Important Announcement!

We are now ready to announce to the trade and to the public generally the opening of our Manufacturing Concern of Ladies' Readymades.

This is an enterprise which merchants will hail with joy, as Newfoundland has always been greatly affected by the lack of local made Ladies' Readymades, and at the present time this drawback is more keenly felt than ever before.

The severe rate of exchange, the high duties, freight charges and the uncertainty of safe transportation, which heretofore was a source of worry and trouble to you, we now shift to our shoulders and deliver to you at your door the finished product, in perfect condition, and at prices far cheaper than that of imported merchandise.

Another benefit that you derive from local made goods is that the local manufacturer strives to produce his merchandise to suit the needs and tastes of the Newfoundland people; a thing which foreign manufacturers cannot and do not do. We have made a careful study of the Newfoundland woman's likes and dislikes in the matter of Readymades and we are now producing Costumes, Raglans and Skirts to please your customers.

Advocate local made goods and increase your business. We are now showing samples. If you cannot call, drop us a card and our representative will call.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Then he takes May's hand and looks down at her.

"May," he says, and his voice is full of tenderness and love, "obey your father; go now. I see my way. Heaven help us both, and keep us true to each other. I—I will not give you up—Hear me out, sir," for Mr. Palmer has made a furious exclamation. "I cannot give you up, but I must go away; if I remained it would only be to cause you trouble and pain. I must go away for a time. But I will come back; always believe that, let them say what they will; I will come back, able, please Heaven, to look your father in the face and tell him that I have a home fit for you to accept. Good-bye, dear, good-bye. Keep your heart, and—go now;" he breaks with a groan.

She looks up at him, her blue eyes filled with tears, but bright with a staunch, faithful gaze, and hiding her face in her hands, turns and leaves them. Bob struggles with the emotion that threatens to overmaster him for a moment, then he turns to Mr. Palmer.

"You have heard what I've said, sir," he says. "You have used hard words to me, harder than I deserve, for I don't think I am a scoundrel. I shall keep my promise. I will not come back until I have won a home for her. Don't—don't be harder with her than you can help, sir. It was my fault, all my fault, and she is too gentle, bless her heart, to be hardly used. I wish you good-bye, sir," and he holds out his hand.

But Mr. Palmer bends a dark and forbidding frown upon him.

"Go to the devil!" he says, and Bob, with a shake of the head, turns and strides off.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Nouvelle-by-the-Sea at noon of a spring day. Who does not know it? Who cannot, by the aid of memory, if he happens to have been there, and with the assistance of written and pictured description if he has not, who cannot call up a vision of that paradise of English tourists, of travelling Americans, and of pleasure-loving Parisians? Time rolls on, dynasties totter and empires fall. Change comes to most things, but Nouvelle is always the same. It would seem almost as if it had taken a lease of the king of this world, and were able to renew it every spring, for annually, every spring, the charming little place awakes from slumber and Indigestion!

"Pape's Diapepsin" relieves Sour, Gassy, Acid Stomachs at once—no waiting! Read.

Your upset stomach will feel fine! No waiting! When your meals don't sit and you feel uncomfortable, when you belch gases, acids or raise sour undigested food. When you feel lumps of indigestion pain, heartburn or headache from acidity, just eat a tablet of harmless and reliable Pape's Diapepsin and the stomach distress is gone.

Millions of people know the magic of Pape's Diapepsin as an antacid. They look that most indigestion and disordered stomachs are from acidity. The relief comes quickly, no disappointment! Pape's Diapepsin tastes like candy and a box of this world-famous indigestion relief costs so little at drug stores. Pape's Diapepsin helps regulate your stomach so you can eat favorite foods without fear.

starts into life like a Venus from the ocean.

Its one-storied wooden houses, with latticed terraces and stone steps, open their shutters, take to themselves fresh garments of white and green paint, and say, softly, "I am ready. Behold me in all my beauty and freshness! Come in—live in me!" The great hotel, which stands in the centre of the promenade and parade, holds its tricolor, rolls out its red-and-white striped awning, and regards its sign—the Eagle of France. The shops in the principal street—pardon, I mean boulevard—stock themselves with wooden "cuckoo" clocks, wooden paper-knives, wooden match-boxes, of which the English visitor, immediately he arrives at Nouvelle, purchases, as if life depended on the prompt possession of such knock-knacks; the casino calls its liveried servants together and cuts its new packs of cards and polishes up the roulette table, at which vast sums will exchange hands before the season is out and Nouvelle sinks to sleep again.

Nouvelle has been fashionable for so long that only the oldest inhabitant can remember it as a plain little fishing-station on the soft, south French coast; and strange legends are told of a certain visit paid by the great Napoleon, who stood with folded arms upon the golden sands, and looking round the sunlit bay, declared, in his grim fashion, that "one might wish to die at Nouvelle." Then, in direct contradiction to the great Bonaparte, some fashionable doctor discovered that Nouvelle was the place to wish to live at. Other doctors, more or less celebrated, followed suit, and it speedily became the fashion for physicians to send those of their patients afflicted with "weak chests" and similar misfortunes to Nouvelle—and so the place was made.

As more English people than those of any other nation fancy that they have weak chests, Nouvelle especially became a favourite resort for the inhabitants of the Isle of fog and damp; and now each spring Nouvelle suffers a British invasion, and every second man you meet wears the unmistakable look of a Briton, and every lodging-house and hotel is full of them.

The shopkeeper, the waiter, the very flymen all speak English, and but for the French uniform of the soldiers and the white caps of the nurses and the petois of the street boys, one might easily persuade oneself that one was at Margate or Broadstairs.

Nearly twelve months have slipped by since Bob said good-bye to May, and was sent to an unmemorable personage by Mr. Houndell Palmer; since Paula discovered that "love was but a snare and faith an empty word," and much has happened in those swiftly months. The cottage and lands are let to a sporting gentleman, who is quite willing to pay a high rent for the privilege of shooting the same which poor Bob preserved so reverently. Bob is—ah, where is Bob? His last letter dated from an out-lying cattle run, away down in the wilds of Australia; but that letter reached Paula months ago, and Bob may be still many more thousand miles away in pursuit of that fortune which he has promised to lay at the feet of his darling May.

Fate plays selfish tricks sometimes; like a harlequin in a pantomime, he swings his hand round his head, brings it down with a tick-tack, and, heigh presto! all is change and confusion. Fate waved the magic wand for more than Bob eleven months ago; for not only is honest Bob missing and scattered, but so also is Sir Herrick Fowls.

It would be more difficult to say where he is than to guess at Bob whereabouts; for no tidings of him have reached the gay world, which he once adorned so bravely, since a day or two after that scene in Raglan Terrace, when Flossie Hamilton lay lifeless on the carpet of the pretty drawing-room.

Not even the major knows where his dear Rick is, and only shakes his head and sighs in answer to the numerous enquiries. And as he shakes his head and heaves his sigh, the major gives you to understand that he is a hard-used man, and in truth quite considers himself in that light.

For the truth must be told that things have not gone as they should with our dear friend the major. Never had his "pots and pans," as Lord Hurstley called his plots and plans, turned out worse. Everything had gone contrary. Instead of taking things easy, after cutting up a little rough at first, Rick had been foolish enough to quarrel with Flossie, and worse still, instead of falling into his dear uncle's plans and settling down into courting "that charming little girl of my dear friend Palmer's," had fled the scene and hidden himself no one knew where. Then, again, when the dear major had advised Mr. Palmer to call in his mortgage on the Estcourt property, he had only intended to put a little pressure on the Estcourts, and thereby show Paula the wisdom of accepting Stacey; whereas the "stupid young people" had taken it seriously, let the house and vanished.

The major felt quite upset and annoyed, and very much injured. He remarked at his club that it was really a very ungrateful world, most ungrateful, and that a man who put himself out of the way to benefit other people, generally found that he had taken the trouble for nothing.

"As to Rick," he said in confidence to Lord Hurstley, over a rubber, "as to Rick, he has behaved like an idiot! I wouldn't have believed that anyone would have been so lost to all sense of—er—er—honour and duty. Here have I, with infinite trouble and inconvenience, succeeded in getting him out of a most dreadful entanglement which would have ruined him for life, and not only that, but actually prepared the way for a most excellent and advantageous match, when off he flies like a madman, and is no more seen. Heard from him? If you call a most abusive and disrespectful letter, calling me the most dreadful names and accusing me of ruining his happiness and disgracing him—well, yes, I did hear from him. But that letter I received on the morning of his departure, and since then I have not had a post-card. My dear Hurstley, I beg you will excuse this emotion. I am an old man, and ingratitude touches me, especially when it comes from the hand which—er—which I have cherished as a father. Enough! I have done my duty, and the consciousness of so doing must be—er—my reward. It's your deal, my dear Hurstley," and the major settled down into his old life and posed as a martyr.

But though the world missed Sir Herrick, whose handsome face had always been as welcome at the ball-room and five-o'clock tea-table as at his club, the world missed Flossie Hamilton much more seriously and for a much longer time.

Society, indeed, received a heavy blow on that morning when it read in the papers at breakfast-time that the popular young actress had been struck down in an instant, and that never more would they see the lithe, graceful form, never more hear the blithe young voice, never more laugh at the saucy smile; or encore the great song in "King Cole."

The good manager of the Frivolity nearly went out of his mind when he was informed that his great draw had made her last appearance on the boards, and for a time he positively refused to accept such a decision. But though the doctors held out good hope of her recovery, Flossie was firm, not to say obstinate, in her resolution to retire from the stage, and in answer to the manager, who appeared at Raglan Terrace and pleaded, with tears in his eyes, that she would at least give him some hope, that she would take a rest, a long rest if she liked, before deciding, she would give him but one answer:

"I'm tired of it. I shall never go on again. I have capered and sung long enough for them."

"A mere girl," he persisted.

"With the heart of an old woman," she said, with a strange smile. "No; let others have a chance. Don't be cut up, Mr. Managers, you will soon find someone else; there's plenty of talent waiting for an opportunity, and before the season is over they will forget me. They always do forget us if they lose sight of us. At any rate, whether they do or they don't, they will see me no more!"

"But," said the manager in despair, "what on earth do you mean to do with yourself? You'll be well again directly. You're all right now; a little pale and that, but nothing serious. I never saw you look better. What will you do? You can't hide yourself, my dear. You'll go melancholy mad without the work, you will indeed. What will you do?"

And Flossie had answered, "That's my business."

Then she sank back amidst her cushions and motioned the faithful Weston to her side, and the manager was dismissed and went off full of despair. And soon a new favourite dawned upon the boards of the Frivolity, and sang her songs and danced her dance. And Flossie's words came true—she was forgotten by all save those few who remember faithfully the stars that have waned from the dramatic hemisphere.

Presently the house in Raglan Terrace was shut up and the dainty drawing-room, which had so often echoed the laughter of lords of high degree, in which the gay little supper parties had held their revels, was shrouded in brown holland and consigned to silence and solitude, and a short paragraph in the society papers, stating that Flossie had gone abroad for the benefit of her health, and expressing a hope that a softer climate would restore the bloom to the cheek and the vigour to the frame of the talented young actress whose disappearance from the stage, which she had adorned and enlivened, was so deeply deplored.

All this had happened in those eleven months; but the world rushed on pretty much the same—especially at Nouvelle, where, on this spring the sun poured down with soft, beneficent rays upon the little promenade, "light and brilliant with its gay frequenters. The hand—a fine hand led by a conductor of note—played on its rotunda. A group of negro minstrels twanged the light banjo, and sang the usual sentimental ditties on the sands, within hearing of the groups of bathers disporting themselves in the smooth, pond-like sea that lapped gently in as if quite aware that it would be impolite to break into waves before so distinguished a company.

without the consent and participation of the American Government, the United States might have to decide whether it could become a party to the Treaty of Versailles and the Anglo-French-American pact. The President was represented as being perfectly willing for the exchanges to be given to the public after he had completed his case.

ADMIRAL JELICOE'S TOUR.

LONDON, Feb. 19. Discussing editorially Admiral Jellicoe's tour, the Manchester Guardian says it excited a good deal of controversy in Canada, where newspapers anticipated that his report might suggest a shipbuilding programme for the dominion, and a plan for amalgamating the ships built there with the British Navy, if the emergency should arise. The Guardian adds, "We do not believe any such foolish scheme is contemplated."

CONFIRMS GRAND TRUNK AGREEMENT.

LONDON, Feb. 19. Shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway, after listening to heated criticism to-day, assented to the terms of the agreement with the Dominion Government. A dozen dissentients held a meeting afterwards and passed a resolution protesting against the terms.

THE PRUSSIAN SPIRIT SHOWS ITSELF.

LONDON, Feb. 19. It is announced that an Allied Commission composed of thirty-five officers with a number of troops to put into effect the provisions of the Peace Treaty, has arrived at Koenigsburg. The members of the commission are billeted in the town because hotel keepers refused to accommodate them with rooms.

PROTESTING AGAINST WAGE PROVISION.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19. Protests against the wage provision of the completed Railroad Bill will be made in letters to President Wilson and Director General Hines, which representatives of the Railroad Union organizations and officials of American Federation of Labor were framing today at conferences at Federation headquarters.

FRENCH TO FLOAT LOAN IN LONDON.

LONDON, Feb. 19. Austen Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced in the House of Commons yesterday that the Government has assented to the issue by the French Government in the London market of a loan, the proceeds of which will be spent entirely in the United Kingdom. The amount and date of the loan have not been fixed. There is no question of a loan by the British Government to the French Government.

SUPREME COUNCIL DISCUSSES RUSSIA.

LONDON, Feb. 19. The Allied Supreme Council spent most of the first session to-day in what was characterized as a preliminary discussion of the Russian situation. What phase of the question debated was not officially disclosed, the official statement in this respect being that the Council considered it inadvisable to let the public know what feature of the situation was discussed.

WINNIPEG, Feb. 19. Hon. Arthur Meighen announced himself in favor of "moderate tariff" in his address here last night at a dinner given him in his honor by the Winnipeg Board of Trade.

CONCESSION FOR GERMANY.

LONDON, Feb. 19. Germany has been allowed a concession from the terms of the Treaty of Versailles with regard to the speed with which her military forces must be reduced. Premier Lloyd George, it was learned to-day, has notified Dr. Sthamer, the German Envoy, that the date when her army must be reduced to two hundred thousand has been fixed as April 10th, while she is allowed till July 10th to bring it down to the 100,000 limit.

ONLY WAR MEASURES!

BELIN, Feb. 19. Gustave Noske, Minister of Defence, speaking at Dresden on Tuesday said that much that appears to the Allies to be criminal was purely general war measures, ordered by superiors, which Germany never would acknowledge to be crimes. It would be premature, therefore, to assume that Germany would be free of any further serious difficulty and possibly reprisals.

Industrial Trouble in Italy.

Genoese Workmen Defy the Authorities--Turkey in the Lighthouse -- Bonar Law Makes Home Rule Bill Announcement--Wilson Replies to Allies on Adriatic Question -- Allies Grant Further Concession of Germany.

ROOFS AND WORKMEN CLASH.

LONDON, Feb. 19. A serious fight between workmen and troops in the industrial region of Genoa is reported in a Central news despatch from Rome under yesterday's date. Many casualties occurred during the disturbances. The trouble took place at Arsenal factory and other factories in San Pier Arena, Cornigliano, Sestri, Levante and other places, where workmen fought police and soldiers all day long. The troops eventually gained the upper hand, cleared the factories and established armed guards, except at Arsenal factory where workers are still in possession, according to the message.

A STORM OVER TURKEY.

LONDON, Feb. 19. The latest development in the Turkish situation have for the moment shifted the Adriatic question into the background in both political and public interest. Reservations which France and Great Britain are said to have made with regard to the Turkish terms, including the retention of the Turks in Constantinople, have caused strong feeling in Parliament, where the opposition strongly objects to the settlement of the Turkish question without reference to the Commission. Particular antagonism has been aroused in opposition quarters in the decision to allow the Sultan to claim sovereignty over Constantinople.

HOME RULE BILL TO-DAY.

LONDON, Feb. 19. Bonar Law, Government spokesman, stated in the House of Commons to-day that it was hoped to introduce the Irish Home Rule Bill to-morrow. The second reading of the bill, he said, would be taken as soon as the House had time to digest the Bill.

FALSE ALARM.

LONDON, Feb. 19. Reports that Alexander Kerensky, Russian Revolutionary Premier, whose regime was overthrown by Bolsheviks in November, 1917, had been imprisoned in the Caucasus were speedily shown to be untrue to-day when inquiries revealed that Kerensky was still in England, where he has been living for some time.

WILSON REPLIES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19. President Wilson to-day completed his reply to the Allied Supreme Council's note on the Adriatic question and sent it to Acting Secretary Polk, who is putting it in form for transmission to the Council. There was no indication as to the note's contents and its length. The President is understood to have answered the Council's contention point for point and to have adhered to the position taken in his note of Feb. 10th. It is now pretty well established that in the communication the President informed the Allied countries that if they proceed to a settlement of the Adriatic question

Saw House Drifting in Ice.

On New Years day an object was sighted by residents of Tizzards Hr. drifting down across the Bay in the ice. It was at first thought to be a motor boat, but after watching it through a telescope it was thought to have the appearance of a house. It was about 2 1/2 miles off when seen and Mr. Fred Locke started to walk off towards it, but as the evening was approaching he did not go more than three quarters of a mile. Next day the wind was off shore and whatever the object was it had disappeared.

Editor Evening Telegram
Dear Sir,—The many friends of Mr. Peter Murphy, were pleased to see him again on his old job, that of Mail Man, for the Southern Shore, and I should say a capable man he is, as he put in two years under the veteran Mail carrier "Coughlan." But it was only for one trip as I understand that when he turned up for the second trip, on Tuesday, his job was gone. Why the change, as you could not lose Peter in one of the gulches.
Yours truly,

"Next President of United States."

E. T. MEREDITH, SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE, BELIEVED TO BE THE MAN DANIELS HAS IN MIND.
Edwin Thomas Meredith, the new Secretary of Agriculture, is the distinguished man believed to have been in the mind of Secretary of the Navy Daniels when he told an audience that he could name the next President of the United States.
Private advices from Washington to people in the financial district, gave the information that President Wilson had sounded William J. Bryan on the availability of Secretary Meredith as a presidential candidate, and that Mr. Bryan endorsed the suggestion. Secretary Meredith is a publisher of farm papers with a large circulation. He is a Methodist and a prohibitionist.

Lifting the Blockade.

For more reasons than one the news that Great Britain has decided to raise the blockade on Russia for trade will be received with genuine pleasure by everyone. For, when it is known that to the imposition and maintenance of the blockade on the great producing country of the North—that land is 180,000,000 producers—is very largely due the prevailing high cost of living, none will contend that the raising of the blockade is anything but good. To the blockade—which has been nothing more nor less than a strangle-hold on trade and export—is due the food shortage in Europe. True, Europeans could purchase from the United States; this is becoming more and more distasteful on account of soaring prices and the unfavorable rate of exchange. Formerly a quarter of the world's supply of exportable wheat came from Russia. To-day it has to remain within the far-flung borders of the Soviet Republic. In view of the present high price of sugar, it should interest people to know that stored in the Ukraine are four hundred million (400,000,000) pounds of that necessary article of food, according to the New York Times. In addition, twenty million bushels of wheat, large quantities of hides (the shortage of which causes the high price of footwear), and other materials are stored there and await export. It may be the alarming activity of the Soviet propagandists in India or it may be purely the European food shortage that has persuaded Lloyd George to take this step. This much is undeniable: the raising of the blockade will go a long distance toward the reduction of the cost of living.

Murdered Classics.

Time deals hardly with the wisdom of classical authors.
Modern versions are invariably incorrect. "When Greek meets Greek, then comes a tug of war" is wrong. The original line written by Nathaniel Lee, one of the old-time dramatists, occurs in his play, long since forgotten, "The Rival Queens, or, Alexander the Great." It reads: "When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war."
Similarly Milton's "fresh woods and pastures new" is invariably rendered "fresh fields and pastures new"; while another pitfall for the unwary is to be found in the well-known lines of Kingsley, beginning "Be good, sweet maid." Nine people out of ten, if challenged with them, would repeat:—
Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever;
Do noble deeds, not dream them, all day long
Whereas what the poet actually wrote was:—
Be good, sweet maid, and let who can be clever;
Do lovely things, not dream them, all day long.
Tennyson has perhaps suffered less from misquoters than most poets, but his "streaming London's central roar," which occurs in the "Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington," is generally converted into "busy London's central roar." "The noiseless tenor of their way," from Gray's "Elegy," is more familiar to many as the "even tenor of their way."

Alberta Forest Losses.

Fire losses on the forest reserves in Alberta during 1919 aggregated more than $2,250,000, or greater than the estimated loss of the previous ten years. The loss in 1918 was approximately $1,000. Fires swept over 548,000 acres of forest reserves in 1919, while 20,000 acres were burned over in 1918, which was chiefly open land. The losses of last year were due to 47 fires, and were made up as follows: Merchantable timber killed, $500,000; damage to young growth, $1,370,000; damage to other growth, $400,000. Heavy losses were sustained in 1910, before the forestry protection was inaugurated, but the damage was considerably less than in 1919. Practically all of the fires and damages occurred from April to July, while the heaviest losses were recorded in May.

What a lot of people there are who talk gracefully about things they know little more than a few catch words, merely for the sake of being thought to be in the swim. For instance, the people who read book reviews, not to find out they will care to read the books, nor for the interest of comparing what some critic thinks about it with their own impressions, but simply so that they may be able to discuss them without having read them.

They Would Rather Chatter Than Learn.

Then there are people who keep track of the theatres in the same way. There is a certain very smart magazine that is unquestionably written largely to furnish table talk for just such people.

The Cavell Memorial.

(Halifax Chronicle.) The Edith Cavell monument, in London, is now nearly ready for unveiling. The standing figure, in the simple dress of a hospital nurse, will at once attract the eye, but it is itself dominated by the impression of a great cross that rises high in the air behind. The "Mother of Humanity," seated on a great crossbeam of stone, with a hand upraised to bless or protect the child safe and happy on her sheltering arm, embodies the helpful pity that was the ruling passion of Edith Cavell's life, and the engraved letters round the monument complete the tragic heroism of her story.

"For King and Country," "Faithful unto Death," "Sacrifice," "Devotion," "Fortitude"—these words explain the motives that prompted Nurse Cavell to run risks of which she was as fully aware as any of her friends in taking up the work that had an ending so suddenly brutal and tragic. The monument near St. Martin's Church is described as impressive by its dignified simplicity of design, and teaches a lesson that future generations will do well to bear in mind.

IN KANSAS.

JACK PICKFORD

In Kansas, when old Booze went out, there was some walling round a bout "O ur fathers," some folks would complain, "they fought for liberty in vain; the boon for which they shed their blood is on the blink, it's name is Mud." A little while they raised their fess, and never missed a chance to cuss the tyrannical that banished booze, and queered the rights men hate to lose. But soon they found that they were bores; men wearied of their useless roars. And so they talked of other themes, and in their trance dreamed saner dreams, and in a little while gadzooks, they learned to like the babbling brooks, from which they need not blow the foam, which sent them sober to their home. And no one thought or talked of booze, of gaudy jags or princely stews. And those who worried days and nights because of our denatured rights, who wildly gnashed rebellious jaws, now yelled for still more drastic laws. Thus will it be the country o'er, when time has healed the spirits sore of dead game sports who now complain because their only drink is rain.

Mainly About People.

Jack Pickford, who has grown famous on the screen, celebrated his 23rd birthday with a film production, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." Jack began in the movies when he was 13. He was born in Toronto, Canada.

Jack Dempsey, champion of the heavyweights, now at Los Angeles, making his first appearance in the films, has on his calling list Ruth Roland, Mary Pickford, Mildred Davis, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Tom Mix, Harold Lloyd and Jim Corbett. He has a mansion and has gone into society functions.

Miss Anne Scott of New York was a stenographer 15 years ago. Now she is president of the $700,000 Bantam Ball Bearing Works of Los Angeles, which has increased production by sharing profits and by humanizing business and organizing workers on the one big family basis. Most of the workmen are of New England stock.

When Marie Kempton of New York was seven years of age she manifested an extraordinary talent for drawing, and now at nine she is the winner of the Wanamaker prize for painting and drawing against all-comers, between 9 and 17 years of age, with a drawing entitled "Pain and Sorrow." She has several drawings of "Madonnas" and "Crucifixes." Her father is a pianist, and her mother a singer.

Dr. Felix Adler, the famous speaker, writer and philosopher, holds that women are the equals, if not the superiors of men, and that any nation which treated its women as inferiors is doomed to decay. He holds that marriage is a permanent bond. A real husband is one who while seeing faults finds so many excellencies and virtues that the faults are mere trifles by comparison.

Mrs. Wilson and the doctors have the time of their lives trying to restrain President Wilson. He insists upon giving pressing matters his personal attention, even at the cost of his life. His country is in his judgment a great deal more important than his personal welfare.

Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet and philosopher, has designated for American textile interests the exact "Blue Bird Shade." His selection expresses "the warmth of the sunlit ocean, the vibration of the Alpine sky and the restfulness of the distant mountains. The "Blue Bird Shade" is likely to be the fashion next summer.

The Plan That Failed.

A pretty girl was engaged to two young men simultaneously, and one evening the parlormaid came to her and said in a scared voice:—"Oh, Miss Bessie, them two gents you're engaged to has called together, and somehow they've found out about both engagements." The pretty girl threw her cigarette into the fire pettishly. "What on earth shall I do?" she exclaimed. The parlormaid smiled joyfully. "I'll tell you what to do, Miss Bessie," she said. "I'll go downstairs and say you're crying in your room because your dad has lost all his money. Then you can be engaged for keeps to the gent what stays." "That seems a good plan," said the pretty girl; and she lit another cigarette and waited. The maid was gone about three minutes. Then she returned with a frightened look on her face. "Miss Bessie, both on 'em has gone," she said.

How to Get the Flu.

(From the Kansas City Times.) A nurse had been taking care of influenza cases for several weeks. She had been perfectly well and had come to think of herself as immune. One evening she sat in an open window until she was chilled. By morning she had a well developed case of flu. The bacteria had been in her throat all the time. The protective forces of the body had kept them from developing until her resistance was lowered by the chill. If you want to get the flu when it is prevalent take little sleep, eat a lot of rich food, deny yourself fresh air at night, let yourself get chilled in a draft, and in general pay no attention to the rules of common sense living. The flu germs are always on the lookout for such as you. Stafford's Liniment for Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism and all kinds of Aches and Pains. Price 20c. bot. For sale everywhere.—feb2,tt

What is a Commonwealth?

The dictionary defines a Commonwealth as being (1) The body of people constituting a state or politically organized community: a body politic; hence a state: especially one constituted by a number of persons united by compact or tacit agreement under one form of Government or system of laws; (2) The English state as organized upon the death of King Charles I, 1649, which existed under Oliver Cromwell and his son Richard, ending with the abdication of the latter in 1659, or by some historians regarded as ending with the establishment of the Protectorate in 1653. The individual states in the American Union are officially styled commonwealth. Neither of the definitions here given, however, apply to the Commonwealth of the British Peoples, which embraces a wider and more comprehensive meaning. The phrase was coined during the late war by General Smuts, the great South African leader, and immediately became popular, finding immediate acceptance, and has now come into general use. During his tour of Canada the Prince of Wales made constant use of the phrase, preferring it to the older term Empire.

“Empire,” says a contemporary, “no longer expresses the British ideal, if indeed it ever did. An Empire is something founded on force and dependent upon authority. It implies personal command and individual government, which was never the case with the British people and their widely scattered territories, those territories with few exceptions, not being acquired by military conquest, but by peaceful occupation, and developed by industry and the natural growth of population. British people and those akin to, or in sympathy with them and their institutions, simply entered into the possession of practically unoccupied world spaces, and established themselves therein under the laws and institutions of their Homeland. In other words they founded colonies.” From these colonies have sprung dominions, and the dominions together, acknowledging one throne, have developed into that for which General Smuts selected the title Commonwealth to designate the entire British nation throughout the world, because after all is said, there is but one British nation, however widely scattered, and it is an actual and indisputable fact that the British in their territorial possessions around and upon the world are practically and emphatically a Commonwealth, having unmistakably shown themselves to be a unit for their common defence and mutual weal. This does not “of necessity connote anything political. A ship's company at sea is a commonwealth. Every city, town and village is a commonwealth. So is every democratic nation. But commonwealth is a term peculiarly appropriate to the British congeries of countries, because they are bound together almost exclusively for ‘the common weal.’ The political ties nominally connecting them have been practically cast aside and they are now ‘only united by those ties ‘light as air though strong as steel,’ which sentiment alone can weave. These ties are the common British weal; and they constitute and indissolubly weld together the great, vital British Commonwealth.”

AND THE METHODIST NATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

$11,900,000 is the total objective set by the Churches that are engaged in Canada and Newfoundland. The Methodist Church has exceeded its objective of $4,000,000 as shown by the following lettergram received by the Newfoundland Conference Organizer, from the Rev. Peter Bryce, of Toronto:

Rev. Dr. Fenwick, St. John's.

Reports to Tuesday night Toronto City, one million one hundred thousand. Dominion, four million two hundred and seventy thousand. Many districts still to be reported. Deeply thankful for result.

Newfoundland Methodist has in this report an inspiration and a challenge, which it is believed will find generous response and a triumphant issue when the appeal is made in April.

8.—(Capt.) Mrs. Jas. Baird	290.00	363.00
Totals	$12,574.50	$11,108.50

This gives a total to date of $64,729.50 for Education and $18,956.50 for the Forward Movement. These amounts represent 274 pledges, and as some substantial gifts are yet to come in, it is confidently expected the objective of $100,000, or about $17,000 more will be reached this evening. Mrs. Crawford's team retained the Educational Banner and captured that of the Forward Movement from Mr. C. U. Henderson. Division D. of which Mrs. D. Baird is commander, thus holds both divisional banners, taking that for the Forward Movement from Division A. Commander W. Campbell.

St. Andrew's collectors are very proud of their success, particularly as the campaign is being conducted without the assistance of outside experts.

An Appeal for the Bartlett Fire Sufferers.

Dear Sir,—The fire on Signal Hill last Wednesday was a tragedy for Mr. Bartlett and family. All the necessities of life and the domestic treasures have been destroyed and not a dollar's worth of anything remains. And all this has come about through a defective fuse which I had pointed out to me on my visit to the ruins on Thursday. The object of my writing this letter is to ask if some of our kind-hearted citizens will follow the example of the Prime Minister and Mayor, who have already promised to head a list of subscriptions from which we may hope to return a new home for the family. At present they have nothing more than they stand up in the Government having sent them the necessary bedding, etc. Those who would like to help are asked to send either to me or to the Rev. Dr. Edgar Jones at St. Thomas' Rectory. Will the other newspapers please copy this appeal?

Yours truly,
LEONARD L. JEEVES,
Rector Cathedral Parish,
The Rectory, Feb. 20, 1920.

Funeral at Carbonear.

At 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, all that was mortal of the late Malina James, was laid to rest in the Anglican Cemetery at Carbonear. A large concourse of relatives and friends of the deceased lady followed the hearse. In the Church of St. James and at the graveside the services were conducted by Rev. H. V. Whitehouse, Rector of Carbonear Parish. By request, the favorite hymns of the late Mrs. James were sung during the office for the Burial of the Dead, “Rock of Ages,” and “My God, My Father, While I Stray,” while “Abide With Me,” was feelingly rendered at the graveside, immediately before the benediction.

Gulf Conditions.

Health Point—Raining, with southwest wind; heavy close packed ice everywhere.

Grindstone—Raining, with southwest wind.

West Point—Heavy ice distant.

Greys Island and North Grindstone—Heavy open ice everywhere.

Pleasant Bay—Shore ice half mile off.

Cape Ray—Foggy, south wind; heavy close packed ice everywhere.

Scattered—Dense fog, southwest wind; close packed ice inshore.

Due to frequent storms the telegraph service is interrupted almost daily.

The Fish Situation.

The present fish situation of Newfoundland is one that is capable of interesting all connected with such matters, and many who cannot distinguish between a cod and a caplin. From figures supplied by the Customs authorities, compilations of startlingly vivid character may be made. It is not known definitely what the 1919 catch was. That of 1918 was 1,600,000. The catch of last season should be about 100,000 less than the '18 quantity. That would be 1,700,000 qtls. The exports of fish of the 1919 catch are available. From July to December 1,042,971 quintals were exported. But of the amount shipped in July, the first shipping month of the new fish, i.e. 106,628 qtls.—some was old fish. Putting it 50-50, it means that 50,000 qtls. must be deducted from the 1,042,971, leaving 992,971 qtls. for July-December exports of the 1919 catch. In January of this year 163,000 qtls. were exported. That makes 1,156,971 qtls.

So far in this month the quantity exported is calculated to be 83,000 qtls., which added to the 1,156,971, makes 1,239,971 quintals of the 1919 catch to be exported to date. This taken from 1,700,000 (the estimated 1919 catch) leaves 462,029 quintals still in the country. So that the estimate of Sir M. P. Cashin, as quoted by the Halifax Herald, of 700,000 qtls. of fish being in the country at the end of 1919, is correct. The number of quintals exported since 1920 set in is 246,000. The problem, then that faces the Government is that of disposing of and marketing 462,029 quintals of fish. Remembering that the end of the Lenten season is approximately but 40 days away, the magnitude of the problem becomes apparent.

Institute Debate Was Interesting.

"Tyranny of Labor and Capital."

Resolved: That the Autocracy of Labor is more tyrannical than the Autocracy of Capital" was the interesting subject of last evening's debate of the Methodist College Literary Institute. Messrs. F. G. Bradley, Roy Gushue and C. C. Pratt for the affirmative, and R. F. Horwood, Harold Mitchell and J. Osmond for the Negative, were the leaders of the debate. The greatest problem with which the world has to deal to-day contended the affirmative, is the question of the relations of Labor and Capital. It will be years before a satisfactory adjustment is reached. The attitude of Labor and Capital before the war, despite smaller wages, were comparatively good. Production was increasing. The hours of labor were greater but not so strenuous. The war brought an increase in the cost of living because production lessened. The inevitable result of lessened production was the soaring of prices. The moment the war ceased the question arose: How to get things back to normal? The answer, it was contended, was increased production. An autocracy, either of Labor or of Capital, was repugnant and unacceptable. But the autocracy of Labor was more tyrannical than that of Capital as evidenced by strikes, demand for more pay and better working conditions.

The negative contended that, although supposed to have been changed by the war, autocracy is as strong today as ever. The great stronghold of autocracy is Capital. In the human make-up there are two great components—Ego,—"I," and Alter,—"the other." Egotism and altruism are always struggling for the mastery. The claim for self interest is a terrible one. But the struggle for the common good is also great. In order to tone down the tendency toward selfish explanation, ameliorating laws have to be made. However, Capital, comprised, undoubtedly of the fittest men for such work, evades such laws and manages to evade the measures made for the protection of the masses. Group interests are always at enmity with the public. By the power of wealth Capital controlled the resources, among which is Labor, with its muscle and ability to work. Ten thousand of the vested interests in the Southern States brought the bloody American Civil War. The liquor interests of England were dealt with on account of the capitalistic autocracy supporting it. It is the same with patent medicines, adulterated foods and the yellow press, doing the dirty work of its masters. Controlling the Courts, making and unmaking legislatures, monopolies—all are fruits of the autocracy of Capital. In wartime, when Labor fights and dies, Capital accumulates more money. In America, 49 railroads, representing billions of dollars, are owned by men who can sit around one table. Not only in big but in smaller things is the autocracy of Capital more tyrannical than that of Labor. On all sides is evidence of the contempt of Capital for the public rights.

In addition to all this it is obvious, it was contended, that the autocracy of the many over the few is not as tyrannical as the autocracy of the few over the many because in one case the number to suffer is small and in the other is great.

Despite the able arguments of the Negative, however, the vote, when taken, showed a majority for the Affirmative side. Some of the speakers of the evening were Messrs. Hayward (Aff.), Wylie (Neg.), R. Hearder (Neg.), J. R. Smallwood (Neg.), and A. E. Parkins (Aff.).

At the City Hall.

The regular weekly meeting of the Municipal Council took place yesterday afternoon. The Mayor presided. After the preliminary business of the meeting, the following matters were disposed of:

J. C. Pratt, representing the Methodist College, wrote in connection with the widening of Linscott's Lane, that he would like to know the correct street line, so as to begin fencing and hedging in the spring.

A complaint was sent in by H. Dawe, Pennywell Road, as to the ashes, etc., blowing from the sanitary dumps. Referred to the Sanitary Supervisor.

T. H. Martin offered a price for one of the houses, Quidi Vidi Road. Ordered to be asked to come and see the Secretary.

Walter Gart asked for certain house in second lot under construction, and he was confirmed in same.

C. J. Fox, Pres. Society Cruelty to Animals, wrote as to the complaints of teamsters and horse owners of the city, on the condition of the streets, etc., etc. The Municipal Council have done and are doing their best in the matter.

Plan of stable for M. J. Blackler, Central Street, was ordered to be sent to the Health Officer for his report.

The light inspector reported a number of gas lamps out for the week. Ordered a copy of the report be sent to the Gas Co.

Plan of improvements to house owned by T. H. Carter was ordered to stand over. The various departmental reports were read and the meeting adjourned at 5.30.

Shareholders' Meeting.

HARBOR GRACE DOCK COMPANY.

The shareholders in the Harbor Grace Marine Railway Dock Co. met in the Board of Trade Rooms yesterday. The annual reports submitted by the officers showed the Company to be in a flourishing condition. A dividend of 7 per cent was declared on the years' business, and a substantial amount was placed to the credit of the reserve fund. The following officers and directors for the coming year were elected:

President—R. Duff.
Manager—J. Tapp.
Secretary—E. Simmons.

Directors—C. A. Jerrett, W. S. Monroe, W. J. Ellis, R. S. Munn, F. McNamara, Capt. T. Dunn, Jno. McRae, and A. W. Piccott.

At a meeting of the directorate held subsequently plans were laid for the coming seasons work. The Harbor Grace Dock has been a boon to shipping, vessels being able to have repairs effected without costly delays. The dock is the best of its kind North of Boston, and can handle vessels up to 500 tons.

A Big Success.

On Tuesday evening American Chain Overshoes, in which the principle of the weed chain used on automobile tires has been humanely adapted to horses' shoes, were first tried on the streets of St. John's and created quite a sensation among horse owners. Attached to the fore hoofs of a heavy truck horse they enabled the animal to get a footing on ice and snow without exertion, which his bare hind shoes were unable to hold. Later they were tried on a cab horse and worked with the same results, except owing to a mistake in size one chain got detached. American Chain Overshoes are not sold by blacksmiths. Soldiers Given Sealing Berths.

Yesterday afternoon a deputation, comprising Hon. J. M. Kent, Chairman; Major J. W. March, M.C., and Capt. Murphy, waited on the various shipowners and, on behalf of the returned sailors and soldiers seeking berths to the icefields, placed the situation before them.

Messrs. Job Brothers & Co., James Baird, Ltd. and Bowring Bros., Ltd. were the firms interviewed, and, in each instance, sympathetic consideration was given the deputation, and vacancies arranged for each ship. An effort is being made for placing five men in each of the sealers; Baine Johnston & Co. having given that allocation already; Harvey & Co. have written Farquhar & Co. for a similar number, and as a result of the interviews yesterday, some forty-five berths are now in prospect, thereby considerably relieving the situation of last week, and there were nearly 100 applicants. The public, generally, will appreciate this act of the shipowners, who although inconvenienced by the arrangement, have shown that the men who served overseas are not soon forgotten.

Motion Picture Actor Falls 700 Feet From Airplane and is Killed.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 6.—Earl Burgess, a motion picture actor, was killed here yesterday when he fell 700 feet from an airplane on which he was performing in the making of a comedy. Burgess was flying with Lieut. Walter Hawkins, an aviator. The actor was to cast a dummy from the plane. In attempting this he fell. The camera man and the director thought the falling body was the dummy and continued photographing. They did not discover their mistake until they went to remove the supposed dummy from telephone wires where it had alighted.

The Lighted Lamp of Doom

(By JOHN LAURENCE, in Pearson's Weekly.)

"And ye'll wait for me, Liz?" said Tom Wynyard.

"Till you come back, Tom," whispered his sweetheart, as she returned his warm farewell kisses. "Only, don't be too long."

"Absence makes the heart grow fonder," laughed her lover, and with a final long kiss she strode down the street and was quickly lost to sight.

Tom Wynyard was a sailor, and he and pretty Lizzy Fernlea had arranged to get married after the voyage, though how long that would be he did not know. Engaged on an ocean-going tramp plying between Liverpool and America, it might be several months before he returned, but to both the period would not seem long, for at the end was the happiness of married life.

Lost at Sea.

Alas! this is a world which has its share of sorrows as well as joys, and the dark-eyed little Stamford lass was to face the greatest sorrow almost any woman can face—the loss of her lover. When she was beginning to count the very days of his return, there came the dreadful news that his ship had been wrecked off Newfoundland and all lives lost.

Elizabeth Fernlea was too good-looking to be without a lover for long, and when Jim Pulley, an old flame, renewed his offer of marriage to her she accepted him, though she warned him that she could never love him as much as she had loved Tom Wynyard.

"I'll risk that, lass," replied Jim Pulley. "When we are married I'll teach you to love me and me alone."

He feared that she might change her mind after all, and he eagerly made preparations for an early wedding. His sweetheart yielded to all his wishes, for though she liked him and hoped to make him a good wife, her heart was far away, beneath the waters of the Atlantic.

Elizabeth Fernlea had only been Mrs. Pulley a single week when Tom Wynyard came back! The lass had given back its "dead!" It transpired that four had managed to get away, and had been rescued from the wreck.

Her First Lover Returns.

"Why didn't you send me word,

Tom?" cried the newly made wife, sobbing on his shoulder. "As long as I knew you were alive I should have waited."

"I expected any day to get a ship back," replied her lover. "And it never struck me that you would hear about the wreck in Stamford. And now—now it is too late!"

His sweetheart's sobs and broken words almost drove him to tempt her to break her marriage vows. But both she and Tom were born of old English stock with good old English traditions. However, she might have hated her husband and loved another man, the marriage vows were too solemn to be lightly broken.

"I shall never marry now, lass!" said Tom Wynyard. "But I shall know how you are getting on."

"And if I am free again—" "When you are free again I'll come back," replied Wynyard. "But till then we mustn't meet, for we can't stand it. I shall know when you are free, and if you still love me and still wait for me I shall know by the light in your window. If there is no light—"

He turned away, and before the sobbing woman could make any reply Tom Wynyard had gone out of her life again.

Poor little Elizabeth Pulley was so upset that she did not pay very much attention to the actual farewell words of her lover, but in after years they were to come back to her with redoubled force.

The years slipped by, and Tom Wynyard had never made any sign, though in her heart of hearts Elizabeth was still true to him. The time came when she was free once more, a pretty widow, who had any number of chances of marrying again if she wanted to. But to all her suitors she returned a decided "No," for she hoped against hope that Tom Wynyard would hear that she was free again—and waiting. But she forgot to light the lamp.

The weary months of waiting slipped slowly by and one day a neighbour said to the widow: "I should be careful to bolt your windows at night if I were you. I saw a man looking in them, and the funny thing was he asked me if you were still at your old address."

"What was he like?" asked Elizabeth eagerly.

But beyond being able to say he looked like a seafaring man down on his luck, the neighbour was unable to give any description of the wanderer who had looked in through the cottage window.

In a dreadful flash of memory there came to her her lover's last words, "If you still love me and still wait for me I shall know by the light in your window."

For the first time that night Elizabeth Pulley left a lamp burning all night in her sitting-room window. Night after night its steady gleam shone out, a message for the man who might pass by, for one wanderer who never returned.

The Finding of the Body.

The lamp had been burning but a few weeks when Elizabeth received confirmation that the man who had looked in her window was indeed her old lover. A fellow seaman called on her and told her that Tom had left his ship at Liverpool saying that he was going to Stamford to see an old sweetheart of his who had not long been a widow!

The months slipped by into years, and every night the lamp was left lighted to tell Tom Wynyard that his old sweetheart was waiting.

Elizabeth Pulley had grown miserably as the years went by for she wanted to save every penny she could against the time Tom Wynyard returned. Gradually she got a reputation among the riff-raff who called that she was a miser who had, hidden in her house, a large sum of money. And that reputation proved fatal to her.

One morning a neighbour passing on his way to work, long after dawn had broken, noticed to his astonishment that the light which usually burned in Elizabeth Pulley's house was still burning.

As he stopped for a moment he suddenly saw a few puffs of smoke coming from under the front door. He peered in through the window, and through the pall of smoke which seemed to fill the room he dimly distinguished the form of Elizabeth Pulley lying on the hearthrug. To raise the alarm soon tender hands were raising the lifeless body of the widow with a rope that a vital spark still remained to be fanned back again into a flame.

Elizabeth Pulley, however, was dead, and it required no experienced eye to tell that she had been murdered and robbed, while an attempt had been made to set the house on fire in order to make the death of the solitary widow appear accidental.

The Clue of the Spoons.

Her head had been smashed in by several fierce blows with some heavy blunt instrument, her clothes were partly burnt away from her body, while all round were scattered the contents of drawers as though the murderer had searched every hiding-place to find the money and valuables the widow was supposed to have hidden.

It was evident that the unfortunate woman had opened the door to the murderer, for all the windows were found fastened, and the front door was unlocked when the crime was discovered.

The police worked at once on the theory that the murder had been committed by some passing tramp, and careful inquiries were made among the high road fraternity, and all pawnbrokers for a considerable distance round were warned that certain articles Elizabeth Pulley was known to possess were missing and might be offered in pawn.

It was not long before a clue was discovered to the author of the crime. A woman attempted to pawn a number of spoons which had formed part of the robbery. When questioned she informed the police that she had been asked to try to sell them by an acquaintance named Corby.

Corby proved to be a married man living in Stamford in extremely poor circumstances, and that the police were on the right track was soon seen when they searched the suspected man's house and found a large number of the missing articles belonging to Elizabeth Pulley. Though not a tramp, nevertheless Corby mixed with a class of men who had often discussed the lonely widow and her lighted lamp, and speculated as to the amount of money which she must have concealed.

The Murderer's Way Out.

The accused man promptly put up the ingenious defence that he had bought the articles found in his house from a passing tramp, but this defence was soon shown to be a poor one, for Corby had no money at the time.

The more the police inquired of Corby and his movements on the fatal night, the more convinced were they that they had laid hands on the right man. Corby, for example, swore that he had never been out of doors that night, whereas it was shown that he was not in his house at midnight, at any rate. The shirt he had been wearing on the day of the murder was washed early the following morning, and his wife asserted that he had washed it himself.

Corby asserted time and time again, in face of this overwhelming evidence, that he was not guilty, but no one put the slightest credence in his protestations, and he was committed for trial.

But he was destined never to face an earthly judge. One morning he was found dead in his cell. He had twisted a scarf round his neck, attached it to a hook in the cell, and slowly choked to death. Legally the murderer of Elizabeth Pulley was never discovered, but there is little doubt that Corby committed the crime and was afraid to face the fate which he knew would be meted out to him at the hands of the law.

Of Tom Wynyard nothing more was heard from that day to this. He went out of existence apparently, just as the lighted lamp of love and doom had gone out at last.

The Return of the Influenza Menace.

When 2,514 cases of influenza are reported in Chicago in one day and theatres are closing as a precautionary measure in that city, and at a time when an epidemic is spreading in army camps East as well as West, it behoves the health authorities of New York to prepare to deal with the disease, although as yet the number of cases reported is not disturbing. It may be true, as the Health Commissioner, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, says, that there is no reason for alarm. But a stitch in time saves nine. It is no time for complacent optimism.

That seems to be the view of Dr. R. S. Copeland. He has come to the conclusion that there may be "several hundred new cases of influenza a day by the end of next week," which in itself would not be disquieting, except as a lack of precautions might raise the number to the totals recorded in the epidemic of 1918, when 5,000, and sometimes 6,000, cases were reported daily. So Dr. Copeland renews his instructions about recognizing the disease and the treatment to be observed, adding advice as regards avoiding infection. The Health Commissioner should be commended for his action in taking the menace of an epidemic seriously. He would not be doing his duty if he dismissed the danger lightly. Happily, the influenza of 1920 does not seem to be virulent. If the people of this city heed Dr. Copeland, all will be well, or well as can be expected at this season of the year.—New York Times.

The Value of a Newspaper.

(From the Petersburg Examiner.)

For a few days recently the people of Winnipeg were without daily newspapers, owing to a famine in newsprint. The absence of their favorite sheets already taught the public to appreciate how big a part the newspapers play in their daily life. Naturally when there is no authentic method of distributing news the city has been flooded with foundationless rumors of happenings in the world at large. Stories that lose nothing in vividness as they pass from one to another have been circulated, and as a result the telephones of the newspaper offices have been kept constantly busy by citizens anxious to ascertain the truth about some of the stories that spread through the city. The experience of Winnipeg calls attention to the value of the daily newspaper in keeping its readers informed of the real facts of what is occurring in the world. The service that is given in this respect is not understood until a crisis like that in Winnipeg shows how effective is the work of the newspapers in the prevention of wild rumors and false reports that would be daily features were it not for the corrective influence of the press. Again, the absence of the newspapers has had a discouraging effect upon business, and upon every other line of the city's activity. Those newspaperless days have been enough to give Winnipeg people a much higher opinion of the press than they have hitherto entertained.

LORD GREY'S LETTER ON THE AMERICAN SITUATION

Full Text of Ambassador's Communication to the London Times -- No Objection to Increase in American Vote in League -- A Defence of the Senate -- Importance of Having America in League

LONDON, Feb. 2.—Lord Grey of Fallodon, British Ambassador to Washington, now in England, has written the following letter to the London Times:

"Sir—Nothing, it seems to me, is more desirable in international politics than a good understanding between the democracy of the United States on the one hand and the democratic Great Britain and her self-governing Dominions, and, I hope we may add Ireland, on the other. Nothing would be more disastrous than misunderstanding and estrangement.

"There are some aspects of the position in the United States with regard to the League of Nations which are not wholly understood in Britain. I am in hope that as a result of my recent stay in Washington I may be able to make the position better understood. I venture to offer the following observations. They represent only my own personal opinion; nothing more. They are given simply as those of a private individual.

"In Great Britain and the Allied Countries there are naturally impatience and disappointment at the delay of the United States in ratifying the peace treaty and the covenant of the League of Nations. It is perhaps not generally recognized here that there are also great impatience and disappointment in the United States. Nowhere is the impasse caused by the deadlock between the President and Senate, more keenly regretted than in the United States, where there is a strong, even urgent, desire on the part of public opinion to see a way out of that impasse found which will be both honorable to America and helpful to the world.

"It would be well to understand the real difficulties with which the people of the United States have been confronted. In the clear light of understanding, what seemed to be disagreeable features of the situation will assume a more favorable and intelligent aspect. Let us first get rid of one misunderstanding. No charge of bad faith or of repudiating signatures can be brought against the action of the United States. The Senate, by the American Constitution, is an independent body—an independent element in the treaty-making power. Its refusal to ratify the treaty cannot expose either itself or the country to a charge of bad faith or of repudiation, nor is it fair to represent the United States as holding up the treaty solely from motives of party politics, thereby sacrificing the interests of other nations for this consideration.

Party Politics in United States.

"It is true that there are party politics and personal animosities in the United States. An American who saw much of England between 1890 and 1896 said that the present condition of politics in the United States reminded him of what he had observed in London when Gladstone first advocated home rule for Ireland. Party politics and the personal animosities arising out of them operate in every democratic country. They are factors varying from time to time in degree, but always more or less active, and they operate upon every public question which is at all controversial. They are, however, not the sole or even the prime cause of the difficulty in the United States about the League of Nations. Nor is it true to say that the United States is moved solely by self-interest to a disregard of higher ideals. In the United States, as in other countries, there are cross-currents and backwaters in national life and motives. It would be well, therefore, for reason both of truth and expediency, to concentrate on the real underlying causes of the Senate's reservations in ratifying the covenant of the League of Nations.

"First, there is in the United States a conservative feeling for tradition, policy, and one of those traditions, consecrated by the advice of Washington, is to abstain from foreign and particularly from European entanglements. Even for nations which have been used to European alliances, the League of Nations is felt to be something of a new departure. This is still more true for the United States, which has hitherto held aloof from all outstanding alliances. The League of Nations is not merely a plunge into the unknown, but a plunge into something which its historical advice and tradition have hitherto positively disapproved. Hence this desire for some qualification and reservation. The American constitution not only makes possible, but under certain conditions inevitable, conflict between the executive and the Legislature. It would be possible, if the Covenant of the League of Nations stands for a President in some future years to commit the making power. Its refusal to ratify the treaty cannot expose either itself or the country to a charge of bad faith or of repudiation, nor is it fair to represent the United States as holding up the treaty solely from motives of party politics, thereby daily responsible to the representative authority of the House of Commons, and where in case of conflict between the House of Commons and the Government, the latter must either immediately give way or public opinion must decide between them and assert itself by an immediate general election. But in the United States it is otherwise. The contingency is within the region of practical politics. They have reason, and, if they so desire, the right to provide against it.

"What, then, may be fairly expected from the United States in this great crisis of world policy? For a crisis, indeed, it is. If the participation of the United States was enormously helpful in securing victory in the critical months of 1918, its help will be even more essential to secure stability in peace. Without the United States the present League of Nations may become little better than a League of Allies for armed self-defence against a revival of Prussian militarism, or against the military sequel to Bolshevism in Russia. Bolshevism is despotism; despotisms have a tendency to become militarism as the great French revolution proved.

Great Object to Prevent War.

"The great object of the League of Nations is to prevent war and to discourage from the beginning the growth of aggressive armaments which would lead to war. Without the United States it will have neither the overwhelming physical nor the moral force behind it that it should have. Or, if it has physical force, it will not have the same degree of moral force, for it will be predominantly a European and not a world organization, and it will be tainted with all the inter-racial jealousies of Europe.

"Without the League of Nations the old order of things may be revived, old consequences will recur, there will again be some great catastrophe of war in which the United States will find itself compelled to intervene for the same reason and at no less or even greater cost than in 1917.

"It would be a mistake to suppose that the American people are prepared or wish to withdraw their influence in world affairs. Americans differ among themselves as to whether they could or ought to have entered the war sooner than they did. It is neither necessary nor profitable for foreigners to discuss this point now. What is common to all Americans and to all foreigners who know the facts is the unselfish whole-hearted spirit in which the American nation acted when it came into the war. The immediate adoption of compulsory military service, and even more, the rationing of food and fuel in those millions and millions of households over such a vast area—not by compulsion, but by purely voluntary action in response to an appeal which had no compulsion behind it—is a remarkable and even astonishing example of national spirit and idealism. That spirit is still there. It is as much a part of the nature and possibilities of the American people as any other characteristic.

"It would be a great mistake to suppose that because the citizens of the United States wish to limit their obligations they therefore propose to themselves to play a small part in the League of Nations. If they enter the League as a willing partner with limited obligations, it may well be more fruitful than if they entered as a reluctant partner, who felt that her hand had been forced. It is by this spirit, in this hope and in this expectation that I think we should approach and are justified in approaching the consideration of the American reservations. The difficulties and dangers which Americans foresee in it will probably never arise or be felt by them when they are once in the League. In the same way the weakening and injury to the League which some of its best friends apprehended from American reservations would not be Warns Against a Mistake.

"If the outcome of this long controversy in the Senate is to offer cooperation in the League of Nations it would be the greatest mistake to refuse that co-operation because of the conditions attached to it, and when that co-operation is accepted let it not be accepted in a spirit of pessimism. The most vital considerations are that representatives should be appointed to the council of the League of Nations by all nations when they are once in the League; that the representatives should be men who are inspired by the ideals for which we entered the war, and that the representatives should be instructed and supported in that same spirit of equity and freedom by the governments and the public opinion of the countries who are new partners in peace. There is one particular reservation which must give rise to some difficulty in Great Britain and her self-governing dominions. It is that which has reference to the six British votes in the assembly of the League of Nations. The self-governing dominions are full members of the League. They will admit, and Great Britain can admit, no qualification whatever of that right. Whatever the self-governing dominions may be in theory and in the letter of the constitution, they have in effect ceased to be colonies in the old sense of the word. They are free communities, independent as regards all their own affairs, and partners in those which concern the Empire at large.

"To any provision which makes it clear that none of those British votes can be used in a dispute likely to lead to a rupture in which any part of the British Empire is involved no exception can be taken. That is the only reasonable interpretation of the covenant as it now stands. If any part of the British Empire is involved in a dispute with the United States, the latter will be unable to vote and all parts of the British Empire, precisely because they are partners, will be parties to that dispute and equally unable to vote. But as regards their rights to vote where they are not partners to the dispute, there can be no qualification, and there is a very general admission that the votes of the self-governing dominions would in most cases be found on the same side as that of the United States.

"It must not be supposed that in the United States there is any tendency to grudge the fact that Canada and the other self-governing dominions of the British Empire have votes, but any person with the smallest understanding of public affairs must realize the feeling created by the statement that the United States with several million more English-speaking citizens than there are in the whole British Empire, should have only one vote, while the British Empire has six votes.

"It may be sufficient to observe that the reservation of America does not in any way challenge the right of the self-governing dominions to exercise their votes, nor does it state that the United States will necessarily reject a decision in which those votes have been cast. It is therefore possible—I think it is even more than probable—that in practice no dispute will ever arise. Our object is to maintain the status of the self-governing dominions, not to secure a greater British than American vote, and we have no objection in principle to an increase of the American vote.

HOW DO YOU BUY YOUR MONEY?

How do you buy your money? For money is bought and sold. And each man barter himself on earth for his silver and shining gold. And by the bargain he makes with men, the sum of his life is told. Some buy their coins in a manly way, some buy them with honest toil; Some pay for their currency here on earth by tilling a patch of soil; Some buy it with copper and iron and steel, and some with barrels of oil. The good man buys it from day to day by giving the best he can; He coins his strength for his children's needs and lives to a simple plan. And he keeps some time for the home he makes and some for his fellow-man.

But some men buy it with women's tears, and some with a blasted name. And some will barter the joy of life for the fortune they hope to claim; And some are so mad for the clink of gold that they buy it with deeds of shame.

How do you buy your money? For money demands its price. And some men think when they purchase coin that they mustn't be over-nice— But beware of the man who would sell you gold at a shameful sacrifice!

A Notable Bridge Builder

Born at Houston in 1839, Sir William Arrol began to earn his living at the age of nine in a Johnstone cotton mill. Five years later he was apprenticed to a Paisley blacksmith, and when a journeyman he saw a great deal of England and Scotland. In West Scotland he found himself foreman in the boiler works of Laird & Sons at the age of 24, and ere he attained 30, he had laid the foundation of his world-famous works at Bridgeton, and set up as a bridge builder. The Caledonian Railway bridge at Bothwell was his first important contract, in the construction of which he put into execution several original ideas. Even more important was the contract for the same Company's bridge over the Clyde at the Broomielaw his mechanical drill and hydraulic rivetter proving invaluable. Soon he became the foremost bridge builder of his time. The collapse of the Tay Bridge, with heavy loss of life, gave him a unique opportunity to replace the first frail structure with one which would stand the stoutest blast. Hard on its completion came the more gigantic task of bridging the Forth, the completion of which entitled it to rank as one of the wonders of the world. It was at the opening of the latter on March 4, 1890, that King Edward, then Prince of Wales, announced that the builder was to be knighted. Another triumph, in which also great engineering difficulties were met and overcome, was the erection of the great Tower Bridge across the Thames. He then received orders which in the aggregate represented five years' work, one order being for the caissons in connection with the naval dockyard at Rosyth and the other for a large bridge across the river Trent. Sir William was disinclined to enter public life, but in 1895 he stood for South Ayrshire as a Unionist, and immediately gained the esteem of the House. He was married three times. On the date of his second marriage an important division was taken in the Commons and Sir William travelled from Scotland with his bride, and went to Westminster and voted. His fellow-Unionists marked his devotion to duty by presenting him with a handsome piece of silver plate. Though having no claims to scholarship, he was honoured by the Universities with the degrees of LL.D. and D.C.L., and was also elected F.R.S.E. He died at Ayr aged 74, on February 20, 1913.
