Mr. COCHRANE. Just sit down. When you are asked for information you make a long speech, and when you get a little criticism, you are ready to show temper. But you need not show it with me.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Flint). Address the Chair.

Mr. COCHRANE. If I have not treated you with all courtesy, Mr. Chairman, I grieve at it very much. I realize the dignity of your position. I am sorry you have not even a more dignified position; but I dare say if you swallow all the principles you advocated in opposition, and be a good boy, perhaps you will get it. Now, as a representative of the people, I want to tell the hon. minister that he does not own this country; he is not running a little show in the maritime provinces. He may have mortgaged the country, but the people will own a little of it even when he gets through. I can tell him that the time is not far distant when he will be relieved of the responsibility of office, and will no longer insult the members of this House with so much of his impertinence. The minister is laughing, and it amuses me to see him laugh, for he generally gets cross. What I want to know is why this money is being given for this work, and that question has been asked half a dozen times. The minister says that the work cost a lot of money. Of course it cost money. I remember, however, when the subvention to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was first proposed in this House, there was a great deal of talk by hon. gentlemen opposite about the enormous sums of money that had been given to the Grand Trunk, and we would never get a dollar of it back.

If the Grand Trunk Railway saw fit to reconstruct that bridge it was their own business and not ours. We have paid all this country could afford to pay as a subvention to the Grand Trunk Railway. Now, why, after giving a subvention of $300,000, do you want to give them $200,000 more when you are paying them $40,000 a year for the user of that bridge? When a subvention was given to the bridge across the Ottawa River and they asked for more aid, you put in the condition that the people should have a right to travel over that bridge; but here you are granting $200,000 extra to a toll bridge. Why do you not put in a condition that the people should travel over the Victoria bridge free, and then you would get something for the people in return for this subvention? While I have sat in this House I have never raised my voice against spending money to develop the resources of the country, but I now enter my solemn protest against subsidizing the reconstruction of a bridge that the country helped to build when I was a young man, and now, when my head is hoary with age we are still to subsidize that road to the extent of $200,000 more. So far as I am concerned, if I get a chance I will record my vote against it

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I insist on getting some statement as to why this money is granted for that bridge. I have asked the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to give us some explanation, and he talked about twenty minutes and never touched the point. Now, if the hon. gentleman wants to save time he will give the House a reason why this money is granted. I have asked for an explanation, and must have it. If the minister refuses to give it, I, for one, am prepared to remain here until I get it. I am going to insist upon it, and I will stay upon my feet till I get an answer, if it takes all night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman had allowed me to continue without interruption the explanation I was giving, we would have been through with it long ago; but he got up twice and was in the act of getting up the third time when I sat down to make way for him. Now, there is the same reason for giving assistance toward the reconstruction of this bridge as there is for giving assistance to any other bridge in Canada. You are not dealing with a bridge of a few hundred feet long, with three or four piers, but you are dealing with a bridge two miles in length, the reconstruction of which has cost over two millions of money. As the Prime Minister has said, we considered that having regard to all the circumstances, having regard to the fact that the company paid back into the treasury of Canada, we felt that 25 per cent of that cost would not be an excessive sum to grant them, and that amounts to $500,000. My hon. friend must bear in mind that this is an enormous work. It was not simply in the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway Company that this new superstructure was placed upon the piers. I maintain that this work of reconstruction was as much in the interest of the country as was the original construction. The reconstruction has enabled a great deal more business to be done by the people of Canada over it than could be done before. The bridge has now a double track which makes it possible and safe for a greatly increased number of trains to be taken over it in the course of twenty-four hours. It had practically reached the limit of safety beyond which it was not possible for them to take any more trains. With the double track and the additional accommodation, they will be able to do all the Intercolonial Railway business, all the Grand Trunk Railway business, and all the business of the other roads having connection with the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Where was the iron made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About ten million pounds was made in Canada by the Dominion Bridge Company, and two or three other companies.

Mr. HAGGART. Does not the material that enters into that bridge pay duty?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think to only a limited degree.

Mr. BERGERON. When we were first called upon to aid in the reconstruction of that bridge I understood that the street railway would be allowed to pass over it. I remember that one of the strongest arguments advanced in favour of granting assistance to that bridge was that the street railway would be able to cross it to St. Lambert and Longueuil. Now the hon. gentleman tells us he hears they will not allow the street railway to cross,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I have not heard they would not; but I understand they had not yet allowed any electric tramways to use the bridge.

Mr. BERGERON. Why should they not allow it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it would be a somewhat dangerous thing, that is my own impression.

Mr. BERGERON. We have paid already $270,000, and we are called upon to pay $230,000 more, that is to say, the government are giving $500,000 for the renewal of that bridge which is after all the private property of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. We are paying $40,000 a year for the privilege of passing the Intercolonial Railway over that bridge, and still if an elector of Canada, who has paid his share of that money, wants to cross that bridge he has to pay the tolls which have been read here to-day. Now, I am surprised that my hon. friend from Chambly-Vercheres (Mr. Geoffrion) does not rise in his place and exact from the government an assurance that they will do everything in their power to procure this privilege for the people of Montreal and the towns on the other side. We are paying $500,000, we are paying $40,000 a year, and still if a man wants to cross that bridge either on foot or in a carriage, he has to pay a heavy toll. The street railway company of Montreal, which obtained permission to cross to St. Lambert on the other side, and other street railway companies which have obtained charters here with the intention of crossing that bridge are now refused permission to do so.

I ask my hon. friend, and I am putting the question in a public-spirited way: Is it fair that the people of this country should be treated in this way? Would it not be better, when the government are doing so much for an old and rich company which has been subsidized by this country to the tune of $28,000,000, upon which we have never got one cent of interest, when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals asks parliament to pay them $500,000 as a bonus for the reconstruction of a bridge, when we are paying them $40,000 a year for allowing the Intercolonial Railway trains to pass over that bridge, that we should exact some concessions in return for the benefit of the people who desire to use that bridge? Every person who crosses on foot or drives over is called upon to pay toll, and the Street Railway Company of Montreal, or any other street railway company, is denied the privilege of crossing over the bridge, a privilege which it was promised to the people of Longueuil and St. Lambert would be granted. My hon. friend from Chambly and Vercheres (Mr. Geoffrion) should stand up and ask the hon. minister to see that the Grand Trunk Railway Company reduce their rates and allow street cars to pass over their bridge. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said that he was ready to make an amendment to the clause, providing that the company should have their rates approved by the Governor in Council. My hon. friend has surely not thought that out. He has the power already of doing that, and what is the use of putting it in the clause? The only effective way of providing for such an approval of rates is to stipulate it in the resolution. That will have precedence over everything. You already have the right to regulate rates by the Railway Act. You are empowered by the Railway Act to approve, or disapprove of any arrangement come to by any railway or bridge company which has been subsidized by the government. If my hon. friend from Chambly and Vercheres and my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Prefontaine) are satisfied with this little amendment, that it shall be left to the Governor in Council, they are satisfied with very little indeed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) has made a statement, which I think, perhaps, he has not considered. I am entirely unaware of the fact that the government is in any position to impose its will upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company outside of a provision such as I have proposed to the chairman of the committee to regulate tolls as respects vehicular traffic over the bridge. All the power that the Railway Act gives to the Governor in Council is to regulate railway rates.

Mr. BERGERON. And tolls.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Railway rates and tolls.

Mr. BERGERON. That is by the Railway Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But that would not cover foot passenger or vehicular tolls.

Mr. POWELL. Would not the government have power to make it one of the conditions of the grant?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have some doubt as to whether it would without having it in this Bill, and I am proposing to put it in the Bill for that purpose.

Mr. POWELL. For greater caution?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. But the hon. gentleman has that right already.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In reference to the question of tramways the hon. gentleman said that the Grand Trunk Railway Company have refused to allow tramcars to be run across the bridge.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not saying that. I am saying that the resolution of the council of Longueuil, which was addressed to my hon. friend, and he admitted that he had received it, says so. The council of Longueuil declared that the Electric Railway Company of Montreal had been refused permission to pass over the bridge. I am not saying it; I do not know anything about it. I am taking the resolution of the council of Longueuil, a copy of which has been sent to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, the hon. member for Chambly and Verchères and to the right hon. Prime Minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood the hon. gentleman to state it, but I understand now that he accepts the statement contained in the resolution referred. There is nothing but the resolution which he sets forth that they did refuse. I do not know that they did refuse. I have had no statement from the Montreal Street Railway Company to that effect, and I do not know the ground at all, if they have refused, upon which they have done so. The subject is probably one which would require to be well considered. It may be that they would have good reason for refusing to allow an electrical car system to use their tracks. They have only two tracks and you would require that the bridge should be equipped in such a way as that it might be used electrically, and it might be regarded, in view of the very large traffic over the bridge, as a very dangerous proceeding to have electric cars running over and have these cars mixed up with railway trains. That might be regarded as a very serious objection. As to the matter that the hon. gentleman has referred to, I would have no objection at all to putting myself in communication with the Grand Trunk Railway Company to ascertain whether any application of that kind has been made and refused, and if so, upon what ground the refusal has been based. I should be very glad to make the necessary inquiries. It is only within a day or two that the resolution came to hand and I have had no opportunity of looking into the question at all.

Mr. VICTOR GEOFFRION (Chambly and Verchères). Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to say that I think the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) is right when he says that he has not power to regulate traffic on the bridge or to force the railway company to allow an electric railway company to put down another track upon the bridge. I am ready to support the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) in his contention that we ought to insist upon the people on the south side of the river being provided with the accommodation which they require, and which has not been accorded them by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. We have already done a great deal in adopting the proposition of the hon. Minister of Railways for them. I hope that the government will see that the tolls are properly regulated, and if I thought that this parliament had the right to force the company to alter its bridge so as to permit a track being laid for electric cars. I would be the first to urge that it should be done. I know that it would be a great convenience to the people living on the south side of the St. Lawrence River to have the street railway crossing over the bridge. I hope the government will study this matter carefully and see if they can force the Grand Trunk Railway Company to allow street cars to cross over the bridge. Unfortunately, I do not think we have any such right, and I have arrived at this conclusion after having looked into the case.

Mr. BERGERON. We have every possible right here. We can do anything we want to in this parliament, particularly when we are voting money. When we are giving money to anybody we can impose conditions.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Has my hon. friend looked into the Railway Act upon this question?

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly. When we are granting $230,000 the hon. minister can impose any condition that he wants to. There is nothing to prevent him from doing so. It is a natural law that when you give you name the conditions upon which you give. My hon. friend is very anxious about these different electric railway tracks. The first time that this proposition was mooted before the House the government were going to arrange with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for electrical tracks and it was understood that tracks should be put on that bridge for the use of electric railways. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), who knows a good deal about the matter, can correct me if I am wrong when I state, that the bridge was first built with that intention. There is a space on each side of the bridge for an electric railway track, but instead of having that, they have made a footpath and carriage way out of it, for what reason, I do not know. The Grand Trunk Railway Company apparently have made up their minds not to put on electric tracks, and we cannot force them to do so, except on an occasion like this, when we are voting them money. We are now called upon to give $230,000 in addition to the $270,000 we have given them already, and the $40,000 a year which we pay them for ninety-nine years. If my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion), wants to obtain any concession for his people now is the time to force the Grand Trunk Railway Company to put down an electric track, and afterwards they can lease it to the Montreal Street Railway, or to any other railway they please, which will give the people of Montreal South the street car facilities which they need, with the city of Montreal. I tell my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion), in a friendly way, that if he wants to get that done, now is the time, and he may have it for the asking.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is quite right in his suggestion that if the parliament of Canada chooses to annex to the grant, a condition that they shall place a tramway track on the bridge, we are empowered to do it. But what my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion) had reference to was, as to our power to regulate or control the passenger or vehicular tolls, and I agree with him that under the Railway Act, we have no power to do that. I do not know sufficiently about the effect of compelling the company to lay down a street car track, to express an opinion about it. We know now that they have two tracks, and that there is not room for more than two tracks, unless you interfere with the vehicular traffic. That is my impression, at all events, but anyway under the circumstances it would be very unwise to act in the direction which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) suggests. It seems to me too clear for argument, that it would be a most dangerous thing and a most unsafe thing, to compel them to use the railway tracks for tram-cars.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not what I want. There is sufficient width on the bridge without that.

The PRIME MINISTER. You would have to put your tram-cars on the arms.

Mr. BERGERON. The member for Lincoln can tell you all about the width of the bridge.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. GIBSON. It is sixteen feet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), says there are sixteen feet clear on each side. If you put down a tram-car in that space you will have to destroy the utility of the highway for passenger purposes.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all.

Mr. GIBSON. Of course you will.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should think so, and you would have a rebellion on the part of the people who use that for passenger and vehicular purposes.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe the Minister of Railways wants to do what is right, but I would ask him, is it not a fact that when the rebuilding of that bridge was first spoken of, it was well understood that there would be two tracks for electric railways? Why was the idea changed? It must have been done for some purpose. One of the first arguments in favour of voting the immense amount of money which has been voted by this parliament for the renewal of that bridge, was that it would provide accommodation for electric cars, and the proof of it is, that the property on the south shore of the river went up by leaps and bounds when that was announced.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is right to the extent that there was a rumour at the time that the bridge could be used for electric cars as well as for steam cars. But I never heard that it was intended to put an electric railway on the arms of the bridge, which were designed for foot-passengers and vehicular traffic. I do not know that the arms of the bridge are strong enough for that. It was contended at one time that the tracks now used for steam purposes should be used for electric cars, but I should imagine there would be great difficulty about that.

Mr. BERGERON. I take it for granted that gentlemen on both sides want to do what is best in this matter, and there is no question that the people of Longueuil and St. Lambert desire to have an electric railway across that bridge. It now seems from what the minister (Mr. Blair) says, that the Grand Trunk Railway refuses to do that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do not quote me as saying that. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, we must take it for granted from the signs which are apparent, that they will not allow it. The council at Longueuil must be well informed as to the matter, and I have here the report of their opinion, as to that. My friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Prefontaine) and my hon. friend from Chambly (Mr. Geoffrion), must be en courant as to whether the people of the south side of the St. Lawrence tried to obtain the passage of electric cars over that bridge. It is a very easy matter to settle the question as to whether there can be electric cars there or not. The engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway, or the chief engineer of Railways and Canals, can very soon report as to whether it is possible to have an electric railway on that bridge, and as there is no hurry to pass this vote to-night, it can well be left over for a short time. When we are called upon to vote such an immense amount of money, we should, at least, give satisfaction to the people who are most interested in the matter, and that would be a very easy way to settle it.

Mr. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Maison-neuve). I quite understand that when the vote was first asked, it was understood that tramways would run across the bridge.

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It was said in this House, and repeated in the press and in the county of Chambly, but I think the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), is under a wrong impression as regards the building of tramway tracks. It was understood that the tramways would have access to the bridge on the tracks used for the railways.

Mr. BERGERON. I never understood that.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no other way of putting tramway tracks on the Victoria bridge as it is constructed now. Besides, vehicles cannot pass each other on one side. There is only room for a vehicle to go one way on one side and come back on the other side. So that there is no possibility of putting tracks on the bridge for an electric railway without completely destroying it for vehicular traffic. The question of allowing tramways to cross on the rails I think has been considered by the authorities of the Grand Trunk Railway. They have not yet come to any conclusion in the matter, and they may come to some arrangement with one of the tramway companies. It is a very serious question for the engineers to decide, whether it is possible to run both steam railways and electric tramways on that bridge at the same time. That is a matter that will have to be studied, and it may, perhaps, be arranged. There is no doubt that the general impression was when the bridge was built that tramways would have access to it. Of course, at present it is impossible.

Mr. GIBSON. As the hon. member for Beauharnois has several times referred to me in regard to the Victoria bridge, I may say that I am quite sure that every member of this House was under the impression that tram-cars would be able to use it. At the time the renewal of the bridge was in contemplation, there was no idea of the Grand Trunk granting to the Intercolonial Railway running powers over the bridge. As it stands to-day, there are only two tracks which tram-cars could possibly use, unless the vehicular traffic was destroyed entirely; for the only place where tracks could be placed for the tram-cars would be on the outlying trusses, and these were built only for vehicular traffic, which is calculated at about 2,000 pounds to the running foot. Then, the bridge is so constructed that if an electric system ran between the railway trains, the present signals on the bridge would be destroyed. The bridge is used almost continuously by the traffic of the Grand Trunk itself, the Central Vermont and the Intercolonial; and, in my opinion, it would be a most dangerous experiment for parliament to force the railway company to provide for a system of trolley cars upon the Victoria bridge. There is no possibility of running them over the top of the bridge; because the centre span is of a different height from the others. It was at first anticipated that a continuous level would be maintained on the top chords of the bridge, so that in future it might be arranged to run electric cars there; but the question of the navigation of the river arose, and the shipping interest waited upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and also on the Minister of Railways and Canals, and insisted on the headway of the bridge being maintained at its old level. It was necessary in consequence, to put in a solid steel floor system, in order to make it as shallow as possible, and a much higher truss on the central span—twenty or thirty feet higher than the other trusses. There is no possibility of getting over the difficulty that I can see, unless a new truss was put in for that purpose. The central span is 100 or 120 feet longer than the others, so as not to interfere with the navigation of the river, and the truss had to be made higher in order to carry that long span; and every member of this House will agree that the navigation of the river is paramount to the interest of the railway. For these reasons, I do not think the Grand Trunk Railway Company, without going to a tremendous expense, could provide accommodation for trolley cars. A very large fence, almost up to the level of the car windows, separates the tracks from the highway, so that the horses shall not be disturbed by the passing trains; in fact, the trains are almost hidden from them. If trolley cars were put on the outside of the bridge, it would be impossible for vehicles to use it.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). While the hon. member for Beauharnois is looking up a point in Hansard, I have just a word to say. This is a new departure, and in common with other gentlemen on this side of the House, I have been listening for some justification for this exceptional grant. The hon. leader of the House and the Minister of Railways have given us three or four pretexts, but I do not think they have given us their reason. What has been urged is first, the very large cost of this work; secondly, the duty that was paid on account of the company being obliged to bring the iron into the country; and, thirdly, the construction of the approaches and additional rip-rap. As respects the very large cost of the work, I find that if the annuity of $40,000 is capitalized, it comes to $1,391,000; and if to this added the $500,000 which will be granted when the present estimate passes, we shall have a present grant to the company of $1,891,000. The First Minister has said the cost of the bridge up to date is about $1,900,000; so that the company, by our grants and annuities we have agreed to pay them, are recouped the whole cost of the construction of the bridge. Passing to the question of the duty, it was said that the company found they could not get the iron in Canada and were obliged to import it. There is nothing in this, because I ask the hon. gentleman if the bridge companies do not import the whole of their iron. There has not been a bridge constructed in this country of any importance for the last ten years, or, for that matter, ever constructed, in which the iron has not been imported. It is imported either from the United States or from across the Atlantic, and the duty has to be paid under any circumstances, and this is simply putting forward a pretext for a reason. As to the rebuilding of the bridges, I call attention to this fact that the approaches to the old tubular bridge were not interfered with by the construction of the new bridge. They were in as good condition as ever. They were ample for all the railway purposes of the new bridge, and the additional approaches and rip-rapping were caused entirely by the construction of the highway on either side of the bridge. What then are we asked to do? We are asked to give a grant towards a purely provincial purpose, the construction of a highway. That is a new departure, which is entirely unjustifiable.

Now, as respects the objection raised by the hon. gentleman from Grey, that this work has been completed, there is a great deal in that point. The bridge has been completed. We give grants for what purpose? We give grants to railway companies for the construction of their lines and bridges because the financial status of the road or the earnings of the particular work are insufficient of themselves to guarantee the completion of that work. But, in this case, the company have not only completed the work, but their revenues have so increased since that they actually have been paying bondholders, who for years previously had received nothing. It is not because the Grand Trunk Railway requires it that we are giving this grant, for the Grand Trunk Railway is in a most flourishing condition during these last few years. There is, therefore, no reason for giving it. That company is not in financial difficulties on account of this work. Its revenues are very buoyant. And yet we are asked to take this new departure in the history of parliament. If we grant this subsidy, what is to prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway coming to-morrow, and with equally good reason saying: The railway bridge that we constructed across the St. Lawrence above Montreal was a work of such vast extent, that we think the company should be recouped to a certain extent by parliament. And we should have no reason for refusing that request were we to grant the application of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. In the latter part of the discussion with reference to the electric railways, we have lost sight of the preceding discussion which was on an important point. I stated shortly after dinner that, if my recollection was not at fault, the president of the Grand Trunk Railway had informed the shareholders in Great Britain that very advantageous terms had been granted by the Ottawa government—so advantageous as to practically relieve the company of the cost of reconstruction and repairing its bridge. I find now that the statement was much stronger than I thought it was, and I will read it to the House:

Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, in the course of his address to the shareholders in London, said, among other things, that the Grand Trunk Railway had agreed with the Ottawa authorities that the government, having extended the Intercolonial to St. Hyacinthe, the Grand Trunk Railway would grant the government road running powers into Montreal over the Victoria bridge, on terms which he believed would enable the bridge to be double-tracked and practically constructed without a cent's cost to the company.

The paper went on further:

The announcement of these favourable terms was greeted with applause loud and long. When it had subsided, Sir Charles proceeded, stating that in addition to what he had announced, the Dominion and Quebec government were each contributing 15 per cent to the cost of renewing the bridge.

So that the arrangement made, by which we were to pay $40,000 per year for the bridge, was so advantageous, in the opinion of the president of the Grand Trunk Railway, that it would enable the bridge to be double-tracked and practically reconstructed without a cent of cost to the company, and then that 15 per cent in addition upon the cost, would be contributed by the Ottawa and Quebec governments.

Mr. HAGGART. What year?

Mr. FOSTER. 1897. I am very sorry indeed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should have left the House. But here is the position to which we have come in connection with this subsidy. Up to the present time there has been an agreement, and the principle was acted upon in accord with that agreement, that these bridges, costing over a certain amount, would get an extra subsidy of 15 per cent of the cost, not to exceed so much. The Prime Minister thought that that was not quite fair, because, he said, this is a bridge which has cost twice as much as the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge. Well, if it has cost twice as much, we give twice as large a subsidy as the amount is arrived at by a percentage. So that if this cost $2,000,000, it would get 15 per cent, or $300,000, while a bridge that cost $1,000,000 would only get $150,000. Being on a percentage basis, it was fair all round, because the one that cost the most would get the larger subsidy. But to-day you are introducing the principle that you may subsidize bridges, if the government take it into their heads to do it, to the extent of 25 per cent of their cost. And if you subsidize one bridge to the extent of 25 per cent of its cost, what will hinder you from subsidizing another bridge to the same extent. Will not the principle and the rule hereafter be that each company will get 25 per cent if it has sufficient political influence, because that is the precedent established. You are altering the basis entirely upon which this parliament has heretofore been giving subsidies to bridges on lines of railway. You are doing more than that. The rule has been heretofore that you would give subsidies only to railways and bridges that were not constructed. But you are introducing the principle of subsidizing to the extent of 25 per cent of its cost a bridge, and a railway in connection with it, which has been in operation for scores of years, and which is consequently not a new bridge, but simply a reconstruction of an old one. Therefore, every railway company which requires to double-track and repair and reconstruct its large bridges, will have a perfect right, under this precedent, to ask the government for a subsidy.

These are two things that we are doing. On what principle? None has been stated. The absurd statement has been made by the Prime Minister that you ought to give this company a larger subsidy because they have been paying duties on the one hand while we have been paying them the subsidy on the other. That has been met by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) who shows that this bridge at Montreal is of material, that is imported by the bridge company, and that duty is paid whether it is imported by the bridge company or by the railway company, as in this case. What reason is there why, having made arrangement to pay $40,000 in perpetuity as a contribution toward the first cost, or the reconstruction cost, which represents the capital sum of $1,300,000, now we are to supplement that with $500,000, and thus we are to pay practically the whole cost of the reconstruction of this bridge. There is no use talking longer. This is the statement made by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) by the hon. member for Westmoreland and myself. It is the statement which must go to the country, and the country will have to judge of it. But, I do wish the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) were here that he might have those question categorically put to him, and that he might tell this House what he thinks of these changed conditions. Does he approve of them? Does the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) approve of them? If he does he has made a complete volte face from his former profession. From the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) we expect nothing better; from the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) we expect nothing better. Neither of these gentlemen grounds his actions upon principle, neither of them has the least notion of consistency. But there are some gentlemen in the Cabinet in who have had principles, and who, I hope, have them yet, and who have some regard for consistency. We have not heard from these gentlemen. Some of them have left the room while this discussion has been going on, while others say nothing. The country may judge. This is as I say a simply political vote which the government are taking out of the hard earnings of the people and giving to this company for the reconstruction of this bridge.

For a railway and traffic bridge over the Ottawa River at Nepean Point, between the city of Ottawa, Ontario, and the city of Hull, Quebec, upon condition that the bridge be so constructed as to provide suitable facilities, to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways and Canals, for free vehicular and foot passenger traffic, the same as upon a public highway, in addition to the $112,500 already granted, a sum not exceeding..... $100,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to insert in this some words which have become necessary by reason of the fact that this subsidy will be in addition to the previous subsidy. After the word 'granted' I move to insert:

Notwithstanding anything contained in the said Act, the subsidy hereby given, together with the grant of $112,500 under 61 Vic., chap. 4, to be paid upon the completion of the bridge and its approaches upon the report of the chief engineer of such completion and the recommendation of the minister.

Mr. POWELL. If you put in the word 'additional' before 'sum,' that would be sufficient.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there is a difficulty. The word 'bridge,' as interpreted in the Justice Department, as we are advised—and, of course, that would govern the Auditor General—means simply the structure from the water's edge on either side, and does not include the approaches.

Mr. SPROULE. When will this bridge be completed? It has been a long time in construction?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has; but I think, perhaps, not so much blame is to be attached to the company after all. They were delayed very much by two causes. My department delayed them until we had an inspection of the concrete which composed the piers. A good deal more delay arose in consequence of the objection that was taken to what was thought to be an interference with Major's Hill park. They were cutting away some of the side of the park, and we delayed them until we could satisfy ourselves that they were not going to impair the appearance of the park in any way. I think, altogether, we were the occasion of their losing some months of time.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the result of the investigation of the concrete? And what is the estimated cost of the bridge independent of the approaches?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The concrete was found satisfactory. The estimated cost of the bridge, when the work was started, independent of the approaches, was $750,000. But the increase in the material and in wages would add enough to the cost, I am informed, to bring it up to about $1,250,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the percentage the minister is giving in the case of this bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We were not basing this grant so much upon percentage as upon the consideration that the bridge would cost a good deal more than was anticipated. At the time application for the subsidy was originally made and the first assistance given, we estimated 15 per cent upon the cost would realize $112,000. Under this additional subsidy, we will probably be giving to the company in the neighbourhood of 18 or 20 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a dangerous principle here, as in the other. I find that the old grant for this bridge was fixed at 15 per cent of the cost, not exceeding $112,500. It appeared to be the settled policy of the government to give a subsidy of 15 per cent, upon the estimate given by the engineer to assist in building bridges. But now the minister gives as a reason for an additional subsidy that this bridge costs more than was estimated. I am afraid that this principle once conceded will be appealed to in every case in the future. All they will have to do is to come here and say: The bridge will cost more than we estimated, and therefore we want the government to give an additional grant. They have these precedents established which they can refer to for their justification.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the precedents will be found to have much effect in the way the hon. gentleman has stated, because we have precedents of the same kind scattered all through our subsidy legislation. There are numbers of instances in which grants have been made in aid of bridges of not more than 15 per cent of the cost.

Mr. FOSTER. Which ones are those?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Last year or the year before we gave a grant in aid of the Yamaska bridge for a fixed amount, irrespective of the 15 per cent. There have been several instances of that kind.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did not the hon. gentleman also put into the grant to the Grand Trunk Railway these words "for free vehicular and foot passenger traffic?" instead of referring the whole thing to the Governor General in Council?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was part of the arrangement in one case, and it was not in the other.

Mr. BERGERON. Why discriminate between the two?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One is two miles long and the other probably about 1,500 feet long.

Mr. HAGGART. I think there was a provision in the charter that the electric railways should have the right of use of this bridge; is that the case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so. But you see we are providing here that this traffic should be free, but the electric railway business is not free.

Mr. HAGGART. The reason you mentioned that at all is in order that it may be free.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to see the estimate confirmed by the hon. gentleman's department that the bridge and piers will cost $1,300,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Are you considering the approaches?

Mr. HAGGART. I want to know what the cost of the bridge and piers alone will be?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They originally estimated that the cost of the bridge would be about $750,000; but there has been, as everybody knows, an increase of 15 per cent in the price of material and, unfortunately for them, the increase had taken place after they had made their arrangements, and after they had got their subsidy.

Mr. HAGGART. Fifty per cent increase on the cost of the superstructure would never bring up the cost to $1,300,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say it would cost $1,300,000. We had a delegation of gentlemen interviewing the government on that subject. We had Mr. A. F. Gault, Mr. Hanson, Mr. Beemer, and some other gentlemen who are connected with this enterprise, and they represented to the government that by reason of the delays which have taken place, the prosecution of the work had been much retarded, that the prices of materials of all kinds, and of labour as well, had gone up considerably; and that altogether the cost of the bridge would be 50 per cent greater than the original estimate, and that consequently the bridge and the approaches would cost a million and a quarter dollars. That was an approximate estimate of those gentlemen.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of that delay was due to the government's action in testing the concrete?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Probably there was a month or two of delay. They made all possible progress. But there was considerable delay in consequence of difficulty in getting the right of way around the park. They think now they will be able to finish it this year.

To the Canadian Northern Railway Company, in further extension of their railway north of Swan River towards Prince Albert, North-west Territories, in addition to the grant by the Act 62-63 Vic., chap. 4, a further mileage not exceeding 100 miles ..... $320,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is an extension of the road built by Mann & Mackenzie. How far is that built up?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say just how much of the hundred miles has been built, but they say they will have 150 miles built this year from Swan River. From Swan River to Prince Albert must be 500 or 600 miles. If they add 100 miles to that which they have built, that will make 200 miles, and they will then have 300 miles more to build. My hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) thinks that I am fifty miles out of the way. It is not more than that any way.

For a railway from the westerly end of the Waskada branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Manitoba, further westward, not exceeding twenty miles..... $64,000

Mr. HAGGART. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The assistance now being authorized by the resolution is for the extension, as the resolution states, of Canadian Pacific Railway Company's branch, which now runs from Deloraine to Waskada. It stops on the easterly side of the Souris River. On the westerly side of the Souris River there is a district of country which has been settled for a great many years. Some ten or fifteen years ago a large number of people left that district on account of the lack of railway communication, but since that time the district has filled up again to a considerable extent. A great many plans have been made of late years, and strong efforts were made last year to have the Canadian Pacific Railway extend their branch, which was only built last year, from the present terminus, fifteen or twenty miles further on. The twenty miles which is now contemplated will be sufficient to furnish reasonable transportation facilities to the people of the whole district. I think this is a meritorious undertaking, because of the fact that the country is settled and the people have to transport their grain for a considerable distance at a very heavy loss to themselves.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has a petition from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company asking for the grant, and stating the necessity of it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To be frank with my hon. friend, I am not possessed of a petition from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are not the only company that have authority from parliament to build this line, and while it might be hoped that they would construct it, yet I think that would not be the sole dependence of the people in the locality.

Mr. INGRAM. I have received two or three letters from a gentleman living in the Swan River district, wanting to know when the plans were filed in the Railway Department in connection with the Canada Northern Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You mean for the extension?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have not been filed, because the route has not yet been determined.

Mr. INGRAM. Can the hon. gentleman tell me when the plans of the portion that is already built, were filed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not from memory, tell the date. Perhaps, if the hon. gentleman would like to get the information accurately, he will allow the question to stand, and I will get it to-morrow.

Mr. HAGGART. It is rather strange that you should take a grant to give to another railway company, if necessary, this sum of money?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not wish to do so.

Mr. HAGGART. You take power to give it to another railway company, if the Canadian Pacific Railway do not choose to construct it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is very important to get the road built.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a provincial government railway.

Mr. HAGGART. It seems to me strange, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company having built their road to this point, not seeing the use of extending it, and not asking for a bonus, the government should take a grant for the purpose of extending it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It very often happens that the company are not particular at all, but the people are anxious for the railway.

Mr. FOSTER. What other company would build twenty miles of railway from the leaving off point of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and without any other railway at the other extremity of the twenty miles?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has been known to be done.

For a railway from a point on the Alberta Railway and Coal Company's Railway towards Cardston, Alberta, N.W.T., for thirty miles of railway at $2,500 per mile..... $75,000

Mr. HAGGART. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my hon. friend will be good enough to look at the map on the Table, he will see the irrigating ditch which has been built by the Colonization Company. They have expended in cash, we are assured by Mr. Galt, a very large sum indeed, in the building of the irrigation ditch, $400,000. It occurs to me that this is an exceptionally important work, sure to make that section of country exceedingly fertile and productive. Settlers are beginning to come in, and arrangements are being made for a large population. I understand their irrigation canals are ninety miles in length. The population which this gentleman represents to us, is either in there, or is going in, will not be less than from 5,000 to 7,000 people.

Mr. HAGGART. How far is Cardston from Fort McLeod?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is quite a distance.

To the Kaslo and Lardo-Duncan Railway Company, for a railway from Duncan Lake towards Lardo or Arrow Lake, British Columbia, or from Lardo to Arrow Lake, not exceeding thirty miles.. $96,000

Mr. HAGGART. What company is the Kaslo and Lardo-Duncan Railway Company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a company incorporated by the British Columbia legislature. I was about to propose that the words 'to the Kaslo and Lardo-Duncan Railway Company' be struck out, so that it may be open to the government to make an arrangement with either that company or any other company. The Canadian Pacific Railway are in the neighbourhood, and they may possibly be willing to undertake the construction of this road as part of their system. This is a section of country which is exceptionally valuable in minerals, and this is with the view of making these accessible.

Mr. BLAIR.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the only subsidy given to a railway in British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there an application received for a subsidy from Wellington to Cape Scott, at the head of Vancouver Island?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is Mr. Dunsmuir's road?

Mr. SPROULE. It was rumoured that a subsidy was promised for that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think we had any application from the company, and it did not appear to us that there was any pressing urgency for it at present.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand from the minister there was no application from this company for a subsidy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is my recollection. I thought I had the papers here, but I find I have not, and I cannot furnish the hon. gentleman any definite information about it. What request we had was not from the company if I remember aright. It did not appear as though the company were moving in the matter and under the circumstances we did not feel that it was an urgent case.

Mr. HAGGART. If we are to judge from the wording of the resolution there is nothing to prevent you giving the subsidy to an American company.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. HAGGART. You have the power.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, we would have the power no doubt.

Mr. HAGGART. Well, the wording is very objectionable. If it is the intention to give it to the Canadian Pacific Railway, why not say so?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not want to force it upon a railway company.

Mr. HAGGART. Well, you came pretty near forcing it upon them in the preceding resolution. It is not the intention of parliament to give power to the government to give subsidies to an American line of railway. Will the minister give me an assurance that he does not intend to do so.

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not understand what the hon. gentleman means about an American company, but, of course, any company has to have a corporate existence in Canada which an American company would not. I could not give an assurance that the government will not give a subsidy to a company which has Americans in it.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not speaking about that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) may rest assured that we will safeguard in every possible way anything that will imperil the national interest.

Mr. HAGGART. You could give this subsidy to a provincial railway company which connects with the American system of roads, and we should guard against that. We should keep that territory for our own people. In view of the assurance given by the minister I have no objection.

To the Restigouche and Western Railway, for the company's railway, in addition to the fifteen miles subsidized by the Act 62-63 Vic., chap. 7, on the easterly section of the line, and in continuation from the westerly end of the said fifteen miles a further distance of fifteen miles towards the St. John River; and for the said railway, in addition to the twelve miles subsidized by the said chapter on the westerly section of the said line, a further distance from the easterly end thereof of fifteen miles towards Campbellton, N.B., not exceeding thirty miles ..... $96,000

Mr. HAGGART. There is no overlapping in this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman can rest assured that there is no overlapping that would injure the object we have in view.

Mr. POWELL. What gap would this leave?

Mr. McALISTER. One hundred and ten miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would leave the distance between Campbellton and the St. John River. There has been 37½ miles subsidized altogether, and we are adding now 30 miles.

Mr. McALISTER. I thought there were 47½ miles subsidized?

For a line of railway from St. Charles Junction on the Intercolonial Railway towards the St. Francis branch of the Temiscouata Railway, Quebec, not exceeding forty-five miles, and from the mouth of the St. Francis River, N.B. westerly towards St. Charles Junction, fifteen miles, in all not exceeding sixty miles ..... $192,000

Mr. HAGGART. Is it the intention of the government to build another railway in the Temiscouata district when you have a railway from Riviere du Loup across?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This starts from the St. Charles junction.

Mr. HAGGART. I have no doubt whatever that the proper way to construct the road in the first instance is from the St. Charles Branch into that section of the country. Unfortunately, we built a line of railway already from Riviere du Loup on which the grades are so excessive that the road is practically useless. I point out to the minister that he is building two roads into that section of the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are going through an entirely different section of the country, and a section which is very fertile, and you are making the line thirty or forty miles shorter.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, no.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). Mr. Chairman, with your permission and the permission of the House I will give a few words of explanation as regards the territory through which this line of railway will pass. The principal portion of it, from St. Charles Junction going eastward, passes through my county. The Intercolonial Railway runs through three different points in my county—St. Charles, seven miles from the St. Lawrence River, St. Michael's, four and a half miles, and St. Vallier, four miles. My county extends to the boundary of the state of Maine. Back of the height of land, called the Alleghanies, or Blue Mountains, runs an immense valley, extending all the way from the county of Beauce to New Brunswick. In that part of the country there are three extensive parishes with a population of 7,000, and these people have to travel by vehicles all the way to Quebec, that is, sixty miles, in order to get to market. They have no railway accommodation of any kind, and they have to go over a range of mountains 1,800 feet above the level of the St. Lawrence River. For the last twenty years these people have been promised railway accommodation, but they have never got it. It might be thought that the Intercolonial Railway would have served all the requirements of that part of the country, but that is a great mistake, which is apparent to any one who travels through it. It is a fine country, as far as cultivation is concerned, and heavily timbered.

Men from New Brunswick and from the United States have immense limits there, and they float their timber down by the St. John and Doaquam rivers. This railway runs from St. Charles Junction eastward, and forms an open angle with the Intercolonial. In my county there are three parishes distant fully forty miles from the Intercolonial Railway—the parishes of St. Magloire, St. Philemon and Buckland. In that part of the country there are in every parish two or three creameries or cheese factories. The valley through which this railway will run is sufficient in extent to afford accommodation for about one hundred parishes, but people have been leaving many of those parishes and going to the Lake St. John district where they get railway accommodation. In my county, election after election, railway accommodation has been promised to the people who have been there twenty-five or thirty years; in 1896 it was promised in every one of those parishes. All that part of the country, which is from fifty to seventy miles from the Intercolonial Railway, is going to receive the benefit of this railway, and every man who knows that part of the country will realize what a great boon it will be.

Mr. POWELL. What will the length of the gap be after these portions are built?

Mr. TALBOT. I could not exactly say.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The length of the whole line will be 130 miles after the connection is made.

Mr. HAGGART. What would the distance be from Rivière du Loup to the common point of junction on the main line?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If you take the common point of junction at Edmundston, the distance from Rivière du Loup is eighty-four miles. This will be the shortest line. I agree with the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals in the statement he made that it is rather unfortunate that the line of the Intercolonial was not originally built in that way, because it was established in this parliament years ago beyond the shadow of a doubt that so far as grades and curves and facilities of construction were concerned, it was the most direct and economical route to follow, while the Temiscouata Railway ran straight across from the River St. John via Lake Temiscouata to the River St. Lawrence at River du Loup. But it is not fair to say that this is an additional line covering the same territory or accommodating the same people. This road is serving a different section of country entirely, and an important section. I speak of it warmly, though I have perhaps less interest in it than others. It only extends eighteen or twenty miles into New Brunswick; the greater part of it is in the province of Quebec. There are several counties that will be served by this line. The Intercolonial was an additional accommodation to the people along the St. Lawrence in summer when they had navigation, but all these back townships have been settled since, and they have been left in the cold, so far as railway accommodation is concerned, because the Intercolonial has not been of service to them. The Temiscouata Railway is not a competing road, and the company favour this grant strongly. It will make their branch from St. Francis to Edmundston more valuable, and from Quebec to the city of St. John it is the shortest possible line.

For a line of railway from Bristol, in the county of Carleton, New Brunswick, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, easterly a distance not exceeding seventeen miles.. $54,400

Mr. POWELL. What point does that reach?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It reaches Foreston, a village with saw-mills.

Mr. POWELL. Whose mills are they?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Walsh's mill. Lynch operates there, to.

For a line of railway from Shediac, county of Westmoreland, New Brunswick, to Shemogue, in the said county, a distance not exceeding thirty-eight miles ..... $121,600

Mr. POWELL. Is it intended to extend this to Cape Tormentine ultimately?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is intended to give the people what they want on the coast.

Mr. POWELL. Has the provincial subsidy lapsed, or is it still in force?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know about that.

Mr. POWELL. There are two petitions. One was in 1892, for a railway from Shediac to Chemogue. Is there not a petition since that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, there is another petition.

Mr. POWELL. I would suggest that you make it read from Shediac to Chemogue and towards Cape Tormentine.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will do so.

For a railway from Lockeport, N.S., to Sable River, or other convenient point of railway connection, not exceeding twenty miles..... $64,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A line of railway is being constructed in that section, which does not touch Lockeport, and this will give this important village a branch line.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the hon. the Minister of Railways if he has not had an application from the people of Meaford for an amount to extend the railway down to the harbour. The Northern Railway passes some distance south of the town, and they are taking it down to the harbour for the purpose of reaching the elevators that are to be built there. The town has burdened itself very heavily by way of a bonus of $50,000 to bring this railway down, and in addition $30,000 to build an elevator. It has a little over 2,000 inhabitants. Last year this parliament voted a subsidy to extend the railway from the present terminus on to Owen Sound, and if the people are to get the advantage they ought to get from this road, it will only be by extending it down to the wharf. Since we are giving assistance to short railways, four or five miles long, it seems to me that the government ought to give assistance to this branch.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have received a good many applications and I am not sure that there may not be one from the town of Meaford.

To the Chateaugay and Northern Railway Company, for a railway from a point in Hochelaga Ward, Montreal, to a point on the Great Northern Railway in or near the town of Joliette, passing near the town of L'Assomption, Quebec, together with a spur into said town, not exceeding forty-two miles .....	$134,400
For a single track standard railway bridge, with two roadways ten feet from Bout de L'Isle to Charlemagne, at the junction of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers.....	150,000
Towards the construction of a bridge across the Lac Ouareau River.....	15,000

The PRIME MINISTER. I might explain these three items together. The object is to give to an important section of the community in the counties of Assomption, Joliette and Montcalm, railway communication with Montreal. The railway is intended to leave the city of Montreal at Hochelaga and cross over by means of a bridge to the mainland, and then go direct to Assomption, to about within a mile of the village and then go to L'Epiphanie and direct to Joliette, making connection with the Great Northern Railway. First, there are two bridges for the two branches of the Ottawa at its junction with the St. Lawrence—Rivière des Prairies and Rivière Jesus. There will be a bridge from the mainland to L'Isle Bourdon, and from that island to the mainland on the other side. The length of bridge on the island before it reaches the river will be 500 feet; the bridge over the Rivière des Prairies will be 1,794 feet; across L'Isle Bourdon 2,200 feet; over Rivière Jesus, 1,194 feet and at Charlemagne, because the land is low and marshy, 1,750 feet, a total of 7,438 feet. The bridge over Rivière des Prairies will be composed of seventeen spans—fourteen spans of 100 feet each, one span of 200 feet, and two spans of 97 feet each. It will be twenty-four feet at the top, and six feet wide, and the distance between the water and the bridge will be twenty-six feet. The bridge over Rivière Jesus will have twelve spans—ten spans of 100 feet each and two of 97 feet each.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no navigation there ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not now. There was formerly, but the waters are so shallow that navigation is not feasible.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the probable cost of the bridge ?

The PRIME MINISTER. In the neighbourhood of $600,000. There is to be another bridge over the Lac Ouareau River on the same railway. It will be 834 feet long and be composed of four spans—two spans of 140 feet each and two spans of 137 feet each. It will be thirty-five feet at the top and six feet wide, and will be forty-three feet above the surface of the river, the neighbouring country being very high.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no navigation there either ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. FORTIN. I understand that this bridge at Bout de l'Île is to serve for vehicular traffic ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. FORTIN. And I understood it was to be a free bridge; so I move that the same words be added here as in the case of the Nepean Point Bridge :

For free vehicular and foot passenger traffic, the same as on a public highway.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very glad, since subsidies are being given to railways and bridges, that the right hon. gentleman has brought down this vote. Were not some representations made by the people of Berthier and other municipalities asking that the road should pass nearer to Berthier than is arranged for here ?

The PRIME MINISTER. What the Berthier people have been asking for is that this railway from L'Assomption should be extended towards Berthier.

Mr. BERGERON. A spur ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What distance ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Speaking under correction, about fifteen miles—certainly not less than twelve miles.

Mr. BERGERON. On this large bridge at Bout de l'Île do vehicles cross on the railway allowance ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, there are ways on either side for foot-passengers and vehicles.

To the Arthabaskaville Railway Company, for a railway from Victoriaville to Chester West, province of Quebec, a distance not exceeding twelve miles.. $38,400

The PRIME MINISTER. I move that 'ville' in 'Arthabaskaville' be struck out, making it read 'Arthabaska Railway Company.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there a company to build that road ?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a company organized, incorporated last year. The municipalities interested, Chester and others, have subscribed and contributed.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that to be an electric railway ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, a steam railway.

Mr. BERGERON. Only twelve miles ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The charter is more ambitious, and, in course of time, the road will be developed for its whole length. The charter is for a railway from Dudswell Junction on the Quebec Central in the county of Wolfe and reaching the Intercolonial Railway at Maddington Falls across the townships of Dudswell, Ham South Ham North, Chester West and the parishes of St. Christophe, Arthabaskaville, Victoriaville, Ste. Victorie, Ste. Rosaire, and Ste. Anne du Sault, a distance of about sixty miles.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for a branch line from the town or from near the town of Joliette towards Ste. Emilie, touching the parishes of Ste. Beatrix and St. Jean de Matha, not exceeding twenty miles ..... $64,000

Mr. BERGERON. That is the old Great Northern Line.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Great Northern as my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) knows is building a railway from Ottawa to Quebec. This is to be a branch line from Joliette towards the north, where my hon. friends knows very valuable establishments are now carried on. Colonization is going very fast in that direction, and this is intended to serve those people.

For a railway from Farnham, province of Quebec, to Frelighsburg and the international boundary line, not exceeding twenty-one miles ..... $67,200

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). This is a continuation of what used to be the Montreal, Portland and Boston, and of what is now the Montreal and Province line. It is one of those railways for the amalgamation of which we passed a Bill the other day, going into the hands of the Central Vermont Railway.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. BERGERON. That is an American company, is it not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Grand Trunk Railway Company practically controls the Central Vermont, and they have promised to build a continuation from Farnham to Frelighsburg and the frontier if this subsidy is given.

Mr. HAGGART. This is in order to enable them to connect with the line between the United States and the city of Montreal, is it not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The road will make connection at the frontier probably ; but the subsidy here is to go for a road from the town of Farnham, a large railway junction in the eastern townships, to Frelighsburg, and the frontier line.

Mr. HAGGART. What road comes to Frelighsburg from the other side ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it is a branch of the Central Vermont in the state of Vermont, which is built right up to the boundary line, or to a village a few miles from the frontier.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no such line now as the Montreal and Province line. It has been merged in the Vermont Central Railway Company, and to be of any utility at all to any railroad it must be given to an American company, the Vermont Central.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is really owned by the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. We gave power, under the charter which we passed the other day, to the Vermont Central to amalgamate with or sell out to the Grand Trunk Railway ; but we are giving under this grant, let it be clearly understood, a subsidy to an American railway company that owns the Vermont Central and has acquired the right of ownership of two railways in the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We gave this railroad company, and the Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly, and the Montreal and Vermont Junction Railway Company, the right to sell their properties in Canada to the Central Vermont, and this is a continuation of what has been the Montreal and the Province line, a company under the control of the Central Vermont, and will be built, I suppose, under their auspices.

Towards the construction of a railway bridge over the St. Francis River, in lieu of the grant under 62-63 Vic., chap. 7, at St. François du Lac, on the condition that the bridge be built so as to allow the municipalities to make use thereof, to establish and maintain a suitable roadway for the free passage of foot passengers, vehicles and animals, to be approved by the Minister of Railways and Canals (revote) ..... $50,000

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a subsidy to be given to the South Shore Railway Company. It is a revote, but there are new conditions attached by which the company shall do what we have provided already that the Chateauguay Railway Company shall do, that is, give free passage to the people. This bridge is to cross the St. Francis River. The approaches will be 1,500 feet long, of trellis work, because it will be necessary to leave open spaces. The bridge itself will be 1,000 feet long. It will be composed of eight spans of 125 feet each, seven of them fixed spans and the other a swing span. There will be nine piers and two rest piers. The height of the piers above the water will be forty feet, under the water, about fifteen feet, the bottom being clay and sand. The cost of the bridge will be about $350,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the old bridge of the Canadian Pacific Railway that was carried away?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, that is now being reconstructed, that is on the Yamaska River. I may mention that the South Shore Railway Company has to build, in the short distance of less than 36 miles, four heavy bridges. First, there is a bridge upon the Richelieu River, that is finished; then, the bridge on the Yamaska, which is now under process of construction; then, there is the bridge over the St. Francis River, which this subsidy is intended to cover; then there is the bridge over the Nicolet. Between Richelieu and Yamaska there is a distance of only nine miles; between Yamaska and St. Francis the distance is less than seven miles, and between the Nicolet and St. Francis the distance is about seventeen miles; so that within a distance of less than 36 miles this company has to build four very heavy and expensive bridges.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there any provision by which foot passengers or vehicles can reach and pass from the bridge?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, it is so provided in the resolution.

Mr. BERGERON. This is part of the South Shore Railway is it not?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Has any contract been entered into for that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and work has been done, I do not think a great deal though.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are nine miles of this now in operation. At the end of ten miles they come to the bridge over the Yamaska, which they are now building, and the company intends as soon as that bridge is completed to go on this fall to the St. Francis River and commence the building of this bridge.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they going on with the old Canadian Pacific Railway line?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Have the company bought that?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, and paid for it.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the length of that line?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Thirteen miles.

Mr. BERGERON. This part of the line was subsidized before.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. It was subsidized to the extent of $3,200 a mile by this government, and $4,000 a mile by the local government.

The PRIME MINISTER. It has been subsidized by the local government, but not by this government.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no subsidy for the line of road; it is only for the bridge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all. Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to put in the words 'and approaches' after the word 'bridge' in the third line.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. From Yamaska to St. Francois du Lac will it be a part of the old Canadian Pacific Railway line?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, there was no Canadian Pacific Railway then. It was Mr. Armstrong's road.

Mr. BERGERON. Was that bought by the South Shore Railway Company?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. The subsidy we are giving here is in lieu of the subsidy we voted last year in favour of that line.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is only for the bridge.

Mr. BERGERON. There is a grant towards construction.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is a grant to the bridge.

Mr. BERGERON. No, Nos. 62 and 63 Victoria, passed last year, provided for a subsidy to the road itself.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is for the bridge. It is put in a different way.

Mr. BERGERON. No, no. This is part of the eighty-two miles, for which we were called upon to vote $3,200 a mile last year. If I understand it, we are changing part of it, and giving it towards the construction of the bridge.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all. We are simply providing for a subsidy for the bridge this year. We are revoting the subsidy so as to force the company to give bridge facilities to the public.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, then, we are voting $50,000 over and above the $3,200 a mile, which we voted last year on the eighty-two miles.

The PRIME MINISTER. No. Last year we voted $50,000, and we are doing the same to-day.

Mr. BERGERON. Then the whole of it is a revote.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the object of it?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The conditions have changed since last year. The company got a subsidy from the local legislature. They got $75,000, and a clause introduced, embodying a new condition, and in order to make the Dominion vote for the bridge conform with the provincial vote, it was asked that we should insert the same limitation.

Mr. BERGERON. Then it does not change the subsidy granted last year to the eighty-two miles?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all.

Mr. BERGERON. The South Shore Railway Company which got a subsidy for eighty-two miles, has acquired the road of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Sorel to Yamaska, and that part of the Armstrong road, the Great Eastern, from Yamaska River to St. Francois du Lac. The first part was subsidized by this government.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, no.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, and by the local government. The road from the Yamaska River to St. Francois du Lac has been subsidized to the extent of $3,200 by this government, and $4,000 by the local government. That line has been subsidized to the extent of $7,200 by the country. We are now giving it $3,200 a mile more.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is quite true, I believe, that the road between Yamaska and St. Francois du Lac was subsidized by this government. It is quite true that a subsidy was voted but it is quite true also that there never was a train run, over that piece of railway. It is also perfectly true that after the subsidy had been paid, the rails were taken up, taken over to Nicolet, and put down on the section of railway between Nicolet and St. Gregoire, and a new subsidy was given for the same rails. The road has never been in operation. I do not know whether the company will use it; I do not think they will.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did they buy it?

The PRIME MINISTER. To get rid of the charter. There were two charters given for the same section of country, one to the Great Eastern Railway Company, and the other to the South Shore Railway Company. The two charters covered the same ground, and the South Shore Railway Company, to get rid of the other company, had to buy their charter.

Mr. HAGGART. That is a most extraordinary state of affairs. A road is laid down and subsidized, and then some one takes up their rails, puts them on another road, and receives a subsidy. The man who did that should be sent to penitentiary. The man who commits a crime like that, should be arrested and punished. I do not care who he is. This is the first time that I ever heard of it, and if any crime of that kind has been committed, the guilty party, no matter who he is, ought to be sent to the penitentiary.

The PRIME MINISTER. I quite agree with my hon. friend that the party who did that ought to be sent to the penitentiary. I state on my responsibility, as a member of this House, and as occupying the position which I do, that the fact as I have stated it, is literally true. There never was a train run upon the road except one. One train was run over the road, and then the rails were taken up, removed, put down upon another section of the railway, and a subsidy was obtained for that road.

Mr. BERGERON. As a matter of fact, we are giving $10,400 a mile for this piece of road.

The PRIME MINISTER. Under the circumstances, yes.

Mr. SPROULE. When was that done?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think about 1887.

Mr. FORTIN. I think we should know who the party, or company is.

The PRIME MINISTER. The company was known as the Great Eastern Railway Company.

Mr. HAGGART. There must be some fault on the part of some of the officers of the department. It never came to my knowledge. The officers of the department who would certify to the government that this road was furnished with new rails, and was entitled to receive the subsidy, must have known, because it must have come to their knowledge that the rails were taken off another portion of the road, that had already been subsidized, and these officers of the department, whoever they are, ought no longer to be continued in their positions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Towards the construction of a railway bridge over the Nicolet River at Nicolet, in lieu of grant under 62-63 Vic., chap. 7 (revote) ..... $15,000

Mr. BERGERON. What about the line between St. Gregoire and Nicolet? Does that also fall into the same line of railway?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. This line has also been subsidized before.

The PRIME MINISTER. It has been subsidized before and subsidized very much under the same circumstances. There never was a train run between St. Gregoire and Nicolet, for which subsidy was paid.

Mr. BERGERON. So that this has been subsidized by two governments, federal and provincial, and we are still subsidizing it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. The subsidies of the two governments have been absolutely squandered.

Mr. BERGERON. This is a very bad state of things.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is.

Mr. BERGERON. There is one thing more I should like to know in regard to the Nicolet bridge. Are not the piers of the bridge all built?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think they are.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that taken into consideration in estimating the cost of the bridge as far as the government is giving aid to it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. The subsidy is only $15,000, and the bridge will cost at least $180,000 before it is completed.

Chapter 7 of 62-63 Victoria, section 2, sub-clause 20, is hereby amended by inserting after the word 'railway,' in the third line of the sub-clause, the words 'or to connect said lines.'

Mr. HAGGART. What is the effect of that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is to make clear what was thought to have been clear in one of the clauses of the Subsidy Act of last year relating to the Bay of Quinte Railway Company. There would really be no controversy over it. I thought it was well to have these words put in. These words are put in for the purpose of making clear the language contained in clause 2 of the Act of last year in reference to the Bay of Quinte Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Does it refer to a particular railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. It removes a doubt which has arisen, and it refers to a particular subsidy.

The subsidy provided for by chapter 7 of the Statutes of 1899 towards the construction of a railway bridge over the St. Lawrence River at Chaudière Basin, near Quebec, shall be deemed to be applicable, as to one-third thereof, to the substructure and approaches, and as to two-thirds thereof, to the superstructure, and the same may be paid on that basis by authority of the Governor in Council, upon progress estimates to be furnished from time to time by the chief engineer of government railways and canals, so that one-third of such subsidy, and no more, may be paid in respect and upon completion of the masonry of the substructure and approaches of the said bridge, one-third, and no more, upon the work and material of one-half of the superstructure being done and supplied, in respect of such work and material, and the remaining one-third upon the completion of the whole work.

Mr. HAGGART. You are introducing a principle here that does not apply to the other subsidies. I see no objection if you give one-third of the subsidy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what we are doing.

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all, you are paying on progress estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is really necessary.

Mr. HAGGART. You might as well apply it to all subsidies given to bridges and railways. It is a new and vicious principle. Unless you have an officer on the ground the whole time, it is impossible to keep track of the progress estimates in the understructure of a bridge. The better way is to give the subsidies when the understructures are completed, and in whatever proportion you find that they bear to the total cost of the bridge. You could pay the superstructure on progress estimates, and although that is bad enough it is not so bad as the system of paying on the understructure. For instance, you might pay subsidies on the piers or understructures of the bridge and the bridge might never be completed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not, I think, risking any public money in respect to a work which will not be fully completed, because we are only paying a small proportion on the whole cost of the work. Here is a bridge which will cost, say, $4,000,000, and if $100,000 is asked for and they have $400,000 worth of work done, you are moderately safe in giving them a proportionate amount. I quite agree that if you were to adopt the principle generally it would occasion a very great deal of additional work in the department and more than our present staff would be able to discharge. We are not, however, doing this generally, and we are limiting it to a large and important bridge.

Mr. HAGGART. I can tell you that you will get yourself into trouble.

Mr. SPROULE. It is my opinion that you are going too far in this matter. The suggestion of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals is a good one, and ought to be adopted. The result will undoubtedly be that you will have to pay all this money on progress estimates. There is nothing in the resolutions to prevent you doing that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But you limit the proportions.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but whatever proportion you pay you must remember you are paying it on progress estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only real objection to this clause is that if we were applying it to all the cases, it would make an exceedingly large amount of work for the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not think it would apply to all the railways you are building under these resolutions?

Mr. HAGGART. It certainly will.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, no, unless the party is entitled to $60,000.

Mr. SPROULE. They will not have much work done on a railway until they can claim they have done $60,000 worth. You will find that you will be asked to pay all this out on progress estimates, because $60,000 will not complete ten miles of an ordinary railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It prevents your being bothered with applications for smaller amounts.

Mr. HAGGART. How does the minister obtain from the railway companies the cost of construction by which he pays in excess of $3,200 per mile. I understood from the minister when he was explaining this a year or two ago, that they were to furnish the actual amount of money expended. The railway company said that it was impossible to keep the accounts separate, and they would not be able to furnish them. The accounts are paid on the estimate of the hon. gentleman's own engineer after going over the work, without any information from the company at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is referring to the case of the St. Lawrence and Adirondack.

Mr. HAGGART. I am referring to the three cases in which the hon. gentleman said he would insist on getting full information before any payment was made, but for which he brought down estimates without such information. I am surprised at the Auditor General paying the money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is in error as to that being the case in regard to these three roads. As respects the St. Lawrence and Adirondack, the engineer was perfectly clear as to that costing a great deal more than would entitle the applicants to the double subsidy. Perhaps he followed the method which we had laid down, after consultation together, to be pursued in these cases. I do not think he got vouchers from the company. They were building a good deal of railway in the United States at the same time that they were building this, and it is quite true that the accounts would be mixed more or less. In one of the other cases—I think it was the Tilsonburg Railway—from what I have heard, the company said they had not the books and accounts available which would show the cost of the work. Therefore, the engineers had to make an estimate for themselves, but they were very careful in reaching a conclusion. The probabilities are that the books would show, if they were produced, that the roads in these cases cost more than the engineers would estimate. He would not be at all likely to make an estimate in excess of the actual cost.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did they not produce the books, unless they had some object in view?

On resolution 3,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to make a change in this resolution. In the ninth line, after the word 'council,' strike out all to the end of the resolution, and substitute these words:

And shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the government, which agreement the Minister of Railways is hereby empowered to make.

I am putting that in because the matter will be submitted to the Governor in Council. The hon. member for Lanark, I think, suggested in the committee the change in the Railway Act which makes it necessary that this change should be made for the sake of uniformity.

Mr. HAGGART. The objection to that is that in every other case there was a cast iron rule that the railways had to be constructed according to a certain standard; but, here you propose to give the Minister of Railways the right without the approval of Council to make a contract in any form he likes.

Mr. POWELL. What is the objection to leaving the clause as it is?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection; but this was sent to me by the law clerk as necessary in consequence of the change made in the Railway Act.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. PUTTEE. There is standing on the Order paper, a government notice of motion known as the current-wage clause, on which the debate has been adjourned, and the last paragraph of that motion reads as follows :

It is hereby declared that the work to which the foregoing policy shall apply includes not only work undertaken by the government itself, but also all works aided by grant of Dominion public funds.

Would that be a condition of granting these subsidies ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to have an opportunity of looking into the clause, and will take occasion to advise the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Mr. POWELL. You always embody in these agreements a provision for the protection of workmen.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not just recall the precise nature of the section, and no doubt it will answer the hon. gentleman's purpose if I let him know to-morrow when these resolutions are submitted for concurrence.

Mr. PUTTEE. It evidently was the intention, when this clause was drafted, to include therein all works aided by Dominion funds.

Mr. SPROULE. That resolution never passed, and I presume was never intended to pass, and now their chickens are coming home to roost too early.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to add another clause, to be called clause No. 7.

That the Governor in Council may make it a condition of the grant of the subsidies herein provided, or any heretofore granted by any preceding Act of parliament as to which a contract has not yet been entered into between Her Majesty and the company for the construction of the railway, that the company shall lay its road with new steel rails made in Canada, if the same are procurable in Canada of suitable quality upon terms as favourable as other rails can be obtained, of which the Minister of Railways and Canals shall be the judge.

Mr. POWELL. The quality should be mentioned. Supposing the rails manufactured in Canada were second quality, the contractors would be bound to accept that provided the price was not higher than second quality of rails could be obtained at elsewhere.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman probably means his remark to apply to the quality of rails we would allow to be laid under a contract. We have never stipulated in any other terms than new steel rails of a certain weight.

Mr. POWELL. I remember a case in which steel rails were purchased for the Intercolonial Railway and were so poor in quality that they had to be taken up and none others were afterwards bought of that quality. Parties starting steel works in Canada might not at the outset be able to make rails of first class quality.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The instance my hon. friend referred to, took place at a time when steel rails were first being made. The trouble was that the rails were too soft, and then afterwards the rails furnished were too hard. It was only after considerable experience that the manufacturers were able to make rails on the necessary solidity and durability, and not liable to break, but nobody nowadays is going to manufacture steel rails for the market unless they can make them of a proper quality, and besides all the rails contracted for are rolled under inspection.

Mr. HAGGART. This is carrying out the idea of free trade as it is in England with a vengeance. What is the object of including it in a resolution of this kind ? Has not the minister power to make any conditions he likes upon which these subsidies will be paid. This is simply an advertisement, because he can make such a clause as this a condition of the contract before entering into it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is an expression of the opinion of parliament as to whether that would be desirable or not.

Mr. HAGGART. The government may make any conditions they like in a contract before granting the subsidy. What an absurd clause this is, providing that the railway company will only be obliged to take the rails if they can get them as cheap as elsewhere. The railway companies will do that in any event.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is hardly as absurd as the hon. gentleman thinks, otherwise persons contemplating establishing rolling mills for the rolling of steel rails would not attach importance to it. We have been asked by two different companies that contemplate establishing works for this purpose, to make it a condition that companies receiving subsidies from the government shall buy their rails in Canada if they can get them on as favourable terms, and unless we adopt this clause it might not be possible to have manufacturers of this kind started in Canada. The clause is not objectionable, and will have the effect of stimulating the manufacture of steel rails in this country.

Mr. POWELL. You might as well extend it to engines and locomotives which the government are buying in the United States, and which are not as good as those manufactured in this country. These can be manufactured here on just as favourable terms as in the United States, and such a resolution would prevent the government being sinners in the future.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When we have manufacturers of rolling stock asking us to insert such a clause, I do not say it would be unreasonable to adopt it. By doing so, you put a little gentle pressure on the railway companies to buy Canadian rails, provided they are as good and as cheap as those which can be obtained elsewhere, and in this way you encourage the establishment of the manufacture of such rails in this country.

Mr. POWELL. It is perfectly innocuous, as the government have the power to insert such a provision in every contract if they wish to do so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If you have this in an Act of parliament, you have an assurance which is more valuable than the expression of an intention to make it a condition of a contract.

Mr. HAGGART. You are adopting a system of protection in the form of a bounty to the manufacturers of steel rails in this country. You give a bounty to every ton of steel rails manufactured in the country, and besides you take the manufacturers under your paternal protection by saying that if you furnish the rails as cheaply as the manufacturers in other countries, you will get the contract. This is carrying out the principles that these gentlemen advocated when they were before the electors—with a vengeance. They wanted people to be left free to purchase where they pleased. But now not only do they give a bounty for the manufacture of the article, but they undertake, as a government, to exercise their paternal influence to make sales.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That principle is very well where you are leaving people to buy with their own money. But, where you interfere and subsidize a railway, I see nothing inconsistent or improper in saying: If you are able to buy in Canada rails of equal quality with those in other countries, you shall give the preference to the Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you not do it in locomotives and everything else they buy?

Mr. POWELL. I object to this, because it does not go far enough. I am a protectionist and I stand by that principle. Instead of it being permissive, it should be obligatory upon the government to insert this clause in the contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This will be inserted in the contract—that is the intention. True, the word used is 'may.' But, it is just the same as in the granting of a subsidy, which the law says 'may' be granted—but everybody knows that it is going to be granted. The really permissive part of this comes in in the minister exercising his judgment as to whether the rails are of equal value and quality with others.

Mr. HAGGART. Fancy a party building a subsidized railway and making purchases of rails in England. He brings those rails before the minister to decide whether they are better quality or cheaper than the Canadian rails.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the way it operates. If, as a result of this a rolling mill is established in Canada, before a man makes a purchase in England, he will go to the minister, and, if he is not satisfied with the Canadian rails will say so and arrange that he is to get the others.

Mr. HAGGART. How will the minister decide without seeing the rails?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Rails, like other things, have their standards. There are marks and brands to indicate the character of a rail. If the Canadian rails are as good as the others, they will be laid, if not, representations will be made and the parties will be authorized to import rails.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, the Minister of Railways is liable to have the manufacturers of this country use their influence to cause him to declare in favour of their rails, and they will say: If you allow rails from abroad to be placed on these railways, we will use our influence at the next election to prevent you getting votes in our locality. It is protection of the most vicious kind. The Premier promised us free trade as it was in England. Can he quote an English precedent for this—that a minister is to decide as to the quality of goods before they can be purchased?

Mr. POWELL. There seems to be a difference of opinion among the members of the government. We were assured positively by the Minister of Railways that steel rails—he did not mention the Bessemer process, but they are all the product of that process—are uniform in quality. But, we are now informed by the Minister of Finance that there are different grades of steel rails.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman said there were marks and brands to show the quality. If there are different grades, a railway may want to lay down a grade different from the grade manufactured in Canada.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Even under the present law, they must submit their rails to the Minister of Railways, because he will not pay the subsidy unless the rails, like everything else, are satisfactory.

Mr. RICHARDSON. May I ask, with regard to the subsidy granted the Canadian Northern, under section 17—have they a land grant, and, if so, to what extent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not given any land grants since we came into power.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But, I think that road has the charter of the former Hudson's Bay Railway Company, and if my memory serves me correctly, that carries a double land grant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not northerly from Swan River, I think.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The line is being deflected to Prince Albert.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not get a land grant unless there was legislation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am disposed to think they cannot surely have a land grant for this, although I have seen it stated that they have. But if they have a double land grant—12,800 acres per mile—in addition to this subsidy, it will be seen that they are getting infinitely more from the country than enough to build the entire road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We give them no land grant. What land grant they got on the other section running north, they got years ago; and unless some legislation was passed in parliament to authorize a diversion in the land grant on this line, running westerly, they would not be entitled to it. That is my opinion, and I am quite confident in the expression of it.

Resolutions reported, and read the first and second time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 193) respecting certain subsidies to railway companies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What will be the business for to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER. The second reading of this Bill, and supply.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. Friday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 13, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL DEBATES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright) presented the Sixth Report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the official report of the Debates of the House during the present session.

The committee, acting upon the precedent established in 1885 and 1891, would recommend that an additional allowance of $250 be granted for this session to each member of the present staff of translators of the official report of the Debates, as owing to the unusual length of the session, the work performed in connection with the translation of the Debates has been fully doubled.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE moved that the report be now concurred in.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I think that this report had better wait over until another day. It ought to be looked into, as it recommends the payment of increased salaries.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion stands.

ELECTORAL FRAUDS.—JUDICIAL INQUIRY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) called the attention of the government to the judicial commission ordered by this House some time ago, and he wanted to know what time the commission would proceed, and if solicitors were to be appointed. As to the first question, the government can give no information, because it is altogether in the hands of the commissioners themselves. With regard to the other point, after conference with the Minister of Justice I can state that he is now endeavouring to make such arrangements as will place at the disposal of the counsel such assistance in the way of solicitors as may be necessary.

ST. JOHN, N.B., HARBOUR WORKS—THE TENDERERS.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I wish to ask from the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Railways, as to whether the forfeits of the two contractors, Haney & Mayes, have been made. There were three tenders put in for the works in St. John, viz.: Connolly's, Haney's and Mayes'. Connolly was the successful tenderer, and in 1899, speaking in the House the Minister of Railways said that the sums deposited with the tenders in the case of Haney & Mayes had been forfeited, and I have not been able to see them in the accounts. One was for $24,000, and the other $14,000. Of course they may have come in since the accounts were made up. I would ask the Minister of Finance to give me the information in the course of the day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I will make inquiry into the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. We want the names of the tenderers and the amounts, in the case of the Brockville drill hall, so that we may have the information when we take up the estimates.

ARBITRATION OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE DOMINION.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the following article, which has appeared in the newspapers :

It is understood that Sir George Burton will retire about the 1st of September. He has accepted the position of sole arbitrator to determine the liability, if any, of the Dominion towards the province of Nova Scotia in respect of the Eastern Extension Railway claim. This line was made a part of the Intercolonial system some years ago. The road was built by an independent company, but was subsidized by the province to the amount of $671,836, and it is in respect of this sum, with interest, that the provincial government claims a refund. When this matter is disposed of, the provincial claim respecting the Western Counties road may be dealt with by Sir George Burton, but for the present it is in abeyance. This claim is for $679,197, with interest, the amount of the provincial subsidy to said road. It arises over the statute of the Dominion passed in 1887 declaring the Western Counties Railway a work 'for the general advantage of Canada,' and 'subject to the legislative authority of the province.' The province contends that, in recognizing the Western Counties road as a work 'for the general advantage of Canada,' the parliament of the Dominion virtually admitted that the public aid given by the province should have come from the treasury of the Dominion, and not from the province.

That opens up, as will be seen, a serious question for the Dominion, as there have been other subsidies voted in other provinces which must follow the same line. I do not suppose there is any truth in this, because I do not think the government would enter upon arbitrations involving such principles and such large sums while parliament was in session without acquainting parliament at least of its intention and getting the opinion of parliament about it.

I have seen it rumoured in the papers about another and, perhaps, still graver matter, namely, that the government had granted a fiat to certain parties in connection with the Regina, Long Lake and Prince Albert Railway, involving a sum of $5,000,000; the claim being that money should be paid according to certain values of land, for lands granted to the railway, but which were not contiguous to the road, or not found suitable for settlements, and which consequently have not been selected. That opens up a mighty serious question, and we quite know what these fiats mean, and we quite know how far the court may go under influences which are not antagonistic on the part of the government. If we are opening up these immense vistas of probable awards against the government, it is something that parliament ought to be acquainted with. I take this as being only a rumour at the present time, but if it proves to be more than a rumour, then it is an intensely grave question for us.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With regard to the last question to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has alluded, I must say at once that I earnestly deprecate the tone of his remarks. It is not to my knowledge that in any British parliament such censure has ever been passed upon a British court of justice. The idea that the hon. gentleman deliberately states is, that there may be influences brought to work upon one of the courts of the country; a court which was constituted by the late government and not by this government. For my part, I do not believe that such a thing exists, and in the name of the Canadian people I must solemnly object to such language. I hope there is no court in this country that can be made amenable to such influences or influences of any kind, and I hope that the Court of Exchequer is not an exception to this rule. I must say to the hon. gentleman that I understand from the Department of Justice that a fiat has been granted to the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Company. I do not know what is the nature of the claim, and I have but a hazy idea about it, but whether the fiat has been granted or not, I submit that it is a question upon which parliament has not any jurisdiction. It is not a matter which is exercised on ministerial responsibility; it is simply a question of law to be determined by the officers of the Crown as to whether or not a subject praying the Crown for a fiat is entitled to it. The petition discloses the right of action, and the law is well settled that if a subject pray the Crown for redress by way of petition of right, he sets forth on his petition the claim, which may be well founded or not, but at all events it is a claim which has to go to the judicial authorities, and the duty is incumbent on the officers of the Crown to grant a fiat under such circumstances.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). As to the claim in Nova Scotia, I desire to say that Sir George Burton has not been appointed to arbitrate on that. The statement in the press is entirely unjustified. The government have not agreed to refer to arbitration the claim referred to, nor has Sir George Burton been appointed.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House will allow me a moment, I do not wish to get out from under any responsibility as to what I really did say; nor do I wish to be saddled with any responsibility which I did not intend to take. My statement is simply this, that if a government is favourable to a claim, it may, by not putting in a defence or by waiving certain legal technicalities, put the claim which goes to the Exchequer Court in a very different position from what it would if it were not so favourable. That is a matter of common notoriety; and if a government takes such a position, it is no imputation against the Exchequer Court, or any other court, that it takes cognizance of any waiver which a government may make with regard simply to technical matters, which, if insisted upon, would be a complete bar to the claim being considered by the court. That far I went, and I went no further. I am quite willing to take the responsibility of going that far.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In regard to the matter to which the hon. gentleman has referred, which comes particularly within my department, I may say that he is under a misapprehension with regard to the position of matters. The position of the government is that they are called upon to administer a contract which was made by their predecessors in office. The company have made certain claims against the government. They have pressed that they should receive certain considerations and certain compensation for what they claim to be the failure on the part of the government to carry out the contract. I declined to recognize that position, and I said to them that their interpretation of the contract was not the interpretation of the government. They are now proceeding in the courts to get a legal interpretation of the contract, and the government is standing strictly on its rights with respect to the contract.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand, from what the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) has said, that the first class of claims to which I referred have not been referred to arbitration yet—the Nova Scotia claims.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The claim to which my hon. friend particularly referred was with regard to the Western Counties Railway; which, he said, would give rise to claims of a like character elsewhere. The government have not agreed to refer any claim of that character to arbitration.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the provincial claim?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was a claim of the province. The whole thing was a claim of the province.

Mr. FOSTER. There were two divisions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One related to a claim on account of the Intercolonial Railway. That, it was stated in the House some time ago, the government were prepared to refer to arbitration; but the claim with regard to the Western Counties Railway the government was not prepared to entertain.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the first one been referred?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has not been officially and actually referred, but it was stated in the House that the government were willing to refer it to arbitration.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Under which contract are proceedings taken—the contract set out in the legislation of 1889?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The contract with respect to the granting of land to the railway company is provided for in an order in council. It is the interpretation of that order in council which is in question. I have not seen the pleadings in the case, because they have not come before me. They came before the Minister of Justice, I think, in my absence.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister recollect the date of the order in council embodying the contract?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be about 1889.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The first one was in 1887, and it was amended in 1889.

Mr. DAVIN. My memory is that there was a contract set out in the legislation of 1889, and in that contract there is a clause dealing with the land grant, as well as a clause dealing with the $80,000 a year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The land grant is, of course, given under authority of an Act of parliament. Then, the department prepared an order in council which sets out practically the terms of the contract. Of course, if the Act did not authorize the order in council, the order in council would be of no value.

PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Following up the remarks of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), it might be well for parliament to know whether the government are considering the question of carrying out the suggestions made by the Interprovincial Conference a few years ago, to which, I believe the right hon. leader of the government expressed his adherence, namely, the question of increasing or readjusting the provincial subsidies.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No, the government are not considering it.

FIRE INSURANCE POLICIES.

Mr. JAMES GILMOUR (East Middlesex). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Solicitor General to state briefly in what regard he proposes to secure uniform conditions of policies of fire insurance?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The intention is merely to introduce the Bill, so as to have it printed and distributed, in order that members and others may become familiar with it for next session. It is not intended to proceed with the matter further this session.

I.C.R.—SHIPMENT OF SHINGLES.

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if he has yet received a report from the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway on the memorial presented some time ago by the shingle manufacturers of Restigouche and Bonaventure with regard to the change in the weight of shipments over the Intercolonial, and if so, has the change asked for been made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I have not received a report.

Mr. McALISTER. This matter is causing a great deal of inconvenience and injury to the shippers of shingles over the Intercolonial Railway, along the shore, and it is to the interest of traffic over the Intercolonial Railway that the request of these men be granted.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

House proceeded to consider amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 189) intitled: 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.'

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The amendment made by the Senate consists in striking out the first clause of the Bill, as it went up to that House, which clause refers to the appointment of three additional judges for the district of Montreal. I beg leave to move, seconded by Mr. Sutherland:

That this House do disagree with the Senate in the said amendment for the following reasons:—

1. Because by section 92 of the British North America Act, it is provided that in each province the legislature will have exclusive power to make laws concerning "the administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and of criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts";

2. Because by section 96 of the same Act, it is provided that the Governor General shall appoint the judges of all courts so organized by provincial legislatures, except those of the courts of probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick;

3. Because by an Act of the legislature of the province of Quebec, passed in 1899, viz., 62 V., ch. 29, it was provided that the constitution of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec should be amended, and that the said court should be composed of thirty-four judges, the object being to give three additional judges to the district of Montreal;

4. Because the object of the first section of the present Bill was rejected by the Senate, is to comply with the duty imposed upon the federal government and parliament by the aforesaid section 96 of the British North America Act, in so far as the above action of the legislature of Quebec is concerned;

5. Because the act of the Senate in rejecting the said section of this Bill is an infringement of the principle of provincial autonomy secured in the British North America Act.'

With reference to this amendment, I beg to draw the attention of the House to this fact, that by paragraph 19, section 92 of the British North America Act it is provided that the provincial legislatures may exclusively make laws in relation to the administration of justice in the provinces, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of the courts of both civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including the procedure in civil matters in the civil courts. It has been suggested that while the power is vested under the constitution, in the provincial legislatures, of establishing the courts, they cannot in the exercise of their power impose additional burdens on the federal exchequer without our consent. But I would draw attention to this fact, that if it be argued that a provincial legislature cannot, even in the exercise of its undoubted exclusive right to constitute courts, do anything which may have the effect of imposing additional burdens on the Dominion parliament, no one pretends that it is not within the power of the Dominion parliament to make laws, for the administration of which the local legislatures are obliged to create courts. We may thus, without the sanction or co-operation or control of the provincial legislatures, make laws which will have for their effect to impose additional burdens on the provincial exchequers. Not only may we do that, but we have the right, under the British North America Act, to retain in our own hands the enacting of laws with reference to criminal procedure. What is the effect of that? It imposes burdens upon the provinces which they cannot regulate or control, but to which they are obliged to submit; and so far do we go in that respect, with reference to our criminal law and procedure, that in so far as Quebec is concerned, we practically operate an injustice. Under our system of criminal procedure, which we control exclusively here, we impose upon the province of Quebec burdens which are not imposed on the other provinces. Take, for instance, the city of Montreal, you have a criminal court sitting permanently there four months in the year, and by our criminal law we impose on the provincial exchequer the expense of a double trial in many cases, especially in the centres of trade. That is the result of the system which we have imposed on the province of Quebec, and which makes it possible that in all criminal cases, the defendant may have a jury composed half of English and half of French-speaking men. The result is that in such case you have a double trial and double expense imposed on that province.

Then take our election Act, which we absolutely control, and the administration of which we impose on the provinces though it is one exclusively of federal concern. You put, consequently, on the provinces the burden of the execution of that Act and thus impose on them a very considerable obligation.

It is said that while we have, under the constitution, vested in the Dominion parliament the right to impose those additional burdens on the provinces, they have no right to do that which they think is necessary in their provincial interests, if by so doing the federal exchequer is in any way encroached upon. That is an anomaly which goes to show that you must read sections 92 and 96 of the British North America Act in conjunction, and read together they mean that there is a distribution of responsibility as between the federal parliament and the local legislatures, and that, in the distribution of that responsibility, the local legislatures have imposed upon them the obligation to provide the courts for the administration not only of the laws made by the local legislatures and also the federal laws, and they must organize and maintain the courts, but if they require additional judges, it is the duty of the federal parliament to meet them half way and co-operate with them in the expense of providing salaries for the judges necessary. It is said, however, that we can afford to deal lightly with the recommendations of the local legislatures, that we exercise a supervisory control, and that, in our discretion, we may revise their legislation and declare that the additional judges which they say are necessary, are, under the circumstances, not required.

In that connection let me read an extract from a speech of the late Sir John Macdonald, on the 20th February, 1880, when the same question was raised with reference to the appointment of judges in British Columbia. He said :

But, as has been said before, it is very difficult indeed for the federal parliament to decide when a wish is expressed by the legislature of any province, that it should be disregarded. The constitution, organization and maintenance of the courts are left to the provincial legislatures. The cost and responsibility for the administration of justice, excepting the salaries of the Superior Court judges, are thrown upon the different provinces, whose governments are responsible for their peace and good government. So that, when a provincial legislature passes an Act, declaring that an additional number of judges is required for the due administration of justice, it is incurring a great responsibility for the federal parliament and government to say : You do not want them ; you can administer justice and keep the peace of the land without them, and therefore, we refuse to appoint them. As a general rule, I think we may safely trust to the discretion of the provincial legislatures in this regard.

Sir John Macdonald went on further to say :

The burden of the administration of justice is thrown on the provincial legislature, and when such powers are given them exclusively, we having no right to interfere with their powers, it is assuming very great responsibility for us to say : Although you declare certain judges are wanted and have passed an Act constituting a particular court, we refuse you the means to carry that policy into effect.

That is what the Senate has done and what we cannot agree to. In the exercise of what I maintain to be the undoubted right of a provincial legislature, its exclusive right, the legislature of the province of Quebec, in 1899, passed the statute, 63 Vict., chap. 99, providing for the appointment of three additional judges for the district of Montreal. Let me draw attention to the fact that that statute was passed in the provincial legislature without division. It did not come into force immediately, but was brought in force by proclamation on the 1st March last.

During the interval between the passing of the Act and its coming into force, the people of the province had ample time to consider its effects. It was submitted to the public, amongst others to the Bar Association of the whole province, and met with the unanimous approval of the whole Bar Association, made up, as it is, of Conservatives and Liberals. Not only has it met with the approval of public opinion in that province, as represented by the two branches of the legislature, but also with the approval of that particular class of the community most directly interested in the proper administration of justice—I mean the bar of the province.

But let us see what were the conditions existing which made it necessary to pass this law, and what are the conditions which exist to-day. We find, for instance, in the district of Montreal that, notwithstanding that of the sixteen judges appointed to administer justice in country districts, seven of them were brought to Montreal for the purpose of taking part in the administration of justice—that is to say, seven judges were taken from the performance of their legitimate duties in the districts assigned to them and brought into Montreal. And I may say, en passant, that one judge, whose district is in St. Hyacinthe, sat 222 days in the last year in Montreal out of 250 working days—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the Solicitor General tell me whether the administration of justice was interfered with by that ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL—but, notwithstanding that we had seven judges in addition to those already in Montreal. What do we find to be the result of the year's operations so far as the administration of justice is concerned? We find that on the 30th June last, there were 317 cases in the Superior Court in Montreal inscribed to be heard, and not one of them was heard. There were 83 cases inscribed in review which also remained unheard. And, in March last, of 261 cases inscribed in that month, 130 cases remained undisposed of—in one month alone. I now speak with the official record in my possession to show that the figures I give are absolutely accurate. Is it to be tolerated that such a condition of things shall continue in such an important district as Montreal—that is to say that litigants shall have their cases at the end of the year undisposed of, but not only undisposed of—for this does not take into account the number of cases taken under advisement by the judges—but actually unheard: 317 cases at the end of the legal year inscribed and not reached at all? Is there to be no remedy for such a condition of things? And I speak now for the members of the bar, for those men who are brought daily into contact with this condition of things, as I have pointed out, these men who know what is going on in the courts because of their daily participation in the administration of justice. What are we told is to be the remedy? We are told that the remedy is to be a change in the judicial system of the province of Quebec; in our imposing on the province of Quebec the obligation to abandon one of its most cherished institutions, its judicial organization. We are told by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron): Do not remedy this grievance, do not give to the province of Quebec and the district of Montreal in particular that to which it is entitled, because, if you refuse to do justice you will succeed in causing them to acquiesce in injustice. If we refuse to give them the justice to which they are entitled, we may deprive them of the judicial system of which, as I said a moment ago, they are justly proud and to which they are sincerely attached. I say, we have no power to enforce such a change upon the province of Quebec—constitutionally, we cannot do it. It would be impossible for us in this parliament to pass a law which would have for its effect to interfere in any way with the courts of the province. If it is not, constitutionally, our right to do this directly, can we do by this indirect method suggested by the hon. member for Beauharnois what we cannot do directly? I say, undoubtedly, we cannot do anything of the sort. What right would we have to interfere in this way? We find, for instance, that my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) attempted to change the judicial system in our province. As I said a week ago, the hon. member for Montmorency, when Attorney General of the province of Quebec, introduced a Bill to change the system in the province, and to change it in a way which I have no doubt, he thought necessary—and in that proposal, I concurred. But we, though we both did our utmost, could not bring about that change in the province of Quebec. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) did not even succeed in getting his Bill to the committee stage in the legislature. And, as I said on a previous occasion, he could not even win the approval of his own colleagues in the cabinet. The outcome was that the Bill never got beyond the second reading. There is an indication of the opinion of the province of Quebec with reference to this change, manifested through that body which alone has the right to speak for the province so far as its judicial system is concerned. And, in the presence of such an expression of opinion, is it to be conceived for a moment that the Dominion parliament would impose on them a system which they repudiated a few years ago by the almost unanimous voice of the local legislature? This was in 1894, but, even this year, during the last session of the provincial legislature, an attempt was made to modify the judicial system to this extent—a Bill was introduced in the legislature which had for its purpose to permit the judges appointed for the country districts to reside in Montreal and Quebec—not to centralize, but merely to change the residence of the judges. And what was the result? That Bill never got its second reading. The legislature would not agree even to such a change as that.

Now, whether they be right or wrong, whether the judicial system of the province of Quebec is an effete, as was said by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), is it within our power and within the scope of our duty to interfere and to impose on the province a system other than that which, of their own choice, they selected in 1857, I think, and with which they have been content down to the present time? Not only that, but I say that the province of Ontario has not been satisfied with the centralization system which they seek to impose upon the province of Quebec. My hon. friends from Ontario know full well that only a few years ago application was made to the Department of Justice to bring about a change in the judicial system in Ontario; and, having failed there those who sought that change went to the local legislature and endeavoured to bring about in the province of Ontario that system which exists in the province of Quebec. They did not succeed at that time, but they got a half measure. It has been decided that the judges of the high courts shall go to each of the judicial districts one day in each week, to do what the judges in the province of Quebec, if they performed their duty would do from one end of the year to the other. Before I pass away from that let me call attention to this point—it is said it is not within the power of the province of Quebec, notwithstanding that they have the right to organize courts and create courts, to add to the number of judges, because that would be an attack on the federal exchequer. But, if they have the right to organize and maintain courts, have they not the right to suppress judicial districts—that is, for instance, that instead of having twenty judicial districts, they should have eighteen? What would be the effect of the exercise of that right—that we should appoint a judge to administer justice in a district in the province of Quebec and the legislature should say that that district was not necessary and should suppress it—what, then, becomes of the judge? Would not the judge disappear with the district. And, if so, what becomes of the independence of our judges and of the system of life tenure of which we are so justly proud? If the legislature, then, in the exercise of their undoubted right should be guilty of such an injustice, are we not guilty of a greater injustice when we refuse to give them the aid in the administration of their affairs that they are fairly entitled to have, especially when we realize that the burdens imposed upon them are imposed without their consent and without their participation.

Now, I say that so far as this government is concerned, at all events, we will not participate in any attack on our provincial institutions, we will not be parties to any assault upon the institutions of any province of this Dominion; and, certainly, all of us who come from the province of Quebec will refuse to join in any attack upon the judicial institutions, or any other institutions of that province. I myself was extremely anxious to bring about a change. I thought, in the interest of the province, that a change was necessary and that it would operate to the advantage of its judicial institutions; but, after all, my voice proved not to be the voice of the province, and when I saw that an Act submitted to the local legislature did, apparently, not meet with favour in the province, my duty was, and is, to conform to the wishes of the province and not seek to impose upon them a system which they have already rejected. It is the right of the Senate—I say it is not only their privilege, it is their right; I would almost say it is the duty of a Senate constituted as the present Senate is, that institution which is the haven of rest for the rejected of the people—that they should be deaf to the voice of the people, should refuse to participate in giving effect to the voice of the people, and should endeavour in all respects to thwart it. That is their duty; but it is our duty, it seems to me, gathered as we are from the different parts of the Dominion, gathered as we are from the different provinces, to see that the rights guaranteed to each province by the Confederation Act are respected, to be careful that we do not impose on any single province a condition of things which is objectionable to that province.

Now, I would like to give a few statistics, before concluding, with reference to judicial business in the province of Quebec. Take, for instance, 1897, the last year for which I have the official judicial statistics applicable to the whole province; there were 8,206 writs issued in the Superior Court of that province; there were 33,095 writs issued in the Circuit Court; there were 398 cases tried in Review. That gives you some idea of the volume of business done in the province of Quebec. I now make this further statement, that notwithstanding the restrictions placed upon appeals to the Supreme Court, notwithstanding that in the province of Quebec an appeal to the Supreme Court can only be had in cases where the amount involved exceeds $2,000, whereas in the province of Ontario the amount is restricted to $1,000, and in the maritime provinces, I think, it is restricted to $200—notwithstanding that restriction on appeals to the Supreme Court, 43 per cent of all the business done in the Supreme Court comes from the province of Quebec, more than from the province of Ontario, and 43 per cent of all the business of the Dominion. Now, as respects the machinery that we have provided to administer that business, we find that there are 31 judges of the Superior Court in Quebec and 6 in the Court of Queen's Bench; whereas in Ontario you have 15 High Court judges, you have 66 county court judges, and you have 7 district judges, in all 88, as against 37 in Quebec. Then, with reference to the question of salaries; notwithstanding that the volume of business done in Quebec far exceeds that done in the province of Ontario, how do we stand in that respect? We find that the Dominion parliament contributes to the administration of justice in Quebec $186,450; whereas in Ontario the contribution is $264,400, a difference of over $70,000. Now, if you bear in mind the volume of business, the position that we occupy because of the additional time and labour which the judges must give to the administration of justice as a result of the existence of the dual language; and if we take into account this further fact, that we have in the province of Quebec the great metropolitan city of Montreal, where more business is done than in the whole province of Ontario—if you take those facts into account, I say that every man who wishes to deal with this matter impartially, must inevitably come to the conclusion that the request made by the province of Quebec, through its legislature, is a fair and reasonable request, and one that ought to be granted. And I say we must come to the further conclusion that, to use the words of Sir John A. Macdonald, we would assume a very great responsibility if we were to say that although the legislature of the province of Quebec declares that certain judges are wanted, and have passed an Act constituting a particular court, we refuse that province the means required to carry that policy into effect. It would be a serious matter for this parliament to take this course, and I appeal to the words of Sir John A. Macdonald in justification of the the course adopted by the government.

Mr. J. A. C. MADORE (Hochelaga, Montreal). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I deem it my duty, under the circumstances, to protest, with all the energy that is in my power, against the action taken by the Senate, under the inspiration of the Conservative leaders of the province of Quebec. In my capacity of bâtonnier of the Montreal Bar, I protest against the action of the Senate, because they have refused to accede to the wishes of that public body, which had demanded the appointment of an additional number of judges, required for the due administration of justice in the district of Montreal.

As a member representing here the county of Hochelaga, which is one of the divisions of the judicial district of Montreal, I protest, in the name of my constituents, against the action of the Senate, because they have denied them the means of having their cases tried with such quick despatch as is required by the trade and business interests.

As a member from the province of Quebec, I protest against this unwarrantable encroachment upon the rights of the province of Quebec, which, under the constitution, has the control of its judicial system.

As just remarked by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), the Act passed by the legislature was submitted to the Bar Association of the province of Quebec and to the Bar Association of the district of Montreal, and met with their unanimous approval. Those two bodies first passed resolutions to the effect of asking the legislature to increase the number of judges for the district of Montreal, and later on, after the passing of the Act, they asked the Dominion government to do their duty by appointing three additional judges.

There was no dissentient voice among the members of the Bar Association of Montreal on that point; and all the members of the Bar, belonging to both political parties, were a unit in declaring that this addition to the judiciary was required for the due administration of justice in that district, the present number of judges being totally inadequate to the volume of judicial business pending before the courts in the district of Montreal.

The hon. Solicitor General gave us, a little while ago, the statistics with reference to the judicial business in the district of Montreal for 1897 and 1898. Let me give, in addition to that, the number of cases inscribed for the whole province of Quebec in 1899. We find that there were 7,916 writs issued for the whole province. Out of that number, the district of Montreal alone claims 4,577, that is to say, that more than one-half of the whole judicial business of the province originates in the district of Montreal. Besides, I find that there were 3,422 judgments rendered in default in the whole province, and of that number there were 1,701 in the district of Montreal alone, while out of 2,273 contested cases, 1,354 were disposed of in Montreal. In short, it may be said that more than one-half of the whole judicial business of the province originates in the district of Montreal.

Now, in order to relieve the courts from the congestion of business, there should be as many judges in the district of Montreal as there are in the rest of the province. But there are only ten judges, and the district of Terrebonne is assigned to one of them; so that there are only nine judges left to expedite the judicial business of the district of Montreal. It is quite evident that the number of judges there is altogether inadequate. Besides, I do not think there is an hon. gentleman in this House who has ever claimed that the number of judges assigned to the judicial district of Montreal was adequate to the needs of that district. But, although they agree that the position of affairs is critical and that there is a congestion of business before the courts, they refuse to accede to our proposition, and they say that the additional judges which we think are necessary, are not required. They suggest another remedy, and that is judicial centralization.

The hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) was of opinion that under that centralization system, the evils complained of could be easily remedied. Granting for the benefit of the debate, that with that change of system the grievance complained of would be redressed, that the judges would have to wait for cases to be tried instead of cases having to wait for an opportunity to be heard, and, in short, that everybody would be satisfied with that system, it is none the less true that such a system is a utopia which nobody can impose on the province of Quebec, as the people of that province are unwilling to accept it.

At the time when the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) held the post of Attorney General for the province of Quebec, he tried to bring about that change, and to impose such a system on the province. But, as remarked by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) he did not even succeed in getting his Bill to the committee stage in the legislature; he could not even win the approbation of his own colleagues in the cabinet, and his Bill never went beyond the second reading. So, that centralization system was repudiated by the unanimous voice of the local legislature and by the voice of the people.

There was another attempt to modify the judicial system and to remedy the sad state of affairs prevailing in the district of Montreal, and that was by permitting the judges appointed for the county districts to sit in Montreal. But this is again the centralization system, under another name. It would not give satisfaction to the people in the rural districts, as it would deprive them of the presence of their judges, which is considered as absolutely necessary. Moreover, that system would prove more expensive than the appointment of the three additional judges which is contemplated by this Bill.

Now, if, on the one hand, judicial centralization is out of the question and outside the realm of practical politics, having been repudiated by the people, and if, on the other hand, you cannot bring the country judges to Montreal, there is only one way of remedying the evil, and that is by appointing the three additional judges as provided by the Bill under consideration.

Now, under the constitution, the judges are appointed by the Governor General in Council. By paragraph 19, section 92, of the British North America Act, it is provided that the provincial legislatures may exclusively make laws in relation to the administration of justice in the provinces, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of the courts of both civil and criminal jurisdiction. That power is vested, under the constitution, in all the provincial legislatures, and it is vested in the legislature of the province of Quebec, as well as in all others.

It is within the power of each legislature to say what is the number of judges required for the due administration of justice in the province, and the only power vested in the Dominion parliament, under section 100, is to fix the salaries of judges. Therefore, parliament has no right to interfere with that power, and neither the House of Commons nor the Senate have the right of restricting the number of judges either in the province of Quebec or in any other province. Section 100 reads as follows:

100. The salaries, allowances and pensions of the judges of the Superior, District and County Courts (except the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick) and of the Admiralty Courts in cases where the judges thereof are for the time being paid by salary, shall be fixed and provided by the parliament of Canada.

That is the only power vested in the Dominion parliament. Now, when the legislature of the province of Quebec declares that three additional judges are wanted, and have passed an Act constituting a particular court, the Senate has no right to refuse the means required to carry that policy into effect; and in so doing, the Senate is going against the practice that has invariably obtained so far. If you refer to the Quebec Revised Statutes, you will find that eleven judges were at first appointed, under the Act of Judicature of the province of Quebec, to sit in the city of Montreal and in the city of Quebec. In 1888, the Quebec legislature amended that Act, by raising to fourteen the number of judges sitting in those two cities, ten in Montreal, and four in Quebec. Immediately after, the Dominion parliament passed an Act on the lines of that passed by the Quebec legislature, and providing for the salaries of those judges, who were allowed $5,000 each. In 1894, the Quebec legislature, having declared that an additional judge was wanted for the district of Terrebonne, forthwith the Dominion parliament passed a law to the same effect. In 1898, another law was passed to the effect of putting the judge at Terrebonne on the same footing as those of Montreal, and raising his salary to $5,000. At the same time, the law was also amended in favour of the province of Ontario, by appointing an additional judge to the Court of Appeals.

Now, all this goes to show that, in the case of the different provinces, the Dominion government and parliament have invariably complied with the demands of the local legislatures as to the number of judges wanted. So I say that the federal parliament and, consequently, the Senate, which is only a branch of the legislative body, have no right to limit the number of judges, and that all that we have to do here, as shown by the statutes, is to provide for the salaries of the judiciary, leaving to the provincial legislatures to decide what additional number of judges is required for the due administration of justice.

The province of Quebec, through its legislature, having declared that the constitution of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec should be amended, the object being to give three additional judges to the district of Montreal, the Senate has no right, under the constitution, to say that an additional number of judges is not required. I have no hesitation in saying that the action of the Senate is an encroachment upon provincial rights, and a step in the direction of legislative union, a system which the province of Quebec repudiates. Unfortunately, while thus taking a step towards legislative union, the Senate is only following blindly the leaders of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec.

The electorate, I hope, will resent this attack upon provincial autonomy and the rights of the district of Montreal, and the guilty parties will be called to a strict account at the hands of the people. The electors of Jacques Cartier will remember, I hope, that their representative here was silent, like the dog mentioned in the Bible. He allowed his friends to kill this Bill, and he never said a word, while his colleagues were intriguing to have it rejected by the other House. I hope also that the hon. member for the division of Ste. Anne (Montreal), Mr. Quinn, will meet the same fate as his colleague (Mr. Monk), for having pursued the same course. The electors of Ste. Anne (Montreal) will also, I hope, do justice on their representative (Mr. Rodrick), for not having stood up and advocated the interests of the district of Montreal, and for having failed to impress upon his colleagues the desirability of voting for this just measure, and one so calculated to promote their interests. I do not say that those hon. gentlemen have caballed together and induced the Senate to pass this amendment, but I say that they have allowed their colleagues to intrigue to that effect, and I have no doubt that the electorate will call them to a strict account for it whenever an opportunity offers.

Mr. THOMAS FORTIN (Laval). Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say a few words in support of what has been said by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Madore), who has just taken his seat, and who has so ably and so eloquently defended the rights of Quebec. In rising I desire, as the hon. member who has just taken his seat has done, to enter my most solemn protest against the unwarranted attack made by the Senate upon the rights of the province of Quebec. Strange to say, the Senate, whose very reason for existence, it has been said many, many times, is to protect minorities and to protect the provinces, and which is looked upon as the bulwark of the provinces, is the first body to attempt an encroachment of this kind. For my part, as a member representing a constituency in the district of Montreal, and as a member of the bar practicing in the district of Montreal, having practiced there for nearly twenty years, I do most solemnly protest against this injustice, which, if it is allowed to be consummated, will be done to the district of Montreal. That it is necessary that three additional judges shall be appointed for the district of Montreal I think is fairly well admitted now. There can be no question about it whatever, after the figures which have been given by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to-day, and after figures given on former occasions. It is admitted by our opponents that there is a large amount of work in arrears, that there are a large number of cases waiting for an opportunity to be heard. There were 400 cases on June 30 last. We heard the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) say the other day: Well, bring in the judges from the adjoining districts. I could conceive of such an expression coming from the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), who does not really practice his profession, but I cannot understand such an utterance coming from the hon. member for Montmorency, who is actively engaged in the practice of his profession. The hon. member for Montmorency must know that the judges who live in the district of Montreal are brought in whenever they can be procured. The hon. Solicitor General has given an instance of that. Here is a judge who, out of 251 judicial days in one year, has spent 222 days in Montreal. It is notorious to every member of the bar practicing in the district of Montreal that every available judge is brought in, and while the members of the bar practicing in Montreal are very well pleased to see these judges come in, it is more difficult for them to give satisfaction than if they were judges appointed for the district of Montreal. Why? This is a matter of common, almost daily occurrence. A judge can only be taken from his district when he is not engaged therein. That is the first drawback. In the meantime, cases may be accumulating there by hundreds, and if the judge is busy in his own district he cannot be brought to Montreal. Suppose he can be brought to Montreal, sometimes he cannot stay there more than a few days. A long case is inscribed for hearing, and is called. The judge says: I cannot take that case if it will last more than three or four days, or possibly two days, because I must go back to my district in the country. It is a common occurrence, happening almost every day, that a case is commenced before a judge from an outlying district, and if perchance a witness goes away, or falls suddenly ill, or cannot be heard, and the case must be postponed, the case will have to stand to a day when the judge can come back from Sherbrooke, or Bedford, or St. Hyacinthe, and continue the hearing. Meantime all the witnesses may have disappeared. I only quote this instance to show that judges are brought in from outside judicial districts whenever they can be got and whenever they can spare the time. But, even under the best possible conditions, with the assistance of the judges in the neighbouring districts, it is impossible to get along and dispose of the business pending in the courts of the district of Montreal. The very fact that they are brought there as soon as and as often as they can be brought, the very fact that cases are accumulating and that the arrears of work are increasing instead of decreasing, shows that the position I have now laid down is well supported.

Now, I want to say a word more upon the question of the rights of the provinces in regard to the constitution and maintenance of provincial courts. Section 92 of our constitution provides that the organization and maintenance of provincial courts, having both civil and criminal jurisdiction, falls exclusively under the control of the different provinces. The word 'exclusively' is to be seen in the text of section 92 in the first paragraph. Now, I submit that whenever a subject-matter is assigned exclusively to the jurisdiction of a province, that province has supreme power and has supreme control over that subject, and it does not lie within the power of the Dominion parliament to put any obstacle, except there be a breach of the constitution, in the way of the exercise of such power. I want to quote, upon this point, in order to place it beyond dispute, if possible, the opinion expressed by Lord Watson in a case that came before the Privy Council. It was in a case arising out of the liquidation of the Marine Bank in New Brunswick. Here is the language used by Lord Watson on that occasion:

It is clear that the provincial legislature of New Brunswick does not occupy the subordinate position which was ascribed to it in the argument of the appellants.

Mr. Speaker, it is found written in many books, I regret to say, and often quoted as authorities on our constitution, that the provinces occupy a subordinate position to the Dominion parliament in this country. I hold that this proposition is not according to law, as will be shown by this quotation from this very high authority.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the page ?

Mr. FORTIN. This is a decision given in the case of the liquidation of the Merchants Bank of New Brunswick, to be found in Todd's 'Parliamentary Government in the British Colonies,' page 573.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It has been decided twenty times.

Mr. FORTIN. Yes ; I am merely taking this as one case. This is what Lord Watson says, speaking of the province of New Brunswick, and it applies to all the other provinces in Canada :

It derives no authority from the government of Canada, and its status is in no way analogous to that of a municipal institution which is an authority constituted for the purposes of local administration. It possesses powers, not of administration merely, but of legislation, in the strictest sense of that word; and, within the limits assigned by section 92 of the Act of 1867, these powers are exclusive and supreme.

Exclusive and supreme. Here is the opinion held, in fact, it is the judgment of the Lords of the Privy Council. Now, if the provinces have exclusive and supreme power in regard to the organization of provincial courts, I say, Mr. Speaker, that it follows as a consequence, that the moment they have organized a court of the jurisdiction provided for by the constitution, it devolves upon the parliament of Canada to appoint the judges and to vote the salaries to pay the same. Otherwise, the supreme power of the provinces would be ineffective. What would be the use of the province of Quebec deciding, for instance, that thirty judges shall constitute the Superior Court of that province, if parliament can step in and say : No, we will only appoint twenty-five judges ? There would be no supreme power, and the exercise of control over those subjects which are given to the province would be utterly illusory and ineffective. But, whatever view we may take of that, in this particular case there is no excuse to justify the action of the Senate. This House, fortunately, has had a higher sense of its duty than the Upper House in regard to this measure. This Bill has passed this House. The opponents of it who worked so vigorously in the Upper House against it did not even have a division upon the Bill in this House, so that, therefore, either looking at this question from a purely constitutional aspect, or looking upon it as a matter of urgency, I may say that it is not only necessary, but that it is urgent that these judges should be appointed, that the action of the Senate is totally unjustifiable, and in this case it is an encroachment upon provincial rights. It is an attack, and an unwarrantable attack upon provincial autonomy, and I agree with the hon. gentleman from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), that the people of the whole province will resent that attack upon their rights. I can tell the hon. gentleman from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) that he may hear something about it in his own constituency, even though he does not represent a constituency in the district of Montreal. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it is publicly stated that he and the hon. member from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) are the guilty parties in this matter.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not hide what I said here.

Mr. FORTIN. It is believed that it is they who induced the Senate to take such an unprecedented action.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not so.

Mr. FORTIN. The Conservatives have been in power for eighteen years, and they appointed judges year after year. The hon. gentleman from Hochelaga has just told the House of the number of judges increased by provincial statutes, and there never was an attempt by the Senate when the Conservatives were in power, to prevent the appointment of judges, or to come into conflict with the provincial legislatures in that regard. In 1888 a statute was passed in Quebec, to establish in the district of Montreal, a magistrate's court, in order to relieve that court from the congestion of business. The hon. member from Beauharnois knows that at that time, when a case was ready to be put upon the roll in the circuit court, the lawyers for the parties had to wait for a year, and sometimes two years, before it was inscribed. In view of that state of things, the legislature in 1888, passed an Act to establish a magistrate's court in the district of Montreal, the province paying the judges. We hear talk in this parliament about the people's money, as if the people's money was supplied from outside the province, and those who speak in that way seem to forget altogether that the province pays the money. It is not for the Senate to deal with the money of the people ; that is the duty of this House. Well, when the legislature of Quebec passed that Bill in 1888, the statute was disallowed, although the Dominion parliament had not one red cent to pay for the salary of these judges. The legislature re-enacted that statute. The argument to justify the first disallowance was that in establishing a court for the district of Montreal, and appointing judges bearing another name, it was nothing less than a district court, which falls by the British North America Act, under the authority of this parliament. The provincial legislature passed another statute, limiting the jurisdiction of these magistrates to the city of Montreal, and that statute was again disallowed. The ground taken by the government of the time, was that it was an attempt to encroach upon the rights of the Dominion, by appointing judges under a different name. Now, Mr. Speaker, if these gentlemen opposite were so jealous of the rights and privileges of the Dominion parliament in those years, why are they not equally jealous to safeguard the rights of the provinces now. I go so far as to repel the idea that we have the right in this parliament, even to question the desirability of appointing these judges. I say we have no right to question the propriety of the provincial legislatures in passing these laws. Judging from some language I have heard in this House, I can say that if things are allowed to drift in the way they are drifting, then, in two or three years (when we are still in power), if perchance we are called upon to appoint another judge, these gentlemen of the Senate will move for a committee of investigation, and if they are allowed their own free will, they will hold an inquiry into whether the provincial legislatures have acted wisely, and as to whether they have been actuated by proper motives in passing their laws. I protest solemnly against such an idea as this, because I believe that it is drifting towards legislative union. I protest against the action of the Senate all the more because that body is looked upon by the province of Quebec as a bulwark of the defence of our provincial autonomy. It has been truly said that the number of senators in the province of Quebec at the time of confederation, was to be the same as the number from the province of Ontario, without regard to population, because the Senate should be a protection to the province of Quebec. I hold that the action taken by the Senate in this matter, has shown that they have entirely forgotten their origin and that they are absolutely oblivious to their mission. I believe, Sir, that the people will condemn the action of the Senate, unless, indeed, the senators act wisely, and recede from their position, which I believe to be an untenable one.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) has prophesied that possibly something very bad will happen to me, when I go back to my county.

Mr. FORTIN. I hope so.

Mr. BERGERON. I have never doubted the hopes of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin), in that respect, or the hopes of those who sit around him. For the last twenty-five years, he and his friends have been wishing for my political downfall. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin), said that he was not surprised to see the position I have taken on this question, because I do not practice law. I take it that my hon. friend (Mr. Fortin), did not make that statement in any bad spirit, but I can tell him that when he has been for twenty-three years a member of this House, as I have, and when he spends four or five months here every session, he will find his law office a pretty cold place, when he puts his nose in there.

Mr. FORTIN. I dare say that is true.

Mr. BERGERON. It is well known that those who engage actively in politics and fairly conscientiously discharge their duties as members of this House, cannot attend much to their law offices, after even an experience of five or six sessions.

Mr. FORTIN. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. BERGERON. All the same, I contend that I am in a much better position to judge of a question like this, than if I were actively practising my profession before the courts. I do not think it was quite proper for the Solicitor General and for the hon. members from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), and Laval (Mr. Fortin), to attack the Upper House. I am not here to defend the senators, because they can do that very well for themselves. But, I am here to say, that I have not interfered with their judgment in any way. The hon. gentleman from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), has not been here for the last week, I know that he has had no opportunity of speaking with the members of the Senate, and I can state for myself, that I have not in any way spoken to them as to what their action should be. I would be ashamed to have any such dealings with the members of the other House, for I would look upon it as a matter of honour, not to mention to these hon. gentlemen anything in the direction insinuated by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin). These hon. gentlemen know their duty and they do not need to be prompted to it by any one in this House, or elsewhere. The hon. gentleman from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), occupies a very high position at the bar of Montreal, and I was rather surprised that he should lay it down that the Senate had no right to do what it has done. The Senate has a right to act as they have.

The PRIME MINISTER. They have the power.

Mr. BERGERON. They have the power and the right too.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. BERGERON. They have the power and they have the right to sanction or to reject any Bill coming to them from this House. My hon. friend said the Senate had the right to change the salaries of the judges, but in that he made a mistake. The Senate have the right to accept or refuse the Supply Bill as a whole, but they cannot take any item away from it. Therefore, when my hon. friend said the Senate might have changed the salaries of the judges, but had no right to reject entirely what was proposed by this House, he forgot the line of the constitution. Our hon. friends on the other side show so much heat in this discussion that one would think—though I am convinced that that is not their object—that some of them wished to take those positions on the bench. We have heard a good deal lately about the right of members of this parliament to express their opinions.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Did they ever do it in a similar case before?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know; I am talking of the case we have in hand. Any one in this House has a right to discuss any question, and it comes very badly from hon. gentlemen opposite to cast insinuations against members of parliament for exercising their rights and privileges. My hon. friend says that the judicial work in the district of Montreal is congested. I admit that; it has not been denied. We all say it is true; but we are opposed to the remedy which hon. gentlemen opposite want to apply. My hon. friend says there are ten judges in the district of Montreal, but that is not enough. To show hon. gentlemen opposite how far they are from obtaining a remedy for the present state of things, let us look at their figures. My hon. friend the Solicitor General said the other day that it had cost last year over $16,000 to bring judges from the rural districts to sit in Montreal. The hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) said it had cost $7,000. But let us put the figures aside; they have not much to do with the argument. We know that Judge De Lorimier sits in Montreal nearly all the time; that Judge Ouimet, of the Richelieu district, sits in Montreal nearly all the time—he lives in Montreal; that Judge Tellier, of the St. Hyacinthe district, sits in Montreal nearly all the time; that Judge Charland, of St. Johns, sits in Montreal nearly all the time; that Judge Langelier sits in Montreal nearly all the time; that Judge Choquette sits in Montreal very often; and others whose names I have not got. The result is that you have sixteen judges who sit in Montreal nearly all the year round, and still you were 400 cases behind on June 30. The three men you want to appoint are not any better, surely, than those who are there now.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The judges from the country parts cannot do their duty properly while oscillating backward and forward between the country districts and the city. I say that because I have had considerable experience in the Montreal courts, and know something of what is going on there.

Mr. BERGERON. With these three judges, and the ten judges in Montreal, you will have thirteen judges.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend is not correct. There are eleven judges in Montreal, not ten.

Mr. BERGERON. I am taking what the hon. member for Laval said; but if there are eleven judges, that will be all the better for my argument. You bring from the country six more, which makes seventeen judges that you have nearly all the year round; and still you are 400 cases behind. You want to change all that in order to appoint three men, who, added to the eleven, will give fourteen judges for the district of Montreal—because the Solicitor General said the other day that no more country judges will come to Montreal; and how do you expect fourteen judges to do the work when to-day seventeen judges cannot do it?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Because the six men who come from the country parts spend most of their time travelling backward and forward. In my own experience, a judge who was trying a case that I was connected with broke off in the middle of the case, and postponed it for two months.

Mr. BERGERON. There may be some cases like that, but most of the judges from the country can sit from ten o'clock in the morning till five in the afternoon, and then go home by train and come back in the morning again. I know that Judge Tellier does that. He comes to Montreal in the morning; he is often there at nine o'clock, and he holds his court from ten in the morning till five in the afternoon, and then takes his train and goes to his home in St. Hyacinthe.

Mr. MADORE. The train leaves at four o'clock, so he cannot stay till five.

Mr. BERGERON. Though my hon. friend says I do not practice in the courts, I was pleading before the Superior Court last year when it sat so many hours a day that a jurymen, a merchant of Montreal, said to me: 'I would rather give a hundred dollars out of my pocket than sit here a week.' Hon. gentlemen opposite say we cannot change the system here, but they should get the government of Quebec to change it. My hon. friend threw a kind of a slur on Judge Tellier when he said he was 200 days in Montreal; but Judge Tellier never came to Montreal except when he was requested to do so by the chief justice, and the bar were always glad to see him, because he is a good judge. My hon. friend from Laval talks about my not coming back here. My hon. friend may not come back, but I shall be here after the elections. Let hon. gentlemen opposite, if they dare, find a man to offer himself against me. They cannot do so. If you appoint these three men, you will have as many judges from the country as you have to-day; but you will have put three political friends on the bench; that is the point.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. There is the proof; listen to the echo coming from that side of the House.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the whole trouble; that is your argument.

At One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. BERGERON. I have only a few words to add, Mr. Speaker, to what I said before recess. That there is congestion in the administration of justice in the district of Montreal is undoubted, but what we contend on this side is that the proposed remedy will not meet the case. As a matter of fact, at present there are seventeen judges in Montreal, but under this Bill we will have but fourteen, if the judges in the rural districts are no longer to assist the Montreal judges, as we were told the other day by my hon. friend the Solicitor General.

To show that the local legislature of the province of Quebec has the remedy now in its own hands, if it wanted to apply it, let me cite a couple of instances. If the district of Montreal is so congested, why not take some of the counties, which to-day are included in that district, and add them to districts which are not congested, where they could obtain justice just as well administered as in Montreal? Take the counties of Soulanges and Vaudreuil, which to-day belong to the district of Montreal. Why not add them to the district of Beauharnois? They are further away from Montreal than from Beauharnois, and if added to that district, that would take two counties off the district of Montreal and give less work to the judges there. Then take Chambly and Verchères, they could be very well added to the district of Richelieu, and go to Sorel for the administration of justice instead of to Montreal. Hon. gentlemen opposite have laid great stress on their desire to meet the wishes of the province of Quebec, and have insinuated that we on this side are in some way seeking to infringe on the rights and privileges of that province. Let me tell you, Sir, that the people of the province of Quebec have never been consulted upon this question. It is true that my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) brought in a Bill in the local legislature in 1894 to reform the Quebec judicial system, and it is true that that Bill had the support of my hon. friend the Solicitor General, but it did not go through for the simple reason that the local government at the time was too weak to put it through. But I am not of the opinion of my right hon. friend that we are here to follow the public breeze. That may suit a man like him who has no fixed policy, but allows himself to be carried away by whatever current of public opinion happens to run strongest at the moment. I say that we are here to lead public opinion. The Bill of my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) was never submitted to the people for their verdict. It was simply killed by the members of the local legislature for considerations to which it would be too long to enter into. The people themselves were never consulted. But no doubt after this discussion, and when they know that they will be called on to pay a larger sum of money than they have hitherto had to pay for the administration of justice, and that justice could be just as well administered without that additional expense, they will modify their opinions a good deal. I would not be afraid to go on the hustings and there speak as I do here; and I have no doubt that when the question is properly put before the people, they will fairly appreciate it and approve of the stand taken by hon. gentlemen on this side.

We have had homilies from these hon. gentlemen opposite on the respect which we must show for any law coming from the local legislature, because otherwise we would be threatened with legislative union and the destruction of provincial autonomy. It is passing strange to hear these hon. gentlemen display their new-born zeal for provincial autonomy. Why, Mr. Speaker, what party is it that has always supported and worked for provincial autonomy, if not the party to which I have the honour to belong? Who was it that prevented legislative union in 1867, if not the late Sir George Etienne Cartier, speaking in the name of the whole province of Quebec. We have always been, and always will be in favour of provincial autonomy. But my hon. friends are not logical. In 1898, the Attorney General for the province of Quebec had a law adopted by the local legislature of Quebec. What was that law:

Article 2321 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding thereto the following: The three judges of the court of review are, however, taken from all the judges of the Superior Court of the province, at the discretion of the chief justice or acting chief justice, as the case may be.

What does that mean? It means that any of thirty-one judges can be brought into Montreal district or Quebec district and there sit as judge in review.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are doing that to-day.

Mr. BERGERON. Let me finish. Every judge of the superior courts in the province, whether he is sitting in a rural district or in an urban district, whether he is paid $4,000 or $5,000 a year, is entitled to sit in the court of review, and country judges were often called to sit in that court. But the Solicitor General has changed that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. How have I changed it? The hon. gentleman is altogether wrong. I simply require that they shall come to Montreal and sit in the court of review at the discretion of the chief justice.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend, by clause 8 of chapter 52, 61 Victoria, amended the Act concerning provincial judges, by providing that the judges in the rural districts shall only sit in the court of review when their presence there is declared necessary by the chief justice. That is to say, the judges of the Montreal and Quebec district will alone compose that court, and no country judge will be called in, unless one of the city judges cannot be had.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It does not mean that.

Mr. BERGERON. The chief justice interprets it in that way, namely, that only when a Montreal or Quebec judge cannot be had, will he call on a judge from a rural district. What is the result? Out of the eleven judges in Montreal district, two or three are called on every month to sit in the court of review, which leaves only eight to sit on cases in the first court, so that instead of having eleven judges available, you have only eight. I may say that the judges in the country districts felt very much wounded in their dignity when this clause was inserted in the law by my hon. friend. Well, if we appoint these additional judges, that will make fourteen judges in the district of Montreal, out of which there will be three detailed to sit in the court of review every month, so that you will still have only eleven judges in Montreal to sit in the courts of first instance, whereas to-day you have seventeen. Therefore, I say that the disregard of the local legislature has been carried further by this government than we are asking them to carry it.

My hon. friend the Solicitor General is very much concerned about the lawyers. Well, so am I, although, as my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin) has said, I do not practice my profession to any considerable extent. Still, I am very proud of it—I see my hon. friend from Labelle laughing—but I repeat I am proud of being a lawyer, because I have gone through all the preliminary stages which have usually to be followed in order to be admitted to the Bar, and was not made a lawyer by Act of parliament as my hon. friend was.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have not yet been admitted to the Bar.

Mr. BERGERON. We are not here to legislate for the lawyers. They can take very good care of themselves. What we are here for is to legislate for the best advantage of the country at large. We are not here even to legislate for any particular province, but for the whole Dominion, and I contend that it would have been in the interests of litigants in the province of Quebec, if the Bill of my hon. friend from Montmorency had been carried. I believe that the working of that Bill would have had the effect of providing our province with better judges, because if all the judges went on circuit, and none of them confined the year round to the one rural district, they would gain much greater experience and be better fitted to administer the law and establish wise jurisprudence in the different districts, than they are at present.

Here is what section 8 of chapter 52, 61 Victoria, provides :

No travelling allowance shall be granted to any judge requested to sit in review unless it is certified by the chief justice or the acting chief justice in the district that the attendance of such judge was, in his opinion, necessary.

There was no use in putting that clause in the law unless it meant that the judges of the Montreal and Quebec district shall first be called on to sit in review, and that only in case any of them are not available for that work shall a country judge be called on. I know nothing about the reasons the Senate had for rejecting the clause which they rejected in the Bill under discussion. I have not had an interview with any of them or talked with any of them about the matter, but I imagine that some of the reasons were those I have just given.

Now, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the other day, uttered what seems to me a very dangerous doctrine. He said that these judges should be appointed, because it would hurt the feelings of the people, it would go contrary to public feeling, if the law as it is to-day were changed. But, if it is changed for the good of the people and in their interest, does he not think it is the duty of public men, wherever they are, to take the responsibility of doing that? I thought the doctrine he professed a monstrous one. Would he be where he is to-day, should we have confederation at all, if the politicians, the public men, of 1867 had not taken hold and done what they thought was best for Canada, carrying it through without consulting the people? That is the only way you can carry on the affairs of the country. You are supposed to be endowed with certain talents and to have acquired knowledge which are not possessed by everybody. And, for that reason you are called upon to direct public opinion. My hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin) said to me : We will watch you. But, he cannot drive me from my position in that way. I approve of what has been done by the other Chamber, and I shall vote as I did before. I am not afraid to do so. I take this course because I think it is best in the interest of the people of the province of Quebec, and best in the interest of the whole country. I shall not be afraid to go before my electors and declare my position. I have done it in the past. My right hon. friend knows that I have not been afraid to express my opinions ; and, thank God, I have been able to show the people that what I did was in their interest, and they have sanctioned the position I have taken. I am ready to do the same thing to-day; and, threats or no threats, I am going to vote against the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick).

Mr. DOMINIQUE MONET (Laprairie and Napierville). The question before the House is, to my thinking, of such concern to the province of Quebec that I feel that I should say a word upon it. I may paraphrase the expression of the great Nelson and say that the province of Quebec will expect every Liberal of Quebec to do his duty. We have certainly entered upon a struggle between the people and the Senate; and it comes by the provocation of the Senate and by their infringement upon the rights of the people of the province of Quebec. This session has been a very bad session so far as our constitution is concerned. It commenced by the ratification by this House of an encroachment upon the constitution by the government, and it is ending by an encroachment by the Senate upon the provincial autonomy of Quebec. I protested against the first encroachment, though I had to go against my own friends. It was with regret that I did so. It is with great pleasure that, to-day, I side with the Liberal party to protest against this encroachment upon provincial rights by the Senate. I was not surprised at the speech delivered by the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), nor with those delivered by my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin), and by the bâtonnier of the bar of the district of Montreal, my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore). Like every Liberal, these hon. gentlemen are born with an instinct in favour of popular rights. Shall I say that I had been surprised at the tone of the speech of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), or of the action of the Senate in this matter? These things are to me surprising, because they are inconsistent with the boast that hon. gentlemen opposite have always been making about having framed our constitution, their protection of the minority, and about their determination to uphold the constitution against all attacks. I believe it is blindness on their part; but, I would withdraw the word 'blindness,' if I were shown that the denunciation of the manner in which justice is administered in the province of Quebec by the hon. member for Beauharnois was not intended for political effect in the other provinces. The hon. member for Beauharnois related a story the other day about a boy who had been badly treated by the jailor of Beauharnois because, when he was allowed out of jail, he did not come back early enough in the evening. What was the object of that story, if it were not to impress upon the other provinces that justice was not well administered in the province of Quebec? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) may boast on the floor of this House that he will be returned and my hon. friend from Laval will stay at home. But, I suppose, the electors of the district of Beauharnois will have a word to say about that; and the whole province of Quebec will protest against the speech of the hon. gentleman to-day, and the speech he delivered in a previous debate on this question.

What are the facts? In 1899, the legislature of the province of Quebec, acting within their constitutional powers, passed a Bill declaring that it was expedient that this parliament should increase the number of judges of the Superior Court of that province from thirty-one to thirty-four. The law was not to come into force at once, but was to be brought into force by a proclamation of the Lieutenant-Governor. On June 3, 1899, a resolution was proposed in the council of the bar of the province of Quebec to the effect that this government should appoint three new judges for the province of Quebec. To show that there is no political partisanship in the matter, no grasping at a job by the Liberals of this House, it is sufficient to say that motion was moved by a Liberal and seconded by a Conservative, Mr. J. Henri Archambault. Afterwards, the same resolution was considered by the whole bar of Montreal, and was unanimously adopted. On July 1, this government, acquiescing in these petitions and in the law passed by the local legislature, asked this House to vote the salaries for three new judges. On July 11, the Senate amended that Bill by striking out the first clause, containing all that related to the province of Quebec; and to-day this House is asked simply to stultify itself by accepting that amendment, which we would not accept when this Bill was before us in the first place. The law that governs the matter was given us in 1857 by the most eminent leader that the Conservative party ever had—George Etienne Cartier. Under this law a decentralization system of administration of justice was established in Quebec. In 1867, when the British North America Act came into force, the same system was in existence; and, by section 92 of the British North America Act, it is declared that the power of fixing the administration of justice in the province of Quebec should rest exclusively with the legislature of the province. Here is the section:

The legislature has exclusive power to make laws concerning the administration, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, of both civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in all civil matters in those courts.

So, Mr. Speaker, Quebec is entitled to say what the number of judges shall be, whether thirty, thirty-one or thirty-four, and all this government has to do is to appoint the judges so desired and to pay their salaries. I admit that this is an anomaly. It is to my mind an anomaly that the government who pays the money should not have the right to say in what way this money should be spent. But does not the same anomaly exist in the province of Ontario and in all the other provinces? Has this government a word to say of the manner that it may please Ontario to conduct her judicial system? Certainly not. And yet the Senate has made no change in those portions of the Bill relating to the province of Ontario. So if there exists an anomaly the only way to remove it is to amend the constitution, and not by the Senate attempting to infringe upon the constitution as long as it exists as it is to-day. The provincial governments have always had the full enjoyment of the right to say what the number of judges shall be and what their duties shall be.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the justification of the Senate? because there is an alleged justification. It is a well-known axiom in law that the greatest culprits never plead guilty to a charge; and so the Senate has set up a sort of plea for their justification, and the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has adopted their plea on the floor of this House. But before examining this plea, let me show in what spirit this question was approached by the Senate. Let me quote a few words that I find in Le Journal, the French Conservative organ of the province of Quebec:

But whose fault is it if the position of the judges does not go to these gentlemen? Perhaps if Mr. Mills had not been so stiff and so autocratic, the position of the Senate might have been different.

So the matter has not been approached by the Senate on its merits, but the action of the Senate was taken because Mr. Mills was a little too stiff for those hon. gentlemen. It is amusing to hear those old Tory senators talk of stiffness. Sir, I believe there is a certain stiffness in the Senate, but it exists in their brains as well as in their legs; and certainly it does not exist either in the legs or in the brain of the Hon. Mr. Mills. Another reason given by the Senate is that the system of the province of Quebec has not worked satisfactorily, that it is a vicious system and should not be continued any longer. The hon. member for Beauharnois seems to think that if the judges for the rural districts were allowed to come to Montreal and help dispose of the cases that the present number of judges are unable to dispose of, that the litigants in Montreal would be put to greater inconvenience. But the hon. member himself gave a strong argument against that contention when he admitted that during last month no less than six judges came from the districts surrounding Montreal to sit in Montreal, and with what result? Did they dispose of all the cases brought before the court? Not at all; no less than 131 cases remained undisposed of. No stronger argument can be adduced to show the need of more judges in Montreal than this admission of the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly we want more judges, but not in the way you want to employ them.

Mr. MONET. My hon. friend is a lawyer, I admit he is a talented man, and if he does not practice at the bar more than he does it is not for want of ability. But will the hon. gentleman claim before this parliament that we have any right to change a system which he thinks himself is so vicious? Certainly not. So we are face to face with this situation, that we have no right to change a system and to remedy an evil that is admitted to exist by the member for Beauharnois. We are asking for more judges in the Montreal district, and we are entitled to get them. Not only do we require more judges in Montreal, but even with those judges who have come to the assistance of their colleagues in Montreal, they have not been able to dispose of all the cases. But my hon. friend says that owing to the law put through parliament last session by the Solicitor General, the judges do not come to the court in Montreal. Well, he has just admitted that six judges did come from the surrounding districts of Montreal to sit in the city courts.

Now, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), whom I do not see in his seat to-day, brought up a new argument the other day when he said that Mr. Justice Cimon has admitted, in an interview published in a newspaper in Montreal, that the system is vicious, and has admitted that it would be expedient to compel the judges of the rural districts to sit in Montreal and help dispose of the cases there. But if Mr. Justice Cimon has chosen to take the public press into his confidence, he does not remain a judge but has become a public debater, and I will treat him accordingly. I will read to the House an opinion of that gentleman before he was a judge and when he was a member of parliament. In 1881 there was a question of appointing two new judges in the province of Quebec, and after certain remarks from the Hon. Edward Blake, Mr. Cimon spoke as follows:

Verily do I regret the conduct of some judges in the rural districts of Lower Canada, especially in the country below Quebec, which conduct justifies what the hon. member has said. I regret that the judges appointed by the federal government, and who are compelled by the local enactment to reside in their districts, I regret, I say, that they should take the liberty of leaving the country and residing in town; they thus give cause to the hon. member for Durham's assertions. But because the judges do not perform their duties, because they act contrary to law, because these judges neglect the administration of justice in the places where they are bound to, it does not follow that such administration should cease to become necessary.

So, Mr. Speaker, the argument of the gentleman who is now a judge and who was then a member of this House, was for the maintenance of the system as it then existed. He wanted only to redress abuses.

More remains to be said. What is the conduct of those judges who should remain in their districts? They take up their residence in the district of Montreal. With the system which they have adopted of preventing the transaction of business in the rural districts, there is nothing to be surprised at if that business should be so small. I maintain that with such a system there is no cause for surprise at the cases in rural districts being but few, nor is there anything to be surprised at that one should hear the hon. member from Jacques Cartier exclaim that the judges should be made to return to town from the country.

Some figures have been given in this House to show the work that is performed by the judges. Some hon. members have said that there are only thirty contested cases in one district, only twenty in another district, that the judges have very little to do, and that a change in the system of administering justice in the province of Quebec should be made right away. But, Mr. Speaker, the figures which have been given to the House do not give a fair idea of what is going on. The figures given to the House include only the cases brought before the superior courts, but all these judges, and this is where the system in Quebec differs from the system in the province of Ontario, are at the same time judges of the circuit court, and judges of the criminal court, so that they are kept a great deal busier than hon. gentlemen opposite have said they were. And I may say most important cases come from rural districts. But, Mr. Speaker, this is not to my mind the main feature of the question at issue. I claim that it is not for hon. gentlemen acting as federal members in this House, but for the people of the province of Quebec in their local legislative capacity, to change the system that is in force in that province, and that if it is considered proper in the best interests of the country that it shall be changed, the people of Quebec constitute the only authority competent to make the change. We in the province of Quebec do not admit the right of the province of Ontario, or of the maritime provinces, or of the western provinces, to change the system that is in force in the province of Quebec. We claim the right of non-interference from the province of Ontario and from senators coming from the province of Ontario, who are the men who come to-day and tell us that our system in Quebec is vicious. It is true that the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) also made this statement, but we can answer him. He is in a position to come upon the hustings in the province of Quebec and speak his own mind, and we are able to answer him, but when senators come from the province of Ontario, or from other provinces of the Dominion, and tell us that our system is vicious, we have only one thing to tell them, and it is: Read the constitution and mind your own business. That is what we are ready to do, and that is what we ask them to do. What are the first conditions that should be present to enable a legislator to enact wise legislation as far as the administration of justice is concerned? If you want to make a good law it seems to me that you should first know the wishes and habits of the people to whom this law is to be applied. What do the senators from Ontario, from the maritime provinces, from the western provinces, know about that? They do not know anything about it. They do not, I suppose, know the geography of the province of Quebec, and if the question is asked: Would it be proper that these gentlemen should come and teach us what we should do in regard to the administration of justice in the province of Quebec, I say no. What kind of judges would we have if they had the right to come and teach us what we should do? They are indirectly asking the province of Quebec to change its system and to make a reform. But, what reform? The very reform that was brought before the legislature of Quebec by the hon. member for Montmorency, which the hon. member brought, not only once, but twice, before the legislature of Quebec in the years 1893 and 1894, with the result that neither of these years was the Conservative government then in power able to have it carried through. What is the meaning of that? The hon. member for Beauharnois told us the other day that the government were not strong enough to have the measure carried. The hon. member knows better than that. He knows that the Conservative government, in power in Quebec in 1893 and 1894, was, numerically speaking—

Mr. BERGERON. I did not speak in that way.

Mr. MONET. Numerically speaking, one of the strongest governments that had ever been in power in that province.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not mean to say that its numbers were not sufficient to enable it to carry the Bill, but I meant that morally speaking it had not the courage to do it. That is what I meant.

Mr. MONET. That is a very poor certificate for the Conservative government of Quebec, and is in marked contrast with the language held by the hon. gentleman when he told the right hon. Prime Minister that he should not defer to the wave of public opinion, but that he should do what is right. What about the hon. member for Montmorency? He was not strong enough to have his measure carried out. Why, if numerically the government were so very strong? What was the reason? Was it because the Conservative members of the local legislature in 1893 and 1894 did not represent the feelings, the sentiments and opinions of their own respective ridings?

No. Neither the Liberal nor Conservative party in the legislature of Quebec has dared at any time to change the system in force in that province. So that, we have the unanimous feeling of both political parties in the province of Quebec, which is expressed in this way: We cherish this system, and we will stick to it. It does not belong to the hon. member for Beauharnois in his capacity as a federal member, and it does not belong to the Tory senators in the Upper Chamber to come and teach us what we must do in the province of Quebec. But, Mr. Speaker, if I failed to understand the exact position of the hon. member for Beauharnois from listening to the first part of his speech, I must frankly admit that in the last portion of his remarks the cat jumped out of the bag. He did not say that it was his main objection, but I am sure it is that these appointments are not to be made by his own party. He admitted indirectly that if the Conservatives were in power, and that if the appointment of these three judges were not to be in favour of the Liberal party he would carry this measure before the Senate.

Mr. BERGERON. What is that?

Mr. MONET. If that were not the exact idea of the hon. member for Beauharnois, surely it was the idea of the hon. member for Montmorency, because the hon. member for Montmorency has been more indiscreet than the hon. member for Beauharnois, as far as plain language was concerned. Last year the hon. member for Beauharnois, criticising the appointment of a new judge for the district of St. Francis, said openly on the floor of this House—and I have still the sound of his very words in my ears—that there was indeed a law proposed by him in the legislature of Quebec, asking for a new judge, but they had done so, not because it was expedient, but because it was to serve political exigencies. We, therefore, see that party exigencies are influencing the action of gentlemen opposite on political questions, and if that is not the idea foremost to the mind of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), it is certainly the idea which actuates the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). I believe there is some truth in the statement I have made with reference to the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). I will not say he is looking for a job, but I am fairly sure that if his friends are returned to power after next election, he will be the first one to call for the appointment of three new judges. It is not as a mere matter of inference that I say so, but it is a statement made in view of the facts, because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron), has himself told us that he pleaded a case before the courts last year, while for several years before, he never pleaded a case. It is, therefore, quite clear that he wants to go back to the practice of law, so that if his friends come to power, he may be raised to the dignity of the bench.

Mr. BERGERON. Must I tell my hon. friend (Mr. Monet), of all the cases I have pleaded?

Mr. LANDERKIN. You will plead strongly for a judgeship, no doubt.

Mr. BERGERON. You will need the services of a lawyer pretty soon, if you keep on.

Mr. MONET. I assert that if there is not absolute blindness in the conduct of the Conservative party, there is certainly inconsistency. We have on record the speech made by Sir Charles Tupper last year, and referring to the platform of the right hon. the Prime Minister as to the reform of the Senate, Sir Charles Tupper said: That if this reform of the Senate was to be accepted by this parliament, there would be no more provincial autonomy and there would be no more protection for the rights of the minority in the province of Quebec. He first quotes the Liberal leader, who says:

The very essence of our compact is that the union shall be federal and not legislative. Our Lower Canada friends have agreed to give us representation of population in the Lower House on the express condition that they shall have equality in the Upper House. On no other condition could we have advanced a step; and, for my part, I am quite willing they should have it. In maintaining the existing sectional boundaries, and handing over the control of local matters to local bodies, we recognize, to a certain extent, a diversity of interests, and it is quite natural that the protection for those interests, by equality in the Upper Chamber, should be demanded by the less numerous provinces.

Sir Charles Tupper then goes on to say:

Mr. Speaker, to-day I speak, not only in the presence of this House, but of the country, when I say that no union, no confederation could have been achieved except upon the principle that representation by population in the House of Commons should be safeguarded by an independent Senate, whose members were nominated by the Crown for life, and in which Quebec would have twenty-four members, the same as Ontario, whose population was much larger, and Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island should have twenty-four senators also, although their population was much smaller than even that of Quebec. What is this proposal which is now made? It is a proposal to strike at the very foundation of this principle of confederation. I brand every man in the great province of Ontario who would support such a proposition, as guilty—not of treason to his country, because it may suit Ontario—but I brand him as guilty of the worst description of bad faith in going back upon the pledge under which the province of Quebec and the smaller provinces were induced to enter into this confederation.

The province of Quebec was induced, Sir, to enter into confederation on the very condition, without which confederation would never have been accomplished, and that condition was that there should be provincial autonomy. Our provincial autonomy is guaranteed in the clause of the British North America Act, which I have read to the House, and we are entitled to have it maintained as it is. Sir Charles Tupper proceeded to say :

I am not surprised that the First Minister was obliged, in company with his friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), to hie himself away to Quebec to dragoon the leader of that province into giving support to such a proposition. They found, after all their communications had failed, that the legislature of Quebec was about to rise without giving them support in this matter. And why?

Let the hon. member from Beauharnois regard these words :

Because there is not an intelligent man in the province of Quebec—and I say it fearlessly—who knows what he is doing, who recognizes what this project would be, that does not know that by supporting it he is cutting the throat of his province.

I feel, Sir, that now, in the last years—I might almost say in the last months, or hours—of my life, I would be only too glad to be exempt from the labour and difficulty which such work involves; but I feel that I would be faithless to the Crown, faithless to Canada, faithless to this great empire to which we belong, if I did not consecrate every hour of my life to meeting on the threshold this dire attempt to subvert the very foundations of this Canadian confederation. I have not a knowledge of the French language; but, Sir, I will make it my business to visit every part of the province of Quebec, and, with the assistance of my able friends and compatriots on this side of the House, I shall be prepared to meet the Minister of Public Works or the Prime Minister of this government, and let it be fairly debated in the presence of intelligent men, whether Sir George E. Cartier, Sir Etienne Taché, Sir Hector Langevin, would not have burned their hands off in the fire before they would have assented to a confederation on any such principle. I do not hesitate to say that no power could have induced either Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island to have any lot or part in this confederation if they had supposed that any party which obtained power as this party has obtained power, could, without the due sanction of the people of this country, lay their unholy hands on the ark of confederation itself, and endeavour to destroy that work which I need not say to this House has made of this Dominion of Canada a country of which every Canadian can be proud.

Sir, if we allow the Senate to infringe upon provincial autonomy, as it has infringed upon it, then every man in this House, whether he be Conservative or Liberal, who will support the action of the Senate, will be guilty of that treason to his country which becomes the hon. gentleman from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), and the hon. gentleman for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), to be the first to support those men who have voted against the vested rights of the province of Quebec in this matter. I believe that the people of the entire province will resent, not only the silence of those who did not speak, but also the words of those who spoke, for their words have been worse than the silence of others, but the whole province will resent the language and the action of hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe, Sir, that the people of our province will resent that conduct to such an extent, that after next election the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), will never have an opportunity again to record such a vote as he wants to give to-day.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I should not rise to speak, Sir,—

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. This is a most extraordinary thing. Here is one of the most important constitutional questions that could possibly be brought before the House, and three speakers on the other side have addressed us, and hon. gentlemen opposite seem unwilling to deliberate. It must be said that my hon. and learned friend the Solicitor General did not introduce the question in a very deliberative tone, and it has not been discussed in that spirit of deliberation which it should be by the hon. and learned gentlemen on the other side. What, after all, is the position? The Senate is a revising body. Is it to be supposed that a revising body shall never come to a decision contrary to the views of the government of the day. The Senate would be perfectly useless if at any time we should contemplate it taking such a course as that. And, whatever action the Senate may take, it surely can be approached in a perfectly calm state of mind, and one consonant with the spirit and letter of the constitution. What has happened? A question has been brought before this House in the form of a Bill relating to the appointment of judges in different provinces, and amongst others the province of Quebec. The first clause of that Bill provides for adding three judges to the number of the judiciary in the province of Quebec. The opposition in this House takes a different view from the government, and the Bill passes on division. It goes up to the Senate, and it is discussed there. The result is that the first clause is thrown out in the Senate. The Bill comes back here, and the Solicitor General rises to move that this House do not agree to the amendment of the Senate. In that he is perfectly right; that is the first step according to the constitution. The next step will be to see what the Senate will do. I suppose the next step after that would be a conference with the Senate. We do not know what the result of that conference would be. It may be that after the conference the Senate would come to the conclusion that looking at the question on all sides the government view is the one that should prevail, and that they would not insist on their amendment. All these constitutional steps have yet to be taken, and yet, we have the Solicitor General, in a somewhat strident and incendiary speech, introducing this question, and we have my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Monet) making a speech which I think would be more suitable to a flaming political issue and on a platform outside of this House. Now, with reference to the constitution, let me point out the proposition which is actually before this House at the present time, emanating from the Solicitor General. It is that any local legislature can, in regard to the appointment of judges, make automatons of the two Houses of the Dominion. That is the proposition, and when it is stated in its length and breadth, I am sure it will startle hon. gentlemen opposite, who have been very facile in pronouncing on the constitution, as if they were the only persons who knew anything about it. The proposition of the Solicitor General, of the bâtonnier of the Montreal bar, of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), and of my hon. friend who has just spoken, is: Let any local legislature pass an Act providing for a number of judges—say three, say five, say ten, say twenty—because if the proposition is good for anything, it is good in an extreme case; then all that need to be done is to have this House apprised of the fact, and we have to pass legislation in accordance therewith. Here is the proposition: That a measure has to be introduced into this House, it might be involuntarily by the government, and we must not debate it. We have nothing to do except to consider what the local legislature has done; the Senate must not debate it, and we must forsooth pass it. I cannot agree that that is the meaning of the constitution. We could all agree with the Solicitor General that the subclause of section 92 and section 96 of the British North America Act have to be read together; but they have not to be read in the sense that the two Houses of the parliament of Canada are abject creatures, without wills of their own, without a right to deliberate, helpless automata in the hands of the local legislature, with respect to the appointment of judges. I cannot think that is the constitution; and to show the absurdity of the proposition you have only to state the extreme case, that you might have a silly, ignorant legislature in some very small province providing extravagant judicial machinery, requiring the appointment of a number of judges altogether in excess of what would be reasonable, and calling upon the Dominion parliament to pass a measure providing for those judges; and all the Senate and House of Commons would have to do would be to endorse it. The Solicitor General, the hon. member for Laval and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, have stated again and again that the Senate, in throwing out the clause in the Bill providing for three judges are assailing provincial rights. That is the most extravagant statement I ever listened to. How are they assailing provincial rights? We are on the eve of a general election. Let it be put forward as the policy of this government that they want additional judges, and let them get the sentiment of the country in favour of their policy, and everybody knows that the Senate will give way. Everybody knows that the Senate, like the House of Lords, is a delaying body whose chief function is to place the sovereign power where it rightly belongs, namely, in the electorate. Everybody knows, therefore, that the Senate's veto, whether of a railway charter, a Bill like this, or a constituent measure, is simply a delaying act, and not conclusive and final. My hon. friend who has just sat down, and also the Solicitor General, spoke as if the province of Quebec were a unit upon this question, and as if the bar of Quebec were a unit upon it. The Solicitor General said: 'I speak for the bar.' How absurd that is when a few days ago we heard two distinguished members of that bar, who practice constantly before it, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), stating that they were against the measure. If the province of Quebec and the bar were a unit in favour of this measure, how utterly absurd it would be to suppose that my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) would be so lost to the incumbency which attaches to his position as a prominent politician as to array himself in the strong manner he does against it. The claim that neither the province of Quebec or the Quebec bar is a unit on this question is therefore palpably contradictory to the facts. And I think I am within the memory of the House when I say that my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) told us the other day that he had consulted in 1892 all the lawyers on this Bill and only one objected to it. Besides, in point of fact, the hon. the Solicitor General then supported it.

As the constitution has again and again been referred to, we may as well just see what the constitution is. I have in my hand Todd's 'Parliamentary Government in the British Colonies,' and on page 699, Mr. Todd says:

Under parliamentary government an Upper Chamber derives peculiar efficacy and importance from the fact of its independent position. Free from the trammels of party, it is able to deliberate upon all public questions on their merits unrestrained by political considerations, which are too apt to bias the judgment of every administration in certain contingencies. For the same reason, an Upper Chamber, being unable to determine the fate of a ministry, is much less influenced by party combinations and intrigues than the popular assembly. This constitutes the special value of an Upper House, under parliamentary institutions. But while the Upper Chambers of all constitutional legislatures recognize their position as one removing them entirely from party considerations, and as designed to be a guard against hasty and immature legislation, they would doubtless feel it to be their duty to weigh with more than ordinary anxiety and care the explicit declarations of public opinion, when deliberately given by all classes of the community upon any measures, after the period of excitement which might have given rise to it had passed away. When such a spirit pervades the Upper Chamber, there need be no apprehension of a conflict between the two branches composing the legislatures.

Again, this great author says :

But whether constituted by nomination or election, the Upper House in every British colony is established for the sole purpose of fulfilling therein the legislative functions of the House of Lords, whilst the Lower House exercises within the same sphere the rights and powers of the House of Commons.

What is the function of the House of Lords? It is a revising, a delaying Chamber, as I have already described the Senate. Sir, within recent years we have had the House of Lords in England fulfilling this function. We have had it delaying measures passed by the overwhelming majorities in the House of Commons, and in regard to which excitable people—people not understanding that in the House of Lords they have the best second Chamber that could possibly be devised—attacked the House of Lords and menaced it with ruin. What happened? These measures were submitted to the opinion of the electorate, and the electorate endorsed, not the action of the government and the Lower House, but the action of the House of Lords, and swept out of power the government of the day.

I have here Mr. Bagehot, and I want to read one sentence from him, who is probably the most radical writer on the constitution that we have :

With a perfect Lower House it is certain that an Upper House would be scarcely of any value. If we had an ideal House of Commons, perfectly representing the nation, always moderate, never passionate, abounding in men of leisure, never omitting the slow and steady forms necessary for good consideration, it is certain that we should not need a higher Chamber. The work would be done so well that we should not want any one to look over or revise it.

And he goes on to point out how impossible it is to get these conditions, and, therefore, how absolutely necessary to a free constitution is the guarding influence of a second Chamber :

The most dangerous of all sinister interests is that of the executive government, because it is the most powerful. It is perfectly possible—it has happened and will happen again—that the cabinet, being very powerful in the Commons, may inflict minor measures on the nation which the nation did not like, but which it did not understand enough to forbid. If, therefore, a tribunal of revision can be found in which the executive, though powerful, is less powerful, the government will be the better; the retarding Chamber will impede minor instances of parliamentary tyranny, though it will not prevent or much impede revolution.

Mr. DAVIN.

We had an illustration of the benefit of a second Chamber in what occurred here in one of the early sessions of this term. We had the famous Mackenzie & Mann contract, which passed this House by an overwhelming majority, although it was well known that it was only by the exercise of executive tyranny that the measure was forced through, and we had members of the Liberal party, who had voted for the contract, going over to the Senate and appealing to the senators: For God's sake, throw out that measure that we have been forced to swallow. The Senate threw it out. If the sentiment of the electorate had been with the government, the government would have reintroduced that measure, or there and then dissolved the House and appealed to the country, as the Minister of Public Works wanted it to do. But the government dared not do that, because they knew that the people would register their verdict in such a way as to show that the Senate had subserved the very purpose described by Bagehot :

This is the mode in which the House of Lords came to be what it now is, a Chamber with (in most cases) a veto of delay with (in most cases) a power of revision, but with no other rights or powers. The question we have to answer is, 'The House of Lords being such, what is the use of the Lords?'

He goes on to show that in cases where there is no doubt as to the will of the people, and no danger of executive tyranny paralyzing the deliberate will of the House of Commons, then the House of Lords gives in. Here is Mr. Dicey. He says :

The electorate is, in fact, the sovereign of England. It is a body which does not, and from its nature hardly can, itself legislate, and which, owing chiefly to historical causes has left in existence a theoretically supreme legislature. The result of this state of things would naturally be that the conduct of the legislature which (ex hypothesi) cannot be governed by laws, should be regulated by understandings of which the object is to secure the conformity of parliament to the will of the nation.

The same thing holds good of the understanding or habit in accordance with which the House of Lords are expected in every serious political controversy, to give way at some point or other to the will of the House of Commons, as expressing the deliberate resolve of the nation, or of that further custom which, though of comparatively recent growth, forms an essential article of modern constitutional ethics, by which, in case the peers should finally refuse to acquiesce in the decision of the Lower House, the Crown is expected to nullify the resistance of the Lords by the creation of new peerages. How, it may be said, is the 'point' to be fixed at which in case of a conflict between the two Houses, the Lords must give way, the Crown ought to use its prerogative in the creation of new peers? The question is worth raising, because the answer to it throws great light upon the nature and aim of the articles which make up our conventional code.

This reply is, that the point at which the Lords must yield or the Crown intervene is properly determined by anything which conclusively shows that the House of Commons represents on the matter in dispute the deliberate decision of the nation.

And nothing can so completely show that as an election in which the verdict of the people would be given one way or the other. He refers also to the prerogative of the Crown. Now, I read this to show how far Mr. Dicey goes. In discussing the relative actions of the Upper and the Lower House, he has before him the probability, which we know to be very strong, but the deliberative will of a House may be paralyzed by the action of the executive. He uses it as an analogy to strongly point his view in regard to the power of the Upper House. Referring to the prerogative of the Crown, he says:

The discretionary power of the Crown occasionally may be, and according to constitutional precedents sometimes ought to be, used to strip an existing House of Commons of its authority.

Mr. Dicey is a man of extreme radical views. He contemplates that even the House of Commons may so far and so palpably act out of agreement with the law of the nation that the Crown may step in and deprive the House of Commons of authority—in other words, dissolve it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Question.

Mr. DAVIN. This is the question:

But the reason why the House can, in accordance with the constitution, be deprived of power and of existence, is that an occasion has arisen on which there is fair reason to suppose that the opinion of the House is not the opinion of the electors.

Mr. CHARLTON. This is the 163rd day of the session, and we want to get home.

Mr. DAVIN. Here is an extraordinary thing—the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says this is one of the last days of the session, and this is a question on which three gentlemen have spoken on the other side, it seems to me with some heat—

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are interested.

Mr. FOSTER. And, if the House will allow me, it is a proposition which I was prepared, with the consent of the Prime Minister to let go entirely without discussion.

Mr. BERGERON. We were willing not to say a word, and four men spoke before we commenced.

Mr. DAVIN. It was most important to recall the House to what is really the issue and to point out the constitutional position as I have pointed it out from Todd, Dicey and Bagehot. And, now that the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has returned, I repeat that his proposition that these two Houses are only automata in the hands of any local assembly as to the appointment of further judges, is a violent proposition, so violent that you have only to state it in its extremity—that, for instance, a foolish provincial assembly might call for the appointment of twenty or thirty new judges and this government and this House of Commons and Senate would have nothing to do, but, without deliberation, to pass the necessary measures though it might be contrary to our conviction—you have only to state that proposition to show it to be absurd and indefensible.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). It is not my intention to follow the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in his quotations of constitutional law. I am not, for one, disposed to question rights of the Senate to act within their constitutional functions. But I say that if that body, or the majority of them, wish their House to be respected by the people, they must play the role for which they were established—to act as special keepers of the constitution, and not to set the example of violating it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has read us long quotations of gentlemen with whom he was personally acquainted, and other illustrious personages, assuming a likeness between the Senate and the House of Lords. I need not point out to the House the difference between these two bodies. The House of Lords is an institution the utility of which we may question, but its origin and the traditions it represents we cannot question; while the Senate has, unfortunately, for the last number of years, in fact almost ever since confederation, degenerated into a body of politicians; a circumstance which is particularly conspicuous since the majority of that House is not in harmony with the majority here. I may say en passant, that the hon. gentleman has referred to Senator Power as having supported the majority of the Senate on this Bill. I do not know where the hon. gentleman got his information. I know that Senator Power opposed the position taken by the Minister of Justice on the amendment to the Criminal Code as to trade unions; but I do not think that he agreed with the majority of the Senate in regard to this Bill—in fact, I understand that Senator Power both spoke and voted in favour of the Bill. The hon. gentleman has also quoted the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), to show that there was a difference of opinion among the members of the Quebec bar on this question. Though I have a great deal of respect for the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and the hon. member for Montmorency; though I acknowledge that they are amongst the lawyers of good standing in the province of Quebec; yet, I must say that in this matter, they did not act as members of the bar of the province of Quebec or as representing the interest of that province, but—like the majority of the Senate—they simply acted as Tory politicians and took their position as such. As to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), I am not surprised at the position he has taken, because he is nothing but a Tory politician. Nobody knows better than the hon. member for Montmorency what the opinion of the bar in the province of Quebec is in this matter. In 1894, he brought in a Bill in the provincial legislature to organize the judicial centralization which the hon. member for Beauharnois would like to force upon the province in contravention of the conditions made with that province when it entered confederation. He sent a copy of the Bill to all the lawyers and all the prothonotaries of the province of Quebec, Conservative and Liberal. The answer was so unanimous against the measure that he thought it well not to allow the Bill to face the certain condemnation of the majority of the House, but to drop it. He has himself admitted on the floor of this House that he could not find, even among his own colleagues in the government of Quebec, supporters for that measure. Whilst, on the contrary, the Bill upon which the government have been acting and have proposed the appointment of three new judges, has been not only approved by the Liberal majority of the legislative assembly, but passed without division through both Houses of the parliament of Quebec. There we have a striking example of what is the opinion of the people and of the bar of Quebec. In one case, the Attorney General of Quebec, commanding a majority in both branches of the legislature, could not pass his Bill favouring judicial centralization, as the opinion of the bar was against it; while, on the other hand, the Attorney General of the Liberal administration carried his Bill through both branches of the parliament of Quebec, though the legislative council was composed of a majority of Conservatives. Therefore, it is plain what the opinion of the people of Quebec is on this subject.

Now, the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has tried to make a point against the Solicitor General, who, by the law of 1898, provided that the chief justices of the districts of Montreal and Quebec should designate the judges who are to sit in the court of review, and the hon. member for Beauharnois charges against the Solicitor General that he was the first to bring in a Bill infringing upon the rights and autonomy of the province in respect to the judiciary. Sir, I think his argument is unfounded. The federal government, the nominating body, and the body who pays the judges of the various provinces, passed an Act, not to interfere at all with the judiciary of the province, but simply to provide that some judges nominated and paid by this parliament should not be able to take advantage of their position to increase their salaries and travelling allowances beyond what they were entitled to. But, Sir, the proof that the Solicitor General in his Bill respected the autonomy of the province, is that he left the operation of the Bill exclusively to the two chief justices. Now the member for Beauharnois gets up and says: Supposing centralization were a good thing for the province, this parliament should force it upon the province. Sir, whatever any law may be in theory, I say that no law is good when it has to be forced upon an unwilling people. The position taken by the member for Beauharnois well illustrates the principles of the party to which he belongs; it is quite illustrative of the old principle of legislative union which forced the will of a majority upon a minority. For my part, I believe that, although judicial centralization might be a good thing, it is not the function of this parliament to enforce it upon a province. But, I go further, and I say that the principle of decentralization, which is at the bottom of the judiciary of Quebec, is the principle upon which all the institutions of this country, all true British institutions, are founded. Decentralization was the principle of the old province of Normandy, from which the French population of Canada came, and it was the principle of some of the old British institutions which were introduced by the Norman population into England. It is no wonder that the French people of Quebec are attached to these institutions, since their ancestors enjoyed them in France, and they left France before those institutions were abandoned by the monarchical and imperial regimes in France. Of course, the English provinces have chosen a different system and preferred the principle of centralization; but, if Quebec has preferred to abide by the system which has proven to be a good one, and, as a matter of fact, is more economical than the system adopted by the English provinces, I do not see why this parliament can object. Especially, I do not see how a representative from the province of Quebec, who boasts sometimes of being the representative of a party that has protected minorities, should now come here and ask the majority of this House, the representatives of the other provinces, to impose upon a province that he is supposed to defend, a system that all previous administrations have rejected, a system that his colleague the member for Montmorency tried to establish in the province of Quebec and which he was forced to abandon.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think the hon. gentleman wishes to be unjust towards the member for Montmorency. The member for Montmorency said, the other day, and it will be found in the Hansard, that in 1894, after this measure had secured the sanction of the Solicitor General, then a member of the Quebec legislature, he called together all the leading lawyers of the province of Quebec, and only one of them was found to be opposed to the scheme suggested by that hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOURASSA. I did not hear what the hon. member for Montmorency said, but if the facts are exactly as stated by the hon. member for Beauharnois, they further illustrate what I have said. If not only one member for Montmorency but some other leading lawyers were in favour of that system, and they found it impossible to induce the legislature of Quebec to accept it, that is a strong evidence that the people of Quebec are opposed to this system.

Now, a great many things have been said in this debate. Theories have been enunciated, arguments have been adduced, interpretations of the constitution have been attempted; but, I must say, to the hon. member for Beauharnois, that we should try and bring the argument to a point. One reason given by the hon. member for Beauharnois for opposing this measure, for stultifying himself and forcing his Conservative colleagues from Quebec to stultify themselves, is this—I am ashamed to say it: They do not like to lose the chance of coming to power in the next general elections, and so have the chance of appointing some of their own friends to these positions. True, that is a very unworthy point of view, but that is the justification of hon. gentlemen opposite for forcing upon a whole province a system that it does not want, and thus violating one of the soundest principles of our constitution. It is just as well that the members of this House, coming from the other provinces, should know exactly what is the size and measure of the men who assume to speak here for the province of Quebec. Sir, the Conservative representatives from Quebec, who are, I am bound to say, even smaller in quality than in quantity, have forced their friends in this House, and have forced the majority of the Senate, to stultify themselves upon this question for one of the least worthy of party purposes; that is because they think, as the hon. member for Beauharnois said this morning, that the Liberal government has brought up this measure in order to enable them to appoint some of their own friends to positions on the bench. Something may be said against the principle of a government giving judicial positions to political friends. But I state that as long as there exists such a thing as government patronage, I am prepared to support a government proposing a measure that may give some favours to some of their friends, provided it is a measure for the benefit of the public; and I refuse to stand with hon. members who are opposing this measure, not because it is not in the public interest, but for the sole reason that it does not favour their political friends.

But this is not the worst feature of this matter. The position taken by the gentlemen opposite can be explained to the electors and the electors are in a position to punish them; but the position which they have induced their friends in the Senate to take is most detrimental to the welfare of this country. I am not one of those Liberals who assert that we should do away with the Senate. As a matter of general principle, I might side with those who say that in this age and land of democracy we need no Upper House. I admit that there are arguments to be employed for and against it. But Canada is a federated country in which an Upper House was conceded, not merely to act, as in England, as a check upon the democratic instincts of the Lower House, but for the protection of the minorities and for the preservation of provincial rights. One of the greatest dangers would be to ask the Senate, in order to serve some small petty party purposes, to violate one of the principles upon which it was established, to take a step against the constitution and therefore to be untrue to the very cause for which it was given authority and existence. The province of Quebec is, as I understand, in favour of the existence of the Senate. It would be, of course, in favour of its reform. But, if the Senate was to lower itself to the degree of a mere political committee and take its instructions from politicians, the people of the province of Quebec, as well as of the other provinces, would be found against the Senate. I would regret it if such were the case because that protection which is in the constitution would disappear. If the majority and the minority as well, in the Senate, would think about the role they have to play in this country, about the protection that it is their duty to give to the provinces of Canada and to provincial rights generally, they should not allow themselves to be influenced by politicians who simply want their favour for party purposes. Therefore, it will be with the greatest pleasure that I shall support the motion offered to this House by the hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. M. T. STENSON (Richmond and Wolfe). Mr. Speaker, the legal gentlemen who have spoken have exhausted the arguments on the question before the House, and I do not intend to expatiate on them. I rise in my place in this House to protest against the action which the Senate has taken. I do so in the name of the judicial district of St. Francis, of which I am the only representative present here to-day. That district sends four representatives to this House, there being four counties in it, and I am the only representative in the House to-day. I do not criticise the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. McIntosh) who, I very much regret to say, is absent owing to severe illness. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore) is not in his place, although usually constantly in attendance in this House. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) is not in his place. It is true that it is not often that he graces this House with his presence, but nevertheless he has plenty of time on his hands to go through my constituency and abuse the Liberals in his own peculiar style of eloquence. He has not time to come here. The district of St. Francis, being composed of four counties, the judicial seat is in Sherbrooke, where there are two judges and a district magistrate, all three eminent legal gentlemen. They have plenty of work to do. The fact that there was too much work for the two judges of the Superior Court to do is proved by the nomination of a district magistrate by the province of Quebec. The action of the Senate would tend to do away with this judicial district of St. Francis, and it is on that ground that I protest against it. There is to be a new courthouse built at Sherbrooke, the appropriation is made for it, and here is the beginning of the principle of centralization which has been adopted by the Senate as shown in its opposition to the measure providing for the appointment of three judges in Montreal. I have said that I would not enter into the details of the question, and I will not delay the House farther than to make my protest as strongly as I can against the action of the Senate in refusing to consent to the appointment of these three judges. I do so in the name of the district of St. Francis. I see that the hon. member for Stanstead is here now, and I ask him if he is willing to vote that this proposed centralization should take place and that the district of St. Francis should disappear. For my part I protest against it and I will leave my hon. friend to speak for himself.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words on this question, because it has been very well gone over up to the present. What struck me about the debate particularly was the introductory speech of the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Instead of being of that calm, dignified and judicial tone which we would expect from a man in his position, it was rather, in my judgment, of an excited and incendiary character, and I think, it was delivered in that way for a purpose. I think it was anything but what might have been expected from the hon. Solicitor General as an example of that dignity and moderation that we look for in every part of the country from the lawyers and judges of the country. The hon. gentleman spoke of the unwarranted attacks of the Senate upon the provincial rights of the people. I think he has gone a long way to reach that conclusion. Can it be contended that the Senate have no rights in regard to legislation either in the direction of checking it or of giving advice? What is their function in this case but simply checking legislation? If this House did not see fit to agree with what the Senate had done it was their duty to say so calmly and return the Bill to the Senate. If that had been done it would be in order for the Senate to reconsider their action or to ask for a conference with the cabinet and the House of Commons and see if they could not come to some understanding as to what would be best in the interest of the country in regard to this measure. Instead of doing that, it seems to me that hon. gentlemen had a purpose to serve and that purpose was to create strong antagonism and provincial feeling which would inure to their benefit when the election would come on. That is the inference I draw from their conduct and I think it is a reasonable inference because otherwise we would not have been obliged to listen to these incendiary speeches which were made by hon. members on the other side of the House. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was rather a puzzle to me when he said that the people of Quebec were always opposed to centralization. How he regards the appointment of three more judges to do the work in the province of Quebec, in the city of Montreal, as opposed to centralization, I do not understand.

Some people in Ontario thought that the proper way was to centralize the law business in the city of Toronto, but the people of the country thought that some of that law business should be transacted outside of the city of Toronto, and that we should enlarge the powers of the county court judges. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) says that they have always been opposed to centralization in the province of Quebec, and if that be the case he ought to be opposed to the appointment of three more judges in the district of Montreal, because it tends towards a greater centralization of the law business in Montreal. It is very easy for the province of Quebec to change its judicial system so as to give the district courts, or the county courts, as we call them in Ontario, more work to do and less work to central courts in Montreal. By that means they could easily avoid the congestion of legal business in the cities. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) said that the Senate took this action for small petty party purposes. That was undignified language coming from a lawyer who ought to know better, and I question the wisdom or the right of a member of this House to impute such motives to the members of the Upper Chamber. I call attention to the fact that the use of such language in this House is not the highest form of parliamentary decorum. Now, let us inquire into what cause led to the necessity of three more judges in Montreal. The Solicitor General himself admitted that nearly all the judicial business of the province was done in Montreal, and he told us that for that reason he had joined with the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) some years ago in an effort to rearrange the judicial system of Quebec so as to obviate that condition of things, but they were unable to carry their measure in the legislature, and so they were obliged to fall back on the system which had existed from time immemorial in that province. We therefore, see that the Solicitor General belonging to the Liberal party and the hon. member (Mr. Casgrain) joined together to remedy the evil. They were both lawyers of eminence, and they sought to apply the remedy, but they were unable to carry the measure in their native province, and because of that the legislature falls back on the power they have of asking the Dominion government to appoint and pay more judges. In view of this fact, if the Senate comes to the conclusion that the remedy is in the hands of the provincial legislature, the provincial legislature is bound to apply that remedy by so distributing the judicial work that the appointment of these extra judges will be unnecessary. Surely the Senate is not to be censured if it should believe with the Solicitor General, that it is in the power of the province to afford the remedy without this parliament adopting the ill-advised legislation which has been submitted to it. Until the hon. gentlemen opposite are able to bring stronger arguments than they have advanced against the Senate, it is my belief that the people of this country—and a large number of the respectable lawyers in the province of Quebec—will not agree that the Senate has gone beyond their powers in this matter. There is no reason at all for the argument of gentlemen opposite who state that this is an attack upon provincial rights. The Senate has a duty to perform as well as the Commons, and the Senate is there for the reason amongst others of retarding hasty and inconsiderate legislation. There is a recourse against the Senate provided in our constitution, but the government and their friends do not adopt that constitutional course. On the contrary, they seem to be glad of this opportunity, because they desire to raise some strong provincial feeling in the province of Quebec which may redound to their benefit at the coming elections. The conduct of the government in this whole matter has not been characterized by that dignity which we would expect from them, and which we would more particularly expect from leading members of the bar on that side of the House who belong to the province of Quebec.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see why two gentlemen on the other side of the House should say 'oh!' If they are not gentlemen, they ought at least to submit to the rules of the House. I think we must ask the Speaker to keep order.

Mr. CHARLTON. We shall be delighted to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. I had no desire to prolong the session. The other day everything that could have been said on the merits of the Bill and on the constitutional point was said, and was thoroughly discussed for hours. When, therefore, the Senate, exercising its undoubted right disagreed with the majority of the Commons and amended the Bill as they had a perfectly constitutional right to do, when the Bill came down and the government proposed to urge its dissent, I did not see that there was any particular reason why there should be any further discussion on the merits of the Bill. I consequently proposed to my right hon. friend across the Table that we should vote upon it without discussion on either side. That proposition was not accepted, and why? For one very simple reason, and one very simple reason alone, and this reason was not in order that the merits of the Bill might be more widely discussed and more fully investigated, because that was not necessary.

Why, Sir, the first statement made by the Solicitor General gave the keynote to the reason why the Prime Minister did not propose that this session should be allowed to go by without a long discussion on this Bill, and upon the action of the Senate. A member of the cabinet, even though Solicitor General and a representative of the Department of Justice, thought it was not apart from the merits of the question, and not aside from the dignity of a cabinet minister, to open his remarks by a fling at the members of the other House as gentlemen who were promoted to a haven of rest after having been rejected by the people. Now, I take it that the Senate have a perfect right to exist, even though the Solicitor General may have his opinion of them. I hold that it is perfectly constitutional for the government, when it is exercising its power of appointment, to appoint a man to the Senate who has never been before the people, or a man who has been before the people and been elected by them, or a man who has been before the people and been rejected by them. Is there anything in the constitution against it, or any regulation against it? None. Well, Sir, is there any ground, from a party point of view, why a sneer like that should be introduced into a judicial argument of great gravity? None, for hon. gentlemen opposite have placed in the Senate the rejected of the people. Where is Mr. Gillmor? Where is Mr. Burpee? Where is the Minister of Justice himself? All of them rejected by the people, worn-out politicians, placed in the Senate by the Solicitor General and his fellow-members in this cabinet. What necessity was there, in order to elucidate the merits of this Bill, for the Solicitor General, as the representative of the cabinet and of the Department of Justice, to commence his judicial remarks with such an eminently judicial phrase as that? But, Sir, that is the keynote of the whole discussion. The Prime Minister did not want this matter to go on its merits; he did not want it to be voted on simply as the members of this House understood it, on its merits, and they understood it thoroughly. It was too good an opportunity to commence the campaign; consequently, the order went out to the back benches to make a campaign day of it, and a campaign day of it we have had. The constitutional question, the merits of the Bill, have not been elucidated by a single English or French phrase over and above what was done the other day; but, some gentlemen think that a fine lot of campaign literature has been manufactured. One gentleman went so far as to threaten with the pains and penalties of an enraged French people an hon. gentleman on this side of the House who represents a French constituency, because he dared to say that he would vote against the proposition to enlarge the quota of judges by three. That is an eminently judicial and eminently parliamentary kind of warfare. Another gentleman called out the name of a member on this side of the House and asked him how he would fare before the outraged sentiment of the province of Quebec in regard to this matter. Is it not all a rather pitiful thing on this last day of the session? Would it not have been far better for the dignity of this parliament, far better for the unity of the peoples of this country, if my right hon. friend had taken my suggestion and simply voted, as every man in this House knew how to vote, on the merits of the question, after the three or four hours' debate the other day, without having all this heated partisanship thrown into it? It is but of a piece with the word that has gone out. Why, Sir, here is an eminently beautiful sentiment in Le Soleil, an organ of the right hon. leader of the government. I challenge him, when I read it, to get up and repudiate it; we shall see if he does. Here is a life-sized portrait of a member of this House, with a bludgeon and a sword, one in either hand, marching out straight against an imaginary foe. Under it all good Liberals in the province of Quebec and elsewhere, but chiefly in the province of Quebec—all good Liberals of every race, but chiefly of the French race—are bid to remember that this is the arch-enemy of the Catholic religion and of the French people in this country. Le Soleil lies about it, and the right hon. gentleman benefits by the lie. Amongst many other things that are said, we read:

Ces orangistes sont tous liés par serment à faire disparaître de cette colonie anglaise l'élément français et catholique.

Mr. FOSTER.

That is:

All these Orangemen are bound together by a solemn oath to exterminate the Catholic and French element in this English colony.

Is that true or is it a lie? That is one of a series that appears day after day, week after week, in this organ of the Liberal party, which has never yet been disowned by the gentleman who reaps the gains of these heated appeals by lies to partisans, to race, and to religion. This is a gross case; but, it is the exact twin brother of what has been going on here to-day, led by the Solicitor General and applauded by the First Minister, who goes about through this country and lays his hand on his heart and appeals to the people, that when he lies in the ground and a monument is raised above him, all he wants on that monument is the statement that he devoted his life to trying to cement together the two races and the different religions in this country. But, that is what goes on; it is a part of the programme; the right hon. gentleman knows it. When the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) puts on his doughty armour and fights against the loyalty of this country and its contingents in going to fight for the British flag, there is a little simulated indignation; but the next minute these two gentlemen meet and put their arms around each other's necks, and in love most intimate they confer with each other. These are two parts of a campaign just like what we see to-day. What has been the whole aim of this discussion started by the Solicitor General? The whole aim has been, as the too honest, as far as expression went, member for Laprairie (Mr. Monet) showed, to excite the French people against my hon. friend here (Mr. Bergeron), against Liberal-Conservatives in this House and in the country. What did the hon. member for Laprairie say? He said simply this: What are they trying to do? They are trying to hold up the French in Quebec and shame them before the English people. What a sentiment that is—what a worthy sentiment—applauded by the right hon. leader of the government. Just another part of the campaign, simply that and nothing more. These gentlemen have all striven to erect this question into an attempt, of Liberal-Conservative Englishmen particularly, to humiliate and oppress the minority in this country. Stripped of all its verbiage, what is the simple question? Is the Senate a constituent part of our parliamentary system or is it not? Who doubts that it is? Has the Senate legislative power? Who doubts that it has? Has it responsibilities? No one doubts it. The Senate, as an absolutely free, constituent part of our parliamentary system, legislating as it has the right to do, forms its opinion and takes the responsibility of its opinions and expresses that opinion in its legal act. You may consider as to whether their action was wise or not, and they may consider as to whether our action was wise or not, just as we on one side of the House canvass the action of the other side. And just as there is not the slightest doubt that we here have the right to our opinion and to give expression to it in legislation, when we are in the majority, so there is not the slightest doubt that the Senate has the right to put on the statute-book its expression of opinion when it sees fit. That is all that is done. This is no Quebec question, it is no simple question of one province. The question arises on a piece of legislation which affects the province of Quebec, but it might have arisen on a piece of legislation which affected the province of Manitoba. In fact, not many years ago the same thing did come up in another form with reference to Manitoba, and I myself and others on this side opposed the payment to a judge simply because we thought that, under the circumstances, it was not necessary to appoint a judge. How wrong it is, how incendiary, how entirely away from the merits of the question to attempt to lower this, which is a broad question, into the narrow question of the oppression of one particular province. It is no such question. Every hon. gentleman knows, in his cooler moments, that if this same thing came from any other province, under the same conditions, there would be the very same difference of opinion, and the very same legislation would take place. There has been an attempt made to show that this is an act of oppression by the Senate. Well, the hon. gentleman's campaign against the Senate was not a very fruitful one. He began it and carried it on for a time with great vehemence, but it ultimately fell very flat, and to-day is as dead as Julius Cæsar. But now these gentlemen think there is a chance to make a little capital against the Senate and catch some votes, and so they raise a campaign against that body. But, stripped of all its verbiage, this is simply a question of opinion. As we stated the other day, we believe that there is the power in this parliament over legislation with regard to this matter, and that we have a perfect right to make it effective if we wish. There is not an hon. gentleman opposite who will dare to get up and say that a condition of things might not arise in which this House would, as a unit, refuse to vote salaries for judges under legislation which had been passed by a province. Take an extreme case, and every man on that side would say that if this is proved to have been an intolerable abuse, this House will not submit to it by furnishing the money to carry on the abuse. Grant that, and what do you grant alongside of it? You grant that there may be an honest difference of opinion on any measure that comes up with reference to this matter. There is an honest difference of opinion to-day. I hold the opinion that it is not a question of provincial autonomy, but quite otherwise, and that it is not the duty of this House to vote the money for extra judges for the province of Quebec under the conditions and the state of things that have been shown to exist in that province. That opinion is a reasonable and honest one. I may be wrong, or I may be right; but no man has the right to get up and say that I am trying to oppress a province because I carry that opinion out, or that I am trying to destroy provincial autonomy because I choose to exercise that opinion on what I think is reasonable ground. If I have that right, so has the Senate, and the Senate has acted within its rights in registering its opinion. That opinion has come here and this House has a perfect right to review it, but for heaven's sake let us review it without reviling the Senate. Any man who, in reply to an opinion on this side, would simply indulge in reviling and abuse, would not be considered as having a strong case. And any man who answers by abuse the recorded opinion of the Senate, has just as equally a weak case. Can we not believe that, so long as we have a Senate and a Commons, each of these has the right to an opinion, and because the opinion of the senators does not agree with ours, are you to stand up and call them the rejected of the people or men who know nothing, or fools or anything else in that line? That never advances a cause and does not advance this cause. Therefore, I say this is not a question of any attack on provincial autonomy. Everybody will agree with Sir John Macdonald in the opinion expressed by him, and which was quoted by the hon. the Solicitor General, that when a provincial legislature declares that it requires additional judges to carry out its judicial system and we are called on to provide for the payment of these judges, under the constitution, the man who undertakes to contravene the wish of the local legislature, assumes the responsibility for what he does. But because he is willing to assume that responsibility, it does not go to prove that he is a lunatic or a fool or a vile man or an oppressor of the poor or the enemy of a province. Certainly not. It simply goes to prove that he is willing to discuss the question and give his vote and take the responsibility, and he would be a coward if he did not. The Senate itself would be coward and not fit to be a constituent part of the government if it refrained from giving its opinion and taking the responsibility, lest some people, who are moved more by impulse than good sense, would stand up in this House and revile it for having dared to do that which it has the constitutional right to do.

I am sorry that this day has been wasted. I am sorry that it has been worse than wasted, because it has been delivered over to the manufacture of campaign literature on a basis which is dangerous to the peace and unity of this country.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman has just given us an example of the lofty manner in which he can discuss constitutional questions. He opened his remarks by rebuking my hon. friend the Solicitor General for not having risen to the dignity of the occasion, and for having adopted a tone the reverse of judicial. But the hon. gentleman himself gave us an illustration of the very thing he was rebuking. He was anything but judicial in his remarks and even descended to discuss by means of newspaper cartoons the constitutional question before us.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the way the hon. gentleman and his government got into power—by virtue of cartoons.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman had better keep quiet for some time. Nobody interrupted him. If we are to go into newspaper cartoons, and if we are to put on the one side and the other the appeals which may unfortunately be made on some occasions to popular passion, how can Le Soleil compare with the Hamilton Spectator and the other newspapers which, day after day, are manufacturing, in the most vile fashion, all the possible attacks they can make on the government.

It is not my misfortune, I say it is my pride, that I am of the French race. But that fact is the argument that the hon. gentleman's supporters in the province of Ontario are using against me every day. And, if some of my friends in the province of Quebec sometimes resent it, while I blame them to some extent, I excuse them. The man does not live—certainly not the hon. gentleman—who can stand before me and truly say that under any circumstances in my life, have I ever made the slightest appeal to religious or race passions. I have fought, and I am fighting, an honest battle. I am meeting the hon. gentleman upon his policy; but never in my life did I do anything which could be pointed to as making the slightest appeal to the prejudice or passion of any creed or race.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the right hon. gentleman's (Sir Wilfrid Laurier's) opinion of this that I have read?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is my opinion—if any friend of mine in the columns of any newspaper in the province of Quebec, in Le Soleil or La Patrie, or any organ of mine—no, not organ, because every newspaper, so far as I am concerned controls its own columns—tries to appeal to the passion of any race or creed, I am not ready to support them. But I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), likewise to impose silence upon the vile sheets, such as the Hamilton Spectator, which are to-day attacking me on account of my race and religion.

But that is not the way to discuss this question. Why are we discussing this question to-day? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says he was quite willing to let this go without discussion. I was not. I thought this was one of the most important questions that could come before this House. I thought there was no more vital question that could be called to the attention of this country, than the question whether or not the provisions of the constitution are to be carried out. That is the question we have to deal with to-day. The question of the salaries of three judges is not a very big question—that is wholly a secondary question. The real question is, whether the principles laid down in the book which sets forth our liberties, provincial as well as federal, shall be observed. The question is whether the administration of justice and the creation of courts, which belong to the legislatures in the several provinces, shall be preserved to them. When the provincial authorities, speaking in their wisdom, have declared that they require so many judges for the administration of justice in a province, I say that it becomes the duty of this House, and of the Senate likewise, to give effect to the decisions so expressed. If the province had the power to appoint these judges, they would appoint them, and there the matter would end. But the power of appointment belongs to the federal authority. Will hon. gentlemen opposite say that when the legislature of Quebec tell us, not once, but repeatedly, that they require so many new judges for the administration of justice, and when their declaration is corroborated by the bar of the province and by the bar of the district of Montreal, which is more particularly affected—will hon. gentlemen say with all this, that we are not to comply with the decision so expressed, but will undertake to teach these men their duty. That is the important question that I submit hon. gentlemen in this House. I submit to those who believe in Liberal principles, but especially, I may say, I submit it to those who were at one time Conservatives of the school of Cartier. It does not rest with this parliament to revise the legislation of any legislature under these circumstances. I make one exception. If it can be shown that a legislature has acted in bad faith, has acted in a manner not defensible, in a manner shocking to the judgment of this House, I say we should not submit. But nothing of the kind is alleged on this occasion. It is not pretended that the legislature of Quebec acted in bad faith or improvidently. But it is said that they did not act wisely. These gentlemen on the other side, coming from the other provinces assume to be superior to the legislature of Quebec. They know better what is necessary for the people of that province than the people of that province themselves. They feel free to tell the people of Quebec that they do not know what they are talking about. They are luminaries. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is one, my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) is another. My hon.

Mr. FOSTER.

friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) also pretends to tell the legislature of Quebec that they do not know what they are talking about, and that the bar of that province is in the same position. We know, say those hon. gentlemen, that they are not in need of so many judges.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say to the right hon. gentleman, that I did not make use of such an expression as that the legislature of Quebec did not know what they were talking about.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman did not say so in so many words. But he did say that there was no need of so many judges in the province of Quebec. That has been the very head and front of his argument, and of the argument of the hon. member for Beauharnois. But what are the facts? The province of Ontario has a population, according to the last census, if I remember well, of 2,115,000. The province of Quebec has a population of 1,500,000. That is a difference of about one-fourth. The province of Ontario has eighty-seven judges to administer justice for the whole province, and the province of Quebec has only forty-one. That is to say, there are two judges in Ontario to one in Quebec. And these gentlemen pretend to tell us that we have too many judges already and ought not to have more. Can there be anything more monstrous? I am ready to appeal to the common sense and justice of the people of Ontario on this question. When the case is presented to the people of Ontario, that in these very estimates that I hold in my hand, we are asking from the parliament of Canada, salaries for eighty-seven judges in the province of Ontario, and only for forty-four—even with the proposed increase—for the province of Quebec, the people of Ontario will not justify the course of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the difference in the amount paid for judges in the two provinces?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that the difference is very great; but what does it matter?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The difference is $60,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has his answer. But suppose there was no difference—is not the country wealthy enough to pay the salaries of all the judges needed in any province? Shall we be told that we are to estimate this by the weight of gold, that upon a difference of money shall depend the rights and privileges of the provinces? Sir, I stand upon the broad principle of provincial rights. The Senate had no right—it had the power, but not the right—to reject this legislation. Hon. gentlemen opposite say:

Will you pretend that this parliament is bound to carry out the will of the province of Quebec? Shall we have nothing to say in the matter; shall we have no right to exercise any judgment? I say that in a matter of this kind, our duty is to support the people of the province of Quebec, and their legislation. This is not unexampled under our constitution. The very basis of our constitution is this idea which seems so indefensible to some hon. gentlemen in this House. The parliament of Great Britain is composed of three branches—the Commons, the Lords, and the Queen. When an Act has been passed by the House of Commons and the Lords, will any one say that it does not belong to the Sovereign to exercise her own judgment and decide whether she shall sanction it or not? No Sovereign is bound to give assent to legislation. It is only in exceptional circumstances that she would take such an extraordinary course as to refuse her assent. In the same way I say that under our system, where the fathers of confederation have left the creation of the courts and the number of judges to the legislatures of the provinces, while leaving to this parliament the power of appointing the judges and the duty of paying them—under such circumstances I say, where would we be if this parliament should assume the power to revise the legislation of any province, to substitute our wisdom for their wisdom? Why, we would have a state of anarchy. Suppose that the province of Quebec said to-day: We must have three more judges for the due administration of the law; and suppose this parliament should say, No, you have no right to them, you can do without them, what a condition of things we would have. You would have chaos, you would have anarchy, but you could never have the harmony which ought to exist between the several members of the Canadian family. For that reason I say it was important that we should have this discussion to-day, that we should know where we stand, that we should know whether we have a legislative union in Canada or a federal union; that we should know whether we have parliamentary government with a federal system, or whether we have a tyrannical Senate imposing its will upon the people of Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. This has been a question nearly ever since I have been in parliament. The question of the payment of judges in the province of Quebec seems to be a perennial one. I thought the constitutional point had been settled long ago as to the respective powers of the provincial legislature and the federal parliament in reference to the appointment of judges and the rearrangement of judicial districts were in the hands of the Dominion government. Nearly every session we have had a debate on the question as to whether we ought to exercise the right which we undoubtedly have of control over the delimitation and rearrangement of these courts. That constitutional authority which is vested in us by the British North America Act I never heard disputed in this House before. It is only a question of expediency. How it affects the autonomy of a province, how that question has been dragged into the debate to-day, I cannot possibly understand; because there is nothing in the action of this House, there was nothing in the action of the Senate, there was nothing in the action of the provincial legislature, to justify the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite, especially of the Solicitor General who led off in the discussion of this question. There was difference of opinion between the provincial authorities of Quebec and the Dominion authorities as to the expediency of appointing these judges. The legislation of Quebec showed it. They passed an Act, which was only to take effect upon proclamation by the Lieutenant-Governor. That gave the local authorities for the province of Quebec an opportunity of consulting with the local authorities of the Dominion for the purpose of coming to an agreement upon the subject. I do not know whether they did it or not, I do not know whether the local authorities of the province consulted with the local authorities of the Dominion; if they did so, I did not hear the statement made to-day. The two authorities may have come to an agreement as to what legislation should be taken upon the question. But no matter whether they agreed or not, the provincial authorities adopted the wise and courteous course; they did not delimit the districts of the judges in any manner until, as I assume, they consulted with the Dominion authorities as to whether they should do it or not. Then, because the Dominion authorities chose to accept the dictum of the provincial authorities and take their delimitations in establishing the courts, it is now contended that the Senate is debarred from expressing an opinion upon it. On this side of the House we contend that this was an opportunity for rearranging the districts. It is notorious to any one who has been in the House for a number of years that the consensus of opinion in this country is that there are too many judges in the province of Quebec. It may be said that the province of Ontario has a greater number of judges in proportion to its population than Quebec. We pay the judges of Quebec $201,000, and as the population of Ontario is so much greater than that of Quebec, the judges of Ontario receive some $271,000. There has been no attempt at all to attack the provincial autonomy, but we pretend that it is the duty of this House, to whom the people have entrusted the management of the finances of the country, to see that the money of the people is properly applied, and if it can be more economically applied by a different arrangement of the judiciary, then it is our duty to make that a condition of granting the money. If the Minister of Justice does not make that arrangement with the provincial authorities, or if the provincial authorities refuse to change the judicial districts, then I say we ought to know it. I say the House ought to have a statement that the provincial authorities refuse positively to change the delimitations. But the bald statement is made that three judges more are required for the district of Montreal; and it is a notorious fact, if we can believe the gentlemen who speak upon the subject in this House from time to time, that in a great many sections of the province the judges are not overworked. It is charged, I do not know if it is true, that this is a scheme started for political purposes in order to make places for political favourites of the government. I do not suppose that is so. But it is natural for the province, who does not have to furnish the money to pay the salaries, to desire as many judges as it can get, not only for the better administration of justice, but for the purpose of securing appointments for political friends. But it is also the duty of those who have control of the people's money to see that justice is not administered in a lavish manner. The simple question, then, which the Senate had a right to consider, and which this House has a right to consider, is not whether three or more judges are necessary for the district of Montreal, but whether a rearrangement could not be made in that province by which in some country districts where there is a plethora of judges, some of them might not be transferred to the district of Montreal, the same as we do in the province of Ontario; and in that way the money might be saved to the country which would otherwise go for the payment of these extra judges.

No matter what hon. gentlemen may say on the other side of the House about attacks upon provincial autonomy by the Senate, I think the people will look at it in a more practical light and say: Cannot there be a rearrangement in the province of Quebec by which the judges who are at present in that province can fulfil all the judicial duties that are required of them? Surely it is in the province of the Senate to say so. Surely they do not attack in any way provincial autonomy by action in regard to that matter, and surely we are not going to condemn the Senate for exercising an authority which they are perfectly justified in exercising, and raise, from one end of the country to the other, over this little question, which has been threshed out again and again for the last twenty years, on the eve of an election, a charge against the Senate, and a charge against the Conservative party that they have conspired against the political autonomy of the province of Quebec. I do not think it ever entered the mind of any hon. member of this House. I do not suppose that any hon. member of this House took sufficient interest in the Bill to speak to senators about it. I doubt if any one on this side of the House has exercised a bit of influence for the purpose of having the Bill defeated in the Senate. The Senate have exercised the authority which was vested in them, and they have done it in the best interest of the country. If the Senate have not the right to exercise discretion upon a Bill of this kind, and to reject this amendment to the Act respecting judges of provincial courts, of what use are they at all? What power have they? What kind of legislation are they to exercise their discretion upon? Hon. gentlemen opposite said, during the last election, at least in my county, that the first thing they would do would be to appeal to the Imperial government for a change in the British North America Act, authorizing the abolition of the Senate altogether. But, surely if they have co-equal powers with us, as they have, on almost all subjects, except matters of money, this is something in regard to which they had the right to exercise their discretion, a question which has been threshed out so often, and in regard to which the only question for the exercise of their discretion was as to whether the request of the province of Quebec should be granted or not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I desire only to say a few words, and I will not detain the House. No one challenges the right of any individual member of this House, or the Senate to express his opinion on grave constitutional questions that come before the House but it is perfectly obvious that the weight to be attached to the opinion expressed by any hon. gentleman must be proportionate to the knowledge which he possesses on such subjects. This constitutional question has two aspects. The first is whether the Senate of Canada is within its rights in thwarting the constitutional will of a province in a matter that comes within its jurisdiction, and the other is: Has the Senate a right to thwart the action of parliament when it is seeking to carry out the wishes of the province. In regard to the latter I challenge the position taken by the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Haggart). The province of Quebec, as the constitution clearly says, has the right and it is its duty to provide for the organization and constitution of the courts of that province, and it is our right and duty to carry out the measures which they desire, unless, and excepting on one ground, and that is where we are convinced by incontrovertible evidence that the provincial authorities are improvidently exercising their rights. I have not heard it alleged by any person who is either competent or incompetent to judge, that there has been any improvident exercise by the province of Quebec of their rights in this regard, and if that is so, and if the parliament of this country, which represents the people, have, without a division, endorsed that principle and have provided the salaries of the judges necessary to carry out the wishes of the province of Quebec, I challenge and deny the constitutional position taken by my hon. friend opposite, that it rests with an irresponsible Senate to thwart not only the action taken by the province of Quebec, but the supplementary action taken by this House. The whole will of the people would be set aside, at the whim of an irresponsible body, sitting in the Senate, and it would be so intolerable that we, as a party, never would submit to it. This measure for adding to the judiciary of Quebec which required the assent and consent of both branches of the legislature, was sanctioned and approved by the legislature of that province without division. Party lines, strong as they are there, were invoked but the measure was so good upon its merits that they did not challenge even a division upon it, and in addition to the fact that we have the measure carried by the legislature without a division, as has been stated here to-day, behind the vote of the legislature, there is the approval of the whole bar of the district of Quebec, and of the district of Montreal. In addition to that, when it comes here it receives the support of the government and of the House of Commons, and it is only by a party vote in the Senate, and for party purposes that the wish and action of the people is sought to be defeated.

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). Mr. Speaker, I intend to occupy but a very few moments in speaking upon this question. I do not propose to go into a discussion of the constitutional portion of the subject which has been sufficiently dealt with by lawyers, who understand the constitution better than I do. I take it for granted in regard to the Senate that the Senate has a voice in the legislation of this country. They have acted in accordance with what they supposed to be their rights, and they have made their decision. Hon. gentlemen opposite are disputing it in this House. The Senate acted in accordance with what they thought were their rights in regard to the Yukon, and their decision was disputed by hon. gentlemen in this House. They acted in accordance with what they thought to be their rights in regard to the Drummond County Railway, and their decision was objected to by hon. members of this House. But, the people have made up their minds. Public sentiment has been formed in regard to these measures, and the people have come to the conclusion that the Senate are standing up in defence of the rights of the people. I think that when the people are appealed to, the Senate will be amply justified in the action it has taken in regard to this question. I do not rise specially to speak upon this question, but to take exception to some remarks made by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Stenson). He took occasion to criticise the members from the district of St. Francis for not being here and attending to their duties. I think he mentioned my own name. I will say that I have been here two days to that hon. gentleman's one. It is a strange thing that he should strive to speak upon a constitutional question which he does not know anything about, and leave all the practical questions which come before this House undiscussed. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, if he is here, what difference it would make to the district of St. Francis if this Bill were not to go through. This proposal is to appoint three judges in the Montreal district and the district of St. Francis have their judges, and they will have their judges whether the Bill goes through or not. It does not affect in any way the district of St. Francis. Consequently he travelled out of his way to censure the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. McIntosh), and the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stenson) had attended to his own business and not be here waiting, as he has been for a long time for that government position which he hopes to be appointed to in Sherbrooke, he would stand better in the eyes of his own constituents than he does to-day. The object of this Bill is to open up three positions for lawyers, favourites of the government, and one of them in the county of Brome. They are all waiting for this opening and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stenson) is waiting for an opening in the district of St. Francis, which I understand he is to have after the session is over. I will not say positively whether that is the case or not, but time will tell. At all events the criticism comes with very bad grace from the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Stenson) who has certainly not attended to the duties of his constituents this session.

Coteau du Lac, Quebec—Wharf on Soulanges Canal ..... $2,800

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) What is this?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). This is for the construction of a pile wharf 96 feet long, 38 feet wide and 20 feet high.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). What is the object of a wharf there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is an adjunct of the canal for the landing of freight.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it in the canal?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What on earth is the minister starting in on now—building wharfs inside of canals?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Department of Railways and Canals has the construction of canals to promote traffic; but if there has to be any construction upon a canal for the use of the public, for passengers or for freight, that comes under the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman going to take the position that we are to build wharfs on the inland waters of the Dominion wherever people want to put on or put off freight? Surely that is a most dangerous extension. If the ministry commence doing that, there is absolutely no end to it.

Mr. BERGERON. I never heard of this before. There were some wharfs on the Beauharnois Canal, but these were generally built by parties obtaining permission from the department to build them; and besides, they paid the department so much a year for that permission. It has always been a hard thing to obtain permission from the government for the building of a wharf in the canal, because it is an impediment to navigation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told that there is a thriving village at this place.

Mr. BERGERON. They have a wharf near by, on the river, where the boat stops twice a week.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This wharf is for the accommodation of the trade of that district, and it has to be constructed either by the Department of Public Works or by the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not suppose there is any human probability of getting the attention of the government as a whole to this matter; but, I should like to ask them what their policy is with reference to the disposal of the public moneys of the Dominion for the building of wharfs on inland waters? Have the government made this departure, that they propose, wherever there is a call for it on any of the rivers or canals or other inland waters, to build a wharf at the cost of the Dominion? That is a complete departure from the policy heretofore pursued. We first commenced with the principle that Dominion public works were to be confined to the seaboard and large harbours. We never extended it to the building of little wharfs all along the watercourses of this Dominion, and then the keeping of them up. There is no treasury in the wide world that would stand that tremendous drain. Surely the government could not have canvassed this or understood what was meant by it, or they would not have sanctioned it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend will understand that on the down trip vessels do not use the canal, and there is a wharf available to them; but, on the upward trip they have to use the canal, and does he propose that they shall not be able to transact business on the upward trip? That is the point.

Mr. FOSTER. I might ask my hon. friend what is to become of trade on all the inland waters of our different provinces? Is it the policy from this time on, that wherever vessels come and go, the Dominion treasury is to be drawn upon for the building of wharfs? Heretofore, wharfs on all these inland waters have been built by the people themselves, by the municipalities, by the aid of provincial money in some cases. Until the present time it has never been laid down as a policy that wherever there is trade, the Dominion shall step in and build wharfs and keep them up. I think I can appeal confidently to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who understands well what has been the policy in the past in this respect. Is private enterprise, municipal enterprise, provincial enterprise, to have no chance at all? Is it all to become a matter thrown on the Dominion treasury?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman seeks to lay down a principle for the whole Dominion from a comparatively isolated case, which cannot have general application. The hon. gentleman, I think, is not familiar with the 'locus in quo.' Formerly vessels on the upward trip went by the Beauharnois Canal, on the south side of the river. Now we have the canal on the north side, and vessels of greater draft making the upward trip use that canal. How is the hon. gentleman going to enable these vessels to discharge their freight and transact business without a wharf?

Mr. FOSTER. How did they do it on the Beauharnois Canal? There are no wharfs there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There would be no wharf here unless it was required.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). How far from the mouth of the Soulanges Canal is this wharf?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a swing bridge at the Rivière du Rouge, and it is some distance above that.

Mr. HAGGART. At the entrance of the Soulanges Canal there is a pier at each side, intended to be used as wharfs, and at the lower end of the canal, where it debouches on the lake, there is another. This must be somewhere in the middle.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Those piers are not intended for trade purposes at all. They are guide piers for the purposes of navigation, not for landing or transportation.

Mr. HAGGART. I know the place well and the hon. gentleman is altogether wrong. On each side of the canal there is an entrance and just before the draw-bridge, where the Canada Atlantic passes over, there is a pier on each side. There is a lock in the middle of the canal which could be utilized by the vessels.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are we going to stop with this sort of thing? If we are going to adopt the principle laid down that on every river, canal and watercourse, wherever people want to get off and on, we are going to build a wharf, there will be no end of such expenditure. This thing was never done before outside of tidal waters, and the greater inland waters. We have confined ourselves to tidal waters even in the River St. John. We made an arrangement by which the local legislature contributes half to the cost of every wharf built on the tidal waters from Fredericton down to the mouth of the St. John. The principle has always been recognized that the rivers and small inland waters are not matters for expenditure out of the Dominion treasury. You can go all over Ontario and you will find that these wharfs are built by the village or municipalities or private enterprise.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why, I have a dozen cases in my mind now in Ontario where the total cost of the wharfs in the inland waters was defrayed by the Dominion government—by the hon. gentleman's own government.

Mr. FOSTER. Name one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Take the village of Beaverton on the east side of

Mr. MULOCK.

Lake Simcoe, entirely inland, a little village, there is a wharf built there entirely at the cost of the Dominion government. When the hon. gentleman cites the River St. John let me tell him that there are wharfs every mile all the way up the river, built by the Dominion government, in the tidal waters and above them too.

Mr. FOSTER. Where?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know how far the tidal waters go, but the hon. gentleman's contention was that on the inland waters in Ontario wharfs were not built by the Dominion government.

Mr. FOSTER. I said in the small inland waters.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The estimates before us contain appropriations for wharfs on inland waters in Ontario, and the hon. gentleman dare not object to them. I challenge him to do it. Whatever is navigable water, whether tidal or inland, is as fit a subject for the erection of wharfs as are tidal waters. If it is right that the Dominion treasury should be taxed to build a wharf in the hon. gentleman's constituency, in tidal waters, it is equally legitimate to construct a wharf on inland waters which are navigable. Why, all the way up from tidal waters to the head of navigation, there are expenditures of public money for the purpose of promoting trade and commerce. If the hon. gentleman's contention is correct as regards wharfs, it is just as applicable to any other improvement to navigation.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course, if it is a question of voting as much as possible from the Dominion treasury, I will not say a word against this, because it is just as well to have the money spent in Quebec as in any other province. But I am opposed to this on principle. We are all here to protect the Dominion treasury. No doubt, in the past, expenditures of that sort have been made. I myself have seen a wharf which cost ten or twelve thousand dollars and had never been used. It was in the province of New Brunswick on a little river, I think of St. Croix.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Whereabouts?

Mr. BERGERON. In the county of Kent, near the parish of St. Louis. It was a little river with hardly any water. A wharf was built there costing, as I say, ten or twelve thousand dollars, and no boat had ever been to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who built it?

Mr. BERGERON. It was built under the old government. I am talking openly. But money spent in that way is badly spent. We know how it was done, however. The member for the county tells the minister that if he can get a wharf or a bridge constructed, he will carry the parish or the township ; and it is granted. But let us put a stop to that. The case now before the House is still worse than anything known before, and I call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to it. This is building a wharf in a canal, a thing I have never heard of before. I know something about the Beauharnois Canal. I have known about that canal for nearly forty years. People used to obtain permission from the Department of Railways and Canals to build little wharfs to load barges with grain. But it was with the greatest difficulty they obtained this permission, and inspections were made by the government engineer, and the most extraordinary precautions taken to avoid impeding navigation. The wharfs soon disappeared, and the government have forbidden any other structures of that kind, as they are objected to by the navigators. No doubt the acting Minister of Public Works is doing this from a good motive. No doubt the member for the county, or a deputation came and said that if you will give us a wharf at the Cedars or at Coteau du Lac, because they are both provided for here, we will carry that whole section. But must we look at it in that way, and not from a national point of view? These canals cost an immense amount of money. The hon. minister says they want the wharfs to unload their freight. But these boats that he refers to, are what we call coasting boats, such as go from Valleyfield to Montreal and back. They are small boats, and there is no danger that they will require the fourteen feet of water which is said to be provided in the canal. Going down, the freights they carry are often heavy—cattle, hay and farm produce of various kinds. But the freights that they bring back are such things as the people have bought in Montreal—light merchandise, most of the packages such as the women carry off under their arms. They can unload all this class of freight that they bring at the bridge, where they can stop ten minutes without impeding navigation, or, better still, at the locks. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster), asks if the government have decided upon the policy of building a wharf at everybody's door. If that is to be the principle adopted, I can suggest ten or fifteen wharfs that can be built there. But these wharfs in the canal—I would like to have reminded the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, but he has left the chamber since this discussion began—will be an impediment to navigation, and will be greatly objected to by those using the canal.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). I would like to know the general principle upon which this vote is based. My riding is partly on Lake Ontario and partly on the Bay of Quinté, and I never heard of a government wharf being built there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is not the first time the government have built wharfs.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. member for Kent, Ont., (Mr. Campbell) has only to learn that the Conservative government followed a certain course, to believe that must be the right one for this government. But I do not think that is the right way to do business. At Deseronto they do an immense amount of shipping business, and I never heard of their getting even an appropriation to build wharfs. Either there should be some principle in building these wharfs, or it should not be done.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Foster), adopts a principle which I would like him to make good. Is it to be determined that no public money is to be spent for wharfs on inland waters. He has raised that point, and I take issue with him. I do not know of any principle upon which you could exclude those who live on inland waters, from the advantages given to those living on tidal waters. The hon. member takes the position that because they are not in tidal waters there should be no such expenditure. Has that been the rule? The whole history of our expenditure gives instances to the contrary. I have already given the case of Beaverton, a small village on Lake Simcoe, where a wharf was built with Dominion money. It is not even on a through line of traffic like the St. Lawrence. This canal is only a way of getting around an unnavigable section of the St. Lawrence, and, in that way it may fairly be regarded as a branch of the river itself. If the hon. gentleman thinks the erection of wharfs on the River St. Lawrence is a proper work to be carried on by the Dominion, then a mere annex of the river is entitled to equal treatment. The river and the canal are practically one system, the canal is simply a way of getting over the unnavigable section of the river. That being the case, that being a safe principle to follow, I am at a loss to understand how, in view of the practice of hon. gentlemen in the past, they can object to this proposition. The canal may be regarded as practically an artificial branch of the St. Lawrence River, and if you admit that on the down trip it is proper to expend money for wharfs on the St. Lawrence for the purpose of trade, I fail to understand the logic that would prevent the expenditure of money to facilitate the upward trip through the canals. It is the St. Lawrence waters that pass through the canals, and the improvement is for the traffic of the St. Lawrence both up and down.

Mr. HAGGART. The principle adopted by the late government, without an exception, was that it is legitimate to build these wharfs in tidal waters or on the great lakes. The hon. gentleman says the principle was extended to Beaverton. That might be, because Lake Simcoe is a large lake. The same principle is extended to Lake Nipissing. The hon. gentleman asks why we should not do it on the St. Lawrence where this place is? But you don't build them on the St. Lawrence River. Why would you not build a wharf at Kingston on the same principle, at Gananoque, or Brockville? But in these places it is left entirely to private enterprise to build wharfs. But the extraordinary thing about it is that you dig a ditch and make a canal, and then you set to work to build wharfs for the inhabitants on the banks of the canal. Now, at the entrance to this canal there are piers which would work admirably as wharfs. In the centre there is a lock, and they can land on both sides of the lock. If you are going to build landing places on canals for the purpose of accommodating the trade of little villages, which perhaps will never be used, you are going pretty far. The principle on which we granted assistance to wharfs was to confine them to inland waters like Lake Superior, Lake Huron, the Georgian Bay, and Lake Ontario, in some instances—and we extended it to Lake Simcoe, and I believe to Lake Nipissing. Perhaps sometimes the rule was infringed upon to a slight extent; but the general principle was to expend no money on any works of this kind except in tidal waters and on the large lakes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would refer the hon. gentleman to another illustration. I would ask him to transfer his thoughts to Lake Memphremagog in the province of Quebec, a small lake ten or twelve miles in length. I do not know its extent, perhaps the hon. member for Beauharnois does.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a small lake, perhaps ten or twelve miles long and three or four wide. But I am not quite sure. But the reason why a wharf was built there was because the lake is a summer resort. There are vessels of pretty large dimensions plying upon the lake for the advantage of American tourists who come there in large numbers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are some wharfs, I know, on Lake Memphremagog which were built by the Dominion government. However, it is a small body of water, and I suppose that so far as trade and commerce are concerned its importance cannot be compared with the importance of the Soulanges Canal. There is a wharf at Magog, one at Georgeville, and another at Knowlton's Landing, and I am told these wharfs were built by hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, why can you not regard the Soulanges Canal as a part of the St. Lawrence River diverted? It is an artificial channel for a part of the St. Lawrence River; and if, as the hon. member for Beauharnois argues, it is proper to spend money on a small lake for the use of American tourists, how can he object to a grant of money to erect wharfs on this canal for the purpose of trade and commerce between the west and the east of the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. WILSON. Will the Postmaster General tell us how he determines when a wharf should be built by the Dominion government and when it should be built by private enterprise? In our section of the country they are all built by private enterprise.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman asks me upon what principle wharfs should be constructed. All I can say is that since confederation no government has laid down any other doctrine than that we should be guided by the requirements of public interest, and we are being guided, I trust, in all these estimates by a due regard for public interests. There is no hard and fast principle governing the expenditure of public money; the question simply is whether it is a proper expenditure in the public interest, not whether it is on tidal or inland waters. Hon. gentlemen opposite defend the expenditure of money on an inland lake like Lake Memphremagog to meet the requirements of American tourists; and this government, without saying anything about that mode of expenditure, would submit that the construction of a wharf upon the Soulanges, a branch of the St. Lawrence River, is justified by the purpose of developing the trade of Canada. The hon. gentleman may prefer that policy, he voted for that expenditure; others may adopt our method and vote for our proposed expenditure. We must test the scheme upon its own merits.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say a word in reference to that. When you get down to a simple matter of argument it is very difficult to lay down any general principle which has not its exceptions, but after all you can find the general principles that have governed the expenditure of public money in this respect. To everything you will find an exception. But what startles me to-night is the statement made by the hon. acting Minister of Public Works, that his policy is, and I suppose it is the policy of the government, that no matter whether it is tidal water, or a large river, or a canal which extends a river, or the navigable waters of Canada anywhere in the Dominion, when it is necessary for trade that you shall build a wharf, it is a proper subject with which to come to this parliament and ask for a vote out of the treasury for it. That is a broad principle that the hon. gentleman has laid down here to-night for himself and for the government. That is what startles me. If he had said that this was an exceptional case and defended it upon that ground, there would have been an action which I could have thought fairly commendable. Now, in the first part of the history of this Dominion, you can take the old estimates and you can find that the Dominion started out with the duty outlined before it of expending public money on harbours, breakwaters and the like of that which were for the protection of shipping and trade along the tidal waters the sea-coast particularly. That was the line which was adhered to. Afterwards it was extended on much the same principle to the great lakes, and harbour works were constructed at different points on these great lakes, harbours, breakwaters and those things which were necessary involving large expenditures. For a series of years you can look through the estimates and you will find that these were the kinds of works upon which the Dominion expended its energy. A great deal of pressure was brought by first one, and then another, not only in respect to the large lakes, but in respect to comparatively small lakes, and so you find on Lake Simcoe, Lake Memphremagog, and on Lake St. John examples of the construction of wharfs. This government built wharfs on Lake St. John against the protestations of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. It was done in our time in one or two instances on that lake, and so gradually there has been an extension of the system, but always guarding, as far as possible, the matter so that you might not be launching out on a sea of uncontrollable and incalculable expenditure. Take the St. John River. When first I represented the county of King's, no such thing was thought of as this government being asked for a grant for a wharf along the whole of that river, and it was not until I had represented the county for several years and had become Finance Minister, and I found that on Lake St. John, Lake Simcoe, and on some parts of the St. Lawrence, wharfs were being put down and the pressure was made so strong for me that I had to draw the line at the tidal waters in the River St. John which ran as high as five miles above the city of Fredericton. Then, I did not extend it to the full, but I made an arrangement with the provincial government that whenever any of these necessary wharfs were built the provincial government would furnish one-half of the cost and we would furnish half. A number of wharfs have been built on that principle. Now, what are we face to face with? When I was Minister of Finance I fought against that extension, and I did it on the ground that once you open up inland waters to the building of small wharfs everywhere, you would be practically launching out on an expenditure which would rapidly become uncontrollable. How can you build a little wharf on the Soulanges Canal and refuse a similar demand from Trenton and other places along the lakes, and on every navigable river in the country? That is what startles me. The minister, evidently, with the sanction of the government, starts out on the principle, which shall rule henceforth, that no matter where it is, wherever there is trade and people who want to get on and off boats, and to take merchandise on and off boats, it is a fair thing for the Dominion government to take money out of the treasury to build a wharf. What will be the consequence?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are exceptional cases.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not have minded so much if the hon. acting Minister of Public Works had put this as an exceptional case, but he laid down a principle and said that that was to be the rule, that where there was an inland water, large or small where there was traffic or trade, it was a fair thing for the Dominion of Canada to spend money in constructing wharfs. As Minister of Finance in the preceding government, I would shudder to come in with a principle laid down and have to face it in future. There are no revenues which can stand that, and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) knows it. I do not say that you cannot find exceptions to anything. Cannot we agree that this shall be an exception, and that we must not open up a broad line of expenditure? The money does not come out of my pocket. I am not opposing this because I have to pay for it. I pay my little proportion of taxation; that is all, but I do think that I have some care as to what is to be the future in respect to the expenditure of this country, and dear knows, we have now forms of expenditure enough without overburdening the treasury by expending money in this way. The people of Kingston, Trenton, Cobourg and every town and village along every lake and river in this country, when they know that the Dominion treasury is open for this sort of thing, are not going to put their hands in their pockets. The member who represents the county will come to the ministry and say: You have granted wharfs there. I want you to grant one here. How are you going to refuse him? The voters behind him will say: What is the good of you? Do you not see so-and-so got these little wharfs dotted all along; why do you not get some for us? Therefore, he must get them or know the reason why. You cannot make fish of one and flesh of another. You will have countless numbers of little wharfs costing from $2,000 to $5,000 each, and to be kept up after they are built, which is the largest expense. Where are we to land if we are to work on that principle?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) asks why I did not ask the committee to treat this case as an exception. As the discussion was raised by my hon. friend endeavouring to lay down the proposition that no such expenditure as this should be made except upon tidal waters, I took issue with him upon that point, and that is the point at issue. This may be an exception, if the committee think proper to treat it as an exception, but I could not allow the hon. gentleman's contention to pass unchallenged that there should be no such expenditure as this upon inland waters, and that it should be confined to tidal waters.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman did not say that there should be no such expenditure on inland waters, we are not at issue.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, we are at issue. I did not say that it was not done on inland waters, but I did say that upon all the smaller waters in the inland parts of the country it was not done, and ought not to be done. I know quite well that we have some lakes where it was done occasionally. Lake Simcoe, Lake St. John and the like of that, but I was arguing on the general principle.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am no more desirous than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) of opening the door to unreasonable demands upon the public treasury, but when he says now, after mature reflection—

Mr. FOSTER. Do not put it in that way. I spoke after the necessary deliberation on the question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, I do not want to misrepresent the hon. gentleman, but if that has always been his policy, would he explain to me the case of Lake Megantic, in the county of Beauce, which is twelve miles in length by three or four in width, and upon which lake are many wharfs.

Mr. FOSTER. How many?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Seven.

Mr. FOSTER. When were they built?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were built by former administrations.

Mr. FOSTER. What years?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has been in public life.

Mr. FOSTER. What years, I ask?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Since confederation, and by the government which the hon. gentleman supported.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us be precise. The officials are there. In what years were they built?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The officials give me the information that they were built, it is immaterial whether it was the hon. gentleman or his government built them. But, at all events, we can find that out.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. FOSTER. I want the Postmaster General to ask the officials the year in which these wharfs were built.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get you it precisely later on. You will find seven or eight wharfs built on Lake Megantic by previous governments, and that lake, which I am not acquainted with personally, is entirely inland water. I find from the statutes that as late as 1893—

Mr. FOSTER. What was built then?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) voted money in 1893 to repair the wharfs.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, to repair.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But, it is just as wrong to repair a wharf—

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Postmaster General wants to be fair.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I do.

Mr. FOSTER. If the wharfs owned by the Dominion were there before I became Finance Minister, was it not a fair thing for me to be asked to keep these Dominion wharfs in repair if they were out of repair? Is there not a difference between doing that and initiating a new expenditure?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to press that argument. I merely compare the practices of to-day with the practices of yesterday. I want the hon. gentleman to understand most distinctly that, so far as I am concerned, I cannot agree to any such proposition as might be construed to have been laid down by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster)—although now he says he did not lay it down—that the districts served by inland waters have not equal claims to the districts served by tidal waters. I understand that the hon. gentleman did not intend to make that contention, but he appears to state that the expenditure on large bodies of inland waters might be justifiable, but not upon small bodies of inland waters. He defends the expenditure of his government upon waters such as the great lakes, and if you call Lake Simcoe an inland lake, he makes the same defence for his government in erecting a wharf there. It is, therefore, purely a question of degree. He defends an expenditure on Lake Simcoe, and in a little while in these estimates, he will have to decide whether he is in favour of an expenditure on Lake Temiscamingue. My hon. friend from Nipissing (Mr. Klock) is looking at me. When we come to the expenditure on Lake Temiscamingue, the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) will have to discuss that with the member for Nipissing (Mr. Klock), and I think I will have the support of my hon. friend (Mr. Klock) as against the member for York (Mr. Foster). Now, when you come to this particular expenditure, you have the St. Lawrence River on its course to the sea navigable and supplied by the Dominion government with wharfage. And, on the north side, the river not being navigable, we propose to make artificial navigation, and establish a wharf on it. Cannot the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) regard this as an exceptional case, and let us pass on with the estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but I want to know where the Postmaster General and his government stand. He twice made the argument that his government proposed to make no distinction between inland and tidal waters, large and small waters, rivers or lakes, but that in every case they will judge according to the circumstances. Is that the position of the hon. gentleman?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have stated that I consider that each item of proposed expenditure should be disposed of on its merits, having regard to the public interests. I do not understand upon what principle we should expend money on the tidal waters for the purpose of trade and commerce and not expend money on the inland waters for the purposes of trade and commerce.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the policy of the government?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am speaking my own views. Large and small bodies of water are relative terms, and the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster's) views, as to what is a large body of water or a small body of water, might not be concurred in by others. The question must be determined according to the merits of each case.

Mr. HAGGART. In reference to the particular question under discussion, here is a canal twelve miles long with piers at each end and a lock in the centre suitable for your docks, and you propose to build two wharfs on the same canal. All the way from Lake Ontario to the province line there has never been a Dominion grant for a wharf; and surely the people in that part of the hon. gentleman's own province have had some claims since confederation for wharfage accommodation on account of the development of trade along the River St. Lawrence. But when it comes to the construction of a little canal, or the digging of a ditch for the purpose of dividing the Cedars from the rapids, we have to build wharfs out of the public money. As to the necessities of the case, they are comparative to the necessities of other sections of the country, and I say that no necessity has been proved for the construction of either of these wharfs.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman, I am afraid, has not carried in his mind the facts connected with many of the wharfs constructed or extended by the government of which he was a member. I understand him to say that for a considerable distance west his government never expended moneys on wharfs.

Mr. HAGGART. Not that I am aware of.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What about the Cobourg wharf and the Port Hope wharf?

Mr. HAGGART. I stated that on the large lakes the same principle was applied as on tidal waters; but on the River St. Lawrence, from where it leaves Lake Ontario down to the province line, I am not aware of any public expenditure for wharfs at Kingston, Gananoque, Brockville, Prescott or Cornwall, except wharfs on the canals for canal purposes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would like to know on what principle the people of Prescott, Gananoque, Kingston and other points should be taxed to build wharfs where the river is enlarged into what is called a lake, as at Cobourg, while the people of Cobourg should not build wharfs on the river itself. The question whether a certain water is a river or a lake is only a question of degree. You have the water beginning at Lake Superior; when it narrows you call it a river, and when it widens it becomes a lake. I am at a loss to understand what principle guides you in proposing that it is sacred to spend money for a wharf on a lake, while it is wrong to do so when that same water narrows to a river.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all clear. The hon. gentleman has been acting Minister of Public Works, and has been wanting to get opportunities to spend public money; and at this moment he has made an appeal to every town and city on the inland waters of this Dominion, come to this government, and it will supply your wants.

Ottawa, March 13, 1900.

My dear Sir,—During Mr. Tarte's absence I have been requested to take charge of his department for him, and it would be of great service in enabling me to take up his work if you would kindly write me at your earliest convenience with reference to the following subjects:

1. For what works in your constituency has there been a parliamentary vote?
2. Have these works been begun? If so, in what state of progress are they?
3. If not begun, what is your advice as to whether or not they should be begun?
4. Are you asking for provision being made in supplementary estimates for:
  - (a) New works;
  - (b) Carrying on or completion of works already authorized or begun?
 If so, what are your views:
  - (a) As to sum required;
  - (b) As to what work should be performed?
5. In case of any work not now under contract, but authorized by vote of parliament, please state whether you advise its being carried out by contract or by day's labour.

Yours faithfully,

WM. MULOCK.

Mr. CRAIG. I never got one of those.

Mr. FOSTER. No, because you are a Conservative; but there is not a Grit heeler from the head of the great lakes down to the harbour of Cape Breton that has not received one of these invitations to make his raid on the public treasury.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to put myself right with my hon. friend in regard to Lake Memphremagog. The hon. gentleman said there were wharfs built there, and he said the lake was about twelve miles long, and looked to me for my assent. As to the building of wharfs there, I know nothing about it; I simply took my hon. friend's assertion that there were wharfs there, and said that if there were, I supposed they were built to bring people to two or three pleasure resorts which are on the lake. I said this, taking the assertion of my hon. friend that there were wharfs. My hon. friend said that there were about seven wharfs built by the Conservative administration on Lake Megantic. When called on to name them and say where they were and what they cost, he brought in this history of 1893, when some money was voted to repair one of these wharfs. Now, the tu quoque argument which we have had is no argument for the people of this country. What a speech we would have from the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) if he were sitting on this side of the House and the Conservative government were proposing to build wharfs in the canals. What a night we would have. How is it that the Minister of Railways and Canals allows another department to build wharfs on a canal which is under his direction? If it is necessary to build wharfs in the canal, which I do not believe, would it not be more natural for the work to be done by the minister in charge of the canal? I call his attention again to the fact that in past times the ministers occupying the position he occupies were very reluctant to allow anybody to build a wharf in the canal, and more so to build one themselves.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend would like the particulars of what was done by his government with regard to Lake Megantic, and I will give them to him. The hon. member for York, I believe, was elected a member of parliament in 1882, and has been a member continuously since. His first session was in 1883. I think he entered the government in 1885 as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. During the hon. gentleman's representation of his constituency, and mostly while he was a member of the government, the following wharfs on Lake Megantic were constructed: Under the late government, on Lake Megantic, there were six wharfs erected at different points from 1883 to 1887. Six years in succession, wharfs were built on this little inland lake, twelve miles long and from two to four miles wide. Was this expenditure more justifiable than the construction of a wharf to facilitate the whole upward trade of the River St. Lawrence?

Mr. BERGERON. Is this the whole cost of this work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Cedars—Wharf on Soulanges Canal..... $2,800

Mr. FOSTER. Where is that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About three miles away.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman going to build a wharf every three miles?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The canal is only twelve miles long.

Mr. FOSTER. That would only make four wharfs.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not asking for four wharfs this year.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this be built by contract or day work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is a small work, but if it can be done more conveniently by contract, we will do it. The general principle recognized is to let out work by contract, after calling for tenders, wherever that system can be conveniently adopted.

Cornwall Canal—To pay Gilbert Dredging Company, interest ..... $23,388

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I have the letter here of Mr. Ferguson, and the receipt taken, both of which will be found in Hansard, July 4, page 9191. The settlement then made was supposed to have been a full settlement of all the claims of the Gilbert Dredging Company. The chief engineer in his report, dated March 15, 1894, says:

I have the honour to report that Gilbert & Son are the contractors of sections 5, 6, 7 and the adoption of the Sheik's Island dam scheme, 8 of the Cornwall Canal, and that by reason of part of sections 5 and 8 and the whole of sections 6 and 7 are abandoned. The value of the work remaining to be done under this contract, on the abandoned portion of the canal is $195,362, 15 per cent on which is $29,350, which, I submit, is a fair consideration for the cancellation of the contract covering these sections of work.

It is absolutely clear that the engineer considered that amount as a complete settlement covering everything.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. CLANCY. Could there be anything more conclusive that this covered everything? We have the hon. gentleman's statement only a few evenings ago, that it was thought at the time, that Gilbert's claim had been completely settled. The receipt does not differ very much from the report. The report puts down the amount as a fair consideration for the cancellation of the contracts covering these abandoned sections. Now, this is not limited, in any sense. Let us take the receipt:

Received from Her Majesty the Queen the sum of $29,350, in full of all claims in respect of the abandonment of parts of sections 5 and 8 and the whole of sections 6 and 7, and of the abandonment of the aforesaid sections on the Cornwall Canal of the Gilbert Blasting and Dredge Company against Her Majesty the Queen, as per letter of March 12, 1894, of A. Ferguson, Esq., their solicitor, as per order in council of March 28, 1894.

(Sgd.) GILBERT BLASTING AND DREDGING CO.
(Per P. H. Gilbert),

Then Secretary and Treasurer.

Witness, A. Ferguson.

There can be no stronger language to show that this $29,350 is in full of all claims in respect of that. Before I proceed further, I would like to ask the hon. minister what portion of each of these claims applies to each section. Take, for instance, 'plant lying idle.' does that refer to section 5, section 8, section 6 or section 7, or how much of it to each? And so of the other claims?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I assume this claim, 'plant lying idle,' would arise in respect of all the work that the Gilbert Company were carrying on the different sections. They were delayed and prevented from using their plant. So, a claim arising in respect to that would arise not with respect to any particular contract but with respect to the whole.

Mr. HAGGART. This is a claim of the Gilbert Company for loss or damage supposed to have been sustained as a result of the termination of their contracts or so much of them as we would require to be terminated by the building of the Sheik's Island dam. Let me read from the contract which these parties entered into with the government. I give two clauses:

It is intended that every allowance to which the contractors are fairly entitled will be embraced in the engineer's monthly certificate; but, should the contractor at any time have claims of any description which they consider are not included in the progress certificates, it will be necessary for them to make and repeat such claims in writing to the engineer within fourteen days after each and every certificate in which they allege such claims to have been omitted.

The contractors, in presenting claims of this kind, referred to in the last section, must accompany them with substantial evidence of their accuracy and reasons why they think they should be allowed. Unless such claims are thus made during the progress of the work, within fourteen days, as stated in the preceding clause, and repeated in writing every month until finally adjusted or rejected, it must be clearly understood that they shall be for ever shut out, and the contractors shall have no claim on Her Majesty in respect thereof.

A similar clause is embodied in the contracts with the Gilbert Company. In 1894, the government determined to abandon the construction of a couple of these sections and entered into an arrangement with the Gilbert Company for their abandonment; and in lieu of any damages they might sustain by the cancellation of their contract, although the government were not bound to pay, they entered into an arrangement with the Gilbert Company under which the company were to be paid 15 per cent on $195,000, the amount of work estimated to be constructed by the company. At the time of the termination of these contracts, there was no claim filed with the government as required under the contract. These claims were an after-thought. Immediately on the receipt of the claims, I forwarded them to the engineer and here is his report upon them:

Superintending Engineer's Office,
Cornwall, March 6, 1895.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 4th inst., covering claims Hutchinson & Co., sub-contractors, and the Gilbert Blasting and Dredging Company, I beg to report that these claims combined, $57,258.35, correspond very nearly with those of the Gilbert Company of April 24, 1894. With reference to the claim of Hutchinson & Co., in my opinion, none of the items should be considered by the department. It is a matter to be dealt with by their employer, the Gilbert Blasting and Dredging Company. As regards the Gilbert Company's claim, the last item only, namely, repairing banks, $11,377, appears to be worthy of any consideration. But the company should first be required to furnish particulars, as otherwise it cannot be reported on intelligently.

The engineer in charge of the work reports from time to time to the chief engineer. The Gilbert Company never made any one of these claims before the termination of the contract; and so they never had a moral, much less legal claim. And even when the claim was filed, Mr. Rubidge stated that not a single one of these claims was worth considering, except one. Five years afterwards, in 1899, the minister calls this same Mr. Rubidge and the deputy minister for the purpose of settling these claims. He gets Mr. Rubidge to report favourably on these claims which formerly he had reported were without legal or moral force. He gets the deputy minister to report favourably on these claims, if the engineer in charge of the works would certify to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who gets that?

Mr. HAGGART. The deputy minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Whom does the hon. gentleman mean?

Mr. HAGGART. The four gentlemen that were together at the time, and who constituted the board of arbitration ; that is himself, the deputy minister, Mr. Rubidge, and Mr. Gilbert. The hon. gentleman says he called them together, and the deputy minister was persuaded by them to report favourably in behalf of that claim. We have the written statement of the deputy minister that he would report favourably on the claim providing the engineer in charge of the work reported in favour of it. There is not a single report in favour of it from the engineer in charge of the work—I may be mistaken—I mean the acting engineer who was immediately in charge of the work, and who gave a certificate to every one of the estimates up to the date when the contract was cancelled. Notwithstanding that they had not the slightest legal claim against the government, these gentlemen sat together and resolved that they were entitled to this claim. Mr. Rubidge swallows his own words, and gives a certificate for work concerning which he states in a letter in reply to me as to the validity of these claims, that they were not worth considering. Mr. Schreiber, of course, on the 26th of August agrees with him, he states that the claims were not worth considering, that he thought they were all settled. So they were all settled, they were settled by the arrangement which I made in 1894. In making an arrangement with these contractors I could only judge by the estimates furnished to my department, I found there was no claim in the department by these people for extra work, and I knew that I was dealing then with only the ordinary estimates of the work under contract, not considering whether they were entitled to it. I thought I had finished the transaction altogether when I recommended an allowance of 15 per cent for the work to be done. It is the most extraordinary transaction that I ever heard of as passed by any department, I never heard before of any minister coming down to the House for the purpose of getting a vote to pay such a claim as this. If it was an honest claim, if it was a moral claim, he could have altered it by order in council saying, Notwithstanding the two clauses in the contract ; and getting permission from the Governor General to submit it to the Exchequer Court, eliminating, if he liked, these two particular clauses. He does not choose to do that ; but without any court finding upon the matter, without any evidence from the engineer who superintended the work, but with the sanction of the deputy minister who could know nothing of it from the parties in charge of the work, he comes down to this House and asks us to pay a large sum of money to these parties who, I state, are not entitled to a single cent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will have to invite the careful consideration of the committee to the questions involved in this matter. I realize that this claim, in common with all unsettled claims of long standing and involving the consideration of a variety of questions, cannot be disposed of off-hand by hon. gentlemen by merely saying that this is the most outrageous thing that has ever been proposed to parliament. This committee must understand, and the hon. gentleman having filled the position of Minister of Railways and Canals ought to be the first to recognize the fact, that whoever fills for the time being the position of head of that department has to deal justly and fairly by the men who have been working under contract with the government, and to examine into their claims and form an opinion upon them. I cannot dismiss every man that comes to me pressing a claim, and say : I will have nothing to do with you. I cannot, in the interest of the country, send every man to the Exchequer Court and say : This claim of yours may have the greatest merit in the world, but I will not consider it ; take it to the court, because if I do consider it and induce my colleagues to consent to putting a vote in the estimates to pay the claim, the gentlemen in opposition will say that I did not know anything about it. Now, I say there is a duty cast upon the minister at the head of that department, a duty that he cannot shirk ; and if he reaches a conclusion in his mind he is bound to act upon it in a way that he considers in the best interests of the country, and that will be at the same time fair to the man who has the transaction with the department. Now, the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals would have this committee believe that it was his practice, and the practice of the department, to refuse to recognize any claim that was preferred by any contractor with the government unless that contractor had observed fully the clause in the contract he referred to providing that all these claims must be handed in at the time, and that they must be renewed every month, or else they cannot be legally enforced against the government. Now, the hon. gentleman cannot have forgotten his own experience in that department ; yet he left this committee under the impression that it was his usage and custom invariably to insist upon the observance of that clause. Now, I have the authority of the deputy minister, who was his deputy minister, for saying that he never insisted upon it while he was in the department, and the hon. gentleman will not say that he did ; he will not say that he rejected claims the moment it appeared to him that they had not been regularly handed in month after month in accordance with that clause.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. I tell the hon. gentleman that I never settled any claim of that kind in my life. I never gave a certificate, and never inquired into a claim of that kind, and never settled one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would advise my hon. friend to be economical in the statements he makes, because his memory does not serve him in respect to many of the things that he has stated. He rises in his place with the authority of a gentleman who has been at the head of this department, and he makes statements which ought to have some weight with the committee; but I venture the affirmation that the hon. gentleman is making statements for which he has not the slightest shadow of authority. I say with respect to this very claim that the hon. gentleman led this committee to entertain the opinion that all claims were rejected the moment it appeared that they had not been filed monthly in accordance with this clause, and in that case he would have rejected these, he must necessarily have rejected these. This claim was filed in the month of April or May, 1894, when it came under his notice. What does he do? Does he ask the deputy minister whether these people have regularly and continuously filed their claims in his department? No, he never breathes it. He knew the clause was there, but he knew that it was a dead letter. He knew that Mr. Page never would act upon it, and he knew that the officials of the department did not act upon it. He did not make an appeal to the deputy minister, which I have just asked him if he did make. He did not reject it, he knew that these claims had not been filed in the regular way. Did he reject any? No, he took steps to ascertain how far these claims were well founded, with the view, when he got all information upon them and was satisfied in respect to them, of adjusting them, if they were right, and of rejecting them if on their merits it was right to reject them. That was the action of the hon. gentleman. He knew, as an honest man, and a faithful public administrator, that he could take no other course than that. There is no reason why the hon. gentleman should venture to create as against this government or against me, an unfavourable impression in respect to my action. It was years after the claim was first presented before I came into the department. I found that it was a living claim, a claim which was receiving the consideration of the officers of the department. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals said: This claim was settled by me. All claims were settled by me in 1894 with these parties. That was when he authorized the payment of the $29,000. What was that payment authorized for? That payment was authorized to extinguish the claim that these people made for loss of prospective profits and nothing else. Will the hon. gentleman deny that?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is putting something into my mouth that I never said. I stated that the information they had in the department was that they were going on with the work regularly, that there were none of these claims in the department in 1894, and that I had settled for the prospective profits of the work which remained to be done, valued at $195,000, by giving them 15 per cent. Now, the hon. gentleman says that I have settled for extra work in precisely the same manner. He said it most positively. Let him produce the proof. I deny it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must not attribute to me statements that I did not make.

Mr. HAGGART. You did make the statement that I had settled with them in a similar manner. I deny that I ever did, and you have no proof.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not going into any discussion.

Mr. HAGGART. After you make an assertion in the most positive manner.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not said that the hon. gentleman settled all the claims.

Mr. COCHRANE. Oh.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), who is most judicial and calm when he—

Mr. HAGGART. That statement of yours would frighten any person.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I took down what the hon. gentleman said, and if he says that he did not say what I have quoted, it will answer my purpose quite as well. The hon. gentleman said that these claims, and all claims of the Gilbert Dredging Company were settled by him in 1894, when he paid the $29,000. It is not necessary that I should elaborate that point. What was settled on that occasion?

Mr. CLANCY. Everything.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy), has the papers in his hands, and yet he persists in saying that. That was settled, and that only which was stated to be settled in the document exchanged between the parties. What was it that was exchanged between the parties? A receipt from the person who received the money from the Crown which contained a reference to a letter, which letter embodied the nature and character of the settlement, and indicated what the settlement was. To show that I am correct in this let me read the receipt again:

Received from Her Majesty the Queen the sum of $29,350, in full of all claims in respect of the abandonment of parts of sections 5 and 6, and the whole of sections 6 and 7—

Of the Cornwall Canal. Is that a settlement in respect of work done before that date?

Mr. CLANCY. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, because there were estimates that were coming in and paid afterwards for work that was done on this canal and which were then due to these people. Then it says:

—as per letter of March 12, 1894, of A. Ferguson, Esq.

In Mr. Ferguson's letter appeared precisely the nature of the claims that were being settled. What does that letter say?

Mr. HAGGART. You stated that there were estimates to come in for that work, the contract for which was cancelled. Are you aware that that work had been abandoned and stopped for months before, and that the estimates were all in before the settlement took place?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware of anything except what the deputy minister tells me, and he says that the final estimates were not in at that time.

Mr. HAGGART. There had been no work done on it for months before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has been years since the work was done on the Cornwall Canal, and we have not got the final estimate yet. We are only asking an appropriation this year for the amounts which we judge these final estimates will cover. Now, let me read this letter, which, I suppose, no reasonable person will deny, must be taken as indicating what these people were paid the money for, and what they gave the receipt for:

Sir,—With reference to the several interviews I have had on behalf of the Gilbert Blasting and Dredging Company with you and your deputy minister, on the subject of the claim of the company for loss of anticipated profits—

For loss of anticipated profits.

—on the works of sections 6 and 7 and parts of the works on sections 5 and 8—

For loss of anticipated profits. Does that mean for the payment of damages that had been suffered by reason of any act of the government, or for the non-fulfilling of any contract? The hon. gentleman would not have a moment's standing in any court, if he ventured to enter it and claim anything else than that.

For loss of anticipated profits.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that when that settlement was made that the Gilbert Dredging Company did not search up every particle of work that was to be done, and put it in, for the purpose of showing that that was work to be done, and that was to be deducted from the whole contract price of the work, that was to have been done in order to bring up what the prospective profits would be? The hon. gentleman must have forgotten that there was a settlement made in regard to that. He will find that there is a statement made in the Auditor General's Report at page Q—157, in regard to the Cornwall Canal, sections 5, 6, 7 and 8, showing the whole of the unfinished work which had been abandoned. Look at the details of the claim and you will find that everything that one could think of has been raked up to show all the work that was done. Look at the claim for the plant that was idle. Does any one in his sober senses think that that was not thought of when the settlement was made. Look at this claim for 'enforcing banks.' Does any sane man think that that was not included in the first settlement? Why the idea is absurd. There is nothing that could have entered the mind of a man with even an inventive genius that was not put in the first claim as work done. Does the minister think that if he had abandoned those sections of the work for ever, that every claim that could have been thought of as prospective profits was not claimed and paid for at the time. The $48,146 allowed in the first place, covered every item that could in any sense whatever be regarded as prospective profits. But the argument of the minister (Mr. Blair) is always that no one knows anything about these matters but himself. He thinks that he has all the information that is necessary to form a correct idea and that nobody can form a judgment on anything but himself. Well, the hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in that, as the opinion of the House would teach him if he knew it. The reports were clearly and definitely made in 1894, on which the payment was made. There is the certificate of the engineer and there is the letter of Mr. Ferguson which if it means anything at all, means that every claim that could be made was included.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How in the mischief would a settlement made on the first of January, cover work that was to be done on the last of July?

Mr. CLANCY. But everything points towards the conclusion and it appears on the face of the whole thing that this was a final settlement for the abandonment of the work on the sections. Is it a reasonable thing that Mr. Gilbert would have overlooked these items when he was trying to arrive at prospective profits? Not at all. Would not an item for a 'plant standing idle' be a fair claim to put in for prospective profits?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood that the hon. gentleman wished to make a very brief argument.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman wants to make his statement before he leaves for the train.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then I will not have the opportunity of showing the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) that he is wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. You can show the rest of us, we will stay with you.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will not say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has not applied his mind to it, because I have a better opinion of his intellect than to suppose that he would carefully consider the question and arrive at the conclusion he does.

Mr. CLANCY. That is the only argument the minister can ever advance, when we show up the evil of his administration. It would be paying him a poor compliment to say that he cuts a sorry figure in this House because he does not apply himself to his work. It would not be less to the point than is the hon. gentleman's usual answer to criticism on his department. I tell the minister (Mr. Blair) that it is quite apparent to any sensible man that the Gilbert Dredging Company did include all of these items in their first claim and that they were paid for them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Gilbert Dredging Company did not make out for the department the statement as to how much of the work contemplated had been done, so as to ascertain what had remained undone to get at the 15 per cent on the prospective profits. That was done by the officers of the department.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Was not the adjustment of the balance of such a nature that it would absolutely involve the preceding statement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. POWELL. I cannot understand that.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the minister mean to say that 'enforcing the banks' escaped Mr. Rubidge's notice at that time? Why it is nonsense to think that. It never occurred to any one that the Gilbert Dredging Company made up the statement with regard to the balance coming to them. Every one knows that that was done by the engineer. And if the engineer was derelict in his duty in including those claims, does any one suppose that the Gilbert Dredging Company would not have reminded him of it. The first settlement was a full settlement for all the claims in connection with the work on the canal, and it was finished and paid for so far as the Gilbert Dredging Company is concerned. Now, I shall not detain the House longer—

Mr. CAMPBELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) has a record in this House for looking out under his hat and saying something to annoy people.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Go on with your speech and stop scolding.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) might occupy his time better in this House than by interrupting people when they speak. Whenever you hear a discordant note coming from the government benches, if you look under the hon. gentleman's hat you may be sure to find where it comes from. Whatever may occur to the hon. gentleman's mind, no one can prevent the conclusion on the part of the public that the Gilbert Dredging Company knew that that was the final settlement; and in that settlement it is most unlikely that they would have left out a single claim, or that they had any idea of coming back afterwards for another settlement. More than that, the chief engineer and Mr. Rubidge stated that they believed that it was a full settlement. But, the hon. gentleman rakes up a letter four or five years old, and says it would stand another interpretation. The hon. gentleman may put any interpretation he likes on it; but a reasonable public, who do not go beyond the limits of common sense, will come to the conclusion that it is not a difficult thing to master its meaning. I think it is within the capacity of an ordinary mind, even one as narrow as mine, to see that the fact, in a nutshell, is that the Gilbert Dredging Company made a final settlement, and urge every claim that they thought reasonable at that time. The fact that some of the very items included in the present claim were included in the first claim, such as the unwatering of the canal, shows that they were not overlooked at the time of settlement. I have no hesitation in saying, so far as I am able to judge of the subject, that the present claim is entirely an afterthought, and that the public money is taken to pay a claim which is absolutely without foundation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had only advanced a short distance in my statement when the hon. member for Bothwell interposed to give his opinion before he left. I was reading the letter annexed to the receipt and referred to in the receipt. To show the state of mind in which the hon. member for Bothwell approached this question, what does he say in regard to this letter? He says the minister has raked up an old letter four or five years old, as though the age of the letter were something which discredited it, and that it ceased to have any value; although the fact remains that this letter bears date a few days only before the date of the receipt which passed between the department and the contractors, and states on its face what the reasons and considerations were on which this money was paid. The hon. gentleman sneers at the letter as if I had picked it out of the dust-heap, and as one that ought not to be considered for a moment. But this letter is a part of the transaction—part of what we would call in law the 'res gestae.' It is the most conclusive evidence which it would be possible to offer, and at the time this government paid the money over, they paid it with the knowledge that it was being received by the Gilbert Company simply as a satisfaction for the loss of their anticipated profits on work to be done, not on work that had been done, and that a further claim would, in course of time, be submitted; and this letter is the evidence of the truth of what I say:

The claims, if any, of the company in respect of or arising out of works actually done will, of course, remain to be dealt with apart from this settlement.

With this letter in their hands the government agree to pay and do pay $29,000 to the Gilbert Company as their right, under a clear understanding as to what their rights were.

Mr. CLANCY. And with that very letter the company understood, and the engineer said, that it was a full settlement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How can the hon. gentleman say, with any approach to fairness, that a settlement is any fuller than it states on its face that it is? How can he say that these documents mean anything more than they express? The language is clear; Mr. Gilbert said, we will take $29,000 for allowing you to cut this contract off from this day, excluding us from the opportunity of earning profits on what we might have done if the contract were continued. Do they say that they take it in consideration of anything that was done in the past? Not at all. They take it only in respect of the one claim which is referred to in the document.

Mr. CLANCY. The engineer put in every claim they had for the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend says what the engineer put in, and he implied that the Gilberts must have had a hand in putting it in, which he afterwards said he did not imply. No matter who put in their claim, would the interest of the Gilberts be to make the balance of the work that remained to be done as much as possible or as little as possible? According to the hon. gentleman's argument on the question, the interest of the Gilberts would be to build up the claim for the work done under the contract up to that date, so as to make the amount on the work to be done as little as possible. That would not be in the interest of the Gilberts, because the larger they make the work to be done, the better for themselves. So that my hon. friend's argument is based on an entire misconception of the position of the parties, and he reverses the attitude the Gilberts would naturally take towards the department in the matter. Now, we have got down to the point that in April, 1894, the Crown paid $29,000 for a specific purpose, which was indicated. Then, the question comes up, was there any bona fide, honest, fair claim which the Gilberts had at that time for anything else? If there was, it has to be disposed of in some way or other. If they have an honest claim, who says they ought not to be paid? It is all very well for political purposes to make a case against the government for maladministration or anything you like; but, it is hardly fair to take out of the pockets even of a government contractor moneys which he is entitled to retain or to deprive him of moneys which are justly his due. I do not care what hon. gentlemen on the other side say, so long as I continue in this department, I am not going to refuse to deal, as I believe, honestly and fairly by any contractor with the government, or reject his claim without consideration, simply because he is a contractor. I think a contractor with the government is entitled to some redress or consideration if he can make out his case, and I am going to allow a fair consideration according to the facts of the case, and the interest of the country, notwithstanding what gentlemen on the other side say. It must be apparent to any member of this House, who has heard the way in which this question has been discussed by the opposition, that they do not concern themselves one bit with the question whether right in this claim at all, but the only question for them is whether they cannot make out some case against the Minister of Railways in this transaction. I say, with as much confidence as I ever made a statement in my life, that there is no fair-minded and partial tribunal that will consider that claim in all its bearings and not conclude that the government had allowed, and only allowed, what was fair and just between the government and the contractors. I am going to take up the time of the committee with this matter, item by item, if the committee will allow me, and see whether the claims are such as ought to be fairly recognized between man and man.

Mr. POWELL. Did this claim, which they were preparing at that time outside the contract for extras or under the contract, come within the estimates made by the engineer or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that a large proportion of them would not be such as would come within the estimates. Take the plant lying idle.

Mr. HAGGART. If the plant was lying idle the whole time, was not the 15 per cent for the purpose of covering that. If not, what did it cover?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does my hon. friend acknowledge that if it does not cover the idle plant, they ought to have something for the nearly two years during which their plant did lie idle. Does my hon. friend admit this?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. POWELL. What were these items?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am going to take the items up one by one. I am not going to allow hon. gentlemen opposite to attack my conduct in connection with this matter without taking the necessary time to put my case before parliament, whether anybody listens to it or not. The plant lay idle two years, all but a month. That is one item. Then there is the reinforcing banks. That item would doubtless be one that might ordinarily come within the estimates, and I have no doubt that if it had been in the estimates it would have covered the full amount that was fairly and properly allowed in respect of that. But it did not come within the estimate, and the reinforcement of the banks was done beyond question. Then here is the loss they sustained in the culverts. That could not be a matter of estimates because that arose by reason of the fact that the canal was not unwatered and the contractors did not have what was pledged to them in the contract. They did not have all that stone that could be removed after the unwatering had been done, and had to get new stone to take the place of the old stone which had been there, and moreover, they would have been allowed a certain sum for the removal of that old stone, which they had not the opportunity of earning. That is a matter of damages.

Mr. POWELL. I am not sure about that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You could hardly expect monthly estimates to establish the amount that was claimed in respect of non-compliance with the contract.

Mr. POWELL. How about the other branch, the prospective profits? They were to have the old culverts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would not be one of the prospective profits. How could it be?

Mr. POWELL. I understand the circumstances were such—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must ask my hon. friend to kindly allow me to make my statement.

It is not a very simple matter to travel over these things, without having an interrupted opportunity of presenting them to the committee.

Mr. POWELL. This is the first time I knew the hon. gentleman to be so easily disconcerted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not, but it is utterly impossible to present the case in an intelligible form unless I am allowed to proceed without interruption. The question of prospective profits only dealt with what would be earned by the contractor, if his contract had not then been terminated and he had been allowed to go on and complete the work. Any damages he had suffered during the years he had been on the canal would not be prospective profits unquestionably on work which was figured out to amount to $195,000. Then the question comes up, had these people any claim existing at that time? It is clear, if they had, it was not settled. Now, what was their claim? I will show you their claim and how it was dealt with and how I arrived at the conclusions I did. I may say, in a general way, that it is important to bear in mind that the chief engineer of railways and canals and the superintending engineer of that work were both dead at the time this claim was presented. Mr. Killaly filled the place Mr. Rubidge now holds. Mr. Rubidge came in after a good deal of this work had been done and just before the period when this adjustment of prospective profits took place, so that Mr. Rubidge did not have the personal knowledge which would be necessary in order for him to say off-hand whether this claim or any claim were properly allowable or not. He might express an opinion on some of them, and yet when he came to inform himself with regard to the actual facts and learn just what the claim was in its details, come to a conclusion different from the one he had arrived at in the first instance. We have had some information from Mr. Rubidge with regard to this question. He presented a report to the department, not exactly the report to which the hon. gentleman referred, because it is clear that that report was made without very much knowledge as respects the matter. The report that I allude to, was one dated 5th of August, 1899, and the hon. gentleman referred to the report dated in the year 1895. The letter which Mr. Rubidge wrote to the department in 1895 contained the distinct statement that the claimants were entitled to be paid $11,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, no.

Mr. FOSTER. He said that was the only claim worthy of consideration, and even in that case certain things had to be established.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certain evidence had to be furnished—that is true. This letter of March 6, 1895, was addressed to the chief engineer of the department, and the fact of its being written supports my statement that the claim had not been rejected by the minister, but that he was having his officers look into it. This report of Mr. Rubidge covered a statement furnished to Mr. Rubidge by the Gilbert Company with respect to each of these items or claims, showing the grounds on which they base their claims and information that Mr. Rubidge may know what their contention was. Mr. Rubidge considers these explanations, and he makes a report to the department on them. I have that report before me to read it. It is dated August 5, 1899. He sends with this report on the claim of the Gilbert Dredging and Blasting Company, his report of March 6, 1895, which I have read, and also notes on the claims of Hutchison & Co., and the letter of E. H. Gilbert. Now, we will go over these claims. This report of Mr. Rubidge is in favour of the payment of $40,588.66. He allows the following different claims :

	Allowed.
Plant idle .....	$ 7,900
Reinforcing banks .....	11,250
Old stone in culverts .....	10,500
Lost by failure of government to unwater canal .....	11,958
Stone torn .....	1,766
Flooding .....	250
Preparing to start abandoned work....	*
Balance due on unwatering .....	1,000
Filling behind retaining walls.....	420
Wages to yearly employees .....	1,500
Backing to dimension stone used in repairs .....	*
Moving dredges .....	1,020
Working on the road.....	588
	$48,146

*Not allowed.

Now, the position is this. That whatever may be anybody's opinion as to the payment of any other sum, there can be no reasonable ground for questioning the payment, at all events, of this amount of $40,588.66. Mr. Rubidge puts in these items and makes this lengthy statement of the allowance which should be made, and tells why he discredits or refuses others. As to the first item, he gives the opinion of Mr. Robertson the assistant engineer on the work, and refers to the statement of Mr. Paynter in the matter. He says that it is proper to allow a thousand dollars in respect of that plant. On item No. 2 he allows $11,250. He states here, as hon. gentlemen may see, the grounds upon which he thinks it would be proper to allow these people $11,250 on that claim. He takes up each of the items which are in this bundle of papers which the hon. gentleman has read over, and which afford the best evidence the committee could desire as to the reasons which caused Mr. Rubidge to come to the conclusion he did up to the amount of $40,000.

Mr. BLAIR.

Now, there were some amounts in excess of the amounts which were allowed by Mr. Rubidge, and it was at this stage that the question came under my notice. The question was whether Mr. Rubidge had allowed a sufficient sum for the plant lying idle when he allowed $1,000. For two years the plant was kept unemployed, the men had also to be kept on hand and in their employ in order to take charge of it. He could not send his staff away altogether, he could not send away his secretary, his clerks, his engineer, because they were liable at any day to be called upon at once to resume the work. That was their contract. They proposed to remove this plant and they were refused the privilege of doing so by the department. The department said to them: No, you cannot move this until it is definitely decided whether this work shall be resumed.

Mr. POWELL. There was a final abandonment, and a provisional abandonment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. POWELL. They suspended operations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The department stopped them from working.

Mr. POWELL. How long?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Two years, but they finally abandoned it. But what I say is abundantly established, and it settles the claim entirely, is that when they desired to remove that plant they were forbidden by the department to do so. The department said, No, you must keep that plant there because we may at any moment resume work under this contract. It was, of course, a very unbusinesslike and a very loose and careless piece of administration to leave this thing hanging in that shape for two years. Now, I want to ask the committee to consider the facts as I present them. Would any man say that it is not fair and eminently just that this company, who held $35,000 worth of plant, plant that was well worth that money, carrying it through their books, plant that was held for two years unemployed, should not be allowed some compensation. I do not think there is one gentleman on the other side of the House who, if he were summoned as a jurymen in such a case, outside altogether of his desire to render a verdict against the department, would not say that it was fair and just to allow these men reasonable compensation for the loss to them for the non-employment of their plant during all that period, and also for the cost to them of the services of the officers and employees that they had to keep upon the work. Now, we had to consider the question whether a thousand dollars was a fair amount. When we came to consider what was usual and customary between contractors, it became evident that in the first place you would have to allow these people something for depreciation during that period. They have got $35,000 worth of plant lying there not earning a copper. What would be a fair amount to allow them for being obliged to keep that plant idle during that period? They claimed, of course, a great deal more than they got, but the allowance, when it comes to be figured out, will be found to be a very reasonable one.

Mr. POWELL. They would be idle about two years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said two years.

Mr. POWELL. They could not work in the winter time.

Mr. HAGGART. The work was closed in February, 1893, and the bargain was made with them in March, 1894, eleven months.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From April, 1891, until some time in the season of 1893. My impression at this moment is that it was fully one year and eleven months that it remained in that shape. Now, what would anybody say would be a fair allowance for the depreciation and waste to a man's plant kept idle for that period? I do not care whether it was busy every month or not, because men have to buy their plant and make their arrangements.

Mr. COCHRANE. It would be idle in the winter time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would not affect the case, because the business has got to be done, these contracts made, and everything has to be considered in view of the fact that there is not a full twelve months' earnings to be made out of this plant; and when you are carrying in your books the value of your plant and writing off every year an amount for depreciation, you write it off as a year's depreciation, not as a six months' depreciation. The depreciation would not only attach to the season in which work could be profitably employed.

Mr. COCHRANE. There would be a depreciation if it was working.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt, but there would be more depreciation if it was not working, because if the plant was working it would be earning, whereas when it is lying idle there would be a depreciation, some would say, more than when it was working. Then you have to allow some interest upon the capital invested in the plant. We had this thing looked into very carefully, and the valuation placed upon the plant was a little less than $35,000. Fifteen per cent of that, any one would say, would be a very small valuation to make to cover the depreciation and interest. We consulted contractors on the subject. I did not jump to any hasty conclusion about this matter. I asked contractors: How much do you yourself charge off in your accounts for depreciation of your plant from year to year? And there was not one of them that told me less than 20 per cent for depreciation in the plant.

Mr. POWELL. Twenty per cent be hang-ed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the statement they made to me. I am not the owner of plant, and I could not say from my own knowledge.

Mr. POWELL. I remember a case where we tried to get as much as we possibly could for depreciation in the running of machinery, and we could not get more than 3 per cent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think if my hon. friend alludes to running machinery which is under cover, which is not exposed to the weather and can be kept oiled, it would be in a different position from plant like this which, they say practically requires to be renewed in five years.

Mr. POWELL. Five years if it is working.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they will tell you it will go behind in five years as much if it is not working as if it is working.

Mr. GIBSON. A man is very lucky if he has his plant intact at the end of five years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They charge off 20 per cent every year.

Mr. GIBSON. A man has to keep up his plant, and he has to write off from 10 per cent to 20 per cent for depreciation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would write off just as much when it is idle as when it is employed. I came to the conclusion, the deputy minister concurred, and the Mr. Rubidge finally came to the same conclusion, when it had been talked over and considered that the allowance he had made in the first place of $1,000 in respect to this claim was a wholly inadequate allowance and that it would be so held if the claimants had gone to court. I want to know whether, if this case had gone to the Exchequer Court, in respect to the damage on this idle plant, the amount which has been allowed and was recommended for payment would have been exceeded or otherwise. I have no doubt that the Exchequer Court would have made a more liberal allowance.

Mr. HAGGART. The Exchequer Court would have given them nothing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have had judgments in the Exchequer Court upon various questions and these judgments have been very much in excess of any amounts that the department has been willing to allow. The department, instead of allowing $9,550, on account of idle plant, allowed $7,900, or $6,900 in addition to the sum which Mr. Rubidge had first reported in favour of. This $7,000 is to be added to the $40,000 which makes $47,000 of the mount included in this estimate. You have then within $1,000 of the amount which we are proposing to pay. The other item consists of $1,500 for wages of the employees of the contractors during these two years in which they were delayed in their work. They said that the amount of wages they actually had to pay to the people they had employed was $3,000. We allowed half of that amount. They had their clerk and engineer and we considered that they might properly be allowed for four seasons at $750 a season, which made $1,500. We get $48,000 in that way, and $48,000 is the amount which we have allowed.

Mr. POWELL. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman when this adjustment was made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were prevented from continuing their work in April, 1891, and in April of the season of 1893, they got final notice that the work was not to be continued.

Mr. POWELL. For how long a period do you allow interest?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We allow interest from October 1, 1891, to July 1, 1900.

Mr. POWELL. Here is a claim for idle plant that starts to run in April, 1891, and runs out in February, 1893, when the work is finally abandoned. Their claim is maturing up to that time in the matter of the plant, and yet you go to work and allow interest on this amount from the time the suspension began. Interest is allowed on the amount from the time it commenced to accrue and not from the time it finally accrued.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We only commenced to allow interest on October 1, 1891.

Mr. POWELL. You do not understand me.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do understand you. We might have taken one-half of the $7,900 from

Mr. BLAIR.

February 1, 1891, and allowed interest on the balance from the very time that the amount was due, but we did not do that. We allowed interest from October 1, 1891. If you figure it up you will find that on the other basis it would come to more than it comes to here.

Mr. HAGGART. I have listened with a good deal of attention to the extraordinary defence of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals of this most extraordinary transaction. He starts out by saying that there was embodied in the contract between the Crown and the Gilbert Dredging Company two clauses by which the contractors would have to furnish to the engineer in charge, a statement of all claims they had against the government in the shape of extras repeated from month to month. The minister (Mr. Blair) said that my practice was to settle claims again and again without consideration of that clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said you never acted on it.

Mr. HAGGART. I tell the hon. gentleman that I never meddled with the settlement of any claim in the department. I tell him that the estimates were all prepared by the deputy head of the department and the engineer, and that I had no consultation with the officials for the purpose of allowing claims for the settlement of extras or anything of the kind. If the hon. minister consulted his deputy, his deputy could have told him that his statement was wrong in that regard. The minister asks why I sent the claim to the engineer for the purpose of reporting upon it. I tell him that I never heard of the claim until it was brought up in this House. It was a simple departmental matter and when the extras were allowed beyond a contract, the question might come before me if it were drawn to my attention by the deputy minister, but never otherwise. Let the House not be drawn away from the simple facts of this case. In March, 1894, there was a settlement with Mr. Gilbert. The minister tells us that he did not include the claims which had accrued previously. The work was abandoned in 1893, a year before. Mr. Rubidge furnished the final estimate ten months before the final settlement, and if the contractors had a claim would they not have put it in month after month according to the contract. It appears they carefully kept it back until the settlement was made with them. The minister says they specially excluded these claims under the settlement. He is a lawyer and he knows differently. He knows the meaning of words, and here is what Mr. Ferguson said:

The claim, if any, of the company in respect of or arising out of works actually done.

Does the minister say that 'plant idle' is one of the works actually done? Does he say:

That damages from the failure of the government to unwater the canal, was one of these. He knows better. He talks of how honourable he would be with contractors. Why, these contractors settled with the government in 1894, and they had their final estimate for this work eleven months previously. They did not except, in the receipt which they gave to the government, any of these claims, and the minister knows that. What procedure did he follow? He summoned the deputy minister, and the engineer, who reported that these claims should not be entertained.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He had reported before that in favour of $40,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister has in his hands the statement of Mr. Rubidge that there was only one of the items in the claim of Gilbert & Company that was worthy of consideration, and before considering even that he would like to have the details. What I want to draw the attention of the country and parliament to is, that all these things were settled for in March, 1894, and that there was no complaint from the contractor in reference to that settlement. In that settlement the contractor did not reserve these claims and the minister knows it. Look at the extraordinary procedure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) adopted. He asked the deputy head to meet him in consultation with the engineer on the work. The three of them met Mr. Gilbert in the office of the minister, and the minister was not able to get from Mr. Rubidge a certificate at that time that Gilbert was entitled to the money. The minister reverses the whole order of procedure. He first approved, and then the deputy minister certified, provided that Mr. Rubidge would give his certificate afterwards. Why, the poor fellow dare not decide afterwards against the decision of the minister. The decision of the minister is sent to Mr. Rubidge certified by the deputy and then Mr. Rubidge was asked to certify and he did so, and how could he do otherwise. Why did not the minister proceed in the ordinary way? Why did he not get the engineer in charge of the work to certify first and then have the deputy supervise it and then approve of it himself. What business has the minister as political head of the department to meddle in anything of this kind? It is the duty of the deputy head and the engineers in charge of the work to deal with that and it does not come within the province of the minister at all. No other minister ever interfered in the details of such a matter as that. It is only on the interpretation of a contract or on some extraordinary occasion that the minister has to deal with such a matter. I do not know how it ever came to pass that council approved of his action. If the minister thought they had any colour of right in their claim he could have guarded himself from all suspicion by referring it to the courts. The whole transaction is one of the most monstrous, one of the most indefensible, and one of the nastiest-looking things that ever was transacted in any department of a Canadian government. It was decided upon previously by his predecessor in office, and he should have looked upon his predecessor's decision as somewhat sacred, or at all events he should not have revised it without the fullest consideration and without submitting it to the courts. There is no denying that his predecessor in office decided that this claim was fully paid, and that there was full compensation given for any cancellation of the contract. There is no denying that. Is unwatering or idle plant unperformed work? 'The claims of the company in respect of or arising out of work actually done'—is idle plant or reinforcement of banks work neglected to be done? If Mr. Gilbert had to reinforce the banks, the engineer in charge of the work would have given a certificate of the quantities from day to day, and I will venture to say that he did so, and that he was paid for that work. The hon. gentleman has forgotten that from the 15 per cent allowance for prospective damages, there is to be deducted the $28,000, and that Mr. Gilbert should have only the 15 per cent on the balance, because the contract is calculated on $125,000 of unperformed work; but he was paid 15 per cent on that. A more disgraceful transaction I never heard of, and I do not hesitate to say so. The Minister of Railways cannot apologize, he cannot excuse or defend it in any manner whatever. Here is a man who has no claim morally or legally. He has barred his claim by his receipt; and in defiance of everything in the good management of the department, the minister boldly comes down and asks for the payment of a sum of money to which this man is not entitled in the least. How he gets his colleagues to support him in conduct of this kind I cannot understand. How they come to pass a vote in council of $28,000 for the payment of an old claim of this kind, without any reason being adduced for it, I cannot understand. How did the hon. gentleman get his department to consent to it? When I presided over the department, it would never do such a thing. We have a deputy reporting that the contractor was not entitled to any such amount, the chief engineer in charge reporting that there was only one item worthy of consideration; no certificate from the engineer in charge—he was not consulted at all. These four gentlemen sat in review upon the decision of their predecessors, that this party was settled with in full for the abandonment of his contract, and was given a sum for prospective profits, and coolly decided that he was entitled to $28,000. This is the same gentleman who has a contract with the department for a dredge at $425 a day, for sweeping out the Galops Canal, for which he has been paid $131,000 for 1,900 square yards, on which he has only received $8.40 per yard. I stated to the minister the other day that this excavation was costing the country—I was afraid to name the amount—$45 or $50 a yard. I said that it was an alarming fact.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is wide of the mark.

Mr. HAGGART. The amount stated in the papers brought down is $131,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That includes the rock.

Mr. HAGGART. It does not include the rock up to date.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $109,000 is what the sweeping came to.

Mr. HAGGART. Well, take the hon. gentleman's own figures—$109,000 for removing 1,900 yards of earth. This same man had the contract for deepening the canal, and he was paid in full for that. Mr. Kennedy, of Montreal, was sent up to look over his work, and reported that Mr. Gilbert was entitled to a certain amount when he completed it down to grade, and he was paid in full for that work. Who is this Mr. Gilbert? What claim has he on the country? How is it he has such an extraordinary pull? I do not know the man; I know nothing about him; but I know that this is one of the worst cases ever placed before the parliament of this country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose the minister for the time being at the head of the Department of Railways and Canals must necessarily submit, with as good grace as possible to all the denunciations which may be heaped upon him by the opposition. Here is a gentleman who has been himself at the head of this department, and who ought to have some experience in these matters, and he tells us that it is no part of the business of a responsible minister to look into claims made on the department, or to supervise and see what is going on in his department, but that he should leave everything to the officials. If anything went astray, the hon. gentleman would be the first man to charge the minister with dereliction of duty and gross incompetency if he would put forward such an excuse. I suppose I shall have to bear with as good grace as possible the denunciations of these hon. gentlemen; but they have no effect upon me, because I am prepared to have this whole transaction, from beginning to end sifted as thoroughly as it is possible to sift it, and I do not fear what the consequences of the investigation will be. I know that it is a fair, square, honest transaction, and, therefore, I do not mind what the hon. gentleman may have to say on the subject. The hon. gentleman asked how could there be a claim for unwatering, and would it not be covered by this allowance with respect to prospective profits? I will tell you why that claim should be allowed and why it should not be covered by prospective profits.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not want the minister to be stating things which I did not say. I referred to 'the claims of the company in respect of or arising out of work actually done,' and I asked how neglect of unwatering or plant lying idle could be an exception to that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can tell the hon. gentleman very readily how it should come under that head, although it need not necessarily come under it, in order to entitle these people to a settlement. If it was right that they should be allowed for this thing, they would not be precluded by the settlement, even though these words in their receipt did not cover it, because all that they were allowed for—I repeat again for the five hundredth time—is the profit they would have made if they had not been stopped from completing their contract. That was estimated at $195,000. What did this claim of unwatering arise from? It was damages which these people claim, because the terms of the contract which the Crown had entered into with them, pledged the Crown to unwater that canal so that they could do this work dry.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland). That was all considered, settled and paid for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg my hon. friend's pardon.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, it was.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is where I say the hon. gentleman is wrong. You cannot say it was settled and paid for.

Mr. COCHRANE. What good is the receipt then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The receipt does not show it was settled and paid for.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would take that receipt before the hon. minister's word, although I have great confidence in him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I dare say my hon. friend has great confidence in me, but he has not sufficient confidence in anybody, who is not an out and out violent opponent of the government, to believe anything they say.

Mr. COCHRANE. I want the hon. minister to take that back.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was going to add something complimentary to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. COCHRANE. It would be rather a suspicious compliment in my mind. If I were sitting in jury—and I am trying to assume that position in listening to this discussion—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt.

Mr. COCHRANE. I know that men's minds may get biassed and they will judge other men by themselves, and that is not a righteous judgment, if we were to believe the good book. If I were on the jury, I would certainly decide that these gentlemen got paid, and gave a receipt.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are not judging the ex-minister fairly, when you are insinuating that he is judging me by himself.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am sorry if I am not treating the present minister fairly, because I want to do it. I have no prejudice in the matter, but I want to guard the interests of the constituency I represent, and I do not want any contractor, after he has been settled with, and has got what the engineer considers a fair amount for the damage he has suffered through not having been allowed to go on with the contract, and after he has given a receipt—I do not want him to be paid $28,000 more of the public money. I did not understand the ex-minister (Mr. Haggart) to say that a minister should sit in his chair and let his deputy run his department. What I understood him to say was that when a claim had been settled by a previous minister, it was rather a suspicious circumstance that the acting minister should revive the claim before getting the engineer's certificate, and have his deputy make a report on it, and then decide the case himself. The hon. gentleman evidently took the case in his own hands, and called in his officers after deciding it himself, and ordered them to certify to this, or their heads would come off.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is now displaying that extraordinary judicial capacity which he claims he is exercising. The hon. gentleman has repeated what was said by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), that no succeeding minister ought to revise, without proper consideration, a decision of his predecessor. I subscribe to that doctrine at once, but the difficulty is that it has not a shadow of application to the present case. It does not happen that I have reversed a settlement made by the previous minister, or a decision arrived at by him. He did not settle this matter, so that I am not disturbing what he settled. He settled one thing, and I am dealing with another. These claims were never passed upon by him at all. What he did, was to send them to his engineer to report upon, and I found them unsettled when I came to the department.

Mr. COCHRANE. What then is the receipt for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would ask the ex-Minister of Railways why, if that receipt was a receipt in full of all claims, why he sent these claims to the superintending engineer, Mr. Rubidge, for him to report upon, and why did he not, when he got the report on March 6, 1895, determine that question, and say: I will allow you $11,000, or I will allow you something or nothing? These people were there demanding payment month after month, and year after year, why did he not decide their claim? If he had decided it, and that decision had been apparent to me, I would not have reopened it, for certainly I do not want to invite the unnecessary consideration of claims. They are numerous and troublesome enough as it is, and I do not want any more of them than I can help. It was because this was not settled that I had to take it up, and I reached the best conclusion I could, and a conclusion which, I am confident, would be arrived at by ninety-nine out of one hundred fair-minded men.

Let me come to the question of this $425 per day. The other transaction the hon. gentleman said was the most scandalous, and this one he says is the most atrocious. We have, therefore, two atrocious transactions to deal with. What is the hon. gentleman's complaint? A contract was made with the Gilbert Dredging Company, whereby they were to be paid for a day of twelve hours, $475, for operating and working a certain plant and machinery, during such number of days as the department might choose to employ them. I found that these gentlemen, when I came to the department had been contractors under the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), and there had been remaining for some little time unsettled, a question as to the clearing up of the rapids, and making a sufficient channel for the purpose of navigation. The hon. gentleman complains that it was unwise policy to do that.

Mr. HAGGART. I never said that it was an unwise policy, but what I said, was that the sum was an enormous sum for the work done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman approve of the policy of clearing out the rapids by means of a dredge and machinery?

Mr. HAGGART. What I said again and again, is that the Gilbert Company had a contract to bring them down to grade line, and that you are giving to these parties $425 a day for the performing of a work for which they had been paid before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When were they settled, with for doing this work? Before the hon. gentleman came into the department or after?

Mr. HAGGART. After. A good while afterwards. There was a dispute and, if I remember rightly, it was left to arbitration, to Mr. Kennedy, to decide what the amount should be. On the certificate of Mr. Kennedy, the amount was paid over.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The statement made to me with regard to Mr. Kennedy coming into this matter was that he was sent in 1892 or 1893 to ascertain whether the work was finished. He found there were large boulders in the channel that would have to be removed. He made no estimate of the amount coming to the Gilbert Company by reason of the work they had previously done.

Mr. Haggart. That is not correct whether the minister gets it from his deputy or not; Mr. Kennedy reported as to the amount of work done and to be done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will state the facts as they appear in the records of the department and as furnished me by the officers. As early as 1892, the Minister of Railways in his report stated:

It is considered an important matter to ascertain whether the shallow portions of the new channel are occasioned by rock in situ or loose material swept in from the banks and lodging in the irregularities of the bottom. This can only be satisfactorily settled by sending a dredge to make an actual test—doubtless an expensive method, but, in my opinion, fully warranted by the circumstances of the case.

Now, mark how the hon. gentleman subscribed to the statement that it was necessary to send machinery and plant for the purpose of ascertaining the facts—sweeping the channel and relieving the bottom of these obstructions. That was the opinion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) in 1892. It was his opinion also in 1893 and 1894, because precisely the same language is contained in his reports of those years. That pointed to the necessity, notwithstanding what had been done years before by the Gilbert Blasting and Dredging Company in the way of performing their contract, of sending a proper plant to this locality to do this work and to make the channel a suitable one. Prior to 1894, as early as 1892, in the month of October, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) was head of the department, communications passed between the superintending engineer, Mr. Rubidge, and Messrs. E. E. Gilbert & Sons, with reference to maturing a plan proper for this purpose. This is the communication that Mr. Gilbert sent:

The government being desirous of ascertaining whether certain material in the Galops is loose or solid, we make this offer: We will supply the plant at our disposal for $425 a day, the government to be at liberty to determine the length of time the plant is to be employed. This plan we considered the only feasible plan to determine the nature of the material in the channel.

Yours truly,
E. E. GILBERT & SONS.

Mr. Haggart.

Mr. Rubidge reported to Mr. Trudeau that he considered the offer made by Messrs. Gilbert & Sons was a favourable offer. They were the only people who had the plant that was necessary, for this was considered a hazardous and difficult place to work, a large amount of plant would be necessary, and nobody else could furnish it. Mr. Rubidge considered this sum, $425 a day, for the use of plant and the wages of the people employed, was a reasonable amount to say. Mr. Trudeau concurred in that opinion and advised the government to pay $425 a day to these people to do this work; and it was settled in the department that it should be done. But some difficulty arose—not in respect to this particular contract, but in respect to the relation which the Gilberts bore to the government in connection with the work, and it was suspended and remained postponed for a long period. It was entirely in accordance with the intention and the policy of the department that the contract should be carried on at once if these obstructing circumstances had not occurred. Now, on the 22nd of October, 1892, Mr. Rubidge reported to Mr. Trudeau as follows:

I beg to inclose a letter from Messrs. E. E. Gilbert & Sons, amending their previous offer to furnish necessary plant with which to test the nature of the material in the bottom of the embankment.

And this was the letter of Messrs. Gilbert & Sons referred to:

The government being desirous of ascertaining whether certain material is loose or solid, we beg to make the following offer: We will supply the plant at our disposal, as stated in our letter of 20th ult., for the purpose, for the sum of $425 a day, the government to be at liberty to determine the length of time the plant is to be employed. This plan we consider the cheapest and only feasible one to determine the nature of the material in the channel.

This is a statement of the plant, and you will see when I read it how complete a misrepresentation of the facts it is for hon. gentlemen who have not read the papers, to get up and say that the government is paying $425 a day for a dredge. Now we will see:

One large spoon dredge, one large tug, two dump scows, two flat scows, one hauling scow equipped with engines, drums, wire rope, &c., one floating boarding-house, anchors, &c. We to equip said plant with the help necessary for its proper working. The price to be $425 per day of twelve hours; time to commence when plant is in position designated by engineer in charge.

The government to be at liberty to determine the length of time that the plant is to be so employed, and to have the right to cancel this contract for such survey upon giving us three days' notice of their desire to so terminate the contract.

It will be understood that such chain and wire rope belonging to the government as may be on the ground, which was used in previous operations by us as government contractors at such work in the Galops Rapids, shall be at our disposal, free of charge.

If it should be required to still further improve the channel by deepening and widening we will do such drilling, blasting and dredging as may be ordered by the engineer in charge, for the sum of $8.40 per cubic yard for rock necessarily excavated. All possible assistance as regards position of work to be done by us to be afforded by the government engineers. It is further understood that vessel-owners are to be notified by the proper department that access to the channel cannot be obtained during the progress of our operations without such notice as will secure immunity of our plant.

(Sgd.) THE GILBERT BROS. ENGINEERING COMPANY.

That is a statement of the plant which they were required to furnish, and they were required to furnish men to man the plant. Now, is there an hon. gentleman in this House that will say that $425 a day was not a fair and reasonable price for the use of that plant, the men to work it, all the fuel required, all the material and supplies necessary to operate it? Who is there that knows anything about it that will say it is an exorbitant sum? And yet the hon. member for York does not hesitate to denounce the Minister of Railways and Canals for entering into such a contract because, he says, it is an exorbitant sum. Does he know better than the superintending engineer on the canal? Does he know better than Mr. Trudeau? Does he know better than the chief engineer? He may know better than I do, for I know nothing about it; but these gentlemen are supposed to know, and they have stated that it was a proper arrangement to make. Now, here is what Mr. Rubidge says on June 12, 1897.

Mr. FOSTER. This was taken in 1892, was it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The department first decided to have this channel swept in 1892, and offers were made to the department by these people who possessed this plant, and the offer was accepted and approved by the officers of the department. It went on until 1897, when we decided upon having our canals put in shape, and Mr. Rubidge communicated to the Gilbert Company that the chief engineer of the department—

Mr. FOSTER. The dredge was not at work until 1897.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps 1897. This is the letter which Mr. Rubidge wrote to Mr. Schreiber on June 12, 1897, and I have here Mr. Trudeau's endorsement of the offer of these people. Mr. Rubidge wrote:

The offer of The Gilbert Bros. Engineering Company, of May 31, 1897, to supply all necessary plant for the purposes of surveys, and of removing the alleged obstructions in the channel, is practically a repetition of the offer of October 22, 1892, made at the suggestion of the late chief engineer, Mr. Trudeau, with a view to act upon my previous reports recommending that a properly equipped dredging and blasting plant should be stationed in the channel, as being, in my opinion, the only means of making a satisfactory test and survey of the bottom, and at the same time of being prepared to remove description of material which might be discovered above the original or contract grade.

The reports also recommend that the south side of the channel should be buoyed, also that in view of the apparent permanent lowering of the water surface and a consequent increase in its slope, that the original grade on Island Shoal and Lower Bar, should be correspondingly lowered. The matter was very carefully considered and previous offers of E. E. Gilbert & Sons amended by that of October 22, 1892—copy herewith.

Referring to the recent offer May 31, 1897, to the hon. the minister, I have to-day had an opportunity of discussing it with Mr. Frank Gilbert, who fully understands the nature and extent of the work required.

Mr. Gilbert has also amended the offer of his company—see copy herewith—by adding the 'torpedo' drill scow to the list of plant to be supplied.

I therefore, in view of the importance of perfecting this channel and bringing it into use, beg to repeat my recommendation that the offer of the Gilbert Bros. to reduce the bottom to the original grade—or any required depth below it—be accepted, and that authority be given me to arrange with them to proceed with the work immediately.

Now, there is Mr. Rubidge's opinion and that opinion was endorsed and approved by the chief engineer of the department. Now, here is what Mr. Kennedy says with regard to this work:

I am in receipt of your telegram of last night asking how best it can be ascertained whether the material above grade on Island Shoal, in the new Galops channel, is loose or solid rock.

Some rough idea may be formed as to the character of the rock on the bottom (as I telegraphed you a few days ago) by means of heavy steel bars forked from a steamer, but the best way of ascertaining, beyond dispute, whether the rock is loose or solid would be to try it with a good powerful dredge. The rock forming the bottom, in its original state, was solid; not only in the sense of being in solid undisturbed beds, but it was so hard in texture as to be practically undredgable, and therefore properly classified as solid rock excavation. Any rock which a dredge can now take up will, therefore, be proved to be loose rock by the fact of its being found dredgeable, and conversely any rock which cannot be dredged will by that be proved to be solid.

In such a trial it would, of course, be essential that only a powerful suitable dredge be employed, and that it be skilfully worked; for there are doubtless blocks of rock which are loose in the sense of not being attached to the bed rock, but which are loose enough or packed closely enough amongst others to appear immovable, and solid, if tried, with an efficient machine or in unskilful hands.

A good dipper dredge would be the most suitable kind.

As to distinguishing between solid and loose rock, just down to grade level and no deeper, the dredge can be made to this also, by taking sufficient care to work the bucket just to grade line depth—such working would, however, be practicable only for investigation purposes. The blasted bottom cannot be dredged smooth, and if it were desired to make the channel navigable to full grade line depth by leaving no point projecting above that, it would be necessary to put the dredge bucket deeper to an extent depending on the size of the broken rock, the size and kind of bucket and the way in which it is worked.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) JOHN KENNEDY.

Now, Mr. Kennedy points out the difficulties, the skilfulness required, the strength and character of the plant that was necessary. Mr. Rubidge reports that these people are the proper people to employ, Mr. Trudeau endorses that in strong terms, the chief engineer recommends it and it comes down to me; and because I say that I will not repudiate and reverse the harmonious opinion of all these officers of the department, I am guilty of a transaction which is disgraceful and for which I ought to be condemned. The hon. gentleman laughs. It is a matter of no concern to him that the statement has been published all over the country that a minister has been guilty of disgraceful conduct in his office. That does not appear to the hon. gentleman to be a statement of any gravity at all. But, I ask any hon. gentleman who is present on either side of the House, whether any minister in my position can be fairly condemned for coming to this decision, after having had presented to him such recommendations, such opinions, such advice from the officers of the department. Was anything for me to do but to recommend to council that a settlement be made of the character I have described? There is not a tittle of evidence furnished by these hon. gentlemen to what the value of this plant is. These gentlemen have had these matters before them a long time, because the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals knew all about it. He knew in regard to what the cost of this work was. If the hon. gentleman has so much confidence as he would give us to suppose he has in his ability to make out a case against the department, if he felt that there was any merit in his contention, if he felt that I had been careless or had been acting improvidently in the matter, why did he not bring the case before the Public Accounts and have witnesses summoned to show what would be a fair value to put upon the services that these people had rendered?

Mr. HAGGART. I never heard of it until the supplementary estimates came down. I never knew that the hon. gentleman would present any such claim to the House. How could I know of it before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where did the hon. gentleman get all his information—out of the supplementary estimates?

Mr. HAGGART. I never suspected that an item of that kind would appear. The first knowledge I had of it was when I saw them in the supplementary estimates. How could I go to the Public Accounts Committee?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman never anticipated that an item of this kind would appear and yet he has been posing before this committee as being possessed with data on all these matters which are matters of engineering skill, as one who had got all the information and now he cannot dream of me doing such a thing. The hon. gentleman had all this material in his possession when he was in the department. He knew that it was recommended by Mr. Rubidge and by Mr. Kennedy, he knew that he had recommended that $425 a day should be paid for the use of this dredge. He entered into a contract with these people—

Mr. HAGGART. I never would have entered into such contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman could not have done anything else under the circumstances. I repeat that having this information before him, knowing the whole question as to whether I was paying a reasonable or an unreasonable price for the services of this dredge, why did the hon. gentleman not bring it before the Public Accounts Committee, summon expert witnesses to say what the value of this work was, and find out if the minister was guilty of a disgraceful transaction in paying the sum which his officers recommended him to pay. He does not know whether $400, or $200, or $1,000 would be a reasonable price to pay. Why did he not get evidence to show what would be a fair price? That would not answer the hon. gentleman's purpose. All that he desired to do was to make a charge against a political opponent for political purposes.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman asks me why I did not go to the Public Accounts Committee with this transaction which I branded as disgraceful, involving the payment of $48,000 in settlement of a claim which was already settled. I had no knowledge that any such claim as this would be presented until I saw the supplementary estimates come down? What are referred to the Public Accounts Committee are the public accounts contained in the Auditor General's Report of last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have been paying for three years on this transaction.

Mr. HAGGART. These payments refer to four or five different transactions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. HAGGART. The first I saw of this payment to the Gilbert Company on account of dredging was in the Auditor General's Report of this year. There is an item of $101,000. What struck me as extraordinary was that the next item in the estimate showed a payment for dredging of $120 or $130 a day for services similar to those for which the minister paid $425 a day. There is no justification at all for the hon. minister in this matter. The hon. minister proceeded to speak about two different things in regard to getting the report of Mr. Kennedy, the engineer, in 1891, recommending that that dredge ought to be employed for the purpose of doing the work. Why did the hon. gentleman not go about it in the ordinary way and call for tenders to do the work? He goes back to the employment of the Gilbert Dredging Company several years before for the purpose of doing work for which they were paid $425 a day. Mr. Kennedy reported in favour of employing these men for the purposes of surveying the rapids. I ordered Mr. Kennedy to employ them and I understood that the whole time occupied would not be more than six, seven, or eight days. When I found that they had taken twenty days to do it. I was very much annoyed and I ordered the discontinuance of the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much did you pay?

Mr. HAGGART. Four hundred and twenty-five dollars a day was the amount they charged, but I refused, in spite of the recommendation of Mr. Rubidge, to employ these men any longer at any such price as that. That might be a reasonable sum to pay for four or five days, but it is not a reasonable sum to pay for two or three years, and to expend $101,000 in that way is absolutely without any justification whatever. The hon. minister tries to change the charge I made against him from the matter of the $48,000 to the payment of $425 a day. The payment of $425 a day is an extraordinary one, but I do not charge it as disgraceful. I do charge that the other transaction is a disgraceful one. The minister cannot defend it, because there is no defence for it. He forces it on the department, gets a report from the deputy minister, and the report is conditional upon getting a report from the engineer in charge of the work. A more disgraceful transaction was never perpetrated by any minister in this House. The hon. minister gets up and attempts to defend a transaction of that kind when he cannot deny that there was a settlement made by his predecessor. There was a settlement in full made with the Gilbert Company for prospective profits on this work. The final estimate was made eleven months before that. They go before that final estimate in order to trump up a claim against this government and the minister sits in judgment upon it and allows it, thinking we would not point out to the people of the country this disgraceful transaction in all its hideousness. The defence of the hon. minister the other day was that this was a transaction for which his chief engineer was altogether responsible, that the chief engineer had the settlement of this affair in his own hands, that it was on the report of the chief engineer that he acted. But when we come to learn the facts, we find that the minister settled the matter himself, and that he got the deputy minister's report conditional on getting the certificate of the engineer in charge of the work. Why does he not get the certificate of Mr. Weller, who was in charge of the work? The fact of the matter is there is nothing at all in the claim of the Gilbert Dredging Company. The truth is that the whole thing was settled in 1894 and the reservation in the receipt covers no such thing as 'plant lying idle.' There is no excuse or justification for this payment, and the minister is absolutely unable to defend the transaction. I can understand that the poor engineer in charge of the work, whose livelihood depends upon being submissive to the powers that he would certify, but how the deputy minister ever certified to a transaction of that kind, is more than I can understand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is one thing the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) can rest assured of, and that is that no officer of the department was ever requested by me to certify in any way as to this claim. He can have that evidence on oath, if he wishes.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister first stated that he had considered the claim fully and had come to the conclusion that it ought to be paid. Then the deputy minister was called upon, I suppose, to back up the opinion held by his political head, but I do not think the deputy minister would ever have done any such thing for me when I was minister. The minister (Mr. Blair), talks about my not seeing the estimates that were sent over to the Auditor General, but I venture to say that he never saw one of these estimates himself. The law provides that the payment shall be made on the certificate of the deputy head, and the minister's certificate is not necessary and he never sees them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), is quite positive as to that.

Mr. HAGGART. I am quite positive that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, they are never brought to his attention.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is an unimportant matter, but it so happens that although I do not know what the contents of the certificates are, I certify to every estimate that goes to the Auditor General.

Mr. HAGGART. Then that is a new condition of things in the department. If the minister looks at the certificates before him, he will find that never did any Minister of Railways sign these estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), has any spare time on his hands, he might persuade the Auditor General that these estimates should be paid without the signature of the minister.

Mr. POWELL. I did not investigate this item previously to its being brought down this afternoon but from what I have heard, my mind is in a considerable state of doubt, to say the least, as respects this transaction. Although I have not gone into it very fully, it is only fair to make the statement before the minister, which I would feel justified in making upon a public platform, and thus giving him an opportunity to answer the statements which I would make in public. I shall very briefly review the salient features of the case as it strikes me. There was a contract for dredging in connection with the Cornwall Canal. In 1891 the work under that contract was suspended. In March, 1893, the work under that contract was totally abandoned. In April, 1894, a settlement was made, at least of some kind, and as to certain matters under the contract. It is claimed by the ex-minister (Mr. Haggart), that at the time that settlement was made, all claims were before him and before the department. The present minister (Mr. Blair), claims that that settlement only was as respects a portion of the matter for which these payments were made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not part of these payments at all.

Mr. POWELL. Well, as respects what you might call the claims arising out of the contract. I am inclined to agree with him from reading the receipt and the letter from Mr. Ferguson, that, at least, one party to the settlement had the idea that there was something outside which should be a matter of further consideration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You can hardly say, that if one party had that view, it would be conclusive upon him that the other party had a different view.

Mr. POWELL. Whatever you may deduce from that receipt, here is what it says :

Received from Her Majesty the Queen the sum of $29,350, in full of all claims in respect of the abandonment of parts of sections 5 and 8 and the whole of sections 6 and 7, and of the abandonment of the aforesaid sections on the Cornwall Canal of the Gilbert Blasting and Dredge Company against Her Majesty the Queen, as per letter of March 12, 1894, of A. Ferguson, Esq., their solicitor, as per order in council of March 28, 1894.

(Sgd.) GILBERT BLASTING AND DREDGING CO.,
(Per P. H. Gilbert),

Then Secretary and Treasurer.

Witness, A. Ferguson.

Read that in connection with Mr. Ferguson's letter? The qualification in Mr. Ferguson's letter is as follows: 'The claims, if any, of the company in respect of or arising out of works actually done, will of course remain to be dealt with apart from this settlement.' That language is loose and inexact. I see opportunities there for a fair difference of opinion. Such is the state of the case on April 24, 1894, when amount of $29,350 mentioned in the receipt from the Gilbert Company was agreed upon for prospective damages or damages for loss of prospective profits at least. It is claimed by the ex-minister that that included something more. A dispute then arises between the parties, and I call the attention of the House and the minister to this fact, that on March 6, 1895, nearly one year afterwards, this dispute culminated in action being taken by the department. That action is to refer the matter to the engineer in charge of the work, Mr. Rubidge, for his report. Mr. Rubidge on that date makes a report. That report states absolutely on the face of it that the Gilberts had no claim whatever, except in respect to the amount of $11,377.75, and he is not satisfied without further investigation that they have any claim in respect to that. Previous to August 5, 1895, Mr. Rubidge is given instructions by the minister, or by the department, to make a further report. Now, a very essential element in this case is the contents of this letter of instructions; but that letter I do not see among the papers brought down. Its absence is significant, and the inference may fairly be drawn that there was some object in concealing that paper.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would not be a fair inference under any circumstances, because the files of the department would not contain a letter-press copy, and the papers which have been brought down are likely communications which are on the files.

Mr. POWELL. That letter must be on the files of the department, and there is doubtless a copy of it in the department. The minister's suggestion in that regard would not convince the committee. In accordance with these instructions, Mr. Rubidge makes a report, not in favour of the whole claim, but only $40,586. On August 26, 1898, twenty-one days afterwards, Mr. Schreiber takes into consideration this report of Mr. Rubidge. He finds fault with what Mr. Rubidge has done, states that he has not acted in accordance with his instructions, and cuts down the amount from $40,586 to $26,766. Now, if the Minister of Railways thinks it desirable to act in accordance with the judgment of those gentlemen who are associated with him as officers in his department, in whose technical knowledge he can repose confidence, he should not, I think, have undertaken to overturn the judgment of Mr. Schreiber in respect to that amount.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not do it.

Mr. POWELL. The matter rests in the department until January 26, 1900, when the matter is again brought up before Mr. Schreiber. Mr. Schreiber then makes a strange report, a report in which he declines to assume responsibility. The fact of Mr. Schreiber's report is very suggestive in two points of view. In the first place, why does Mr. Schreiber make a second report bringing the amount up to $48,000, or $8,000 in excess of the highest estimate that had been made previously, which estimate he had previously condemned? Mr. Schreiber guards himself in respect to his final report. He does not take upon himself the responsibility of certifying it; but he says: 'I will certify this provided the gentleman who had an intimate acquaintance with the matter certifies it;' and that gentleman had not certified it. This is a peculiar state of affairs. The first thing that strikes me about the matter is this. On March 6, 1895, when the matters were fresh in the mind of Mr. Rubidge, who had charge of the work, and who knew whether the claims were well founded or ill-founded, he made a report absolutely condemning the claims as being bad, with one exception, and calling for more light in respect to that claim.

Mr. FOSTER. That was when he was unhampered by his minister.

Mr. POWELL. Yes. When Mr. Gilbert said he had a claim, here was an absolute refusal of it. The matter remained in abeyance during 1895 and down to the time the ex-Minister of Railways vacated the office in July, 1896. Why did not Mr. Gilbert, in the face of this absolute refusal of the department, get a fiat and go into the Exchequer Court?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He never had an absolute refusal of the department.

Mr. POWELL. Does the minister mean to tell me that Mr. Gilbert would not be cognizant of that report, and would not take that as an absolute, flat-footed denial of his claim?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know whether Mr. Gilbert ever saw it or not, but I know that Mr. Gilbert has stated over and over again to me that the department had not determined his case.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman assumed control of the department de facto in September, 1896. He does not settle that claim for nearly four years, and when the settlement is effected, it is rather a shady settlement. I use that language advisedly. In the first place, these claims aggregating upwards of $48,000 are allowed interest for eight years. The hon. minister was wrong and made an error against himself of a year—I will give him the benefit of that—almost to the extent of a year. The interest did not commence on the 1st of October, 1891, but some time in the spring of 1892; I reckoned it up, and it is exactly eight years' interest. Now, here are these claims that have been reported against altogether in one case; in the second instance, reported against as respects almost one-half the claim; in another case, reported against to a large extent; yet interest is allowed, and allowed from a day antedating the maturity of many of the claims, even if good. This transaction may be all right, and in a great deal the hon. minister has said about the impropriety of any person, particularly a government acting the part of a shylock and taking advantage of this provision in a contract I entirely agree. I think that the provision requiring the Gilbert Company to submit their claims month by month was for the protection of the department, and as long as the department was satisfied that the claims were bona fide, it would be acting in a most unjust and tyrannical manner if it refused to consider them, even supposing the Gilberts had been guilty of laches.

But there is a phase of their delay that is very important. I do not think that their laches should have prevented Gilbert's claim being considered, but their delay in submitting their claim is a very important factor when we were considering whether it was bona fide or not. If they allowed a couple of years to go by before submitting this claim to the department at all, while I do not say that that delay should have prevented the department from considering it, still it is an important fact when considering whether this claim is bona fide at all. And I must say, although I have not gone into the reports at all but simply speak from what I have heard from previous speakers, that this is not the correct way of administering the affairs of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. There were several things, three at least, that were to be discussed on this same item, and we might as well discuss them now. I do not propose to say anything with reference to the two transactions we have just been discussing except this which I do not think the Minister of Railways made sufficiently clear. He thinks that he has sufficient justification for spending over $109,000 in keeping a $425 per day dredge and its appurtenances sweeping the Galops channel because that dredge had been employed previously and payments had been made at that rate by the preceding minister. But the payments were made by the hon. gentleman's predecessor under these conditions. At a certain time in the progress of that work, the department came to the conclusion that it would get Mr. Kennedy, a noted engineer of Montreal, to go and make an examination, and they gave Mr. Kennedy carte blanche to do it. In doing it, he used the Gilbert dredge at the rate of $425 per day, and when his report was made and the minister found that what was proposed to have been but a six days job at the rate, had gone on for a longer time at that same rate, the transaction was stopped. The minister himself, working with his officials and with reference to their recommendations, never employed the dredge at that rate at all. Afterwards, in 1897, the present minister took it up, and has spent from that time to this over $109,000 in that expensive proceeding. What I want the minister to make is a short statement as to what has been the cost of this contract on account of his action with reference to Mr. Archie Stewart's contract in the two regards—one with reference to the quarry which the hon. gentleman attempted to take from him, and the other with reference to the claim which is now before the Exchequer Court for the damages for the cancellation of his contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All I know is this, that when I came into the department the government had before it the question as to the early completion of the canal. We ascertained what progress had been made by the different contractors on the various works in progress, and we came to the conclusion that they were not being prosecuted with vigour, and it was necessary some steps should be taken to urge them on more promptly or else it would be many years before the canal would be fit for the purposes of navigation. In connection with this, naturally the works on the Soulanges came up for consideration. One of the first things I became aware of when I got to the department, was that Mr. Stewart, one of the contractors upon the Soulanges Canal, was being delayed in his work and actually stopped by reason of a dispute between the engineer and himself as to the sufficiency of the stone he was getting out for use. That took some months and led to some delay, and unquestionably put Mr. Stewart to some little disadvantage, and for that he was compensated to an extent regarded as satisfactory by him, and he accepted the amounts and professed to be content. After that he assured the department that he would take the works up and proceed vigorously with them. He was allowed a reasonable opportunity to gather himself together after the delay which had occurred. But he did not appear to at all realize the importance of reorganizing or putting his staff on a stronger basis and pushing the work more than he had been doing. His attention was called to the fact, and he was required to take up the work and prosecute it with vigour. The chief engineer reported from time to time that he was not doing that, and I think two or three notices were given Mr. Stewart that unless he did push the work forward more rapidly it would have to be taken out of his hands.

Mr. FOSTER. About what time was this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would be early in the season of 1897, or late in the season of 1896. The chief engineer thinks it was in 1896. Mr. Stewart received two or three of those notices and appeared to disregard them all, and later, when he was most earnestly pressed, he gave us to understand that he was not under any compulsion at all to build this work at any time we might require or with any degree of rapidity as he had been authorized to delay in pushing the work forward by the minister of the department, and he had been advised by counsel—Mr. O'Gara, and I think Mr. Osler—that the fact that the department had allowed him to overrun his time, and given him permission to do the work just as he chose, as far as time was concerned, entitled him to disregard any notice that we gave, and we were entirely at his mercy as to when the work should be completed. That was the ground he took, and it was an absolute rebellion against the control of any orders from the department.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. Schrieber gave him final notice that the contract would be taken out of his hands, in accordance with the contract. I saw Mr. Stewart myself, and told him we did not wish to take the work out of his hands, but preferred that he should finish it. I made use of any persuasive powers I had to prevail on him not to allow the extreme step to be taken. But all this was without avail. I gave my sanction, and the final order taking the contract out of his hand was given by Mr. Schreiber. The matter had been previously talked over in council, if I remember well. After having authorized the final step by Mr. Schreiber, I had nothing further personally to do in the matter. All the details were looked after in the customary way, all legal proceedings being taken by the Department of Justice. I took no further part in the matter until I was consulted by the counsel for the Crown looking to the settlement of the suit.

Mr. FOSTER. Was not some action taken by the minister with reference to the quarry?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Action was taken, I believe, by the department—either the Justice Department or the proper officers in my own department in connection with that quarry. When we took the work out of Mr. Stewart's hands we found it necessary that we should get the quarry. A good deal of the stone that we were to put into the work was already cut and the stone for the construction was to be got there, and we were entitled, under the contract as I supposed, and as we were advised by the Justice Department, to take possession of the quarry to enable the new contractor to avail himself of the stone that was cut, and also to have the stone for the continuation of the work. So far as the results go, I believe the final settlement involved the payment to Mr.

Stewart of $20,000 in respect of damages accruing through the action of the government in taking the quarry. That was one doubt which our council entertained—as to our legal position, and whether, after all, we had been well advised in our proceedings for taking the quarry in the way in which it was taken. The claim for damages for taking the quarry, made by Mr. Stewart, was very large. If my memory serves me right, it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of a million dollars, and perhaps more. Of course, it was an absurdly large claim, but our counsel strongly advised us that we had better settle that claim. Mr. Newcombe, of the Justice Department, the counsel for the Crown, and myself, consulting together, we came to the conclusion that it would be well to recommend a settlement of that portion of the matter in controversy between us on the terms proposed. I sanctioned that, so far as it became my duty to deal with it. There were some $1,500 of costs in addition.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that all the costs?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No further costs have arisen in connection with it pending the decision of the suit. There still remains to be determined by the court a claim for damages by Mr. Stewart for taking the work out of his hands, and a counter claim by the government against him for damages by reason of his having failed to carry out the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the work finished?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Practically finished—sufficiently for navigation purposes. There is still some dressing up to be done.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not intend, at this late hour, to make very extended remarks, although it is really too bad to have had to go through that immense volume of papers and not be able to give the results of my labour in full. I rather think that I know more about the matter at present than the minister, though I examined the papers somewhat cursorily. But I wish to point the moral of the story that the minister has told us to-night and the results to the country. When I spoke here some time ago in criticism of some of these matters, I said that the minister's management had been costly to the country. This is one of the instances that prove the assertion I made. Mr. Stewart had the contract, but was subject to delays, of course. In 1896, his work was stopped when the new government came in—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was stopped before I came in; I am not responsible for it.

Mr. FOSTER. When I say the minister is responsible, it will be time enough for him to deny the soft impeachment. In 1896, at the beginning of the session, a dispute arose because Mr. Munro objected to the stone and the work was stopped and the contractor was unable to proceed. That dispute was settled, after some delay, by the chief engineer himself overruling Mr. Munro, and deciding that the stone should be used. On two or three occasions the deputy minister and chief engineer made that apparent to Mr. Munro, and Mr. Stewart was allowed to go on. But, Mr. Stewart ought not to be held responsible for delay which occurred owing to Mr. Munro's dissatisfaction with and interdiction of the stone. When this dispute was settled, it was so late in the season that it was impossible for Mr. Stewart to go on with this work. There is more than this one thing that makes me exceedingly critical of the department—these transactions of Mr. Rubidge, blowing hot and blowing cold, at one time declaring that there was nothing in the claim, and at another time declaring that it was worth $40,000 or $50,000, makes one critical of the officer who is implicated in reports and managements of that kind. In the same way with Mr. Munro. During that summer, before the minister, I think, was elected, and when he was running his election contest, this department was presided over by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who took the matter up, and he applied to Mr. Gibson, the member for Lincoln, for some one whom he might send to make an examination of the stone, and Mr. Gibson, willing to oblige the minister, picked out two persons whom he recommended to the minister. These were sent down, and they made a report unfavourable to an expense with reference to this stone. Now, that seemed not quite a fair transaction. Why should the minister apply to one of his own supporters, a member of parliament, to recommend to him impartial persons to go down and make a report? When that member happened to be a contractor, and happened to have interests in quarries as well, it makes the transaction still less advisable. Granted that Mr. Gibson gave a thoroughly competent and honest recommendation of certain men, the fact remains that if you are going to get arbiters to give you a report it is best not to take them from a rival in contracting.

Mr. GIBSON. No rival.

Mr. FOSTER. I mean that he is one of the guild of contractors.

Mr. GIBSON. Every hon. gentleman in this House know that as long as I occupy a position in this House it is practically impossible for me to become a government contractor, so that I was not a rival with Mr. Stewart. Further than that, I refused positively to act myself. The very foreman I recommended was friendly to Mr. Stewart; and the other man was Mr. James Munro, of St. Catharines, a gentleman with whom I have never spoken on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. The only point of my remark was that I did not think it was advisable to ask a member of parliament and a contractor interested in quarry work, to give advice on that subject, and I think subsequent evidence went to show that these gentlemen who were appointed were not the best that might have been sent, at least one of them. However, it was these things that caused delay, and that ought not, I think, be counted against Mr. Stewart. Now, as a result of that action on the part of Mr. Munro, this country was mulcted in the sum of $17,544, that is the fine it had to pay. Now, that is rather serious. If an officer of the department interferes between a contractor and his work, stops him, and then when it comes to be fought out, is overruled absolutely by the chief engineer, and the chief engineer decides that the stone is good and shall go in, and the contractor is stopped from his work, and Mr. Munro takes it upon himself to run down and see the coming minister and talk the matter over with him, and gets a telegram from him to have the thing stopped until a decision is finally come to—I say that if an officer puts himself in that position and is then proved absolutely in the wrong, and the country has to pay a bill of $17,544 in order to pay off that piece of bad business, I think it is something that a department should take into account. I think it is very hard that the country should be fined in those sums for incompetence on the part of its officers, and these officers are kept.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you think that action justifies the dismissal of Mr. Munro?

Mr. FOSTER. I say that you have a chief engineer to whom you give the ultimate decision. Mr. Munro shows a strongly antagonistic spirit to the contractor; he condemned his stone, he hung him up, and after the whole thing was gone into, the chief engineer, who is the supreme authority, says, You let that stone go in, I will be responsible for it. Somebody ought to be blamed. I am not blaming the chief engineer, consequently I think that Mr. Munro is subject to criticism.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a serious thing to dismiss an engineer who is in charge of works which have been under contract for a long time, before your contractors are settled with.

Mr. FOSTER. It is equally serious that the country has to pay a large sum of money for these transactions. Some one is wrong, and some one is right, and I am inclined to think the chief engineer is right. Well, after this was decided, it came to be so late that it was impossible for the contractor to go on. The next spring, when the season should have commenced, a change was made in the mode of construction of the locks, and it was not until the 24th of May, or a month and a half after the season opened and when the contractor should be at work, that he was notified as to this matter, consequently there was a delay of nearly two months in that season. Then occurred the interference of the minister. After talking it all over with the contractor, the latter expressed his willingness to come under contract and to finish the work by 1899. The minister wished it to be finished at the end of 1898. The minister seems to have decided this matter early, for the very notice of cancellation which was forwarded by the chief engineer in November, showed that it was signed by the minister, or authorized by the minister, in June of that year. So the minister had early made up his mind that this should be cancelled, but for some reason it remained over until November, and the chief engineer sent the notice of cancellation in November. He forgot to obliterate the time at which the minister had proposed it should go, which was in June, and both dates appear, the lower one being scratched out. Well, then what took place? This very cancelled contract was given to Ryan & McDonald. For less money? For $75,000 more, and it will cost more than that before it is finished. But, the minister wanted stone. No, not the minister, but the new contractors wanted stone. They had no quarry; the former contractor had. The minister said to himself: That is easy to arrange. If Ryan & McDonald have no quarry the former contractor has. I will step into the quarry, kick the owner out of it, and put Ryan & McDonald in the quarry to get stone for their contract. And so, the minister stepped into the quarry, kicked the owner out, took possession of it and set Ryan & McDonald at work quarrying in the quarry belonging to Mr. Stewart. He soon found out, to use a western expression that he had bitten off more than he could chew, and in the end he had to give up the quarry.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was because the proceedings were not legally taken not because there was not the right to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, he and his colleagues attempted to put legislation through the House which would have enabled them to have taken hold of that quarry. Fortunately, the Senate stepped in between the minister and this act of spoliation. The legislation was not passed. The minister then entered a suit to expropriate the property or the use of it. He went on to do that with a great flourish of trumpets and his counsel had not got well into the rights of the case before they came about his ears and advised him that he had better settle the suit. Negotiations went on and the minister ultimately paid $21,500 in settlement for illegally taking possession of this quarry and in settlement of the two years use that he had had of it. Was that all? The hon. minister would lead us to suppose that that was the total amount of the fine or the costs which had to be paid. But, it was not. Twenty thousand dollars was given to settle the suit; $1,500 more was given as costs to Mr. Stewart, but there were other costs. Blake and his firm were employed, Mr. Lawlor was employed, valuers were employed, and if these papers show anything at all they show to me that Blake and his firm were paid or are to be paid—I think the payment has been made—$9,871 as their costs. Mr. Lawlor gets at least $2,900 as his costs, and as to the valuers I have not got the whole amount which they receive. There was more than one set of valuers, because the minister took hold of Mr. Stewart's machinery, which in the suit was valued, and which stands at a valuation of $54,000, and this government without doubt will also have to pay for that. The bill of costs and award involved amounts to $36,771, and that does not carry with it all the costs in the matter, because they have not all been settled. There are first the damages amounting to $17,544 in consequence of delay caused by his engineer's action. Then the hon. minister came in and took another man's property, careless if the man was willing or not, after which he took his suit in the Exchequer Court, and before he got well under way with it he had to pay $200,000 and $1,500 in costs, making $21,500, and in addition to that he had to pay the difference between $21,500 and $36,000 or $37,000. When the $36,000 or $37,000 is added to the $17,000 it makes $50,000 and over. These are some of the financial results of the brilliant management of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. The government is responsible in part and they may apportion the blame where they like, but the minister and the minister alone is to blame, that the country will have to pay $75,000 and more to Ryan & McDonald for doing the work that Mr. Stewart would have done and which he offered to finish in the fall of 1899. The minister wanted it done in 1898. The minister gave the contract to Ryan & McDonald for $75,000 more. The work has not been done yet, the work will not be done till the snow flies this fall, and a large amount of money will have yet to be spent upon it. It is now 1900, so that the minister paid $75,000 and $100,000 more than he would have paid to Mr. Stewart, and the Minister has not got the work done in 1900. If Mr. Stewart had been allowed to have done the work it would have been done in 1899. But there is more. The minister has a suit against him for damages for the cancellation of the contract which is yet unsettled, and which we cannot discuss, but which is liable to result in a still larger sum of money being taken out of the treasury of the country to pay for the damages of cancellation. What more? The minister himself, and the party declared that the canals had been dilly dallied with, but that now they were going to be finished in 1899. The department got up a tug to go through the canals early to carry out the promise, and they took the tug through, had their picnic, and it was flaunted all over the country that the canals were finished. They were not finished.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman ought to have invited me to that picnic. I never heard of it before.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will not deny that the vessel went through. No doubt it was a good picnic time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I deny the statement which the hon. gentleman made.

Mr. FOSTER. It was a good picnic time, a good opening time. We read the description of it, and it was declared that the canal was opened.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was opened last fall.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not finished, but they got the tug through. In the operation, in order to make a flourish of trumpets and to get the tug through what happened? The water was let in, the water went a little bit too high, it washed off the embankments, and $100,000 has had to be expended in order to repair the damages which took place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Revise your information.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be revised, but I will venture to say that revisions will not effect the figures which I have given $20,000 in the first place, $1,500, $9,871, $2,900 and $2,500, making $36,771 as the law costs and the award for illegally taking a man's quarry, $75,000 extra at least, to the new contractors, who will not finish the work until the end of 1900, and $100,000 in order to make good the damages resulting from this little picnic. Add to this the suit for damages for cancellation of contract which is now pending. Well, Sir, there was another thing that we are discussing to-night and it is in regard to the cement. I have been looking through these papers very cursorily and what do I find in reference to the cement? I find this is brief: That the present Minister of Railways and Canals made a contract for cement with the Battle people in Thorold. He got it in barrels and he got it in sacks, and the result is seen in the summing up which I shall give. Suffice it to say, that before that, the engineer on the works did not believe in the cement, reported that it was not the right cement to use.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, Sir, it was stated on oath by the man himself, before the Public Accounts Committee. Now, Sir, here is the result of that, as given by the chief engineer. Of the cement used and remaining in the work, there were 3,966 barrels. Of the cement used and afterwards torn down, there were 1,160 barrels. The cement thrown away, as useless, amounted to 16,667 barrels. Making in all thrown away and useless, 17,827 barrels of cement, at a cost of about $22,462. Who paid the bills? The country paid the bills of course. The minister had the satisfaction of saying 'yes' to some ardent supporter who pressed the cement upon him. He had the satisfaction of pushing it into the work against the wish of the engineer, and afterwards he had the satisfaction of seeing the country paying $24,462 for cement, the larger part of which was useless and thrown away, and the rest of it built in, proven to be useless and torn down again. You not only lost the cement, but you lost the value of the labour in putting it in, and tearing it down again.

There is another piece of work by this talented business man in a business administration which is going to revolutionise things. I could find more but I do not want to pile it on too much on the minister just now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do not hesitate.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister (Mr. Blair) does not have to pay the bills, and he does not care. These are large transactions you know, and in that generous way which I commended in the minister the other day, he throws on one side and on the other the money of the public. But all the time he is Minister of Railways and Canals, and all the time the poor taxpayer pays the bills.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) in his election manifesto, the other night, started out by affirming that this government was violating all business rules, by letting out contracts without inviting tenders. He told us that the most conspicuous instance of that was that the Minister of Railways bought a worthless cement without a tender. Well, so far as the cement is concerned, this argument does not apply at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I was criticising two things: The business government and their methods of doing business, and the minister (Mr. Blair) immediately mentioned to me that this was done by contract and tender. I took the retraction of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) the very moment he made it, and he ought not to bring it up again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the hon. gentleman is correct, but if he states so, I will not contradict him. In this cement matter the department, in the ordinary way, invited tenders for the furnishing of cement, of a certain quality. It was well understood that all cement offered to the government would have to stand a particular test made by the engineer. The Battles amongst others tendered. They offered a cement, at a fair and reasonable price, which was below that of all other tenderers. The chief engineer laid the tenders before me, and he said: I do not consider that the Battle cement is of the best quality, by any means, and I do not believe it will be fit cement for the front work of your walls, but it would do very well for backing. In addition to that I had a strong certificate in its favour from Mr. Thompson, the superintending engineer of the Welland Canal. I had also a certificate from Mr. Thomas Munro, the gentleman who gave the evidence referred to, but who up to that time had not expressed, so far as it had come to my knowledge, any opinion at all upon the quality of this Battle cement other than what I have above referred to. The question arose, whether or not it would be a proper thing for the department to give a small portion of the cement supply to a home industry, or whether we would disregard the offer so received, and take foreign cement. In view of what was set forth in the certificate of Mr. Thompson and of Mr. Munro, in view of the opinion expressed to me by gentlemen who knew its value when used in other canals—amongst others, Mr. Gibson—I came to the opinion that there would be room for the employment of a very considerable amount of this cement in the backing work. I gave the contract to the Battles for that. I can imagine now, that if I had refused to award a portion of the contract to the Battles, how these gentlemen opposite would accuse me of an error of judgment in not giving fair consideration to the claims of the home manufactured article, at all events for a class of work for which it could well have been used. However, we had this additional guarantee behind, that the cement must stand the test; and it was the duty of the superintending engineer on the work to have the cement tested as to its efficiency for the purposes of that construction, as it came from time to time. Under these circumstances a contract was awarded, and these parties made the same cash deposit that was made by the other tenderers, in proportion to the amount that was awarded to them. I did not know the Battles; I had never seen them, I believe, until they were introduced to me on this occasion; I knew nothing about their cement; but it was declared to be useful for the purposes I have mentioned. There was every reason for me to believe that the public interests would be amply protected; and I do not believe that any gentleman in my position would have shut the door in the face of an article that had been used on many of our canals and had a high reputation for certain classes of work. It is true, the cement did not turn out well, and a good deal of it has been lost. But if the duty which devolved upon certain officers on the works of exercising care had been performed, and if they had tested it and condemned it, there would have been no great loss suffered by the department; but they did not do that. There was a determination—I did not know it then—on the part of the superintending engineer of the canal to condemn this cement and not give it a fair chance. When it went there, he did not give it proper protection from the weather, with the result that a great deal of it went to waste. I am bound to say that I do not think that the superintending engineer did his duty in the matter. But, as I have said, in managing a department of this kind and having regard to all the conditions, I do not feel that I could undertake to punish with the extremest penalty every failure on the part of an officer, even though it does involve some considerable pecuniary loss to the country. There might be, and would be in many cases, much vaster pecuniary loss entailed on the country by visiting the utmost penalties on officers who may fail to discharge their full duties in these matters. The matter just resolves itself into a case of failure in the article to meet the conditions, and the failure of the superintending engineer to watch it closely; and, as a result, this loss has been sustained. But I cannot myself see that personally or in any official capacity I am open to any very serious criticism. I think that any one who was in my position would have pursued exactly the same course that I did, feeling a desire that if we could fairly and reasonably and safely, as I felt we could, give to our own manufacturers some little consideration in awarding a contract of that kind, we would meet the general desire of the public, and would do no injury to the interests of the public.

Mr. FOSTER.

With regard to the other question which the hon. gentleman alluded to, the proceedings which were taken in the Stewart matter, it is a great personal satisfaction, no doubt, to the hon. gentleman to discover something for which he can fix some personal or official responsibility on me.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a personal matter at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I appreciate the hon. gentleman's delight under such circumstances. I know how he rolls the idea as a sweet morsel under his tongue, when he says: Here is a loss to the country, and the Minister of Railways is the man who is responsible for it. Now, let us follow the transaction through. What was the origin of this difficulty? The origin of the whole trouble occasioning all the legal proceedings that ensued, and any losses that may result, was when the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals did as he swore he did, in the testimony he gave in the case of Mr. Stewart—instructed Mr. Stewart to pause in the prosecution of the work. It has transpired, according to the opinion of the courts, rendered, I think, since that occurrence took place, and not within the knowledge or fully understood by the law officers of the Crown until a more recent period. When the hon. gentleman gave those instructions, and allowed the contract which Mr. Stewart had entered into to complete the work as early as 1894, to be indefinitely postponed, he practically placed the government, as respected the completion of the work, in Mr. Stewart's power. If the hon. gentleman had not done that, if he had insisted that the work should go on, we would probably not have had any difficulty. When the change of government took place, according to the opinion of the officers of the department, whose judgment on the subject I felt myself justified in accepting, this work, at the rate of progress at which it had been going on for the previous two or three years, would not be finished for seventeen years.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman lay the calculations on the Table?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the end of that short term we would have been able to allow a vessel to run through Mr. Stewart's section of the canal. Does the hon. gentleman imagine that the present Minister of Railways is responsible for the delay in the work? Does he say that the work ought not to have been pushed on, does he say that every reasonable opportunity was not accorded by the department to Mr. Stewart, if he had shaken himself, and got to work to finish it, even if he had taken longer to finish than was required of him at that time? Mr. Stewart was assured by me that we had no wish to treat him harshly or to take this work out of his hands. We infinitely preferred that he should complete it himself, and if he would show that he was in earnest in pushing it forward, we would render him every assistance in our power.

That cannot be denied. Alongside of that assurance I place this fact, that Mr. Stewart made no effort—I do not say that he deliberately refused to make an effort, but would prefer to believe he was unable—to push on the work. He had not the machinery or the men or means to do the work, and it became absolutely necessary to take it out of his hands, if the enlargement of the canal, upon which we had expended many millions of money, were to be made available within any reasonable compass of years.

What is it the hon. gentleman charges me with having or not having done? Was it not sufficient for me to have made every possible effort a human being could make to encourage Mr. Stewart to go on with his work? Was I to stand still and allow the work to be absolutely paralyzed? If I had done that, what would have been the charge against me? If because we had been unwilling or imagined ourselves unable to grapple with the situation as presented by Mr. Stewart, under the tuition of my hon. friend, and left Mr. Stewart to dilly-dally with the work, what would have been the outcry against me as minister? It would have been, not the cry now raised, but the graver charge, which the people might well take some note of, and which they would have taken note of, that we had shown incapacity and incompetency in allowing these public works to be delayed for an indefinite period. Everything was done to induce Mr. Stewart to go on, and he would not. The department had to act. What was it to do? It had to authorize the necessary steps to be taken in order to bring the contract to an end. But I understand that the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Foster) who had been discussing this question is of opinion that it was my business, not only to come to a conclusion as to the policy to be pursued, but to draw out every paper that had to be drawn out, to be my own lawyer and bailiff and officer, and take all these proceedings myself individually. I should not have utilized the Justice Department or the engineers of the department, but have done these things myself. And because in a question of law the very grave doubt occurred as to whether or not the proper proceedings were taken to carry out our very well considered and properly decided policy, the minister must be condemned forsooth. What have I to do with the legal machinery or the legal proceedings that were taken. I claim that if legal proceedings had been taken in a proper form, Mr. Stewart never would have recovered a dollar against the department.

Mr. HAGGART. Where was the Solicitor General?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the Solicitor General ever saw the papers or heard anything about the matter. I do not think that the chief engineer consulted with the Solicitor General, but went right over to the Justice Department, and whatever advice was had he got from the officers of that department. I do not think we got it from the Minister of Justice either.

Mr. FOSTER. Did he go over to the Minister of Justice without instructions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The deputy minister and chief engineer received my authority to authorize all the proceedings that were proper and necessary in order that the condition of things then existing should be put an end to, and the contract taken out of Mr. Stewart's hands and put up to competition, and given to somebody else able and willing to carry it to completion. It is absurd for the hon. gentleman to pretend that the minister of the department had all these details to attend to and follow up minutely and personally, but that is the impression he is trying to create on the public, or at least on those who will be so ill-employed as to read what he has said.

Mr. FOSTER. Am I to understand that the deputy minister burnished up his arms and took possession of that property all by himself?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let the hon. gentleman ask Col. Sherwood, the officer of the police, and he will tell him who took charge.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there is such a thing as ministerial responsibility.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am prepared to take the responsibility for the policy which the government adopted and the conclusions arrived at, and for everything that occurred outside of the legal proceedings, and for those I take no responsibility as the head of the Railway Department. I do take the general responsibility that every member of the government must take for what took place in connection with the legal proceedings, but, while I take responsibility for the legitimate business of the Railway Department, I must decline responsibility for the particular legal proceedings taken by another department. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman has made out a very poor case against my department. He has not shown that there was anything we could have done that we did not do. He has not shown that Mr. Stewart was willing and able to prosecute that work. He cannot show that, because it would not be according to the facts. He has not shown that we dealt harshly with Mr. Stewart in any way. He cannot deny that we exhibited a spirit of forbearance and consideration to Mr. Stewart all the way through, and would have been only too happy had he been willing and able to carry the work on to completion. The policy of the government and the way in which it was carried out down to the moment when these proceedings were taken, are matters not at all open to criticism. But, as to errors made in our legal proceedings, I have no special apologies to offer. I suppose that legal uncertainties will arise in respect to all transactions in which differences arise between contending parties. It has happened, so far as the quarry was concerned, that that matter had to be settled at our expense, but I entirely agree with the counsel and assistant counsel and the Deputy Minister of Justice, when they jointly recommended that it would be better to settle that part of the case without any further litigation. I admit the responsibility of settling the matter. As to the outlay which the hon. gentleman has stated, he is entirely wide of the mark in his calculations. Those costs are not applicable only to the proceedings in connection with the quarry. It was all the one suit. There were not two or three different suits.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. minister say?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The quarry question arose in the same suit and the costs paid were not costs applicable to this portion of the suit alone or the quarry question at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid you have not read the papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not, but I venture to say that I am correct and that there was no division into the case, with regard to the quarry, and the case with regard to the other matter. They were all carried on at one time. Valuers may have been used in connection with the quarry, but they were used also in connection with the other portions. The costs paid and fees paid to counsel for the Crown were on bills that were rendered in connection with the whole suit.

Mr. FOSTER. But all they did was to look into the question of the quarries.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not correct. They took pages of evidence on other points.

Mr. FOSTER. I have read all the papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself has stated that they dealt with a plant that had been used, which was not a question necessarily connected with the quarry. As to the results, I am inclined to think that Mr. Stewart will be much disappointed. I know he has the sympathy of hon. gentlemen opposite. They ought to sympathize with him, seeing that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) went to him and virtually told him not to hurry, that he did not want to press him unduly, and that in so saying, he was speaking in accordance with the wish of the Minister of Finance of that time, who felt that this work would cost less money if it was not hurried.

Mr. WM. GIBSON (Lincoln). The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), cast a slur upon one of the gentlemen I named to go down in place of myself to look at the stone, saying that one of these gentlemen, at all events, was not satisfactory. I suppose I should have suited the hon. gentleman better if I had sent a dry goods merchant, or had consulted with himself as to who should look at the stone. The men who went down at my request, were practical stonemasons, and knew more than the contractor himself. I myself saw the cut stone in the quarry, and afterwards saw the stone in the work. Whether one of the gentlemen whom I sent down was satisfactory or not, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), took care not to say that Mr. Hobson, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway, examined that stone and gave expert evidence as to the quality of the rock, and that Mr. Hanaford, late chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway, was also sent for—

Mr. HAGGART. He was a good authority.

Mr. GIBSON. As good authority as the hon. gentleman who questions his authority. Now, the whole trouble lay in the fact that the contractor was not a practical man. Mr. Archibald Stewart, instead of laying out his work to meet the sizes of the stone in his quarry, instead of cutting the stone two feet and the height of the bed, cut it three feet, where there was a reed of six inches at the bottom and top beds of the stone. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), does not tell the committee that thousands of dollars had to be paid by the new contractors to recut the stone. So little care was taken of it, that it fell in pieces when the hooks were put in it to lift it. The reason I did not go to give my own opinion, was because I knew that some time this matter would come up, and I wanted to be free to deal with the question, and could not be accused of being prejudiced, one way or the other. I examined the stone, and had no fault to find with it, except that the beds were of too great depth, and that the size of stone required, was not considered, that three-foot stone was out of proportion to the work, and that headers could not be got to correspond with the heights of the courses, on account of these reeds. I asked the man there: Why are you leaving the top and bottom beds of the stone? And his answer was: I am told to mind my own business. That was told me by the foreman whom I had recommended to Mr. Stewart, and the fact that I had sent him a foreman, shows that I was not unfriendly to him then, and I am not unfriendly to him now. It is unfair of the hon. member for York to show only one side of the case. He has taken the greatest pains so as to show everything that can be thought to be disadvantageous to the government, but he took good care not to say that Mr. Hobson had examined the stone.

Mr. FOSTER. My statement could only be made from what I found in the papers.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), has been elbow to elbow with Mr. Stewart, as has the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, and he said only this evening, that he knew more about it than the minister does. At all events, he had not a word to say about Mr. Hobson having reported against the stone. Hon. gentlemen could not well do that, because the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), sent Mr. Hobson up to the Sault Canal to examine the masonry and the work in connection with that canal. I do not think that any man who knows anything about it, will be prepared to say that Mr. Hobson is not a judge of stone, both practical and theoretically. And Mr. Hobson condemned the stone in Mr. Stewart's case, for the way it was cut. I know nothing of what took place between the chief engineer and Mr. Munro, but so far as the stone-cutting was concerned, Mr. Munro was perfectly right. If Mr. Stewart had been a practical man, he would not have tried to have three feet heights of courses in the locks of that canal, particularly in the conditions of his quarry. I never had a word with the men who undertook the contract, and do not know that I should know them if I saw them; but I venture to say that they will agree with me that a practical man would never have cut the stone three feet in height. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals dealt leniently with Mr. Stewart. The fact is that Mr. Stewart got into such a condition, that he had not the money to go on with the work. The stone had to be recut, and the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals knows that tens of thousands of dollars of the peoples' money had to be paid for recutting stone—a work that would have been unnecessary had it been properly done in the first place.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not true.

Mr. GIBSON. Ask the engineers and the present contractors how much the recutting of the stone cost and the difference between the quality of stone cut and that actually used in the work, and you will find the discrepancy. These were things the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) carefully avoided bringing before the House. But if there was any extra cost and expense at all in connection with this work it will be found that it was not caused by the present Minister of Railways and Canals, but was created by the leniency and the friendliness of the ex-minister toward the contractor, allowing him, as it came out in evidence, all the time that he liked, allowing him to be paid for stone after it was condemned by the resident engineer; and after the resident engineer condemned the stone the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals went on and passed estimates and paid Mr. Stewart for quarrying and cutting the stone.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member is stating what is absolutely untrue.

Mr. GIBSON. Was not Mr. Stewart paid month after month?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says that I went on and paid for the stone after the engineer had rejected it; I say the statement is absolutely untrue.

Mr. GIBSON. I have to accept the hon. gentleman's statement, and I accept it fully. I want to say this, however, that I think it will be found on examination that after the report was made by Mr. Munro condemning the stone, estimates were paid for stone cut in the quarries at Rockland. That is the point I want to make clear to the committee, that after the stone was refused by Mr. Munro, it was still sent down upon the works, forced upon the works, and some of it was so rotten that the hooks used to lift it would not hold. That is one of the reasons that this $75,000, or whatever the sum was, had to be paid to the contractors who succeeded Mr. Stewart, that is a portion of the cost. The contractors who accepted that work had to make good and replace the stone that Mr. Stewart had been paid for and that had gone to pieces. That is the statement I make, and I think it can be verified on reference to the Department of Railways and Canals. It can be shown that when the last payment was made, when the last progress estimate was made—and the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals dare not deny it—the stone cutting went on, the quarrying went on, after Mr. Munro objected to the stone. Can the hon. gentleman deny it?

Mr. HAGGART. I don't know anything about that.

Mr. GIBSON. Of course, but he allowed it to go on. What I say is that they cut the stone improperly, they cut the stone out of beds where there is a loss of six inches on both beds. The hon. gentleman may laugh but the hon. gentleman never knew anything about his department. I have cross-examined him across the floor of this House time and again, and he always says, I don't know anything about it, I left it to my chief engineer. And all the time he was getting $8,000 a year for leaving everything in the hands of the officers of his department. The present Minister of Railways and Canals takes pains to acquaint himself personally with the details of his department. He knows more about the Inter-colonial Railway, knows more about the working of it, than did the hon. gentleman who preceded him.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you expect to get for that eulogy?

Mr. GIBSON. I expect nothing. I am not looking for anything. There are higher motives for our action in this House than an expectation of reward. I suppose the hon. gentleman is looking to get back to his old position again, but he is going to be a long time without getting back. It is a long time since he went out of the government, and now he is holding us here five months and a half, and when the House closes the hon. gentleman is out of a job. He has nothing else to do but to remain here. It does not matter to him whether we are five months, or twelve months, or five years. He is simply acting his part here in such a way that he may get back again. It does not lie in the mouth of the hon. gentleman to twit any one in this House with expecting a reward. Everybody has their feelings. If there was ever any gentleman in this House who claimed perfection it is the hon. member for York, and he is about as far from it as the rest of us. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that so far as this work is concerned it will be found that much of the extra cost with regard to the letting of this new contract was largely on account of the condition in which the stone was cut.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways and Canals has such a knowledge of everything that when the question of cement to be used in the construction of the locks is to be considered, he does not take the advice of the engineer, but on his own responsibility he orders material, with the result that $23,000 of the peoples money is being spent for an entirely useless material in the construction of these locks. He states that if it was properly looked after by the engineer in charge of the work, the $23,000 would not be lost. If he thinks so it is the duty of the ministers to see that that engineer no longer continues in charge of that work. If the engineer in charge of the work is prejudiced against the material so that a loss would accrue to the country of $23,000 he should not be allowed to continue as the engineer of the work. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) has criticised my management of the work. He speaks of my having overruled the decision of the engineer. I contradict him flatly in that; I did not do anything of the kind. The question of material was left entirely to the deputy. He made inquiries on the subject without being influenced by me at all. I did not care anything about it. It was his business to look after the material used in the construction of the locks and to see that it was proper material. He inquired into the matter in a way that would enable him to get the best information on the subject. He sent for the foreman mason employed on the Intercolonial Railway for the purpose of looking at the quarry and seeing whether the stone was fit for the work or not. He found that it was. Samples of the stone were sent to the mechanical laboratory of McGill University for a report. I had nothing to do with that. As to going into the quarry and seeing whether the stone was the best that could be obtained which the hon. member for Lincoln thinks is part of the duty of the political head of the department, I did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. GIBSON. I never said anything about that.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not part of the minister's duty. He is dependent entirely upon his deputy minister and the engineer in charge of the work. I never interfered directly or indirectly in favour of Mr. Stewart. I treated him the same as every other contractor who had a contract with the department. The hon. Minister of Railways states that I gave exceptional favours to him, that I made a statement to him that debarred the government from compelling him to do the work. The statement made to him was made by the deputy minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, not at all.

Mr. HAGGART. Well, I may have told Mr. Stewart myself. I may have spoken to him in reference to the matter, but the deputy minister had instructions from me. I had instructions from council. The matter was brought up by the Finance Minister in Council. I got instructions and I gave them to the deputy minister in reference to these works.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what we suspected.

Mr. HAGGART. It was under orders from Council. I gave the instructions to the deputy minister. The work was to be gone on with slowly. If I remember correctly the reason was that there was some taxation taken off sugar or something, the finances were not as buoyant as they usually were, and for this reason the Finance Minister asked me to state to the contractors that if they thought it was to their advantage not to proceed expeditiously with their work they could do so. I simply carried out the wish of council and the wish of the Finance Minister.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I want to make a little statement in regard to the stone. I happen to be acting Minister of Railways before my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) took charge of the department, and when I went into the department I found very strong written representations from Mr. Munro, the resident engineer, condemning the stone which Mr. Stewart was supplying from his quarry. Mr. Munro followed up his written representations by a personal visit to the department. I saw him, and he condemned the stone much more strongly than he had done in his written reports. He condemned it so severely that I felt something had to be done. The chief engineer differed from him. The hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) rather intimates that there was some unbusinesslike proceeding in the way in which the department managed this transaction. I wrote to the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway Companies asking each of them if they could furnish me with a first class man who could give me an opinion about the quality of stone supplied for the locks. We got a man from the Grand Trunk Railway, but we did not succeed in getting one from the Canadian Pacific Railway. We got two from the Grand Trunk. Mr. Hobson and Mr. Hannaford. These gentlemen went down, examined the stone, and although they did not condemn it as unreservedly as Mr. Munro had done, they gave an opinion against the stone. I was not disposed to accept even their judgment, but I thought we should get some one else whose thorough knowledge of stone would enable him to pronounce an authoritative opinion upon it. I thought of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), and I wrote him, telling him the whole circumstances, and asking him whether he could go and examine the stone and give his opinion in order to enable me to form an opinion between the conflicting opinions of Mr. Munro, Mr. Schrieber, Mr. Hobson and Mr. Hannaford. He told me that he did not care to interfere with it at all. Then I asked him if he could give me the names of two of the best qualified men as judges of stone that he knew. He gave me the names of two men and they condemned the stone. I do not know what more I could have done. I do not know that I left anything undone that I should have done, or that I did anything that I should have left undone. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) then came into the department, and I believe he had the benefit of the opinions of the same parties. Eventually part of the stone was accepted, but a great part of it was found bad for the reasons stated by the hon. member for Lincoln, not that the stone was inherently bad, but because of the way in which it was cut. As far as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is concerned, and he has consulted me a good deal, I cannot conceive how a contractor could have been treated more considerately than he has treated Mr. Stewart. His whole object seemed to be to tide Mr. Stewart over the difficulties that he was in. I think that under the circumstances he has treated Mr. Stewart with the utmost consideration and kindness.

Mr. HAGGART. Two of the experts that the hon. gentleman got from the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), Mr. Hobson and Mr. Hannaford, are found to be utterly unreliable, because the stone has been used from that very quarry ever since.

Mr. GIBSON. Were the stone supplied afterwards, three feet high?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know anything about that, their being three feet high, but they were from the same quarry. Mr. Munro reported against the stone and Mr. Hannaford objected to it as not being fit to be used at all. It was not a question of its being 3-feet thick. Besides the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) need not impose his technical knowledge on the committee in reference to all these details. There is another subject which is perhaps as interesting as the others, and in regard to which we would like an explanation from the minister. The Minister of Railways will notice that certain serious statements were made in the Upper House by Senator Ferguson in reference to lubricating oil furnished to the Intercolonial Railway. That matter requires an explanation from the minister.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have a word to say about this cement business. I was at the Public Accounts Committee when this investigation took place, and I am satisfied in my mind that Mr. Munro was directly responsible for the bad condition of that cement. The cement was under his charge; it was put into a wooden shed, it was subject to damp in the fall and then during winter season it was frozen solid with the result that it set. The best cement in the world would do that if it was treated in the same way. It was the engineer in charge and not the minister that was to blame. Munro should have been dismissed years ago. There were other transactions he was guilty of for which he should have been dismissed, but this one was sufficient. If he knew the first thing about his business, he should have cared for that cement and prevented it from getting damp. He should have put some stoves in the shed to keep the place warm during the winter months. If ministers keep such men in their employment they are responsible to some extent. It was established that this gentleman went almost every day to Montreal and although he had a pass on the Grand Trunk Railway he charged the government the full amount for a single ticket going and coming, although he did not pay a cent and always returned the same day. He should have been dismissed for that. It is all very well to hear the member for York (Mr. Foster) talking about nothing of this kind occurring when he was in power. It is a common occurrence in business as in anything else that the best of men will make mistakes and incur losses and sometimes employ unworthy servants. Ministers of the Crown must have the same experience. Does the member for York remember about the contract for the harbour works in Toronto under his government. It was proved here before a committee of this House that blind bolts were used in that work and that hundreds of thousands of them were driven in with a sledge hammer in place of the whole work being bolted together and filled in with stone. The first storm that came the work was swept away and the country lost over $22,000. I produced one of these blind bolts at the time in this House and the Minister of Public Works was surprised. There was an investigation held and my charge was proved up to the hilt, although there was an engineer in charge of that work all the time. That occurred in a government of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was a member. I do not believe myself that the minister can, always be held responsible for these things. For the cement business Munro was responsible and he should have been discharged.

Mr. W. C. EDWARDS (Russell). Not being familiar with all the ins and outs of this matter I do not wish to take part in this debate further than to say that Mr. Stewart must have suffered considerable loss and he certainly suffered great inconvenience indeed because of the fact that from the first Mr. Munro condemned this stone in toto. As to the long delay that took place afterwards, and as to the evidence given by the experts I venture no opinion whatever. To a business man or to any one who has any understanding of such matters it would appear perfectly evident that Mr. Stewart must have suffered severely in consequence of Mr. Munro's condemnation of the stone. It proved subsequently that Mr. Munro was wrong because the stone was finally accepted and is in the work to-day. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), inadvertently made a mistake because it is a fact that Mr. Munro's condemnation existed from the first.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not deny that. I think before any of the stone was used in the work Mr. Munro reported against the quarry. But I think the deputy got experts to inquire into it.

Mr. GIBSON. Was no money paid for the stone that was cut in the quarry?

Mr. HAGGART. Not unless on the certificate of Mr. Munro and the deputy minister. I never had anything to do with it. I never talked to the deputy minister about giving a certificate.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Munro refused to certify; and still the money was paid.

Mr. HAGGART. Not that I am aware of.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, that is so; Mr. Munro refused to certify.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Munro refused to certify it, but I do not think the deputy certified until he got Mr. Munro's certificate. Mr. Munro changed his mind after the inquiry by the deputy minister, and when the deputy minister found that it was good, he certified to it. But I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. EDWARDS. Of course, it is very well known that I am a friend of Mr. Stewart's; and as to this whole transaction, I am simply an observer, and I only wish to say that Mr. Stewart must have lost very severely both by loss of time and in consequence of the action taken in regard to the stone.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The ex-Minister of Railways has asked me to make some explanations in regard to certain allegations which have been made by one of the gentlemen of the Senate with regard to what is called the Galena Oil Company's contract. I think it is rather to be regretted that this matter, if gentlemen desired to go into it, was not taken up at an earlier period of the session. At this period I do not think it would be possible to go into it as I would like, because any insinuations or charges which have been made with regard to the bona fides of that transaction can be absolutely dispelled and disproved. I happen to know about that matter, and I am in a position to state that nothing would have given me more satisfaction than to have had it brought up at a time when we could have had it inquired into by the Public Accounts Committee and all the persons who knew anything about it asked to give their evidence upon it. I explained the transaction somewhat fully the other day when I was speaking generally upon supplies for the Intercolonial Railway, and I do not know that I need now do more than refer to one or two specific things that have since been mentioned. When I first came into the department, I was called upon to deal with the subject of a contract for oil for the Intercolonial Railway. Notice had been sent to the Imperial Oil Company that for the major part of the oil for lubricating purposes the contract would be awarded to it. That was done by the late government; but no contract had been entered into, and it appeared to me that that was not the best arrangement that could have been made. Tenders which were received by the department included, among others, one from a company called the Galena Oil Company, whose works, I believe, are located near the city of Toronto. This company, I may say, has been furnishing oil for lubricating purposes for a number of years to the Canadian Pacific Railway; it also supplied the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canada Atlantic, the Canada Southern, and in point of fact, 95 per cent of all the railways that are operating on the continent of America, because of the way in which it performs the service and the quality of the oil it furnishes. I found among the papers that had been filed with the tender, a list of the companies which at that period were served by the Galena Oil Company, and that company, through its agent, expressed its desire that its statement in that regard should be verified. The various samples of oils that were supplied by the tenderers for analysis were sent to Professor Ruttan, the chemical analyst at McGill, and he made a report upon them. The result of his report was that he did not recommend that the oil of the Imperial Oil Company should be accepted by the government and the contract awarded to it in preference to the others. There was very little difference between its price and that of some of the other tenderers; but the oils of the Galena Oil Company were very much higher than those of the other tenderers. But there was this difference, a substantial and material difference between the tender of the Galena Oil Company and that of the other. The Galena Company guaranteed that if a contract was made with them, they would not only furnish a quality of oil entirely satisfactory to the Railway Department, but that the cost of lubricating oils for the year in which their contract might continue would not be as great per 1,000 miles as it had been for the year preceding, which I believe was an average year. They said: give us the contract and we will make your oil cost you 10 per cent less than it has been costing you, and the way we will do it is this. We know what kind of oils are better for lubricating than the ordinary producers. We have had the experience with railway companies, we supply 95 per cent of the railway companies and they have confidence in us and the way in which we perform their service, and we will undertake to put men upon your railway, trained experts in the matter of oiling, who will explain to your train hands how to use the oil so as to use it economically, and at all events, whether we succeed in impressing our system on your men or not, we will contract with you that you will not pay us for our oil no matter what quantity you consume, as much by 10 per cent as it cost you last year for your lubricating. That seemed to me a more favourable offer than any of the others. It seemed to guarantee an efficient service, and we had the fact that all the other railways were using it and we were going to get our supply at a 10 per cent reduction.

The question came up and I made a statement of the case in my report to council, and council came to the conclusion that under the circumstances it would be in the public interest to make a contract with the Galena Oil Company in preference to the Imperial Oil Company. The contract has been in operation from that time down to the present. After it had been running a while, on consultation with the mechanical superintendent and the general manager at Moncton, it was decided that the service was very satisfactory and could not be improved upon, but that we would make an effort to have a still further reduction in the cost beyond 10 per cent, and we demanded that 15 per cent reduction should be made in the contract. That was ultimately agreed to, and we went on operating under the 15 per cent for a while. Then, by reason of the instruction which the company gave our employees and the improvements made in the way in which the oil was used, we had such success that the report from the officers of the department show a very much larger reduction in the cost of the oil to the railway itself than the guarantee of the Galena Company provided. The figures which I read in the House the other day, on this subject were to this effect, that whereas prior to the adoption of this contract with the Galena Company it cost us $3.72 per 1,000 miles for oiling locomotives, under this contract we had succeeded in getting the cost down to $2.72, effecting thus a saving of a dollar per 1,000 miles. On the passenger service the oiling of the passenger cars has been reduced from 80 cents to 20 cents. On freight cars it has been reduced from 22 to 12 cents, is a much larger percentage than even the 15 per cent at first agreed upon. That is the way the thing stands. It is said, I believe, hon. gentlemen in the Senate, it is stated in the Montreal Gazette of to-day, that there is something very suspicious about this whole transaction, because they say the price of this oil is very much higher than the Imperial or the Eastern or any other people are willing to furnish their oil at. That is true, the price is higher, but the question of price is not an important consideration under our contract, and because no matter what the price may be, no matter if it was $11 per gallon in place of 50 or 60 cents, they could not get beyond the 10 per cent reduction in the first contract and 15 per cent in the second contract—$2.70 for locomotives, 20 cents for passenger cars and 12 cents for freight cars, no matter how many gallons of oil they used they cannot ask for a nickel more than the figure per 1,000 miles, for each of the different class of cars. The fact that remains is this. The Galena Oil Company charge higher for their oils, but their oils are better quality, and they have given the guarantee, furnishing other railways I mentioned. They have stated to Mr. Pottinger that they supply all the other railways with oil exactly at the same prices charged to us, not one farthing less—no discounts, no reductions. If they do that, as I have reason to believe they do, they appear to be an honourable and self-respecting company. Otherwise they would not have contracts the same as ours with these railways over the whole continent.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you pay per 1,000 miles for the locomotives?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $2.72. There is no doubt that before we entered into these contracts at all, the cost to the Intercolonial Railway for oil service was very much greater than upon other railways. Even if we were getting it at 10 per cent less, the cost would be higher than on the Grand Trunk Railway, Canadian Pacific Railway, or Canada Pacific or Canada Southern, or any of these larger roads. And the reason is that these companies exercise a more effective control over their employees in that way, and their employees are more amenable to discipline. You cannot get men to be so circumspect on our road as upon a privately-owned road. I suppose one explanation is that the men feel that if they are chided too severely, political friends will interest themselves in their behalf and prevent punishment from being meted out. I mention this because it is put forward prominently as a ground of condemnation. They say there must be something wrong in the transactions or the government would not undertake to pay the prices in excess of prices that would be furnished by other people. But, it will be seen that the price charged is not the important or controlling element in the situation. The fact is the mileage rate is far below what we have ever before obtained. Another thing is mentioned, and I am surprised that a paper of such standing as the Montreal Gazette should make such insinuations against a minister of the Crown, bringing the evidence of mere supposition to justify those insinuations. This paper says it is a most extraordinary circumstance that when I was seeking election, Mr. Lichtenheim, a gentleman representing the Galena Oil Company was in the county of Queen's, and took an interest in the election; and their getting the contract, therefore, was not surprising. I want to say, most emphatically, that I never heard of Mr. Lichtenheim until after my election took place, and if he was in the county of Queen's during the election, he did not make himself known to me, and I did not know he was there. The contract was made long subsequent to the election. I cannot remember the exact date, but I think it was in October or November. And it was entered into after the fullest consideration by Mr. Pottinger, the general manager, who was of the opinion that it was a favourable arrangement. And certainly, with respect to lubricating our trains, we never had such favourable conditions as to cost.

Mr. HAGGART. What amount does the minister pay for the three years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The first year it was $3.72 for locomotives. I do not think there was any reduction in the second year. I think the only reduction that took place would be the 10 per cent below the previous cost per thousand miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman give the cost per car per thousand miles for lubricating?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was 80 cents, as I am advised, before this arrangement was made; and it is now down to 20 cents.

Mr. POWELL. There are some figures I would like the minister to explain as to the cost of lubricating and lighting the railway. I saw in looking after some returns given in the railway reports of the department, that there had been quite a commendable reduction in the cost of lubricating and lighting, but that was all I knew about it at the time the hon. gentleman referred to the oil used up on the Intercolonial Railway. But when the statement was made and figures given the other evening, by the hon. minister, my attention was called to some facts and figures he gave, which I attempted to verify. I think his claim on that occasion was too wide. Either there are some serious defects in the data given in these annual reports, or otherwise the hon. minister is entirely astray in his figures. Every year the department publishes a statement of the cost of lubricating engines and cars, and also from signal and other lamps.

From these tables the following facts are given: In 1896, there was a total engine mileage of 4,714,000, and the cost of lubricating engines was $28,224. When the present minister came into power, he substituted for the then existing arrangements on the Intercolonial Railway the present arrangement with the Galena Oil Company, and the result was that the next year, 1897, with a mileage of 4,655,000, the cost is $30,848; in 1898, with a mileage of 4,871,000, the cost was $31,424; the next year, which is the last year of the published reports, the mileage was 5,974,000, and the cost was $29,846. This is the statement concerning locomotives. Now, turning to the cost of lubricating cars, I find that in the last year of the ex-minister's management, the total car mileage was 43,005,000, and the cost $15,098. In 1897 the mileage was 40,823,000; in 1898, 43,189,000; in 1899, 53,422,000; the combined cost of the three last years being $53,562. The point now arises as to whether there has been a reduction in cost. In 1896, the cost was $28,224 for 4,714,000 miles of engine mileage. According to that basis, the cost for the three succeeding years should have been $92,802; as a matter of fact it was $92,118; so that as given by his reports, the actual cost was $684 less, as regards engine mileage, than it should be on the basis of 1896. As regards car mileage, the actual cost for the three years, was $53,562. On the basis of 1896, the cost should have been $48,256; so that the loss to the country was no less a sum than $5,306. On the basis of the contract, the hon. gentleman entered into, the two mileages were to form the basis of calculation. From the figures as published, this result follows: There should have been under the contract which provides that the cost is to be in the aggregate ten per cent less than under the last year of Mr. Haggart's administration in 1896, a reduction in respect of engine mileage of $9,280, as a matter of fact there was only a reduction of $684. When we look to the car mileage, we find the loss to the country was $5,300. There should have been a 10 per cent reduction under the terms of the contract, which would have reduced the cost of lubricating the cars by the amount of $4,825 below $48,256, which should leave the cost at the rate of 1896. That would make a reduction from the actual figures that were paid on car mileage, of $10,131. Adding this to the reduction we should have in the case of engines, we find that altogether the country has paid under the contract, $18,724 more than it should have paid. This is irrespective of the 5 per cent reduction which the hon. gentleman claims for the last year. This extra reduction of 5 per cent would amount to $7,052. Hence, the cost to the railroad was greater by $25,779 than under the contract, and subsequent for a further reduction of 5 per cent it should have been.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That cannot be. They cannot be so far astray at Moncton as to have made any such calculation at that.

Mr. POWELL. I am simply giving you the published figures, I do not vouch for their correctness.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is something that is not in the calculation that ought to be there.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman stated also that this contract had reduced the cost of lubricating engines per thousand miles. In the published report of 1896, the cost of lubricating cars per thousand miles is set down, not at $3.72, which the hon. gentleman says was the cost in 1896, but at $3.20. Now, these reports for 1897-8-9, give the cost of lubricating engines as follows: 1897, $4.90 per 1,000 miles; 1898 $3.50 per 1,000 miles; 1899 $2.20, making the average for these three years $3.53½ cents per 1,000 miles. If there was a reduction in the cost per 1,000 miles of 10 per cent instead of being $3.20, as it was for 1896, the cost would have been 32 cents less, or $2.88. As a matter of fact, according to his reports, the hon. minister will find that, for these three years, the cost was not $2.88, but $3.53½. When you come to cars, according to the figures that are in the hon. gentleman's report, the following results flow: In 1896 the average cost per 1,000 miles for lubricating cars was 30 cents. In 1897 it was 50 cents; in 1898 40 cents, and in 1899, 25 cents. The average cost for the three years, 1897-8-9 was 38½ cents, an increase of 8½ cents instead of a decrease of 3 cents. I think it is due to the hon. gentleman himself to have the mystery connected with this business cleared up. I read the report of the speech that Mr. Ferguson delivered in the Senate. Some of the calculations are not made on exactly the same lines as I have made these, and I do not know where he got some of his figures. They are calculations that he has worked out, and whether they be true or not, I do not know. These results I have obtained from simply taking the hon. gentleman's own figures.

Leaving that I come to a matter which is not one of comparison by mileage at all, but which is a very simple and plain matter, and one that does strike me as a very unjustifiable proceeding on the part of the minister. I refer to one particular kind of oil. The contract that the hon. gentleman entered into with the Galena Oil Company respecting lubricating oils was made on the 17th of September, 1896. Six days afterwards the hon. gentleman entered into another contract with the Galena Oil Company. The second contract was not for lubricating oil, but for signal and lamp oil, as it is called. There appears to be a mystery about this contract. In the first place I may say that before that time the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals had called for tenders, and that a tender had been put in for this particular kind of oil by the Imperial Oil Company, for the sum of 37½ cents per gallon, which was accepted. It was not the lowest tender nor was the oil tendered for by this company the very best oil. The lowest tender was that offered by Samuel Rogers & Co., 37 cents per gallon. At the same time there was a tender put in for a peculiar kind of illuminating oil known as 'A' specification of the Intercolonial Railway. 'A' specification is the specification of this contract that was made on the 23rd of September, 1896, and it appears in a return that was brought down in the Senate. It is as follows:

This oil to be of the best quality of double distilled standard white, extra refined petroleum, free from acid, sulphur or other impurities, to weight at 62° Fahr. not less than 7.85 pounds, nor more than 800 pounds per gallon, not less than 90 per cent, to distil between 300° Fahr. and 518° Fahr., to withstand a flash test of 105° Fahr. by the standard pyrometer, and in all other respects to comply with the provisions of the Petroleum Inspection Act, 1880, 43 Vic., cap. 21, and amending Acts. In burning for twelve hours the oil must produce a brilliant and nearly uniform flame, without crusting the wick or discolouring the chimney, and with a loss of not more than 15 per cent in power during that period.

In the contract made on the 23rd of September, 1896, the contract purports to be for signal oil, but this is a portion of the contract:

Such contractor will furnish the said oil in all respects according to the specifications hereto annexed, marked 'A,' and sample submitted, which specification is to be taken and read as forming part of this contract, and will deliver the said oil in good order at Moncton N.B., free from all charges, and duty paid.

Hand lamp and signal oil was tendered for by the Imperial Oil Company at 37½ cents a gallon. That tender was accepted but 'A' specification oil was tendered for at 20½ cents a gallon, and that tender was also accepted. The tender of the Galena Oil Company was 46 2-10 cents a gallon for signal lamp oil. Mr. Ruttan who made the inspection reports gives his analysis as follows:

The sample of signal or hand lamp oil submitted by the Eastern Oil Company, No. 291, possesses such properties and composition as would justify it being placed at the head of the list. It has the best average in all respects. The Samuel Rogers oil gives a bright light, and has the lowest cold test, but contains too much light petroleum, and has too much free fat acid to recommend it as a safe light to use. The signal oil submitted by the Galena Oil Works, Ref. No. 2306, contains a very high percentage of heavy lard oil, giving it a very high cold test for this climate. It also burns with less brilliancy than many of the other samples, although the light is steady and even. The remaining samples are superior to the two just mentioned, and but slightly inferior to the samples submitted by the Eastern Oil Company, and are about of equal value among themselves.

The Imperial Oil Company's hand lamp and signal oil it will be seen was classed superior to the hand lamp and signal oil of the Galena Oil Company. In fact the other is condemned. This is the peculiarity, that the Imperial Oil Company signal hand lamp oil was offered to the railway, and the offer was accepted at 37½ cents, but that was set aside, and in its room was accepted this oil of the Galena Oil Company, which was condemned by the analyst, at the rate of 46 2-10 cents per gallon, was with tender substituted for it. That is not a question at all that bears on the question of mileage. There is no condition in the contract as to reducing it in any way. It is simply deliberately accepting a poorer oil for 46 2-10 cents per gallon in lieu of a better oil for 37½ cents per gallon. If it be that the contract was not made really for signal oil, but for the 'A' illuminating oil, and this is the legal construction of the contract, then the department deliberately gave to the Galena Company 46 2-10 cents per gallon for an oil that was not as good as was offered by the Imperial Oil Company for 20½ cents and accepted by the railway office at Moncton. In the one case there would be a loss of over 8 cents a gallon, and in the other case there would be a loss of about 26 cents a gallon. These facts appear on the face of a return that has been brought down to the Senate. If the minister (Mr. Blair) has any explanation, I think he had better give it to us before the House closes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The figures which the hon. gentleman has read from the report are not at all within my knowledge. I do not know on what basis they have been prepared, nor do I know as to how far they may be applicable to the calculation which I have recently received. I can understand that it might be for the reason that in the recent statements they have got the cost of the oil for lubricating the railway, within the last nine months would be the low figures I have mentioned, and the years that are there referred to in the report may be years when the rates are up. It is no doubt a fact that the present contract prices that we are getting our oil furnished at, are the results of the most recent operations of the contract upon the line, because for a considerable period after the arrangements we first made there was no evidence that the quantity of oil consumed was very much diminishing. There were a good many complaints made that the employees of the road were not handling the oil with a view to economy, and that went on for a considerable period, but I have heard lately that the company have been able to introduce a more judicious use of the oil throughout the road. I am quite unable to state anything which is different to what I have already said. I have had these figures presented to me and I gave them to the committee previously. I have stated what these figures show. If they differ from those the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) has made up there must be some mistake somewhere. There cannot be any mistake about this, however: That there has been a saving of 10 per cent when the contract stood at 10 per cent, and there has been a saving of 15 per cent during the period that the 15 per cent reduction was in the contract. I cannot have been misled by the officers of the department in any such way as that they would furnish the oil under the first contract for 10 per cent less than it cost the year preceding the date in which they entered into it.

Mr. FOSTER. They do in 1897 and 1898.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. There are your figures.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot answer for these figures. I do not pay these gentlemen, nor do I adjust their claims. But I feel as morally certain as a man can be, that the accountant in the first place, and the Auditor General in the next place, would not pass accounts unless there was the 10 per cent reduction made according to contract.

Mr. HAGGART. On what basis do you pay the company when you take this oil into store.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the necessity for purchasing two years' supply—nearly $40,000 worth, and taking it into store at the beginning of the year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that it has been done. I certainly never gave any authority or never was asked, and I cannot say that any such purchase has been made. I have not a particle of doubt in my mind, but that the gentlemen who are responsible for the way in which the payments are made, and the service performed have not allowed the public interests to be sacrificed in the adjustment of the accounts. I will, of course, take immediate means to ascertain what explanations may be given as to that report.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you justify giving 46 2-10 cents to the Galena Oil Company for oil which is inferior, according to the analyst's report, to the 21-cent oil, and without any 10 per cent reduction ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not recollect the circumstances connected with the other contract. My impression was that there was only one contract.

Mr. POWELL. There are two.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should judge that the oil which they furnished is of a superior character.

Mr. FOSTER. But the analyst says it is inferior.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think you will find that Dr. Ruttan acknowledged that he could not himself form any definite opinion as to the oils. There is no doubt that the signal oil of this company is used very largely by these other railways, is guaranteed to be an article of excellent quality, and is giving very great satisfaction in the department ?

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman know the prices the other companies are paying ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not. They do not use a large quantity of this oil compared with the lubricating oil, and it might very fairly go with that seeing that the company's conditions for supplying it are so reasonable. We have had the utmost satisfaction with this company in the way in which it has performed the service, and it is the opinion of the general manager and the mechanical superintendent that it is in the interest of the railway service that this company should continue to supply us with these oils. When the manager was last up, I took occasion to ascertain what his officers thought on the subject, and he was decidedly of opinion that it was the best arrangement we could make.

Mr. HAGGART. What did it cost in 1897, 1898 and 1899 for lubricating per car mileage ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I told the hon. gentleman that it cost 10 per cent less than $3.72 during the pendency of the first contract; we reduced that by 5 per cent, which gave us 15 per cent reduction during the pendency of the second contract; and on the present contract we are getting it at a fixed rate of $2.72, for the locomotives, 20 cents, for passenger cars, and 12 cents for freight cars.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman be astonished to learn that the same gentlemen who have a contract with him for $2.72 per thousand miles for locomotives, on the Intercolonial, have a contract with the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific Railway and other railways in Canada to furnish oil for less than $1.50 per thousand miles for locomotives ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I dare say.

Mr. HAGGART. Will he be astonished to learn that for lubricators for which the hon. gentleman has been paying from 80 cents down to 22 cents, they have contracts with nearly every railroad for less than 11 cents ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway I think that the passenger car mileage might be reduced one half, and I would not be surprised to learn that on these roads I have named, the car mileage cost per 1,000 miles could be reduced to eight or nine cents. But we cannot and never will be able to do it on the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have been four years getting down to our present figures. The Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway commenced in the neighbourhood of where we were and got down inside of two years to their present basis.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. minister is willing to let it go at that, I do not think we need stay any longer. Taking the whole matter of this oil business together, it is as bad as the worst kind of oil could possibly be. In the first place, the hon. gentleman entirely repudiated contract and tender. When he came in he found what had been followed always by the Intercolonial Railway—the calling for tenders, the getting of samples, the analyses made by the analyst, and the taking of the best oils at the lowest prices. He found that tenders had been called for and the contracts practically awarded. Did he ask the council anything about that. No, but he swept away all these, and afterwards, when he undertook to make a contract with the Galena Oil Company without calling for tenders, he took the matter to council, and put it through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Tenders were invited and the Galena Oil Company tendered the same as the Imperial Oil Company did.

Mr. FOSTER. That was only in the first instance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. gentleman in every case took the highest priced oil and gave the contract away from the lowest price tenders, although the analysts reports were against the Galena Oil Company except in one instance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I got the guarantee of 10 per cent reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. In 1896, what was the standard for the locomotive car mileage? It was $3.20.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, $3.72 I am informed.

Mr. FOSTER. Three dollars and twenty cents is given by the hon. gentleman's own return.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As a matter of actual fact, I do not believe it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman may not believe it, but these figures have been taken entirely from his own report given to the House. But supposing it was $3.72, it was that in 1897, and the contract called for a 10 per cent reduction over rate of 1896.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was $3.72 in 1896:

Mr. FOSTER. What was it in 1897?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Ten per cent less.

Mr. FOSTER. You got it for $3.72. That is what you paid in 1897, and the 10 per cent reduction was not taken off.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It must have been taken off. These gentlemen in Moncton knew what the contract was.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman had Dr. Ruttan's analysis on signal oil before him, in which Dr. Ruttan says it is not as good as the sample tendered for at 37½ cents. He gave 46 2-10th cents to the Galena Oil Company, and is buying it at that rate without any 10 per cent reduction. When you tell him this, he says it must be wrong. But, here is the contract, are you to take the contract or simply the supposition of the hon. gentleman? The fact is, that the hon. gentleman's manipulation of the oil business on the Intercolonial Railway is as bad an affair as was ever recorded in the history of any department in the country. He has been weak and tottering in the sham defence he has made to-night. Sometimes he knows everything, but to-night he knows nothing. Why; because he was faced with his own report.

The committee rose and reported progress.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 119) to authorize the granting of subsidies to certain lines of railway herein mentioned (Mr. Blair) read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3.35 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, July 14, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RAILWAY DEPARTMENT—DISMISSED OFFICIALS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to avail of this, which I hope is the last opportunity of calling attention to the return of dismissed officials by the Department of Railways, so that I might get my errant papers together.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Very well.

HARBOUR WORKS, ST. JOHN, N.B.—TENDERERS' DEPOSITS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I asked, yesterday morning, for information from the Minister of Finance as to whether the two deposit cheques of the tenderers in connection with this work have been forfeited, and if the proceeds have gone into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The cheques are held by the government, and will be forfeited.

Mr. FOSTER. Will be forfeited?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

IMMIGRATION TO THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I wish to draw attention to an inaccuracy in the report of the Department of the Interior. On page 16 of the report, I find the following:—

The Galicians who have gone into Manitoba and the North-west Territories during the past three years, numbering about 16,000, while attracting a great deal of attention on arrival, have been so well settled—being divided into small colonies—that they have been little heard of since.

The words 'being divided into small colonies' clearly conveys an inaccurate idea, inasmuch as in the colony which exists 35 or 40 miles west of Edmonton, there are half of the whole number of these Galicians, that is to say, about 8,000. I think it is desirable that the House should have a thorough understanding of the facts in such an important matter, and that, so far as this colony is concerned, they are not in a small colony. Further on in the report I read:

They are now considered by the residents a decided advantage to the locality and are making quite as good progress as any other class of settlers in the country. The objection to this nationality which existed in the popular mind a year or two ago and which was the subject of so much newspaper discussion, has quite passed away.

That may be a matter of opinion; but my position, as representative of the district in which a large number of these people are settled, compels me to say that the objection has not passed away. On the contrary, the fact that they are there in such large numbers and increasing so rapidly has increased and intensified the objection hitherto existing there. I read further:

The reason for this appears to be that they are adapting themselves to the conditions of the country and are now looked upon as a part of the great producing class of Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

I would like to say, on behalf of the people of the North-west whom I represent, that they decline to be considered simply in the light of 'producing classes.' They are there for other purposes than merely to be 'producers.' They are citizens of the country; and it strikes me that any report in regard to immigration which considers immigrants simply in the light of 'producing classes,' falls very short of the proper idea of what immigration should be.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John City). I wish to express my opinion, and that is that the best kind of people we can have in this country are people who are producers.

Mr. FOSTER. If they are good producers.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) has brought up the question of the quality of the immigrants we are getting in this country, I would draw the attention of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of the Interior to a despatch in the Edinburgh Scotsman, a marked copy of which I received yesterday. It reads as follows:—

Vienna, June 29.—It appears that a considerable number of the increasing stream of these immigrants from Roumania, which has been passing through the Dual Monarchy for weeks past intend to settle in Canada as labourers.

Further on, I read:

Their poverty is such that they are forced to camp in the open air, being unable to pay for the poorest lodgings.

I draw the attention of the Prime Minister to this statement, and I wish to ascertain from the government if our immigrant agents in Europe are catering to bring out vast numbers of people of this class to settle them in our North-west?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). When the Minister of the Interior is in his seat, I will be able to give an answer to the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke). It is not the policy of the government to bring out paupers, but I know of no restriction against able-bodied men who are willing to work and can work.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) will bring the matter up again, when the Minister of the Interior is here.

Mr. OLIVER.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved second reading of Bill (No. 192)—(from the Senate—to amend the Bank Act Amendment Act. He said: This Bill is designed to meet a case that has arisen since the passing of the Bank Act Amendment. It may be remembered that in that Act we made provision for the purchase of a bank by another bank which desired to take over its business. A case of that kind has arisen under the provisions of the Act, as between the Bank of Commerce and the Bank of British Columbia. The Bank of Commerce has agreed to buy out the Bank of British Columbia. The provisions of the Act are that the purchasing bank must assume responsibility for the note circulation of both banks; a very proper provision. But the power of the purchasing bank, as respects circulation, is limited to its capital under the general provisions of the Bank Act. It is found in this particular case that the united circulation of the two banks will be in excess of the capital stock of the purchasing bank, and, consequently, there will be a difficulty for a time. The purchasing bank is meeting that difficulty by proposing to issue $2,000,000 of new stock, thus increasing its capital from six to eight millions. However, there will be, in the interval, a period when this circulation would be against the law, and the bank would be liable to a penalty—in fact, it would block the whole transaction. The amendment is to provide that, in a case of that character, the excessive circulation may be met by a cash deposit with the Finance Minister, pending the time that the bank can adjust the difficulty by issuing new stock. It is a very reasonable proposition, and I do not think there can be any objection to it.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). It is provided in subsection c of this section that the notes outstanding and in circulation according to the last monthly report of each bank, shall not exceed the paid-up capital of the purchasing bank. It strikes me that this limitation is perhaps more stringent than is necessary. In the event of the consolidation of two banks, by the purchase of one by the other, with perhaps nearly an equal amount of capital, the curtailment of the circulation of notes to the amount of the paid-up capital of the purchasing bank, might work injury to the public interest. I do not see why the provisions which apply to each bank in its separate state should not apply to them when consolidated, so that united they would have the same circulation that they would have in their separate existence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend reads the clause through, he will find that we meet that difficulty by providing for a cash deposit; and in the particular case which gave rise to this Bill, the reasonableness of that provision is admitted, and the parties are willing to make the cash deposit. If we can get that additional protection for the note-holder, I think we had better do it.

Mr. CHARLTON. This cash deposit will be so much drawn from circulation for the purpose of leaving it with the Finance Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. The Finance Minister will not keep it long.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not see any need of curtailing the circulation which each bank in its separate existence would be entitled to issue.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because when the selling bank goes out of existence, its shareholders are absolved from the double liability. The purchasing bank assumes the notes, and the right of the latter to issue circulation should be limited to the amount of capital which it has in one form or another.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that one bank purchases the other; it is not an amalgamation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a purchase—the same thing in another form.

Mr. HAGGART. It is an entirely different thing, because the stock of the purchase bank is extinguished.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved second reading of Bill (No. 173) 'respecting the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.'

Mr. BERGERON. What is it?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. By chapter 48 of the Statutes of 1898, the Quebec Harbour Commissioners were authorized to borrow $350,000, giving as security a prior lien on the properties it then held in the harbour of Quebec. Last year the Quebec Harbour Commissioners Act was amended to provide that the unexhausted portion of the $350,000, that is, $200,000, should be issued carrying with it the prior lien. An Act was also passed ratifying an agreement entered into with the harbour commissioners by the Great Northern Railway Company to build an elevator on the property of the harbour commissioners in the city of Quebec; and it was to secure the payment of the interest on the bonds to be issued to the extent of $200,000 to enable the elevator to be built, that the provision

I have referred to was made. It was provided in the agreement that the work was to be begun within a certain period and completed within another period. The object of the first part of the amendment now proposed is to extend the terms of that agreement to cover the delay in the completion of the elevator. The second portion is intended to fix definitely the rank of the bonds issued, so as to make it quite clear that the interest on the first issue of $350,000 shall take precedence over the interest on the $200,000. There is another modification of the agreement. As it was passed last year, it provided that the harbour commissioners should receive out of the earnings of the elevator a sum sufficient each year to guarantee the payment of the interest, which they guaranteed in their turn, that is, 3 per cent on the $200,000, or $6,000 a year. It provided that any sum received by the company in excess of 6 per cent on the $200,000 would be deposited with the harbour commissioners as a sinking fund to provide for the payment of the $200,000. It is now proposed that the company instead deposit the sum of $12,000 a year to the joint credit of the harbour commissioners and the Great Northern Railway Company, and shall maintain that deposit until such time as the security is exhausted, that is to say, for twenty years.

Mr. BERGERON. There has been no work done there at all?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, the elevator is almost completed. It will be finished by September 1.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood that the hon. gentleman wanted an extension of time.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, because under the old agreement it is provided that the works should be begun by the 1st of December last and finished by the 1st of May last. The new guarantee could not be made to apply in this condition of things, because the elevator will not be finished until the 1st of September next, and the intention is to extend the delay.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time; considered in committee; reported; read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved third reading of Bill (No. 193) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before this Bill is read the third time, I want to call the attention of the hon. minister to a fact developed in the papers with reference to the three roads out of the number subsidized, to which payments were made in excess of $3,200 per mile. I have gone through all the papers in connection with all of them, and in no single instance is there a voucher or account given by the company to establish in the slightest degree what was the cost of construction. In two cases, the statement was made by the company that they had no vouchers or accounts. In the other case, there seems to have been no demand made for the same. The only thing that results is a hap-hazard estimate by some engineer sent to go over the road after it is finished.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In all cases where vouchers and papers can be had, the department had adopted the rule, under my instructions, requiring that they should be secured and looked into, for the purpose of ascertaining what the actual cost of the work has been. Of course where a company has not any books or papers,—and that one could imagine would occur at times—you cannot get them. Arrangements may be made by a company with sub-contractors, and the company have nothing to show except its arrangement with the sub-contractor. But that is not a circumstance which at all militates against the government. It would be necessary that these facts should be disclosed some way or other, if the company were asking to be paid or insisting upon being paid a larger sum than the report of the engineers shows the work was worth. But we can rely with confidence that the engineers are not going to make an estimate in excess of the value. A company would be more likely to suffer if not able to furnish evidence to show that the engineer's calculations were favourable to the company and that the work cost more than the engineer's report shows. It is not a difficult matter at all for an engineer to go over a work and establish what it is worth. That is a simple and easy thing. But if, by reason of the fact that, while the work was in progress, expensive portions of the undertaking are covered up and cannot be seen, that circumstance militates against the interest of the company and tends to the reduction of what they claim, because the engineer may report nothing but what he sees on the surface. The question was asked: How could the engineers tell what the work cost? An engineer has no difficulty in giving figures which are a safe valuation, and they know the prices for the different classes of work. One can well understand that the work may have been more expensive than appears on the surface; and the company cannot furnish satisfactory evidence for any additional cost that they may claim. The Crown does not suffer. But we cannot compel them to produce books and papers which they have not got. It does not look very business-like—I am prepared to admit that. But the only thing we can do is to be sure that the value we place on the work is safe and within the mark.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House will allow me a moment—the minister has entirely shifted from the one substantial ground upon which this extra payment was based. It was stated in the first place, and even yesterday before I brought out the information, and the House really thought, that the amount of cost must be made certain by the actual payments that went into the construction of the works. We have nothing to do with the excuse from the minister that they may have difficulty in giving the figures, or with the plea that the company may possibly fare worse if they do not give them. That is not the point; the company were to give the statement. And, if they are told at the outset: You will not get a cent more than $3,200 per mile, unless you show by your accounts and vouchers just how much has been spent—you will soon find that they will keep their accounts in such form that they can be inspected. Again, I make the statement which the minister denied yesterday, that, though the law expressly states that you shall not include rolling stock in this estimate for the payment of more than $3,200 a mile, rolling stock was actually included and payment made on basis of it, after being recommended by the minister and passed by the council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In what case?

Mr. FOSTER. The minister can look at his own papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I deny the statement; the hon. gentleman cannot name the instance—

Mr. FOSTER. There are not many—only three. The minister denies the statement. I make the statement; let him have recourse to his own papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is pure evasion on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). I ask him to name the railway that was paid extra subsidy on account of rolling stock.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister had better not be too bold. I know what I am stating; I have my responsibility. I refer him to his own papers.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). The papers were returned to the hon. minister. While they were in our hands, I looked over them with the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster). He asked me whether stations were included in road-bed, and I told him they were. Afterwards he called my attention to the fact that rolling stock had been included in that item. The minister stated that there was only one case, when I stated that payments were made otherwise than in the way he had declared they would be made. I stated that in three cases payments were made when there were no vouchers furnished to the government; and, if the hon. minister will consult the papers, he will find my statement correct. The payments in those cases were made entirely on certificate of his engineer, and in one case rolling stock was included in making up the account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What case?

Mr. HAGGART. I have forgotten the case for the moment; but if the hon. gentleman's deputy were here with the papers, that case would be found.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). It seems to me that the examination by the government engineers of the work would, in any case, be a salutary check upon the representations made by the railway company. While my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) asserts that, in any case, a railway company could give vouchers, I must question the accuracy of his statement. There are cases where extensions of railways are built in a manner that makes it very difficult indeed for the constructor to render separate accounts of the vouchers and the cost. I know one case in which the road had an extension of three and a half miles, which extension was entitled, under the Act, to the bonus of $3,200 per mile and the extra bonus on cost over $15,000 per mile. This extension was built by the syndicate owning the road, at prime cost, without the intervention of sub-contractors, and the work was done in conjunction with work upon the portion of the road already constructed. The persons building the road were under the impression that they were to receive a fixed subsidy of $6,400 a mile, and their accounts were not kept in such shape as to make it possible for them to furnish vouchers for the cost of the three and a half miles separately. In such a case, if the government had taken the stand that they could not pay more than $3,200 a mile, a great injustice would have been done. The government engineer estimated the cost of the section, and he gave a very moderate estimate. There was upon that section a bridge costing fifty or sixty thousand dollars, $25,000 of the cost of which was applicable to this little section of three and a half miles. The government engineer estimated that the cost of the road was $18,277 per mile, including the $25,000 on account of the bridge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Any rolling stock?

Mr. CHARLTON. No rolling stock was allowed for, nor was the right of way where they passed through a town.

Mr. FOSTER. What road was that?

Mr. CHARLTON. The Tilsonburg, Lake Erie Pacific Railway. The builders said that the estimate was too low and that the road cost them more.

Mr. COCHRANE. How did they know, if they did not keep books?

Mr. CHARLTON. Work on the seventeen miles already constructed went on at the same time with work on the extension, and material was bought for both. It was apparently unnecessary to keep the books separately, because they supposed they would receive a fixed subsidy of $6,400 a mile. They were placed in such a position that they had to take the government engineer's estimate of the cost, which was $18,277 a mile. They were able to point out that various items of the estimates were too low. They were able to furnish vouchers for some portions—as, for instance, an interlocking switch—but they were settled with on the basis of the engineer's estimate, which, I am satisfied, did them injustice. But what could the department do? Was the government to take the stand, that this company should not receive a cent in addition to the $3,200 per mile? If they had taken that stand, I, as representative of the riding in which this road was built, should have taken the ground that the government was guilty of a very serious outrage upon the rights of my constituents. There may be difficulties of that kind, and I know, from the position taken by the government in that respect, that it is a difficult thing to get a matter adjusted without the vouchers are furnished. I know the government take a firm stand upon that matter, and they make no allowance, in the cost of the road, for the cost of the rolling stock, for the cost of terminal charges or terminal privileges, and the cost of right of way within the limits of incorporated villages and towns. I think the course pursued by the government in the matter of the payment of these subsidies, if closely scrutinized, will prove that they have had fair and due regard to public interests in the adjustment of these matters.

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche). I know that the first ten miles of the Restigouche and Western that have been constructed have been very difficult indeed. I think the amount expended on it is sufficient to justify their getting more than the $3,200. I know the locality well, and have been there when they were building the road.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me that if we propose to give an additional subsidy beyond the $3,200, that it is a notice to all railroad builders that we will do it only upon certain conditions, namely, that they are able to show, to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways and Canals, that the railway cost more than $75,000 per mile. Now, how would any contractor expect to earn additional money, unless he was able to furnish that information? And he could only furnish it by keeping books. The Minister of Railways says they sublet contracts. So they do; but there is no man who sublets a contract but knows what he sublets it for, and if he is a business man, he must keep books and know where his money is. This is a notice in advance to them, that if they wish for an additional amount of money, they must be prepared to establish what they have expended; therefore, there will be no excuse why they should not be prepared to give that information, and there is no reason why they should ask for an additional subsidy, unless they are prepared to furnish that information,

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I expected the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would tell the House whether he had received a letter from Mr. Armstrong, whose road was mentioned the other day. There was something said against that gentleman, the other day, of a very grave character, and, although I have nothing to do with Mr. Armstrong, I am informed by him that he addressed a letter to the Prime Minister, explaining the matter. If the hon. gentleman has received that letter, I think it would be only an act of justice to Mr. Armstrong that he should read it to the House. Moreover, I believe, from papers I have seen, that the right hon. gentleman had been put, some two or three years ago, in possession of all the facts concerning that transaction, and perhaps the right hon. gentleman may have forgotten that. If he has not got any explanation from Mr. Armstrong, I will ask permisison of the House to put in a statement I have received from him in defence of his character, because it was stated by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals that he was a man who, if guilty of what he was accused of should be sent to the penitentiary.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I received a letter from Mr. Armstrong yesterday, denying the statement which I made the other day, which the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals will remember. On receipt of the letter, I immediately put myself in communication with the party from whom I received the information. I telegraphed him yesterday, and I tried to telephone him this morning, and have not been able, up to this moment, to get an answer. But I intend on Monday to make a statement.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Public Works—Harbours and rivers—Maria, isolated lock ..... $6,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). This is on the Baie des Chaleurs, and is to make provision towards the construction of an isolated lock and ballasting crib-work 230 feet by 30 feet, so that steamers plying in the Baie des Chaleurs during the season of navigation may safely land passengers and freight. The total cost of the projected block is $13,000.

Maria is situated on the northern side of the Baie des Chaleurs and about ten miles to the eastward from Carleton, and is one of the most important parishes in the county of Bonaventure, Quebec. The steamer plying during the season of navigation in the Baie des Chaleurs stops regularly off Maria, landing passengers and freight in boats or barges, which is attended with much loss of time and delay, and at times with much danger, whilst in stormy weather no landing can be effected for want of wharf accommodation. This is very proper and necessary work.

Mr. FOSTER. It will never pass with that explanation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Is the hon. gentleman going to threaten the House?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not going to pass with that explanation.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is an important line of steamers plying between Dalhousie and Gaspé. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McAlister) knows that this is the only means of communication that the population on the north shore of the Baie des Chaleurs have with the outside world. That coast from Carleton up to Gaspé is dotted with parishes, all enjoying a relative degree of prosperity. Let us follow the boat, for instance, after it leaves Dalhousie. The boat leaves Dalhousie in the morning, it crosses immediately over to the north shore of Baie des Chaleurs, it stops at Carleton, and then goes to some other place—I cannot follow all the places.

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche). Maria is the next place. It anchors out from the shore at that place.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, but that is all. The boat goes to Carleton, where there is a wharf, then to New Richmond, then to New Carlisle, and then it follows the coast—

Mr. McALISTER. It goes to Carleton, Maria, New Richmond and Bonaventure.

The PRIME MINISTER. At all these places touched by the boat, there has been provided by the government of the country wharfs and other accommodations, excepting at Maria.

Mr. McALISTER. There is no wharf between New Carlisle and Harvey.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, there is one at Paspebiac.

Mr. McALISTER. No, there is none at Paspebiac.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. McALISTER. There is no public wharf at Paspebiac.

Mr. TALBOT. There is a wharf.

Mr. McALISTER. There is no public wharf.

The PRIME MINISTER. At all these places there are wharfs which have been put up by the government, not by this government, but by past governments, for the accommodation of the public in that section of the country. But, as I said a moment ago, and it will be borne out by my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister), the people there have no communication with the outside world except through the means of this line of navigation. A railway has been opened, but, unfortunately, it is not running now. The people are left with the same method of sending and receiving their goods as they possessed before. The boat calls at Maria and there is no place at which it can be moored.

Mr. McALISTER. Yes, it always stops there.

The PRIME MINISTER. It moors out in the bay.

Mr. POWELL. It moors to a buoy.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no place at which it can be moored. There is no wharf of any kind. The reason is that the water is so low. The people have been complaining of that condition of things, and they asked the government to build them a wharf, as has been done at some other places. But, upon looking at the matter we came to the conclusion that it would require an expenditure of over $100,000, and of, perhaps, $200,000 to build a wharf from the shore to the open sea, or where the boat could find anchor. What was the next best thing to do? We came to the conclusion that we could give them an isolated work, such as we propose here, at a place sufficiently advanced in the bay that the steamer can moor against it.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the depth of the water there?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know the depth of the water, but I know that at the place where this block will be located there will be sufficient water.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Fourteen feet at low water.

The PRIME MINISTER. The boat can moor alongside of it. This is the only accommodation that can be given to that locality.

Mr. BERGERON. It will be the same thing as at Baie St. Paul?

The PRIME MINISTER. The same thing as at Baie St. Paul, and the people will be satisfied with that.

Mr. McALISTER. If the wharf would be any benefit to the people there, I, for one, would have no opposition to it, because I would be pleased to see the accommodation provided at that place. I see in the estimates that there is a revote of $6,400 for the extension of the landing pier at Carleton. That is absolutely necessary. The trade at Maria is very small. The revenue of the post office is only about $100 a year. If you build that wharf away out there, when there is an easterly wind the boat cannot land. There is far greater need of a wharf at New Richmond and Bonaventure than at Maria. There is far more traffic at Bonaventure than at Maria, and if a wharf is to be built at Maria, there is far more reason for building one at Bonaventure. What distance is this wharf to be out from the shore?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Eighteen hundred feet.

Mr. McALISTER. I have been on the boat, and I know that it does not come within three-quarters of a mile from the shore.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When there is a block they will be able to come in much closer than they now do to anchor. The previous government erected a dock at Carleton for the same purpose as the purpose of this block. There are wharfs along that shore, and when the winds are in certain directions the vessels cannot stop at them, but there are times when the vessels can stop. It is proposed, under these circumstances, to have this dock so located that it will meet a portion of the requirements and afford protection between the block and the shore against the prevailing wind. The winds that would chiefly interfere with the landing there would be the south-west winds. This will afford some protection, which pro tanto is of great value. The hon. gentleman says the population of Maria is only about one hundred, but five years ago the village had a population of 2,250.

Mr. McALISTER. There is no village there at all.

Mr. BERGERON. The minister is all wrong.

The PRIME MINISTER. That population includes the whole parish.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no government wharf between Carleton and New Carlisle, a distance of over forty miles, so that this is an absolutely necessary public wharf, and I am surprised to hear the member for York (Mr. Foster) object to it.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister need not put on his heroics.

Mr. BERGERON. The government will have to admit that the opposition saved an immense useless expenditure to the country in connection with this wharf, and I must say to the credit of the Prime Minister that he had a great deal to do in it in preventing the squandering of that money. The acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fielding) last year did not know anything about that work which was engineered by the real Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), and through loyalty to his colleague he was willing to rush through a vote for $60,000. When we were labouring against that item the Prime Minister knowing the locality agreed with the opposition that there was no sense in building a wharf there and he got the item struck out. When the Minister of Finance goes on the hustings and tells the people that we did not object to these appropriations by voting against them, I hope he will give us credit for saving a large sum of money in connection with this work.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was cut down from $200,000 to $13,000.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not object to this proposed block although I do not know that it will prove of the benefit that is expected from it. My hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) who knows the place well says that it will be difficult to touch at that wharf when the wind blows in certain directions. Now, let me say this to the Prime Minister and to his government. If the people of Canada are to be led to believe that the government will build for them wharfs, and ice breakers and bridges and anything at all they want, then so far as I am concerned I cannot object to the policy of the government. I do not pay more in taxes than anybody else; probably less. But is it not a most extraordinary thing that the Liberal party should be filling up the estimates with all these expenditures and that the hon. gentleman from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has not yet got a stroke of apoplexy protesting against them. When the Conservatives were in power they never asked a vote for half of these things, and I believe to some degree it was perhaps a bad policy.

The PRIME MINISTER. Are you converted now?

Mr. BERGERON. I never had the ambition to change the whole policy of my party, but I can see now that the government is doing too much in the way of giving public grants. We are taking away personal initiative. Everything comes from the government. My hon. friend knows that there is a good deal of the French paternal government in that. I do not know that it is as good as the British or American way of allowing men to use their intelligence and energies without government aid. For eighteen years the Liberals were clamouring against the Conservatives for constructing such works as these, but when they get into power they go the Conservatives ten better. What will be the end of it? The acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock) sent out a circular inviting his political friends to send in applications for these works, and if there is a man opposite who has not got something for his county he has not done his duty to his people. Here is the government lavish in bridges and wharfs and custom-houses, and any Liberal member who has not obtained one for his constituency will no doubt get the cold shoulder when he returns to his electors. Will the country stand that kind of thing? That is the question. Will the people of Canada say that this is a good policy? I doubt that they will. There is a party opposite us who said that $40,000,000 was too large an expenditure and that the country was going to ruin and decay. The Prime Minister never had so much eloquence as when he spoke on that subject before the people. But here is to-day expending millions and millions a year more than the Conservatives spent. Here we have this government not only granting everything that is asked for, but actually inviting their friends to ask, sending them a circular which means: Come on, we have our arms in the public chest now; it is at your disposal you good Grits who supported us for eighteen years in opposition, now we are in and let us have a carnival of extravagance. I doubt, Sir, if the people of the country will endorse a policy like that.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister is buying the people with their own money.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is unfair to the memory of your leader that you should quote his sentiment like that. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) that I will not have much trouble in answering to the people for this policy. He has given the answer himself already. After having gone into his fit of eloquence over the expenditure, then he tells us that he himself approves of this appropriation.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, if that is to be your policy.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) commenced by saying that there was a carnival of extravagance, and he wound up by saying that he approved of the vote.

Mr. BERGERON. We saved $40,000, for the people on it.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) complimented me on striking out this vote last year, and I do not know that I am entitled to that compliment.

Mr. BERGERON. We helped you a great deal.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman will always find us prepared to accept any reasonable representations that are made in this House. We try to inform ourselves as much as we can upon the votes which we ask for, but I do not pretend that we have exact information in every case. Last year the discussion revealed that there was a great deal of shallow water at that point and in looking into the matter we came to the conclusion that this isolated pier would have to answer the purposes. Although the people are disappointed we have to disappoint them, and the best we can do is to give them this isolated pier. The hon. gentleman says that this country is going into too large expenditures. There is some truth in his statement that the government of Canada is perhaps doing more in the way of public works than any other country in the world. But this is not a new system, and I am afraid that whatever government is in power it will have to carry it out for some time to come, and until our country is more thickly populated than it is at the present time. I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite to lay aside party politics and to give this question their impartial attention. The great difficulty in Canada is that we have an enormous territory, not with a continuous population, but with little settlements here and there. At this point, there is a settlement, a church, and mills, and the people are doing a good deal of business, but they have no wharf accommodation. They see that Carleton on the east and other places on the west have wharf accommodation provided by the government, which afford them facilities for exporting their goods. Is there any reason why we should not give those people the same accommodation that we have given to their neighbours? There is none. Some years ago a railway was built in the Baie des Chaleurs district. Unfortunately this railway is not in operation; but if it were open there would not be the same necessity for this block that there is. I agree with my hon. friend that it is a necessity.

Mr. McALISTER. I do not wish to detract in the least from the importance of Maria, which is in my own neighbourhood. On the contrary, I would support anything for the benefit of that district; but I fail to see how this block is going to be of any benefit, because in certain winds boats cannot land there. Before the money is voted for this block at Maria, I think we should know the exact locality where it is to be placed. If built, it should be built at the place where it will be of most benefit to the whole district.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), expressed regret that this policy has been adopted. But, after a policy has been in existence for a great many years, it is pretty hard to turn round and abandon it altogether. As the First Minister has said; exigencies will arise which require a departure from a well-understood principle in the case of small groups of people, settled in a certain district. We know that hon. gentlemen opposite did a great deal in this line themselves. They inaugurated this policy. I admit that we found fault with a great many things they did; but you can never lay down a rule without an exception, otherwise it would cease to be a rule, and this may be an exception to that rule. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) took the minister to task last night for erecting wharfs on canals, but that hon. gentleman himself, when he was Finance Minister, got a vote of $2,500 passed through this House for the erection of a wharf on the Rideau Canal at the Maria Street bridge, right here in the city of Ottawa. If he will turn up the estimates for 1887-8, he will find that vote.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like very much to see the estimate.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will send to the library and get it.

Mr. HAGGART. And I would like you to produce the wharf.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a landing-place there, and if the hon. gentleman sends for the estimates of that year, he will find the vote. With regard to the circular issued by the acting Minister of Public Works, I do not think there is anything wrong in that.

Mr. FOSTER. We did not suppose you would think anything was wrong.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am willing to sit in judgment on the acting Minister of Public Works, or anybody else; but he issued that circular simply for the purpose of gathering information.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was just as good-natured, hearty and generous in his support of the Minister of Public Works last year, when a vote was brought down which would have passed, if we had not organized a contest and fought it here for two or three hours; and the Prime Minister this morning acknowledges that it would have taken $200,000 to finish the work, and he had absolutely no information on it. But that made no difference to the conscientious member for North Wellington, who was loud in his applause and beautiful in his concurrence.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have the estimates for 1887-8, and I want to read this item:

Wharf accommodation near Maria Street bridge .....	$2,500
--	---------

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). I want to ask the acting Minister of Public Works if he sent a copy of that circular to the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers). In that constituency there are two communities of people who are more isolated than the people of the Baie des Chaleurs, because they are on islands which constitute municipalities, and on which they have churches and mills and post offices, but have no means of reaching the outside world except by steamers.

I understand that at Baie des Chaleurs there is a railway, but these people are isolated and have no means of reaching the outside world except by steamer. My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) and the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce know the locality I refer to—the townships of Wolf Island and Howe Island. The township of Howe Island could be connected with the main shore by a bridge not exceeding 150 feet, and applications have come to the government to have that work done. I would like to know if the hon. member for Frontenac sent in an application on behalf of these people, who have erected year after year, at their own expense, wharfs all around Howe Island and Wolf Island without getting a dollar of grant from any Dominion government, while down in the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec, wherever there is a church erected or a little village, or wherever there are a few farmers living along the shore, the government come to their rescue and build a wharf. Why have they not done that for the residents of Wolf Island and Howe Island? A bridge could be erected to connect these islands with the main land at less cost than this wharf down by the Baie des Chaleurs, and which would give connection the whole year round.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not aware that any circular had been sent to my hon. friend from Frontenac, but my hon. friend will not find in the estimates any appropriation for bridges, and especially bridges of the character he refers to, where there is not more than 20 feet of water between the island and the main shore. If he is of the opinion that a bridge should be built by the government on a stretch of water 20 feet wide, I think he is too extravagant for this government, and we could not accept his suggestion.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) cited, as an instance of building wharfs upon a canal, that a vote had been passed in 1887 by the late government for the same purpose. He brought down the sessional papers, in which there is a vote for wharf accommodation on the Rideau Canal near Maria Street bridge. But the Rideau Canal was taken from the Imperial authorities by the Dominion government, the Imperial authorities owned the property in the centre of the town, they owned the wharfs, and these were taken over, subject to the obligation of keeping them in order. There was no new wharf built there. The amount given by this vote was to repair a wharf already existing.

Mr. McMULLEN. Read the item.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. HAGGART. I did read it.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland). I am much obliged to the right hon. Prime Minister for his kindness and graciousness in smiling over at me so benignly, and to you, Mr. Chairman, for recognizing that there are other men in the House besides those behind the ministerial benches. I represent a constituency in Ontario that is now exporting more grain and cheese and farm commodities than the whole of Prince Edward Island, and I want to tell this House that there has never been there never has had a dollar spent on wharfs by any Dominion government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How long have you represented the county?

Mr. COCHRANE. Longer than you will ever represent a riding, and if I have not represented it with as much intelligence as it is entitled to, I have not at any rate displayed as much brass as the hon. gentleman has. I have never been opposed to the expenditure of money to develop the resources of this country, but when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals tries to cover up some rather scaly votes, which he is asking for in some remote place that nobody ever heard of before, by making reference to the province of Ontario getting its share, I want to tell him that on Lake Ontario, one of the finest natural harbours there never has had a dollar spent on wharfs in it by a Reform or a Conservative government.

As regards the argument of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), it is his favourite and time-worn one of: 'You are another.' Why, Mr. Chairman, these men got into power through denouncing the extravagance of the Conservative party. They got the votes of the people by misrepresentation, and if they got their money as they got the people's votes, they would be in the penitentiary. I used to listen to the arguments of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) when in opposition, and thought that he was honest. His arguments often made me uneasy in my seat, and almost convinced me that there must have been something wrong. But everything has changed since these gentlemen have got on the Treasury benches. $30,000,000 expenditures per year was bleeding the people white when they were in opposition, and when the Minister of Trade and Commerce put on his sanctimonious air and declaimed against this expenditure, I felt convinced that he must have been honest in his views. But what a change has come over the spirit of his dream. He never raises his voice now, even in the most feeble protest, when our expenditure has swelled almost to $80,000,000 per year. Will there be a drop of blood left in the body of the honest farmer when he finds himself bled to the tune of $80,000,000 more? I believe that the hon. gentleman's excuse is that he is only a looker on and has nothing to say in the affairs of the government, and it seems that he is in this position that his colleagues can say to him: You must sit there and reap the emoluments of office without protest, or you may get out and we will get along without you.

Let me tell the hon. member for Wellington that this reply: 'Oh, you did it too,' will not go down with the people. That hon. gentleman has swallowed every profession he made on the floor of parliament. We could go back to the time when he made some seven hundred speeches in the House of Commons denouncing the extravagance of the Tory party, but he will swallow every one of these votes now submitted without a grimace.

I would ask the right hon. the First Minister if the reply: 'You are another,' is any answer to the criticisms from this side. Why, the right hon. gentleman told the people that he was prepared to run the country on $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 less expenditure. And what is the spectacle we witness to-day? The right hon. gentleman, a knight forsooth, charged with leading the people astray, has only one argument to which he can resort, and that is: You did it too, and are just as bad as we are. But he will find that reply insufficient when he comes to answer for his misdeeds at the next election.

Mr. EDWARDS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) has not had docks built in the constituency in which he lives, his friends when in power were not as good to him as they were to those in other parts of the country. Now, so far as wharf building by the government is concerned, generally speaking, I am opposed to it. In the general way, it is the business of the different localities to build docks for themselves.

Mr. COCHRANE. But you will vote for them.

Mr. EDWARDS. I will undertake to say that I will never vote for as many wharfs to be built under this administration as were voted for by this House during the time I have been here by hon. gentlemen on the other side. But, if people have become accustomed to a certain practice and have learned to regard it as the proper thing, it will take some time to do away with that practice. Last night, there was a discussion on this subject, some features of which amused me—as, for instance, opposition to the building of wharfs by hon. gentlemen in whose constituencies a number of wharfs have already been built at the cost of this country. On the Ottawa River, in the next constituency but one of this, a large expenditure took place on the building of a dock on the river. It was built years ago by hon. gentlemen opposite, and was maintained by them while in power. And as you go further down the river, almost all the docks were built at the expense of the federal exchequer. It is simply preposterous for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that this is not their practice.

Mr. COCHRANE. And you condemn it?

Mr. EDWARDS. I say openly and distinctly that, speaking generally, I think docks should be constructed by the people in the locality. There are, perhaps, exceptional cases—but they should be exceptional. But when my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) argues as he did last night that it made a difference whether a wharf was on a lake or on a river, I certainly must take exception to that. The conditions may be just as pressing for a wharf upon a river as upon a lake or upon tidal waters. But I must say that the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite that no docks should be built by the government does not come with good grace from them. The principle that I held to when these docks were being voted under the late government, I hold to to-day. As to the localities in which these docks are being built, I will say, as I said last year, that I am not conversant with all the conditions, and for that reason, am not able to discuss the merits of these wharfs. But I do not believe there is one man in the House who will oppose the construction of a wharf in his own locality, where the conditions are such as to make it desirable that a wharf should be constructed.

Mr. McALISTER. I think we should get some information as to the location of this block. Evidently, a survey has been made. Is the block to be near the buoy where the boat lands now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is to be opposite the church.

Mr. McALISTER. How far is that above the wharf that was proposed to be built before?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are building further out than where it was supposed to be last year.

Mr. McALISTER. When this wharf was up before the House on a previous occasion, complaint was made that it was to be built at the shallowest part of the coast in that locality, and that if it were built a little to the west of this it would be built in a place where the water would be deeper and not only that, but that there was a cape there which would shelter it from westerly winds. Why was not the dock located where it would be of most benefit to the people?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When I stated where it was likely to be built, I gave the information furnished by the chief engineer. The location will be chosen by the chief engineer and he would select the place that is best, without regard to individual interests.

Harbours and Rivers, Quebec—River Saguenay, below Chicoutimi—Dredging (re-vote) ..... $4,000

Mr. BERGERON. Is that dredging done by contract or by a government dredge ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is intended to be done by the government dredge, worked by men to be hired by the government.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they at work now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Because they have not a dredge available at present.

Mr. BERGERON. When will you have it ? I think this vote has been here for some time. It is a standing invitation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer informs me that the only reason dredging has not been done heretofore, is because there has not been a dredge.

Mr. BERGERON. Do you expect to have one soon ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Do you want a big dredge or a small one ? What is the depth of the water there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. An elevator dredge is the dredge required.

Mr. FOSTER. Who has the contract for the removal of rocks ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The work is done under the supervision of the resident engineer, Mr. Breen, in the city of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is doing the work ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is done by the foreman. The work of removing rocks is done under the direction of the engineer, Mr. Breen, of Quebec, and under the immediate supervision of a foreman appointed by him.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the name of the foreman ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is done by local men from time to time, whenever the work is to be performed.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a large operation ; $200 is the total amount. You get an engineer to look after it in the first place and several foremen, and there must be an immense amount spent in this stone-gathering.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The whole time of the engineer is not given to this.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend know where the work is being done ?

Mr. MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer informs me that this class of work is being performed at a couple of places.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there anything being done at Jersey Cove ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer does not remember.

Mr. BERGERON. There is something being done at Jersey Cove in Gaspé.

The PRIME MINISTER. What is being done there ?

Mr. BERGERON. The government have been paying money to have stone removed, and instead of doing so, a man by the name of Morin has been taking the stone to make roads there. Whenever he could not use it for the road, he threw it down on the shore, and the consequence is that the fishermen cannot pass. He committed a nuisance there instead of doing good, and the government are paying for it.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend perhaps refers to a circumstance that occurred a year or two ago. I know that the account has been in suspense, and that the minister refused to pay it because the money was not expended according to appropriation.

Mr. BERGERON. We are asked to request the government not to pay that man until they are satisfied he is doing the work properly.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries could assist the government, because he has the plaint of the aggrieved parties. I have a copy of the letter here.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never had it called to my attention.

St. Jérôme—Lake St. John wharf ..... $4,500

Mr. BERGERON. Where is St. Jerome ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a new parish in the Lake St. John region.

Chicoutimi Wharf—Repairs, painting shed, &c. .... $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is the government building sheds on wharfs, as well as wharfs ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Freight sheds.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we leave Chicoutimi, is there anything more that can be done there ? I see the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Savard) near the minister. Is there anything he may have forgotten ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, he has not forgotten anything.

Isle Verte—Extension of wharf and new freight shed ..... $4,500

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have an explanation of that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for an extension of the wharf and a new freight shed to cost $4,500.

Mr. FOSTER. What is this freight shed to cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Eight hundred dollars; extension of wharf, $2,800; repairs to old wharf, $900, making $4,500.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it possible that we are, on these little wharfs, building sheds at a cost of $800?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You could not allow any one else to build upon the wharf.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You have to build freight sheds on many of these new wharfs. It has been done in many cases.

Mr. FOSTER. I never heard of it being done in the maritime provinces.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. Supposing that a steamer is running to a wharf, carrying perhaps the produce of 200 farmers. When the steamer arrives in the evening these goods have to be put under cover until they can be hauled away; otherwise they would be destroyed. It is a government wharf and you must have a small freight shed.

It being One o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Temiscouata Lake—Landing piers ..... $1,200

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This is a new work. There is a great deal of colonization going on along Lake Temiscouata, and these piers are needed for vessels by which the people may have communication with the rest of the world. The lake is about as wide as Lake Megantic. Lumbermen are there in large numbers, and settlers follow the lumbermen.

St. Roch des Aulnaies—Wharf (revote)..... $3,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). This is near Grosse Isle. It is expected to cost $8,800. The work is now going on.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it under contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. It was considered last session, and there was a vote.

Mr. HAGGART. We want now an assurance from the minister that all these works will be let by contract.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whenever it is reasonably possible, that will be done. Of course, I cannot speak for the real minister, but I think he will read what I say, and I have no doubt will be governed by what I say.

Mr. HAGGART. But you should be in a position to make a promise that the law will be carried out.

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whenever it is reasonable to have it done by contract, it will be done so. The engineer tells me that repairs must be excepted.

Mr. HAGGART. I mean new works of construction. It may be impossible in many cases to make repairs by contract.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The general principle should be adopted, that the work must be done by tender and contract, and if in any case that principle is not adhered to, it must be, in my judgment, a special case, there must be special conditions that would warrant a departure from the wholesome doctrine of tender and contract.

Mr. BERGERON. I take the word of my hon. friend. Last year I took the word of the Minister of Finance. But, of course, as the Minister of Finance said last year, and as the Postmaster General says now, they have only given their own word. Now, the Minister of Public Works will come back here and will not consider himself bound by these promises, as we have seen in the past. It is very awkward not to have the Minister of Public Works here, so that next session we can hold him to his promises.

The PRIME MINISTER. There has been no departure from the promises we made here last year.

Rivière du Sud—To complete protection of river banks ..... $15,000

The PRIME MINISTER. This is to complete a work which was undertaken by the late government. It is in the county of Montmagny. The bridge at Montmagny station was alleged to be damaged, and it is to repair that work.

Mr. HAGGART. The Prime Minister is astray as to the late government commencing it, it was commenced by his own government. If I remember right, it was in Judge Choquette's county. I went down and looked over the ground, and did not think the government were at all responsible, and refused to undertake the work.

Cap Santé—Wharf (revote, $2,000) ..... $3,500

Mr. BERGERON. There is going to be an election there. Will that work be done by contract or day's work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The building is now going on. This is not being done by contract. Cap Santé is a wharf already in existence that the government has purchased and is repairing. Repairs are not being done by contract.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will it cost altogether?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $2,000 were paid for the purchase and filling, and it is expected the $3,500 will complete the work.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you gone into the policy of purchasing wharfs?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some time when a wharf is desired it is better to purchase a dilapidated wharf and rebuild it than to build a new one.

Mr. BERGERON. This will prove an awkward policy. You will be asked to buy all the wharfs in the country, or, at least, to keep them in repair.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is not a new work. The hon. gentlemen opposite introduced the policy at Sault Ste. Marie when Mr. Plummer's wharf was bought for a matter of $7,000. The reason given was, that part of a wharf was already there, and they simply bought it and added to it, and paid Mr. Plummer $7,000 for it.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember rightly, Mr. Plummer conveyed it over to the government without receiving anything for it whatever.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not at all, you had to pay him for it afterwards.

River Batiscan—Dredging channel at mouth ..... $8,000

The PRIME MINISTER. This is one of the harbours at which the boats of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company call.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is the most important lumber centre, outside of Three Rivers, west of Quebec, in the province of Quebec. It is the place where the two largest mills in the province are situated—those of Price Bros., and those of the St. Maurice Lumber Company; and an American concern is there also. It is one of the great shipping places on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. HAGGART. How far up the River Batiscan are these mills situated?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are about half a mile from the mouth.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the estimated cost of this work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $8,000. This will dredge a channel fifty feet wide to a depth of five feet at low water, for a distance of 5,000 feet.

Mr. BERGERON. How is that work being done?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. By a dredge owned by Mr. Malone. He is paid at the rate of $80 per day of ten hours, and he has to take out 600 cubic yards a day.

Mr. MULOCK.

Yamaska Lock and Dam—To pay to 'Le Président et les Syndics de la Commune de la Seigneurie d'Yamaska, in full and final settlement of all claims for damages to their lands resulting from the construction of the said works ..... $3,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is that?

The PRIME MINISTER. In 1885 this government built in the Yamaska River a dam and a lock with the object of improving the navigation above the dam. On the west bank of the river is a large flat area of marsh or meadow land known as La Baie de la Vallière, consisting of several thousand acres. It is owned by the farmers of the neighbourhood in common. There are no fences between them, and they have a kind of organization among themselves by which they use it for pasture. While the dam was being built, and after it was built, they complained that their lands would be flooded.

Mr. BERGERON. Who built the dam?

The PRIME MINISTER. This government, at the time Sir Hector Langevin was Minister of Public Works. The object of the dam was to raise the level of the river so to have navigation as far up the river as St. Hyacinthe. The object was not fully accomplished; but I believe navigation was obtained up to St. Aimé, a distance of eighty miles from the mouth of the river. In 1889 a portion of the dam was washed away, and the complaints of the people were regarded as so well-founded that the government never rebuilt the dam, and it is now in the same damaged condition that it has been in since 1889. The government would not undertake to repair the damage, because it would undoubtedly result in the land being flooded over a very large extent. The owners of that property have been making a constant claim upon the government for the damages they suffered during the years the dam was up. They claimed $10,000 damages. We sent an engineer to make an inspection, and, as a result, we have agreed to offer them $3,000 in full settlement of all their demands.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the president of this syndic de la commune?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know a single one of them.

Mr. BERGERON. Who has been dealing with this matter?

The PRIME MINISTER. The secretary of the syndic. The land is tilled as pasture land in common, under a system which has come down from the French regime. For instance, the land is parcelled out and surveyed, and each farmer is entitled to so many tons of hay and pasture for so many head of cattle according to the size of his farm.

Mr. BERGERON. How many families are there ?

Mr. R. M. S. MIGNAULT (Yamaska). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, those lands were flooded in 1889. The president of the commune at that time was Mr. Salva. Now it is Mr. Parent who is president of the commune. It is an incorporated commune, with a president and ten syndics.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) How many people or how many families are interested in that commune ?

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) There are 333 people who have rights in that commune. Each of those owners is entitled to so many tons of hay and pasture for so many head of cattle. I could not give the exact number of the head of cattle.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) How have those proprietors acquired those rights ?

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) They were handed over to them by the seignior de Pounancourt.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) So this vote of $3,000 is going to be distributed among three hundred families ?

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) That sum of money is going to be handed over to the syndics of the commune, who will settle the claims of the interested parties. Those damages were caused by the flooding of the lands in 1889. Every year, since this dam was built, inundations have occurred, but the inundation of 1889 was more considerable than those of the preceding years.

In 1891, the government had a dam built on a small channel which carried the waters into the main dam. Above that latter dam there is a small channel which drains the surrounding lands and carries the water into the Yamaska River. In 1889, a large portion of the waters, instead of flowing into the Yamaska River, passed through that small channel and was thrown over the adjoining lands causing considerable damage to the meadows and pasture lands. Channels were formed which completely destroyed the meadows. The farmers claimed they had lost $10,000. The farmers not only lost thousands of tons of hay but from 150 200 head of cattle were destroyed by the inundation, and that is the reason why the claimants asked the government a compensation for the damages suffered.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Is the dam still causing damages ?

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) Since that little channel was built the lands have not been flooded and the farmers have suffered no more damages.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Do you know whether the government intend to remove the dam in case it should not be rebuilt ?

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) I think my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was mistaken when he stated a little while ago that after the dam was washed away it was never rebuilt. As a matter of fact it was repaired by the government and even after that damages were caused to the lands.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Is the dam up there at present ?

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) Yes, and the level of the Yamaska River, which is raised from four to five feet overflows through a little channel over a large flat area of marsh or meadow land ; and as a matter of fact the land there is so low that I do not think there is more than twenty inches from the level of the lower part of the river to the dam, and the water of the Lake St. Peter flows back as far as that point. The flooding of those lands has caused damages to the meadows and farmers can no longer grow any hay where formerly they used to raise thousands of trusses of hay. There is even a portion of those lands which is no longer fit for pasture purposes, and, moreover, as I said, a large number of head of cattle were destroyed.

Mr. BERGERON. The story of the hon. gentleman from Yamaska (Mr. Mignault) is very interesting, and if what he says is true, as I have no doubt it is, then these people had good claims against the government of Canada in law, and it is most extraordinary that they never applied for a fiat to take proceedings against the government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mignault) says that in one year alone they suffered over $10,000 damages and that subsequently 200 head of cattle were destroyed by the inundation, and subsequently they lost thousands of tons of hay. If that is so why did not the government do them justice ? They have certainly claimed they lost $25,000, but the government now proposes to give them only $3,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. We intend to offer them that.

Mr. BERGERON. There is nothing paid yet ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. BERGERON. But the hon. member for Yamaska (Mr. Mignault) says they have accepted the $3,000, and if they have lost $25,000 through the neglect of the government, surely that is not doing them justice. I presume if they accept this money the government of Canada will for ever get a release of those claims.

The PRIME MINISTER. They must give a release on every claim.

Mr. HAGGART. It is very peculiar that this course should have been adopted without resorting to the ordinary means of expropriation. Has there ever been any consideration given these people before on account of these claims?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The practical result of the construction of the dam by the government has been to throw a certain quantity of water on these lands which are held in common for pasture purposes.

Mr. HAGGART. The point is whether they have received any remuneration before.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There was no remuneration before in any manner whatever.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you a report from any of your officers as to the damage done by this dam?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, we have a report that the damage was caused and that the people claimed $10,000, but as I have said, nothing was ever paid.

Mr. HAGGART. I have an idea that this claim about the Baie de Vallière was up here before.

Mr. BERGERON. This is for the Petit Chenal?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, I remember there was something about that before.

The PRIME MINISTER. That was in respect to the Petit Chenal which was discussed in the House before in reference to a bar which was placed there to prevent the flow of the water coming in.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you an idea of how much that barrier cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not remember the amount.

Mr. BERGERON. I have somewhat of a grudge against the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock). He has not sent me that circular which he has sent to some of our Liberal friends in the country, and if he had I would ask him for an appropriation something like this for my own county. There is between Valleyfield and the River St. Louis a channel built by the government some years ago and which caused last spring a good deal of damage. The water going through that channel acts as a feeder for the manufactories in Beauharnois, and there is an employee of the government to keep the water in proper level. Last fall when the ice took, this was not properly kept, and the water flowed over the banks and went into the cellars of the farmers and caused a great deal of damage. The government has been asked to compensate for these damages to the extent of $1,500 or $1,800, and I do not think that the acting minister even answered their claims, and there is nothing in the estimates to provide for them. I do not see why the people there should not be treated in the same way as our friends in Yamaska. They are the same class of people; good respectable farmers and they deserve some consideration from the Prime Minister, because they supported his government at the last election. I am very sorry that the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock) did not address that circular to me, because I would have advised him as to the wants of these people, and if the government want to do what is fair and just they would have put the sum in the estimates. When the people in my county hear that $3,000 has been given to some of our friends in Yamaska, and when their claim is exactly the same, they will be surprised that the government should make fish of one and flesh of another. I hope when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) is sending out another circular he will send one to me, because I have many cases to bring to his attention.

Mr. HAGGART.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I assumed that because of the economical views of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) that if I had addressed that circular to him he would have thrown it into the waste paper basket.

The PRIME MINISTER. He is not an economist for Beauharnois.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told that the difficulty which the hon. gentleman refers to was not the fault of the government but of Seigneur Ellis of Beauharnois, and there is a question on the part of the people who suffered damage as to whether or not they would proceed by way of petition of right. If my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) proposes to throw aside all his economical views expressed this morning, and wishes to advocate the real substantial wants of his constituents, I will be pleased to learn his views in time for the estimates next session.

Mr. BERGERON. That is very kind of the minister, but I have seen economy practised here so many years by the Conservative government, that I have not yet been able to reconcile myself to the very lavish expenditures made by the Liberal government. If I had received that circular, I would have looked at matters in a different way. The hon. gentleman is badly posted about this ditch. Formerly all that land belonged to the seigniors, and they made a bargain with a man called John Symons, who had a mill on the River St. Louis but could not get all the water he wanted, by which they allowed him to make that ditch from the lake to the river. It was a very shallow thing, about 2 feet of water, and the government some years ago had to deepen it to about 6 feet, so as to carry away more water. The work is a government work. There were some people who claimed to own the whole thing and they were granted a petition of right but never used it. The government own half an acre on each side, and nobody protested against the government doing work there. The damages that were caused last fall would entitle the people to ask the government to compensate them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why did you not bring it to my attention?

Mr. BERGERON. I was under the impression that we had to deal with a very economical government, but when I see so many grants being given—and in saying this I am not objecting to the present vote—a work of this kind should certainly be provided and I would have been delighted to ask for it.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the dam up there at present?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. The easement will still be exercised?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Is not the embankment that the government put up for the purpose of preventing an overflow of these lands working well?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no such embankment and the dam throws the water over the adjoining lands.

Mr. BERGERON. There is an embankment at the head of the Petit Chenal.

Mr. HAGGART. I have told the First Minister that I remembered something about a vote for this purpose. As I understand this the water came from the Yamaska River and was dammed up by this dam and flowed into a little channel, and thence overflowed the land, and there was a grant given for the purpose of protecting the bridge across this and keeping the water from overflowing.

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) wants to know whether the little channel is still extant. It is still there, and it serves a very useful purpose, as, since it was built, it has kept the water from overflowing.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) This bar is a permanent work, is it not?

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) Yes.

Richelleu River—Boom east side of entrance to draw-bridge of Central Vermont Railway at St. John..... $1,500

Mr. HAGGART. Do you charge for the use of these booms?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. HAGGART. On what principle do you build booms down there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To keep the logs from interfering with navigation and to guide boats through the entrance.

St. Lambert—Cribwork and protection wall ..... $10,000

Mr. VICTOR GEOFFRION (Chambly and Verchères). Every year the inhabitants occupying the river front at St. Lambert, right opposite Montreal, have been suffering in the spring. When the ice is moved down by the current, it damages the river front, and the inhabitants have petitioned the government to have some protection built there. In the beginning they did not suffer so much, but last year the damage was so great that they had to remove their houses and buildings and their roads about seven feet away. Every year the damage is increasing, and the people think that if ever an appropriation would be warranted by the public interest, it would be in this case. Those who know the locality know that the river front forms a curve on which the ice strikes as it passes down. The preceding government considered the matter and found the claim a just one. If I remember well, Sir Hector Langevin when Minister of Public Works, promised the people of that locality, although they had not suffered so much then as they do now, that he would have some protection work erected, but nothing has yet been done although the people have been suffering more and more every year. It is only reasonable that this work should be done to guard against further damages. My hon. friend need not imagine that there is any political capital in this vote, because my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) knows that the people there are his political friends, and if they ask the government to do this work it is because they are suffering in the way I have stated, and it is only fair that it should be done.

Mr. BERGERON. What would be the whole cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $16,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How are you going to build it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. By tender. It is to be cribwork along the road and it will be over 1,500 feet long.

Mr. BERGERON. If you want to do any work that will be permanent and effective, you will have to make it 2,000 or 3,000 feet long.

Mr. FOSTER. It is instructive to see the light and jocose way in which the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock) is dealing with the country's money which has come into his hands for administration to a certain extent. Do we understand the principle upon which we are now going? If we undertake to build cribwork to protect the banks of all the rivers of this country from the corroding effects of the water, we have undertaken a big task. That is what I understand—the water is eating out the banks, and carrying them away and thus threatening the land adjoining. That is going on in every river from British Columbia to Cape Breton.

Mr. CHARLTON. But this is within the city limits.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see that this makes any difference. Besides, I understand that it is outside the city limits.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The information given to me is that a pier has been constructed from the Victoria bridge down the stream of the St. Lawrence, that is easterly, a distance of nearly 3,000 feet, and approaching St. Helen's Island. The effect of the construction of that pier is to throw to the other side a large volume of water that formerly flowed down the north side.

Mr. HAGGART. What engineer reported that? It is a most extraordinary thing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It does not require an engineer to understand that. The chief engineer, who is familiar with the works, is of the opinion that it must have that effect. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has only to see the sketch—

Mr. HAGGART. I know; I have been on the pier.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The water cannot go to the north as it formerly did, and it is thrown upon the south shore.

Mr. BERGERON. My impression is that the spending of this money may do good—I hope it will. But I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), that it would be better to have the written opinion of the engineer. There might be another way to accomplish the object in view. No doubt the throwing of this water to the south has relieved Montreal of danger from spring inundations, but I believe it has done harm on the south. I think I have heard engineers express the opinion that the only way to avoid damage from this water being turned to the south would be to deepen the channel between St. Helen's Island and the south shore.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is rock.

Mr. BERGERON. But you work in rock as well as in other material. I am only throwing out the suggestion. I think before the hon. gentleman involves the country in the expense of this work, he should get the best opinion as to what should be done, so that the money may be spent usefully and not wasted.

Mr. TALBOT. By deepening the channel to the south, would you not deprive the harbour of that much water?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BERGERON. No, because the danger is from the heavy flow in the spring.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very important matter, irrespective of any sympathy we may have for a place that is being damaged as this is said to be. This is either one of two things—either the minister is commencing a line of expenditure which will commit this Dominion to expending money for the protection of the banks of every river in Canada, or else the injury complained of is due to some previous work carried on by the Dominion. If the latter be the case, it removes it from the category to which I have objected. But before we undertake in this or in any case the expenditure of a large sum of money to protect the banks of a river, we ought to be perfectly certain that the damage is actually caused by the work precedent built by this government, for which, of course, the people who are being injured are not responsible. Is it not a fact that St. Helen's Island intervenes between the pier that was built and the south shore on which these lands are situated, so as to protect them from the force of the current? In any case, before we undertake such an expenditure, ought we not to have the best engineering report that we can get as to the damages caused, and by what they are caused? It is not quite sufficient for the minister to say that, the pier having been built we must undertake, for all time, the protection of the south bank. A matter of this kind is so important that it ought to be backed up by the written and reasoned report of the engineer, to satisfy us that we ought to undertake the expenditure. When I was in the cabinet, we were petitioned year after year to protect the banks of rivers where there was a sharp turn and the water was eating into the banks, eating away large portions of surrounding lands. We refused to undertake such works, on the ground that if we undertook such works, there would be no end to it, and that it did not fall within our duty, but was a matter for individuals or municipalities, or localities to undertake. If we are not to commit ourselves to expenditures of that kind, we must be certain that the injury is due to something that we have previously done. In such a case there may be reason for our doing perhaps the whole of the work—perhaps assisting the municipality in doing it. But we have no report.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, we have. I can say that personally I was interviewed by the Mayor of St. Lambert and by my hon. friend from Chambly (Mr. Geoffrion), and I have a distinct recollection that the Mayor of St. Lambert showed me a protest which he had filed with the authorities when the work was made in the harbour of Montreal. I think it was addressed to the harbour commissioners, and was a protest against the erection of these works on the very ground that it would have the effect that has since followed. They feared that the erection of these works would throw the current on the south side and corrode the bank, and do the very damage that has been done.

Mr. HAGGART. How far is the work that it is proposed to erect, from the embankment that was built by the government?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The guard-pier runs parallel to the current of water that flows under the Victoria Bridge, some 3,000 feet down. The ice and water that flow under the bridge spread out, some of it passing alongside the city on the north side of the island, and another part on the south side, both streams running through without doing any harm. The north side has a deep channel and the south side a shallow channel. This pier prevents the water and ice from flowing to the north side, and thus throws a great quantity on the south side, immediately opposite this guard-pier. It is proposed now to construct this protective work at the south side opposite the pier, commencing a short distance below the Victoria Bridge, perhaps one or two hundred feet.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you any reports in the department of the actual rise of water caused by this erection? Have you any actual figures?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer informs me that Mr. Fraser, one of the engineers of the department, has reported.

Mr. HAGGART. We would like that report.

Graham Wharf—To complete ..... $4,000

Mr. BERGERON. Where is this?

Mr. H. S. HARWOOD (Vaudreuil). Graham's wharf is on the Grande Ligne, between Rigaud and Vaudreuil, four miles from Rigaud village, opposite St. Placide, on the Ottawa. It is on the west side of the river.

Mr. BERGERON. Do boats stop there?

Mr. HARWOOD. All the market boats. This is a wharf formerly built by a Mr. Graham, a wood merchant, and up to ten or twelve years ago, he kept up the wharf for his own private business, loading cordwood. When he gave it up, the wharf went to ruin. Seeing the great importance of the wharf, I asked the government to rebuild it. Mr. Graham giving the old wharf, giving the land and the road to go to it, for nothing. The wharf will be a convenience to the parish of St. Marc, five miles away.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there a village near?

Mr. HARWOOD. There is a small settlement, and there is a good country surrounding. This sum will complete the repairs.

Coteau Landing—Dredging (revote) ..... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the Gauthier contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This work is being done by L. Cohen & Son, contractors, Montreal. They have been working there for two years.

Mr. DAVIN. Has Gauthier ceased to work for the department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Has he transferred his contract to anybody else?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have no knowledge of that.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did you pay Gauthier until to-day for dredging at Coteau?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This work has nothing to do with Gauthier. Gauthier has ceased to work for the department.

Mr. BERGERON. Gauthier's dredging took place near the old Canada Atlantic Railway wharf; where is this being done?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This work has been let by tender to Cohen & Son. A. W. Fleck, treasurer of the Canada Atlantic Railway, and secretary of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway, asked for dredging to be done in connection with the elevator dock at Coteau Landing.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the work Gauthier was doing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is a continuation of that work, but it has nothing to do with Gauthier. He is away, and we are now carrying out this dredging in a fair and square way.

Mr. DAVIN. When did Gauthier cease to work for the department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He only worked one season, he ceased about two seasons ago.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money was paid to Gauthier?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not the faintest idea. The matter was closed up a year or two ago.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been paid for this work up to date, the work performed at that point, no matter whether by Gauthier or Cohen?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman mean the dredging that has been done at this particular point for an elevator?

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, dredging has been going on at Coteau Landing for three seasons at least, either at the wharf or the elevator site, or in the vicinity. What has been spent up to date on that work ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer informs me that the total expenditure on dredging at this point for the purpose, as I understand, of the Canada Atlantic Railway elevator and wharf, has been $18,138.16.

Mr. BERGERON. That was the Gauthier contract ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It includes all that has been paid to Mr. Gauthier and to other people who have done any dredging.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the others ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer cannot recollect whether there was dredging done by others than Mr. Gauthier, but whatever dredging was done by Mr. Gauthier, or anybody else, cost $18,138.16.

Mr. DAVIN. This is a most extraordinary spectacle. Here is the minister, here is the deputy minister, and here is another officer of the department, and these officials cannot tell him whether any other persons besides Gauthier have been working there. It is a pretty nice state of affairs.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How many years is the hon. gentleman speaking of ?

Mr. DAVIN. Has there been any other dredging other than that done by Gauthier in the last three years ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. DAVIN. Why not say so in a straightforward manner, instead of dodging in the manner we have witnessed ?

Mr. BERGERON. Will this $2,000 complete the work ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is all that it is proposed to expend this year, but the engineer informs me that it will be advantageous to do more dredging, and that it will cost about $7,000 to complete it.

Mr. BERGERON. I have not the contract for the construction of the Soulanges Canal here, but that contract must have provided for the opening of the Soulanges Canal. I call the attention of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals to this, that the work of opening the Soulanges Canal must have been going on at the place where this dredging is being done. Mr. Macdonald, or whoever was the contractor for the dredging of the opening of the Soulanges Canal, must have been working where this dredging is being done. The contract was given to Gauthier by the hon. Minister of Public

Mr. MULOCK.

Works (Mr. Tarte), or rather the contract was offered to Gauthier. When the minister found out that he could spend some money, he gave a contract to Gauthier to deepen the water at the old Canada Atlantic wharf, so as to facilitate the transshipment of grain from the Canada Atlantic Company's elevators into barges. That was three years ago. The object was to provide 14 feet of water so as to allow barges drawing that depth of water to load grain there and go down to the Soulanges Canal. The contract was given to Gauthier for $21,000. Gauthier never worked there at all. I do not believe he ever went there at all. He asked Mr. Macdonald, who had barges there, to do that work, and he pocketed the profits. I have tried to get the details of this transaction, but I have not yet succeeded, although I have a pile of papers from the Department of Public Works. But, it has never been denied that Mr. Macdonald did the work for $5 an hour, while Gauthier was receiving $8 an hour, or $30 a day, which he was putting in his pocket. I want to know if this $2,000 will put a stop to this squandering of money. The country must have paid twice for all that work. The man who had the contract for the opening of the Soulanges Canal must have had the contract for dredging at this very same place, as it is all comprised within the same area. I want to know if the $2,000 will put an end to this sort of thing ?

Mr. DAVIN. He says it will take $7,000 more.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This work is called for by the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, public carriers ; it is in their interest and in the interest of the public. I do not think it is squandering money to provide facilities for vessels coming to their elevator. The government do not think so either.

Mr. BERGERON. Do you not think that spending money twice is squandering money ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been no such transaction as the hon. gentleman mentions. There has been good value received, I am informed by the engineer, for every dollar spent. It is not the slightest consequence who owns the dredge or who gets the money, as long as the public get good value for the money spent. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the question as to who gets the money has anything to do with it. I think when we spend money for the removal of so many cubic yards of earth, the water is just as navigable, no matter who removes the earth or receives the money for it. I am informed by the engineer that a fair market price was paid for the service rendered, and that value was received. If that is the case, there is nothing to discuss as to the past.

As to the $2,000, I am informed that this is all that it is contemplated spending this year, and that to complete the work will cost about $7,000 more.

Mr. DAVIN. We are, evidently, in regard to explanations respecting public works and railways and canals, moving in a circle. First, the hon. minister arranges the matter, then he asks the engineer to approve, he gets the engineer to approve, and when we come here and ask him why this was done, he tells us that the engineer has approved of it. What could the engineer do but approve of it? We had the same thing in regard to the Railway Department the other night. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals showed that the hon. Minister of Railways had dictated to the engineer what he should advise, and then he came here and said: I have the sanction of the engineer. This is a beautiful circle in which these hon. gentlemen move.

Mr. FOSTER. And this is a beautiful sentiment that the hon. acting Minister of Public Works has just enunciated. He thinks it is necessary and proper, whenever a public or private corporation want the government to spend money to help them to carry out their enterprises, that the government should step in and make a harbour for every railway company, dig around the wharf of every corporation, and do that with the public money, presumably in the public interest, and without any regard to the private or public enterprise which is being carried on. But, better than that, and more advanced, is the doctrine championed to-day by the hon. gentlemen here in this House to-day, once before by the actual Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), and now by the acting Minister of Public Works, that it makes no matter who does the work provided so much is taken out for so much money. I spoke about the go-between the other day. Here is the champion of the go-between. A man sitting in his office in Montreal, foreign to anything like dredging work, being a relation of the hon. Minister of Public Works, is asked by the minister if he would not like to tender for a contract at Coteau. He takes sixteen days to think it over, then he says he would. In sixteen days he has found that he can get a man who has a tug and dredge at Coteau, and who says: I will do it for half of what you get. Gauthier takes the contract, the work is done while he is sitting in his office, and the public is mulcted by the amount of his commission on that work. The man who does the work and makes the wage gets $5 a day, while this man gets the overplus. That is the doctrine of the go-between. There is the champion of the go-between.

Rivière Chateauguay—Dredging (revote,
$1,500) ..... $5,000

Mr. BERGERON. Which dredge is working there now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Little Giant.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is she working?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At the mouth of the River Chateauguay.

Mr. BERGERON. How much was done, there last year, how much did it cost, and by what dredge?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Last year there were 7,630 yards consisting of boulders, hard pan and clay. It is navigated by the steamers Filgate and Chateauguay, which run between Beauharnois and Nun's Island and Lachine and Montreal daily. The work has been continued by the T. F. Moore estate. The vote of $5,000 was required to continue the dredging which was commenced in 1898, and also certain dredging at certain shoals in the river.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not object to that vote, for I think the money is well spent. The minister is misinformed as to the steamer Filgate. She is navigating in some other part of the world, and has not been there for three years. I am told by the pilot of the steamer Chateauguay, that there is quicksand there, and that you will have to use piling, for if there is only ordinary dredging it will fill up every year. I would like the minister to consult his engineer about that.

Gatineau River—Protection work on east side of river ..... $7,300

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The government some years ago diverted the channel of the Gatineau River by dredging at the eastern side, and as the water was thrown to the eastern shore, these protection works are necessary.

Mr. HAGGART. First of all you dredge a channel at the request of the inhabitants and then you have to provide protection works.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The late government did construct protection works there, and these were found inadequate, and it was necessary to continue them.

Hull—Landing pier ..... $10,000

Mr. HAGGART. What are you building a pier at Hull for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a pier at the foot of Elizabeth street in Hull, just below the Interprovincial bridge. It is to provide facilities for vessels navigating the Ottawa.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there any vessel landing there?

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright). The vote now submitted by the acting Minister of Public Works is for a landing pier to be constructed at a distance of about 200 feet from the Interprovincial bridge, now under construction. I do not think that any one will dispute the advisability of this wharf being constructed at this particular point. It will be of considerable benefit not only to the city of Hull, but also to the Gatineau region and to Pontiac County. Every one knows that the transportation of freight by waterway costs a good deal less than by rail, and the freight intended for the extensive region I have referred to, will be landed at that wharf and carried immediately on the Gatineau Railway and on the Pontiac Pacific Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the railway go to this wharf?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. The intention is to have a siding to the wharf. Every one knows the extensive traffic carried on with the city of Hull, especially in the lumber trade. There is no wharf at Hull with the exception of the ferry landing, and the wharf belonging to private individuals, and these are altogether insufficient for the wants of the trade. It will be readily seen that in the absence of a wharf great inconvenience has been experienced by the people of Hull in getting their freight from Montreal and other points via the Ottawa River. The Ottawa Navigation Company, which plies several steamers, are now obliged to land their freight on the Ottawa side, with the result that the people of the city of Hull are obliged to cart it backwards and forwards four miles each way; in all a distance of eight miles. I submit to hon. gentlemen that this work is an absolute necessity.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that work be done by tender and contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will.

Mr. BERGERON. All right.

Greece's Point—Wharf ..... $3,000

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that?

Mr. HAGGART. Why, this is on the canal. Surely you have wharfage enough on the canal without that.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that on the Grenville Canal?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The accommodation there is inadequate, and the forwarding companies are pressing for this wharf for the accommodation of their trade.

Sorel, P.Q., ice piers ..... $8,200

Mr. BERGERON. What are these?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are to protect the harbour from ice in the spring. Large numbers of vessels call there, some owned by the government and some by private citizens.

Grand Vallee, pier ..... $2,000

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is at Grand Vallee des Monts, on the north shore of Gaspé County. It is a shelter for fishing boats, and it is a point which is much exposed to storms.

Depot Harbour, Ontario—Breakwater .... $50,000

Mr. HAGGART. What will this cost altogether?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $150,000. There is an island in the centre of the harbour, and it is proposed to extend a pier from the existing pier to the island, and this will afford complete shelter. Depot Harbour is the terminus of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway. It is about three miles from Parry Sound, and there is another small village or town springing up there.

Sarnia—Dredging ..... $11,250

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to call the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works to a petition which was sent to the minister early this session, in regard to the dredging of the Napanee River. The department has had its engineers up there staking out the place where dredging is required, but I do not see any vote in the estimates for doing the work. It is very much needed, and I would like to know what the minister has to say about it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A preliminary survey has been made recently, but the report has not yet been made, and the matter has not yet got to that matured stage to enable the work to be done this year. The hon. gentleman spoke to me about it, and the moment he did so I gave instructions to have a survey made. My recollection is that it was near the close of the session when he spoke to me.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. gentleman's letter to me is dated March 21.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may say to my hon. friend that a great deal of dredging has to be refused simply because we have not sufficient dredging plant. I am not aware that any dredging plant would be available for that work even if a vote were taken for it this year.

Mr. WILSON. I might call the attention of the hon. gentleman to a letter which I received from Mr. Tarte, dated the 7th of March, in which he says:

In answer to your letter of yesterday, I may say that the department has all the information that is necessary to deal with the matter you speak of when the supplementary estimates come.

I do not think the answer given by the acting minister is sufficient, that the department have not the information, because I have the statement of the minister over his own signature that they had the information. Only a small amount of dredging has to be done. I suppose three or four thousand dollars would be sufficient to make the navigation satisfactory in the Napanee River. I suppose $3,000 to $4,000, or less, will do all the work required to make navigation satisfactory. I do urge the minister to have this work done. I had reason to suppose that it would be in the supplementaries from the fact that he had all the information necessary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the hon. gentleman brought the matter to my attention, I at once communicated with the chief engineer. I knew nothing about Mr. Tarte having written such a letter, and I am told by the chief engineer that he was in error. When I could not get the information to deal with the matter otherwise, the chief engineer sent Mr. Fraser to Napanee.

Mr. WILSON. How long ago?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is about two or three weeks since he returned.

Mr. WILSON. He must have gone elsewhere and did not come right back.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer has the season's work to look after. The order was given to him, but he could not drop every order to proceed to Napanee at once. The hon. gentleman has no ground of complaint against me. I acted with the greatest diligence and in the best faith, and Mr. Tarte was in error. That is all. The report of Mr. Fraser has not yet been made.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the depth of water in the Sarnia ditch?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About four or five feet.

Port Hope Harbour—Dredging, $5,000; repairs to piers, $2,000 ..... $7,000

Mr. CRAIG. I wish to express my approval of this vote. Port Hope is one of the most important harbours on the north shore of Lake Ontario, and it is hoped that at no distant day it will be the harbour where the Trent Valley Canal will enter the lake. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the repairs will go on very soon?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know of no reason why they should not proceed as soon as parliament gives the money.

Lancaster—Wharf ..... $5,000

Mr. DAVIN. Is this to be done by tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Nation River, north branch—Purchase of existing riparian rights and removal of dam, parties interested contributing.... $2,500

Mr. HAGGART. What is that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The dam had been erected many years ago, and fell into decay, but it had backed up the water on large quantities of land, and submerged some lands which it is claimed are very valuable. In 1893 parliament voted a sum for the buying out of the ownership in that water privilege, but for some reason or other, the matter was not completed, and the vote lapsed. In 1894-5 the late government repeated the vote, but still allowed it to lapse.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought that that was deepening?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, for acquiring the rights so as to result in the removal of the abandoned dam and allow these lands to be reclaimed.

Mr. HAGGART. This surely is purely a provincial matter. A party has erected a dam, and exercised the right of overflowing the land above it. In order to give the lands back to the individuals, you purchase the dam and remove it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It does seem extraordinary, and I was surprised, when I found that parliament had twice committed itself to the matter. The public are anxious for the removal of the dam, and have been negotiating with the owners and have arrived at a figure.

Mr. HAGGART. There are hundreds of places just the same in Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman put it in his estimates two years. Here is the item as it appears in his estimates:

Nation River, north branch—Purchase of existing riparian rights and removal of dam, parties interested furnishing one-half the amount ..... $2,500
Oshawa—Repairs to pier (provided harbour is transferred to town corporation, and that the corporation will agree to maintain it in future) revote, $8,000..... $10,000

Mr. HAGGART. Who owns the Oshawa harbour?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know personally. It is owned by private citizens. We have stipulated that the town is to acquire it.

Pickering Harbour—Repairs to breakwaters and dredging ..... $4,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for the rebuilding of the upper end of the north and east piers, from low water leveling up, and for dredging between the piers for a short distance up.

Toronto Harbour—Work at eastern entrance, &c. (revote) ..... $40,000

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain this?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is aware that when the two piers at the eastern gap were constructed, the westerly one of the two was about eight feet shorter than the other. This westerly one is being extended out 800 feet. That extension will bring it out just as far as the easterly pier, and when it is completed, the process of extending the piers will have to be continued until you get into still water, so as to prevent the washing of the sand. You have got to get beyond the wave line, in fact, to prevent the deposit of sand between the two piers. It is a very necessary work.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the work let by tender ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. It has been let.

Mr. CLARKE. And as to the dredging ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is done at the regular rate by W. E. Phin, who is one of the contractors with Mr. Magann in building the pier. I do not know whether Mr. Magann, is interested in the dredging.

Mr. CLARKE. He gets the work without tender ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At the regular scale of remuneration, $8 per hour for a minimum of 600 cubic yards per day of ten hours.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister (Mr. Mulock), is aware that this dredging has cost considerably more than according to a statement of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), it previously cost under contract. That being so, it seems manifest that tenders should be called for.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know to what the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) in answer to an inquiry gave a statement showing that this work of dredging by Mr. Phin cost more than it had previously cost under contract. I think that will be found in the Auditor General's Report of 1897 or 1898.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer informs me that a contract was let by the late government to Murray & Cleveland, and that of the amount involved in that contract, about $300,000, a comparative small amount, was for dredging.

Mr. CLARKE. There was an immense quantity of dredging.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Most of the contract, I am told, was for the construction of the piers, but it included dredging, which was to be done at 11 cents. As long as the contractors got a satisfactory result from the whole work, I suppose they did not mind giving a low figure for the dredging. The amount paid to Mr. Quinn is 13 cents a cubic yard.

Mr. COCHRANE. How is it measured ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. By scow measurement.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are there officers there, and do they attend to their business, or are they like the other officers—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Temple is there, a thoroughly reliable and hard-working officer.

Mr. CLARKE. A bid was put in by a Toronto firm to do the work at a much lower price.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The department has not received such an offer. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) give me the name ?

Mr. CLARKE. They were the same firm who, within a year or two supplied Mr. Phin with the apparatus to do the work—Coghill & Company.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Phin has no dredges of his own—he is like Gauthier, is he not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He has his own dredge.

Mr. DAVIN. I find in the Auditor General's Report for 1898, a sum of $7,259 paid to Mr. Phin for the work of one dredge, and $2,721 for the work of another—about $10,000 paid to Mr. Phin for work given him without tender.

Mr. CLARKE. Let this item stand until I have an opportunity to consult the Auditor General's Report.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Consider it passed ; but if the hon. gentleman wants to discuss it later, he can do so.

Harbours and rivers, Ontario—Toronto harbour—Diversion of Don and dredging in the harbour (revote)..... $25,000

Mr. CLARKE. Has this work been awarded ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. DAVIN. Would the hon. minister explain—I am an Ontario man, though living in the west—the relation of these works, the eastern entrance and the Don. In 1882, I myself proposed a scheme for opening the eastern gap in the harbour, and there was a great deal of interest in the matter. Are these two in any sense the same work ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No; the eastern gap is now used almost solely by vessels passing between Lake Ontario and Toronto Bay. The diversion of the Don is in connection with another scheme altogether.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the work being done on plans approved of ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The city corporation had Mr. Jennings for their engineer, and the department sent Mr. Roy, and the two have been conferring with a view of devising a scheme to work upon—a general plan, so that the harbour improvements at Toronto shall be carried out otherwise than in a piece-meal fashion. The plan, if carried out, will, doubtless, involve a very considerable expenditure, and it will have to be determined what portion of that expenditure is to be borne by the government and what by the city. Part of the work will be purely local and directly advantageous to the city—reclaiming land, affording extra wharfage, and so on. Part of it may be treated as belonging to navigation. There will have to be an apportionment of the cost. A report upon the scheme has been made, but I have not had time to consider it and bring it to the attention of the government, and until that is done, I doubt that much can be done with this vote.

Harbours and rivers, Ontario—Bronte—
Harbour improvements ..... $5,000

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the minister kindly state the nature of these improvements?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This vote is to make provision, in accordance with estimates approved by the chief engineer, for dredging and repairs, and extension in connection with piers built in the mouth of Twelve-Mile Creek, in order to make the harbour available for vessels drawing 8 feet of water. Dredging, $1,250; sheet piling, $2,460; extension of piers, $12,750; add for superintendent, $540; making a total probable expenditure of $17,000. This $5,000 will be on account of that expenditure.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it the intention to proceed with this work at once?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As soon as parliament votes the money the department will proceed to prepare plans and specifications, and put it under tender in the ordinary way. But there is much time involved in the work of preparation, and it takes two or three months to get the plans and specifications ready, and have the advertisements run the proper time, and get the contract signed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope that every expedition will be used in order to make this harbour available for the purpose intended as soon as possible.

McGregor's Creek—To compensate Messrs. Taylor & Williams in full of all demands for damages to their warehouse at Chatham, resulting from the subsidence and sliding of portions of the left or south bank of this creek, caused by dredging performed by a government dredge ..... $ 250
To pay E. W. Seane in full of his claim for damages caused to property by dredging of creek ..... $5,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This creek in the town of Chatham runs parallel to one of the leading streets, and only a few feet back of the main street itself. Some years ago the government dredged that creek for the purpose of facilitating the flow of water and making it navigable for small boats. On the main street the lots are comparatively shallow, and there is a streak of quicksand under the soil, and when the dredging took place there was a subsidence, the dredge removed the lateral support and there was a subsidence in rear of these lots. The government had an examination made and awarded damages to a number of the property owners. These two were left unadjusted. The $250 claim was considered by Sir Frank Smith when acting Minister of Public Works, and he agreed to pay $250 and signed the memorandum, and parliament voted the sum. But when it came to be paid, the Auditor General would not allow payment, because the wording did not meet the case. The matter has been revived and brought to my attention, and I find the facts as I have stated them. I consider that Sir Frank Smith having authorized the payment and parliament sanctioned it, we are bound to pay it. Up to the present about $12,000 has been paid on all these claims.

Port Burwell—Improvement of harbour.. $30,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to provide for dredging the basin at Port Burwell to a depth of eighteen feet at low water for the accommodation of steam barges. It is to be used by a new ferry service between Port Burwell and Ashtabula, in Pennsylvania, for the transportation of coal. The total expenditure has been estimated at $99,890; this will cover the extension and repairs of the westerly and easterly piers. The work has been going on for some time. The money already voted by parliament is $69,964.

Mr. FOSTER. Has there been any contribution to this by the parties interested?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I think when the work was commenced it was on the distinct basis that they were to provide a certain amount of money, and that this would be supplemented by the government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer has no knowledge of that.

Mr. FOSTER. Negotiations began in our time when I was Minister of Finance. The undertaking has merit in it without doubt. There is the opening of a large trade there if anticipations are fulfilled. In considering the matter we made an arrangement with them by which we proposed to give $25,000, and the company interested was to provide $25,000. When the hon. gentlemen opposite came into office they eliminated that condition, and the Dominion is now paying the whole cost. Of course, it is an incomplete operation, and the ferry boats not having been put on, I suppose no trade has accrued as yet from the other side across the lakes; but there are prospects of a good trade being opened up when the improvements are made.

Mr. CHARLTON. The government preceding the present one never went so far as to place a sum in the estimates, but did, I believe, promise to the promoters of this enterprise a vote of $25,000. I do not think, however, that the condition the hon. member for York refers to was made at that time; that condition, as I understand it, was made with the present government.

Mr. FOSTER. I made that condition myself.

Mr. CHARLTON. However, when the project was placed on foot, about the time that the company who proposed to build the road and put on the ferry should have undertaken operations, the chief promoter of this company, Mr. Worthington, of Detroit, died. He was the financial basis of the company, and his death left the company in such circumstances that they were not able to make the expenditure upon the harbour that they proposed. The matter came to a deadlock. I was instrumental in getting from the present government a considerable amount for the purpose of opening this harbour. It was necessary to do this or let the project fall through. The work is one possessing great merit. The harbour of Port Burwell was erected by the government forty or fifty years ago, and was at one time one of the most important harbours on the north shore of Lake Erie. This harbour was allowed to fall into ruins practically, and at the time it was visited by the hon. Minister of Public Works, a year ago last autumn, there was only eight feet of water at the mouth of the harbour. I accompanied the hon. Minister of Public Works upon his visit, and in looking over the works it was assumed that possibly the portion below water of the old piers that had been put in by the government forty years ago could be utilized to build the superstructure upon. The merits of the scheme were so apparent to the minister that he concluded to waive the conditions that had been made in regard to a contribution on the part of the company towards the construction of the harbour, and agree to make the provision necessary for the construction of harbour at this point. The appropriations were made, and work upon the harbour is very well advanced. The present appropriation of $30,000 will complete the harbour, with a turning basin, or very nearly do so. When the harbour is completed it will be the best harbour, perhaps, on the north shore of Lake Erie, and a harbour whose geographical position makes it an important harbour of refuge, and a harbour which is almost directly opposite the chief American coal ports. It is not more than fifty-eight miles from Erie, Ashtabula, Confeaut and Fair-

Mr. FOSTER.

port. The capacity of the harbour will be ample for all the trade that is likely to centre there, and it will serve the purpose as well for shelter for vessels storm-stressed upon the lake. The purpose of constructing this harbour is to develop the coal trade short line. The railway is about constructed from the harbour of the Michigan Central Railway, and it is proposed to extend it to Ingersoll. It will have a length of thirty-four miles, and will connect with four trunk lines, the Wabash, using the Grand Trunk air line, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Michigan Central Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Arrangements have been made by the company to put on a coal ferry, a vessel capable of carrying twenty-eight loaded cars of a capacity of forty or fifty tons of coal each. The consummation of this project is dependent upon the completion of this harbour. I believe that no public work has been undertaken by the government which has greater merit or will make better returns in the public interest than this one will, and I can most sincerely express the opinion that the policy of the previous government in inaugurating this work, and the policy of the present government in carrying it out to completion, is a good one, and I can also say that it has been necessary to forego the offer made by the company to contribute $25,000 in order to carry out the work at all.

Port Stanley—Wharf ..... $8,000

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to draw the attention of the committee again to this question of dredging. I find in the Auditor General's Report for 1898 that the matter is mentioned as far as the contract with Murray & Cleveland is concerned. The cost of dredging under that contract 685,633 cubic yards was 12 cents. In answer to a question. I asked the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), on February 14, 1898, that hon. gentleman said:

The price paid the contractor was at the usual rate paid by the department for work of that kind, namely, $8 per hour actual working time. The contractor worked from June 29 to November 26 dredging 37,214 cubic yards, the cost per cubic yard being 14½ cents.

Then, he gives the further information that Mr. W. E. Phin, of Brantford, was the contractor. In view of the fact that the department was in possession of the knowledge that the dredging under contract at that time only cost 12 cents per cubic yard, what justification was there for continuing this other contract with Mr. Phin at $8 per hour? According to the admission of the acting Minister of Public Works, Phin was only supposed to dredge 600 cubic yards per day. That is at the rate of 13½ cents per cubic yard. Why did he pay this amount for doing this work when, in consequence of their having called for tenders this work was done for 12 cents a yard? Why should ten per cent more be paid to Phin for doing this work than to this other firm of contractors? I am advised that Mr. Coghill, of Toronto, put in a tender to do the work for $6 an hour, although the hon. minister says that there is no record of any such tender in the department. I think with a work of that magnitude going on in the harbour of Toronto, it is only a business proposition that tenders should have been called for, and that if the experience of the department is that by calling for tenders 10 per cent can be saved, there is no justification for awarding this contract to somebody without tender at a price over and above that for which the work could be done just as well.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whilst the regular going price may be 12, or 13, or 14 cents per cubic yard from time to time, there is no absolutely fixed price, because the cost of labour varies, and I presume the cost of dredging will vary. Who did dredging at 12 cents a yard and when?

Mr. CLARKE. I was just showing you the record of it in the Auditor General's Report.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Was that dredging done by Murray & Cleveland in connection with the same contract?

Mr. CLARKE. I find the item at page Q-146 of the Auditor General's Report for 1898:

Toronto harbour—Murray & Cleveland, expenditure under contract, dredging 685,633 cubic yards at 12 cents... $82,275 96

Why is this not done in a businesslike way? Why not call for tenders and ascertain what the work can be done for? When the work was awarded to Phin, he had no dredging apparatus at all, and that he had to lease a dredging apparatus from a person who had one in Toronto.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The department has tried on several occasions to get tenders for dredging. Last year it called for tenders three times for dredging at Coteau Landing, Southampton and Sauguen. The lowest tender in each case was 14 cents per cubic yard. That is the lowest price at which we could get tenders and the officers of the department consider 13 cents a very fair rate. I remember quite well consulting the chief engineer in reference to making a contract with Mr. Phin for dredging this year, and I asked him if that was a fair rate or whether there would be any advantage in calling for tenders. He cited to me the experience of the department recently, and my own impression is, although I may be in error, that I rejected tenders as being greatly in excess of the current-going rate. I refused to allow some work to go on simply because I thought the tenders were excessive. Perhaps that was when I was acting minister last season. So that, there would be no probability of getting a price lower than 13 cents. The engineer certified to me that that was a fair and reasonable rate, and, under these circumstances, I think I had a right to proceed as I did.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. acting Minister of Public Works seems, by the position he takes on this, to make it very easy for him to go against the principle of tender and contract altogether, and he will positively do away with the necessity of calling for tenders. When he calls for tenders and finds that Phin gives him the lowest tender, then he is perfectly justified. He has done his duty to the public and satisfied his own mind that he is getting the work done at the lowest price. But, he will not do that. He says he is satisfied that he could not get a lower tender. If the hon. minister is going to take that position he will never call for tenders, because he will satisfy himself that he can have the work done just as cheaply without tender. In others of these items, the minister has declared that the policy of the government is, that wherever it can be done it shall be done by tender and by contract, which every one knows is the proper method, but why is it that in a large centre like Toronto that rule cannot be carried out? The experience in Toronto faces the minister in the Auditor General's Report.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. To make his case good the hon. gentleman would have to show that the nature of the dredging was similar. Dredging may range up to thirty cents a yard.

Mr. FOSTER. Every one knows that. If the minister is determined to have an argument against calling for tenders he will have it. You can call for tenders for your particular kind of dredging and you can offer your work for competition and the fact that dredging may cost thirty cents a yard does not interfere with the principle. What objection in the world is there to calling for tenders and awarding the contract to the lowest and best tenderer. This is a new work and one of the easiest things upon which to base a contract by tender. But there is another go-between. At a certain time a strong political friend of the then Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), a strong political friend of the party in power, thought he would like a job, and though he did not own a dredge, and had never been engaged in dredging, he said to the government: I want some contracts if you have any lying around. The accommodating minister said: Yes, we have a large amount of dredging in Toronto harbour, and the political friend replied: Give me a firm offer and I will go out and scurry around and see if I can find a dredge and make my percentage. The accommodating minister said: Yes, we will do that; run out and look for a dredge, and the political friend went out in the street and hired a dredge, and he figured the terms out with his lead pencil, and he said, this is a good thing. I can make so much per day on it, and he has been making so much per day for three years. It is exactly the system of the go-between; it is a Gauthier business all right. The Postmaster General told us when a man was appointed postmaster, and he farmed it out at 30 per cent; the Postmaster General said: What does it matter so long as the public are served. This dredging business is on the same principle. Carry it through the different departments of government, and what will be the result? Suppose the Minister of the Interior wants a first-class superintendent of agencies, and he says to a political friend: I will give you $3,000 a year, but you can sit in your house and get another fellow to do the work for $2,000, and you can rake-off $1,000, that would just be exactly on a par with what the government is doing here. Why is it that in the broad light of day in the city of Toronto, you cannot call for public tenders for this large amount of dredging, and give it to the lowest and best tenderer?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not rise to say anything about tenders. I simply pointed out to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke), that when he stated a contract was let for dredging in the harbour of Toronto for 12 cents, while this cost 13 cents; I pointed out that it might have been different material that had been dredged, and that wages might have been higher and that other conditions had to be taken into account. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), is inaccurate and unfair, as he was last year in his statements. To say that Mr. Phin is not a contractor is to say what I know is untrue.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say he was not a contractor. I said he had no dredge.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Contractors follow all kinds of work, and Mr. Phin is in that business.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course the minister can find an argument for the go-betweens, if he wants to.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This gentleman is no more a go-between than is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Just the same as Gauthier.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Gauthier sat in his house, but does he mean to say that Mr. Phin sat in his house?

Mr. FOSTER. I mean to say that when Phin got the job from the government, he had no dredging plant, was not in the dredging business, and that when he got what was called a firm offer, he went about the streets until he got a chance to get dredging plant to hire.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) any proof of that?

Mr. BERGERON. The proof is in the Hansard of last year, given by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte).

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) means to say that Mr. Phin took the contract and sat in his office, and did not attend to his work, that he was merely a go-between and pocketed so much money; then I say that all the evidence is against that statement. I know, as a fact, that Mr. Phin has been engaged in giving his personal attention to this work. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) know that it can be done cheaper?

Mr. FOSTER. How do you know that it cannot?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I know that the government of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), estimated $8 an hour as fair wages for dredges, and that they paid it for years and years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They gave more, as a rule.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They did that without doing as we did in the case of Mr. Phin, stipulating that there must be a minimum amount of work. The very fact that we are taking out stuff that was easier, and that it is only one cent a yard cheaper, shows that very great care has been exercised in this matter. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) talks about this man being a go-between and sitting in his house and making so much a day, the hon. gentleman makes a statement that is contrary to the fact. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), say that Mr. Phin paid a certain man so many dollars an hour for doing this dredging work? He says that Mr. Phin hired a dredge at so much a day, how does he know? What did Mr. Phin pay for the dredge, if he hired it? The hon. gentleman ought to know that. Did he pay so much an hour for every hour the dredge worked, or hire it at so much per annum?

Mr. FOSTER. What difference does that make?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Cannot the hon. gentleman see the difference? Suppose there were storms on the lake, and he only worked two days in a week. He is not paid for the time he does not work. He has to take all the chances.

Mr. FOSTER. And suppose it was open to tender.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Now, the hon. gentleman is getting away from the point altogether.

Mr. BERGERON. I will tell the hon. gentleman what we heard in this House about that from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). When that contract was first discussed, it came out that this man was a barber in the town of Brantford, and had no dredge at all when this work was given to him. There was some remonstrance made in this House, but of course, the vote carried in spite of that. The next year the Minister of Public Works, with a smile, said that Mr. Phin was now the owner of the dredge. That is to say, he had made so much money at $8 an hour that after one season's work he had been in a position to buy the dredge. That story is in Hansard, and has never been denied in this House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman says this man was a barber, and that has been solemnly stated in this House, although it is an absolute falsehood.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister prove that he is not a barber?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The statement will be laughed at. This man had a large contract on the Grand Trunk tunnel at Sarnia for the same kind of work, and that is his business. But the hon. gentleman comes up with the same tale, and the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) repeats it.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. Minister of Customs tell us what precaution was taken to guard the public interest in connection with this dredging? His colleague the Minister of Public Works did not make answers of the kind the hon. gentleman is making when replying to questions in regard to this contract two years ago. He said then: 'The work was not awarded by public tender.' Does the hon. gentleman think the public interest is being properly guarded when a work of this magnitude is given out without tender at $8 an hour, although, the minister had information that the same kind of work cost only 12 cents a yard?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to tell him that he will find no contract with Murray & Cleveland at 12 cents a yard as a separate contract. He may find that work was done at less than 13 cents a yard, as part of a larger contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman think the government were discharging their duty to the public by bringing a man from Brantford to dredge the eastern harbour at $8 an hour? The hon. gentleman says that one of the conditions of that contract was that he was to dredge 600 yards a day. I hope he will have no objection to lay that contract on the Table this evening. There is not a word stated in the Auditor General's Report for 1899, or his report for 1900, as to any such condition. The Auditor General's Report for 1899, on page 161-Q, states: 'W. E. Phin, Brantford, dredging eastern channel, and on bar 400 feet south of east pier, 923 hours 49 minutes, at $8 an hour, $7,390.' Not one word is said as to the quantity of material to be dredged per day. Then, in the Auditor General's Report for 1900, at page 183-Q, we find that Mr. Phin was paid for dredging in the eastern channel, at $8 an hour, $7,259 in one item, and $2,712 in another item. There is nothing said as to the quantity to be taken out. But, the Minister of Customs says: 'Oh, but there is dredging and dredging; some may cost 15 or 20 cents a yard, and other dredging may cost 30 cents.' That is quite true; but surely the dredging which Mr. Phin has undertaken to do is not more difficult than that which he did in 1897, because, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman's colleague, one of the stipulations of the contract is that he must dredge 600 yards in ten hours. If the dredging was more difficult, it is not likely that he would be willing to do it at the same price. It must be because the work is of the same character as that which he has been doing during the last three or four years, that the contract price is allowed to remain at the same figure; for if Mr. Phin is an experienced contractor, he would not take the dredging at the same price if the work became more difficult from year to year. Now, I understand that at the time he undertook the work in Toronto harbour Mr. Phin had no dredge. The government never took the slightest precaution to protect the public interest, but allowed him $8 an hour when he had not a dredging plant at all, but had to rent the outfit to do the work. The firm from whom he rented the plant declared that they had put in a bid for the work at $6 an hour, but the department say they never received it. I say that it is not in the public interest that a work on which anybody could tender should be continued to be done year after year at $8 an hour, when, if tenders were invited in all probability it could be done at from 20 to 25 per cent less. According to the statement of the minister on the 14th of February, 1898, the cost of the dredging was 14½ cents a yard, and the arrangement with Mr. Phin has continued from that day to this, although the same kind of work has been done at a cost of only 12 cents a yard. I appeal to the acting minister whether the public interest in a large work of this character would not be better safeguarded by calling for public tenders. When tenders were received, the minister would not be blamed if, other things being equal, he gave the contract to one of his own friends

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told that the practice of the late government was to make arrangements for dredging by the hour without requiring a minimum amount of work to be done per hour, and the result was that it cost the government much more than the rates now paid, when there is a minimum amount of work exacted they made a loose kind of bargain. The contractor was paid by the hour whether he did more or less.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Was he always paid $8 an hour?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, whether he did more or less than the average of 60 cubic feet per hour. Under the old regime, a minimum amount of work was not exacted, so I am told by the chief engineer. But when the present administration took office, the Minister of Public Works, in addition to the payment of the old rate, incorporated another condition, namely, that there should be a minimum amount of work done per hour, and the result is that frequently the amount done per day exceeds 600 yards, and then the cost of it is less than 13 cents. At 600 yards precisely per day of 10 hours, the cost would be 13½ cents. If, however, the dredge does more than 600 yards, the cost is less. If any dredging done by Mr. Phin was much less than 13½ cents, it is because he did more than 600 yards per day and the average cost per yard became less. I am told by the chief engineer that the late government never got dredging done at less than $8 per hour, so that there has been practically a standard price fixed, and the experience I have personally had in two or three cases does not show that the calling for tenders would be any advantage. Unfortunately there are not enough dredges to provide legitimate competition. If you call for tenders, when only one or two dredges are available, you do not gain anything. I do not believe that there are sufficient dredges to create wholesome competition and secure any great advantage from the system of calling for tenders.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman may make what observations and interruptions he chooses. I never yet had him address me in any other than an offensive way.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a chestnut.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is quite true. The hon. gentleman's insulting observations and demeanour are chestnuts. They have become part and parcel of his regular nature.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope that I will address the hon. the Postmaster General with becoming courtesy.

Mr. CLARKE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was not making any reference to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLARKE. I merely wish to say that notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman has just told us as to the average cost of dredging, I find it here stated in Hansard, on February 14, 1898, page 482, by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) that the cost per cubic yard, in this very case, was 14½ cents, so that evidently the condition which the hon. gentleman says is inserted in all these contracts, providing for a minimum quantity of 60 cubic yards per hour, per day of 10 hours, was not adhered to. What is the use of the hon. gentleman trying to make us believe something which is directly contradicted by the figures given by the minister for whom he is acting.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer informs me that the rate per hour of $8 is for ordinary dredges, but that if it should—

Mr. CLARKE. There must be a minimum no matter what occurs.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, for the ordinary dredging, but if the contractors should strike rock or hard-pan, that is not covered by the contract, and no man could dredge rock or hard-pan at any such rate.

Mr. CLARKE. What then becomes of the argument of the Minister of Customs?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister takes no account of the course followed by the government of giving these contracts to parties who are merely agents and who employ the dredges at a lower figure than the government pay. Why should not the government deal direct with the dredge owners and get the advantage of the lowest rate? As to the scarcity of dredges, my information is that since the present government came to power, there were many dredges lying idle at first. The owners of the Owen Sound dredge could not get employment from the government until these dredges were handed over to political friends of the government, and immediately they were employed at $8 per hour and have been working ever since at that rate. Sometimes there may be a great deal of dredging to be done and the dredges may stand out for a little higher rate, but at other times dredges are lying idle and the owners would be quite willing to accept much lower rates, if tenders were called for and competition thus created. But these hon. gentlemen prefer to pay the full $8 per hour in order that some friend of theirs, who will hire these dredges at $5 an hour, may profit by the difference.

Leamington—Pier ..... $15,000

Mr. HAGGART. Is that a railway pier?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It does not connect with a railway. This is for the construction of a pier some 745 feet long.

Goderich Harbour—Reconstruction of breakwater, &c. (revote) ..... $20,000

Mr. SPROULE. At what stage is this work, and who is doing it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a revote of $20,000, together with a vote of $18,000 in the main estimates, and is required to continue the reconstruction of the breakwater at Goderich. The contract was awarded on August 11, 1898, to F. Smith and D. McGillicuddy, of Goderich.

Mr. BERGERON. A newspaper man.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contract is for the bulk sum of $56,700.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the amount of the whole contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The total amount of the contract is $56,700.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the matter with Contractor Madigan?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Madigan's is a sad case. He entered into a contract with the government apparently in perfectly sound mind, it afterwards became manifest that his mind was unbalanced and it was necessary to cancel his contract.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will it cost to complete the work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This $20,000 completes it.

Mr. SPROULE. You have other items relating to this item, have you not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps, I had better explain all the items relating to this harbour at once. The $11,000 revote, together with the vote of $2,000 in the main estimates is required to continue the dredging to twenty feet below low water level, that is about the present level (two feet above zero of gauge), from Lake Huron through channel and up to the new elevator. The estimate of quantity and cost of excavation to make this department are as follows:

Total rock excavation, 9,669 cu. yds. at $3.	$29,000
“ hard-pan excavation, 13,852 cu. yds at 45 cents .....	6,233
Total gravel and earth excavation, 81,799 cu. yds at 15 cents .....	12,270
Superintendence, &c. ....	847
<hr/>
Total .....	$48,350 00
Deduct expenditures and other estimates .....	$42,601 72
Additional amount required.....	$ 5,748 28

An agreement was entered into with the Morlton Dredging Company, of Goderich, to do the dredging at the regular rate of $8 per hour, ten hours a day, no time allowed for repairs, &c.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there any provision for a minimum?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no such provision in the contract but it is exacted—600 cubic yards per day of ten hours.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you strike a minimum in these different kinds of dredging?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The government send men to do the blasting, and the removal of the material is done by the dredges. This $5,039.98 is to pay Contractor Luke Madigan, the amount at his credit at the time of cancellation of his contract. I believe that includes the return of his deposit, and closes with him on account of the contract taken out of his hands. The vote of $4,700 is for the blasting and removal of a rocky shoal in the vicinity of the Elevator and Transit Company's wharf. The vote of $2,100 is for repairs to the northern entrance pier of Goderich harbour—ordinary repairs. I am informed that the amount of public money expended on Goderich harbour, I suppose since confederation, is $626,560.60—up to the 30th of May last.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will it take to complete the work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These balances will complete it.

Mr. SPROULE. The government blasts the material and the dredge removes it. How are they allowed for that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is allowed that 250 cubic yards of broken rock removed is equal to 600 cubic yards of earth.

Mr. SPROULE. And how about the hard-pan?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. According to the nature of the material, from 250 to 400 yards of hard-pan are counted equal to 600 yards of earth.

Mr. SPROULE. Have McGillicuddy and his partner this contract, or is there a separate contract for the dredging, and if so, who are the parties?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Morlton Dredging Company are doing the dredging.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that McGillicuddy?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Who compose that company?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know. I never heard the name until this moment. The officers of the department do not know who compose the company.

Mr. SPROULE. And what is the name of the firm doing the other?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Smith & McGillicuddy.

Mr. SPROULE. I have nothing special to say except that I am told that if this contract were in the hands of people who knew the business, a good deal of money would be made out of it, but even the present contractors are making something out of it. But Mr. McGillicuddy was rather a malcontent some time ago, and intimation was conveyed to him that there was an opportunity of making a little money. His knowledge of printing and newspaper work, of course, suited him admirably for this kind of contracting. I presume by this time he is up to concert pitch and in harmony with the party.

Meaford harbour—Dredging and pile work. $30,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This vote is to be applied as follows: Construction of a line of pile work, 910 feet in length, on the east side of Meaford harbour; for the extension of the present breakwater to 300 feet in length; dredging and excavation to a depth of 20 feet in low water; removal of 100 feet of the outer end of the present western pier. This work is now under contract, the contract price is $52,570. Estimate for contingencies, $3,450. This amount of $30,000 will need to be supplemented another year by $36,000. The contract has been awarded to Mr. A. M. Pigott, Hamilton, for $62,570. Some of the work is required to be done at once to admit the use of the elevator this fall.

Mr. SPROULE. I am sure that the people of Meaford will be grateful for this sum for such a purpose, and the work will be a very valuable one. I noticed some time ago when the minister was up there and being dined—I will not go so far as to say wined, because there was a lot of temperance people there. In an address presented to him I noticed one phrase in it induced him to say that he was glad to know that there was no politics mixed up with the demonstration. I noticed that the entertainment was headed by the gentleman who is supposed to be the coming Reform candidate of that riding, Mr. Hartman. I thought that was a kind of intimation that it was well for them that the gathering was not an exclusively Tory gathering. That conviction was strengthened ed in my mind when I noticed a semi-government organ down here lately drawing attention to the fact that Mr. Hartman had been instrumental in getting this work, and he was going to be the Reform candidate. Of course, I suppose that was inspired from governmental sources here for the purpose, perhaps, of keeping the people mindful of the favour the government was going to do them. I do not think the people will object as long as they get the money spent. Whoever the Conservative candidate will be there, he is going to carry the riding easy enough.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Mr. Hartman to whom the hon. gentleman alludes did press the claims of this town on my attention. I did visit the town, and I formed a very favourable opinion of its prospects, and I regretted the fact that it had not long ago been developed. I think this town on the Georgian Bay may become the centre of an active trade, not only to the advantage of the locality itself, but of the surrounding country, and will also in time be able to establish a good trade with the North Shore. Meaford is naturally well situated for trade, and I look upon this work as inaugurating a new era for it. There is no reason why there should not be good smelters and industries of various kinds established at Meaford, for there are perhaps as good facilities for trade at Meaford as at Midland, Owen Sound or Goderich. I think it is a most justifiable expenditure of public money, no matter whether the hon. gentleman who happens to represent the riding is a Conservative or a Reformer.

It being Six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in Committee.)

Collingwood harbour—Improvement (re-vote, $30,000)..... $50,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) kindly give the explanation of that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This matter was under consideration by the former government, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) will probably remember, and the government made an estimate of $250,000 for providing a harbour of 20 feet deep with a channel 400 feet wide. There was some engineering mistake and it was a grave one. There was an inaccurate survey of the water, with the result that instead of giving a depth of 20 feet of water the specifications included two feet in the air. The whole specifications had to be recast so as to give 20 feet of water instead of 18 feet of water, and 2 feet of air. The work was under contract to Boon & Armstrong, but they did not appear to make a great deal of headway, and this spring we brought the Boon & Armstrong contract to an end. It was in accordance with the specifications prepared by the late administration that the channel should be 400 feet wide. This is wider than is at present necessary, and we recast the specifications so that instead of having a channel 400 feet wide it was reduced to 110 feet in width, with 20 feet depth of water. No doubt another contract will have to be made to make the channel wider as we go on. Then, we made a contract with Boon & Armstrong at $2.25 per cubic yard for rock work from the centre of the channel to the south shore.

Mr. HAGGART. Was that let by tender and contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, for the reason that Boon & Armstrong had this contract. They were dillatory, as they evidently had not the proper experience, but they had their plant and outfit on the ground, and they were ready to go on. I terminated their contract because of the dillatory way in which they had been doing the work. I terminated their contract this spring and gave them in lieu of that contract certain rock work at $2.25 per cubic yard they agree to abandon their old contract and proceed upon a narrower limit. So that instead of having a channel 400 feet wide according to the specifications prepared in 1896, we propose to have a channel 110 feet wide. We have made it 110 feet because that is exactly two lengths of a dredge, and by moving the dredge once across they cover the width of the channel. We will get a channel of 110 feet wide, and they will move southward as they proceed with their rock work. To the north it is hard-pan, and we have not yet a contract for the hard-pan. Tenders are being invited for the hard-pan on the north side, and if we are successful in getting a contractor, there will be a channel of 110 feet wide by the end of this year.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the town of Collingwood contribute anything?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think they have contributed $25,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the Grand Trunk not give something?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. SPROULE. The town, I think, gives $15,000, and the Grand Trunk $10,000. That is how the $25,000 is made up.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have only got $15,000. There was talk of the Grand Trunk giving $10,000, but it has not come yet.

Mr. SPROULE. They agreed to give it if they got the desired depth of water.

Sault Ste. Marie—Harbour improvements. $10,000

Mr. HAGGART. What is the explanation of that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is for the reconstruction of the wharf at the Sault.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that where the old wharf was?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This vote is required towards the extension of the old wharf there, known as Plummers' wharf, 100 feet, and for the removal of a shoal.

Little Current—North channel improvements ..... $1,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is that for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is for the removal of rocks from the north channel in the Georgian Bay opposite Little Current. The total cost is $2,500. There has been $1,500 spent, and this is to complete it.

Port Findlay—Wharf (revote, $2,500)..... $5,800

Mr. SPROULE. Where is Port Findlay?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In Algoma. This work is under contract.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The total estimated cost is $7,300, and this vote of $5,800 finishes it.

River Ottawa—Dam on main channel above the Long Sault Rapids at the foot of Lake Temiscamingue ..... $5,600

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman kindly say what that will cost, and what the object of the undertaking is?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to try to raise the water of Lake Temiscamingue. Mr. Lumsden and Mr. Klock have been urging that certain improvements be made, for example, these two wharfs. It is proposed to put in some piers to try and check the flow of water with the view of raising the level, and do away with dredging. We expect to raise the level about 2 feet, and perhaps a little over that, but at any rate it will be over a foot. I would like to state that perhaps this work of constructing the dam will not be let by tender. Mr. Lumsden, who is lumbering there, has seen me on the subject, and he thinks this amount will meet the requirements. There are other people who say it will not. There are reports which say that it will take a great deal of money to raise the level of the water. But Mr. Lumsden, having a pecuniary interest in the raising of the water, will, if he gets this amount of money, put piers that will to some extent meet the requirements. If he does, I wish the committee to understand that we should be free to get Mr. Lumsden to build these piers for what parliament has voted without having to submit the matter to tender.

Mr. HAGGART. Let me draw the hon. minister's attention to the necessity of a dam at the end of Lake Temiscamingue. I think there could be no more valuable work for this section of the country than to erect a dam at the foot of Lake Temiscamingue for the purpose of retaining the waters which annually come down the Ottawa River, and of distributing their flow over different periods of the year. I do not know whether you would be called upon to pay damages for overflowing farms above it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. HAGGART. If not there is no more necessary work than the erection of a dam at the foot of Lake Temiscamingue for the purpose of reserving the waters of the Ottawa River, so as to have an equitable distribution during the year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The idea at present is to put in these piers at the foot of the lake. They will check the water, and if they do not raise it enough the department can put in more piers and fill in the spaces, and by this process put in a complete dam.

Mr. SPROULE. There is talk about another gentleman who is around there, and they say there is no timber could be injured, or no land that could be flooded.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You are quite right.

South Nation River—Towards the improvement of the pitch-off ..... $5,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is this making the outlet better as was applied for some years ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to remove a ledge of rock.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister might as well say at once that the only object is drainage, because there is no navigation there at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The work is to permit of navigation over this rock and also to prevent the water flooding the country.

Lake Manitoba—Opening of additional outlet to prevent overflow of lake, and maintenance of same at proper level for navigation purposes (revote) ..... $25,000

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What has been done so far with regard to that work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The work is under contract now and is being pushed forward rapidly.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What work are you doing under the contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Dredging the channel so as to give an additional outlet for the water.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. A channel from where?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. From Lake Manitoba into Fairford River.

Lake Manitoba—Dredging small channel at south end ..... $1,200

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I do not know of any harbour there.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). There is a harbour there, but the sand has been washed up and it forms a bar across the mouth of it and this appropriation is to dredge the bar and allow boats to get into the harbour.

Lake Dauphin—Lowering of..... $5,000

Mr. LaRIVIERE. How do you intend to lower the level of Lake Dauphin?

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). I am probably better acquainted with that than the minister.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I will wait for the answer of the minister and then it will be all right.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This vote is according to the estimate of the chief engineer, for the removal of boulders in the bed of the river to facilitate the discharge of surplus waters in Lake Dauphin and with a view of preventing the periodical flooding. The total estimated cost is $9,000.

Fraser River—Improvement of ship channel protection works, &c. .... $40,000

Mr. SPROULE. What do you propose to do with this large sum of money?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Fraser River gives itself great airs and runs all around the country just as it seems to like. This $40,000 is to afford protection, &c. It is a very difficult problem to deal with.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you propose to protect the bank?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. By mattresses if possible.

New dredging plant, Ontario and Quebec. $75,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is this for building new dredging plant?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are engaged in constructing an elevator dredge at Sorel. It will be moved where required.

Des Joachims bridge—Reconstruction (revote) ..... $14,500

Mr. DAVIN. Will this be let by tender ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Ottawa—Maria Street bridge, over the Rideau Canal—Reconstruction (revote, $37,000) ..... $50,000

Mr. DAVIN. Will this be let by tender ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it is under contract now.

Portage du Fort bridge—Reconstruction (revote) ..... $19,000

Mr. DAVIN. Is this also under contract by tender ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Battleford—Bridge, to replace old condemned superstructure ..... $25,000

Mr. DAVIN. Is this a new work ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Have tenders been called for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not yet. They will be. The old bridge fell down.

Telegraph line on the north shore of St. Lawrence—Extension from Romaine eastward to Belle Island (revote, $26,000) ..... $40,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is that being built now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, we expect to have it built by the end of September.

Mr. SPROULE. How are you having it built ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. By contract. We invited tenders from the cable companies in England. There are twenty-three miles of sea cable. This is to provide telegraphic communication between Belle Isle and Canada—a most important public work.

Mr. ELLIS. I was going to ask about the Prince Edward Island telegraph line, but I see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will arrange with the minister that the hon. gentleman may put his question under any item.

Telegraph lines, Ontario—Peelee Islands—Renewal of original portion of cable connecting the island with the mainland. $6,000

Mr. SPROULE. What do you need down there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been a cable there, but it has gone to decay, and we have to repair it.

Telegraph lines, British Columbia—150 Mile House to Quesnelle Forks and Horsefly. $6,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a new line, which connects the old telegraph system of Canada with the Atlin district.

Monument to Hon. Alexander Mackenzie (revote) ..... $4,000

Mr. DAVIN. When will that be ready ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is thought it will be in shape to be erected next spring.

Mr. DAVIN. Where is it to be placed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think the exact spot is selected yet, but it will be somewhere on our grounds here.

Mr. DAVIN. The erection of a statute to so representative a man as the late Alexander Mackenzie meets with my entire approval; but as the Reform party is supposed to be in power at the present time, I think those in power might have gone further and have erected a statute to the purest and noblest figure in our history whose name is connected with the Reform party, though the Reform party he led would probably not be quite in line with the Reform party of to-day. I mean Robert Baldwin, a man whose character stands out in stainless purity in the history of Canada, and whose efforts to bring about responsible government were untiring and statesmanlike. I hope, if the present government does not, that at an early date some government in Canada will feel a real historical gratitude, and will be led to erect a statute to Robert Baldwin. It is quite right and entirely appropriate that gratitude and loyalty should animate a party in regard to a dead chief; but there is even a nobler loyalty, and that is the loyalty which we can all share towards a man whose name is no longer connected with the strifes of to-day; and of whose claims on national gratitude there can be no doubt. In the same connection I would say that it is a reproach to Canada and to administrations both Liberal and Conservative, that no statute has been raised to D'Arcy McGee. Any one familiar with the history of the years prior to confederation, and the forces that were put into operation to bring confederation about, will know that amid all those men, brilliant and great, who contributed to bring confederation about, there was no man who did more than D'Arcy McGee, because, owing to the peculiar cast of his mind, he was able to present the proposed scheme in an attractive and national light, and, by reason of the intuitive character of his intellect, he was able to anticipate in the midst of a doubting generation, the large expansion and vast proportions of Canada, which we witness to-day. He was the proto-martyr of the Canadian confederacy. He fell a victim to an assassin and died a premature death, because he had so nobly advocated that great forward movement of the Canadian people which culminated in confederation. The reproach is at the door of both Conservatives and Liberals, and I hope that some day not far off the government will see that a suitable memento adorns those grounds of a man who was an ornament to the House of Commons, who contributed, at a time when it was much needed, by his genius and eloquence, to the intellectual life of Canada, and whose name is endeared, not merely to one section, but to the great mass of the people. I think it would be a great mistake to confine such recognitions merely to those who may have climbed to the position of First Minister. It is not done in England, and it would show a regard on the part of the people to what might be called the caprices of fortune, that is unworthy the great motive which should animate us when, after a man has passed away from the strife of the hour, we seek to produce something enduring that will testify to our own time and subsequent generations the estimate we have formed of what the country owed such men.

Mr. SPROULE. Who has the contract for Hon. Alexander Mackenzie's monument?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Felix Hébert.

Portrait of Her Majesty the Queen, including freight charges ..... $1,000

Mr. SPROULE. What portrait is that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is to be found in Rideau Hall.

Salaries—Chief architect's and chief engineer's staff, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service or any other Act..... $7,400

Mr. SPROULE. How is this distributed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There have been small increases, but by some ruling of the Auditor General, it seems to be necessary to have a special vote, not merely for the increase, but for all the salaries. It is a revote of the salaries of the staff, and represents about $1,700 increases distributed among nine officials. They are all old clerks, and this is not included in the main estimates.

Telegraph line—Quesnelle to Atlin, B.C. (revote)..... $110,000

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman explain this, and state how far built, and the cost per mile?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The distance between Quesnelle and Atlin is about 900 miles, and there you connect with the Quesnelle system. This is required to secure the construction of a telegraph line from Quesnelle to Atlin, 900 to 1,100 miles in length. The appropriation for 1899 was 900 miles at $250 per mile, $225,000; and anticipated additional length, 200 miles, $50,000. Total probable cost, $275,000. Deduct expenditure to June 30, 1900, $115,000. Six weeks ago the department received a report showing that 100 miles were constructed westerly from Quesnelle, and 100 miles easterly from Atlin. The whole line will be constructed by October next. The expectation is to have the whole line constructed by October.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it done by tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it has been done by the department under the superintendence of Mr. Charleson.

Mr. SPROULE. That is about $305 a mile?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, $250. A total of $275,000 would provide for 1,100 miles, and $225,000 for 900 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Why the extra 200 miles?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no real survey, and it is not possible to know but that they may be obliged to go by a circuitous route. General Greeley, who has charge of the American government telegraph service all over the world, was here, and in conversation with me he expressed surprise at the facility with which we built the line and the cheapness of it.

Mr. HAGGART. Cheapness?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, he was amazed at it. And he has been engaged in similar work in Alaska.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the one that Charleson furnished the wire for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. He has furnished no wire. The wire was furnished by three firms in Montreal, the Lewis, and Kavanagh and Macpherson firms.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you give Charleson a commission on the number of men employed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, he is paid a salary.

Mr. SPROULE. How much?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Four thousand dollars a year.

Mr. SPROULE. And living expenses?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course.

Mr. SPROULE. How many men has he with him on salary?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He has about 100, labourers and all.

Mr. SPROULE. But, how many are employed on salary, and what are their salaries?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are four under-managers; and they get about $1,500 to $2,000 a year each.

Yukon Territory—Telegraph lines—Dawson to Fort Cudahy or Fifty-Mile River.... $12,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are making an arrangement with the United States under which we will have the whole of the business between the United States and Alaska over this line.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this to be built by Charleson ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have not decided. Probably he will have charge of it. We could not do better.

Yukon District—Trails, roads and bridges (revote) ..... $50,000

Mr. HAGGART. How is this to be expended ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is nothing determined as to where these roads shall be built. Last year parliament passed an item for this purpose, and there are some trails and roads constructed. This sum will be available according to the exigencies of the season there. If new discoveries are made and facilities for reaching all claims be deemed necessary, this money may be expended for such purposes. It is simply a precautionary vote to meet what may be a proper demand.

Mr. BERGERON. Why was none of the money expended last year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A larger sum than this was voted and some of it was spent. It was spent through the Department of the Interior.

Yukon Territory—Public works and buildings—Income, rent, fuel, lighting, &c.. $19,500

Mr. SPROULE. How about the coal up there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have nothing definite.

Mr. SPROULE. You still depend on wood ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Why do you not build there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are engaged at it now.

Mr. FOSTER. What rents do you pay—this seems a large amount ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I believe they calculate to get back the value of a building in two or three years there. This vote, together with one of $27,000 in the main estimates is called for by the Department of the Interior. Among the rents to be provided are the following :

Dawson City—Commissioner's office and post office.....	$14,400
Crown timber and lands registrar's office.....	9,000
Commissioner's house .....	3,000
House for gold commissioner and officials.....	3,000
Cabin—Legal adviser .....	780
Hunker—Land and mining recorder's office .....	300
Sulphur—Mining recorder's office .....	300
Furnishing .....	1,500
Fuel for buildings, 400 cords of wood at $25 .....	10,000
Light .....	4,000
Incidentals .....	220

Total ..... $46,500

Mr. BERGERON. Do they use the electric light in these buildings ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Electricity is used in Dawson, but we have not the public buildings lighted with it.

Mr. BERGERON. Why would not they use an electric light ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy informs me that these buildings are rented, and that as soon as we can get into our own buildings they will be equipped with electric light.

Mr. SPROULE. How long are you going to use these before you get your own buildings ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I instructed the engineer, Mr. Fuller, some two months ago to proceed with the work of erecting the buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason for wood being so high, $25 a cord ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy informs me that he has no information upon that point further than that the wood was purchased by Mr. Ogilvie, and accounts were rendered by him.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there wooded lands more or less about Dawson ?

Mr. BERGERON. Wood is cheap, but the cutting and driving of it is dear, as I learned from an old miner that I met last winter. Day labour is very high.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to find out whether the wooded lands in and around Dawson are in the hands of the government, or in the hands of companies and private individuals ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not aware that the government has parted with all its wood lands, but I think the member for Beauharnois has given the explanation. I can recollect having seen an item in the paper about a man making $10 in part of a day by sawing wood.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been asserted, and I think there is a great deal of truth in it, that the available timber lands have largely gone into the hands of private holders or companies, and wood being so scarce an article there, they hold it at a very high price. It is the common complaint all through that country, with the miners in particular, that it is getting to be almost impossible for them to get wood for the active operations of their mines.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed an item in a paper some time ago stating that the wood in the vicinity of Dawson was held by parties who had control over it. Some member of the government ought to know whether that is the case or not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I learned from the Minister of the Interior that there is no corner of any kind upon wood, that the price is now falling, and within the last three or four weeks he is advised that you can get cordwood for $18. I suppose labour is getting cheaper. But there is an abundance of wood on government lands in the immediate vicinity of Dawson.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the dimensions of that building for which you are paying $14,400 as rent?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy has no information, and it could not be got this side of Dawson City.

Mr. FOSTER. That is rather an astounding statement to make, that you are paying rent for a year and a half at the rate of over $14,000 a year, and the department has never had the curiosity to ask what kind of a building that was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Ogilvie rented the building. We have to trust somebody, and Mr. Ogilvie is certainly an upright and honourable man, and he is quite familiar with the conditions in Dawson City. When he went there he had to provide proper accommodation, and I think we can depend upon him for making a proper bargain.

Mr. BERGERON. From whom did he lease that building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. F. C. Lowry.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that satisfactory to the House that is voting money, to say that an official is trustworthy, and consequently we are not going to ask what kind of a house he gets? I may have as much faith as others in Mr. Ogilvie, but he is simply an official, and it is his duty to inform his superiors about these matters; because everybody knows that when you come to vote money you must have more information than a minister saying that he does not know what kind of a house it is. But there is another point. Mr. Ogilvie does not hold himself at all in the proper place of an official towards his minister and towards this parliament. Only this year we had the fact brought out that with reference to a report promised in his last year's report, the acting minister has been unable all this year to get that report from him, and up to the last information which was given to the House, absolutely unable to get even a telegram or an answer from Mr. Ogilvie in answer to his repeated telegrams to know why this information and report had not been sent. That does not seem to me to be the way that an official should act. I have been going through some correspondence in reference to permits in reference to which the hon. Minister of the Interior found that his will and wishes and law had been expressly violated by Mr. Ogilvie. He had to haul him over the coals in a moderate kind of way for having expressly gone against what the minister had ordered. In the course of the whole correspondence I did not see any justification of Mr. Ogilvie's conduct, but when an official in the pay of the government sends out a report and intimates that a supplementary report was soon to follow, when nearly a year goes by and there is no supplementary report, when parliament is in session and wants information, when the hon. acting minister telegraphs and telegraphs when he has to come down to the House and say that he has not had the courtesy of even a reply from Mr. Ogilvie, it shows that the line of communication is cut for some reason or other. Why is it? We are absolutely in the dark in this parliament and although we have arranged telegraphic communication at immense cost we cannot even get a reply from His Excellency to the simplest kind of a telegram.

Mr. MULOCK.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Is the hon. gentleman referring to Mr. Ogilvie's report for last year?

Mr. FOSTER. I am referring to the supplementary report which was promised by Mr. Ogilvie and for which we have been waiting all this session, and which the hon. acting minister told us in the House that he had three times telegraphed for, after which he had written a sharp letter and at our request telegraphed again. Up to this moment he has not sent the report. I put it to the minister himself; here is one of his officials up there who rents houses and gives a rent of $1,200 a month. He has made the rent of this building $14,000 a year, and no department in Ottawa seems to have even a description of the kind of House for which he is paying $14,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can tell the hon. gentleman something about it now. My hon. friend for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) has been up in Dawson City and he informs me that this is the finest building in Dawson City and would be a credit to some of the older settled parts of Canada. It is a frame building, two stories, large and commodious. He thinks it could not be built for $20,000. It affords accommodation not only for the residence of the commissioner but for various offices. The office of the controller, the officer of the court, the registrar, and so on.

Mr. FOSTER. Well it is a great blessing to this parliament that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) has not gone home before this, or, with the acting Minister of Public Works and the officials of the department, we would have been totally in the dark as to whether it was a corrugated iron building, a log building, or as to anything about the size of it.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know if the whole building is rented or if the building is divided up amongst different departments.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have it all rented.

Mr. SPROULE. You give $14,000 for one building and $9,000 for another. Are these different buildings or are they parts of the same building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is an additional building.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. acting Minister of the Interior to say that different parts of this building were used for the different offices.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some of the different offices, but it does not contain all our offices.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. acting minister to say that only the gold commissioner was occupying the building for which we pay $14,400 a year, or are there two or three others in the same building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There in the office of the controller, the man who has charge of the expenditure, and a part of the building is set apart for the commissioner's residence.

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. member for New Westminster say that they could not build that building for less than $20,000 and if we pay $14,400 a year it will not take many years before the building is all paid for.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He did not say that it could be built for $20,000. I asked him if it could be built for $20,000, and he said that would be the inside figure. He did not tell me what was the outside.

Mr. SPROULE. How many houses and offices are there, and what does each cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have read the list already, but I will read it again. The Crown timber office, the land office, and the registrar's office are rented from J. E. Binet. We pay for that building $9,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the size of that house?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the size. The house that the commissioner lives in is rented from Rev. F. Gendreau at $3,000 a year, the house for the gold commissioner and his officers is rented from the Alaska Commercial Company at $3,000 a year. Then, there is the office for the legal adviser rented from Mr. de Lobel at $780 a year. At Hunker Creek there is a mining recorder's office, rent, $300 a year. At Sulphur Creek there is another mining recorder's office, rent, $300 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. What kind of a building is the one that the registrar is in?

Mr. MORRISON. It is a building very similar to the post office to which the hon. acting minister has referred, excepting that it is smaller. It is something of the same style as the other.

Mr. FOSTER. A two-story building?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What would be the size?

Mr. MORRISON. It is not much smaller than the other.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the other?

Mr. MORRISON. You are satisfied with the rental of the other building and that would be by inspection, only of course, about 75 x 100 feet. It is a very large building, and the registrar's building is also a very respectable building and one that you would be surprised to find in a town like Dawson. I was very much surprised to see such a commodious and well equipped building.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I have some little knowledge of buildings in Dawson. Of course the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) is criticising something that he knows nothing about. Rents up there are very dear. A little house that I know of and I will give this as an example, about 30 x 40 feet, rented for $300 a month. That might seem very surprising to hon. members of this House, but it shows what rentals are there. I happen to know this public building and I do not see anything particularly wrong with the price paid for it. I have no doubt if we went to Apohaqui, where the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) lived, that we would not expect such a high rent. It is quite a nice little village, and doing very well since my hon. friend represented it. A little house which you would rent down here for $20 a month, would cost $300 or $400 a month up in the Yukon. Lumber costs $400 or $500 a thousand, and land costs from $10,000 to $15,000 a lot.

Mr. BERGERON. Does not the land belong to the government?

Mr. DOMVILLE. It did at one time, as did all the rest of the land in Canada, but they parted with it.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did they not hold some of it for their buildings?

Mr. DOMVILLE. If they had the benefit of your wisdom, perhaps they might have done it. The land was parted with there, when the Conservatives were in power.

Mr. BERGERON. We had nothing to do with the Yukon in our day.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I tell you what is the fact, and I am talking about something that I know. I have no doubt that the member for York finds these prices extravagant, and I do not wonder at it, but lots there of fifty feet by one hundred and fifty feet, have been sold for $50,000, and when you put a building on that, you will see what can be charged. I lived in a little bit of a cottage, not much larger than the Clerk's table there, and we paid $75 a month for it.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope that next session, we will be able to get information with reference to the size of all these buildings, and what rent we are paying for them.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is an election before then, the government will not have a chance to give the information.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that all the Public Works estimates are now through.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Then I wish to ask the Prime Minister and the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock), if there was not a deputation here from Valleyfield recently, asking for a public building? I want to know from the Prime Minister what that deputation asked, and what was his answer? I want to know why there is not an item in the estimates for that public building which the people of Valleyfield are entitled to get?

The PRIME MINISTER. I received a delegation from Valleyfield some time ago, asking, among other things, for a post office. Probably they anticipated the remark that my hon. friend made this morning, when he said of us: Come on, we are now deep in the public treasury

Mr. BERGERON. They heard of Mr. Mulock's circular.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps so. I am sorry to say that the magnitude of the estimates which is so much criticised by my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), did not permit us to take the matter into consideration this year.

Mr. BERGERON. You are giving them cold justice.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Minister of Public Works goes, I wish to say on behalf of the North-west, and on behalf of all Canada, that these numerous items, these vast amounts which have been voted seem to me to smell of humbug and some of them to smell of something worse. I venture to say that many of these amounts will never be spent, and I wish I could have divided the House on three-fourths of them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would like to hear from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), if he objects to any expenditures in the North-west Territories?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the minister for an answer to the question I put yesterday as to the Brockville drill hall—who the tenderers were, the amounts, and the successful tenderer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy is leaving to-night and will not be back till Tuesday, so I shall not be able to give the hon. gentleman the information till then. We shall have it here on Monday.

Post office service—Additional amount required ..... $24,767 84

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. Postmaster General will remember that I called attention a short time ago to the dismissal of the postmaster at Carnduff. I think the Postmaster General is aware that the Liberals of that district resent what was done just as much as the Conservatives. There was a numerously-signed petition protesting against it, and if I were to read the names on that petition, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who is acquainted with Carnduff, would see that the majority of the names on that petition are Liberal names. What happened was this. The daughter of the postmaster happened to be in charge, when a gentleman residing there went into the post office and handed her some circulars purporting to be public documents; and this young girl, thinking they were public documents, circulated them; and, because of that, in the face of explanations, she is dismissed, and the man who pressed the complaint is placed in her position. On the 17th of March Mr. Lesueur wrote to W. W. McLeod, saying :

I am directed to inclose to you herewith copy of a portion of a letter from a Mr. J. H. Taylor, of Carnduff, Assa., charging the postmaster of Carnduff with having distributed, free of postage, through the post office, a certain political pamphlet to persons residing at that place, one copy of which was received by himself; and to request that you will be good enough to inquire into the matter and report the result for the Postmaster General's information.

The letter of Mr. McLeod is as follows :

Post Office Inspector's Office,
Winnipeg, Man., April 11, 1900.

Sir,—With reference to your letter, No. 91, of the 17th ult., inclosing copy of a portion of a letter from Mr. J. H. Taylor, of Carnduff, Assiniboia, charging the postmaster with having distributed free of postage through the post office a certain political pamphlet to persons residing at that place, and requesting me to inquire into the matter and report the result, I beg to say that on the occasion the pamphlet in question was posted, the postmaster states he was away from home, and the office was in charge of his daughter, a sworn assistant; that Mr. J. W. Connell, M.L.A. for the North-west Territories, handed these pamphlets in, and as they came from Ottawa, and were already done up in wrappers, his assistant did not think it necessary that the postage should be prepaid. The postmaster thinks there were probably about eighty in all posted.

I will call the attention of the Postmaster General to this, for I suppose the merits of this case never really came before him, and that he was pressed by powerful political influences to cut off the head of the postmaster at Carnduff. The assistant postmaster's explanation of the matter is as follows :

I took the papers and distributed them free of charge, as I have distributed papers from editors which were done up in wrappers in same way, so I thought these papers which Mr. J. W. Connell brought in should be distributed in a similar manner. I might also state that I did not know what kind of papers they were. I had no idea whatever that they were political papers. My father and mother did not know that they were political papers either. My father was away from the village altogether when papers were brought to the office and did not return until after I had all the papers which were brought in given out of the general office. I have done very little work in the office, and am indeed sorry for error made and trouble which I have caused. However, I will try and be more careful in the future.

Surely, for a little venial fault like that on the part of a young girl, that is excuse enough. It is evident that she could not have done it from design and knowing the character of these papers. If she knew the character of the papers, she was much too intelligent to circulate them, because she knew very well that that would imperil the position of her father. The purport of the postmaster's explanation was indicated to Mr. Taylor, and his reply was to the effect that this young girl was a sworn assistant, and he characterized the pamphlet as quite indecent. That is another reason that it is simply impossible that the young girl should have known anything of what she was distributing. Mr. Taylor writes :

Your letter of 27th to hand. With reference to my complaint, I would say that if the postmaster had only franked political pamphlets, I would not have complained.

Mark that, although we know very well that would have been a very grave offence and a most improper thing.

But the abominable stuff that he sent out from his office was not politics, but filth. I have no desire to cause Mr. Carnduff any trouble in the matter, as I think he will be more careful in the future.

So that the man who made the complaint had no desire to have him dismissed.

Although I believe him to be responsible for this, as they refer in their letter to you to the same pamphlets passing through this office under wrapper, they evidently knew what it contained.

Of course that is not so. In the face of the statement of the man who was complaining that he did not want the postmaster to be disturbed, what happened? On May 23, a letter was sent as follows :

Memo. for the post office inspectorship at Winnipeg—Name of office, Carnduff; district, Assiniboia East; cause of vacancy, removal of J. B. Carnduff from postmastership.

And the inspector's report is referred to. There is nothing in the report to account for it. There is nothing in the complainant's letter to account for it, but Mr. Coulter on May 23 writes to J. S. Taylor :

I have the honour to inform you that you have been recommended by the Postmaster General as a fit person to be appointed to the postmastership of Carnduff, in the electoral district of Assiniboia East.

On May 31 Mr. Connell wrote to Mr. McLeod, saying it was rumored that the present postmaster was to be removed, and John Taylor to take his place and informs him that such action will be resented by the people. He said :

A petition is now being signed by the entire community, with scarcely an exception, protesting against such change.

He goes on to say that the building is not sufficiently large, but that Carnduff agreed to build an office of such dimensions as will be necessary to accommodate the public, if given any guarantee that he will be left permanently in charge of the office. He further asks the department to defer further action until they have received the petition or given Mr. Carnduff a hearing which any man is entitled to. Again, on June 4, Mr. Connell wrote to Mr. McLeod, post office inspector, Winnipeg :

Dear Sir,—Inclosed you will please find petition which I have to request you to kindly forward to the Postmaster General at Carnduff.

I may tell you that there is general dissatisfaction throughout the entire district at the action taken in this matter, and the people feel justly indignant at the dismissal of Mr. Carnduff from the post office. He has given the people entire satisfaction for sixteen years, and they feel that the spoils system should not have been applied in this case.

The following is the petition :

Carnduff, Assa., May 31, 1900.

To the Honourable the Postmaster General of Canada.

Your petitioners being informed that it is in contemplation to remove Mr. J. P. Carnduff, postmaster of Carnduff, from his position as postmaster, beg respectfully to call your attention to the following facts:

1. That Mr. Carnduff has been for nearly eighteen years a resident in this district, being one of the pioneer settlers.

2. That he has held the post office ever since its establishment, some sixteen years ago.

3. That during that long period he has carried out the duties in a manner which has given complete satisfaction to your petitioners, and, as we have every reason to believe, the public at large throughout the district.

4. That Mr. Carnduff, although known as a Conservative, has never taken, at any time, any active part in politics whatever, much less shown any offensive partisanship.

5. That the business requirements of this rapidly growing town have undoubtedly outgrown the accommodation provided by the existing building, but that Mr. Carnduff is prepared, if given any reasonable guarantee of the permanent tenure of his office, to at once erect a building which will fully meet the needs of the town and district for years to come.

6. That this petition is signed irrespective of party, and because your petitioners believe it to be in the public interest that the present postmaster should be retained.

And your petitioners, therefore, respectfully pray that no change be made, but that the said J. P. Carnduff be permanently retained as postmaster of Carnduff.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

This petition is signed by J. W. Cairns, farmer; Chas. H. Seyper, farmer; and a number of others, covering a page and a half of foolscap. I suppose now that Mr. Taylor has been appointed and there is no hope of the reinstatement of Mr. Carnduff, but I think that the House will see that very harsh treatment has been dealt out to that gentleman, and I would like to hear from the Postmaster General an explanation of his course. We might have thought that at this time, long after the election of 1896, the hatchet would have been hung up, but evidently it is not. I think that this whole matter reflects on the management of my hon. friend.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has read the evidence, which, I understand, shows that mail matter was allowed to be transmitted free through the mails at this point, contrary to law. There are 10,000 postmasters in Canada, and if any laxity of this kind should be allowed in one place, you would very soon find imitation in others, and what would become of the revenue of the country? I think it is a serious offence, and if a postmaster absents himself and allows his place to be taken by some one not competent, whether he be responsible morally or not, he is legally responsible for the act of his agent. In this case he left the office in the hands of some one, who, whether innocently or not, allowed mail matter to be transmitted free. I have had more than one such complaint brought to my attention within the last few years, and while these people very often plead absolute innocence—and I suppose I must accept their word—I think we have to deal with the subject, not merely as to what they intended, but as to whether or not they are competent to protect the revenue. In this case, the revenue may not have suffered to any great extent, but still mail matter was allowed to be transmitted illegally through the mails.

Mr. DAVIN. I will say no more about that except that I do not think that the reply of the hon. gentleman will satisfy the supporters of his party who have signed the petition, and who are indignant at the harsh treatment dealt out to Mr. Carnduff. I have another matter to bring before the hon. gentleman. We heard a great deal in this House and the country about the abuse of the franking privilege. We have had, for instance, criticisms of the Minister of Trade and Commerce for the use of his frank on a certain occasion, and I think the criticisms were just. But occasionally we see in the press absurd criticisms, such as that a member has franked either his own speech or the speech of some other member. I have seen the criticisms of myself, for instance, because I franked to one of my constituents the budget speech of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). I think everybody will admit that it is a very proper use of a frank for a member of parliament, to send the speech of one of the leaders, or the speech of his own or even of any other hon. member. But it must be clear that there is a limit of honour that must be observed. We cannot use the franking privilege to further the commercial interests of ourselves or others. Within a few days I have received a letter from the North-west which brings before me a much more serious breach of the franking privileges than anything that has yet been brought up. In the early part of this session, I had several letters brought before me, on the abuse of the franking privilege, to which I thought to call attention, but I did not think it necessary to bring them before the House, although I thought it was serious enough. For instance, here is a notice of the Herald Publishing Company, as follows :

Montreal, March, 1900.

Dear Sir,—During the past three months we have been sending the 'Herald' to your address daily at the expense of Messrs. Henry Morgan & Co., of this city.

We now find that, owing to a misunderstanding on our part in connection with the excessive postage imposed on papers sent in the interest of advertisers, we are compelled to cancel this contract with Messrs. Morgan & Co.

We are glad to inform you, however, that we have made a new arrangement with Messrs. Morgan & Co. to send you our large Saturday edition for a time, and we hope you will receive it, with the firm's compliments from week to week.

Thinking probably you would like to become a regular subscriber to the 'Herald,' and thus receive the paper daily, we will accept your subscription for a full year for the small sum of $1.

Bear in mind this is a special price that we quote you in order to get the 'Herald' more widely introduced throughout your district.

Trusting the 'Herald' has been a welcome visitor to your home during the past three months,

We are, yours truly,

THE 'HERALD' PUBLISHING CO.

Now, it will be observed, there are two commercial firms advertised here—Henry Morgan & Co. and the Herald Publishing Company. Nevertheless, when that was brought to my attention, I did not bring it before the House, because it related to a newspaper which contained political information, and, by a charitable construction, this might be held to be within the franking privilege, though, when one looks at it, it clearly is not. However, as I say, I did not bring it before the House, because I do not care about that sort of thing. But as it is connected with a very much graver offence against the franking privilege and has again been brought before my attention, I must bring it before the committee. This has been circulated in my own constituency in Alberta and in the Saskatchewan and East Assinibola by the hundreds, franked by the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). But, here is a purely business card :

Hotel Cecil, Ottawa, has now entered on the third month of its existence, and the following are some of our patrons:—

And there is the picture of Hotel Cecil and an alphabetical list of the patrons. This has been circulated, I am told, by tens of thousands all over the west, franked 'T. O. D., M. P.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And by others, also.

Mr. DAVIN. If by others, then so much more reason why I should bring it before parliament. It has only come to my knowledge that the hon. member for Saskatchewan has done it. I will not quote the statements in the letter written to me, because, after all, they are based on surmise and the writer cannot know whether, or not, the person who has sent this broadcast, has got an equivalent for it. I am not familiar enough with the hon member for Saskatchewan to know whether this address is in his handwriting or not, but the frank is in his writing. If the address is in his writing, this is a very great offence. If it is by the clerk of the hotel, look at the extent to which the post office has been defrauded, supposing that 100,000 or even 500,000 of these have been sent out. But—apart from that, I say that to do a thing like that is a dishonourable thing, unworthy of a member of parliament. I am sorry it came into my hands only within four or five days. Had it come into my hands earlier in the session, I certainly would have made a motion to inquire into it. But here is the hon. member (Mr. Davis) franking an advertisement for the Herald Publishing Company and Henry Morgan & Company, and then franking in this business card for an hotel. I will not say that I adopt the criticism of this letter, written to me, that the hon. member has received an equivalent in board, because I have no evidence whatever in the matter. But why should any member of parliament do such a thing as that? What motive can there be? There is no member of the House of Commons so wanting in intelligence as not to know the impropriety of it; and, knowing the impropriety of it, why should it be done? Is it possible, as hinted in this letter inclosing the card and circular, that some consideration is to be given for that? It is quite clear that if 100,000 of these are circulated, it amounts at once to a sum that might face a considerable consideration. I know nothing about that. The impropriety of doing that is clear enough without going on to a suggestion of that sort.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from York, made a suggestion, which I think is a reasonable one, that we should, as far as possible, begin at the beginning.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Postmaster General nothing to say about this matter that has been brought to his attention by the hon. member for West Assinibola? I think it is worthy of very strong remarks.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The statute does not define the kind of mailable matter that may be transmitted under a member's frank; it simply says that letters and other mailable matter may be franked. Each hon. gentleman in the House has to use his own judgment as to what is a proper exercise of that privilege. I would tell my hon. friend (Mr. Davin), that while he singles out the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) for criticism, he is not the only offender, if he is an offender in this respect. I do not think I have any right to sit in judgment on use of the frank by an hon. gentleman if he is within the law; if the law says he may frank any mailable matter, I have no right as a minister to call into judgment the manner in which he may exercise that privilege. I may have my own opinion, but parliament has not given to the Postmaster General the right to say how a member shall exercise his frank. As to the particular case that the hon. gentleman cites, that of the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), I know nothing about it; but I may say that other similar cases have been brought to my attention, not merely this session, but last session, and in connection with that very institution, and I took the liberty of mentioning privately to these gentlemen—they were not confined to one side of the House—that I thought they were exposing themselves to criticism if they ventured to use the frank in that way.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister is perfectly right in saying that under the law he cannot control the manner in which a member during the sitting of the House shall exercise his frank. That was the contention I took when we discussed the matter before. But I do not think the people generally would approve of that kind of extension of the franking privilege, and it might be well for the minister to consider whether the law should not be amended to prevent that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a good idea.

Mr. FOSTER. I think any political matter a member has to send or receive whilst attending the session, should be covered by the frank. Moreover, a man representing a constituency has necessarily to bring a large part of his business with him, and he must do that from the House, and I do not think it is too great an extension of the frank that it should cover his private business. But I think those two things, public documents of a political nature and his own private business, should be the limit to which the frank should apply. It is certainly a terrible abuse when a man constitutes himself the medium for circulating through the mails business advertisements of newspapers or any other business. I dare say we have all offended more or less in that respect.

I want now to call the attention of the minister to the case of the dismissal of a postmaster in the town of Woodstock, N.B., I mean Lieut.-Col. Vince, who was appointed under the regime of the late government. He was a most excellent postmaster, so excellent that I do not think you would find a single political opponent in the whole city of Woodstock or district who would say that in all respects he was not an ideal postmaster. He was a lawyer, and when he undertook the business of the post office he gave up the practice of law. But there were certain arrears of business which he obtained permission from the department to complete, but that did not bring him into competition with other legal firms of the city, and he carried on no firm business after that. Representations were made that he was interfering, and correspondence took place, and as a result an investigation was ordered, which was undertaken by the post office inspector of the province. The papers brought down show that Mr. Vince devoted his time almost exclusively to the work of the post office; there was no fault found with any service or supervision with which he was charged in connection with the office. He carried on no legal business in competition with any law firm, and with the exception of one or two unimportant things, all he did was just the tag ends of the business which had been begun before he took the position. The report of the inspector, while he does not make any recommendation, is, I think, a complete exculpation. In the first place, his salary was reduced by the rents of the post office boxes having been taken from him. Although that was done, the office was carried on with just the same efficiency as before. There, I think, the matter would have rested, because the postmaster did not interfere with this officer until other pressure was brought. But at last, owing to a promise having been made to a local M.P.P., in the county of Carleton, that he should have the appointment, and after a year of pressure, it came to the point where this gentleman said: Now, I want this promise redeemed, I was promised that place, and I must have it. When it came to that point this letter was written:

Ottawa, August 14, 1899.

Dear Postmaster General,—I beg to bring to your notice that Mr. Vince, postmaster at Woodstock, N.B., still continues to disregard the regulations of your department forbidding officers of his rank to engage in outside business. Mr. Vince carries on openly and notoriously a considerable practice as a lawyer, and his conduct in this regard, after having had numerous warnings, ought not to be longer tolerated. He obviously considers his professional practice of more value than his official position. Might I therefore ask you to take steps to make a change? Kindly have Mr. Vince retired, and appoint Mr. Charles L. Smith, at present member of the legislature for Carleton County, and a resident of Woodstock, postmaster in his place.

Yours faithfully,

ANDREW G. BLAIR.

When that peremptory demand was made upon the Postmaster General he acceded to it, and he dismissed one of the best men that he could possibly have in his whole post office service, a man who subordinated everything to the work of the post office, and who after permission obtained, kept loyally within the lines of that permission, merely finishing up the fag ends of the business. He carried on no firm business whatever, and entered into no competition with the legal firms of the city. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman would not have dismissed this man were it not for the pressure of his colleague based upon political necessity.

Mr. MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has discussed the matter in a very calm way, and I will endeavour to follow his good example. Not having refreshed my memory as to the facts I can only speak from recollection in reference to what I remember now, going back to the period in the last act in the drama a year and a half ago. I do not understand the hon. gentleman to quarrel with the abstract proposition, that when a person is filling an office such as the postmastership of Woodstock he should not be permitted to carry on some other business in competition with others in that town.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a fair proposition.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was brought to my attention that Col. Vince was engaged in the practice of his profession. When this matter was brought to my attention, I instructed the department to inform him that he would have to make an election between retaining his office and practicing. I was not desirous of dealing in a harsh manner with him, and I gave him authority to manage some little private estate of which he had charge. I endeavoured to give him as much latitude as possible, so long as it did not come in conflict with public opinion and with what I considered my duty towards his competitors. I must say that I think Col. Vince did not altogether live up to the rule that was laid down for his guidance. He may have done so for a while, but I think about the time of the letter that the hon. gentleman has read, he had probably come to the conclusion to practice his profession, and he had practically begun it.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman will find that upon looking up the records in reference to it. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. FOSTER. October.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there is evidence to show that he had begun the active practice of his profession again. My recollection is that there were newspapers sent to me containing advertisements showing Col. Vince to be acting as solicitor for parties in connection with the disposition of property, acting as solicitor for persons in the management of sales in connection with the winding up of mortgages. I am of the opinion that in addition to the letter of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) there was evidence furnished showing that while he may for a time have abstained from doing other than looking after these private estates, he subsequently began to act as solicitor for parties to the extent of signing his name to these advertisements, and perhaps otherwise. I may say there was no disposition on the part of the Minister of Railways and Canals to take action except in deference to the view that the hon. member for York thinks is a correct one, which I must agree with.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to enter into a controversy. The hon. Postmaster General is at the disadvantage of not having refreshed his memory of late in reference to the matter. I can assure him that he would find that public opinion in the city of Woodstock is very different from the representation he has just made of it. Of course, Col. Vince does not care now particularly. He did not wish to hold an office where he was not persona grata with the authorities that are. I do not think he harbours any feeling in any way in reference to it, but when there is so good an officer, it hurts the morale of the administration of the post office through and through to find that officials are dealt with simply for political exigencies, as in this case he was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Might it be possible for me to get this item through very soon?

Mr. FOSTER. One or two hon. gentlemen have a few words to say on post office matters, but with the understanding that on Monday they will be allowed to speak on any item, we may allow this to pass.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, on any item.

Post Office Department—Civil Government
—Forty-eight third-class clerks, $50 each $2,400

Mr. FOSTER. Does this include the statutory increases for all those who are eligible?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not every one that would be in law eligible. Everybody under $600 is included in this.

Mr. FOSTER. There are eighty-six altogether. It must be a pretty large proportion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose it is.

One additional first-class clerkship ..... $1,400

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to be the additional first-class clerk?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My private secretary, Mr. Laschinger.

Mr. FOSTER. What position has he now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is a second-class clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. When did he come into the service ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With the government.

Mr. FOSTER. In what position ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Twelve hundred dollars a year. This will not add to his salary.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, this gives him $1,400.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I think there are arrangements made by which the secretaries get $600.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They may get it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I intended that what he got as first-class clerk would be taken off the $600. I do not intend him by this vote to get any more money than he is getting.

Mr. FOSTER. In 1896 he was made a second-class clerk at $1,100.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All the private secretaries get $1,200 a year by a special vote, including the $600.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but the hon. Postmaster General says that this gentleman came in as a second-class clerk in 1896, that he made his bow in the service as a second-class clerk.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think he came in first as a temporary writer.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to a private secretary having a position given to him, but there is no particular reason why you should make him a first-class clerk.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, he is a very strong man.

Mr. FOSTER. I know, he may be a very strong clerk. My private secretary, in 1885, came in as a second-class clerk, and he only got his first-class clerkship when he had earned it by progression in his increases.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This will not make any difference in his salary. Six hundred dollars, or a variable sum, is attached to the salaries of clerks who are acting as private secretaries. He is getting a certain salary outside of the $600, being his salary as a second-class clerk. When he gets his increase as a first-class clerk, the amount of that increase will be deducted from the $600, except any annual increase.

Mr. FOSTER. You make a man a first-class clerk in three years' time. However,

Mr. MULOCK.

I suppose this is provision against the rainy weather.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is a good man.

To increase the salary of Mr. J. F. Everett, superintendent of the money order office $200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $200

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is a good increase.

Travelling allowances of judges in the Yukon territory ..... $1,500

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When Judge McGuire was in the Yukon territory he was obliged to go to Tagish for the purpose of trying the Indian murderers, and this item is simply kept in the estimates for the purpose of meeting such an emergency as that should it arise.

Salary of sheriff, Territorial Court, Yukon. $2,000

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When the sheriffs in the Yukon were first appointed, they were appointed on the same conditions as existed in the North-west Territories, under which the sheriff received a salary of $500 and in addition fees. Mr. Constantine, a member of the North-west Mounted Police, was the first sheriff and he received no salary. Subsequently another officer of the North-west Mounted Police was appointed, and as he might incur some personal liability as sheriff he received a salary of $500 and fees. It was then decided to send a sheriff from the older provinces and Mr. Eilbeck was appointed. It was stipulated that he should receive a salary of $1,200 and he was requested to make a report as to the amount of fees which he received; the intention being to increase his salary if the fees warranted it. We did receive a statement showing that from the 27th of July, 1899, to January, 1900, about half a year, the fees were $694.24. It was then decided to increase his salary to $2,000, from the first of July, inst., the fees to go into the treasury. What I have said of the sheriff applies to the clerk. The clerk received $500 salary and fees, and it was found that the first clerk, Mr. Schnell, had received out of a gross revenue of about $8,000 a salary of $4,000, so that it was decided to abolish the fee system and make his salary $2,000 a year.

Maintenance of prisoners in the Yukon territory ..... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is your provision with reference to the prisoners.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The amount paid during the last fiscal year for maintenance at police posts at Dawson and Tagish was $14,498, and the accounts for May and June are yet to come in. The rate agreed upon being $1 per diem for each prisoner. This gives a daily average of prisoners of between 47 and 48, which may be further subdivided into 33 at Dawson and 15 at Tagish. The total for the last year is estimated at about $17,400.

Dorchester Penitentiary—Further amount required ..... $4,000

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This item was held over in order that my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) might say something.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Solicitor General look into the strange meanderings of Mr. Bill, the commissioner, to find out what he was doing at these places for which he charged ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The number of witnesses examined in connection with that inquiry was thirty-seven, and the evidence, I am informed, covers many pages. The charges by the commissioner were for two trips made to Amherst, one to examine Dr. Allison, and the next to examine an ex-guard. The expenses to Halifax, which were accounted for at the time, were for a day in Halifax on his way home.

Mr. FOSTER. I forget the number of days the commissioner spent over this investigation, but it was over half a year, I believe, and from all I can learn the work of the investigation should not certainly have gone over five or six weeks. But the job was nursed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was 140 days.

Mr. FOSTER. One hundred and forty days, just to look into the affairs of a small penitentiary, the evidence being almost entirely local, and the expenses of the 140 days being, of course, met by the public treasury. I am sorry that when a commission of this kind is appointed, some method is not found of expediting the commissioner. I do not want to pass too strong strictures, as strong as might be passed from all I can learn of what took place; but that circumstance alone is simply absurd.

Charges of management—Office of Assistant Receiver General, St. John ..... $100

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is owing to the contingent account running very close last year, and we think we need a little more margin.

Department of Justice—Hector Verret to be a second-class clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $1,100

Mr. FOSTER. Why this proviso ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I made inquiry, and I am told that the Auditor General insists upon it, because of some provision contained in the amendment to the Civil Service Act, which was introduced by the Postmaster General. I cannot understand why it should be necessary, because this gentleman is a graduate of the University of Quebec, and I rather assumed that he would not be required to pass the qualifying examination.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you giving him just the regular salary ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, that of a second class clerk.

Governor General's Secretary's Office—Promotion of a second-class clerk to a first-class clerkship ..... $200

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to be promoted ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Sladen.

Department of the Secretary of State—To provide for an additional first-class clerkship in place of one second-class clerkship at the same salary, which was dropped in the main estimates ..... $1,400

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to be promoted ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A. M. P. Drouin. He is a skilled engrosser, age 49, appointed in 1885.

To provide for the appointment of A. Brophy as a second-class clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $1,100

Mr. FOSTER. Why is the proviso put in ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Brophy is private secretary to the Secretary of State.

Mr. FOSTER. When did he come in ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think he came in with the minister, as private secretary.

Mr. HAGGART. Does he get $600 besides this ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I believe not. I think this is not intended to affect his salary, but it gives him the rank in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason you make Mr. Brophy simply a second class clerk, whereas, you make the private secretary to the Postmaster General, who came in at the same time, a first-class clerk ? Both of them came in in 1896. Provided they both are good clerks, why do you discriminate between them ? Is Mr. Brophy so inferior, or the other so superior ? Or is it that the one minister is more insistent than the other ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think in each case, the minister got what he desired.

Department of Printing and Stationery—Statutory increases—One third-class clerk, $50; one messenger, $30 ..... $80

Mr. FOSTER. Who gets the statutory increases ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The clerk is D. Behan, and the messenger H. Allen. Behan was appointed in 1883.

Mr. FOSTER. Have all the clerks in that department received statutory increases ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not. I know that in most of the departments, all did not receive it, and I presume this is not an exception.

Three junior second-class clerks at $600... $1,800

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The three are F. G. Bronskill, T. F. Clancy and G. S. Hutchison. They are all in the service as temporary clerks, receiving respectively $460, $400 and $400. They are all advanced to $600.

Mr. FOSTER. This is the first instalment of the new class ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Department of Indian Affairs—Additional remuneration to the secretary of the department, J. D. McLean, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..... $150

Mr. FOSTER. Why is this extra salary given to Mr. McLean ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McLean was appointed secretary of the department in 1897, his salary being fixed at $2,000. He has proved to be a very efficient officer, and we thought it well to increase his salary by $150.

Mr. FOSTER. What was he before he was made secretary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He was a first-class clerk in the department. He had been there a great many years.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $1,800.

Mr. FOSTER. Now he is getting $2,150 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He had $1,800 before he was appointed secretary. Then he got $2,000. He received no increase since then, and now we propose to give him an increase of $150. That will make his salary $2,150.

Mr. FOSTER. We had a little discussion, when the minister was absent, with reference to the extraordinary increase in the hon. gentleman's department in the case of a few clerks. I do not intend going over that discussion again. The hon. gentleman will find it in Hansard. He has seemingly exhausted, by these extraordinary increases given to a few clerks, a large amount of money which prevents his giving the statutory increases to others who are deserving and acknowledged to be deserving, but who are put off with the statement that all of the clerks could not receive their statutory increases. It does seem to be unfair that in order to give increases of $200, $400 and $800 in some cases to a few favoured clerks, the other clerks equally deserving should not receive theirs during all these years. It knocks the ambition and pride out of these clerks entirely to give abnormal increase to certain of his favourites and none at all to the other clerks. By this partiality the hon. gentleman has done a decided injustice to numbers of his clerks who admittedly done their work well and have received no statutory increase at all. I do not want to revive the discussion on this matter, but I certainly think that the service does not gain by that kind of favouritism.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not want to revive either the discussion which took place some time ago on this question of statutory increases, but I wish to give expression to a similar complaint that has arisen in the Interior Department. I am told that there is considerable heart burning in that department among the typewriters. There are eight or nine ladies, third class clerks, short-hand and type writers, who were made permanent in 1892 at $400 per annum and, in case of optionals, $450. Since the coming in of this government, two of these ladies have received exceptional promotion. I wish it to be understood that I am not at all attacking the promotions of these ladies, but what I wish to convey to the minister is the dissatisfaction existing through his not dealing out similar recognition to the others. I have no doubt whatever that the promotions of these ladies were deserved. I am told that Miss May and Miss Barber have been given their increases every year, or at all events they have only missed one year, whilst others have not received any increase, and there is a conviction in the department, especially strong amongst those not recognized in the matter of increases, that neither Miss May nor Miss Barber does better work. It seems, however, that Miss May is with the deputy minister and Miss Barber with Mr. Rothwell, which may account for the fact that they have been promoted. There is a feeling that this is unfair, and that those who had not the good fortune to be typewriters for the deputy minister or Mr. Rothwell, do equally good work, and are equally entitled to their increase. I am assured that officers in the hon. gentleman's department, occupying high positions and having his confidence, appointees of his own, consider that injustice has been done those young ladies, whose grievance I voice on this occasion. I wish to say that not one of these young ladies do I know, and this matter has not been brought to my attention by any of them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I perfectly understand and appreciate the spirit in which the hon. gentleman has spoken. The two young ladies to whom he refers, Miss May and Miss Barber, are typewriters respectively of the deputy minister and the law clerk. The hon. gentleman will see at once that their work is of a more important character and requires a higher degree of capacity than that of ordinary clerks in the department. That would account, to some extent, for the slight discrimination in their favour. But I am quite safe in saying that the hon. gentleman is misinformed with regard to the facts, and that there is no one of these clerks to whom he has referred who has not received a statutory increase since the change of government. The facts will bear out my statement that the statutory increases, though not uniformly given every year, have been fairly distributed. It is the first time I have heard of any complaint that favouritism of any kind existed, or that the clerks were not, between themselves, fairly treated. There is, of course, the standing complaint that the clerks do not get their annual increase automatically every year, but that has been already discussed, and I need not go into it now. That has been discussed in the House before, and I need not discuss it again. But this is the first time I have ever heard that there is any complaint that the clerks, as between themselves are not fairly treated and the statutory increases not fairly given. I think I can say with certainty that the hon. gentleman is misinformed on that subject and that a full statement would show that the statutory increases have been fairly distributed. If necessary, on Monday, I will give a statement showing exactly how they have been given.

Mr. FOSTER. On the minister's own statement you would have five or six at the same rate, and two of them given statutory increases every year, and you would have only given the others one statutory increase in the whole time you have been in office. If you have half a dozen young men of about equal ability and equal industry and doing the same class of work, and you give two of them their statutory increases every year and let the others toil along with only one increase in a number of years, that must breed a sense of injustice. If you have not enough to go around, distribute them. Whatever the hon. minister may think about it I think there is no doubt whatever that the other course breeds a dissatisfaction in the service and is a bad thing for the service.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) will bring me the information tomorrow.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Before we leave that item I desire to bring up another matter in connection with the department. While the minister was away we had an item in the estimates to provide for the relief of distressed persons in the North-west Territories, $10,000, but reduced by the acting minister (Mr. Sutherland) to $5,000. The information given by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), who took some part in the debate, was that these were distressed farmers who had lost their crops. He stated, I think, that there were some two hundred of them. I have a letter which I will read to the committee, but without giving the name, as I have not the permission of the writer to give his name. But I will show the letter in confidence to the Minister of the Interior, and he will know the writer as one who is well qualified to speak on this subject. He says:

Five thousand dollars for destitute farmers at Birch River and Cedar Lake; why, there are not more than a dozen families in both places combined, and not a single farmer in the whole of that part of the North-west Territories. Not a bushel of grain was ever sown there, and I do not believe they ever planted a bushel of potatoes even. These people are not destitute. They live by hunting and fishing, and past season has been good for such. I fancy it is an election fund.

When this item was explained it was stated that there was high water in the Saskatchewan last summer which had covered the place where these people had their houses, their property and their crops, and destroyed their crops and they lost everything. Also, I was informed that from 150 to 200 people were suffering—this is what the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) said—and, after consultation, it was his personal opinion that probably, for the present, $5,000 would be sufficient. But if the information given by this writer, who certainly is in a position to know the Saskatchewan well, is correct, it would justify moving, on concurrence—I am not saying that I will do it—that the item should not be concurred in. In any case, we want an explanation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Shortly before I went away, this matter was brought to my attention. I had not, at that time, received sufficient information to enable me to make up my mind what course should be adopted. The course subsequently adopted by my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), who acted in my place, was taken upon information which came from the Hudson's Bay Company. The same general course has been followed in this case as has been followed by the department for many years, where persons in the neighbourhood of Hudson's Bay Company posts have been destitute. The Hudson's Bay Company has been given authority to give assistance in absolutely necessary cases. We have in some such cases—with Indians particularly—recouped to the Hudson's Bay Company what they have given in that way. In this particular case the chief commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company, Mr. Chipman, was requested to instruct his officers at that point to do what was necessary to prevent the people suffering starvation. If there are only a dozen people and only a few who require assistance, the amount disbursed from this vote will be very small. The only use made of the vote is through the Hudson's Bay Company, and, possibly the officers of the mounted police in the district. Whatever is urgently necessary will be done. I think the hon. gentleman can rely upon it that that is the only use that can be made of it.

Mr. FOSTER. The information we got when that was being voted was largely through the member for Saskatchewan. Very little of the information came through the Hudson's Bay Company, but the representations were made by the member for Saskatchewan on the floor of the House, and he vouched for them, and led us to believe that this was a farming district, that there were from 150 to 200 souls whose crops had been swept away, whose property had been destroyed, and they were in a state of dire starvation. If the statement made in that letter by the gentleman, who is, no doubt, a representative man, is correct, it is a very different version, and it makes one suspicious of these statements that are made.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will not suggest that the statements of the writer of this letter are to be taken as against statements made by a member of the House, without any further investigation?

Mr. FOSTER. I would just as soon trust the statement of the writer of the letter as the statement of the member for Saskatchewan; but I am bound to take his statement as a member of parliament when he makes it. But, the least that can be said is, that it throws a doubt upon the statement of the member for Saskatchewan, and makes it obligatory upon the minister to make a careful investigation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I agree with that.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another point I wish to mention. I believe a change has been made in the mining regulations as to the area of claims in the placer districts, that these have been enlarged.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No change.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been told that under the new mining regulations the area of the claims in the placer districts have been enlarged, that on Discovery a claim is now 1,500 feet instead of 1,000, and the width has also been increased. Ordinary claims are also enlarged. My informant states that the regulations also provide that claims which have been staked before the present regulations came into force may be increased in size to the present limits, provided it does not interfere with any one else. Now, suppose that the increase verges on the lots that are kept for the government, can the increase take place, will the government hold its title to the alternate lots by so firm a line of delimitation that they will consider that to be an increase or enlargement to the size now made by the regulations?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The reason why I said there had been no change was, that the change was made a good while ago. The writer of the letter is evidently mixing up something else along with the ordinary regulations, when he says that the size of the ordinary claims has been changed. If there is any truth in that it would arise from some changes that were made in regard to the interpretation of the regulations respecting the rear boundary, in regard to which there was great difficulty on account of the question of what rim rock was. Some definition was given to that by the changes that were made. Probably the idea that the size of the ordinary claim was changed has arisen from that.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not quite understand, if the ordinary claim is not enlarged, why he should say:

The regulations also provide that claims which have been staked before the present regulations came into force may be increased in size to the present limits.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That would only refer to specific cases, that is to say, upon a certain creek.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose that in your effort to get it enlarged in that way, increased to the present limits, you find no bar except the reserve claims of the government, is that a bar?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot make a general statement, but I will say what we did. This statement can only be true in some specific cases, which were dealt with by specific orders in council, it is not a general principle, but was done where it appeared to the department that persons staked claims in ignorance of the regulations. I think the particular case so dealt with was upon Dominion Creek, and there the size of the claim was fixed at 250 feet. If, in order to give that width, it was necessary to encroach upon a government claim, then the government would lose, and land to the amount of 250 feet would be given to the claim owner.

Department of Militia and Defence—For increase of salary to the following, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act: Capt. A. Benoit (promoted, chief clerk) ..... $200

Mr. FOSTER. When this item is up, I want to ask the minister if, in view of the statement made in the House the other day by the Minister of Justice, he proposes to do anything with reference to the Devlin fraud. Is he going to prosecute the man who swindled and committed the fraud, or will he turn the whole matter over to the Minister of Justice in order that the Minister of Justice, as he intimated his readiness to do, may see that justice is carried out.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not read the statement made by the Minister of Justice. I understand the Minister of Justice stated that he had not consulted me, and I doubt very much if he has very carefully read the case at all. I do not think the hon. gentleman would hardly expect me, on a short notice of this kind, to make a declaration with reference to this matter. However, I have no objection, in fact, I should be very glad to consult the Minister of Justice with reference to the whole matter, and I shall take an early opportunity of discussing it with him.

Department of Railways and Canals—To increase the salary of secretary of department and chief clerk in the office of the deputy minister and chief engineer, L. K. Jones, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $200

Mr. HAGGART. I did not know you had a secretary of the department now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. After the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that there was no necessity for a secretaryship.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman, I think, remembers that my statement was that we would not require any new officer in the department as secretary, that the duties discharged by the secretary previously, might be discharged by the chief clerk, and that it was my intention to appoint the chief clerk as secretary of the department.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. minister be kind enough to tell me what Mr. Jones received in 1896, and what this increase makes his salary now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This makes his salary $2,400 a year. Mr. Bradley received $2,800, and Mr. Balderson $2,300.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the salary Mr. Jones was receiving, when the hon. gentleman entered the department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I gave him an increase of $200.

Mr. HAGGART. This is only $400 of an increase altogether?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Department of Inland Revenue—Chief clerk and accountant, F. R. E. Campeau, from $2,250 to $2,400, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $150

Mr. FOSTER. What is that large increase for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will hunt up the explanation.

Auditor General's Office—Three junior second-class clerks at $600 ..... $1,800

Mr. HAGGART. There are three more increases in the Auditor General's office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, we are creating three junior second-class clerks, but this does not add to the number of officers in the department. We are taking men from the temporary service, whom the Auditor General regards as good men. We are not increasing the number of officials, but substituting permanent for temporary officials.

Mr. HAGGART. But there are to be three junior second-class clerks, and they are to get $1,800.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are not adding to the number of officials at all. We are making three junior second-class clerks, and reducing the number of temporary clerks.

Mr. HAGGART. You take your full estimate for the Auditor General's department, and then you take an estimate for three junior second class clerks at $1,800.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, but in carrying through the contingencies, I stated that we would reduce the contingent amount given to the Auditor General for clerical services. There are two or three cases in which we will have to make reductions on concurrence.

Department of Agriculture—Increase of salary to W. J. Lynch, chief clerk patent branch, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $100

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) might explain this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Mr. Lynch is a chief clerk in charge of the patent branch. He is the junior chief clerk, and has less pay than any of the chief clerks in the department, although he has the largest number of clerks in the department under his control. He is doing the work of his branch very efficiently, and there has been a large increase in the work, in consequence of the large number of patents applied for, and issued.

Promotion of J. W. D. Verner, third-class clerk at $1,000 in main estimates to second-class clerkship ..... $100

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has been at the head of the third-class clerks for many years.

To provide for three junior second-class clerkships, one at $638.75 and two at $600 ..... $1,838 75

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved :

That the item be reduced by $38.75.

He said : This adds one clerkship and one clerkship will be taken off the vote for contingencies.

Mr. HAGGART. The contingency vote is reduced by this amendment.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, and the next item of $800 which is put in here, providing for the appointment of an assistant patent examiner, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, will be taken off the contingencies in the main estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. We have gone to nearly half-past eleven, and I think we had better stop.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is the item of the Department of Inland Revenue for which I have been unable to get the explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. You can get the explanation on Monday.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very good. There is the item of the Dominion Police that we may take now. I have had a conversation with the hon. ex-Minister of Finance about this special vote, for the Dominion police.

Mr. FOSTER. On the condition that the details of the expenditure shall be submitted to the audit of the Finance Minister, the leader of the opposition and myself, we may let it pass.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, my hon. friend or any of the leading gentlemen on his side of the House, certainly.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the adjournment, I understood my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) last night to say that no more measures were going to be brought down now.

The PRIME MINISTER. No more measures.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

Mr. FISHER.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 16, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright) moved :

That this House doth concur in the 6th report of the select committee appointed to supervise the official report of the debates of this House during the present session.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be advisable to concur in this report.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, why should not any reasons be given? Because I have heard the Premier express the view that, unless there are very strong reasons to the contrary, the House should accept the report of the committee, otherwise its action is a reflection on the committee.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not yet heard any reasons in support of it.

Mr. BERGERON. I will give my hon. friend some reasons. If my hon. friend (Mr. Champagne) wants to speak, I will give way to him.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. As chairman of the committee, I will give the reasons why, to my mind, this report ought to be adopted by the House. A few days ago, the translators of the Debates presented to the Debates Committee, a petition in which they asked for an increase of salary, in view of the unusual length of the session. They asked for an allowance of $500 each. After having discussed the matter carefully, and taken into consideration all the facts and reasons for and against the petition, the committee came to the conclusion that it was fair and just to grant the request of these gentlemen to the extent of $250; and, as chairman of the committee, it is my duty to ask the House to concur in the report which has been laid before it. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has pointed out that in matters of this kind, the reports of committees ought to be adopted by the House, unless exceptional reasons of a very serious character are shown. I submit that this is the right principle to act upon. I am sorry that the right hon. the Prime Minister does not think it advisable to recommend the adoption of the report by the House; but I think the House will be free to accept the principle which was laid down by himself in 1899, when the case of Mr. Pelland's dismissal came before the House. On that occasion the Prime Minister said :

It has been the invariable practice of this House, when questions of this kind have arisen, to sustain the action of the committee, whatever that action was. We must recognize that it is impossible for us, sitting here, to form any conclusions as to the merits of this dismissal. It may be right or it may be wrong. I am assured that it is right, because the members of the committee have come to this conclusion.

As I have said already, unless it can be shown to the House that the report of the committee is altogether wrong, I think it ought to be adopted. Now, it is stated in this report, that on two previous occasions, this House has granted an increase of salary to the translators of the Debates. One precedent is to be found in the year 1885, and the other in the year 1891; and I may say at once, that the present session is likely, when ended, to be the longest session since confederation. In 1885 an extra allowance of $500 was granted to the translators of the Debates for a session of five months and twenty-one days, when the matter translated covered 6,952 columns. On that occasion, at the end of the session, a report similar to the one now submitted to the House was presented by Mr. White, of Cardwell, who was then the chairman of the Debates Committee. It will be found in the Journals of the House of Commons of 1885, at page 665, as follows:

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), from the select committee appointed to supervise the official report of the debates of the House during the present session, presented to the House the fourth report of the said committee, which was read, as followeth:

The committee would recommend that the following additional allowances be granted for the present session, as owing to the unusual length of the session the work has fully doubled, viz.: To the translators, $500 each; to the English proofreader and reviser, $400; to the French proofreader, $200.

In 1891, a similar demand was made by the translators, with the result that these gentlemen were granted an extra allowance of $350. The session of 1891 lasted five months and two days, and the matter translated was 6,472 columns, a little less than the translation which had been made during the session of 1885. So the basis taken for the extra allowance was the number of columns translated, the amount having been reduced from $500 to $350. I find in the Journals of 1891, at page 518, the following:

Mr. TAYLOR, from the select committee appointed to supervise the official report of the debates of this House during the present session, presented to the House the fourth report of the said committee, which was read, as followeth:—

Your committee beg leave to report the following resolution, as a recommendation:—

Resolved, that having regard to the length of the session, the translators and Mr. J. C. Boyce, assistant to the chief reporter, should be paid extra on the same basis as they were paid in 1885, that basis having been a basis of time.

So that in 1885 and in 1891, the rule was admitted and laid down by this House, that these translators should be paid according to the time during which they would be at work, and according to the amount of work which they would perform. I think, Mr. Speaker, this is far from being an unjust demand on the part of these translators; on the contrary, I think it is a just and fair demand, when we take into consideration the fact that they are paid only $1,000 for a session, and that they are not placed altogether on the same footing as most of the other employees of this House. We know that the sessional clerks and others are paid by the day, from $2 to $3.50 a day, so that these employees are not losing anything by the unusual length of the session, whilst the translators are obliged to work more than they are expected to do under ordinary circumstances. If we take into consideration the good work these translators are doing, especially since certain reforms have been made in the staff, I think at the suggestion of the committee, I think we have every reason to be satisfied with the way they are doing their work. They have translated the debates up to the 7th of July instant, which shows a celerity that is unprecedented. If the French Hansard is not more advanced than it is, it is due wholly to the delay caused at the Printing Bureau—for reasons which I have no doubt must be very good—owing to the work coming in every day in immense quantities, especially during the last days of the session. Anyhow, here is the fact, that the translators are at least eight or ten days ahead of the Printing Bureau. Under all circumstances, Mr. Speaker, in view of the precedents established in 1885 and in 1891, the members of the Debates Committee think the House ought to concur in this report, especially in view of the fact that the amount which we recommend is a good deal less than the amounts which were recommended in 1885 and in 1891, while, if we took the basis of the payments then made, the amount would be higher than $500. I submit the report, and hope that it will meet with the approval of the House.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I would like to say a few words about this report, and, in connection with it, on another subject of perhaps equal interest to the other members of this House. I heartily concur in the observations of the hon. gentleman on moving the report. I do think, in view of the increased work which these translators have to do and the increased length of time it will take them to do it, this is not an unreasonable request. The only objection I have to the report is this, that it deals simply with a few hands about the House. This House is now in session 166 days, and it cannot be prorogued for a few days yet. The law provides that, during a session of parliament, a member may draw seven dollars a day during every day of the session until the sessional indemnity of $1,000 is exhausted. This is always exhausted when 143 days have expired, which, in the present session, expired 23 days ago. I respectfully submit that $7 a day for a member of parliament, who leaves his business at home and allows it to go to wreck almost entirely for nearly six months in the year, is a very small compensation, and the full amount is drawn at the end of 143 days, after which time a member is obliged to send home for money to pay his board, and work for nothing in the interests of the country. This session is probably a fair average of what sessions will be in the future. All will agree with me that there has been no desire or intention to in any way obstruct the ordinary work of the session, on this side, and yet we have been steadily employed since February 1 doing the work of the country, and we are not quite through. This House for several days past has been very much denuded of its members. Only a fraction are here to-day, because a large number cannot afford to remain here and work for nothing and have nothing to pay their board, when the sessional indemnity is all gone. If this were an exceptional session, and future sessions were not expected to be so long, it might be said that we ought only to deal with the exceptional circumstances at the present. That is what we propose to do with the translators, but I submit that this is not an exceptional session, because for several sessions past we have never been able to get through with our work in less than between five and six months. As the business of the country increases, it may be expected that the length of the session will increase in proportion, and in future we cannot reasonably hope to get through in three months. We should either review the situation and adapt our sessional indemnity to the increased length of the session, or else make some provision that when the sessions become exceptionally long, the members should get some consideration. It may be said that that would tend to lengthen the sessions. In my judgment, it would not likely bring about anything of the kind; but if it did, so long as it could not be shown that the time of the House was wasted, we would be quite justified in making our sessional indemnity bear some proportion to the length of the time we must be here. My objection to the report is, that it only deals with the sessional translators. It ought to deal with every other member connected with the House of Commons and the Senate who is obliged to remain here longer than the usual time to attend to the work of the country, except those paid by the day, and to whom it is, therefore, an advantage to have a long session. But that does not apply to the members of parliament, or the senators, or many of the civil servants connected with the House during the session of parliament, who must be engaged long after the session, finishing up their work, owing to its increased length.

Mr. SPROULE.

It may be said that this would not be endorsed by the country and that this is not the proper time to bring up such a question. I submit that it is the best time to bring it up. We are practically at the end of the parliamentary term; and, if this matter is settled now, the people will have an opportunity, at the forthcoming election, of expressing their views, and it will not be said that at the beginning of a parliament the members voted so much money into their own pockets at a time when the people had not the opportunity of expressing their opinion on the action of their representatives. This, therefore, is the proper time to deal with this question. We must all admit that the sessions are not likely to get shorter. It is unreasonable to suppose that men can leave their business and neglect it during five or six months, when they are doing the work of the country, for an indemnity of $1,000, and have to bear the great additional expenses incurred in travelling back and forth. If a judge is appointed an arbitrator to arrange a school section, the law allows him $20 a day, and any man appointed an arbitrator in any ordinary matter, no matter what his ability, gets $5 a day at the least. But here we are attending to the work of the session and only drawing $7 a day, and having to bear all the necessary extra expense of donations and subscriptions and all other incidental expenses entailed on us by virtue of our position. And, after the 143 days are up, we are expected to work the rest of the time for nothing and pay our own expenses. This is unreasonable. I do not think that the country expects it, and the government is doing less than its duty when it does not give something that would be a fair compensation.

What must be the result, if this continues? The result will be that you will drive from the House a large number of members who are not moneyed men and cannot afford to be here that length of time without getting fair compensation, and the House would be composed largely of wealthy men, who would not be a fair representation of the various classes and interests of Canada. In my judgment, that is the best House which is composed of men taken from all lines of life, from the poorest as well as the richest—those engaged in large business as well as those engaged in smaller affairs. The result will be, the intelligence of each particular line will give, in the aggregate, the intelligence of the country and bring to bear on the public business the accumulated experience and intelligence drawn from every line and class. But if the present system continues, poor men must be driven from this House, men of moderate means, and only one or two classes will be able to afford to remain, namely, the class who are wealthy, like some of the men we know in this House, and those who have no money and who would come here for the purpose of earning money they could not possibly do at home. Now, we are sometimes told—

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend's (Mr. Sproule's) argument, but I desire to remind him that he is talking entirely away from the motion.

Mr. SPROULE. As I understand the motion, it is this—that the increase in the length of the session demands an increase of pay for certain persons about this House. I submit that if that applies to any it applies to all, every civil servant in this House. I was about to say—we are sometimes told that the ministers are against this. But compare the ministers and the private members. We are compelled to stay six months of the year here, and we get $1,000 paying all the extra expenses that must be incurred during a long session here. The minister of the Crown stays the same length of time, and for that length of time he gets $4,000—that is, he gets $8,000 a year, and for six months half that amount. It is not justice, therefore, for ministers of the Crown to object to an increase; it is unjust to their own following and to all the members of the House. They are doing less than their duty and less than the country would justify them in doing when they refuse to favour at least some additional indemnity not only to the members of parliament, who have been engaged here so long and must in the future be engaged every year for longer than three months, which was formerly the ordinary length of session, but to every employee about the House of Commons and the Senate whose work is increased by the increased length of the session.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). The Hansard staff are engaged to do the work of the session, just the same as the members of parliament are engaged to stay here for the session, for $1,000. Now, we all stand in about the same relation. Hansard staff may be kept a few days or few weeks more one session than another. But, to increase the pay of the Hansard staff, while members are kept at the same amount as they have been receiving, I consider would be unfair. For my part, I am not prepared to fully endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule). It is well known; it has been my experience—and I have sat in four different parliaments—that the last session of a parliament is always the longest one—

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this the last?

Mr. McMULLEN. It is expected to be. We do not know. But I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite have taken this to be the last session, and have been preparing material against the time when the appeal is made to the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. Last session was about as long.

Mr. McMULLEN. Probably because hon. gentlemen opposite thought that it would be the last session of the parliament. But they have no more right to conclude that this is the last session than they had to conclude that last session was the last. I must say that I agree, to a certain extent, with the remarks of my hon. friend from East Grey. I agree if we are to sit here for five months and receive only $1,000, it would be no compensation for a man who has any business at all at home. But I am not prepared to sit here and vote money into my own pocket. If the government, after carefully reviewing the business of the country for the last five or ten years, come to the conclusion that the duties performed by the members are increasing and that it is advisable in the interest of the country to recommend an increase or proportionate allowance, that would be an entirely different matter. I am opposed to a vote of that kind until the government concludes it is right. With regard to the Hansard staff, notwithstanding the precedents produced by my hon. friend (Mr. Champagne) who presented this report, I will oppose any increase to any person who has agreed to perform the work of the session for a fixed sum, as the Hansard staff have done, unless the government assume the responsibility of proposing an increase. I do not think they do more arduous work than the members who sit here all night. As to the remarks dropped by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) in regard to the discrepancy in the salary of ministers and the allowances to members, I believe that is absolutely ridiculous. I said on one occasion I thought the ministers of the Crown were overpaid. I do not think the First Minister is overpaid, and would not be if he got double what he now receives. But some of the minor ministers are earning, I believe, more than they could in any other way. So far as I am concerned, I shall oppose the adoption of this report until a more general readjustment takes place by the government, who should assume all responsibility.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS. (St. John City). The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) does not use exact terms when he refers to the Hansard staff. This report does not refer to the entire Hansard staff. As I understand it, the shorthand reporters—and we certainly have excellent reporters, officers of whom the House may well be proud—are paid by the year, but the translators are paid by the session. The reference in the report is entirely to the translators. As a member of the committee, I know that the matter was thoroughly discussed in the committee; and it did seem fair and reasonable to the members of that committee, in view of the length of this session and of the fact that because their work is greatly increased, not only because of the number of days taken up by this session, but also by the longer hours of these long sittings, these cruelly long sittings, that we have been holding for some weeks past—these men have to do a great deal of extra work. The committee have been very—hard, I was going to say, but that would not be quite correct—on the translators, but they have been very exacting in holding the translators to their duty. The committee have kept the work of translation up better than it has been kept, I believe, in any parliament that has ever sat in Canada. This has been done only by hard, severe work. And, thinking the circumstances exceptional as they may be, though not entirely exceptional, the committee felt that the translators deserved a greater allowance, and I trust that it will be allowed. The amount proposed is a compromise sum, and it is a fair sum under the circumstances.

With regard to the increased indemnity for members, I agree that an increased indemnity should be allowed for this session. Without going over what I have previously said about the hardness and severity of the work, it is undoubtedly a fact that members of the House are at great expense through these long sessions. It is a fair comparison, even though it may be somewhat odious, as all comparisons are said to be, between members of the House and ministers. The tax on private members, during the past session has been very great, and, on account of its length, professional men must see their business going to ruin because of the time they are giving to the public. I cordially support the idea that there should be an allowance to members for the length of the session.

Mr. BERGERON. As a member of the Debates Committee, I desire to say one word in support of the motion of my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Champagne), for the reasons that he gave—and he gave them all.

There is a precedent for this. On two occasions before the translators have been given a bonus. In 1885, they translated probably about half the matter which they have translated this session, and they were given an addition of $500; in 1891 they were given $350. Now, it has been remarked that since the indemnity of the members of parliament has not been increased, these gentlemen should have no bonus. I do not think there is any reason in that. We are in a different position entirely, we are members of parliament, and are not supposed to ask for anything; but these are employees of the House, and they have already done double the work for which they had a bonus before. Now, since the Debates Committee have threshed the matter out so thoroughly, and have come to the conclusion to recommend a bonus to the translators, I think we should grant it. I want to say that if there ever was a time—and I say it because I have examined the matter thoroughly—when the translators of the Hansard deserved special recognition at the hands of this House, if there ever was a time when they were entitled to congratulation by the House for their work, that time is the present. We have in the past had a good deal of difficulty in the Hansard Committee to procure a good translating staff, and I think at last we have probably secured the best staff, one that does the best work and does it the most rapidly, that we have ever had. It is very important for the House of Commons that if the English Debates are to be translated into French, they should be translated into good French; and it is important for the House that they should be translated as quickly as possible after the speeches have been delivered. That has been done this session. For the last two months, since the staff has been renewed, we have had good and quick translation. So I say that these gentlemen are justified in coming before the committee and asking for a bonus, relying upon precedents. The Debates Committee have examined their request and reported in favour of it; and I am surprised that my right hon. friend, without giving any reason for his action, should simply say: This report should not be adopted. Heretofore he has always shown a good deal of consideration for reports of committees for the reason that he regards them as delegations of this House, and to refuse to accept the report of the committee, unless there are strong reasons to the contrary, is a kind of reflection upon the committee.

Now, since I am on my feet, as I do not wish to act the part of a coward, I will say a word on the indemnity question. I am not going to say what I might say, because I am probably the poorest man in this House, but I approve entirely of what has been said by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis). Especially I agree with the hon. member for North Wellington, that it is a disgrace that the members should be speaking about that question in the House. We have a government of Canada controlling affairs, and they should have done what was done in 1885 and in 1891, when the governments of those years did not wait to propose an increase in the indemnity until they were pushed and dragged into it. They simply brought it down in their estimates, everybody understood that it was due to the members, and the people were so well satisfied that we never heard a word of it, either in the House of Commons or anywhere else. As I said before, I am not going to give my own opinion. If I were a rich man I would be able to speak more freely, and I think I would be able to convince this House that the government should have been manly enough to bring down a vote of their own volition. I do not say that the members of Parliament should be treated in a different way from anybody else. The hon. member for St. John, in speaking on the question of the indemnity, said what has often occurred to me before. I think there are only two ways of settling this question, and that is either to have an adequate indemnity or to have no indemnity at all, as is the system in England, and then everybody understands that it would be easier to run the elections, and the sessions would be shorter. We would then not be obliged to remain here every day, but we could do like the English members of parliament, come to the House of Commons when there is an important debate and register our vote, and express our opinion, and then go back home and attend to our own business. But where an indemnity is given people think that it is given to pay us for our services, and consequently they expect us to be in attendance upon parliament all the time. As far as I am concerned, an hon. member mentioned the other day that I did not practise in my profession. Well, Mr. Speaker, how can I practise when I am obliged to pass so great a portion of the year in session? When I go to my office even my partners and our clerks scarcely know me. I only mention these things to show that there seems to be a consensus of opinion that this matter ought to be settled in one way or the other. Either let us have no indemnity at all, or if there is to be one, let it be sufficient to indemnify members for the loss of their time.

Mr. G. E. CASEY (West Elgin). The question really before us, I understand, is the increase of pay to the translators. I really cannot see any way before me except to support the report of the committee. These men are not paid by the year, as the reporting staff are paid; their pay is estimated with reference to the ordinary length of the session. When the session becomes double the ordinary length, coupled with, as has been pointed out already, double the ordinary work in each day, there should be some increase in the pay of the translators. I do not say that the committee have hit exactly the right sum to recommend, that is their business; but, I am prepared to say there should be an increase in the pay of these translators. The Hansard Committee represents both sides of the House, it has always, in all parliaments, been a very fair committee, and has not been guided by politics in its management of the Hansard, to any extent worth noticing. I think it is a fair representation of the good sense of the House on such matters, and that this report is entitled to a good deal of weight. Apart from that report altogether, I would urge the right hon. the Prime Minister not to make this a question on which the government takes an absolute stand, but to take the sense of the House on the matter as a mere question of opinion, and let the sense of the House be carried out.

The discussion has been forced into other lines as well. I cannot help putting in one word in reference to it. My hon. friend from North Wellington has said that we would look very absurd to be voting money to ourselves as extra pay. Well, if this money is to be given to us we will have to vote it to ourselves, no matter who proposes it. We shall have to take the responsibility of it being done, if it is done, and the responsibility of its being left undone, if it is left undone. I am not trying to force the hand of the government or urging them to reconsider any decision they have come to. They have come to a decision apparently, it is generally supposed they have, from the course the debate has taken; and I am merely discussing this point as a question that must be gone into in the near future. When I first came into this House the indemnity was $600. During my first session it was raised to $1,000. At that time the average session was between nine and ten weeks long. If a thousand dollars was a reasonable indemnification for a session of that length, what would be a reasonable indemnification now? That is a question for the House and the country to consider. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), I think, was scarcely fair when he said this government was cowardly on this question, but a former government had boldly taken unsolicited the step of increasing the indemnity. All who were here at that time remember that there was a round robin in order to ascertain, before this thing was done, as it always is ascertained before a thing of that sort is done, that the House would be practically unanimous in supporting the proposition. That is what a round robin means. People do not like the name, but, after all, that is merely the means of ascertaining privately what the feeling of both sides of the House would be on a question of this kind; and, on both former occasions when an increased indemnity was given, it was ascertained, before the government proposed it, that the House was practically agreed that the thing ought to be done.

At the present time the government apparently have what appear to them to be good reasons for not moving in the matter. I am not saying whether they have or not, or whether they intend to move or not, but that seems to be their idea. I must bow to their judgment in this matter, but I cannot admit that there would be anything improper, unfair or indecent, whether this is the last session or the first session in our agreeing to raise the sessional indemnity to a reasonable figure.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I have always adopted the rule and acted upon it that reports of committees ought to be accepted especially when they are presented to the House with adequate reasons. I was taken a little by surprise by this report which asks to do a favour to a certain portion of our employees. After hearing the sense of the House I am quite prepared to move the adjournment of the debate so as to have a word with my colleagues in council and give an opinion upon it this afternoon. The objection I would have at this moment is that there is some difference between the present proposal and the precedents of 1885 and 1891. In 1885 and in 1891 this recommendation was part of a general plan to increase the indemnity, not only to increase the allowance of certain employees of the House but to increase the indemnity of members as well. There is nothing of that kind on the present occasion while we know that on those two previous occasions, in 1885 and 1891, there was a well understood agreement that such a report came in as part of a general plan. There is no proposal of the kind this year. In regard to the indemnity of members, speaking for myself, because the matter is not one upon which the government is prepared to pronounce an opinion, I am of the opinion that the indemnity of members ought to be increased. The condition of things at the present time is such that I think the people of Canada cannot complain if the men who are sent here receive more than they do at the present time. But, I think it would be objectionable as well as a detriment if we should take any action unless we make a general law. Nothing could be more detrimental to the public interest to have at any time in any session a movement started to increase the indemnity. Members who come here ought to understand that they will receive such an indemnity and no more.

If anything is done to increase the indemnity the plan I would propose would be that the indemnity should be fixed at a certain sum of money not to be increased or decreased should the session be long or short. Members would know that they would get so much, whether it be $1,500 or $1,800. It would be to the interest of members, knowing that, to make their speeches short and to expedite matters as much as possible. The plan that I would suggest, would be that the question should be dealt with on general principles. In the meantime I beg to move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Before the motion is carried I would like to say that hon. members who speak of the translation perhaps do not realize, not only the amount of material work, but the amount of superior literary skill that is applied to the work of the translators. Nobody who has not done the actual work of translation can understand the amount of labour and care that are involved. The work done by these gentlemen is not only to be counted by the number of days that they devote to it, but by the number of columns of translation. In 1885 there were some 4,000 columns less than the actual translation done by these translators this session. If we are entitled to a French Hansard, what we want is decent translation, not only a literal translation that will oblige us to go to the dictionary and make it out for ourselves, but a translation that will represent the true sense of the language translated. It has been the effort of the Debates Committee to reform the translation staff so that we shall have proper translation. They have chosen good men; now we have a good staff that is doing good work; and, I think, we should encourage the translators not only to do good work in a material way, but to do good intellectual work. I claim that they are the only staff employed by both Houses of parliament that have such an amount of intellectual work to do. Although the stenographers of this House must have a certain amount of intellectual work to do, it is not to be compared with what is required of the translators who must know, not only the English language, but the French language. This is necessary if the translation is to be perfectly accurate and in the best literary form.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). Mr. Speaker, I was surprised at the principle laid down by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he said that the circumstances to-day are not identical with those of 1885 and 1891, because in those days we also increased the indemnity of members as well as of the translators. Well, Sir, I do not see why if we are denied an increased indemnity ourselves, we should do the same thing in regard to the employees of the House, who are entitled to the same privileges that we think we are entitled to ourselves. While the members of the House have nothing to say as to whether their indemnity will be increased, they should have something to say as to whether the salaries of their employees should be increased. The recommendation of the committee which has charge of this part of the business of the House, is simply a recommendation that justice shall be meted out to certain employees who have been overlooked, on account of the length of the session and on account of the matter that has been put into the hands of the translators for translation. While speaking on that I may say that there should be a rearrangement in regard to the translation bureau, and there should be a rearrangement in regard to our staff of reporters as well. There is no class of men, I may say, in the whole country, in the whole of Canada, who, during the time of the session, are more overworked than the reporters of this House, and the translators. I remember on one occasion, that while our translators drew salaries for two sessions in one year, because they are sessional and are paid by the session, our reporters did not receive an increase of pay at all, though they put in two sessions in the year for the same amount of salary, their salary being paid annually. I remember also that in the session of 1896, our reporters had to work night and day for a whole week, consecutively without stopping, and no consideration was given to them. They have not received any compensation for it. When these gentlemen agreed to do the reporting of this House, the sessions were only to last for three months in the year, whereas they are now bound to work for six months for the same amount of money. I believe it is about time that their position in regard to this House should be reconsidered. Of course, at this late hour of the session. I shall not discuss it further because the question has not been put before us, and I may say here, on their behalf, that I have never seen a reporter asking for any extra allowance for his work, and I say that to their credit. But, it is our duty to see that they are well and properly paid. Now, we have only this report in regard to the translators before us. We had a good many complaints in reference to the staff at one time, but I may say, that they have so improved the work that they are now performing it with the greatest celerity, so much so that they are up to date. When we have a staff of men putting forth so much exertion, if they are not rewarded well, we must not expect the same amount of work from them in future, but we must encourage them, because they are doing good work.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (Western Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee, you will permit me to say that the committee could not consider the general question, because we have no control over it. All that the committee was able to do, was to consider the question as to whether or not the French translators were entitled to more remuneration, and having decided that they were entitled to more remuneration, we made the recommendation that has been proposed by the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Champagne).

The right hon. gentleman says the indemnity is not adequate, and that it should be raised, his proposition therefore is that as the indemnity is not adequate and therefore unjust, yet he cannot deal with it unless from the point of view of making a permanent increase. And he argues: I cannot agree to pay the translators more unless I give the members of parliament more. Now, I cannot agree with the arguments that because the members of parliament in your opinion are not getting sufficient, and you do not desire to give them sufficient, that that is any reason why certain officers should not get what they are entitled to.

It is a question repellant to me to discuss the indemnity of members. It has been spoken of here as if it were a remuneration; that is not a fact. Why, Sir, if $1,000 for a session of six months is remuneration, that would be a strange state of things because I could mention one man after another in this House who could in a few minutes if he were drawn away from his business here, make more than the $7 a day, and often make in a week more than the whole indemnity. To my own knowledge one man here had to give up two cases when he was coming down to parliament. His two clients said: We have the utmost confidence in you, but we have not the same confidence in your partner, and they asked that a leading man in another firm be brought in. This member of parliament said: Oh, no the gentleman you mention is capable of taking charge of the whole case, and he handed back all the papers. I entirely dissent from regarding the $1,000 as in any way remuneration. I regard it as an approximate sum to make it less than absolutely cruel to keep members here for six months or five months or four months as the case may be. I will put the idea of the indemnity in this way: It is to make it possible that poor men may be enabled to come to this House and not that men shall be rewarded or receive compensation for their services here. Then again, if it were payment for service, I would not look upon it as a payment of $7 a day for the session, because there is not a man in this House whose time during the whole of the year is not to some extent taken up with the business of his constituents, and the business of the country. It has been suggested that we might revert to the English system. Well, we cannot revert to the English system in Canada; we have no leisure class here. There was a comparison made between private members and ministers. I cannot agree with even the bare suggestion that ministers of the Crown in this country are overpaid. It is against the interests of the people and against the interests of the country that the ministers should not be paid in a manner bearing an exact proportion almost to the salaries paid to men of similar ability in important civil positions. For the same reason I have always been in favour of increasing the salaries of the judiciary.

Let me deal with an incidental matter. Let me ask what is parliament? Parliament is government by speech and if there be anything that parliament does, that is worth more than another, it is in the criticism of ministers. I venture to say there is not a minister sitting before me who does not believe that in his own department the criticism sometimes from his own side but mainly and necessarily from the opposition has prevented extravagance and excesses in the government, that would otherwise be committed in consequence of forces operating on the department. That every gentleman in this House is aware of. I have no doubt whatever that when the late government was in power and hon. gentleman opposite in opposition many things that would be regrettable were prevented taking place in consequence of the criticism offered. Therefore, this deprecation which we sometimes hear in the House of the opposition for discharging its duties in offering criticism, is a thing which we should not hear. The criticism by the opposition is altogether for the benefit of the people of Canada.

Motion (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to adjourn the debate agreed to.

POST OFFICE EXPENDITURE.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Does the $3,592,647.47 shown in Public Accounts, page (1) VIII., column five, as post office expenditure for the year 1894-5, include all sums due for service on post office account up to June 30, 1895 ?

If not, what amount accrued for said services of 1894-5 are not included?

Does the $3,665,011.30, shown in same column as post office expenditure for 1895-6, include all sums due on post office account for services up to June 30, 1896?

If not, what amount accrued for services of 1895-6 are not included?

And similarly for the $3,789,478.34, expenditure, 1896-7?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I answered the whole of the question except the portion having reference to the year 1896-7. I understand that Mr. Foster wishes to know whether the item of $3,789,478.34 set forth in the public accounts as the expenditure for 1896-7, includes all the moneys owing by the department up to that date, and if not what amount is not so included.

The expenditure for the year ending June 30, 1897, was $3,789,478.34, which amount includes all sums due by the department up to that date.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—RECRUITING STATIONS, &c.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. How many recruiting stations were established in Nova Scotia at which applications were to be received from parties desiring to join the second contingent for service in South Africa?

2. At what points were these recruiting stations?

3. How many assessment boards were appointed in Nova Scotia, and when, to appraise and value the horses for the mounted infantry and artillery that were to be forwarded to South Africa with the second contingent?

4. How many horses, and what price was paid for each, were accepted at the different stations?

5. How many horses, with their prices, were passed over the assessment board at Sydney, Cape Breton, by Dr. Jakeman, the veterinary surgeon representing the department, as being sound and fit for the service?

6. If the horses were not accepted, for what reason were they rejected?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Two. 2. At Canning and Sydney, C.B., being the headquarters of the King's Canadian Hussars and 17th Field Battery respectively. 3. Four, viz.: 1 at Canning, 1 at Sydney, C.B., 2 at Halifax. 4. Canning, 35 horses, viz.: 1 at $100, 1 at $112.50, 2 at $120, 1 at $125, 1 at $127.50, 1 at $130, 5 at $135, 11 at $140, 2 at $145, 10 at $150. Halifax, 21 horses, viz.: 1 at $90, 3 at $135, 3 at $139, 4 at $140, 1 at $144, 3 at $145, 1 at $146, 1 at $147, 1 at $148, 3 at $150. 5. No report has been received from the board appointed to act at Sydney, to assess the value of horses offered by men enrolling. The officer commanding 17th

Mr. DAVIN.

Field Battery reported by telegram that but one horse was so offered. Instructions were subsequently issued to the officer commanding the battery to have examined any horses suitable for artillery purposes, and available for purchase if required. He reported that four had been so examined. As they were not required no further action was taken. 6. No horses being accepted for purchase, none of those examined and passed by the veterinary surgeon were afterwards rejected.

BARRIEFIELD COMMON, KINGSTON.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Sproule) asked :

Has the government sold, leased or given permission to any person or persons to erect cottages on the government land known as Barriefield Common, at Kingston? If so, to whom, and on what terms? Have any cottages been erected on said lands, and by whom?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). No.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PENSIONS FOR VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. OLIVER asked :

Is it the intention to provide pensions for volunteers disabled by wounds or disease in South Africa?

Is it the intention to provide pensions for the dependent relatives of volunteers who have lost their lives in South Africa?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). According to the terms laid down by the Imperial government, and agreed to by this government, in reference to troops from Canada serving in South Africa, they will be treated precisely as Imperial troops, and receive the same pensions and the same gratuities. In reference to any further provision, if any further provision is to be made, the time has not yet arrived for considering that matter.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

House resolved itself into committee to consider the following resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the salary of the senior judge of the Circuit Court of the district of Montreal shall be $3,600 per annum.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 195) to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE TROUBLES IN CHINA.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Before the Orders of the Day are called, as we are on the eve of prorogation, I would like to have the opinion of the government on a question of very great importance. Over a month ago, on the 11th of June, the Herald, which, as everybody knows, is one of the government organs in Montreal, published an article headed: 'Canada Should Prepare,' in relation to the Chinese war; and after some considerations as to the role to be played by Russia and by England in the east, there was a paragraph which I think is very significant:

Nevertheless there is the possibility of a war in which English civilization will be pitted against a retrogressive despotism. If the struggle comes, it will not be such a walkover as we have witnessed in South Africa. It will be fought on sea as well as on land. If it should come, and if troops should be needed in China, in India, in Persia, or in Africa, there can be no doubt there will be in Canada a repetition of the spectacle which has brought so much comfort to the minds of British statesmen.

And further down:

It is certain that the Canadian people would rise to the occasion, and for one that was willing and anxious to go to South Africa, ten would be ready to serve in the greater trial of strength. It might be well, therefore, for the government to take whatever steps may be necessary to provide against such a contingency.

And a week ago to-day, that is, on Monday last, the Toronto World published an article on the same question, from which I read the following paragraph:

While the situation in China is anything but reassuring, we do not think the time has arrived for Canada to proffer any practical assistance. But we cannot tell what a day, or even an hour, may bring forth. . . . When the South African trouble confronted the Empire, the Canadian government laid down the proposition that it could not commit Canada to the sending of a contingent without the sanction of the Dominion parliament. It is, no doubt, better to have the sanction of parliament in cases of this kind, whenever it can be obtained. Parliament is now about to adjourn for seven or eight months, and in the interim events of supreme importance to Canada may transpire. We think that parliament ought to delegate to the government ample power to deal with any situation that may arise between now and its reassembling next winter. The House should not adjourn until it has made a pronouncement on the Chinese question.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to know from the government is this. The reason that was given by the government for not consulting parliament before sending troops to South Africa was that the will of the people was expressed in such an apparent way, in such unmistakable terms, that there was no need for the government to consult parliament; because parliament being only the representation of the people, the government could count upon the support of parliament as far as that was concerned. The present situation is not the same. When parliament prorogued last summer, nobody expected war. In fact, we had passed a motion, the opportuneness of which I have already discussed, which was intended to help in maintaining peace. Now the situation in China is different. War is declared; at least, if it is not officially declared, there is a state of war in that country, and we see now by the expression of one of the government organs, and by the expression of one of the Tory organs, that it is the wish of some people that Canada should share in that war. Therefore, the reason that existed last session does not exist now; and the only thing I would like to know from the government is, in case the will of the people is expressed with regard to China in the same way as it was expressed in regard to South Africa, whether the government would feel justified in sending a contingent to China without consulting parliament, simply waiting until next session to have their action ratified by parliament; or whether they will follow the constitution and call parliament for a special session before doing anything?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I would deprecate the way in which my hon. friend has spoken of the Montreal Herald as being an organ of the government. The government has no organs. There are some papers which are friendly to it, and which support its policy; but my hon. friend would not, I am sure, pretend that the government is responsible for what appears in any paper, however friendly it may be.

Mr. BOURASSA. I did not mean it in that sense, but simply referred to it as coming from one of the closest supporters of the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a friendly paper and a very good one at that, but I would not feel myself bound by anything which appeared, even in such a valuable paper.

As to the question of my hon. friend, he heard me say last Saturday that the government did not intend presenting any new legislation this session, and, therefore, my hon. friend need not anticipate anything in our budget to cover any expenditure connected with the war in China. We do not intend to have any war or to send any contingent to take part in the Chinese war.

I cannot imagine that the occasion will arise in which we will feel called on to take part in that war, because it is not to be supposed that all the allied powers of Europe will not be able to handle that business without our assistance, but should by any possibility, any such occasion arise, and a feeling in behalf of our giving assistance arise in the country that would call for action, the government, if parliament were not in session when it would have the opportunity to pronounce on that question, would consider it its duty to call parliament in order to discuss the advisability of our taking any action.

THE SCOTT ACT.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call attention to a question affecting the Scott Act. I gave notice last session and this session of some amendments to the Canada Temperance Act, but have not had the opportunity of bringing them before the House, owing to the press of government business. I am, however, encouraged by a resolution which was passed in favour of making some amendments to that Act, which requires perfecting in many matters of detail. It is too late this session to deal with the matter, but I would ask the government whether, in view of that resolution, it would not be prepared to refer any amendments suggested, including those of which I have given notice, to the Department of Justice, and introduce a Bill next session, as a government measure, to supply the deficiencies in the present Act. One reason why I ask this is, even supposing the Bill I have on the Order paper should pass this House, it would have to go to the Senate, where it would have, colloquially speaking, neither father or mother.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is unjust to Senator Vidal, who is one of the oldest and strongest and most intelligent temperance men in the country, and also to the father of the Scott Act, who is now in the Senate.

Mr. FLINT. The Canada Temperance Act is not in force in any district with which Senator Vidal is connected.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not destroy his interest in it.

Mr. FLINT. In any case the point I make is that, if the administration would take hold of this matter and receive suggestions from the various solicitors and prosecutors in those counties where the Act is in force, and refer these suggestions to the Department of Justice, and then embody them in a Bill, and present that Bill to the House as a government measure, which would have the powerful advocacy of the Minister of Justice in the other House, a great deal of time would be saved, and there would be a much better chance of having legislation perfecting the Scott Act adopted.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have no hesitation in saying to my hon. friend, that the government would be disposed to perfect the Scott Act, so as to make it more acceptable to those counties which have chosen to adopt it. I must say, however, that my good intentions were not very much responded to on a previous occasion, when a motion recommending the perfecting of the Act passed in this House by barely one of a majority. But if the temperance people choose to make representations to the government and manifest their desire that the Scott Act be perfected, the government would be quite ready to receive their suggestions.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. gentleman could not indicate the lines on which he will proceed?

The PRIME MINISTER. I should think that perfection ought to be satisfactory to my hon. friend, but I would add that my hon. friend from Yarmouth was hardly fair to the other branch of the legislature, when he said that nobody in the Senate would feel an interest in such a measure. The father of the Scott Act is at present a very valuable member of the administration, the present Secretary of State, and if any one takes a legitimate pride in his offspring, certainly he would be ready to do everything possible to make it more acceptable.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (Western Assiniboia). I happened to be in Montreal on important business for three or four days, and during that time the motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) in connection with the Temperance Act came up. I may tell him that the Scott Act is not in force in the Territories, and I think that the people of the North-west Territories have a right to complain of my hon. friend from Yarmouth, in having put this matter so late on the Order paper. As he seems to feel that he has some right to complain of the government, I may say that the people of the North-west Territories—a very large number of whom take great interest in this temperance question—feel that the only measure that will do justice to the needs of the country, is a complete measure of prohibition, and they feel that the government of Canada is not carrying out their pledge that if, when the plebiscite was taken, a majority of the electorate pronounced themselves in favour of prohibition, the government would bring down such legislation, and complain that the government have not kept faith with them in that respect as they have not in so much else. If I had been here I should have voted for absolute prohibition.

THE GENERAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I would like, at this period of the session, when the belligerent passions on either side have pretty well cooled down, or have been burnt out, and we are all looking forward to a little holiday, to know whether the right hon. gentleman would take the House into his confidence, and tell us how many weeks we may put aside for ourselves for a complete holiday, before being called on to go into the turmoil of an election?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am very glad to say to my hon. friend that I can give him a very satisfactory answer. If he will guide himself by the movements of the Crown, he will be on safe lines.

LONG SERVICE MEDALS.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) whether it is the intention of the government to recognize long service in the active militia of Canada by granting long-service medals. And, if I am in order, I would ask when may we expect such medals to be issued?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). A question on this subject was put and answered some time ago. The answer was to this effect—that a long-service medal for the colonies had been approved by Her Majesty—a medal similar to that of the British volunteers. Regulations respecting it have been forwarded to the War Office for approval, but have not been received back yet. After they are returned and after we get through with the medals which are now being distributed to those who participated in repelling the Fenian raids this matter will be taken up by the government.

THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY SUBSIDY—ALLEGATION AGAINST MR. C. N. ARMSTRONG.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) the other day asked me if I had received a letter from Mr. C. N. Armstrong with regard to a statement I made when we had under discussion the subsidies to railways. I informed my hon. friend that I had received a letter from Mr. Armstrong, and, on receiving it, had placed myself in communication with my informant. I think it is only fair to Mr. Armstrong and to the party who informed me that I should lay the statement of both parties before the House. This is Mr. Armstrong's letter:

The Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Premier, Ottawa.

Sir,—In the report in to-day's 'Gazette' of the discussion in the House of Commons last night on the railway subsidy resolutions, I notice certain statements made by you in connection with the Great Eastern Railway.

Although you made these statements on your responsibility as a member of the House, and therefore, it might be considered that you had a personal knowledge of the facts, I cannot but believe that you have been imposed upon by others, and had accepted their statements as worthy of credence.

As the facts being entirely different to the statement made by you, you cannot have had a personal knowledge of them.

In the first place, the government has not paid any subsidy twice on the same rails. The second section was laid with new rails, and the rails laid in the first section are still there, with a slight exception, which I will explain later on.

This is not a new charge. It was first made in 1894, and was immediately met and evidence of its falsity given.

In 1897, La Chambre de Commerce of Montreal, in a memorial to the government on the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, inserted a statement prepared by some of its members in which a somewhat similar charge was made. This memorial was sent to the Governor General and the members of the government. Upon obtaining communication of this memorial, I at once instituted actions for libel against those who were responsible for it. La Chambre de Commerce called a special meeting, at which I was asked to be present, and an apology was made to me for the circulation of the statement, and I was requested not to push actions for damage, as the memorial would be withdrawn, and an explanation sent to each person to whom it had been sent.

I also, on the 24th of February, 1897, addressed a letter to His Excellency the Governor General on the subject, which was duly acknowledged, and sent a similar letter to each member of the Privy Council, including one to yourself, which was acknowledged on February 27.

I am forced to believe that lapse of time and your numerous occupations caused you to forget these circumstances.

This story originated through a change of line caused by a change in the location of the bridge across the River St. Francis, which necessitated the rebuilding of about half of a mile of line, and the removal of the rails on that portion. A few of the rails, some twenty-five tons, were temporarily used as a siding to save the trouble of removing a ballast siding, but they are still on the property, and no attempt was made or could have been made, to obtain any subsidy payment on them; this was clearly proved at the time by affidavits of Mr. G. Ball, M.L.A., mayor of Nicolet, and Mr. Phillips, C.E., the engineer in charge of construction, which were furnished to the Railway Department, and is also proved by the reports of the inspecting engineer of the department.

As I quite agree with you and Hon. Mr. Haggart that any one who would do what the Great Eastern Railway Company was charged with doing should be sent to the penitentiary, I trust that you will do justice to that company by withdrawing as publicly as it was made the charge that that company has robbed the people of Canada.

As these charges were so publicly made, I hope that you will not consider me wanting in courtesy if I send a copy of this letter to the press without previously requesting your permission.

I am, yours truly,
(Sgd.) C. N. ARMSTRONG,
Managing Director,
Great Eastern Railway.

P.S.—Should you desire them, I will place at your disposal the correspondence and affidavits above referred to.

On receiving this letter, I searched the records to find the statements which had been sent to me personally. I have it here—a statement by Mr. Allard, M.P.P., as follows:

In 1886 the company—

Meaning the Great Eastern Railway Company—

—constructed a line six miles in length from River Yamaska to St. Francis. That line was in operation during the election of 1887. But as soon as the elections were terminated, the cars disappeared and never were seen again. Afterwards all the rails were removed and some of the sleepers also, and what are left of the sleepers are rotten and of no value. Since 1887 that company has not given the slightest sign of its existence, and the work which was done is deteriorating every day.

But I was not satisfied, so I telegraphed both to my informants and to Mr. Allard himself at St. Hyacinthe—

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Is that the present member for Yamaska ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. It will be seen that there is a discrepancy on one point. Mr. Armstrong does not deny that a portion of the rails were removed from part of the line, but he implies without stating it absolutely, that the rails so removed were put on another location of the line. He says there was a displacing of the line in order to allow for a new location of the St. Francis bridge, and the rails were put on this new line. That is altogether disposed of by my informant. The telegram I have received from Mr. Allard is in these terms :

Rails were removed by the Armstrong company at St. Francis for a space of about twenty arpents—

That is a little less than a mile——and carried to Nicolet, in the spring of 1888 or 1889. No work whatever has been done on the new location of the Armstrong line. The right of way even has neither been bought nor expropriated; and that new location was laid down by the 31st of October, 1889.

The other telegram said :

They removed about a mile of rails between Yamaska and St. François du Lac, not for a change of line but to complete a section between Nicolet and St. Gregoire, where they were short of rails, and was to complete that section. It was the Great Eastern Railway foreman, Joseph Leblanc, that came to St. François du Lac with a tug and barges during the construction of that section between Nicolet and St. Gregoire, and lifted about a mile of rails, not counting the long siding and the 'Y.' and were not put back.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it would only be an act of justice, after what has fallen from my right hon. friend, for me to say a word. If I understood him well he stands in the position which he took at first, notwithstanding Mr. Armstrong's letter—

The PRIME MINISTER. To this extent, yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course, everybody understands how strong an allegation this is against a man occupying the position that Mr. Armstrong does—one who must meet and deal with business men as the head of several enterprises. When this letter was sent by Mr. Armstrong he left it in my hand, in case the Prime Minister should not accept his statement or should receive other information, some documents which I claim the right to put before the House.

Now, I believe my right hon. friend expressed some opinion to which Mr. Armstrong took exception, and the latter addressed to my right hon. friend some papers in February, 1897, which he thought would be accepted as satisfactory. At that time a letter was also addressed to His Excellency the Governor General by Mr. Armstrong, answering those charges; and I gather by the reply of the Governor General in Council that the explanation of Mr. Armstrong was accepted. Now, the right hon. gentleman admits that the expressions used by Mr. Allard agree pretty well with the explanation he has received from Mr. Armstrong. I may also mention that the Chambre de Commerce de Montreal expressed the same opinion. I do not think there is a man in the country that has been spoken against so harshly as Mr. Armstrong, whether he deserved it or not. I think Mr. Armstrong is a very clever man, and would not allow people to go too far, and the Chambre de Commerce got caught on that occasion. They passed a resolution insinuating, or taking for granted, certain accusations brought against Mr. Armstrong, and he threatened to sue them. They had a meeting, and returned to him this answer on February 22, 1897. It is in French, but I will read it in English :

Montreal, February 22, 1897.

C. N. Armstrong, Esq., Montreal.

Dear Sir,—In reply to a communication of your solicitor, Mr. Morgan, received on Saturday, the 20th, I am instructed to inform you, on the part of the president of the Chambre de Commerce, that the memorandum which you mentioned has been corrected in such a manner as to remove the portion of which you complain, and the copies which were addressed to several persons (about sixty) will be immediately withdrawn from circulation, so as to give you satisfaction.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant.

S. COTE.

Which shows that they did not dare to go any further after receiving a lawyer's letter. A letter was also addressed by Mr. Armstrong to His Excellency the Governor General in Council, and answers were received from the Premier of Canada and from the Governor General. My hon. friend has read a report of Mr. Allard; Mr. Allard is a member of the local House, he is a politician.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Who is the other man who is so distinct in his statements ?

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Beauchemin, who is one of the owners of the South Shore Railway, and is much interested in different railways in the vicinity of Mr. Armstrong's railway, and I do not think there is any love lost between the two. I have here affidavits from two men that my right hon. friend knows. One is from Mr. Phillips, which I will read :

I, William C. E. Phillips, now residing in the town of Iberville, district of St. Johns, civil engineer, do solemnly declare:

That I was, in 1889, engineer in charge of the construction of the Great Eastern Railway between St. Francis and St. Gregoire.

That it is to my personal knowledge that the rails used in the construction of the Nicolet and

St. Gregoire section were new rails not previously used anywhere, and that at the time of the inspection of that section of the line by Mr. Ridout on behalf of the Dominion government no other rails had been laid on this section of the line.

That some time afterwards, to avoid taking up a long siding in the ballast pit, which pit I proposed to use in the construction of the section between Nicolet and St. Francis, I decided to use temporarily some of the rails from St. Francis, where a piece of track some 3,000 feet in length (owing to a change in the line, approved by the government) had to be taken up, to lay a track in Nicolet station yard. These rails were not in use and could be moved in a few hours, and after advising with Mr. Ball, of Nicolet, I took the responsibility of using them temporarily at Nicolet, as the cost of returning them would be trifling.

That, as only some 1,600 feet of track were laid, the remainder of the rails were piled on the company's property, and were there when I left Nicolet the following year.

That some months since I made an inspection of the line between Yamaska and St. Francis for the company, and found all the rails were as originally laid on the whole line, excepting the 3,000 feet above referred to.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and in and by virtue of the provisions of the Evidence Act.

WILLIAM C. E. PHILLIPS.

Then, I have an affidavit from Mr. Ball, the present local member for Nicolet, who, I believe, is one of the proprietors of that road, a shareholder, if not a director. He has some money in it, and has taken an active part in the construction of that line:

I, George Ball, of the town of Nicolet, district of Three Rivers, mill-owner, do solemnly declare that in the year 1889, I made advances to Charles W. Armstrong, contractor, of the city of Montreal, and the Great Eastern Railway Company, in connection with the construction of the Great Eastern Railway between Nicolet and St. Gregoire.

That, as part of these advances, I paid for the rails and fastenings used in the construction of the line between these two points and the freight on them to St. Gregoire Junction on the Grand Trunk Railway.

That I was present when Mr. Ridout inspected the line on behalf of the Dominion government. That the rails there laid on the lines were the rails so paid for by me, and that no subsidy was paid on any other rails.

That it is to my knowledge that a small quantity of rails which, owing to a change of about half a mile of line at St. Francis, had to be taken up, were transferred to Nicolet, and a portion used in laying about a quarter of a mile of track at Nicolet station. That the surplus rails not used in laying this track were loaned temporarily to Messrs. Tourville & Co., and are still in their possession. That no subsidy has been claimed or paid on those rails so removed, nor was there any possibility of its being collected. That Mr. Phillips, the engineer in charge of the work, advised me as to the temporary use of these rails, and that I furnished my boat for their removal.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and in and by virtue of the provisions of the Evidence Act.

GEORGE BALL.

Mr. HAGGART. Were they brought back?

Mr. BERGERON. The gist of the thing is, that the government has not paid two subsidies upon the same rails, as was stated the other day, and which was looked upon as a grave offence. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals said the other day that a man who would receive subsidies on the same rails in two different places should be sent to the penitentiary. But, I think it is now established by these affidavits that he did not receive two subsidies upon the same rails. I have brought this matter up simply in justice to Mr. Armstrong, who is a business man, and has had a great deal to do with the business men of Canada, and it would be unjust to suffer an unfounded accusation to go through the country that he had received subsidies twice upon the same rails.

Mr. HAGGART. There seems to be a very serious charge, even after these affidavits have been read to us. He received a subsidy on a certain line of road, he took up one mile of that road and took the rails to another road that he was building, something he had no business to do.

Mr. BERGERON. Only a quarter of a mile.

Mr. HAGGART. He says 3,000 feet—took them over to the other road, and it is not very clear that they were put on to the other line. But, certainly he had received a subsidy for those laid down on one track, and he took them up and took them over to another line of road.

SUPPLY—CHARACTER OF DEBATE IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I desire to make a few remarks, before that motion is carried.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, when one o'clock was called, I was about to rise before the House went into committee to call attention to the degraded spirit that has been introduced within the last four years in the debates of the House. I wish to illustrate it by referring to the degrading tactics that have been adopted in regard to myself. I will take only one illustration out of several that might be taken. Last year the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) in his speech on the address thought fit to discuss my private character, and to discuss my private character in details, having nothing whatever to do with the issue, and that could not have anything to do with the issue. Private character has nothing whatever to do with the issue that is involved in a man's public character, and for the very first and best of reasons that it is illogical. It diverts the public mind from the real issue, namely, a man's fitness. There are only two cases, there may be two cases, where the private character of a public man can be in issue; one case is where his private conduct infringes on his public efficiency, and the other is where his private conduct is of that notorious character, that, in consequence of a man's public position, it tends to bring discredit on public life and to injure the efficiency of public life. On the 27th of March, 1899, the hon. member for Saskatchewan made statements about my private life referring to incidents that he alleged had occurred in the North-west Territories when this House was not sitting, and the statements were absolutely without foundation. You, Sir, did not call him to order, and the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who has as much responsibility as yourself for the good behaviour of this House sat there and gave him sanction by his silence. Not only that, but the whole—I will not say the whole, but ninety-nine-hundredths of the Liberal party then present, cheered the hon. gentleman while making these statements which were, as I say, utterly unfounded. That, as I stated would justify me, if it were my cue, to take such a course, not only in putting the private character of the hon. member for Saskatchewan in issue, but the private character of every man in the ministerial party who sanctioned him; if I dealt with the hon. member for the Saskatchewan, I should have grounds to go on. I say that within this last session he has been guilty of disgraceful conduct unworthy of a man and a member of parliament as I can prove. He took occasion to insult in me, if I may dare say so, a whole nation in my person, and amid the jeers and laughter of the Liberal party, to imitate my Irish accent, which, of course, has not the high-bred intonation that belongs to the hon. gentleman, and he was vociferously cheered by hon. gentlemen, whose accents, of course, tell that they have been bred in the bowers and boudoirs of Lady Clara Vere de Veres. I am not going to pursue that course, but if I were going to adopt similar tactics, I could show that this very session, as can be proved by members of parliament, if it should be thought necessary at a future session to inquire into the matter, that the hon. gentleman has been guilty of disgraceful conduct unworthy of a member of parliament and unworthy of a gentleman. But, I am not going to pursue that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Order, order. The language of the hon. gentleman is unparliamentary.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. DAVIN. Shall I state what his conduct was?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No, it is unparliamentary.

Mr. DAVIN. I must not say that he has been guilty of conduct unworthy of a gentleman?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, you must not.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, I will withdraw it, and if I am given a committee, I will prove by the testimony of hon. members of this House that he went to a lodging House in this town with a lady under an assumed name, and tried to pass her off as his wife.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. McMULLEN. Nobody but a blackguard would make that statement.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) had better take care, because on his conduct may depend the scope I give to the statement that I make here.

Mr. McMULLEN. Go on as long as you like. Nobody but a blackguard would make that statement.

Mr. DAVIN. What then is to be said of a party that would sanction, on that date, when hon. gentlemen cheered, the making of statements here about my private life without the least foundation, and not one word of order called? I was surprised at the right hon. leader of the House. From him we expected better things. But that same hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) did not only do it in this House, but in another place he referred offensively to slanderous statements that were made about me in a public newspaper, which slanderous statements had to be publicly withdrawn by the man who made them. And then the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) moved that these be referred to the Committee on Public Accounts. The Committee on Public Accounts met, and it was very interesting at the early sittings of that committee to see a number of hon. gentlemen and senators all fleckless, spotless creatures, like Senator Watson and others, coming there, thinking there were going to be revelations which would gratify them in regard to me, and what I had done. Witness after witness was called, and it was shown there was not a tittle of foundation for the suggestions. Well, now, what do I complain of? The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) is chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. What would you expect when two definite matters in regard to a public man and a member of this House are referred to a committee, after the committee has had evidence placed before it and two ministers of the Crown are present and show by their demeanour that they understood the thing in its true light? What do you think of the chairman of a committee who merely reports the evidence and does not report to this House as he should have done that the committee inquired into these two matters, and that it was found that there was not a tittle of evidence to support the statements made. He does not say anything in this House, but he goes to Toronto, and when he thought he could make a political point for his friends by stating the truth, in Toronto, he makes this statement:

He had been on the Public Accounts Committee for four years, and had been chairman three years. The committee had the full business of the government before them, and there had not been a single charge laid or attempted to be proved that a minister or a member of parliament or head of a department ever took a cent that did not belong to him.

Not a single charge ever even attempted to be proved that a member of parliament had taken a cent that did not belong to him. Now, what is to be said of the manliness in our public life when the chairman of a committee makes a statement like that outside of the House and does not make that statement inside of this House when presenting his report, as he should have done? It shows, of course, that not merely has an ungenerous spirit entered into public life, but a spirit of a character that the place where I am speaking forbids me properly to characterize. Whether we have another session in this term, or whether we are to commence a new term, when another session comes on, I hope we will introduce into our debates a spirit of manliness and a spirit of fair-play, and not a spirit of vile and shameless traduction and moral assassination.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—INDEMNITIES TO FAMILIES.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask in pursuance of a question I have on the Order paper, which I proposed asking the hon. Minister of Militia, what is being done, or what will be done in the case of the wives of men who have lost their lives in South Africa, and what is being done, or what will be done in the case of wives of men who have been disabled in South Africa?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Mr. Speaker, I think that all the cases of that kind are temporarily being looked after by the officers of the Patriotic Fund. There has been a very large fund raised for purposes of that kind. The money is being expended, and all the cases are being looked after. The government is not taking any special action in the matter except as provided for under the Bill passed this session in regard to the allowance made to the wives of soldiers in South Africa. I think final adjustment of these claims should be left over until a later period. As soon as the session is over I intend to take the matter up, and as far as we have authority now to deal with the individual cases, I propose to do so.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). What about those who are dependent upon soldiers who have gone out. There is the mother of the two Scotts in the North-west and she was dependent upon these two young men. She seems quite at sea as to how she is to get part of their pay. I wish the minister to let us know what she is entitled to and to whom she is to apply.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman will address me a letter giving me the particulars I shall be happy to give him the information. All special cases of hardship are being looked after by the patriotic fund. I may say generally that officers of the North-west Mounted Police will be treated in the same way as officers of the permanent force and other officers who have gone out.

Mr. DAVIN. I sent a letter to Col. Irwin, and I am told he is away in England.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is some one acting in his place.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). The pay of the soldier in South Africa is to be supplemented to the same amount as if he were serving in Canada. I am told that in some cases there is back pay which will revert to the family of the soldier in case of his death. The hon. minister might give us information as to that.

Mr. OLIVER. In case of the death of a married member of the forces in South Africa does the separation allowance to his wife cease at once?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it would.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the intention?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Balance of expenses in connection with the commission for the investigation of the affairs of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. $662

Mr. BERGERON: What did each of these commissioners receive?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Mr. Noxon, $2,570; Mr. O. K. Fraser, $2,410; Mr. Lafortune, $2,340.

Mr. BERGERON. The whole transaction cost about $15,000, and where is the remaining $8,000 gone?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I gave all the information on that point when we were on the main estimates. There was clerical assistance, and there were stenographers to be paid for.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are these ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The usual stenographers employed under the order in council; the Hansard men.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there not transportation expenses for the commissioners, when they went from one place to another?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was very natural they should get these disbursements.

Mr. BERGERON. I know they were driving around in fine carriages with two horses.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They were probably looking for the immense quantity of stone that was paid for by the government and never delivered to the penitentiary.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all, they were picnicking. They were driving from St. Vincent de Paul to Montreal in fine carriages with two horses and passing by St. Laurent and boasting that they were having a good time and that the government was paying for it. They were not looking for stone in the county of Laval. How much did that picnicking cost ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I gave all these details on the main item, and they are in Hansard. The item stood over and the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Foster) asked for these details which I afterwards gave to him.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the hon. gentleman say it was published in Hansard ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, and as the payments were made last year, the hon. gentleman will find all the information in the Auditor General's Report.

To pay P. O'Donnell, late storekeeper, $2,000, and N. P. Wood, late assistant storekeeper, $350 gratuities under the authority of 50-51 Vic., cap. 52, sec. 4.... $2,350

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. On the report made by the commissioners it was found necessary to suspend Mr. O'Donnell, late storekeeper, Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Wood, assistant storekeeper. This sum of $2,000 is intended as a remuneration to Mr. O'Donnell. In view of his forty years service, he would be entitled to receive a gratuity under the Act, of $3,100. In consequence of the report we did not allow him the full amount but only this $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Does he get superannuation ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. He would have been entitled to receive $3,100 under what is called a gratuity allowance, but we only recommend that he should receive $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed the statement in one of the papers lately that a substantial reduction has been made in the price of binder twine to be sold at this penitentiary, and that this was due to the authorities being able to buy enough raw material at a very much lower price than formerly. Is that a fact, and, if it was, can the hon. gentleman give us the price ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot answer that. The matter has not come to my knowledge at all. I know that a large amount of raw material was purchased, and the House voted, I think, $30,000 for the purpose of taking advantage of what was thought to be a fall in the market. I cannot go beyond that. I know the penitentiary output of this year has been disposed of at practically retail prices to any of the farmers who wished to apply for it. I am not aware that any change has been made in the figures since this matter was up before.

Mr. SPROULE. The prices are very much lower. They are down to 8½ cents a pound instead of 14 cents. What I wanted to say in connection with the matter was this. When we were discussing the question of the cost of the raw material, especially manila, it was said that owing to the war it was very high in price and almost impossible to be got. The war is not yet over, and the people have not yet gone back to the raising of manila hemp to any extent, so far as is indicated by the returns to the New York market, and it seems strange that at the very time when manila is supposed to be at the highest price owing to its scarcity, the authorities are able to purchase it at so low a price as to sell the binder twine at 8½ cents a pound instead of 14 cents. There must be a nigger in the fence somewhere.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In order if possible to find the nigger, I have sent to the inspector.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is that amount voted as a gratuity or is it voted under the Superannuation Act ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As a gratuity.

Mr. COCHRANE. Was he entitled to anything under the Superannuation Act ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, he was entitled to $3,100 of superannuation under the Penitentiaries Act.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the report of the commission deprived him of his superannuation, it seems rather difficult to explain how he is entitled to a gratuity. I am merely asking for information.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A man may be entitled under the Act to a specific amount, but if it is found that during the time he has served the Crown he has not been a faithful servant, it is possible to make a reduction. After all, this gratuity is a reward for faithful service during a number of years. This man was in the service forty years, and as a result of the investigation it was found necessary to dispense with his services; but at the same time it was felt that something should be given to him for many years of faithful service.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the charge against him?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. At pages 31 and 32 of the commissioner's report, the hon. gentleman will find a reference to the charge. Generally speaking, it was neglect of duty.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If he was in the service forty years and was a faithful servant, and was not found to be unfaithful till forty years had elapsed—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Unfortunately, that was the case in the penitentiaries. Things had been going on for a number of years that were not found out until this commission was appointed.

Expenses of a judicial inquiry into certain election matters, so much thereof as the commissioners may require, to be subject to their order, for the payment of witnesses' fees..... $20,000

Mr. HAGGART. I understood the Premier the other day to say that if solicitors were wanted for the conduct of the case—there may be two or three—the counsel would be left entirely to select their own solicitors.

The PRIME MINISTER. That I understand from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. HAGGART. Would they be allowed to select, for instance, one or two? The selection is entirely left to them, with the consent of the judges?

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not put that point to the Minister of Justice; but I know that the instructions are that the government does not want to have anything to do with the matter, but wishes to leave it to the judges and the counsel themselves.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to point out, in reference to this matter, though it is a very delicate matter to touch, that one of the judges who is appointed to preside at this inquiry in connection with the election frauds, Mr. Justice Falconbridge, has been appointed to a higher position since he was appointed to this position. It does seem to me to be a very indelicate thing for the government to do, just on the eve of his being put to work on a matter in which the government are very much interested, to practically give him a bonus or a higher salary. If such a thing were contemplated, it would have come with much better grace after this inquiry than before it. While there may not be anything wrong, and while I do not believe the appointment will influence the judge in any way, because I believe he is a man of very high character, still it does leave an impression on the public mind that will be injurious to the government of the day. Some will have a suspicion that it was done for some other purpose rather than to elevate him to a position which he is better capable of filling than any other capable man.

The PRIME MINISTER. I altogether dissent from the views the hon. gentleman has expressed just now. I believe the general impression on the part of the public will be that the character of Mr. Justice Falconbridge is above the possibility of his being influenced by any consideration of that character. There were two vacancies in the High Court of Justice of Ontario; two chief justices had to be appointed. One of those positions was given to Mr. Justice Armour, against whose appointment I am sure there is not a word to be said; it was approved of by everybody; and I believe the same thing applies to the appointment of Mr. Justice Falconbridge.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not saying a word against Mr. Justice Falconbridge nor against his ability to fill the position. But I say that in the eyes of the public it looks bad and suspicious. I think it looks a good deal worse for the government than for the man. The man may be all right. I do not wish to be understood as casting the slightest reflection upon the government for the appointment, so far as his fitness or unfitness for the position is concerned. As to that, I do not know anything except what is in Mr. Justice Falconbridge's favour; but I say that at the commencement of an inquiry of this kind, in which the government are so directly and vitally interested, there will be a percentage of the public who will come to the conclusion that it was a very indelicate thing to do.

The PRIME MINISTER. I presume nobody will deny that Mr. Justice Falconbridge is fitted for that position. He was the senior judge; he holds a high position in the estimation of the public in the province of Ontario, where he is best known; and it would be most unfortunate, I am sure, if because he was selected to do a work for which he was eminently fitted, that should be a reason against his preferment for another position for which he was also eminently fitted. I did not know that anybody would object to that.

Mr. HAGGART. I believe that the Premier voices the opinion of the whole of Canada, in saying that Mr. Justice Falconbridge is eminently fitted for the position. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will just consider: here is a vacancy in the High Court of Justice which occurred just after Mr. Justice Falconbridge was appointed on this commission. Surely his appointment to the commission should not prevent him getting his well-deserved promotion.

Mr. DAVIN. There is no doubt whatever that Mr. Justice, now Chief Justice, Falconbridge is a man of the very highest character and legal standing, and I, for my part, have the fullest confidence in him. I think our general system is open to condemnation, judging by what has occurred. We should have the system which prevails in England, and once a man is on the bench there should be no more promotion.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They have promotion in England. Look at the Master of the Rolls.

Mr. DAVIN. The system in England is to recruit the chief justices, not from the ranks of puisne judges, but from the bar.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Where does the present chief justice come from?

Stationery ..... $5,300

Mr. DAVIN. Does the stationery with which we are supplied come from upstairs?

Mr. SPEAKER. This is applied to the stationery supplied the members.

Mr. BERGERON. How much does the stationery cost this year?

Mr. SPEAKER. $15,300.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did it cost in 1896?

Mr. SPEAKER. A little larger.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think that is a reduction in the proper direction. Our stationery is very inferior to what it used to be, and if there is a place where the stationary should be first class, it is the House of Commons. There is very little difference between what we are paying to-day and what we paid in 1896, and there is a great difference in the quality of the stationery. We have envelopes we cannot seal and paper that the pen will run through and bad pens.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It seems to me that there is a great difference between the stationery we get here and that which is supplied the Senate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are very giddy and reckless in that body.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is no reason why we should go to the other extreme. You cannot show me worse paper and envelopes than what are furnished this House. Our stationery is a disgrace to Canada. As to the Senate expenditure, not belonging to that high body, I am not prepared to discuss it, but judging by letters I have received from some members of that House, their stationery is far ahead of ours. Taking the importance of a House like this. I do not see why the government should allow the stationery to be given to us which we receive every day. There is no necessity why there should be any extravagance, but the material ought to be fairly good.

Mr. LARIVIERE. The Printing Committee appointed a sub-committee composed of the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) and myself, and we have provided for the stationery for the coming session equal in quality to that furnished the Senate, and that is why this sum is asked.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to make a suggestion to that sub-committee. I do not see why the monograms on the envelopes and the paper of the House of Commons should not be printed in both languages. That would not add to the cost, and would be gratifying to the French members. We used formerly to have the monograms in both languages, but to-day we have none in French at all.

Provincial voters' lists ..... $8,000

The PRIME MINISTER. This is intended to pay for the lists which we have to receive from the different provincial authorities. Last year this sum was taken out of the appropriation for printing. We had but little printing last year, and could take this sum out of that appropriation, but this year we have had a large number of lists to print, and every penny of this will be required for the printing of the lists.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the sense of paying this when we do not get the lists printed?

The PRIME MINISTER. We will get them printed here.

Mr. SPROULE. They will be a year old when they reach us.

The PRIME MINISTER. They are being printed at this moment.

Mr. SPROULE. For nearly five months we have been told that the lists are being printed, and yet we have seen none of them. Our provincial lists are nearly a year old, and instead of having the latest lists, we will have the old lists.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Printing Bureau is printing the list. These lists come progressively and not altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. We do not see any of them.

The PRIME MINISTER. The printing has been going on since last fall. I will undertake, on concurrence, to have all the information as to the lists.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In that case, I think the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), ought to bring down a list showing which voters' lists are printed, and which are not. For the last five or six months we have been trying to ascertain what was the position of these lists. I know I have put questions more than half a dozen times upon that point, but the invariable answers of the government is that the lists are being prepared. But they cannot be in preparation for ever. Of course, I am against the present system of preparing voting lists for parliamentary elections: but if we are called upon to vote money for the system we ought to be able to get information how the work goes on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I would call the attention of my hon. friend to a blue-book recently issued by the Secretary of State, which gives most of the information he seeks. I see that the list for Three Rivers for 1899, was not received at the Printing Bureau until December 13: and it was printed. I suppose that the list for this year is not in yet. This blue-book gives a great deal of information, and, if anything further is required, the Prime Minister will supply it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But that shows how bad the present system is. The government cannot control the municipal authorities who make up the list. If the municipal authorities were to send a list in September, and we had an election in October, it would follow, that we would be obliged to hold the election on old lists. That goes far to prove that the present system is a vicious system.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You would not have fresher lists under the old system.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not see that that follows. But the point I wish to make is that if hon. gentlemen spend $30,000 or $40,000 for printing the lists, and then have to fall back upon a list two years old, the money is wasted and people are disfranchised who should be allowed to vote.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think that is perfectly plain. You might have one list for the whole life of parliament, holding not only the general election, but by-elections upon it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is what occurred in the last general election—we had lists two or three years old.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But hon. gentlemen came in to do better than their predecessors: and, if they are going to fall back on a tu quoque argument, the improvement is not very great.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know the provisions of the charter of Three Rivers; but my right hon. friend knows that in our province, the lists are made in the spring—

The PRIME MINISTER. Not in Three Rivers.

Mr. BERGERON. There may be something special in their charter on that point. I understand in Quebec and Montreal, the lists are only made every two years, and Three Rivers may be in the same case. But I know that in my county the lists are made up in the spring, and they have been two or three months in the Printing Bureau. It may be that there is so much work that they have not been able to get the printing done. But there seems to be a good many in the same position. I suppose the work will be done as soon as possible.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland). Does the government have to pay the municipal authorities in each of the provinces for preparing the voters' lists?

The PRIME MINISTER. In most of the provinces, the lists are prepared by the municipal authorities, and this money goes to the clerk.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, I understand the clerk of the municipality gets paid for a portion of the voters' lists?

The PRIME MINISTER. For the copy he sends.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think that is proper, so far as Ontario is concerned. I wrote to the judge who revised the lists for East Northumberland to ask who was the custodian of the lists, and he told me it was the clerk of the peace. That is the proper authority from whom to get the list.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps so.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think the government should get the list from the clerk of the municipality. We have no knowledge whether they are tampered with or not. But if they are in charge of the clerk of the peace and the government gets them from that officer, we can have confidence that they are the proper lists. I have never had a list for East Northumberland since the law was changed. Our list was in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on January 8, this year, having been revised about November. If there is an election about the latter part of this year, we shall have to run on a list that is over a year old. Hon. gentlemen opposite used to find fault under the late government, about running elections on old lists; but they have not remedied that at all. Under the old law, if the government intended having an election, say in 1900, we would revise the lists in 1900, and run the election on the new lists. Another point is this—the municipalities do not all have the revision at the same time. I recollect that in my own riding, on one occasion, one municipality did not have the lists revised in time to have the local election. If, for instance the township of Percy did not have their lists printed in time of the election of 1900, what would the government do?

The PRIME MINISTER. Take the last list in force in the municipality.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is you would have a list two years old.

The PRIME MINISTER. We cannot help that.

Mr. COCHRANE. But there is no economy to the taxpayers. In fact, they are paying now more than they did under the old Franchise Act. You are asking just as much money to print the lists. It is true, it is easier for the member who has to see to the revision of the list. Under the old law, when the lists in my riding were revised, I had to put up money to serve notices, and so on; but now, the money has to be put up by the municipalities in Ontario. But instead of relieving the ratepayers of the province of Ontario, it placed a burden on them that they never had before.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend says in Ontario the money will be paid to the clerk of the peace, because he is the custodian of the list; in Quebec it goes to the registrar of the county. What is the scale upon which the government pays for these lists? In Quebec the registrar does five times the amount of work for the same amount of money that the custodian of the list has to do, for instance, in British Columbia. In Quebec the registrar has to have one line for the name, one for the qualification, one for the lot upon which he is qualified, another for the post office address, and so on. It is a pretty heavy list, and that is paid for by so much per name. But in British Columbia there is only the name that has to be written down, and the custodian or whoever he is, gets, I am told, ten cents for writing that name, whereas in the province of Quebec the registrar who has to do five times more work only gets five cents for each name. Now, why should not the government adopt one price for the whole country? Because it is a palpable injustice to pay less in one place than you do in another.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, and I will look into it. I think he is in error, but I will ascertain.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought this item was a provision for the supplementary provincial lists. This of course does not provide for the voters' lists in cities and towns in the province of Ontario. Have you an item for the purpose of preparing that list?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is an item in the main estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. I think our Act provides that the registration list, if it is not more than a year old, should be used, and if it is more than a year old, there must be a new registration.

Mr. COCHRANE.

Mr. HAGGART. It must be a list prepared immediately after the issue of the writ, whether it is a year old or any length of time. I want to be clear upon that point. There is no list for the province of Ontario of a certain class of votes until the writ for the election is issued; then, no matter whether it is a year old or more, there must be a subsidiary list prepared in cities and towns after the writ is issued, otherwise we would have no list.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is the law now?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Where, in the province of Ontario, the lists are made at irregular intervals—and that would apply to manhood suffrage vote in cities and towns—and where the list is more than a year old at the time the election takes place, in that event a new manhood suffrage list must be made up.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will this $8,000 make for this work altogether?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $40,000.

Mr. COCHRANE. Will the list be sent to us as soon as printed?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Immediately after they are printed, twenty copies must be sent to the member and to the defeated candidate.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I desire to ask the Solicitor General, as he has the statutes before him, to refer to subsection 10, of section 10, of the Franchise Act. Are we to understand that in the event of the Queen's Printer not having printed the current year list, say the list for 1900, and the election should take place this fall, before these lists have been printed in Ottawa, are we to use the list prepared by the municipal council?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. The municipal council prepares a list for provincial purposes, then the custodian or clerk sends a copy of that list to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who causes it to be printed; then that list so printed by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery becomes, for the purposes of our Dominion election, the original list. But if by any accident, either by an omission on the part of the custodian or for any other reason, he does not send the list, then the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is obliged to provide the returning officer with the provincial list which is in the custody of the provincial custodian. So that you have got, for any election that may happen to take place, the last list in force in the province, with the exception of course of the manhood suffrage vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. When would the provincial list come in force? Is it immediately after it is revised, or within a certain number of days?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not got that before me, but I understand that in so far as Ontario is concerned it comes into force within a certain number of days after it is revised, and I think that is the rule all through Canada. I am now dealing with the ordinary list, not the special registration list.

Mr. JAMES GILMOUR (East Middlesex). Suppose that in a portion of the city of London a provincial registration took place in February, would that stand good for a Dominion election that took place in August?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, that would be a list less than a year old.

Mr. GILMOUR. Notwithstanding the fact that the registration took place in the city of London, that portion of the city would be exempt.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, from the obligation to make a new list, that is to say, that would be a list which, within the terms of the statute, would be less than a year old.

Mr. McALISTER. Suppose in the province of New Brunswick an election took place now, before the last lists are printed and distributed, would the election be held on them?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, if they are not printed and distributed, then you simply go to the clerk or whoever the custodian of the provincial lists may be, and you get a copy from him for the returning officers.

Increase in salary of the accountant, deputy sergeant-at-arms and four clerks ..... $300

Mr. SPEAKER. There is an increase of $50 each to the accountant, Mr. Chamberlain, and to Mr. Bowie, the assistant sergeant-at-arms, and to four clerks: Mr. Hartney, examiner of private Bills; Mr. W. Todd, clerk of private Bills; Mr. N. Robideau, clerk of railways; Mr. C. H. Jones, third-class clerk.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these statutory increases?

Mr. SPEAKER. These are the usual $50 increases. They are recommended by the Committee on Internal Economy.

Sessional clerks ..... $3,120

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say, in respect to these items, that heretofore these estimates have been passed for a session of 100 days, and the House will recall that we had to have a special vote each session. This is for an additional thirty days, so as to avoid the difficulty that has occurred during the last two sessions. We pay out no more money, because they are paid by the day.

French translators ..... $480

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask His Honour the Speaker to see that there will be a room downstairs placed at the disposal of the French translators next session. Last year and two years ago deputations waited on the Speaker to get a room in the House of Commons for the French translators. They are at present occupying premises outside of this building. I do not know where; in fact, I have never been there. Of course, that costs something as the government is obliged to lease a place for them, but I do not know how much it costs. It has been suggested that the translators should have a room in this building. I believe that downstairs there is a room which, I think, could be put at their disposal. I am not speaking as to the economy that would result from this arrangement, as I do not know whether we are paying a large rent outside or not, but it would be a great deal better for the efficiency of the service if the translators were here. We sometimes have to deal with them, and we either have to send a messenger to them or ask them to come up here. I think if we could have them in this building it would be much better. They would like it better themselves. I would ask His Honour if he would be kind enough to place a room at their disposal, or, if he feels disposed to do so, to consult with the hon. Minister of Public Works and see that a place is put at their disposal by next session.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would be very glad to do it if hon. members would stand between the Speaker and members of this House who are occupants of these rooms. We will have to reduce the accommodation that members of the House use. One of the very first things that I had brought to my attention was a grievance of that kind. As a matter of fact, it is of very long standing.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to say that Mr. Speaker cannot reduce the number of rooms which the members of the opposition occupy.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John City). This matter can be very easily arranged. After all the members shall have left, whoever is in authority, can put these translators in, and whoever comes back next session will find this room pre-empted.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the hon. member (Mr. Ellis) suggests, this can only be done between two parliaments, and as the hon. gentleman says, they will be in possession when members come back.

Mr. BERGERON. I have called the attention of His Honour to it, so that he can arrange the matter after we are all gone.

Library—Additional to the salaries of Mr. Smith and Mr. Sylvain ..... $100

Mr. DAVIN. I consider, Sir, that these two gentlemen who are mentioned here are about two of the best officers in the library, and I entirely endorse these increases, which, I suppose, are the annual statutory increases that come to them as a matter of course. But, I have seen no statutory increase for Mr. Casault. Why is it that the name of Mr. Casault is not included? He is absolutely one of the best officers in the employ of the government. He is a most useful officer. Col. Todd is a first-class man. Mr. MacCormac is also a first-class officer in the library. I use the library a good deal, and I think that Mr. Casault does not get what he is entitled to. He has not spoken to me; of course, I know nothing about it; but he is absolutely one of the best officers I ever knew.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that we had a pretty large staff in the library? Do we require two more?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is the same staff.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought we were providing for two new ones?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I entirely agree with what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has just said in regard to Mr. Casault. It seems to me that this is not the only instance, but that in other instances, in which there has been discrimination. Some have been selected for promotion and others, just as well entitled to it, have been put aside. As to these increases, there is no objection, because Mr. Sylvain and Mr. Smith are first-class men. But there is no reason, if you have three good men, why the three good men should not be treated on a plane of equality. If one gets an increase, the others should be treated in the same way.

Mr. BERGERON. To what class does Mr. Casault belong? It may be that he is at the head of his class.

Mr. SPEAKER. He has been a long time in the service.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Casault can hardly be said to be in any class known to the civil service, but this special officer has been there for a long time, he has been a good officer, and I would be very glad to see his name down in the list.

Glasgow Exhibition ..... $25,000

Mr. DAVIN. Before you proceed with that item, there is a matter that I want to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). The Canada Lumberman, published this month in Toronto, the organ of the lumber interest, places before the public a very serious matter which,

Mr. BERGERON.

I think, requires an explanation on the part of the hon. gentleman. It is an article entitled 'The Canadian Exhibit at the Imperial Institute,' and it is as follows:

The Canadian Exhibit at the Imperial Institute.

The resources of Canada, and particularly of the province of Ontario, are by no means properly or creditably represented by the exhibit at the Imperial Institute in London. The visitor would be much more favourably impressed if the exhibits of the various provinces were placed side by side instead of on different floors. The present arrangement does not give the idea that Canada is one Dominion, but rather that it consists of a number of separate provinces, having little or no connection with one another. The exhibit should be arranged in compact form like that of Australia.

As to the character of the exhibit, and more particularly that of the province of Ontario, the richest and most important of the provinces, there is good ground for complaint. One would suppose from the numerous views of Niagara Falls placed about the walls, that this great natural phenomenon was the one distinguishing characteristic of the province of Ontario, while the specimens of Indian work are well calculated to confirm the idea, already too prevalent in the minds of some of the people of Great Britain, that Canada is a wild and uncivilized country.

Ontario is known on this side of the Atlantic as a fruit-growing province, and the quality of its productions in this line is not excelled by those of any other country. In view of this fact, it is extremely humiliating to a Canadian to observe that the jars containing samples of Canadian fruit shown in this exhibit have apparently not been refilled during the last decade. What was once fruit might now, judging from appearances, be almost any other substance under the sun.

There is also displayed a view of the Toronto Industrial Exhibition of date the year 1885, which, of course, conveys a totally inadequate idea of the character and extent of the exhibition of to-day. We would suggest that all relics such as this and the photograph of the ruins of Fort Erie, might well be thrown out of the exhibit, and modern views of our principal cities and industries substituted, so that visitors would be given an approximately fair idea of the kind of country Canada is, the extent of its development, and its advantages as a place of residence and business enterprise. The Canadian Pacific Railway show some excellent views of the harvesting operations in Manitoba. These are well calculated to make a favourable impression upon intending emigrants. There is also an excellent geological map of Ontario, containing a large amount of information with regard to the population and resources of the province. There is a fairly good exhibit of building stones and marbles, also of hardwoods. Other features equally valuable might be added, so as to convey to visitors a proper idea of the country and its resources.

The entire exhibit should either be rearranged, improved, and brought up-to-date, or entirely done away with.

I was requested to bring this matter before the minister, and I hope he will see that our exhibit at the Imperial Institute is rejuvenated.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The Canadian exhibit at the Imperial Institute is managed and provided for by the provinces, and the Dominion government has nothing to do with it. I find from the records, that when the Canadian Institute was established, the late government declined to take up its management, and the duty was relegated to the provinces. I was in the Imperial Institute not very long ago, and I must say that the exhibit of Canada is not very creditable, and not very commensurate with what Canada can produce. The Australian exhibits are looked after by the different colonies of Australasia, and in that respect, are the same as the Canadian exhibits.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this Glasgow exhibition?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is an international exhibition to be held in Glasgow next year, and a large number of the producers of Canada think it very important that we should exhibit there. The apparent smallness of the vote is accounted for, by the fact, that we expect to be able to take the Canadian exhibit from Paris over to Glasgow. We will only have 8,000 feet of space at Glasgow, whereas we have over 30,000 at Paris.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is looking after the work?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The work will be done when the Paris exhibition is over.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose it will be another job for Tarte. I agree in the desirability of having a proper representation of Canada in Glasgow, and it seems to me that you ought to commence the preparation for the work at once. You cannot prepare for an exhibition in a month or two.

Taking Dominion census..... $100,000.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). In the earlier part of the session I moved for a copy of the forms that were used in the census of 1871, 1881 and 1891, with a view to see what changes had been made in these forms, so as to discover, if possible, why we had such unsatisfactory returns last census as regards the origin of the people. In the census of 1871 and 1881, the form was 'name of the country, or province of birth,' and in the next column, 'origin,' whether they were French Canadians, English Canadians, Irish Canadians, or any other origin. In the census of 1891, this form was changed to 'country or province of birth,' and then a special column for 'French Canadians.' The next column was 'place of birth of father, place of birth of mother.' This was an innovation. My object now is to call the attention of the House to the fact this this appellation of 'French Canadian' as in the form of 1891, led to a great deal of mistakes, so that the returns we have received from that census were very unsatisfactory. The French Canadian population may be divided into two distinct classes.

One: The Canadians of French origin, coming from the province of Quebec, who may properly be called French Canadians. The other: The Acadians, who are also of French origin, and who although they do not style themselves French Canadians, belong to the same family. Then in the Manitoba and the North-west Territories, we have two classes of half-breeds. We have the descendants of the French Canadians, who have settled in the North-west, and we have the descendants of the Scotch people brought in by the Hudson's Bay Company. They are called respectively, French half-breeds and English half-breeds. Though the French half-breeds are the descendants of the Canadians from Lower Canada, who have settled in the North-west, they do not call themselves French Canadians, and they object to being recorded in the census as such. Therefore, while we have a certain number of French Canadians returned under this column, the Acadians and the French half-breeds are excluded, although all three belong to the one family, and should come under the same description if there is only one heading in the form. I would suggest to the minister that he would have a heading for each of these three classes of the French Canadian people, so that they might be returned under their respective headings. I believe that the census should be a complete description of the population, and while I speak especially with regard to French Canadians, I believe the other Canadians, Scotch, English or Irish, should have a column of their own, so that they might be recorded under their respective origins. If we had this designation, then in years to come, we could study the different fluctuations of the population, and ascertain the progress that each nationality is making. In reply to this, I may hear some gentleman tell me that we in Canada should form only one nationality, and that we should all call ourselves 'Canadians.' That is true. We are all Canadians, but at the same time we have a certain affection for our origin, and the Irish Canadians, or Scotch Canadians, or English Canadians should be just as proud of the land that their forefathers came from, as the French Canadians are proud of their origin. I believe that the census should give all these details. We should then have something on record that would be very interesting not only to ourselves, but to future generations. If this whole country is to become one people, then we should follow the progress of the respective nationalities in origin. In the United States they are very much more particular in taking the census, and they give many more details with regard to the people and their respective origins. Why should we not, in the forms that are being distributed, get all the statistics we can? We get descriptions of the private properties of individuals, the animals they are possessed of, and so forth; but in regard to the origins of the people, which are much more interesting from one standpoint, we are much more neglectful, grouping them all together, so that it is impossible to tell where they come from. I believe a great change should be made in this respect, and the present minister will be deserving of the thanks of the country if he gives us a census which will contain proper statistics with regard to the origins of the people.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I agree with everything which has fallen from the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière). For instance, the student of history or the writer of history, who wants to get such information as my hon. friend has been discussing, ought to be able to find it in the census. We pay a very large amount of money for taking the census, and I think we should make it as complete as possible by giving full information in regard to the different nationalities in the country. The fact of our people all being Canadians does not do away with the historical fact that this part of our continent has been peopled by different races; and it would be very interesting to be able to trace the development of these different races in different parts of the continent. I think we should feel very much indebted to my hon. friend for having brought this matter before parliament; and unless the hon. minister can see insuperable difficulties in the way, I think that information should be added, which would make our census much more interesting, complete and useful, both to the people of this country and to people abroad.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have had this matter brought to my attention personally, before now, by my hon. friend from Provencher and others, and I may say that I quite agree as to the desirability of what he suggests. As to its feasibility, I shall have to consult my officers, and I will certainly do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us when the census is to be taken, the system which is to be followed, and who is to be in charge of the work?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have already announced that the system will be the same as before—the de jure system. The census must be taken next year, but no date has yet been fixed, nor has any arrangement been made as to the personnel of those who are to take it.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the census is taken about the same time all over the British Empire, in the month of April. Is it the intention of the department to take it about that time, or to make any departure?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not had anything brought before me yet to induce me to depart from the usual system. The date, however, cannot be fixed until I have gone into the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman say whom he intends to appoint to take charge of the work?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There has been no arrangement made about the personnel. I have just been waiting till the close of the session to go to work at it. If the hon. gentleman will let us away, I will go right at it.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend says the census will be taken on the de jure system?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All the censuses have been taken on that system.

Mr. BERGERON. We heard so many criticisms of the system in 1891 that if my hon. friend adopts it, it may show that it was not so bad a system as was said at the time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose my hon. friend refers to the complaints of the inaccuracies and the padding in that census. I can assure him that I will see that nothing of that kind occurs under my administration.

Cold storage on steamships, on railways, at warehouses, and for expenses in connection with trial at creameries, and for expenses in connection with trial shipments of products and for securing improvement and recognition of the quality of Canadian farm products..... $30,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is this an additional amount for cold storage?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is to enable us to carry out the arrangements which were provided for in the Bill which passed this House some time ago—to pay for the additional steamships that were required for this season's work.

Mr. SPROULE. That is to cover the enhanced price we have to pay on account of the delay in making your contract.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, nothing of the kind.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to tell us the other night that he would have to pay considerably more now than he would have had to pay if the contract had been made a little earlier.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the hon. gentleman did not say that at all.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the impression conveyed to the House, whether it was wrong or not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Quite wrong.

Mr. SPROULE. I think Hansard will bear me out in saying that that was the impression given.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why does the hon. gentleman say that this is for steamships only, when the vote says that it is also for cold storage on railways, at warehouses and at creameries?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is exactly the same wording as that in the main estimates?

Mr. COCHRANE. If it is not correct, why put it in?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is correct. This is an addition to the vote for cold storage purposes.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. gentleman told us that he was going to ask a certain sum more for cold storage on steamships. Why put in these other items in regard to warehouses and creameries if you want this for cold storage on steamships?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The expenditure for all these items comes out of the one vote, and the difference is simply this, that $70,000 was asked for in the main estimates and we want $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understand it correctly, this goes a good deal further than providing cold storage on steamships. Is it intended out of this vote to select certain trial shipments of products and send them over to be sold? If it is not, I respectfully submit it ought to be changed and let us have the estimates made intelligently. We should know what the money is intended for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is intended to be used for just the same work as the vote in the main estimates, and is exactly in the same wording, and is an addition to that vote.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this to be used for steamships and railway lines, warehouses, creameries, and for expenses in connection with the shipment of products?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For all these.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the full amount the hon. gentleman intends to use for these purposes?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $100,000.

Paris Exhibition ..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That makes a total of $285,000. When this question came up before, a good many questions were asked, which I was not then in a position to answer. Now, I would inform the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague)—who, I am sorry, is not here—that his statement that the Canadian building at the Chicago Fair cost $4,000 was only incorrect to the extent of $22,000. It cost $26,000 instead of $4,000. In the next place, the World's Fair at Chicago cost this country $454,801.18.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the particulars?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not all the details:

Dominion government expenditure....	$252,513 91
Province of Ontario.....	$84,834 72
“ Manitoba .....	48,828 49
“ Quebec .....	34,407 21
North-west Territories .....	10,600 00
Province of British Columbia	17,956 84
“ Nova Scotia ....	5,057 71
“ Prince Edward Island .....	602 30
	202,287 27

Grand total..... $454,801 18

A part of that was spent by the provinces, but they undertook the work and prepared the exhibits, which they have not done in the case of the Paris exhibition.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I understand that Manitoba did not exhibit at all on the grounds but had an exhibit outside the grounds?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Manitoba spent $48,000.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Over $80,000, but outside the exhibition altogether.

Mr. COCHRANE. What has that got to do with the expenditure of the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was part of the whole expenditure of Canada.

Mr. COCHRANE. It was done by the provinces, and not by Canada, and you are bringing that up to cover your own expenditure.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This was a payment by the people of Canada, and if the provinces had taken the same steps to represent themselves at the Paris exhibition, it would not have been necessary for the Dominion to spend so much.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman give us the particulars of the Dominion expenditure at the Chicago fair?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can give some but not all. I can give, for instance, a list of the employees. Mr. Larke, who was Canadian commissioner at Chicago, cost this country $11,000. We paid also the following:

W. Saunders.....	$ 768 15
J. W. Robertson .....	664 10
E. A. Charters.....	2,331 24
W. M. Andrews .....	3,721 14
Miss R. J. Barrett.....	1,803 76
A. M. Chisholm .....	1,038 75
J. Clarke .....	2,801 96

H. C. Cockburn .....	$ 382 70
W. D. Dimock .....	4,961 17
J. A. G. Goulet.....	2,097 75
W. H. Hay.....	235 68
P. E. Rercheldt.....	358 50
J. B. Samson.....	1,376 60
W. Smith .....	1,000 95
E. S. Stanton .....	1,685 83
M. C. Swanson .....	1,432 08
J. H. Tracey .....	2,326 16
J. O. Turcotte .....	1,378 75
L. Wolverton .....	1,913 45
R. S. Hodgins .....	1,225 20
P. A. Hughes .....	1,544 75
L. H. Lafleur .....	1,448 75
W. B. Larke.....	1,248 20
J. Legge .....	313 00
L. Jones .....	876 65
J. Lobb.....	1,721 40
R. Marion .....	1,293 65
W. Morton.....	2,473 72
G. H. Parsons .....	1,562 11
Brother Plerinus .....	264 00
W. Pennoyer.....	1,405 90
J. P. Redwood .....	1,179 50

I think he was a member of the House at the time.

Mr. BERGERON. No, it was three or four years after.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Altogether thirty-eight employees. There was also the Hon. Joseph Tassé, who was paid $3,170; E. R. Cockburn, who was a member of the House at the time, $4,425; Mr. Ewart, $1,000; Hon. A. R. Angers and Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, travelling expenses, $353, making up a total of over $75,000 for salaries. I have not the details of the other expenditure. The Antwerp and Colonial exhibition cost $157,617.98, and the Indian and Colonial cost $154,458.19.

Mr. DAVIN. Is not the hon. gentleman astray in saying that the amount he gave was all for salaries?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Salaries and expenses. The Indian and Colonial exhibition cost about $160,000. At the Chicago fair, there were some thirty-eight employees on the list, while at Paris, up to the present—not to-day in Paris, by any means—we have only twenty-six.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the total cost of the Dominion with the Chicago fair, leaving out the provincial expenditure?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $252,000.

Mr. CLARKE. And how much to date on the Paris exhibition?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the exact details. The amount asked is altogether $285,000.

Mr. DAVIN. If the number of officers at Paris is fewer now than the number at the Chicago exhibition, the hon. gentleman must be paying them a far larger amount individually.

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The amount I have given includes freight charges, and about $125,000 for space, while at Chicago nothing was spent for space, as that was provided by the American people.

Mr. DAVIN. What a monstrous thing to have to spend $125,000 for space. That will shock the public mind.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, it is a very large expenditure, but it was the rule of the exhibition, and the arrangements made for the British exhibits were made by the Imperial commission, without whose authority we could not have exhibited there at all. Consequently, we had to deal with them and through them for the arrangements for this building. The building has been a very expensive one, and I believe it is not as good as it should have been for the money expended. I have protested, and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has protested, and the bills are not yet settled; and I trust that when we come to settle it, we shall not be obliged to pay the full amount charged. I desire to make it clear that we were allowed to exhibit in Paris only as a portion of the British Empire, that the Exposition commissioners dealt entirely with the British Imperial Commission; that the British Imperial Commission invited us to take part in the exposition as a part of the British Empire, and we accepted that invitation. We are there as part of the British Empire, as one of the colonies of Britain. The British Imperial Commission arranged with the Exposition authorities that the British colonies should have a building to themselves in which to place their exhibits. This was gratifying to us because we thought we could make a better display by having our exhibits all together than if they were scattered in different parts of the exposition. We were informed that the building would cost 10 shillings per square foot of floor space. On that basis we accepted the invitation. The British Imperial Commission afterwards informed us that their calculations had been increased, and the building would cost us more, though they did not give an exact figure. The plans, after considerable discussion and correspondence, had to be submitted to the French commissioners, because only such plans as they approved could be adopted. We found that the plans were going to involve an expenditure of 12s. 6d. or a little over $3 per square foot. We found also that there were some other expenses, such as fire appliances, which the Paris authorities required to have put in, and lighting. Afterwards we were offered a part of the space which had been set apart for the British exhibits. As we had urgent requests for more space than that available in the colonial building, which was quite inadequate—as a matter of fact we could not even have placed all our exhibits in that space—and still less make a good show we accepted the offer. That space was charged for, I think at the rate of 6 shillings per square foot. We then found that all the agricultural implements were to be transferred to the park in Vincennes, another part of Paris; and, if they were to be exhibited at all adequately and properly, we had to provide a building in the park in Vincennes. It may be said that we ought not to have agreed to these increased expenditures for buildings and accommodation; but when we found as we did that all the Canadian exhibitors were crying out for more space and declaring that they could not make a proper display in the space allotted—and in fact, we could have filled twice or three times the space placed at our disposal—we decided to undertake the additional expenditure. And I venture to say that the people of Canada would have thought us derelict in our duty had we failed to take the extra space allowed to us. Of course the expenditure for space is very materially increased. I only allude to this to show how unfair it is to make a comparison between this and other exhibitions in which no charge has been made for space. It is the rule of the Paris exhibition to charge for space, and they treat us no differently from the way they treat others. The point is that the building which the Imperial commissioners undertook to put up for the British colonies apparently has not been a success, is not up to the contract and specifications and has been to a certain extent unsatisfactory to Canada. Our commissioners have tried to overcome that at least to some extent by decorating the building inside and out—

Mr. BERGERON. But we are paying all the same.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That remains to be seen. There is still $16,000 or $17,000 which, up to the present time I have refused to pay; and I am not going to pay until I have discussed the matter thoroughly, through Lord Strathcona, with the Imperial commission.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister has given us only a part of the information. He says that the Chicago exhibition cost us $252,000. Will he tell us how many lines were exhibited by us there, what space we had and whether the cost for the different provinces was borne by them, or whether we paid for the employees in connection with their several exhibits.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the details as to space, but, of course, the space we occupied at Chicago was very much larger than at Paris, but the space was free and not so fully occupied. So far as the provincial exhibits are concerned, the provinces spent the amounts I have read here through their own commissioners. But when I gave the number of employees connected with our exhibits at Chicago I did not include the employees who were sent there by the several provinces.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they paying them out of the provincial exchequer?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They did at Chicago, but they are not doing it at Paris.

Mr. BERGERON. Are we paying for the provincial representatives?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are no provincial employees that I know of, with the exception of one or two honorary commissioners.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Deschenes has gone for Quebec. Is he paid by the Quebec government?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He may be paid by the province. He goes as honorary commissioner, and is doing no work for us at Paris.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It seems to me a poor argument to say that we did so and so because we were asked to do it. If the conditions were not satisfactory, there was no obligations upon the government to pay $125,000 for space in the Paris exposition. But the point I really wish to discuss was about this building. I have not had an opportunity to visit the exposition, but I have seen quite a number of people who have been there, and they all agree that the Canadian building is no credit to Canada.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, they do not all agree.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have not met one who has been over there who said that the building was at all equal to the buildings of other nations. The Minister of Agriculture did not deny that the building is no credit to Canada. It would have been better for us to pay more for a good building than to put our exhibits into a building which is a discredit to Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend says that everybody who went there has said the same thing. I think he is exaggerating a little. I am willing to admit that the consensus of opinion is that the building is not what it should be for the price we paid, and that a better building ought to have been prepared for the colonial exhibits. I have here a published interview with Mr. Hosmer, a gentleman of Montreal, whom the hon. gentleman knows very well. He is a good judge of such things, and after saying something about the general effect of the exhibition, he is thus reported:

He was aware that the Americans criticized their department, but he was very favourably impressed with Canada's building. It was one of the first objects to catch his eye on entering the grounds by one of the main entrances, and he thought that, on the whole, it was a good advertisement for the country.

I may say that the Hon. Mr. Tarte has written me over and over again condemning the building and condemning the arrangements made; and in consequence of its inferior character he was obliged to spend a considerable sum of money in decorating it and improving it, and I have no doubt that Mr. Hosmer saw it after Mr. Tarte had made the improvements.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is responsible for that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not quite sure. The colonial committee of the Imperial commission managed the building, and gave the contract, and we paid our proportion. Queensland, South Australia and Tasmania. I think, are represented in the building, and we all pay a certain proportion according to the floor space which each of us occupy.

Mr. BERGERON. I read somewhere that the whole building was supposed to cost $85,000. Then that would be distributed amongst the different colonies?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Our share is $85,000.

Mr. BERGERON. I have read several times that a building like that could be built for $20,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. So far as I can make out from the letters that I have received, the building should have cost about $70,000 or $75,000, and I think it did cost a little over $100,000, of which we pay four-fifths.

Mr. SPROULE. I have information that we had many more lines exhibited in Chicago than we have in Paris. Could the hon. gentleman give us any information in regard to the number of lines that are exhibited in Paris?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got a list of exhibits, of course, but practically every line produced in Canada is exhibited there. We have in the first place the government exhibits; we have the agricultural exhibit, the food produce exhibit, an exhibit including the cold storage arrangements, a forestry exhibit, a fish and game exhibit, a mineral and mining exhibit—all prepared by the officers of the government. We have then exhibits made by a large number of private individuals covering practically every line of the manufactures of Canada outside of those that I have indicated. Among them are exhibits of all kinds of textile fabrics, boots and shoes, leather work, harness and saddlery, and everything of that kind, agricultural implements on a very large scale, heating apparatus, furniture, canoes and boats, wagons and carriages of all kinds, furniture of all kinds, edge tools, metal work of various kinds, carpenters' and joiners' work of all kinds—practically every manufacturing industry in Canada is represented. When the hon. gentleman says that in Chicago there was a greater variety exhibited, I think he is in error. There has never been a greater variety sent out of Canada than is found to-day in Paris. It is true, the space in Chicago was very large, consequently a greater number of exhibits could be shown. But we have carefully chosen the exhibits in this case, and induced exhibitors so to arrange their exhibits that specimens are shown of practically everything produced in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. My information is that there was much more variety in Chicago, that there were larger quantities of each line. In fact, the information given to me, is that there were hundreds of articles on exhibition at Chicago, that are not on exhibition at Paris at all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is talking exaggeratedly, because there are not hundreds of lines at any exhibition. There are hundreds of individual exhibits, but there are not hundreds of lines.

Mr. SPROULE. That shows how little attention the hon. gentleman has given to the matter, because there are hundreds of lines.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Can the hon. gentleman mention them?

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose, if I took the time until ten or eleven o'clock to-night, I might mention the ones I know of, without touching the ones I do not know of. I got this information from a party who was at Chicago for a length of time, and who profess to be somewhat intelligently informed as to what is being done in Paris. While I cannot vouch for it, I think it is approximately correct. In regard to the employees over there, I presume that the hon. minister can give us some information as to what they will cost. While I suppose the hon. gentleman would be able to give us their salaries, he will not be able to know what their expenses will be, until the exhibition is over.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Those who have been sent there are on salary, and they have a certain living allowance per day, which was fixed before they went.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the number of days that they will be there, fixed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically until the exhibition closes.

Mr. SPROULE. And they are engaged for the whole of that time?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not necessarily.

Mr. SPROULE. If not necessarily, they must be engaged for some time. I do not understand the object of the minister beating about the bush. He either knows or he does not know. If he does not know, he should not create the impression that they will not be there during the whole time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are engaged for as long as their services were found necessary at the exhibition, or until its close, subject to being sent away whenever their services were no longer needed. Two of the gentlemen sent over have returned already. Mr. Hay, of the experimental farm, went over to put up the agricultural trophies and decorations, and he has returned. One of the men who went over with fruit is returning on August 1. Professor Robertson went over there, spent a week or so, and came back. One officer, I regret to say, was dismissed, on account of his conduct. I, therefore, cannot tell the hon. gentleman exactly how long these gentlemen will be there. They will, in no case, be kept there longer than the exhibition lasts.

Mr. SPROULE. That verifies what I say, that it is impossible to tell what the cost will be, unless you know the length of time each one will be there. But the hon. minister said no, because we know the length of time that the exhibition will last. Therefore, we cannot make a correct calculation as to what these officers will cost.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have taken a vote of $285,000, which is all I ask for.

Mr. SPROULE. I am inclined to think that it will reach $300,000. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he can give us any information as to when the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), is coming back?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say exactly as to when the hon. Minister of Public Works is coming back.

Mr. BERGERON. Does he consult with the government at all?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. When will the exhibition be over?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On November 1.

Mr. BERGERON. Is my hon. friend aware that the exhibition, as a matter of fact, is not yet prepared, and that it will not be a complete exhibition before September?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not prepared to say as to what other countries have done, but the Canadian exhibit has been completed and in efficient operation, and it has absolutely been completed for more than a month back, or about a month now, with this exception that there are still some small exhibits yet to be sent. We propose to send fruit, for instance, as soon as the fruit gets ripe, and perhaps some grain of the crop of this year.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the hon. gentleman speak as to other countries?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As to other countries, I am not prepared to say. The Canadian exhibit was one of the first prepared for exhibition; in fact, we received many compliments from the press in Paris and elsewhere in regard to it. It will not be out of place for me to say that while we have not received the official declaration from the French authorities, our commissioners have been informed privately by the jury of awards, that Canada has been awarded the highest award in a large number of instances. This is the Grand Prize. I take it that that means the highest class of award. We have been informed privately that the highest award has been given to Canada for the forestry exhibit, the mineral exhibit, the exhibit of agricultural products, the leather exhibit, the furniture exhibit, and the heating apparatus exhibit, and our friends there say that the jury of awards, while not having finished their labours, have spoken most highly of our exhibit of canoes, butter—cheese had not been examined at the time this was written—and our higher educational exhibit. This spring we sent over an exhibit of apples of last season's crop which had been kept in cold storage all winter in Montreal. They were sent away from here on May 24, and they arrived in Paris in first-rate condition, notwithstanding the fact that they had to go from Liverpool to Paris, not in cold storage. They were kept in cold storage here, and sent across the Atlantic in cold storage, but notwithstanding the fact they were sent from Liverpool to Paris by express, they arrived there in good condition, and in time to take part in a competition for prizes. They were exhibited by provinces, and the provinces of Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia took first prizes. The Dominion beat everybody, including the Americans. The province of New Brunswick took second prize and the province of Prince Edward Island took third prize, showing that not only is our fruit of unexceptional quality, but that the arrangements for forwarding it, and our cold storage arrangements for keeping it, turned out to be excellent. I think this is most gratifying, and I hope that when we send forward fruit of this season's crop, the result will be equally satisfactory, as I have no doubt they will be.

Mr. SPROULE. I fully appreciate the great importance of sending fresh fruit as soon as it is available, because fruit loses in flavour by being kept. It is affected more in flavour than any other way.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Of course these were the very best keeping varieties.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman said that there was a specific sum per day for all of the officers at the exhibition. Is the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) limited?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. About the Minister of Public Works, I saw the statement made that he was coming home shortly, but that he was going back again. Does the hon. minister know if that is the case?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware of it.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose it would be out of place to ask the right hon. First Minister if the hon. Minister of Public Works is going back again?

The PRIME MINISTER. As soon as the hon. Minister of Public Works comes back, he will stay back.

Mr. DAVIN. Is the hon. gentleman, the Minister of Agriculture, when the House rises, to pay a visit to the exhibition in Paris?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not made all my plans yet, but I am rather inclined to go, I confess.

Cattle quarantine—To pay North-west Mounted Police, services, &c. .... $1,500

Mr. DAVIN. Have we at the present time a sufficient number of mounted police in the North-west to make the quarantine effective?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have not, and that is the reason why I have to ask for this vote. We used to do it by the veterinary surgeons, but in consequence of so many going away, I have been obliged to employ outside veterinary surgeons at higher prices.

Mr. DAVIN. But this is to pay the North-west Mounted Police?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, because I asked the North-west Mounted Police to secure the veterinary surgeons, and they do it from outside the force.

Organized districts and public health vote. $20,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is this vote for?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In consequence of the outbreak of smallpox in the United States I have had to put a number of physicians along the frontier and I find I have to pay them very good prices. Besides, there is smallpox in the Yukon which I may have to attend to.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there not a steamer detained now at Gross Isle?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A steamer arrived at Gross Isle some ten days ago with smallpox on board, and the passengers are detained there.

Mr. SPROULE. How are these physicians supposed to make their work effective?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They watch the incoming trains and whenever a passenger comes from a district infected with smallpox, they require that passenger to be vaccinated if he has not been previously vaccinated, and they examine him to see if there is any signs of the disease.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you the authority to examine and detain passengers coming from the United States?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, under our Quarantine Act.

Mr. SPROULE. That will be news to a good many passengers passing across the line. How many of these physicians have you and how do you pay them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are twenty-two or twenty-three at different points along the frontier. They are selected from the medical men at these different points and as soon as the need for their services passes by we hope to be able to stop the work. They are paid $100 a month. In 1885 similar work was done by the Dominion government.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the provincial health officers attended to the work then. I think there was some friction between the provincial health officers and the Dominion government in respect to that, because I remember very well that I was consulted about it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Dr. Bryce, the chairman of the Ontario Health Board, demanded that I should do this, and the Attorney General of Prince Edward Island pointed out that it was my duty to do this work.

Mr. SPROULE. I agree that it is your duty to do it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Minister of Justice advised me also that I was bound to do it. The province of British Columbia undertook the work first themselves, but I presume they heard we were doing it in the other provinces and we were obliged to take the work over there.

Mr. SPROULE. Under the British North America Act you were of course obliged to look after the quarantine. I would ask the hon. gentleman, for instance, what steps he is taking to prevent smallpox being carried by the Indians who are constantly travelling from the United States into Canada, in Manitoba and the North-west Territories? We know that smallpox is almost always amongst those Indians.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It would, of course, be practically impossible to watch 3,000 miles of frontier, and what we are doing now is to specially watch the main channel of communication.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that the $100 covers everything.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Do these officials give their full time?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are obliged to give all the time that is necessary and in some cases it practically takes up all their time and in other cases I presume it would not.

Mr. SPROULE. Take the case of Windsor and Detroit. We know that smallpox exists in Detroit and has already been brought into Windsor, and the ferries are constantly passing there every hour in the day. What do your medical men do at such a point as that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have left all the details to Dr. Montizambert, the director general of public health.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told there is practically no arrangement there and that you can go across the ferry any time without examination. Hundreds of workmen cross there every day, and I am told no precautions are taken to prevent the introduction of smallpox into Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. Before that item passes, I wish again to draw the attention of the government to a despatch which is reproduced in the Edinburgh Scotsman of Tuesday, July 3. It is a despatch which was sent to the London Times from Vienna on June 29. I brought the matter up on Saturday, when the Minister of the Interior was not in his place. It is headed: 'Exodus of Roumanian Jews,' and is as follows:

Vienna, June 29.—It appears that a considerable number of the increasing stream of these immigrants from Roumania, which has been passing through the Dual Monarchy for weeks past intend to settle in Canada as labourers.

I will not read the whole of it. After giving particulars of their condition, it says:

Their poverty is such that they are forced to camp in the open air, being unable to pay for the poorest lodgings.

I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if settlers of this class are being encouraged to come to Canada by the agents appointed by the government who are touring Europe in the interests of immigration?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, the instructions to the agents are not to encourage people of that class. When I was in England the question of a movement of Jews was discussed between myself and Mr. Preston, and I specifically instructed him that no encouragement should be given to this particular movement.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw a statement in a paper lately that some arrangement was come to between Canada and the United States to enable immigrants to pass through Canada to the United States, and to allow such inspection of them as takes place at Castle Garden, so as to prevent undesirable immigrants reaching that country. Will the minister state what arrangement he has with the United States in this respect, and what will be done with undesirable immigrants after they come here—whether they will be deported, and if so, at whose expense.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No change has been made in the arrangement that has existed for a considerable number of years before this government took office. Under that arrangement the United States government were allowed to have a commissioner at any landing point where steamships landed immigrants for the purpose of getting information which would enable them to deal with these people upon reaching their country. Up to the present time no proposition has been made for a change. I saw the item to which the hon. gentleman refers, but I have received no official information in regard to it.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention to bring in Galicians and Doukhobors as usual and settle them in colonies?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I discussed that point at considerable length upon the general immigration vote, and I thought I made the position of the government on that point very clear. So far as Doukhobors are concerned, we cannot get any more of them, because there are no more. Those who came included all the people of that sect who settled in Russia, so far as I know. Therefore, the question of the Doukhobors need not trouble us in future. As to Galicians, the position I take is exactly what I have explained to the House a number of times. While we cannot offer any special encouragement to those people, we do not object to them coming.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you not paying a steamship subsidy for them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We pay the steamship companies a bonus for the Galicians just as we do for other persons from the continent of Europe, but we are not giving them any special encouragement as distinguished from other people, and we impose this special restriction upon them, that each head of a family is required to be possessed of a certain amount of money at the time he lands, so that there is no possibility of any of them being objects of charity.

Mr. SPROULE. What are you going to do with any that you find without money after they land? Some of them were objects of charity last year. I notice, in fact, by the hon. gentleman's own report that certain philanthropic gentlemen came from the United States and relieved them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is a fact, and therefore, we require them to have a certain amount of money.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the department give the same encouragement to Galicians and to other people of the continent as is given immigrants from the British Islands?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The continental bonus is larger than the bonus given for immigrants from the British Islands. The reason of that is not to offer a greater inducement to the people from continental Europe, but simply to meet the bonus paid by other countries.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. Is the same bonus given for the conveyance of continental immigrants as is given for the conveyance of immigrants in the British Islands?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is nothing given for the conveyance of immigrants. The only thing we do in the way of encouragement is to pay a bonus to the steamship agents.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the United States government pay a bonus to the steamship companies?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the United States government pay any bonus at all, because they do not desire immigrants.

Mr. CLARKE. What other countries have we to compete with?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Queensland and nearly all the Australian colonies, Brazil, Argentina, and I think some others.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us the difference between the continental bonus and that paid for immigrants from the British Islands?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I explained that to the House at least six or seven times. The bonus is the same in the case of English immigrants as it has been for a number of years, a $1.75 for each adult, and half that amount for each person under twelve years, and therefore not reckoned as an adult. From the continent the bonus is the same, one pound for each adult. The tickets for two persons under twelve are reckoned the same as one adult.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it still the hon. gentleman's intention to settle these Galicians in colonies?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Our intentions respecting them must be regulated necessarily, to a considerable extent, by the desires of the people themselves. The idea that the government can send people just wherever they like is entirely a mistake. We have found that to be the case in a number of instances. Persons who came in during the last year from Galicia, came, almost without exception, on account of communications sent them by Galicians already here. They knew exactly where they were going and would not go anywhere else, and would not take advice from the department as to where they should go. They went out among their own people. During the past year we have had practically very little trouble with them because they very largely took care of themselves, owing to that fact. In the future, whatever people of that class come here will probably distribute themselves as they did last year, without much control on the part of the government. Our desire is to separate them and not have them altogether, but it is quite impossible to prevent them colonizing close together. My own impression is that in moderate sized colonies, they would do much better than if scattered around individually.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. SPROULE. According to the hon. gentleman's estimate a Galician over twelve years of age cost us $4 a head, whereas an Irishman and Englishman or a Scotchman costs $1.75. I wonder how much the hon. gentleman would be prepared to give for Frenchmen a head?

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand that none of those Galician Jews referred to in the Times despatch from Vienna will come or be encouraged to come here?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. None of them will be encouraged by the government directly or indirectly.

Mr. DAVIN. I may tell the hon. gentleman that while I have a good deal of sympathy for these people, we have to do the best we can for the country, and he is aware that a large number were at one time established along the Souris under the patronage of Baron Hirsch. I have travelled over the whole district set apart for these people, and that district is now desolate. They turned out to be quite unfit for farming, and it would be a perfect waste of money to induce others of that description to settle in the North-west.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in connection with this immigration that the government had to notify and call in the assistance of American officers to prevent these people leaving this country. He had to invoke the assistance of the Alien Labour law officers of the United States to prevent their going to that country, or we might have had a repetition of the desolate waste along the Saskatchewan. The deputy minister informed us of this in the committee.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I wish to ask my hon. friend if he intends to do something further with regard to the repatriation of French Canadians from the United States. His attention has been called to this on several occasions already. In fact a memorial was sent him last year by Father Morin, who submitted a scheme to that effect, and this year I understand that the congress just held in St. Boniface passed resolutions, and a memorial is to be sent to the hon. gentleman in connection with that movement. I hope that out of this large amount voted for immigration purposes, he will see his way to organize a better system of repatriation than the one followed in the past.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite appreciate the importance of the subject, and I can say that for the last three years the department has been doing every thing which seemed to be reasonable and likely to bring about the desired result in the direction of repatriating French Canadians. We have given special assistance to the repatriation society and to the late Lake St. John Railway Company which is specially engaged in that work and devote considerable portion of its time and money to it, and we have done in various ways everything possible to encourage that movement. I do not know what more we can do but am quite prepared to consider any suggestion which bears on its face the probability of success.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I had reference particularly to the work that might be done in the eastern states. In the western states a good deal of work has been done, but the French Canadians there have been neglected. That work was done more especially on behalf of the English-speaking population in the United States, and good work has been performed, but I am sorry to say that the general impression of my countrymen is that our section has been neglected in that regard. The hon. minister need only consult the documents put before him on that question and other communications that may be submitted to him, and I have no doubt he will be in a position to do better than he has done in the past.

Militia and Defence—Income—Military properties ..... $53,200

Mr. HAGGART. What is this to be expended for ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Of this, $30,500 is to be spent on rifle ranges, as follows: Montreal, $4,500; Quebec, $10,750; Bedford—that is near Halifax, and is the principal rifle range in Nova Scotia—$14,750; Victoria, $500. The putting in of a new wooden block floor in Quebec drill hall is estimated to cost $7,500; making centre armoury in drill hall, Kentville, N.S., $1,500. The balance is for heating apparatus in the following buildings: Stanley barracks, Toronto, $2,200; Fredericton, $6,700—at present this building is heated with fire-places and stoves, and a new heating plant will be installed—hospital, St. Johns, Que., $1,800; new lavatory and heating the same, Royal Military College, $2,000. Considerable saving will be effected in the expenditure for fuel by these changes. It is estimated that the saving in Stanley barracks will be $500; Fredericton, $800; hospital and married quarters, barracks, St. Johns, Que., $300 a year.

Mr. TAYLOR. I put a question on the paper, and I do not know whether it was answered to-day or not. But, I wish to ask the minister to whom he has given permission to erect buildings on the Barriefield common in Kingston? I notice that buildings have been erected there on government property.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I referred that question to the officers of my department, and received an answer that no permission had been given to any one. Since the hon. gentleman has called attention to the matter—this is the first I have heard of it—I will make immediate inquiry, and if I can get information will let hon. gentlemen have it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was there myself and saw the buildings. I presume that you, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Britton) are well aware of the fact that cottages had been erected on the common east of the hospital. I am satisfied that persons would not put up expensive cottages such as these without coming to some arrangement about the land. I am informed that they have leases for 99 years at a nominal sum. The item had better stand until we get the information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It has nothing to do with the subject brought up by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. TAYLOR. It has to do with military property, and I am speaking of the military property at Kingston. I had a question on the Order paper for several days and I want the information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I believe there are properties there belonging to the Interior Department as well as to the Militia Department. I referred the hon. gentleman's question to the proper officers, and I have given the answer as I received it. Since he has made his statement, I will refer that statement at once to the officers of my department and ask for an explanation, and will give him the answer as soon as I get it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Is the land in the city of Kingston?

Mr. TAYLOR. I presume it is within the city limits. I know the property as well as I know where I live myself. It belongs to the Department of Militia and not to the Department of the Interior. We all know that the military property extends for a mile of two below Kingston, but the spot I speak of is close to the city, just east of the hospital.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). I presume that the Minister of Militia is aware that Lunenburg Rifle Association have abandoned their old range in consequence of the danger caused by rifle firing there, and have selected a new one. The selection was made since I left home, but I can approve of it in every way as free from danger. The association have met and are making a request by letter, which I will send to the minister, for aid for the improvement of the range. I believe they are well entitled to it. We have some excellent shots, and we want to encourage them in every possible way. I would also ask the hon. minister if we can manage to get the new rifle for use in target practice? I think he will have no hesitation in acceding to that request.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the new rifle has been given out, in limited numbers at any rate, to meet the requirements of the battalions. As soon as the central armoury is established, the hon. gentleman knows, the commanding officer will have charge of the rifles. In the meantime, it is necessary for the care and preservation of the rifles to take them back in store, except a certain number left with each battalion. I will look up the rifle range to which he refers. There is a general vote for rifle ranges, out of which sums can be taken for such purposes as those to which he refers. I will have the matter looked into.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if he has given any authority to build on the property in Kingston, controlled by his department. I rather thought, from what he said, that he might have given this authority, imagining that the property was under his control?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My only recollection of dealing with any land in Kingston is, that we gave authority to either the city of Kingston or the school board to fence a piece of ordnance land for the purpose of protecting it from trespasses and improving its appearance. We were informed that it would likely become an eyesore if this was not done, and that it would be fenced and used as a park. They were allowed to do this, but they have the property as tenants at will. I would not give that as an official answer, because before that is done the records ought to be searched. When the question of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) was put on the paper. I called the attention of the head clerk of the Ordnance branch of it, and he informed me that it must be under the Militia Department. It may be that a more careful search would disclose the fact that he was mistaken, but that can be verified in the morning. I am satisfied, however, that it belongs to the Militia Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would call the attention of the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), to what the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), has said. It would be well if the whole of that property around Barriefield common were fenced and improved. The river is encroaching on the land, simply for lack of some slight improvements to the property. My hon. friend from Kingston knows just as well as I do that by going out of the city on the steamer, you can glance at the fortifications, and see that they are melting down for want of some little repairs. The frost has got in behind the wall and hove it out. It certainly should have had some repairs within the last two or three years. It is in a very dilapidated state, and a disgrace to the Militia Department of this country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will look into that.

The PRIME MINISTER. The subject the hon. gentleman has brought up has no connection with the vote that is now before the committee. I understand the minister undertakes to search again and give his answer to-morrow morning.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is a vote for military property.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can say just now that no lease has been given for ninety-nine years, and in any of the leases given by the Militia Department, we specially provided that no building should be constructed, and if buildings have been constructed there on leased ground, the construction is contrary to the terms of the lease.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the hon. member for Kingston aware that buildings are being erected there?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes, I am. Leases have been granted on property below the old hospital property, which I should think any one who knows the property well, would say is an advantage rather than a disadvantage to the properties, both as to the caretaking and as to the appearance of the locality. I know also that persons who have leased, built these cottages at their own risk entirely. The government has a right to take back the property at any time on demand, and all the lessees know perfectly well that they are taking their own chances and building at their own risk. Before the recent leases were made at all, there was a person, whose name I have forgotten, who assigned his lease and it went into the possession of a man named Galloway. That is the first cottage, so far as I know, that was put up on the ground below the hospital. But since then there have been leases made of pieces of land below that place and below the old hospital, and persons having these leases have taken the risk of putting up inexpensive cottages or buildings, which they occupy for a little while during the hot weather.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could give the information the minister is expected to give as to the leases and the terms?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will get the information tomorrow.

It being Six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in committee.)

Gratuity to Mrs. T. J. Benbow, equivalent to two months' wages of her husband..	$76 25
Gratuity to family of R. Roussell, Quebec, of two months' wages .....	62 00

Mr. BRITTON. In connection with this item I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia if there is any rule in regard to wages where a person dies in the service. Take the case of the engineer of the Royal Military College, who lately died, or any such case as that. Is the payment of his salary only to continue until the end of the month or is there any further pay granted?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Unless they are officials employed in the civil service we have no power except by a vote of parliament to give any gratuity. That is the reason why these amounts are put in here. One of these men was employed at the drill shed in Ottawa and he lost his life through the burning of a hotel in Montreal. The other was the caretaker of the cavalry barracks in Quebec. I do not think the rule would apply to the engineer of the Royal Military College.

Mr. BRITTON. Do I understand that the pay stops on the very day of death?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, at the end of the month.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the government not power to do this without a special vote?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not think so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only in the case of those who are in the civil service.

Monuments for battlefields .....	$3,000
----------------------------------	---------

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I move that the word 'revote' be inserted in the item.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HAGGART. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is for monuments at Stoney Creek. It was voted last year.

War in South Africa—Halifax provisional garrison .....	$350,000
--	-----------

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have already had a vote in the supplementary estimates for last year, which was explained, similar to this, of $150,000 for the four months to the 30th of June last. This is for the present year, and it is to provide for the maintenance of 1,000 men at Halifax.

Mr. HAGGART. What does it cost a year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This will be the cost for the year, $350,000. The cost per man, except for heating and clothing, simply for feeding the men, is 13 8-10 of a cent per day.

Mr. SPROULE. As I understand it, this is for garrisoning Halifax for the next year? Have we not always had to expend something for troops there?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, the hon. gentleman knows that we offered the Imperial authorities to relieve the infantry regiment they had there in order that it might go to South Africa. I do not know how long it will continue.

Bonus to be paid to the following officials on account of extra work in connection with South African contingents: B. Sulte, E. B. Holt, P. Weatherbe, G. Guy, P. Clarke, F. E. Knight, E. E. Lemieux, L. Foley, G. S. Maunsell, F. Beard, S. R. Tooley, $100 each; F. X. Lambert, W. H. Aumond, T. C. Larose, F. E. P. Aldrich, W. J. Davidson, N. Casault, E. Verrault, J. Courtman, E. A. Waterson, $50 each. These sums to be chargeable to the fund provided for expenses of troops serving in South Africa.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice in connection with this vote that there are a number of items for extra services performed by certain officials.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is really not a vote. It is really asking authority to pay gratuities to certain members of the civil service in the Militia Department out of the vote of $2,000,000. There is no amount carried out there. We were able to pay certain extra amounts to the outside service, but the Auditor General refused to pay any of those in the inside service without a special vote of parliament, so I have asked parliament to vote $100 to each of a certain number of clerks, and $50 to certain others on account of extra work which they did, working day and night on holidays and Sundays, in some cases during the time that we were despatching the contingents to South Africa.

Mr. HENDERSON. A question of extra pay came up this morning in regard to certain other officials and I do not see the justice of paying one set of men for extra services and refusing it to another. I think these men are sufficiently well paid, and if they had a little more work to do in connection with the service they are very well paid without calling on parliament to give them an extra $50 or $100 especially when the government are so much opposed to the payment of other men who are serving the country, and who are performing extra services. Either we must have no extras at all, or all cases must be put upon the same basis. I think we had better leave this item over until we learn what the government are going to do in reference to the case we had before us this morning.

Mr. SPROULE. It occurs to me that you should have the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' in this item.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I beg to move that these words be inserted in this item.

Amendment agreed to.

Intercolonial Railway—To increase facilities along the line ..... $112,800

Mr. SPROULE. I see there are a number of items here. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee long, but I would like to say something on these before they pass. I have watched with a good deal of interest the proposals that have been made from time to time, particularly last year, to expend money upon capital account in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, and it seems to me that they are more than liberal—I was almost going to say that they were extravagant. I find that we voted last year, $4,421,303 to be spent on capital account in addition to what is spent on revenue account. This year it is proposed to expend $2,974,249, provided we vote what is proposed here in the estimates, making for the two years $7,195,552. I would like the people of Ontario especially to take note of this because I am of opinion that they will not endorse it. I think it is a great injustice to them, that in addition to the fair and equitable distribution of any money that is voted for railway subsidies, and we had a pretty large vote last year and a fairly large one this year, amounting to $3,600,000, which is usually distributed in some kind of ratio between the different provinces, the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec get their share of that vote, but in addition to that we are spending and we spent last year $7,195,000 in Quebec and the maritime provinces, principally in the maritime provinces. To my mind, this is a distinct injustice to Ontario and the western country where there will not be a dollar of this money spent. It has been said that these are very expensive operations that are being carried on down there. They seem to me to be unusually expensive, because the figures given in regard to the prices of property purchased or the cost of putting up a building, when we compare them with the cost of property, or of building in our country, or with the same kind of work, they seem to be extravagant. I do not think the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals can go into the province of Ontario and justify it, and I know the people of Ontario will be anything but satisfied when they notice from year to year the very large expenditures that are taking place on the Intercolonial Railway on capital account. This is one of the public works of Canada that is not paying any too well, but notwithstanding that we are putting money into it in large quantities every year. It may be that the hon. minister has been starving it for two or three years and that he has been spending a little extra money this and last year to make up for it and that this is the reason why we have been called upon to provide this very large sum. In my judgment it is an infeasible sum, and I want the people of Ontario, who pay the large share of this money, to understand that this heavy expenditure is going on, that it is out of all proportion to anything that has taken place in their own province, and that notwithstanding this heavy expenditure, the maritime provinces get their proportion as much of any expenditure that is made by the country by way of railway subsidies or public works as any other province gets. This is a special expenditure which takes place in the maritime provinces. The government have been lavish in their expenditures in various lines. The government have been spending money on wharfs by the dozen, and they have commenced public works, that, before they are completed, will mean an expenditure of very many millions of dollars in Canada if they are ever completed. As to the wisdom or unwisdom of commencing these works I am not going to say at the present time. So far as we know many of these public works will be practically money thrown away, and there will be no adequate return to the people for the outlay. But, you are, in addition to that, proposing this very large expenditure which, taking this year and last year together, makes $7,195,552 to be spent in Quebec and the maritime provinces, the maritime provinces principally, and which is going into capital account on the Intercolonial Railway. I do not think it is justifiable, and I want the people of Canada to know it and to take note of it, so that when the time comes that they may express their opinions, that they may do so in regard to extravagances of this kind, as I think they will do in regard to the extravagances of the government in many other lines.

Mr. McALISTER. Mr. Chairman, I cannot agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) in regard to the expenditures made on the Intercolonial Railway. True, there are very large expenditures made from time to time, but, expenditures judicially made on the Intercolonial Railway are, perhaps, the best expenditure that can be made by the Dominion of Canada with a view of the development of the whole country. I have heard it stated here that the Intercolonial Railway is managed in the interests of the maritime provinces. I deny that. The Intercolonial Railway is a national highway, managed and operated for the whole people of the Dominion; for the people of the west as well as for the people of the east. No doubt large expenditures are made on the Intercolonial Railway from year to year, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) seems to forget the fact that large expenditures are made on the canals from year to year, and the maritime province members never complain.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not the same thing at all.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no comparison.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is identically the same thing.

Mr. McALISTER. It is exactly on a par, and it is time we should hear the last in this House of such sectional discussions as we sometimes do hear. It does not make any difference whether the money is spent on the Intercolonial Railway or on our canal system, or, whether it is spent in the maritime provinces or in Ontario, so long as it is economically spent, and so long as it is going to be beneficial to the Dominion at large. I would point out to hon. gentlemen that the sooner we stop criticising expenditures that are made in one province, simply because they are made in that province, the better it will be for the interests of the whole Dominion. If you take the Hansard and examine it from year to year, you will find that there is scarcely any criticism made by any member from the maritime provinces with regard to the expenditures made on our canals, or in the province of Ontario.

I wish now to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways to the present running arrangements on the Intercolonial Railway. When the Intercolonial Railway was extended to Montreal the train left that city in the evening about seven o'clock, and got to Halifax the next night. I never heard any objection to that time schedule, except perhaps it came from the city of Quebec. From the time the Drummond County road opened until last fall, the city of Quebec fought against that running arrangement, and they succeeded in bringing sufficient pressure to bear upon the government to change the time of the trains, and with the result that the present arrangement is about the most unsatisfactory to the Intercolonial Railway at large that could possibly be made. The maritime express now leaves Montreal about twelve o'clock mid-day and gets to Campbellton at 3.20 in the morning, a most unsatisfactory and inconvenient hour, and arrives at Moncton between eight and nine o'clock. The result is that the very finest scenery along the road cannot be viewed by the tourists. But this is not the only objection. Passengers arriving from the west at Montreal in the evening, rather than wait until twelve o'clock the next day, take the Canadian Pacific Railway short line, and get to Moncton some fourteen or sixteen hours earlier than if they went by the Intercolonial Railway. If you keep your present time table in force, passengers will therefore, not patronize the Intercolonial Railway. From every point of view the old time arrangement was much more beneficial to the road than the present one. There is another objection. A great many of the Toronto papers are taken in the maritime provinces, and under the old arrangement they would arrive there the morning after publication, but under the present arrangement they are a day later, and are practically valueless to the people because daily papers forty eight hours old are seldom read. The evening papers published in Montreal—the Star, Witness and Herald, used under the old arrangement to arrive at their destination the next day after publication, but now they are not distributed in the maritime provinces until twenty-four hours later. From a business point of view, as well as from the point of view of convenience of passengers, the present running time is against the interests of the Intercolonial Railway. Nearly every one now takes a daily paper, merchants, farmers and artisans, and under the present arrangement the papers coming from the west are too old to be of any use to them. I submit that the city of Quebec should not control the running of the Intercolonial Railway. It is a recognized principle that the lesser interest should give way to the greater, but in this case the reverse is the rule. The city of Quebec seems to have brought sufficient pressure to bear upon the government to induce them to change the Intercolonial Railway time against the interests of the whole of the maritime provinces. When this change of train time was made, the town council of the town of Campbellton, passed a resolution protesting against the change, and which was sent to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) on the 14th or 15th of February. He wrote to Mr. Verge, town clerk of the town of Campbellton in answer, as follows:

Dear Mr. Verge,—I have before me your communication of the 13th inst., inclosing a resolution passed at a recent meeting of the town council of Campbellton respecting the change of time for the through express from Montreal. It is always a matter of much difficulty to so arrange a through express as to accommodate all points along the line, and I am well aware that any change is attended with some discouraging consequences; but the present arrangement is only going to be temporary, and was necessitated by the impossibility to make satisfactory arrangements across the river between Lévis and Quebec. We have quite a considerable business with the city of Quebec, and during part of the winter, especially during January, February and March, the ferries decline to cross after six o'clock, which makes it necessary that all our passengers should leave the city of Quebec before that hour; and remain at Lévis for five or six hours to connect with our eastbound train, while persons who arrived by our westbound train have to remain all night at Lévis before they can make their crossing.

That is inadvertently an error, because the passengers arriving by the westbound train under the old arrangement got to Lévis about twelve o'clock noon, and from that letter it would appear that the city of Quebec was at a disadvantage to connect with trains up and down, whereas the westbound train always got in at the hour I have mentioned, and the passengers did not have to remain at Lévis.

I am afraid it will be impossible to return to the old time-table for a short period, and I would be glad if you would explain to the council the circumstances under which this temporary inconvenience to the citizens of Campbellton has occurred.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) ANDREW G. BLAIR.

From that it would appear that the present arrangement was only to be temporary, whereas under the new time table, which came into effect about June 23, or 25, the time has continued pretty much as it was before. In fact, it is worse, because under the former arrangement the train going east reached Campbellton at 2.4 a.m., whereas it now reaches it at 3.20, and the train coming up formerly arrived at 3.00, whereas it now arrives at 4.20—a most inconvenient hour. I find by the time table that the scenery from Montreal to Lévis and a short distance below is portrayed in glowing terms. I have nothing to say against that; the scenery is very fine; but nothing is said about the scenery from Bic down to the Lower Restigouche, which is certainly the finest and most picturesque on the Intercolonial Railway. There are many gentlemen here who have travelled over that line, and I think they will agree with me that the finest scenery on the whole Intercolonial Railway is that down through the Metapedia Valley along the Restigouche River and skirting the Bay of Chaleurs until you reach the lower end of the county of Restigouche. That is not all. The county of Restigouche, which I have the honour to represent, is served, so far as train arrangements are concerned, in the very worst possible way. I have referred to the through express going east at 3.20 and coming west at 4.20; but there is a local mixed accommodation train running from Campbellton to Moncton, and from Moncton to Campbellton, that from Campbellton South leaves Campbellton at five o'clock in the morning, a very inconvenient hour. So far as the whole county of Restigouche is concerned, this train is of very little service, because it reaches the lower end of the county at too early an hour. Returning from Moncton it reaches Campbellton at 8.20 in the evening and the town of Dalhousie a few minutes earlier. The St. John and Moncton papers all come by that train, and as it arrives after the business places are closed, the postmaster, who has no assistant, has to keep the post office open for the convenience of the people an hour or so after the time for closing. The mails are carried from the station to the post office, a distance of about half a mile, and by the time they reach the office and are sorted it is nine o'clock, if the train is on time. If the train is behind time, as is often the case in winter, there are no mails delivered that night. I am told that the time between Moncton and Campbellton could be made two hours less. The distance is 185 miles, and the time taken by the westbound train is 9 hours and 40 minutes and by the eastbound train 8 hours and 50 minutes, nearly one hour's difference. As that portion of the road is level, I do not know why it should take nearly an hour longer to come up than to go down. If the time is shortened two hours, and I am credibly informed that this could be done, and the train left Campbellton at seven o'clock instead of five o'clock, and arrived on its westward trip at seven o'clock instead of at 8.20, there would be very little complaint. As I said before, it is very unfair to the other sections of the Intercolonial Railway that they should be overlooked for the purpose of accommodating the city of Quebec. If we look at the revenue derived from these different places on the Intercolonial Railway from 1897 to 1899, we find that the trade of the city of Quebec is comparatively small compared with that of other places which I shall mention. I will take first Rimouski South, because it is the first place that is seriously affected by the present arrangement. The revenue derived from these different places in 1897 and 1899 respectively has been as follows:

	1897.	1899.	Increase.
Rimouski.. .. .	$14,000	$16,000	$ 2,000
St. Flavie .. . . .	9,000	13,000	4,000
Little Metis .. . . .	8,100	14,700	3,600
Metapedia .. . . .	9,000	23,350	14,350
Campbellton .. . . .	50,000	57,000	7,000
Newcastle .. . . .	41,000	45,000	4,000
Chatham Junction .. . . .	77,000	96,000	19,000
Kent Junction .. . . .	12,000	18,000	6,000
Quebec .. . . .	22,286	23,123	837

These figures show that the city of Quebec is the last place along the Intercolonial Railway that should find fault or endeavour to get the time changed to suit its convenience. The revenue from the town of Campbellton is more than double what it is from the city of Quebec, and instead of increasing $837 from 1897 to 1899 it has increased $7,000. We know very well, as the hon. minister says in his letter, that the Intercolonial Railway cannot be run so as to suit all localities. Some will be inconvenienced by any arrangement that is made; but the great object should be to so manage the Intercolonial Railway as to accommodate the greatest numbers and the greatest interests involved; and I take it that from a traffic point of view the present arrangement is the most detrimental to the Intercolonial Railway that could possibly be adopted, apart from inconveniencing the larger section of the road. If reports be true the Minister of Railways should take some particular interests in the county of Restigouche and endeavour to accommodate it in some way.

I do not say that the Minister of Railways himself is altogether to blame, but the government has adopted the very worst running time possible for the county of Restigouche. I hope that the hon. gentleman will take this matter into his favourable consideration, and see that some slight change is made by which these complaints may be removed. There is certainly every reason for complaint on the part of the people in this section of the country. I do not bring up this matter at all for the purpose of fault-finding, but because I feel very keenly the injustice done that county which I have the honour to represent, and not only that county but all that section of country, and in addition the whole of the Intercolonial Railway. I hope the hon. minister will take this matter into consideration and have some change made, by which the county of Restigouche will have fair accommodation.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no fault to find with either the manner or, in a general way, the matter of my hon. friend's criticism. But I can assure him that he is entirely in error in the views he has expressed, that the present time-table on the Intercolonial Railway is due to representations emanating from the city of Quebec. My hon. friend very properly referred to the letter I had written to the municipality of his city, in which I stated that the arrangements made last winter were due to the conditions which prevailed at Lévis in connection with the traffic across to Quebec, and at the same time said that the arrangement would be temporary. That was the view I entertained when that letter was written. It was not because the city or the people of Quebec had called upon us to make the arrangement we did, as to running time that we made that arrangement, but because we were compelled to give them connection, and we could not, except at a very enormous cost, avoid changing the hour of leaving Montreal, and there were considerations at the other end of the line which made it desirable that a change should take place. My hon. friend must not, therefore, infer that we were pressed by the city of Quebec, either to make this change, or to continue it when made. When the time came for considering the running arrangements for the season opening this spring, the traffic officers of the Intercolonial Railway, one and all, from the general manager down, concurred in the opinion that it would be very much in the interests of the railway service that we should make our hour for leaving Montreal in the morning or before noon, and not revert to the old time table which had governed during the last season. Had we done the latter, one of the results that would have followed would have been this: We would have been compelled to keep the passengers, who in considerable numbers, are using the Intercolonial Railway to reach Cape Breton, at Sydney and North Sydney, at Truro for many hours, and they would have been thrown over so as not to arrive at Sydney and North Sydney to connect with the Newfoundland steamship line until the next day. It is impossible, as the hon. gentleman admits, to make your arrangements for a line of railway, such as the Intercolonial Railway, extending a large territory, when running through trains, so as to convenience intermediate points along the line. Your paramount consideration must be the through traffic, and the convenience of the people at intermediate points must be subordinated to what the traffic officers and general manager of the road conceive to be in its true interest, so far as regard the time of leaving and reaching the terminus of the system. There is no doubt at all in the mind of the officers of the road—those to whom I would have to look for advice—that the service has been very much more profitable, and the results more advantageous, under the present time-table, than they would be if we were to change it. I am told by the general manager, and the reports seem to indicate, that there is a very large amount of through traffic all the way from Montreal to Cape Breton, it cannot be expected that we should sacrifice that through traffic, and throw the system into disorder, for the purpose of having our express train pass local points at hours which would be entirely convenient for the people at those points. We do the best we can with the local service. That brings up the question of the local trade. I know that there is a good deal of complaint on the part of the people of the northern section of New Brunswick, not limited by any means to Campbellton, Restigouche or Dalhousie, but also from Bathurst and Newcastle, against the hours of leaving and arrival of our local trains. I myself have looked into the question with very great care to consider whether better time could not be made, but it has been found wholly impossible to cut short the hours between the terminal points on the local trains with any success. We have to-day to do a certain amount of shunting, to drop and receive a certain amount of light local traffic, freight as well as passengers, and we have to serve the interests of the public in that regard, all of which necessitates delay at these points, and we cannot give these localities a local train service in any shorter time than we are giving now.

Mr. McALISTER. What is the reason of the fifty minutes difference in the running time coming up and going down?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have to climb one of the longest grades of the whole line, when coming up from Campbellton to St. John, which makes that difference in the time. My hon. friend, of course, naturally and properly looks at this question from the local standpoint, but if he could put himself into the position of viewing it as a whole, he would be overborne by the considerations which have overborne me, and he would find that it will be impossible to do better than we have done. As respects this local train, I have had our general superintendent and general manager and men of the district conferring together. I have talked with them myself and urged them to make that local train faster. But they have assured me and proven to me that it is impossible. The only alternative would be to run another express, and my hon. friend knows the passenger traffic would not justify that. He will find that day after day that train goes out with one or two passengers from Campbellton, drops them along the line, and picks up others and drops them also. That traffic must be carried on by a mixed train under the circumstances, and you cannot make the time on a mixed train that the hon. gentleman thinks should be made. There has been every anxiety to meet the wishes of those who have complained. There is no reason why we should not effect the desired change if it can be done; there is no interest that we would naturally be so glad to serve as that of the travelling public, if it can be done without too serious a burden on the public generally. Such considerations as those the hon. gentleman presents have not been lightly passed over, but every point has been carefully considered. I am sorry that I cannot hold out much prospect, if any—for my part I cannot see any—of improving the local train service in the way he suggests.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say a word with regard to the Intercolonial Railway. This road has been a bone of contention ever since I came to parliament. Before the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie went out of power, he closed the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway, which, I think, was a proper thing to do. Unfortunately, hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, and they opened that capital account again, and commenced to charge up such items as snowsheds and that kind of thing. The result has been that we have been adding to this capital account year by year; until, I frankly confess, it is about time some change should be made. I agree with my hon.

Mr. BLAIR.

friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to some extent at least. The people of western Ontario have had to pay for all their accommodation, never receiving a dollar of Dominion money for that purpose in any form. But, in addition to paying for their own railway accommodation, they have to pay their share of the taxes for the construction and maintenance of the Intercolonial Railway, just the same as do those who live near enough to take advantage of the accommodation it affords. I pointed out this fact when I was on the other side of the House. The Minister of Railways says that the canals should be an offset to the Intercolonial Railway. But I do not see that. If the canals ran through the centre of Ontario and gave the same local accommodation to the people there that the Intercolonial Railway gives to the people of the maritime provinces, you might consider the expenditure on the canals an offset to that on the Intercolonial Railway. But the canals run around the border of Ontario, and more than that, they do not give the local accommodation to those who live along their banks that a railway does to the country it serves. The canals are a great transcontinental institution, and are of more advantage to the west and north-west than they are to Ontario. I do not say that the Intercolonial Railway is not, to some extent, an advantage to the western portion of this Dominion. It gives an outlet and convenient connection with the maritime provinces. But, as we have sunk such an enormous amount of money in the road, some steps should be taken to stop further expenditures on capital account. I supported the changes that have recently taken place in the Intercolonial Railway, in the hope that they might bring about a better condition of things in connection with the road than we have experienced in the past. Up to this time the country has lost eight and a half millions in working expenses over revenues and over and above the interest on the money that has been sunk in building the road. It may be said that there are no debentures on the road. That is true, but the country is in debt for the money spent in building the road. That has amounted to $60,000,000, which, at 3 per cent, would represent nearly two millions of dollars a year, in addition to the running expenses. I do not doubt that the Minister of Railways is doing the best he can. I believe, however, that he is subject to and fettered by political influences. No doubt his experience is that of hon. gentlemen opposite when in power. When I sat on that side of the House, should there be a snowstorm along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of men would want to be sent out to shovel snow and earn a few days' pay. I know that one gentleman, when hon. gentlemen were in power, wanted drains dug along the Intercolonial Railway in order to give some men in his constituency something to do. I hope there is a better day in store for the Intercolonial Railway. One of the best railroad men in Canada told me, five years ago, sitting in his private car, running between Toronto and Montreal, that Canada was sacrificing more than a million of dollars on the Intercolonial Railway simply because it was subject to political influences. I do not know whether it is the system of the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk to charge to capital such items as we charge to that account, but, if it is so, it only shows that we are doing on the Intercolonial Railway the same as is done on the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk. It makes very little difference, of course, whether sums are charged to capital account or working expenses—it all comes out of the same pocket. But, unfortunately, charging to capital account, we are heaping up an enormous capital in the road that you cannot say is in it. I am glad to know that the Intercolonial Railway is increasing in traffic to such an extent that more rolling stock is wanted. I do hope it has now got over the hill, and that the Intercolonial Railway will show better returns in the future. If it does not, and I am a member of this House, I will strongly urge that it be taken out of the hands of a political majority in parliament and put into the hands of a board who are completely removed from political influence, men in the position of judges or of the Auditor General, who will handle the road in the interest of the country and on business principles and take it from under men who are subject to political influence. We will have to do something with it if, in the near future, it does not show a better return than it has shown in the past. I merely rose to challenge the statement that the canals were a proper offset to the Intercolonial Railway. I contend they are not. I contend that the people of Ontario, for instance, where canals are built get nothing like the local conveniences that the people of the maritime provinces get from the Intercolonial Railway. The canals cost a lot of money. It is true, but they are transcontinental institutions and they do not give anything like the local advantages to the people along their banks that the Intercolonial Railway gives to the people in the lower provinces.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I scarcely believe, although we have just heard presented what has been described as the Ontario view, that there is prevailing in the province of Ontario any such opinion as has been expressed by my hon. friend with regard to the Intercolonial Railway system. I do not believe that any one who thoroughly understands the circumstances under which the Intercolonial Railway was built, and how it came to be a government railway, would for a moment urge that the government of this country ought not to do all that is necessary in order to maintain that railway in a proper and efficient working condition. I believe that the people of Ontario are broad enough to realize that the Intercolonial Railway was the condition upon which the maritime provinces went into confederation with the older provinces, and rescued the latter from the impossible position in which they found themselves prior to confederation.

Mr. COCHRANE. Oh.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend may say oh. He ought to read the history of his own province, and he will find that there was a complete deadlock between Ontario and Quebec, and it was nothing but the accretion of the maritime provinces that enabled them to overcome the difficulty and launch out upon a career of great prosperity. Now, Sir, I take no pleasure in dwelling upon the sectional phases of the question, I do not think there is any occasion to do so. I believe our public men are broad enough to regard this question as too important to be limited by any narrow sectional views. The maritime provinces are entitled to the fulfilment of the bond that the Intercolonial Railway should be efficiently maintained; and the moment my hon. friend is able to convince the maritime provinces that the great Dominion of Canada cannot carry out its obligations, why, then we will yield, we will submit, we will say we are not going to ask this Dominion to make sacrifices that it cannot bear up under, and therefore, we are not going to insist that the Intercolonial Railway should be maintained as a railway ought to be maintained, and particularly one which belongs to the government of the country. Now, I say it is a reasonable and fair proposition to put the expenditures of construction and maintenance on the one side as compared with the expenditures upon the Intercolonial Railway and its operation upon the other. Even though it were not a part of the solemn engagement that was entered into between the provinces at the time of the union, that this government railway should be constructed and maintained, even outside of that, it is a fair proposition to put the expenditure both for construction and maintenance on the one hand, upon this portion of the country, and the Intercolonial Railway expenditure on the other. I say that in my opinion the province of Ontario gets the best of the bargain by all odds. The province of Ontario came down to the maritime provinces and captured our manufacturing industries, almost the whole of the wholesale import trade of those provinces, as soon as the Intercolonial Railway was in a shape to do the business. We thought we were something of a manufacturing people, but they closed up our manufactures, they took trade away from our wholesale merchants, they sent their runners down there and carried away our business, and the Intercolonial Railway carried the traffic that they thus obtained. That is a fact, and everybody knows it. But, I am not complaining of that, that is one of the natural consequences of trade; but it is a complete answer to those who say that the Intercolonial Railway is wholly a maritime province institution, and that there are no substantial and important advantages which have been reaped by the upper provinces by reason of the construction of that line. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) laughs at it, but it is a fact all the same. You can appeal, if you like, to statistics, and they will bear out the statement that I make.

Now, I say that the propositions that have been made in the last few years with reference to expenditure upon the Intercolonial Railway have been as moderate and as reasonable as we could make them. We have had no desire to spend one dollar more than was necessary. But the government have been attacked by hon. gentlemen opposite because we had not understood the necessities that have arisen early enough to provide for them, and to provide the necessary improvements upon the line and the necessary increase of equipment. Do they attack us because there was no need of making these improvements upon the Intercolonial Railway? I do not think so; it is because they had a case; it is because there was reason in the ground they had taken that I could not answer them. It was true that we had traffic offering which we could not take, it was true that great industries were springing up which required to be well served by a railway, and we were not able to perform the service. It is because their complaints were well founded that I realized their gravity and was impressed by them, and I have not asked, nor has this government proposed to ask parliament for any larger expenditure than is imperatively necessary in order to put the railway upon a fair and efficient basis by which it will be able to take the business that is offering to it. The business is increasing wonderfully, and I think it will continue to increase, the output seems favourable. But, Sir, it would be a reproach to this country, and my hon. friend would be one of the first men to call attention to it, if, with great industries growing up, there should be no railway to accommodate that business, and if this government should say: We decline to undertake the necessary expenditure because there is a feeling in Ontario against making expenditures upon the Intercolonial Railway, there is a feeling in the country that the capital expenditure should be closed and that we should leave things as they are; you must stand there paralyzed because there is a feeling in one portion of Canada that there ought not to be further expenditure made to meet the demands of a great and prosperous section of the Dominion of Canada. What kind of an answer would that be? How much eclat would that government get by yielding to such a cry and putting it forward as an excuse for doing nothing, for standing by and refusing to move in the direction of developing one of the great properties of the country? Why, we would be held by every right thinking man to be utterly unworthy of the position which we occupy, we would be held to be too cowardly to be entrusted with the responsibilities of the government of this country. That is what would be said about us. Therefore, realizing the necessity of putting our road in the shape in which it can do business we have asked for these appropriations while I am happy to be able to say that I think we are approaching a period when we will not be called upon to ask parliament for any such grants hereafter, and while we have been able to meet what we felt were fair demands of an important section of this country, on the great government railway, we could not have got along with asking for any less sums than we have asked for in such appropriations.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is making an earnest effort to get his estimates through. Whenever there is the slightest criticism upon any particular part of them he gives us a speech. He has just made one of the most wonderful speeches that I have ever had the pleasure of listening to in this House. He actually claims that the maritime provinces have a right to these expenditures in some way or other to counterbalance the deprivation of manufacturing industries which they suffered on account of confederation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) think that is a fair statement?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman gave as one of the reasons why we should not complain of the expenditure down there, that the effect of confederation was that the manufacturing industries were shut out of the maritime provinces and conveyed to Ontario. He speaks as if we were obliged to counterbalance the expenditures for the canals by the expenditures upon the Intercolonial Railway when there is no necessity to counterbalance them at all. The hon. gentleman should justify his expenditures by the needs of the Intercolonial Railway. He has asked this parliament for expenditures on capital account, amounting to $7,100,000, added to which is the $1,400,000 that he paid for the Drummond County Railway, making $8,500,000 charged to capital account in two years. Just fancy any railway on the continent of America which has the amount of traffic that is done on this road with such a capital expenditure as that. The total receipts on the Canadian Pacific Railway are $30,000,000, while the receipts on the Intercolonial Railway are $3,500,000. I believe the hon. gentleman says that they will be increased this year to $4,000,000 or $4,500,000. What would the directors or stockholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway think if they were required to expend in two years on that road, for rolling stock and increased accommodation, stations and everything of that kind, an amount equal to $64,000,000? The thing is perfectly absurd, and I wonder that the hon. gentleman's colleagues in the government have consented to an enormous expenditure of this kind. The people of Canada, by the terms of confederation, agreed to build the Intercolonial Railway. We are not bound by the terms of confederation to agree to the enormous expenditures above the necessities of the road which are being made from year to year. We are willing that there should be no profit to the people of Canada out of the road. It is easy to make $1,000,000 a year, and to balance receipts and expenditures, but what we object to is that over and above the balance of receipts and expenditures there should be an expenditure out of the principal contributing province of the Dominion of $4,000,000 a year. There is no justification for it. There is no necessity on the Intercolonial Railway for any such expenditure as that. The rolling stock, and the road-bed on the Intercolonial Railway were of the best possible. They had a lavish amount of locomotives on the Intercolonial Railway, but the hon. minister, when he gets into power, must have a superior kind. The ordinary locomotive is not good enough for the hon. gentleman, but he must have locomotives of the largest size, and he must increase the expenditure for the purpose of building bridges to carry them and to increase the size of tunnels and everything else. The expenditure is entirely unjustifiable, and is out of all proportion to the requirements of the road. There are no people in Canada who begrudge the Intercolonial Railway to the people of the maritime provinces. We do not expect any return from it. We look upon it as a gift to the people of the maritime provinces, but we do not want, besides the gift we have given them, to be mulcted to the extent of $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 a year for the purpose—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A gift to the people?

Mr. HAGGART. The Intercolonial Railway is a gift by the people of Canada. This expenditure of $3,500,000 a year is almost useless, and there is no need on the road for it. What the people require from the management of the Intercolonial Railway is that you should put an end to the capital expenditure and see that both ends meet. If there is a small deficit of $250,000 or $500,000 a year, adding in capital account, the people of Canada will not begrudge it, but they do begrudge these enormous expenditures which are taking place at present on the road. I wish the hon. gentleman, upon this item for increased facilities, to give us the particulars. I see by the papers that there is a difficulty in regard to the arrangement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway. I believe that the hon. minister has put the papers on the Table in reference to putting an end to the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway. I saw it stated from St. John—I do not know as to the truth of it—that the gentleman who is managing the road, or the parties under him, refused to the Canadian Pacific Railway the right of getting freight at the different stations between St. John and the terminus of the road, that the Intercolonial insists that all freight should be booked at its stations along the line of travel which would bring the most return for it. I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway are likely to put an end to any agreement, and that they are not intending to take any traffic other than local traffic to St. John in future as they have been debarred from the return traffic. I am aware that the traffic they have been taking to St. John is of a kind which did not pay them very well, and that it would have paid them as well to have transferred it to the Grand Trunk Railway and sent it to Portland or to Boston, but the policy of this country was, just as much as possible, to keep the trade of our country for our own ports of St. John, Halifax or Quebec. I believe it is the wish of the people of Canada that the trade should be, if possible, forced to the old country, through our own ports, and it has been the policy of the country to grant favours to the railways which communicate with these ports, and to do everything that we possibly could for the purpose of having the traffic of the country taken from our own ports to the European ports. I would like to know what the arrangement is at present between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway, whether the agreement which was in existence in my time has been put an end to, and what are the prospects of a new agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not for a moment challenge the statement that a part of confederation was that the Intercolonial Railway should be built, but it never was part of the confederation that all the branches that have been built should be built. Hon. gentlemen opposite were responsible for all these branches.

Mr. HAGGART. I know it was not, but we have changed since then. We built the Pictou branch, the Oxford and New Glasgow branch, the St. Charles branch and the capital stock in that way was considerably increased. I admit that the extension of the road to the important city of Montreal, was a great advantage, and I congratulate the present Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) on moving in the direction of abolishing this system of everlastingly adding to the capital account.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McAlister) told us that the maritime province members never objected to expenditures made in the other provinces. I have a distinct recollection, that when the Canadian Pacific Railway was being built, a very pronounced kick came from the maritime provinces and from Quebec, and that they demanded a quid pro quo for the expenditure on that railway. As a result we gave Quebec a sum equal to $8,000,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. How?

Mr. SPROULE. We guaranteed the bonds on the North Shore road, and made other expenditures.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. You are altogether wrong.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What did New Brunswick get?

Mr. SPROULE. There was a consideration given to New Brunswick.

Mr. McALISTER. Turn up the Hansard, and tell us what member from New Brunswick opposed the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McAlister) was not here at the time.

Mr. McALISTER. But I could read at the time, and I know as much about it as you do.

Mr. SPROULE. I am right in saying there was a vigorous kick from the maritime provinces and from Quebec, and every one of them got compensation. If my memory is right—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman's memory serve him as respects New Brunswick?

Mr. SPROULE. It does.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What was the consideration there?

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot give it off-hand, but I can very easily turn it up and show the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then your memory is not serving you.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McAlister), says that the canals ought to be taken as an off-set against the Intercolonial Railway. The canals are an international scheme, intended to draw trade from the west, and they do not, to any great extent, benefit the people of Ontario.

Mr. McALISTER. What is the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. SPROULE. The Intercolonial Railway is in every sense of the word a colonization road.

Mr. McALISTER. Not at all.

Mr. SPROULE. It runs through the centre of your country, and your country is not very thickly settled yet. When Sir Leonard Tilley was here, I compared the freight rates on other roads with the freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway, and the Intercolonial rates were such that it was easy to understand why it did not pay. I do not doubt that if the Intercolonial Railway were in the hands of an independent and private company, it might be made self-sustaining. But I regret to say that, in my opinion, it is made a donkey-engine for every party in power in the maritime provinces for the time being. The hon. member (Mr. McAlister) said the Intercolonial Railway was one of the conditions of confederation, but as I understand it, the condition was that the road should be built, and afterwards it was to pay its way out of its earnings, and not be a drain on the country to the tune of $4,000,000 a year on capital account. I protest in the strongest language on behalf of the people of my province that this large expenditure should be carried on for the benefit of the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces; in addition to the large expenditures they get for harbours and rivers generally. The day must come when we will have to stop this expenditure on capital account. I am far from saying that the Intercolonial road is of no use to us, for I think it is of some little use. It was perhaps more use in the past than it will be in the future, but now we have two other railways to take our freight from the upper provinces to the seaboard. It is true the Intercolonial Railway is a competitor with them, but the Intercolonial Railway does not charge the people of Ontario any less rates than do the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you not think the Canadian Pacific Railway rates would be higher, if the Intercolonial Railway was not in competition with it?

Mr. SPROULE. That may possibly be, but I am not prepared to say.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I am prepared to say.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not noticed that the freight rates have been changed very much.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What road does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Mr. SPROULE. The Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows the Grand Trunk Railway does not go to the maritime provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. I know it reaches the sea at Portland, but it takes our products out of the country just the same. I believe that if you put the freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway on a paying basis, the road would be self-sustaining, but as the management is now, the Intercolonial Railway is a sink-hole into which we put millions and millions of dollars every year, and without any benefit to the people of the province of Ontario and of the west.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is not often that I disagree with my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), but I have to on this occasion. It is too late in the day to discuss the relative position of Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, in so far as confederation is concerned.

Mr. ELLIS. Hear, hear.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The fathers of confederation in their wisdom pledged themselves to build a railway that would bring the maritime provinces into intimate connection with the other portions of the Dominion, which have been considerably extended since. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) calls the Intercolonial Railway a colonization road, but every road that traverses a section of the country is a colonization road, in the sense that it tends to increase the population. Where does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) find his evidence for the statement, that Quebec got a compensation of $8,000,000 for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Where does my hon. friend find in the statistical history of this country that Quebec got $8,000,000 as compensation for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. SPROULE. I tell the hon. gentleman that the bonds of the North Shore Railway were selling at from 20 to 25 cents on the dollar and as soon as this government guaranteed them at 3 or 3½ per cent, they immediately jumped up to 50 cents and we are still paying the interest on these bonds.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I again ask the hon. gentleman to point out to this House when $8,000,000 were contributed by the government of Canada to the province of Quebec as compensation for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The history of that period is well known to those who happened to be in the House at that time. In anticipation of the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway the provincial government of Quebec put their hands into their pockets and built the line of railway to join the Pacific Railway at Ottawa and when the Pacific Railway was built, the question arose whether the province of Quebec, having expended a large amount of money in building that road, was going to be left without any compensation; and it was not $8,000,000 that was paid, but $4,500,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That was only a part of it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What does the hon. gentleman understand by a part? It is the amount of money Canada paid. The hon. gentleman says that the canal system going through Ontario is of no earthly use to Ontario. It is the great artery which takes the grain from the west to the seaboard.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman misrepresents me. I said that it was of no more use to Ontario than the other provinces.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am so comparatively unaccustomed to public speaking that my hon. friend's interruptions may interfere with my speech. If he will permit me, I state that the canal system of Canada is of great advantage to the whole of Canada, and I say moreover that the Intercolonial Railway is of enormous advantage to Canada. We talk of Imperialism, of uniting this country and making it strong and powerful. Does my hon. friend say for one moment that it would not be a disadvantage to us to have a road like the Intercolonial Railway that carries our goods in winter to Canadian ports instead of letting them go to Portland? My feelings and sympathy for the Grand Trunk Railway are well known. I look on that railway as being the pioneer road of this country, which did more at the time it was built to build up Canada than any other railroad; but I shall never admit that it is not an advantage to the whole of Canada to have a railway that takes our goods in winter to St. John or Halifax. How can the hon. gentleman deny that if it were not for the competition of the Intercolonial Railway, we would be at the mercy of any rates that the other railways might impose? And Sir, it is of no use disguising the fact: the building of the Intercolonial Railway was a part of the confederation; it was one of the conditions on which the maritime provinces came into the union. Of course, I am not discussing the management or the amount of money expended; but I am viewing the question from the historical side, and from the conditions which made the building of that road part and parcel of confederation.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to the Intercolonial nor to its being part and parcel of confederation. One condition was that that road was to be built. Let it be built to a finality at some time, and then let it be self-sustaining. I object to the bad management which makes it a sink-hole for more money. I am not objecting to the road nor saying that it is not valuable to the country; but I am objecting to constantly spending four or five hundred thousand dollars a year on capital account to keep up a road which the articles of confederation only bound us to complete once, after which it was to be maintained out of the earnings.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am very sorry this debate has taken the line it has, and I blame the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) for introducing provincial politics into a discussion like this. I can understand the hon. member for North Wellington, because, when he was on this side of the House, he was everlastingly pitching into that road and every other idea advanced by the Conservative party. He has hardly got out of that narrow gauge in which he has been running for a long time. I condemn the Minister of Railways as much as I do him for discussing provincial matters that existed at the time of confederation. He should be a bigger man than that. I represent an Ontario constituency, and I take the ground that as long as the money is properly expended, it is no matter to me where it is expended in this grand Dominion of ours. I am willing to sacrifice a little for the sake of building up a great nationality on this northern half of this continent. That is why I think we should not debate these questions from a provincial point of view. I was very much surprised to find a man who is Minister of Railways and Canals in a government of Canada narrowing his discussion down to ask what New Brunswick got out of this deal. I wonder if that is where the hon. gentleman stands when he is dealing with a large question like this affecting the whole Dominion of Canada. Why, he wants something for New Brunswick or Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was asking the question of the hon. gentleman who said my province had got something.

Mr. COCHRANE. You did get something. Anything that builds up the Dominion of Canada adds to all the provinces.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I agree with that. That is my theory.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, you did not talk it. That is why I was finding fault with you.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not talk anything else.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appeared to me that you were wanting to make a little political capital in New Brunswick on this question. I can submit to that in the hon. member for North Wellington; but when the Minister of Railways deals with the question in that spirit, I think it is beneath the dignity of the position he occupies. From my point of view, I do not condemn the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. I know something about the history of that road as well as the hon. gentleman, who told me I did not know what I was talking about; and I have read a little, although I have not dabbled in provincial politics as much as he has. I know something about the history of confederation, and I know that confederation was brought about for a grand purpose outside of anything pertaining to the old provinces of Canada. I believe that the Intercolonial Railway is for the benefit of the whole Dominion. But it is certainly run extravagantly. Had the government kept the rolling stock up as they should have done and charged the ordinary amount necessary to keep it up every year to running expenses, they would have been following a wise and business-like policy which any one could understand, but instead they allowed the rolling stock to run down, and then spent a large amount to renew it and have charged that amount to capital account. By this means they hope to hoodwink the people into believing that they are running the road at a profit. Not only have they bought more engines than are necessary for the proper equipment of the road, but they even went to the United States to get them, although engines better suited to the road could have been had in Canada. Why did they go to the States? There are circumstances in connection with all these things which cause the electorate to look on the course of the Minister of Railways with suspicion. There is only one reason for his going outside this country to buy engines, and that I am not going to repeat.

I am not a railroad man, and do not know as much about railway matters as the hon. minister has said, but I believe that I have brains enough to run the Intercolonial Railway without running it into debt as the hon. gentleman has done. If there is a deficit, the charging of it to capital account will not make it any the less, but of course, the object is to hoodwink the people into believing that there is not a deficit but a surplus. These hon. gentlemen, by charging a large proportion of the annual outlay to capital account instead of to running expenses, think they will get out of the hole they fell into when they took over the Drummond County road, and persuade the people that they have made a good bargain. But the people are not so easily deceived as these hon. gentlemen imagine.

I will never oppose an appropriation for that road when it is reasonable and necessary to keep it in a proper state of repair. As far as our canals are concerned and also the Intercolonial Railway, they are for the development of this great Dominion of ours, and I do not at all agree with those who would like to see our traffic diverted by the Grand Trunk Railway to Boston or any other United States port. On the contrary, I would be willing to sacrifice some thing to keep the trade of the country within our own channels. I do not view our canals in the same light as does the hon. Minister of Railways. The expenditure on these canals has not merely the effect of improving our waterways, but it has also the effect of regulating railway traffic. Were it not for the canals, our railway rates would be a great deal higher, but none the less do I believe that the railways are going to carry the bulk of the grain of this country to the sea. I want our canal system to be kept in proper repair if only for the sake of the effect they have on a railway route. Local politics should not influence a discussion of these large matters affecting the whole Dominion, but they should be viewed from a broad standpoint, and from that standpoint I am prepared to support every legitimate expenditure to keep our railways and canals in proper condition, while at the same time I shall oppose any extravagant outlay, and certainly I shall make every attempt to oppose this means of endeavouring to deceive the people by charging to capital account what should properly go against running expense.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). My hon. friend who has just spoken has very properly said that we should view this question from a Canadian standpoint, but it seems to me he has approached it altogether from the standpoint of a party critic who is bent on fault-finding with the administration. When I heard him speak disparagingly of the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, and express so confidently and with so much modesty his ability to produce better results if he had the management, it seemed to me that he lost sight of the object for which this road was built. As a matter of fact, the circumstances are such that you cannot run that road upon a business basis, because it was not built on business principles. No private corporation would have located that road as it has been. It was built, not as a business project, but as a great national highway, and to-day has realized that project, because it has become an imperial highway, being the only railway we have for the transportation of troops to the west. It was not built as a commercial enterprise to be run on business principles, but was constructed as part and parcel of the great project of confederation. The hon. the Minister of Railways has increased the expenditure in some lines, and I wish to express my approval of the course he has adopted with reference to one class of expenditure. He has increased the wages of a large number of employees, men of different lines of work, such as telegraphers and station agents. He has also increased the wages of the trackmen, and it is with reference to this particular class that I wish to address the House for a few moments. The trackmen on the Intercolonial Railway were paid from 1880 to 1895 at the rate of \$1.10 per day, and in 1895 their wages were raised to \$1.15. Up to 1895, the foremen trackmen were paid \$1.50, and after that date \$1.60. The increase in the wages of the trackmen in those years was, therefore, equal to  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, and that of the track foremen to  $6\frac{2}{3}$  per cent. But within the past year the hon. minister has increased the wages of the trackmen 5 cents a day, or as large an increase as was made to them in the whole eighteen years during which the Conservatives were in power.

Mr. TAYLOR. Coming on the elections.

Mr. LOGAN. No, the increase was made last year before there were any signs of elections. What I desire to impress on the hon. minister is the desirability of still further increasing the wages of the trackmen.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad to have the approval of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. Mullen). Now, the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is a private and soulless corporation, pays its trackmen a minimum wage of $1.25 per day in the country districts, and in the cities it pays them wages according to the higher cost of living. Whereas on the Intercolonial Railway the minimum wage of the trackmen is $1.20, and they are paid the same wages whether they live in country districts or in the cities and towns.

Mr. HAGGART. What are the wages paid to trackmen on the St. John division of the Canadian Pacific Railway between St. John and Montreal.

Mr. LOGAN. $1.25 per day.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought that we were paying as much, if not more.

Mr. LOGAN. No. I find that the Maine Central Railway, which is very near the Intercolonial Railway and which runs through a country where living expenses are about the same, have increased their trackmen's wages, foremen from $1.50 to $1.70 a day, and men from $1.20 to $1.30 per day.

An hon. MEMBER. How many men to a mile on the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. LOGAN. There are four men to the section—as on all railways, as I understand, in the eastern provinces at any rate. Up to a few years ago the trackmen on the Intercolonial Railway had certain privileges. They could take the hay that grew on the respective sections, but that now goes to the farmers on adjoining land. They were allowed to use the old ties for firewood, but the order now is very strict that these are not to be burned. They were formerly allowed a day's pay for walking the track on Sunday—

Mr. McALISTER. Are they not allowed something now ?

Mr. LOGAN. They were formerly allowed $1.10 for walking the track on Sundays. But they get now only 57½ cents, and, as two men generally walk the track, one covering half and the other covering half, that means that these men walk twelve miles on the Sabbath for 57½ cents.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Each man is allowed the amount you name and they only walk six miles each.

Mr. LOGAN. For the twelve miles of walking, only 57½ cents is allowed—this is what I understand from the statement made by the Trackmen's Association, which I have before me. They now get 57½ cents for work for which they were formerly paid $1.10. The track foremen on the eastern division of the Canadian Pacific Railway are paid $1.75 per day, whereas our men, as I am instructed, are only paid $1.60. From 1880 to 1895, track carpenters were paid, foremen, $2.50, which was cut down to $2, a decrease of 20 per cent ; and carpenters $1.60, which was cut down to $1.20, or a decrease of 25 per cent. The present Minister of Railways, as I say, has given an increase all round. What the trackmen contend is that all permanent employees under a trackmaster shall be granted a raise of 20 per cent on the wages paid when the present minister came into office, that they shall receive a full day's pay for walking the track on Sunday, and that permanent employees should be promoted according to seniority, where merit and other qualifications are equal. That would put the trackmen on the same footing with other permanent employees, which seems to be only fair. At this stage of the session, no one desires long speeches ; but I would like to impress upon the minister that this is a matter of supreme importance. These men are among the hardest-working men in Canada. The hotter the sun, the greater the snowstorm, the more attention must these men devote to the railway. Any man who goes over the Intercolonial Railway and who knows anything about a road-bed is bound to say, as I heard Mr. Hayes, the president of the Grand Trunk, say that the Intercolonial Railway road-bed is in first-class condition. For these reasons I urge that these wages be increased. Why, Sir, in the maritime provinces to-day, with the prosperity which exists in this country, thanks, in a large degree to this government—

Mr. TAYLOR. Providence.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, this government is providential—with the prosperity that exists, nearly every large employing concern has raised wages at least 10 per cent. In the mines of Nova Scotia, wages have been increased 10 per cent within the last two or three months. There is not a manufacturing concern in my own town, or, for that matter, in the three provinces, in which wages are not being increased all along the line. Why should these trackmen be asked to work along the road in stormy weather as well as fine, many of them working on Sunday as well as week days, and sometimes miles from their homes for the paltry, insignificant sum of $1.15 a day. If private concerns can raise the wages of their employees 10 per cent, the people's railway should increase its wages also. The people of this country are bound to demand that at least as good pay as is given by soulless corporations shall be given by the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. McALISTER. I agree with my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) with regard to the pay of the trackmen on the Intercolonial Railway. I know from personal knowledge the work that the trackmen have to do. As my hon. friend says they have to be out in stormy weather as well as fine and must work Sundays as well as week days. Under the present rate of wages, they are not able to save anything : in fact they cannot support themselves and their families at such wages without close economy. We know that the safety of life and property depends largely on the trackmen. If they are negligent, both life and property are imperilled. The sectionmen on the Intercolonial Railway, as far as I know them, are all faithful, honest men and do their work well. If they were paid adequately for their labour their work would be performed with greater cheerfulness, and, if possible, better than they perform it now. I certainly would support an increase of at least ten cents a day. I am sure that I cannot be charged with taking up time unnecessarily, so I may be allowed a word or two in answer to the Minister of Railways. That hon. gentleman says, in reply to my remarks, that there was not sufficient traffic on the Intercolonial Railway between Moncton and Campbellton to justify putting on another train. I agree with that. But could not the present mixed train be lightened so as to allow it to make better time ? Two regular freights go south from Campbellton and two regular freights come in from the south, in addition to the accommodation and specials. Would it not be possible to lighten the accommodation ? If that were done so as to enable it to make the time in two hours less than at present it would remove the cause of complaint that now exists. I believe that is the only way to get over the difficulty so far as local traffic is concerned. Therefore, it would do away with the necessity of putting on an extra train. That is the only possible way of getting out of the present difficulty and of making that local service satisfactory to the people. Now, the Minister of Railways and Canals made the remark that the people of Newcastle and Bathurst were complaining of the present time. I do not think they have any cause to complain of the present time so far as the local trains are concerned. The accommodation train going south gets to Newcastle about ten. The train arrives late both up and down, but we do not complain so far as local time is concerned. But any person looking at the time table will see that the county of Restigouche is the worst situated in the point of railway accommodation of any place on the whole Intercolonial Railway. I think by adopting that suggestion the accommodation could be improved to meet all requirements. I am satisfied if the time was reduced two hours each way there would be very little complaint so far as the local service is concerned. Now, as to the through express, may I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if the down express from Montreal makes sharp connection at Truro with the Cape Breton road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The question which the hon. gentleman asks me to consider has been considered, and I will be glad to look into it again and see whether there is any possibility of applying a remedy in the direction he proposes. Let me say one word with regard to the wages of the trackmen on the Intercolonial Railway. My hon. friend has evinced a great deal of interest in the condition of the trackmen and the wages that they are paid, and he is satisfied that they are paid much less wages than the Canadian Pacific Railway Company pay their men in New Brunswick territory. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have this condition of things to face: Through the state of Maine the wages are higher, and for the few miles they run between the boundary and St. John they cannot very well cut down the wages below what they are paying to their sectionmen in the state of Maine. But the hon. gentleman has forgotten this fact, they do not give their section men and their foremen employment all the year round, summer and winter, wet and dry; they drop off a portion of their section force when the summer season is over, and when the repair season has passed, and then they only pick up men as they may require them later, when snowstorms or other contingencies necessitate additional men. So, I think the position of the track men on the Intercolonial Railway is not at all unfavourable as compared with the position of trackmen on the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is another fact the hon. gentleman has forgotten. We are paying as high wages to our men as are being paid by the Grand Trunk Railway. The Grand Trunk Railway comes directly in touch with us, and we pay as good as they do. Of course if we could give additional wages to our men I would be very glad to do so; and it was without any strenuous pressure from the trackmen on the Intercolonial Railway that this increase was given. I looked into the thing, and I am satisfied that we can give them $1.20 a day, not in view of the election at all, but because we felt that they were entitled to it, that the improved business justified us in making some addition.

Mr. HAGGART. Now the arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the details in that estimate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may state to the hon. gentleman that we have no written arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway at all. Notices were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway under an agreement entered into with them by the government for the termination of the contract, and when the time came we had a good deal of discussion as to whether we could come to any new arrangement. Conferences between the officers of the two roads extended over a long period; but some times one was away and sometimes another was away. But it did not appear to be possible to come to any common understanding. We took the ground that as respects both the running of the trains between Halifax and St. John and St. John and Halifax, and as respects the transfer of the traffic originating on our road to the Canadian Pacific Railway at St. John, there were two conditions about which we had some reason to complain. We did not strenuously oppose the continuation of the system of passenger train connection with them, but we did feel that the business which grew up upon our own railway, and which the merchants and manufacturers along our line desired to forward to points west, properly to the Intercolonial Railway and did not belong to any other railway. I felt that to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to come into our territory and solicit our merchants to forward their freight to the nearest possible point at which they could get it, and hand it over to another railway to be carried to the terminus of our road, was really a perversion of all sound railway principle. I felt that having 1,400 miles of railway running into the city of Montreal, we should, as a matter of right, say to the people who are situated on our line: We will carry freight to Montreal as cheaply as any other road, but we will carry it over our own road. We are running trains and why should we hurry it on to get it over the Intercolonial Railway as fast as we could and get it into the charge of another railway so that they could bring it to the point which was the terminus of our own line? I could not see any business in that. There has been no disposition on the part of the government to make any change that would be inconvenient to the travelling public. We have offered every facility to the people all along the line from Halifax to St. John to buy their tickets and to take the route by the Canadian Pacific Railway to St. John if they desired to do so. We have not undertaken to say to the people who want to travel from Montreal; we will prevent you from going by the other railway and insist upon your going by ours. We leave the people to exercise their own discretion in that regard. As to the matter of freight we are perfectly convinced that it is sound policy to retain the custody of our own freight, and to hand it over at the destination whether it be in the city of Montreal, or even to the Canadian Pacific Railway at Ste. Rosalie. We will deliver it at any point to which it may be consigned. We are perfectly willing to give west bound freight to the Canadian Pacific Railway at Montreal or at Ste. Rosalie, or we are perfectly willing to deliver it to the people to whom it is consigned in Montreal. We do not consider that it is sound railway principle or practice for us to be content with 100 or 150, or 200 miles of a haul over our railway and let another railway make the profit of hauling the freight to Montreal when we have a railway which goes right into that city.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. gentleman give an explanation as to how this $112,800 is to be expended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The large part of this goes towards providing facilities and acquiring land in Sydney. We have to furnish them with all these requirements. Then we have to provide loading platforms, freight houses and stations, at various points along the line.

Mr. HAGGART. Just read off the cost and the details.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) asked the hon. minister some time ago for some information in regard to railway sidings in Cape Breton. Would he be good enough to give the cost of railway sidings in Cape Breton, if he has it there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have it, but I do not happen to have it here at this moment. I think it is in my room, and I can send for it. The details of this vote of $112,800 are:

Freight-house at St. Pierre .....	$ 400
Ice-house at Mulgrave .....	500
Extension to deep water at Sydney.....	6,213

To purchase tools and machinery..... $66,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to purchase:

Engine and machinery, &c., at Sydney..	$ 4,000
Small tools for workshops at Moncton, Halifax and Rivière du Loup.....	2,000
Machinery for shops at Moncton.....	60,000

Total .....

$66,000

Mr. HAGGART. Any particular machines?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. HAGGART. Just general machinery?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

To equip passenger cars with Pintsch's gas apparatus .....

$4,800

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to equip six sleeping cars on our through passenger trains with Pintsch gas apparatus, at a cost of $800 each.

To increase accommodation at Lévis ....

$110,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have already voted for 1899-1900, $80,000. The supplementary estimates for 1900-1901 amount to $110,000, making $190,000. There has been expended up to 31st March, 1900, $1,027.19, and the estimated expenditure from March 31 to June 30, 1900, is $79,912.81, making $80,000, and we will require $110,000 for this current year.

Mr. HAGGART. How does that compare with the expropriations on the St. Charles branch?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not costing us one-fiftieth part of what it cost on the St. Charles branch.

Additional sidings along the line.....

$105,500

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The details are as follows:

Sidings at Dartmouth .....	$ 7,500

	$105,500

To provide three travelling steam derricks .....

Mr. HAGGART. What are these for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is proposed to provide one at Truro, one at Moncton, and one at Rivière du Loup.

To provide a new steel bridge at Etchemin—Additional cost.....

Mr. HAGGART. What is the cost of that bridge altogether ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We put the value of the old iron box girder at $3,000, and we expect to put in a new steel bridge which will cost $25,000.

To increase accommodation at St. John (revote, $150,000) .....

Mr. HAGGART. Give us the whole cost of that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot give the hon. gentleman a statement as to what the whole cost will be. I gave that on the main estimates, and I have not the figures here, but I can tell him what these are.

Mr. HAGGART. Try and have them on concurrence. I want to know what the whole cost will be. The hon. minister and myself had a little controversy as to what the total expenditure was. Be sure and have it on concurrence.

To improve ferry service at Strait of Canso .....

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A ferry at the Strait of Canso is really the key to the situation of Cape Breton development.

Mr. HAGGART. Give the details, as we are as anxious to get away as you are.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no ferry service there at all. We have a barge there, and that barge is pulled over and back by a tug. The barge does not carry passenger trains at all and only four or five cars at a time. It is a very slow business as the barge has to be turned when you go over and when you come back, and it is a very serious impediment in the way of traffic. We are absolutely compelled to have a ferry upon which we can carry trains, go straight out from one slip and run straight into another slip. It is a vital thing and I believe it will provide us with a most excellent steam ferry for the purpose.

Intercolonial Railway—Rolling stock ....

Mr. SPROULE. What is this about ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I gave the details of this and you will find them in the Hansard.

Mr. HAGGART. Does that include the amount in the main estimates and all ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I showed the whole statement.

Mr. BERGERON. Where will these cars be built ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will build all we can in Canada. We have always done that.

Mr. BERGERON. We have extensive car works in Canada and they should be patronized.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We certainly are not going outside of Canada for anything we can get here.

Steel rails and fastenings .....

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have provided for 15,000 tons of 80-pound steel rails at $33 per ton, which was the selling price when we made the estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. Some years ago they were purchased at $23.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Last year before the rise in steel we bought them delivered at $20.

Mr. BERGERON. We voted in the railway subsidies the other day that all these rails should be bought in Canada. The government should set the good example. Will these rails be bought in Canada?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly. As soon as there are any to be had in Canada we will buy them by all means.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this the total cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the balance remaining after we deduct the price we are likely to receive for the old rails.

Mr. McLELLAN (P.E.I.). Is it the intention of the government to lay any steel rails in Prince Edward Island this year. Last year we expected this to be done but we were disappointed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We hope to put some of the 57-pound rails in Prince Edward Island, which we will replace by the 80-pound rails.

Mr. McALISTER. With regard to this vote for railway buildings, I would call the attention of the minister to the railway stations at Nash's Creek and Eel River crossing. I would ask him to improve the stations there so as to make them habitable.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will take that into consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. I notice a lot of revotes here. The government must have expected the elections to come on last year so that when the elections did not come they did not spend the money and so we have to vote it again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We made contracts for most of these last year, but the companies were so busy that they could not supply us with material.

Mr. BERGERON. It occurs to me that we vote this money too late in the season to have it expended in the fiscal year. If you had voted it two or three months ago it might be properly applied.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. minister (Mr. Blair) to the case of Mr. W. Moon, coal inspector between Halifax and Lévis, who was dismissed in 1896. The member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) also called the minister's attention to this. Mr. Moon got $80 a month and he was dismissed on the ground that he was not needed, but since then I have been informed that two men have been appointed at $50 a month each to do Mr. Moon's work. Now, what explanation has the minister for a transaction of that kind?

Mr. HAGGART.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The circumstances are entirely different from what they were then. We were under the impression that we could get along without the services of that inspector. I was advised by the officers that it would be a great advantage to dispense with the inspector, and to have the tank man or the foreman of a section in the neighbourhood keep an eye on the coal as it came to the road, and make a report. It was in the fall of 1896 or early in 1897 when that change took place. That continued for two or three years, until the increased business of the road led to an enormous increase in the coal consumption. This impressed the officers with the importance of having some inspection; and we are now getting a very largely increased quantity inspected for $100, and better done than it was formerly. From an economical point of view there is no reason to criticise the present arrangement as compared with the previous one.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the one man not do it for $80?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I think not. We are getting coal from Cape Breton and from all the mines in Pictou, as well as from the Cumberland mines.

Mr. SPROULE. What did you do with Mr. Moon? Did you give him another position or leave him out in the cold?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was there only temporarily.

Mr. SPROULE. I think some will be uncharitable enough to believe that it was from a desire to get a place for some one else. Has the hon. minister that answer with regard to sidings?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The sidings which were put down in Cape Breton as private sidings at the request of the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) cost $2,205. There were laid down private sidings at the request of other parties and at their cost, at Leitche's Creek, Orange Dale, Sydney siding, Leitche's Creek extension, Barrachois and Beaver Cove. These sidings were all put down on the same terms as the sidings for Mr. McDougall, the parties putting up a deposit of the amount required to cover the cost of construction. Then, we put down public sidings at River Denys, George's River, Ball's Creek and Sydney Forks.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you the cost of any of these?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood that what the hon. member for Cape Breton wished was the cost of the sidings which he had put down, and also what other sidings had been put down for private parties ; but I cannot give the details. The amounts deposited were : Leitch's Creek, $114 ; Orangedale, $105 ; Sydney Siding, $200 ; Leitch's Creek extension, $100 ; Barrachois, $200 ; Beaver Cove, $147.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, I understood that there was one put down by private individuals themselves ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so, because that is hardly usual. It may be so, but I have not any memorandum of such.

Trent Canal—Construction ..... $300,000

Mr. HAGGART. Where is the construction to be done this year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $105,000 of this is required towards the construction of the Kirkfield-Lake Simcoe section, and $150,000 towards the Trenton-Frankford section. The Kirkfield-Lake Simcoe section is 18 miles in length. It will have four guard gates, five lift-locks, and one hydraulic lift-lock. The estimated cost is $900,000. The Trenton-Frankford section is 8 miles in length. It will have two guard-gates, seven lift-locks and seven dams.

Rapide Plat Canal—Enlargement ..... $155,000

Mr. HAGGART. Will that finish it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Farran's Point Canal—Enlargement ..... $60,000

Mr. HAGGART. Will that finish it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Galops Canal—Enlargement (upper entrance) ..... $60,000

Mr. HAGGART. Will that finish it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the expectation.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal—Hugh Ryan & Co., award and interest thereon.... $283,739 68

Mr. SPROULE. How has this grown to such enormous proportions from what it was when it was presented to this House before ? I have a somewhat distinct recollection of going over that claim in the Public Accounts Committee, and at the figure at which it was then placed, it seemed to me that it was reasonable ; but, still, the parties were asking a good round figure. But this seems to be out of all proportion to what it was then.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This amount is by no means all that was claimed. The claim was referred to Mr. Walter Shanly and the award made by him. This amount comprises the sum which he adjudged was originally due.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When was the award made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On April 14, 1899. We brought in a vote last session for the amendment of the award.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is not brought down until this year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We brought it down last session but the hon. gentleman opposite asked that it should be allowed to stand.

Mr. HAGGRAT. Of course, at this late stage of the session I am not expected to go into a long argument on this case. I went into it fully last session, and protested against it.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to waste time, but I listened attentively to the examination in the Public Accounts Committee and tried to get at the information from the engineers and contractors. But comparing the work with the amount of the award, it seemed to be unreasonable. What rate of interest was allowed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We allowed the same rate as in all others, six per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. Compound interest ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the papers relating to this should be laid on the table.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were brought down last year. I laid on the table about half a ton of evidence taken before the arbitrator.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Is this the amount of the award ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it arranged when the arbitrator was appointed that his decision was to be accepted without appeal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The arbitrator was appointed under the contract. The contract provided that the chief engineer was to be the sole arbitrator ; but he objected to acting in that capacity, and stated his reasons to Council. He represented that he had been opposing and criticising these claims at every stage, and it did not seem to him reasonable that he should suddenly assume the position of arbitrator. Council regarded his reason as sufficient ; and, in choosing an officer, we decided that there was no man in Canada with the ability and experience to judge of these matters, and whose name would be so complete a guarantee that he would arrive at an honest and correct conclusion, as

Mr. Walter Shanly. We suggested that Mr. Shanly should be appointed and he was accepted by the other parties to the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the award put in writing?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How much did Mr. Ryan claim?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between four and five hundred thousand dollars.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to income—
Welland Canal—General repairs .....	$30,000
Outlet drainage at Port Colborne .....	6,000
To renew entrance piers, Port Colborne (revote) .....	20,000
	$56,000

What kind of general repairs are these?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The canals generally is in very bad condition, and we must put it into shape. We have been putting it off because we cannot put it off any longer.

Annapolis and Digby Railway—To pay O'Neill & Campbell interest .....

Mr. DAVIN. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is interest on a claim which has been recognized by the courts and judgment recovered for the amount, $39,559. Up to the time of payment of the judgment under the law, these parties are entitled to 4 per cent, and that is what we are allowing them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What contractors were they?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Contractors on what was called the Western Counties Railway, now the Dominion Atlantic.

Mr. HAGGART. This is interest on an award given them by the courts?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Ottawa River—Survey in view of improvement to navigation .....

Mr. HAGGART. I can only say I am very sorry to see no sum in the estimates for the building of the very important work, the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal.

Rideau Canal—Salaries and expenses.....

Mr. HAGGART. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That comprises the salary of the overseer, newly appointed, Mr. Daily at $1,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. The editor of the Kingston Freeman. What are to be his duties.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is an overseer on every canal. This is a very lengthy canal, and the business is increasing, and it is necessary to have an overseer.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Did he acquire all the necessary experience in a newspaper office?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Newspaper men are very quick to learn.

Mr. HAGGART. This is not using the old staff rightly. If it is necessary to have an overseer, which I doubt, he should have been selected from the staff. There is Mr. Ritchie, the lockmaster at Smith Falls, who is as efficient a man as you could get in the whole Dominion. How will he and the rest of the officers feel when you take a man out of a newspaper office and make him overseer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A newspaper man would be as likely to discharge the duties efficiently as the doctors of medicine, who were appointed superintendents of canals by the late government.

Mr. HAGGART. What doctor of medicine?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Dr. Hickey.

Mr. HAGGART. He was brought up on the canal.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did you ever have an overseer before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not that I am aware of; but there never has been so much business done as at present.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the canal pay expenses and leave a surplus?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The margin is not very considerable.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister knows there is a very large deficit, and he is loading the canal down with this political appointment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There used to be a superintendent and also an engineer, and now we have a superintending engineer, and also an overseer. We have the same number of officers, but called by different names.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is not Mr. Phillips attending to the duties that Mr. Wise formerly performed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt he is doing all that one person can do, but you cannot expect the one man to be everywhere.

Welland Canal—

Improvements to Port Colborne entrance (revote) ..... $300,000

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount of the expenditure you are going to make at Port Colborne.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $1,000,000.

Mr. HAGGART. How much is the Public Works Department going to spend?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As far as I have been able to gather from the engineer in my own department, there would be another $1,000,000 required for an efficient breakwater at Port Colborne.

Additional for steam communication during the season of 1900, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland ..... $2,500

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the usual service between the province of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Under the terms of union we are obliged to keep up that communication. The subject was discussed on the main estimates, and general approval was expressed of the enlargement of the subsidy by $2,500. The former subsidy was $10,000. Tenders were invited, and practically this was the only party that was willing to do the work, and he demanded $12,500. It is a very important service that keeps up connection between Prince Edward Island and the main land, with our own steamers.

Steam service from Annapolis and Kingsport to London, four trips at $750 each.. $3,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a new service to the western part of Nova Scotia on the Bay of Fundy, in the apple region, where, at certain seasons of the year, there is a great deal of business, and people complain of having to ship their apples a long distance. Some parties applied for a new service, and we gave that experimental subsidy of four trips.

Additional for steam service between Port Mulgrave and St. Peter's, extending twice a week to Irish Cove and Marble Mountain ..... $1,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a section of country which is entirely without railroads, and there is a desire to have boats touch several points along that region. The parties refused to perform the service for the previous sum, and we had to add $1,000 additional. We are paying $5,000 for the whole service.

A new lighthouse and fog-alarm building on a pier on Middle Ground, Lake Erie. $60,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). This is necessary owing to the destruction by fire this spring of the lighthouse on Pelee Island. As the amount is a large one, I thought it well to bring over a chart of the proposed lighthouse and the location where it is to be placed. The old lighthouse was built before confederation on Pelee Point, and owing to the quicksands and drifts there it was in a very awkward position. In the old times when it was built, as I am instructed by my deputy, the draught of vessels was very light and they could go right in near the lighthouse. The course they took is marked on the chart, the usual course for a dummy light. They had to avoid the shoal by taking a sharp turn. The original lighthouse cost $65,000, and we have expended on it altogether $135,000 since it was built. A petition came in from all the captains not to rebuild on the same place, but to build on Middle Ground, and the engineer reports strongly in favour of it.

Legal expenses of arbitration re seizures of sealing vessels by Russian cruisers in the North Pacific Ocean in 1892 (revote). $8,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is an arbitration which has been pending for some years, and a dispute as to the terms has been carried on. This last week the American government and the British government have succeeded in inducing the Russian government to come to terms; the terms of the arbitration have been agreed upon. This covers all the claims that are in dispute.

Construction of a steamer for fisheries and customs protection, British Columbia... $50,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For the last ten or twelve years the British Columbia members have been pressing for this steamer. The fisheries along the coast of British Columbia are very valuable, and north away to the straits complaints are being made that American fishermen are encroaching upon our Canadian fishery grounds. Col. Prior has been at me for some time, and four years ago the hon. members for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) Vancouver (Mr. McInnes), and Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock), came to me as a deputation and summed up all the petitions which had been presented to the department for years. I found that it was no use resisting the claims. In addition to the necessity for a vessel for the fishery protection service, there are complaints made that all along the coast there is a great deal of smuggling going on; and although I am made responsible for the expenditure, the Minister of Customs will get the benefit to a large extent, of this protection, because it will be used for fishery protection service and for customs protection.

Erection of two fish hatcheries in British Columbia and a combined salmon and lobster hatchery in Gaspé County..... $12,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The fish hatchery above

Westminster has worn out and we are building a new one further up the river at Sicamous, on the Fraser River. We are building a second one at the mouth of the Skeena, and another is being built down in Gaspé county near where the old one originally was built, but is worn out.

Mr. SPROULE. Since the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that the inland fisheries belong to the provinces, what do you do with the Ontario hatcheries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We keep them up. We have not started any more, and as to the question of starting any more, I would like the opinion of the House of Commons. But at present I am not ready to recommend any new ones.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the difference in the case of deep sea fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The receipts from British Columbia are many thousands in excess of the expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. That would not alter the principle at all. We either own them or we do not. If we do not own them, I do not see any reason why we should keep up these hatcheries. I can understand the difference between sea fisheries and inland fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The receipts from the fisheries in British Columbia come from the salmon fisheries. Gill-net licenses are issued from the mouth of Fraser River as far as twenty miles up. These licenses are issued by us, and the receipts are enormous. The object of these hatcheries in the Skeena and Fraser Rivers is to supplement nature in the supply of the Sockeye salmon which is the most valuable fishery on the Pacific coast.

Mr. SPROULE. If the policy is adopted of keeping up the hatcheries, I would like to inform the hon. minister, that there is an admirable place for a hatchery in Grey County, right close to the Georgian Bay, where there was a most valuable fishing ground, until it was fished out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that near any town?

Mr. SPROULE. It is near Thornbury on the Beaver River. I think there could not be a better place than that for one.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). The subject of the shore and deep sea fisheries of the maritime provinces, is a matter in which I have, and naturally so, a very deep interest, as the population of the county I have the honour to represent, is largely composed of fishermen, and the sea is the source whence parties residing on the shores of the Atlantic Coast—Nova Scotia in particular—very largely, and in some cases wholly have hitherto derived their living for themselves and their families. Considering that fishing is their living, it necessarily follows that the primary object and ambition of a fisherman would be that the fishing industry should be made a success, and as a very large amount of money or capital is invested by them in fishing property, it is the natural bent of my inclination, as well as my duty, as the representative of fisherman to watch every interest of theirs in this connection tending to its encouragement and advancement, and to guard, foster and protect their interests here by my expressions in parliament, to make the industry of fishing a success, as far as I am able. This industry I do not despair seeing made a success, if I can only get the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the government to speak and act with me, on the lines I have laid down as shown in letters from me, addressed to the minister, which is nothing more than a course other countries have pursued, and as a result followed with success, so far as the culture of food fishes is concerned.

The sea is the foster mother to the fisherman, as well as the soil is the foster mother to the farmer. The one is synonymous to the other. That is, the fisherman and farmer help to support each other, in short the fisherman gets the cash for his catch, and consequently has the needful wherewith to purchase the products from the farmer, to say nothing of the valuable sea product the farmer received from the sea in sea-weed and kelp, as a fertilizer for his soil. But I regret to say, notwithstanding my many appeals in connection with fish culture, and the scarcity of sea-weed and kelp from our shores, nothing has been done by way of inquiry as to the cause of the lack of crop in the kelp product. I can assure the hon. minister that unless something is done by way of inquiry as to the scarcity of food fishes, and the disappearance of kelp and sea-weed from our shores, the poor fishermen, for the want of a living will, of necessity, be compelled to leave their comfortable little homes, they have built for themselves at no little expense, and seek other channels that will offer more lucrative employment, which will be a serious loss to the place.

The government, through the Department of Agriculture, employed the most skilled minds, with a view of obtaining from the soil the choicest and most abundant crops, any by chemical analysis discovers the description of fertilizer best adapted and most suitable to the soil to which it is to be applied, to produce the richest description of crop, as well as the most abundant. But, is the same care and interest exercised by the Department of Marine and Fisheries as respects the sea, to produce similarly satisfactory results? I certainly have yet to see it. Why not establish a bureau of fisheries, as well as we have a bureau of agriculture, and court information as respects the advancement of the fisheries, and have committees appointed of members of the Commons, to invite evidence and solicit information from good practical and scientific men, and have the report of such evidence circulated throughout all the fishery districts, for the edification, improvement and practical advantage of fishermen, and the advancement of the fishery industry as a whole?

It is a well-known fact that there is a decrease in the supply of food-fish as the population increases, which is experienced everywhere in all fishing countries, where no effort is made in the direction of the culture of fish by the most improved methods. Hence the greater reason for practical measures being set on foot at once to supply this growing necessity.

We have a first-class scientist in the person of Professor Prince, the commissioner of fisheries. I know of no person better qualified than he, and all I ask is to give him a free hand on the lines I suggest, and as a consequence wonderful results, I feel assured, will follow. At present I am desirous of ascertaining the cause of the disappearance of the small food-fish, and the kelp and sea-weed from our shores, which is a serious loss to both fishermen and farmers, a matter that should be inquired into at the earliest possible moment, for whilst delay offers both fishermen and farmers suffer, and if delayed, or allowed to drift without seeking a remedy, shore fishermen will be driven to surrender their calling, desert their comfortable little cabin homes, upon which they have spent considerable of their hard-earned means, and seek some other more lucrative employment, away, perhaps, from the country. As I have written to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the subject referred to in detail, I will, with his permission, read the letters I have sent him, that they may appear in Hansard, with the view of the subject being read and studied over by fishermen and others interested in the subject, so that when an agent or commissioner is sent into the fishing districts by the department—which is greatly desired—to obtain information and evidence, they—the fishermen—will be the better prepared to give their views as to the cause of the disappearance of fish and seaweed, and the means that can be applied to restore this product. The product from the use of fish hatcheries, whether it be from floating incubators, which can be used anywhere on the coast, or stationary one, or the use of natural ponds, formed by the indentations of the coast, all have proved of infinite value in artificial fish culture and the propagation of fish. To illustrate the advantages, take a 12-in. female lobster, which will average by actual count 22,000 eggs, and allow 10 per cent loss in stripping, and another 10 per cent for imperfect eggs, and you have 18,000 cultivated lobsters from one single lobster. The same can be said of the cod fish in the cultivation of their young. The product really, if properly cared for, is infinitesimal, and I invite the government to give fish culture their very first and heartiest attention and support. Other countries have set an example, such as Norway, Sweden, Scotland, and even little Newfoundland with excellent results. Why should not we follow it up with all seriousness, on similar lines and as an investment the government could not appropriate money to a better purpose than the development of the shore and deep-sea fisheries.

I can recommend places in my county, Lunenburg, for the establishment of hatcheries, and no better can be found on the coast, such as the La Have Islands, at the mouth of the La Have River, Vogler's Cove, Blue and Black Rocks, Chester, and other places between Chester and Hubbert's Cove, all choice places, and well protected from the sea. The hatcheries should be placed at certain intervals all along the coast, and parties paid to care for them, which would be a small income to the parties in charge, and as a result of such methods, an immense return to the fishermen—all of which investments made by the government would be returned by the encouragement given to the fishermen, thus giving employment to them, enriching the waters of the coast, and giving an abundant supply of food product, all of which outlay by the government would be returned to the country in the abundant harvest of fish, when converted into money by the fishermen and spent in Canada—besides giving the fishermen the comforts of life to live from, which at present they are deprived of for the want of a catch, the waters being depleted of the finny and other tribes of food-fish. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, as also that of the minister, I will now read the letters:

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman's letters have not passed unnoticed, and I can assure him that I have referred them expressly to Commissioner Prince to make an investigation this summer, and Commissioner Prince, as soon as parliament is over, will go to the maritime provinces and make investigation into this matter. At this late stage of the session the hon. gentleman could, perhaps, dispense with reading the letters.

MR. KAULBACH. I want them to be placed on the Hansard, in order that I may be correctly understood by my constituents. The first letter is as follows:

House of Commons,
Ottawa, March 26, 1900.

Hon. Sir L. H. Davies,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir,—I desire to draw your attention and that of the government as well, to some very important facts respecting the fisheries on certain of our shore in Nova Scotia. Some years ago I brought to the notice of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the singular disappearance of the kelp and other sea weeds from the rocks and rocky bottoms along our coasts, principally on the southern sea line of the province. But I did not apprehend then the very serious results that have since accrued from the absence of these marine plants in the locality mentioned, and in consequence the absence of fish from our shores, once so plentiful. So marked are they that I no longer delay in making them known to you, in the hope that the matter may receive attention at once at your hands.

The evil—for it is proved such—extends many miles along the shores as well as seawards, and where a vast accumulation of sea plants once flourished in abundance, as a protective shelter and feeding-grounds for young fish, not a vestige is now to be seen; but where it grew the whole bottom is covered completely with a small white or grayish round-shelled mollusc, the technical name of which escapes my memory. Fishermen are unanimous in the belief, or rather the certainty, that fish will not remain where these white shell-fish cover the bottom, that the shore fishing is spoiled, and they suffer accordingly. This white or grayish round shell-fish, commonly called by the fishermen 'horeeggs,' it is conceded by fishermen, was the food of lobsters, that the lobster would crush the shell with her claws, and eat the meat or extract the meat from the aperture in the shell, but now, from the depletion of the lobsters on our shores, from the over-catch or otherwise, the disappearance of the sea weed, and the wonderfully rapid propagation of the referred to 'horeegg,' so-called, covering the rock bottom, both fish and sea plant are all but extinct. Besides this, the broken portions of kelp and bunch sea-weed, that at one time in quantities came ashore after rough weather, furnished a well known and excellent fertilizer for the farm lands lying near the coast. The occupants of these now loudly complain of the want of what was once the natural means of enriching the soil, and they now are powerless to remedy the matter.

With the disappearance of this marine vegetation in the localities I have mentioned, lobsters as well as other fish have been undoubtedly scarce as compared with former days, and I think the reason for it is not far to find. This kelp and sea-weed not only afforded suitable feeding-grounds for young fish, lobsters included, but it also furnished hiding places in which to escape from their enemies, and was also a valuable protection for them in rough weather, just as on land the grass and bushes and the forest furnish food, shelter and protection for the young of wild birds and animals.

In the sea-weed, too, among the crevices in the rocks, the lobster was said to deposit its spawn. Now the rocks are bare and white, and over the barren, shell-covered bottom not a particle of food exists.

The evil complained of has grown so extensive that it appears absolutely necessary a remedy should be sought and decided upon as soon as possible.

I would suggest here—with a view of arriving at the root of the matter—that an efficient officer be sent from your department to visit the coast affected as described, with instructions to obtain all the information possible from practical, intelligent fishermen and others residing there, eliciting from each his actual knowledge of the cause and effect in his own particular district, and such officer to report the same to your department, giving as well his own views on the subject. It appears to me that it is only by a carefully conducted inquiry of that kind, made during a personal visit by your delegated officer, that we can get at the bottom of the trouble, and discover, if possible, a remedy.

This much is quite certain, the shore fishing industry has suffered, and is still suffering, from the water being depleted of fish. The kelp and sea-weed have gone. Their loss to both fishermen and farmers is so serious that I feel it imperative upon me to ask at your hands attention to the foregoing statements.

The importance of the subject will, I hope, be accepted as my apology for pressing the matter upon you; but at the same time I must request you to have the kindness to give it your best, most serious and earliest consideration.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
C. E. KAULBACH, M.P.

The second letter with reference to the lobster culture, is as follows:

House of Commons,
Ottawa, April 20, 1900.

Hon. Sir L. H. Davies,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Sir,—When addressing you by letter some few days ago re the all-but-complete disappearance of fish, kelp and sea-weed from our shores on the Atlantic coast, once so plentiful, I omitted to advance the opinion of others as well as my own, that in order to restock our shores with fish, as referred to, lobsters in particular, that the most convenient, the least expensive, and the most successful method to employ, would be to establish fish hatcheries at short intervals along our shores, and to take advantage of certain indentations of our coast that may present themselves forming natural salt water ponds, with narrow entrances, where the tide ebbs and flows, wherein to deposit all the spawn lobsters when taken in traps by fishermen, where they can be protected, cared for and the spawn deposited by the mother lobster in the natural time.

Such hatcheries or ponds to be protected at the entrance or outlet to the sea by wire netting, in order to prevent fish of prey from entering and interfering with the spawn, and the mother lobster returned to her native element as soon as it would be thought prudent after it had deposited its eggs.

Advantage should be taken to have such fish ponds, or nurseries, as near packing establishments as possible, but in cases where such natural ponds do not exist, then to utilize the improved incubators, and the packers of such canning establishments to receive a benefit for every lobster deposited in them, as well as a certain sum for his attention and care of the same.

In cases where packers are too far removed from such ponds so appropriated, I would suggest a fisherman in the near vicinity to be employed to have charge and receive fish, take account of the number, and care for them, and to be paid a fair compensation for his services. It is generally conceded, and reasonably so, that a mother lobster when taken with eggs or spawn, is not fit for food. Still, nevertheless, such fish are in most cases stripped of their eggs and thrown in for the packers to can, whereby unwholesome food is canned, the unripe eggs destroyed, and worse than that, when thrust on the market, the consumers of such impure food incur the risk of being poisoned when partaking of such diet.

I will go further in expressing my views as respects the use of seed lobsters, that it is a loss to the fishermen when the mother fish is destroyed with the eggs, an injury to the packer so far as his reputation is concerned, and a discredit to Canada and its fair name, when it will permit such imprudence to be practised and does not provide a remedy.

Whereas, to adopt the system as suggested, the fisherman receives his pay for every seed lobster so deposited in such hatcheries, the regulations are not infringed on, the public are relieved of the risk of eating unwholesome food, and still better, the waters are recuperated from the product of such hatcheries, thereby furnishing a supply to the sea at all times equal to the catch, and still better, having the pleasing prospect, at no distant day, of realizing the advantages of such a system by seeing our shores formerly the sporting ground of such fish, restored to their original condition with a rich supply of fish to destroy the 'hore eggs' now covering the bottom, and the rocks, now covered with such objectionable matter, restored with a verdant bed of kelp and sea-weed, the feeding-ground and protection as well as shelter for the fish, thus satisfying the fisherman, having the waters well supplied with fish, and the farmer with a product of kelp and sea-weed, a fertilizer for his farm.

An expenditure in this direction, carried out on those lines, as suggested, means money well, prudently and profitably invested, and will, I feel assured, result in an abundant reward, and meet the favour of fishermen and farmers combined.

I may here suggest that when sending out an agent from your department to visit the coast waters of Nova Scotia to obtain evidence with regard to the disappearance of fish, kelp and sea-weed from our shores—and it is to be hoped you will send one instead of entrusting so important a matter to unskilled resident officials, who in most cases are incapable of eliciting evidence or reporting intelligently—he will be instructed also to make special inquiry as to the practicability of carrying out the suggestions as contained in this letter, and report on this subject as well as the other at the same time, both subjects being synonymous or akin to each other.

As the subject matter of this letter interests every fisherman and farmer of the maritime provinces, I sincerely trust you will concur in my suggestion and give this and the matter referred to in a previous letter, your serious and very earliest attention.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) C. E. KAULBACH, M.P.

The excretion of a saliva character now covering the bottom or feeding grounds for fish, and preventing the growth of sea vegetation, should be carefully inquired into.

Hoping that these letters and my remarks may carry with them the desired effect, I will not occupy the time of the House any longer.

Geological Survey—Boring operations in the North-west Territories ..... $3,309 51

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
I wish to strike out this item.

Mr. DAVIN. Why is this struck out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
It is a revote, and there are no operations to be carried on.

Mr. DAVIN. Did the minister intend to carry them on?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
No. This is in connection with the boring for oil. It is a revote of the balance of the appropriation of last year; but the accounts are all paid and there is nothing required.

Mr. DAVIN. When I saw this item, I was in hope that the minister was proposing to sink artesian wells in certain parts of the North-west Territories. I pressed this object many times on the attention of previous ministers. Only one artesian well was sunk, I think, and it was very successful. I am very sorry this is not a vote for that purpose.

Claims of John Harrison, of Owen Sound, for the value of land purchased by him and afterwards cancelled by the Department of Indian Affairs, and the value of his improvements thereon ..... $1,300

Mr. SPROULE. What is this?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
This claim arises in this way. Some years ago the department granted a privilege to a number of parties to cut timber on the Indian reserve on the Saugeen peninsula. This man, John Harrison, was among those who secured that privilege. The government, in compliance with the terms on which the parties were to be allowed to cut timber, cancelled the entries made for settlement claims. By mistake two claims owned by this man, on which settlement duties had been performed and for which he was therefore entitled to his patent, were cancelled along with the others. Upon examination, it did not appear that there was any possible way in which the government could resist his claim.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. gentleman sure that is the history of this case? My recollection is that a number of sawmill-owners were in the habit of cutting timber illegally in the Indian lands, and the department had an understanding with these people to charge them double dues. I know that Mr. John Harrison seriously objected to paying this and I was with him at the department one or twice about it, and considerable difference arose between him and the deputy. The land regulations provide for the taking up of homesteads and doing settlement duties, but it was ascertained that the land was so rocky that there would be no object in doing the settlement duty and the timber men and sawmill-owners contended that there was no need of doing the settlement duties. These duties were merely perfunctory operations and the lumbermen bought these claims all over and got up affidavits that the settlement duties were done. That has been going on for many years and I may say that these people claim that these sawmill-owners have been running the thing to suit themselves and to the disadvantage of the poor Indians. There must be some mistake about this.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no mistake about it. The claim came before me and I could not see that there was any defence. The one who performed the settlement duties was entitled to the patent, and the government, in cancelling all the other entries, cancelled these two by mistake.

Mr. SPROULE. How could John Harrison have made a claim for settlement when he was living in Owen Sound and not on the land?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The settlement duties had been performed by the person who lived on the land and John Harrison was a subsequent owner.

Salaries of extra clerks at head office, advertising, &c..... $3,000

Mr. DAVIN. Has the hon. gentleman brought down the information he promised me?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have the information here:

Ottawa, July 16, 1900.

Memorandum re Salaries of permanent lady clerks (third-class), Department of the Interior.

Since 1896 all the lady officials have received two statutory increases except Miss Barber and Miss May, who have received four.

Both Miss May and Miss Barber have been in the service for many years, Miss May having come in in 1883 and Miss Barber in 1885.

Three, Mrs. Bell, Mrs. Lee and Miss Yielding, have been ill for many months.

Three, Mrs. Ricard, Mrs. Ridley and Miss Shaw, are receiving respectively $847, $800 and $700, hold less important positions than the two clerks who have been granted increases this year, and are not capable of performing the same amount of work.

Two others, Miss Coleman and Miss Ellis, receiving $750 and $650, are of more recent appointment, and their work is not so important, and are now proportionately receiving a larger salary than Miss May or Miss Barber.

The following is a statement of the salaries of the permanent lady clerks in the Department of the Interior:

Miss Barber .....	$800
Miss Coleman .....	750
Miss Ellis .....	650
Miss May .....	850
Miss Ricard .....	847
Mrs. Ridley .....	800
Miss Shaw .....	700
Miss Yielding .....	847

Mrs. Lee is about leaving and Miss Yielding has been many months ill; Mrs. Bell has also been ill.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to say that the complaint was not made to me by any of the young ladies.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite understand.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. DAVIN. What is to be done under this item respecting protection of timber lands and tree culture?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Last year we took an appropriation for the purpose of carrying on a system of protecting forests and, to some degree, encouraging forestry in Canada. Of course, the timber lands of the Dominion are not so extensive and important, perhaps, as those of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick or British Columbia. Still, a great deal can be done in Manitoba and the North-west in the preservation of the forest already existing and in encouraging the planting of trees. Hon. members will recollect that an officer was appointed, a considerable discussion having taken place over the appointment last year. That officer has been actively engaged since his appointment in formulating plans for the carrying on of this work. As an initial step he has secured the formation of the Canadian Forestry Association, the first report of which is just now issued. I would commend it to the attention of members of the House. The association has for its object not only to do this work in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, but to encourage the movement for the protection and care of forests in Canada generally. In Manitoba and the North-west Territories and in the railway belt of British Columbia, where the timber was under the jurisdiction of the Dominion, it is our intention under this vote to appoint men whose business it will be to act as fire guardians and forest rangers and also to assist and encourage the planting of trees in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. The number we expect to appoint will be in the neighbourhood of seven or eight, for the purpose of getting the work started. My opinion is that nothing could be done that would be of greater importance to the welfare of Canada than to care for our forests. This is particularly vital in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. If we succeed in doing anything substantial, the money will be well expended.

North-west Mounted Police—Assistant Surgeon W. E. Thompson the difference between $1,000 and $1,200 per annum from July 1, 1898, to April 3, 1900. $351 67

Mr. DAVIN. In connection with the North-west Mounted Police, I wish to call attention to a return I moved for early in the session—a return relating to the supplies for the North-west Mounted Police. A great dossier, an immense collection of papers was brought down. I have gone carefully through them, but the letters I wished to have were not there. The orders of the House called for all the correspondence connected with the North-west Mounted Police supplies. The hon. minister (Mr. Sifton) was necessarily very much connected with the North-west, and as an admitted fact, I believe, he actually managed the North-west Mounted Police—

The PRIME MINISTER. Not in the North-west, but in the Yukon.

Mr. DAVIN. He had a good deal to do with the North-west Mounted Police too. The correspondence which took place between the Minister of the Interior and the officers of the North-west Mounted Police here do not appear in the correspondence. There was a letter written to the Minister of the Interior on the 22nd of August, 1889, by Mr. Walter Scott, inclosing a letter from Messrs. R. H. Williams & Son, asking that the police should take a quantity of tea that they had on hand. The minister has that letter from Walter Scott in his possession, recommending that this tea should be taken off the hands of Williams & Son and pointing out reasons to the minister why that course should be taken—because Mr. Williams was at that time inclined to join some independent persons in Regina who did not regard the Minister of the Interior with peculiar favour. Probably the hon. minister will be able to let us have that letter of Mr. Scott to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember anything about the letter. If any letters that passed were not brought down in the return, I presume they were marked 'confidential.' I could not bring down a letter from an outside individual marked 'confidential.'

Mr. DAVIN. This letter was inclosed in Mr. Scott's letter:

Glasgow House,
Regina, Assa., Aug. 21, 1899.

Walter Scott, Esq.,
Regina, Assa.

Dear Mr. Scott,—On account of your being so connected with the Dominion government from this section of the North-west Territories, I am taking the privilege of addressing you as follows. During the last year and up until last spring, in April, we have been supplying the North-west Mounted Police at this point and some of their other points, with tea. This tea has been pronounced and passed by officers to be the best they have ever had for the money. Now, sir, thinking that they would still continue to use the tea, we placed a very large order for the special brand which they use. The first consignment has just arrived, and the other consignments will still continue to come until our orders are filled. On looking over the schedule calling for tenders for the police supplies, we notice that they are not asking for tenders for their supply of tea this year.

Now, Mr. Scott, unless we can dispose of some of this tea to the police we will be dead stuck, as we have no other channel to place it except through our retail business, and it would take a considerable time to dispose of this quantity of tea that way. If you assist us by placing the matter before the department, or the proper purchaser for the police, you will greatly oblige us.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) R. H. WILLIAMS & SON.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who is Mr. Williams?

Mr. DAVIN. He is a prominent merchant in Regina, very active in the direction not peculiarly pleasant to myself, but, apart from that, a very good fellow. When that letter came into the possession of the Minister of the Interior he wrote a letter or had a letter written to Mr. White, and that letter has not come down.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If I wrote a letter to Mr. White, I do not remember the circumstances—it must be among the papers. If it is not there, that is pretty good proof that no such letter was ever written.

Mr. DAVIN. Did the hon. minister send for Mr. White?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) said I wrote a letter.

Mr. DAVIN. Did the hon. minister communicate with Mr. White? He must have communicated with him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman seems to see now that he was incorrect in saying I wrote a letter to Mr. White.

Mr. DAVIN. He sent for Mr. White.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) know what I did. Would the hon. gentleman expect that if I had had a conversation with Mr. White it would be in the return?

Mr. DAVIN. No, but I would expect that the hon. gentleman, who is very clever in these matters, would cover his tracks so that they would be very hard to find. What is the result of the negotiations which took place between the hon. gentleman and Mr. White? The result is that this tea was taken off the hands of Williams & Son, and it is palpable under these circumstances that no tenders were called for. The principle that should obtain in these matters was violated, and in fact a job was perpetrated. Will the hon. gentleman bring down to-morrow, before concurrence, Mr. Walter Scott's letter?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If it is not confidential I will bring it down.

Administration of justice in Yukon territory—Witness and jury fees in criminal trials, $7,000; law books, &c., and freight thereon, $2,000; living expenses of the sheriff of the Yukon territory and of the clerk of the Yukon territorial court, $1,200 each; total ..... $11,400

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is necessary to provide fees for witnesses, and also for juries in cases in which offences against the laws of Canada are tried. The sheriff and clerk are allowed living expenses with fixed salaries instead of being in possession of the advantages which men enjoy in the North-west Territories. They are receiving a salary, and the fees, instead of being paid over to them, are put to the credit of the Receiver General.

Expenses in connection with a commission appointed to investigate the Chinese and Japanese question ..... $10,000

Mr. SPROULE. I always thought that the last commission that sat on that question accumulated about all the information needed. It seems to me the only aim of appointing this commission is to stave off the question and make places for two or three friends for a few months to earn some money.

The PRIME MINISTER. For one matter, without mentioning the Chinese, Japanese immigration is a question which has to be dealt with on altogether different phases, and that alone will justify the commission.

Grant to the Interwestern Exhibition at Calgary ..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The people in the neighbourhood of Calgary have organized an association for the purpose of holding an exhibition for the western territories, but open to all parts of the west. In view of the fact that the Territorial government is not able to make a sufficient grant of this kind, the government have thought it would be reasonable to give them a small grant to assist them.

Schools in unorganized districts ..... $4,500

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The number of schools in the unorganized portions of the Territories is slowly increasing. I have here a list which shows that the total amount that would be required for the year is $6,200. In addition to the amount we took in the main estimates we require this additional amount. This vote is not under the government of the North-west Territories, but will be administered by the Lieutenant-Governor.

Rocky Mountain Park of Canada ..... $2,500

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The expenditure that has been incurred amounts to about $350 for the purchase of a small herd of elk to go into the park. Hon. gentlemen are aware that we are trying to make the park a little more attractive, with considerable success, and the number of visitors indicates that it is growing in favour as a place of resort. We have a herd of buffalo there, and we have purchased a small herd of elk. The amount for the purchase and transportation will be about $350. Then we require to add to the number of buffalo by getting two or three male buffalos from the north. We have let the contract to a hunter in the north to deliver a couple of them at the park. We do not know exactly how much it will cost, and we could not make an absolute bargain with him. The man is the best we could find for that purpose.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Commission appointed to deal with half-breed claims in the North-west Territories..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Two parties are there now who have gone in for the purpose of issuing scrip certificates to the half-breeds. One of these parties went out by way of Alberta and the other through Assiniboia and Saskatchewan, north of the Qu'Appelle. The total expenditure for the year is estimated at $18,100. We have already estimated in the main and supplementary estimates for last year $8,100.

Mr. DAVIN. Who are the commissioners?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McKenna is chairman of one of the bodies. The commissioners are Mr. McKenna, Major Walker, of Calgary, Mr. Cote, of the Department of the Interior, and Mr. Samuel McLeod, of Prince Albert. One of the officers of the department is with each body.

Mr. DAVIN. Is that Mr. McLeod the local member?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think it is.

Mr. DAVIN. That is the entire commission?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. Mr. Cote and Mr. McLeod take one route, and Mr. McKenna and Major Walker the other, because it would be absolutely impossible for one party to cover the whole territory in a season.

Interest on amounts contributed to the Superannuation Fund by E. Kelly, from Dec. 1, 1888, to Dec. 31, 1896, $47.89; and by J. B. Ryan, from Sept 28, 1886, to Dec. 31, $75.02 ..... $122 91

Mr. SPROULE. What is the explanation of this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These were two officials who were dismissed for political partisanship. When we proposed to give them their superannuation money, with interest, the Auditor General found that they never had any right to be on the superannuation list, and he declined to give them interest. It is only reasonable to give them interest, and I am afraid that from the way the item is drawn they will not be able to get interest up to the time they should get it.

Towards the expenses of visit of American Institute of Mining Engineers to Canada, $2,000

Mr. DAVIN. When will this take place?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In a month.

To make good to Caleb C. Carleton, of Souris, P.E.I., amount of duties paid by him to United States customs on fish and fish oil, recommended to be paid by commissioner appointed by Dominion government ..... $208 50

Mr. HAGGART. We voted enough to cover that claim last year

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is a little item due to Mr. Carlton which has been overlooked. Mr. Prowse brought it up in the Senate, and when we looked into the commissioner's report we found that it was due.

Printing plant—Webb perfecting press (revote)..... $19,000

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether a printing press already in the Bureau had to be discarded and another press substituted?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think we discarded one of the linotype machines, but not a press. This press was ordered last year from the Potter Company, of New York, but they were unable to deliver the press in time, and a revote is necessary.

Consolidation of the Dominion Statutes, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $20,000

Mr. SPROULE. When do you expect to have this work completed?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say, but I apprehend we will be able to get it through within two or three years.

Mr. SPROULE. Who are the parties appointed to do the work?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are no appointments yet. The last consolidation took six years, beginning in 1881 and ending in 1887.

Mr. COPP. What will be the probable cost of the consolidation of the statutes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is impossible to say what the cost will be, because it is the intention, so far as possible, to utilize the officials. The last consolidation was so outrageously expensive that we must prevent anything of that kind occurring again. The last consolidation cost $120,000. This consolidation should not cost more than $50,000.

Printing Dr. Rand's English-Micmac Dictionary (revote, $750) ..... $1,000

Mr. DAVIN. Who is Dr. Rand?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He was a celebrated Micmac missionary in the maritime provinces, who died and left his works in manuscript form.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have been partly printed, and this vote is asked upon the recommendation of the Library Committee.

Expenses under the Conciliation Act, 1900 ..... $10,000

Mr. DAVIN. We want to know what this is for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. First of all, there is the editor of the labour gazette, then, there will be a chief officer in charge of the conciliation board, and there will be some other expenses in connection with the development of the labour board. There is to be a labour board in connection with the department of some of the ministers, and there will be some expenses incurred. I was under the impression that the vote was $20,000, and I am disappointed that it is not. It is a very sad awakening.

Mr. SPROULE. How many will the labour board consist of?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will have to be developed.

Mr. SPROULE. Surely if the hon. minister has any idea in his head he ought to be able to say what he intends to do.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have given a little idea about what I intend to do.

Mr. SPROULE. The only idea he has given us is, that there is only $10,000 when he thinks there ought to be $20,000, and he is going to appoint an editor. Does he propose to buy printing plant for the gazette?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister say how many employees there will be in connection with this vote?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. I think we will begin something like this: You would have a chief officer to take charge of the department, and it would be his duty to be in touch with the conciliation boards. He might require a registrar. There will be a system of registration and some supervision of the establishment of boards throughout the country. In the event of a strike and attempt at conciliation, the chief officer might find it his duty to visit the seat of trouble, and there would be some expenses in connection with that.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman any idea of the salary he will pay to this officer?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not, I have a fair idea what it will cost for the editor.

Mr. SPROULE. How much?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Between $1,000 and $2,000.

Board of Customs—Additional amount required for Dominion appraisers and special officers of customs ..... $5,000

Mr. DAVIN. Among the list of customs officers given me by the minister, was one William Young, assistant officer at North Portal. May I ask the minister who recommended Young to him?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Young was known to myself to be a good officer. The railway companies require an officer there on account of the amount of business to look after the manifests and whether Mr. Young will be permanently there or not, I cannot say. This gentleman was living in the North-west or Manitoba at the time.

Mr. DAVIN. He used to be in the hon. gentleman's constituency.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He was in my own constituency and lived there.

Mr. DAVIN. I have here a letter from a former constituent of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson), and he wishes to have it imparted to the House, that the people of the community were very much surprised at learning that this Mr. Young had been appointed customs collector at North Portal.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He is not collector, he is an assistant officer.

Mr. DAVIN. The gentleman to whom I referred, writes me :

The people of this community were more than surprised last week to see a notice that a person named W. D. Young had been appointed a customs collector in Assiniboia. This person was raised in Paris, and was noted only as a useless ne'er-do-well, whom his immediate friends had tried in every way to assist, but all to no avail. He was a tailor, professedly, by trade, but a failure always because of idleness and want of application.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot endorse that.

Mr. DAVIN. I dare say not.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Who says that ?

Mr. DAVIN. I may perhaps give the name to the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I wish you would.

Mr. DAVIN. This letter continues :

At one time his expenses were paid out to British Columbia in the hope that he would there secure employment, but utter lack of ambition and laziness doomed him to failure there also, so he managed in some way to make his way back to Paris, where he was again a burden on his friends.

The only service he has rendered to any one was during the election of 1896, when he in some way became possessed of a copy of an old electioneering brochure which had done duty in North Wellington and other ridings, and with the assistance of two or three others, altered the 'Modern Chronicles' so as to apply to proprietors of the manufacturing establishments in Paris, the men who have brought to the town and retained whatever has been of prosperity and success. The most dastardly innuendoes were by this means directed against every one of these men and their families, the baseness of which can be judged by reading these 'Chronicles,' as you will see them in the 'Star-Transcript' newspaper of June 10 and 17, 1896. This was presumably done in the interest of the Hon. Wm. Paterson, the candidate of the Reform party, and so much indignation was aroused in consequence of the cowardly allusions to the female members of the families of our most respected citizens, that there was little wonder at the result when the state of the poll was announced.

Mr. PATERSON.

I believe the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) was beaten, and the appointment of Young shows his forgiving spirit. Here is a fellow that contrived at the minister's defeat by the way he helped him, and then the minister shows his forgiving spirit by rewarding Young with a job in the public service.

Young was ostracised and refused admission to the society of people who had long respected his family, and so uncomfortable did his residence here become that he was again shipped off, this time to a prairie farm in Manitoba. But as a reward for his supposed services at that election, his friend Bain, private secretary to the Hon. Mr. Paterson, who had himself gained no little notoriety as anonymous scribbler, has used his influence to secure Young a berth which will yield him a living. I can refer you to J. B. Henderson, of the Pennan Manufacturing Company, H. Stroud, manager of the Paris Windmill Company, and all other manufacturers in the town for corroboration.

The publication of the petty, malicious documents was only an evidence of the utter want of judgment and journalistic acumen on the part of the proprietors of the Grit newspaper, but it gave the fellow Young and his envious coadjutors to wound the feelings of a large number of ladies who had no means of protecting themselves from the coarse and cruel innuendoes of the miserable gang who in this cowardly way sought to accomplish their purpose.

It was stated at the time that Bain had signified his intention of using his influence to have Young placed on the government service roll, and it seems he has succeeded, to the chagrin of all who know the despicable character of the man. A glance at the files of the 'Star-Transcript' for June 10 and 17, 1896, will show you the kind of work which secures reward from the hon. Minister of Customs.

Now, that letter is quaint, I grant you. But it shows, and I think the answer of the minister shows, that really this man has been foisted into the public service, because some electioneering work was done in 1896 for the minister. In fact to quote the classical language of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor), it is another job.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it is very unfair to the hon. gentleman to put a letter like that upon Hansard. May I ask him to give me the name of the writer ?

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I do not think it is necessary to give the name.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You ought to.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think so.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think so. I never heard of the events mentioned in that letter. The writer speaks of my private secretary, John Bain. Ask Mr. Henderson, whose name is mentioned there, about Mr. Bain. He will not thank you for using his name as one who would calumniate Mr. Bain. Mr. Young I do not know personally. I never before heard of the statements mentioned in that letter ; and to spread a document like that on Hansard without giving the name of the writer is manifestly unfair. Mr. Bain will see what is said in Hansard, and if the hon. gentleman will not give the name, perhaps we shall be able to discover it in some way. I cannot see what the hon. gentleman is hinting at in the letter about traducing respectable females. I have no remembrance of anything of that kind. I have no remembrance of ever hearing of any unpleasantness. The remarks made with reference to Mr. Bain convince me that whoever has written that has written it in a spirit that is not at all commendable. As I said before, Mr. Bain did speak well of this man to me. He was living in Manitoba or the Territories at the time, and the railway company pressed for additional help at North Portal, and he was asked if he could go there as a temporary officer, and he went, because living near the place he was able to reach there quickly. I would like very much indeed if the hon. gentleman felt himself at liberty to mention the name of the writer, and when he read that letter and placed it on Hansard, I think he should have been at liberty to give the name. I think his own sense of fairness would suggest that to him.

Mr. DAVIN. There are two officers in North Portal?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I think there is only one.

Mr. DAVIN. There is A. C. Patterson, sub-collector, and William Young, assistant. Is it necessary to have two officers there?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. North Portal, as the hon. gentleman knows, is a point where there is a good deal of manifesting. Like Emerson, it is on the United States boundary, and it was only on the pressing request of the railway company for an officer in the interest of trade that this officer was sent to assist during the busy season. He may not have to be kept there for a great length of time, and one of the reasons why Mr. Young got the position was that he lived near there.

Mr. DAVIN. What qualification could the work of a tailor give to a man for the position of assistant customs officer?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know whether he was a tailor or what he was. When he took his place I think he was in a newspaper office, and I do not suppose the hon. gentleman will deny that he must have been a man of considerable intelligence.

Mr. DAVIN. I have seen men in newspaper offices who had not much intelligence.

Mr. SPROULE. This only shows the minister's gratitude to those who have been kind to him in election matters, and it seems to be not the only instance, because I have under my hand the name of another man whom he has been good enough, I believe, to appoint in the Customs Department as well. That is the celebrated Tom Lewis, of London, the bartender who managed Mr. Pritchett and kept him out of the way during the inquiry into the election frauds, and supplied him with money. He is put into the customs house at London. So it seems that there is a closer connection between these individuals and the minister down here than before. I notice, too, that the celebrated Con. O'Gorman has struck the capital. I am told that he has been brought down here by the Postmaster General to do some secret work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You are told so? Who told you so?

Mr. SPROULE. It is my business who told me so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You are telling an untruth if you say so. If you make the statement, it is untrue. I never heard of the man in my life.

Mr. SPROULE. I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister is within the rules of order or not?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the expression is in order.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL: If I made an unparliamentary statement, I withdraw it. What is the name—Con. O'Gorman?

Mr. SPROULE. I said Con. O'Gorman.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never heard of such a man in my life, and the hon. gentleman need not stand up there and make any insinuations or slanders.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister may reserve his temper for another time. He is not going to deter me from saying what I want to say nor make me back down. I said I was informed, and I say so still, and I do not allow the Postmaster General nor any other man to make me take back my word.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You are stating what is untrue.

Mr. SPROULE. I said I was told.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Give the name of your author.

Mr. SPROULE. I will not give the name of my author. It is my own business, and not the Postmaster General's; and there is no need of any such display of temper, because I can tell the hon. gentleman a good deal more than he would like to hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Give the name of your author.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite within my rights in this House and within the rules of debate, and I am not going to be put down by the Postmaster General nor any body else.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You cannot give an authority for your statement.

Mr. SPROULE. I said that if it was so it was in keeping with the recompense that was given to Tom Lewis when he was put into the London custom-house. I said I was informed, and if the Postmaster General had not been quite so impatient he would have heard me out and not let himself into the blunder he has committed by trying to contradict me, and so deliberately and grossly violating the amenities of debate in this House, that he was obliged to take back what he said.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). Perhaps the gentleman who thinks so much of rewarding political supporters for wrong-doing has referred to that matter by reason of a letter which appeared in the Globe of Saturday. It is not a nameless letter, either, but a letter signed by a well-known man, J. W. Holmes, M.P.P. for Haldimand County. It is an open letter addressed to Mr. Whitney. In it the writer refers explicitly to some things that were done in 1891; and perhaps it is on account of this letter that we have had this attempt tonight to show that some wrong was done by Liberals in appointing their friends to office. This letter is written in consequence of charges made by Mr. Whitney, when Mr. Holmes was not present, in regard to switching ballots, and matters of that kind, which are the stock-in-trade of the opposition whenever there is a picnic or a political gathering. I will read a small portion of this letter:

Or, if you had looked one half-mile to the north, when you were speaking at Hagersville, and had asked the Hon. Dr. Montague who owned that land, he would have informed you that it was the Indian reserve.

He could further have told you that at the general election held in 1891 Henry J. Ince, a supporter of his, was deputy returning officer in that reserve, and that one Moses, an Indian, poll clerk. By a strange coincidence Henry J. Ince, who lived in Oneida, two or three miles from the reserve polling place, left his home the night previous to the election and went to the polling place, the residence of an Indian, and stayed there all night, apparently to be on hand whenever the poll might open; but by the law it was provided that it should open at nine a.m.

Clocks and Watches Gained.

By some strange accident the watch of John Moblo gained an hour. Augustus Almas, of Hagersville, and Joseph McCloy, also supporters of Dr. Montague, were on hand at the poll at eight o'clock a.m. The clock in the polling place mysteriously gained an hour, and through the day the hands pointed an hour ahead of the striking arrangement. For instance, when the clock struck eleven strokes, the hour hand was at twelve.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This discussion is entirely out of order, both what has been said previously and what has now been said, but I suppose the House will allow the hon. gentleman to conclude his remarks.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand you to rule, Sir, that when your attention has been called to the fact that the hon. member is out of order, and you rule that he is out of order, you will allow him to go on.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) alluded to some one appointed to the customs service, and insinuated that his appointment was due to political purposes. Whether any one of the names the hon. gentleman mentioned is in the service or not, I cannot tell, but no appointment has been made except on the recommendation of those whom any one occupying my position would naturally consult in the matter. My hon. friend from Kingston in reply is reading an article from the Globe newspaper to show there are men who secured their position in the Customs Department service for political services rendered Dr. Montague. If the hon. member for East Grey was in order, so was my hon. friend.

Mr. DAVIN. We do not say that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was in order. The Chairman says he was out of order, and that the hon. member for Kingston is also out of order, and I ask him to enforce his ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am bound by the ruling I have just given, though I am somewhat surprised that the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who was the one that raised the irregular discussion, should now press his point of order.

Mr. DAVIN. I insist, Sir, upon your ruling being enforced.

Mr. BRITTON. The hon. gentleman read something that purported to be a letter reflecting on the Minister of Customs for some appointment he had made.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have to be guided by the rules of the House, and I have to rule that the discussion is out of order.

Mr. BRITTON. The hon. member for Assiniboia ought to be the last man to raise the point, because ever since this session began he has been continually violating the rules of the House by reading anonymous articles from newspapers, which were irrelevant to the matter in hand, and were purely the fictions of the imaginations of those who wrote them.

The committee rose and reported progress.

JUDGES OF THE PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Bill (No. 195) to amend the Act respecting the judges of the provincial courts, read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope the House will agree to sit a little longer that we may make some progress in concurrence. We will reserve any item that any hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. DAVIN. We would rather begin to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid we cannot get through to-morrow.

Mr. HAGGART. We will go on with concurrence to-morrow. We have hurried through these items in order to go home.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved that the House concur in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 132) to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. HAGGART. What are the amendments?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Striking out the 12th section, that is, with reference to the adoption of the Quebec procedure respecting Dominion railways.

Mr. HENDERSON. What effect would that have?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The striking out of this clause does not affect any other section of the Bill. It was inserted in order to avoid some consequences which, it was thought might result to one or two railways if there was not this power. However, they have chosen to strike it out, and I propose to accept the amendment.

Mr. HAGGART. All right.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We might take up the unfinished resolution on the paper.

Mr. HAGGART. What is it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That relating to government contracts.

Mr. HAGGART. No; we cannot go on with that to-night. We will get all through to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What will be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This resolution and concurrence.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. (Tuesday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 17, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to draw to the attention of the right hon. First Minister and the House the following letter, which I have just received:

Gananoque, Ont., July 16, 1900.

Dear Sir,—The oarsmen of this neighbourhood consider that they have a substantial grievance against the authorities of the country in the non-enforcement of the Alien Labour Law. Instances are occurring here of the bringing in of oarsmen from the American side to row fishing parties who are stopping here and fishing in Canadian waters, the result being that we who have to provide and maintain expensive outfits are left idle, and without the means of earning our livelihood. This is all the more unsatisfactory when we find the American authorities opposite us strictly enforcing the Alien Labour Act on the American side of the line, in the interests of their own citizens. Only last week a number of Queen's College students were sent from the American side, and were not permitted to act as waiters. We would bespeak on our behalf a similar enforcement of the Act, which you were largely instrumental in having introduced, but which, it is to be regretted, is not, at any rate in this locality, attempted to be enforced.

Faithfully yours,

BENJAMIN LONGUEUIL,
FRANK LATTIMORE.

On behalf of the Gananoque Oarsmen.

OFFICIAL DEBATES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright). I see by the Order paper that the motion to resume the adjourned debate on the motion I submitted yesterday, on behalf of the Debates Committee, that this House do concur in the sixth report of the special committee appointed to supervise the official reports of the debates of the House during the present session, is at the end of the Order paper. This is a motion asking for the granting of an additional indemnity to the translators of the debates, and I would like to know from the right hon. Prime Minister whether there is any chance of having this matter brought up again this session for the consideration of the House. I would suggest that, perhaps, it would be better to dispose of it at once. The debate has taken place on the subject, and I think that hon. members have formed their opinion on it. I think it would also be proper for me to ask the right hon. gentleman whether the government has come to any conclusion as to the increase of the sessional indemnity which was discussed on the motion with reference to the French translators?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With regard to the motion of my hon. friend, I have no objection to ask the House to dispose of it as soon as we have taken concurrence. As regards the question of indemnity, that was settled some time ago, and is no longer before the House.

THE DEPUTY MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS.

Mr. C. A. GAUVREAU (Temiscouata). (Translation). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to call the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), to the treatment members of this House are receiving at the hands of the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Schreiber. Not only does that gentleman receive us with scant courtesy, when we call at his office, but he even has the audacity of wilfully deceiving us and, were I not afraid of going against the rules of parliament, I would not hesitate to say that he is an impudent liar.

As representatives of the people in this House, it is high time that we should know whether those public varlets to whom we pay large salaries, are going to be allowed to insult us and tell falsehoods, even in our official relations with them. There are limits to human endurance, and it is high time that the province of Quebec should know whether that state of affairs is going to continue any longer. Mr. Schreiber was to receive on the 13th instant, a telegram in connection with a very important business. I called at his office and inquired from him whether he had received that telegram, and the answer I got from him did not leave room for doubt; he had received nothing. On the 14th of July I called again in the morning, and again at twelve o'clock, and I got a similar answer. But, in the evening, I received a copy of that telegram, and I find that it was sent on the 13th. So, I had been deceived, and the truth had been kept concealed from me. Why? It was, no doubt, in order to favour some of their friends; for, under the new regime, these gentlemen, as in the past, obey their instincts, as I am afraid some of us may know later on from actual experience. I protest against that conduct on the part of some officials, and I hope the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), and the right hon. the Prime Minister, will give a lesson in civility and courteousness to those subalterns who believe they are almighty, and who do not know how to behave towards hon. members of this House who are not of their political stripe.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

The House proceeded to consider and concur in resolutions adopted in Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE.

Post Office Department ..... $202,455

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I desire to refer to the item of $685,447.85, which has been referred to in debate on the subject of post office expenditure. The Postmaster General, in his explanation, stated this was an item most improperly concealed. Well, Sir, that item was simply the cost of the mail service, and the other items being paid quarterly, only became due on June 30, and was paid out of the appropriation for the fiscal year commencing July 1, that is, out of the appropriation for the year in which the payments were made. The hon. gentleman understands my contention, that amount of $685,447 is simply the cost of the mail service, and the other items being paid out quarterly, only became due on June 30, and were paid out of an appropriation for the fiscal year commencing on July 1, that is, out of the appropriation for the year in which the payments were made. Now, my contention is, that that rule has been invariably followed, not only when I was Postmaster General, but by Sir Oliver Mowat, the Hon. D. A. McDonald, and the Hon. L. S. Huntington, predecessors of the Postmaster General, who have never taken any exception to this practice. I contend that the practice is correct, that is to say, that a payment should be brought to account during the fiscal year in which the service was rendered. If that were not so, there would be five quarters, the service would be performed only in the year when payment took place. Now, I would like to know from the hon. gentleman how he arranges it, whether he has discontinued the practice which he deemed so irregular, of including payment for mail and other services during the June quarter, in the accounts for the following fiscal year. Does the amount charged for mail service in his report for the year ended June 30, 1897, namely, $2,218,168.45, include the cost of mail service and other items for the quarter ended June 30, 1897?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It does.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I also wanted to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to another point. So far as my recollection goes, he promised to bring down a list of the contracts which had been cancelled when we were on the main estimates. It may have escaped his memory, but I recollect that he stated he would bring them down. Of course, I think it was a very arbitrary measure to put an end to a contract which had been entered into, according to law, and to refuse to allow the contractors to take an action against the government to find whether the contract had been properly cancelled. That is something that I think these people are entitled to; and if the government consider that they were quite right in cancelling the contracts, there can be no trouble whatever in allowing these people to take out an action and to establish their rights before the courts of justice of this country. These are the points which I wanted to bring before the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that I probably answered the chief questions that my hon. friend had in his mind, but in case my categorical reply did not quite make it clear what the practice has been, I would say that my instructions to the department are, on the close of the fiscal year, to ascertain all moneys owing for all services rendered up to June 30, and to have the accounts paid in time to have them carried into the expenditure of the department for the year closing on June 30. I understand from the department that my instructions have been fully carried out, and that the items in the public accounts showing the expenditure for each year since I took office, show the total cost of the services for that year.

Mr. HAGGART. That has always been the practice, every expenditure that has been incurred up to June 30, has been included in the accounts of the preceding year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. HAGGART. But the law required it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But it has been ignored.

Mr. HAGGART. Not that I am aware of, as Postmaster General, and from what I have heard since then; every amount, or expenditure, or obligation, of the preceding year, has been included in it. The statute requires it. Our returns were made according to law, and the law is no different now from what it was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The practice is, though.

Mr. HAGGART. It is only a question of payment. The charge against us was that we exceeded the appropriation by paying out of a subsequent year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The law applied in the past, as it does to-day, but in the case of our predecessors, the law was not lived up to, and when I took office, there were debts owing for services rendered up to June 30, amounting to $685,000, that should have been paid out of the appropriation for the fiscal year terminating June 30, and there should not have been any old accounts outstanding to be paid out of the appropriation for the succeeding year. These debts were accrued, the services rendered, and the money payable on June 30, and should have been paid and included in the expenditure for that fiscal year. That was not done in the case of my predecessors, and it has been done in my case.

Mr. HAGGART. That cannot be.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has been.

Mr. HAGGART. It was not done before.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will read the evidence confirmatory of my statement. I have here the report of W. H. Cross and W. F. Munro, the two auditors, and here is their statement upon the subject:

(a) At the beginning of the fiscal year 1895-6, as the result of the deficits of the previous years, there were outstanding liabilities of the department, in the shape of unpaid accounts, to the amount of $616,712.99.

(b) At the close of the fiscal year 1895-6, the liabilities of the department in excess of all parliamentary appropriations applicable thereto amounted to the sum of $685,447.03.

(c) Thus the liabilities had increased during the year 1895-6 to the extent of $68,734.04.

There you have the statement of the auditors, and it proves that it was not paid that year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman says that there is an amount of $685,447.03 which, as he says, was improperly concealed. Now, my contention is that the amount which was due at the end of June of that year, for the cost of the mail service, and the other items, are paid quarterly, these contracts are made quarterly, and hence they only became due on June 30.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to say that the ex-Minister of Finance himself, discussing this matter with me across the floor of the House, conceded without reservation, that the practice the hon. gentleman alludes to, and which he admitted had become the practice, was not a desirable one, was not a proper one, and he did not defend the practice.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is no concealment about it. That is what I am arguing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It does not appear on the record.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. All these mail contracts are payable quarterly. On June 30, or at the end of the fiscal year, the money was gone and the service had only been rendered in the year after the appropriation for the fiscal year was ended. It was the practice long before my time to pay these amounts out of the amount which was given to us for the next fiscal year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A bad practice, a vicious practice.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It may be a bad practice, but there is no concealment about it. We would have been paying for services which would not have been rendered. The hon. gentleman has not said anything about the practice in regard to flats that I was referring to. I hold that these men are entitled under the law to secure the issue of a fiat to them. It is a matter of opinion which it is quite proper to discuss; but, I think the law is as I have stated it. The Postmaster General, under certain circumstances, had the right to continue a contract that had been entered into without asking for tenders. The present hon. Postmaster General cancelled a very large number of these contracts. These contractors say that they have the same rights as every other British subject in Canada. They want to see whether, under the law, these contracts have been properly cancelled or not and the hon. gentleman refuses to give them a fiat to allow them to try their case before the courts. I think this is a very improper thing and that it should not be tolerated. Then we were discussing the main estimates. I asked particularly about bringing down the list of these contracts and the hon. gentleman stated that he would do so. That was the reason why we allowed the item to pass. It was understood that we could discuss it now.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no recollection about being asked for a list of the contracts, but I would say that there is a very extensive list in the supplementary report. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) was not present in the committee when we discussed the very point he now raises. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) brought it up, we discussed it in committee, and I told him that I intended to make a report to the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Mills) setting forth my views on the subject.

SIR ADOLPHE CARON. I was absent and it was because of my absence that the request was made that these items should be discussed later.

MR. HAGGART. On the question as to whether the book-keeping was properly done or not I cannot get into my head the distinction that the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) tries to draw. At the end of the year everything that was due was entered with the rest of the expenditure of the Post Office Department.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it was not; that is the trouble.

MR. HAGGART. I contend it was, because we fulfilled the requirements of the statute. Every amount that was due was entered in to the expenditure in the Post Office Department.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it was not.

MR. HAGGART. If you will look at the obligations in the statute you will see that they require it.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know they do.

MR. HAGGART. I say the statute was fully complied with in every respect. Then, the only question is whether the amount was voted before for the expenditure, or whether we got a fresh vote. That did not appear in the accounts at all, just the same, for instance, as when the Intercolonial Railway gets a vote of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 for expenditure on that road. The receipts from the Intercolonial Railway may be such as require a larger expenditure. That does not enter into the book-keeping at all. It makes no difference as to whether the amount is voted previously or voted afterwards. On the question of fiats that matter was threshed out when the Bill was passed, and you will notice that in the speech of Mr. Blake on the subject and in the answers which were given to him by the government the principle was laid down that the mere application by the party who thought he had a claim against the government was sufficient to secure the issue of the fiat as a matter of course. If a man thought he had a claim he had a right to have his claim tried. In England that is the principle which prevails. The answers given by the government when that Bill passed and the opinion of Mr. Blake agreed that every man had the right to have a fiat who had a claim against the Crown the same as he had a right to have a writ issued if he had a claim against an individual, and it was not to lie in the hands of the head of a department, or of the government, to refuse justice to a party who believed he had a right of action against the Crown. The Crown had no option. It was held when the Bill was passed that the option was not vested in the Crown at all of refusing a fiat, but that an application and the performance of the ordinary forms required preceding the issue of a writ were all that were necessary. What a farce it would be otherwise. What was the use of passing or amending the Act in reference to the issue of fiats if a minister may say that a party has no claim, or advises the Crown to issue the fiat?

MR. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, it always seemed to me to be an inherent right that the department, according to my interpretation of the law, could cancel a contract if it, at any time thought it could do so for the betterment of the service, and there is no doubt that on this ground and on this ground simply, if we are to believe the hon. Postmaster General, these contracts were cancelled. That seems to be generally accepted throughout the country, but it has always been a disputed question as to whether the government had or had not legally the right to cancel a contract that it had entered into. That this point should be put beyond doubt it seems to me most desirable for the government to grant a fiat and let these people try their case. It would only be trying one case, for whatever the decision of the court would be in that case, it would be a ruling for all of them, and therefore does not involve a large expenditure of money. But it establishes a precedent that would be a guide in the future. Very many of these people, who are unable to fight for their rights will believe that they were improperly and illegally dealt with, and I think the government would be consulting its best interests, as well as those of the department and those of the country, by granting this fiat and settling the question once for all. My opinion has always been, and in this I agree with the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), that the granting of a fiat was a mere matter of form, and that it was distinctly understood that when any one had a claim against the Crown and he wished to try that claim in law, as a matter of course, the government would grant a fiat without any trouble except the asking for it. In regard to the other question I have understood it in this way: Here are accounts coming in at the end of the fiscal year, but these accounts are not adjusted because they cannot be adjusted and paid up to June 30. If they are not paid before June 30, the appropriation lapses.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it does not.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is carried over.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It may be or it may not be.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the general principle with regard to all accounts, that when the fiscal year ends on June 30, then all expenditures to be paid under the appropriation, lapse.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). That is neither the law nor the practice.

Mr. SPROULE. It is done too often in this House for the minister to say it is neither the law nor the practice. We are told time and again by the ministers that the money voted was not paid within the fiscal year and that therefore it has to be revoted. The same principle applies to the Post Office Department. It is true that the appropriation for that purpose may have run out and it may have been necessary to pay these accounts out of the appropriation for the succeeding year, but that has been the custom followed for a long time and it does not seem to me that the practice is different today from what it was years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to direct the attention of the Postmaster General to the post office at Ste. Victoire. I have given the hon. gentleman notice that I would speak about this matter. If the information in my possession is true, that post office is in a bad state and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mullock) will have to watch it very closely. I need not say, of course, that the postmaster there is a man who is looked upon as one of the chiefs of the Liberal party in that parish, and whether it be true or not, people are under the impression that it is on account of his political proclivities and cleverness that the department is so very lenient towards him. It seems that letters remain at that office for many days and although they are claimed they are not delivered. As there is no money order office there, the people give to the son of the postmaster, who carries the mails, money letters to be put in the post office at Sorel, but this man does not deliver the letters. He uses the money, and when he feels that he can do so he sends back the money to the party to whom it is addressed. The postmaster does not stamp half the letters that pass through his office. Many letters have been lost at the office and although they have been claimed sometimes it is weeks and months before they have been found. Father Beaudry, the parish priest of Ste. Victoire, has had a long correspondence with Mr. Bain, post office inspector of Montreal, and with the Postmaster General concerning this office at Ste. Victoire. Affidavits were sent to the Postmaster General and an investigation demanded, but instead of trying to find out the truth of these accusations the Postmaster General granted a contract to the postmaster's son for four years to carry the mails at $270 per annum, when there was an offer made to do the work for $220, and good securities tendered. In 1898 Father Beaudry, cure of Ste. Victoire, sent the Postmaster General a petition signed by him and a great many parishioners, asking that a daily service be given between Ste. Victoire and Sorel instead of three times a week. In December, 1898, the department called for tenders for the daily service. In April, 1899, the daily service was established, maintained for five or six weeks, and then discontinued. A new demand was made for the daily service by the cure of the parish at Ste. Victoire in November, 1899, and on the 17th of November, 1899, the Postmaster General answered that it was impossible to establish a daily service as the price wanted, namely, $270 a year, was too high, considering the receipts from the office. Father Beaudry wrote to the minister that he could find a man who would give first-class securities who would carry the mail daily for $220 per year instead of $270, which was asked by Mr. Paulhus, the actual postmaster. On the 1st of February, 1900, complaint was made to the inspector of posts as to the manner in which the post office was kept. On the 20th February, 1900, with the idea, as it is hinted here, of blocking the investigation the Postmaster General, although he had said on the 17th of November that he could not establish a daily service because it was too dear; the Postmaster General then established a daily service. He gave to Paulhus fils a contract for four years to carry the mail between Ste. Victoire and Sorel for $270, notwithstanding that the cure offered him a reliable man to do the work for $220. A demand was made upon the Postmaster General asking who were the securities for Paulhus and that was refused. The idea there is, that the securities are his son and his son-in-law, both of whom are insolvent. This is the information which is given to me and which I now bring before the Postmaster General. I have here a copy of a letter which is addressed by Father Beaudry to the post office inspector at Montreal, which I will read :

Sainte Victoire, Feb. 1, 1900.

Mr. James William Bain,
Post Office Inspector, Montreal.

Sir,—I want to call your attention to the following facts. A letter addressed from St. Hyacinthe, P.Q., on October 18 last to a person residing at Ste. Victoire, county of Richelieu, P.Q., was not delivered until December 3 following. I can see this by the stamps giving the dates of the offices of St. Hyacinthe and Sorel, and I can judge from that that the delay took place in the post office at Ste. Victoire, where the letter remained, as I have the proof, and where it would still be if a person of good will had not taken upon herself to send it back to the person to whom it was addressed. On December 22 a demand was made from St. Hyacinthe by registered letter on the postmaster here, Mr. H. Paulhus, for explanations as regards the delay. He did not give any explanations. On the 9th instant the said party in St. Hyacinthe, being at St. Victoire, where he had gone to see Mr. Paulhus, the latter commenced by saying to him that he had never received any such letter, but he accused everybody of having ill-will against him.

In spite of the complaints which were addressed to Mr. Paulhus—

Mr BRITTON. Tell us what is the grievance.

Mr. BERGERON. Are you tired? You can go out. I have been waiting three weeks to get a chance to bring this matter up, and I notified the Postmaster General that I intended to bring it up. If my hon. friend thinks I am amusing myself, he makes a great mistake. The letter goes on :

In spite of the complaints which were addressed to Mr. Paulhus concerning that letter which was delayed, I have no grudge against him personally; and although he said that he did not fear the post office inspector, I put the whole case before you to let you know: first, that Mr. H. Paulhus keeps in a very bad way the post office at Ste. Victoire; second, that he opens without necessity packages of letters; third, that he does not stamp with the date of the office a great many letters which come to the office; fourth, that many persons in the locality have very serious grievances against Mr. Paulhus.

I take upon me to give, by myself or by others, the proof of these four accusations as stated above, and to furnish you with all the information which you may desire. The person of whom I have spoken above is the Rev. A. M. Daoust, of the bishopric of St. Hyacinthe. This gentleman will give willingly his testimony in case you require it.

Ste. Victoire is one of the rear parishes of the diocese of St. Hyacinthe, I might almost say of the whole postal district of Montreal, which does not possess a daily mail service, and this at least ought to be given to that parish without any inconvenience.

Awaiting your answer, believe me, Mr. Inspector,

Your very devoted servant.

Mr. BERGERON.

This letter is not signed, but I have reason to believe that it was written by Father Beaudry, and my hon. friend must have the original of it. At the bottom is the following :

All the allegations of this letter as far as I am concerned, are perfectly correct. In belief of which, &c.

(Sgd.) A. M. DAOUST,

Assistant Secretary to the Bishop.

St. Hyacinthe, February 1, 1900.

On the 3rd February—and this convinces me that the letter was signed by Father Beaudry—the following letter was written by the post office inspector :

Post Office Inspector's Office,
Montreal, February 3, 1900.

Rev. J. Beaudry, Curé, Ste. Victoire.

Reverend Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st inst., and to say to you that I will give it my immediate attention.

Your obedient servant,

J. W. BAIN,

Post Office Inspector.

On the 13th of February another letter was written by the post office inspector, as follows :

Post Office Inspector's Office,
Montreal, February 13, 1900.

Rev. J. Beaudry, Ste. Victoire.

Reverend Mr. Curé,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, and in answer I may say that upon the receipt of your complaint I wrote immediately to the postmaster to call his attention to the irregularities of which you complain, and to put him in a position to give the necessary explanations in the matter. It is impossible for me at present to say exactly when I shall be able to visit Ste. Victoire, but when it shall be possible for me to go, I shall let you know in advance. I hope, in any case, that the admonition given to the postmaster of that place will cause him to give more attention to the duties of his position.

Your obedient servant,

J. W. BAIN,

Post Office Inspector.

I said at the commencement of my remarks that the attention of my hon. friend had been called to this matter long ago. I have a letter from him dated the 17th November, 1899, and addressed to the Rev. Mr. Beaudry, as follows :

Ottawa, November 17, 1899.

My dear Sir,—Permit me to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 13th inst., with reference to the application for the establishment of a daily mail service between Sorel and Ste. Victoire.

This proposed service was strongly pressed upon me by your representative, Mr. Bruneau, and it would have been a very great pleasure for me to have met his wishes, as it would be to accede to yours. You, as a man of experience in affairs of the world, will know that there are generally two sides to every important question, and the present one is no exception. Allow me to say that, with a view to ascertaining whether it would be possible to arrange the daily mail asked for, I directed that tenders be invited for a daily service, in the hope that the cost would come within reasonable limits, having regard to the revenue derived from the office. The lowest and only tender received was one for $270. The gross revenue of the Ste. Victoire office amounts to only $84 a year, out of which the postmaster receives a salary of $30, leaving a net revenue of $54. Thus you will see that the expenditure involved would be equal to almost five times the net revenue. The present cost of a tri-weekly service is $140 a year. I therefore very much regret that after carefully considering all the circumstances, I am unable to comply favourably with your request.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) W. MULOCK.

Rev. Father J. Beaudry,
Ste. Victoire, Que.

My hon. friend wrote that letter on the 17th of November; yet when great pressure was brought to bear for an investigation of the office at Ste. Victoire, instead of having an investigation and finding out whether these accusations were true or not, he gave the contract to Mr. Paulhus for $270 for a daily mail service, although in this letter of the 17th of November he says the revenue would not justify him in doing so. The mail was carried daily for a few weeks and then discontinued; and to-day it is only a tri-weekly service, though the department continues to pay Mr. Paulhus $270 a year. I hope my hon. friend will give me the explanations, so that they may appear in Hansard, and I may send them to these people.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman a few days ago called my attention to the insufficient mail service between Ste. Victoire and Sorel. That was the only thing he alluded to at the time, and I was not then aware, and have not been till this moment, that there was any other ground of complaint than that a daily mail service was paid for and only a tri-weekly service was said to be given.

Mr. BERGERON. I thought the hon. gentleman knew what I meant, because last year the same complaints were brought before him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not know of the complaint with regard to the alleged inefficient management of the post office. There are thousands of communications sent to the Postmaster General which are not brought to his personal attention, but are distributed to the proper officers to be dealt with. I understand my hon. friend's grievances to be divided into two classes: One with reference to the management of the post office, and the other with reference to the mail contract. With reference to the management of the post office, all such complaints are referred to the inspectors to be reported upon. Complaints of this kind are of daily occurrence, referring to letters not being date-stamped, or people fancying that their letters have not been properly despatched, or have not been delivered to them when called for. These things will continue as long as there is a post office.

Mr. BERGERON. There are more grave accusations there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not minimizing them at all. I am only indicating to the hon. gentleman that practically no Postmaster General can possibly receive all the communications and attend to them himself. The machinery of the office does that. A letter only comes to his knowledge when some action has to be taken by the responsible head, such as the dismissal of a postmaster for wrong-doing. I have no recollection of ever having heard till this moment of any irregularities or neglect of duty on the part of the postmaster.

Mr. BERGERON. I think I brought the matter to the attention of my hon. friend in the House last year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think not. I am very methodical in regard to all such matters, and they take their regular routine. Any complaint against the postmaster goes to the inspector, and not to the head of the department, until some official action on his part is necessary. However, I give my version as I recollect the facts, and my hon. friend will observe that there is no connection between the alleged shortcomings of the postmaster as such and the giving of a mail contract to him.

The hon. member for Richelieu was constantly pressing me to establish a daily service, and I resisted his application. He joined forces with the cure, but I resisted, as other Postmasters General have had to do, and will have to do in similar cases. I resisted as long as I could, but finally yielded. It was represented to me that there was no telegraph or telephone or railway system, and that even if the mail service did cost more than it ought, under ordinary circumstances, in consequence of the people not having these conveniences they ought to have an improved mail service, and at last I yielded. As regards the statement that a tri-weekly service only has been rendered, I asked Mr. Smith, of the contract branch, if such was the case, and he said it was not, so far as he knew, and there was nothing in the department to show that there was less than a daily service. If there has been only a tri-weekly service when a daily service was ordered, the officers are responsible for not having brought the matter to my attention. The inspector of the division has certified to the accounts, and they have been paid, and the responsible officer will be called on to ascertain the facts and give an explanation.

Mr. BERGERON. Last year, during the estimates, I spoke on this subject, but, probably, not in so thorough a manner as at present, but if the hon. gentleman will inquire into the matter, that will be satisfactory. The complaint does not arise in my county, but, of course, we receive many such complaints, right and left.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Quite so, and, as I have said, I will inquire into the subject. With reference to the amount of the contract, my recollection is that, first of all, tenders were invited for the service, beginning at Sorel, and ultimately it was shown to be more convenient to have the contractor begin at Ste. Victoire, and a contract was given beginning at that place, some seven or eight miles from Sorel. It was done in the best of good faith, in order to have the best service. I cannot recollect any offer of $220, but I am sure that if there were any such offer, it was made in such a way that its acceptance would not have been in the best interests of the community.

Mr. BERGERON. The information I have is, that the cure made an offer at $220, and gave two securities, and could not get any reply.

I want to ask my hon. friend another question, to which I may not be entitled to a reply to-day, as I did not bring it to his attention previously. I want to find out the number of permanent employees, the number of extra or sessional employees, and the number of first and second class employees in the department. I believe that there are over 270 employees, of whom only about twenty-five are French Canadians. I am informed also, that since this government came into power some of the French Canadians have been superannuated, or have otherwise disappeared from the department, and their places have been filled by English Canadians. I am informed that out of 190 permanent employees, very few are of French origin, and that it is among the sixty-two extra clerks that most of that nationality are to be found. There was a first-class clerk in the department by the name of Octave Fortier, who died and was replaced by an English-speaking Canadian in 1898, although there were some twenty-five or thirty French Canadians in the department in the same class, who had passed all the examinations and were thoroughly competent to perform Mr. Fortier's duties.

I do not want to raise any question of race or nationality, but wish to know, purely and simply, as a matter of administration, if what I have said has actually been done, and if so, what was the reason?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot take exception to the spirit in which my hon. friend has spoken, and will try and meet him in the same spirit. When I took charge of the department, I looked over the staff, and found, without making any comment on the course followed by my predecessor, who can well afford to stand the criticism—that my own fellow-countrymen had been more highly favoured in the department and that there were comparatively few French Canadians on the staff. Like my hon. friend, I am not anxious to ostentatiously make appointments, on the ground of race, but I desired, when a fair opportunity occurred, to recognize what was due to my friends of French Canadian origin, and from time to time have made appointments of French Canadians. The usual way to enter the Post Office Department was by the third class, and then rise gradually by promotion according to merit. But, when the third class was abolished, the only way to enter the department was by the writers' class, because it is very unfair to those who have been years in the service to put new men into the second class over their heads. That was the principle on which I acted, save in one or two cases, and that was in the case of my own private secretaries.

The private secretary has very onerous work, if he is an efficient man. Owing to the discontinuance of the third class, it is practically impossible for any one to enter the service where there are divisions of classes, first and second, except beginning at the writers' class. To do otherwise would create great disaffection throughout the service. I have respected that position in all I have done, and I have endeavoured, quietly, whenever fair opportunity presented itself, to appoint members of my hon. friend's race. As he does not wish any point made publicly, it is not necessary to press the matter further.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As to the nationality of those who were appointed, I may explain that of the appointments made when I was head of the department, several were French Canadians. I appointed Mr. Lemay and my own private secretary, who was a French Canadian, and a number of others whom I do not recollect at the moment, but whose names will be found in the civil service list. However, of course, there were very few altogether as the service was already filled.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). Referring to the subject which occupied the attention of the House during the earlier part of the discussion, I desire to say but a word to express my dissent from the views expressed by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I believe that a fiat should not issue as a matter of course, that is not the intention and is not the practice; and I should think it is a very bad thing if that were the practice. Before the fiat is issued, there ought to be two things shown—first, that the case is one of a class of cases well known to be within the remedy afforded by the petition of right, and second, that there is a prima facie case for the issue of a fiat. I simply express my dissent from the hon. gentlemen I have referred to and give a reference. I have here 'Clode on Petition of Right,' and at page 50 begins a chapter in which attention is drawn to certain classes of cases in which it has been held that petition of right will not lie. Discussing that point, at page 52, the author says :

It must not be inferred, however, from the foregoing words, that every violation of right or legal injury for which an action would lie by one subject against another can, if committed by the Crown or its agents against a subject, be the foundation of a petition of right; and that the rights and remedies which a subject has against the Crown by petition are co-extensive with those which he has against his fellow-subjects by action. Such an inference would, as we shall see hereafter, be entirely erroneous. In the first place, it would be wrong to make the rights and remedies which exist between subjects the measure of those which exist between subjects and the Crown, since historically they are unconnected, and have been developed on entirely different principles; and in the second place, there are some acts which are legal injuries when done by a subject, but are not so when done by the Crown.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the date of that book ?

Mr. BRITTON. It is not very recent, still it is not very old—1887.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. member (Mr. Britton) will remember, I was saying that in England the petition of right issued as a matter of course.

Mr. BRITTON. I think not, and I give this authority.

Mr. HAGGART. All that I know, is from the argument that took place in the House when the Bill was passed. I happened to be in the House at that time, and listened to the speeches of Mr. Blake and others. Of course, there are some cases in which it would be inadvisable to grant the petition of right; yet in almost every ordinary case, it ought to be granted. The object of the Bill was to make it as free as possible, and I remember particularly that the argument in the House went to show that when the Bill was passed it was intended that in nearly every case the petition should be granted. I can imagine cases in which it would be inadvisable for the petition to issue, but in nearly every case it should issue.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There ought to be provision or security for costs; otherwise, it would be a serious tax on the exchequer.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. But I would refer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) to the argument of Mr. Blake and other lawyers upon the question.

Arts, agriculture and statistics..... $492,500

Mr. HAGGART. When are we to get our statistical year books? We want them very badly now.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The statistical year book is in the hands of the printer, and I hope it will be out soon.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the number of copies to be given to each member of the House ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think we shall be able to give about ten copies to each member. I have increased the number as compared with last year.

Department of Indian Affairs—Contingencies ..... $9,130

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to ask the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), if he can explain to me why there were two increases granted to the salary of J. D. McLean, secretary of the branch, one in the main estimates of $50, and another in the supplementaries of $150, making two increases in one year? Why was it necessary to do that, while many other deserving men in the same department were passed over?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I may say to the hon. gentleman that the intention was that his salary should be increased by $200. It was increased by $150, and in addition he got the usual increase along with many others. Mr. McLean holds a position almost equal to that of a deputy minister, although he is receiving a small salary. He has been twenty odd years in the department and it was represented to me by all parties that he had been a most useful public servant, attentive to his duties and most competent to deal with all Indian affairs. As my hon. friend knows, there is no deputy minister at all in the Indian Department, and Mr. McLean fills the deputy's position as far as the administration of the department is concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. He gets the usual statutory increase, when the statutory increase is denied to many others. In addition to this he gets $150, making three statutory increases in one year. I understand that he is only doing ordinary work—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is the secretary of the department, and he is practically the deputy head of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. He is secretary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is secretary of the department and has very responsible duties, having practically to check up the work of all the other officials of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. There are two objections to this increase. One is the way that a portion of it is put in the main estimates and another in the supplementary estimates. I think that when these increases are given in one year they should be given in one place. It is put in piecemeal in the hope that it may be overlooked by the House when we are considering these items in the estimates. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) says Mr. McLean is a very useful man. I believe he has been a very useful man to the hon. Minister of the Interior, and I have no doubt that may be one reason why he has got such a large increase while others have been passed over.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he intends in future to deal out, in case he should have charge of the department, equal justice to all the clerks of his department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that I have done any injustice.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like whoever has charge of the railway estimates to bring down this information when they come up for concurrence. The statement was made by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), and confirmed by myself, that in paying extra subsidies to railways last session the locomotives and other materials upon a road were taken into consideration in the estimate for the payment of the subsidy. It was indignantly denied by the hon. Minister of Railways, who said there was no such thing.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Could you state on what road?

Mr. HAGGART. There are only three roads altogether, and the one I particularly mentioned was in New Brunswick.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Restigouche and Western Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. I want the papers brought down in reference to it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) stated that it was not correct that the rolling stock had been paid for. What he stated was that in the construction of the railway an engine or two which had been used and which were worn out were taken into consideration as part of the expense of construction.

Mr. HAGGART. In estimating the amount to be paid over, the $3,200 per mile, the estimate was to be founded on the actual construction of the road independently of the rolling stock. Our statement was that these payments were made without an account being furnished or a book to justify the payment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will have the papers brought down this afternoon.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, as I stated, on one particular road, in order to make out payment, he had to include the rolling stock.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) stated it, but he refused to state on which road it was.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. HAGGART. I said it was on the Restigouche and Western.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Before we leave the votes for the Department of Public Works, and with reference to this item for telegraphs, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a company which was chartered last year, namely, the Canadian British Columbian and Dawson City Telegraph Company, Limited. The company obtained from parliament, without objection from the government, a charter to construct a telegraph line to the Yukon district. This necessarily involved considerable expense. The company's correspondence with its solicitor at Ottawa, shows that within two months of the passing of the company's Act of incorporation, he brought the subject of the company's undertaking to the notice of the Minister of Railways who assured him that the government had no intention of undertaking the construction of a telegraph line to the Yukon district. In consequence of this, the provisional directors organized the company and brought out the project in London at great expense. In the month of December, following 1898, the Minister of Public Works was formally advised of the organization of the company, of its having obtained capital in Britain, and of its having entered into a contract for the construction of the work, and the company made an application to him for a lease of the government line from Ascroft to Glenora. He was seen personally on the subject two or three times, but notwithstanding he was aware of the company's operations and expenditure, he concealed the fact that he had a project on foot to build the line for the government, and was then actually carrying out the various preliminaries. Any hon. gentleman who looks at the charter will see that my name appears as one of the directors, and I want to explain the circumstances under which I agreed to join the company. I happened to be in London, when it was represented to me and to the Hon. Mr. Turner, the ex-Premier of the province of British Columbia, who also happened to be in London at the time, that this was an enterprise which Canadians considered to be almost indispensable to that country, as I consider it myself. Two members of the British parliament, among others, became trustees for the company, and English capital was invested in it, for the purpose of building this telegraph line. I had occasion when in London, with the trustees and the bankers of the company, to interview Lord Strathcona, and through him we sent a protest to the Governor in Council here, stating the facts and representing that it would be detrimental to the best interests of Canada to allow it to go abroad to the public of Great Britain that a charter could receive the sanction of the Canadian government and parliament, and could then be set aside by the government undertaking to build the line themselves. I do not wish to take up the time of the House; but I must state that I know instances where the very circumstances connected with this charter have worked against Canadian enterprise in London. If Canadians go about with a charter and seek to get English capital interested in the development of the resources of Canada or the building of public works of importance, gentlemen may say, 'Well, how can we rely upon your charters, in view of the fact that a charter was given to the Canadian, British Columbia and Dawson City Telegraph Company, Limited, and a few months afterwards, the government, although aware of the expenses which had been incurred by the company in sending an engineer to New York and Chicago for the purpose of entering into contracts to build the line, undertook to do the work themselves?' This certainly is not a means of attracting British capital to Canada. I know the company applied to the government for redress, at least to the extent of being indemnified for the expenses which have been incurred. I had occasion to meet the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) when in London, and I introduced him to these gentlemen. We had interviews with him, but the only explanation we could get from him was, that after granting the charter, the government had decided to build the line themselves. I think this was not a fair recognition of the efforts made by those who undertook to find the capital to build a deserving public work, nor to the company who had invested their funds, and had gone to a great deal of trouble and expense to find the material and to enter into contracts for the construction of the line. I wanted to bring the matter up sooner, but I happened to be away when that part of the estimates of the Public Works Department were taken up. Lord Strathcona himself thought we had a good case for indemnity for the expenses incurred. I think this circumstance has done Canada harm, and is likely to do it more harm still. The government to my mind, did not do what was in the interests of Canada in competing against that company.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Speaker, not being aware of the facts to which my hon. friend alludes, I am not in a position to discuss the merits of the claim which he says has been made to the government for indemnity. I quite endorse all that any member can say as to its being the duty of the government to exercise the best of faith, not only towards those who obtain charters, but towards the public who may be induced by the government to believe that those charters are outstanding. I understood my hon. friend to state that the foundation of the claim rested on certain representations said to have been made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), and the Minister of Public Works. How far the utterances of individual ministers would bind the government on questions of policy would be a proper subject for consideration.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We will not discuss that point; it would mislead the public.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It might mislead the public, and, therefore, no minister can be too cautious in what he does lest even an ill-considered word might be supposed to have more far-reaching consequences and more authority than the facts warranted. However, I can only say, with reference to the memorial which the hon. gentleman says has been presented to the government, that when the Minister of Public Works returns I will bring the matter to his attention, and I have no doubt it will receive every consideration.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would just say, as a supplement to what I have already said, that Mr. Walter O. Clough, a member of the British House of Commons, a man well known in the city of London as a very wealthy man, became a trustee with Alderman Joseph Barker; and the solicitors of the company are Messrs. Gemmell & May, of Ottawa, who had the interviews with the two ministers to whom I have referred.

Militia—Pay and allowances ..... $381,094

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. During the discussion on the estimates, I had occasion to speak to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, about certain promotions which had been made and certain increases given to some of the officers of the department and refused to others. I refer more particularly to Mr. Holt and to Mr. Lambert, who have been a long time in the department. I had occasion to test the qualifications of both these gentlemen. Mr. Holt came into the service in 1882. His training has fitted him in every way for the position he occupies. He was trained in a commercial house and subsequently in a banking house, and I fear no contradiction, when I say that, as a man thoroughly capable of occupying the very responsible position of accountant in a department like that of militia, he may have his equal, but certainly not his superior. He has been through every examination, he has qualified for every step by submitting to all the examinations he had to undergo. I have never heard during the whole years when I was Minister of Militia, any complaint against him, by any officer in the department. All his superior officers, the deputy and all the others with whom he was in touch, have always spoken of him as one of the most efficient officers in the civil service. He came into the service in 1882, and in 1894, he became first-class clerk, and received his increase of $50 every year, until the hon. gentleman took charge of the office in 1897, when the government ceased to give him his annual increase. He is an officer who stands very high and is recommended by the deputy and all those who can appreciate the services he has rendered, and he has refused the increase which is given to others. I have not got a word to say against Mr. Lane or the other gentlemen who have received their increase. They are very good officers, and very useful, but I say the discrimination exercised is one which saps at the very foundation of the civil service of Canada.

Mr. Holt was appointed during my time, and is a very excellent officer, and so is Mr. Larose. But where I claim the injustice is done to Mr. Holt is that he has been refused his increase, and this will interfere with his retiring allowance. It is impossible for me to make out why this discrimination has been made. It is true, Mr. Holt has been given an allowance for extra work in connection with the South African contingents. There is also Mr. Lambert. He is one of the best officers in the department. He does not, nor do his people belong to the political party to which I belong. I am not attempting to depreciate the services rendered by the other gentlemen, but I say that in the cases of Mr. Lambert and Mr. Holt, there is a glaring injustice which should be remedied even at this late hour. Mr. Holt's services are appreciated by all those who know what they have been. During the trouble in the North-west, he was in charge of the books, and he rendered invaluable service. It is very hard indeed that the work of a man who has devoted the best years of his life to the service, should not be recognized and that he should be set aside, while others are promoted and given the increases. I do not know the reason why the minister has taken this course, but it seems to me that injustice has been done in these cases, and I wished to bring them, even though in this brief manner, before parliament, and before the country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). It is quite true that my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron), has referred to the case of Mr. Holt, in personal conversation, and I endeavoured to explain the matter to him. The question of promotion is not involved; the question is whether the statutory increases, so called, should be given or not. I do not intend to discuss that now, as it has been gone over again and again. But I may say that the present government, on taking office, took the view that we were not bound by the statute to give the so-called statutory increases, unless the minister of the department thought the clerk was entitled to it. Under that rule, I selected, with the assistance of the deputy minister, certain clerks—ten, I think out of eighteen—to receive increases. It so happened that Mr. Holt was not one of these. Mr. Holt is in the finance branch of my department and is, as the hon. gentleman states, very efficient indeed. But he is receiving, I think, fairly good remuneration—some $1,550 a year. For the work he performs, he would not receive that amount in any of our chartered banks—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He was getting much more when he came in.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then I do not see why he left what he had. In any case, I agree with the hon. gentleman that he is a good man. I do not think the hon. gentleman has a right to say that there has been discrimination. He says that certain clerks junior to these gentlemen have received increases. But the House will readily understand it is necessary, at times, to increase the salaries of men drawing six or seven hundred dollars a year, when it might not be necessary to increase the salary of a man drawing $1,550. I believe there are many cases of great hardship among the clerks receiving small salaries, and wherever there is such a case, I try to remedy it. In almost every case, except that of Mr. Benoit, who has been promoted, we have given the increase to men whose salaries were below $1,000. Mr. Holt has not been set aside, or his claim disregarded. He has received one statutory increase since I came in, and, if I remain at the head of the department, he may receive others. But, for this year, he is receiving a bonus of $100 for the extra work he did for the contingents; and his salary and this bonus together, constitute, I think, a fair reward. As to Mr. Lambert, he is receiving the maximum salary of his class, and we could not give him more, unless we promoted him to a chief clerkship. I think my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron), knowing, as he does, the officers of the department, would not, if he were in my place, recommend that Mr. Lambert should be given a chief clerkship, instead of Mr. Benoit. Mr. Benoit was recommended to the new chief clerkship which has been established, and I believe that was but a just recognition of a most faithful servant. Mr. Lambert is one of the oldest officials in the department, and in the public service. He has been in the public service since 1859, and has earned his full retiring allowance, those being entitled to it, who have served over thirty-five years. Mr. Lambert is now nearly seventy years of age; and I may say to the hon. gentleman that Mr. Lambert is willing, and, I think, desirous of being relieved from his position. I think the last thing in the world that Mr. Lambert contemplates, is asking for promotion.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. On January 1, 1898, Mr. Holt was receiving $1,550. Since that time, the increase of $50 has been refused him. Under the system which obtained until the present government came into power, Mr. Holt would have received $400 more than he has received.

There is where I complain. I am not able to take in the system which is followed. When he came in he came in at the minimum of $1,400. In these very estimates there are increases of $200 for some of the officers of the hon. gentleman's department. It seems to me that when these large increases are given, unless it be possible to establish the fact that the ordinary increase is refused because the officer is not deserving, it is an injustice which does a lot of harm in the civil service. When a man does his duty faithfully, and when he sees preferences of that kind, I do not see how he can remain satisfied and contented. If I am in parliament another session I intend to draw the attention of parliament to it in a much more prominent manner, because I think it is doing a great deal of harm and injury to the service.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. I understand that all the charters of steamers for South Africa, with the exception of one, were given to Boston firms. The Minister of Agriculture promised to give some additional information with regard to that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The information that I understood was desired was in connection with the charter of the Manhanset, which Messrs. Scammell & Company, of St. John, wrote about. I did not get from my officers details of the other steamers that were chartered. I have here a memorandum from Professor Robertson, which I will read :

I had communication with J. H. Scammell & Co., St. John, N.B. regarding chartering of steamships on account of the War Office for carrying Canadian products to South Africa.

I may say in explanation that this was in consequence of my instructions to Professor Robertson to communicate with various steamship owners and brokers in Canada who might have steamships to offer.

On March 8, Messrs. Scammell & Co. offered the ss. 'Manhanset' at $27,000. To that I replied: 'Not yet ready charter April sailings, and will not require before April 23.' After that the office agent of the managers of the ss. 'Manhanset,' with Mr. John C. Hall, of Boston, came to Ottawa. It was not suitable to have the 'Manhanset' begin loading before April 25. The point of not beginning to load until April 20 was conceded by the managers direct, through John C. Hall & Co., and could not, as far as I learned, have been obtained in any other way. I could not, as I wanted, have the date when the loading should commence, put to April 28. The demurrage on the steamship was £50 per day, and if the charter party permitted the loading days to count from before the cargo was ready to load, the demurrage would have to count from before the cargo was ready to load, the demurrage would have been payable for such time. Also, the War Office desired the shipment to be postponed as late as practicable. A telegram has been received at this date, July 11, saying the 'Manhanset' is not yet discharged in South Africa.

The ss. 'Manhanset' was chartered on March 28. I wrote to Messrs. Scammell & Co. a letter on April 6, explaining the facts, as per copy attached hereto.

This is the letter :

I am in receipt of your letter of April 3. The department is desirous of putting this business wholly in the hands of Canadian firms, but has taken the usual business course of accepting the offers of those who were able to offer the best value at the time. We could not use the steamship 'Manhanset' to begin loading until April 20. The agent of the owners of the steamship, together with Mr. Hall, came to Ottawa, and later on they consented to an agreement whereby the lay days would not begin until the date I have mentioned. As far as I could learn, that concession could not have been obtained through any broker except by direct negotiations with the owners of the steamship. At the present moment we have chartered all the tonnage which we require for produce to South Africa.

This shows that when Scammell Bros. made the offer of this steamship it was before we needed her. We then found that we would need a steamer at a certain date. They could not retain the steamer until that date, they only had it up to a certain time. But the owners of the steamer were able to make arrangements through Hall & Company to charter the steamer, but it was really a direct transaction with the owners of the steamer.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could tell us by to-morrow why the chartering of the steamers was given through a Boston firm. It was thought that we had Canadian firms through whom the business might have been done just as profitable as through a Boston firm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think the statement is strictly accurate, it was not all done through a Boston firm. I cannot speak positively, but I know there was one steamer owned and managed that was chartered direct from the owners in Canada, and I know there was another steamer chartered through the Thompsons, of St. John, and I think there was another chartered in Canada. But the fact is, as I stated the other day, these gentlemen made us offers much cheaper than anybody else. I gave the Canadian firms a chance, we got offers from a number of people in Canada, and we found they were invariably underbid by this firm, and we felt it to be our duty to take the lowest bid.

Post Office..... $953 12

Mr. SPROULE. I may as well take the occasion of this item to ask the Postmaster General to inform us how many of the clerks in his department received a statutory increase this year. I do not suppose he could remember the names, but I fancy there were quite a few.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman said he would bring down that list.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am afraid if I said so I have not kept my word. I have not got the list here, but I will send and get it if desired. I should think that 50 per cent, or, perhaps, 55 per cent of those that were eligible received increases.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the hon. minister give the list to the House any time to-night or to-morrow?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That would not be possible, because the names have not passed council. When this vote is passed they will go to council.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. gentleman must have a record of those who would be presented to council for increases. I presume the hon. minister knows those to whom he is going to give increases?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think I can dispose of the matter satisfactorily to the hon. gentleman by saying that in every case both in the inside and outside service where the officer had not a salary of $600 there is an increase. That represents, I think, the overwhelming number of the employees of the Post Office Department. Most of them are low salaried people. In the last few years there have been no appointments made in the inside service other than those of temporary clerks. I think, and as the higher officers on the list have got pretty well up to the maximum, the withholding of the increase does not numerically affect as many in the Post Office Department as many other cases.

Mr. SPROULE. Those between $600 and $1,000, which would be the maximum of the third class would be left out.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, not left out. In addition to those under $600 getting an increase there is a very large number of permanent clerks who have not been up to the maximum also getting an increase, and I think the hon. gentleman will find, although I do not want to be held literally to this, but I think it is substantially the case, that the increases granted this year will practically apply to every clerk not at his maximum, who has not had an increase in the prior year.

Pay Ralph Jones half interest at 6 per cent on $38,915.37, amount reported by commissioner on Oxford and New Glasgow Railway claim respecting 'hardpan' of Stewart & Jones' contract, No. 6, made up as follows: On $38,055.37 from January 7, 1893, date of finding, to September 20, 1893, date of payment, and on $860 from January 7, 1893, date of finding, to October 9, 1894, date of payment, in all $1,694.99..... $347 50

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. HAGGART. I see the representative of justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) in his place now. I think when this matter was under consideration, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) stated, that he had referred it to the Department of Justice, and upon their advice this item was put in the estimates. It is one of the most extraordinary interferences of the government in private affairs that I ever knew of. It seems to me that there was a certain sum of money due to Stewart & Jones for contract work down in Nova Scotia, and they were entitled to a certain sum for interest. The government pick out one of the individual members of the firm and say that this money, which is due to the firm, shall be paid to one of the members of the firm. I believe the firm's assets are in the court, and under the direction of the court which makes it still worse. Here is the Railway Department asking the country to vote a sum of money which is due to Jones & Stewart to be paid to Mr. Jones individually, notwithstanding the fact that the amount is due to the firm of Stewart & Jones, and that the assets of the firm are in liquidation, and under the direction of the court.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I presume that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) must have consulted the regular officials of the department. The matter never came to my notice at all. I have not been called upon to express an opinion upon the subject one way or the other.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like the hon. gentleman's opinion of it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would be necessary for me to give the matter very careful consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we proceed, I would like to refer to a matter we were discussing the other day. Of course, it is very ungrateful to discuss anything now after the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has gone away, but I want to make one remark about the tolls which have to be paid by the public on the Victoria bridge. I do this in view of the fact that we have granted subsidies this year to the amount of $230,000, that we voted last year $270,000, and that we are paying the Grand Trunk Company $40,000 a year for allowing the trains of the Intercolonial Railway to cross that bridge. We feel that an imposition has been placed upon the public in that they should be called upon to pay tolls when so much money has been contributed towards the construction of that bridge out of the public treasury. I need not remind the House when the Victoria bridge was first built $5,000,000 of the money of the country was paid towards its construction. The House was under the impression that if we were able to secure a reduction of the tolls this would be the time to do it, because of the large contributions of public money towards the reconstruction of the bridge. The hon. Minister of Railways promised that he would see to it. What I want to bring before the House now is a sadder case than any of those which have been mentioned in connection with the collection of tolls. The tolls are very high. It costs 5 cents for a man to walk across the bridge when the Grand Trunk Railway Company only charge 5 cents to take a man from the Bonaventure station and land him in St. Lambert. Since this subject was discussed in the House I have received a letter telling me of the case of a man in St. Lambert who had the misfortune to lose his son. He wanted to take the remains to Mount Royal cemetery in Montreal for burial. When the funeral procession crossed the bridge the ordinary toll for the hearse was charged and they charged 5 cents for the body which was in it. That was looked upon as carrying things too far, and I only ask the attention of the House to it to show that unless these gentlemen are remonstrated with they will be allowed to do things which will revolt public opinion. I call the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to it, because the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is far away from here now. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals promised the other day he would see to it. When they are going so far as to charge 5 cents for a corpse crossing the bridge it is carrying things too far altogether.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is aware that by the Bill which has passed this House, and which I hope will receive the Royal Assent tomorrow, we have taken power to regulate the tolls over the bridge. This subject is engaging our attention, and we have already communicated with the Grand Trunk Railway authorities on the subject.

Mr. HAGGART. Before we pass the railway votes, I wish to make a statement. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) and myself stated in the House that some of the railways that earned their subsidies took into consideration the rolling stock. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) denied that in the most positive manner, but the papers are down to-day, and I find it is absolutely correct, that subsidy payments have been made on the rolling stock.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What is the rolling stock?

Mr. HAGGART. The rolling stock is $10,000 on ten miles of road. The total estimated cost per mile, including that $10,000, is $17,985.42.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does the rolling stock include the locomotives?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. I see a memorandum on the bottom from Mr. Schreiber. The rolling stock referred to is an engine and train of flat cars purchased for construction purposes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is what the Minister of Railways said. It was rolling stock used in construction, but not a portion of the permanent equipment of the road.

Mr. HAGGART. I stated that the rolling stock was taken into consideration in finding out the value of the permanent way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The statement made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), and supported by the hon. member (Mr. Foster), left the impression on this committee that this was for the rolling stock on the road. The rolling stock referred to by the Minister of Railways was worn-out rolling stock used in the construction, just the same as an old spade would be.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) looks at the estimate of the cost, he will see at once that that argument will not have the slightest effect. There is an item for close cutting, grubbing, earth excavation, hard-pan and loose rock, solid rock, &c., at the rate of $1.40 per yard, and that amounted to $13,133. Then, there are stone drains, rip-rap, timber, lumber in drains, stone filling, public road diversion, ties, rails, fastenings, &c., bringing it up to $50,000. There is also a steel bridge. All these items cover the cost of construction. It was never contemplated that the rolling stock should be included in the construction. There is no doubt that it was on these figures that the amount was paid. The Act says that for anything over $15,000 a mile, the road is entitled to 50 per cent of the excess.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I merely point out that the statement of the Minister of Railways was to the effect that the rolling stock was that used up in the construction of the road. Whether it is a proper item to include in the cost of the road is a matter with which I have nothing to do.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman will read the certificates of the engineer he will see there was no mention that this was rolling stock used up in the building of this ten miles of road.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to ask the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) a question. It is understood that Lt.-Col. Sam. Hughes, M.P., has been discharged by Lord Roberts in South Africa. No particulars can be obtained. Might I ask the Minister of Militia or the Prime Minister if they have any information to give on this matter?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Speaking for myself, I have none whatever.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, I can say to my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that I have no official information upon the subject.

Mr. SPROULE. The amount expended from year to year during the last few years has been increasing very rapidly, although when hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition they never ceased denouncing the late government for its extravagance in immigration expenditure. In 1894, the late government spent $202,000 on immigration, and the hon. member for North Wellington declared that if his party held office they would save $200,000 a year of that expenditure or practically wipe it out altogether. In 1895, the expenditure amounted to $195,000 and in 1896, to only $120,000. Then these hon. gentlemen opposite took office, and I find that in 1889 they spent $387,000, in 1900, $435,000, and they are asking $445,000 for 1901. It will thus be seen that the expenditure has more than doubled itself the last three years. It appears to me that the immigration department has been converted into an asylum for defeated Reform candidates and politicians, who are useful no doubt to the party, and are to-day drawing pensions at the expense of the country. Besides the class of immigrants brought in is not a class most desirable for this country. Notwithstanding what may be said to the contrary, I do hold that there is a strong conviction in the North-west that both the Doukhobors and Galicians are undesirable as settlers, and I am told that the unpopularity of the Minister of the Interior to-day in the west is largely due to his immigration policy. The salaries of the agents in Great Britain amount to $110,000 and we are told by Mr. Preston that the work is not carried on very satisfactorily. He pointed out several directions in which it might be improved. According to the reports from our European and continental agents it appears also that the outlook for immigration is very blue, so that I can see no necessity for this increased expenditure. I therefore move that the item under consideration, item 96, be not concurred, but be referred back to the committee with instructions to reduce it by $10,000.

Amendment negatived on division.

Contingencies in Canadian, British and foreign agencies and general immigration expenses, including salaries of extra clerks at head office ..... $283,000

Mr. SPROULE. I beg to move in amendment that this item be not concurred in, but be referred back to the Committee of Supply with instructions to reduce it to the amount of $200,000.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. HAGGART. There was an item with reference to the voters' lists, which came up when the right hon. gentleman was out, and in connection with that item I draw his attention to the fact that the Senate have made a considerable number of amendments to the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to the elections of members to the House of Commons. There are here about 87 amendments. Have the ministers seriously considered the position with regard to this Bill and whether they will go on with it this session?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, I have had a conference with the Minister of Justice to-day on this subject, and he informs me that the amendments, with one single exception—that is, except as relating to one single subject—are verbal and of no consequence, and do not affect the principles of the Bill or its provisions. However, there is a serious alteration in the Bill in regard to the law in Prince Edward Island. Apart from that, there is no difficulty in coming to a conclusion in regard to these amendments. We will take them as soon as we have finished the present order.

Mr. HAGGART. We will take them up the first thing to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, the first thing this evening.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to capital—Cornwall Canal—To pay Gilbert Dredging Company, interest ..... $22,388

Mr. HAGGART. I move that this item be struck out.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not necessary; it can be expressed by a negative vote.

Amendment negatived on division.

Militia and Defence—Income—Military properties ..... $53,200

Mr. TAYLOR. I had a question on the Order paper, and I believe that the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), has the answer. I would like him to give the answer to the question, which is as follows:

Has the government sold, leased or given permission to any person or persons to erect cottages on the government land, known as Barriefield Common, at Kingston? If so, to whom and on what terms? Have any cottages been erected on said lands, and by whom?

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). The following is the answer: The government has not sold or leased to any individuals, land or given permission to erect cottages on the government land, known as Barriefield Common. Leases have been granted to the following parties, of small plots of ground on the shore front of the military reserve, east of Fort Henry: Major J. Galloway, by the year, at an annual rental of $4.86. No permission granted to erect buildings. J. D. Thompson, for ten years, at a rental of $4.86. No permission to erect buildings, and possession resumable by the department at any time, if required. John Carson, same terms. Rental $4.86. R. H. Abbott, for ten years, at a rental of $5. Possession resumable by the department when required. Permission to erect buildings granted. No compensation to be allowed at termination of lease.

Penitentiaries—St. Vincent de Paul—Balance of expenses in connection with the commission for the investigation of the affairs of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary . $662

Mr. BERGERON. Is that investigation completely finished?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. In both?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In both.

OFFICIAL DEBATES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE moved that the sixth report of the select standing committee appointed to supervise the official report of the Debates of the House during the present session, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved:

That the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 137) further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, be now considered.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the nature of the amendment?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There were three amendments suggested by the Senate. In reference to the first and fifth we expressed our disagreement. The Senate concurred in the disagreement expressed by us in reference to the first and fifth amendments, but in reference to the third they persisted, and we concur in the amendment made by the Senate?

Mr. BERGERON. What is the third one?

The PRIME MINISTER. The third amendment is an amendment which creates a new offence out of the obtaining of credit under false pretenses. They disagreed to that, and we accept the disagreement. They asked that the law shall remain as it is.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved:

That this House doth not insist on its disagreement to the third amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 137) further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, but concurs with the Senate amendment thereto.

Motion agreed to.

ELECTION ACT AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved:

That the Senate amendments to Bill (No. 133) to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members of the House of Commons be now considered.

He said: In reference to the first amendment no reason for it is apparent to any one, but as it appears to me to be harmless, I can see no objection to concurring. In reference to the second amendment, I am sorry to say that I think it involves a distinct breach of faith with the representatives of the North-west Territories. It was understood and declared at the unanimous request of all the members of the House from the North-west Territories that this Act would not be made applicable to the North-west Territories. This request was made by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who sits on the other side of the House as well as by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, but notwithstanding that unanimous request from the members of the North-west Territories, apparently the Senate have thought proper to make some changes, and to make the Act applicable to the North-west Territories. The Senate have not evidently considered the North-west Territories Representation Act, and the Senate have not considered the Bill which we sent to them, because they provide among other things for the North-west Territories, that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall send to the returning officers copies of the election lists when there are no election lists in the North-west Territories. However, I presume, we shall have to submit. The third amendment we agree to; the fourth, also.

Mr. HAGGART. How will you get on if there is an election, if there are no lists, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is obliged to send the lists?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You will see that it is made applicable as far as possible. It is very curious that they should have specifically inserted that clause which makes it necessary to send copies of the voters' lists. I presume if it is not possible they will not do it. They provide that one whole, clause 6, shall be left out. They evidently made a mistake. It was clause 2 they meant there.

Mr. SPROULE. What is clause 6?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Clause 6 refers to those who are not eligible as candidates, whereas clause 2 says that this Act is not applicable to the North-west Territories, so that it must be clause 2 they had reference to.

Mr. BERGERON. We must be sure about that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There cannot be any doubt about it to any one who understands the Act, because the only clause that has reference to the North-west Territories is clause 2. Clause 6 has reference to an entirely different matter.

Mr. BERGERON. It must be a typographical error.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It must be, I presume.

Mr. HAGGART. Had we not better take one amendment at a time, and see if we can understand it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In reference to the third amendment if my hon. friend will take the statute he will see that the third amendment is intended to substitute the words 'legislature of any province' for 'provincial legislature.' The reason of that amendment is not apparent to the ordinary observer.

Mr. BERGERON. Are there no reasons given?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. None whatever. I cannot see that the difference between 'provincial legislature' and 'legislature of any province' is very clear.

Mr. BERGERON. It might have reference to the North-west Territories.

The PRIME MINISTER. It says 'legislature of any province,' leaving our 'provincial legislature,' and inserting 'legislature of any province.' It cannot mean the North-west Territories there.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The fifth amendment is right. It is 'officer' in the singular, instead of 'officers' in the plural. The sixth amendment being a merely verbal amendment we acquiesce in. The seventh amendment is agreed to, and also the eighth.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the effect of the seventh amendment?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That has reference to the famous clause that we discussed here so much in the House. This provides that the forms of oath shall be prepared beforehand and distributed with the instructions to the returning officers.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, that is all right.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, we agree to that. We agree to the eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. There is no objection as regards amendment No. 16, respecting the stamps to be used on ballots. The 29th is a very important amendment. There is a distinct encroachment upon the principle of provincial franchise. It destroys the principle of manhood suffrage as it exists in Ontario.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the most important clause in the whole Act.

Mr. SPROULE. The general opinion of the House was that there should be not only a provincial, but a county residence in Ontario. You strike at the foundation of the whole thing by that.

Mr. HENDERSON. That applies only to cities, but not to rural districts.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of course. The amendment is:

29. Page 16, line 50.—After 'contained' insert the following as subsections 6 and 7:

'6. If the name of any person is found on the voters' list to be used at any polling division of an electoral district situate wholly or partly within the limits of a city or incorporated town, and—if, between the time when such list came into force for the purposes of a Dominion election, and the polling day at such election, such person has changed his residence from one part of such city or town to another part thereof,— then, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the provincial law as applicable, under the Franchise Act, 1898, or under this Act, to such election, such person shall not be disqualified from voting in such polling division.

7. From any oath which any such person offering his vote at such election may be required to take there shall be omitted any statements as to residence which he cannot, by reason of such change of residence as is mentioned in the next preceding subsection truthfully make, and instead of such statements the following paragraph may be added to such oath:

"That you are now actually a resident of and domiciled in the city (or town) of (insert here the name of the city or town) of which this polling division is a part."

Mr. SPROULE. This is intended simply to meet the case in cities and towns where there is registration. For instance, in Toronto, they might move from one ward to another, and still have the right to vote in the constituency where they moved out of.

Mr. BERGERON. That is our Quebec law. A man may move to a different ward, but he has a right to vote in his old constituency.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If a man's name is on the list in Quebec, the question of residence does not affect him, but it does in Ontario.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, is that amendment correct?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes; at least I submit, in amendment 31, the intention is to broaden to some extent the amendment we introduce here. We applied the franchise to the soldiers in South Africa, but in the Senate they extend it to the soldiers in the Halifax garrison. They do not say how they are to vote or where, but I can see no reason for differing from them.

Mr. HAGGART. Would you let them vote in Halifax?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When they went that length, they could have adopted the English Act. It would have been much more useful than dotting the I's and crossing the T's.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that you agree to the amendment with reference to the North-west Territories?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, I accept it under protest, because of the guarantees given by the North-west members.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, the only one you disagree to is that relating to Prince Edward Island?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, they are all reduced down to that. I may say shortly that the Prince Edward Island amendment amounts to this. My hon. friends are aware that they have no voters' lists in Prince Edward Island. A man comes up and proves his qualification, and is then entitled to vote. If an objection is made to his vote, notwithstanding the objection his vote is deposited; but the deputy returning officer initials and numbers his ballot, and at the close of the poll, when he adds up the votes, he puts the ballots given by the objected voters in a separate envelope, apart from those admitted. The intention of this amendment is to provide that on a recount, these votes, instead of being counted for the person for whom they are given, are to be subject to what is called a scrutiny; that is to say, the judge on the recount will have the right to examine into the whole question whether or not these voters were entitled to vote. By this proceeding before a county judge will be done what in the other provinces has to be done on a contested election petition. So that you will have this anomaly, that the county court judge will pronounce on these votes one way or the other, with no appeal from his decision; whereas, on a contestation of an election, the whole matter is proceeded with regularly on a petition, before two High Court judges, with an appeal to the Supreme Court. Therefore, this amendment provides for a condition of things which it seems to me is very anomalous. In addition to that, there is no notice given to the man whose vote is attacked. He gets no opportunity to come in and defend his vote. Nor is there any notice given to the opposing candidate as to the votes which are to be attacked. The whole thing is done in a hap-hazard way; and I cannot help putting to myself this question, how comes it to pass that the people of Prince Edward Island have no such proceeding under their local Act? Although their Act has been in operation since confederation, they have never thought it necessary to make this change, and I do not see why we should be asked to import into our election Act such an anomaly as this amendment is.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely it is not the fact that the votes which are objected to are not counted by the deputy returning officer?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are counted, though objected to.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that the rejected votes are counted, and the amendment gives the judge making the scrutiny the power to decide whether they are right or not. That puts the voter in pretty near the same position as the voter in the province of Ontario. In the first count all the votes are counted, because if a man's name is on the list, he votes, whether he is entitled to vote or not; and the only question on the scrutiny would be whether the party who voted was the party whose name was on the list. The question of his qualification could not be entered into.

Mr. BRITTON. In a scrutiny the question of the qualification must be gone into. The hon. gentleman is speaking of a recount, while the Solicitor General is speaking of a scrutiny.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no scrutiny on a recount in Ontario.

Mr. HAGGART. That relieves my mind of the difficulty altogether. If all objected votes are counted, I do not see why power should be given to a judge, whose functions are simply ministerial, to go beyond these ministerial functions.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is exactly the difficulty.

Mr. BERGERON. What I gathered from the discussion in this House, in which my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island occupied the time of the House for about three hours on this point, is that there are no lists in Prince Edward Island. If the man who asks to vote is known by the deputy returning officer, he is allowed to cast his ballot, but if he is not, he gives his name and qualifications and is asked to swear to both, and the deputy takes it upon himself to judge whether he ought to be allowed to vote or not. Then, such ballots are put into a separate envelope, and if there should be a recount, the judge is not given the right to decide whether these votes which were thus put into a special envelope should have been received or not. If you are in the hands of a dishonest deputy returning officer, he can run the poll to suit himself. The people have more confidence in a judge than in a deputy returning officer, and that judge should have the right not only to count the ballots but revise the decision of the deputy returning officer and decide whether those who gave such a vote were entitled to vote or not.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The question is simply whether one judge from a particular province is going to override all the others.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend admits that there is this special circumstance in Prince Edward Island, that they have no voters' lists there.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Neither have they in the North-west Territories, and why not provide the same process there?

Mr. HAGGART. The difficulty is the form of trial of the person to be summoned.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, it is just an ordinary recount.

Mr. HAGGART. But the party is entitled to prove that he has a right to vote.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What is it that is proposed by this amendment. The amendment is as follows:

52. Page 26, line 11.—After 'addition' insert the following as subsection (a):

'(a) In the province of Prince Edward Island, at the time and place appointed and before proceeding to recount the votes, the judge may receive an affidavit from the candidate or his agent, against whose return the affidavit mentioned in subsection 1 of this section has been directed, declaring that any other person not qualified to vote has voted, giving the name, designation and residence of such person, and also the name and number of the polling division in which he has voted; provided always that the affidavit authorized by this subsection shall not be received by the judge unless the applicant has deposited with the clerk of the county court in the aforesaid judicial district the sum of $300, in legal tender or in bills of any chartered bank doing business in Canada, as security for the costs in connection with the recount or final addition, of the candidate appearing by the addition to be elected; and further provided that the affidavit authorized by this subsection shall not be received by the judge except when the recount has been demanded on the fourth ground of application.'

This last provision we had in the old law, but it was struck out when we passed the present Bill the other day. If the deputy returning officer is not an honest man, he may allow people to vote who are not entitled to vote.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is good ground for contesting the election under the Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, but that involves a deposit of $1,000 and complying with all the procedure of the Controverted Elections Act, while in this province, where the deputy returning officers have special power, they ask that a defeated candidate may be allowed, on depositing $300 and giving the requisite affidavit, to prove to the satisfaction of the judge charged with the recount that certain ballots were improperly cast.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend must see that he would be thus vesting in the judge, whose duties are simply to make a recount, the power of trying the election.

Mr. BERGERON. That only gives him the power of deciding whether certain votes were properly cast or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is equivalent to trying the election.

Mr. BERGERON. No, because there are many other things than that which would void an election.

The PRIME MINISTER. If sufficient votes were contested which, if rejected, would transpose the majority, that would be a proper cause for an appeal under the Controverted Elections Act, but my hon. friend wants, in this particular province, to have an exception made by allowing such an appeal to be brought before a county court judge on the payment of $300 and filing an affidavit. But the county court judge is simply vested with the ministerial duty of making a recount and determining whether any ballots properly marked were rejected or any improperly marked admitted. Once that is done, his functions cease, and if there were other offences against the election law, which, if proved, would void the election, they must be brought before the court provided under the Controverted Elections Act. My hon. friend, however, would put the county court judge on a par with that court and give him the right of trying the election. The county court judge could reject as many votes as he thought had been improperly given. After his decision, there might be a petition under the Controverted Elections Act to the judge of the Superior Court, and his decision might be different from that of the other judge.

Mr. BERGERON. But, that happens often.

The PRIME MINISTER. But, we should not provide for it except in legitimate cases. The object is to provide for a recount, and it is not necessary, in a recount, to decide these other points. The only object is to admit those ballots that have been properly marked, and to reject those that have not been properly marked. We ought not to put on the judge of the inferior court work which is entrusted to a superior court, that of determining who had and who had not the right to vote in the election. It seems to me it would be a most dangerous proceeding to engraft upon the law such a feature as that.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not understand it as my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) does. Suppose that the election is a very close one—the successful candidate having a majority of only, say, four votes. The unsuccessful candidate demands a recount, and they go before the county judge. His object in claiming a recount is, that he thinks he will be in a position to show that at least five men had voted who should not have been allowed to vote by the deputy returning officer. He feels that he is elected if only proper votes are counted, and he does not want to disburse $1,000 and go to all the trouble of a controverted election trial. If he can prove by affidavits that five men had voted against him who should not have voted at all, the election is given in his favour. This is not the law in other parts of the Dominion, but there are special circumstances relating to Prince Edward Island. By depositing $300 a candidate who, apparently, has received a smaller number of votes, may go before the county court judge. All the people in Prince Edward Island seem to have the most perfect confidence in their judges, which is certainly a very good thing. The affidavits are presented there, and it is like a little trial. It is found—say in the case I have supposed—that five men have voted whose ballots should not have been accepted by the deputy returning officer. These votes are annulled, and the one who asked for a recount is declared elected by one majority. If the man who is then defeated thinks he is entitled to the seat on other considerations, or because he does not agree with the opinion of the judge, and says that in spite of the affidavits these men had a right to vote, he can deposit $1,000 and go before the controverted elections court. For these reasons, it seems to me that there is something in this proposal.

The PRIME MINISTER. Here is another reason. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) knows that the writ has to be returned within a certain time and that action for a recount has to be taken within a specified time.

Mr. SPROULE. Four days.

The PRIME MINISTER. The application must be made within six days and the report must be made within four days thereafter. But, if you have the county court judges hold a trial, not merely upon one of two but, perhaps, twenty or a hundred cases, you may delay the return of the writ for weeks.

Mr. BERGERON. It would be short.

The PRIME MINISTER. How does my hon. friend know that? The moment you go before a judge, you must take the consequences, and you may have an investigation that will last a long time. It is not a difficult matter to have a recount within four days, because the judge has only to open the envelopes and count the ballots—merely mechanical work. But if you go into the examination of witnesses, first for the plaintiff, and then for the defence, and then in rebuttal—and you may have an investigation that would be protracted for three or four weeks.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. And let me call the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bergeron's) attention to how this would work out in practice. Suppose that a man has the right to go before a judge and ask to have it determined that a certain number of voters have not the right to vote. He has to put in a petition, alleging that certain voters whose ballots were accepted had not the right to vote. It will hardly be said that the other side should be denied the right to attack the qualifications of those who voted for the petitioner. But, before all this can be done, the time for the recount will have expired.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think the second man would have the right to do it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is still worse; that would mean that one side would have the right to ask to have ballots thrown out, while the other side would have no such right. Surely, such an anomaly as that makes it plain that the whole thing is unworkable. The man who drew this, probably never had any experience and was not able to judge that it would be absolutely unworkable.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HAGGART. I would ask that the amendment affecting the North-west should not be gone into until the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is in his place. In the meantime, it is six o'clock.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish to make a few remarks on the Prince Edward Island clauses. One of the objections to the form of procedure taken by the Solicitor General and by the right hon. leader of the House, was that in Prince Edward Island, there was no provision for a trial under this clause which gives power to the county court judge, or whoever he may be, not only of making the recount, but also of trying the competency of the person to vote. I see there is a provision in the Bill in the first instance, that where the vote is objected to, the deputy returning officer is obliged to mark the ballot with the number after the name of the person who has voted, so that the ballot can be identified, and that when it comes to trial before the judge on a recount as the competency of the party to vote, it may be in his power to deduct that vote from the number cast, if it is found he had no right to vote. The objection made by the Solicitor General to the amendments made by the Senate were, in the first place, that there was a provision made by which an attack may be made on the candidate who was elected. I find, in looking at the Bill, there is a provision for that. In clause 46:

That in Prince Edward Island any person not qualified to vote in such electoral district has voted, stating the name, designation and residence of such person, and also the name and number of the polling division in which he has voted.

First of all an affidavit has to be given, setting forth the facts upon which a recount is demanded. Then on page 25, line 23, it is inserted :

Or in Prince Edward Island $300 if the application is made in relation to the fourth ground of application.

You will see by the Act itself, there is provision made in the first place, that there should be an affidavit attacking the competency of the parties who have voted and giving the grounds. Then the party who complains, must first make a deposit of $300. The Solicitor General said there was no provision made for an attack upon votes. But I find in section 52, the following :

In the province of Prince Edward Island, at the time and place appointed, and before proceeding to recount the votes, the judge may receive an affidavit from the candidate or his agent against whose return the affidavit mentioned in subsection 1 of this section has been directed, declaring that any other person not qualified to vote has voted, giving the name, designation and residence of such person, and also the name and number of the polling division in which he has voted, provided always that the affidavit authorized by this subsection shall not be received by the judge unless the applicant has deposited with the clerk of the county court in the aforesaid judicial district the sum of $300 in legal tender in the bills of any chartered bank doing business in Canada, as security for the costs in connection with the recount or final addition of the candidate appearing by the addition to be elected, and further provided, that the affidavit authorized by this subsection shall not be received by the judge except when the recount has been demanded on the fourth ground of application.

So you see it is competent for both parties to make an attack on the competency of the voter who has voted during an election. The right hon. gentleman opposed the Bill on the further ground that there was no time to make a trial of this question. The proceedings for a recount, you must remember, commence seven days after an election, that is on declaration day. Then any day within four days after that, a person may file a petition for the purpose of having a recount, then the judge, after he receives the petition, any time within four days may order the court to be held. I thought from the observations of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government, and from the Solicitor General, that the proceedings ended at the end of ten days, but I find by the Act, it is not so. The judge may proceed from day to day until the result of the trial.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The application must be made within six days.

Mr. HAGGART. Within six days after the declaration, after the return.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Within six days after the final revision.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. In Prince Edward Island I notice by the local Act that there was a certain number of days fixed after the election, for declaration day. But, anyway, after declaration day he has six days to file these affidavits and demand a recount by a county judge. Then, after the lapse of four days the judge may fix any time for the purpose of the trial, and the trial may continue on de die in diem until it is ended. They have no lists at all in Prince Edward Island. The returning officer has no judicial duty to perform. He has no right to reject a vote. Any person tendering his vote has a right to a ballot and his vote has a right to be counted. Such a proceeding of that kind as might be necessary in Prince Edward Island would not be necessary in other parts of the Dominion, because the qualification of the voter is fixed before the voting day. His name appears on the list of voters and the returning officer's duty is to add up the votes. It is the same with the judge at the recount. The only latitude the judge has is as to whether a vote alleged to have been delivered in favour of a certain candidate has been marked in a proper way. His duty is simply judicial as to the intention of the voter in marking his ballot. I do not know as to the finality of a proceeding. I think the return of the county court judge would be final as to the qualification of the voter and as to the count, and the only questions for the judge would be the ordinary ones as to corrupt practices under the Controverted Elections Act. I was inclined to take the view of the right hon. leader of the House and of the Solicitor General, but on looking it over I think there is a great deal of force in the amendments that have been proposed in the Senate, which are confined entirely to Prince Edward Island. The eighty-two or eighty-three amendments to the Bill I understand were proposed by the government and assented to by the hon. Minister of Justice. They received his sanction and some of them have his imprimatur upon them.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not want to be responsible for putting this clause into the Bill. I cannot accept it.

Mr. DAVIN. In looking over the amendment of the Senate to the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members of the House of Commons, I find that the Senate seem to have taken note of section 2 of this Bill, which reads as follows :

2. Except as provided by the North-west Territories Representation Act, and to the extent to which certain provisions hereof are incorporated with the said Act by the provisions thereof, this Act shall not apply to the North-west Territories.

Originally, when the Bill came down there were sections applying especially to the North-west Territories, but the government placed this clause in the Bill. Now, Sir, I find there is an amendment in the Senate which reads as follows :

2. Page 1, line 6.—Leave out the whole of clause 6, and substitute the following :

'2. The following provisions of this Act shall apply to elections in the North-west Territories, so far as the same are applicable and are not inconsistent with the provisions of the North-west Territories Representation Act, as amended, that is to say: Sections 4 to 7, both inclusive; section 9; section 41, paragraphs (c), (d), (e) and (h);—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no such thing as paragraph h at all. That shows the care given to this whole matter.

Mr. DAVIN (reading) :

—and subsections 2; sections 43 to 59, both inclusive; sections 62 to 64, both inclusive; sections 69 to 150, both inclusive; and sections 152 to 154, both inclusive; together with the forms mentioned in the said sections and parts of sections; but otherwise, except as provided by the North-west Territories Representation Act, or any amendment thereto, this Act shall not apply to the North-west Territories.'

I may say that this amendment of the Senate is not only unnecessary, but it would make the working of our Act quite cumbersome. It is my opinion that it is in the interest of the efficiency of our North-west Territories Representation Act that this amendment of the Senate should not be agreed to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I concur.

Mr. DAVIN. I move, seconded by the Solicitor General :

That the House do disagree with the second amendment of the Senate in that it is unnecessary, and would render the working of the North-west Territories Representation Act cumbersome.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know anything about this, but I understood that this amendment was made in the Senate at the suggestion of the Minister of Justice. Was the Solicitor General consulted ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know anything about that. The Bill was introduced after it was examined by the government, and I am responsible for it as it was introduced in this House.

Motion agreed to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved :

That the House do disagree to the 46th, 47th, 48th, 49th, 50th, 51st, 52nd and 53rd of the amendments made by the Senate to the said Bill for the following reasons :

1. Because the 'Controverted Elections Act' already makes ample and proper provision for the scrutiny before two judges of the Supreme Court of all objected votes polled in Prince Edward Island under conditions which assure to all interested parties, electors and candidates, the amplest guarantees that the rights of the voters will be examined into and determined on after proper notices given.

2. Because the addition to the powers of the county court judge of holding a scrutiny in conjunction with the recount will prolong the proceedings to an undesirable length, and will raise serious questions of conflict of jurisdiction between the county court judge under this Act, and the judges of the Supreme Court under the 'Controverted Elections Act.'

3. Because the addition of a scrutiny to a recount is inadvisable and takes away from parties who may consider themselves aggrieved, any right of appeal from the decision of the county court judge.

4. Because the provisions in the amendment for a scrutiny are inadequate and do not provide for the giving of proper notices to parties interested, of the votes to be attacked, and because it is difficult, if not impossible, to make provision within the time in which a recount should be held for the giving of such notices and procuring the necessary evidence against or in support of such votes, and the expenses of such an election scrutiny would be largely in excess of the suggested deposit.

5. Because the acceptance of the amendment leaves it open for the same questions to be adjudicated upon first by the county court judge and afterwards under the 'Controverted Elections Act.'

Mr. HAGGART. I doubt very much that the same subjects would be dealt with by the county court judge and by the judges in a trial under the Controverted Elections Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Every trial under the Controverted Elections Act in Prince Edward Island necessarily implies a scrutiny because there are no lists.

Mr. HAGGART. There is another question I would like the Solicitor General to answer. He has, no doubt whatever, as to the application of the Controverted Elections Act, taken in connection with this Act, to elections in Prince Edward Island ? The impression of some lawyers is that after the passage of this Act, the Controverted Elections Act would not apply to Prince Edward Island.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is absolutely impossible. The trouble about all this is that the gentlemen who dealt with this matter in the Senate, do not appear to have realized that in connection with an election, you have the Franchise Act, which is the basis of all, then you proceed under the Elections Act, which provides the machinery for the election, and then you proceed under the Controverted Elections Act, which provides the machinery necessary for contesting an election. We have not touched the Controverted Elections Act, and you cannot touch this proceeding without amending the Controverted Elections Act. Under the Controverted Elections Act, you must necessarily have a scrutiny in Prince Edward Island. The petitioner cannot satisfactorily claim the seat without having a scrutiny, because otherwise he cannot have the question of the number of votes cast in one way or the other determined.

Mr. SPROULE. In a scrutiny have the judges the right to bring the voter and have him sworn, and put such questions to him as they desire, in order to ascertain whether or not he had the right to vote ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Undoubtedly. That is the very basis of a scrutiny, that the voters should be brought up for the purpose of being examined. For instance, take an election which is protested on the ground of personation. The petitioner is not going to weary himself with all the expense of establishing bribery and corruption, if he has evidence that two or three persons have been guilty of personating. He limits the trial to that point, and tries to prove that, on ascertaining the true votes cast, the majority will be the other way. But what I have not been able to get those in the other House, with whom I have discussed this matter, to understand, is, that the amendment of the Senate cannot be made operative unless you amend the Controverted Elections Act. I may say that we prepared a Bill to amend the Controverted Elections Act, in order to meet this case, and submitted it to a gentleman of the Senate, and it was refused. I do not know whether I should state that here.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think there is any object in keeping it secret. I heard one of the senators speaking about it, and giving credit to the hon. the Solicitor General for his desire to meet them very fairly. He said no man could have made a stronger effort than the Solicitor General to meet their views and try to reach some satisfactory conclusion, but he thought the Bill as proposed by the government would be entirely unworkable.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The amendment of the Senate would give us two courts to decide the same question. After the county court had given its decision, the whole trial would have to be gone over again under the Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be something like taking a case from a lower to a higher court.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would be an absolutely useless proceeding. Why subject a man to the expense of trying the case before a county court judge, and then have to go before another court, which will not take cognizance of what has been done by the county court judge at all ? And besides, there is no procedure provided by the Senate amendment to govern cases going before the county court judge. There is no provision for notices or anything else.

Mr. QUINN. I do not agree with the hon. Solicitor General. I would like him to point out the section in the Controverted Elections Act, which will authorize the contestation of elections on the ground that a certain number of voters, whose votes had been accepted, were not qualified to vote. I do not think that the fact that a person had voted improperly in Prince Edward Island would be a ground for contesting the election, while it ought to be a ground for a recount. The conditions in Prince Edward Island are such that if a man votes who is not qualified, and is satisfied to take the chance of being proceeded against for perjury, there is no way of setting aside the election on the ground that a number of such votes have been given. The fact that a person had been elected by votes cast by a number of persons who had sworn falsely as to their qualifications would not form the basis for an election petition under the Controverted Elections Act, is what made it necessary for the Senate to provide this amendment. I would ask my hon. friend to point out to me the section of the Controverted Elections Act which would allow an election to be contested on the ground that such improper votes had been given.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Does my hon. friend pretend to say that if, for instance, a judge, whose name was on the election list, or any other person not qualified, such votes could not be challenged under the Controverted Elections Act ?

Mr. QUINN. There is no list in Prince Edward Island.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In that case you take the poll book, and if it appears by the poll book that a man has voted who is not qualified, undoubtedly you have the right to establish that fact under the Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. QUINN. On a scrutiny it can be done.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What is a scrutiny ? Let my hon. friend look to the Controverted Elections Act and he will find a scrutiny referred to. It is a necessary and incidental proceeding in all contested elections.

Mr. QUINN. Of course I had no time to look into this question thoroughly, but I looked into it a month or so ago, and the opinion I formed was that the case provided for by the 46th amendment of the Senate, is one that is not covered by the Controverted Elections Act. If a number of persons go into a polling booth in Prince Edward Island and vote, and those men are not qualified electors, there is no means of attacking their votes, except on a recount. This is not a basis for a petition to set aside the election under the Controverted Elections Act. I refer to section 5 of the Controverted Elections Act, which says :

A petition complaining of an undue return, or undue election of a member, or of a double return, or of any unlawful act by any candidate not returned, by which he is alleged to have become disqualified to sit in the House of Commons, at any election, may be presented to the court by any one or more of the following persons:—

No complaint can be made under that of a person, other than the candidate having been guilty of some act which would unseat the member. Other acts under which a petition might be made are provided for specially by the Controverted Elections Act. For instance, there are certain offences under that Act, such as bribing, treating, and so on. But this particular case covered by the amendment of the Senate is not provided for in any way under the Controverted Elections Act. That being so, should it not be provided for under section 90, of the Act before the House—coming in exactly where and as the Senate provides :

If, within four days after that on which the returning officer has made the addition of the votes, for the purpose of declaring the candidate or candidates elected, it is made to appear, on the affidavit of a credible witness, to the judge of the county court of the county or union of counties, or to the judge of the judicial district in which the electoral district or any part thereof is situated, or in the province of Quebec to a judge of the Superior Court ordinarily discharging his duties in the judicial district in which the electoral district or any part thereof is situated, that a deputy returning officer at an election in such electoral district in counting the votes (1) has improperly counted, or (2) has improperly rejected any ballot papers at such election, or (3) has made an incorrect statement of the number of ballot papers cast for any candidate—

Now, why is the act of a deputy returning officer made the subject of a petition to a judge for a recount? For the reason that there is not a line in the Controverted Elections Act which makes the deputy returning officer's conduct the subject of an appeal under that Act. Then it goes on, as relating to Prince Edward Island :

In Prince Edward Island that any person not qualified to vote has voted, stating the name, designation and residence of such persons; or (5) that the returning officer has improperly added up the votes——and so on. As I say, the misconduct of a deputy returning officer cannot be made the basis of a petition under the Controverted Elections Act—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. How about the other provinces?

Mr. QUINN. The conduct of the deputy returning officers cannot be inquired into on an election petition.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. QUINN. Then, why is it not here in the Act as I have read it?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Why, you make the deputy returning officer's conduct part of the case.

Mr. QUINN. Undoubtedly, but for what purpose? For the purpose of punishing the deputy returning officer.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. For the purpose of condemning them to costs.

Mr. QUINN. Yes, but not to set aside the election.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will not argue that point with you, nor will any other lawyer in the House.

Mr. QUINN. That is a good way to avoid it, but not a good way to answer it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) says the reason why it should not go in, is because it is provided in the Controverted Elections Act. If it can be provided for in that way, why put it in here? He said he would not put in here a provision respecting the conduct of a voter, because it would provide two methods of inquiring into one offence.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. But that is not inquiring into a deputy returning officer's conduct?

Mr. QUINN. Certainly, because the Controverted Elections Act provides against misconduct on the part of deputy returning officers, but not for setting aside the election on that account.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think you need not worry about that.

Mr. QUINN. If section 90 is necessary at all in regard to the misconduct of the deputy returning officer, it is equally necessary with regard to the misconduct of a voter's, as provided under the amendment of the Senate.

Motion (Mr. Fitzpatrick) agreed to on division.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved that the remaining amendments made by the Senate in the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—CONDITION OF CANADIAN TRADE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I have no desire to detain the House, nor will I, but I thought this an appropriate occasion to refer to the circumstances of trade in Canada, as we have found them during the past year. At the end of a long and wearisome session, I am sure it will be a source of consolation to the members who have attended so closely to their duties, to know that they have been legislating in the interests of a country that has been making extraordinary progress in all directions. We have not yet received full trade returns from all parts of the Dominion, but we have received sufficient to enable us to deal with approximate figures which I think full returns will prove to be very nearly correct. It must be a source of pleasure, not only to the members of this House, but to the country at large, to know how great has been the expansion of our trade during the past few years. There has been an increase in the total trade of last year over the preceding year, which was the highest in our history, of something like $50,000,000. I have here a little table of the goods entered for consumption and of the produce of Canada exported. It deals wholly with the goods we have imported for consumption in this country and the goods we have exported that are the produce of this country, not taking in the total imports and exports. I find that in 1900 our total imports for consumption and total of Canadian produce exported, amounted to $336,028,190; in the year 1899, the total was $286,852,855. Hon. gentlemen will see that during the past year there has been an increase of about $50,000,000 in our trade in the articles that I have mentioned over the preceding year. If we go back four years to 1896, when this government took office, we find the total was $216,966,232. So there was an increase of something like $120,000,000 in the past few years. The figures I have given are exclusive of short returns and of coin and bullion exports so it will be seen that they will be very near the correct figures.

I have another table which takes in a larger scope. The total trade on the basis of the total imports for consumption, and total exports exclusive of short returns, are for the following years: In 1900 we had a trade of $358,866,220; in 1899 the figures were $308,388,968, or an increase over 1899 of $50,477,252, or an increase of 16 per cent. In 1896 the figures were $228,272,279. So that the increase of last year over 1896, four years previous, was $130,593,941, or an increase of 57 per cent in four years.

But I have also a total of the trade in imports and exports, and while we may say we are more particularly concerned in goods that are entered for consumption and goods the produce of Canada, no one will deny that our total trade in exports, which are not the produce of Canada, and of which we do the handling, from which we reap a great benefit, is of advantage to the country. For the year 1899 the figures for the total trade, imports and exports, were $321,661,213. For the year 1900 I have made an estimate which I think will be found to be within the mark when the total returns are made, that the total trade in imports and exports of the Dominion of Canada, will be $372,000,000, an increase of $50,000,000 over the last year which was the largest by far of any year of Canada's trade, and over the year 1896, which was $239,025,360, an increase under this table of $130,000,000 in the four years.

Now, in order to understand the progress that Canada has made during the past four years I will give you the figures for 1878. The total trade of exports and imports amounted to $172,405,454. There was an increase then in the eighteen years from 1878 to 1896, of $66,619,906, or an average annual increase during the eighteen years of about 3½ millions; while in 1900 the increase over the year 1896 has been $130,000,000, or over $32,000,000 per year as against $3,750,000 per year during the previous eighteen years. I say such a result as that must be very gratifying indeed. A large part of the increase has taken place in our imports, and there has also been a large increase in our exports. Taking our exports, the produce of Canada, I find in 1878, the exports of the produce of the mines, fisheries, forests, animals and their products, agricultural products, manufactures and miscellaneous, exclusive of coin and bullion and short returns, amounted to $65,740,134; in 1896, $106,378,752; in 1900, $152,818,917. So that the increase, in the eighteen years, of our exports of the products of Canada was $40,638,618. In the four years since 1896 the increase has been $46,440,165, or $6,000,000 more in the four years than in the eighteen preceding years.

Now, Sir, I do not wish to weary the House by dwelling longer upon these figures, but it seems to me they are appropriate on this occasion when the House is about to vote to Her Majesty the supplies necessary to carry on the government during the coming year. We are told that the amounts asked for are large. Some criticism has been offered by hon. gentlemen opposite to the figures, to the various votes that have been proposed; but they have not so far as I remember challenged those votes except one or two items in committee. It has been said that we are in a very peculiar position inasmuch as it is alleged that certain members of the Liberal party in 1894, and subsequently, when the expenditure was $38,000,000, said that expenditure was not warranted under the circumstances; and now hon. gentlemen opposite say: You have an expenditure of $12,000,000 more, and we wonder how you will dare face the electors and what answer you will give them. One hon. gentleman pointed out to us how difficult it would be to meet the electors and he asked: How will you meet them? My answer to that is, that, as far as I am personally concerned, I will meet them with the public accounts of Canada in my hand and I will ask them to turn to the year 1894-5 when the ordinary expenditure of hon. gentlemen was $38,000,000, excluding capital altogether; I will point out to them that the book shows that in that year there was a total revenue from all sources of not quite $34,000,000, and that in order to carry on the ordinary affairs of government, they had to borrow and to run the country into debt to the extent of over $4,000,000. Hon. gentlemen can easily understand, as will the people of this country, that when things are conducted in that way, when, to meet the expenditure on ordinary account, leaving out capital account, they had to run into debt to the extent of $4,000,000, it was perfectly justifiable on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite in criticising them, and to say that in view of that condition of things there should be an attempt made to bring the expenditure within the revenue. But the hon. gentleman has told us that we have added $12,000,000 to the expenditure of the country. Does the hon. gentleman think that this is something we should be ashamed of? I say that rather than be ashamed of it, it is something we should be proud of. Suppose, as the hon. gentleman says, that we have this $12,000,000 of extra expenditure, has it run the country into debt to the extent of a single cent? Not at all. When these figures are applied, according to the hon. Finance Minister, it will be found that the expenditure of last year on ordinary account and the expenditure on capital account, and such expenditure as will have been incurred for the contingents sent to South Africa, will all be paid out of this year's revenue, and leave, as we hope and believe, no debt upon the country at all. Under these circumstances, of what avail is it to talk about the public utterances made in 1894-5, when, with an expenditure of $38,000,000, we had to borrow and go into debt to the extent of $4,000,000 to pay the ordinary expenses of the country outside of capital expenditure, and when we added over $6,000,000, nearly $7,000,000 to the public debt? Circumstances have changed. Not only are we paying the current expenditures, but we have a surplus, as we have estimated, of $7,500,000, and we are using that $7,500,000 to enlarge our canals, to develop our waterways, to improve our railway system, to do as the hon. acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock), is doing from the Atlantic to the Pacific, doing what was neglected for years and years, by hon. gentlemen opposite, putting the harbours, rivers, lighthouses, piers and public buildings of the country in a proper state of repair, and giving facilities to trade and commerce of the country. This is being done and done successfully. I have not the slightest difficulty in reconciling the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite in the year 1894-5, when we had an expenditure of $38,000,000 with the expenditure which we are called upon to make, exceeding the expenditure of 1894-5, by millions, it is true, but an expenditure not made out of borrowed funds, not running the country into debt, paying not only out of ordinary revenue for the current expenditure, but paying for the capital expenditure as well. But hon. gentlemen say: What about your debt? Well, I have just pointed to the fact that we are not increasing the debt. During these four years, with all the expenditure on capital account, with millions and millions expended in the directions I have pointed out in the public interest, the cheapening transportation to the producers of the country, we have only added less on an average than $2,000,000 a year to the net debt of the country, as against $6,000,000 added every year on the average, by hon. gentlemen opposite. But, hon. gentlemen will say and have said here: You have taken this $12,000,000 of extra money out of the people by way of taxation. They speak of the volume of taxation as having increased. Yes, it has increased by many millions, but when did the Liberal party ever pledge themselves that the volume of revenue by way of taxation in this country would be less? When did they ever propose that the revenues of the country should be less? What they did pledge themselves to, and what the government are responsible for, was to reduce the rate of taxation, and that they have carried out.

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON. No.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They pledged themselves to reduce the rate of taxation. The parliament of Canada does not make the price at which goods are sold in foreign countries. The parliament of Canada has not dared, nor would it seek to ask any member of this House, or any person in this Dominion, to purchase more or less goods. Every individual can adjust that for himself. But, there is one way and one way alone in which this government do stand between the consumer and the goods he uses, and that is on certain lines of goods they say to him: Before you can acquire these goods to consume them, you must pay a certain number of cents on the dollar into the public treasury, to carry on the government of the country. That is the only way in which the government stand between the people and that which they consume. That is termed the rate of taxation. The government were pledged to reduce the rate of taxation, and they did it. While they reduced the rate of taxation, the volume has swollen, it is true, not swollen by compulsion on the part of the government; for, as I said before, the government do not determine what quantity of goods shall be purchased by any one in this Dominion, nor do they determine the price at which goods are sold in foreign countries. They only determine the number of cents on the dollar that they will take from the consumer to put into the public treasury to carry on the affairs of the Dominion. We were pledged to reduce the rate of taxation, and we have done so. Let me give you now the figures of this and let us remember that all this expenditure which I have mentioned is applied to the public improvements that are being carried on. Let us see how we stand in the way of taxation. If we show the people of this country that we have spent these millions more in the direction that I have indicated, and that while we have done that, we have reduced the rate of taxation, that we have lessened the burdens they were under for years preceding our government coming into power, then, I think the people will say: You have managed our affairs very well indeed. Now, I have a statement here which I will give as test. I do not give it altogether as an infallible test. I give it to the House as rough test, as a test that was applied by the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) last year. I do not give it as definite test. It is not that, but it will serve a purpose pointing in that direction, and it will not be found very far wrong. Some circumstances come in and it may be varied a little this way or that way, by a larger quantity of goods being charged a higher rate, or the public purchasing more of one line of goods than another, and so on, taking the comparative statement, it is a ready way of arriving at something like the amount of the reduction of taxation that we have affected while we have been in power. In 1900, the goods entered for consumption, dutiable and free, were of the value of $183,209,273. That was for the year closed June 30. I say these figures may not be absolutely correct, but they are approximately so. As I said before, we have not the full returns, but we have them so full that I do not think when they are completed, the result will make any material difference in the deductions that I draw.

Mr. DAVIN. Would the hon. gentleman state the figures again?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. $183,209,273, on which we collected duty to the amount of $28,866,986. That was an average rate of taxation on all the goods imported for consumption, dutiable and free, of 15·76. In 1896, the total value of goods imported was $110,587,480, on which a duty was collected of $20,219,037, or a rate of taxation of 18·28, a decrease in the rate of taxation of 2·52, or a reduction in the rate of taxation of nearly 14 per cent.

Mr. DAVIN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? What quantity of corn was imported from the United States free, to be exported?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the returns of the imports of corn this year. We have not the quarterly statements from the outports yet. This statement may be varied a little one way or another by coin and bullion and corn; but I am giving a rough and ready method of judging of the true condition of affairs. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that is not much of a reduction—only 2½ per cent. Remember, however, that it is not 2½ per cent on the 100. It is a reduction of 2·52 from the rate of hon. gentlemen opposite in 1896, which is equal to a reduction in the rate of taxation of 14 per cent. To show what that means to the country, let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite that if their rate of 18·28 per cent were levied upon the imports for consumption of last year, it would take from the people $33,490,655, while the duty actually collected was $28, 866,986, or less by $4,623,669 than it would have been at the former rate of taxation. With the reduction in the postal rate, which hon. gentlemen opposite said would amount to $750,000, and with these reductions in the revenue of the country, we find that we have been able to spend millions, which hon. gentlemen opposite lament, we have been able to pay all our ordinary expenditures and we hope all our capital expenditures, and all the expenses of sending our troops to Africa, and come out without adding a dollar to the debt of this country.

Mr. DAVIN. The expenses of the troops were charged to capital.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am explaining that according to the estimate of the Finance Minister, which we think will be realized, not only all the ordinary expenditure of this year, but all the capital expenditure on railways, canals and other objects will be paid out of revenue, and that without adding anything to the burdens of the people at all.

Another point I wish to mention, and it is the last one. Hon. gentlemen say: You pledged yourselves to reduce the public debt. I do not know that we did; but the platform of the Liberal party did recite that we viewed with alarm the great increase of the public debt; and well we might, with deficit after deficit meeting us, and with the debt being added to on the average during the whole eighteen years to the extent of over $6,000,000 a year. As I have pointed out in the four years in which we have been in power, we have not added to the public debt $2,000,000 a year; but in my judgment we have virtually reduced the public debt most materially. If—I say, if, because I have not the means of ascertaining the exact fact—if we have added, as I believe we have, half a million people to the population of this country since we came into power, we have virtually decreased the public debt to the people while nominally adding to it $7,500,000. Why do I judge that we have added half a million people to the population of this country? I ask you, in the first place, to look at the volume of trade. Granted that the people are better off than they were, and no one will deny it; but look at the vast increase in the importations of goods, which means an increased consumption by the people, and that not by displacing goods manufactured in our own country; for every factory, I might say almost without exception from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is busy. The steam whistles all over the country would give the denial to any statement that the production of our home industries is less now than it was before. Everything bears testimony to the fact that there has been an era of great expansion in the manufacturing industries of this country. We find that our home production is greatly enlarged; you read in the papers that there are orders for more goods in many lines than can be got out by the New Year. When we look at our increased importation, at our immigration returns, at the signs of expansion about us in every direction, we must believe that we have added largely to the population of this country, and I think it is not extravagant for me to place that increase at a half a million. If I might use the expressions of hon. gentlemen opposite, I might find confirmation of that belief. I do not wish to distort their remarks, because I know their figures were given in the rough; but more than once the leader of the opposition has spoken of the population of Canada as being now 6,000,000, and the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) last year spoke of Canada as a population of 6,000,000. I do not take so high an estimate; but if when we came into office the population was 5,200,000, and if I put it at 5,700,000 now, I do not think I am out of the way, for the population was 4,800,000, when the census was last taken. I say that the only proper way to measure the debt is at so much per head; and if you take into account half a million people added to the population with the addition of $7,500,000, to the public debt since we came into power, you will find that we have virtually reduced the public debt of this country by $3 per head or $15 per family. Any man knows that if a municipality has a debt of $200,000, and if you double the population of that municipality, and double its wealth and its assessment, you have virtually cut the debt in two as far as the citizens who were in the municipality when the debt was incurred are concerned. The same will hold with the public debt of Canada; and therefore while there has been a nominal addition to it of $7,500,000 in the few years, yet by the increase of population there may have been virtually as explained a material reduction in the public debt.

I do not wish to detain the House further. I thought it was not inappropriate, however, when the House is asking for supplies which some gentlemen think extravagant, that I should point out that there is no need for them to feel any apprehension, and I am sure they will agree with me in complimenting the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock) on the fact that he has not confined his attention to one province or one section, but has gone from the Atlantic to the Pacific, wherever the public needs have required it, and has endeavoured to do that which is in the public interest. As I said before, there is only one thing which the people of this country will ask with regard to this extra expenditure of millions of money. When we tell them we have expended it not by increasing taxation, not by borrowing money or running into debt, but while reducing taxation, all they will say will be: 'All right, if you had the money, and if you spent it wisely where the interests of the country require.'

And our answer is that in all the millions and the tens of millions which we have expended, the gentlemen sitting opposite, men skilled in finance, and imbued largely with the spirit of criticism, have not put themselves on record against any item of that expenditure. I do not know that they are on record against any of the expenditure, except, perhaps in committee. There alone did they venture to move reductions, and then only on a very few of the unimportant items. I think we can accept this as evidence that the expenditures made by us in the past, as well as those we are now providing for, will meet with the approval of the country as they have met with almost the unanimous approval of this House.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. gentleman has treated the House to a nice little pyrotechnical display at the end of the session, but very much like all fireworks, it was made up largely of noise and dissolving views. Certainly no one could admire the hon. gentleman for his logic or the depth of his reasoning. He said that the government had practically reduced the public debt. How did he attempt to prove that? By taking the increase in population and because there were increased numbers to pay the debt therefore the debt was decreased. Well, the net debt stood below $260,000,000 when the present government took office, and it is seven million dollars above to-day, so that the mortgage standing on the farms of this country has been increased to that extent under the regime of the present administration. Let me apply the hon. gentleman's reasoning to a particular case to show its absurdity. Suppose a farmer had mortgaged his farm for $1,000 when he got married, and then increased it during the next twelve years to $1,500, and in the meantime had also increased his family to the extent of twelve children. What would the farmer think if the hon. gentleman would apply to his position the same reasoning that he does to the debt of the country, and say to him: You need not worry, you have practically reduced your mortgage, because, whereas when you incurred your mortgage of $1,000 you were only yourself and your wife, now you are fourteen, including your twelve children, so that your mortgage of $1,500 means very much less per head than did your mortgage of $1,000, and you therefore have reduced it. I do not think that kind of reasoning will go down with our intelligent farming community, and it is a very poor compliment to their intelligence for the hon. gentleman to suppose that he can hoodwink them by any such specious and fallacious argument as that. So, with regard to our public debt, the farmer will see that the mortgage which was standing against his farm, when the present government took office, was $260,- 000,000, whereas to-day it has been increased by $7,000,000, and will come to the conclusion that instead of that mortgage having been reduced it has been increased, and increased in an exceedingly rapid ratio by these hon. gentlemen.

The hon. gentleman says that he is prepared to go to the country and ask for a favourable verdict and base his case on the Trade and Navigation Returns and the public accounts. He certainly will not go before the people on the platform laid down by his party in 1893, and on the broken pledges which have characterized that party ever since it had the opportunity of putting its promises into effect. The hon. gentleman will try to keep those in the background as much as possible, and seek to delude the public with glittering generalities or anything else that will draw a red herring across the track and divert the attention of the electorate from the many broken promises which stand like mile-stones to mark the ruinous course of the present government.

Let us give another illustration of the fallacies and sophistries of the hon. gentleman, to which he has treated us at this the closing hour of the session. He said: I take the trade of this country during the eighteen years our predecessors were in power, and I find that the average annual increase is of that trade very slight, whereas during the four years we have been in power the average annual increase of our trade has been over $50,000,000. Let me draw attention to the object lesson which the Finance Minister gave us with regard to the fluctuations of trade, owing to good times and bad times, extending over these eighteen years. In 1878, under the Mackenzie administration, our trade had reached the lowest point it had ever descended to since confederation. The country was in the slough of despond and its trade aggregated only $150,000,000. During the succeeding years, however, it improved until in 1881 it had reached the highest point it had ever attained in any previous year. Then we had a succession of bad crops, and our trade declined for three or four years in succession and afterwards the reaction set in and it decreased during five or six years. So that during all these eighteen years we have had fluctuations of good and bad times, and in some periods the depression was very low and our export and import trade consequently considerably decreased. And the hon. gentleman takes an average of that eighteen years period of good and bad times and compares it with the average during the past three years, when the crops have been exceptionally good and times have been exceptionally prosperous all over the world. Any one can see at a glance how unfair must be such comparison. In 1896, when these hon. gentlemen took office, the improved condition was apparent especially in the United States where labour and capital were being employed to a greater extent than they had been before in every line, and in addition Providence had blessed us with a bountiful crop. During that and the succeeding three years, trade therefore ran up rapidly until it reached the highest pitch it has ever reached in this country. But was that due to any good management on the part of this government? We need only look at the increase in growth of our natural products to find out the cause of this prosperity. Year after year for the last three years our farmers have been increasing their exports until last season they exported nearly twice as much to foreign countries as they did the year before. This was owing to good crops and greater yield than for many years previous. To-day we have reached an abnormally inflated period, and the turn may come at any moment. In fact, the signs of the times rather indicate that we must look out for some reaction, but to compare these last four years of inflation with the period of eighteen years preceding must strike everybody as a most unfair comparison. But that is the comparison which the hon. gentleman coolly submits to this House, and he was careful to do so at a moment when he believed that no one would stand up to reply to his argument.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I could not think that while you were here.

Mr. SPROULE. We are approaching the end of the present parliamentary term and no doubt before we meet again, we will have gone to the people for their verdict, and I have no doubt that when the people look over the administration of affairs and carefully analyse the course taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, they will come to the conclusion that if the expenditure has been so much higher than it was under the administration of the late government, as is shown, that it is due to bad management on the part of the present administration and not to any other cause.

The hon. gentleman also endeavoured to show that our taxation was less. How did he endeavour to establish that? By taking into the calculation the 22,000,000 bushels of free corn brought into Canada, a large portion of which went out of the country, and adding that into the free goods to the taxable list for the purpose of striking an average to show the customs taxation rate. Is not that unworthy of an hon. gentleman occupying the position of Minister of Customs? But I think the people of Canada will be inclined to ask: How much more have you taken out of our pockets in taxes than your predecessors took? In 1894-5, the Conservative government took from the people, for customs and excise revenue—and these are the taxes that come out of the country—$25,000,000. In 1899-1900, the amount taken was $38,000,000. Yet, the hon. gentleman dares to tell the people that they took less taxes than their predecessors? The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) told the people of Canada, when the taxes amounted to twenty-five millions, that they were being bled white. If so, they are being bled whiter to-day. But, these gentlemen were fond of declaring to the people of Canada that the expenditure must be cut down. In 1896, the total expenditure under the Conservative government was $41,000,000, while, under this government it has reached $53,000,000, an increase of over $12,000,000. I think the people will say: We do not wish you to go to the Trade and Navigation Returns for figures with which to delude us, when the records of public expenditure show that you have actually spent twelve millions more than your predecessors, instead of reducing the expenditure, as you said you would, by two, or three or even four millions. They will also inquire as to the nature of the expenditure; and I think they will decide that that expenditure has been very improvident looking into it. They will find that unusual lines of expenditure have been opened up. For instance, dozens of public works have been started for which small items are voted to-day. But, these works must all be finished—the country is committed to it—and before they are finished the expenditure for these works will run into millions and millions. We vote $5,000 to-day; but we are told that this is only the beginning of the work, and that $50,000, $80,000 or even $100,000 will be necessary to complete it. Then, take the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway voted last year for this purpose over $2,000,000, add that to what we are voting this year and it makes over $7,000,000 to be expended on capital account. This road was built as one of the terms of confederation; but, the contract was that we were to build it, and then it was supposed to be self-supporting—the people of Canada were not to be taxed to keep it up. But now we find that from year to year our debt is largely added to to keep it up—for instead of its being paid out of revenue as it ought to be, it is charged to capital account. Another pernicious principle is giving subsidies to railways that have to be rebuilt. For instance, we have given $500,000 to the Grand Trunk to rebuild the Victoria bridge. The Grand Trunk got a large subsidy to build that bridge when it was first constructed, and they have been taking the earnings of that bridge for their own treasury ever since. But, when it is necessary to rebuild, they come to us to get the money. This is a dangerous precedent; I see no reason why, on the same ground, the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway in the country, should not ask for subsidies with which to rebuild their bridges when they are worn out. I want the people to understand that this is a new and unheard of line of expenditure.

and one that may lead us into no end of trouble in the future.

These hon. gentlemen promised us new markets. But, what new markets have they found? Not one. They thought they had one, when they started the negotiations with Trinidad. But it fell through, like their bottle-necked steamers, their preferential trade and other schemes. Who benefits by their system of preferential trade? The English artisan, the English labourer and the English farmer. And not only is Canada injured in a trade point of view, but she is deprived of what might be a means of gaining advantages in outside markets. We want a preferential trade that will be truly preferential that will give an advantage to our side as well as the other. The present government promised to settle our disputes with the United States, and also to secure a reciprocity treaty. Have they done it? They spent $36,000 wining and dining with the representatives of the United States, but came back with their fingers in their mouths, having presented us with another of their dissolving views. Have they settled the Atlantic shore claims? Have they settled the Behring Sea claims? Have they settled a single dispute with the United States? Not one of them. They have been four years in power and they have not settled one of these disputes, nor have they secured a reciprocity treaty. When they came in they found arrangements completed for a fast Atlantic service, which would be of incalculable benefit to the people. But, with a great flourish of trumpets, they announced they were going to get something better for $700,000 a year less. But their bottle-necked steamers proved only to be another of those dissolving views. And we are told to-day that we cannot get the fast Atlantic service, unless we pay very much more for it than was called for by the contract that would have been carried out had the Conservatives remained in power.

Then, they said our immigration policy was wrong. The hon. member for North Wellington said, when we proposed to vote $200,000 for immigration, that it ought to be cut down by $200,000 and saved to the people. In four years what have they done? This year they have voted $445,000, and last year they voted $435,000 for that purpose. The figures have been creeping up every year since they came into power, and still they are not satisfied, because they want more money in order to give them an opportunity to appoint a greater number of their political heelers to these lucrative offices where they become practically pensioners on the country. I want the people of Canada to remember the promises made by these hon. gentlemen, and ask themselves whether they have been fulfilled. They said they would revise the civil service. Have they done so? No, but they have demoralized the civil service from the highest to the lowest, and have practically starved out some of the best men in the service, refusing to give them annually the $50 statutory increase to which they were entitled. Then they said they were going to do away with superannuation. Have they done so? Why, Sir, the superannuation list last year reached the highest point it has ever reached, by several thousand dollars. They are superannuating men in the prime of life, men who are walking about the streets of Ottawa and Toronto, drawing large pensions from the country, just as well able to work to-day as they ever were. But they are superannuated, and in my judgment, for no other purpose than that of making places for the political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite.

The Minister of Customs said to-night, Look at what the Postmaster General has done for the people of Canada in the reduction of postage. I am willing to give him credit for everything he did that is right; but I would ask the people to look at. I was going to say, the dishonesty of his policy, but I will say, the three-card monte game that was played on the people of Canada when he got out his Jubilee stamp and took nearly $400,000 out of their pockets without giving them a dollar in return. Then he went and cancelled a large number of contracts of men who had a legal right to do certain work, ruthlessly cancelled them and expelled them from their positions, without allowing them an opportunity of testing in the courts the legality of the action of the Postmaster General. I say the whole administration has been characterized by incompetence as a party by corruption in their elections, and by jobbery and extravagance of every kind. Look at the deal they made in the Yukon where, if they had not been headed off by the action of the Upper Chamber, they would have given to certain parties $47,000,000 for the purpose of building a narrow-gauge tramway 150 miles long. Then look at the Crow's Nest Pass Railway out of which a few of their friends that control the organ of the party made about $3,000,000 out of the people of Canada. When I look over the conduct of these gentlemen I shall be very much mistaken if, when they come to be judged by the people, the verdict will not be: Weighed in the balance and found wanting, and their kingdom will be divided and given to others. When that time comes the people will say to hon. gentlemen opposite, who have been charged for the time being with the control of the destinies of our country: You have violated every pledge you made to the people before you came into power, you have shown your incompetence in every line, you have come short of what we expected of you, you have carried on a game of deceiving the people; and I shall be very much mistaken if the people of Canada do not consign them to the cold shades of opposition for eighteen years to come.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Although I can only remain a few minutes longer in the Chamber, I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without saying a few words in reply to the Minister of Customs. The hon. gentleman started out by telling us how the Liberal party had reduced taxation in face of the fact that they had increased it from 1896 to 1900 to the extent of $12,000,000. I want especially to draw attention to this fact, that not only have the Liberal party failed to reduce taxation, but they have very largely increased it. It is the declared policy of the Liberal party not to reduce the taxation of the people. That policy has been declared in this House by the Minister of Finance. It is true that in 1897 they did make some changes, they took off a little here and a little there, but whenever they took off a little in some places they put a good deal more on in other places, and that is the policy of the government. They reduced the duty on lawns and muslins, on fine goods worn by fine people; but they were very careful to add more taxes to the coarse goods worn by the labouring classes of this country. The workingman, the toiler, the farmer, the mechanic, who had to wear his tweed and coarse cotton shirt, was taxed an extra 5 per cent by this government who say they have reduced taxation. They were taxed an extra 5 per cent; but the person who could wear fine goods imported from England was allowed to bring them in at a considerable reduction. They have only reduced taxation for one class, not to the people who are entitled to a reduction. Let me give you the words of the Minister of Finance, and I think they will set forth the policy of the government in an authoritative manner. Speaking in this House on the 20th day of June last, the Minister of Finance said:

When we reduced the tariff in 1897 we made a large number of changes, changes which in the main were in the direction of lower taxation. . . . It was of the utmost importance that we should maintain a strong financial position, and in view of the uncertainties as to the amount of revenue that might be produced by this lower rate of taxation, it became necessary that we should take some steps to make good any possible loss that might result.

The intention was that there should be no possible loss resulting from their changes in the tariff. Quoting again from the Minister of Finance:

It was thought that it might fairly be met by providing for the raising of some additional taxation in order to balance or make good the loss occasioned by the reduction of duties.

He says further:

It was necessary to have an increased revenue in certain directions when we were to lose revenue in other directions.

There is the declared policy of the government that is going to the country to tell the people that they have reduced taxation, a party which declares that it is not now, never was and never will be their policy to reduce the taxation of this country. The very fact that they have increased the taxation by $12,000,000 shows that they are carrying out the policy declared by the Minister of Finance to be the policy of the government, and that was a policy by which, wherever they reduced taxation on one thing, they were to increase it on another to balance up the account. They reduced taxation on certain articles, for instance, that the farmers do not want to use. But, they were very particular to increase taxation on what was absolutely necessary for the farmers use. They added 33½ per cent to the duty on sugar so as to even up what they would lose on some little things they would lose here and there. They added largely to the duty on tobacco, a duty that is paid by about one-fifth of the people of the country, because only about one-fifth of the people consume tobacco. In that way they succeeded in getting over $1,000,000 to balance up some little reductions they made here and there in their tariff changes. So, I say they have nothing to boast of before the people of this country. They have no right to go before the people of the country and tell them that they have reduced taxation or that they have ever intended to reduce taxation. Their policy is to spend more money simply because they have taken more money in taxes out of the people. Surely the people will have something to say about that. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the people believe that the true policy of the country is simply to pay taxes for the pleasure of seeing the government spend money, the people will have an opportunity of pronouncing on that question, and I believe that when they have that opportunity they will tell the hon. gentlemen that they are tired of seeing their money spent on bridges, and harbours and rivers where there is no water. This is the only item that I feel called upon to refer to. I regret that I am obliged to leave the Chamber; otherwise I would have liked to have taken up many questions to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I think the hon. Minister of Customs would have shown a great deal more common sense had he retained his seat and not made the absurd statements that he did. The statement that the country is satisfied because taxation has been increased by $12,000,000 is about as absurd as the statement that we are reducing the national debt when we are increasing it.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I confess that I cannot but agree with the sentiment that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has expressed regarding the speech of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). The hon. Minister of Customs is a man of great experience. He has been a long time in parliament, he is a man of great ability, he is a powerful man, as we know, on the platform, and he has been accustomed for something like thirty or thirty-five years to deal with public questions. Bearing that in mind, what impression must have been made upon those who listened to the hon. gentleman, and what impression will be made on the people of the country when they read what he has uttered this evening in the press or in Hansard? I will just give a resumé of his speech. You have only to do that to see the very ridiculous position in which he is placed for all time. Bearing in mind the history of the last four years, and the utterances of the hon. gentleman, no critic or historian will record what the hon. gentleman has uttered here to-night without asking whether or not some malignant power had not struck the brain-pan of the hon. gentleman for the time being and reduced it below that high level at which it commonly stood. The hon. gentleman went on to say that our imports and exports had increased. He compared the imports and exports at present with the imports and exports in 1896. He went on and said: We are spending $12,000,000 this year more than our predecessors spent and more than we spent last year. What did he say then? He said: We point with pride to this expenditure. We point with pride to this $12,000,000 of excessive expenditure. Then he said: Look at the surplus; we have $7,500,000 of a surplus, and he said that it was a thing whereof to glory. Mr. Speaker, you have been for years a colleague of the hon. gentleman and you know that he has always professed to be a financial critic. He stood up and said: Look at the surplus. Then he went on and talked about taxation. He actually stated that the taxation had been decreased. He stated that for the present year the average taxation on the aggregate imports is 15.76 per cent, but when I asked him whether or not he took into account the large amount of corn that was brought into this country for the purpose of exportation, and which he was counting amongst the imports, he said no, he had not calculated what difference that would make. We know that it would make a difference of about 1.80 per cent in his calculations. I am quite sure that when my hon. friend has, to-morrow morning, gone through his devotions and his mind reverts to what he stated here to-night, namely, that their promise was not to reduce the amount of taxation, but to reduce the rate of taxation, when he remembers that he said that, I think that his reflections will be sicklied o'er with something paler than the cast of thought, and that penitential vows will go up to heaven to the recording angel to beg of him not to make too deep a record of what the hon. gentleman said here to-night. The hon. gentleman surely must remember what was his experience when he went to Winnipeg. He at Winnipeg rehearsed the audacious attitude that has characterized him here to-night. Did it have any effect on the people of Winnipeg or upon the people of the North-west Territories? No, Sir, although he is one of the foremost orators in the camp of the Liberal party, although he was associated with the minister from the west, and although he had some of the comic talent of the outfit with him, he was not able in many places to get anything like a respectable audience to listen to the extraordinary utterances, a premonition of which had been given in the Winnipeg speech. Mr. Martin, who was an old colleague, and still a Liberal of the Liberals, standing on the same platform, afterwards tore into shreds his attitude and utterances on the tariff, tore into shreds his attitude and utterances in regard to expenditure; and showed in its true light the extraordinary and fatuous audacity of the hon. gentleman on that platform, and the fatuous audacity which has been outdone by him here to-night.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It would have done your heart good to see our meeting at Regina, when you never ventured to come out.

Mr. DAVIN. From what I have heard, I do not think it would have done my heart any harm. I rather think I would have been much pleased, because I heard exactly the way the Regina audience regarded the utterances of my hon. friend and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). Oh, for one hour of blind old Dandolo! Oh, for one hour of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in his old form; only to reply to that speech which we have just heard! Let me read an utterance with regard to what the policy of the Liberal party was to be if they got into power in 1889:

We are taking $6,115,000 more in taxes out of the people than we should, and we spent $7,571,000 more than we should. An era of economy in expenditure should be at once entered upon.

Who uttered that? The Hon. William Paterson? Does he recognize his language? Or is he like that person mentioned in the epistle of the great apostle who looks in the glass and then goes away and straightway forgets what manner of man he was? Now, Sir, sitting near the hon. gentleman is a leader of the Liberal party, and here is what he said at one time:

For my own part, I do not hesitate to tell him that I consider a yearly expenditure of $40,000,000 or $38,000,000 altogether too large for the present resources of Canada. I say that it is a disgrace and a shame to the government who have been entrusted with our affairs that they come down to us and ask for an expenditure of $38,000,000 a year for federal purposes. Sir, the thing is utterly unjustifiable.

That was Sir Richard Cartwright.

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. With the present resources.

Mr. DAVIN. Are the resources any different?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIN. What the hon. gentleman means by that is this, that the resources of Canada to-day are different from what they were a few years ago, because we happen to have—in consequence mainly of the higher prices—a larger amount paid for imports. Certainly we have not a very much larger amount in the quantity of imports: but we are paying very much more for the imports that are coming in than we did in previous years, and therefore, collecting larger revenue. So that the position of our people is this, that they are paying a larger amount for the goods imported, and, in consequence of paying higher prices, they are paying higher duties on those goods than ever before; and yet the hon. gentleman thinks that because that is the case, our resources are different. Canada was ten years or fifteen years ago what it is to-day, a country of vast resources, whose inchoate wealth is simply incalculable; but, Sir, in these resources Canada is in no different material position to-day than it was when these words were uttered. What has happened is that we have had a period of great prosperity; and what is the attitude taken by the hon. Minister of Customs, who should be a financier, and who is himself a commercial man? What is the attitude taken by the government? Not, I believe, on my honour, with the hearty consent of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I believe if the Minister of Trade and Commerce could have had his way, he would have entered upon a period of economy. We would have used the time of prosperity to cut down the taxation, as has been done in England by great financiers like Sir Robert Peel and Mr. Gladstone. Why, Sir, when you have prosperity, and when you have the consequence of prosperity an abounding income, that is the time not to go into reckless extravagance, not to take Mr. Tarte's view: 'We have spent much, because we have made much.' We have made much—that is the tone of the hon. gentleman, who is evidently taking his inspiration from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). Look, he said, at our surplus of $7,500,000. It is a burning disgrace to Canada and to the government that they have a surplus of $7,500,000. Everybody knows that a Finance Minister who cannot adjust taxation so nicely to the needs of the country that income and expenditure will about balance, shows his incapacity. If you want to know what should be thought of a surplus, I will give you the opinion of a man whose opinion you must take. In 1894 a gentleman in this House uttered these words:

Why, Sir, you heard the hon. gentleman driven to the expedient of giving it as an evidence of prosperity—

Just as my hon. friend has done—

—that during the last fifteen years which the country has been under a protective regime, the finances of the country balanced year after year by surpluses which now aggregate to the enormous sum of $20,000,000. This fact, which I do not hesitate to say to the hon. gentleman, is nothing short of a disgrace and a shame for the administration, was treated by him as a boast.

Who uttered these words? I am quoting from a speech of Mr. Laurier, now Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Prime Minister, delivered in this House in the debate on the address of 1894. But what he was condemning were moderate surpluses aggregating $20,000,000 over a period of fifteen years. So that an average surplus of something like $750,000, according to that hon. gentleman, is a disgrace. But the Minister of Customs says, look at our surplus of $7,500,000. If an average surplus of $750,000 was in the opinion of the present Prime Minister a disgrace, what would he say if he spoke out his own thoughts of the surplus of the Finance Minister this year, which I say is a burning shame, and a thing which stamps him as utterly unfit, either morally or intellectually, I will not say which, to have charge of the finances of the country. Mr. Laurier went on:

I assert that such a condition of things is a shame and a disgrace to any government. In England the aim and the purpose of the Chancellor of the Exchequer is so to calculate the expense and the expenditure as to make them balance evenly, and the reputation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer would be lost for ever if, year after year, his calculations were found to be wrong.

Well, Sir, apply that to this government. The only mortal thing they have to boast of is that the country is prosperous. They stand before the country convicted of falsehood to all their pledges. And the hon. gentleman is actually forced to get up here and say that he never promised to reduce the bulk but only the rate. I have quoted his own words and shown that that was not the case.

If, instead of having just the revenue which was wanted to meet the expenditure, it was found that there was such a disparity in his calculations as exists in Canada, the reputation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer would be lost for ever, unless he was able to show that the discrepancy arose from a sudden disturbance in the condition of business.

That is just what this government cannot say.

I consider that these surpluses represent $20,000,000 of unjust taxation which has been wrung by the government from the consumers of the country, which should have been left in the pockets of the people for the purposes of their own business, for instance, to be applied to reducing the mortgages with which this country has been plastered during that term of years.

And, Sir, with that seven and a half million dollars of surplus, what have we done? We have voted millions of money to be charged to capital account. One of the items charged to capital account is $5,000 for a snow fence. You might as well charge to capital account and the future the cost of your pocket-handkerchief. But that is the way that this boasted surplus is made up. But the schoolmaster has been abroad, and the hon. gentleman must not think that the people of Canada are so benighted that the government can go seriously before them, as the friends of free trade and the engineers of great advance and expansion. They stand condemned by the evidence of their own Prime Minister and have heaped on taxes when they should have been reducing them. Let me quote what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

If we get into power we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie, and I say that although we may not be able to bring the expenditures to what they were under him, we can reduce the amount two, yes, three millions of dollars per year.

Is there any talk about rating in that? Is not that a promise to reduce the bulk of the expenditure? And yet the hon. gentleman will try to impress the people with the view that such a promise was never made.

I want to call attention to the falsification of the promises made by these hon. gentlemen, and which has special interest for that part of the country whence I come. The right hon. the First Minister promised that the protective system would be swept away, and he specifically promised that the duties on agricultural implements would be removed, that we should have cheap coal oil, and that the duties on the cheaper cottons would be removed. But what are the facts to-day? Let me give a few of the items:

	Conservative tariff.	Present tariff.
Farm machinery .....	20 per cent.	20 per cent.
Soft coal .....	60c. per ton	53c. per ton
Burning oil .....	6c. per gal.	5c. per gal.

But they have handed us over body and bones to the Standard Oil Company, and the result is that we are paying more for our coal oil than we ever did.

	Conservative tariff. per cent.	Present tariff. per cent.
Boots and shoes .....	25	25
Manufactures of brass .....	30	30
Carpets .....	25 & 30	35
Gray cottons .....	22½	25
White cottons .....	25	25
Printed cottons .....	30	35
Sewing cottons .....	12½	15
Woollen clothing .....	*25	36

*And 5 cents per pound.

Here are items that come home to the business men and the farmers of the Northwest Territories, and in regard to which we have specific promises broken, just as was the promise of reduction in expenditure.

and the promise to cut down the upas tree of protection.

Let me compare the expenditure during four years under Liberal-Conservative government and the expenditure of the present government. The expenditure on consolidated revenue, as may be seen by the public accounts of the year 1899, page XV-a, was as follows :

1892-3.....	$26,814,052
1893-4.....	37,585,025
1894-5.....	38,232,005
1895-6.....	36,949,142

Compare those with the figures under the present administration :

1896-7.....	$38,349,759
1897-8.....	38,832,525
1898-9.....	41,903,500
1899-1900.....	43,175,000

Take the current fiscal year, we have had a statement made of the expenditure for the eleven months, which shows an increase of $1,121,630 over the corresponding eleven months of the previous year, and taking the estimates of the Minister of Finance, given in his budget speech—which in the previous years of his administration were below the mark—we have a current expenditure for this year of about forty-three and a half million dollars.

Let me now take capital expenditure. If you will turn to the Public Accounts for 1899, page XV-a, you will find that the capital expenditure for the years of Conservative rule were as follows :

1892-3.....	$3,088,317
1893-4.....	3,862,969
1894-5.....	3,030,490
1895-6.....	3,781,311

But, Sir, after the change of government we see such an increase in the sums charged to capital account, that there is not a Liberal in the country with any stake in the country, or with any fair sense of what is for the good of the country, who is not shocked at the increase. The following are the figures of capital expenditure under the present administration :

1896-7.....	$3,523,160
1897-8.....	4,143,503
1898-9.....	5,936,342
1899-1900 (Mr. Fielding's estimate) .....	9,875,000

This last figure is the Finance Minister's own estimate. Fancy, nearly ten million dollars, charged to capital account made up of such items as $5,000 for a snow fence. With regard to the burden of taxation, on which the hon. gentleman tried, as I say, insincerely, to cover over with a cloak the promises of himself and his government, if you look at the Public Accounts for 1899, page L-1, and the hon. gentleman's own Trade and Navigation Returns for 1899, page 6, you will find that the taxes in the years of Conservative rule, were as follows :

Mr. DAVIN.

Liberal-Conservative Taxes.

	Customs.	Excise.	Total.
1893-4 .....	$19,379,822	$8,381,088	$27,760,910
1894-5 .....	17,887,269	7,805,732	25,693,001
1895-6 .....	20,219,037	7,926,005	28,145,042

But, take what we find under the Liberal regime, this regime that was to cut down the expenditure by three millions, and to keep down taxation. We find that the figures were as follows :

Liberal Taxes.
	Customs.	Excise.	Total.
1896-7 .....	$19,891,996	$9,170,378	$29,072,374
1897-8 .....	22,157,788	7,871,562	30,029,350
1898-9 .....	25,734,228	9,641,227	35,375,455

And the hon. gentleman in his own speech stated the amount that would be received for customs up to the 30th of June last, was between $28,000,000 and $29,000,000. And he boasted of it, and seemed to rejoice in it. With his record before him, with his promises and those of his leader and colleagues before him, with sound principles of government and finance before him, he ought to have been ashamed that though a member of this government, he has not been able to effectively protest in council against the course of the Finance Minister; he has not been able to persuade his colleagues to adopt such a wise system of finance and taxation as would enable him to say: The country is prosperous, we have an adequate revenue, and yet I have cut down taxation and reduced the burdens upon the people. Comparing 1896 with 1899, we have the following :

Increase in customs taxes .....	$5,515,191
“ excise taxes.....	1,715,222
Total increase of taxes .....	7,230,413

The hon. gentleman talked about population, and said that he believed the population had increased considerably. Take his own estimate of the population as found in his own volume, the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1899, page 7, and you find the taxation per head as follows :

	Customs.	Excise.	Total.
1895-6 .....	$3 94	$1 54	$5 48
1896-7 .....	3 83	1 77	5 60
1897-8 .....	4 22	1 50	5 72
1898-9 .....	4 84	1 80	6 64

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What page is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) reading from ?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman will find this at page 7 of the Trade and Navigation Returns.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is not my own book, that is the Tory campaign book that he is reading from.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, if the Tory campaign book can make a damning arraignment of the present government by quoting from the hon. gentleman's own blue-book, how can the government stand before the country when they are called to account on platform after platform?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman said he was reading from the Trade and Navigation Returns.

Mr. DAVIN. I told the hon. minister (Mr. Paterson) that what I was reading would be found at page 7 of the Trade and Navigation Returns.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The reference is right.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, what does the hon. gentleman mean?

Mr. TAYLOR. Here is a Grit campaign book. Read the cover.

Mr. DAVIN. It is called 'Political Pointers No. 2.' I have glanced through it. They have no defence for their tergiversations, for their falsehood to their promises, and they go back in the history of this country to try to indict men, some of whom have passed out of public life and some of whom are dead. Actually one of their emissaries was in the library trying to find out whether Sir John A. Macdonald had signed an annexation manifesto some fifty years gone by. Now, here are some more of the achievements of the Liberal government:

They settled the Manitoba school question, which was a subject of so much racial and religious controversy, and which seriously threatened the peace and welfare of the Dominion.

Have they settled it?

They adopted a tariff which materially reduced the rate of taxation, promoted domestic and foreign trade, did no injustice to any class, and has been the means of restoring prosperity to the people.

They 'adopted' a tariff; 'adopted' is the right word. When you adopt a child, for instance, you take him from another family and you call the child your own, and that is what these hon. gentlemen did. Instead of giving a new birth as they promised, instead of giving a tariff for revenue as they promised, they adopted the Tory tariff. But it did not do what it did under those who managed it before. The ex-Minister of Finance knocked off $3,000,000 at once on sugar. When our friends were in power they tried to adapt the tariff to the conditions of the country, and if the country was prosperous and enabled them to do it, they reduced the taxation. But hon. gentlemen come in and they adopt the tariff, and they do not know how to manage it, and the consequence is we have these riotous surpluses. They have increased the taxes on the cheaper cottons, on tobaccos, on things used by the masses of the people, and they have relieved the rich on some of their luxuries.

They granted imports from Great Britain a substantial preference.

Now, if I had time I could show that that is utterly false, that so far from that being the case every item in this book (the Trade and Navigation Returns) proves that the tariff has been more favourable to the United States than to England; and while imports from England have increased at a certain percentage, imports from the United States have increased still more.

They sent contingents of Canadian volunteers to help the motherland in the Transvaal.

Isn't it beautiful? After dodging it, after trying not to do it, then, when forced to do it by the powerful will of Sir Charles Tupper and the rising tide of public feeling, they turn round and boast of what they have done. You have often heard of the man who was in a shanty with a loft overhead to which a ladder was attached, and when a bear came in he ran up the ladder and drew it after him, but his wife took a broom and beat the bear out. Then he came down and took hold of his wife's hand and said: Didn't we do that well? That is the way they sent soldiers to the Transvaal. On page 6 of this campaign sheet I find:

They gave the people an opportunity to express their minds on the prohibition question.

Why, Sir, I thought the people always had an opportunity of expressing their minds. The hon. gentleman refers to the squandering of a quarter of a million of money on a piece of blatant humbug, for no other reason than to protect the present Prime Minister from the necessity of saying yes or no to a question whether he would give prohibition. When they determined to give a plebiscite it was thought it would fulfil its purpose, because their plan was to go to the country before they could have a session subsequent to the plebiscite being taken. Unfortunately for them the plebiscite being taken showed a clean majority of some 13,000 votes cast for prohibition, for the policy which they promised the people would be carried out. Then, having had a session, they come here and say: The majority is not large enough, we expected you would give a bigger majority than that. Did they hold that out before the people when they said: We will give you a plebiscite? No, Sir, that plebiscite is like the rest of their policy, from the time they entered office to this hour. Take the session of 1896, the session of 1898, the session of 1899, take this session, and take all their utterances, even those that we heard to-night; they have always the same boundless belief in the gullibility of the people, and in humbug. I have more faith in the good sense of the people than hon. gentlemen. I have not so much faith in humbug as hon. gentlemen seem to have, and I do not believe that you can found a policy or a government on diplomatic mendacity, however charmingly it may be put before the people.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is a good peroration.

Mr. DAVIN. I never make perorations. I leave perorations to others. I have made many speeches, but I have never done such a thing as that. When I have finished what I have to say down I sit. I leave these puerilities to my hon. friend and others. I think I have done enough to show to the House and the country that the hon. gentleman would have done well with such a case and at such a time, to have kept silent.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

The following resolutions were adopted:

1. Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1900, the sum of $2,264,728 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1901, the sum of $36,131,735.03 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

SUPPLY BILL.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 196) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending June 30, 1900 and 1901, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to. Bill read the first and second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

WORKMEN'S WAGES ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Mulock :

'That it be resolved that all government contracts should contain such conditions as will prevent abuses, which may arise from the subletting of such contracts, and that every effort should be made to secure the payment of such wages as are generally accepted as current in each trade for competent workmen in the district where the work is carried out, and that this House cordially concurs in such policy, and deems it the duty of the government to take immediate steps to give effect thereto. It is hereby declared that the work to which the foregoing policy shall apply includes not only work undertaken by the government itself, but also all works aided by grant of Dominion public funds.' The motion of Mr. Clarke in amendment thereto, and the motion of Mr. Campbell in amendment to said amendment.

Mr. DAVIN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the question was raised whether this amendment of Mr. Campbell was in order ; because it will be seen that what it does is really directly to negative the amendment. I would like to have your decision.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot say that I see anything in the amendment that is not applicable to the original motion.

Mr. DAVIN. Is it in proper form as an amendment ?

Mr. SPEAKER. My view, speaking for myself, is that it is in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. Now that the Prime Minister is present, I am quite satisfied that the Postmaster General will not insist on going on with this resolution. He cannot insist on it and get it through. The oppositon are few in number, but they are prepared to go on all night, if necessary, and if you introduce a Bill you will not get prorogation to-morrow. The hon. Postmaster General has introduced this resolution to make political capital, and in asking that it should be put through after the Supply Bill has passed, he is trespassing on good nature. We have allowed the Supply Bill to go through, and now it is time that the House should rise.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am a little surprised at my hon. friend's objection to this policy, for which I expected his co-operation.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the country approves of it if the hon. gentleman does not.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, the hon. gentleman ought to have put it through before. It has been on the paper over a month.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is only eleven o'clock, we are accustomed to late hours, and this is a subject of great importance.

Mr. TAYLOR. You should have put it through a month ago, when we had plenty of time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A subject of such importance as this is entitled to be dealt with in a respectful way in this House, and I think we could not more fittingly close this session than by affirming the principle announced in this resolution. I am sure it will commend itself to this House and the country, and be productive of great good, and I fail to understand the reason for any hostility to it. I hope my hon. friend will recede from his attitude, which is a hasty one, and will join with us in unanimously expressing the assent of parliament to this policy.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) who has been leading the opposition, left for home a few moments ago with the statement that there would be nothing further done to-night; and certainly I am not going to take the responsibility in his absence of allowing this measure to be proceeded with.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Who gave the assurance on behalf of the government that there would be nothing further done to-night? If any one on behalf of the government made any such promise to any member of the House, of course we will observe it.

Mr. TAYLOR. He certainly did leave the impression that the hon. Postmaster General if he wanted to do something for the labouring men of this country, would not wait until the dying hours of a session lasting five months and eighteen days.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand that the hon. Postmaster General means to bring in a Bill if this resolution passes?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is, therefore, under a complete misapprehension on that point.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, what is the good of your resolution?

Mr. DAVIN. It will be remembered that I myself suggested, when this question was up before, that it should be embodied in a Bill, and then the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) moved his amendment to that effect. If the hon. gentleman introduced a Bill embodying this clause, I would support it; but I do not see the value of a mere resolution. It is only an academic thing, and it can only be hung up for some purpose other than a practical one. If the hon. gentleman is sincere in wishing to put this resolution into practical effect in this country, the proper thing is to bring in a Bill and have it embodied in every contract connected with the railway subsidies we have voted. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) the other night asked the Minister of Railways whether he would embody this resolution in the contracts connected with the railway subsidies which were given to a large number of companies, and the Minister of Railways said he would consider it; but he never gave an answer to my hon. friend from Winnipeg. I think there is a great deal in what the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says, that at this period of the session, when we have gone through all the work, and when there is hardly anybody here, it is not fair nor right for the hon. gentleman to press a motion which will lead to controversy. I could not support the resolution, but I would support a Bill embodying the resolution.

An hon. MEMBER. What is the difference?

Mr. DAVIN. The difference appears to be this. To pass that resolution does not make it at all necessary that it shall be embodied in contracts, whereas, if we pass a Bill with one or two clauses in it, providing absolutely that such and such things shall be done, I apprehend that the result would be very different. When my hon. friend put this resolution on the paper, I made a point of inquiring into the way this matter had worked in England, and I brought it to the attention of the House the fact that hundreds and hundreds of contracts were made, and great firms worked out great undertakings, without taking any account of the resolution that had been passed in the English House. I heard the report, which I know the hon. gentleman also read, which was made at the instance of Mr. Buxton, who had a commission of inquiry on the subject.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A committee of the House?

Mr. DAVIN. Well, a committee will do as well. I read the report of the committee and the evidence, and I came to the conclusion that there would have been a very different tale to tell if there had been a Bill making the regulation imperative, and not a mere resolution. Take for instance, Ireland. It was found that the resolution was disregarded entirely in Ireland, and if we are to go into this matter, I must ask the hon. gentleman to allow me to send for the report, for I am sure the House has forgotten what took place in debate on the 22nd March, and would like to know what was reported by that English committee. I do not think, under the circumstances, that it is fair to press the resolution at this time. The hon. minister had plenty of opportunity to press this resolution earlier in the session, when the House was complete, and certainly should not press it now when it is almost denuded of its members. To show the great probability there is of this resolution being utterly disregarded, let me refer to the Alien Labour law, which has been on our statutes some years, and which so far has been a dead letter. If these hon. gentlemen have not been able to enforce one of the laws of this country, how can we expect them to put in force a simple resolution. For my part, I abhor this whole system of promising to the ear and breaking to the fact. It is neither creditable to the government nor conducive to improve the morale of the people. If the government is sincere, why did they not take the hint of the hon. member for Winnipeg and have a resolution to this effect attached as a condition to all their railway grants. We have voted $3,900,000 in bonuses to railways, and such a resolution as this could easily have been made a condition of each grant. The government cannot say that it was not brought to their attention, because the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) tried to impress the importance of this on the Minister of Railways, and that

hon. gentleman said he would consider, but, as is his habit, utterly failed to keep his promise. If the government would bring in a Bill instead of a resolution, I would support it, and I would ask the hon. minister to confer for a short time with the Solicitor General and bring in a Bill, and we will put it through. But I do not want at the dying hours of the session, to be a party to a thing that is perfectly illusory and calculated to become a dead sea apple in the mouth of the labour of this country.

Amendment (Mr. Campbell) to the amendment (Mr. Clarke), agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is now on the amendment (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. TAYLOR. I think that motion should stand until to-morrow morning when the ex-Minister of Railways will be here. Any person will know that the thing is a piece of buncombe from the start to the finish. It was put on the Order paper months ago, and was taken up in the House on the 22nd of March. Amendments were offered and voted down by the government, amendments intended to put the proposal into shape so that it would be of some benefit to the workingmen. Since then, the railway subsidies have come down and have been voted without these conditions being put in. The government is erecting a building in Vancouver to-day, and I have letters from there that aliens are working on that work while our men are walking the streets there and cannot get a job. This morning, I read a letter from the oarsmen of my own town, Gananoque, saying that they were being driven out of work by alien oarsmen. And yet, on the other hand, when a number of our students from Kingston went across and took employment as waiters in one of the hotels, they were driven back across the line by the officers enforcing the Alien Labour law. Why do not the government enforce our Alien Labour law which is workable except that it depends upon the government itself? The Prime Minister promised that he would give us a law, line for line and word for word the same as the American law; but he has failed to carry out that promise. He has not given us a real effective law, though our workingmen have frequently petitioned for the enforcement of it. Besides the case of the oarsmen, I brought up not long ago the case in Prescott, which was one of the most outlandish cases ever known. The Prime Minister himself said that this case ought to be dealt with, yet nothing has been done. The government want this resolution passed so that these petitions may be put into government contracts. But they have the power to do this without any action on the part of this House. Why do they not put it in the Railway Subsidies Bill? It is simply an attempt to humbug the workingmen of this country, but they are too intelligent to be humbugged in that way. Though this resolution was on the paper on the 22nd of June it is not pressed until now, the 17th of July, after the Supply Bill has been passed and we are only waiting for the Senate to concur in the amendments made in some of the Bills passed in this House and for Black Rod to rap at the door for prorogation. The government tries to humbug the workingmen by saying: Here is what we tried to do for you, but the opposition would not let it pass. Of course the government could force it through if they wish to, but I should think they would yield to the suggestion that they should not force it through until the ex-Minister of Railways, who is leading this side of the House, is present.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I shall not address myself to the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that this is a mere sham. The hon. gentlemen are at liberty to have any opinion they like upon that. The propriety of having such a resolution affirmed in the House must be manifest to any person who gives fair consideration to the preparing of contracts for the erection of public buildings. The incorporation of the principle of this resolution in the contracts necessarily means the payment of larger wages to employees, and, therefore, that public works will cost the country something more. It is, therefore, extremely proper that before the principle of this resolution is incorporated in public contracts, as a matter of permanent policy it should receive the sanction of parliament. When it receives the sanction of parliament, it is a mandate and authority to the government to incorporate such a condition in government contracts; and, if this House sanctions the resolution, the principle of it will be lived up to by the government. My hon. friends opposite ask why this provision is not incorporated in the Act, respecting subsidies to railways. If they had been as attentive to find out what is in that Act as to assert what is not in it, they would have found that there is a provision to the effect that the granting of these subsidies shall be upon such conditions as may be set forth in the agreement between the government and the railways respecting such subsidies. If this resolution receives the sanction of the House, it will be the duty of the government and the Minister of Railways, representing the government, to incorporate the provisions of this resolution in the agreements relating to railway subsidies, and it will become one of the conditions regulating the right of railways to receive subsidies. This resolution expressly states that the fair wages principle shall apply to all works aided by subsidies of public money. If hon. gentlemen opposite desire this condition to be incorporated in these subsidies, let this resolution receive their approval and it will become the duty of the government to live up to it in their dealings with the railways. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has referred to the experience of the Imperial government in connection with a similar resolution. My recollection of that experience is very different from his. In 1891, the Imperial parliament unanimously passed a resolution word for word such as this, except that it did not apply to subsidized works. In 1896-7, that parliament appointed a committee to inquire into the working of the resolution; and the finding of that committee was to the effect that the departments of the Imperial government had very substantially applied it in their government contracts. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) asks for an Act in one breath, and, in the next, says that an Act would not be binding upon us. When this subject was under discussion some months ago, the Prime Minister, dealing with this very proposition about the passing of an Act, pointed out that it was much better to leave it in the form of a resolution, because it afforded more elasticity and would enable the government to meet the various conditions, and not have a cast-iron set of words that would not fit in properly into some contracts. The words may have to be changed, but the principle is applicable to every government contract, and no Act is required in order to give the government a mandate to apply this principle. Already conditions have been drawn and are now in the departments, embodying the principle of the resolution, and current advertisements for public works are subject to the conditions of this resolution. But before we make the country pay more for these public works, as it will be necessary to do from the increase of wages, it is right that the government should have the sanction of this House. Already the principle has been introduced into one public work, involving a considerable expenditure, I refer to the St. Andrew's Rapids in Manitoba. Tenders had been invited without this condition, but the government decided to recall the advertisements, to readvertise for tenders subject to the conditions of this resolution. We have opened the tenders, and they are here to-day, and I want to have that contract executed with the terms of this resolution proposition embodied in it.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the contract given yet?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. I want the authority of parliament before putting the country to the extra expense involved in applying these conditions in that contract. But hon. gentlemen opposite are unwilling to give us their endorsement. I regret it. In England the House unanimously agreed to this principle, and I hope that even yet, my hon. friends will reverse their attitude, and now, at the close of this session, let us agree upon a measure of such great importance and utility to the working classes. There are now current many other advertisements for public works throughout Canada. All the tenders that have been invited since this resolution was placed upon the Notice paper have been subject to the conditions involved in this fair wages resolution. These contracts are about to be let. Are we to have the authority of parliament to incorporate this fair wages resolution in these contracts? If this resolution passes there will be an obligation upon us, not only in respect to the advertised contracts, but all future contracts, to make them subject to this resolution. Now, on what principle do my hon. friends object? They say no good will come of it. Well, surely no harm can come of it, and if we do not live up to it, what a weapon they will have in their hands against us. I cannot, however, admit their charge of bad faith as having any foundation. The government have taken it up in good faith, with the full purpose of advancing the welfare of the industrial classes of Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the country will be grateful to us for having drawn such a strong and emphatic statement from the Postmaster General, who is the father of this resolution, strongly pledging himself and pledging the government to make this resolution operative. He tells us also that in the Railway Subsidies Bill there is a clause that refers to this matter, and by implication, therefore, he promises that this clause will be embodied in all these railway transactions. He has given us his assurance, and he speaks for the government in the presence of the Premier, that in all future works this clause will be put into operation. I think with an emphatic statement like that we are in almost as good a position as if the hon. gentleman had acted on my suggestion, and given us a Bill. Under these circumstances, I shall not oppose the clause. If the clause is carried out, it will do all that I hoped would be done by an Act of parliament, because we on this side of the House are as anxious as any hon. gentleman opposite to secure to every workingman a fair wage for a fair day's work. The hon. gentleman will remember that on March 22, when I took part in the debate, I pointed out that my object was to have this House take such action as would secure a great boon to the workingmen of Canada, with whom the party with which I act, has always had the strongest sympathy.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—DEATH OF LIEUT. BORDEN.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to move that the House adjourn. Before this motion is put, I am sure the House will agree that I may properly take this opportunity of confirming the sad rumour which has been circulated through the corridors of the House this afternoon, to the effect that Lieutenant Borden, son of the Minister of Militia and Defence, met his death yesterday in South Africa. The rumour is unfortunately too true. This afternoon His Excellency received a telegram from Lord Roberts, informing him that yesterday, near Pretoria, Lieutenant Borden was killed in action. Lieutenant Borden was a young man who enlisted recently to fight for the Queen in South Africa. He was only 23 years of age, a young man of great promise, athletic in figure, bright, intelligent, a model boy in every way. He had, as I am informed, already made a mark in his career, attracting the attention of his chiefs by his coolness under fire, by his daring, by his courage, and had won the affections of his comrades by his amiable disposition. This precious life has been cut short by the uncertainties of war. Now, this event, I am sure, will reach the heart of every member of this House. He is the son of a prominent member of this administration, of an old member of this House, and of a popular member, and, as I am reminded, the only son. Whatever bitterness there may be of strife, I am sure that before such a misfortune all such bitterness disappears and that on both sides of the House friends and foes will unite in offering to the bereaved father and to the bereaved mother that sympathy which can be the only solace of such a misfortune on this side of the grave.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I wish that the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) were in his place, in order that he might echo the sentiments which have been so fitly expressed by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). A great statesman, Sir, belonging to Athens said that of great men who died the whole earth seemed to be the mausoleum. I think it may be said, that, of even the humblest hero who under modern conditions dies on the battlefield, the whole earth is his mausoleum, because the civilized world seems to be in attendance and to watch what is going forward, and I am sure there is not a man in Canada, or for that matter, in the British Empire, but will have heard of the death of this young man, just 23 years, with all the budding hopes of youth, and already crowned with valour, whose death is so untimely, and who yet died so grandly, with sympathy for his family, and especially, here in this House, will that sympathy be felt for his distinguished father. I would for my part, personally, as well as, if I may speak for this side of the House, express our great regret, and yet mixed with that regret there is a sort of gratulation and pride that the son of a member of our own body and a member of our government, fighting for the empire, although his family are bereaved and his country has lost his valuable life, yet has won the great prize of death in battle.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 18, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg to inform the House that I have received a letter from His Excellency the Governor General's Secretary, which is as follows:—

Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
Ottawa, July 17, 1900.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber, to prorogue the session of the Dominion parliament, on Wednesday, the 18th instant, at three o'clock.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant.

L. G. DRUMMOND, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

CASES OF DUBE AND CAZES.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if we are likely to get the papers in the case of Cazes to-day?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No. The papers are being copied, but will not be ready for some time. The record is very voluminous.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). That is an extraordinary thing. I read that the report of Judge Bossé was printed, and that is the only thing that my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) desires to have. The other papers are not important. It was represented to be entirely different from what had been stated by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). He said that the report of the judge was distinctly more in favour of commutation in the case of Cazes, and very hard in the case of Dubé. By the account I read, it was the very reverse—that he was more lenient in the case of Dubé than in the case of Cazes. The report is very short, and I am sure it should be brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER. This shows that it is not well to form an opinion on mere fly sheets of that kind. I have been told—I have not seen it myself—that a report purporting to be that of Judge Bossé had been put in Le Journal. But, there are two reports in the case of Cazes.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Then, we cannot hope to have the papers here this session?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, but as soon as the return is complete, we may give it to the press.

SUSPENSION OF SITTING—AMENDMENT TO CRIMINAL CODE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There are some little things yet to be done, but I propose that the sitting be suspended until two o'clock.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Before that motion is put, I would ask the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) whether he received the information that was ordered for me respecting the amendment to the Criminal Code?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I asked the proper official of the department to give my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) the information; and I understood he had done so.

Mr. DAVIN. I have not yet received it.

THE LIBRARY.

Mr. DAVIN. I would also like to say, that in making references to the library the other day, I mentioned certain officers as first-rate officers. But, I omitted to mention the name of an officer there whose services are invaluable—Col. Todd.

INSPECTION OF APPLES AND PEARS.

Mr. GEORGE GUILLET (West Northumberland). I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) if he has anything to say with reference to the Bill respecting apples and pears, or does he propose to withdraw that Bill?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). We are not prepared to go on with that Bill this session.

The House took recess until Two o'clock.

The House resumed at Two o'clock.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 197) to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. He said: This Bill is for the purpose of adding certain sections which provide for a scrutiny in the case of the province of Prince Edward Island, that is to say, to bring about what was desired by the amendment suggested in the Senate to the Dominion Elections Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second times, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). I want to ask if these amendments are exactly the same as the amendments made by the Senate to the Elections Act?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not quite the same. This is to provide for a scrutiny in the case of elections in Prince Edward Island, but the provision is for a scrutiny solely, instead of a contestation of the election. It has to be made within twenty days after the publication in the Official Gazette of the election, so as to give an opportunity to contest on any other ground, if it is desired, before the thirty days expire.

Mr. BRITTON. There is a discrimination in favour of Prince Edward Island.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. But there is all the reason in the world for the discrimination. In Prince Edward Island they have no election list as they have in the other provinces, and this is to discriminate in favour of Prince Edward Island, because of the conditions existing in that province.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Do I understand that these clauses which were amended in the Senate give to the county judge the right virtually of trying whether the party was entitled to vote?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Your contention is that that properly ought to be a part of the Controverted Elections Act?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. And you have amended the Act so as to remove all doubts so far as Prince Edward Island are concerned, and to give the judge authority to try these cases.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Exactly, giving that authority to the judge of the High Court, in order that he may dispose of it absolutely as he would of an election petition in the regular courts.

Mr. BRITTON. I understand that the Bill amends the Controverted Elections Act so that there may be a petition on this ground. Do I understand that it may go before the county judge?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, it is not an ordinary petition to contest the election, I suppose it would go before a High Court judge. Then it gives an opportunity of ten days additional to attack on other grounds, if necessary. It must be done within twenty days after the return.

Mr. HAGGART. It does not interfere with the county court judge having the same powers of a recount as in any other part of the Dominion?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He has got absolutely the same powers on a recount.

Bill reported.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I move that the Bill be read the third time.

Mr. HAGGART. What are you going to do with the Act as amended by the Senate?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I understand they are going to withdraw their amendment on our passing this.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We agree to all the amendments proposed by the Senate with the exception of these that are covered by this amendment to the Controverted Elections Act. They are waiting to get this Bill.

Mr. BRITTON. In other words, the Senate has held us up.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think it would be highly improper, after all the labour the House has put upon this Bill when endeavouring to amend the Act, so as to make it impossible for fraud to occur, that our work should all be sacrificed now.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the third time, and passed.

JUDGES OF THE PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved that the House take into consideration the Message from the Senate, consisting of amendments made to the Bill (No. 189) to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts.

Motion agreed to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is impossible for us to accept the amendments suggested by the Senate, and we are obliged, in consequence, to allow this important measure to drop entirely, leaving the responsibility for the inconveniences that must necessarily ensue, to rest with the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER. Dropped.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a Message from the Senate acquainting this House that the Senate hath rescinded its proceedings, had this day with respect to the amendments Nos. 46, 47, 48, 49, 52 and 53, made by it to the Bill (No. 133) intituled: 'An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the Election of Members to the House of Commons,' and that it doth not insist upon the said amendments, but that it doth insist upon its amendment No. 2 to the said Bill.

FORT DUFFERIN WHARF.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

When was the shed upon the government wharf at Port Dufferin or Salmon River, in the county of Halifax, completed?

2. Was this shed built by contract or how otherwise?

3. What amount has been paid on account of the cost of construction of this shed and what bills have been rendered for or on account of the cost of such construction?

4. What wharfage has been collected in respect of the government wharf at Port Dufferin or Salmon River, in the county of Halifax?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. The engineer reports that the work is finished, but he does not give the date. 2. The shed was built by day's labour. 3. The return of expenditure is not yet received by the department. 4. Wharfage is collected by the Marine Department.

PROROGATION.

A Message from His Excellency the Governor General by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

Mr. Speaker:

His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of your Honourable House in the Chamber of the Honourable Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber.

IN THE SENATE CHAMBER.

His Excellency was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

An Act respecting the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company.

An Act to incorporate the South Shore Line Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Copyright Act.

An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

An Act respecting and restricting Chinese Immigration.

An Act to amend the Pilotage Act.

An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of J. W. Anderson.

An Act respecting the construction of a branch railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour.

An Act to incorporate the British America Pulp, Paper and Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Central Vermont Railway Company (foreign).

An Act respecting the preservation of Game in the Yukon territory.

An Act to aid in the prevention and settlement of trade disputes and to provide for the publication of statistical industrial information.

An Act to amend the Militia Act.

An Act to amend the Bank Act Amendment Act, 1900.

An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

An Act to amend the Railway Act.

An Act respecting the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.

An Act further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

An Act to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act.

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members of the House of Commons.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the fifth session of the eighth parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In relieving you from further attendance in parliament, I desire to thank you for the diligent attention which you have given to the labours of an exceptionally protracted session.

When parliament opened in the month of February last, the thoughts of the whole empire were centred on the war which was then raging in South Africa.

The marked successes which have since attended the British arms, and in which our Canadian volunteer soldiers have taken a conspicuous and glorious part, justify the hope that peace will be soon restored in that distant land.

The large number of private Bills with industrial objects considered and passed is a good indication of the great expansion of the business of the country.

I desire to congratulate you on the buoyant state of the revenue. The large receipts have enabled my government to provide liberally for the public service, and to maintain Canada's strong financial position.

A marked feature of the session has been the adoption of many important measures which must beneficially affect the future of the Dominion.

The improvements in the Act relating to banks will tend to perfect a system of banking of which Canada has reason to feel proud.

The extension of the British preference in our tariff will tend to reduce the burden of taxation, and stimulate the growth of our trade with the mother country.

The measure you have passed respecting the admission of Canadian inscribed stock to the list of securities in which trustees in Great Britain may invest, is being followed by similar legislation in the Imperial parliament, which will, in due course, consummate this very important improvement in the financial affairs of the Dominion.

There is reason to believe that the legislation of this session will have important and favourable results. I particularly congratulate you upon the passing of the Conciliation Act, which, it is confidently hoped, will not only improve the condition of the industrial classes, but will also better promote the relations which ought to exist between capital and labour.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It affords me much pleasure to observe that the prosperity of Canada continues unabated, and I pray that Divine Providence may continue to look with favour upon this Dominion.
