agent to oversee the test at Kingston. I refer to that particularly, because whatever opinion one may have as to the conduct of the contractor, there is no doubt that he basely betrayed the interests of his principal. Well, what happened? The agent employed to watch the test at Kingston, followed the test, and after the test brought to his principal, the affidavits of the soldiers, as was his duty, because his principal had sent him there as his agent, and had paid all his expenses; and if hon. members will read those affidavits, they will find that the soldiers swear positively that the food they had at Kingston was Hatch's protose, and was known by no other name. The affidavits, were no doubt, drawn up by the agent himself, and the only kind of food to which they refer, is Hatch's protose. With regard to that test, I will only say this: I am not a military man, but it seems to me, that proper care was not taken in the department at the time that test was made. Whatever may have been the value of the test, if I had to conduct it, even as a civilian, I would have conducted it with far greater precaution; but it is a regrettable fact that though this food on which so much depended, was sent every day to Kingston, the officials there never saw fit to keep some samples of it. However, that is outside of this inquiry. This is also uncontradicted, that at the time of the war this man whose food was successfully tested, wrote to the department, reminding the department of that test, and asking them if they required any of that food for the soldiers, and he received an answer, as every other tenderer did, that there was no food to be bought for the soldiers. There were other tenderers who interviewed the Minister of Militia himself, and their evidence is in the record. It is proved that the agent of the Bovril Company which supplied, I believe, over $750,000 worth of emergency rations to the British army in this very war, in regard to which rations not one complaint has been made, interviewed the Minister of Militia, and was told, as Mr. Hatch was, that there was no food to be purchased. Another witness, Mr. Besserer, swears positively to the same effect—that he interviewed the Minister of Militia, that he came to the department time and again, to find out if he could not supply food which had been tested by the Geological Department, and found satisfactory, and was turned away with the statement that no food was to be purchased. Hatch also swears—and this is a fact admitted, and a most important fact, when we come to consider the conduct of the minister—that he wrote the letter of January 25. And let me say at once that the specious argument that this letter was merely the letter of a disappointed contractor, will not go down with the public. If you take the trouble to read that letter, and consider the surrounding circumstances, you will see that it is not the letter of a disappointed contractor. Here is a man whose food has been tested, the only food which has been tested in this country; and what does he tell the Minister of Militia? Does he complain that he did not get the contract? Does he say that he has been dealt with unfairly? Nothing of the sort; but he does what is the duty of any man under the circumstances. He says: 'I am informed that the department is purchasing a food which purports to be my food, and I deem it to be my duty, and my right, to warn you that you are being imposed upon, to tell you that it is not my food which is being supplied to you.' The House will see the importance of this, when we come to consider the assurances given by the contractor to the department. He says: 'I inform you that this is not my food, and that I intend to take proceedings for the violation of my rights.' Is this the letter of a disappointed contractor? By no means. It was a letter which it was not only this man's right, but his duty to send to the minister.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. MONK. When you left the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I was adverting to the evidence, uncontradicted evidence, of certain facts which preceded the contract. I was more particularly speaking of the evidence given before the committee by Mr. Hatch. I think that a most unfair, I will even go the length of saying a most cruel, remark was made by the chairman of the committee (Mr. Belcourt), in moving the adoption of the report this morning, as to the conduct of this witness. I am not charged with his defence. I never met him until after I brought this matter up in the House, because the information on which I proceeded was given to me by a most reliable physician, practicing his profession in the city of Montreal. But when the hon. gentleman said that the witness did not dare, or at any rate did not see fit, to come back and contradict the statement made by the witness Muir that his food only contained 15 per cent protein, he made a mistake. When the witness Muir, to whose testimony I will presently refer, had been heard, I moved at once in the committee to have Mr. Hatch recalled, and he was telegraphed to, upon that motion being adopted, by my hon. friend, and he answered that he was ill and could not leave that evening, but would come up the following morning. He was ill—I am now speaking of facts not revealed in the evidence, but which I am free to state in this House—he was ill in consequence of absurd threats made to him by parties in the city of Montreal. He had been threatened that his laboratory would be seized by the government, that all his papers would be taken away, and that he would be subjected to harsh treatment; and I am bound to say, because I desire to be frank in the matter, that I am convinced these threats did not come from the government, but the contractor. Of that I am absolutely certain, so that had it been necessary to hear the witness on this point, there can be no question but that he was quite willing to come before the committee.

Mr. BRITTON. Should that committee try this case by the evidence given before the committee or on what the hon. gentleman says the witness would say?

Mr. MONK. Unquestionably I will answer my hon. friend on that point. We are dealing only with the evidence, but I have thought it only right to state what I think is just, as regards this witness, who came here willingly, and who, I think, gave his evidence so frankly, that I do not think it was right he should be attacked here in this way. But of course, as a lawyer, and even in any capacity, there is no doubt we must judge this case on the evidence produced. The witness was intimidated. That I state to the House.

Mr. BELCOURT. What evidence have you of that?

Mr. MONK. I believe it if the hon. gentleman does not, and I have it from the witness himself. I am aware that this subject occupying the attention of the House has been treated in some quarters with great merriment, and it has, I frankly admit, a comical side. That a body of men whom we all admire, moved by the highest motives, imbued admittedly with admirable courage, should be prepared to travel 7,000 miles to engage in the cruel business of war, and that at the same time a man—and of all men a medical man—should come up to Ottawa, rush through a contract with the government, take his satchel, go down to New York, and come back with twelve trunks containing broken biscuits, have them ground and stuffed into little pots, which are generally used to hold paint, and hand these over to this group of men as an emergency ration,—all this opens a boundless field to a clever caricaturist.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question? I would like him to tell us where there is any evidence of this food having been ground biscuits.

Mr. MONK. I will answer my hon. friend this important question as I proceed.

Mr. BELCOURT. Is there any evidence of that?

Mr. MONK. Abundant, but unfortunately not completed because this traveller with the Saratoga trunks never judged fit to give us any information. But apart from that picture which is a curious one, and a ludicrous one, there is a serious side to the question. A joke is not a genuine joke if it entails serious consequences, and I think hon. members will admit that this joke, if joke it was, did entail such consequences, because we have on the other side of the picture men who very naturally would start out on a day's march over the broken veldt, each with a can of this stuff, feeling confident, and rightly confident, that on it they could subsist comfortably during the entire day. And then we have the picture of the men who undertook that march, falling exhausted after their mid-day meal, and unable to fulfil the important tasks assigned to them.

There is a most important uncontradicted fact, proved by this witness, and that is what Mr. Hatch stated with great candour to the committee, namely, that he had remnants of the Kingston food. He produced before us two boxes in which was bread powder, remnants of biscuits, and he said that accidentally he had kept in his possession some of this food which had been tested at Kingston, and he said, what is of more importance, that he had brought it up with the desire that the committee should subject those remnants of that food to an analysis. It was moved in the committee that they should be analysed, but that motion was voted down by the majority of the committee. And I will point out to you, Mr. Speaker, what seems to me of paramount unfairness, that whereas there were analysis made of everything that the committee had before it, everything produced by the officers of the Department of Militia, strange to say this demand to have analysed what the witness swore positively—and upon this point he was not contradicted—were remnants of the Kingston food, was rejected. I think that if this House and the public, couple that most unjustifiable refusal with the fact that this man's food was all over the country and could have been procured and analysed at any stage, and was not analysed, the conclusion will be that there was on the part of some people an absolute fear of having a genuine analysis made of this substance and of finding out the truth.

Another fact which is uncontradicted, and which I desire to point out to this House as showing the bad faith of the contractor, is this one. The House will find it in the evidence of Mr. Hatch. On the 15th January, while this contract was being carried out, Dr. Devlin, who had acted as an agent of Mr. Hatch, who knew all about this food, was in Mr. Hatch's office—with whom? With a New York capitalist endeavouring to conclude an agreement for the formation of a company, and upon that occasion, although he was a long time in Mr. Hatch's office and conversed about the formation of that company, he never mentioned that he had a contract at that moment with the Dominion government for $4,660 to furnish the Dominion government with the food which had been tested at Kingston. That, I think, is of the greatest consequence.

While I am on the evidence of Mr. Hatch, I may point out, in answer to a question put to me this morning by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), that the percentage of protein in the Hatch food is adverted to in Mr. Hatch's testimony at page 62. And what Hatch says there, hon. members may read. He says 85 per cent of proteids on one side; 30 per cent for the lowest percentage on the other. He says: I made it my business to see that the soldiers at Kingston always had an average of 60 per cent in the food furnished them. I may state here, in a general way, that, although I have not had time to read—nor would I read, even if I had time—from the evidence to maintain every statement which I make to the House, if on any point to which I refer I am mistaken and my statement is not borne out by the evidence, I shall be happy to retract; because what I desire in this matter, is that the House, as my hon. friend said, should know the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

There is another significant fact, though not of paramount importance—still a fact not to be lost sight of, and that was that the important letter of the 25th of January received no answer in acknowledgment from the Minister of Militia. At the time of the Ottawa fire Hatch wrote to the Minister of Militia offering his food as a donation for those who suffered from the fire, and to that letter he received no acknowledgment whatever. There is also the fact that he wrote to Ottawa offering gratuitously his food for the Red Cross Society in South Africa, and to that letter, I think I am safe in saying, from the evidence, there was no answer either.

Mr. BRITTON. There was an answer by Dr. Neilson. He was referred to Dr. Ryerson, head of the Red Cross Society.

Mr. MONK. It may be so. Now, we must not be led astray on the questions of percentage of proteids. As shown by the evidence of Mr. Hatch, and amply corroborated by the evidence of a man of the highest authority—I refer to Professor Ruttan—when you speak of 16 per cent proteids in a food, as Professor Ruttan says, you speak of a diluent. What does he mean by that? He explains that a diluent is an element which you use to reduce the strength of the food in proteids. Proteids in crude and original shape contain 100 per cent of nutriment; but, as Hatch explains, under the direction of a physician it may be necessary to reduce that strength anywhere from 80 per cent to 30 per cent; and any food which contains 16 per cent has enough dilution, and has no unusual value whatever. As the witness states: I buy my diluent anywhere: I buy them from Fraser, Viger & Co., grocers; I import them from the States. There is nothing at all astonishing to anybody who understands this matter in the fact that there are entries in the custom-house showing importations by Hatch of the value of from 2½ cents to 12 cents a pound, for diluents are not worth more. If hon. members will take the trouble to inquire, they will find at their grocers various foods such as Farina and shredded wheat; and in the States there are a great number of foods containing that 16 per cent of proteid which is of no special value. Have we not here in the province of Ontario a food called Pease Méal, prepared under a Scotch formula, which is very good for breakfast—and indeed at any time—and which contains 28 per cent of proteid? And what is it worth? I think it is 10 cents a pound—probably less. Therefore, there is no special value in a food containing 16 per cent of proteids—that is what you find in any ordinary daily diet.

I have adverted to the facts preceding the contract; let me speak as briefly as possible of the contract itself. On the 3rd of January, Devlin went to the Herald office—this is in the evidence of Mr. Sharpe—and he got two samples, one of a large label and one of a small one. He wrote out himself what was to be printed on these labels—page 259 of the report. And what did he write? Did he write his own name, something which would show that those who prepared this food were ready to assume some responsibility? By no means. He gave a fictitious title, and he gave as the address of the manufacturer of the food, which evidently at that time he had the intention of supplying to the government, a wholly false and fictitious address—The Vitallin Company, corner Craig and Bleury Streets, Montreal. This he gave to the printer on the 3rd of January, when there was no contract, and he gave a false address. I cannot insist too much on this as being an element to guide hon. members in appreciation of this matter. This company is not to be found anywhere in the City of Montreal or in the province of Quebec—it has no existence whatever. On the 4th of January, the day following, Devlin came to Ottawa, bringing with him a tin can containing a substance—a very ordinary substance with 16 per cent of nutrition in it—and in Ottawa he interviewed three persons, the Minister of Militia, the director general of the medical staff, Dr. Neilson, and the deputy minister. Dr. Neilson tells us in his evidence that he was struck with this label upon the larger can, and he told Devlin: This is not protein vegetal, this is not Hatch's protose, this is not the substance tested in Kingston. This is a fact of paramount importance, which is uncontradicted and about which there is no doubt whatever. What did Devlin tell him? He told him: It is absolutely the same thing, it is identical with the food tested in Kingston. And he gave as a reason for the change of name that it was for commercial purposes—that in commerce that name was a more suitable one. And, feeling that, unquestionably, this was a matter of importance, Dr. Neilson wrote a recommendation, and that recommendation was to the effect that he recommended that the soldiers be supplied with protein vegetal—not with anything connected with the Vitallin Company; and hon. gentlemen will read that he recommends this food because it has been fully tested in Kingston, and is a highly concentrated food. Armed with this recommendation, obtained under the representations that I have just stated, Devlin goes to the minister and closes the contract there and then with him. But, subsequently, in preparing his tender, he does not refer at all to Neilson's recommendation, but offers to supply the troops with vegetable proteid powder according to the sample—a worthless food. The whole thing is settled, evidently, according to the evidence, in about twenty minutes.

With this order, Devlin leaves immediately for the States, he must have left on the following day. After a very short interval of time, he returns from the States with twelve trunks. Upon this point we have the evidence of the two men who ground this substance, after it was brought in from the States. Of these twelve trunks, I have no doubt whatever, that he must have passed six through the customs-house without paying any duty. There are only six trunks accounted for, he must, therefore, have got these six trunks through the customs-house without explaining to the officers, that this substance was dutiable, or in some way or other he got them through without paying any duty. Now, as regards the other six trunks, there is nothing in the evidence to show that he paid duty upon them. I have no doubt that any man reading the evidence would come to the conclusion that he never paid any duty, either upon the other six trunks, and the one packet which the customs-house officer noticed. Long after this investigation was begun, he gave two cheques to the collector of customs. One of these cheques was by Dr. Devlin himself, and one was on the manager of the Merchants Bank, and the manager tells us he never had any account in that bank. However, these trunks attracted the notice of the customs-house officer.

Now, I would say this to the House, although by no means charged with the defence of the collector of customs at Montreal, that I think the report contains a very unfair reflection upon the conduct of that gentleman. What are the facts? This man, a medical man known in Montreal, came to the collector and exhibited to him a document from the Militia Department which satisfied him—these are the words of Mr. White—that what was in the trunks was imported for the use of the Department of Militia. There was something more, he exacted from the doctor an assurance that he would get a regular certificate, such as provided by the regulations of the department, from the Department of Militia, and Devlin promised him to obtain the certificate. There was hurry, there was urgency, there was no time to be lost, and under these circumstances the contractor was allowed to take out the trunks without paying duty. Therefore, to say that the conduct of the collector of customs was wholly indefensible, seems to me a very unfair reflection upon that officer.

Once the twelve trunks were in Montreal, they were brought to the manufacturing druggist, and there the contents were ground into a powder. One of the witnesses, Mr. Hatch, and I think another also, stated that they had heard of a proteid powder being made into biscuits, but nobody ever heard of a proteid biscuit, a most expensive article, being ground into powder. There are proteid biscuits manufactured in Europe containing as much as 80 per cent proteid, but nobody ever heard of a proteid biscuit being ground into powder, because it loses a great deal of its strength. However, the stuff was taken to this man and pulverized; and I speak in the judgment of the medical men in this House—although there is nothing on that point in the evidence—in saying that food of this kind is very subject to bacteriological changes, and the mere fact of bringing it in in that loose way from Montreal, leaving it at the station, and taking it to a mill to be ground, is proof that this man Devlin had really no consideration whatever for the parties for whom he was preparing this food.

Well, on February 14, the contractor was paid. Great stress was laid by my hon. friend upon the fact, as he says, that I alleged in the charges, that the payment was made before delivery. But if hon. members will refer to Hansard, they will find what I really said in the House; what I said was that I had reliable information that payment was made, if not wholly, at least in part, before delivery. But I stated specially that if payment was not made after delivery the government was far more seriously at fault, because then payment had been made after the department was fully aware that this food had no value. I think the case would be far better for the government, if payment had been made before delivery, because the government had then no proof whatever, that this man was actually perpetrating a fraud upon the government. When he was actually paid, the government had in its hands, an analysis made by its own official, which analysis revealed that there was nothing in this food beyond an ordinary diet, that it only contained 16 per cent of nutrition, that it was not, in the words of the analyst, a highly concentrated food, and that it had not the value of $2 per pound. It was after having received this statement from its own officer, that the government, without any question, paid this man. Now, let me state to the House what grounds I have for saying that this amount was paid before delivery. This man Devlin, the contractor, is notoriously insolvent. He is not a responsible man, and it was assumed that he could not pay even the travelling expenses which he was put to, in order to get this food, and hand it over to our troops, without a sum of money being advanced to him. When I attempted proof through the banker, who had advanced the funds, the small amount necessary for carrying out this contract, I was prevented by my hon. friend. But what did I pretend? I pretended that I had alleged in the charges that the contractor was irresponsible. Hon. members have only to refer to the charges to see that there is a specific allegation that the contractor was irresponsible. How do you prove before our courts, as a general rule, that a man is irresponsible? Why, the very first witness examined usually is his banker; and when I attempted that proof, that ordinary proof of his insolvency, I was estopped by the majority of the committee, upon the ground that I could not enter into an examination of the doctor's private affairs. I will state to this House that I had another motive. I believe that the conduct of this contractor is wholly indefensible; but, I will say, in justice to him, that I believe he is not the only man concerned in the rake-off of profits in this transaction. I believe that in certain respects he has been sinned against, and that there are men whose names do not appear in this report, who have participated in the fraud which he practiced upon the government. It is probable that had I been allowed to make this proof, many of these facts would have come out, and guilt would have been brought home to the parties behind this man who profited by these transactions.

What did we have as to the value of the food? I am of opinion, and there is not a man in this country who is not of that opinion, that this food was what the manufacturing chemist, what Mr. Capelli, and I think, Mr. McGill, said was broken biscuits. I believe that this food was purchased in a clandestine manner in the United States as the refuse of a biscuit factory, and that belief is upheld by the evidence. Broken biscuits are not worth 30 cents a pound. They are worth considerably less. The minority in the committee assumed, as to the value of the food, the value that was put upon it by Dr. Devlin himself after this inquiry began, and he had gone to the customs officers to cover up his tracks and make entries of these goods. We took his own value—30 cents a pound. That is as to the value in money. Now, as to its value as a food. Mr. Macfarlane, the Dominion analyst, states in his certificate that he does not understand why a value of $2 a pound is set on this food. Mr. McGill corroborates the evidence contained in the certificate. Mr. McGill entirely upholds in his evidence the charge which is of very great importance that this food was improperly packed. The man who made the cans told us that they were ordinary paint cans. Prof. Ruttan also upholds that charge. The cans were neither air-tight nor water-tight and all the witnesses agree that this powder, whatever it was, even if it was ground biscuits, was most susceptible to the assimilation of moisture. Mr. Hatch states, of course, that his food, is always sterilized and packed in air-tight receptacles. As to the necessity of proper packing he is also corroborated by Mr. Hersey, an analyst of high standing in Montreal, and corroborated by Prof. Ruttan. Prof. Ruttan says these are ordinary paint cans and that food packed in such cans is liable to absorb moisture, and there is no question that with these troops marching through the fields in South Africa and sleeping out at night with these foods, unless they were properly packed for such an emergency as that, damage would result. Upon that point the charge is amply sustained, and it is a serious charge because, even if it were the best of food, being improperly packed, it would be useless to the troops. We had a sample of the British army ration, and the witness who produced that sample showed that it was packed in an air-tight tin and that upon the sample there was a direction that the tin is not to be opened except expressly upon the order of an officer. In respect to the value of the food Prof. Ruttan stated that the result of the studies of professional men as far back as we can trace them shows that four ounces of nutriment, of proteids, are necessary for a man daily, and he says, as a consequence of that, this food, containing only 16 per cent, instead of carrying one can for one day, a soldier would have to carry nine or ten cans to be properly fed for one day, if indeed, his digestion could stand the contents of nine or ten cans, and if he proceeded upon a five days' march and relied for his sustenance upon emergency rations, he would have to have fifty cans in his kit. The House will see at once that this food was not at all what it ought to have been. Prof. Ruttan swears that it is an insufficient ration. If hon. gentlemen will look at the evidence they will see that he is asked: Do you say that it is an insufficient ration? He says: Yes it is. As against that we have nothing but the evidence of Sergeant Cotton. I do not know how many hon. members of the House were present when he was before the committee, but the evidence of Dr. Neilson himself shows that it amounted to practically nothing. He delivered the certificate to Dr. Devlin before he had ever tried the food, and he took beer while he was taking the food; in fact, there was nothing in his evidence. Dr. Devlin's food was not subjected to a proper test. Hon. members who concur in this report have insisted very strenuously, just like wrecked sailors upon a raft, eager for a chance of being relieved, that there was an envelope containing something that was tested in Kingston, and that it contained only 13 per cent of nourishing substance. There is nothing whatever in that. In the first place, I will ask hon. members if they think it is probable that this man who manufactures an 80 per cent food would have sent, as a sample to the department, a food, or powder, containing only 13 per cent. As regards the origin of this envelope there is the greatest obscurity. What does Dr. Neilson say? He, on being examined in the first instance, said that he had preserved none of the food tested at Kingston. Gradually, as the case became more desperate, he began de novo before the committee and produced this envelope. What does he say as to this envelope? At page 116, Dr. Neilson says:

I must say here that when the experiments took place at Kingston, Mr. Devlin put in my hands some samples of protein vegetal such as he used in that bread. The bread was the means of conveying this protein vegetal.

By Mr. Monk:

Q. Was this in Kingston?—A. Well, before he went to Kingston he sent me samples of protein vegetal, full strength, and protein vegetal, half strength. I kept these samples, and I have them yet, at least not all; I have not the protein vegetal, full strength, but I have samples of the one marked half strength. When the subject of Dr. Devlin's tender was being considered, I compared this protein vegetal, half strength, with the contents of that tin.

Here are the remains of the first sample; I said two samples had been sent to me of the protein vegetal.

By the Chairman:

Q. Used at Kingston?—A. Yes. It is written here on the back of it 'protein vegetal,' not in my writing.

By Mr. Monk:

Q. Whose writing?—A. I don't know, sir, but it resembles a little the writing of Mr. Hatch; it is in the original envelope, and is called protein vegetal, one-half strength, and I marked there that I received it in March.

At page 119:

By Mr. Clarke:

Q. Was this a private package you are submitting here?—A. It was sent to us as a sample.

Q. Of what?—A. Of protein vegetal, one-half strength.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is not reading as it appears in the printed book, but it may be all right.

Mr. BERGERON. Word for word. He is going to other pages.

Mr. MONK (reading) :

By Mr. Monk:

Q. By Dr. Devlin?—A. I think it was, perhaps it was Hatch. I don't know.

If hon. members will read on they will arrive at the conclusion that this man does not know exactly where he got this envelope. Perhaps it was from Dr. Devlin; perhaps it was from Mr. Hatch. It was certainly not the food sent by Mr. Hatch to Kingston. He had it in his drawer with a lot of postage stamps and other matter for over a year. Are we going to hang our decision on this important matter on such evidence as that? When we have a witness, a manufacturer whose goods are all over the country and who comes and says: My food contains such and such proportions of nutriment, and I sent a sample of my food to Kingston and asked them to analyse it; no, no, we will not analyse it, but we will go upon this envelope.

Permit me to refer, as briefly as possible, to the conduct of the Minister of Militia. It appears from the evidence that he closed this contract at once. There was no delay. There were other tenderers; there were those who furnished supplies to the British army, and whose rations had never been complained of from time immemorial, but the Minister of Militia closed the contract with Dr. Devlin immediately, and it does not appear that the minister ever asked the contractor whether this was the food tested at Kingston or not. The minister wrote 'approved,' and the whole thing was settled in a few minutes. According to the minister's own evidence, he had before him the recommendation of Dr. Neilson that the food to be furnished should be the same as that furnished in Kingston, but the minister does not appear to have asked this contractor, who suddenly appeared before him on January 4, whether this in reality was the same food. Not at all; he closed the bargain in a moment. Then, on January 25, the minister received a letter from the man who had been expressly recommended to the department by Dr. Neilson—because Dr. Neilson in his letter recommended the minister to take the food tested in Kingston—and that letter solemnly warned the minister that he had been imposed upon. What should have been the conduct of an ordinarily prudent man on the receipt of that letter? I do not hesitate to say that it was the duty of the minister to answer that letter. I assert that it was the duty of the minister, when he received that letter, to walk to the room of his subordinates and to say: Is this true or is it not; we must have this sample examined; we must find out if the allegation contained in the letter from the supplier of the Kingston food is true or not. Had I received such a letter, Sir, even from an anonymous correspondent, I would have taken that precaution. I do not hesitate to say that had I received such a letter from a convict in the penitentiary, writing over his own name, I would have provoked inquiry. But, the minister, having received such a letter from the manufacturer, who had been introduced to him by Dr. Devlin as the only maker of this food, the duty of the minister was to act at once. What did the minister do? I am right in saying that the letter was suppressed; it was never filed in the department; it was never brought to the knowledge of any one except Dr. Devlin, as the minister himself tells us. Here was Dr. Neilson, upon whose recommendation the contract had been made, and he never heard of the letter. Here was the Deputy Minister of Militia, who had prepared the documents to carry out the contract, and he never heard of the letter until the Sunday before the day we commenced our investigation. The letter was not on file, and it was suppressed. We have it on the uncontradicted testimony of Capt. Benoit, who went to Halifax to see the shipment of this food, that he brought back two cans, and that he, in the month of February, asked that an analysis be made. It was this witness who initiated the analysis made by Mr. Macfarlane. The minister never asked for the analysis. The analysis was made, and the minister does not even seem to have heard of it. In fact, if I mistake not, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) stated that he heard of that analysis for the first time when the question was brought up in the House. Therefore, on receipt of this letter—which gentlemen on the other side call a querulous communication from a disappointed contractor—the minister took no steps whatever, and he did not even acknowledge the receipt of the letter. And, Sir, that analysis being in the department, and being, as I submit, an absolute condemnation of this food, the Minister of Militia never thought it fit to communicate the startling revelation brought out by that analysis to the troops in the field. He could have telegraphed to Halifax; he could have telegraphed to Cape Town, he could telegraph to-day and it would not be useless. The men who have to depend upon this insufficient ration, upon this food which is not concentrated, this food which is of no value; the men who are in the field to-day while we are quietly sitting here; the brave soldiers of Canada who are most interested in the results of that analysis of the food, know nothing about it. And, Sir, at the present moment, while I am speaking, some of our soldiers may be departing upon a march without any other food but this broken biscuit, which is of no value whatever for their sustenance. Is this House going to say that such a condition of things is right? If it does, Sir, mighty as is the power of this parliament, there is an appeal to a higher tribunal, to the public opinion of this country. It would only have been fair and right and just and prudent, that the soldiers in the field should be warned that this food was not what it was represented to be, and it was the duty of the minister to give that warning. It is his duty to do it to-day. It is his duty so long as detrimental results may ensue from dependence upon this food. Although we all hope that the war is practically over, yet while there is a guerilla warfare in South Africa, it is more than probable that on many occasions the soldiers may have to make use of this ration, believing that it is all which the label on the can says it is, when in reality it is of no value whatever. Now, Sir, there are two recommendations in our report, which, if the motion of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) is adopted, will be brushed aside by this House. One of these recommendations is, that henceforth when food is purchased for our troops on active service, that food should be analysed beforehand, and ample security procured from the contractor. Is the House going to say that this is an unwise recommendation? There is another recommendation which is of greater immediate importance, and that is, that the substance of Mr. Macfarlane's report should be communicated to the troops in South Africa. Is the House going to brush that recommendation aside also? Is the House going to pronounce that our soldiers in South Africa will not be informed of the valueless character of this as a concentrated food? We have before the committee the result of the analysis of Mr. Macfarlane, and the further evidence of Mr. Hersey, and no reasonable doubt can exist in the mind of any man that this food is not what it purported to be. I moved in committee that an interim report be made to the House, and that the House order simply that the results of Mr. Macfarlane's analysis be communicated to the military commandant or to the authorities in South Africa, in order that they should be on their guard about this food. That motion was voted down—not immediately, but upon an amendment prepared, after consideration, by my hon. friend from Kingston, which amendment shows that the fat of the food is not of any great value, is not concentrated, which is admitted. But, that amendment vetoed that wise recommendation contained in my motion; and this House will assume a very grave responsibility before the country if it decides that the knowledge which we all have to-day shall not be conveyed to the parties most interested in the composition of this food.

Mr. MONK.

Now, Sir, as to the remarkable conduct of Devlin, the contractor, I have not very much to say. But does it not appear strange to the members of this House that this contractor should come up here; follow the investigation stage by stage; attend almost every meeting except a couple, when he was absent in Montreal to get witnesses; follow eagerly and assiduously the proceedings, continually prompting my hon. friends with questions—questions which to my mind were merely calculated to embarrass the witnesses; and, when he saw the inquiry coming to a close, should disappear? We were meeting at two o'clock in the afternoon, and he sent a letter to the committee asking to be heard. The man was in this building at the time and till five o'clock that afternoon. He left by the evening train after six. His letter was read, as everybody on the committee was agreeable to hear him. I say—and I place myself in the judgment of this House—that the duty of this man was to appear on the first day and ask to be heard, instead of allowing us to prove all the facts to which he could testify. Well, Sir, we waited most of the afternoon—at any rate, over an hour. He did not appear. He was in the House, but he could not be found. We adjourned till eight o'clock in the evening. He did not appear in the evening, but sent a letter stating that he was most anxious to be heard, but that he had to leave for New York, and asking for an adjournment till Friday. No member of the committee proposed that that extraordinary demand should be complied with.

Mr. BERGERON. What did the chief justice say?

Mr. MONK. The chief justice himself was rather surprised; and, as we were anxious that this matter should be finished before the end of the session, we dispensed with the evidence of this man. He therefore, left for New York—but I mistake; he did not go to New York. He went to Montreal, and, with an imprudence which is scarcely conceivable, began interviewing the newspapers, writing letters, and stating that he was dying to be heard. This reminds me of the memorable scene in Macbeth, where Lady Macbeth travels about her castle at night asleep, under the watch of her physician and her attendants, and exclaims: 'Out damned spot! All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.' And I say to this House that all the interviews, all the letters, all the affidavits in the world will not remove the very painful impression created by this man who was so anxious to be heard before the committee.

Mr. DAVIN. Could not the medical doctor minister to a mind diseased?

Mr. MONK. No, nor could he pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow. There was a witness, Mr. Muir, who came before the committee, and as to whose evidence there can be no question. He is a most respectable man, well known in Montreal, and he stated that Mr. Hatch had told him after the test in Kingston that the food supplied there contained only 15 per cent of proteids. I wish to say in regard to the evidence of Mr. Muir, that I think it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that he stated the truth and nothing but the truth; but how can we reconcile that extraordinary statement with the statement made by Mr. Hatch under oath, that he supplied a concentrated food for the test at Kingston containing an average of 60 per cent of proteids? Why should he go uncalled for, and state to this man that this food really amounted to what we know is nothing but a diluted food? There are many explanations which will suggest themselves to lawyers of experience and to men of the world. There must be some mistake. Gentlemen who heard Mr. Hatch testify before the committee will bear me out in saying that English is not familiar to him. We had often to repeat questions in order to make them clear to him. He is an Austrian. His English is pretty fair, and his French pretty fair; but it does not take more than two minutes to see that English is not his language. Therefore, it is possible that when he was saying 15 per cent he thought he was saying 50 or 60 per cent. However, the crucial point is this. This man Devlin never manufactured any food before, and I venture to say that unless he is singularly favoured by Providence he will never manufacture any again. The other man's food is there; anybody can get it; and we all know that it would be absurd for him to say that he fed people with 15 per cent food. Mr. Hatch told me, when he revealed to me that he was threatened—the House may believe me or not as it chooses: 'I am very anxious to go up to Ottawa. Mr. Belcourt occupies a house there. Let him or the members of the committee, if that is according to parliamentary rule, look me up after having searched me, in Mr. Belcourt's kitchen, and give me three hours; and, with the ordinary things used in every-day life, I will turn out a food containing over 80 per cent of proteids. This is a fair test, and if there is another man in the country who can do the same thing, I am ready to be confounded.' So that, after reflection, it was considered that it would be really useless to bring this man back merely to state that there was a misunderstanding on the part of Mr. Muir, and I think that was a wise decision of the committee in order not unduly to prolong its sittings.

Now, one word more as to these charges. I have stated to the House that I believe public opinion upon this question is formed; nor would I have taken up so much of the attention of this House had it not been that I feel that the House would go very far if it whitewashed, as this report purports to whitewash, the conduct of the contractor. As regards the conduct of the Minister of Militia, the facts are not complicated; they are admitted, and the public can form their own opinion. Hon. members and the public can form their opinion, but is it right, I ask this House, that we should state positively by our verdict that the conduct of this contractor was honourable and proper and all that it should be? It is this point to which I wish to call the attention of the House, because the condemnation of the contractor, of course, as hon. members will see, has no political consequence whatever. But I say it would be very regrettable that we should adopt a report declaring to the people that this contractor is above reproach. It is pointed out in the draft report made by the minority that the contractor is civilly responsible to the government. I appeal to hon. members who are lawyers if we have not evidence in this book—evidence which could be produced before a court of justice—that this contractor solemnly guaranteed to Dr. Neilson that the food was the very same as that tested in Kingston, and the government had, at that time, in its hands, a pamphlet saying that this Hatch's protose was over 60 per cent protein. Is there a lawyer who will say that if the government saw fit to take a civil suit against this man, they would not have the evidence at hand to enable them to obtain a condemnation in damages against him, useless as that might be. Let any one consult the Adulteration Act, and the question is really under what section of the Act this man does not come—not under what section he does come. I leave it not only to lawyers, but even to laymen, whether under the provisions of that Act, he is not clearly criminally responsible. Did he not furnish to the department, on the 4th January, a can on which he had caused to be printed these words: 'Upon this food Canadian soldiers have subsisted thirty days'? Was this true or not? And if untrue, is he not criminally responsible?

I am grateful to the House for having listened to me so patiently, and I regret having taken up so much of its time. Let me say one word regarding myself personally. In a very extended debate, which hon. members can consult, and which took place in 1892, when our late lamented Speaker, Sir James Edgar, made charges in this House, it seems to have been generally recognized that a man who brings charges in this House and fails to substantiate them, is not for that reason debarred from sitting in this House. Sir John Thompson said that that was the popular but a mistaken impression. It may be a mistaken impression theoretically, but it is my opinion that that impression is correct, and let me say that I do believe that a man who rises in this House and makes charges which an investigation shows to be frivolous is not deserving of a seat in this House. Had I any doubt as to the facts established in this case, I would deem it my duty, if this majority report is adopted, to resign my seat in this House; and I think I will find an emphatic echo among many members of this House when I say it would be perhaps an advantage to retire, under such circumstances, from a life which is filled with burdens and which is so thankless, but I do not consider that the charges made by me were frivolous. I do consider that any man who carefully goes through that report must, whatever may be his political opinion, arrive at this conclusion that this contractor, under circumstances of great meanness, perpetrated a gross fraud upon the Department of Militia, that he is a man evidently unscrupulous and without a proper sense of what is due to the people of this country; and that being my conviction, of course irrespective of the verdict which is always a doubtful one, which the electorate may pronounce on my conduct with respect to these charges, I do not consider that the outcome of this investigation is of such a nature that I ought to give up my seat in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier moves, in amendment to the motion of the hon. member for Ottawa City, that the minority report be adopted.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this amendment?

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order. The amendment has not been read and surely we should have it read.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member insists on having it read to the House, I will read it, but it has been printed and is in the hands of every member of the House.

Mr. Speaker read the amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN RUSSELL (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), in his very pathetic closing remarks, indicated that he had had pretty hard luck in the prosecution of this case, without having the left-handed compliment paid to him by his friends upon the opposite side of the House, of assuming that the routine reading of this report by the Speaker, would produce a stronger impression upon this House and the country, than that which was produced by the hon. gentleman's speech. I think it was the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), who was mainly instrumental in securing the reading of the report, realizing that something was necessary to bring the House back to the consideration of the real question which was placed before the committee, and which was so gingerly and faintly dealt with by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. It will be perfectly remembered by every hon. member of this House, that when these charges were launched to the number of seventeen or eighteen paragraphs, in which the evidence, or facts relating to the matter, in the conception of the hon. gentleman, were expanded, they led up to what was in fact the main charge, namely, that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), for all these various reasons, and under all these circumstances, as above set forth, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence, in the various measures specified in four subparagraphs of the closing paragraph of his charge. I think I may justly say that in the speech of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, there was a smaller percentage of reference to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, than there was of proteids in any one of these samples that have been brought before the committee. I do not think that you will find 60 per cent, 80 per cent, or 90 per cent, or that you will find even 16 per cent of reference to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, in that long speech of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. You will not even find 13.8 per cent, or whatever it was which Hatch's proteid realized when subjected to the severe and analytical methods of the expert analyst who dealt with it. I think that indicates to every hon. member of this House that the judicious people of this country must have perceived the intention, the desire, the determination of those who instituted this charge to get as far away as possible from the issue in which they charged negligence against the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, and to attach as much odium as they could to everybody else connected with the matter. They have very little to say about the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, whose skirts have been proved to be as entirely clean as they could be. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier said that he would discuss the matter in a judicial tone, and we expected to find his tone in striking contrast to that of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. RUSSELL. Some hon. members say 'hear, hear.' We all expected that there would be that marked contrast displayed in the remarks of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, but all must have been disappointed, after listening to his speech, when we found that it was delivered in a tone which nobody would ever have recognized as judicial if the hon. member had not taken the pains to inform us of the fact. The hon. gentleman's judicial tone in his speech was about on a par with the judicial position he assumed in the committee. He was prosecutor, counsel and judge in the committee: he undertook these three-fold functions, and having conducted himself in that way, I do not wonder in the least that he felt it was necessary to do something to redeem himself from the awkward position, from the rather equivocal position in which he had allowed himself to be placed.

I will not refer to the unpleasant episode in connection with the publication of the report. My hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) spoke of that. Certainly, it does not reflect the highest credit upon the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who gave every member of the committee to understand, upon his honour, that there would be no publication of the report of the minority unless there was a contemporaneous publication of the majority report. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman realized the necessity of doing something to prejudice public opinion in advance of the conclusion which had been arrived at; but, I do not think it was candid, I do not think it was fair or just for him to allow the committee to separate without giving us all to understand—what he afterwards privately gave some of us to understand—that although he was prepared to jealously guard any copies of the minority report that happened to be under his own control, he could not answer for copies of that report which were extant in the hands of others who were speeding by train to Montreal, to have it in time for publication in the morning papers there, as it was published here in the Conservative organ on the following morning. I do not think that circumstance reflects the highest credit on the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. It is his misfortune, probably, that that occurred; it is one of the many misfortunes that have pursued him since he undertook this unpleasant and unprofitable business. Now, Sir, I and every member of this House will agree in the remark of the hon. member (Mr. Monk) as to the very keen interest which is taken by the community at large in this question, as in all questions which concern the safety and the happiness and the welfare of our brave lads who have gone to fight the battles of the empire in South Africa. There is a keen interest, as there should be in everything relating to this matter, and, Sir, it is right that everything relating to our valiant and heroic Canadian lads should secure the most efficient and ample attention. It is so in the old country. Everything that concerns the British soldier is keenly criticised, and, indeed, I may say that it is not always impartially or fairly considered by the general public. Even the great name of Lord Roberts does not shelter him from criticism, and from charges which have been brought against the administration of the military department in South Africa, which is under his immediate control. We know that Burdett Coutts is now making charges in England against the hospital service at the seat of war. It is right that such charges should be inquired into, and it is inevitable that the public will take the deepest interest in allegations of that kind and have them sifted to the utmost. But, Sir, while the public are jealous of everything that appertains to the welfare of the soldier in the field, they will not be unreasonable; they are not so unreasonable as hon. gentlemen on the other side of this House. The public do not look for absolute perfection in these matters, because they know that absolute perfection has never been attained by any administration in any war that ever took place in the history of the world. The public do not look for impossibilities. They know the experience of other countries; the experience of countries of ampler resources and a more perfect system of administration in such matters than we can pretend to have. No war has ever taken place in any country under the sun in which there were not instances of transports failing to connect, of mistakes made, of some person imposing upon the authorities, who, in good faith, were seeking to discharge their duty in the best possible way. The conditions under which wars are waged do not permit of absolute perfection. There is not the same time for deliberation in the conduct of a war that there is in the prosecution of any peaceful avocation. Everything has to be keyed up to concert pitch, if I may use the expression. No reasonable man can expect the same consideration, the same deliberation, the same care in every minute detail in the administration of a war which you may hope to find in the administration of any civil branch of the public service. Even a government of all the talents, such as we had in this country in 1866, when that government had a disturbance on its hands, did not succeed in attaining to absolute perfection in the conduct of the affair. Those of us who attended the meetings of the British Empire League heard Col. Denison when he referred to the conditions under which he and his comrades in arms were sent to the front in 1866, and if hon. gentlemen forget it, I will read an extract from the graphic description which Col. Denison gave of the condition of things then; not under an amateur government—as gentlemen opposite sometimes call the present government—but under a government composed of men like Sir John Macdonald, Sir George Etienne Cartier, D'Arcy McGee, Wm. McDougall, Sir Alex. Galt, George Brown, and men of the highest administrative ability in this country. They had a war on their hands, and look under what conditions the troops were sent to the front then. Col. Denison said:

We were sent without carbines.

A much more important item, one would think, than emergency food.

We were sent without carbines, which I had earnestly asked for. We were sent with revolvers with only a few cartridges; not enough to load them at once. We had no haversacks; we had no water bottles, no nosebags, no canteens or valises, or camp kettles, or cooking utensils of any kind; no tents or no blankets. Some tents came after us in a few days. No one in the command had a proper map of the locality.

Mr. BEATTIE. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) what war that was?

Mr. RUSSELL. There was a war in 1866.

Mr. BEATTIE. Yes; where the troops got twenty-four hours' notice to take the field.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was an infinitesimal war compared with this, but yet, these great men in the government sent the troops out in the condition so graphically depicted here.

Mr. BEATTIE. It was a very serious war; it lasted half an hour. I was there, and we had to go out on twenty-four hours' notice.

Mr. RUSSELL. Col. Denison's remarks on the occasion I have referred to, were delivered extempore, but there is a more formal historian, who devotes some attention to that struggle, and to the way in which the repulsion of that raid was mismanaged. That historian was Col. Grey, a colonel and a judge both, and he speaks of mismanagement on the part of the highest military authorities in Upper Canada; he speaks of the entire absence of those preliminary preparations which are essential to any success in war; he speaks of volunteers hurrying to the front without proper supplies; he speaks of a divided command, with no previous co-operation, of deficient transport arrangements, of uncertainty of direction, and of insufficient medical care, and he goes on to say:

It is pitiful to read of boys slaughtered by such mismanagement.

Compared with such things as are here depicted, what becomes of alleged lack of sufficient provisions in an emergency food which may never be called into use.

It is pitiful to read of boys slaughtered by such mismanagement.

That occurred under a government of all the talents. How can you expect in these degenerate days—for there were giants in those days'—that we can find a Minister of Militia or a government capable of conducting this large campaign in a way more perfect than these great men were able to conduct even that comparatively trifling trouble that was then on their hands.

But, Sir, there have been other occasions when it was necessary to have military administration in this country. We had a war later on, a real war, a war usually spoken of in the journals as the disturbance in the North-west; and even in connection with that you will find that absolute perfection was not reached. You will find bitter complaints running through the reports of the brigade surgeon, and the reports of others who were charged with the administration of military affairs at that time—complaints that the clothing was not sufficiently warm, that each soldier was not supplied with a water bottle. We read that 'the 90th suffered very much from intense thirst during the four days they were engaged, owing to this want, as there were no means of supplying the line of skirmishers with water, who were out the whole day.' When you find that preparations were not made to supply the soldiers with such an absolutely prime requisite as water, and that they were allowed to suffer for four days from intense thirst when on the line of skirmishers, how can you assert—even if there were anything in these charges, which I do not admit—that there was negligence or culpability on the part of the Minister of Militia? All other rations, even emergency rations, are supplied by the British government; but, because, in the effort to do that which was a work of supererogation, in the effort to supply that which should not be a necessity at all, the minister was imposed upon—even if he was imposed upon, which I do not admit—to the extent of a $4,000 contract among the many contracts amounting to about $1,000,000, which he made during that time, can you fairly say that is evidence of negligence or culpability? We find General Laurie referring to Colonel Williams' regiment in the following words:

I believe they want water bottles and clothing, and I have repeatedly asked for both, but I have not received either.

Well, Sir, if that is any serious reflection on the Militia Department in connection with the conduct of a war in our own country in those times, I want to know who is going to judge so minutely the supposed omissions or failures or negligences of a Minister of Militia, who, in a range of contracts running to about a million dollars, has been imposed upon, assuming that he was imposed upon, to the extent of a $4,000 contract. One million dollars is to $4,000 as 100 is to two-fifths of one. That is to say, in the whole range of expenditure apart from pay of our own soldiers in the South African war, amounting in round numbers to about $1,000,000—the whole expenditure is, I suppose, over $2,000,000—even if the Minister of Militia had been imposed upon by a designing contractor to the extent of $4,000, that would only amount to two-fifths of one per cent on the whole; and it would be of infinitesimal matter in contrast with the general administration of the minister which has called forth high encomiums from men on both sides of politics all over the country, and won the applause of the whole empire outside. I say I am agreeably disappointed to find that there is nothing whatever in the charge, even though it is of such infinitesimal proportions, and I should not have been at all disappointed if it turned out that in regard to two-fifths of one per cent of his total expenditure the minister had been grievously imposed upon. Even if the food supplied by Dr. Devlin under that contract had been absolute trash, not worth a button, if it had not even been fit for human food, I would not have thought it was a remarkable thing to happen. On the contrary, I would have thought that in a large mass of contracts, extending over the whole range of materials requisite and necessary for such a service, it would have been almost a miracle if the Minister of Militia had escaped by a larger margin than two-fifths of one per cent from being imposed upon by downright fraud and humbug. But in this case I say there had been no fraud and no imposition of any kind whatever.

Now, my learned and hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has gone into the evidence so fully, and we have had the reports before us and before the country for so many days, that it is not necessary for me to occupy so much time as I otherwise would have taken in the expansion of this proposition. I presume that the best way in which I can preserve some degree of continuity will be to deal with the subject in the order in which it has been dealt with by the findings of the committee. If those findings are based on evidence, and are correct, then there is absolutely no charge proved against the hon. Minister of Militia, nor even against Dr. Devlin. But I want to call attention again to the way in which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has sought to get away from the real issue. He is alarmed, apparently, at the spectre which he has raised, and is anxious to get as far away from it as possible. He is harking back from the charge he made, the gist of which was that the Minister of Militia had negligently allowed an inferior article of food to that tested at Kingston to be supplied to the troops going to South Africa. That is the gravamen of the charge, but on that my hon. friend has expended as little time and attention as he possibly could, with any semblance of respect to the indictment which he himself prepared and laid before this House. He has been attacking the officers at Kingston; and he has been attacking Dr. Devlin. What has the character or conduct of Dr. Devlin to do with the charge against the Minister of Militia? Who has been defending Dr. Devlin? Who in this House cares a button about Dr. Devlin? Whether he is the most honest man in the world or the greatest scoundrel that walks unhung, is certainly a matter of absolute indifference to any member of the committee. Then I want to know what sense there is in attacking Dr. Devlin or in charging him with attempts to impose upon the public. That is not the question we are here to deal with at all. The question, I say again, is whether the Minister of Militia has been at fault or negligent. Whether Dr. Devlin did or did not supply such a food as he undertook to supply, and whether that food was or was not equal in strength and character and quality to that tested at Kingston, is a subsidiary question which it may be profitable to answer for the purpose of showing that there was no imposition on the Minister of Militia. But if you grant to the fullest extent that Dr. Devlin succeeded in imposing on the officials in the Militia Department, that might still leave the charge of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier absolutely unproved and foundationless.

The second paragraph of this report refers to the samples forwarded to the director general of medical supplies at Ottawa. These are referred to for the purpose of establishing a proposition which I say again it was not at all necessary to establish, but which is established beyond all reasonable controversy—that the food which was used in the test at Kingston did not contain a percentage of over 13·7 of proteids. The evidence of that rests on this fact, that there were two samples of food furnished, with the handwriting of Mr. Hatch on the envelope containing one of them, which Mr. Hatch himself told us he furnished to Dr. Neilson for the purpose of making a test in Kingston. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier referred to three samples. I am not aware that there were three. I understand that there were but two samples—one with 80 per cent of proteids and the other 50 per cent of proteid. The 80 per cent sample he called full strength, and the 50 per cent half strength. There was no other sample ever furnished Dr. Neilson. Mr. Hatch does not pretend that there were any other samples sent, nor does Dr. Neilson or Dr. Devlin suggest that there were any others. We then have this, as a reasonable conclusion to arrive at, that there were two samples sent to Dr. Neilson as samples of the food to be tested at Kingston. Mr. Hatch himself admits that it was not the 80 per cent sample which he was going to make the subject of the test, because that would have been altogether too strong. It would have been preposterous to feed soldiers for twenty days on 80 per cent of proteids, because that kind of food is only suitable for patients suffering from wasting diseases. What he did say was that he was going to supply a food with 60 per cent proteids. We know now that this sample which he sent, and which he called his sample of half-strength, contained, not 50 per cent, but only 13·7 per cent proteids. What he called his half-strength sample was submitted to an analytical chemist and analysed, and the evidence in regard to that is a direct, logical, continuous chain. It is absolutely true that the sample called the half-strength sample, furnished by Mr. Hatch to Dr. Neilson as a sample of the food upon which the soldiers were to be fed at Kingston, did not contain 50 per cent strength of proteid, but only 13·7 per cent, and Mr. Hatch admitted afterwards that it contained only 15 per cent. If Mr. Hatch assumed that what he was giving to Dr. Neilson was a 50 per cent sample of protose or proteid—because there is nothing in all this pother about the name on which my hon. friend insists so strongly, and I must say that a man is driven to the catch at a very small straw when he thinks he can make anything out of the difference in names

—if this sample, which Mr. Hatch called half strength, and which he supposed to contain 50 per cent of proteids, contained only 13·7 per cent, it is reasonable to assume that when he thought he was furnishing 60 per cent proteids, he was in reality only furnishing about 14 per cent. When Mr. Hatch supposed—and I am giving him the credit of good faith—that he was actually furnishing Dr. Neilson and Dr. Devlin at Kingston, for the purposes of a test, 50 per cent proteids, but which on analysis was found to contain but 13·7 per cent, it is fair to conclude that if he did the thing in good faith—and I am arguing on the assumption that he was in good faith throughout, though I strongly suspect he was a fakir from the beginning to the end—it is but reasonable to suppose that when he thought he was furnishing 60 per cent of proteids, he was in reality only furnishing about 14 per cent. That is entirely in accord with his own admission. The real truth is that he did not know what he was furnishing the government. He never knew anything about it at all. He simply made some hocus pocus mess that he called proteose, and never analysed it at all or had it analysed. Any one who will take the trouble to read his cross-examination will discover that he did not know what he was furnishing. He is not a chemist. He told us that he was a Galician Jew, practicing the trade of grist-milling when in his own country, and it is passing strange to find our hon. friends opposite, who have such a prejudice against that race, now championing the cause of the most prominent Galician in the country. If you will look at the cross-examination of Mr. Hatch, you will find that he could never have had any possible means of knowing what was the strength of the food he was sending to Kingston at all. He did have analyses made by Dr. Ruttan of some food, when he first came to this country, but when I probed him and when he was sharply questioned by other members of the committee, he had to admit—and he did so very reluctantly—that that was not food made in this country at all, but some food he had brought with him from the old country and had handed to Dr. Ruttan for the purpose of having it analysed, and he got an analysis and a certificate from Dr. Ruttan showing that it contained 60 per cent of proteids. And by a breach of faith, by a breach of the express understanding between him and Dr. Ruttan, he used that certificate as a puff for the stuff he was making in this country, with which it had nothing at all in common. I say therefore that, as a matter of fact, he did not know what he was giving the soldiers in Kingston at all. But he admitted, so far as his admission is worth anything, that the strength of the food he was giving them was 15 per cent of proteids. That is established by the uncontradicted evidence of Mr. Muir, of the firm of Muir & Torrence of Montreal, and I noticed the very artistic way in which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier slides over that evidence. How can he get that out of the case? How can he get out of this record the uncontradicted admission by Mr. Hatch that he did not supply 60 per cent or 30 per cent or but only 15 per cent of proteids for the purpose of the test at Kingston. Mr. Muir gave the whole conversation. He explained that it was not merely a casual statement made to him by Mr. Hatch, and he explained why he had such an accurate recollection of the conversation. The very surprise excited in his mind by that statement caused him to remember the thing so well. If it was a lie told by Mr. Muir, it was a lie with a circumstance, which I admit is the most artistic kind of lie a man can tell, but the hon. member for Jacques Cartier himself admits that the statement made by Mr. Muir was a true one; and if it was true, that is absolutely the end of my hon. friend's case.

There is no foundation left for his case, if Mr. Muir told the truth. If Mr. Muir told the truth, Hatch made the clear and distinct admission that the food had not 50 per cent or 60 per cent, or even 30 per cent strength of proteids, but only 15 per cent. And, when Mr. Muir expressed surprise, and said he thought it was a very much higher percentage, Hatch went on to explain the reasons why he used a low percentage, and claimed that that was the very merit of his invention, and that he was enabled, by the peculiar constituents of the food, and by the way he mixes them, to make a food so quickly assimilable, that a 15 per cent strength of proteids had a better effect upon the system than a higher percentage of proteids would have in less perfectly composed and less perfectly blended ingredients. I press the concession of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), that Mr. Muir was telling the truth, and that this was really and verily a clear admission on the part of Hatch—an admission not made under any misunderstanding, but made with a detail and circumstantiality which shows that he fully and perfectly understood the matter; that his attention had been aroused by the fact that he had actually surprised Mr. Muir, and, with that full and fair understanding he made the frank, clear and distinct admission, that the food he had supplied at Kingston did not contain more than 15 per cent of proteids.

Now, if Mr. Muir was not telling the truth—which, however, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier will not contend, because he has admitted the contrary—it was the duty of these hon. gentlemen on the committee to bring Hatch before the committee, and have Mr. Muir's statement contradicted. The hon. member (Mr. Monk), admitted to my hon. friend from Kingston, that we are not going to try this case on evidence that was not before the committee; we are not at liberty to try this case by volunteer statements made outside, without the sanction of an oath. There is no other way to get rid of the effect of Mr. Muir's statement, and, therefore, of Hatch's uncontradicted admission, except by having it solemnly contradicted under oath in the same way that it was given by Mr. Muir. I do not suppose that I need labour that matter longer. I do contend that from the uncontradicted admission to Mr. Muir, and the analysis made by Dr. Ruttan, it is clear that the food sent to Kingston for the purpose of being given to the soldiers subjected to the test, did not contain a higher percentage, at all events, than 15 per cent of proteids. Dr. Ruttan was called by my hon. friends on the other side to show that it was impossible that those results which were obtained at Kingston, could have been obtained with a food having only a 15 per cent strength of proteids. Though it is a little out of the line I intended to follow, yet, while the matter is present to my mind, I might as well deal now with the evidence of Dr. Ruttan on that point. This evidence was presented by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), with the intention of proving, by chemical authority, that these results could not have been obtained with a food of 15 per cent strength of proteids, but that the food used, must have had 50 or 60 per cent. And the way it was sought to be proved, was by asking Dr. Ruttan a number of hypothetical questions as to what would be the effect of feeding such and such men with such and such a strength of food, for such and such length of time under such and such circumstances. And in answering these hypothetical questions, Dr. Ruttan said that it would be impossible to sustain life for such a length of time on such food so given. But these hypothetical questions and the answers to them, proved nothing at all; because when I put in the affidavits of the men, showing that they had not relied exclusively on this food, but that they had had beef tea, sugar, milk, and some of them beer, Dr. Ruttan had to admit that every one of the results reported to have been accomplished by the test, might have been accomplished by the use of a food having no greater strength of proteids than 15 per cent. I say that this is absolutely fatal to the contention that the food tested at Kingston could not have had so low a percentage as 15 per cent, or otherwise the test would have had different results. Dr. Ruttan's evidence does not disprove, but rather confirms, the statement that the food used at Kingston contained only 15 per cent strength of proteids. Now, there is no dispute, absolutely none, about the proportion of proteids in the food sent to South Africa. There is no doubt that it contained at least 16 per cent. So that according to the evidence, it was a food as strong, if not stronger in proteids, than the food used in the tests in Kingston.

Mr. RUSSELL.

There was one feature of my hon. friend's (Mr. Monk's) speech, by the way, to which I must call attention. He spoke as though it were admitted that the proteids were the only nutritious element in the food. But the hon. gentleman knows very well that the proteids are only the tissue-producing elements, and that it is important for men on the march, or in the fighting line, or engaged in heavy work, that they should be supplied with the energy-producing elements as well as the tissue-producing elements. I am not a chemist or physiologist, but I venture my opinion for what it may be worth, that if there is any preference at all, as a matter of common sense, it is vastly more important to have the energy producing elements, than the tissue forming elements. I only refer to this matter to refute the utter fallacy of my hon. friend in assuming that because there was only 14 per cent of proteids, there was only 14 per cent of nutriment in the food supplied to the soldiers who went to South Africa.

Now, suppose there had been a mistake made—of which there is no proof—suppose there had been an improper food furnished. I venture to say that the responsibility does not rest, and cannot be made to rest in any degree whatever upon the Minister of Militia. Dr. Neilson took the right view of his position, when he said that he assumed and was obliged to assume the whole responsibility for recommending that food. It is necessary and right that there should be some person in the department to assume such responsibility for the supplies sent to South Africa. Do you suppose there would be any member in the Imperial House of Commons lunatic enough to make a personal charge against the Marquess of Lansdowne, because he had not himself personally examined all the supplies that were sent out with troops that were going to the front? And if not, why should we look for that in this country, which no sane man would think of demanding of Ministers of State in England? It is only right and reasonable that there should be technical officers charged with the responsibility of such matters, and upon whom the minister has the right to throw the responsibility, if anything goes wrong. Therefore, I say, Dr. Neilson was right in assuming, as he did assume, the entire responsibility. The sample was handed to him by Dr. Devlin, and he satisfied himself that it was the same kind of food that had been used in the test at Kingston. He undertook the whole responsibility; and more than that, I do not see why he was not as much entitled to rely upon the respectability and responsibility of Dr. Devlin as the collector of customs in Montreal was to rely upon the respectability and responsibility of Dr. Devlin. Hon. gentlemen opposite contend that it was all wrong for Dr. Neilson to accept the statement of Dr. Devlin without criticism, but when it comes to the collector at Montreal, oh, then Dr. Devlin is everything, Dr. Devlin is a perfectly responsible man, and the collector of customs in Montreal does perfectly right in relying implicitly on the assurance of Dr. Devlin that these goods are those contracted for by the government. But Dr. Neilson must not rely upon Dr. Devlin for anything at all, when the latter assures him that this sample is really a sample of the food which was tested at Kingston and tested under Dr. Devlin's own care, tested under his own superintendence. Dr. Devlin was the man with whom Dr. Neilson had acted all the way through, and with whom the Minister of Militia and Defence had acted, and it would have been fair and reasonable to suppose that a man standing high in the community—and I know nothing against his honour, professionally or otherwise—was furnishing him a fair, reasonable and proper sample of the food. But he did not rest at that, he subjected it to the only test that it was feasible to subject it to at the time. He assured himself, at all events, rightly or wrongly; and if my hon. friends opposite will take the responsibility of saying that Dr. Neilson did not take proper precautions, and that he should be dismissed from the service of the Militia Department for not taking proper precautions and making an adequate test to satisfy himself that that sample was suitable to be the standard of the contract, then I have nothing to say about it. He is no relation to me in the world. I do not know that he is a protégé of any hon. gentleman on this side of the House; but I undertake to say that they will not insist that Dr. Neilson did anything wrong which would warrant his being blamed or dismissed.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what precaution Dr. Neilson took to satisfy himself that the food that Dr. Devlin undertook to supply was similar to that used at Kingston?

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to answer him by asking another question? Do you insist that he should be dismissed for not taking proper precautions, and do you say that if he failed to take proper precautions to assure the Minister of Militia and Defence of the genuineness of the food you have any right whatever to condemn the Minister, and that it is not a malicious proceeding to base any charge against the Minister if Dr. Neilson had satisfied himself in his own mind, and assured the Minister of Militia and Defence that these were samples which could be depended upon as fair samples of the food which was used in the test at Kingston.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman to come down to rock bottom, and tell us what precautions Dr. Neilson took to satisfy himself that the food was similar to that tested at Kingston?

Mr. RUSSELL. Dr. Neilson says under oath that he took all the precautions possible for him to take at the time. He says that if he had had a chemical analyst at his elbow like Mr. Hersey, he would have been very glad to have his assistance, but it was entirely impossible for him to analyse the specimens. The contract being made on the 4th and to be performed on the 15th, it was absolutely necessary to close the bargain at once, or else it was no use to undertake it at all. He says if he had undertaken to have the samples analysed the contract could not have been performed in time to allow this food to go to South Africa. He says further that if he had insisted upon the analysis it would have taken twelve days for the Inland Revenue Department to secure an analysis of it, and we know, as a matter of fact, that when the goods were afterwards put in the Inland Revenue Department for the purpose of being analysed, the process did occupy twelve days before any results could be given. But that is not the point. How anxious my hon. friend is to get away from the point; how anxious they all are to get away from the point; how anxious they all are, having failed in establishing their unfounded charge against the Minister of Militia and Defence of gross and culpable negligence, to find some scapegoat in the department upon whom they can transfer the charge. Now, I say again that the responsibility of Dr. Neilson in this matter he himself has recognized. I am not going to waste time by reading extracts from the evidence; every member of the committee can remember the statement of Dr. Neilson that he then became absolutely responsible to the Minister of Militia and Defence for the equivalency of that sample on which that contract was based to the food which had been used in the test at Kingston. It might be possible, if it had turned out that it was not equivalent to it, that my hon. friend would have a right to call for the dismissal of Dr. Neilson. But when it is proved beyond any fair doubt that Dr. Neilson was right, that the assurance given him by Dr. Devlin was right, that the analysis has confirmed every conclusion at which he arrived, and that the food which was sent to South Africa was really better than the food which was supplied at Kingston, then I say that Dr. Neilson, having taken that responsibility upon his shoulders, and having come out without being convicted of any mistake, without having been convicted of any blunder, taking the responsibility, taking the risk—I say he has passed that stage at which it is fair or reasonable to raise any further outcry against him. But even had he made ever so great a mistake, I say again that that would be absolutely no reason upon which to found any charge against the Minister of Militia and Defence, no more than if any subordinate in any of the departments in England had been found guilty of carelessness or of negligence in allowing things to pass which should not have been passed without further criticism and without further care, that would have been a ground upon which to base a personal charge against the Secretary of State for War.

Now, then, my hon. friend referred to the letter of Mr. Hatch as being the foundation for another charge of negligence against the Minister of Militia and Defence; and he said that it was very wrong and unfair to describe that letter of Mr. Hatch as a letter from a disappointed applicant for a contract. Now, let us see. Mr. Hatch, I suppose it will be admitted, was an applicant for a contract, Mr. Hatch did not get that contract, and I suppose it is not a very long inference to draw that he was a little disappointed at not getting it. Now, if he was an applicant for a contract, and failed to get it, and was disappointed at not getting it, and wrote a letter about it, I do not see there is anything very wrong in saying that his letter was a letter from a disappointed applicant for a contract. That seems to me about as plain as the nose on your face. Very well, that was only one of the innumerable letters which the Minister of Militia and Defence was receiving every day; and although he would have been justified in throwing it into the waste basket as one of the innumerable back-biting letters of complaint which he was receiving, he did not do so, but he did everything which he would have done had he known the writer of the letter, that is to say, he made inquiries of his officials to discover whether there was any basis for the letter of Mr. Hatch, and he learned from the officers of his department the proceedings that had been taken. First of all, he learned that his deputy had taken care that Capt. Benoit should be sent to Halifax for the express purpose of seeing that proper delivery was made of these goods under the contract.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not at all.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, absolutely so, as you will see at page 9 of the evidence. You will see the statement of the Deputy Minister of Militia 'that the cases were to be delivered to Capt. Curran, and Capt. Benoit, the secretary of the department, was sent to Halifax to see that everything was delivered according to contract.'

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is no evidence.

Mr. RUSSELL. Why does the hon. gentleman interrupt me to say that this is not evidence, when it is conclusive evidence.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Because Captain Benoit contradicts it.

Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. RUSSELL. He does not contradict it. Capt. Benoit, in his cross-examination, stated that he had taken samples out of the box in which they were contained, for his own satisfaction. Was it for his own satisfaction individually? Not at all. I asked him: You mean, of course, for your own satisfaction as an officer of the Militia Department? Certainly, he said. Somebody, I suppose, had to be responsible. Somebody had to be charged with details of carrying out this contract. Somebody had to be charged with the responsibility of seeing that the contract was carried out, and Capt. Benoit was there in Halifax for the very purpose of superintending the matter. What was Capt. Benoit's business in Halifax? The Deputy Minister of Militia tells us that his special business in this connection was to be in Halifax to see that the delivery of these goods was in accordance with the contract. Now, my hon. friend seems to think that what is done by Capt. Benoit, by Col. Pinault, by Dr. Neilson, or by any other officials of the department in the way of taking proper precautions and seeing that things are done rightly, reflects no credit upon the department. It is only when a minister personally does anything in reference to these matters that it is to count at all. But whatever is done by the members of his department is not to count, and is not to be placed at the credit of the department. What are his subordinates for, except to see that the business of the department is properly carried out. When officials of the department were in Halifax or elsewhere, or in Ottawa or elsewhere, and when Capt. Benoit, for his own satisfaction, as an official of the department was there to see that the contract was properly carried out, took actual samples and forwarded them to Ottawa for the purposes of analysis, I do not know why the department should not get credit of it. The hon. gentleman's theory is that whatever goes wrong in the department, if there has been any carelessness or any negligence, that comes right home to the Minister of Militia, but if the officials of the department attend to their duty, if they are careful and solicitous in the discharge of their functions, then, the department is to get no credit for that, but it goes as a personal asset to the particular officer who attends to the discharge of the duty entrusted to him. That is a most monstrous and a most ridiculous suggestion. The minister discovered when he made the inquiries suggested by Hatch's letter, that a number of things were being done to ensure the proper performance of the contract, everything that any man would insist upon having done, had his attention been called to the matter. But, it was not Dr. Hatch's letter that secured the taking of these precautions. My hon. friend assumed that Dr. Neilson did not know anything about the results of the analysis. Dr. Neilson knew all about what Mr. Macfarlane the Dominion analyst, had said: Dr. Neilson had the analysis in his own hands, and he was satisfied when he read the analysis of Mr. Macfarlane, and when he saw the proportion of proteids contained in the food, that it was a proper food to be sent to the troops in South Africa. The adverse language of Mr. Macfarlane was entirely uncalled for by the question submitted to him.

An hon. MEMBER. It was true.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was a gross impertinence on his part. I do not see anything in the submission which would call for the comments that he made. But Dr. Neilson, notwithstanding, chose to pass his professional judgment upon that food as a proper food to be sent to our soldiers in South Africa. He candidly admits that he expected it to contain a larger and higher percentage of proteids than it actually did contain. He does not pretend to be a food specialist. He does not pretend to know whether 14 per cent is better or worse than 30 per cent, or 50 per cent, or 60 per cent, but he exercised his judgment as the medical officer of the department, after having analysed the the foods which were sent to him or brought to his attention by the minister, and his judgment was that this was a proper food to be sent to South Africa. He adheres to that opinion to-day, and he expressed it without hesitation when sworn before the committee. One of the misconceptions that underlies the criticisms that have been made upon this food by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and by the newspapers in the country, as far as they have criticised it, is in assuming that this was to be an exclusive food. I lay stress upon that because the contrary is written clearly upon the official records. If hon. gentlemen will look not merely at the oral evidence that has been given before the committee, and which might be subject to the comment that is given after the event for the purpose of exculpating officials that are accused, but if they will discharge that from their minds and take the written record, the evidence which was put on record before any question had arisen in the community in regard to this food, if they will take the directions of the director general to the medical officers they will see that this was not an exclusive food at all, but that it was more a stimulant than a food. If they will look at the 'Instructions for medical officers on hired transports to the Cape,' at page 269, they will find the following:

The minister has added five days' emergency rations per man of a new nutritive extract known as 'protein vegetal'—(four ounces equal to one day's ration). On occasions when extraordinary exertion is called for, this light and compact ration will be found of great value. Its merits have been fairly tested in 'A' Battery, R.C.A. (April, 1899).

He does not say that if you run out of all other rations, that if you run out of the regular rations supplied by the Imperial government or run out of whatever emergency ration may be supplied by the Imperial government, you will be able to rely upon this. He does not say that at all, but he says:

On occasions when extraordinary exertion is called for, this light and compact ration will be found of great value. Its merits have been thoroughly tested in 'A' Battery, R.C.A. (April, 1899.)

That is consistent with the test that had been made in Kingston. It never had been tested as an exclusive food. Hon. gentlemen cannot read the affidavits of the soldiers upon whom they tested that ration and come to the conclusion that it was being tested to learn whether it was a food to be relied upon exclusively. It was a diet to be taken with the assistance of auxiliary foods. So that, it was entirely in accordance with the test which had been made by the medical director and with his general directions to the medical officers that this food was not a food upon which they could rely, as an exclusive diet upon which men could live without any other food, but that it was a food to be resorted to:

On occasions when extraordinary exertion is called for.

The 'Instructions for medical officers on hired transports to the Cape,' given by the medical director are entirely in line with the purposes and results of the tests made at Kingston, and entirely in line with the evidence of Dr. Ruttan. Now, I do not know that there are very many other points in this matter that I wish to refer to, but I think if the House will call it six o'clock I will recall some points that I may have forgotten.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, the only important part of the report that I have not dealt with is the reference which it makes to the collector of customs at Montreal. I do not quite understand the position taken by the Conservative journals, and by some hon. gentlemen opposite, with respect to that matter. When the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) formulated his charges, he seemed to think that it was a very terrible thing that this food was imported from a foreign country, and that it was a still more flagrant offence, it being imported from a foreign country, that it should be brought in without payment of duty. He asserted in his charges that it had been brought in without payment of duty by some order from the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Militia—I do not quite remember which he regarded as being the responsible minister in the matter. There is no doubt in the world that if my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) had not been entirely disappointed by the evidence, and if he had discovered that this food had been imported free of duty because of an order from the Militia Department or the Department of Customs, or any other department of government, there is no doubt at all that he would have rung the changes on that discovery and would have insisted upon it as a reason why this House should vote want of confidence in the government. He would have urged it as a reason that the particular minister should have been dismissed, or that the government, failing to get rid of that particular minister, should itself be dismissed. It seems to me that if that is the light in which the matter was viewed by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) when he supposed this food had been imported free of duty because of an order from some department of government, that it requires a great deal of casuistry to see that so far from it being a matter deserving of censure, it was a meritorious procedure on the part of the collector of customs. That is a species of casuistry which I confess I have not the intellect to comprehend. If, indeed, it would have been a grave and serious offence that this material being imported from the United States, was admitted free of duty by an order from a department of government, then I do not see why it is not a still more grave offence for a subordinate officer to exercise what hon. members opposite seem to regard as the 'magnificent indiscretion' of undertaking to dispense with the payment of duty upon this material imported from abroad, when he really had no discretion in the matter at all. The report, I consider, is very lenient in that regard, I do not see why it can be open to the comment of being in any way severe. It goes out of its way to point out that the collector for the port of Montreal might very well have been excused for allowing the first lot of this food to come in free of duty, because he might rely upon having a certificate from the Minister of Militia which would entitle it to be so imported. The report points out that the collector at Montreal might exercise a fair and reasonable discretion in the first case, depending upon the undertaking of the importer that he would produce that certificate, but I believe the report is entirely correct in saying that after he had failed to secure that certificate for the first lot, and after an interval of five or six days, if my memory is correct, the second lot was sought to be imported without any certificate at all or any order of any kind from any minister of the government to warrant the free importation of the second lot, I repeat that the report is correct in saying that it was then certainly his duty to have called Dr. Devlin to account, to have refused any further concessions, and to have said that his discretion did not permit him to, for a second time, violate the strict routine of the department. I certainly am not a blood-thirsty person, and I certainly have no strong personal feeling against the collector of Montreal. I have no desire to see him get into any trouble at all. I was very favourably impressed with his demeanour before the committee, and I must say that personally speaking, it would rather be painful to me to see him in trouble on account of the indiscretion in which he has indulged. But at the same time, if this government is sufficiently lenient to the collector of Montreal to let him go undisciplined and unpunished for what is undoubtedly an indefensible proceeding, it will be because they are more lenient than other governments have been to other collectors of customs. I have in my mind the case of a collector of customs at the port of Halifax, who exercised just exactly the same kind of discretion in permitting the transshipment of fish from a vessel which came into port sailing under the United States flag. He did it in entire good faith, believing that he was acting in accordance with the wishes of the government of which he was an officer. It had been done frequently before. No person ever raised any question that the collector at Halifax did not act in absolute good faith in what he did. At the same time there was no leniency shown to him, and there was no plea made for him. He was obliged to tender his resignation, and he is no longer collector of customs for the port of Halifax. Well, Sir, I say that if Collector White still continues to be collector for the port of Montreal after committing this indefensible proceeding, and I have not the slightest personal objection that he should continue to the end of his days to be collector at that port—it will be only an evidence that this government is more lenient with officers who think they are acting in good faith than a former government was with my old friend, the Hon. William Ross.

I think, Sir, I have dealt with every part of this report that it is important I should deal with, and that in treating this matter in this way I have obviated the necessity of my going over the speech of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I must have incidentally dealt with most of the subjects to which he drew our attention in the course of my remarks. There are one or two things, however, not of prime importance, to which I shall refer in concluding. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) speaks of Mr. Hatch's supposed secret. I assume that he has some secret, and the hon. member asks this House to infer that Mr. Devlin had no such secret, had no access to Mr. Hatch's secret, and had no opportunity for furnishing the same food to the government, because he entered into an agreement with Mr. Hatch in which he made a recital stating that Mr. Hatch was the proprietor of the secret. Well, Sir, if you can prove facts by recitals in agreements, then I admit that the fact is proved that Mr. Hatch was the sole proprietor of this trade secret. But it is a novel way to prove facts. It is quite true that Dr. Devlin might, in point of law, be estopped from making any assertion to the contrary of that which he had consented to insert in a document under his own hand and seal, but it hardly amounts to a particle of evidence as to the fact. It is as remote from proof as of that actual fact. It is as remote from proof as of that fact as another method of proof that was given to us by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) when he asked us to infer that a certain thing was a fact because he read it on the label that was attached to one of the boxes.

A word in reference to the exhibition of himself that Mr. Hatch made before the committee. He stated that he was when in his own country, a miller, that he had no pretensions to be a chemist, that he did not profess to have any scientific knowledge, and when he was asked if he had gone through any college or university, or anything of that sort, he told us that he had taken a course in a polytechnic school, but he told us also that he had no diploma, and in fact that the greater part of his life had been spent in the ordinary business of milling. When he was examined as a witness, he fully justified the inference as to his comparative ignorance which one would draw from his own statement of his biography. He undertook to say that any man who tried to live on a food containing less than 14 or 15 or 16 per cent of proteids, would be obliged to eat such large portions that his stomach would not hold the amount of food he would have to carry and that his digestive organs would break down. He was asked what were the percentages of the proteids in the ordinary food which we consume in everyday life. He was very reluctant to tell, although he professed to know all about it, what were the percentages of proteids in the ordinary foods daily consumed by an average man in an average vocation of life. So I had to take him piece by piece, one food after another, and the final result of the cross-examination was his confession that the average daily food of an average man in ordinary vocations of daily life would be from 7 to 9 per cent of proteids. Was it not a perfectly preposterous thing for him to say that if the average food which we eat every day of our lives contains only from 7 to 9 per cent of proteids, then any person who ran the risk of eating a food, day in and day out, that contained less than 16 per cent of proteids would break down, that his digestive organs would not stand the strain, and that he could not endure to eat enough food to give him the requisite quantity of proteids. Surely it was the most marvellous exhibition of ignorance ever displayed. Then, if you look at page 12 of the third day's proceedings, you will find that Mr. Hatch admits that he does not know the very first thing about that on which he was undertaking to enlighten the committee. He had said that any food containing less than 14 or 15 per cent of proteids would involve the eating of so much that the digestive organs would not stand the strain. I asked him what extent of proteids oatmeal porridge would contain, and I think he said it contained 6 per cent, or less, because a large proportion of water entered into the making of the food. There are a great many people who live on oatmeal porridge year in and year out, and live very well. I believe Dr. Johnson once described oatmeal as a grain on which men were fed in Scotland and horses in England, and the report was that you could not find better horses anywhere than in England nor better men anywhere than in Scotland. If Scotchmen can live on oatmeal year in and year out, as many of them have done and do, I think Mr. Hatch displayed a marvellous variety of ignorance when he told the committee, that unless a man had 14 or 15 per cent of proteids in his ordinary daily food, he could not at all survive. I was pressing him on this point, and I asked him :

Q. Then from 7 per cent to 9 per cent would be for a healthy person in an ordinary sphere of life the normal average?—A. Of the whole volume taken together, the average that would nourish a man in average business.

Q. When you more than double that percentage are you not getting up to the danger point?—A. That depends on the individual; I think that is rather a question for a physician.

That is to say, when you give a man more than 14 to 18 per cent, or 15 or 16 per cent, my question was, is there not a danger that you are giving him too much proteids? Ought there not to be other constituents in larger proportion, and a smaller percentage of proteids? Look at his answer :

That depends on the individual; I think that is rather a question for a physician. I doubt even if a physician could tell you that.

Then, I asked him :

Q. Have you any opinion on this point : whether 7 per cent to 9 per cent being the proper percentage of proteids in the normal food of a healthy person in an ordinary avocation, when you double or more than double that, do you come to a point which is dangerous ?

And the man who undertakes to be a food specialist and to tell us that food for soldiers ought to contain 60 per cent of proteids, and that he can give food containing 85 per cent, when I asked him whether, in the average food used by men in the ordinary avocations of life, if you put more than 14 to 18 per cent of proteids you would not reach a point that was dangerous, answered :

I don't know ; that is a question for a physician.

I say that is a confession of ignorance about the whole question which makes Mr. Hatch's evidence in respect to this matter absolutely useless.

I have already commented on the fact that Mr. Hatch was not brought, as he should have been, and as he could have been, to contradict the statement made by Mr. Muir. The excuse given by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier for not calling him, is that Mr. Hatch was sick and unable to attend. He was ill, I suppose, for he sent a telegram stating that he was ill ; but, if that was a vital point in the inquiry, and it was possible for Mr. Hatch to clear up that point, surely it was the duty of my hon. friends to ask that the committee sit another day to hear him. That was June 26 ; but my hon. friends got so tired and sick of the investigation that they said their stomachs would not stand any more of it, and we must close it at all hazards and meet to make our report. That was nine days ago, and we may have nine days more before we get out of this ; and if Mr. Hatch's evidence was of any importance at all for the purpose of contradicting the evidence of Mr. Muir, what possible objection could there have been to have Mr. Hatch called before the committee ?

With regard to Dr. Devlin's non-appearance before the committee, if the hon. gentlemen on the other side really believed that he did not wish to testify, and thought that it was important that he should testify, when, as was reported in the organ of the Conservative party in this city, I was making a plea for him to be heard, I want to know what objection there was to conceding that very small favour which Dr. Devlin asked to have the committee adjourn till Friday morning, when he would be present with his witness from New York to make the statement which he wished to make before the committee. I say that these hon. gentlemen, having asked the committee to close its proceedings without hearing Dr. Devlin, it does not lie in their mouths now to say that Dr. Devlin did not wish to be called. I did not, nor did any other member on the government side, ask Dr. Devlin to be called, because we regarded his evidence as entirely irrelevant to the charge. We had no regard nor concern for Dr. Devlin ; he was not in our thoughts. We understood the charge to be one of culpable negligence against the Minister of Militia ; and Dr. Devlin, so far as we knew, had no light to throw on that question. There was no evidence that we could imagine Dr. Devlin capable of giving which would be relevant to the main issue. I did not ask that he should be called, and I am not going to charge him with seeking to evade an appearance before the committee, but the members of the committee who seek to make that charge should certainly have insisted on giving him an opportunity of appearing ; and having asked that the committee should close its labours and report, it is unfair on their part now to make any point against Dr. Devlin on the ground that he did not appear before the committee when they themselves refused the concession he asked for.

As to the statement of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, that this food which was sold by Dr. Devlin to the government consisted of broken biscuits. I am not aware that there is a single particle of evidence, from beginning to end, that will sustain that statement, which has gone broadcast all over this country, and which, I have no doubt, has influenced a great many people in making up their minds. It was a statement in the original charge of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, that the food was a powder resembling broken biscuits. When the bagful of stuff from the Saratoga trunk was brought before the committee, I understand that it exactly corresponded with the stuff which was approved of by Dr. Neilson, the director general of medical supplies. Broken biscuits, I suppose, might be made to resemble it, and so they might be made to resemble many other things. It might be reeking with proteids and still resemble broken biscuits, or it might resemble broken biscuits with scarcely a particle of proteids. I do not think it is a distinguishing characteristic of proteids at all that they do not resemble broken biscuits. But this food could not have been broken biscuits because Mr. McGill, who was called by my hon. friends opposite, said that wheat biscuits, as a rule, contained 8.55 per cent of proteids, and other biscuits a still smaller proportion. He said I admit that there was a kind of food used in the German army which contained a very much larger percentage of proteids, but that ordinary biscuits contained only 8.55 per cent. The fact that this food contained double that percentage is conclusive proof that it was not broken biscuits. I do not know on what authority or on what kind of evidence or why any member of this House should have the hardihood to get up and suggest that there is a particle of evidence to justify the statement that that food which was imported consisted merely of broken biscuits. I do not know that we have the right to assume that Dr. Devlin did not know how to procure it in exactly the same way, and, for all I know, from exactly the same sources as Mr. Hatch. It would be marvellous that he should have been so long collaborating with Mr. Hatch, kneading it in his own kitchen, making it in his own oven, having it prepared by his own housekeeper, in close connection with Mr. Hatch in the whole business from beginning to end, and not know the methods by which Mr. Hatch got his materials and the sources from which he got them.

As to the price of the food, that is a comparatively small matter. It is not one of the statements of this charge, on which this country was made to ring. It was not anything so small and petty as a few thousand dollars that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier was thinking of when he formulated his charge in this House, on that day last month when he was pleading for our brave boys who are fighting the battles of their country in the South African war. It was nothing so small as that he was thinking of. It was the life-blood of our gallant sons that he was so much agitated about at that time. What was making his blood boil was the sorrows and afflictions from which those brave boys might be suffering in the field. But now what is in question is a matter of a few thousand dollars in the whole expenditure of this country in connection with this contingent—one-fifth of one per cent in respect of the whole expenditure and two-fifths per cent of the expenditure on account of supplies. If the case has come down to such a paltry issue, there is not a man, woman or child in this country who will bother about the thing any more. Everybody who buys a fancy article is called on to pay a fancy price. We know that this was a proprietary article, and the price which Mr. Hatch spoke of charging the government was two dollars and fifty cents. If Mr. Hatch could afford to charge two dollars and fifty cents to the government for what I have demonstrated to be substantially the same article as was furnished by Dr. Devlin, I do not see that any such grievous sin can be imputed to Dr. Devlin for charging two dollars for substantially the same thing.

I can very well understand, as my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has said, the great disappointment to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier that the charge which he depicted in such glowing colours, should have amounted to so extremely little, and how grievous must be the disappointment of my hon. friends opposite that it has not materialized into a magnificent scandal, something of the kind we were accustomed to see when they were in power. Something of that kind must have been what they were fishing for, but when they can bring home to any Liberal government or members of a Liberal administration in this country, one hundredth fractional part of the scandalous transactions that have not been charged merely but proved up to the hilt against successive Conservative administrations, it will be time enough for them to expect to excite the keen attention of the people. I go further and say that if ever that time should come—and I have no fear of ever living to witness it—when they will bring home one hundredth part to this government of the scandals which have been proved up to the hilt against successive Tory administrations, the people will insist upon hurling the Liberal administration from power, even although it be at the risk of reinstating the very men who brought more shame on this country in days gone by than they can ever live to atone for.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorancy). I will begin by one of the last remarks made by my hon. friend when he spoke of the absence of Dr. Devlin from the committee. It seems to me that the absence of this gentleman and his evident refusal to testify before the committee, throws upon the whole transaction such a light of suspicion that it is well to dwell upon it for a short time. Dr. Devlin attended the meetings of the committee assiduously except one or two, and was there on the last morning the committee sat, and remained in the room until the last witness was examined and the last question put to him, and then all at once he fled the Chamber. At three o'clock that afternoon, we received a letter from him in which he said that he was very anxious to make a statement before the committee. We waited an hour and a half, and the committee adjourned until the following evening, when another letter was received from him saying that he had been called suddenly to New York in order to obtain important information regarding the subject-matter of the inquiry. What then happened? Did my hon. friends propose that the committee should wait until Dr. Devlin got back on Friday so as to hear him? They did not. If Dr. Devlin had anything to communicate to the committee, if he had not all the anxiety in the world, either for himself or the government, to avoid giving evidence, he had every opportunity to make a statement before that committee at any time, and could have made it just as well as did the hon. Minister of Militia and the Deputy Minister of Militia and the director-general of medical service. But the fact that he attended the meetings of the committee until the last witness was heard and then suddenly departed shows conclusively that he did not want to appear on the witness stand to make a statement, either because that statement would have been prejudicial to his own interests or the government, a friend of which he is.

I am not going over the ground which the chairman of the committee (Mr. Belcourt) went over this morning. He made a plea pro domo, he tried to show that he was right in the rulings he gave as chairman of the committee and to impress the House with the idea that he was the most impartial chairman who ever directed a select committee in this country. We have nothing to do with that question, but I would remind my hon. friend of the old French proverb, 'Qui s'excuse s'accuse,' 'who excuses himself accuses himself.'

There is one thing that struck me—and I do not wish at all to be disagreeable to my hon. friend—and that is that he came out of that committee a much wiser and milder man than when he went in. He came into the committee like a roaring lion but he went out as meek as a lamb. He learned so much of the procedure and the rules of the House which govern evidence in a committee of this kind, and of the conduct of an investigation by a committee, that the next time he is chosen by the government as member of a select committee in the House, should I happen to be a member of the same committee, I will vote him into the chair and thereby spare him the necessity of voting for himself.

Now, what did my hon. friend who has just taken his seat say? He spent a long time in addressing the House. Did he spend all that time in discussing the reports before the House, or the relative merits of these reports? No, a great deal of his time was spent in going over the mistakes committed in times long gone by, as long ago as Wellington, I believe, in preparations for war—to show that in the great armies of England, there had been scandals about rations and scandals about provisions for the troops. He went so far as to say that when our volunteers were called out in 1866 to repel the Fenian invasion, they went to the front without water-bottles. It seems to me that has not much to do with the subject before the House. What is the question before the House? It is a serious question. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side have tried to make light of this question, but it is a serious question. And the proof of that is the attention that has been given it by the press of this country—by the press on both sides of politics—by the attention given to it by the public, and by the attention given to it by this House; and also by the numbers of people who attended the meetings of the committee of investigation. The question before this House is this: Who is responsible for having paid $4,660 for a worthless article? That is one question, but not a very large one. The other and important question is: Who is responsible for having furnished our troops in South Africa with a so-called emergency ration, a ration which was to be relied upon by the troops, when they had nothing else, a ration that could be taken out and depended upon by them for sustenance in the field—who is responsible for giving to the troops an article which does not deserve the name of an emergency ration, as the Dominion analyst said, and which is completely worthless as a ration at all.

Now, let me dwell, for a few minutes, on the report presented by the chairman of the committee. It is simply a whitewashing report. It is a thick coat of whitewash applied to the Minister of Militia, and to those in the Militia Department. It simply says that the charges made against the hon. minister (Mr. Borden), and the Department of Militia are not proven. Hon. gentlemen on the other side who sat upon this committee, were bound to a certain extent, I take it, to whitewash the minister. They were bound also to whitewash the deputy minister, because otherwise they would have been condemning a great friend of the government, who had been placed in office by them. They could not condemn the director general of the medical staff, because that would have been condemning the Department of Militia, and also condemning the minister, who is at the head of the department. But they found an unfortunate Tory on their way, a gentleman named Robert White, who is collector of customs in Montreal; and because he is a Tory, they found him guilty. Guilty of what? They found him guilty of allowing this food to come into the country under the representations of Dr. Devlin, the very man upon whom the Minister of Militia and all the officials of the department relied in choosing this food to be sent to South Africa. And because Mr. White is a Tory, and because they had to blame somebody, they blame Mr. White. Now, my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, said that they had found that Mr. Hatch was a fakir. If they had known Mr. Hatch to be a Conservative—I do not know whether he is or not—I do not doubt they would have brought him in guilty of assault and battery. Let us take up the facts in this matter in chronological order. I am going to be as brief as possible, because the facts can be placed before the House in a nutshell. The very foundation of the charge made against us, is that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), declared that the food which was sent to South Africa, was not the same food as that which had been tested at Kingston, and that, as we had failed to prove that, our whole case falls to the ground. It seems to me that the evidence, as I heard it, and as any hon. gentleman might have heard it, in the committee, or may read it in the report, proves beyond any possible doubt, that the food sent to South Africa is not at all the same food as was tested at Kingston. On June 6, the Minister of Militia stated in this House, in answer to a question, that the food sent to South Africa, was known as protose, and he was absolutely right. As far back as 1898, the minister and his department were in communication with Mr. Henri Hatch: and in October of that year, letters were sent to and fro between the Department of Militia and the Hatch Protose Company. Letters bearing date of October 16 and October 20, were written on paper, headed 'The Hatch Protose Company,' and were signed by Henri Hatch. And, on October 24, the Minister of Militia signed a letter addressed to Henri Hatch, thanking him for an offer of emergency rations for the first contingent and declining the offer. Not only that, but the minister says, and the officials of the department say, that the test was held at Kingston, which proved that this food was a good food for an emergency ration for the troops. This was an interesting question to the Minister of Militia, as he has said himself, not only because he was Minister of Militia, but because he was a medical man. He took a great interest in the test, and caused his officers to make a report thereon. After the test had taken place in Kingston, five affidavits were sent in of soldiers who had gone through the test, and these were filed in the department. If hon. gentlemen will follow these affidavits, they will see that in answer to the questions: 'What food have you lived on exclusively for twenty-eight or thirty days?' they answered 'Hatch's Protose Powder,' 'Hatch's Protose Biscuits,' 'Hatch's Protose Bread.' And the minister says that he saw these affidavits. And not only that, but you will find that the pamphlet which I now have in my hand, in which these affidavits were printed, was filed in the department in the office of the minister. Hon. gentlemen will see that it is headed 'protose,' and tells of 'protose' manufactured by the 'Hatch Protose Company.' What is contained in this pamphlet? First is a certificate by Dr. Ruttan of McGill University, dated June 3, 1898. This is addressed to Henri Hatch, and this certificate is important in two respects—it is important first, as proving that the Department of Militia and the minister himself, must have known that this product was called 'protose' and that it was manufactured solely by Henri Hatch—because, as I say, this letter was addressed to Mr. Hatch—and not only that, but it proved that this food was a highly concentrated food, and eminently suitable for an emergency ration, for which purpose it was sent to South Africa—if this was the food that was sent there. I will not read the whole of Dr. Ruttan's certificate, but only a part of it:

I have analysed the sample of protein vegetal which you submitted to me April 23rd, and also have carried on experiments regarding its digestion.

I find that the two samples, crude and prepared, differ somewhat in their composition, as will be seen in the subjoined table:

	P. c.
Soluble in water, crude.....	0·18
Finely ground prepared material..	0·13
Moisture, crude .....	16·25
"    prepared .....	8·75
Protoids, crude .....	84·78
"    purified .....	85·97

So it is demonstrated by this analysis, made by Dr. Ruttan of Montreal, one of the most eminent chemists in the country, that this product of Henri Hatch was the product into the composition of which protoids entered to the extent of 84 or 85 per cent. It is proven by this that Henri Hatch was able to make a food which contained as great a quantity of protoids as much as 84 or 85 per cent. The hon. member for Halifax said that this material was brought into the country by Mr. Hatch, and was not manufactured by him. There is not a tittle of evidence in Mr. Hatch's evidence or anybody else's to prove that. This was food manufactured by Henri Hatch in Canada, and tested by Dr. Ruttan, and Dr. Ruttan gave him the certificate. Can it be pretended, that after Dr. Devlin had introduced Mr. Hatch to the Minister of Militia, as a food specialist, as far back as October or November, 1898, in the Windsor Hotel in Montreal, after the minister had written to him himself, after he had received several letters from him, all bearing the heading, as I said, 'Hatch Protose Company,' and referring to his food which was called protose, after the minister had written to him himself, after he had received several letters from him all bearing on that Hatch protose, all referring to this food that was called protose at the time, although the name was not yet registered—can it be pretended, I say, after the long experience the Minister of Militia and Defence had with Henri Hatch concerning this food, and the conversation he had with him on the train between New York and Montreal, that the minister himself, that the director general of the medical service, that the officials of the Department of Militia did not know that the only concentrated food that was ever mentioned in the Department of Militia, which was ever offered before the month of January, 1900, was the food prepared by Henri Hatch and called protose? It is also proven beyond controversy that the sole manufacturer of this food was not Dr. Devlin, who was simply the agent of Henri Hatch, but was Henri Hatch himself.

Now, following up the events in the order in which they took place, other people went to the Department of Militia when this contingent was being sent, and tendered their samples for emergency rations. The Boveril Company, as the member for Jacques Cartier said, offered its ration, and the emergency ration of the Boveril Company is known all over the world as suitable, and is used in the British army. But these people were told that the government were not purchasing any emergency rations at all. But on the 3rd or 4th of January a friend of the government, Dr. Devlin comes up here to Ottawa, and what reception does he get? Is he told that the government is not purchasing any emergency rations? Not at all. He interviews the director general of the medical service, and he interviews the minister; he brings with him a tin of this stuff upon which is a label which I will read. On the 4th the recommendation is given, on the 4th the tender is made, and this sample is put in, and on that very day this food, the supply of which all other tenderers had been refused, is accepted by the Militia Department. Now, Sir, what was the label that was on this tin? This is important as showing that the contractor himself knew very well that the food which he was supplying to the department was not at all the food which was tested at Kingston. Let me read this label:

Vitallin.

Vegetable Proteid Food.

Two and a half days' rations for a soldier; one-half an ounce to an ounce every four hours, four times a day mixed in water at temperature not lower than 70° Fahr. beef tea, milk, light broths or soups; take three or four biscuits to a meal or half a pound to three-quarters of a pound of bread per day. On this diet with tea, coffee, Canadian soldiers have lived in perfect health twenty-one to thirty days.

VITALLIN CO.,

Montreal, Can.

Now, Sir, what did the director general of the medical service do? He simply said to Dr. Devlin: Vitallin, I do not know anything about that. I know protein-vegetal. And he knew that the stuff which had been offered to the Minister of Militia was protose manufactured, not by the Vitallin Company in Montreal, but by the Hatch Protose Company. Did he take any precaution to find whether this was the food upon which these soldiers had lived at Kingston for thirty days? No, sir. The only precaution which he takes was, as he said himself: I tasted, smelt, and felt the food, and I found it was the same. These were the only precautions he took, and upon the false representations made by Dr. Devlin, notwithstanding that this stuff bore a different name, and was manufactured by another company altogether, he recommended it to the Minister of Militia and Defence. It was the bounden duty of the Department of Militia, it was the bounden duty of the Minister of Militia and Defence himself in such an important matter, to find out and satisfy himself by proper analysis that this food was really the same food as that tested at Kingston; because, as I said before, in the minister's own words, this was a food upon which the troops could rely, all other sustenance having disappeared.

Dr. Devlin was a friend of the government, and upon his sole representations that this food was the same, it was accepted by the director general and by the minister himself. Dr. Devlin gets the contract, and he goes to Montreal, and then he goes to New York. There is no doubt this stuff was not manufactured in the country by the Hatch Protose Company, there is no doubt it was obtained from New York, there is no doubt that it was brought in here in twelve Saratoga trunks, six of which were smuggled through the customs in Montreal, there is no doubt that this stuff does not at all resemble, in its analysis, that which was tested at Kingston—there is no doubt on these points at all. It was surreptitiously brought into this country in Saratoga trunks, not in ordinary cases in which merchandise is usually imported, each containing two bags of this food. It was put into tins. And what label was put upon the tins? Dr. Devlin knew so well that this food was not the food which had been tested at Kingston that he did not dare to put upon the tins which were to be sent to South Africa the same label as he had put on the sample which he had offered to the Department of Militia with his tender. This label is also reproduced in evidence, and hon. gentlemen will notice the great difference between the two labels. Here is the label put upon the tin sent to South Africa:

Emergency Rations.

Vegetable Proteid Powder.

One ounce or two tablespoonfuls, four times a day, in beef tea, milk, broths or light soups or water at a temperature not lower than 70° Fahr. Take with powder three slices of bread or four or five biscuits, tea or coffee.

VITALLIN CO.,

Montreal, Can.

Cor. Craig and Bleury Sts.

Now, Sir, that was the emergency ration furnished the troops, the ration upon which it was said that troops could rely; but they were told at the same time that they had to take with that three or four slices of bread, and five or six biscuits, and tea and coffee also. So that from the mouth of the contractor himself it is evident that this stuff which he had put into these tins, and which was shipped to South Africa was not at all the food which had been tested at Kingston. He did not dare to say that upon this food soldiers had lived at Kingston for twenty-eight or thirty days.

Now, this stuff is sent to Halifax. Is it examined in Montreal by anybody from the Militia Department? Does the Minister of Militia and Defence send anybody down to John T. Lyons's drug store to see what kind of food was put into these tins? Did he take the ordinary precaution to satisfy himself that the stuff which was being put into these cases was food which could serve as emergency rations? If he did not want to get it analysed he could, at least, have taken the precaution to see that it was the same stuff as that which was in the tender. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that there was no time to make an analysis. Why, Sir, Mr. Hersey, one of the most eminent chemists in Montreal, probably in the province, and who is well known to be so, stated to the committee that he could make this analysis in three or four hours, and he offered to do so. So there was no reasonable test that the stuff which was shipped to South Africa was examined and analysed to show whether it was the equivalent of the tender. It is sent down to Halifax and accompanied there by Mr. Lyons, the druggist who got it put into the tins; and then by the merest chance, Capt. Benoit, an old and trusted employee of the Department of Militia, had sense enough, on his own motion, and for his own satisfaction, to take two or three tins out of the boxes which were labelled vitallin, and to bring them back here to Ottawa. If Capt. Benoit, on his own initiative, and to satisfy himself that this was according to tender, that it was the right stuff, had not, without any instruction from his chief, taken out these tins from the boxes which were shipped on the Pomeranian and the Laurentian from Halifax, we would never have had the analysis which was made afterwards by the Dominion analyst, the result of which was produced before the committee. But, Sir, he says in his evidence, and in order that there may be no cavil about this, I will read just a few lines of what he did say. The question is put by the chairman, not in cross-examination, as was said this afternoon by the hon. gentleman :

By the Chairman :

Q. You went to Halifax at the time of the shipment of the emergency stuff?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under whose instructions did you go?—A. I did not go purposely for that, I went there in case the troops might want something that would have to be purchased at Halifax at the last moment, but did not go on account of that food which was to be delivered there, that was all I had to do with it.

Q. Were you to receive it and see about its being delivered to whoever was the officer in charge?—A. I spoke to the quartermaster general there and he told me not to bother about it; that the local medical staff officer would attend to it.

Q. Otherwise it would have been your duty had not some one else had to look after it?—

A. Captain Gwynne told me that the local medical man would look after that.

Q. Were you there when it arrived?—A. I did not see it arrive, but I saw it there in the gun sheds at Halifax.

Q. And what did you do; did you take any samples away with you?—A. Yes, I went there to look at it and I saw it, a big heap of boxes there, and for my own satisfaction, I asked if they could give me a few tins of it, and the foreman, out of one of the boxes, in my presence, took out two tins and handed them to me.

If we had not the evidence of Capt. Benoit, and if Capt. Benoit had not gone to Halifax, there would have been no evidence at all before the committee to show that the stuff in question was according to the sample, or that it only contained 16 per cent of protose, as was shown by the result of the analysis made by Mr. Macfarlane, the Dominion analyst. He was sent to Halifax and came back to Ottawa, and what had taken place? On the 25th of January, or on the 26th of January, the hon. Minister of Militia admits that he received a registered letter from Henri Hatch in which Henri Hatch says that the stuff that is being shipped to South Africa is a pure imitation, and an adulteration of his product. This was a letter concerning a public contract, concerning the public affairs of the country. It was a letter concerning a most important affair, a letter concerning the sending of emergency rations to our troops in South Africa. That letter was not marked private, or confidential, or personal, but it bore upon its face the mark of being a public document, and that public document did not belong to the hon. Minister of Militia, but it belonged to the public of this country. That document should have been filed amongst the public documents in the Department of Militia, and I am in the judgment of those occupying seats on the Treasury benches, I am in the judgment of those who have ever occupied positions in any administration, that when a document relating to a public question, relating to an important question, not marked confidential, private, or personal is received it is a public document, and should, of necessity, be filed with the documents of the department. This was a solemn warning given by a man whom the hon. gentleman knew to be the sole manufacturer of the food that had been tested at Kingston, that the stuff which was being sent to South Africa was an adulterated article, an imitation article which ought not to be sent to the troops in South Africa. What was done with that letter? Was it filed in the department? Not at all. Was it shown to any of the officials in the department? Not at all. It was the duty of the minister to go to the deputy and to the director general who had given his recommendation, and to have said to them: Here is a letter which I have received from the man who has been introduced to me by Dr. Devlin as food specialist, who is the manufacturer of 'Hatch's protose' which has been tested in Kingston; we should have an investigation, and see if the food which has been sent to South Africa is really fit to be sent there. That was the duty of the minister, and it was his duty to file that letter. If he has not done so, I state here in this House that he has been derelict in his duty, and that this was the first step he took in the culpable negligence which he has shown all through this transaction. Whom does he show the letter to? He shows it to Dr. Devlin, and he is not even certain that he did show it to Dr. Devlin. The only indication that he has shown it to Dr. Devlin is that there is written on the corner of the letter the words 'Dr. Devlin,' apparently in the handwriting of his secretary. He shows that letter to this contractor, to the man who has been making false representations to the government, and who has sold to the government not the stuff that was tested at Kingston, but his spurious dog rations, his dog biscuits, which is not worth—

Mr. BELCOURT. I suppose that is in the evidence—dog biscuits?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I say that it is not worth any more than dog biscuits—ordinary Spratt's Dog Biscuit, and it comes from the same place in New Jersey. There were two shipments of the stuff, one on the Pomeranian, and the other on the Lauren- tion. One vessel left on the 20th of January, and the other on the 27th of January. At that time there is no doubt that the minister had time to stop one of the consignments, or, at all events, to telegraph, or write to South Africa warning the troops not to use this food. There is no doubt that this food could not have arrived in South Africa before, at the earliest, the 20th of February, so that ample time was given to him to warn the troops that they should not use these emergency rations, that they should not be exposed to rely solely upon these rations, so that if all other food gave out they should not be obliged to fall back upon Dr. Devlin's vitallin. Capt. Benoit, when he got back here thought it was prudent to have this food analysed. On the 2nd of February he made the suggestion to the Department of Militia, and upon his suggestion the Department of Militia sent this food to the Dominion analyst, and what did the analyst find? He found that there was only 16 per cent of proteid or nutritive matter in the food, and he says that seeing that ordinary wheat contained 12 per cent of proteid matter, this food does not seem to be a very concentrated food, that it does not deserve its name, and that it is not worth $2 per pound. Did the Department of Militia take any steps after they had the report of the Dominion analyst, to notify the troops that these were not emergency rations? Not at all. They simply took the action of paying the contractor because, they said, the food furnished was according to sample, and they paid him $4,666, which was due him. This was two days after the report of the analyst had been filed in the Department of Militia. After the reception of the letter of the 25th of January, from Henri Hatch to the minister, instead of taking into consideration the fact that the stuff which had been contracted for was called vitallin, while it was well known that the stuff which had been tested at Kingston was known as proteose, and after the analysis had been made by Mr. Macfarlane it is extraordinary that the Department of Militia should not have taken some steps to warn the troops in South Africa that these rations were really not emergency rations. It is most extraordinary that the employees of the department, seeing the result of this investigation and the analysis, should not have called the attention of the minister to the condition of affairs. I cannot understand how it is that the deputy minister, when he received the analyst's report, which proved conclusively that the rations were worthless, as such, did not call the attention of the minister to the fact. If this is the state of things which exists in the Department of Militia, the sooner such evils are remedied, the better. Let me just call the attention of the House to another fact. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) this morning, in his speech, said that it was at the suggestion of the minister that this analysis was made. If it was at the suggestion of the minister, as the hon. gentleman says, surely the minister should have seen what was the result of the analysis, and if he did not see the result of the analysis, it is another proof that he was guilty of negligence in not looking at this report, and seeing whether this food was really fit to be regarded as an emergency ration. A great deal of stress has been laid on this fact. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that this food which was sent to South Africa was exactly the same food as that tested in Kingston. Having established that to their own satisfaction, they say the case falls to the ground because the only requirement was, that the food should be food of the same strength as that which had been tested at Kingston, and which had been proven to be a good ration for soldiers to live upon for twenty-eight or thirty days. Let us see what they base their contention on, that the food was the same as had been tested at Kingston. First, they say that Mr. Muir, of Montreal, came here and swore that Mr. Hatch had made the admission to him that the food at Kingston only contained 15 per cent of proteid matter, and, secondly, they base their argument upon the statement that a quantity of powder which had been found by Dr. Neilson, in a drawer of his desk, after this question came up in the House, was analysed and found to contain only 13 per cent of proteids. Basing their argument on these two points, they affirm that the food sent to South Africa was of the same nature and strength as that tested at Kingston. Let me point out that Mr. Muir is an intimate friend of Dr. Devlin's. He had been introduced to Mr. Hatch by Dr. Devlin, who told him that Hatch was an excellent pianist, and it was proved that while the test was going on at Kingston Mr. Hatch and Dr. Devlin were, time and again at Mr. Muir's house. According to Mr. Muir, every time he got an opportunity, the conversation was upon his concentrated food, which Hatch was continually praising. Is it not extraordinary that if Mr. Hatch, in discussing this matter, had any admission to make, that he would not make it in the presence of Dr. Devlin, who was interested in the contract and in the test in Kingston, and who was present at all these conversations between Muir and Hatch. But, said Mr. Muir, this was not a conversation in his home. It was one day, a year and a half ago, in the month of February or March, 1899, that Mr. Muir, walking down street, going to his office after luncheon, met Mr. Hatch, and Mr. Hatch said: Look here, there is only 15 per cent of proteid matter in the food which is being tested at Kingston. I do not say that Mr. Muir deliberately came here to perjure himself, but there are some extraordinary circumstances surrounding Mr. Muir's evidence. First of all, how is it that this did not come out in conversation in Mr. Muir's house in presence of Dr. Devlin, when they spoke of it so often? How is it that it only came out casually at the corner of the street when Muir was on his way to his office? And how is it that Muir never mentioned this conversation to Dr. Devlin until two days before he gave his evidence before the committee. I say, Sir, there is a great mistake somewhere. Here is Mr. Hatch, who has always told everybody that the food which he manufactured contained as much as 80 per cent, and at least 60 per cent of proteid matter, who has always been telling every one that the food tested at Kingston contained at least 60 per cent; here is the man who manufactured the food which was analysed by Dr. Ruttan, and which Dr. Ruttan ascertained to contain 84 or 85 per cent of proteid, and how is it possible that he could have met Mr. Muir in the street and said to him casually: Oh, the food which is being tested at Kingston only contains 15 per cent of proteids? No intelligent jury would have given a moment's attention to that evidence, and if they were disposed to be charitable they would find that Mr. Muir was rendering a friendly service to Dr. Devlin, but that he was mistaken in his comprehension of the conversation he had with Mr. Hatch that day. Yet, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the strong arguments which these gentlemen opposite put before this House to say that the stuff which was tested at Kingston and the stuff which was sent to South Africa are identical.

There is another point. They say that Dr. Neilson gave Dr. Ruttan a sample of the powder which was tested at Kingston, and that Dr. Ruttan found, by analysis, that it contained only 13 per cent of proteid matter. They argue from this, that the food tested at Kingston is not as good as the food sent to South Africa. Let us see what happened in that case. Dr. Neilson swore he got two samples from Hatch or Devlin before the test was made at Kingston, one being full strength, and the other half strength, and Dr. Neilson swears also that he brought back, or some one sent from Kingston, some of the identical bread or biscuits which Hatch sent to Kingston for the test. This was rather an important matter for Dr. Neilson, and it was important for him to prove that he had not been mistaken when he said that these two foods were identical. This is the story which Dr. Neilson tells. He came to his office one day; he did not find the bread or biscuits which had been tested at Kingston; he did not find the proteid powder of full strength which was given him by Dr. Devlin or Hatch, but he opened his drawer in which he kept postage stamps and other things, and at once he exclaimed: Eureka, I have found it. He found an ordinary envelope in his drawer, marked 'protein-vegetal,' and he immediately jumped to the conclusion that it was the powder sent to him—he did not know whom by—a year and a half previously, and he hurried down to Montreal and he got this powder analysed. I will ask any lawyer, I will ask any reasonable man in this House, to put himself the question: Is this evidence on which any responsible body of men would pass judgment and say that there is proven an identity between the stuff which was tested at Kingston and the powder which Dr. Neilson brought to Montreal? Why, Sir, in such matters as this the greatest precautions are always taken, and the very essence of the evidence which would be given before a court would be that there must be absolute identity between the stuff which was analysed and the food which was used. But in this case, by some accident, Dr. Neilson finds this stuff in his drawer and he immediately concludes that it was that which was analysed at Kingston, and he gets it analysed. But, where were the biscuits and the bread, and where was the full-strength powder which was sent to him at the same time by Hatch or Devlin? It had disappeared. Disappeared how? Dr. Neilson does not know; he could not find it, and he says: I suppose the charwoman came along in dusting and she must have taken the bread and the biscuits and the powder away with her. That is the kind of evidence upon which these gentlemen opposite rely to say, that the food which was tested at Kingston and the powder which was sent to South Africa were identical in composition and strength, and were fit food to send as emergency rations to our soldiers in the battlefield. But, there was another test which our hon. friends opposite could have made, and which would prove conclusively whether or not this food which was tested at Kingston was really good emergency rations and concentrated food. Mr. Hatch came before the committee and he laid before the committee samples of the bread and biscuits and powder which he had prepared for the test in Kingston. He said: This is the same stuff which I prepared; I used to bake it with my own hands; here is some of the stuff which I prepared for Kingston and which was spoiled in the baking. It was not palatable; it was not fit to be used as food for the soldiers; but analyse it, and you will find that it contains 60 per cent of proteid matter. Here was a man who had devoted almost his whole life to manufacturing this food, and offering it for analysis to the committee. Can hon. gentlemen believe that if he thought he was going to be condemned by the analysis if he were afraid of a test, he would have made that offer? It was because he was certain that there was in the food which had been prepared for the Kingston test an average of 60 per cent of proteid matter that he almost defied the majority of the committee to have it analysed. After Mr. Hatch had made this offer to the committee, my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) moved to have it analysed by Mr. Milton Hersey, who was then present, and who declared that he could make the analysis in three or four hours and have the report ready on the same day at five o'clock, if he were allowed to use the laboratory and the materials in the Department of Inland Revenue. What did the majority of the committee do? They refused. What could be the justification for such a refusal? They did not dare at that time to refuse point-blank, but they put it off by moving an amendment declaring that the time had not yet come to have this analysis made—that the committee should wait until Dr. Ruttan had made his report. My hon. friend from West Toronto moved again the next day that this food should be analysed. The majority of the committee again declared that the time had not yet arrived. Dr. Ruttan was heard as a witness, and he made his report of the analysis which he had made of the powder which Dr. Neilson had given him. Then the hon. member for West Toronto again moved that this food be analysed. Dr. Ruttan having made his report, the amendment was not in order and could not be moved again; but the majority of the committee refused to have it analysed. I ask again, why was this refusal made? The analysis of Mr. Hersey in the Department of Inland Revenue would not have cost the country anything, and the committee could have been satisfied by it whether or not Mr. Hatch was telling the truth.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will my hon. friend allow me to say why it was refused, or will he himself inform the House of the reason?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Go on.

Mr. BELCOURT. It was refused simply because it did not appear in evidence that this was part of the food sent to Kingston; but it appeared, according to Mr. Hatch's evidence, that all this food was spoiled, and did not go near Kingston.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the use of quibbling? Of course, this food was never sent to Kingston and was never near Kingston, but it was proved that it was prepared for the Kingston test and not sent to Kingston because it was not palatable, having been spoiled in the baking. Mr. Hatch said: 'This food could not be taken by the soldiers, as it was scorched and burned in the baking; I did not send it therefore; but it is the same kind of food, and I defy you to analyse it and find if it does not contain 60 per cent of proteid matter.'

Mr. POWELL. Was it made of the same material?

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was made of exactly the same material.

Mr. FOSTER. What evidence had they that Dr. Neilson's powder found in that little box was the same?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Simply Dr. Neilson's statement or conjecture, in face of the fact that he could not find the bread or biscuits returned from Kingston or the powder which he received at the same time either from Dr. Devlin or Mr. Hatch.

Of course, the question of price is a small matter; but I think we should call the attention of the House for a few minutes to it. The price paid was $4,666 for 2,333 pounds. The price which Dr. Devlin swears he paid in the United States was 30 cents a pound. I say I do not believe Dr. Devlin when he says that, and why? Because the collector of customs asked him, not once, but twice, not only verbally, but by letter, to give him an invoice, and Dr. Devlin refused to do it—why? Because, if he had given the invoice, he would have been obliged to show that he had not given 30 cents a pound for this stuff, but probably only 10 cents a pound. The cost of grinding is $23. The tin cans—ordinary cans, in which paint or white lead is put—7,000, at $25 a thousand, cost $175; labelling cost $12; customs duties, for which he gave unaccepted cheques, amounted to $140; making a total of $1,049, for the whole stuff. So that this contractor, in this little transaction, made a profit of over $3,000; and yet hon. gentlemen say that out of the million dollars spent by the government for provisions for the soldiers, we have only found this little thing. But wait until the Auditor General's Report comes down next year; wait until we see the returns and the accounts which will be produced before this House next year; and if we have found this instance of a profit of $3,600 on a small purchase of $4,600, what shall we find when we go into all the purchases amounting to $1,000,000?

Now, Sir, I am not much concerned with the test made at Kingston, for this reason. If that test was a farce, if it was not a serious test, then I say that the department and the minister himself were guilty of negligence in that respect; because, as I said before, this was an important matter, a matter in which probably the life and death of the soldiers in South Africa were concerned. The department were sending them food on which they had to rely when all other food had given out, and therefore it was only on the positive assurance that the food was good and fit for emergency rations that it should have been sent to South Africa at all. Therefore, I say that if the test at Kingston was a farce and a fake, that does not relieve the Department of Militia and the minister, who said he took great pains to have the test properly made, from the charge of negligence. Now, Sir, viewing all the circumstances of the case, viewing the warning which had been given to the minister on January 25, viewing the analysis that was made by the Dominion analyst, viewing the fact that the food supplied by Dr. Devlin was not the same as that tested at Kingston, I say that the conclusions to which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier came when he first made his motion before this House, are amply borne out by the evidence which has been adduced before the committee. I say that the Minister of Militia and his department in this whole matter were guilty of gross and culpable negligence in sending to South Africa as an emergency ration a food which was absolutely worthless, and was proved to be so by the Dominion analyst. Therefore it is, I regret to say, my duty to state to this House that after having sat in that committee and heard all the evidence and gone through all the documents and seen everything that took place, the charge that the minister was guilty of culpable negligence in not seeing that proper rations were sent to South Africa with our troops, has been clearly proved, and that, I think, will be the verdict of every impartial man in the country.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). The speakers on both sides who have preceded me, Mr. Speaker, have taken this case up historically, and given all the facts in evidence in such a way that any one who has listened to this debate, can have no difficulty in forming an impartial judgment. I do not consider it necessary that I should speak at any great length. I just want to call attention to some of the points in the arguments that have been presented by hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), instead of confining himself to the evidence given before the committee, or to anything that has transpired in connection with the committee, dealt with what Mr. Hatch would say, had he been examined a second time, and with what this one or the other would have said, and not with what appears in the book containing the evidence, placed in the hands of hon. members. And my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), with that oratorical power which distinguishes him in addressing juries, wound up with an appeal to wait until next year. Wait, he said, until we get this matter before the Public Accounts Committee, and then we will show what fraud has been committed in the paying of this large amount for this food. But, all these things which he has promised to do next year, have not yet materialized, and have nothing to do with the question before the House.

I want to deal with this case historically, and show where we are, from my point of view, as a member of the committee and of this House. The charge that the committee had to deal with, is found in paragraph 10, in the long list of so-called charges made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier:

That, as a matter of fact, the food or emergency rations, supplied to the Canadian troops was not identical with the food tested at Kingston known as 'Hatch's Protose,' but was a totally different article, of a very inferior quality, containing scarcely 17 per cent of nutriment, whereas the food tested contained over 60 per cent of nutritive substance.

That is followed by paragraph 16, which says that the usual precautions as to inspection were not adopted by the Militia Department in regard to the shipment of emergency rations.

I do not know what the usual precautions were that were not taken in this particular case, unless what is meant, is simply the analysis. All ordinary precautions were taken. Boiled down, this charge—and that was the drift of the speeches delivered on the opposite side to-day—is that Hatch's food was all right, but Devlin's was all wrong. There is plenty of other matters in the charges, but it is what may be called padding. Consider them as closely as you can, and you will see that what I have said, is substantially the charge made. Conceding for the sake of argument, that Dr. Devlin's food was not identical with Mr. Hatch's, it does not follow that the Minister of Militia was in any way negligent. Before you can charge him with negligence, you must know the history of the transaction.

The majority report of the committee is that this charge is not proved, and the amendment of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, is a report which consists of twenty-nine sections of so-called arguments, unsupported by evidence. These twenty-nine sections, made up of so-called arguments and unsupported allegations, wind up with a verdict of guilty, against the minister, a condemnation of the food supplied, with a finding as to what should have been done, and some wholesome advice and recommendations as to what should be done in the future. Whatever this House may have power to do, this committee certainly had not any such power as might be given to a Royal Commission, to go into an investigation of this kind and make such recommendations as are made in the minority report.

If, as these hon. gentleman opposite argue, Hatch's food was all right, then, if the government had taken that food, there could have been no objection, and I want to see where that would lead us. When you charge the minister or his department with any wrong-doing in connection with the selection and purchase of this food, you do so because Hatch was set to one side and Devlin preferred. But, for the purposes of this sale, Hatch and Devlin were practically the one person, so far as they were known to the Militia Department. Hatch was introduced by Devlin to the minister at the Windsor Hotel in 1898. That is undisputed and it will be found on page 49 of the evidence. Hatch, at that time, boarded with Devlin, at 100 University Street, Montreal. He says that after that introduction to the minister, he received a letter from Dr. Neilson in October or November, 1898. I think that he was mistaken about the time, but that he did receive a letter from Dr. Neilson, is undoubted. But, I think he is mistaken as to the time when he received that. Now, bear in mind, at this time, this food—there is no dispute about it at all—was called by Hatch himself Protein Vegetal. That is the name Dr. Neilson knew it by, and he knew it by no other name. He says that in his evidence time and time again. That is the name by which it was registered by Hatch himself up to the time the test was made in Kingston. It was so registered on April 21, 1898. It was not registered as Hatch's Protose until April 16, 1899. The test at Kingston took place between March 16 and April 16, 1899. The test was supposed to be successful. I am not criticising the test. Perhaps I may not be as credulous about it as some other hon. gentlemen; but, admitting that it was successful, as a result of it, this food was registered by Hatch as Hatch's Protose. But, bear in mind, there is no public notice given of this registration. It is here for anybody who wants to go and see it; but there were no circulars sent out calling special attention to it. Letters were written with the words 'Hatch's Protose' at the top of the paper. But, I ask hon. gentlemen in all fairness, if they do not often receive circular letters in reference to goods offered for sale, and afterwards they know no more about it, so far as remembering the exact name is concerned, than if they had never received the circulars at all. The next thing we know is, that Dr. Neilson asks for samples of the food. There is no letter—and I want to be candid about it and give the evidence as it is; and I invite hon. gentlemen, if they think I am misquoting, to challenge the statements I make and see if an explanation cannot be given from the evidence on the points we are discussing. There is nothing to show that a copy of the letter was kept, but there is evidence to show that Dr. Neilson's testimony is absolutely correct; because, on a date in February, 1899, he writes to the minister in reference to the letter that he has written for samples. Subsequently, he receives from Dr. F. E. Devlin an answer to his letter, inclosing samples. There is another step in the case connecting Hatch and Devlin—Dr. Neilson writes to Hatch for samples, and these samples come in a letter from Dr. Devlin. If that is not calculated to throw any person off his guard to prevent further inquiry, I do not know what would be. The only samples received by Dr. Neilson were those referred to in the letter of February 18, 1899, which will be found as exhibit 22, at page 261 of the evidence. The next step is that the Minister of Militia says that he has no recollection of seeing Hatch a second time in Montreal. Hatch says he did see the minister. That may go for nothing one way or the other, because Hatch does not say that anything special took place between him and the minister, further than this—that the food was mentioned and some reference was made to a test which Hatch wanted to have made. But nothing was arranged with reference to the test, and nothing was done that bears in the slightest upon this case. The next thing we have in the evidence is, that Hatch says he saw the minister in New York in the railway station. Just before the door was opened to allow persons to go to the train, they met, and the minister said: 'Hello, Hatch; you here?' And some other two or three words were spoken. The minister says that that is all the conversation that took place between them. On the other hand, Hatch says that they found themselves seated together in the pullman car, and they talked from nine to twelve o'clock at night on this subject. Now, I put that point to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. Here is a statement made by the hon. Minister of Militia, a member of this House, that no such conversation on the car took place as Hatch says. Hatch states what seems to me to be an absolutely improbable thing—that he, a Galician, an unknown man, comparatively, having nothing in common with the Minister of Militia except that he had a food to sell, sat beside the minister for three long hours, from nine o'clock to midnight, talking on the one subject of this food. I would ask the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), whom they will believe in regard to that—will they believe the Minister of Militia or will they believe Hatch? That is the story that Hatch tells, and even according to himself, that is the last time they met on the subject.

Now, all this, bear in mind, was before the test at Kingston. After the samples had come up and the letters with them, the test took place upon five soldiers at Kingston. Dr. Devlin was at the test. He was the man who received the food. He says he received it at Montreal, and Hatch says he sent it to him, so there can be no doubt about that. Dr. Devlin was the man who administered the food; he was the person looked to, as the responsible man connected with the test. I do not know whether the test was honestly carried out or not. Dr. Neilson himself was not there until the last day of the test, and he was there when answers were made by the men in reference to it. The point I want to make is, that Dr. Devlin was the man who was managing that test; and he was doing it, in a sense, for Hatch. I do not dispute that he was the agent of Hatch, but he was the responsible man and the only man who was brought in contact with Dr. Neilson, the representative of the Militia Department, on that occasion. Now, the test is ended. The government does not give any order. Hatch said that there was some talk about an order for the North-west Territories. That is not remembered by the Minister of Militia. It is not likely that the Minister of Militia would promise an order for a department over which he has no control. No order was given, and nothing came of the test further than that the answers to the questions were embodied in an affidavit. The test ended on April 16, and, when it was over, the men were taken to a notary in Kingston, and what they said in answer to questions, and probably more, was embodied in that affidavit. And now, it is contended that the department should have known this food as Hatch's Protose, because possibly copies of this affidavit were seen by the department, and, if they had cared to read they would have found in the middle of them the name 'Hatch's Protose.' That is notice, after everything else having taken place, upon which the minister, we are told, should have refrained from dealing with the man who was the responsible man during this whole test—because, in the middle of an affidavit which is presented to him, or shown to him, made by one or all of these five men at Kingston, the words 'Hatch's Protose' occurred. But no purchase was made and nothing was done by the department in the shape of negotiation in this line. So it went on from April down to November. The next thing is a letter from the Hatch Protose Company, asking that they should be given an order for the first contingent. At that time the department had not intended to give any order, and the reply given to the letter was that they did not intend to order for the contingent because the ship was to provide for the men until they landed at Cape Town, and afterwards the British government was to supply all the food. So there was no need of sending any further answer than was sent, and there was no need of considering the question at all. Bear in mind this was prior to any intention on the part of the government to give any order at all. Then the first contingent is sent, and it is afterwards suggested by the Minister of Militia and Defence that perhaps it would be well for the government, who desired to deal liberally with those brave men, who desired to do for them more perhaps than would be considered necessary—both Dr. Neilson and the Minister of Militia and Defence thought, in consequence of something they had seen in correspondence from South Africa, that it would be well to provide what has been called an emergency ration for those who would follow the first contingent. Having made up their mind that something of that kind should be done, there were plenty in the field who could be found looking for contracts of that kind. Up to the time that the letter of Mr. Hatch was written, both Mr. Hatch and the Bovril Company, and Mr. Besserer, who represented another company, all got the same answer, either orally or in writing, that it was not intended to furnish any emergency food. But when the government made up their minds to furnish it, then naturally the minister and Dr. Neilson thought of this kind of food that had been tested at Kingston. They believed that the test was good and that the food was a good food. Now, who, in that state of things, would they look to except to the man with whom they had come in contact during all these previous negotiations, the only man they knew, Dr. Devlin, the man who had introduced the food, who was present at the test in Kingston? So Dr. Neilson says that he saw Dr. Devlin here in Ottawa, and the result of all conversation and correspondence was a contract. First comes a letter from Dr. Devlin, who is on the alert for business. That would be so whether he intended to perpetrate a fraud upon the government, as we are told, whether it was a fake food or whether it was an honest food. But, I am only pointing out the position of the matter, because up to this time it is not pretended by anybody that there was any scheme to commit a fraud upon the government. At the time of his first dealing with Devlin they were not sending any contingent, this thing was not in anybody's mind, so there is no reason to suspect fraud in connection with it. Then when there is a perfectly honest transaction in which Dr. Devlin was interested and with which he was connected, when there came to be a desire to send an emergency food, then, I ask again, who were they to look to except to Dr. Devlin? Dr. Devlin wrote to the Minister of Militia and Defence, and the minister replied saying that he was interested in the question, and suggesting that if terms were satisfactory there might be a transaction. Dr. Devlin then came to Ottawa, and from that time to January 4, they had a great deal of conversation with reference to this food. The result was that Dr. Devlin agreed to supply 2,333 pounds of food to be put up in cans in the way that has been mentioned, for the price of $2 a pound, supplied in Halifax at his own cost. On January 4, the tender was made, it was approved by Dr. Devlin, it was sent into the minister and approved by him, and the contract was made. This is the whole story with regard to this contract. There is nothing else about it, and these are all facts. There was not a single reason for suspecting bad faith or fraud. Supposing they were dealing for a specific thing that this man Devlin vouched for, that Dr. Neilson knew had been tested in Kingston, the matter came to an end. Now, it appears even at that time Dr. Devlin or Mr. Hatch had a disagreement, but there was no knowledge of that on the part of the Minister of Militia and Defence or of Dr. Neilson. There was no evidence in any way that they thought they were dealing with any one else than the man who had furnished the sample of such food.

Now it will be seen, according to what I have stated, that all the details were left to Dr. Neilson. The Minister of Militia and Defence, personally busy with a thousand matters at that time, had not time to deal with it, even if he had felt disposed under other circumstances to deal with it, and all the details were left to Dr. Neilson. Dr. Neilson made this contract on the express stipulation that the food furnished by Dr. Devlin was to be identical with the food that was sent to Kingston and on which the test was made. He had a sample of that food, as he says, furnished him, on January 4, and he made a comparison of it by analysis in such a manner as to satisfy himself that this food sent in as a sample was identical with the food tested at Kingston. Now that was the state of things down to the time the bargain was made. Then the bargain having been made I suppose that ought really to have ended the matter, because a bargain once made ought to be carried out unless there could be some reason shown to the contrary.

Now, I want to call attention to the different names given to this stuff as we have them in the evidence. The member for Jacques Cartier spoke about what was on the label as presented by Mr. Hatch, and took the label to be an indication of the composition of the stuff. I must say that that is an instance of faith that we do not often find, especially among members of parliament. He is willing to take as evidence of the constitution of a thing the label that is on the package of that article. He thinks the government should have taken some steps to ascertain that the article was just in accordance with the label. Well, Dr. Neilson relied upon the identity of the stuff and he says he knew the stuff as 'Protein Vegetal.' If you turn to his evidence on page 115, you will see it called Protein Vegetal Powder. It is called simply 'protose' and is called 'Hatch's protose' in the affidavits of these men. I call attention to the agreement, exhibit 19, which is rather an important matter as showing what this Mr. Hatch called it, with whom he has been dealing, and to show that negligence cannot be imputed to anybody for not remembering it as Hatch's protose. When that agreement was made between him and Dr. Devlin in reference to this article, it is called 'Proto-Vegetose,' or 'Protose,' or 'Protein Vegetal.' All these names are applied in the new agreement that is filed as exhibit 19, and so far as the name is concerned, it is as binding upon Hatch, being a party to the agreement, as it is upon Dr. Devlin. These names all appeared before this contract was made under the circumstances I have mentioned. After that we get the word 'vitallin,' and that is used by Dr. Devlin. Dr. Devlin having used that word and having put it upon his can as shown in exhibit 5, Dr. Neilson called his attention to it. He says: I do not know about that. I do not know what this 'vitallin' is, and Dr. Devlin says 'vitallin' is exactly the same as the food which was called 'protein vegetal,' which was tested at Kingston. Dr. Neilson was relying, and he had reason to rely upon his assurance that:

It is absolutely one and the same thing, except that 'protein vegetal' is a double word, and 'vitallin' is a short word that appeals to the public.

You will find that at pages 115, 126 and 128 of the evidence. It seems to me that no point can be made out of the use of the word, but that it was explained by the person with whom the representative of the Department of Militia was dealing, and who represented to him that it was absolutely the same thing that was tested at Kingston. So, we have it shown, as it seems to me, that the department took all the ordinary precautions that could be taken in a matter of that kind. Dr. Neilson relied on the representations of Dr. Devlin, but he did not rely altogether upon these. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) put the question across the floor of the House: What precautions did Dr. Neilson take? All I can say is that apart from the representations on which he had a right to rely he took the precaution first of taking a sample, and of comparing it with the other sample, tasting, feeling and smelling it. Hon. gentlemen opposite made considerable fun of that, and said that it is clear that he could not test a powder in that way, and be able to judge one with the other. It does not lie in their mouths to say that. They brought before the committee an Italian from Montreal, a man of respectability, who has been in business there for a long time, and this Mr. Catelli, whose evidence will be found in the book, took the food that was presented before the committee, tasted it, smelled it, and felt of it, after which he was able to pronounce an opinion that satisfied hon. gentlemen. If Mr. Catelli could do that, I do not know why Dr. Neilson could not do the same thing. Then, in addition, Dr. Devlin did not come as an unknown man to Dr. Neilson, but he came with a certificate from Sir William Hingston and Prof. Ruttan, whose evidence is spoken of here. So that he not only had certificates in favour of his food, which he offered for sale, but in favour of Dr. Devlin himself. In regard to the test, this was a time of haste, not a time when there was an opportunity, as in ordinary contracts, to wait until an analysis had been made, and all those things had been done which might, perhaps, suggest themselves under other circumstances. Mr. Hatch is put forward as a great dealer in this food business. He is put forward as a man of honour, of good faith, having good food which has been advocated by hon. gentlemen who have discussed this matter, but we will see whether his food was any better than that of Dr. Devlin, as it turns out. It is all very well to speak as hon. gentlemen do, after these things have come to light, because we know a great deal more about these things than we did at first, but I am basing my remarks upon what was the knowledge of the parties at the time the transaction was taking place, and not upon what it has turned out to be afterwards. Hatch, in his evidence, describes the kind of business he was doing. You will find at page 62 a good deal of information in regard to Mr. Hatch, and in regard to the way in which his food was made:

Q. This machine was in Dr. Devlin's house?—
A. The apparatus and the hand mill were in my workshop at Dr. Devlin's house on the top floor.

That is Hatch, mind you, not Devlin. Hon. gentlemen are making a great deal of fun about Devlin, but this is what Hatch says about his food that we are blamed for not taking.

Q. A kind of coffee mill?—A. A hand mill; I only worked three and a half pounds?

Q. The stuff was made sometimes by Dr. Devlin's housekeeper?—A. Which, sir.

Q. The stuff you sent away?—A. Never. Sometimes I told her to watch the stuff, sometimes she helped me; she saw me working ten hours a day.

Q. How large is the cost of this machinery?—
A. It depends on the scale you are working on.

Q. The scale on which you are working?—A. $10 or $15 will be enough for machinery to make two and a half pounds to five pounds.

Q. Where did you get your material?—A. That is my secret.

Q. You can tell us what country?—A. This raw material is not used by anybody else for food purposes but by me, and the committee wish—

Q. Is it got in Canada?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Was it made in Canada or outside of Canada; do you decline to tell me that?—A. I cannot do more than be prepared to show—

Q. Could it be made in Canada?—A. I could show any one.

Q. Do you refuse to say?—A. I refused you first, and you insisted, and then I gave you another answer.

Q. Do you refuse to say whether it was made in Canada or outside of Canada?—A. I told you it could be made in Canada.

Q. I didn't ask you whether it could be made in Canada, I asked whether your raw material came from Canada, or outside?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. You mean you won't tell me?—A. I can't tell you.

Q. You mean you won't tell, don't you?—A. I don't wish to tell you; I have an interest not to tell you.

This food, this vaunted stuff, is made in an up-stairs room of Dr. Devlin's house, watched over in the manufacture sometimes by Dr. Devlin's housekeeper, and if the government had bought this stuff under these circumstances it would have been all right. But when the Militia Department bought what they supposed to be all right, it is guilty of great negligence, because Hatch was not interested in this food. That is the whole case, as it seems to me. It may be good food which is being made by Hatch under these circumstances, but if so, it seems to me it may be good food even if made by Dr. Devlin, and he had an opportunity of getting the material in order to enable him to make this food as well as Hatch had, notwithstanding what Hatch says to the contrary.

I am not going to deal with the analysis of these goods further than to state that from first to last, until the charge was made by the hon. member (Mr. Monk), it has not been a question of the quantity of proteids in the food. It has been a question of the combination which would render the food easy assimilative, which would make it easy of digestion, which would nourish the system of the person who partook of it, and that was the secret of the food which Mr. Hatch had. It has, as I have said, not so much the quantity of proteid in the food, and, therefore, it is not singular that Mr. Hatch should have stated as he unquestionably did, to Mr. Muir, that his food did not exceed 15 per cent in proteids. Let me call attention to the testimony of Mr. Muir. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), accepted Mr. Muir's statement unquestioning, and he told the House that Mr. Muir was undoubtedly a respectable and a truthful man. On the other hand, the member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), questioned Mr. Muir's evidence, and asked the House not to put any reliance upon his statement. Now, this statement of Mr. Hatch to Mr. Muir, was not made in a casual manner, but it was made by Mr. Hatch in the course of a lengthy and sustained conversation. It was not a conversation in which a remark was interjected by Mr. Hatch as to 15 per cent, but it was a deliberate statement made in conversation, and Mr. Muir has either told the truth, or he has given false evidence, and nobody suggests that Mr. Muir would be guilty of that. If Mr. Muir told the truth, and I think every member in this House will believe that Mr. Muir is a truthful man, then, Hatch stated specifically to him at a time when it was not a question of the amount of proteids, but a question as to the secret by which he was able to make the food of value; that this food only contained 15 per cent of proteids. That being so, it does not seem difficult to accept the other statements which have been made in regard to this food, putting it at all events identical with the food that was tested at Kingston. A great deal has been said about Dr. Devlin's company having no substance, but I want to know who this Hatch Protose Company is? Mr. Hatch was before the committee and he did not tell us. He told us of the registration of the name of his food, and of the room where he works and that is all we know about it. I say that it showed greater care on the part of the Militia Department, to have dealt with Dr.

Devlin, under the circumstances, than it would have been for them to go to Montreal and buy from the Protose Company, which has on the heading of its letters a place called 12 Richmond Square, and which does not mean any more than the announcement that Dr. Devlin packed his food at the corner of Bleury and Craig Streets, Montreal. Then the complaint is made that the government accepted this food in what the hon. gentleman called 'paint cans.' There is a good deal in the use of a word, and nobody knows better than my hon. friend who described them as 'paint cans' in a sense that was derogatory to the can. They were the shape of cans that paint is usually put in, but they were new cans, made specially for the purpose and they were practically water-tight. It is stated in the charge that the cans should be sterilized and be airtight, or at least water-tight, and we have the evidence of Dr. Neilson, who has some experience on that, and to use his own words, he describes it as 'bosh.' This may be described as desiccated food, which of course would suffer in contact with water, but would not be affected by the air. If they were sufficiently water-tight; in the ordinary case of a man being out in a rain storm, that was sufficient, for as long as they were not submerged in water, they were sufficiently water-tight to prevent the water coming in contact with the food. Flour is a desiccated food, and flour is exported in barrels and kept in barrels for years. There has never been any pretense that desiccated food, or flour, needs to be in a sterilized vessel or needs to be in a vessel that is absolutely water-tight. It just shows how far afield these gentlemen have gone to try and make out a charge against the government, of negligence in this matter. It has been shown in the evidence, and no one has pretended, for a moment, that this was at least not a very good food. It may not be so concentrated as to have the term concentrated food applied to it, but it is a useful, proper ration to be used and one that is in no way unwholesome. If it is true that this food is made under some secret, by which it is more useful than the amount of protoid matter in it would indicate, and as the test at Kingston shows, there is no reason why it should not have been bought and bought for the price paid for it.

But whether that is so or not, any evidence of negligence on the part of the department is absolutely displaced by the consideration of the facts of the case. I think praise instead of blame ought to be given to the head of the Militia Department for doing what he did. He was not obliged to do it; there was no reason for his doing it except his desire to serve the interests of the contingent. The vessels were obliged to provide food for the journey; the British government supplied them with their ordinary rations, and were to give them also an emergency ration. There was no reason for the minister supplying this food except out of an abundant desire on his part to do more than was absolutely required to furnish the contingent. So he made up his mind to add this ration, a small one, it is true, as a gift from Canada. All these preparations were made in a hurry. When the first contingent was sent, it was not known that a second one would be. It is quite true, we have a splendid militia force; but Canada is not yet, whatever it may become, a military power, and there has been no great experience or expense on the part of the Militia Department in mobilizing our forces or supplying them for war. Everything was rushed as to the appointment and the equipment of the men, and without any of the experience which nations constantly at war or with standing armies have. We have had a little experience, as the hon. member for Halifax said, under former administrations, and that experience was not very satisfactory. With regard to one of those occasions our hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie), who I am sorry to see is not in his place just now, thought he knew something because he was there. The hon. gentleman may think that in military matters, it is quite sufficient if he is there; but other people might think it would be necessary to have something else besides Major Beattie; and we find that the equipment was not well attended to then, as it has been in these latter days under the rule of the present Minister of Militia.

Now, we have these charges made. We have the state of things, which I have tried to present exactly as it appears in the evidence, without exaggerating or minimizing anything. The matter came before the House in the form of charges by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. The committee was appointed. I was not present when the committee was appointed, and of course had naturally no desire to be on such a committee; but having been appointed, I acted, and I have no hesitation in saying that I tried to do my duty fairly. The report of the committee has been presented to the House, and as soon as this report was made, what did we find? We found the Liberal members of the committee attacked by the Conservative press from one end of the country to the other, and accused of being blind, party-besotted, and ready to do anything for their party. These are the same papers which, as soon as the charges were made, considered them proved without hearing any of the evidence. They published articles from day to day assuming the charges to be established before a single syllable of evidence had been given; and they have charged the Liberal members of the committee with being party blind, because they have come to a conclusion after hearing the evidence. That is the condition of party politics to which we have come in this country. I might quote what was said in the Mail, I think on the very first day that this committee met; and if I did so, I might say, as another hon. member said, 'Ex uno disce omnes'—from this sample learn all the others. I might say, therefore, that the Conservative press, from the head down to the tail, united in assuming that these charges were proved without hearing the evidence; and later on they have had articles blaming the Liberal members of the committee for the conclusion at which they have arrived. It may be that some Liberal papers have said similar things in regard to the Conservative members of that committee; but if they have, I have not seen them, and I think it is a poor piece of business if men have to be personally attacked because they come to a certain conclusion on evidence given before them. But I have come to the conclusion that it is a part of the campaign of our friends on the other side, that charges should be made and should be stuck to as much as possible, in the hope that the more charges there are, the more mud may stick, and, whether the charges are true or false, some party advantage may be gained from them. With that object in view, as part and parcel of a party campaign, we have these charges first made and then argued from as if they were established, and then those who take a different view are abused in the party press. A charge is made and guilty is the verdict before the evidence is offered at all. Guilty is all the word they care for; and from first to last this is apparently the policy to be adopted. We find that an attempt is being made to arouse public feeling, not so much because of any imposition upon the government in this matter, but because it has reference to soldiers' food. For instance, we see in the Montreal Star articles on the starvation and the sufferings from starvation put side by side with the comments upon this charge against the Minister of Militia. Now, there are none so blind as those who will not see; and whether we say that this food is a real emergency food or not, it certainly is nothing that is going to be a damage to our men in South Africa. There is no reason why, if they take it at all, it should not be an advantage rather than a disadvantage, and there is no reason for articles of the kind I refer to.

Now, the charges having been made, and having come before the committee, they must either be proved or they must fail. We have come to the conclusion that they have signally failed, and we have tried to have the evidence placed before the committee in a way that is eminently fair and proper. I want to call attention to two or three matters. In not one single instance was there the slightest obstruction or attempt to prevent any evidence being submitted that should have been taken. Strictly speaking, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was not entitled to submit the evidence of Mr. Macfarlane, the man who made the analysis, and who was then on the ocean. The minority report states that they were not able to get some evidence because he was away. That is not true, because they were allowed to give the evidence they supposed Mr. Macfarlane would have given had he been here. The paper he signed was put in, and they were allowed to examine Mr. McGill, Mr. Macfarlane's assistant, who gave evidence as if he were the one who had made the analysis instead of Mr. Macfarlane. Hersey's evidence was also allowed. This man, whom they announced as an eminent authority, did not make any analysis. The analysis was made and furnished by Mr. Wood, and Mr. Hersey knew nothing about it, but he accepted the statement Wood had made, and we allowed all that to go in. The very parcel that was examined by Mr. Wood was brought to him by a person he did not know, but whom, he believed, was a woman. He knew nothing about where the parcel came from.

There was no obstruction or difficulty of any kind thrown in the way. A man named Moore bought a tin from Lyons and handed it to Mr. Hatch. Hatch says he gave it to a person, presumably a girl, but the girl was not called, and there was nothing to prove that it was the food sent.

We were charged with unfairness because we would not permit the refuse food that Hatch produced to be analysed. It seems to me the answer is perfectly obvious. If my hon. friends thought that there was any great importance to be attached to an analysis of that particular article, leaving its identity to be discussed later on, there would have been no trouble to them in having it analysed, because they had control of it. Why did we not allow that to be analysed? Because we doubted its being what Mr. Hatch swore it was. This food was said to have been made when the test was going on at Kingston, from March 16 to April 16, 1899. At that time Hatch was making the food at 100 University Street. After the test, he moved away, and I do not know whether he has a room where he lives at Richmond Square, but he does not live with Dr. Devlin, and he had his letters afterwards addressed to Mackay Street, where Dr. Devlin lives, and later on to 12 Richmond Square. It seems to me most improbable that this man Hatch should have saved a couple of pounds of food which he admitted was spoiled. Why, if spoiled, did he not throw it out? What object was there in keeping it? There could have been no question then of this investigation, yet, he kept it from April 16, 1899, nearly a year before the government entered into the transaction now under discussion. There was, therefore, no reason for his having kept that food, and yet he swears he did keep it. He moved in the meantime, and when people move they generally throw away refuse of this kind, but this Mr. Hatch said he did not throw away, and he brought it to the committee to be tested. Another reason why we did not have it tested was, because Mr. Hatch said that different parts of the same food, for want of proper mixing, would not show the same proteids on an analysis. Why, then, was this spoiled food brought here? I, for one, was not satisfied that we could assume it to have been proved identical with that tested at Kingston, and there was no reason why it should be subjected to an analysis. We have no explanation why that food was kept other than the bald statement made by Mr. Hatch after this dispute arose, and I would attach no value whatever to an analysis of that food. There was no means of connecting it with the food on which the soldiers lived at Kingston, and I am prepared to stand by that position.

Let us look at the other side. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier said he hoped that he would not follow the example set by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), but would adopt a more judicial tone. I think he did adopt a judicial tone, but that is all there was judicial in his remarks. There was nothing else judicial but the tone. His argument was, from first to last, a misrepresentation of what took place before the committee.

I am not going to detain the House by repeating what has been already said, but I do say that I thought it was understood, as a matter of honour among the members of that committee, that the minority report was not to go to the press until presented to the House. It did go to the press, and appeared in the leading Conservative organs in Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto. Not only was this a breach of parliamentary privilege, but also a breach of faith.

Further, this minority report is a deliberate, wilful misrepresentation of the facts, when it refers to the exclusion of the evidence of Mr. Ramsay as to certain things he could prove. True, we objected to his evidence as to the disposition of the money in the bank, but, while that was objected to, the question was asked, and Mr. Ramsay answered it at length, so that his answer forms part of the evidence, and I cannot see how the hon. member for Jacques Cartier can say that this evidence was excluded. His evidence was to the effect that he was not able to trace the payments of the money, that Lyons had other money in the bank, and the money he chequed out could not be traced to any individuals. What was the object of putting that evidence in? Simply to insinuate what these hon. gentlemen dared not assert, namely, that some part of this money was used improperly. That, the hon. member for Montmorency said, he would establish before the Public Accounts Committee next year, if he should be in this House. That was a cowardly insinuation. There is nothing in the evidence to warrant it; and if people are to be tried in this House upon insinuations not warranted by the evidence, there is an end to all air argument, debate or proper investigation. And yet, if the clause in the report means anything, it means that; and if it means that, it is not supported by one tittle of evidence given before the committee. It was unfair too, in view of the evidence of Dr. Ruttan. That evidence was given as to the analysis of food said to be a sample of the food tested in Kingston. The answer is, they say: You have not established that you have an analysis of a sample of the food tested at Kingston. That depends on two things. First, it depends on whether Dr. Neilson told the truth in giving his evidence, and secondly, on whether Dr. Devlin, when there was no object, so far as we could see, in lying, told the truth in regard to this being a sample. He sent the sample before the contingent was sent, before it was known that any troops were to be sent. He was friendly with Hatch at that time, and a party to the agreement produced before the committee. At this time he introduced this man Hatch to a capitalist in New York, named Hall, and the three men were parties to an agreement. And, if he did tell the truth, and if Dr. Neilson told the truth, then Dr. Ruttan analysed a sample of the food tested at Kingston. Yet, we have that kept out of the report, and the other analysis referred to. And this first analysis made by Dr. Ruttan is an analysis of stuff that was not made in Canada. Hatch himself says that, as will be seen in his evidence at page 71:

Q. I don't know whether you said you had ever made in this country an analysis of this protose?—A. It is printed in my pamphlet, in McGill University.

Q. When?—A. When I arrived two years ago.

Q. Where was that protose made?—A. That I brought with me when I arrived.

Q. The protose you made in this country was never analysed?—A. That I made here?

Q. Yes?—A. When I was treating Dr. Devlin in Notre Dame Hospital I prepared it daily.

Q. I am talking of analysis?—A. Oh, no, I never had it analysed except there.

And it is an analysis of food that was made in the United States and brought in with him, that is presented to show what the Hatch food was. And, as the long cross-examination by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) shows Hatch depended for his knowledge as to the quantity of proteids in these foods on the representation of a man from whom he bought the stuff that was put through the process of manufacture.

I have dealt now with both the majority and the minority reports. I say, from what has taken place—and I hope I may be pardoned for making this statement, if it is wrong—I have hardly a doubt that, from the time the committee first met, this report presented as a minority report, was in process of being made out—

Mr. CASGRAIN. I will ask my hon. friend (Mr. Britton), to allow me to say that that is not correct.

Mr. BRITTON. I must accept the statement.

Mr. SPROULE. How about the majority report?

Mr. BRITTON. That certainly was not made out until the time it was presented, or very little before. At all events, there is the internal evidence in the minority report, that it was not made on the spur of the moment; and I imagine the typewritten copies which found their way to the press, indicate that it was made before there was an opportunity of consultation as to what had been brought out by the evidence.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman is wrong.

Mr. BRITTON. Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain), and his colleagues are very expeditious workmen.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We are.

Mr. BRITTON. That is the only explanation I can give. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier said he hoped this House was not here to whitewash Dr. Devlin. I hope not. But I hope, on the other hand, it is not here to blackwash anybody. I do not think we should feel that to be our duty. There is nothing said in the majority report in reference to the customs-house officer of Montreal, which was not brought upon himself by himself. The facts are in accordance with the report, in my opinion. It is clear that the announcement made by the customs-house officer in explaining his action, whether it was intended to do so or not, did cast reflection on innocent people, as was thought. He seemed to desire, or some thought he desired, to imply in his telegram that blame was to be attached to the government, and that an order for the free admission of this stuff had been given by the government. But it turns out that he had no such intention, as I understand it. And while that is the case, I think it is quite open on the evidence to the finding the majority have come to on that point. The majority report seems plain and simple on the evidence, but the minority report is a very different thing. We are asked, and asked by lawyers, by this minority report, to find Dr. Devlin guilty of two offences. A man could not be convicted of using abusive language, or of an ordinary assault, or anything else, without being brought before a magistrate or some court, and a formal charge made. We are told that Dr. Devlin was before the committee, though he did not give evidence. But he did not know the charge that had been made against him in the report of the minority. And yet we are seriously asked by the members of the minority to find Dr. Devlin guilty of two offences—first an offence against the Adulteration of Food Act, and secondly an offence under the Criminal Code, without giving him an opportunity of being heard with reference to the charges, and not even telling him what those charges are. This, the largest deliberative assembly in Canada, the most important tribunal is asked to condemn a man on a charge for which he has never been arraigned. That would be no more illogical than some other things proposed by the minority report, but they certainly do strike one as going further than we have been asked to go in this line. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk's) address with reference to hygiene and health food, was of course interesting; but it was altogether beside the question. His reference to broken biscuit was entirely unwarranted by the evidence. Though when Mr. Hersey was giving evidence, the question was asked whether this material looked like broken biscuit, and the answer was in the affirmative. But there was nothing to show that it was anything of that kind. And, yet, without any evidence whatever, the hon. member for Montmorency spoke of it as dog biscuit.

Comment is made on the fact that Dr. Devlin did not appear before the committee. We have nothing to do with that. Dr. Devlin is his own master. I suppose we could have asked him to give his evidence. But the charge was before the committee, and it was not proved so far as we were concerned. If the other side wanted to make any further proof of charges by calling Mr. Devlin they had an opportunity, and they could have asked for an adjournment to get his evidence. It is reported that Dr. Devlin said he was going to New York, and therefore, he did not come. Well, he wrote that he was going to New York for the purpose of getting a witness to come before this committee, and he was told in Montreal on his way to New York that the committee had decided not to take any further evidence, so under these circumstances he did not go to New York. While the other side have appeared here as apologists for Mr. Hatch, I do not appear as an apologist for Dr. Devlin. I have no brief for him, and we do not accept any responsibility for not calling him, and I have given the reasons. But, I suppose that I am at liberty to make a statement in reference to Dr. Devlin as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier made one for Mr. Hatch. He said Mr. Hatch was willing to come here, willing to go into a room, as I understood him to say, and to experiment with this food—whether to make a new food or not—or do something with reference to it as an additional test. I do not think we want anything further from Mr. Hatch in regard to this matter. We have heard his statement, we know that he did not come back to contradict the statement of Mr. Muir. The hon. member stated that Mr. Devlin gave unaccepted cheques for the customs. It is true that Mr. Ramsay stated that he had no account in the bank on which one cheque was given. That was a mistake. There was no account with the branch with which Mr. Ramsay was connected, but the collector of customs at Montreal is authority for the statement that that cheque was on the Merchants Bank, at the St. Catherine Street branch, and it was paid on presentation. It is only justice to Dr. Devlin to state that, and I state that he had an account at the Merchants Bank, but not at the branch where Mr. Ramsay was stationed. This is a statement that can easily be verified.

Now, a little ridicule was cast upon Mr. Cotton for giving a certificate before he had actually made the test at St. John's. Cotton is one of the men on whom the test was made at Kingston. He was satisfied that the food did him a great service. He was satisfied it was a valuable food, and he was willing, though a very stout man, to undergo a test again at St. John's. He asked to undergo a test, and his request was granted. When the food was presented to him at St. John's, from his examination and his taste of it, he believed it was the same food that he had tried at Kingston, and for that reason he was willing to certify to it. Dr. Neilson said he did not give much weight to the certificate, nor do I. But that is not the point; the point is that he was one of the men on whom the test was made at Kingston, he was an honourable man, he gives his testimony in a satisfactory way, and he repeats his testimony when he comes before the committee in regard to the test at Kingston, and says he has undergone the same test at St. John's under Dr. Devlin with the same kind of food; and he believes, so far as he can tell by the taste of it and by its effect upon him, that it is the identical food that was used at Kingston. Now, this food tested at St. John's is part of the food that is in question here. This statement is given by an honourable man, without any reserve, that that food was a good one, on which he lived for thirty days at Kingston, but taking a glass of beer at Kingston every night, though he did not take it at St. John's. He is the only man relied upon by the friends of Mr. Hatch as supporting the test which was made at Kingston. Under all these circumstances, I feel satisfied that the weight of evidence is with the majority report of the committee, and that is the report that I think this House should adopt.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). As one of the two laymen on the select committee appointed by the House to inquire into this matter, I trust I shall have regard to the proprieties, and in view of the fact that we have had the pleasure of listening to very lengthy and exhaustive speeches from the legal gentlemen who composed the remainder of the committee, I shall not attempt to trespass upon the time of the House more than a few minutes. Let me say that I entirely agree with one remark that fell from the lips of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), when he said that everything concerning the welfare of our brave soldiers, who are upholding the honour of Canada on the South African veldts, evokes the deepest interest in the public mind. There can be no doubt whatever of the accuracy and of the force of that statement; and that has been fully exemplified by the intense interest which has been aroused in the proceedings of this committee, and the intense horror that was felt throughout Canada when it was alleged in this House that a worthless emergency food had been purchased by the Militia Department, and supplied for the use of the Canadian troops in South Africa in cases of emergency. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that the amount involved in the purchase of this food is not a large one. The misapplication, or the mis-spending, of three or four thousand dollars of the public money is not of itself a matter of very grave importance. The hon. member for Halifax, in the course of his remarks, said that although an expenditure aggregating a million dollars had been made by the Militia Department in the despatch of these contingents to South Africa, exception had only been taken to the amount involved in the purchase of this emergency food, some four or five thousand dollars. Speaking for myself, I would have preferred to see all the moneys that have been expended in the equipment and despatch of these contingents absolutely wasted, thrown into the ocean, rather than that the lives of the men composing the Canadian contingent should have been placed in jeopardy for one moment in consequence of the grave fraud which has taken place in the purchase and in the despatch of this emergency food. We are asked to believe that every necessary precaution was taken by the Department of Militia in securing for the men for whom it was intended a food that, in the hour of emergency, would not fail them. If that fact has been established, if it can be established by the evidence which is contained within the covers of the book which has been presented to parliament as the result of the deliberations of the committee, then I say, Mr. Speaker, that the report of the minority is not well founded. But I challenge any man to take up this book and read it from cover to cover, and, if he is an impartial man, he must, in my humble judgment, conclude that no such precaution was taken in a matter of the most vital importance to the well-being and to the lives of the men who are fighting for the honour of Canada at this hour.

Mr. BRITTON.

This food, if it was of any real value, if it was of sufficient value to be paid for at the rate of $2 a pound, must surely be all that was claimed for it. It was, according to the admissions of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and according to the evidence, first presented to the notice of the department by a man named Henri Hatch, who was introduced to the Minister of Militia and Defence as a food specialist. It was his food that was tested by the Department of Militia at Kingston. It was his food that was relied upon as containing a percentage of nutriment sufficient to be used with confidence by the soldiers in case of great emergency or exertion. In the course of the speech which the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) made this afternoon, he declared that Mr. Hatch did not know what was given to the troops at Kingston, that Hatch made a hocus-pocus mixture, that Hatch was a fakir, and yet this man Hatch is allowed to impose his food for a test upon the Department of Militia, the food is tested, and after the trial is made at Kingston, most flattering testimonials are given to Hatch as to the value of his emergency ration. Will it be believed that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has been arguing at considerable length, and he thought, with some force, that the food that was tested at Kingston was never analysed by the department, that the food which Hatch had secured splendid testimonials for, was food that had not been made in Canada, but was food that he had brought with him when he came to this country from the United States?

Mr. CAMPBELL. So he says himself.

Mr. CLARKE. Surely if the government of Canada had taken reasonable precautions, if they had desired to ascertain what were the component parts of the food which was tested at Kingston, they would have taken the ordinary business precautions, they would have required the Department of Militia, because they had the means available at their command, to have had a careful analysis made of that food. But, nothing of that kind was done. A statement was received from the men who underwent the test at Kingston with Hatch's protose as to the excellent qualities of this food. These men made affidavits as to how they felt after a test of the food had been made upon them for thirty days, and upon the result of that test most flattering testimonials were given to Hatch as to the value and efficacy of his food. Now, the first contingent which was despatched from Canada was not supplied with the emergency food, and the reason given was that the Imperial government were to supply all the rations that were required when the troops landed at Cape Town, and that ample provision had been made for their sustenance during the voyage from Halifax thither. That was the statement made by the hon. Minister of Militia when he was approached, not by Dr. Devlin, but by Mr. Hatch in the fall of last year before the first contingent sailed, and asked to be given an order for the food which had been tested at Kingston. The minister declined to give an order for the reasons which I have stated. Officials of his department, Dr. Neilson for one, were waited upon by a gentleman representing the Bovril Company, one of the largest manufacturers of concentrated foods in the world, a company which supplies tens of thousands of pounds annually of concentrated food to the British army. A representative of that company waited upon the minister, or some of his officers, and a similar answer was given to him as that which was given to Mr. Hatch. A gentleman resident in Ottawa, whose business it is to deal in concentrated foods, waited upon the department and asked for an order to supply emergency rations to the first contingent. A similar answer was given to him as was given to the others. Now, we are asked to believe that between the time the first contingent sailed and some time towards the latter end of December, or the beginning of January, reports had come to Canada and had been published in the Canadian newspapers as to the insufficiency of the rations being supplied to our men in South Africa, and the happy suggestion was made to the Minister of Militia—the minister is not very sure whether it came from Dr. Devlin or Dr. Neilson—but the suggestion was made by either one of the gentlemen, that it would be a good thing to supply the second contingent, which was being enrolled for active service, with an emergency ration. Expedition seemed to be the order of the day. The matter had to be done with great speed, with great energy and celerity, and yet notwithstanding the fact that the minister and the Department of Militia had Mr. Hatch's address, that they had given him a testimonial as to the value of his food, that they had tested that food on the soldiers of the Kingston garrison; notwithstanding the fact that they had the address of the agent of the Bovril Company of Montreal, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Besserer, of Ottawa, had supplied food and had given the greatest possible satisfaction to the Geological Survey, and to the Department of the Interior, notwithstanding the fact that they could have written to these men, or that they could have communicated with them in a few minutes by telegraph, asking them if they were prepared to supply emergency food in great haste, not a single effort was made to communicate with any one of these gentlemen, and no attempt was made to advertise the fact that it was the wish and desire of the government to supply the second contingent with an emergency food to be used in case of great exertion or of forced marches. If ordinary business prudence had been adopted by the Department of Militia, in view of all the experience that the Department of Militia had had with Hatch's food, and in view of the fact that he had made offers to supply emergency food for the first contingent, they were in duty bound to have communicated with him, and to have communicated with the Bovril Company, whose reputation for food products is world wide, and they were in duty bound to have communicated with the British War Office, and to have ascertained where and how they procured their emergency food. Was one of these precautions taken by the government? Not a single one. A bargain was made with Dr. Devlin. He came to Ottawa in the latter part of December or the beginning of January. The recommendation was secured from Dr. Neilson on the 4th of January, that recommendation was endorsed and approved by the minister on the 4th of January, a letter was written to Dr. Devlin on the 4th of January, informing him that his offer had been accepted, and a contract was actually made with him on the same day, showing the expedition which can be practiced by the government when a political friend and supporter was to be given something that he was not justly entitled to. How long would it had taken the Department of Militia to have placed itself in communication with those who were in a better position to supply this food than Dr. Devlin? I ask every business man whom I see sitting on the other side of the House if it were his own transaction, if he were asked to spend $4,000 or $5,000 of his own money to supply an emergency ration that could be depended upon, whether he would have adopted the methods adopted by the Department of Militia, and would have supplied the men of the Canadian contingent with the stuff that was supplied to them? I venture to affirm that there is not one hon. member on the other side of the House, if the transaction were his own, if his own business reputation were at stake, if his own funds were to be expended, would have adopted the course pursued by the government. Now, a contract was made with Dr. Devlin to supply certain rations for the use of the second contingent. He was to supply emergency rations.

What are emergency rations anyway? Are they what desert is after a full dinner? Not at all. Are emergency rations what people often take after dinner as a kind of settler for their stomachs? Not at all. Emergency rations are food which it is intended shall be used exclusively in case of great emergency and need, when it is not possible for the military authorities to supply the troops with the ordinary rations. That is what emergency rations are. The department in its wisdom, and I have no doubt with a patriotic desire to supply emergency food for the second contingent, entered into an engagement with Dr. Devlin that he was to act as their contractor for the supply of such food. What precautions were taken by the gentlemen who are responsible to the people of Canada for the taking of reasonable and necessary precautions in an important matter such as this? Let us see. Dr. Neilson's testimony throws considerable light upon that. He had a conversation with Dr. Devlin as to the amount of stuff which was to be supplied, and Dr. Devlin was to supply food similar to that which had been tested at Kingston, and of equally nutritive qualities. He was to supply food four ounces of which would be a day's rations, and he was to put that food up in tins, each tin containing one day's rations. The department ordered 7,000 of these tins, which were supposed to be sufficient to supply the second contingent with five days' rations for each man. Let us see just exactly what the conversation was upon this matter between Dr. Devlin and Dr. Neilson, as narrated by Dr. Neilson himself. I read from page 116 of the evidence of Dr. Neilson, and it will be seen that the word 'he' in the text refers to Dr. Devlin:

He (Dr. Devlin) said: 'This is Protein Vegetal Powder, such as we have used in the experiments in Kingston; it is under the name of Vitallin; I have used that name for professional and commercial purposes.' It is, as I would have you see, a dry, desiccated powder. I don't know if he used the word 'indefinitely,' but would keep for a long time; he said: 'Particularly if in a tin tightly closed as this one is.' That appealed to me as very sensible. I said: 'This tin is too large, I want one to contain a day's rations.' He said: 'A tin containing four ounces will be a day's ration; I can make it that strength.' I said: 'Very well, Dr. Devlin, put it in the form of a tender, and your tender will be considered.' That was on January 4.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I draw the attention of the House to the fact that Dr. Devlin contracted with Dr. Neilson, who represented the Department of Militia, that he (Dr. Devlin) would supply food, four ounces of which would be one day's ration, and that food was to be inclosed in a four ounce tin. Dr. Devlin, as appears from the evidence, supplied 7,000 tins of the stuff, and it was sent to South Africa as emergency rations for our Canadian soldiers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Read the balance of that evidence.

Mr. CLARKE. I will leave that to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell), as I do not wish to trespass too much on the time of the House. Further down, on page 116, Dr. Neilson gives this further testimony:

The tender was approved of, and Mr. Devlin set to work, and the outcome of it was that he supplied the second contingent with five days' rations for each man.

Now, let us see what kind of stuff this was that went to South Africa. By turning over a little further in the evidence, we can read the testimony of one of the leading analysts, as well as one of the best qualified chemists in Canada, to express an opinion as to the value of this food. At page 169 of the report of the committee, Dr. Ruttan gave his evidence as follows :

Q. Do you concur in the opinion of the Dominion analyst? Have you seen it?—A. No, I have not. I read part of a newspaper report.

Q. Will you take communication of the report of the Dominion analyst marked exhibit 2L?—A. Yes.

Q. I don't mean the analysis, but in the conclusion of it?—A. I quite agree with the statement that it should not be considered a concentrated food.

Q. Therefore, do you consider that it is a suitable army emergency ration, the constituents being given as they are in that certificate?—A. That involves a good many considerations. The quantity, as I pointed out, that would be necessary for a man to carry in order to sustain life is so great that it does not seem to me to be better than almost any other form of rations, in fact, not so concentrated.

Q. What other form of rations, doctor?—A. Well, the ordinary form of powder.

Q. Anything else?—A. Biscuits or materials of that sort.

Q. They are more nutritious, you think?—A. Not more nutritious, but as nutritious.

Q. Beef, dried beef, stuff of that kind?—A. Much more nutritious.

Q. Dried beef would be much more nutritious?—A. Much more nutritious, yes.

These were the questions to Dr. Ruttan, and these were the answers given by him as to the value of this stuff that was supplied by Dr. Devlin to the Militia Department as an emergency food. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, this stuff was put up in four-ounce tins, one of which was to contain a ration for twenty-four hours for a soldier doing exceedingly heavy duty. Now, what does Dr. Ruttan say as to these precious tins. I quote from the evidence of Dr. Ruttan at page 174 :

Q. Then, it would take, according to your estimate, how many of these to sustain a soldier of 150 pounds for a day of arduous duty?—A. I should say about eight or nine.

Q. Eight or nine of these tins a day?—A. Eight or nine of these tins.

Q. Would one tin alone sustain him?—A. It would prevent him from starving.

Q. But would it maintain his vitality and strength?—A. No.

I could go on reading this testimony, but I do not wish to take up the time of the House. I merely desire to draw attention to the fact that we are asked to hold blameless the Department of Militia—

Mr. CASGRAIN. And the minister.

Mr. CLARKE. And, of course, the head of the department, who is responsible to this parliament, and not the officials. We are asked to hold the department blameless in view of the fact that they made a contract with Dr. Devlin, to supply food, four ounces of which he declared would be sufficient to sustain an able-bodied soldier doing arduous work for twenty-four hours, when the unchallenged testimony of one of the leading chemists in the Dominion, a professor in McGill College, is to the effect that the stuff which was supplied was of such poor quality that instead of one four-ounce tin being sufficient for that purpose, it required eight or nine tins to do the work. I appeal to the House, I appeal to every hon. gentleman present, if a gross fraud was not perpetrated upon the people of this country in this transaction. I submit that the parliament of Canada should hold the Department of Militia responsible for not safeguarding the public interests sufficiently to prevent this fraud being perpetrated, and if this House of Commons fails to do its duty in the premises, then, Sir, the people of Canada will hold the Militia Department responsible, and will visit it with the punishment which it deserves.

But, Sir, we are told that Dr. Neilson assumes the entire responsibility for this transaction. Suppose he does? I have not the slightest desire to say one harsh word about Dr. Neilson, but I do say that the Minister of Militia cannot relieve himself of responsibility by the chivalrous conduct of Dr. Neilson. The fact that Dr. Neilson is prepared to shoulder the responsibility, does not relieve the Minister of Militia of the responsibility that properly attaches to him as head of the department. Now, you have heard it stated to-day that evidence was produced to show that the food tested at Kingston, and the food sent to South Africa were practically one and the same. We have heard that repeated again and again during this debate. Dr. Neilson, who ought to know, and upon whom, jointly with the collector of customs at Montreal, hon. gentlemen are fastening the responsibility for all this trouble, gave evidence on this point, and what does he say, as to his own personal knowledge of the food that was tested at Kingston? Let me try to enlighten the House with a short extract from Dr. Neilson's evidence. At page 173, the following questions and answers will be found :

Q. Can you swear that this food that you have reported upon was the food used in the test at Kingston?—A. In a different form.

Q. You swear that it was?—A. Well if—I have got to put an 'if,' because it is on the assertion of Dr. Devlin. We dealt from the beginning with him, and until this spring I had no doubt but he was connected and proprietor and knew everything about this, and I did not doubt him. Moreover, he was so anxious that this be used in South Africa, so that it would be a good thing, so it would be brought to the notice of the army, that I could not doubt he would send the best supply he could.

Q. You have no knowledge yourself as to whether that powder was used in Kingston or not. You have no knowledge yourself. You depend entirely on what Dr. Devlin told you?—A. Oh, largely.

Q. To what extent are you depending on Dr. Devlin? What knowledge have you yourself that that food or powder is exactly similar to that was used at Kingston?—A. I didn't suppose it would not have been used.

Q. What personal knowledge?—A. I was not there present.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge?—A. I have no personal knowledge. I was not there present at any time until the end of the experiment.

That is the testimony given by Dr. Neilson as to his personal knowledge of the food that was tested at Kingston. What help will it afford the people of Canada to be told—I leave the House to judge, from the extract I have read from his evidence, what kind of an authority he may be considered—that Dr. Neilson chivalrously assumes the responsibility that ought to rest on the head of the department? None whatever, because he seems to have known just as little about the quality of the food tested at Kingston, as any other member of the Militia Department.

Now, just two or three words more, and I will take my seat. Dr. Neilson told us that he had obtained samples of the powder, samples of the biscuit and samples of the bread that were used at Kingston, and that he had put them away—the biscuit and the bread in a jar or a box, and the powder in paper packages or envelopes. It will be well to remember that when Dr. Devlin made an offer to supply the second contingent with emergency food, and submitted a sample, Dr. Neilson made no attempt, such as would satisfy any business man, to ascertain whether that sample was similar to the samples which he had retained of the food used at Kingston. My hon. friend from Kingston, in the course of his remarks, said that Dr. Neilson had smelled the sample powder which Dr. Devlin had submitted, and had tasted it, and that we ought to be satisfied with that examination. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that that was not such an analysis or comparison as any business man in Canada would be satisfied with. But Dr. Neilson, after smelling the sample of powder which Dr. Devlin filed with the department when making his tender, after tasting it, feeling it, looking at it, was perfectly satisfied in his own mind, at any rate, that it was exactly similar to the powder tested at Kingston. Is it not absolutely absurd, Mr. Speaker, to ask the people of Canada to believe that any man, especially a man who has had no experience as a chemist or an analyst, could tell by tasting, smelling and looking at a powder, whether or not it was similar in nutritive qualities to another powder which he had not seen for twelve or fifteen months? What test did he make of this emergency food? He told us that he made a test upon himself. After breakfast, as usual, he took some of the powder for lunch and had his dinner in the evening; and we are asked in all soberness by hon. gentlemen opposite, to endorse the action of the Militia Department in this transaction, and to say that these safeguards were sufficient to secure value for the money they were paying out. Well, Dr. Devlin supplied the food, and it was sent to Halifax; and the secretary of the department, Captain Benoit, went to Halifax to supervise the embarkation of the contingent. While there, Captain Benoit, of his own motion, secured two or three samples of the food, and brought them back with him to Ottawa; and he suggested to the Department of Militia—I think it was to the deputy minister—that those samples should be tested by analysis and compared with the sample filed by Dr. Devlin when he made his tender. Now, Mr. Speaker, if it was desired to compare the samples of the food shipped at Halifax with the food which was tested at Kingston, I ask any fair-minded man why these officials did not make the analysis of the food sent to Halifax with the sample that had been retained in Dr. Neilson's possession? From the time the test was made at Kingston, it never struck them that was a proper thing to do. They thought it was sufficient to have an analysis made of the pot or tin filed by Dr. Devlin when he made his tender, and an analysis of the samples brought from Halifax. That was done, and the analyst of the Inland Revenue Department, Mr. Macfarlane, was instructed to make these analyses and report. I suppose, if he had carried out the strict letter of his instructions, he would have been satisfied with saying that sample A contains such a percentage of proteid matter, and sample B contains so much more, or whatever the case might be. But, Sir, like an honest official, like a man having the welfare of the Canadian contingents at heart, like a man appreciating the value of an emergency food in case of an emergency, he went just a little further, and declared that this emergency food, four ounces of which was guaranteed to be capable of sustaining an able-bodied man in case of great exertion, for twenty-four hours—that this stuff misnamed emergency or concentrated food, was not worthy of the name at all.

He pointed out to the Militia department that this stuff contained 16 per cent of proteid matter, while ordinary flour contained 12 per cent, and that the price the government was paying was altogether out of proportion to its value. That report was made by Mr. Macfarlane two days before the account of Dr. Devlin was paid. I ask any hon. member of this House, in view of the fact that the analyst of the department of Inland Revenue made that statement over his own signature—a responsible officer and perfectly reliable in every respect—was it a business proceeding on the part of the department of Militia to allow a check to be issued from the department for $4,666, being at the rate of $2 per pound for food that had been unequivocally and unhesitatingly condemned by the analyst of the Inland Revenue department? Is there one hon. gentleman opposite who, if the transaction were his own, would have under such circumstances authorised the payment of that money? I venture to affirm that there is not one hon.

gentleman on the other side, of any business experience, who would have allowed that money to be paid over to Mr. Devlin. How did the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) refer to that evidence. What did he say about Mr. Macfarlane's conduct in warning the Department of Militia that a fraud was being perpetrated upon it? He told us that it was a piece of gross impertinence on the part of Mr. Macfarlane. He told us that it was a piece of presumption on the part of a man in the public service in the Dominion to have done so, although that man is an officer whose duty it is to make an analysis when he finds any fraud being perpetrated on the people, or any department of the government, and make an announcement of the fact so that he who runs may read. If that statement is to go unchallenged, if a deserving public official is to be snubbed in this House for trying to save the treasury from being defrauded, the sooner that the people learn who it is that denounce such conduct on the part of an official, the better it will be for the proper administration of our affairs.

I do not think I will trespass more on the time of the House. Gentlemen who are in the habit of analysing and assessing the value of evidence, have given us reasons why they do not think that we should have tested the food and the powder which were presented to the committee by Mr. Hatch. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) gives as the reason why these were not examined, that Mr. Hatch had moved his quarters from the place where he had been manufacturing the food to some other part of the city, and he could not conceive why Mr. Hatch kept the samples of the food partially destroyed in the cooking for such a length of time. Well, Mr. Hatch was on his oath, and he swore positively that he had made or superintended the making of all the food used by the troops at Kingston, and that the food he brought before the committee, a portion of which had been spoiled by the attendant not looking after the fire properly, was a part of the food he was preparing for the Kingston test. He swore further, and his evidence has not been contradicted, that the powder which he also presented to the committee was the same as that used in the Kingston test and that it contained at least 60 per cent of proteid matter; and yet when the committee had the opportunity of analysing that powder and biscuit and burnt bread, and thus either establishing the accuracy of Hatch's statement or confounding him before the people for all time to come, they refused to allow that powder and food to be analysed on the ground that it was not the food or powder used in the Kingston test. Yet these very same gentlemen were quite prepared to allow a sample of half strength powder, which had been lying in Dr. Neilson's desk a year and a half, that had never been used in the Kingston test, which Dr. Neilson could not swear was the same stuff as was used at Kingston—they were prepared to allow that powder to be analysed, while they would not allow the powder and the food Mr. Hatch swore was similar to that used at Kingston to be submitted to an analysis. If the committee was appointed, as I believe it was, to ascertain all the facts, and get at the very bottom of this colourable transaction, it would have helped us very materially had we been allowed to have an analysis made of the food and powder which Mr. Hatch brought to us, and which he swore again and again were exactly the same food and powder as that tested at Kingston. The hands of the committee were, by this refusal, in a measure tied. If Mr. Hatch's statement had not been borne out by an analysis, the charges of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would have been materially weakened. We realized also, and so did hon. gentlemen opposite, that if an analysis had been made of the food and powder which Mr. Hatch submitted to us, and if that analysis had sustained his declaration on oath, that the strength of proteids in the food used at Kingston was 60 per cent, that would have proved the case of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier up to the hilt, and demonstrated beyond peradventure that a gross fraud had been perpetrated on the department, by substituting Devlin's food for that made by Mr. Hatch.

Next to the Minister of Militia, Dr. Devlin was the person most interested in giving every tittle of information he was possessed of with regard to this transaction from beginning to end. He was in attendance at the meetings of the committee from day to-day, he was at the elbow of hon. gentlemen opposite, giving them information from day to day during the course of the investigation. He appeared there until the very last day of the taking of evidence, and then he sent a letter to the committee expressing his desire to make a statement, and of course the committee would have been glad to hear him and waited an hour and a half. He did not, however, put in an appearance, and the committee adjourned until late in the evening for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to give evidence, but after the committee had adjourned at half past four, and before they had resumed at eight p.m., Dr. Devlin saw the chairman of the committee. The chairman knew that he was in the city, he was here at five o'clock or about that hour. It was surely of the utmost importance that the information he possessed should have been obtained in the interests of everything fair, honourable and straight in the matter. We should, at all hazards, have secured his evidence. But no. These gentlemen, after having seen Dr. Devlin, resumed the investigation at eight o'clock, and a letter was then sent to us saying that Dr. Devlin had been suddenly called away. Another emergency transaction. Another case of great emergency. He had to go to New York to get evidence from somebody there bearing on the case, and he asked an adjournment until the following Friday. Well, if Dr. Devlin could have assisted hon. gentlemen opposite, if his evidence could have given them any comfort, he would not have hesitated to come up and give his evidence. Is it because he had something to conceal, possibly, that he did not give evidence before the committee. The fact that he did not come before the committee is of itself one of the most damning things in connection with this unfortunate affair. But, he had a sleeping partner or person connected with him in this sale named Lyons. Mr. Lyons said he wanted to make a statement; and when he was called and sworn, he said that if the committee wanted to ask him any questions he was ready to answer them. He was interested with Dr. Devlin in the sale to the government of this stuff that was sent to South Africa.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He swore he was not.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) can read his testimony. And when we sought to ascertain to what extent he was interested and also to what extent others were interested with him, he refused to answer; and the committee did not compel him to answer, and so we were not enabled to obtain the information on this point. I say that the whole transaction, from beginning to end, reflects no credit on the administrative ability of the head of the department or upon the executive ability of those officers whose duty it was to protect the people of Canada from fraud, and Canadian soldiers at the front from the possibility of being imposed upon by this worthless food. And I say that the evidence contained in the blue-book presented to the House fully justifies and vindicates the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in taking the stand he has taken in this matter. Fraud of the grossest, gravest, meanest kind has been perpetrated upon the people and upon the department; and the hon. member (Mr. Monk) would have been remiss in his duty, as one of the representatives of the people, if he had not taken the earliest opportunity that presented itself to make the declaration he did make, and give the Minister of Militia, and anybody else concerned, an opportunity to clear himself from the accusations made. But, when he made his statement in this House, how was it received? It was received as if he were an enemy instead of a friend. He was threatened and challenged to make his charges. But, he is of the kind of stuff that is not to be cowed by swaggering or threats; and when he was given an opportunity he made his charges. And it will rest with the people of Canada, when they have read and digested the report and the evidence given, to say whether these charges have been proven completely or not. For my own part, as one of the minority, I am fully impressed with the fact that the gross negligence is chargeable to the Department of Militia in connection with the purchase of this food and its transmission to South Africa.

Mr. DOMINIQUE MONET (Laprairie and Napierville). I wish to take five minutes of your time, Mr. Speaker, to explain the vote I am going to give on this question. There are four different people who are incriminated either by the charge brought before the House by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, or by the evidence given before the committee—the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden); Dr. Neilson, an official of the Department of Militia; the collector of customs at Montreal, Mr. White, and Dr. Devlin, the man who sold the stuff to the Minister of Militia. Two of these persons are Liberals, the Minister of Militia and Dr. Devlin, and two of them are Conservatives, Mr. White and Dr. Neilson.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Monet's) pardon—Dr. Neilson is and always has been a great Grit.

Mr. MONET. If my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) were making a statement with regard to himself, I would accept it; but, it concerns another man, and I am informed by my friends that Dr. Neilson has always been a Tory and is still a Tory. There are two reports laid on the Table, the report of the Liberal majority and the report of the Conservative minority, of the select committee. The report of the Liberal majority exonerates from all blame the Minister of Militia and Dr. Neilson and Dr. Devlin. It does not say anything in favour of the latter two, but it does not draw any conclusion against them. But, it draws a strong conclusion against the collector of customs, Mr. White. The Conservative minority finds that the Minister of Militia has been guilty of gross negligence. The report of the committee reads:

On the whole, your committee find that the Minister of Militia and Defence and the Department of Militia were guilty of culpable negligence in purchasing and providing the Canadian soldiers with an article totally unfit for the purposes for which it was intended.

As to Dr. Devlin, the same Conservative minority of the committee come to the conclusion:

He violated section 448 of the Criminal Code, 1892, by offering for sale an article bearing a false trade description as defined by subsection (c) of article 443 of the code.

The Conservative minority of the committee do not draw any conclusion as regards Dr. Neilson or as regards Mr. White, the collector of customs. Now, I believe, honestly, that neither of these reports show the impartiality that should govern such matters as this. When a member puts his seat at stake in making a charge of that kind, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has done, the question involved is one of honour for the member who makes the charge, and it should not be dealt with on grounds of political partisanship, but on grounds of mere justice. For my part, I believe that Dr. Neilson was the very man guilty of the charge that was made by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier against the Minister of Militia. I believe that Dr. Devlin has criminally deceived the government in this case. I believe that the collector of customs at Montreal, Mr. White, has been an accomplice of Dr. Devlin to defraud the government in this matter, and the government should take action against these three. Now, here are the facts on which I base my judgment. I believe it is proved beyond contradiction: First, that a certain food worth 30 cents a pound, according to the sworn declaration of the seller himself, was sold at $2 a pound to the government; second, that Dr. Devlin represented to the Minister of Militia that the stuff that he was going to sell him was the same kind as the stuff tested at Kingston, and that is the reason why the minister bought it; third, that the Minister of Militia and Defence, being warned by Mr. Hatch that the food of Dr. Devlin was an adulterated food and not the genuine protose, instructed Dr. Neilson to analyse the protein of Dr. Devlin, and report; fourth, that Dr. Neilson recommended the stuff to be bought by the government; fifth, that the vegetable proteid food of Dr. Devlin was unduly imported free from the United States, by the fault and connivance of Mr. White, collector of customs, at Montreal; sixth, that the vegetable proteid food, instead of being a concentrated food as it ought to be, to be of any use as an emergency ration, is instead a very ordinary and diluted food.

Now, as to the conduct of the Minister of Militia and Defence, I fail to see that any gross negligence is proved, as alleged in the report of the minority. When the minister was warned by Mr. Hatch's letter, he gave instructions to Dr. Neilson to analyse the stuff and report. We cannot imagine that the Minister of Militia and Defence should know all about this food of his own knowledge, he had to rely upon one of his officials, and that is what he did. For my part I cannot blame him on this point. But I wish to consider this matter from another standpoint. The same question is involved, that was involved when we discussed the sending of the Canadian contingents to South Africa. For the same reason that I was opposed to paying the expense of sending those contingents, I oppose the payment of this money to Dr. Devlin. I do not see any justification for the Minister of Militia and Defence paying for the food that was furnished by Dr. Devlin. According to the well understood contract between the government of England and the government of Canada, as soon as the Canadian contingent touched the soil of South Africa, the troops were to be maintained at the expense of the English government. From a Liberal standpoint I fear that the electors at large will say that the Minister of Militia and Defence, after having first refused to buy the stuff when it was offered to him by the Bovril Company, afterwards made a bargain with a political friend of the government, Mr. Devlin, I fear that the electors at large will find that the bargain was made with a view of giving an undue favour to a friend of the government. I will vote against both reports.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL (Kent, Ont.). As one of the members of the committee—

Mr. FOSTER. There was an agreement made across the floor of the House, that the debate should stop with three on each side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I only want to make a personal explanation. As a member of the committee, and not having spoken at all, it is only fair to myself, that I should make a personal explanation. I did intend to speak on this question, but the House seemed to be anxious to come to a vote, and therefore, agreed not to speak. But I think it is due to myself to say that, having carefully considered all the evidence, I entirely concur in the report of the majority of that committee. I believe that it is true, and that the evidence and the facts that have been brought out, are correct, and I entirely concur in every finding of the majority report.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I am very sorry to have to take sides against the Minister of Militia and Defence in this case. It is not my fault, any more than my wish, that I have to do so. I am the last man in this House to place the responsibility for the action of Dr. Devlin, or of Dr. Neilson upon the Minister of Militia and Defence. But it has seemed good to the minister and to all parties concerned to consider this question from the standpoint of the department and to make it a departmental question. Then if the minister has made that choice, by that choice he must stand, so far as I am concerned, very much as I regret it. I think there is no question that a swindle has been perpetrated upon this country; there is no question that a swindle has been perpetrated by Dr. Devlin; there is no question that it has been perpetrated through the Department of Militia; and I am sorry to say, judging from this evidence, there is no question that it was to a certain extent within the knowledge of the Minister of Militia and Defence. I read in this report of Mr. Thomas Macfarlane, chief analyst of the Inland Revenue Department, dated February 12, to whom a sample of this food was submitted :

Since the average percentage of proteids in wheat is about 12, it does not appear that this 'proteid powder' is a very concentrated food, or is entitled to its name, or has a food value equivalent to $2 per pound.

I do not go any further than that. I say that was enough to demand an inquiry by whoever was responsible for the conduct of the Militia Department. So far from any inquiry being made, I find that two days after this report is dated, the money was paid on this contract; and I find that the last of that food was not shipped from Halifax until February 21, some nine days after the date of this report, leaving plenty of time to verify by every means necessary, the truth of the report as to the value of the food. Now, I do not know anything about the transactions of the department; but I say in the face of the evidence here, with the knowledge that must have come to the minister, if Mr. Devlin has not yet been criminally prosecuted, and if Dr. Neilson still occupies his place in the Militia Department, I cannot relieve the minister from responsibility in this matter.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I would not like to give a silent vote on this question. I take the view expressed so clearly and so fairly by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), that some person must be held responsible for this fraud, that, it must be apparent to every fair-minded man, has been perpetrated upon this country in this connection. I dislike extremely to hold the Minister of Militia and Defence responsible in this matter, and I am sure that many will be disposed to deal with him very leniently, inasmuch as he must have been exceptionally busy during the period when this fraud was perpetrated. But as he has chosen to make it a departmental matter, and to take the responsibility for it, then he must share in that responsibility. I myself feel that the report of the majority utterly fails, inasmuch as it reports that this was a good food, and inasmuch as it fails to report that some person is responsible and should be punished in this connection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And has defrauded the department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The department and the country have been defrauded, certainly. I think it must be abundantly clear to every fair-minded man who chooses to read this evidence, that this is certainly not an emergency food: it may be a very good food, but it is certainly not what the country would expect should be purchased for that purpose. In order to prove that point, I desire to read one or two brief extracts from the evidence of Dr. Neilson himself:

Q. You said you did not know protose; were not any experiments made with it?—A. No, I don't know protose at all.

Mr. OLIVER.

Q. I understood you to say: 'I told him I had not experimented with protose'?—A. No; I wrote Mr. Hatch in October, as I told you. I don't know protose; I don't know that it is a variety of protein vegetal. I know protein vegetal, that is all. He said: 'This is protein vegetal powder such as we have used in the experiments in Kingston; it is under the name of vitallin; I have used that name for professional and commercial purposes.' It is, as I would have you see, a dry, desiccated powder. I don't know if he used the word 'indefinitely,' but would keep for along time; he said: 'Particularly if in a tin tightly closed as this one is.' That appealed to me as very sensible. I said: 'This tin is too large, I want one to contain a day's rations.' He said: 'A tin containing four ounces will be a day's ration; I can make it that strength.' I said: 'Very well, Dr. Devlin, put it in the form of a tender, and your tender will be considered.'

Let me just show you what Dr. Ruttan, one of the most eminent chemists in the Dominion, had to say on this point. I quote from page 166 of the evidence, and this ought to be conclusive:

By Mr. Monk:

Q. Supposing five soldiers doing fairly active work, do you think they could subsist in perfect health and in good condition of nutrition upon this 16 per cent food for a month?—A. Oh, yes, I think so.

Q. They could?—A. I think so; they would have to take a good deal of it; it is a food, you know: it is a very good food.

Q. Could they do it on four ounces of it a day? You will remember that that was the amount that Dr. Neilson had arranged with Dr. Devlin should be put in the tins:

A. No, they would require about a pound and three-quarters—between a pound and a half and a pound and three-quarters—in order to get sufficient proteids.

How on earth could our soldiers subsist for a day on four ounces when this eminent chemist says that they would require a pound and a half, or a pound and three-quarters?

—The usual amount as based upon the experiments which have been carried on for a good many years is twenty grammes of nitrogen, which would correspond to about four and a half ounces of protein for a day's ration, for a day's food.

Q. Four and a half ounces of proteids?—A. Four and a half ounces of proteids.

Q. Pure proteids?—A. Pure proteids.

Q. Well, that being the case, how many ounces of pure proteids necessary for sustenance did you find in one day's emergency ration of this stuff?—A. Well, 16 per cent of four ounces; if a man takes four ounces it would be 16 per cent of four ounces.

Q. Well, then, on this four ounces it would be impossible for soldiers to subsist to do efficient work?—A. Not on that alone.

Q. Well, what is your opinion of an army emergency ration of four ounces, containing 16 per cent proteids?—A. I consider it would not be sufficient.

Q. It is an insufficient ration?—A. An insufficient ration.

This gentleman, who must not be assumed to have any bias, and who was brought before the committee as an expert, tells us that this is an entirely insufficient ration which was purchased as an emergency ration. It may be quite true that it is a reasonably good food, but no fair-minded man in this House, and no fair-minded man who reads the evidence and understands the case, will contend that it is an emergency ration.

Mr. WOOD. Have there been any reports from South Africa that it is an insufficient ration ?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood) asked that question, because he usually asks inconsequential questions. Let me quote from 'Instructions to medical officers on hired transports to the Cape,' which were placed in the hands of the surgeons. This document is signed by 'H. Neilson, lieut.-col., Director-General Medical Services.' Clause 13 reads as follows :

XIII. The minister has added five days' emergency rations per man of a new nutritive extract known as 'protein vegetal'—(four ounces equal to one day's ration). On occasions when extraordinary exertion is called for, this light and compact ration will be found of great value. Its merits have been thoroughly tested in 'A' Battery, R.C.A. (April, 1899).

I think myself that the chain which has been forged for the purpose of establishing that this ration which was purchased is the same as that tested at Kingston is weak. I do not think the evidence is at all conclusive. I do not think that any absolutely satisfactory evidence has been furnished that the food which was purchased from Dr. Devlin is the same food which was tested at Kingston. I am not prepared to say that the food tested at Kingston was any better. They may both have been frauds, for all I know, but I have arrived at the conclusion that the food sent to South Africa is not an emergency food, although it may be a reasonably good food. I want to say a word in reference to a remark which fell from the hon. member for Laprairie and Napier-ville (Mr. Monet). He accused Mr. White, the collector of customs at Montreal, of being an 'accomplice.' I feel certain that any person who knows Mr. White and his record while a member of this House, will not for an instant think he is an accomplice in the matter. He may have made a trifling mistake in allowing the food to come in free of duty, but I think any person who knows Mr. White will not accuse him of anything more than having made a mistake, as he is a man of high personal honour, and one of the most competent officials in the service. I do not think any person who knows Mr. White will accuse him of being an accomplice of Dr. Devlin in order to share the profits that might be made out of it.

House divided on the amendment (Mr. Monk).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. STENSON. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has not voted.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is now on the main motion.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, before you proceed to take the opinion of the House upon the main motion, I have an amendment to move which I will supplement with a few remarks. My position on this question is very much the same as that taken by the hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Monet). I did not go into the details of the inquiry. I did not give any special study to the technical questions raised, for the good reason that from the very start my opinion was that whatever might be the quality of the food, and whatever might be the details of the arrangement entered into between the Minister of Militia and Dr. Devlin, that the Minister of Militia had no authority to buy that food or any other food. As it has been pointed out by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Monet), the arrangement concluded between the British government and the Canadian government was that as soon as the Canadian troops would land in Africa, the British government would bear the whole expense of feeding and maintaining them as well as any other colonial troops at the seat of war. We have several evidences that the government themselves held that opinion when they sent the first contingent, and for several months afterwards. We find in the testimony of Mr. Besserer, agent for the Bovril Company, that he called on Dr. Neilson and offered him some of his concentrated food, and that Dr. Neilson very naturally told him that the Canadian government was not buying any food for the troops in South Africa. We find the same testimony given by Mr. Hoy, manager of the same company, with this difference that the reply he received was not from Dr. Neilson but from the Minister of Militia himself. I will read an extract from the report to that effect:

Q. Did you have occasion at the time of the outbreak of hostilities in the Transvaal to interview the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) in regard to furnishing our troops with emergency rations; if so, will you state to the committee what took place on that occasion?—A. I saw Dr. Borden some time just before the sending of the first contingent, and just learned from him that the government was not supplying anything for the contingent.

The Deputy Minister of Militia deposed: 'We had nothing whatever to do with supplying the food for the troops in South Africa,' and the Minister of Militia himself, in his testimony, said:

We did not purchase any emergency ration for the first contingent, because under the arrangement with the Imperial government we had nothing to do with furnishing food, as we supposed and as we well knew.

There was, therefore, no doubt possible in the mind of the Minister of Militia that he had nothing to do with buying or supplying food to the troops in South Africa. I am quite surprised to find that two or three months after the minister had refused to accept any food from the companies that were supplying a large amount of this food to the Imperial army, he should have changed his mind. We have from the evidence that the Bovril Company was supplying a large amount of food to the British War Office; and what surprises me is that the Minister of Militia preferred an unknown food, a food that had not been experimented on a large scale either by Canadian troops or by the British soldiers, to a well known food which had been supplied to the British army. The minister appears to have very suddenly made up his mind that he would give a contract to Dr. Devlin; and the reason given by him in his testimony is based upon a foundation which I certainly think did not justify that change of mind on his part. He said:

Later on, experience showed, by the telegrams received in this country, I think in December, that hardships had been experienced by troops, some of our own, on long marches, because they ran out of the food, of the regular rations supplied by the Imperial government, the army authorities, and it was then suggested that it might be advisable to supply a small quantity of extra rations.

I think it is a very grave thing. Mr. Speaker, to hear at the end of the month of June, that our Canadian troops were suffering in South Africa; that they were suffering because they were not properly fed by the Imperial authorities, and that the Minister of Militia should have waited until an inquiry was asked for in this parliament, before he took steps to see that our Canadian soldiers were properly treated by the Imperial authorities. That is most strange. If there was a desire of going to the rescue of the Canadian soldiers suffering in South Africa, immediate steps should have been taken by the Minister of Militia here and by the government; they should have inquired from the War Office in London, and asked what was the reason for such treatment of our soldiers. The position taken by the Minister of Militia, and the reason given by him for awarding that contract to Dr. Devlin is nothing less than a straight slander on the administration of the British War Office in South Africa. If in every case where the British War Office is not doing its duty, if when the hospital service in Africa is not properly conducted, Canada is to interfere, how is it that our government does not propose now to send a whole army hospital corps to the seat of war, because there is undoubtedly better reason for doing that, and far better evidence before the Imperial public at large that the hospital service in South Africa is more defective than the commissariat. If, we are called to act whenever there is anything lacking in the army administration in South Africa by the Imperial authorities, then we would go very far. Logically, our government should have supplied better guns, they should have supplied better cannons, they should have supplied a better service of nurses and physicians.

Sir, this shows plainly that after one step comes the other. When the first contingent was offered, we were told that the only thing this government was doing was to allow the men who wanted to fight in Africa to go there. We were told that we were giving them the ships; that we were feeding them until they landed; but that the moment they landed, they became British soldiers, were incorporated in the British army and were paid and fed by the British government. After one thing came the other. When the second contingent was sent, it was no more a question of liberty given to those who wanted to fight. We gave them horses, we gave them rifles, we gave them saddies, we added additional pay; and now we are asked to approve of a report which says that the Minister of Militia did right in supplying them with extra food. My reason for moving the amendment is especially because of the 8th paragraph of the majority report, which says:

8. The committee finds that the Minister of Militia, in supplying our soldiers with the food in question, acted with a laudable desire to lessen the hardships they should have to endure on account of forced marches and scarcity of rations, by giving them a supply of valuable food, put up in small and convenient packages, easily carried, and which, as indicated in the instructions issued to the medical officers of the transports, was not to be regarded as a substitute for other food, but to be available as 'a light and compact ration' 'of great value' 'on occasions when extraordinary exertion is called for.'

Now, either the troops are well fed in South Africa, or they are badly fed. Either the Imperial authorities do not look after the welfare of the British soldiers or they do. If they do look after the welfare of the British soldiers, it is not for us to interfere and tell the British authorities that they do not understand their business and that we will do what they are unable to perform. If the troops are not well fed, if they have suffered days of starvation, the position of the government is not better. It is evident from the report of the majority, as well as from the report of the minority, and even from the speeches which have been made here to-night by members of the majority of the committee, that that food is not sufficient when other food is lacking. It may be a good food to be added to the other; but, is it to be supposed that, as a general rule, the Imperial authorities do not give proper food to the British soldiers? Until I am given strong evidence that the Imperial authorities do not treat the soldiers well, I refuse to join with those who think it is necessary to send them food from Canada. Therefore, I move, seconded by Mr. Monet:

That all the words after 'That' be struck out, and the following words inserted:

'Under the terms of the arrangement concluded between the British government and the Canadian government, the feeding and keeping of Canadian troops, as well as of other colonial troops serving in South Africa, are to be borne entirely by Great Britain.'

Therefore, this House considers that the Minister of Militia should not have involved the credit of Canada in this contract and expended Canadian money to buy food or rations for troops in the field.

Mr. SPEAKER. This motion does not appear to me to be relevant to the matter under discussion. We are discussing the report of a select committee appointed to inquire into the circumstances under which certain emergency food was purchased. I do not see the connection between a criticism of the Minister of Militia for spending the money and the subject under investigation; I cannot see the connection between the amendment and the subject being discussed in the House. Under these circumstances, I am obliged to rule that the motion is not in order.

House divided on the main motion.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 1.05 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 6, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

YARMOUTH STEAMSHIP COMPANY AND THE DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth) moved :

That as it appears from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate that Bill (No. 185), An Act to authorize the sale of the Yarmouth Steamship Company's property to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, was withdrawn and discharged from the Orders of the Day of the Senate, the accountant of this House be authorized to refund the fees paid on the said Bill, less the cost of printing and translation.

Mr. FOSTER. What happened to this ?

Mr. FLINT. The negotiations fell through, and I was requested to withdraw the Bill.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 191) to amend the Post Office Act. He said : The Bill has only one clause, and that is a clause proposing to reduce the postage upon newspapers to a rate of one-eighth of one cent per pound for transmission in the province or territory of publication.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it keep up the old exception in reference to newspapers and radial areas ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It leaves the law just as it is, except that it reduces the rate to the extent I have mentioned. That is the only proposed change.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much revenue do you expect to lose by it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps that had better come on the second reading. I will try and find that out.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move :

That the following proposed resolutions be taken into consideration to-morrow, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider them :—

1. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated), which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per centum on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as shall be in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile. The expression 'cost' used in this resolution means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge, up to and not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus, but shall not include the cost of equipping the railway, nor the cost of terminals and right of way of the railway in any city or incorporated town; and such actual, necessary and reasonable cost shall be determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the report of the chief engineer of government railways, certifying that he has made or caused to be made an inspection of the line of railway for which payment of subsidy is asked, and careful inquiry into the cost thereof, and that in his opinion the amount upon which the subsidy is claimed is reasonable and does not exceed the true, actual and proper cost of the construction of such railway, the lines of railway being as follows, that is to say :—

1. For a railway from a point at or near the junction of the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway to the village of Minden, in the county of Haliburton, Ontario, not exceeding 12 miles.....$38,400
2. To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway Company, for a railway commencing at a point at or near Caradoc Station on the Canadian Pacific Railway and extending to the town of Strathroy, Ontario, not exceed 7 miles (revote) ..... 22,400.
3. For a line of railway from a point on the Pembroke Southern Railway at or near Golden Lake, towards a point on the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway at or near Bancroft, Ontario, for the further extension of such railway westerly from the western terminus of the 20 miles granted by Act 60-61 Victoria, chapter 4, for a distance not exceeding 20 miles..... 64,000
4. To the Algoma Central Railway Company, for 25 miles of its line of railway from its terminus at Michipicoten Harbour, Lake Superior, towards the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for a further extension of this company's line of rail-

- way from Sault Ste. Marie towards Michipicoten River and Harbour, Ontario, towards the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, 25 miles in all, not exceeding 50 miles .....$160,000
5. To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for a further extension of their railway from, at or near Bancroft to a point on the Canada Atlantic Railway between Whitney and Barry's Bay, Ontario, not exceeding 20 miles. 64,000
6. To the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company, for a line of railway between Little Current on Manitoulin Island and Sudbury, Ontario, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, the company undertaking to bridge between Little Current and the mainland, the bridge to be so constructed and maintained as to afford suitable facilities, in the opinion of the Minister of Railways and Canals, for free vehicular traffic, the same as upon a public highway, the work to be begun and prosecuted from Little Current and Sudbury, one-half of the subsidy to be applicable, as earned, in respect of the work beginning at Little Current and carried on towards Sudbury, and one-half thereof to be applicable, as earned, in respect of the work beginning at Sudbury and carried on towards Little Current, the course of the line of railway to cross the Sault Ste. Marie branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not exceeding 66 miles..... 211,200
7. For a railway from Bracebridge in Muskoka to a point at or near Baysville, Ontario, not exceeding 15 miles. 48,000
8. For a railway beginning at a point northerly 20 miles from Parry Sound and extending from that point to the French River, Ontario, not exceeding 35 miles ..... 112,000
9. For a railway from a point 20 miles easterly from the village of Haliburton, via the village of Whitney, towards the village of Mattawa, Ontario, not exceeding 40 miles..... 128,000
10. To the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company, for a branch line of railway to iron mines in Bedford township, Ontario, not exceeding 12 miles ..... 38,400
11. To the Thousand Islands Railway Company, for an extension of their railway from the present northerly terminus to a point easterly thereof, not exceeding 2 miles..... 6,400
And also for an extension from a point on the railway to connect their railway with the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, the Bay of Quinté Railway, the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway or the waters of the Rideau Canal, the balance remaining of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Vic., chap. 5, not exceeding 9½ miles (revote) ..... 30,400
12. For a railway from Dymont, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the New Klondike mining district, Ontario, not exceeding 7 miles..... 22,400
13. To the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company, for an extension of their line from its easterly terminus to a point at or near Bond's Lake, Ontario, not exceeding 4 miles.... 12,800

14. To the Nipissing and James Bay Railway Company, for a railway from at or near North Bay Station, on the Canadian Pacific Railway towards James' Bay or Lake Tamagaming, Ontario, not exceeding 20 miles (re-vote) .....	$64,000	from the mouth of the St. Francis River, N.B., westerly towards St. Charles Junction, 15 miles, in all not exceeding 60 miles .....	$192,000
15. In aid of the Ottawa and New York Railway Company's bridge over the St. Lawrence River and for the Canadian portion of such bridge, not exceeding .....	90,000	24. For a line of railway from Bristol, in the county of Carleton, New Brunswick, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, westerly a distance not exceeding 17 miles .....	54,400
16. To the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, towards the cost of the rebuilding and enlargement of the Victoria Bridge over the St. Lawrence River, Quebec, in addition to the amount received by the company on account of the subsidy granted by 60-61 Vic., chap. 4, viz.: $270,000, to make up the grant in aid of the undertaking to $500,000, not exceeding .....	230,000	25. For a line of railway from Shediac, county of Westmoreland, New Brunswick, to Shemogue, in the said county, a distance not exceeding 38 miles.	121,600
17. For a railway and traffic bridge over the Ottawa River at Nepean Point, between the city of Ottawa, Ontario, and the city of Hull, Quebec, upon condition that the bridge be so constructed as to provide suitable facilities, to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways and Canals, for free vehicular and foot passenger traffic, the same as upon a public highway, in addition to the $112,500 already granted, a sum not exceeding.....	100,000	26. For a railway from Lockeport, Nova Scotia, to Sable River, or other convenient point of railway connection, not exceeding 20 miles.....	64,000
18. To the Canadian Northern Railway Company, in further extension of their railway north of Swan River towards Prince Albert, North-west Territories, in addition to the grant by the Act 62-63 Vic., chap. 7, a further mileage not exceeding 100 miles .....	320,000	27. 		37. For a railway from Farnham, province of Quebec, to Frelighsburg and the international boundary line, not exceeding 21 miles .....	67,200
		38. Towards the construction of a railway bridge over the St. Francis River, in lieu of the grant under 62-63 Vic., cap. 7, at St. François du Lac, on the condition that the bridge be built so as to allow the municipalities to make use thereof, to esta-

- blish and maintain a suitable roadway for the free passage of foot passengers, vehicles and animals, to be approved by the Minister of Railways and Canals (revote)..... $50,000
39. Towards the construction of a railway bridge over the Nicolet River at Nicolet, in lieu of grant under 62-63 Vic., cap. 7 (revote)..... 15,000
40. For a line of railway from Halifax towards a point on the Central Railway of Nova Scotia, in the county of Lunenburg, in addition to and in extension of the 20 miles authorized by the Act 62-63 Vic., cap. 7, not exceeding 20 miles ..... 64,000
41. Chapter 7 of 62-63 Victoria, section 2, subclause 20, is hereby amended by inserting after the word 'railway,' in the third line of the subclause, the words 'or to connect said lines.'

The subsidy provided for by chapter 7 of the statutes of 1899 towards the construction of a railway bridge over the St. Lawrence River at Chaudière Basin, near Quebec, shall be deemed to be applicable, as to one-third thereof, to the substructure and approaches, and as to two-thirds thereof to the superstructures, and the same may be paid upon that basis by authority of the Governor in Council, upon progress estimates to be furnished from time to time by the chief engineer of government railways and canals, so that one-third of such subsidy, and no more, may be paid in respect and upon completion of the masonry of the substructure and approaches of the said bridge, one-third, and no more, upon the work and material of one-half of the superstructure being done and supplied, in respect of such work and material, and the remaining one-third upon the completion of the whole work.

2. Resolved, That the subsidies hereby granted or any subsidies heretofore granted under any Act of the parliament of Canada, still in force, but not fully paid, towards the construction of any railway or bridge, shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and may, unless otherwise expressly provided, at the option of the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, be paid as follows:—

(a) Upon the completion of the work subsidized; or

(b) By instalments, on the completion of each ten-mile section of the railway, in the proportion which the cost of such completed section bears to that of the whole work undertaken; or

(c) Upon progress estimates on the certificate of the chief engineer of railways and canals, that in his opinion, having regard to the whole work undertaken and the aid granted, the progress made justifies the payment of a sum not less than sixty thousand dollars.

(d) With respect to (b) and (c), part one way, part the other.

3. Resolved, That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively; that the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as are approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively; that all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from the said first day of August, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the government, which agreement the government is hereby empowered to make, and that the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

4. Resolved, That the granting of such subsidies, and the receipt thereof by the respective companies, shall be subject to the condition that the Governor in Council may at all times provide, and secure to other companies such running powers, traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, reasonable and proper facilities in exercising such running powers, fair and reasonable traffic arrangements with connecting companies, and equal mileage rates between all such connecting railways; and the Governor in Council shall have absolute control at all time over the rates and tolls to be levied and imposed by any of the companies or upon any of the railways hereby subsidized.

5. Resolved, That every company receiving a subsidy under this Act, its successors or assigns, and any person or company controlling or operating the railway or portion of railway subsidized under this Act, shall each year furnish to the government of Canada transportation for men, supplies, material and mails over the portion of its line in respect of which it has received such subsidy, and, whenever required, shall furnish mail cars properly equipped for such mail service, and such transportation and service shall be performed at such rates as are agreed upon between the minister of the department of the government for which such service is being performed and the company performing it, and in case of disagreement, then at such rates as are approved by the Governor in Council; and in or towards payment for such charges the government of Canada shall be credited by the company with a sum equal to three per cent per annum on the amount of subsidy received by the company under this Act.

6. Resolved, That as respects all railways for which subsidies are granted by this Act, the company at any time owning or operating any of the said railways shall, when required, produce and exhibit to the Minister of Railways or any person appointed by him, all books, accounts and vouchers showing the cost of constructing the railway, the cost of operating it, and the earnings thereof.

I beg also to announce that His Excellency the Governor General having been made acquainted with the subject-matter of these resolutions, recommends the same to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES OF THE PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 189) to amend the Act respecting the Judges of the Provincial Courts.

Mr. DOMINIQUE MONET (Laprairie and Napierville). Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the Orders of the Day have been called.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is too late to-day ; we are proceeding with the orders.

Mr. BOURASSA. The Orders of the Day have not been called.

Mr. FOSTER. No, we have gone into the business.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency) moved :

That all the words after 'that' in the main motion be struck out and that the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to strike out section one.

Mr. MONET. I would like to know whether the Orders of the Day have been called.

Mr. SPEAKER. We have proceeded to this order, and we have passed that stage. The question is on the amendment.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, before this amendment is put, I want to answer a few observations which were made the other day by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) and a few others in reference to the position which I took upon the question. The hon. gentleman and some others stated that I had given my opinion that the present number of judges in Quebec was sufficient to discharge the duties devolving upon those charged with the administration of justice. If the hon. gentleman would do me the honour of looking at what I said then in regard to this subject, he will find that I said I had no opinion to offer upon it because, having practically abandoned my profession for more than ten years, I could not give an opinion upon this subject. But, I stated that the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) could not hold the view that the present number of judges would be sufficient to discharge the duties connected with the administration of justice, because in a Bill which he introduced a few years ago into the legislature of Quebec, he provided that the present duties which are now discharged by 31 judges should be discharged by 41 judges, instead of 31, that there should be 15 judges of the Superior Court and 26 other judges, or what he called district judges.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Twenty-six ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, twenty-six. They would be practically County Court judges in the province of Ontario. That would make 41 instead of 31, and if that Bill had been passed, or if the present government of Quebec had taken the Bill of the hon. gentleman and put it through, instead of applying for an increase of three judges, they would have been asking for the appointment of ten additional judges. There is, therefore, no argument in that. What I wish to address myself particularly to is the statement made the other day by the hon. member for Montmorency, by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), and by the hon. member for York, N.B., and some others, that the judges in the rural districts of Quebec have practically nothing to do.

That is not the way to look at the question at all. It was stated by some gentlemen opposite that there were judges in the rural districts of Quebec who tried only eighteen or twenty cases during the year. That may be true or it may not be true, but I want to point out that in the rural districts of the province of Quebec—as my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) knows—the judges do not only exercise their jurisdiction in the Superior Court, but they have also to discharge the Circuit Court and Division Court duties which appertain to the county court judges in the province of Ontario. The Superior Court judge in the rural districts of Quebec has to sit in every case, big or little, whether the amount be $100,000 or whether it be only $5. He has also to discharge the duties of the Court of Chancery in Ontario, and he has also to sit in the criminal court, a duty which does not devolve upon the Superior Court judges in the cities of Montreal and Quebec, as the criminal court in those cities is presided over by the Queen's Bench judges. The rural Superior Court judge has also to sit in the Circuit Court, which is not a duty which devolves upon the Superior Court judges in the city of Montreal. I believe with my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) that it would be better to have the judges residing in Montreal and Quebec and going on circuit in the province to discharge these minor duties which the Superior Court judges to-day have to discharge in the rural districts. I believe that our present system is antiquated in that respect, but the people of the province are wedded to it, and it gives them satisfaction. The system proposed by the hon. gentleman from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), by which the judges would reside in Montreal and Quebec, where they could confer together, would, in my opinion, be a better system, but it certainly would increase the number of judges, and it would increase rather than decrease the expenditure. That system would not only put upon the district judges the duties which are now discharged by the Superior Court judges, but it would assign to them the duties now performed by the district magistrates, and the Dominion treasury, instead of the provincial treasury, as at present, would have to pay these judges. For these reasons, the present Bill can certainly not be attacked upon the ground of economy.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I do not want to misrepresent the right hon. gentleman so far as I am concerned, but I would like to call the attention of the House to the statement that was made by the Solicitor General.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is a different matter.

Mr. FOSTER. The Solicitor General, I presume, may be taken to represent the government and the Department of Justice, and he is a high authority on this matter. At page 9331 of the Hansard he says:

I notice that the hon. member for Montmorency was content to speak of the judges in the province of Quebec, saying that they were sufficient in number to perform all the duties assigned to them under our system. With that statement I have absolutely no quarrel. The great majority of our judges in the province of Quebec are, to say the least, not overworked.

There was a direct statement made by the Solicitor General, and it is a direct and absolute admission that there are quite a sufficient number of judges in the province of Quebec to do the work. Then the right hon. gentleman, in his speech, said:

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron), following the hon. member for Montmorency, said that the number of judges in the province of Quebec is already too large, and that opinion is shared to some extent by the Solicitor General.

Then the right hon. gentleman goes on to say that he would not undertake to decide that question, because he has been so long out of the practice of his profession. I find that the right hon. gentleman did not make the statement in so many words, but he did not feel that he could combat the absolute statement which was made by the Solicitor General. It is undoubted that this Bill is necessary, not because there is not a sufficient number of judges, but because the system of distribution is faulty.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I was one of those who took the same meaning from the right hon. gentleman's statement, and I took it from that part of his speech which is to be found at page 9114 of Hansard, which pretty fully bears out the contention which was made from this side of the House. The Prime Minister said:

The only objection is that it provides for a greater number of judges than are really necessary—that there are to-day a sufficient number of judges to administer the law, but that they are so distributed that some of them in the city of Montreal have too much to do, while others, in the rural parts of the country, have too little to do. I am free to say at once that everybody knows that. Everybody knows that in the district of Montreal the judges are overworked, and that is the very reason why we want to make the provision we are now doing. It has become an imperative necessity to have more judges in the district of Montreal. Then, it is stated that other judges have not sufficient work. That may be also. It may be that there are judges who could do more work than they do at the present time.

In view of these words, I do not think we took any too strong a meaning out of the statement of the Prime Minister.

Amendment (Mr. Casgrain) negatived on division.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 132) to amend the Railway Act.—(Mr. Blair.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Is this Bill printed as amended? Were there not some amendments made after it was printed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I will explain to the committee what did occur. After the Bill had been practically adopted, but before it was finally reported, it was suggested by some member of the committee that it would be well to have it printed and distributed so that it would be seen in what form it would leave the committee. It was so printed. There are one or two typographical errors which have crept into the Bill which will have to be corrected. But what I apprehend the hon. member is alluding to more particularly is a discussion which took place in the committee upon the Drainage Bill introduced by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). The result of that discussion was that an addition to the Railway Bill was proposed by me in substitution of the Bill the hon. member was promoting, and was agreed to by a majority of the committee. The other clauses which are to be found in the printed Bill were adopted practically unanimously.

On section 11,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose that the following be added as section 12, which is precisely as it was approved of by the Railway Committee when the discussion took place upon the Bill of the hon. member for West Elgin:

12a. Whenever proceedings for the drainage of lands have been taken by any landowner under the provisions of an Act of the legislature of any province in that behalf, and it appears to the committee that an outlet for such drainage is required over, across or under the lands of the company, the Railway Committee may, upon the application of the landowner or engineer in charge of the work, and on due notice to the company and hearing the parties, order the company to construct and provide upon its lands all necessary means of drainage, as in such order specified, upon the landowner first complying with such terms, as to payment or security for payment of the whole, or so much of the cost of construction and maintenance of the said drainage works as the committee may in such order provide.

12b. Whenever any application is made under the last preceding section or under section 14 of this Act, the Railway Committee may, if it thinks proper, direct an inquiry to be made in the locality in question by a person appointed under section 12 of this Act, and may authorize such person to hear the parties and take evidence under oath, and may also, if it thinks proper, act on his report without further hearing of the parties.

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (West Elgin). I regret that some of the gentlemen who are most interested in this Bill are not able to be here to-day—for instance, the two members for Essex, and others whom I need not name; but I beg to offer a few general remarks on this drainage question and on the amendment proposed by the hon. minister. This is a matter that has been before the House for a number of years, and until now those who are in favour of securing rights of drainage for individuals and of providing a tribunal for the trial of drainage cases generally have not been able to interest any government in the question. This year, however, the Minister of Railways has given it, I believe, careful and earnest attention, and has proposed an amendment, which he honestly believes to be the best thing under the circumstances. I may have to differ in some respects from his amendment, but I must congratulate the minister and the government on having taken the important step of, at all events, recognizing the rights of private individuals in the matter and devising some means to right what was admittedly a great wrong.

Hitherto, all cases concerning drainage had to go before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, involving the personal attendance of the parties, the engagement of counsel, and a lot of expenses of that kind, which practically put it out of the power of the poorer municipalities to get justice done. Individuals had no right to appeal to any tribunal whatever on a question of drainage between them and a railway company. They could not appeal to the courts because the courts held that no provincial Act applies to a Dominion railway. They could not appeal to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, because there is not provision for their doing so in the Act which gave that body jurisdiction over railway companies. The municipalities alone had only the very expensive and inconvenient remedy to which I have referred. That people should have to come from the ends of the Dominion to Ottawa to settle a question of putting a culvert under a railway track, seems to me monstrous and preposterous. I therefore proposed the measure that has been before the House, substituting a tribunal of three arbitrators for the tribunal provided under the law for the settlement of these cases.

It was provided in my Bill that each of the parties to a case, the municipality or individual landowner, and the railway company, should appoint an engineer, and a third engineer was to be appointed by these two, or by the Minister of Railways. This board of arbitrators was to sit at the spot where the difficulty arose and take evidence under oath, and finally decide the whole question. That seems to be a most convenient tribunal, and the fairest all round. That Bill was unanimously adopted by this House, without expression of dissent, at its second reading. It went to the Railway Committee, somewhat against my own judgment. The discussion of the Railway Committee, the hon. minister says, gave him much information on the subject, but it also had the effect of killing the Bill which had been adopted at its second reading by this House. I do not know, therefore, whether that reference was the most lucky thing for the Bill or not, under the circumstances. At all events, we are grateful for the fact that the minister has obtained a great deal of information on the subject, and has done his best to usefully apply it. Four sittings of the Railway Committee were taken up with the discussion of this Bill, a very large part of the time being taken up by the legal representatives of the different railway companies, who certainly had every opportunity to put their case fully before the committee. Then the minister proposed his compromise between the Bill and the present law. That raised distinctly the issue as to whether a court of arbitration, or the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, is the best tribunal to consider such cases. I have already given my reasons for thinking that an arbitration is the best tribunal. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council, of course, could have no personal knowledge of any of the cases that came before it. They must always depend on the report of some engineer, or the facts laid before them as evidence. The latter involved the attendance of the parties, and had the effect of preventing action in a great many cases. Again, when a case depended on the report of an engineer, it was practically decided on the opinion of one man, who might or might not be satisfactory. Again, the Railway Committee is composed of gentlemen who have many other duties to perform. The ministers of the Crown are busy, and have not the time to act as frequently, perhaps, as is required in cases outside of their own department. In other words, men who are busily occupied with their own departments have not the requisite time to sit as a tribunal for the trial of cases outside their departments. The minister believes, and other previous Ministers of Railways have believed, that really every case that ought to be attended to is attended to, but that does not seem to be the opinion of the public. It may be that the cases which actually were brought to the attention of the Railway Committee were disposed of pretty expeditiously, although I am told by a gentleman who was a candidate at the last election for this House that he knew of a case in which affidavits relating to a matter of this kind had been lying before the department since the term of office of hon. gentlemen opposite, and had never been attended to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Are you at liberty to state to what case you refer?

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. CASEY. I do not know what the case was, or whether I should mention the gentleman's name or not, but will give his name privately to the hon. minister, and he can inquire into the matter. The great point I wish to urge is, that, under this tribunal, the expense of going before it, and the difficulty of fighting the great railway corporations before it, have deterred the public from raising many cases that ought to have been raised. In fact, there has been a failure of justice for lack of an accessible tribunal.

My opinion on that point remains just as it was, that the tribunal of arbitration is a preferable one to the other. The amendment introduced by the minister, however, makes one great difference in giving the individuals some rights against the railway companies. Until the assumption of the different railways by the Dominion government, the people had those rights under different provincial laws. They were taken away by this parliament, and now an instalment of them is coming back to the people. There has been too much disposition on the part of all concerned in our legislation and administration to look upon railways as something sacred and inviolable, to look upon their property as something totally different from the property of other people. I believe, and I embodied the statement in the Act that was before the House, that every landowner should have the same rights of drainage over the property of railway companies as he has over the property of any other landowner, subject to due provision for the safety of the road-bed and of the traffic that passes over it. Those provisions, I hoped to attain, by having an arbitration by three engineers, one representing the railway and the other representing the department here. It has been contended by these people that to allow the right of drainage across railway lands would seriously endanger the road-bed and the lives of passengers, and the freight and rolling stock of the company. Sir, there is nothing in it. Every railway, when it is built, puts in a large number of culverts and smaller drains without the slightest danger to its road-bed or rolling stock. As time goes on, that railway is bound to keep these in order, to keep them in good condition; it is bound also, in justice to the public, to keep its tracks in good condition and the road-bed generally. Now, Sir, I am prepared to say that infinitely more danger exists to life and property from the condition in which parts of the road-bed of the different railway companies are kept at the present day, from sheer consideration for the purses of the company, than any danger which could arise out of a largely increased system of drainage across those tracks. It is perfectly easy to put in a culvert or drain in such a way that it will not hurt the track. But loose rails,

Then again it has been maintained by the railway companies, and seems to have been maintained by a previous government, from the statements made in the Railway Committee, and I am sorry to say that it appears to be maintained by the present government, that the railway company should not only be paid the cost of putting in any new drainage accommodation required, but should also be guaranteed the cost of keeping that drainage accommodation in repair to all futurity. I beg to dissent in toto from that theory. The railway company is bound to afford drainage when the railway is first constructed for all natural watercourses, and for all drains then in operation. We all know that in western Ontario, and in many other parts of the country, there are no big watercourses which drain a whole district; each small part has to be drained separately through a comparatively small outlet, and the railway has to provide for these outlets and to keep them in order for all time at its own expense. I do not see why a different rule should be applied in case of new accommodation for drainage, from that which is required for a drain when the railway is first constructed. That outlet would not be given by arbitration or by any other tribunal, unless it was required. In most cases it has become necessary by the settlement of the country, caused by the operation of the railway, which country furnishes increased freight to the railway company and increased patronage, generally in consequence of opening it up. It is perfectly proper that, as the company's business increases through the opening up of the country, it should afford to the newly-opened districts, those conveniences which it was compelled in the first place to afford, when it first laid out its route across the lands. Those, I think, are all the points in regard to the general question that I need touch on now.

I want now to offer a few remarks on this resolution itself. In the first place, the amendment starts out by providing that, whenever proceedings for drainage have been taken under any provincial statute, then the Committee of the Privy Council may take cognizance of the grievance alleged by the individual. Now, in many cases no proceedings need be taken, or can be taken, under provincial Acts where drainage is required. A great many cases arise where a farm is cut in two by a railway. In my own county, for example, where a railway runs at right angles to the length of most of the farms, that case is very frequent, and the farmer is unable to drain one end of his farm into the other end without crossing the railway track. He certainly cannot take any proceedings under provincial Acts to enable him to do that, and, therefore, this proviso would leave him out in the cold. Then in many other cases, he might wish to cross the railway track and drain on to the highway, or into the ditches on highways, or into the railway drains themselves. In that case, I do not think he could enter any proceedings under any provincial Act, and would be shut out. I would ask the minister to amend that clause so as to allow an individual to apply without having started proceedings under the provincial Acts. Of course, there are other cases where water, after crossing the railway track, would go into somebody else's land. In such a case as that, the individual could institute proceedings, but in the other cases he could not. Then we come to the latter part of the same clause which reads :

That cognizance may be taken of the case upon the landowner first complying with such terms as to payment or security for payment of the whole or so much of the cost of construction and maintenance of said drainage works as the committee may in such order provide.

That is the clause to which I object on the grounds already stated. I do not think it should be assumed, in the first place, that the cost of putting in these conveniences or maintaining them to all futurity, should rest upon the landowners. That should be a question for the tribunal which tries the case to decide, upon the circumstances of each individual application. In some cases it will be proper, and in most cases, it seems to me, it would be highly improper. I do not think the assumption should be made that the landowner is to be liable for these expenses before his case is heard. I propose to ask the committee to add to this Bill a couple of provisos, the first laying down general principles on which the tribunal should be guided. It is in the following words :

Subject to the provisions of this Act, every landowner should have the same right of drainage on and across the lands of railway companies, as he now has by law in regard to the lands of any other landowner.

I do not think there can be any reasonable objection to that statement of principle; certainly it would do all that is necessary to safeguard the railway companies. The only reason for putting it in is that the principle upon which the case should be considered should be declared in the Bill, namely, that the right of drainage inheres in the landowner whose land needs drainage, and the decision of that question should not be made subject to the railway committee of the Privy Council.

Then, again, a most valuable suggestion was made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson). He contended an arbitration in every case would probably be expensive, not as expensive probably as a reference to the Privy Council, but too expensive for the individual. There is a great deal of force in that, and I believe that the amendment proposed by the hon. minister, with the addition of what I am now going to propose, would probably cover the case better than an absolute reference to arbitration in every case. What I propose is (as suggested by the hon. member for Lincoln, Mr. Gibson), that an engineer should be sent down by the Railway Department to make a general report upon the case in the first instance. That would not cost anything to either of the parties. I propose that his report as to what should be done should be made known to both the parties, and that then, if either of the parties felt sufficiently aggrieved by the report to risk the cost of an arbitration, an arbitration should be held before a board composed of three engineers. That clause would read as an addition to the clause proposed by the minister :

In case either the railway company or municipality or landowner interested notifies the Railway Committee of the Privy Council that they wish to appeal against the decision given in any question concerning drainage, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council shall authorize the holding of an arbitration before a board of three civil engineers, to be appointed as follows : One by the municipality or landowner, one by the railway company, and a third by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and the decision of this board shall be final.

I beg to move, seconded by Mr. McMillan, the first clause to which I have referred declaring the general principle which should underlie all drainage proceedings. I move that it should be placed before the clause proposed by the minister.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Is that in amendment to the clause presented by the minister ?

Mr. CASEY. It is in addition to it.

Mr. SPROULE. That would presuppose that the clause presented by the minister is accepted ?

Mr. CASEY. I suppose it might be taken in that sense.

Mr. SPROULE. In regard to the amendment proposed by the government, it resembles, in my opinion, the homeopathic doses of medicine given by homeopaths to their patients as it is so infinitesimal so far as any benefits to be derived from it by the farmers of the country are concerned. However, it has this advantage, that, instead of the municipality taking up the fight for the farmer, the farmer can appeal himself to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. But, it compels a farmer to come down here and fight his case before the Railway Committee. It is true that the succeeding clause says :

Whenever any application is made under the last preceding section or under section 14 of this Act, the Railway Committee may, if it thinks proper, direct an inquiry to be made in the locality in question.

I presume that in the future, as in the past, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, will prefer to do their own work down here in their office, and that it will still necessitate the farmer coming down here to fight his case. I think it will be very little benefit to the farmer. It will be some slight benefit, but very little. In regard to the amendment to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). I do not know what it is because he reads it in such a low tone of voice that we could not hear it in this part of the House.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). I think the section now under consideration that is proposed by the minister might be altered a little with advantage to the landowner. I agree with what the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says that this is an improvement upon the Act as it exists, but there are cases in which after the landowners put the law in motion they have nothing to do with it whatever. They petition for drainage. Their petition is sent to the engineer of the township or of the municipality if the municipality is prepared to deal with the petition. After that the landowners have nothing more to do with it. It is true that under the other section the municipality can then come to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to get drainage across the railway or find an outlet. Suppose the municipality does not do it this amendment simply gives the landowners the right to come where the municipality refuses. Assuming that this be the case I think more benefit would be conferred upon the landowner if the words 'upon the landowner first complying with such terms as to payment or security for payment of the whole, or so much of the cost' were struck out and 'upon such terms as to cost' should be inserted. Although the landowner might be benefited he has nothing to do with the cost because the cost is fixed by the engineer and it is paid by the land assessed. The landowner should not be under terms personally as to the payment of the cost or giving security for the cost where the jurisdiction of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is invoked under that section.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the landowner could never satisfy the Railway Committee of the Privy Council as to the security he is compelled to give under this clause. Why do you compel him to give satisfactory security any more than the railway company? It seems to me that if the landholder is compelled to give security as it is proposed he would not be able to give a permanent security unless he gave a mortgage on his land. The railway company would never be satisfied with the security that the landowner would be able to give, and is therefore stopped from being able to go across the railway property in my judgment. I do not think you should put such an onerous condition on the landowner. It is all put on the landowner and not on the railway company.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). I have looked over this very carefully. A farmer inaugurating proceedings under the machinery provided by the local legislature under the Ditches and Watercourses Act, must call his neighbours together and try to make an amicable settlement. If he succeeds, the settlement is registered, and becomes, in law, the same as the award of the engineer. But if a settlement is not reached, the farmer has only to notify the township clerk, and the clerk is compelled—the council has nothing to do with it—to notify the engineer to come on within a certain time. But an engineer brought on under the provincial laws can only deal with what the province has control over. If a railway is involved he cannot make an estimate and send that to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, unless a clause is put into this Act giving that authority. Of course, it is all right after you cross the railway, but the engineer has no power to deal with the railway, which is under Dominion jurisdiction. Cases arise where the only parties involved are one farmer and a railway and the farmer clearly cannot take proceedings under the provincial Act, because the other party, the railway, is not under provincial jurisdiction. I hold that there must be power given to the local engineer to examine and give an estimate of the work on railways before a proper case can be laid before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Further, I object to the clause under which the farmer is bound for the whole cost. A good deal has been made out of the point of circumstances arising to overcome which the railway should not be held liable. But the circumstances, before the railway was built, were that the farmer had free access to means of drainage for his lands, and that which prevents his still enjoying that right is the building of the railway. The railway, in fact, has taken away a natural right; and to compel the railway to give the farmer drainage is only to compel them to restore that natural right. I do not see, therefore, why the farmer should be bound to give security for all the expenses.

Mr. BRITTON. I wish to put myself right in connection with what the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) has said, and I then shall have said my say with reference to his amendment. I am sorry I was not in the Railway Committee; if I had been and had understood the discussion that took place there, I probably should not have troubled the committee of the House. Both the hon. member for South Huron and myself spoke from an Ontario point of view. The hon. gentleman is quite right with respect to the Act concerning ditches and watercourses. But there is in another Act in the province of Ontario which refers to municipal drainage—a larger class of drains—and that is what I had in mind when I addressed the committee before. I am now told by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) that this amendment is intended to apply only to ditches and watercourses, as they are called in Ontario. That being so, while the objection raised by the hon. member for South Huron and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) as to the farmer giving security for costs is a matter to be discussed, my point is not necessarily before the committee. The other class of drains is provided for by some other section of the Act, and this subsection a is intended to apply only to ditches and watercourses, so I have nothing to say.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think that the hon. member (Mr. Britton) is right in saying, with regard to the suggestion he made—he did not put it in the form of an amendment—that there would be no utility whatever in carrying out that suggestion. I think it would be well for members of the committee to bear in mind the fact that we have been called upon by the proposed legislation of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) to deal with cases which cannot be and are not being dealt with by the municipalities in respect to drainage. The existing law is ample to cover all cases in which the municipal body will declare its interest and will make an application under section 14 of the Railway Act.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). Will the hon. minister permit me—to save time in the discussion—to say that I fear he is not making the distinction between what is purely a matter of municipal concern rather than a municipality acting for a drainage territory. There is no provision in the Bill for the cases the people are most concerned in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The subject, I admit frankly, was a new one to me; and I did not apply my mind to it until the discussion came up in the Railway Committee at the instance of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). But the conclusion that I came to was this—that the provincial legislature was at fault in that it did not furnish the machinery which would enable the landowner to move so as to not merely invite but compel the action of the municipal body, and that we could not supply that omission. I will read a few lines of the 14th section of the Railway Act which, I think, will illustrate my meaning:

Whenever, after due notice of application therefor, the Railway Committee decides that it is necessary in the interest of any municipality that means of drainage should be provided—

That clause, you will see at once, presupposes that the municipality will declare that it is interested and will invite the intervention of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for this purpose—

Mr. SPROULE. That would be only for municipal purposes?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that it would be limited to what would be called narrowly municipal purposes, but it must be limited to such purposes as the municipality is both empowered and willing to act in and to appeal to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council—

Mr. HAGGART. It is that broad—they can apply for an individual.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should think they would not be compelled to apply for an individual, but I would imagine that it would be within their competency to apply for an individual. But they have not done it and they cannot be induced to do it—as I understand it has not been found possible to bring enough influence to bear upon municipalities generally to induce them to move under the provisions of the Railway Act.

The hon. member (Mr. Casey) now comes in with this Bill, and he asks that a single individual may secure the laying down of drainage works across railways. The first answer to that is, that to-day you have your provincial legislature which has to do entirely with the subject of drainage, and if you cannot influence sufficient opinion in the province to put the law in the shape you desire, then it becomes a very difficult question to deal with, bearing in mind that the subject of drainage does not belong to parliament. I suggested to the committee that we might afford relief to these people by enabling a single landowner to act under what is called the Ditches and Watercourses Act in Ontario, and that having authority to lay the drain under that Act, it would be proper enough for this parliament to authorize the crossing of a railway, under such conditions as the Railway Committee of the Privy Council might deem to be fair and reasonable. The proposal of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) is to create a new tribunal on the basis of arbitration, and to absolutely ignore the existing law which has been in operation for years. My proposal is that it should go to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council which has the machinery at hand, which can lay down a uniform rule in these matters, and which in the past has exercised its jurisdiction with a fair degree of satisfaction to the public. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council, I contend, has had as large a measure of success as human institutions generally have. We propose not to alter the existing law; we propose to utilize the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to do practically what the hon. member (Mr. Casey) desires. We propose that the Railway

Mr. BRITTON.

Committee may send a proper and competent officer to the ground to examine it and make his report on all the material facts which are necessary in order to the giving of a decision. I ask the House to remember that we propose that should be done at no expense whatever to the applicant. I do not think that the system of arbitration would be satisfactory at all; I think the Railway Committee of the Privy Council would be better than an arbitration.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would, too.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Railway Committee will have all the machinery at its disposal, and it will be able to use that machinery without any cost to the applicant necessarily. of course he, the applicant, may incur as much cost as he pleases, and he may employ lawyers, ad libitum, but there will be no occasion for him to do so. During the tenure of the chairmanship by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), and certainly during my tenure in office, private individuals make applications to that committee; members of parliament come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and present cases on behalf of their constituents, and that is done without any expense whatever. You might imagine a more expeditious tribunal than the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, because sometimes the ministers are so much engrossed with other business that they have to delay decisions much more than they would wish, but on the whole there has been no serious complaint with regard to delay. The committee has been fairly expeditious in these matters, and the delays have almost uniformly occurred by the wish of both parties to the hearing. Under the proposal which I now make you get an inexpensive tribunal; you get a moderately speedy tribunal, you are utilizing machinery which is now in operation, and you are preserving that measure of control over the railways of the country which parliament has always considered necessary, and which parliament ought always to consider necessary in the interests of public safety. I can see nothing of advantage in the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey), and I do not know that I am quite prepared to express an opinion as to what, if any, would be the effect of it. He declares that subject to the provisions of this Act every landowner shall have the same rights of drainage on and across the lands of railway companies as he now has in regard to lands owned by another landowner. How far this amendment would carry my hon. friend I am not prepared to say. Does not this present clause read with section 14, recognize that it would be a proper application in a proper case. You are not going to affirm arbitrarily that all applications must be granted; you must leave the discretion somewhere, and you leave it in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council under my clause.

Mr. HAGGART. Would not the amendment, if passed, make the provincial law applicable to Dominion railways?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Were it not that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) starts out with the words 'subject to the provisions of this Act.' I would be inclined to think it did, but I cannot at this moment undertake to advise the committee as to what the effect of the amendment would be. But, this section might mean a great deal more; it might mean that you are entirely ignoring the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature in respect to the question of drainage. That is where one of the difficulties in connection with the hon. member's Bill has arisen. The hon. member seems to treat the matter as if it were simply a case of getting across the track of a railway; but it is not that alone. You have to provide for the drainage of lands on both sides of the track.

Mr. CLANCY. No. If you get across the railway the provincial laws will accomplish the rest. I quite agree with my hon. friend that a scheme should be set on foot under the provincial laws to start with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member's Bill makes no provision for that. It absolutely ignores the provincial legislation.

Mr. CLANCY. If you commence under the authority of the Ditches and Watercourses Act or the Municipal Drainage Act, then the question is only to get across the railway.

Mr. CASEY. The object of my amendment is this. Whatever tribunal is going to try these cases, whether the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or an arbitration, or a railway commission, it is only there to interpret the law. I do not think the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or any arbitration or anybody else should be above the existing law. My amendment says in plain language that the rights of the landowner against the railway company shall be the same as his rights against any other landowner.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my hon. friend means that, he ignores the fact that in crossing railway lands you are not crossing lands which either need drainage or contribute to drainage. He is applying his clause to conditions that are so totally dissimilar that it cannot be properly made to apply. The hon. member recognizes that he is setting up a perfectly new procedure, a procedure altogether outside of the Watercourses and Ditches Act of Ontario. To that extent his Bill is not within the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament, and it becomes us in our legislation to recognize and utilize the existing law in respect to drainage passed by the legislature of Ontario. We have done nothing more than that, and therein I understand the hon. member for Bothwell agrees entirely with the principle underlying this provision. We say, utilize the machinery provided by the local Ditches and Watercourses Act, and if that machinery is not ample for your purpose, you ought to be able to get it improved or amended. Then come to the Railway Committee and it will give you the crossing. Thus, your scheme of drainage is complete. You indicate by your plans where you start, you foresee where you are going to carry the water, and when you once get it to the railway under the provisions of the local law, then we will provide the terms and conditions under which you can make your crossing, if it appears to be a proper case for drainage. I cannot see anything that will answer the case better than this.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be an improvement to say the Railway Committee of the Privy Council shall send an engineer, instead of may send one.

Mr. TISDALE. You cannot command them.

Mr. SPROULE. The word 'may' leaves it optional with them, whereas 'shall' makes it imperative. My reason for suggesting that is this. Suppose a farmer comes to argue his case before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council; he has pitted against him an expert railway lawyer, and, perhaps a railway engineer. He has not an engineer or railway expert to back up his case, and he presents it in his own humble way. The Railway Committee lets him go home, and he hears nothing more about the case, until after a while he receives notice that the case has been decided against him. I maintain that if the Railway Committee sent an intelligent engineer to the locality to see the conditions, he would be able to present the case on behalf of the farmer, and the individual would be relieved largely of the responsibility of having to fight a railway expert and an engineer before the Railway Committee.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the difficulty with the suggestion of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is this, that if you change 'may' to 'shall,' what power have you over the Railway Committee?

Mr. SPROULE. It means that they will always have to send an engineer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They may decide that there is no case made out. Then there is no possible way of compelling them to change their decision. In the Railway Committee the main point raised was that while a municipality had the right to go before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, an individual had not, and it was often exceedingly difficult to get a municipality to take such steps as would guard the interests of an individual. The amendment of the Minister of Railways places the individual in the same position as the municipality, and I am prepared to support it.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to provide that when an individual makes a complaint to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, it will be the duty of that committee to send an engineer to examine the locality.

Mr. McMILLAN. In my opinion, there should be no necessity at all for hearing the parties after an engineer has reported. I would rather leave the matter in the hands of the Privy Council to act on the report of their engineer, than be compelled to come here and lay my case before the committee, and there meet these railway experts who, according to my experience, are very unscrupulous with respect to such matters. The Minister of Railways has said a great deal about taking this matter out of the hands of the government, but the Ontario government found it necessary to devise machinery for deciding such cases without the interference of the government. Under the Ontario Drainage Act, the parties are allowed to choose their own engineer to go and examine the whole work.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). This matter has been discussed for days in the Railway Committee, and finally the committee agreed upon these clauses which the minister has introduced. If we are going to start anew and discuss the whole matter over again, it will take the whole afternoon. Surely after the time devoted to it by the Railway Committee, and after the endorsement of these clauses by the majority of the Railway Committee, we ought to accept them and be done with the matter for this session. Then, after a year's experience, if necessity should be shown for further change, we can deal with the matter next session.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the word 'may' is tantamount to 'shall.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly. We could not accept the suggestion that the word 'shall' be inserted in place of 'may,' because then we could not exercise any discretion in any case.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where a case is made out, the clause is considered as compulsory.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. If it is distinctly understood that 'may' is equivalent to 'shall,' where there is need for it, I am quite satisfied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My interpretation is this, that in almost any supposable case, the first thing to do would be to send an engineer experienced in drainage matters to examine into it. That is the most simple and satisfactory way of disposing of the question.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I think this amendment is a step in the right direction, and I shall be very glad to accept it, although I advocated strongly the Bill of my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey). I am quite disposed to give these amendments a trial for a year. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council so far has given very good satisfaction. And, until such time as a very large number of cases have been referred to them, and they have declined to act, or have not given satisfaction, there will be no necessity for altering the law. Give them a year under the present law, and the proposed amendment, to see how they will do; and, if they do not meet the expectations of the people who are suffering for want of drainage, we can press for a further amendment or for the Bill that my hon. friend has brought in.

Mr. CASEY. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), that this is a matter that we can drop in a few minutes, after having spent the whole of yesterday in a matter which is of much less importance to the people of the province I represent. The Minister of Railways and Canals says that my amendment ignores the provincial law. I do not see how he can get that idea. My amendment to his amendment is that, subject to the provisions of this Act, the existing law shall apply—whatever it may be. If a judge interprets that to mean that the provincial law shall apply, that is what it means. The object of my amendment is, so far as the right of getting drainage, and so far as the expense is concerned, to provide that the railway company and every other landowner shall be on exactly the same basis. Provision for safety to the roadbed, the right of way, and so on, are made elsewhere in the Act, and will overrule the other considerations. The point urged by my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) is extremely strong. The government of Ontario, so far from keeping up the old system of centralization, and keeping irresponsible power in the hands of the Privy Council, thought it necessary to divest themselves of all right to meddle in these matters. Experience has justified that course. If the minister's amendment results in litigation coming before the Privy Council on the part of individuals, he will be sorry that he did not divest the Privy Council of this power. There is no reason, logically or constitutionally, why the Railway Committee of the Privy Council should be the tribunal in such cases at all. It is part of the old Tory system of centralization which, I had hoped, would be done away with. The system would utterly break down if all the cases really requiring attention were brought before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Hitherto that body has not been overworked, because there was no chance for such cases to come before it. The hon. minister has admitted that he, coming from another province where they have none of these drainage questions, has only now been informed on the question. Here is another illustration of the inconvenience of calling upon cabinet ministers to settle cases of this kind. They would have to have every case argued out before them as to the provincial law—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so.

Mr. CASEY. Evidently, the minister does not think so. But he has admitted that he did not know the Ontario law, and others that may come up, until this discussion was brought on lately. If even he, a lawyer, was not acquainted—could not be expected to be acquainted—with the laws of other provinces on these matters, how about the other ministers, some of whom are not lawyers, and are not interested? I am ready to take the vote on the amendment.

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to say just a word—

Some hon. MEMBERS. One o'clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No—go on.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. minister (Mr. Blair) thinks the discussion can close before the House rises at one o'clock, I am sure he is mistaken. We had better call it one o'clock. I want to give the hon. minister all the assistance I can.

It being One o'clock, the committee took recess.

The Committee resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. CLANCY. I presume the phraseology of the section has not been changed from the one the hon. gentleman was good enough to hand the committee a day or two ago?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Just the same.

Mr. CLANCY. I am going to read the amendment to see if I have a proper understanding of it:

Whenever proceedings for the drainage of lands have been taken by any landowner under the provisions of any Act of the legislature of any province in that behalf—

Do I understand the word 'landowner' is to be taken in a plural sense, and that it means any number of landowners?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Then the clause continues :

And it appears to the Committee that an outlet for the drainage works is required over, across, or under the lands of the company, the Railways Committee may, upon application of the landowner or engineer in charge of such work.

I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that if it includes all, it includes any and every work that may be undertaken under the authority of any provincial Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. It meaning that, then you have to provide that a clerk of the municipality as well as the landowner and the engineer could give the notice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the municipality is at all interested, then they have got the power under the existing law.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will see that the case provided for in section 14 is an entirely different one. The case of a municipality is one similar to the case of the city of Ottawa if it wished to improve its sewerage by crossing a railway which belonged to the municipality alone.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you mean the clerk of the municipality does not act for the municipality ?

Mr. CLANCY. The only machinery provided by the provincial law is the machinery through which notice must be given in any other case. For instance, if a drain is being extended into another municipality, the clerk of the municipality, under the provincial law, is the only party from whom a notice can come. If the words 'or clerk of the municipality' were added to the words 'engineer or landowner' it would include all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CLANCY (reading):

Upon the landowner first complying with such terms as to payment or security for payment of the whole or so much of the cost of the construction and maintenance of said drainage works as the committee may in such order provide.

I am sure the Minister of Railways and Canals has seen much difficulty with regard to that matter of security. In many cases it means that it will probably be impossible for the landowner to offer such security as the Railway Committee may think reasonable security to go on with such work. But if the hon. gentleman will leave out 'landowner' and have it read 'upon first complying with such terms as to payments or security for payment,' that would include the landowner and it would include the municipality, because the municipality after all only acts for the drainage territory. For instance, a drainage territory petitions the council of the municipality to send on an engineer with a view to have drainage works. The council accept the petition and order the engineer on ; the work goes on and the municipality issues debentures. The municipality is, in fact, primarily responsible for the payment of the debentures. But we have the machinery for taxing the lands, and the lands thereof are security. The lands could be made security to the municipality, but if it was an individual case the individual would have to give the security.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not necessarily, because in the security the landowner would comply with that requirement if the municipality, on his behalf or at his instance, was prepared to give the proper security.

Mr. CLANCY. Now it says :

For the whole or so much of the cost of construction and maintenance of said drainage works as the committee may provide.

Now the hon. gentleman will see that there is an assumption in there that the landowner would have to bear the cost of the work. If you leave out the words 'for the whole' and say 'or so much,' 'so much' may mean the whole or a small part of it were reversed. I think the representatives of the railway companies would say : No, we don't want that in because that assumes that the company shall pay the cost of the work. I want to say on general principles there are few cases, there would not be a case in a thousand where the individual or a number of individuals would not be concerned. The municipality is in no sense concerned in this part of the section I am now reading, it is only in so far as a municipality is acting for a set of persons, either for a single individual or for a great number of persons ? Now section 14b says:

Whenever any application is made under the last preceding section or under section 14 of this Act.

I understand that that must be read separately, that the last clause provides that wherever a case arises under either this section or under section 14, the Privy Council will do certain things. Therefore, the works to be undertaken under section 14, are those belonging exclusively to the municipality, for instance, they are putting a sewer under a railway. The other case is different, it is a case of one or two individuals, or any number of individuals, seeking drainage in which the municipality has no concern beyond being the machinery through which the work is to be carried on under the provincial law. If the section read:

Upon such terms of payment or security for payment of so much of the cost of construction and maintenance of said drainage works as the committee may in such order provide.

That does not assume one way or the other, it leaves it perfectly free for any interpretation that would conclude that either the burden rested upon the railway company in the first instance or upon the landowners. I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that as to the natural drainage, as to the fall of the land, as to the incline of the water in a certain direction, no landowner should be in a worse position for drainage than he was before the construction of the railway; that no landowner should be deprived of the natural drainage, of the advantage of an outlet by the incline of the water in a certain direction; he should not be in any worse position after the railway is constructed than he was before. The railway companies naturally assume that where a road is constructed and cuts off that natural flow of water, it is then a privilege for the landowner to get under. It is not a privilege, it is a right of the landowner. You have taken away the right and you are barely restoring it. I think the hon. gentleman will say that is a sound proposition, therefore, there should be no assumption one way or the other, the case being shown clearly to the Railway Committee that certain general principles should govern in that way. My object is to show that subsection a of section 14 should not be governed in any sense by the wording of section 14. The hon. gentleman is aiming at such a case as I think is clear to his mind. He has drafted this clause with great clearness, and I am well satisfied with it; but there should be no assumption one way or the other who is to pay this. Let the facts determine that, always keeping in mind the general principle that no railway company has a right to build a road and cut off the natural flow of water for miles, probably, and then say to the landowner: We are granting you a privilege to get through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to adding a word or two to carry out a portion of the suggestion of the hon. gentleman. I beg to observe to the committee that I think he would be in error in striking out the words—

Mr. FOSTER. Are you going to admit his proposition? If you are, admit it, leave the observations off and let us get on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I am not going to admit it. I would not feel at liberty to express any opinion at all on that, but I say that there is no such assumption to be drawn from this clause whatever. The words 'so much of the cost' ought not to be left out.

Mr. CLANCY. I would leave out 'the whole or.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You want to provide that the committee may impose the whole?

Mr. CLANCY. If you like.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Or that they may impose part, if they like.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You cannot do it without having both of these words in the clause. I am willing to add these words 'if any' so that it will read 'so much of the cost, if any.'

Mr. CLANCY. That will do. There is one thing more. When the notice is given to the Railway Committee and to the department, there should be some provision, and in making it we are not interfering with the provincial law, requiring that plans and specifications shall be filed with the department and served on the railway company. That will simply leave the matter, in the first instance, in the hands of the local engineer who is in charge of the work. Barely providing that notice shall be given to the railway company is very indefinite. The engineer, or the clerk of the municipality should be required to furnish the department when the application is made with plans and specifications of the work undertaken under the provisions of the provincial Act and to furnish a copy to the railway authorities as well. Under our system, where a municipality wants to drain through another municipality, or through a portion of another municipality, the clerk of the municipality has to serve the clerk of the adjoining municipality with plans and specifications of the whole work and with a statement of the assessment. That ought to be provided for in this case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is really no occasion for putting any provision in here more than we have, because the Railway Committee would not move a hand without giving notice to the parties interested. They could not do it. The first thing that the Railway Committee has to do in exercising all these general powers is to notify the parties who are going to be affected by their decision of the matter which is proposed to be taken up.

Mr. CLANCY. I have not made my meaning clear to the hon. gentleman, I am perfectly certain. The hon. gentleman would want plans and specifications in his department before he looked at the question. Why should they not accompany the application from the local engineer at the time the application is made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We propose to send an engineer.

Mr. CLANCY. You will not require to send an engineer at all. I am endeavouring to provide against the sending of an engineer if there is no necessity for it. The hon. gentleman must have these plans and specifications before him, the railway company should have them at the same time, and if we require them to be filed you provide for a necessary and cheap method. The hon. gentleman would not surely send his engineers to make plans and specifications without the local engineer having done it first. His engineer only goes up there to see if they are correct specifications.

Mr. WM. GIBSON (Lincoln). When this matter was up for discussion, the object that the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) had in view, or what seemed to be the general desire of the committee, at all events, was that in order to make the application of the farmer, or the township, as inexpensive as possible provision should be made that anybody could apply to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or the Minister of Railways and Canals, stating his reasons. The idea then was to prevent parties suffering from want of proper drainage being put to any expense whatever except to require them to lodge their complaint with the minister, who would forthwith send his engineer to look into the case. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) wants to make this procedure as inexpensive as possible to those who require drainage, but if those who require drainage have to furnish the Railway Committee with plans and specifications they might supply plans and specifications for something that might not perhaps be needed. In that case he would oblige a farmer, or a township, to go to the expense of employing an engineer in the first place to make up the plans and specifications and estimates of the whole cost of the work.

Mr. CLANCY. No, that is not it at all.

Mr. GIBSON. The idea of the committee was that the farmer should be at no expense and that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council were to ascertain whether the farmer had a grievance in the first instance. It was suggested in the first place that a board of arbitration might be appointed, but that seemed to meet with a good deal of opposition from the committee, and, as a matter of compromise, I made the suggestion that the government should, in the first place, make inquiry and find out if the party complaining had the right to complain, and if so, notification should be sent to the railway company.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not the hon. gentleman's amendment at all.

Mr. GIBSON. That was the idea of the committee, at all events.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. Of course, I admit I have not been in the House following the whole Bill, but I have a distinct recollection that it was the desire of the committee that no litigation should be forced upon the farmer, that the matter should be made as inexpensive as possible, that he might come without even employing a lawyer or an engineer of any kind with his complaint, and the government would send an engineer to make a report upon the case. Then, all parties were to be notified and if the railway company did not agree, a board of arbitration was to be appointed, which was to consist of the local engineer, hired by the municipality, or farmer; the government will have their engineer, and the railway company, I have no doubt, will look after their engineer.

Mr. CLANCY. That was expressed, but would overturn what the hon. gentleman said entirely. There is no such provision now. The provision is, that it must not be undertaken by an individual unless under the authority of some provincial Act.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CASEY. I beg to move an amendment in the sense of the proposal to which my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) has just referred. After hearing his remarks in the Railway Committee, I saw reason to modify my idea of the desirability of an arbitration as the first resort, but, I quite agree with the hon. member for Lincoln in holding that if there is a difference with regard to the engineer's report, the final tribunal shall be an arbitration. I, therefore, beg to move that the following words be added to section 14b :

In case either the railway companies or a municipality or landowner interested notifies the Railway Committee of the Privy Council that he wishes to appeal against the decision given in any question concerning drainage, the Railway Committee shall authorize the holding of an arbitration, before a board of three civil engineers to be appointed as follows: one by the municipality or landowner, one by the railway company, and a third by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and the decision of this board shall be final.

I am very much obliged to my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) for his business-like suggestion, and I hope the committee will adopt this amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CASEY. I would ask the minister, before we finally dispose of this Bill, if he has considered the question, which I raised in the committee, as to the numerous cases in which it is impossible for an individual farmer to take any proceeding under any provincial Act? Take, for instance, cases common to my own county, where a railway is crossing a farm and the owner of the farm desires to drain from one part of his land to another. It is impossible for him to take proceedings under any provincial Act, and, therefore, he would be debarred, under the wording of this resolution, from appealing to the Privy Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not had much opportunity of considering this, and I think that the cases of that kind are so extremely few in number that we could scarcely hope to cover them by any general enactment. I think that the hon. gentleman had better be content with the very substantial advance he has made in the direction of removing the grievances he has complained of, and another session the matter he has brought up can be dealt with, and proper attention and consideration given to it.

Mr. CASEY. It is not a question of a very few cases. In the western part of Ontario the farms generally run north and south, and the railways east and west, and a farm is cut in two as a general thing. Most of the cases of drainage arise from this circumstance. Why should not a farmer have the right to drain across a railway track, and have the right to apply at once to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, stating that he cannot take any provincial proceeding, and let his case be considered by the Privy Council?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not very easy to deal with a matter of this kind on the spur of the moment and amend the law. Questions might arise in such cases, not involving simply the mere passage from one portion of a man's land to another, but his drain might require to follow the course of the railway embankment and cross other people's land. A variety of questions might arise, and I would not be disposed to settle such a question off-hand.

Mr. CASEY. The matter was brought up in the Railway Committee a week or two ago, where I discussed it fully, so I am not springing the idea on the House or the minister. The cases I refer to are probably the greater number which will arise, and we could avoid the difficulty, stated by the hon. minister, of draining from one man's land on to another's by providing that a direct appeal to the Privy Council should lie only in cases where the drainage required affects the one property. We might meet the case by adding after the words 'the provincial Act of the legislature of any province in that behalf' the words 'except in cases where all the drainage is to be done on the property of the landowner.' This would cover the whole case, and, I think, ought to be adopted.

Bill reported.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CASEY. In order to put my views on this subject on record on the Journals, I am compelled to repeat the motions which I made in committee. I, therefore, beg to move, seconded by Mr. Beith:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with instructions to add the following as section 14c:

'14c. Subject to the provisions of this Act, every landowner shall have the same rights of drainage on and across the lands of railway companies as he now has by law in regard to the lands of any other landowner.'

House divided on the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN moved :

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with instructions to add the following to section 14b:

'In case either the railway company or the municipality or landowner interested notifies the Railway Committee of the Privy Council that they wish to appeal against the decision given in any question concerning drainage, the Railway Committee shall authorize the holding of an arbitration before a board of three civil engineers, to be appointed as follows: one by the municipality or landowner, one by the railway company and a third by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and the decision of this board shall be final.'

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time and passed.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, certificate of the return of Michel Esdras Bernier, Esq., for the electoral district of St. Hyacinthe.

CONCILIATION OF TRADE DISPUTES.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulack) moved second reading of Bill (No. 187). An Act to aid in the prevention and settlement of trade disputes, and the publication of statistical and industrial information. He said: When I had the honour a few days ago to introduce this Bill, the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) expressed his regret at its having been introduced so late in the session, and he spoke as if the Bill came as a surprise to him. The hon. gentleman must have forgotten that on the opening day of the session His Excellency, in the speech from the Throne, addressed himself to this question in these words:

The attention of the government has been called to the conflicts which occasionally arise between workmen and their employers. While it may not be possible to wholly prevent such difficulties by legislation, my government think that many of the disputes might be averted if better provisions could be made for the friendly intervention of boards of conciliation, the conclusions of which, while not legally binding, would have much weight with both sides and be useful in bringing an intelligent public opinion to bear on these complicated subjects. You will be invited to consider whether the provincial legislation in this matter may not be usefully supplemented by an enactment providing for the establishment of a Dominion tribunal for assisting in the settlement of such questions.

Therefore, nearly six months ago parliament was informed of the precise nature and mode of settling such disputes which would be embodied in a measure to be submitted for the consideration of parliament. I was consequently not prepared for the criticism of the hon. member for York, N.B., that the matter had come in at an unduly late period of the session, nor do I think that the hon. gentleman was quite fair in his criticism of that portion of the Bill which announced the establishment of a labour gazette. When I stated that it was to be published monthly, and that it would not be a medium for the expression of opinions, but would be a simple register of facts, I was surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) should have inquired: How frequently it was to be published, whether it was to be a partisan organ, and whether it was to be in fact a medium for affecting public opinion. I endeavoured to make that perfectly plain, and I emphasized at that early date that the object of the labour gazette was to be a publication of fact which all might read and comprehend, and from which they might draw their own conclusions.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is to compile the facts?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a matter that will be dealt with departmentally. I repeat this statement, so that hon. gentleman may be under no misapprehension as to what the labour gazette will be. The question of the treatment of differences between masters and workmen has invited the attention of legislators far and wide, and various attempts have been made to devise the best mode of dealing with such important questions. These have practically narrowed themselves down to two. One treatment of these disputes is by conciliation, and another by some other course more or less of a coercive character. Arbitration, where the parties to the controversy delegate to other persons to determine the issue, is in itself more or less of a coercive character. However, the most coercive measure that I have found on record is the New Zealand Act, passed some six years ago, and I do not know that the experience of the people of New Zealand would justify the people of the Dominion of Canada in following their course. The conditions in New Zealand are widely different from the conditions in Canada; but even if the New Zealand precedent were a good one, there are constitutional difficulties in the way of this Dominion parliament following it. The New Zealand law provides that if the question of wages, for example, has been referred to a board of conciliation, and if the judgment of that board is not acquiesced in by both parties, then one of the parties—necessarily the successful one—in order to secure legal force to that decision must take the case to the board of arbitration, which is composed of three men; one a representative of the employers, another a representative of the employees, and the third, who is the umpire or chairman, a member of the bench. The decision of the board of arbitration is final and cannot be appealed from on any ground of mistake in fact, or, error of judgment. The effect of its decision is to create a legal liability on the part of the employers and also on the part of the employees. If, for instance, that board should determine upon the rate of wages, thereupon, regardless of all contracts, the employer would be liable to pay that rate of wages. In many other ways one could illustrate how that legislation is an interference with the right of contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the employer be compelled to retain the men in his employment?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the Act in question, the employer cannot lock out; that is the answer to my hon. friend.

Mr. CLARKE. But, he can dismiss the men if he likes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, that is penal. Under the New Zealand Act, strikes and lock-outs are forbidden pending the reference of the matter to either of these tribunals. If the employer were to lock out for one or two reasons—say for the purpose of locking out, and that is the point my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) wanted to know about—

Mr. CLARKE. I beg the hon. minister's pardon—I thought he was explaining the provisions of his own Bill. I see he is explaining the principles of the New Zealand Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. He is going into the history of the thing from the flood up.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) may sneer at my observations—

Mr. FOSTER. I do not sneer at the hon. minister's observations; but, I do think that at this period of the session he might contain himself within some kind of bounds.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think I am not open to the rebuke of wasting time, so much as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself. I am referring to the New Zealand law because, doubtless, it will be referred to in the debate, and those who have not read it and are not familiar with the text of it, may not object to a brief explanation. I may explain that, as the New Zealand Act affects civil rights, and that the Dominion parliament has not the same power to legislate that New Zealand has. Under the British North America Act, legislation with regard to civil rights is confined to the provincial legislatures. So, it is not a question of choice with us. We cannot legislate here so as to affect the law of strikes, so far as the question of civil rights goes. Therefore, the extent of our legislation is at once brought within a narrower scope. We can, at best, pass a permissive Act, such as a conciliatory measure. At the same time, I think it is fair to compare the relative advantages of settlement of these difficulties by conciliation and by measures more or less of a coercive character. There has been on the statute-book of England since 1896 an Act known as the Conciliation Act, for the settlement of trade disputes. As I mentioned on its introduction, that portion of the Bill now before the House dealing with the settlement of disputes is an echo of the Imperial Act. There are some other provisions in the Bill which I shall allude to later on. As to the advantage of settlement by conciliation or according to the New Zealand method, I would refer those who would advocate the New Zealand method to a most interesting book by Mr. Henry Lloyd, who is evidently a deep sympathizer with the New Zealand law. But, even a perusal of this book fails to convince one that the New Zealand method is a permanently durable one, but leads to the belief that it is submitted to for the time being, but does not produce the permanent good that flows from the conciliation policy adopted by the Imperial parliament. I simply allude to one extract, at page 59 of Mr. Lloyd's book. Dealing there with the settlement of a certain question, he says :

The masters and the men are both strongly organized. They hold unshakeable convictions; they even have conscientious scruples. They are not satisfied, for neither has secured what he asked for; but they find it less intolerable to obey the award and go on than to give up the business. The trade is kept in a continual agitation for six years. But how innocent an agitation.

Then, he goes on to draw a proper contrast between a settlement by strike and a settlement in a friendly way. The scheme of settlement by conciliation did not have its beginning in 1896 in England, when the English parliament passed their Act. It had its origin at an earlier period. The father of conciliation boards may be said to be Mr. Mundella, who, in 1860, adopted that system in connection with his own business as a manufacturer. Hon. gentlemen will find in a book by Henry Crompton, entitled 'Industrial Conciliation,' at page 33, a very interesting description of Mr. Mundella's experience. Throughout this book will be found a good deal of argument in support of the wisdom of the Imperial parliament's action—which was subsequent to the publication of this work—in adopting the legislation which is now upon the Imperial statute-book. The English Act has been in force, as I say, for four years. I have here a couple of reports which were presented to parliament as to the working of that Act. The contents of the first report are embodied in the second. Reading from the second report, I think I can say, that, while the number of cases referred to this board directly under the Act has not been very large, the working of the board has well justified the policy which led to the establishment of the law. The report shows that about six-sevenths of the cases that were referred to that board were settled by conciliation. There is an official publication by the Department of Labour in England which contains a schedule showing the number of cases settled by conciliation boards. When the Imperial Act came into effect, there were scattered throughout England a large number of conciliation boards, which had been brought about by agreement between the employers and the employees. These, under the provisions of the Act, registered; others came in afterwards and also registered. This annual report, showing the result of conciliation in the settlement of strikes and lock-outs is a most eloquent argument in favour of the conciliation system of settling such disputes. I shall not give the figures, but the report is available for any hon. gentleman who desires to see how valuable this mode of treating such disputes has proved. In connection with the United States Department of Labour, there are published monthly bulletins, and hon. gentlemen who would care to refer to the May bulletin, edited by Mr. Carroll D. Wright, a well-known officer in connection with trade disputes, will find most cogent arguments urging the United States Congress to adopt the English system for the purpose of settling such disputes. Among other publications, I would refer hon. gentlemen to the Railroad Telegrapher, a monthly publication, in the June number of which reference is made to a report recently made to Congress by an industrial committee which was issued by Congress to consider the question of how best to treat such controversies. On page 441, it states the following :

The commission reports that arbitration and conciliation laws in the states have been found effective for the purpose of conciliation, but that the strict arbitration machinery rarely performs its functions well.

I have given some evidence in support of the principle of the Bill. I cabled Lord Strathcona in order to get the latest information from the English Board of Trade, and I received a cable from him in reply. The letter in reply is dated the 12th of June, and my cable was about that time :

Has Imperial Act, being chap. 30 of 1896, for prevention of trade disputes, been of public service? Kindly have inquiry made of board of trade and cable me information earliest convenient moment. Similar legislation contemplated here.

I also asked him to send reports. To this cable he replied as follows :

Conciliation Act, am mailing reports and papers to-morrow. Act has been utilized to limited extent only, but board of trade believes its general effect has been good, and it provides machinery for settlement difficulties if parties to disputes agreeable. Several voluntary boards conciliation, organized by different trades, have adopted rules for appointment umpires by or reference trade disputes to board trade in cases where said boards fail agree.

Lord Strathcona sent me the following list of references to boards. This list which I am about to read is a list of cases where parties have taken advantage of the machinery of the Conciliation Act and agreed more or less to be governed by its provisions. The return to parliament which I alluded to showing the number of cases dealt with under the Act from year to year, does not include the information which I am about to give. These reports to parliament show the number of cases satisfactorily settled under the Conciliation Act. But in addition to that mode of settlement there is the other mode, namely, of parties settling the dispute themselves with the aid of some person sent down to assist them under the provisions of the Conciliation Act; and here are a few illustrations of advantage taken in that way by many persons interested in industrial life, both employers and employees. For instance:

Working rules agreed to by London Master Builders' Association and National Association of Operative Plasterers provided that in the event of conciliation board failing to arrive at a definite decision, either party may apply to board of trade under the Conciliation Act, or apply for the appointment of a conciliator, such conciliator's decision to be final and bind both parties. Another large class of interested persons, the London Master Builders' Association and Joint Company of Carpenters and Joiners, have agreed that in the event of the conciliation board failing to agree, they shall make application to the board of trade under the Conciliation Act, or apply for the appointment of a person to act as conciliator, whose decision shall be final and binding on both parties. Another class, the North Staffordshire Association of Master Painters and Plumbers, and the National Amalgamated Society of Operative House and Ship Painters and Decorators of the Potteries and Newcastle district, have agreed to appoint an arbitrator should conciliation board be unable to agree. A board of conciliation for the plumbing trade recommend the local employers and operators to appoint an arbitrator to act (failing settlement by the board), and that the dispute be referred to the arbitrator to be appointed by the board of trade under the Conciliation Act. And so other industries of the building trades of Reading, of the bricklayers in Ashton, of the operative plumbers of Wigan and district, the stone masons of Wigan and district, the Durham coal trade, the water, steam and beer fittings trade, the brass foundry trade, the gas and electric light fittings trade, the lace trade, the lightermen's trade, and so on.

All these industries have, in one form or another, adopted the machinery provided by the English Conciliation Act for the peaceable settlement of trade disputes. So that we are not embarking in any new field in asking this parliament to follow in the footsteps of the mother country, and to enact similar legislation here. A short time ago there was a serious strike in Canada, in the Kootenay district, between the miners and the mine owners, and the government on that occasion sent Mr. Clute to endeavour to reconcile the differences, if possible, and to bring that strike to an end. Mr. Clute went to British Columbia, he performed his mission, and peace is restored. I have a letter in my hand, dated 23rd of June last, from Mr. Ralph Smith, of British Columbia, to Mr. Clute. Ralph Smith, as hon. gentlemen know, is a prominent citizen of British Columbia, a man who takes a deep interest in labour questions, a member of the local House, I think, a man of standing, and enjoying public respect in British Columbia. After alluding to the settlement of the strike in British Columbia, there is a passage which I may be permitted to read. Referring to the settlement Mr. Clute had been permitted to take part in, Mr. Smith refers to the result as follows:

Looked at from a public standpoint, there is every satisfaction, and the settlement is regarded by the people of this province as one of the best things that any government ever did in the way of sending conciliators on the ground where the trouble existed, and I am certain that the settlement saved this province from a very serious calamity, which would have stopped the development of the mines for years to come and put back the real cause of labour in the province for ten years.

I hardly think, Mr. Speaker, much more evidence is necessary in order to commend that portion of the Bill to the approval of parliament. There is another portion of it which proposes to establish a labour department, and states what the duties of that labour department shall be. As I stated when I introduced the Bill, I repeat now, that the Labour Department will not be a separate department of government, but will be attached to some minister of the government. It does not mean the establishment of a new portfolio, but merely an additional duty assigned to some minister. The Department of Labour will issue a monthly labour gazette, and in addition will submit an annual report to parliament. The labour gazette will be edited and conducted on the lines of the Labour Gazette in England.

Mr. CLARKE. How is that Gazette conducted?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They have an editor and a number of correspondents in different places in Great Britain. It is the duty of these correspondents to constantly gather facts that are of value and instructive to those engaged in industrial life and to communicate them to the central office there to be analysed, digested and published for the information of the industrial classes.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these correspondents to be paid for their services?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is some slight remuneration. The first number of the Labour Gazette of Great Britain was issued in 1894, and the introduction to it stands good as the introduction to our Labour Gazette. The announcement on the first page of the first number is as follows:

The Objects of the 'Labour Gazette.'

The 'Labour Gazette' is a journal for the use of workmen, and of all others interested in obtaining prompt and accurate information on matters specially affecting labour. It is intended to stand to labour questions in the same relation as the 'Board of Trade Journal' to questions of trade and commerce. In other words, official information bearing on the interests of labour will be adapted for general use and made public, including information which the department obtains from its correspondents largely for the purpose of publication. . . .

With mere questions of opinion, the 'Labour Gazette' will not be concerned. The aim of the department in the publication is to provide a sound basis for the formation of opinions, and not to supply opinions.

It will be the duty of those who have to conduct the Labour Gazette to follow upon these lines. The importance of the Labour Gazette giving statistical information to persons engaged in industrial life, I think, will be generally conceded. It was some years before the Labour Gazette of Great Britain was established after public opinion had called for its establishment. As early as 1886 there was a resolution of the English parliament in the following words :

In the opinion of this House immediate steps should be taken to ensure in this country the full and accurate collection and publication of labour statistics.

The Labour Gazette of England has been published monthly ever since, and I have here the last publication for the month of May, 1900. I think in its general character it represents the publication generally, and reading from the title page, if hon. gentlemen will permit me, I will show the class of questions that are dealt with by this Gazette :

Employment Chart, 1899-1900; State of the Labour Market in April; Diseases of Occupations; Abstract of Labour Statistics; Accident, Old Age and Invalidity Insurance in Germany in 1898; Recent Conciliation and Arbitration Cases and Collective Agreements; Legal Cases Affecting Labour; Labour in the Colonies; Labour Abroad; Reports on Special Industries (Coal Mining, Iron Mining, Pig Iron, Iron and Steel Works, Tinplate, Seamen, Agricultural Labour, Women in Textile Trades, Shipbuilding); London Dock and Wharf Labour; Employment in London and Provinces; Industrial Accidents; Changes in Rates of Wages; Changes in Hours of Labour; Miscellaneous Trade Notes; Dividends on Purchases Paid by Co-operative Distributive Societies; Emigration and Immigration; Trade Disputes; Pauperism; Labour Bureaux; Foreign Trade of the United Kingdom; Women's Employment Bureaux; Industrial Organizations and Industrial Prosecutions.

That is a bill of fare in the Labour Gazette for May, which is most interesting and the knowledge of which subjects will be most valuable to all (be they employers or employees), engaged in the industrial life of Canada. Whilst our subjects are to be treated in the Gazette will not altogether correspond with these, still, the direction in which this Gazette has gone suggests how useful a properly conducted publication of this sort may be to the industrial classes of Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the employers of labour to be consulted as to the condition of the labour market by these correspondents ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend will have to allow the working out of the matter to proceed on the general lines I have indicated. It will be the duty of whoever is charged from time to time with the publication of the Labour Gazette to see that the Gazette fills its proper place and secures information from proper and reliable sources. It will be an error to suppose that any one class is to be considered in gathering information, because all this information will be applicable to the whole field of labour as a proper subject to be given to the public generally. It will be the duty of those charged with the publication, the conduct and the management of the Gazette, to see that it fills its proper place in the industrial world of Canada.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if this Bill is entirely original, or whether there is any precedent for a Bill of this kind. I have read the New Zealand, the New South Wales and English Acts and the very condition upon which they are based is the incorporation and registration of trades unions, if I recollect correctly. If these are regularly incorporated and registered the Act applies, but in reading over this Bill I fail to see any means by which you can arrive at a conclusion, for instance, as to the question, who are the workmen interested. If you are dealing with trades unions, or with their officers, you know whom you are dealing with, but suppose a lot of workmen are satisfied and a lot are dissatisfied, who is going to speak for them when they are pulling apart. The English, New Zealand and New South Wales Acts make provision for all these emergencies. Looking at it very hastily it strikes me that this Bill is very crude, and has not the very first principle in it to arrive at a basis of conciliation. The first principle of this Bill is to place entirely in the hands of the minister the appointment of a board of conciliation. As I recollect—it is some two or three years since I read the English, New Zealand and New South Wales Acts—they make provision for the appointment by the men of one conciliator just as you appoint an arbitrator, and the appointment by the employer of another member of the board. These two men get together, and in a friendly way talk the whole matter over, and inquire into the facts, and if they cannot agree between themselves they call upon the arbitrators who are to be appointed under the provisions of the Act. This arbitration board makes a final decision which is binding on the trades unions.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The New Zealand Act is only operative where there is organized labour. But, the English Act is different altogether. The hon. gentleman describes the Bill before the House as crude and devoid of any machinery to put it into force.

Mr. POWELL. It has no principle of vitality.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman in saying that, attacks the wisdom of the Imperial parliament which passed this measure.

Mr. POWELL. This is not the Imperial Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Word for word the Imperial Act is here, and in addition to that there are some clauses which I submit with modesty for the consideration of this House. The machinery contemplated by this Bill for conciliation is word for word the machinery of the Imperial Act with the exception that the word 'minister' in this Bill takes the places of the words 'Board of Trade' in the English Act, which words in English imply a minister of the Crown.

Mr. POWELL. How many English Acts are there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the English Act of 1895.

Mr. POWELL. It is some years since I looked into the English law.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I see the mistake which the hon. gentleman has made; he has not read the English Act of 1896.

Mr. POWELL. I have not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will repeat for the benefit of the hon. gentleman, that in 1896, the Imperial parliament repealed certain legislation referring to settlement by arbitration, and it passed what is called 'The Conciliation Act, 1896,' an Act which has been in force ever since and under which important trade differences have been settled.

Mr. POWELL. That wiped out these long Acts that existed previously.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It wiped out several, and it adopted a great many conciliation boards then in existence. The policy of the Imperial government was not to do anything directly, but to induce employees and employers to get together.

Mr. POWELL. On the principle that it is often ignorance or misconstruction of the other's motives, which causes these differences.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Quite so. It was considered that the best settlement and the most permanent one would be reached when the parties had broken down the barriers which separated them, and when they came to look upon each other as brothers they could make a friendly settlement between themselves.

Mr. POWELL. I am in favour of the principle; you need not argue that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As the result of my research into the matter, I have found that the Imperial Act has been productive of substantial good and has been the means of permanent settlement in cases where a coercive measure might not have produced such good results. As to this point, may I be permitted to quote from the book of Henry Crompton, which was published prior to the passage of the Act.

Mr. POWELL. I have read the book. He recites a long page of history of the success of voluntary measures.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. He compares in advance of this measure the preference that should be given to voluntary conciliation before and above any kind of force, legal or otherwise. This was one of the writings that educated public opinion in Great Britain, so that it was possible to crystallize it in the Conciliation Act of 1896. Mr. Crompton is somewhat severe on us of the legal profession, but we can afford to stand that. He writes:

It is better, therefore, not to depend on legal means, but for both sides to rely solely on moral means, and to endeavour to strengthen that in every way. By trusting to legal redress, I cannot but think that an obstacle is put in the way of the development of the mutual trust between employers and employed which is the only real reconciliation. The statute gives a very excellent form of contract, and may possibly be used in some industries, but will have little practical effect, as the opinion of both employers and employed, confirmed by experience, is against legal and in favour of voluntary arbitration outside the law. Here, as in so many other parts of our social life, we find the legal system becoming inefficient and antiquated. Legal remedies and the legal system were created by the past. The law and the lawyers have been the instruments of part of the human progress, and they have still a great and noble work to do. But it is a work that must constantly diminish. Professional lawyers naturally exaggerate the importance of their own profession, and judges will inevitably attempt to arrogate to themselves a moral authority which they do not possess. On labour questions they have shown how utterly incapable they were of grasping the conditions of the moral problem. The history of their actions in the labour laws and in the law of conspiracy ought to be the most valuable warning to the working classes not to trust to law for the solutions of these great industrial and social difficulties. The law and our tribunals, admirable and worthy of veneration as they often are, cannot be the means of reconciling capital and labour.

I should explain that prior to the passage of the Conciliation Act, the Imperial parliament had established a labour department and a labour gazette; which is a handmaid in making effective the Conciliation Act. In this measure we propose to establish a labour department and a labour gazette which is not provided for in the English Act, but which was in existence before that Act was passed and continues in existence. The Bill contains one paragraph which may fairly be a subject of discussion and I will be glad to have its merits discussed in committee. There is a clause providing that on the consent of the parties to the controversy and of the conciliators, the government may authorize a person to take evidence upon oath. It sometimes happens that misunderstandings arise between employers and employees because of an imperfect knowledge of the facts, the elucidation of which would probably remove the grounds of dispute. Accordingly, provision is made in this Bill for evidence to be taken under oath by consent.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Would that be done under the Act respecting inquiries in certain public matters?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It could be done under that machinery; but it will be observed that that portion of the Bill cannot be taken advantage of except both parties consent. There are sometimes trade secrets which those possessing them are not willing to give to the public, and therefore that portion of the Bill is based on the consent of both parties. In fact the whole measure presupposes consent and the result of mutual agreement and not otherwise.

Mr. POWELL. It is entirely advisory.

Mr. DAVIN. Has the minister constructed this clause in consequence of a demand made by any parties?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, Mr. Clute, who was engaged in the settlement of the trouble in British Columbia informed me that a good deal of the difference between the mineowners and the miners was because they did not understand the facts.

Mr. INGRAM. Was that in the early stage of the dispute?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. After the strike was on, Mr. Clute told me that if he could have obtained information which would have been accepted as authoritative by both sides, it would have paved the way for an earlier settlement. Mr. Clute himself suggested to me the clause I am now referring to; but it is an experiment and it is not available except by the consent of both parties, and, therefore, it can do no harm if it is made a part of this Bill. I am glad to see, from the tone of the House, that the measure in its principle commends itself to hon. members. There is a wide distinction between the settlement of a difference by conciliation and its settlement after a strike. This measure contemplates, not merely dealing with a trouble that has broken out, but taking early action when a difference is springing up, and before it has assumed the proportions of a dispute, or before the dispute has assumed the proportions of a strike or lock-out; and it may be put in force by any party to the controversy, or it might be put in force by the minister himself, if so advised. So that the measure has a good object, and I trust will receive the hearty approval of parliament, which is of great importance to its effectiveness. The measure contemplates conciliation. I do not know that we can by any conciliatory measure bring together the two parties in this House on any question; but I venture to hope that the spirit of this Bill may find a response from the members of this House in dealing with this subject.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the hon. gentleman quite sure that this measure will not interfere with similar legislation passed by the provincial legislatures?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been legislation in this direction in the various provinces. It is not necessary to criticise that legislation adversely or otherwise, but I do not know that any great use has been made of it. For example, there is the Ontario Act, which requires the assent of both parties for the submission of a difference to arbitration. But this Bill interferes with no other legislation in Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the Labour Gazette to be strictly confined to statistics, and not to give expression to opinion with regard to trade disputes or anything of that kind? And is the paper to be an advertising medium for patent medicines?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The first point my hon. friend raised, I have already dealt with, by stating that the Gazette will be a register of facts, and not for the expression of opinion. If it were to be a medium for the expression of opinions, it would cease, I think, to have the educational value which we expect it to have. It will follow, as near as may be, the Labour Gazette of Great Britain.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman intend that it should also be a medium for advertising?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a matter of detail which has not yet been considered. It will depend on the character of the advertisements perhaps. I will not take up the time of the House any further, except to express the hope that if this measure receives the assent of parliament, in the form in which it is now presented, or in some amended form, it may prove of some avail in bringing about more friendly relations between labour and capital, and in substituting industrial peace for industrial war. Strikes and lock-outs, the exercise of physical force, are industrial war. Sooner or later, they have to be settled at great cost; and an agreement is at last arrived at which might have been arrived at without such great cost, and without leaving behind it the heart-burnings and estrangements which must linger long after a formal strike or lock-out has been enforced. I humbly submit this measure for the best consideration of parliament, and I believe that, if passed, it will be productive of great good, and prove to be one of the most important measures that have ever emanated from the parliament of Canada.

Mr. POWELL. I would like to ask if, in case of a dispute about the sufficiency of wages, it is contemplated to have an investigation of the margin of profits of the manufacturer or producer; and if so, is it intended to give the conciliator powers similar to those given to commissioners by chapter 114. of the Revised Statutes, if he desires to have evidence taken under oath, in order that contradictory statements may be harmonized and the truth evolved, when the feeling between labour and capital is very intense?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Any subject of difference between an employer and his employees can become a subject of consideration by a conciliator or a conciliation board. Most of the questions, so far as I have read the reports, have had to do, not only with wages, but with other questions, such as the hours of labour, sanitary conditions, and a great many other matters.

Mr. POWELL. So far as my experience goes, the mechanics of the country are a great deal more reasonable than they are given credit for. If they are satisfied that the margin of profits will not permit of an increase of wages, they are generally reasonable enough to accept the situation, and take the reduced wages offered to them. Under these circumstances, is it contemplated to have the conciliator inquire into the margin of profits, with the view of satisfying the employees as to the rate of wages which the industry will bear?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot better answer my hon. friend's question than by informing him that he will find the report of the settlement of a great coal strike in the north of England.

Mr. POWELL. That is the Newcastle strike?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps so. I have read so many of these settlements in the iron and coal trades, that I cannot recall a particular one. They went into the question of profits, which was a very important question, often the question, and the history I have read stated that the workmen had been given full information on that question, and not one had ever disclosed that confidential information. That very question, the extent to which the trade would stand an increase of wages, was made clear, and a settlement arrived at.

Mr. POWELL. I am glad that is contemplated.

Mr. J. H. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I am in favour of the principle and the object of this Bill, but am not so sanguine as to the benefits to be anticipated from it as is the hon. minister.

Our experience in this country, and the experience of England, is that in times of prosperity there are very few disputes between capital and labour; and inasmuch as a period of prosperity now exists in Canada, and is likely to continue a considerable time, there is happily but little prospect of our requiring to put this measure into operation.

Again, the experience of a similar measure in England has shown that since 1896 only 7 per cent of all the disputes in that country between capital and labour have been settled by boards of conciliation. The other 93 per cent were settled by the parties among themselves, or in some other manner apart from outside interference. In this country, therefore, we cannot expect that more than a similar percentage of the disputes will be settled by a resort to the provisions of the Bill before the House.

Further, labour organizations in this country and elsewhere, have so perfected their constitutions that they contain within themselves the means of settling disputes by arbitration. Their bylaws always contain provisions for referring any difficulties that may arise to a board of arbitration, so that there is little necessity in practice for the system of arbitration provided for in this measure.

Nowadays knowledge is widely spread, and the relations between capital and labour fairly understood among the workmen. The workmen are studying these subjects more closely, and hence are becoming more reasonable than they used to be, so that as education advances among them, there will be less liability to disputes of this kind than in the past, when ignorance of these great questions was prevalent.

Besides, there is no certainty of any boards of conciliation being formed in this country under this Bill. In England the conditions are different. In this country we have a dispute, for instance in Atlin or Kootenay, and there will be no board of conciliation established in either of these places.

Under these circumstances, I cannot take the same sanguine view of the results to be accomplished by this measure as is entertained by the hon. minister who has introduced it. Still, as a similar measure has led to the settlement of 7 per cent of the disputes that have taken place in England, and as there is a reasonable probability that a similar number of disputes may be settled here, under the operation of this measure, I am in favour of the Bill as introduced.

Mr. POWELL. I trust that the hon. the Postmaster General will not interpret the few remarks that I made in interrogating him, as being hostile to the principle of the Bill or the Bill itself. I did not understand exactly what the hon. gentleman meant by the Bill, not having heard his explanation or had the privilege of having a copy of the Bill to read. I may say, however, that coming as I do from a county where there is a very large labour element, I most heartily endorse the principle of this Bill. I differ from my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Bell), because in dealing with this question we are dealing with one of the most difficult questions probably that thrust themselves into the arena of industrial affairs, and I think that the Bill itself, in its very crudeness and nakedness, is likely to be much more productive of good results than if it proceeded on more definite lines, and looked to the establishment of more cast-iron institutions than we have in Canada. The machinery could not be more elastic, and the whole object is simply a benevolent one. The Bill does not contemplate making decrees that have the force of law, but simply proceeds on the assumption embodied in the lines, 'We would love each better if we knew each other more,' or the principle announced a very long while ago, that the great differences between humanity probably resulted in ignorance of each other's motives. This is purely conciliation intending to bring about peace between two disputants by affording some means of bringing them together. Neither disputant cares to take the initiative, but when a difficulty arises here is the procedure to enable an outside party entirely, a party not interested except out of a feeling of good-citizenship, a party recognized by the government of the country, and therefore, not liable to be treated as one taking upon himself a matter that is none of his business—here is a procedure to enable such a party to effect a conciliation, and I look forward to most beneficial results from the adoption of the Bill.

In England this principle of conciliation has worked out most marvellous results wherever it has been established, and the records of the boards of conciliation are appealed to by gentlemen who study thoroughly the labour question as showing these boards to be the most effective means of settling the difficulties between labour and capital. Therefore, this Bill shall have my most enthusiastic support.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I was out of the House when the hon. the Postmaster General concluded his remarks. I would ask him if we have not had a Conciliation Act in force in Ontario for some years, and if he knows anything as to its operation?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.)

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Conciliation Act in the province of Ontario cannot be put in motion except by the consent of both parties, but this measure can be set in motion at the suggestion of either, or by the minister himself, without the consent of either.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). I happen to represent a constituency in which this Bill will be hailed with great pleasure. In the town of Springhill, the largest single colliery in Nova Scotia, in a period of ten years, they went through nine strikes. One of these strikes lasted nine weeks. I have had some experience myself in dealing with these strikes, and I am bound to say that the only way I have ever seen of settling them is to bring the parties together so that they may understand each other better and argue out their differences, and whether the parties are brought together by their own motion or by an outsider, who acts as conciliator between them, a settlement is generally the result.

I cannot for one moment agree with the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Bell) when he says that nine-tenths of the strikes could be settled without conciliation. I do not think he speaks with knowledge of the facts or with experience in this matter, or he would not make such a statement. The history of the past has been, at least in the province of Nova Scotia, that these differences cannot be settled as between the parties. I have seen strikes where there was very little difference between the employer and the employee, yet after days and even weeks had gone by it was absolutely impossible for the two parties to come together for a settlement without the intervention of a third party.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) I was speaking from the latest returns with regard to strikes in England.

Mr. LOGAN. The latest returns with regard to strikes in England showed that, under the Act of which the Bill proposed by the Postmaster General is a facsimile, six out of seven of the strikes have been settled.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Six-sevenths of the references have been settled. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) would allow me to interject an explanation. I think he has been misled a little. I would say that in England this conciliation measure did not originate the policy of settling industrial disputes by conciliation. Voluntary conciliation boards had existed prior to this Act and have since continued. Those existing at the time of the passing of the Act registered, and new ones have come in since and registered. And the record—the book I have in my hand, the last official report of the Department of Labour to the House of Commons in England—shows that hundreds and hundreds of difficulties and disputes have been settled within the last year by conciliation boards. I believe that in one trade alone there have been seven hundred settlements. They may not all be settled under the Act, but they are settled by conciliation boards recognized by the Act and, perhaps a great many of them through the teachings and influence of the Act and the development of goodwill and the recognition by public opinion and by parliament of that mode of settlement.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) What percentage, according to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Mulock's) reading, has been settled directly through the instrumentality of the Act passed in 1896?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are no statistics to answer that question. The Act provides, for instance, that trades and interests may invoke its machinery, and I find a list of a large number of trades that have agreed, in the case of any controversy or troubles, to abide by the decision of the arbitrator or umpire to be sent down by the Board of Trade. There might be no record of a settlement of that kind. The record we have is of the cases that have come directly before the board for settlement. And in this report you find hundreds and hundreds of settlements by the machinery of conciliation, whether technically by the conciliators appointed under the Act or by conciliation boards recognized by the Act, or through the machinery of the Act by arbitrators chosen—and all these all tributes to the efficacy of the principle.

Mr. LOGAN. The hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Bell) has also said that, owing to the better education of the working classes there is less liability to great strikes in the future. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman in that proposition, because it seems to me that the more the workmen are educated the less they are inclined to put up with the inconveniences and hardships of past years. Nor do I think that he will find that the statistics for the past few years will warrant the statement he has made. For I think it must be admitted that within the last few years the greatest strikes in the history of the world have taken place in Great Britain and in the United States. At this very present hour, there is a strike covering a large district of the United States which is assuming alarming proportions and manifesting alarming conditions.

A few moments ago I was referring to the town of Springhill, where a large number of strikes have taken place. Something over a year ago, the men themselves and the management agreed upon a conciliation board in that town, and they chose about half a dozen of the leading merchants of the town as conciliators. Since that time peace has reigned in the town, greater peace than has reigned there for the last fifteen years at least. So, should a dispute arise between a workman and his employer, the case is immediately referred to the conciliation board of merchants, and they give their decisions; and the parties have so far abided by those decisions and strikes have been averted. The trouble in the past has been that we have not had the means by which we could set the conciliation machinery in motion. It seems to me that this Bill provides for that, as it has been explained by the Postmaster General; because, if neither of the parties will agree to conciliation, the minister administering the labour bureau can interfere himself and endeavour to settle the strike by conciliation. This is, in my opinion, most important legislation. Any one who has had any experience in labour difficulties, particularly in the strikes that have taken place in the past, must know that their effect is of the most serious and damaging character upon the community in which they take place. Not only does the strike affect the workmen themselves and their wives and children, but it affects the whole commercial community. It affects particularly the merchants of the town in which the strike takes place. And those who have seen strikes have not only seen trouble among the men, not only recognized the suffering among the women and children of those who are interested in the strike, but have seen merchants become insolvent and towns also become nearly bankrupt—often because there was not some one to come in and bring together the contending parties. As a representative of labouring men, as a representative of a constituency in which labour unions exist and in which there is employment given to a very large number of workmen, I hail with delight this legislation looking toward the establishment of better feeling between workmen and their employers. No more important legislation, in my opinion, has ever been introduced in this parliament. I trust that the spirit of conciliation which has been shown by hon. members on the other side who have spoken on this question in approaching this from a non-partisan standpoint will inure to the benefit of the workmen of this country, and that, in the future, we may avoid a repetition of such labour disputes as have taken place in different parts of Canada in days gone by.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I am heartily in accord with the Bill, so far as I can understand it, believing that it will tend to prevent a repetition of the lamentable strikes that have taken place. I listened with great pleasure to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) who has just taken his seat, because I myself have had a great deal of experience in strikes and other disputes that have occurred between miners and their employers. I can verify all the hon. gentleman says with regard to the distressing results of such strikes. I never knew a strike take place that did not result in great loss both to employers and employed. Nobody makes anything out of a strike, and a large amount of money is lost to everybody concerned and to the country at large. As far as I understand the Bill, it seems to me it is bound to do a great deal of good. I only trust that it will be found, as the Postmaster General has said it is, elastic in all its clauses; because I do not think that any Act that lays down a hard and fast rule authorizing the government to step in under any and all circumstances and interfere between employers and employees would work satisfactorily. I trust that the Bill will bring about the best results that we look for from its operation.

Mr. T. BEATTIE (London). This appears to me a very harmless Bill. If it does no good it will do no harm. However, I am glad to see any move made in the direction of assisting in settling the disputes between workmen and employers. I have not much faith in arbitration boards. This House will remember that last summer we had a street railway strike in the city of London. The men had organized a union and the company had refused to recognize that union in the manner the men wished them to do. There were several committees organized one after the other, but each of these committees seemed to increase the difficulty of settlement. The strike was not settled, it lasted for over five months, and finally ended in the defeat of the men. I can only say that I think this Bill will do no harm, and we can at least give it a trial. If it does not work properly it can be amended or repealed.

Mr. PUTTEE. The House does not seem disposed to discuss this matter very seriously, and I presume one reason is that it has been brought down so late in the session. We have been told the measure is non-contentious. I think I may also say that it will be non-effective. Of course, we are perfectly safe in extolling the virtues of conciliation, we are all in favour of conciliation. It is very pleasing and very satisfying to talk of conciliation in times of peace; it is extremely difficult to apply it after hostilities have broken out. I may refer to the last experience that we had in Canada in which Mr. Clute's mission was successful. But in that case the strike had been on eight months and both sides had had about all the strike they wanted, and all the damage that could be done was done by that strike, all the evils that a good Bill, if applied, would advert, had already occurred. Then, at an expense of six or seven thousand dollars conciliation was resorted to and a settlement was patched up, some kind of an arrangement that will last probably for a few months. I am not antagonistic to this Bill, I am prepared to accept and to apply anything that will in any way relieve this great question of industrial disturbance. But I do think that if we are going to make an experiment we might consider something really serious and try as far as possible to avail ourselves of the experience that has been dearly purchased by other countries. The hon. the minister said that we were not embarking on a new principle, and I think he is quite right. It is a fact that we are not embarking on a new principle, I believe he could have gone further and have told us that we are the last legislature to embark on this principle at all, and to the extent it goes we are on safe ground. I am unalterably in favour of the New Zealand principle adopted in their Conciliation and Arbitration Act, because I think that something should be done to remove the evils caused by strikes and industrial disturbances. I am in favour of that, because it is the only effective principle, the only one that has attained the object for which it was framed. The Bill before us is based on the English Act. The third section of this Bill provides:

3. Any board established either before or after the passing of this Act, which is constituted for the purpose of settling disputes between employers and workmen by conciliation or arbitration, or any association or body authorized by an agreement in writing made between employers and workmen to deal with such disputes (in this Act referred to as a conciliation board) may apply to the minister for registration under this Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, where you have men who have drawn up an agreement of conciliation, I am sure it hardly needs an Act of parliament to make that agreement effective. When the men have got together and have drawn up an agreement, you have the two elements that will give effect to conciliation. That is a very simple proposition, that if you can only get the men together and get them to agree to arbitration before arbitration is necessary, the whole difficulty is overcome. The machinery contained in this clause of the Bill, I believe, is the only part of it that will be used, and it will be used to a very limited extent, because in Canada we have very few such boards, very few agreements that have been drawn up in times of peace preparing for times of hostility. There are, I think, two or three different kinds of conciliation Acts. There are Acts in some countries that are purely ornamental, passed with no intention of their being used. This Act is modelled after the English Act, but the British parliament is the greatest capitalistic club on earth, it is hardly the best place to look for conciliation Acts that would be fair to both parties. The New Zealand Conciliation and Arbitration Act was passed about 1894, after the colony had been through stormy industrial weather, after its industries had almost been crippled, and when the colony was in pretty bad shape financially. This Act was introduced as an experiment only. The experiment has proved successful, and I do not think that anybody can say that it is now looked upon as simply a temporary measure. In their last report that has reached this country, bearing on the operations of the conciliation and arbitrations, and also reviewing the scope and character of the Act and the additions that have been made to it, I noticed this very pregnant phrase :

The present merit of this Act is that it reaches down to remove even the tiniest industrial irritant.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is the hon. gentleman quoting from ?

Mr. PUTTEE. The Minister of the Labour Bureau of New Zealand, after this Act has been in operation five or six years. If you try to apply that sentence to our Bill here, you will see whether that will remove anything in the way of an irritant. This New Zealand Act has been prominently before the minds of the people in this country who have been paying attention to this matter, and the objection to it has been voiced in this House this afternoon, namely, that New Zealand is a small colony, and that it has full jurisdiction, that the Act could not be applied in Canada because of the want of jurisdiction in this parliament over provincial affairs. While that objection is good, that Act is very superior to any voluntary conciliation Act, and I believe we should do better to adopt that principle. We could make it applicable to all corporations and institutions which are operating in more than one province, imparting a Dominion character to the Act. By putting it on the statute-books of Canada we would take a step that would result in having it brought into force in the different provinces, because, I believe, they would accept it. I believe they would do so because some of the provinces now have voluntary Conciliation Acts upon their statute-books, although I think they have wasted their time in adopting them. I believe the principle to which I have referred would be speedily availed of by the different provinces if we adopted it, and that the Act itself could be put in force by vote of the legislatures. An. hon. gentleman on the other side of the House mentioned the street car strike in London which has been waged for fifteen months now. It has not been settled yet, although Ontario has a good Conciliation Act, as conciliation Acts go, on its statute-books. The theory upon which such Acts as these were based was that they would do some good. This Act has not been availed of at all. I think if we were to put the New Zealand principle in operation we would see a number of the provinces following in that line. The objection that has been taken to the English Act is an objection that applies to every Act of this kind, that it may be all right, but it does not do the work it was framed for. It has conciliated six-sevenths of the cases that have been brought under its provisions, but how many cases have been brought under it? The number is simply a drop in the bucket compared with the total number of labour disputes that have occurred in England. Under the New Zealand Act either party can make a reference to a new court that has been created, and this court proceeds, happily, without the intervention of lawyers. The reports of the operations of this court are that its findings have been eminently satisfactory whenever it has been consulted. The beauty of it is that if you have a strike the strike is in the court room and not in the workshop. I do not see any value in United States reports of arbitration cases, because they do not take kindly to the settlement of disputes in this way, and I believe the United States will be the last country to wake up to the urgency of this matter of the settlement of industrial disputes. When the Bill comes down to deal with the labour gazette, I most heartily endorse it, and because of that principle, I can afford to accept the whole Bill. I shall not be disappointed in the Conciliation Bill, because I expect nothing from it. I do expect that if properly operated, the department of labour and the labour gazette will be very valuable to this country. We have already lost a lot of valuable time in not having our statistics collected and kept for record. I have here the journal of the Department of Labour of New Zealand, a much smaller publication than that which the Board of Trade produces in Great Britain, but it ought to satisfy those gentlemen who are a little fearsome that there will be political matter and patent medicine advertisements in it. It is a very small publication, but as it comes out regularly it effects the purpose. The whole purpose of a labour gazette issued under government auspices should be the collection of reliable information and the recording of statistics on matters appertaining to industrialism and labour in this country.

Mr. INGRAM. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) introduced this Bill the other day, I took occasion then to draw his attention to a few suggestions which I thought might be incorporated in it, but I find, to-day, that he has not done anything in the direction which I suggested. What I wish to say, now, before the second reading of the Bill, is that I approve of the Bill. I quite agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) in the belief that very little advantage will be taken of conciliation by mutual consent, but if the Act is placed on the statute-book, we have gone a step, perhaps, in the right direction, because, at a later period, some person may have the Act amended in such a way as, perhaps, will meet the objections which have been taken to it on this ground. The hon. Postmaster General said to-day that under this Bill the Governor in Council could undertake to investigate a difficulty without the consent of both the parties interested.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, not 'without.'

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, one part of it; but I did not mean that he could act under that clause which provides for the taking of evidence.

Mr. CLARKE. As I understand it, there is nothing compulsory in the Bill at all.

Mr. INGRAM. Take, for instance, the case of the Grand Trunk Railway strike that occurred a year ago; without the consent of the management of the Grand Trunk Railway and of the employees, this Bill would have no effect at all. They would require to mutually agree before this Bill would affect the case at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I have been misunderstood. What I desired to convey when I said that there was nothing compulsory in the Bill was, that you could not compel any person to abide by any advice or decision, but the first subsection of section 4 provides:

Where a difference exists or is apprehended between an employer or any class of employers and workmen, or between different classes of workmen, the minister may, if he thinks fit, exercise all or any of the following powers, namely:

(a) Inquire into the causes and circumstances of the difference, &c.

He may proceed further on to suggest the appointment of conciliators.

Mr. INGRAM. But, so far as both parties to the dispute are concerned, they can ignore that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They can.

Mr. INGRAM. I can quite readily understand the difficulty this parliament will have in passing legislation that will compel both parties to a dispute to agree to conciliation or arbitration. I understand there are a great many obstacles in the way, and that it is a very difficult question to solve. This Bill may not be worth very much at present, but, by placing it upon the statute-book we may open up the way for some person at some future time to bring in a provision amending it in such a way as to meet the objections which have been made.

Mr. CLARKE. Like the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), I endorse and approve of the principle of the Bill. As he says, if it does not do any good it certainly cannot do any harm. Neither of the parties to a dispute need avail themselves of the provisions of the Bill, but it is certainly a wholesome measure, inasmuch as it proposes to provide machinery whereby, if both parties are agreeable, arbitrators may be appointed and the disastrous consequences which often result when a strike has to be resorted to may be avoided. I think the objections taken by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), as to the time at which this Bill has been introduced, are well taken. It is true, as the hon. Postmaster General has said, that reference was made to the Bill in the speech from the Throne, and that that speech was delivered between five and six months ago. But, if I understood the hon. gentleman correctly, on June 12 he cabled to Lord Strathcona for some information as to the operation of the Conciliation Act in England, and he intimated to his lordship that similar legislation was 'contemplated' here. It seems to me that it would have been a great deal better if the Bill had been introduced at an earlier stage of the session, and if an opportunity had been given to hon. members on both sides of the House to obtain copies of the Bill, and to send them to the parties who would be most interested in the operation of the measure when it becomes law, namely, the employers of labour and the employees.

The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), says that this is the most important piece of legislation that has been introduced into this parliament for a long time, but if we are to judge by the scant attendance of members—there are scarcely three dozen in the House—not a great deal of interest is taken in it. I believe, however, Mr. Speaker, that it is a measure in the right direction. If machinery is provided to which the attention of arbitrary employers or hot-headed employees can be drawn, and if as the result of putting that machinery into operation, strikes, loss of time, loss of wages, and loss of capital can be avoided, then I think the government and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock), especially are entitled to credit. I heartily support this Bill, and while I have not very much faith in the amount of good it will accomplish, yet believing it to be a movement in the right direction, we must hope for the very best from it.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the advantages to be obtained by registration?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will enable the department to make use of these boards as the necessity may arise, and it will give the boards an official connection with the department.

Mr. INGRAM. It says the application must be accompanied by the constitution and by-laws and regulations. What are these?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whatever they choose to adopt.

Mr. INGRAM. I am afraid that would not work, for the reason that in some districts, where there is a small population they may want to form a conciliation board and may have no rules and regulations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In that event they would not have to send them.

Mr. PUTTEE. They are bound to have rules and regulations or they cannot be formed at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is the way it is in the Imperial Act.

On section 4,

Mr. PUTTEE. What is meant by subsection c?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the minister found there was no board, he might then appoint one.

Mr. CLARKE. That would be in case of trouble?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You need not wait for that.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the intention to appoint boards of conciliation all over the country?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no intention about it. It is hoped that when the Act is passed the interests concerned will themselves organize and register.

Mr. CLARKE. That is the reason I asked the minister if it was his intention to appoint in case of trouble.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In case of trouble, the minister having charge of the Act would be governed by the circumstances. It would be far better if the interests concerned arranged a tribunal in advance of the trouble, which would prevent the trouble coming to a head.

Mr. INGRAM. These boards will be purely voluntarily, I suppose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no distinct policy with reference to the matter. It may be thought prudent to encourage the formation of these boards and I think the hon. gentleman would approve of that.

Mr. CLARKE. In case of trouble.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is our present hope that the people themselves will make use of this machinery.

Mr. McDOUGALL. In case neither of the parties agree to refer to the minister, would he act of his own motion?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This will be purely a matter of discretion when the case arises. Whoever is in charge of the measure will have to consider the situation, and if he thinks he could profitably offer his friendly offices, he will, no doubt, do so.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). There is one thing which strikes me as somewhat singular about this. The first part of the section provides for registering the boards of conciliation and assumes they will be in existence, but section 4, which is really the heart of the whole Act and provides for the machinery, makes no reference to boards of conciliation at all. It provides that where there is apprehension of difficulty, the minister may take certain action, and then it says he may take such steps as to him may seem expedient, under section b. Is the 'person or body' referred to in subsection b, a board of conciliation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, that is the person or body to nominate a chairman.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). In this section 4, which seems to contain the machinery of the Act, the board of conciliation is dropped out of sight. As the great purpose of this Act is to promote the formation of these boards of conciliation, I would suggest that more prominence be given to the board of conciliation in preference to calling upon other parties or institutions to supply any other kind of machinery.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think my hon. friend has not quite apprehended the whole clause. It enables the minister to do what he might do without the Act, but might hesitate to do. The first subsection provides that he may, if he thinks it wise to do so, inquire, and his inquiry may take the form of trying to get the parties to meet together. When they meet together, in order to be organized, the first step is to get a chairman. Then they can have a further meeting. The clause then goes on to provide that if they ask the minister to appoint a board, he may do so.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the intention that the person who is to act as conciliator, shall be remunerated by the government for his services?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no policy on that point at present.

Mr. CLARKE. What has the minister in his mind about it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My own opinion is that the conciliator ought to be chosen and settled with by the interests involved.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the practice in England?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is done in that way.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the intention to follow that practice here?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have never contemplated any other course. I have never discussed the point. I think the whole machinery should come from the people, including the remuneration, and be left to move automatically.

On section 7.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman had incorporated into this Act the 'Act respecting inquiries concerning public matters,' it would be more convenient.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wanted to make it quite clear that power should not be placed in the hands of commissioners, without the consent of all concerned.

On section 9.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I understand that the intention is that the minister shall move without either of the parties asking him to do so?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He may suggest the establishment of a conciliation board. Of course, that is a thing he could do without this authority; but the object of this provision is merely to free the minister from the embarrassment of doing an act apparently of his own motion without statutory suggestions.

On section 10.

Mr. INGRAM. I suppose this will involve the employing of some qualified person to edit this Labour Gazette. Would the hon. gentleman say whether he has any person in view at present for that position? It is a very important position, requiring some person well posted on labour matters, and one in whom the large body of labour men throughout the country will have confidence.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman's question is a perfectly proper one, and I would say that I have some one in view, and if we are fortunate enough to get him, I think he will be entirely persona grata to all classes—the labouring class as well as the employers of labour.

Mr. INGRAM. I might suggest to the hon. gentleman that no person engaged very much in party politics, I care not whether he is a Grit or a Tory, would be very acceptable to labour men generally. If some person could be got who has not associated much in party politics, but who knows a good deal of labour matters, he would be the most acceptable.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may say that the gentleman whom I have in my mind has not, so far as I am aware, ever taken part in Canadian party politics. I dare say he has his party bias, but if we are so fortunate as to get him, the objection which my hon. friend foreshadows, will have no place.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Is it the intention to include other matters in the department of labour, such as the Alien Labour Act, the commissioners under that Act, the minimum wage clause, and so forth?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill at present only deals with the subject of the bureau and the Labour Gazette, but doubtless from time to time changes may be made. It may be that these duties are like movable feasts and can be sent over to the minister in question by order in council. I do not know that they are attached by Act of parliament to any particular minister.

On section 11,

Mr. BELL (Pictou). What expenses will be included in this? And how far is it the intention of the government to defray the expenses of whoever may be appointed to inquire into labour disputes? Is it the intention that the expenses of the arbitrators or commissioners should be paid by the government or thrown upon the parties?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The expense to be defrayed by the government would include the cost of the Labour Gazette. As to the other questions, I stated to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), that I thought that the boards of conciliation, being local, should be appointed by the interests concerned, and their expenses paid by the interests that appointed them. In like manner, if those conciliators should be empowered to take evidence, the taking of the evidence should also be at the expense of the parties concerned. But if the situation required, for instance, some expert to be sent, it might be proper for the government to pay his expenses.

Mr. INGRAM. This Act should be entitled 'The Conciliation and Arbitration Act.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The title will not matter, because it will be popularly known as 'The Conciliation Act of 1900.'

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 186) respecting the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company.—(Mr. Semple.)

CENTRAL VERMONT RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 171) respecting the Central Vermont Railway Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

On section 1.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark.) I have not seen the amendment which, I believe, is to be proposed, but I speak of the Bill as it is before us. This gives a power to an American railway to purchase, lease and operate the railways of the Montreal Province Line Railway Company, the Stanstead Shefford and Chambly Railway Company and the Montreal and Vermont Junction Railway Company. I suppose the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has fully considered the question of a foreign corporation purchasing railways in Canada. I do not know under what corporate powers they will work the railways. I do not know whether the Vermont Central Railway Company is a state corporation or what powers they have. But, I think it is objectionable to give to a foreign railway company the right to operate and own railway corporations entities in Canada. I notice there is no provision under the Bill as to the liabilities of these three companies that are to be taken over so as to protect the rights of those who have claims against them. It gives an absolute transfer of these companies to this foreign corporation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I did not happen to be present at the meeting of the Railway Committee which took this matter up, being engaged elsewhere. Therefore, I am not able to speak of what occurred at that committee. But when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) asks whether I have considered the question of allowing foreign corporations to operate railways in Canada under their charter, I would recall to his mind an occasion when a Bill was considered by a sub-committee of the Railway Committee, of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) was a member, dealing with a similar case and involving the same question. I refer to the case of the different lines that were to be operated under the charter of the Buffalo Railway Company an American company, so declared on the face of the Bill. The sub-committee included the leading lawyers of the Railway Committee. We considered this question very carefully, and came to the conclusion that there was no serious objection to allowing this course to be pursued in that case, and I do not know of any distinction that can be drawn between that case and this. My hon. friend himself subscribed to the opinion of the sub-committee, and was quite in favour of the action taken.

Mr. SPROULE. Was that the Niagara Central?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Bill I refer to came up during the present session of parliament—only four or five weeks ago. The Niagara Central had a railway in operation under that name. But, the Bill I referred to provided for the amalgamation of two roads on this side of the line with a third road incorporated and operating in the adjoining state under the name of the Buffalo Railway Company. I see no objection to allowing the Vermont Central Railway Company to acquire and control a Canadian railway. There might be special reasons in this case why we should not allow it, but I am not aware of them.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the extent of the railways to be taken over?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The Montreal Province Line Railway has a length of about forty miles between St. Lambert and Frelighsburg, passing through Farnham; the Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly Railway runs from St. Johns to Waterloo in Shefford County, a distance of about thirty miles; and the Montreal and Vermont Junction is a road starting from St. Johns, Que., and going to the Province Line near St. Armand, about twenty-two or twenty-three miles. Altogether, I should think these railways would represent a mileage of about 100 miles.

Mr. SPROULE. What position would the creditors of these roads be in?

Mr. HAGGART. Unless provisions is made, they would have no remedy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood that there was an amendment to cover that point.

Mr. HAGGART. I am afraid that the precedent cited by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) will hardly apply to this particular road. If I remember, the Buffalo Railway Company was a corporation chartered by the state of New York—an electric railway company. The amalgamation gave them power to take over a couple of bridges. Formerly, a bridge connecting Canada and the United States could not be operated under one corporate power. We had to form two distinct corporations, one working the Canadian side of the bridge and one working the American side. However, this only took over a small electric railway company near the Niagara Falls, and there was a provision made in the Bill as to the indebtedness, there was a provision for having an office in Canada at which it could be served. The danger of a Bill like this which gives the Central Vermont Railway Company the right of issuing bonds over this road, is that it may become an international question at some time if we attempt any railway legislation which would interfere with the rights acquired by a foreign railway company in this country. Legislation like this ought to be very carefully looked after. I think at least it should have been submitted to the Justice Department to find out what corporate powers they obtained in these roads in Canada, whether they were to be worked under the corporate powers which they received from a foreign government, and whether we would have power, without special reservation and special mention in the Act, to legislating from time to time with reference to the road. I think there should be at least notice in the Bill that it is subject to our legislation, and that their corporate powers which they acquire in Canada shall have no greater effect than these railroads have at present, that is the right of working in Canada. While I would not offer any objection to such legislation as would enable this railway company, which I believe is virtually the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to acquire these roads and work them, that legislation should be such as is approved by the Justice Department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand the hon. gentleman to object to the passing of this Bill upon the general ground that we are allowing a corporation which derives its existence from a foreign state to become possessed of, and operate a railway in Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Now, my hon. friend thought it ought to be well considered, and asked whether I had well considered it. I call his attention to the fact that during this present session of parliament he was a member of a sub-committee which did consider a cognate question, in fact the identical question, and he was of opinion that there would be no objection to allowing the company to acquire the property, interests and rights which had been conferred upon the companies that were being amalgamated with that company by the parliament of Canada, or by the legislature of Ontario. He will remember that I expressed my extreme reluctance to subscribe to that principle, but the committee almost as a whole, I think, concluded that there was no serious objection to that, particularly when their attention was called to similar legislation which has passed this parliament, and to which the company had consented, allowing a provision to be inserted which would safeguard our rights as a parliament, and would recognize the jurisdiction of the Railway Act over it. Now, I was not present at that meeting of the Railway Committee when this Bill came up, but I understand the committee passed it with a clause similar to the amendments that were added to the Buffalo Railway Company's Bill. I think if they do that they will meet any objections that, at all events, the sub-committee of the Railway Committee had to the passing of the Buffalo Railway Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you got the clauses?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have them in my hand:

The Central Vermont Railway Company, hereinafter called 'the company,' is invested with and shall be entitled to all the powers, privileges and rights as a corporation necessary for the convenient and proper carrying on of the business and undertakings in Canada in the next following section mentioned.

Then another clause relates to the subject to which the hon. member has made reference:

The company shall have an office at or near Montreal, and service of process or legal documents may be effected upon any clerk or officer employed therein, or upon the person then in charge thereof, and such service shall be good service upon and shall bind the company.

These were provisions that we deemed it prudent to make in the case of the Buffalo Railway Company.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). Is it not specified that it shall be subject to our Railway Act?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, 'all the laws of Canada,' not simply of the Railway Act, but of any other Act.

Mr. TISDALE. I am not sure whether that makes it subject to the Railway Act, what you read.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It must necessarily be subject to the Railway Act, because the Railway Act is one of the laws of Canada.

Mr. TISDALE. Yes, but the Railway Act applies to all this legislation by virtue of its being made applicable to all our railways. It seems to me that section ought to be made clearer, that the Railway Act shall apply to the corporation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (reading):

Nothing in this Act contained shall relieve the company from the observance of the laws of Canada or Ontario, as the case may be, except in so far as such laws are inconsistent with the acquisition and operation of the undertakings as hereby authorized.

I think that makes it clear enough.

Mr. HAGGART. Still, I think it ought to include 'and the Railway Act.' The Railway Act per se does not apply to this railway at all. It is simply because all our railways are subject to the Railway Act. Now, the Central Vermont Railway is not subject to the Railway Act because it is a foreign corporation. Therefore, when you say 'the laws of Canada' it would mean the general laws, it would not mean a specific law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will see that any railway legislation which emanates from this parliament is granted always subject to the provisions contained in the Railway Act, unless expressly excepted. We are giving powers to the Central Vermont Railway Company to acquire and operate this railway. Now, if we put in this Bill a provision that notwithstanding the fact that they are a foreign corporation they shall still be subject to the laws of Canada, you include all laws. There is no law which may be applicable to such companies which would be excepted, and which would not be operative.

Mr. HAGGART. I would urge the Minister of Railways and Canals again to consider that clause, and see that it is drafted properly, and if necessary to submit it to the Department of Justice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there can be any doubt about the application of the law.

Mr. TISDALE. I cannot see any objection to the legislation if it is properly safeguarded.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, the property in Canada is subject to Canadian laws, and we do not exempt it from the control of Canadian laws.

Mr. TISDALE. The Railway Act is only applicable to railways incorporated by this parliament, because we say that railways incorporated by the parliament of Canada are subject to the Railway Act. This is not a railway incorporated by the parliament of Canada. We say that a foreign road shall have certain powers, and then we say that the laws of Canada shall apply to it. The query is whether we find it necessary to specially say 'under the Railway Act.' I wish to see the Bill passed, because I know that a controlling interest in the stock is held by the Grand Trunk Railway and that the reorganization was effected practically by the Grand Trunk Railway. No one wants to object to their enjoying these powers, because I think it is in the interest of these roads that they should do so. What we want to do is to be careful that the legislation which will serve the purpose is put in such a way that afterwards it will not be brought up as a precedent for giving such powers to foreign corporations.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It seems to me that the amendment read a few minutes ago by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals fully covers the point and places the Central Vermont Railway Company, in so far as its property in Canada is concerned, absolutely under the laws of Canada. Of course, the Central Vermont Railway Company operating in the state of Vermont, is under the laws of the state of Vermont. We cannot control it in any way, but this clause only places the property of the corporation in Canada under the laws of Canada. At the present time, the Central Vermont Railway Company has no corporate existence in Canada, nor has it any property in Canada. It only leases these roads and operates them. For convenience in the working of these roads, there is no question that it is better in the public interest, that they should be under one corporation. The Central Vermont Railway today is practically owned by the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and the Central Vermont Railway Company has operated these roads in the past. It is more convenient that they should be worked under the management and in connection with the Central Vermont Railway Company. I think the clause in question places the company's property in Canada under the laws of Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher). fails to catch the point I am making. We know nothing of the corporate powers of the Central Vermont Railway Company, and we are giving to that company the power to acquire these railways. It may have different powers entirely from these under its incorporation. You give to this foreign company, of whose powers we have no knowledge whatever, complete control over these two roads in Canada, with the limitation that the hon. minister says he intends to apply, that is, to make the Railway Act applicable to them and all the laws of Canada which are at present in force, and which may be from time to time in force in Canada applicable to this company. My objection is that I know nothing of the corporate powers of the Central Vermont Railway Company. I do not know what control it may have over this property which it has acquired in Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It does not seem to me that it matters to us in the slightest degree, what powers have been given to the Central Vermont Railway Company by a foreign government. They can only have such powers in Canada as we choose to give them.

Mr. HAGGART. But we are giving them the powers which they have in a foreign country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, that is where I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is misapprehending the scope of this Bill. All that we are doing is to recognize a company deriving its existence from foreign legislation which desires to acquire these railways mentioned here, and to operate them in their own name. These companies in Canada, at this moment, have existence, I suppose, being incorporated under Canadian laws, and in the name of Canadian companies. With these charters, the Central Vermont Railway Company have acquired the powers attached to them. We are not changing these powers in the slightest degree. We are only saying that the name of the owner of these railways shall be from the passing of this Bill, the Central Vermont Railway Company. We are not touching the property; we are not altering the status of the property.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Are you not altering the ownership?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not changing the status of the property in the slightest degree. Let me illustrate it in this way: Suppose that some foreign firm, which we call by the name of Brown, Jones & Robertson, are acquiring this railway. That would be subject, as to the holding ownership and operating of this railway to the laws of Canada, and they could not acquire any right of operation, unless they acquired it under the laws of Canada, because they could not acquire any rights under the laws of a foreign state. You are only rechristening the company, giving it another name. Notwithstanding that you are giving this name to an existing foreign corporation and saying that that foreign corporation may own this property you are saying that they shall own it, subject to the laws of Canada. If I had been framing that particular clause, I think, perhaps, I would have framed it a little differently.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the objection of making it thoroughly inclusive?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there would be no objection.

Mr. POWELL. The objection of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), is rather that it is through the medium of incorporation that the power over the subject of incorporation, over the work, is given.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a mistake.

Mr. POWELL. I will not say whether it is so or not. Possibly, the company itself was not within the scope of the Railway Act, and the clause that relates to it is rather one that assumes that it is, instead of absolutely declaring that it is. That is the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale). It is a backhanded way of getting at it. It says it shall not be exempt from the laws of Canada, but the hon. gentleman contends that it shall state affirmatively: It is subject to the laws of Canada.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). It is quite clear that we can legislate only for that portion of the railway which is within the jurisdiction of Canada. We submit in the Bill the proposition, that that railway will be within the laws of Canada which, of course, includes the law regulating railways. That being so, I do not see there can be any doubt about it. When a foreign corporation comes into Canada with a portion of any railway falling under our jurisdiction, it is regulated by the laws of Canada and, of course, regulated by our Railway Act.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). The Central Vermont Railway Company is given power to purchase the capital stock of these different roads, and as to that power no harm may come, because it can only operate these roads under the charter they now have. But it is also empowered to purchase and operate these railways, and if it operates this railway as a purchaser, then something is necessary in order to bring the Central Vermont Railway Company entirely within the laws of Canada. It does strike me that there may be something in the point that was raised. The Railway Act applies to any railway that is for the general benefit of Canada, and that being so there ought to be a clause inserted putting this railway company in the same position as if it were incorporated here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Province Line Company was incorporated by the parliament of Canada.

Mr. TISDALE. But when the Central Vermont purchased it, it ceased to be the Province Line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the railway; it is not the name.

Mr. POWELL. The Railway Act, so far as it is applicable to the property is all right. But what about these provisions of the Railway Act applicable to the company as distinct from the property, such as making returns of statistics, and so on?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The moment you make a railway subject to the Railway Act, then it is wholly subject to the Railway Act whoever may own it, and the Railway Act governs and controls as respects these returns, and so forth, as fully as you could make it by any special legislation.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not think the Railway Act will be applicable unless we make it specially applicable.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No matter whose property this railway may be, I do not see how it can be anything else than subject to the laws of Canada, so long as it is situated in Canada. Suppose this company desires to make a crossing or connection with any other railway in Canada, would any one seriously contend that this legislation would withdraw it from being subject to our laws.

Mr. POWELL. You have control over the property, but not the company.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Is there anything objectionable in providing specifically that it shall be subject to the Railway Act.

Mr. POWELL. That might meet the difficulty.

Mr. HAGGART. There is another difficulty. These railways were first of all purchased by the Central Vermont Railroad Company. That company became extinct in the United States, and their properties were sold, part of which was the majority of stock in these different railway companies. Then there was a new company formed last year in the United States called the Vermont Central Railway Company. They elected a board, and that board by the charter, had to sit in Canada. Under this Bill you are giving them powers, although every director may reside in a foreign country, and they may be all foreigners. The board of directors may sit and reside entirely in a foreign country. This Vermont Central Railway Company may issue bonds on the whole undertaking, and that part of the road which is in Canada may be liable for the whole issue, to the extent of $250,000 or $300,000 a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We allowed that in the case of the Buffalo company.

Mr. HAGGART. I am arguing on principle—not because it was done before for a little electric railway company. There cannot be any objection to giving this new company all the rights which the Central Vermont Railway Company had. They have the majority of the stock, they can elect their directors in Canada, and do everything they could before, and we have complete control over the corporation. But, the danger arises when you give to a foreign corporation certain rights in Canada which they may insist shall not be interfered with by any legislation of ours hereafter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is provided in a special amendment that they shall be subject to the laws of Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. All I ask the minister is to submit the question to the Department of Justice, and have the Bill put in such a shape that it will be satisfactory to the House.

On section 2b,

Mr. TISDALE. This section says that nothing in this Act contained shall relieve the company from the observance of the laws of Canada or Quebec, as the case may be. Instead of that being in the negative form, I think it should be in the positive form, that the company shall be subject to the Railway Act and to the laws of Quebec.

Mr. GIBSON. There is no objection to that.

Mr. TISDALE. Like the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart), I would prefer to have the Bill properly considered in the light of the objection which has been raised to-night. If this were a case of acquiring control by a transfer of stock, it would be a different matter, because then the different corporations would have to be kept nominally alive; but now it is proposed to bury these old corporations, so that the only corporation left would be the Central Vermont Railway Company, a foreign corporation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not undertake to give a legal opinion on the matter, but I supposed that this amendment would cover the point. The great object is to do away with these small corporations and combine them into one under the Central Vermont Railway Company. I am still inclined to think that the laws of Canada would control that portion of the railway in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Are any of these provincial companies?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly and the Montreal and Vermont Junction companies were incorporated by the old parliament of Canada. The Montreal and Province line was incorporated by parliament.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) You have now control of these companies, because they are Canadian companies, resident in Canada. You cannot serve a process on a railway track or railway tie, but you can serve a process and impose penalties on a corporation. But, if we dissolve all these corporations, we shall have no longer a corporation in Canada. The properties will be in Canada, but the laws have to be enforced against the corporations which own the properties. Against whom are you going to enforce penalties in this case?

Mr. WM. GIBSON (Lincoln). The Bill provides that the office of the company shall be in or near the city of Montreal, so that service may be made upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. The office is there just for convenience, for the purpose of the service.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suggest that words be added to declare these railways works for the general advantage of Canada, which will bring them under the Railway Act.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not touch the difficulty which I see. It does not give you any jurisdiction or power over a corporation which resides in the United States. Whatever may be the powers of a Canadian company, we grant them and know what they are. You are desolving all these. We do not know what corporate powers this company has. We do not know how extensive they are. That road is coming into Canada and getting at once 100 miles of railway for operation. That is not going to be the end of it. These are not finished lines. In the course of years they will stretch out to other parts of the country, as they properly should, and then you will have a large corporation, with these unknown powers, competing with Canadian corporations. It may be that this American corporation has not larger powers than our own, but it may have very much larger powers. It will be here with what powers it has, and will read those powers into the miles of railway it owns and controls in this country, and consequently you will not have the hold over them that you would have over a Canadian company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are subject to the Railway Act.

Mr. FOSTER. But if a corporation is outside of your reach, how are you going to enforce it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Against their property.

Mr. TISDALE. We must not forget that the Grand Trunk Railway, in respect of the lines they own in the United States, have not been able to get there the legislation we are proposing to give this American road. They have to keep separate corporations for every road they have. That is hard on them, but, of course, because the Americans are not liberal to the Grand Trunk Railway is no reason why we should not be liberal here, provided we keep legislative control. It is a more difficult problem than it appears at first view.

Mr. GIBSON. I think that the suggestion of the ex-Minister of Finance perhaps is one in the right direction, and it would be better to allow this Bill to stand over until a conference is had with the Department of Justice. I have no objection at all to this; it would be far better to have the Bill in proper shape than one that is imperfectly put. We all know the Central Vermont Railway Company have had these lines under control for five and twenty years. That railway has gone out of existence and a new name given it, and the Grand Trunk Railway controls two-thirds of the stock of the Central Vermont, which controls all these lines, and the whole object is to enable the Grand Trunk Railway to control the lines in Canada of the Central Vermont, and it would be much better for the company and the Bill that the thing should be carefully considered. I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Carrying out the regulations concerning the health of employees on public works under the Public Works Health Act, 1890 $5,000

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I suppose that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will persist in endeavouring to pass this vote. I do not desire to consume the time of the House further than to say that this is simply a waste of money. If any attempt is to be made to do really what is pretended to be done with this $5,000, no such sum would be at all adequate. It will be spent in the salary of an officer, appointed by the government from among its friends, and I have concluded, after going into the matter, that that is the real purpose. I want to enter my protest. I think the money will be wasted, but will make no further objection.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I cannot allow that charge to pass unchallenged. Since this matter came up the other night, I presume that the hon. gentleman has studied the regulations and made himself acquainted with what is intended to be carried out by means of this vote. Those regulations are for the purpose of providing security for employees on public works, to secure that they will be looked after, both as regards the accommodation provided for their living and the securing of proper medical attendance and supervision, and also for isolation when necessary to prevent the spread of contagious diseases. The hon. gentleman seems now to be fully possessed of the idea that there may be some necessity for such work. He shakes his head, and therefore I presume that he is prepared to say that on public works the employees are quite able to take care of themselves, and there is no necessity for any effort on the part of the government to see that they are properly cared for. I differ with my hon. friend. I believe that it is our duty, on account of some occurrences that have been brought to light lately amongst employees on public works, to see that these employees are properly protected. We know well that contractors, busily engaged in the prosecution of their work, often in rather wild parts of the country, where the ordinary conditions for the preservation of public health are not easily obtained, may be very easily tempted by the exigencies of their work to try and force their employees to accept conditions which are not consistent with the proper care of their health. I believe that the Act passed last year was in the interests of the working people and the regulations founded upon them, but these regulations cannot be carried out if we leave the matter entirely in the hands of the contractors, and therefore we require to provide some supervision.

These regulations will require certain expenditure on the part of the contractors, and, no doubt, the profits of their contracts may be, thereby, somewhat curtailed. This being the case, it is only right and prudent on the part of the government or the country to see that these regulations are properly carried out. The machinery for that purpose need not be very expensive. My hon. friend, the other night suggested, that, no doubt, a superintendent might be required whose salary might be as high as $3,000 a year. I hope to be able to obtain a good man for considerably less than that, I have not gone into that question. I consider it necessary to secure a competent man, and one who would have the confidence of the workmen in doing this work, and for his salary, an adequate sum must be provided. There will also be travelling expenses of the superintendent, and occasional appointment of superintendents for particular pieces of work. The director general of public health, an officer of my department, who has charge of the quarantine service may be called upon to go to any of these public works to supervise the medical attendance if an epidemic should take place. Money must be provided for these contingencies. At the same time, I believe, with all due deference to my hon. friend's opinion and experience that we can efficiently carry out these regulations for the sum here proposed. Should a larger sum be required, it will have to be provided in future years, or, if necessary in the supplementary estimates for this year. But, so far as we can foresee at present, $5,000 will be sufficient.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. minister knows that, so far, there is no instance that has been brought to our attention except that of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway—at least I have heard of none. My opinion is that cases that would require the attention of the department in the way of sending an officer, are so rare that the director general of public health could very well afford time to attend to the work that may be required in some special part of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the director general of public health has a great deal of time on his hands—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not a great deal.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think quite enough to attend to all the duties that would be required of an officer under this Act. The hon. gentleman knows that contracts that are being carried out in well settled portions of the country will require no attention of this kind. Take, for instance the populated parts of the province of Ontario, or almost any place in Ontario—the local boards of health, which are very efficient, acting in concert with the provincial board of health, will be ready to take cognizance at once of anything requiring their attention. There may be cases in exceptional portions of the Dominion where such an officer will require to do work; but my point is, and was the other night, that the director general of public health will have plenty of time to attend to this in addition to his other duties, and the creation of this office is simply for the purpose of creating an office. Hon. gentlemen opposite have created a great many offices. I do not think that any government in Canada, in such a short time, has created so many offices as this government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is not my impression.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am afraid the number of offices created has been so great that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) has not been able to follow or record them. In his own department, quite a number of new offices have been created.

Mr. WOOD. The country is growing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend (Mr. Wood) is more active to-night than he was on the night of the coasting trade debate.

Mr. WOOD. That is all right.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He seems to have revived. Where was he when that important question relative to a great Canadian industry, the giving away of our coasting trade, was under discussion? I am speaking in all earnestness when I say that this is an unnecessary office, and, having that view I oppose the vote of the money. I do not oppose the government taking every means to maintain the health and add to the comfort of employees on public works in any portion of Canada. As much attention should be paid to these employees as to any other class of the community. But I do not think it is necessary to create a new office for that purpose. Moreover, I would point out that if the hon. gentleman is going to send his officer here and there and everywhere, whether a request is sent for him or not, he has not sufficient money here to do the work efficiently. An hon. gentleman the other night suggested that I had asked this item to stand time and time again. I took occasion to look that matter up, and I found that it stood just once at my request. Of course, if the hon. minister is bent on passing this item, it will be passed.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I agree with the necessity of looking after the health of those engaged in public works. I have been looking up the Act and find that it is open to the objection I urged at the time it was proposed. This Act professes to confer certain powers upon officers in the case of contagious diseases arising. But suppose that was in the province of Ontario, and I happened to be health officer there. I am instructed by the Department of Public Health in Ontario to do certain things, but some one representing the Dominion, comes in with supposed authority under this Act to make some other regulation. There would be a conflict of authority. In my opinion this parliament has no power to pass laws that will interfere with the carrying out of provincial laws regarding health. I agree with the minister that it is desirable that the health of people on public works should be looked after. We had such a painful illustration of what can be done by the greed of contractors in the case of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, that it suggests the wisdom of doing what can be done in that direction. I could readily understand that it would be possible for this parliament to make laws and enforce them with regard to the North-west Territories or some other place where there was no provincial authority, no local boards of health. But in the organized provinces, where there are boards of health, I do not see how they can interfere with the work of those boards under this law or by instruction to this inspector. I agree with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), that if this work is to be done efficiently, there is not enough money provided here to do it. But I raised objection to this Act when it was passed, and my opinion is the same to-day as it was then, that there would be a conflict of authority in the event of a Dominion medical man who was appointed for that purpose stepping in and interfering with the rights of the local health officer who was endeavouring to carry out a local health Act.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman's argument is directed more against the Act itself, than against this regulation which is made under the Act.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman claims that we have concurrent powers.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not prepared to give a legal opinion. When the Act was passed, it was discussed and, I believe, the Minister of Justice gave his opinion, sanctioning it, therefore, I take it for granted it is the opinion of the Department of Justice, that we have power to pass such legislation as this. My hon. friend speaks about the local health authorities. They certainly have certain powers, and in the provinces where they exist their powers are defined by provincial Acts. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Act, and then at the regulations, he will see that not only is this an Act to provide against the spread of contagious diseases, but also to provide for an inspection, to provide for proper sanitary conditions among labouring people on public works. But if the Act is in existence, and the regulations are in existence, and there is nobody to see to them, the Act is likely to be a dead letter, and, therefore, it is necessary to have a superintendent, which will carry out the provisions of the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I say the Act goes further than we are justified in going. We can deal with mortuary statistics and we can deal with quarantine. But this is not a quarantine regulation, except as regards a public work. The minister says that my argument is directed against the Act itself. I know it is, because I hold that the Act was going beyond our powers at the time it was passed. Now, he proposes to go still further, and to pass regulations upon the strength of an Act, which I hold we had no power to pass, thus intensifying the evil. But I want him to understand, that so far as we have a legal right to act, I am in favour of his scheme, but I do not like to see an attempt to carry out something that we would be unable to carry out in the event of a conflict of authority arising between the provincial and the local authorities.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Before we leave these votes, I wish to say a few words with regard to the farming interests of British Columbia. There is a general impression amongst the farmers that they have not been treated as liberally as they ought, they feel that they are neglected to a certain extent by the Agriculture Department. There also seems to be an impression in that department that British Columbia is not a farming country. Well, I admit it is not, as a farming country, to be compared with the great North-west and Manitoba; but there are, as anybody knows, who has been in that country, most magnificent stretches of country up the Cariboo wagon road, down the Okanagan valley and on the Fraser River. There is land in those regions that cannot be beaten, and also on the island, there are splendid areas of farming country of many thousand acres in extent, that will produce anything that can be raised in a climate of the kind. These farmers want no public buildings, or none to any extent, but they do think the Agriculture Department should give them the very best assistance in the way of expert advice. I asked a question in the House some time ago of the minister, as to what expert assistance was given to British Columbia, and he answered that two men had been out there for quite a length of time. Now, the Dairymen's Association met on January 12 to 13, in Victoria, and passed a resolution which I will read:

That the Dairymen's Association of British Columbia desire to impress on the hon. Minister of Agriculture for the Dominion of Canada the advisability of granting to British Columbia the advantages which have been enjoyed by the other provinces in their time of need, and which are at present enjoyed by the North-west Territories, from having an expert official devoted to the dairying interests established among them, and respectfully request that an expert in dairy matters be appointed to take up the work in the province without delay.

Now, they do not feel content that a man should go up there from the North-west for a few days, or a few weeks at a time. There are plenty of good dairy farms in British Columbia that could occupy the attention of one man, at all events, all the time from one end of the season to the other. In a letter from the secretary of that association,

Mr. SPROULE.

I find their idea is that Mr. Marker was sent out there on an average, about two weeks per annum, for the last four years. I would impress upon the minister the advisability of keeping a man there all the time. There is much support given to the farming industry in Manitoba and the North-west, and large sums of money are advanced to them, for creamery purposes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not in Manitoba, not the last four years.

Mr. PRIOR. They are managed by the government, then.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not in Manitoba, but in the North-west Territories.

Mr. PRIOR. It used to be so in Manitoba. But I think if the minister looks into the matter, he will see that he can do more than he has been doing for the farmers. I know the experimental farm is very well run there, and is under very good management; but that really does very little good for the majority of the farmers. Some of them are so far away, in a large country like British Columbia, that they really get no benefit from it. I notice in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, innumerable wharfs are being built by the government, that are of great benefit to the farmers in those provinces; but in British Columbia, ask as we may, we never get a cent for wharfs. There are any number of farmers on the coast and on the islands, who would only be too glad if the government saw fit to give them wharfs. They cannot get from the provincial government as many as are wanted. So I think the Minister of Agriculture, when he is looking after the interests of the North-west, might plead with his colleagues to see if some money might be spent on wharfs in out of the way places, so that the farmers can get their produce to market. I am sorry that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), is not present, or any other hon. members from British Columbia, because the hon. member for New Westminster represents a magnificent farming district, and I am sure he would back me up, if he were present in the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is due that I should say a word or two in reply to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) has said, and I can say that I quite sympathize with him in the expressions which he has let fall. British Columbia has magnificent agricultural capabilities. It was my good fortune last fall to pay a visit to that province. I had the opportunity of visiting the provincial fair at New Westminster, and of taking a trip to different parts of the province, where I saw a great deal of fine alluvial farming land. There are difficulties in connection with the development of agriculture in the province of British Columbia that I appreciate now more than I did before I went there. The province is so much cut up that the farming sections which have been developed and are being farmed are somewhat isolated, and it is a little more difficult to deal with them generally, or comprehensively, than it is to deal with similar land in the other provinces. That difficulty will disappear as the province gains more population, and the intervening sections are filled up and more fully cultivated. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that in various sections there are magnificent farming lands capable of splendid development, and that the people who have gone there are doing a great deal in the way of such development. My hon. friend rather desires that I should do more, and has quoted a resolution passed last January by the Provincial Dairymen's Association. I received a copy of that resolution. Since that time no less than three of the officers of my department have been out in British Columbia and have spent a considerable time in that province. I was in communication with Mr. Anderson, the official of the Department of Agriculture in the province, and I have received resolutions from that very association, and from one or two other associations there, thanking me for the response which I made to their request and expressing gratification at the fact that the officers of the experimental farm, and other officials of my department, had been out there and had given them a great deal of assistance. I propose to continue that work. It is only the other day that the live stock commissioner, appointed by my department recently, came back from a lengthy visit to British Columbia, where he came in contact with the breeders of live stock there to a very considerable extent. He is going out again in the fall to reorganize the work in such a way as will be suitable to their circumstances. Mr. Marker, manager of the creameries of the North-west Territories, and one of the best dairy experts we have in our employ, has been six weeks in British Columbia, and he will make another visit of six or eight weeks before the end of the year. It is true that we have no permanent officer in British Columbia, but the difficulties have been rather great. I am trying to work them out, and if I can find the right man, a man who will be able to understand the conditions there and help the people in a suitable way, I would be very glad to place him in that province.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister spoke of regulations made in connection with this law. Where can these regulations be seen, or have they been made yet.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The regulations were passed by order in council on January 31, 1900, and published in the Canada Gazette, February 10.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us now what the expenses of the Canadian government's commission at the Paris exposition up to date have been ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can tell you now if you wish. I can go into the whole question of the Paris exposition, if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I just want the amount up to date.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not tell the hon. gentleman without reference to my notes and going into the whole matter. The hon. gentleman can get all the information he has asked for when the supplementary estimates are taken up.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) still a free hand ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is still chairman of the commission.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And has a free hand ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As free a hand as he has always had.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the hon. minister say whom he intends to appoint to carry out this Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not. I have not anybody in view.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this cover all travelling expenses as well as salaries ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is expected to cover all expenses in connection with the carrying out of the regulations.

To pay Gilbert Dredging Company, interest ..... $22,338

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I wish to avoid repeating any portion of the explanation I made the other night that will not be necessary. Before taking up these different items which constitute this claim in detail, I beg to say that the committee were reasonably well satisfied the other night, so far as this claim was concerned, that the payment of the $29,000 did not settle this claim on the 19th April, 1894. It was an open claim, and remained open after the payment, which was made on April 19, 1894, in respect of the abandonment of those sections and parts of sections of the Cornwall Canal work, which were discontinued.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I am afraid that we are going to take more time than is necessary if we take it up in this way. What we wanted to get were certain reports of the officers of the hon. gentleman's own department, and we have not these. The hon. gentleman may have them with him, and it would facilitate matters if we had these reports laid on the Table so that we could see them ourselves ; and then, having become masters of the situation, so far as that goes, we could discuss the matter much more quickly and come to a conclusion much more rapidly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think, if the hon. gentleman will allow me ; it is not an easy matter to understand—

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot understand it by word of mouth.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think you can understand it very much better. I think, if I made a statement of the facts, it would be more helpful and it would enable hon. gentlemen to arrive at a conclusion as to the different items in the claim and the conclusions that we arrived at in regard to them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman knows that he promised us, when we were discussing this matter the other evening, to have the contract and various reports, both by the chief engineer and the resident engineer, as regards this claim, before us, but we have not got them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I told the hon. gentleman that I would bring them down. I have done so, and I will read them, because I want the committee to understand what the claim consists of. I am prepared to furnish this committee with the minutest details in respect to this claim. It is a very simple and easy matter to cast doubt upon the integrity of the department in connection with the adjustment of such claims as this.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman need not get angry. If he will give us the reports, that is all we want.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not getting angry. The hon. gentleman need not assume that I am getting angry, because I am not. In connection with these contracts, there are portions that remain in abeyance necessarily for years, pending until you come to make your final estimate, and I would ask the committee to allow me to present these matters to the committee as they were presented to me and as they presented themselves to my mind.

Mr. FOSTER. That we want the minister to do, but we also want to be in a position to understand what the minister is saying and to be able to criticise it from a knowledge of the papers. We want the minister to give us the contract, the claims that were made, the report of the officers on which the payment was made in 1894, the claims that were made since, and the report of the officers on which the minister has based the payment on which he now asks us to vote. If we had these papers we could follow the minister when he makes this explanation. I am anxious for the despatch of business on this item, and that despatch would be more rapid if the minister gives us the papers. I also asked for certain papers with respect to the Stewart claim and also as to the cement. These have not come down. Some of these nights when we are in a hurry the minister will get up and make a speech, but what we want first of all is the papers, and then we will be able to understand the explanation and the business will be despatched more promptly. There may be no ground for criticism, but we will not know that until we see the reports ourselves.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman does not say that he asked that the papers be placed on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, we want them brought down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was asked if I had these reports before me and I said I had not, but that I would bring them with me when we took up the item again. I have them here now.

Mr. FOSTER. What good are they to us over there in your book?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not believe that any one considered it a request to lay the papers on the Table. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says that he would understand these papers in a short time, I do not think he could. These gentlemen, the contractors, urged for a hearing, and they appeared before me on a fixed day, the superintendent engineer and the chief engineer being present, and we discussed the matter and I endeavoured to form the best opinion I could on it. I asked the claimants what they had to say on the other, and although this claim only amounts to $58,000 in all, we had at least three afternoons devoted to the hearing before I could get a thorough understanding of the case.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood from the minister that he heard the applicants on the one side and the engineers on the other, they being evidently against the applicants, and that he decided the case himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The conclusions in this case were reached after the discussion of each item. The claimants would give their reasons for claim No. 1 and Mr. Rubidge would say: Was not this the case, and the chief engineer would say: Was not that the case? The engineers on behalf of the government were labouring under the disadvantage that Mr. Page, the chief engineer, and Mr. Killaly, the engineer in charge, were both dead. The facts had therefore to be ascertained by investigation to a much greater degree than would have been necessary if Mr. Rubidge had been superintending engineer all along.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did the minister agree to pay this on the report of the engineers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the minister let us see that report?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will do so with pleasure. I would much prefer to approach these different questions seriatim so that they can be understood. The proper way is to take the matters up seriatim to show what conclusions were reached and why they were reached. On the 19th of April there was a settlement of the claims of these parties in respect to the abandonment of sections and parts of sections of the work, which settlement was based upon the allowance of 15 per cent for prospective profits upon the amount of the work which would have been done if the contract had been carried out.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The minister has a report from the engineer on which that settlement was made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will hear just what I have if he will permit me to continue. $29,350 was paid on the 19th of April, 1894, that being 15 per cent on $196,000. It was conceded to have been paid in a receipt given by the Gilbert Blasting Company and a letter which was attached to the receipt and which was written by Mr. Ferguson, the solicitor for the contractors. Immediately upon the payment of that amount the Gilbert Dredging Company preferred their claim, dated the 24th of April, 1894, only five days after. The following was their letter:

We beg to submit herewith our claim for extra works, damages, &c., in respect to the works executed by us on sections 5, 6, 7, 8 of the Cornwall Canal. This is separate and distinct from the claim paid to us by your department the other day for loss of anticipated profits on abandoned works.

Attached is the claim for $58,425.13, identical with the claim which I read to the committee the other night. This claim was sent by the department to Mr. Rubidge, who, in 1894, was in charge of the Cornwall work, and Mr. Rubidge made this endorsement upon it:

Full particulars should accompany this claim, without which it will be impossible to deal with it intelligently.

He knew nothing himself, not having been in supervision of the work, as to how these different items were made up or as to what constituted the basis of the claim. It appears that it was not until the 5th of August, 1899, that Mr. Rubidge made his report to the department in regard to it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was there any correspondence in the interim?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The minister told us the other night that they had been constantly, time and again, pressing this on the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So they had. They had been urging that it should be settled, but there does not appear to have been any written correspondence exchanged between them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. During the time, was Mr. Rubidge ever asked to make a report?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, frequently. I am afraid the old gentleman is a little too dilatory about these matters. The next communication we have on the subject on the files, so far as I am aware, and so far as the chief engineer is able to inform me, was on the 5th of August, 1899.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Before you go that far, you must have a final estimate. When was it made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The final estimates were not made when the hon. gentleman left the department in 1896, and they are not made up to this date.

Mr. HAGGART. That is extraordinary. When was the last payment made to Mr. Gilbert on this particular work other than the 15 per cent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell you now, nor can the chief engineer state from memory.

Mr. HAGGART. That is most important. The whole question hinges on whether or not the claim of Mr. Gilbert was considered when the final estimate and the report of the engineer were made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The claim that is included in these items was not embraced within any estimate that was made.

Mr. HAGGART. Before you come to 1899, it was in 1894. Every amount due to the contractor, and every claim made by the contractor, it was the duty of the engineer in charge of the work to report to the department; and the last payment that was made must include all the claims of the contractor, because under the contract, I understand, he is not allowed any extras unless he puts them in monthly to the department. I want to know when the last payment was made on divisions 2 and 4, apart from the 15 per cent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were not divisions 2 and

Mr. BLAIR.

4, but divisions 5, 6, 7 and 8. The hon. gentleman received in his own department a detailed claim for the month of April, 1894, to the amount of $58,000, and directed it to be sent to Mr. Rubidge to make his report upon it; and Mr. Rubidge endorsed it in his own handwriting on the 1st of May, 1894, stating that he could not make a report upon the claim or deal intelligently with it until those people furnished him with a statement of the particulars.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister does not see my point. The agreement was made in March, 1894, for a settlement in full or in part of the claim which Mr. Gilbert had for the work done independent of the 15 per cent. When was the last payment on that work made to Mr. Gilbert?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know. We will find out as soon as we can. But, I say that question cannot be a material one, when, beyond all doubt, these items were not covered or included in any such estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Rubidge wanted a full statement of particulars from the Gilbert people. Did they put that in?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They did not put it in, in writing, so far as I know. They furnished the information.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If they furnished that detailed statement, it would be furnished in writing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If Mr. Rubidge had been in charge of the work, he would not have asked for these particulars he speaks of. He was furnished with detailed items numbering 13, and aggregating in amount $58,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But he says he wants details, and he did not get them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I assume that he did not, because he does not make his report until the 5th of August, 1899.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why did he make his report then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know. No doubt he was pressed and urged by the contractors to make his report, because their claim would not be dealt with by the department until his report was received. It did not come under my personal supervision until subsequent to the receipt of this report. Indeed, I did not take it up until January, 1900. That was the first time this case was presented to me.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He could not make his report in 1894, because he had not the details; but he could make it in 1899, five years afterwards, without the details.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not any doubt that Mr. Rubidge was furnished with those particulars; but if he was, I have not them here. I am not personally aware whether he was or was not furnished with them, but I assume that he must have been.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the minister see that what we want is the statement of claim of the Gilberts, and the report of the engineer upon it, and we cannot go through with this until we have those two things. It is absolutely impossible that the minister could have paid without statement of the claim in detail, or, I should think, without a report of his engineer. Now, we have a right to see that statement of claim in detail, and to have the engineer's report upon it. That is what we want, and that is what the minister promised to bring down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is it worth while for the hon. gentleman to state that what we want and what we ought to have is the engineer's report on this claim when I am in the very act of reading the report, and these gentlemen raise a controversy as to why the report did not come earlier? There is no use presenting these matters when questions are interposed as to why certain things occurred which no human being can answer. I have the report in my hand which I am proposing to read, and which I cannot get an opportunity to read.

Mr. FOSTER. Can I not get the minister to come down to a business basis? He wants to get his estimates through, and the House wants to get them through. If the hon. minister had acted in a business way, he would have laid that report on the Table—that plain statement of the claims, the report of Mr. Rubidge and the contract—and the next day we would have had an opportunity of looking over them and could have disposed of this item in a very short time. But he will take his own way and stand up first and go through the whole of them. He may do so, if he chooses, but before he gets his estimates through he will have to lay the papers on the Table, and give us an opportunity of looking through them. It is for him to decide whether he will save time or waste time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman can see how very inconvenient it is to have to discuss these estimates without the papers being before the House. The other day, in the case of Battle Brothers, he charged me with discourtesy in not having told him, before he brought down his estimates, that I required these papers when the estimates were being discussed. But I had not asked for the papers because the discussion which gave rise to my question arose before I supposed the item would have been brought down at all. Then he said, it is no use quarrelling over that point, I will bring down the papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that it was suggested that I should bring down the returns and lay them on the Table?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend must remember that these papers are very voluminous, and you cannot have them copied in a moment. I am not going to put the originals on the Table, but would have given instructions and had them copied. There is nothing about the papers that I am not perfectly willing to submit.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman is introducing a new rule. Parliament is entitled to have the originals on the Table.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it is.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman is absolutely wrong. Parliament has a perfect right to the originals, more especially when discussing the estimates. He says it will take time to copy these papers. Well, I do not know the length of these documents, but my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) asked him if he would bring them down, and the hon. gentleman said that certainly he would, and would lay them on the Table.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will not find, on referring to Hansard, that any such statement was ever made by me.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have not consulted Hansard, but I remember the discussion perfectly well, and I am quite certain that it ended when the hon. gentleman told us he would give us the information we required before we could discuss that item. I have not heard of any other minister than the hon. gentleman, administering any department of this or any other government, ever stating to parliament that we are not entitled to have the originals on the Table. No individual member would have the right to take them away, but for the purpose of discussing the estimates, the originals must be placed on the Table where they can be examined by gentlemen who take an interest in the item under discussion.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman tell this committee the date of that receipt of settlement for $29,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The 19th April, 1894, and the 24th of April, 1894, the claim that I have read several times was presented by these contractors. If the hon. gentleman who now asks that these papers should be placed on the Table had stated so, we would have understood each other. I thought that they would be satisfied if I brought the papers here, and I have them here now, and in my explanation desire to use them. I have no objection to allow hon. members to have these papers, but unless the House should order that the original papers should be laid on the Table, I would not understand that I was to do so.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It has been done frequently.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it is at all usual to do that. I have brought the original papers with me for the purpose of quoting from them by way of explanation, but I do not think it is usual to lay original papers on the Table. If hon. members want to have an opportunity of going through these papers, I will have them copied and put in their hands. I do not want to take any other course than one that will facilitate business, but I can assure hon. gentlemen that after they have the papers they will require an explanation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We want to get them in order to ask explanations.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the hon. minister does not think we are going to purloin the papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. We are all members of parliament together, and if the hon. gentleman would put the original papers on the Table, if they even came to my desk or the desk of the ex-Minister of Railways, he may be certain that they would be returned. The minister must not run away with the idea—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman need not undertake to lecture. I am not going to be lectured by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister must submit to be lectured so long as we feel disposed to lecture him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not without protest.

Mr. FOSTER. He may protest as much as he likes, but he will have to sit quiet and receive his lecture despite his protest. He will not get a dollar until we have had the papers in our possession. I want him to understand perfectly now that we want those papers in order to have an opportunity of examining them ourselves in our own hands, and we must have them before the estimates pass. He can give his explanations and take two hours doing it if he likes, and then he will have to let his items stand until we have the papers and go over them ourselves. He can let the item stand now and give us the papers, and then we will discuss it together, and come to an understanding, or he can give his explanation now, and then let the item stand until we have looked into the papers. He may not think it worth while giving us those papers, because it is an abstruse question and we would not understand it, but we will try, with our little ability, to understand it from an examination of the papers ourselves. We stand on an exact equality with the hon. minister, and we require the information which is at his hand just as he himself has it. I never yet heard of a minister objecting to put any papers or contracts on the Table until the hon. minister himself made such an objection last session when we discussed the matter nearly twenty-four hours, and the discussion ended in the hon. gentleman having to bring down the original papers and put them on the Table. He did more, he came over to the leader of the opposition and myself, and we went over the original papers together, and we found that the hon. gentleman was mistaken. We found that he stated a thing was so when it was not, and he had to acknowledge that he was wrong.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is drawing on his imagination.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, now, I want to make a formal request in the most formal way I can and in the most definite way, to have brought down to this House a statement of the Stewart claim; a statement of the costs that have so far been paid; a statement of all the awards that have been given in that suit with reference to Stewart so far; a statement of the claim for damages which is now before the court and the costs which have been incurred so far with reference to that. My hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) will make his own formal demand with reference to the cement case. He made it before and was promised the papers, but my hon. friend's (Mr. Blair's) memory has played him false again. He does not need to copy the records of a great many transactions. He can get one of his officers to make a statement that will be sufficient for our purposes on two pages of foolscap. What we want is to have it down definitely so that we can see it and analyse it for ourselves. This is not unreasonable and the hon. minister will not say it is. It is for him to say whether he will give us the papers and then discuss the question or whether he will make a one-sided discussion of it, and then let the item stand until we have the papers and are able to form an opinion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There would not have been the slightest objection to the request if it had been made and there was no reason why it should not be complied with. But I understood, rightly or wrongly, that what was wanted was to have the documents here when these items came up again. These documents are here. But I should not be asked to lay original documents on the Table. That is not as the hon. gentleman suggests, because I fear that anybody will run away with the papers. But every member of the House has as much right to see them as has the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster); and papers passing from hand to hand may be mislaid without the slightest intention on anybody's part of doing any wrong. Original documents of value as records should not be handled in that careless manner. If I had understood that hon. gentlemen desired to have these papers in their hands, I would have had them copied as rapidly as possible and placed at their disposal.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. minister can have them copied yet. He had better let the item stand until that is done. We do not wish to delay the hon. minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What I object to is to have it assumed that there is any unwillingness on my part to furnish hon. gentlemen with the documents they require. I unquestionably had no desire to do that. But I doubt that with the documents they can come to a proper understanding of the case in the absence of explanation.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister says that the matter was settled by the chief engineer, and he has the chief engineer's report on that subject.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. That is one document I want.

Mr. FOSTER. We want a statement of claims made by the company; we want the report of the engineer on which the settlement of 1894 was made; we want a statement of the claims that were preferred on the basis on which Mr. Rubidge's report was given in 1899; and we want Mr. Rubidge's report of 1899. If we had these and the original contract we should have all the papers, so far as I know, that are necessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And we want the correspondence between the department and Mr. Rubidge which led to the making of his report in 1899.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware, nor is the chief engineer aware of there being any correspondence as to the making of the report. He may have been called upon personally or by telephone.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I refer to the details which Mr. Rubidge asked for in 1894, but which he evidently did not get.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer tells me that he cannot say that details were furnished in writing. They are not in the files here. If they were furnished Mr. Rubidge would have them in Cornwall, and we should have to send for them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The details would be sent to the department here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they are not sent here.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would also like to get the papers relating to the Battle case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All right.

Mr. HAGGART. The two last estimates on which payments were made to Gilbert & Company on the sections on which work was stopped other than the 15 per cent allowance on the $190,000—we would like to get those also.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to capital—St. Lawrence River—

Gas buoys .....	$37,160
Surveying, removing boulders, &c.....	40,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was asked to state the places at which these gas buoys were to be placed. The list is as follows: Worth Channel (both entrances), 2; King William's shoal, 1; Sparrow Hawk's Point, 1; Toussaint Island Point, 1; Point Iroquois shoal, 1; Morrisburg East, 1; Doran's Island, 1; Jackass, 1; Chrysler's Island, 1; Weaver's Point, 1; Goat Island, 1; Baker's Point, 1; Hoople's Creek, 1; Cornwall Island, 1; Clarke's Island, 1; Squaw Island shoal, 1; Island bank, 2; Point Mouille Flats, 1; Point Lewis Flats, 2; St. Zotique, 1; in stock, 2; total, 24.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these gas buoys placed and the lights arranged on that stretch of navigation on the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries' officers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. Mr. Rubidge, the superintending engineer for canal navigation.

Mr. FOSTER. From whom are these bought?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Schreiber cannot tell me the name of the firm that they are bought from, but the agent here in Ottawa is Mr. R. M. Courtney, son of the Deputy Minister of Finance.

Mr. FOSTER. Were tenders asked for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No tenders were asked, because this is the only concern which manufactures them.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there only one kind of gas buoy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume there may be others, but this is regarded as the best buoy.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is Mr. Courtney regularly in that business?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know whether he is in it regularly or irregularly. I had no communication with Mr. Courtney personally, on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. On what recommendation did the department buy them?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Rubidge recommended these buoys to the chief engineer, and the chief engineer recommended their purchase. These buoys were purchased from the same people that the United States government purchased their buoys from.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What was the cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One thousand five hundred and seventy dollars each, the same price the American government paid.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It ought to be easy to arrive at the value of these buoys. They were used by the Department of Marine and Fisheries on the St. Lawrence River for six or seven years, although I do not know that they are identically the same with those which the hon. gentleman wants to use on the canal. Gas buoys as a protection for navigation have been known for a number of years, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will corroborate my statement that they have been used on the River St. Lawrence at several points for years and years. Without contending that the item is an improper one, we require that information from the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the particular information the hon. gentleman desires?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We mentioned the other night the information which was required, the name of the manufacturers, and also the places where the buoys were to be located. We have the names of the places where they are located, and now we want to know who are the manufacturers, and the price paid for the buoys.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand that the gentleman from whom these were purchased is Mr. Courtney, son of the Deputy Minister of Finance. That is not a matter with which the House has any reason specially to deal, unless there are special circumstances in connection with the purchase. If young Mr. Courtney is regularly in that business, if he carried through this transaction as part of his regular business, and the government purchased through him, this committee can offer no objection, even though he got a fair-sized commission. But if, on the other hand, he is not in that business, but is engaged in some other business, and the government made a special case for that purpose and that particular transaction, and he becomes the agent of these men, then I think the committee ought to know it. I am not casting any suspicion whatever upon this purchase, nor upon the agency of the young man, but certainly the relationship between a deputy minister and the government is such, and particularly the relationship between the Deputy Minister of Finance and the government is such, that the government should not travel out of the ordinary course of business to make a purchase from any one so closely associated with the deputy minister, as this gentleman is in a family way. If he is not in that business regularly, the House ought to have every particular before the vote is passed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The necessity of purchasing these buoys was represented to me by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, in view of the demand that was being made upon us for proper lighting in the river reaches. The deputy minister states that Mr. Rubidge had represented to him that the best buoys that we could get, were the same buoys that had been selected by the United States government to be used for the lighting of their wharfs, and that Mr. Courtney was the agent for these.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is Mr. Courtney's business?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is an agent in the town. I had no communication myself with Mr. Courtney, and never saw him on the subject.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where is Mr. Courtney's place of business?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On Sparks street, I am told. He is an agent doing business, handling cements, hardware and articles of various kinds, and amongst the rest he is agent for this concern. It was not a case such as the hon. member suggests at all of going out of the way, or of going to some person not in ordinary business.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not even suggest that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not the case. The firm of Mr. Courtney were carrying on a regular business of sale and purchase on commission, and they are carrying it on up to this day, although Mr. Courtney himself, I believe, is in South Africa.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will bring down the name of the firm ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The minister will really bring down the name of the firm ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes.

Intercolonial Railway—To provide for building for baggage and express at Truro... $2,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if members of parliament are allowed to distribute free passes on the Intercolonial Railway ? A letter was sent to me by a gentleman in Matane inclosing a copy of a letter which was written by an hon. member of this House, Mr. Ross, the member for Rimouski. It is in French, and I am translating it :

I inclose a pass for a trip from Petit Metis to Montreal and return. I think if you can come up here I will be able to demonstrate to you that everything, under the circumstances, which could be done has been done in favour of our friend, Mr. Fabien Morin.

I am, yours truly,

A. ROSS, M.P.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that the genuine signature of Mr. Ross ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, it is a copy of a letter which was inclosed to me. I know the gentleman who sent it to me. It does not pretend to be anything else than a copy of the letter. I do not know what the important nature of the business was, but it is very important to know whether even on very important business it is permissible for members of parliament to utilize the Intercolonial Railway and to send a free pass to a gentleman whom he wishes to see in Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has mentioned the matter, and I will make inquiries. I can say that Mr. Ross received no passes from me to distribute, or a pass for any person, unless it might be for Mrs. Ross. I give members of parliament passes for their wives when they ask for them, but I do not give them to anybody else. Will the hon. gentleman give me the name of the person to whom this pass was given ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, I am quite prepared to hand over the copy of the letter to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). It is quite possible that the same thing has occurred in this connection as sometimes occurs in connection with other railways where, in cases of disputes arising over freight or baggage charges, passes are sent to claimants to enable them to go and confer with officials of the road. I received, for a client, in one instance, not from the Intercolonial, but from another railway company, a pass to enable a claimant to go and interview one of the head officials of the road.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have followed the course which appeared to me to be fair. I have submitted the case to the minister, and I have given him all the information which I myself possess. I do not say whether it is a case in which a pass might be properly given or not, but I want to know from the minister whether it is such a case. I express no opinion at all, but I do express my astonishment that any member of parliament should write a letter to a gentleman and say : I am sending you a free pass to come from Petit Metis to Montreal on important business. It certainly requires an explanation, so that the people of the country may know how the department is administered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member whose name is mentioned will be here on Monday. In the meantime, I will make inquiries. He received no passes from me and the deputy says he received no passes from him. It may be that he bought a ticket and sent it to the man ; that would be a pass.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before the hon. gentleman passes away from the question, I would ask him what are the initials of Mr. Courtney ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know ; his name is Reginald.

Mr. MONTAGUE. R. M. ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He does not advertise as a commission merchant. His card is in the Ottawa directory as 'R. M. Courtney, Insurance Agent.' It gives the insurance company he represents. There is nothing whatever about a commission business of any kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman assumes that because he may be carrying on an insurance business, he would not be carrying on any other business.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I assume that if he was carrying on an insurance business and another business, he would advertise it on his cards.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The deputy minister tells me he is carrying on an insurance business and another business, and if he is not correct, we can easily find it out.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it understood to be a part of the rule of the Railway Department, that in addition to the passes given to members, passes are given to their wives and members of their families ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, a trip pass during the session.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is the rule it ought to be made general, so that it would not be necessary to go and ask for it. Of course, in one sense, a thing that is worth anything is worth asking for, but after all, one puts himself under an obligation when he asks for a thing as a favour. I do not suppose that members on this side of the House would care to do that, even with so genial a person as the Minister of Railways. If it is going to be done at all, it should be done generally, as a matter of right, and not as a matter of favour.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The members receive annual passes, but these are trip passes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it confined to during the session ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only during the session of parliament. No member gets it unless he applies, and I do not think there is any member of parliament who applied and has not promptly been accorded the courtesy.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that extend to members of the family ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I have declined to extend it to the family of members on either side of the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You have to draw the line somewhere.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it advisable to extend it. Might I ask the hon. member from Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron), whether he saw the original of this letter ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, I just received this copy. I will give the hon. gentleman the name of the man who sent it, if he wishes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is it, please ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The name is L. H. Chouinard, of Matane.

To extend dyke at Leper's Brook..... $300

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This brook overflows its banks and floods the pits of the engine-house every year. This vote is to prevent that.

To build iron highway bridge, Rocky Lake. $5,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are three public railway crossings there and a dynamite factory near, and wagons loaded with dynamite now cross the track. There is an element of danger, apart from the ordinary hazard, and it is proposed to build an overhead bridge, and divert the highway.

Mr. FOSTER.

To provide additional houses for engines. $80,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for the purpose of enlarging a number of the engine-houses along the road. It is intended to put in an entirely new eighteen-stall engine-house at Stellarton, which has become necessary.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What will be done at Rivière du Loup ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We intend to extend and enlarge the engine-house there.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not a new building ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, an addition.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Is it intended to extend the engine-house at Sydney ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We hope to be able to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What additional size is to be added ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say what the cost of each will be, but the average will be in the neighbourhood of $10,000. It is likely we will have to enlarge Sydney more than we originally contemplated. The grant may be sufficient to enable us to do that although it may fall short.

Mr. FOSTER. Has not the enlargement and additions to engine-houses previously been charged to revenue ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As a general rule that has been the case, but the demands that are now arising are of an exceptional and unusual character. Our engines have to be larger and heavier, and we require extensions of this kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman think that whereas in former years when it became necessary to enlarge these engine-houses, they were charged to the revenues of the road, does he think that it makes any difference as to whether these are large or small engines, as to the method of charging such extensions. The fact is that the hon. gentleman is rendering completely useless any comparison as to the expenditures and receipts upon the Intercolonial Railway system by charging to capital account such items as this $80,000 for the enlargement of station-houses, which were formerly charged to running expenses. This leaves the hon. gentleman $80,000 of revenue available for the purposes of a surplus. It is an easy matter to have surpluses if the hon. gentleman will change the method of appropriation and book-keeping, and will take out of capital and borrowed money what was formerly taken out of the earnings of the road. But how foolish it is to go about the country bragging about a surplus which you make in that way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The answer to the statement which the hon. gentleman makes lies on the surface. What seems to be giving the hon. gentleman the most concern is the fear that this disturbs the value of a comparison. There is an easy and proper way in which you can make comparisons between the management and administration of the road at one period, and the management and administration at another. It is by ascertaining how much money was laid out of your earnings in each period for purposes of maintaining, repairing, improving and bettering the road and the equipment of the road. Here an emergency arises, a special condition presents itself; your business grows by one-half, you have to supply your road with additional and larger engines; you have to incur expenditures, either on capital account or out of income, away in excess of the receipts of the year. Would it be fair under these new and altered conditions to charge this extraordinary expenditure against the income of the year, and make out a deficit to the amount of half a million of dollars, when no necessity for such expenditures arose in times past? Would that be a fair comparison? It would no doubt suit the hon. gentleman when he wanted to show a deficit; but it would not be a fair comparison, and if a comparison is not fair, it ceases to be of legitimate value.

Mr. FOSTER. Did they never build engine-houses before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The engines built on the Intercolonial Railway have all been built out of capital.

Mr. FOSTER. And the engine-houses enlarged?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know of any enlargements before. The necessity for enlarging the engine-houses never existed until now. The engine-houses which we have are not thrown away, because we have a number of small engines; but for the larger engines we are getting, we require larger turntables and larger engine-houses.

Mr. HAGGART. There was $40,000 voted last year, and you are now asking for $80,000, making in all $120,000. Will that finish the expenditure, or how much more will be required?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say that that will finish it entirely. I am only asking for what will provide for the lay-out of the present year. We asked for $60,000 last year, but we were not able to make arrangements to spend the money—we could not get the work done—and in the supplementary estimates for the present year we are asking parliament for a revote of $52,000 out of the $60,000 which we got last year.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to impress on the hon. minister the advisability of moving the engine-house in the town of Sydney to some other place, if possible.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I believe we are going to do that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The congested state of business close to the station, and the close proximity of the engine-house make it difficult to have business conducted there properly. The engine-house is also very close to one of the most important crossings in the town, and there is great danger arising from the way in which the railway crosses the street at present. Unless some precaution is taken, there will be serious accidents at that crossing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have had our engineers and officers down there with the view of providing new arrangements. I have the data available, and will call attention to the details when the supplementary estimates are up, touching the very subject the hon. gentleman has referred to. I think that the plans of the engineer will meet the needs of the situation.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman cannot make that crossing safe without providing a gate, because the railway track is right at the end of the bridge, and when teams are on the bridge they have to come within two feet of the track before they can see an engine coming out of the yard. The high board fence which is there prevents an engine being seen until you are within a few feet of the track, and unless something is done, a serious accident may happen at any moment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are going to make an entire change.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). Besides the danger alluded to by my hon. friend, I would draw the minister's attention to the extremely dangerous condition of two other crossings in the town of Sydney—the Mackenzie crossing and the Lorway crossing. The town is fast growing in the direction of these two crossings, and at the Mackenzie crossing the banks are very high on each side of the highway, and the street leading to the town of Sydney, crossing the railway at that point, comes right up on to the railway. The Lorway crossing is equally dangerous. In fact, a man was killed there the other day, and something certainly should be done to prevent further fatalities happening. There is again the McKeagney crossing, very near the bridge, where the Sydney and Louisburg Railway joins with the government road. There is a number of tracks there, and this is the greatest thoroughfare going into the town of Sydney. Between the two crossings there is only a very small space, and often teams are caught there as in a trap. I was requested particularly to draw the attention of the minister to the condition of these three crossings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will they require to be protected by gates?

Mr. GILLIES. Certainly. The department will be liable some of these days to heavy damages unless the precautions I indicate are taken.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Picton). I would like to get the attention of the hon. minister for a few moments with reference to the inspection of coal, as now conducted on the Intercolonial Railway system. In 1897. William B. Moore was coal inspector, and was dismissed that spring. I asked the hon. minister, in the course of that session, about this matter, and he told me the office had been abolished, but I have since learned that there are three individuals now acting as inspectors doing the same work Mr. Moore did. Will the hon. minister inform me who these are and what salaries they are getting?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If there are any inspectors there, they are only temporarily employed, and I cannot tell whether there are any, but I will telegraph in the morning for the information, and give it to the hon. gentleman before the estimates finally pass.

To pay balance due on Halifax cotton factory branch ..... $5,802 50

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a matter to adjust book-keeping. There is no other way in which you can get this rectified.

Mr. POWELL. What is the arrangement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This Halifax cotton factory branch was originally built by the Halifax Cotton Company at their own expense for the purpose of affording a satisfactory means of railway connection with their factory on the high ground. This branch was such a convenient way of reaching the city, that it came into use to a very large extent by the Intercolonial Railway for its traffic. The Cotton Company agreed to transfer and have transferred all their interests in the line to the Intercolonial Railway. It was built originally at the expense of the Cotton Company, but with the understanding that we were to take it and operate it.

Mr. POWELL. What is the length of the branch?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It must be about three miles. We have a vote later on to provide for extending it. The present item is simply a matter of book-keeping. There is the sum of $5,802 standing in our books and we want to have it struck off.

Intercolonial Railway—To provide freight shed and improve station at Rockingham. $1,800

Mr. POWELL. What improvements are to be made at this station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is now a small building which is used for both freight and passenger business. We propose to keep this for one of these purposes and put up an additional building for the other, and also, in the new one, to have another story, where the stationmaster can live.

Intercolonial Railway—To extend the cotton factory branch at Halifax..... $7,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the item to which I just referred. We own no land at the top of this height of ground, and have no place for our cars to stand. A large amount of business has drifted in that direction, and our cars are standing about, often blocking the streets and causing a great deal of public discontent. It has been found necessary to get additional land and lay down tracks and sidings, and, generally, to extend the line to a point in front of the commons.

Mr. HAGGART. How many miles is the extension?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The branch is about three miles, and it is proposed to extend it about half or three-quarters of a mile.

Mr. HAGGART. And it is to cost $70,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, land is the most expensive item.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does it go on any part of the commons?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We go to the south-westerly side—not the part facing the harbour.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this to accommodate the Cotton Company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there is no occasion for it for their purposes, except that the cotton factory helps to swell the business and thus makes it necessary to provide more accommodation. A large number of residents of the city live up there, and a great deal of our traffic is carried up there at the desire of the people, because they get their freights delivered more satisfactorily than if they have to haul them up this hill.

Mr. FOSTER. How much did we spend on this extension ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Speaking from recollection, our expenditure was in the form of four or five thousand dollars worth of rails which were furnished by the late government. And, some time after they were furnished parliament passed an Act—one of the clauses of a Subsidy Act, I think, allowing the rails to be placed in construction on the Halifax Cotton Company's line and taken out of store account.

Mr. GILLIES. Will the hon. minister state what the land will cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have had careful inquiries made into the question of right of way. We have paid nothing and have not yet acquired the land, waiting until we get the authority of parliament. I have before me a statement which has been prepared by the engineer upon this very subject of the valuation of the land we are proposing to take. Upon the valuations which we have ascertained, we judged that it would take to pay for the land and the consequences upon taking the land, $70,000 or $80,000. The extension proposed will cost $96,000.

Mr. POWELL. Are you going to have a station up there ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not contemplated to have a passenger station, we will have some freight buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this for the cotton factory accommodation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How is it that the parties interested in this siding do not provide the right of way, as we have to do in our town ? For instance, the town of North Sydney had to pay for the right of way for five miles into the town, otherwise they would not have got the railway. The town of Sydney could not get a railway to the water terminus, or to where the station is, without making a gift to the railway, of the right of way, at a cost of thousands of dollars. I cannot understand why a different rule should be applied in one case to that which is applied in another.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the case of North Sydney they were desirous of having this extension made to the deep water, and they themselves made the offer, that if the government would do so and so, they would make a contribution of their own. That was the inducement held out, upon the strength of which the extension was made. This extension we are making at Halifax, is entirely for our own accommodation, and not in the interest of any individuals or residents in that locality.

Mr. GILLIES. In the case of North Sydney, before the railway could be got to the old terminus at all, the government made it a precedent that the town should furnish the right of way from the junction into the town; that was under the late government. The people of North Sydney did furnish the right of way from the junction to the town. The first location of the road into the town of Sydney, was placed at Fresh Water Creek, so-called, a distance of a mile from the present terminus, and when the people approached the government, and asked it to extend the road around the town to the deep water terminus, the government took the ground, that having selected the terminus, if the town wanted a deep water terminus, they would have to furnish the right of way between the place selected by the government and the place desired by the town. That was done, and the town paid thousands of dollars for that right of way. If it was made a condition that these towns should furnish the right of way, why should the rich city of Halifax call upon the government to pay $70,000 or $80,000 to pay for a siding ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The city of Halifax is making no demands, this is done in the interest of our own road.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The city of Halifax has terminal facilities given at public expense; they have the deep water terminus, the terminus at Richmond, and a terminus at the passenger station. To my mind this is done for the convenience of a portion of the people of the city, who desire to have this cotton factory siding, because it will be nearer to them than to the other station. Halifax is being treated more generously than the town of Sydney and the town of North Sydney. In the case of North Sydney, when the road was surveyed, the department provided only for going as near North Sydney as the junction, and when they were pressed to reach the town, the decision of the chief engineer was, that the government should not provide the right of way, but that the people should provide the right of way if they wanted the railway to go right into the town, and they did so, because they were determined to get it at any cost. It was the same in the case of Sydney. When the chief engineer decided on locating the terminus at what is known as Fresh Water Creek, the chief engineer took the ground that if they wanted the terminus anywhere else, they would have to pay for the right of way, and so they did. Instead of that being only for the convenience of the town, the location of the terminus at Sydney is more for the benefit of the railway, inasmuch as they were better able to make their connection with the Sydney and Louisburg Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must not overlook the fact that there was not a large business at North Sydney, when this arrangement was made, to invite the construction of this railway, from a railway point of view. Therefore, it was that the government asked the people to pay for the right of way.

Mr. McDOUGALL. No, there was business always waiting for the railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It appeared to me to be a reasonable explanation of the action of the late government in the matter, but perhaps I am wrong in that, and I will have to leave the matter unexplained. As to this project all of this railway to the Halifax Cotton Company's premises was built at the expense of the Cotton Company.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did they provide the right of way?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they did it at their own expense. Now, the business conditions have so changed that we are obliged to increase our own accommodation. It is not a matter that we are asked to do by the corporation of Halifax, or by any of the people resident there. I have had no petitions from the people in the locality asking that this should be done, but it becomes absolutely necessary that we should increase our accommodation.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it proposed to buy out the interest of the Cotton Company, or to recoup them for what they have spent on the siding?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we do not require to buy it out. The cotton factory people agreed that the road should belong to ourselves if we would operate it. It was not supposed, I presume, that it would be very profitable to do so, or not sufficiently profitable to induce us to do so unless we were bound. We accepted the line on the condition that we would operate it. Now, the Intercolonial are driven by the increase of business, to extend this line to where they can get more yard room and where they can have tracks laid down to stall their cars.

Mr. POWELL. Have you expropriated the land for it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we have not struck a blow. The land on which the Cotton Company built the road was paid for by themselves.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this $70,000 finish it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it will require $26,000 more next year.

To increase station accommodation at Westville ..... $8,000

Mr. POWELL. Is that to be a new station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we are converting the present building into a freight shed, and we are building a new station.

To increase accommodation at Sydney.... $39,000

Mr. McDOUGALL. What increased accommodation is it proposed to give Sydney?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We propose to put in an additional siding to add to the freight house and the building adjoining, and we have to acquire land and to fill in a water lot. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) knows the lot I allude to. We have made an arrangement with the Steel Company which has bought rights in that neighbourhood. We think we have half of the property.

Mr. GILLIES. Are you buying from the Dominion Iron & Steel Company any land?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, whatever rights they may have in it they are willing to surrender to us. We claim that as riparian owners our property would run out to the middle of the body of water. I think, from a conversation I had with representatives of the Dominion Steel Company there would be no disposition on their part to raise any question to our rights. We have to fill in a water lot.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is that filling in to take place nearly opposite the station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I thought there was a question about the ownership of the property.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Steel Company have bought up all the claims to the property.

Mr. McDOUGALL. To the water's edge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. Whatever remains would belong to the government and we are going to come to an understanding whereby we will get half of the property.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There is another piece of land, which, I understand the government are taking over farther down from the station at what is known as Barrack Point, a property known as Louisa Garden.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I can locate the property that the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the purchase of that property been completed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The latest information that I had on the subject was that the purchase had not been completed, but it was thought to be in a fair way to completion. I think the parties have agreed practically. There are two lots we are getting, one of which we will likely have to appropriate, while the parties are willing to sell the other at the price we are willing to pay.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There are two other properties, I understand, the government have been negotiating for, one between the bridge of the Steel Company's Works and the station, and one on the other side between it and the Sydney and Louisburg Railway before you come to the station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the department closed for the purchase of these properties?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have just said to the hon. gentleman that I think we can come to terms in regard to one of them, but in regard to the other I have my doubts.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the minister tell me the names?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Would it be Muggah?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the name of the party, I think, that we cannot come to an agreement with.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The other party is Mitchell. I think it is more likely that you would be able to come to an agreement with Mitchell.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not clear about it. There is one property that we will have to appropriate.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The other property is known as the Louisa Garden. It is away beyond that. Will the minister tell me the area of the land he proposes to take?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have plans of the whole undertaking, but I did not bring them with me. I think they will more particularly have a bearing on the items in the supplementary estimates. I will show them to my hon. friend if he would like to see them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it proposed to remove the station building from its present site?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We were considering whether we would use that for freight purposes and remove the station elsewhere, but it has not been finally determined upon.

Mr. McDOUGALL. A suitable site for the station could be found between the present site and the street leading down to the Steel Company's bridge. The present station could be utilized for freight sheds.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the suggestion.

To provide sidings at Stellarton..... $39,000

Mr. POWELL. Is it not exceptional to charge this to capital?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is entirely in accordance with precedents. It would be impossible to construct these sidings otherwise than from capital account. I do not say that they were all charged to capital formerly, but some of them were.

Mr. POWELL. What years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say just now. The sidings required are so extensive that it is absolutely impossible to provide for them in any other way.

Mr. POWELL. I think the minister is in error as to this being in accordance with precedents, because I have his return before me which he brought down last year, and in that return I find that during the years 1892-3-4-5-6, there were charged up to revenue account for sidings, no less a sum than $57,699, or a yearly average of $11,539.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and we are building out of revenue now just as extensively as they were built before.

Mr. POWELL. It is remarkable that these sidings should now be charged to capital. In the preceding years from 1881 to 1891, there were constructed sidings to the extent of $246,537 out of revenue, or a yearly average of $24,623. It does strike one as being a remarkable change.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The minister says he is building quite as much out of revenue now.

Mr. POWELL. I cannot tell what is building out of revenue this year, but his own return shows that he is in error, not only in respect to sidings, but to other things. There is a general tendency in the Railway department to charge these things to capital that had previously been charged to revenue. In this return for the five years from 1891 to 1896, buildings to the value of $30,628 were charged to revenue, and during that time I fail to find a building charged to capital. Take the rebuilding of the Halifax elevator, that whole expenditure was charged to revenue. On no system of book-keeping, giving the minister the benefit of the most scientific process, can all these works be charged to capital. The betterments might be charged to capital, but to charge the whole thing to capital is simply ridiculous work. It is done for a purpose. I might point out also the gross injustice in this case which I have mentioned. At the time of the fire the wharf was destroyed and during the last year of the administration of the ex-minister (Mr. Haggart), that wharf was rebuilt at a cost of over $50,000, which was entirely paid out of the revenues of the road. Take that item alone, and if the ex-minister (Mr. Haggart) had pursued the policy of the present minister (Mr. Blair) and had charged that to capital he would have wiped out his deficit, and have a surplus for every year he was administering the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How was the elevator built?

Mr. POWELL. Entirely out of revenue; not a dollar out of capital. From 1881 to 1891, I find from this return that $183,999.69 was expended in the reconstruction of buildings and charged entirely up to revenue. While it is true that it may be hard that very large expenditures may be made in one year, yet that did not deter former Ministers of Railways from charging to revenue what is now charged to capital. In the year 1894, $63,028.25 was charged to revenue for one building alone, and in the following year, for the completion of that building, $29,000 was also charged to revenue, and not a cent to capital, but strange to say on this very building, the present minister (Mr. Blair) has charged $7,000 to capital for fitting up an upper storey. Take the bridges. I simply wish to show how unfair it is; if for no other purpose, unfair to his predecessors that this should be done. His predecessor is attacked for allowing the road to run down, but his predecessor charged to revenue and not to capital in the five years I have mentioned no less a sum than $98,855, an annual average of $19,771 for bridges. All that was charged to revenue and not to capital. The minister (Mr. Blair) talks about the preceding history of the road. In a return which I have before me, I find that during the ten years from 1881 to 1891, the policy pursued by the present minister (Mr. Blair), was not pursued at all. When Ministers of Railways, under the Conservative government were charged by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) with improper book-keeping, with having cooked the accounts, with having fraudulently deceived the electorate; when they were charged with this, I find that no less a sum than $234,495 was expended on the construction of bridges, in many cases new, but all of which was charged to revenue and not to capital. That does not represent the whole of it, because this statement that I have is simply a statement of betterments. The original cost is not included at all. Under the hon. gentleman's method of book-keeping the original bridges were all to be thrown to the winds and the total expenditure charged to capital, whereas there is the difference between the cost of the new structures and the cost of the old structures, which should be deducted. I find an item of land damages to the amount of $2,500.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does not the hon. gentleman know that that is an item which has appeared continuously and without cessation every year since the Intercolonial Railway was built? The item of $2,000, for land damages on the Oxford, New Glasgow and Cape Breton division appeared years before I came in, and I am simply continuing it. In some years there is something paid on it, and in some years nothing, just as the claims arise.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman is charging all land damages to capital, and on scientific principles of railway book-keeping he may be correct. I am simply calling attention to the unfair comparison this leads to. During the five years covered by the return which the hon. gentleman has brought down, I find that there was an expenditure on land damages of $12,988, or an annual average of $2,598, every cent of which was paid out of revenue. I also find that from July 1, 1881, down to July 1, 1891, a period of ten years, on land and land damages there was expended out of the revenues of the road $30,802, or an annual average of $3,080; whereas, the hon. gentleman is charging all these to capital. Another item here is $2,000 for a building for baggage and express at Truro. If the hon. gentleman will take the pains to look back, he will find that buildings to a much larger extent than that have been frequently charged to revenue and not to capital—not only station-buildings, but residences for station agents. Here is an item of $300 to extend a dyke charged to capital. In other years a trivial item like that would be charged to revenue and not to capital. We have here an item of $16,200 to increase accommodation at Halifax. I do not know exactly what that means, but last year we had a similar instance with respect to Moncton. There was an item chargeable to capital put in the estimates during 1896 by the ex-Minister of Railways in connection with the re-building at Moncton. So far as that stone and brick building was a betterment upon the old one, so far would the expenditure be charged to capital; but the old building was there, and yet, the total outlay is charged to capital, and not a cent to revenue.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimates were prepared by the late government.

Mr. POWELL. So far as the charge was for betterment, it was rightly charged to capital; but, the hon. gentleman does not charge it to capital on the basis of betterment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was not made on any such basis, either.

Mr. POWELL. I happen to be able to tell the hon. gentleman that the estimate was for only a portion of the expenditure, the betterment portion, which was a capital item. That item was put in at my own solicitation. I talked the matter over with both the ex-Minister of Finance and the ex-Minister of Railways. We discussed it from top to bottom, and they thought that inasmuch as there were considerable outlays made at Halifax and other places during 1896, which had to be charged in the accounts of that year, they could not see their way to contribute it at that time. I pointed out that betterment was a fair charge to capital expenditure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have the estimates and the explanations, and it was not on that basis.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman is venturing an assertion at random about something which he can absolutely know nothing about. He knows that there was an item in the estimates, but further than that, he is merely surmising. I happen to be in a position to know.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, it is very strange if it did not appear.

Mr. POWELL. I asked the hon. gentleman if the explanations ever appear in the estimates. What a silly thing that is for a Minister of Railways to say.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not state that they appear in the estimates, but they do appear in the office.

Mr. POWELL. I ask the hon. gentleman if he saw in the office any explanation different from what I have given?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have seen none such as you have given.

Mr. POWELL. Did the hon. gentleman see any explanation of it? I might go into other matters, such as the changing of air-brakes on passenger cars, $13,000. If I mistake not, these improvements on passenger cars were formerly charged almost entirely to revenue, and not to capital. For instance, I find that from 1881 to 1891, there were improvements in freight cars amounting to $45,000, or $4,500 per annum, all charged to revenue and not to capital. And see also that there were charges amounting to $90,000 for betterments on locomotives between 1881 and 1891, and these were all charged to revenue and not to capital. And by the return which the hon. gentleman has brought down, I find that between 1881 and 1897, a total of no less than $115,062 was charged to revenue and not to capital. In the same way, I find that from 1891 to 1896 an expenditure of $41,462 on passenger cars, and $177,822 on other classes of cars were charged to revenue. If the hon. gentleman is going to adopt the principle of charging to capital instead of to revenue not only all betterments, but all these outlays, which were previously charged to revenue, he can see how absolutely fallacious is any comparison which he attempts to make between his own administration and the administration of his predecessor. I shall not take up the time of the House in discussing the matter at unnecessary length at this stage of the session; but, I do protest against this method of charging to capital what should be charged to income; and if the hon. gentleman continues to pursue the course he has adopted, then, I think it would be only fair, in giving his statement to the House and the country, that it should be supplemented by a statement on his part showing candidly that he is adopting a principle which is unfair to the administration of his predecessors, in some cases to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I remember when the leader of the opposition was Minister of Railways, we had a very lengthy discussion in this House on items then charged to capital account that we thought should have been charged to working expenses. Some of those items were snow-sheds. In some cases, snow-sheds had been burnt on the Intercolonial Railway, and the new ones erected in their place, were charged to capital account.

Mr. FOSTER. What year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not remember.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not remember the year, but can turn up the discussion. Snow-sheds were actually charged to capital account, and the leader of the opposition, who was then Minister of Railways, said that while the repairs to cars should be charged to working expenses, new cars should be charged to capital account, and new engines, unless when they replaced old ones that were worn out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has made the statements he did, because that helps us to a better understanding of his position, but I must express my surprise that, knowing thoroughly well how immensely the business of the railway has increased, and how imperative it is that these improvements, additions and extension in various ways, should take place, he should be almost the first man in this House to raise an objection to the proposed improvements.

Mr. POWELL. I am not objecting.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is objecting and endeavouring to create a feeling in this parliament against putting the Intercolonial Railway into proper shape.

Mr. MONTAGUE. State the words in which he objected.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The inference is perfectly clear. He says it is improper, that it is not a sound principle, what does that mean, but objecting?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He objected that it was not fair, for the purposes of comparison, to charge these things to capital, instead of to revenue.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Exactly, what I was proposing to do, was not fair. What was the object of the hon. gentleman's criticism?

Mr. FOSTER. To show that you are boasting of a surplus which you ought not to boast of.

Mr. POWELL. I said that it was not fair to your predecessor.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is eminently fair, and I am not boasting of a surplus I have not got. I am willing to make a comparison with the expenditure of the late government, covering all the ground which may be embraced within the improvement and betterment and the repairs of the Intercolonial Railway. Take them altogether. That is the way to do it. It is not fair to take an item here and there, as the hon. gentleman is so very ready to do, and say that the late government spent out of income a large amount for this or that purpose, but you are spending it out of capital.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman mean the House to understand that he is making quite as large an expenditure out of revenue for betterment, as his predecessor did?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I mean. I make a larger expenditure, and I have given you the figures, and want them to be challenged. The hon. member for Westmoreland undertook to deal with figures the other night, but what did he do? I had proved that the average expenditure during the years I had been in charge of the department, as compared with the three years preceding, was larger, or, in other words, that in the three years of this government, we expended on these items something like $50,000 per year more than was spent by the previous government in a corresponding period. If that statement is correct, and let hon. gentlemen contradict it if they can, it proves not that I spent as much on any one item, as perhaps the late government did upon the same item, but that my expenditure on the whole, was greater. You cannot look for the same class of outlay every year. Some years you will spend more on locomotives, in others you will spend more on buildings, and in others on rails, but taking them altogether, and comparing the three years of this administration with three preceding years, the outlay for the purposes of betterment, repairs, maintenance and equipment, made by this government, has exceeded the amount expended in the same period by the late government.

Mr. HAGGART. On revenue account?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say it is so.

Mr. FOSTER. Should not the hon. gentleman take a comparative view, based on the income of the road. You ought to spend more proportionately, when your income is greater.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not necessarily follow, but as a matter of fact, I have. I showed that this year the amount that was expended, taking into account the additional mileage of the Drummond County Railway, was over a quarter of a million more than the hon. gentleman expended during a corresponding period. The increase in the business is great, as hon. gentlemen know. We have heard nothing on the other side of the House, but appeals for extensions in all directions. The leader of the opposition, in the early part of the session, asked why I had not gone on putting up buildings, laying down additional sidings, affording more facilities, and he complained that I had not anticipated the growth of business and supplied the necessary extensions in all directions. What does that prove? It proves, accepting the statement of these gentlemen, that the increase in the business calls for larger expenditures than were ever called for before, many times larger than that ever called for by an increase in the business before, in the way of additional equipment and additional expenditure of all kinds, sidings, platforms, and other things that go to make up conveniences for the transaction of business of a railway.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are you still building loading platforms?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. When you have to extend your sidings, you have to extend your platforms as well.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We do not have them in the west.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You ought to have them; they are very useful. The hon. gentleman seems to think it is unfair for purposes of comparison that these charges should be made out of capital, overlooks the unfairness of a comparison between my administration and that of my predecessor if I were to be called upon to bear all these charges out of income. With my predecessor the business did not increase, and we did not need all these things. But I have to provide for a million and a half additional business. These hon. gentlemen think it would be all right to have all these things paid out of income. Then they could say that this government had greatly increased the Intercolonial deficit, and had spent a great deal more than their predecessors, and they would have given that as a conclusive proof that we had failed in our management. They would not take any notice of the increased demands arising. Therefore, it is that the hon. member is demanding that these sums be charged to income.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has the revenue increased in three years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About a million and a half. The revenue for the year just passed, I stated at $4,530,000. The last week was an estimate. Since then I find the actual receipts were $4,540,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That ought to carry considerable more improvements.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And it has carried $250,000 more improvements. But if the ideas of hon. gentlemen opposite had been carried out, instead of having a margin, a fair margin of profit on the transactions of the year, I would have had to spend nearly a million of money. The result in the long run—or in the short run, for that matter—is just the same to the treasury. The only complaint of these hon. gentlemen is that we are not paying all these things out of income and showing a great deficit. If the expenditures made by this government for the maintenance of the road are as large as those of their predecessors—and certainly they are larger—we have fully met the demand, and the comparison is a perfectly fair one. The hon. gentleman has gone over a number of items which, he says, had been paid for out of income by the late government. I am satisfied that I can establish that my predecessor (Mr. Haggart) built sidings out of capital, built stations out of capital, and, in fact, made all the other classes of expenditure out of capital which are charged to capital here. I do not say, and never have, that the hon. gentleman did not pay for any sidings except out of capital. I think probably he built a large proportion of sidings out of income. But I have built as many and more than he built, but more are wanted than I can build out of income. They are absolutely necessary—there is a cry from all points for them, in consequence of increased business.

Mr. HAGGART. I would call attention to the fact that while the business has increased $1,400,000, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) only wants $2,000,000 within the same period for increased rolling stock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) knows there has been an increase in the mileage, quite as much as there was in 1891, when he bought 1,016 cars of various kinds, and charged them to capital.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was not that when the road was extended to the Island of Cape Breton, when there was an additional 100 miles of railway requiring this rolling stock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not finding fault with it; but I am saying that the addition of the Montreal extension makes even a greater addition of mileage than that of 1891.

Mr. POWELL. Your additional rolling stock is all right—that is a fair charge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not got as much yet as I would be entitled to. I am willing that the comparisons should be made, but hon. gentlemen opposite want to make them one sided. Whenever he can find that I am paying for cars or for other improvements larger amounts in proportion than were expended by the late government, or if my outlay for betterments and repairs is not equal or greater than his, then, for purposes of comparison, I would be at a disadvantage.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to read for the benefit of the hon. gentleman a discussion that took place in 1885, on a vote to supply air brakes to 100 engines, $78,500 :

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would give us some information?

Mr. POPE. Up to the present time we have had the ordinary brakes in use. We have found them not only expensive but dangerous. Trains could not be stopped with them as quickly as with improved brakes. After a good deal of pressure brought to bear on the government by those who patronized the road, we felt it to be in the interest of the country to obtain the most improved brakes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Whose patent is to be used?

Mr. POPE. The Westinghouse.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman yielded to the pressure last year, for there is a large sum in the Public Accounts for the application of the Westinghouse air brake.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. An item of this kind should be taken out of ordinary income. To place charges for air brakes to capital account, which is supposed to represent permanent improvements, seems questionable policy.

Mr. BLAKE. How much has already been spent on the application of the Westinghouse air brake?

Mr. POPE. I cannot state.

Mr. SHANLY. When these 100 engines are supplied with the air brakes, will that finish the equipment of all engines on the road?

Mr. POPE. All but fifteen.

Mr. BLAKE. How many engines are there on the road?

Mr. POPE. One hundred and sixty, I think.

Mr. VAIL. There were $32,500 expended last year.

Mr. BLAKE. This is all charged to capital account.

Mr. POPE. This is a new thing, and we think it properly belongs to capital account. We have heard from hon. gentlemen opposite that in repairing rolling stock we charge it to capital account, but we do nothing of the kind. Our running power has gradually increased from $1,000,000 in 1877 to $2,170,868 this year; and as we require more rolling stock to keep pace with our traffic, we charge it to capital account.

Mr. POWELL. I fail to see the pertinency of those observations. The hon. gentleman has charged me with making an unfair statement. If he will refresh his memory he will find that in these matters I have never taken the ground that the additional rolling stock required for a new road, or required for any portion of an old road, is a proper revenue charge, or that it is wrong to charge it to capital. Any gentleman who takes that ground, notwithstanding that Sir Richard Cartwright took ground like that, is taking an unfair ground. So far as necessary additional rolling stock is concerned, the hon. gentleman is making a fair and legitimate charge. What I found fault with him for the other night is that whereas he had allowed 320 cars to be condemned and remain condemned instead of rebuilding them at the expense of revenue, he had bought 260 cars and charged them to capital. That is one item. The hon. gentleman has charged me with unfairly treating his comparisons the other night. I have to say to him that the unfairness and the absurdity are in his own comparison that he made the other night. Now, in railway accounts those matters that are betterments, those matters that look to the maintenance of the road-bed and the plant are classified under thirteen or fourteen heads. What are those heads? I have made a careful list of them: Repairs to engines, repairs to passenger cars, post, express and baggage cars, freight cars and vans, snow ploughs and flanges, ties upon the road, lumber, wharfs, buildings, platforms, rails and fencing, repairs to tools, repairs to water tanks. Those are the classes into which these expenditures for maintenance for roadway and plant are classified in the reports from time to time given out by the department. Now, the hon. gentleman makes a statement, made no doubt upon information furnished him, but information which I challenge. When I replied to him the other evening, what I objected to was that in 1893 he singled out the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals for condemnation in scrimping the expenditures upon the road, in starving the service. That charge was unfounded. In 1893, upon these thirteen services, the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals expended $1,308,413. Now, the last year ending 30th June, 1899, the hon. gentleman, with one-seventh more road than his predecessor had, expended $20,000 less; whereas he should have expended, if the former regime was running down the road, nearly $20,000 more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Have you the items there?

Mr. POWELL. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The same as you put in the other night?

Mr. POWELL. No, but I will give him the totals for the same services. In 1894 the expenditure was, $1,179,388; that is less than the minister spent last year. In 1895 the expenditure was $1,178,734; 1896, $1,278,681; in 1897, the first year the hon. gentleman came in, he expended, $1,215,045. I have not got a statement for 1898, for the reason that that year was not clear. My object was to show a comparison between the earnings of the road with the extension to Montreal, and the earnings before the extension was built, consequently I did not make a statement for 1898. But, taking these years, I find that if the hon. gentleman had, upon these thirteen services, made the same proportionate outlay that his predecessor had made in 1893, he would have expended, not $1,308,413, but $1,471,704. He actually expended only $1,283,000. So that he expended less by $188,900 relatively, than his predecessor did in 1893, when he complains that his predecessor had been starving the service of the road. I will tell the hon. gentleman how he makes it up. There are certain items that have nothing to do with the road-bed at all, that are entirely dependent upon the amount of traffic, and that is the train service. That is where the hon. gentleman has swollen his expenditures to the enormous amount he has referred to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not include items for train service at all. The hon. gentleman says that I had taken the total of the average for 1897, 1898 and 1899. I have found that upon maintenance and new plant, he was $50,000 in excess of what his predecessor had for the three previous years. Now, I call this fact to the attention of the hon. gentleman, that in 1896, or immediately preceding his advent to power, the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals rebuilt, out of revenue, the Halifax wharf, whereas the hon. gentleman is making a similar expenditure out of capital, and he omitted in his showing to take notice of this very important fact. Why, in 1898 the hon. gentleman was over $200,000 behind! Let him distribute that over his three years, and where does his $50,000 go? I put two years repairs in one.

Mr. POWELL. Well, we will give the benefit to you of two years, and then you come out behind $200,000. Irrespective of the fair addition upon what you should make on account of additional mileage, you are still behind the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, even on your own showing. When the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was boasting of his surplus, he might have reflected a moment upon this fact: Taking four years of the administration of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals and retaining that charge against the working expenses and the rebuilding of the wharf at Halifax, the hon. gentleman's annual average deficit was about $6,000, while the hon. minister's average deficit for three years is $60,000 odd. Taking out this expenditure in the Halifax wharf and the ex-minister would have an average surplus of about $8,000 per annum. But, if he will take a period of years, he will see where he is landed. The hon. gentleman has had an additional revenue of $1,500,000. In anticipation of an increase of revenue of $1,500,000 any manager of a railway would say that a very large percentage of that should be clear gain. On the contrary, the hon. gentleman only announced a surplus last year of $100,000 on increased traffic, amounting to $1,500,000. I think, in view of the fact that on the railways of Canada, every dollar of additional revenue was earned at a cost of about 22 cents, while every dollar of additional revenue was earned by the hon. gentleman at a cost of upwards of 93 cents, it is a very bad showing. If the hon. gentleman compares the management of his railway with that of the five leading railways of Canada, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canada Atlantic Railway, the Dominion Atlantic Railway, and the Canada Southern Railway, he will find that he has a worse showing than any one of these leading railways by 50 per cent. almost with the exception of the Grand Trunk Railway, which had a very small surplus.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. gentleman argue or claim that it would be desirable that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway should be raised to the same altitude as the rates of the five great railways he has mentioned?

Mr. POWELL. Now, the hon. gentleman is raising a point that I will have to ask him to put upon the Notice paper. I do not think the hon. gentleman's question is pertinent. I am speaking now of increased traffic. The rates are exactly the same as they were before, and when the hon. gentleman considers his fixed charges and considers the proportion of the variable charges, he will find that a showing of 92 cents cost for every additional dollar of revenue earned, is a very sorry showing indeed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How are the rates now as compared with 1896—higher, are they not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The local rates are higher. I pay 75 cents a ton on coal, whereas I used to pay 50 cents.

To continue improvements at Mulgrave... $25,000

Mr. McDOUGALL. What are these improvements?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a very congested point. There are no conveniences for the handling of the traffic going to and from the ferries, and we require to extend the wharf there, to fill in and grade the station yard, and to put in sidings.

To complete subway at Christy's Brook,
Amherst ..... $1,800

Mr. POWELL. Where is that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Near Christy's, where the highway crosses the railway at the rail level. There has been a good deal of complaint about that crossing.

Mr. POWELL. There was an embankment there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. We are proposing to construct a subway at Christy's Crossing.

To increase accommodation at Amherst ... $3,500

Mr. POWELL. Is that station, or yard accommodation?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We require additional siding accommodation, besides which we have to extend the passenger platform, provide a crane for the handling of traffic and to add to the baggage-room. There are several purposes for which this vote is asked.

Mr. HAGGART. A crane in the station yard?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. What kind of traffic are you providing a crane for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We require a crane to handle the traffic there.

Mr. LOGAN. It is to handle stone from the quarry.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely they provide their own crane?

Mr. LOGAN. There has always been a crane. There is a crane now, but it is not good enough for the traffic.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it possible that the railway provides the apparatus for loading?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We provide a crane to handle the traffic.

Mr. HAGGART. It was never known on a railway before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Always on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. But private parties provided it.

Mr. McCLURE. The government provides one at Truro.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Canadian Pacific Railway has one at the town where I live for loading threshing machines and other heavy freight.

To strengthen bridges..... $100,000

Mr. FOSTER. What are you going to do with this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are going to construct one bridge at Mill Stream and another at Penobscot.

Mr. HAGGART. Are you constructing or strengthening?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are taking out the structures that are there now, and in part distributing them along at various points strengthening the other ones and putting in new structures in the other cases. The plan adopted by the department is that if we have twelve bridges, we double the old ones up making six, and then make the other six entirely new.

Mr. HAGGART. On all railways, the betterment is all that is charged to capital account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what we are doing.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what I want to know. If you take up a 56-pound rail, and put in a 70-pound rail, you only charge the difference to capital account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all. That is the basis on which we are asking the appropriation.

To change air brakes on passenger cars... $13,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where are you getting this done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We get the brakes from the Westinghouse Company with whom we have a contract for a term of years.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it done by contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. POWELL. What do these cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About $40 a car.

Mr. POWELL. Are the freight cars pretty well all changed now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Our time is pretty well up for making the change.

To change draw-bars on freight cars..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. What do these cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $25 apiece.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are they got?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to speak with confidence, but there is an American patent and I think they are manufactured in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you get them by contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Are they a success?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They say so.

Mr. HAGGART. Have they been adopted by any other road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. We have notices from the several American railroads that they will not take our cars unless they are so equipped. The Baltimore and Ohio is one company.

Mr. HAGGART. Have Canadian companies got it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They must all have it, otherwise they could not send their cars across the line.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose the hon. gentleman is aware that there is a combination of the holders of patents relating to railways who endeavour to force these couplers and other things upon the railways under the pretense that they are doing it in the public interest. It is a perfect fraud, and I doubt very much whether the railways in Canada have complied with these demands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These rules, so far as they relate to the use of couplers and other apparatus, are enforced by the interstate board, and we have to submit. I have no doubt that what the hon. gentleman says is true, that the holders of these patents work up these combinations and impose their views upon the associations; but we are obliged to comply with them in order to have our cars admitted into the United States.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the minister any report from his own staff on the road with regard to these draw-bars?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that I have got what you might call a report, but every year they send a requisition of some kind.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I might say that I saw a good deal of these couplers and draw-bars in use by the brakemen on the Intercolonial Railway, and I do not look upon them as a success.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The association maintains that they are safer.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not think the brakemen would say that they are. Does the minister say that at the mere whim of a railway outside of Canada, that happens to receive a car from us, he is to change the couplers and draw-bars on his whole system?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If people who do business with us have freights which they want to send to the United States, and if our cars are not admitted to the United States, we are not going to be able to do business. We have nothing to say about this matter. We must submit, or else undertake not to forward any freight at all to the United States. That would not suit our people.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then, if there is a man connected with the Baltimore and Ohio Railway who has a draw-bar or coupler which he wants to have adopted, he has only to go to the manager of that railway and induce him to put some of them on his cars, and at once the minister will change the whole system of the Intercolo-nia Railway at the expense of this country.

Intercolonial Railway—Chargeable to capital—To provide additional rolling-stock ..... $950,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister tell us what he intends to do with this immense amount of money? Does it not frighten himself sometimes?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would be much more frightened if I had to sit here and be denounced by hon. gentlemen opposite for not providing sufficient accommodation. We have $950,000 in these estimates, $190,000 in the supplementaries of last year, and $400,000 in the supplementaries of the current year, making $1,540,000 for cars. This amount of $950,000 will furnish us with twenty-eight additional locomotives, 508 box freight cars, and twenty cattle cars.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are you getting the cattle and box cars?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are getting some from the Crossen Company, some from the Rathbun Company, and some from Rhodes, Curry & Co.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they all made in Canada and under contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are you getting your locomotives?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no locomotives now under construction, except such as are being built at the Kingston works.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you propose to get your twenty-eight locomotives in Canada?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We cannot get them all in Canada. The last we got were from the Baldwin Company of Philadelphia. We got those at an exceptionally low figure, I think the cheapest of the size and weight that were ever brought into Canada. We bought them for $9,800 each, their weight being between seventy-two and seventy-five tons.

Mr. POWELL. Are your box cars chiefly large ones?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, thirty tons.

Mr. POWELL. Could not some of these engines be made in the shops at Moncton?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We made four entirely new engines there last year.

Mr. POWELL. How do they compare in cost with the Baldwin ones?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We put in nine new locomotives this year. Four were made in our own shops and five were bought.

Mr. POWELL. The engines made in Moncton are really better than the Baldwin engine, requiring less repairs and are handier and do better work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to say that, because, in the general opinion of railway men, there is no better engine than the Baldwin made in the world. It may be that the men are not yet thoroughly familiar with the handling of it, but after a little training and experience, they will be able to handle it better and it will not require so much repairs as at present.

Mr. HAGGART. How do the Kingston locomotives turn out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not too badly. The only trouble with the Kingston people is that they are so slow.

To provide accommodation and facilities along the line of railway ..... $104,000

Mr. McDOUGALL. What facilities?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are providing here for an enlargement of the freight house and to buy land to put on a Y at North Sydney Junction, which will cost $7,000 or $8,000 before we get through.

Mr. McDOUGALL. To come in between that part of the road that runs into Sydney from the junction to the part that runs into North Sydney?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should think so. At St. Rosalie Junction we will have to furnish a Y also, which will cost $3,000; another at Ingersoll; we have to extend and improve our station at Nash's Creek; we have some snow fences to construct; we have to convert a station house into a freight shed, and build a new station house in that town; we have to do the same at Milford and at Valley; we have to erect a protection wall in Cape Breton on both sides of the Grand Narrows; we have to put up freight protection at the embankments on the Oxford line at Tatagonish; we have to provide increased accommodation at Tignish and East Mines, and new tracks and Y at Springhill Junction; increased freight and passenger accommodation at Adamsville; new station house and freight shed at Barnaby River, and the old building we are converting into freight purposes; then we have to put up a dwelling house at Mulgrave for our station agent and another at Red Pine.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the hon. gentleman provided any improvement in the station built at Boisdale.

Mr. POWELL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I called attention the other night to the condition of that station. I told the hon. gentleman that one or two doctors had declared that the building was not fit to be inhabited by any human being, except it was intended to kill them. The hon. gentleman moved a young man with his family from Grand Narrows into that station, and compels them to live in that place, and yet will not spend a dollar to improve its sanitary condition. The drainage is bad, the cellar of the station is always half full of water and cannot be used.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must have that matter looked into.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It was called to the attention of the officials of the department from time to time, and they got reports more than a year ago, and yet nothing has been done. The first stationmaster who had charge of that station died in it, the next stationmaster lost his wife, and the doctor reported that both deaths were due to its unsanitary condition. Another death or two took place since from the same cause, and I do not see how the hon. gentleman can expect any one to live in it.

The other day I made application for a siding near the town of Sydney, and the hon. minister said he would have the matter attended to at once. But I have a letter from the general manager, dated the 4th instant, in which he says he sent a report to Ottawa, but has not yet received any instructions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All I can say is that a day or two before the hon. gentleman mentioned the matter, the deputy minister put under my eyes the application to be approved, and I approved it immediately.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I have here the letter. It is dated Moncton, 4th July. It acknowledges the receipt of my letter of 30th of June, and says he sent the papers and reports in regard to the siding to Mr. Schreiber on the 26th of June.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very likely. In due course of mail it came here, and Mr. Schreiber at the first opportunity brought the matter before me, and I decided it.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. minister allow sidings to be built between stations?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. No other railroad on the continent does.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have them on our road.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no greater danger to those travelling on the road than to have these numerous sidings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must remember that he allowed sidings when he was minister—

Mr. HAGGART. I do not care whether I did or not. As a general principle there ought not to be sidings between the stations. They ought to put sidings at proper intervals, and have people go there. If you allow sidings between stations, that is an end to the utility of your road.

Mr. POWELL. That would not do very well down our way. I know half a dozen places where, if you do away with a siding you do away with the living of those who use it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The remedy is to put a station at each siding.

Mr. POWELL. That would be expensive. I suppose they lock it up and give the key to the section man, so there is not so much danger.

Mr. HAGGART. But there is danger.

Mr. McDOUGALL. These sidings are put in for temporary purposes. In my own case there were 400 cars loaded, not one of which would have been loaded if they had been obliged to go to the nearest stations. From temporary sidings put in this way there were 3,000 cars delivered to the railway that would not have been delivered if the sidings were not put in where the material was convenient.

Prince Edward Island Railway—Murray Harbour branch, including Hillsboro' bridge ..... $700,000

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Prince, P.E.I.) How much of the sum voted last year was expended ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there could not have been very much, because the contract was made late, and I think the contractor had not begun to earn. Something may have been paid on account of material, but that would be all.

Mr. MARTIN. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir L. H. Davies) speaking for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) last year, made the voting of this money an excuse why no sums should be spent in Prince Edward Island for wharfs all over the province. And yet the sum was not expended at all. What part of this $700,000 is to be expended on the bridge, and what part on the railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the figures ; but I should judge that in the current year we should build the substructure of the bridge which should cost about half a million, leaving about $200,000 for expenditure upon the railway. We can spend $200,000, I imagine, within twelve months. The contractors will work vigorously.

Mr. MARTIN. Contractors for the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I am speaking of the railway. No doubt the hon. gentleman desires to have the work pushed vigorously, and we propose to do so.

Mr. MARTIN. Has the hon. minister decided when tenders are to be called for for the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The call for tenders for the substructure of the bridge have already gone out.

Mr. MARTIN. The minister has only about twelve out of sixty miles under contract, and that only for grading. What about the rest of the line ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been petitions from various localities, and there is a good deal of rivalry as to the route to be taken. We want to give that some consideration before finally deciding.

Mr. MARTIN. I would ask the minister as to the proposed cross line by way of Montague bridge, concerning which I asked before ? His reply would indicate that he is in total oblivion about the petition sent, and not only these, but petitions with regard to other branches in different parts of the province. His reply does not cover petitions which I know to have been sent to the Secretary of State.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, they have not reached my department yet ; because, I apprehend that my officers would furnish me a statement of all the petitions received by the department.

Mr. MARTIN. I want to know if the government has come to any decision as to the construction of any, or how many of these lines ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is something I was not able to announce to my hon. friend, for the reason that no definite decision had been arrived at.

Mr. MARTIN. The minister knows that the survey for this road began in 1897. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries said in this House that he was going to remove the building of that road from being a party question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has ceased to be a party question now, pretty well.

Mr. MARTIN. He has run two elections on the strength of that road already in that province. In 1897, a small sum was put in the estimates for a survey, with loop lines, in order to secure votes in two or three sections. These were alternate lines surveyed merely for the purpose of catching votes. The engineers were interfered with in their work with this object. In 1897 a sum was voted in anticipation of the provincial elections. In 1898, when the provincial elections were over, nothing was done. Last year nothing was done, until two by-elections were going on in the province. As soon as these two by-elections came on, the organ of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in Prince Edward Island proclaimed that tenders were to be called for to build a bridge last December.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have the advertisements out now for the construction of this bridge.

Mr. MARTIN. I suppose that is an indication that the elections are not very far off. Now, I want to call the attention of the minister to the necessity of a short branch from Rustico to Charlottetown, a distance of only nine or ten miles. If the hon. gentleman has been down to that province and knows the section of the country that I refer to, he will know that it is the best watering place and summer resort in Canada, yes. I may say, in America, and the greatest drawback to it is that it is not connected with Charlottetown by rail. It should be the best paying part of the road. Rustico has good fishing grounds, and a short branch by way of Covehead is of the utmost importance. Several petitions were forwarded to the government, as also from Stanley and other sections.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What are you going to do to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will continue in supply.

Mr. HAGGART. What estimates? The hon. Minister of Railways will not have the information ready by to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps not on that particular point, but there may be some other items which may be taken up. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has one item, there is one item still in the Interior Department, and then the Trade and Commerce estimates will probably be taken up.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Saturday).

Mr. MARTIN.

SATURDAY, July 7, 1900.

PRAYERS.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to bring to the attention of the House certain documents, and to ask one or two questions of the government regarding them. I received the following letter in the month of June:

Winnipeg, Man., June 15, 1900.

Sir,—I send you herewith copy of a memorial recently sent by the Catholics of Winnipeg to the Prime Minister and members of the government. We trust that if the government act upon our appeal and bring in legislation for our relief, you will find yourself able to give it your support.

I beg to remain, your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) P. MARRIN,
Secretary Catholic School Committee.

A. A. C. LaRivière.

The memorial referred to is as follows:

Winnipeg, Man., June 15, 1900.

To the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Colleagues in the Dominion Government.

Gentlemen,—The following is a copy of a resolution unanimously passed at a mass meeting of the Catholics of Winnipeg, held on May 27 last:

'Whereas, the Catholics of Winnipeg have for ten long years suffered under the odious burdens imposed upon them by the School Law of 1890, and whereas, the recent negotiations with the public school board of this city make it plain that as the law at present stands, we can expect no relief; be it resolved, that we, the Catholics of Winnipeg in meeting assembled, hereby instruct the committee to take immediate steps to lay our grievances before the Dominion and provincial authorities, pointing out to them the severity of our long-continued persecution, and praying them to come to our relief on the lines laid down in the Privy Council decision.'

According to the instructions contained in the resolution, we now take the liberty of addressing you, and we feel that in doing so it is not necessary for us to add many words to the clear terms in which the meeting expressed itself. The facts of our position are undesirable, and speak for themselves. For ten years we have been forced to pay heavy taxes towards the support of the public schools, whilst at the same time maintaining schools to which in conscience we could send our children. We have derived not the slightest benefit from the Privy Council decision; the grievance declared in that decision to exist still exists, and even in aggravated form, and the so-called settlement of 1897, whilst it may by temporary toleration of the authorities, be workable for the time being in some country districts which are distinctively Catholic, has proved absolutely unworkable in our mixed community where Catholics are in a minority, and has failed to bring us a particle of relief. The burden has been hard to bear, and has lately become almost insupportable, and in our extremity we approached the public school board of the city, hoping that it might be possible, under a liberal interpretation of the school law, to obtain some slight measure of relief and assistance. This hope has now been proved to be vain, inasmuch as the school board declare that they can do nothing for us, and after consulting authorities, they point out to us that the law, and especially the amendment of 1897, is so clear and explicit that they are absolutely debarred from giving us relief, and the only thing they can suggest to us is that we should surrender everything to them, and put our children into their hands to be distributed amongst the public schools of the city. It being evident we could get no relief under the present law, we then approached the provincial government, and obtaining no satisfaction there, we now appeal to you to use the power vested in you to have the decision of the Privy Council put into effect in its fullness and entirety.

The burden is becoming insupportable and we must have relief. We are entitled to it under the constitution, the Privy Council has pointed out the means whereby that relief may be assured us, and with every confidence that you will see justice done, and the rights of the Catholic minority here restored, we have the honour to remain, on behalf of the Catholics of Winnipeg,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) P. MARRIN,
Secretary.

(Sgd.) J. G. CARROLL,
Chairman of Catholic School Committee.

I have since received a letter from the secretary of the same committee which reads as follows:

Winnipeg, Man., July 3, 1900.

A. A. C. LaRivière, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Sir,—A couple of weeks ago a memorial on the school question was forwarded to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues by the Catholics of Winnipeg. A copy of the memorial was sent to you and others of our friends in the House of Commons and the Senate. We fully expected that the matter would have been brought up and ventilated in the House, but so far as our information goes, it has not been once referred to there. This seems to us all the more strange in view of the fact that during the previous two or three weeks the school question was frequently a topic of discussion in the two Houses. We think it of the highest importance that someone should ask the Premier whether he has received the memorial, and what he intends to do about it, and the committee instructed me to write you, thinking you might ask the necessary questions.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) P. MARRIN,
Secretary Catholic School Committee.

I, therefore, wish to ask the government: Has the memorial I have just read been received by the right hon. the Prime Minister? I also ask: Inasmuch as the requirements of the remedial order of March 21, 1895, on the Manitoba school question, have not been complied with by the local authorities, what is the intention of this government in regard to removing the grievances complained of by the Roman Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The memorial which has been read by my hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) was received by the government some few weeks ago, and the receipt of it has been acknowledged. The government has done nothing more, because the matter is now in the hands of the provincial authorities. It is of public notoriety that some few weeks ago the Roman Catholics of the city of Winnipeg approached the civic authorities with a view of having their schools taken over and made public schools under the Act of 1897. I am informed that these negotiations have not succeeded for the time being. I am also informed that it is yet possible that the Roman Catholics and the civic authorities of that city may come to an understanding to have their schools taken over in the same way as some eighty schools, and, perhaps, one hundred, have been taken over by the municipalities in different parts of the province. The Roman Catholic schools to the number of about one hundred have been taken over by the authorities in the different municipalities. There is reason to believe that the same thing will be done in this case. If after these steps have been exhausted the Catholics do not get the relief to which they believe they are entitled, they can address themselves, as they have done before, to the local legislature. I recall that at a banquet in the city of Montreal, on December 3, 1896, Mr. Greenway, then Premier of the province of Manitoba, speaking of the legislation of the province, stated, that if at any time this legislation was found to be insufficient; if experience showed that it should be remedied, he would be prepared to consider the representations made in that behalf, and I would suppose that the present legislature of Manitoba would be disposed to carry out such a legitimate purpose.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Since my right hon. friend refers to Mr. Greenway's statement in Montreal, he might as well have quoted his statement in his political address in the last election, when he said he would do nothing.

The PRIME MINISTER. I stated what I heard with my own ears.

AN ASSAY OFFICE FOR THE YUKON TERRITORY.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the right hon. leader of the government to a telegram which I received from British Columbia this morning. On June 15, I made some remarks to this House, as to the dire necessity which existed for the establishment of an assay office in the Yukon, so that the gold obtained by the miners there might be sold, and that they might get money for

it. The right hon. gentleman in answer to me, said :

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, having already spoken on the motion now before the House, would not feel justified in going at any length into the argument this evening ; but, at some other day he will answer the question.

The hon. Minister of Finance has not seen fit to say one word about that subject up to the present moment, and we are now very near the end of the session. The telegram which I have received this morning is as follows :

Victoria, B.C., July 7, 1900.

Col., the Hon. E. G. Prior, M.P., Ottawa.

Board anxious to learn government's decision regarding resolutions mailed you June 6, four millions gold dust from Yukon already delivered Seattle assay office. Great injury being done to Canadian trade through absence of government facilities in Canada for sale gold dust.

F. ELWORTHY,
Secretary.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance or the right hon. leader of the government, whether they can give any assurance that an assay office will be established, or what the policy of the government is in regard to the matter ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It is hardly necessary to say that so far as the output of the present year is concerned, it cannot be done, as the wash-up has taken place, and the gold is going out. The question of what may be done in a future season is well worthy of consideration, and will receive consideration. At the same time, I would not like my hon. friend to assume that the view that is implied in his question, and in his remarks based thereon, is well founded. There is very much to be said in favour of treating gold, as any other article of value, which will always find men ready to buy and sell it. The banks in the district purchase it at what they consider its value, and there is competition between the banks. I do not suppose that such evil has befallen Canada, because of the absence of an assay office, as the hon. gentleman suggests. However, I am not offering any final judgment on the question. It is too late to do anything this season ; and, as to the future, the matter will receive consideration in connection with other matters relating to the royalty and the collection thereof.

HAWKESBURY AND LOUISBURG RAILWAY.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). I wish to engage the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals for one moment. During the session of 1894, this parliament granted a subsidy of $96,000, or $3,200 a mile, for thirty miles of railway, to be built from Hawkesbury to St. Peter's, being part of a line to be built from Hawkesbury to Louisburg. A contract for that subsidy was entered into between the late government and the Cape Breton Railway Extension Company, and that contract, as the hon. minister will see from data in his office, was renewed from time to time, by the late government, at the request of the company, so anxious was that government that the work should be proceeded with. The company did not go on with the work, and last session this parliament revoked the subsidy of $96,000 for the thirty miles. I want to inquire of the hon. minister, if any contract has been entered into between the government and any company, for the subsidy which was revoked by this parliament last session.

Mr. PRIOR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). No contract has yet been entered into in respect to that piece of road.

Mr. GILLIES. Are there any applications before the minister, and if so, from what companies ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are two applicants. There appears to be some rivalry between them. Neither of them has yet satisfied us that they can comply with the conditions. I could not tell the hon. gentleman the names of the companies at this moment. They are both incorporated, I think, under the provincial law of Nova Scotia.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I would like to ask if the return from the Railway Department with reference to dismissed officials is ready to be brought down ? I mentioned it the other day, and the answer was that it was ready and would be down the next day. I have not received it yet, and it has not, so far as I know, been brought down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was immediately prepared and sent to the Secretary of State the very afternoon the hon. gentleman called my attention to it. I will inquire why it has not reached us here.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish also to ask for the information with reference to the Gilbert, Stewart and Battle cement matters. At this stage of the session, unless these papers are brought down with some promptness, their absence will act as an absolute bar to the progress of business.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is no doubt aware that these papers have not been moved for as a return. The subject came up the day before yesterday in supply, and I understood the request of the hon. gentlemen opposite to be that when we again went into supply and came to the item, I should be prepared from the papers to furnish the information they desired. Therefore I did not make any return and did not understand that I would be expected to make any return; but I was ready and willing to bring the papers down when we go into supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I want the matter thoroughly understood. Four or five days ago I asked the minister for those papers. They were not brought down. Last night we asked for the papers again. They were not brought down, but they were definitely promised. Now, we are told by the hon. gentleman that as they were not ordered by the House, he does not suppose he is bound to bring them down, but he will have them here when we go into supply, and use them in the discussion. I wish to give notice formally that the estimates of the hon. gentleman will not be allowed to advance one single step further until the demand of this side and the promise of the minister are fulfilled, and we are prepared to stay here all summer if necessary. Now, there is no beating about the bush. That is a frank, open statement, and I invite the attention of the Prime Minister in the lobby to it.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Michel Esdras Bernier, Esq., member for the electoral district of St. Hyacinthe, introduced by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Richard Cartwright.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I wish to say that the remarks that have been made by the hon. member (Mr. Foster), and the spirit in which he has made them, are entirely uncalled for. The House will have sufficient recollection of what I said a moment ago, to know that the hon. gentleman did not correctly represent my statement. I did not state that I would not bring down the papers. I stated what my understanding of the request was; I did no more. I understood the matter to be just as I stated it to the House, and a reference to Hansard will show that there was not a request from hon. gentlemen opposite that I should lay the documents on the Table. I was asked in the ordinary and usual way to bring them with me when we were discussing these matters in supply. If I had had a request from hon. gentlemen to lay them on the Table, I would have no objection to do so. I do not want to be put in an unfair position by having my statements represented by the hon. gentleman to be otherwise than they actually were.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. the Finance Minister was here and I simply leave the matter in his hands. After having argued the question as to why those papers were not ready yesterday before we took up the item, and having received the same answer as I have now received, namely, that the Minister of Railways did not understand that they were to be laid on the Table, and having tried, with all the force of language at our command, to make him understand that that was what we did want, and having made the formal demand that before the estimates would be allowed to go through we must have those papers brought down so that we may ourselves have an opportunity of looking into them, I leave the case entirely in the hands of the Minister of Finance, confident that he will support the position I take.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood last night what the hon. gentleman desired, but it was then about one o'clock in the morning, and I have not been able to procure these papers: but I was referring to what took place the other day, when the hon. gentleman based his complaint on the allegation that I had not brought down the papers as I had promised. I stated last night that I would furnish the papers, and will do so at the earliest possible moment.

YUKON—THE FRENCH KLONDIKE BANK.

Mr. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to a paragraph copied in La Presse of Montreal from a French paper entitled Le Moniteur de la Bourse:

I am in a position to give you to-day the names of the principal administrators of La Banque Française du Klondike. They are: Dr. Barthélemy, chief physician of the first-class, officer of the Legion of Honour, who will be the delegate administrator; M. Ponsignon, first minister plenipotentiary of the first class, officer of the Legion of Honour; Commandant Littré, shipmaster, officer of the Legion of Honour; M. Armand Grenier de Cassagnac, M. Janne de Lamare, besides 'two eminent personages of the superior Canadian administration will have seats in the council, but I cannot yet give their names.' I think that my readers will be satisfied with this choice, which will give them every guarantee.

Has the right hon. gentleman heard who are the two members of the superior administration in Canada who have places on the board of administration of this bank; and whether they are these two ministers who have been travelling for their health the last two or three months?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, that if he wanted the information, he might have asked for it in a less offensive manner. The question he put is fairly entitled to an answer, and if he had put it with ordinary courtesy he would have had his answer all the same. This is the first time that I have heard of the Klondike Bank, I do not know that anybody in the government has ever heard of it, and neither do I believe the statement.

INQUIRY FOR PAPERS, ETC.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). I see that the correspondence between the late Lieutenant-Governor McInnes of British Columbia and the Dominion government has been published—or rather portions of it have been published—in the British Columbia press. I would like to ask my right hon. friend if he will have that correspondence brought down to the House. It has been moved for in the Senate, I think, and the promise made that it would be brought down. Would the right hon. gentleman favour this House with the same papers?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have no objection at all to doing so, but I may say that the correspondence which has, I understand, been published in the British Columbia press, is not official correspondence but private correspondence between the late lieutenant-governor and some members of the government. However, what official correspondence there is, there is no objection to bringing down.

DISMISSAL OF LIEUTENANT FOYLE.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the removal of Lieut. Foyle of Company No. 1 of the 94th Battalion. I understand that he was called upon to resign without any reasons being given and that having refused to do so, he was dismissed, or an order to that effect issued, and another man named McCrae promoted to his place. It appears that Lieut. Foyle was informed that the reason for his dismissal was that he was physically unfit to discharge the duties devolving upon him in charge of that company. He says that he was never examined by the surgeon-major, but that he has certificates of other doctors to the effect that he is physically fit to discharge all the duties devolving upon him in that position, in which he has served since 1885. He also says that he demanded a military investigation, which he was refused. I would ask the hon. the Minister of Militia whether he can give me any explanation?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). If my hon. friend had given me notice yesterday I would have brought down the information, but I do not remember anything about the case at all. It may have been before me, but if so it is one of hundreds of such cases, and I do not remember the circumstances. However, I will look into the matter and let the House know what the facts are. The commanding officer of the 94th is not here, but there is one of the officers in the

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

House who possibly may remember something of the circumstance.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the hon. gentleman promise to give the information before the estimates of his department are up for consideration.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will give it to you on Monday.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Mr. SPEAKER read the following Message from the Secretary of His Excellency the Governor General:

Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
Ottawa, July 7, 1900.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Mr. Justice Taschereau, acting as deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber at 12 o'clock to-day for the purpose of giving assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present session.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

L. G. DRUMMOND, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). With reference to the question put by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), I wish to explain—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. MACDONALD (P.E.I.).

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I am put down as having voted for Mr. Parmalee's amendment in the matter of provincial legislation. I wish to say that I voted directly the other way and in favour of the principle of prohibition.

ELECTION ACT—AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 133) to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members to the House of Commons.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). Before this Bill is read the third time, I would like to call my hon. friend's attention once more very briefly to the amendment I proposed to the 72nd section of the Act. I may call the attention of the House to the fact that certain practices have arisen of late in regard to the placing of the ballot papers in the box which have given rise to a great deal of comment and have resulted in very great scandal in this country. It is notorious that constituencies have been stolen from the electors of this country, and one of the means by which that has been done is by the substitution of one ballot for another by the deputy returning officer after he receives the ballot from the elector, and before he puts the ballot into the box. The mode by which this is accomplished is thus described in an affidavit read in this House during the present session :

The method of substituting a false ballot for a genuine one which the deputies I have mentioned were to use is as follows: He would keep the false ballots so that he could readily take one in his left hand when he wished to work it. When a known Conservative voter would be in the act of handing his ballot to the deputy the latter would place his left hand upon the table with a false ballot under the hand, but no counterfoil. At the same moment he could accept from the voter, with his right hand, the genuine ballot and counterfoil. He then would place the genuine ballot under his left hand fingers, as if for the purpose of tearing off the counterfoil, and with a quick motion of the right hand he would remove both genuine ballot and counterfoil, at the same moment raising the left hand and leaving on the table a ballot from which the counterfoil had apparently been just removed. He would put what he had right in his coat pocket, and then put in the box the ballot lying upon the table. This ballot, so put in the box, would be one of those previously furnished by me to the deputy, and on which I had put a cross in favour of the Liberal candidate.

—or it might be the Conservative candidate, if this practice were carried on in his interest. That fraud has been practiced, and has been practiced most successfully. The object of the amendment I have proposed is to make the perpetration of that fraud impossible. I venture to say that the words which I have suggested do make the perpetration of that fraud impossible, if the scrutineers who are present choose, in the slightest degree, to avail themselves of the opportunity which the law, with this amendment, will offer. The proposition I make is this—that we shall insert in section 72 the words ‘still keeping the ballot paper in full view of those present.’ My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) suggests these words: ‘That the deputy returning officer shall then in full view of those present, including the elector, remove the counterfoil and place the ballot paper in the ballot box.’ What I say, is that the words suggested by my hon. friend do not cover the point I seek to make, do not reach the action on the part of the deputy returning officer to which I object. I want to impose a mechanical difficulty between the deputy returning officer and the perpetration of this fraud, and in order to do so, I wish this House to legislate that he shall keep the ballot paper itself in full view of those present. The words my hon. friend has substituted instead of those I suggested, I venture to assert very positively, do not carry out the object that I have in view. The deputy returning officer may, in full view of those present, tear off the counter-foil as this directs him to do, and he may in full view of those present put the ballot paper into the ballot box. If he does so, he has fulfilled the obligation which is imposed upon him under the clause as proposed by my hon. friend. If he does that, it would be impossible to convict him or to recover a penalty from him under the provisions of this Act. I do not profess to be a lawyer—though I do have the honour of being a member of the Middle Temple. It is thirty years since I practiced law. But I profess to have some glimmering recollection of the principles of law; and I have had the advantage and privilege of hearing the greatest advocate of my time, Carlake and Colebridge, and Parry and Roundell Palmer, and others, discussing questions of law day after day, and have heard the greatest judges in Westminster Hall giving their decisions upon them; and I venture to make the assertion that there was not in my time one lawyer of standing in that Hall who would venture to say that you could recover against a deputy returning officer (under these words introduced by my hon. friend), who had torn off the counterfoil in full view of those present, but who had held the ballot under his closed hand while he was tearing it off, and who had, for convenience sake, rested his hand upon the table, and, in full view of those present placed the ballot in the box. I am sure my hon. friend the Solicitor General himself will not say the criminal law would hold a deputy returning officer under such circumstances, guilty and make him subject to a penalty, for the simple reason that in doing this he would have fulfilled all the conditions laid down. These words, my hon. friend knows would be construed strictly in favour of a man charged in a criminal court. I have taken the precaution to have the advice of several of our own legal lights on this side, and they concur in the view that it would be impossible to obtain a conviction. They say that a man who tore the counterfoil off, as he is ordered to do, in full view of those present, and put the ballot paper into the box in full view of those present, would completely fulfil the law. As I said before, there is not a lawyer in Westminster Hall in my time who would stake his reputation on a contrary opinion. Now, why should we have any doubt about it? The words that I proposed make the thing perfectly clear. They provide not merely that the counterfoil shall be torn off in full view of those present and the paper put into the ballot box in full view of those present, but that the ballot paper itself shall be kept in full view while that is being done, so as to prevent the fraud which has been carried on so successfully, and which has resulted in stealing constituencies from the electorate of this country. I am sure that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will agree with me that it is right that we should put in some words that will provide for this case.

The PRIME MINISTER. I understand that it is already provided for.

Mr. McNEILL. Any one who says so, of course, has a right to his opinion, but he does not agree with some of the leading lawyers of this House; and, if there be a doubt about the matter, as there is, in the name of goodness why not remove the doubt.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) propose to amend the section?

Mr. McNEILL. By providing that the ballot paper itself shall be kept in full view of those present. That is the only point. It is a question as to whether the ballot paper is to be kept in view or not. If it be kept in view of those present it is impossible to perpetrate this fraud. I think, in view of what has occurred in this country, it would be an extraordinary thing if this Act is allowed to leave the House without providing some words which will cover that suggestion. I would ask my hon. friend, at all events, to accept words which will remove all possible ambiguity from this clause.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). My hon. friend is aware, probably, much better than I can pretend to be, that for many years past we have heard of these charges of stealing ballots, and mutilating ballots, at elections. I have heard of them for almost fifteen or twenty years, and I know several cases, especially in the province of Ontario, after the election of 1896, where the judges determined that ballots had been improperly mutilated by the returning officer. For that reason, we consider it necessary to make a change. I think I can fairly state to my hon. friend that I have in view the same object as himself, that is to say, to guarantee as far as possible that the ballot paper given by the deputy returning officer to the elector shall go through the elector to the secret chamber, there to be marked, shall be brought back by the elector from the secret chamber and delivered to the returning officer—the same ballot shall go and return. Then, the further assurance should be given that when the ballot paper has reached the hands of the returning officer from the elector the same ballot paper he has received from the elector shall go into the ballot box. That is the object we all have in view. I say that object is achieved by the words of this section 72, where we say that the ballot paper, after it is received back from the voter, shall be examined by the deputy returning officer for the purpose of ascertaining whether it has the stamp and seal upon it, with the counterfoil and with the number. Then, we go on to say that the deputy returning officer, in full view of those present, including the elector, shall remove the counterfoil and place the ballot paper that he has just received in the ballot box. All that is to be done in full view of those present. It seems to me that puts the matter beyond a shadow of a doubt. But, the hon. gentleman suggests that, probably, some deputy returning officer may have the power of necromancy, such as Hermann had, and may be able so to manipulate the ballot in the presence of those who are there to keep watch as to remove the counterfoil and substitute another ballot. He thinks that may take place, but, to my mind, it is physically impossible. The words which he suggests to cover that case are not more conclusive than the words I used. But we are all of us inclined to think our own opinions are better than those of another man, and, perhaps, my hon. friend, coming from a portion of the British Empire that is well known to us all, may be a little more set in his opinion than a man who was born in the new world. But, I submit to my hon. friend that we should allow this question to go elsewhere for consideration. I wanted to get the opinion of the Minister of Justice to see whether the words suggested by my hon. friend could be really adopted. I saw him this morning, but I had not an opportunity to discuss the matter at sufficient length with him yet to be able to come to a conclusion. But, we are all anxious to get rid of the Bill, let it go through in its present form; and I say now that, my object being the same as the object of my hon. friend, if it should turn out that his words will achieve the object better than mine, I will be very glad to adopt them.

Mr. McNEILL. With reference to my hon. friend's remark as to my holding a set opinion, I wish to disclaim being a lawyer, and my statement here to-day would not have been made had I not been supported by three eminent legal gentlemen in this House, and natives of this hemisphere. I am glad to find, at all events, that my hon. friend, when he was discussing the matter with the Minister of Justice this morning, found that there was some little doubt about it, because a decision was not arrived at immediately as to whether he was right or not. With regard to the ballot boxes, my hon. friend asked me to make a suggestion. The suggestion I made was, that there should be a stout paper cover, such as I produced here, lined, if necessary, with linen, in which the ballot box should be encased, and that this cover should be sealed up. But, to meet a difficulty suggested by my hon. friend from East Grey, the suggestion I have to make now is, that this ballot box, so encased and sealed, shall be placed in a wooden box, and that the lid should be so constructed as not to press upon the seals; in that way we would secure the ballot box being sealed effectively by the agents of the different candidates and by the deputy returning officer, and those seals being preserved intact.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I desire to move an amendment to clause 52, specifying the hours during which the polls shall be open. When this matter was brought up in Committee of the Whole, a great deal of attention was given to it, and a general feeling was expressed that some amendment should be proposed to meet the wishes of all concerned. The hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) gave notice of an amendment to open the poll at seven o'clock in the morning. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) proposed that on election day there should be a half-holiday proclaimed. My own amendment, which was also included in a Bill I introduced early in the session, was to provide that in cities comprised in an electoral division and containing 10,000 inhabitants or upwards, the poll shall be open until eight o'clock in the afternoon. I can testify to the fact that when the polls are closed at five o'clock in the afternoon, there is not a fair chance for the workingman to poll his vote in a city.

The lists are sometimes several years old. In cities a large portion of the population have moved their residences during that time, and it often happens that the voter has to go across the city to get to the polling subdivision where he is entitled to vote. It is therefore, utterly impossible for him, under the present arrangement, unless some party conveyance is provided, or some special privilege is asked for and granted, to go to the poll and poll his vote. It has been suggested in this House that there should be some free time when a man could go and cast his vote without asking the privilege of any person. That is what my amendment seeks to do. I consider that the only valid objection raised to this amendment was that raised by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) when he said that in rural constituencies that contained a city of 10,000 it would not be fair to keep the polls open in the city and close them in the rural portions of the constituency, because information as to the result in the rural part of the constituency would be sent into the city, and it might lead to fraudulent practices which would have an influence upon the result of the election. I propose to make the amendment apply to cities of 15,000 and upwards, which will largely overcome this objection. I therefore move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to amend clause 52 by inserting after the word 'day,' in the twenty-first line, the following words: 'and in electoral districts containing, comprising or being part of a city of upwards of 15,000 inhabitants, the polls shall be kept open until eight o'clock in the afternoon.'

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I fear that the amendment would be unworkable. Take the case of a rural constituency in which there is a city, and there are several in the country, we would have the poll in one portion of the constituency closing at one hour and at another portion closing at another hour.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). And in addition to that there are a lot of little towns which are really the manufacturing towns of our country, such as Galt, Preston and Hespeler, in which there are large factories, employing a number of operatives. The provision would not apply to these when it is limited to cities of over 15,000.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), who is unavoidably detained, I beg to move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by inserting after the word 'time' in the first line of the 38th section, the words 'within forty-eight hours,' and by striking out the words 'and before the closing of the polls,' in line 2 thereof.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to say that in my judgment the amendment is a very good one, because it leaves it open to the electorate to have the men of their choice. It sometimes happens that a candidate is put up for the purpose of dividing the votes on one side or the other, and he may be retained in the field until nearly the last moment when all the harm is done, or rather until it is impossible to get a straight vote of the electorate for one side or the other. Then, he may resign. I think he ought to make up his mind before that time, and forty-eight hours after nomination is quite long enough to enable him to do so. Then, it gives time afterwards to have information disseminated throughout the constituency that the candidate has resigned, and that there are only certain candidates in the field.

Mr. JOSEPH A. GILLIES (Richmond, N.S.) Mr. Speaker, I think the law as it now stands can scarcely be improved upon. The amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) provides for the retirement of any candidate within forty-eight hours after the nomination. Now, the ballot boxes in the meantime have gone out to the different polling places, and all the expenses incidental to election almost have been incurred. Unnecessary expense can be avoided by leaving the law as it now stands.

Mr. SPROULE. The ballot boxes will not have gone out at all within forty-eight hours.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Yes, in some constituencies.

Mr. GILLIES. I know that in several constituencies immediately after the candidates are nominated and all the preliminaries are over he sends the ballot boxes out to different parts of the constituency.

Mr. SPROULE. The ballots are not printed. They cannot be.

Mr. GILLIES. Yes, he has them printed, and as some polling subdivisions are very remote from the shire town, or centre where the returning officer resides, the time intervening between the nomination and election is short enough for him to have the ballot boxes distributed in the different districts. Therefore, the expense incurred in sending the ballot boxes to these polling subdivisions has been incurred before the candidate wishing to retire has given notice to the returning officer. I think it would be a most inopportune amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. Evidently the hon. gentleman is not familiar with the routine of the business after nomination.

Mr. GILLIES. I am so.

Mr. SPROULE. Because, in forty-eight hours, you cannot print the ballots, and none of the ballots are printed. The ballots and instructions are put into the ballot boxes. Before nomination you do not know who the candidates will be. It is only after nomination that you know who the candidates will be, and it is not until then that you can commence to print the ballots and prepare the instructions to put into the ballot boxes. It is usually two or three days before the ballot boxes are distributed, and it is to avoid putting the names of candidates on ballots who are not practically in the race at all that the proposal is made.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I think this would be a good clause in which to say what should be done with the $200 deposit that is forfeited when a man retires. In some cases the money is given back to the candidate, and in some cases it is remitted to Ottawa. There is no law about it, and I think this would be a good clause in which to say what should be done with the money.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It goes to the Auditor General.

Mr. BERGERON. But it is not always sent to him.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There was an action in our province in which Mr. Turcott was plaintiff, where he wanted to get his deposit back from the returning officer, and the court said he could not get it, although he withdrew immediately after the nomination.

Mr. BERGERON. In my county in 1892 three candidates lost their deposits, but they all got their deposits back.

Mr. BLAIR.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The returning officer should have been made to account for it.

Mr. BERGERON. He was the sheriff.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to move the following amendment in reference to a half-holiday on election day.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) having moved one amendment, he is not entitled to move another.

Mr. BENNETT. This is an amendment to another clause.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is only one motion.

Mr. BENNETT. I will hand it over to my hon. friend (Mr. Puttee).

Mr. PUTTEE. I beg to move—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is in the same position as the member for Simcoe. He has already moved an amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg to move this amendment, Mr. Speaker, although I am not in favour of it. To oblige my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) I move, seconded by Mr. Haggart:

That Bill No. 133 be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House with instructions to amend the same by amending section 24 of the said Act by adding as paragraph 'E' the following: 'The declaration of a half-holiday on said polling day where a poll is demanded.' Also that form 'E' of section 1 is amended by adding thereto the words, 'and further, a paragraph containing these words, and in case a poll is demanded, there shall be a half-holiday on the forenoon of said polling day in accordance with a proclamation issued by His Excellency the Governor General regarding the same, and all persons shall govern themselves accordingly.'

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order.

ROYAL ASSENT.

ELECTION ACT—AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION.

Amendment of Mr. Foster negatived.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton) moved :

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by striking out all the words after the word 'paper' in the tenth line of section 34, also subsections 2 and 3 of the said section, and substituting therefor the following as subsection 2 :

'2. Upon receiving a nomination paper the returning officer shall give a receipt therefor, and such receipt shall in every case be sufficient evidence of the production or filing of such nomination paper and of the consent of the candidate.'

And that subsection 2 of section 39 is hereby struck out.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E.I.) moved :

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by striking out section 69, and inserting in lieu thereof the following :

'In Prince Edward Island if the deputy returning officer refuses a ballot and the right to vote to any person who is willing to take the oaths prescribed by this Act or the provincial law, or gives a ballot to and allows to vote, any person who refuses to take such oaths, he shall for each such offence be liable to any person who may sue for the same, to a penalty of $200.

He said : I complain, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill, as reprinted, was only placed in our hands a few minutes ago. In the Bill, as introduced, there was a section 69, which, I take it, was intended to whitewash returning officers when they went beyond their duties. After I had called the attention of the House in committee to that section, it was agreed to be struck out ; but I do not think that is going far enough, and I wish to insert this amendment as subsection a in section 68. In the discussion of the Bill, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said that the law at present in Prince Edward Island worked very well. In that law, there are penalties attached to returning officers who fail to perform certain duties, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries contended that that law applied to Dominion elections. But that is not the case, as you will find on page 9078 of Hansard the following :

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the Solicitor General this. Does the provincial penalty which applies to a deputy returning officer in a provincial election apply to the deputy returning officer who acts under the Dominion law in a Dominion election?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

That shows that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not correct, and it appears that the penalties provided by the provincial law do not apply to the Dominion elections, therefore, it is necessary, in my opinion, to have this subsection introduced into the Bill.

Amendment negatived, on division.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) moved :

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with power to amend the same, as follows:

13. Section 90, in line 19, after figure (4), insert the following words:

'That in Prince Edward Island any person not qualified to vote in such electoral district has voted, stating the name, designation and residence of such person, and also the name and number of the polling division in which he has voted, or (4).'

Section 90, line 7, after the word 'dollars' insert the following words: 'or in Prince Edward Island $300, if the application is made in relation to the third ground of application.'

Section 90, line 30, after the word 'application' insert the following: 'Or decide whether any person in Prince Edward Island not qualified to vote has voted, if the said application is made in relation to the third ground of application.'

15. Section 90, line 37, after the word 'be' insert the following words: 'together with a copy of the affidavit aforesaid.'

15½. At the end of subsection 4 of section 90, insert the following as subsection 'A': 'At the time and place appointed and before proceeding to recount the votes, the judge may receive an affidavit from the candidate or his agent, against whose return the affidavit mentioned in subsection 1 of this section has been directed, declaring that any other person not qualified to vote has voted, giving the name, designation and residence of such person, and also the name and number of the polling division in which he has voted, but the affidavits authorized by this subsection shall not be received by the judge except when the recount has been demanded on the third ground of application.'

16. Section 90, subsection 5, line 18, after the word 'counted,' insert the following: 'including in Prince Edward Island those numbered and initialled under section 67 of this Act.'

17, 18 and 19. Section 90, subsection 7, leave out from 'in' in line 32, to 'shall' in line 33, and insert the following words: 'Subsection 1 and 2 of section 81 of this Act, and in Prince Edward Island the judge, when recounting the votes, shall decide the qualification of all voters whose ballot papers were numbered and initialled, under section 67 of this Act, as having been objected to on the ground of want of qualification, and who have been described in the affidavits provided for in this section, and for the purposes of such decision he shall hear the candidates or their agents, and may examine on oath the person whose vote has been objected to or any other person. Both candidates may be represented by counsel, and the judge shall ascertain the facts and shall take such other evidence as he thinks necessary and is able to obtain, and may require the attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and shall, for all purposes of such decision, have all the powers of a county court judge in Prince Edward Island exercising his ordinary jurisdiction in civil cases.

(a) In determining the qualification of the voters aforesaid, the judge shall not identify nor allow to be identified any ballot paper until it has been decided that the person casting it was not legally to vote, in which case he shall identify the said ballot paper and deduct the vote or votes marked thereon from the total number of votes received by the candidates or candidate in whose favour it has been marked.

(b) The judge.'

Amendment negatived.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's).

YUKON—PRESERVATION OF GAME.

, Bill (No. 190) respecting the preservation of game in the Yukon territory (Mr. Sutherland), was read the second time; considered in committee; reported; read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—DISMISSAL OF LIEUT. FOYLE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief explanation with regard to the question asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall). My attention was called to the physical condition of Lieut. Foyle of the 94th Battalion, of which I am surgeon, and it was my duty to examine whether the evidence submitted with regard to his physical condition was well founded. I may say that I satisfied myself that Lieut. Foyle is an epileptic, and therefore, unfit to hold office in any battalion. To sustain my opinion, I have the evidence of another medical gentleman connected with the battalion to the same effect. I may say that if an epileptic be examined, when not suffering from these fits, that came on periodically, he may seem, from a cursory examination, to be in perfect health, but the fact remains that I have convinced myself of the fact, and have signed a paper to the effect that he is subject to that disease.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Has he political fits sometimes?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). No doubt, he is somewhat like my hon. friend in that regard.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Did the hon. gentleman examine Lieut. Foyle personally or sign his certificate on hearsay?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I examined him professionally and officially.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I have here a copy of the certificate of a medical man which was sent to the department, and which has been placed in my hands:

Baddeck, June 11, 1899.

To the Hon. the Minister of Militia, Ottawa.

Sir.—In the matter of the appointment of Lieut. T. H. Foyle there appears to be some question as to his health, and as I have carefully examined him and given him a certificate of health, I feel it my duty to say a few words in his behalf. The facts of the case are that persons who are jealous of him will not stop at doing anything they can to his injury, representing him to headquarters as unhealthy, &c. This is not the truth, and it is pure spleen and vindictiveness. I can assure your Honour that I know whereof I speak, and I can justify his health to be as perfect as possible and a very suitable person for the position.

Yours faithfully,
S. G. A. McKEAN.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he gave a certificate. If the hon. member attended him during one of these fits, of course he would be competent to give a certificate, but if he gave it only on information obtained from another medical man, his certificate would not be of any value.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The hon. gentleman knows well that there are symptoms following epileptics which are well marked, and these were distinctly marked in the case of Lieutenant Foyle. The hon. gentleman knows right well, as a medical man, also, that in an examination of such cases, a medical man can call in the evidence of another medical man who was in attendance. I refer to Lieutenant-Colonel Bethune, who has been in attendance on that officer professionally. Aside from my own examination to sustain my opinion, he assured me, that Lieutenant Foyle, while under examination as to his health, fell in an epileptic fit. While this evidence of a medical man and an officer of the battalion, together with the symptoms following a chronic case of epilepsy in evidence, I had no hesitation in giving the certificate I had given. And, I also may say that when inquiry is made in the department, a certificate will be found of another medical man living in Baddeck, the place of residence of Dr. McKean, whose professional standing, I can assure the House, is equal to that of Dr. McKean.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan (Inverness)), destroys the first argument he presented, which was that epilepsy, when the person was not under the influence of a fit, could not be detected by a medical man. Therefore, the examination made, as described, would be of no value. But the hon. gentleman goes on to say that it can be detected. I admit that in a chronic case of long standing, there would be symptoms which a medical man could detect; but, that being the case, I should imagine that the medical man who examined him, and who says he is in every way in a healthy condition, would be as likely to detect the symptoms as the hon. member (Mr. McLennan, Inverness), and his evidence would be as valuable as that of the hon. gentleman. But, one seeing a patient in a fit would be able to give a certificate that would be conclusive.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I did not say positively, that a medical man could not detect the symptoms. What I said was that it was possible that a medical man, if his attention was not called to the symptoms, might report a man to be in a fair condition of health.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did the hon. minister promise the man a military investigation, which, I understand, Lieutenant Foyle requested? And will the minister promise that? It seems a reasonable request.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At this moment, as I told the House, I do not remember the case. I cannot give any promise, except that I will bring down the statements at the earliest moment—on Monday I hope.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—GALLANTRY OF CANADIANS IN THE FIELD.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Before you leave the Chair, at one o'clock, I desire to read a telegram from Lord Roberts—with reference to the good work done by the 1st and 2nd battalions of Canadian Mounted Rifles in South Africa. The despatch is addressed to His Excellency the Governor General, and reads as follows:

Pretoria, July 6, 1900.

July 6.—I have much pleasure in bringing to Your Excellency's notice the good work done by the 1st and 2nd Battalions Canadian Mounted Rifles who have been repeatedly conspicuous for their gallant conduct and soldierlike instincts. During the attack by the Boers, on Katbosch, on the 22nd of June, a small party of Pincher's Creek men of the 2nd Battalion displayed the greatest gallantry and devotion to duty. Holding in check a force of Boers by whom they were largely outnumbered: Corporal Morden and Private Kerr, continued fighting till mortally wounded, Lance Corporal Miles and Private Miles wounded continued to fire and held their ground.

On June 18, a party of 1st Battalion, under Lieut. Young, when operating with a force under General Hutton to the north-west of Pretoria, succeeded in capturing two of the enemy's guns and brought in a herd of cattle and several prisoners without losing a man.

(Sgd.) ROBERTS.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

SUPPLY—GRIEVANCES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Before you leave the Chair I want to say a few words in regard to matters in the province of British Columbia. Some time previously during this session, the right hon. leader of the government called me to task for bringing up matters when the Orders of the Day were called. He said that if we had any grievances the time to bring them forward was on motion to go into supply; therefore, I take this opportunity of doing so. Now, there are, I am sorry to say, several grievances that my constituents complain of, and I think the great majority of the people of British Columbia will agree with my constituents. The first and largest grievance is that the province of British Columbia pays a tremendous amount of revenue into the federal exchequer and gets very little back. I have during the last few weeks gone to a great deal of trouble in trying to make out a correct list of the revenue paid by British Columbia, and also of the expenditure made by the Dominion government in that province. With the permission of the House I will read the figures, and I trust the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) who is noted for his work on the Auditor General's Report, will not find fault with my figures. It has certainly taken a long time to prepare them, and I trust they are correct; if they are not, it is because it was almost impossible to reach a certainty in some items:

Well, Mr. Speaker, that deducted from the revenue gives a balance of $1,803,192.07 that stands to the credit of British Columbia in the federal treasury. Of course, hon. gentlemen opposite may say that we have given a large sum of money to the Crow's Nest Pass road as a subsidy, and also that there are expenses of civil government and other outlays that ought to be taken into account. With regard to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway subsidy, I can say that I do not think it is fair to debit that altogether to the province of British Columbia. In the first place it is part of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and of equal advantage to the whole of Canada as it is to the province of British Columbia; moreover, the whole of it is not in the province of British Columbia, but a great deal of it is in the North-west Territories. Then the subsidy was far too large. When the Conservative party were in power they made an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway to build it, if I remember right, for a bonus of $5,000 a mile, and a loan of $6,000 guaranteed to be repaid, which was equal, with the interest that was charged, viz.: 5 per cent. to a bonus of only $4,500 per mile, whereas the present government has given them a subsidy of $11,000 per mile, representing $6,500 per mile actually thrown away. However, if the hon. gentlemen think that ought to be taken in for comparison's sake, I am willing to take half the sum paid this year, viz., $2,322,500. Half that sum is $1,161,250. Then there is the percentage of the expenditure for the administration of civil government, and other matters contained in the consolidated fund account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I understand the hon. gentleman says that the loan to be made to the Canadian Pacific Railway was only $6,000?

Mr. PRIOR. I understood it was $6,000 a mile to be repaid.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The bonus was $5,000 a year, and if my memory serves me, the loan was $20,000 or $25,000, altogether.

Mr. PRIOR. If so, I stand corrected. I was only speaking from memory. Anyway it was to be repaid, and the bonus was only $5,000 a mile. Now, I have taken the population of Canada at the same figure as the Minister of Trade and Commerce used in working out the results in his report, namely, 5,312,500. I have taken the population of British Columbia at the number estimated by the statistics of last year, as 168,000. Taking those figures, and working out of the percentage. I find that British Columbia might be charged with the sum of $530,888 on consolidated fund account. This includes an item 'miscellaneous' of $318,907. Many of those items that are included in miscellaneous, and which I could not pick out correctly, are included in the expenditure that I have named, so that I am well on the safe side. Now, that gives a total, taking the Crow's Nest Pass outlay and consolidated fund account, of $3,016,625, as the total expenditure in the province of British Columbia, which is even then $111,054 less than revenue collected from that province.

Now, some hon. gentlemen contend that we cannot expect any more. Well, I think in a new country like British Columbia, a country of great possibilities, in fact of great certainties, I may say, in the mining, lumber, and fishing industries, it should be the policy of the government to expend large sums in developing that country to the utmost extent. We know that huge sums have been spent in the older provinces, far more than they ever paid into the treasury, and we think that now the time has arrived when British Columbia might get the benefit of these sums as the older provinces have in the past. If you make a comparison, with the receipts and expenditures of the other provinces, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, you will find that none of them pay any more, in fact, not as much into the Dominion treasury than British Columbia, and they certainly, as anybody can see by looking through the estimates, receive far more from the government to be expended in these provinces.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have not looked into the question.

Mr. PRIOR. I think you will find that I am correct. I will now take some special items. There is one item to which my attention was called some time ago by a friend in British Columbia, in regard to the way the customs accounts are kept in the Auditor General's Report. I looked it up, and I found that at page T-45 of the Auditor General's Report, British Columbia is credited with $2,113,927.24 of customs duties, and besides that, the Yukon territory is credited separately with $482,098.55. That amount is not credited to British Columbia, but if we go to the other side of the ledger we find that Victoria is debited with $27,861.89 for salaries and contingencies of officers in the Yukon. That is manifestly unfair. If you are going to debit Victoria with the cost of the management of customs in the Yukon, you surely should credit her with the amounts received in the Yukon. Now, take the Chinese tax. The government collect, as everybody knows, $50 per head on all Chinamen coming into Canada. That is collected nearly altogether in the province of British Columbia. The receipts at Victoria last year were $145,300, at Vancouver, $69,609.50, at Nanaimo and at Rossland, $50 each, making in all, $215,009.50. Of this amount, the province only gets 25 per cent, which would make its share $53,262.50, making the portion kept by the federal government, $161,747. Of this sum, $900 was refunded to Chinamen, making a clear profit to the Dominion government of $160,847. I contend that as the people of British Columbia have to put up with the loss occasioned by these men living there, they certainly should get more benefit from the head tax. I think if the Dominion government were to just keep back enough to pay the salaries of the officers they have to employ for the purpose of collecting the tax, it would be a more equitable arrangement. I think it would be only fair to give the balance to British Columbia, and I hope the government will take that suggestion into their serious consideration. Hon. gentlemen may say: If you think so, why did you not move an amendment when the Chinese Immigration Bill for raising the head tax came before the House? Every parliamentarian knows that it would have been out of order. I tried to move some amendments, and I was told by the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that they would be out of order. That is the reason that I did not move an amendment in this direction. I think the question is one well worthy the attention of the government. Then, there is the question of the British Columbia fisheries. I find that the revenue collected by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) in 1898-9, in British Columbia, amounted to $45,801.75. That is a large amount to be collected from salmon licenses, and you would naturally think that with such a splendid industry as this fishing industry is the government would spend a large proportion of the sum collected in that province for the purpose of improving the fisheries. The amounts expended were: Fraser River hatchery, $3,736.14; salaries and expenditures, $8,459.47.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is hardly fair, considering that we voted $12,000 for a fish hatchery this very year.

Mr. PRIOR. I am not dealing with this year. This year must speak for itself.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand the hon. gentleman was arguing that we were not dealing fairly with British Columbia?

• Mr. PRIOR. Yes, for last year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh.

Mr. PRIOR. I can only go to the Auditor General's Report. There was $109,000 in the estimates last year for the defences of Esquimalt, and we found that only $44,000 of it was spent. Nobody knows how the estimates will be spent. I agree that the hon. gentleman will do a little more this year, but it is last year that I have now under consideration. The expenditure on account of fisheries leaves a balance of $33,606.14. I contend that that money should have been spent in British Columbia. The fisherman, the canners, and all the people in British Columbia interested in the fisheries, are almost a unit in the wish that the best class of hatcheries should be established there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are doing that.

Mr. PRIOR. I am very glad to hear it, and I trust he will be enabled to carry out what it is intended to do. Then, he might spend money very well in appointing more guardians to look after the rivers. At present there is a tremendous lot of poaching and a great destruction of trout in the rivers of British Columbia, and especially on the island. Some of the rivers, that a few years ago were the most magnificent fishing rivers, are being destroyed as fishing rivers, owing to poaching, dynamite and nets. But, if the hon. gentleman would pay small salaries to good men to look after these matters, much good would be done. This matter has been brought to his attention several times, but he has not seen fit, in his wisdom, to act upon the suggestion. This is a very important question amongst sportsmen in British Columbia, and we feel that as so much money has been collected from the fishermen, more ought to be expended. Now, I come to railway subsidies, and I will take up this year, if you like. The railway subsidies have just come down, and what do we find? We find a beggarly $96,000 for British Columbia. That is the whole amount of the vote for British Columbia, a country that should be well subsidized, as I have already said, for the purpose of opening up its resources. There is nothing for the Comox and Cape Scott Railway, an application for which was backed up by the members for British Columbia, and I certainly understood that the government had given a promise to the chief promoter of the railway that a subsidy would be given to it, but there is not a cent down for it. I think the government is deserving of the utmost censure in not giving more money to the province of British Columbia. That road is to run from Wellington, a large mining district, to Comox, another mining district, and then to the head of the island. It would open up some magnificent lands, it would be the means of developing the island, and it is the general wish of the people of the island, and, I think, also of the people of Vancouver, that such a road should be built. It would be the means of opening up a new route to the Yukon country. The British Columbia Board of Trade sent to the right hon. leader of the government a petition, on March 23, a copy of which was sent to me, and which reads as follows:

British Columbia Board of Trade,
March 23, 1900.

The Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
P.C., G.C.M.G.,
Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir.—I have the honour to advise that a special general meeting of this board was held this afternoon to consider the importance of the construction of a line of railway from the present terminus of the E. & N. Railway at Wellington to some point at or near the northern end of Vancouver Island, and it is unanimously resolved: 'That this board regard the proposed railway to the north end of Vancouver Island as a work for the advantage of British Columbia and the Yukon territory and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the government and parliament of Canada as deserving of assistance by a reasonable subsidy.'

In this connection it is desired to direct your attention to the large revenue the province of British Columbia contributes to the federal exchequer every year. During the fiscal year ending 30th June last the customs and inland revenue together amounted to nearly three million dollars, besides which there were large contributions made through the fisheries and other federal departments. In approximating the total provincial contributions it is necessary to add the duties which have been paid upon goods which find a market here; also the excise collected in the east upon goods manufactured there and consumed in British Columbia. This board is not in a position to approximately estimate what the total sum would amount to.

In view of the foregoing a more liberal expenditure by the Dominion government upon railways in British Columbia is considered to be justly due and this board trusts that this opportunity may be availed of to return to the province a small portion of its contribution.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) F. ELWORTHY,
Secretary.

I beg also to read the following:

Copy of resolutions adopted at a public meeting, held in the City Hall, Victoria, on the 16th February, 1900.

Resolved that, in the opinion of this representative meeting of the citizens of Victoria the construction of a railway to the northern end of Vancouver Island, so as to afford continuous railway connection to this city and province and absolutely necessary for the development of the great resources of Vancouver Island, and that we earnestly recommend such a railway to the favourable consideration of the federal government and parliament and of the provincial government and legislature.

CHAS. HAYWARD,
Mayor and Chairman.

That is all, Sir, I have to submit with regard to the railroad. I must say that I feel much disappointed that the government did not see fit to give a good subsidy to the Cape Scott and Comox Railway, as it is a road that was badly needed, and would have opened up a magnificent country.

I congratulate the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), on having put a vote in the estimates this year, to provide for a new steamer for the prevention of smuggling and the protection of the fisheries in British Columbia. That is a matter in which my colleague (Mr. Earle), and I, have taken great interest in past years. For the last seven or eight years, we, in British Columbia, have been pressing for it, and I am glad to see the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies), has come to the conclusion to comply with our repeated requests. I would now impress on the minister the necessity of having that steamer built in British Columbia. There are just as good shipyards and just as good mechanics, capable of building that boat in British Columbia, as there are anywhere else in the world.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Prior), that that is the intention if the vote passes.

Mr. PRIOR. I am glad to hear that statement from the minister, and so I need say nothing more on that point. He will get just as good work done in British Columbia, and he will get it done as cheaply as anywhere else.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the appointment by the government of the new Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia. Any one who knows Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière, knows that he is the personification of everything that is courteous and gentlemanly. I have no doubt he will give great satisfaction to the people of British Columbia, when they get to know him as we know him here. I trust, Sir, that he will enjoy his tenure of office, and I am quite sure, that having spent five years there, he will not want to leave us. But at the same time, I do not think it is right that the representatives of my province in this House, should let the matter pass without saying that the people of British Columbia have the right to expect that one of themselves should be nominated to the office. There are gentlemen in that province who have done yeoman service for the right hon. the Prime Minister and his government; and, no doubt, they expected some recognition at his hands, when the position of lieutenant-governor became vacant. I would ask the right hon. gentleman why were Mr. Bostock's claims overlooked? He is a gentleman whom every one will agree, is fitted for the position. He has great wealth, and could look after the social duties, while, at the same time, he is, no doubt, competent to discharge the other duties which belong to the office. Then, again, there was a gentleman now elevated to the Senate, who was beaten several times in his effort to become a member of parliament, and as the right hon. gentleman saw fit to place him in the higher position of a senator, surely he would be equal to the lieutenant-governorship. Then there is Dr. Milne, who has fought valiantly for the party for years and years, and who has spent many a weary week trudging up and down the corridors on the look-out for recognition.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Which is the hon. gentleman's favourite?

Mr. PRIOR. It is pretty even betting. Dr. Milne was looking for subsidies, or something to turn up, but he has been ignored altogether. I can assure the Prime Minister that if he cannot get any one amongst his own party who would fill the bill, we can at least find him one or two on our side, who would make excellent lieutenant-governors. Joking apart; British Columbia has nothing to be ashamed of in the lieutenant-governors she has supplied from her province. There were the Hon. Jos. Trutch, the Hon. Mr. Cornwall, the Hon. Mr. Nelson, and the Hon. Mr. Dewdney, all British Columbians, and they all upheld the dignities of the office with the greatest credit to themselves and to the province. It is a great pity that when this vacancy occurred, the right hon. leader of the government and his colleagues, could not find some gentleman who lived in British Columbia, and had worked there for years for his party, to appoint to the honourable position. I can say this much; I am perfectly certain that if the Prime Minister proposed to appoint a British Columbian as lieutenant-governor of Quebec, the whole of the province of Quebec would be up in arms. If Quebec is bound to have her own governors, why should not British Columbia have her's as well? I am not saying a word against the present occupant of the office in British Columbia, because he is a thorough gentleman, as the people of British Columbia will find out, but the fact remains that the people of British Columbia would, on principle, like to see a gentleman from their own province holding the office.

There is another thing I want to mention, and that is that the government has let slip by, the opportunity to give British Columbia representation in the cabinet. When they sent Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière to British Columbia, the portfolio of Inland Revenue became vacant, and the least the government should have done, was to select a British Columbian to preside over that department. As we know, when the Conservative party was in power, they recognized that British Columbia deserved a representative in the cabinet, and they gave her one. She will never get her proper share of expenditure till she has a representation at the council to look after her interests. I have on several occasions asked in the House, if that good example was to be repeated, but the Prime Minister has never seen fit to give an answer. This was a fair opportunity to show justice to the province of British Columbia. It was a chance that may not occur again for a long time, but I suppose the people of British Columbia are now accustomed to have promises made which are not fulfilled. For my part, I protest, on behalf of the province of British Columbia. There does not seem to be any other member from that province in the House, just now, but for my part, I repeat my protest, that the government has lamentably failed in doing justice to my province by not appointing a British Columbian in the cabinet.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have a word to say in answer to the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Prior). First, with regard to the lieutenant-governor: I am quite prepared, without the slightest hesitation, to admit that there are undoubtedly several gentlemen in British Columbia who would, under ordinary circumstances, be eminently qualified for the office of lieutenant-governor. We know, however, that the condition of things in that province for two or three years past, has not been as happy, or as harmonious as might have been the case. It would have been difficult to select any one in the province who has not been at some time or other, more or less identified with strifes of such a character, that his usefulness would be seriously impaired. Everybody, I think, will admit that. For this reason, the government came to the conclusion it did, and I believe it is a conclusion that has been ratified, not only by the people of British Columbia, but by the people of the entire Dominion. We came to the conclusion, that the government should select some gentleman of wide experience, of well known ability, of great fairness of mind, of many fine qualities, who under such circumstances, would be better qualified than any one that could be selected from within the province, to restore the harmony which must prevail in British Columbia, as everywhere else. We have appointed Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière, and I believe we have been eminently fortunate in securing all these qualities in the present Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia.

I place myself in the judgment of the House when I say that I believe that no man could be more suited for the difficult task which the lieutenant-governor of British Columbia has to perform at this moment. For these reasons alone, not as a precedent to be followed hereafter, but for the peculiar emergency that has arisen, the government, I think, have acted wisely in selecting Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière to represent the Crown in that province; and I endorse everything that has been said by my hon. friend as to his character, which my hon. friend has referred to in a way that is fair but at the same time generous. I feel, like himself, that when the tenure of office of Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière comes to an end, he may perhaps be induced to remain longer, but I hope that will not be the case. My hon. friend said the province of Quebec would resent any similar treatment. If the province of Quebec were situated like the province of British Columbia, if it were torn by severe political strife, I do not know that it would object to such a man as Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière being sent from another part of the Dominion to become its lieutenant-governor. With regard to the question of the representation of British Columbia in the Cabinet, what applies to the lieutenant-governorship on this particular occasion applies also to representation in the Cabinet.

Mr. PRIOR.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to ask when there is to be another meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, and, if there is not to be another meeting, when the report of that committee will be brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman knows that I have no power over this matter, but I shall be very glad to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Canals—Chargeable to collection of revenue—Repairs and operating expenses $597,100

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). Explain the increase of $35,600.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The chief item of the increase is due to the provision which we have to make this year for the Soulanges Canal—$20,337 for the staff and $1,382 for contingencies, making in all $21,719.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). How many employees are there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One overseer, one clerk, ten lockmen, ten bridge keepers, twenty linemen, one foreman, two lamp cleaners, three lamp repairers, one chief electrician, three oilers—fifty altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that for the whole length of the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. How many men have you on the Beauharnois Canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not discharged the staff on the Beauharnois Canal yet.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any navigation going on there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but I think that this year we shall be able to dispense with that portion of the staff which has to do with the navigation of the canal. We shall only require to retain those people who have to do with keeping the bridges and looking after the water levels for the purposes of the mills that are operated upon it.

Mr. BERGERON. I hope it is not the intention of the government to close that canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not absolutely.

Mr. BERGERON. There is the old class of smaller boats which have to pass through it for local traffic. There must be six or seven of them during the week, which travel between Valleyfield and Montreal, and have to pass through that canal, or else it would be like passing through Quebec to go to Three Rivers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not yet sufficient information to deal with the question so as to determine whether we would close it this year or not.

Mr. BERGERON. I see a great deal of difference between closing it altogether, and keeping it as it is to-day. There are on each lock four men and one lockmaster. I do not think it would be good policy to close the canal now, but there might be a reduction in the employees, as there will only be about one-tenth of the work done which was done before. Instead of keeping five men doing hardly anything, I would have only two or three men and one lockmaster.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will have to examine into the question to really see to what extent the canal may continue to be used for navigation. We cannot have locks opened and shut at the call of even a limited number of craft without having men on every lock in sufficient numbers to handle the gates. It is not going to be so easy as my hon. friend thinks to reduce the staff, if the canal is still to be used for purposes of navigation.

Mr. BERGERON. I remember the time when there were only two men besides the lockmaster. There was an increase in the number in 1871 or 1872, when there were three men, and the fourth man was appointed in 1879 or 1880, because they were really working night and day. Although the Soulanges Canal is in operation, the smaller boats would still use the Beauharnois Canal. I am informed by some navigators that some very important work will have to be done at the head of the Soulanges Canal. I am told that when a western wind is blowing, tugs coming down with barges in tow run great risk in trying to get in the canal. That is one of the principal reasons why the smaller boats prefer the Beauharnois. The entrance of the Soulanges Canal is in a very bad condition. There is a good deal of current, and the pier is not long enough. It would have to be lengthened and broadened. I do not think it would be wise to close the Beauharnois Canal until the government are satisfied that the entrance to the new one is perfectly safe.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would ask the hon. gentleman to consider how serious is his proposition that we should continue to maintain the Beauharnois Canal for the purposes of navigation. That involves not only the maintenance of a staff, perhaps not necessarily as large as at present, but still considerable, but the keeping of the canal through its entire length in a state of efficient repair. You must have your gates so that they may be used, and the breaks and defects that constantly occur along the banks carefully repaired. All these things would be necessary if we were to continue its use, even in a moderate way, for the purposes of navigation. If that can be avoided, and simply sufficient men kept to look after the lock water levels, so that those using the waters under lease from the Crown may not be interfered with, a considerable saving would be effected. The smaller craft will find that they can be as well served on the Soulanges Canal as on the Beauharnois. The condition of the entrance has been brought to my attention, and the engineers are having it put into proper condition. What the hon. gentleman refers to as being a source of some apprehension on the part of navigators is the shoals at the entrance, which must be removed, and we are proceeding with all despatch in removing them. I am informed that the work will be completed in a couple of months. The entrance is safe now, but we simply want to remove any possible apprehension on the part of even the most timid.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it would be bad policy to stop the work on that canal altogether until all the vessels which go through now are replaced with larger vessels. An accident might close the Soulanges Canal. Last year an accident on the Beauharnois Canal stopped navigation for four days. It must not be forgotten that in this canal were spent $4,000,000; and, if it were abandoned altogether, it would soon go into decay. As the minister says, if it is to be kept open, it must be kept in repairs, and I believe repairs are required there now. Of course, the expenditure upon working the canal should be reduced, but I would be sorry to see the canal closed until the Soulanges Canal is so secure and in such complete working as to assure the absence of danger to navigation.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond, N.S.) Is any of this amount for repairs on the St. Peter's Canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This estimate includes the removing of 450 feet of the east wall at the northern entrance, $600; renewing the coping of the south entrance at both sides, $276; nine mooring posts and repairing facing with creosoted timber, $43; ten new hanging fenders, and other small repairs, $281.

Mr. GILLIES. Has the minister instructed any of his officers to report what would be the cost of straightening the canal? He is, perhaps, not aware that there is a large bend almost in the centre of the canal, which interferes materially with the navigation of the canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been no instructions to that effect, personally, I have never seen the canal, and do not know what the curve is or how, it is situated. But, I do not remember having had my attention called to the subject of straightening this canal before.

Mr. GILLIES. Has the attention of the minister been called to the necessity of enlarging the locks on that canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no report from the superintendent on that subject.

Mr. GILLIES. I am sorry for that, for I was in hopes that we should see a considerable item in the estimates for the straightening of this canal and enlarging the locks. I may draw the minister's attention to the fact, and I am sure he will take it in the best part, because this is a work of great general utility and very extensive importance, and I am familiar with it, as it is situated in the centre of my constituency. This canal affords communication from the Atlantic Ocean to the Bras d'Or lakes, and thus to all the eastern ports, saving vessels the necessity of making the long and tempestuous voyage around by Cape North, or, on the southern side, around by the dangerous coast of Scataree. Should it be the fortune of the Minister of Railways and Canals to bring down the estimates next year, I hope he will have the necessary steps taken to verify my statement as to the need for the work to which I am drawing his attention. This canal is now extremely crooked, there being on the eastern side a great bend, and as the canal is only 800 yards in length altogether, and very deep and heavy, the hon. minister will see that vessels of any length going through have great difficulty in making their way from ocean to lake or from lake to ocean. The department had an engineer for some considerable time on this work, sent by the late government in 1891, to have repairs made to the canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was outside of the canal.

Mr. GILLIES.

Mr. GILLIES. No, right in the canal between the Bras d'Or side and the ocean side, on the western side of the canal. The slope of the canal was so steep that it was constantly falling in. The department had it thoroughly examined by an engineer, and they decided to have the canal so sloped that there would be no falling in. The hon. minister will remember that this was done between 1891 and 1896, at a considerable outlay—something over $100,000. Mr. McCarthy, an engineer of very considerable experience, was in charge of the work. While he was there I brought to the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals of that day, the present hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), the necessity of having the eastern side of the canal dealt with in the way I have indicated—straightened. Mr. McCarthy was instructed to make an estimate of the cost, and he did so. I am not prepared to say whether the estimate is in the department or not.

He did make an estimate, and he found that the material to be removed consisted of rock. His statement to me was that 150,000 yards of rock had to be removed to straighten out the eastern side of the canal and put it in a condition demanded by the exigencies of commerce, and this would cost, he said, $150,000. That is a considerable sum, but I think it is very small in comparison with the conveniences that would be afforded to commerce. From time to time a demand has been made upon the department that the locks should be enlarged. The lock there now is only 200 feet in length, and when ships go there they find they cannot get through on account of the shortness of the lock. The depth of water on the mitre sill is 18 feet, and the width of the canal is 48 feet. It is therefore, as to breadth and depth, one of the largest canals in the Dominion. It has the greatest depth of any canal, except the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, which has a depth of 20 feet and a width of 60 feet, and the Cornwall Canal, which has a width of 55 feet. The length of the lock on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is 900 feet, while this, as I said, is only 200 feet. What ship masters complain of is that the length of the lock is entirely too short in proportion to the breadth and depth of the Canal.

Now, Mr. McCarthy, the engineer in charge of that canal for five years, stated to me that the canal could be made absolutely straight and the lock enlarged to a length of 300 feet, for a sum less than $300,000. Then we would have a canal that would be a credit to the government, and would be of much greater service to the transportation interests. I would call the minister's attention to the territorial position of the canal. The convenience it affords to the province of Prince Edward Island is that vessels coming down to markets on our eastern ports all come through that canal. There is also a large gypsum trade on the Bras d'Or lakes carried on with the United States, and vessels of a large class are in that trade, so large that many of them coming to the canal find they cannot get through and have to go round the coast of Cape Breton; whereas if the lock was large enough they would have ready access to the lakes on the one side and to the ocean on the other. Besides these difficulties for persons who use the canal, there are people in the western counties of Lunenburg, Shelburne and Queen's whose ships go through that canal in great numbers to the Newfoundland banks. They prefer to pass through this canal instead of making the boisterous voyage of going around the Cape Breton coast. Now, I am sure the minister will be very much encouraged in entering into this outlay and in grappling with this question when I tell him that it was the policy of the late government to undertake such repairs as I have indicated, and to send this engineer there to make an examination with the view of straightening out the canal and enlarging the locks.

I have shown the necessity of the work being done, I will now give a few facts to show that the claims of this work are far in advance of the claims of some of the other canals. This canal is open earlier in the season and closed later than any other canal in the Dominion. The hon. gentleman will see from his own reports that in 1899 the canal opened on the 2nd of April and closed the 7th of January, giving a navigation of more than nine months. The other canals in Ontario and Quebec are open on an average about seven months in a year. The canal is, therefore, being used when other canals are closed. The traffic going through this canal is also much greater than the traffic going through some other canals. The cost of St. Peter's Canal from first to last was $648,547. Last year 1,692 vessels went through that canal, carrying 64,490 tons of goods, and paying tolls of $2,876. Compare that with the Murray Canal, and I am not finding fault with the hon. gentleman's administration of these works at all, or with that of any government. In fact, I was always a strong endorser of the policy that our canals in the west should be enlarged. The Murray Canal cost $1,247,470.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Murray Canal is about 5½ miles long.

Mr. GILLIES. That does not make any difference. I am just showing its cost to the country. The tolls collected amounted to $684, and the traffic that went through it amounted to 15,543 tons, or less than one-quarter of the traffic that went through our canal. The number of vessels that passed through was 677, or about one-third of the number that went through ours. Now, no objection can come from any hon. gentleman who advocated the construction of that canal to any application for the enlargement and straightening of St. Peter's Canal. Now, we will take the Trent Valley Canal. There has been expended upon it $2,543,240, and the estimate of the hon. gentleman's department is that it will cost about $6,000,000 to complete it. The amount of traffic that went through it was 27,676 tons, or less than one-half of the quantity that went through ours, and the amount of tolls collected was $1,094.63, or about one-third of the amount collected on the St. Peter's Canal. Take the Rideau Canal, which is almost within sound of our voices and within sight of Parliament Hill. The cost of that canal was $4,095,043. Only 54,946 tons of traffic went through it, or 10,000 tons less than went through our canal. This is sufficient to show, I think, that the application from Cape Breton and Nova Scotia to have the locks of St. Peter's Canal enlarged to the dimensions of 300 feet, and also to have it straightened so as to allow the class of ships that ply there to go through it is a reasonable one. Now, I would also, in connection with this part of my argument, call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the canals I have mentioned, the Murray, Trent and Rideau call for a very much heavier outlay in the way of maintenance and repairs than our canal does.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are quite lengthy, you know.

Mr. GILLIES. On the Trent Valley Canal last year, the hon. gentleman's department expended in ordinary repairs, under the head of staff and repairs, $12,634. That is a canal upon which $2,543,240 were expended, through which only 27,676 tons of traffic passed, and upon which only $1,094 of tolls were collected. The outlay in connection with the Rideau Canal was $28,899. This was expended under the same heading, namely, ordinary repairs, under the head of Staff and Repairs, although only 54,946 tons of traffic went through it, although it cost $4,095,043, and although 10,000 tons less traffic went through it than went through ours. Then there is the Murray Canal. Upon this canal, which cost $1,247,470, from which only $684 were collected in tolls, through which only 15,543 tons of traffic passed, and through which only 677 vessels went during last season, $3,533 were expended in ordinary repairs under the head of staff and repairs. The operation of St. Peter's Canal, under the same heading, although 64,490 tons of freight passed through it, although 1,692 vessels went through its locks, and although it paid $2,876.32 in tolls, only cost $456.61. I think I am making a valuable brief for the hon. gentleman, and I hope that he will soon embrace my views—not my views altogether, but the views of those whom I represent here—and have the repairs made in this canal by enlarging the lock and straightening out the canal that I am endeavouring to bring to his notice.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to add to the statement made by the hon. member for Richmond, N.S., (Mr. Gillies) who has gone very thoroughly into the matter, excepting that I give every word he has uttered in regard to the importance of this canal my most hearty support. The county that I have the honour to represent here is very largely interested in the canal, and in the efficiency of it. The greater part of the business done through that canal is done in the way of communication with the great centres in my county, and it is of the greatest possible importance that the canal should be improved because the business from year to year is growing. As the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) knows, in a great many instances, steam communication has taken the place of sail, and under those circumstances the change to steamers makes a greater demand on the conveniences of the canal in regard to the size of the locks than sailing vessels. I believe we would have several lines of steamers running through the canal from Sydney and from the Bras D'Or lakes if the canal was large enough to allow of the passage of such steamers. My hon. friend has gone so thoroughly into this matter that I consider it is unnecessary to take up the time of the committee any further.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is only fair to say that I am impressed by what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) has presented to the committee, at all events, to this extent that the business which is being done upon this canal, and the moderate outlay which is connected with it entitle it undoubtedly to very early and very full consideration. What he has pointed out to me as desirable to be done is a matter which I would assure him, as far as I am concerned, I will give my early attention to. I cannot, of course, undertake to express any opinion as to whether it would be important that the locks should be enlarged, or that there should be a straightening of the canal. That would follow on a very careful examination of the canal and the opinion of the competent officers. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies), that I will take into account what he has said, and give it every consideration.

Intercolonial Railway—Chargeable to collection of revenue..... $4,100,000

Mr. HAGGART. That is on an estimate of about $4,500,000 of receipts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not able to speak with any confidence as to what the income in the year to come will be, but we are safe in saying that this vote will be required for the working expenses. It may be that we will have to ask next session, as we did this, for an addition in the supplementary estimates. We are not asking for any more than we are sure we will require.

Mr. HAGGART. If your estimate is $4,500,000 of revenue, you surely do not expect a surplus of $400,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My statement was with reference to the incoming year, which has just been concluded, and I can make no estimate for that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it the intention of the minister to continue the services of two express trains, leaving and arriving at Sydney each day?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So long as the business continues to be as it is now, we will undoubtedly have that service. I cannot speak with confidence as to the future of the business there, but it is highly probably that the two trains will be continued.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am sorry the Postmaster General is not in his place, because I want to say that since the train time is changed, the mail service between here and eastern Nova Scotia, is not at all satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There ought to be closer connection now.

Mr. McDOUGALL. To give an illustration. A letter mailed here yesterday, will not arrive any sooner in the eastern part of the province, than a letter mailed to-night. Unless letters are mailed before eight o'clock in the morning, which is very improbable, they cannot make any connection.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That ought not to be so.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There certainly ought to be some arrangement made to prevent that delay in the mail, as regards the eastern part of the province. It does not affect the system to Truro, or between Truro and Halifax.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Probably since the change of time was made, it will require the Postmaster General's Department a few days to meet the new conditions. I am quite sure that the Postmaster General's intention is to make the service as perfect as possible.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Suppose a letter is mailed at Sydney on the morning of yesterday, that letter used to be here at half-past ten to-night, but according to the present arrangement, it does not arrive until the late train leaving Montreal, brings it here at two in the morning.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You cannot have all connections, to answer every purpose equally well.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But we were given to understand that the change of time was made for the purpose of connection at Montreal, and that was told us at a setoff against the inconvenience of the hours of arrival and departure in Sydney, which is not quite satisfactory to some people.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot understand why there should be any delay coming west, the object was to have close connection with Ottawa.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There is something over an hour. I know that when I came on the train to Montreal, I discovered that I was an hour or an hour and a half late. There is a train leaving later, by which I think the mail could be sent. With regard to the mail for Cape Breton, I left Montreal at noon by the Intercolonial Railway. I took with me some papers of the previous evening, and I arrived at my House in Cape Breton on the evening of the following day by the fast express; but to my surprise mail matter which was mailed at Ottawa before I left, did not arrive until the following day. That is due to the fact that the express to Halifax makes connection with the fast express for Sydney from Halifax at Truro, but does not transfer any mail.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the mail went by the Canadian Pacific Railway and it does not connect. That is not for the railway service, but for the Postmaster General.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Something should be done between the Railway Department and the department of the Postmaster General, because the whole of the mail for that part of the country is detained for twenty hours.

Prince Edward Island Railway—Chargeable to revenue ..... $275,000

Mr. FOSTER. There is an increase of $25,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a good deal more business on the Prince Edward Island Railway than there was before, and therefore the working expenses are necessarily higher.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Might I ask the Minister of Railways if he procured the information I desired with respect to the coal inspection?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I telegraphed for it, but the reply has not yet been received. I shall have it by the time we reach the other items.

Customs—Province of Nova Scotia..... $115,005

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask the minister if he has finally disposed of the cases that occurred at North Sydney some two years ago, in connection with alleged infractions of the customs law?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I think they are all settled.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the minister tell me what he succeeded in getting out of those transactions?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not got that with me. It was in the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What fines were collected, and what did it cost to collect them, and the names of the parties?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think they cost a good deal, but have not the information just now, I understand the hon. gentleman wishes to know what was derived in the shape of fines, what it cost to collect them, and who the parties were who received the money, and I will furnish the information before all the estimates in my department are through.

For salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports, viz.:

Province of Nova Scotia.....	$ 2,920
“ Quebec .....	13,750
“ Ontario .....	9,000
“ Manitoba .....	3,740
“ British Columbia .....	3,545
North-west Territories .....	1,560
For customs laboratory, additional amount required .....	200

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We found the service increasing and required additional help at different places. We found also that the vote taken the previous year was not quite sufficient to meet the demands of the different provinces. There is a number of small increases at the different ports in Nova Scotia, being increases in salaries. At Sydney there is an increase of $550 in salaries, and $150 in contingencies.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What are the increases at Sydney, and the names?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The estimates I have now are for the past year, and the amount will be larger next year. There is an increase to C. S. McEachren, Louisburg, from $150 to $300. The salary of Miles Fitzgerald, preventive officer, is increased from $100 to $250. P. C. Campbell, acting preventive officer, gets $500 from November 1, 1899. He will do landing waiter services, or any other duties under the collector's direction.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has Mr. McVarrish had any increase? He should receive the same consideration as others.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My impression is that we are increasing all the officers there for the next year. The collector's salary is to be increased, and one or two new officers have been appointed as well. Mr. McVarrish is not provided for in last year's.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am very sorry for that, because this man did all the business at that point previous to an assistant being named. The business was increasing very largely since about a year ago, and this man was nearly all the help that the customs collector had at that point, so that the work done by him previous to the appointment of a further assistant was very heavy, and I think it is unreasonable that he should not have got that recognition in the matter of increase in salaries which is given to others.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. McVarrish's salary is not large.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is very small.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know that it was brought under my notice.

Mr. McDOUGALL. My hon. friend will find that for several years claims had been made for an increase in the salary of Mr. McVarrish, and the reason alleged for not giving the increase was that the business at that point did not justify the increase. It was true enough that that business was not very large, and the department was adding expenses to the outports connected with that port; and, for that reason, it was difficult for them to accede to the request. But, now that the business justifies an increase, and as the salary was much too small in the past, I think the minister will agree with me, this officer should be the first to receive recognition when the change of circumstances makes it possible. I hope the minister will reconsider the case, and will take into account the services that Mr. McVarrish had rendered since last August, because he has been the principal assistant to the collector of customs at that point. I think the minister would be justified in taking up the case again and giving Mr. McVarrish an allowance for back services.

Mr. GILLIES. I know the case referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall). I know Mr. McVarrish personally, and know that he has rendered very assiduous and capable service for years. The hon. minister will bear in mind that the condition of the port of Sydney is far different from what it was some years ago. In past years, the customs receipts in the port of Sydney would average something like $12,000 to $14,000 a year, while the receipts at that port for last month alone were about $50,000—and month after month the receipts have been about the same. The minister will understand, that greater labour had been imposed on Mr. McVarrish, the tide-waiter at that point, by this change of conditions. Again I would ask the minister's attention to the fact that the cost of living in the town of Sydney has gone up very much in the past year or two; and if a salary of $300 or $400 was considered sufficient under the old conditions, it requires very much more to maintain a family than it did then. Knowing, as I do, the case we are urging on the minister, I trust it will meet with the kindest possible consideration.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are now considering the supplementary estimates for last year. I could not increase it now, for the past year. I will not say that it has not been considered for the year we are now entering on, for my impression is that we have made provision for an increase for the different officers there. I do not remember this particular officer by name, but I feel sure that we made provision for an increase for the collector.

Mr. GILLIES. How much?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not remember exactly. If the question had come up when the main estimates were on, I could have had the information ready, but I will ascertain.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. minister will find that this was a matter of oversight on his part. The correspondence was in the department.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I feel confident that provision was made for this year.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Yes, but how about the year just ended, and the eight or ten months of services that Mr. McVarrish has given? If the minister neglected to make provision as he did in other places, it would be proper for him to take it up again, and when other estimates are coming down—as I presume there will, before the session closes—he could make provision then.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The only way I could do would be to make a little further provision for next year.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That would do as well.

Mr. WALLACE. For whom is the increase of $250 in Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is an increase of $150 for Miles Fitzgerald at Port Sydney.

Mr. WALLACE. A new appointment?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, he is at International Pier, in Sydney.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was this Mr. Fitzgerald appointed in place of Mr. Carlin, who was dismissed?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He is the preventive officer at International Pier.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The preventive officer at International Pier in our time was

Mr. Carlin. Was not he dismissed and this man put in his place?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not recollect that.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not find Mr. Fitzgerald's name in the civil service list for 1900.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will be found in the Trade and Navigation Returns.

Mr. WALLACE. No, I do not find it there.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If it is not there, he must be a new officer.

Mr. WALLACE. That is what I say.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), who knows the locality, tells me that International Pier is part of the port of Sydney.

Mr. WALLACE. On what ground was the former official dismissed?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know that he was dismissed.

Mr. McDougall. Then, I suppose the petty officials dismissed him?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) expected to remember the facts about every official in the department?

Mr. McDougall. Will the hon. minister (Mr. Paterson) promise me that if this man was dismissed without the knowledge of the minister, he will put him back?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, it would not be done without my knowledge.

Mr. McDougall. How is it that he knows nothing about it then?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not keep trace of so many officers.

Mr. McDougall. Perhaps the Minister of Finance could tell?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot tell you anything about it. There are five thousand things in the department for which it is impossible to give an answer at a moment's notice.

Mr. WALLACE. The minister (Mr. Paterson), has his estimates here for an increased expenditure, and he should be able to tell. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) wants to know about the dismissal of this man who is the predecessor of the man for whom the minister asks the salary. How is it that this man is appointed during the current year, and is getting an increase of salary?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He must have been appointed before that.

Mr. WALLACE. He is not on the civil service list.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I assume that he is a temporary officer, and not on the civil service list, but he is on the list I have here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The explanation probably is that it is the practice to appoint officers of customs who remain for many months before they are put on the civil service list.

Mr. WALLACE. How many officers are there at Port Morien?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are three, but as Alex. McInnes, preventive officer, only got $25, he was probably there for only a portion of the year.

Mr. WALLACE. The income from the port is $48,611; and that is quite a large staff for the amount of revenue received. They appear to be new appointments.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman knows what the explanation is, with reference to many of these ports in the lower provinces. You cannot judge it by the revenue, because they are there as preventive officers. That is a thing which has been in existence for years and years.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the reason that led to the appointment of these three officers at Port Morien?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The salaries paid altogether at the port last year, were $233.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The misunderstanding arises from the fact that Port Morien is the modern name for a place formerly called Cow Bay, which at one time did quite a large business, but for different reasons that business has been diverted elsewhere.

Mr. WALLACE. How far from Port Morien is Cow Bay?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I should say about twenty miles. The mines there have been suspended for some time. Recently a new mining enterprise has started there with very excellent prospects I believe. The customs arrangements are, I think, substantially the same as in former years.

Mr. McDougall. Mr. Bown was an old officer at the port. I cannot say as to Mr. Macdonald, but Mr. McInnes, who gets $25 as preventive officer, probably got it in the way of expenses. There was a large business done at one time in this port, and for many years, two large collieries operated there. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding), should have told the House, that the closing down of the business there, was one of the results of his legislation a few years ago at Halifax. The Gowrie mines at Cow Bay, or Port Morien, were amongst the largest that were operated, until the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) passed the Dominion Coal Company legislation. In consequence of that, the business went down, but the customs officers remained the same. We hope that at an early date the business of this port will come back to where it was some years ago. There is a new company beginning to operate the coal mine there, and I hope it will be successful. It was one of the most prosperous of our mining districts up to the time of the Dominion Coal Company legislation. They found it to their interests to withdraw their operations from that point, and so they closed the mine, and the shipping left the port.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall), wishes to give the history of that event, he might give it with greater fairness. It is true that the Dominion Coal Company, which was created by the legislation to which the hon. gentleman refers, purchased the Gowrie mine, and came to the conclusion that it was wise to close the mines for the present. It is true they ceased to take coal out of that mine, but they have taken a great deal more coal out of other mines, and they have taken more coal out of Cape Breton than was ever taken by the former owners of the mines. The results of their operations have been such that the rates of wages have increased, the revenues of the provincial government have increased, and in every respect that enterprise which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) desired to sneer at, has been of immense advantage to the people of the province. Not only that, but it has been the means of establishing the great iron and steel industry which is doing so much to-day for the Island of Cape Breton, and which is creating all this prosperity to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. McDOUGALL. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) made a very weak argument for his case. I do not wish at this stage of the session to go into the case, but if I did take the trouble to go into the case, I think I could convince hon. gentlemen that if you look at the operation of these collieries previous to the time that this legislation took place, and if you compare the percentage of increased output with that of the time subsequent to the placing of duty upon coal, it will be found that there is no greater increase in the output to-day from Cape Breton than there was before. It would only require a few minutes for me to show the committee how weak the hon. gentleman's argument is, but I do not desire to take up the time. I have not my figures with me at the present moment, but if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) will go to the records of the Mining Department of Nova Scotia and seek the percentage of increase in the output of coal from 1878 down to the time when his legislation was inaugurated at Halifax, he will see that he had just as large an output from these collieries then as we have to-day in consequence of the protection on coal. When we came down with a measure for the encouragement of the iron and steel industry, proposing to give a bounty on iron and steel, the hon. gentleman's friends, who then sat on this side of the House, objected. I am astonished that the hon. Minister of Finance, at this late day, and in the presence of an intelligent body of people in this House and in the country, should make such a weak statement. Where would that industry be to-day had it not been for this legislation granted by this parliament for the assistance of the people who were willing to engage in it at a time when the price of iron and steel was as low as it could be, when Mr. Graham Fraser and his associates undertook to build up that great industry in Pictou that was laughed at by the hon. gentleman's friends? But for that industry, would Mr. Graham Fraser be going down to Cape Breton now to seek a place for the establishment of works greater than the works he has established in Pictou? Another great measure that was undertaken previous to my hon. friend's legislation, was the building of the railway through Cape Breton to enable Cape Breton to send her coal to the iron and steel works at New Glasgow, where it was possible to test it and see if it was satisfactory. So satisfactory was it that these people found it to their interest to take their works down to Cape Breton instead of carrying them on in Pictou. The hon. gentleman spoke of the enterprise of Mr. Whitney and his associates. Mr. Whitney and his associates are enterprising men. Mr. Whitney is entitled to a great deal of credit for his enterprise, but we must not claim for Mr. Whitney that he has accomplished everything. A great deal was accomplished in the dark days and the bad times without the assistance of Mr. Whitney. We had to come to this parliament, and not only to fight my hon. friends upon the opposite side of the House, but, when we introduced to parliament a measure with the view of encouraging that great industry in Cape Breton and Nova Scotia, we had to reconcile our own friends, and we had a strong argument to meet in Ontario. That argument was, that the products of the mining industry of Nova Scotia could not reach the people of Ontario—a very strong argument indeed. We had to make our peace with these gentlemen, and not only had we to meet the opposition of the Liberal party throughout Canada, but we had to fight our own Liberal neighbours in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton. My hon. friend, time and again, went down to Cape Breton and spoke about the iniquities of the taxation imposed by the Conservative party, and he was bold enough to say that if his party got into power and gave free trade, the interests of the coal industry would be subserved and a tax on foreign coal would be unnecessary. Does my hon. friend find that it is unnecessary? He is bound to keep up the duty on coal to-day, as he is bound to keep up the duty on every other article that comes into Canada upon which a tax was imposed by the Conservative party. If the hon. gentleman's policy had prevailed we would have had neither a coal nor an iron and steel industry. My hon. friend would have to begin to-day where we began twenty years ago. Instead of beginning four years ago, he should have begun eighteen years before he did by imposing duties upon articles that are consumed in this country, and which can be manufactured by our own people. This is the policy which prevailed, and the hon. Minister of Finance has been compelled, not only to agree to it and to support it, but to increase the duties imposed in some cases in order to meet the demands of the people of this country. When he comes at this late hour and in this intelligent age and tells us that his legislation was the foundation of the great iron and steel industry established at Sydney to-day, I tell him that there is not a child knee-high in the country but knows that it was not due to his legislation, but that the inauguration of that great industry was due to the protection that was given to that and other industries. Why, Sir, where are Mr. Whitney and his friends going to get the great portion of the raw material that they will put into that industry in Sydney? They are getting it through the operations of Mr. Graham Fraser, who was put in the position by the legislation of this parliament, by the protection afforded him by this parliament, to operate his own industry at Pictou, and not only to operate his own industry at Pictou, but to go to Newfoundland and take up large areas of iron-bearing lands. Some of them he made over to Mr. Whitney and his associates, and some of them he is operating himself, and which he will operate in connection with a great industry in Cape Breton lying side by side with the great industry that is to be carried on by Mr. Whitney and his associates. Mr. Fraser has very important, very influential and very respectable associates belonging to Canada. We have no right to belittle what these people do. We have a right to give to these people, no matter what their politics are, credit for what they have accomplished under very great difficulties in the establishment of this iron industry in Pictou during these years of hard times. These are the people to whom a great deal of the credit is due for what we have and what we hope to have in this country in regard to the iron and coal industry. They helped to provide us with a market for coal, and they helped to provide us with markets of all kinds. Their business must necessarily create other businesses, and to the pioneers of this great industry should be given the credit. The hon. gentleman has been obliged to give his adhesion to the policy inaugurated by the Conservative party for the carrying on of this great industry.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Life is too short, and the weather rather too warm for me to follow the hon. gentleman through all the ramifications of his address, covering the history of the coal business for twenty years, more or less. But there are one or two points to which I want to call his attention. The point of difference between the Liberal and the Conservative parties in the elections in Nova Scotia was chiefly with relation to the American market. It was the contention of many men in Nova Scotia, of Liberals in Nova Scotia chiefly, that the best possible market for the coal of the island of Cape Breton and for Nova Scotia generally, would be the American market, if we could possibly obtain it.

Mr. GILLIES. Did the coal owners think so?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have found by experience that those coal owners who did not think so, did not know what they were talking about. The Liberal party for many years preached the doctrine that if we could get access to the American market, it was the most promising market for our coal, by reason of our geographical position; and the hon. gentleman opposite preached the doctrine that, even if we had free trade in coal with the United States, you could not send a pound of coal into that market. That was the argument used election after election, parliament after parliament: What is the use of the American market? If you had the duty taken off you could not send in any coal there. The hon. gentleman knows that since the mines passed from the hands of those old companies into the hands of men with larger capital, with modern ideas, with larger resources, with ample equipment, with enlarged facilities, and those modern aids of steam and electricity, trade with the American market has been opened up, and we are sending now hundreds of thousands of tons of coal from the mines of Cape Breton into the United States, the very market to which they said we never could send a pound.

Mr. GILLIES. With a duty of 75 cents a ton on our coal going to the United States, and with the policy of the hon. gentleman's friends to allow foreign coal to come into this country free, of what use would their market have been?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman contended—

Mr. GILLIES. Answer my question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not going to answer a question that does not deal with the whole matter. The point of the whole question was whether we could send our coal to the States. We were negotiating for a free market, and I could quote speeches made by the hon. members where they said that we could not send a pound of coal, even if the duty was taken off. The companies were carrying on the coal business at that time in a small old-fashioned way. One or two large companies there were, but many of the mines were being operated in a very old-fashioned way, with limited capital, with limited resources, and without a knowledge of the progress the world was making in the production and in the handling of coal; and when these small mines were consolidated in the hands of a company with large capital, large resources, then it was found possible to do the thing. That was the policy the Liberal party had at Halifax, to bring in foreign capital, and to put the industry into the hands of men who knew how to handle and to manage it. The result was, as I have stated, and the predictions of the hon. gentleman were falsified, and to-day the port of Louisburg is sending tens and hundreds of thousands of tons of coal into the United States in the face of all the hon. gentleman's statements that it was utterly impossible. So much on that point. But he said that the national policy did it. Sir, if there ever was any class of people who were tricked, deceived and humbugged by the government of Canada of that time, it was the coal owners. I went down into one of those sections the hon. gentleman refers to, I went down into the county of Cape Breton at the time when I was preaching the doctrine that if we could get admission into the American market—

Mr. McDOUGALL. You have not got admission yet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have got it; in face of the duty we are sending hundreds of thousands of tons of Nova Scotia coal into the American market, and if we had free admission into that market we could send millions. But I went down into that country preaching that doctrine, and what did I find? The hon. gentleman and his friends went from platform to platform in that country and told the miners that if there was free trade in coal between the United States and Canada they would come to starvation. I went to a great mining district at Glace Bay. There was a magnificent meeting, and friends came to me afterwards and said: Well, Mr. Fielding, in the main we agree with your policy, but we are told that if we had free trade in coal with the States the mines would be shut up and we would be starved. The people were frightened at that statement, and they voted to sustain the Conservative party. Now, Sir, what did we ascertain afterwards? We ascertained that at that very moment there was lying in the office of a public man of the United States an offer of Sir John A. Macdonald to make coal free.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Nonsense.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am willing to produce the document, if the hon. gentleman wants it. I will bring it down at once. It was a letter written by Sir John A. Macdonald—I could almost quote it—dated at St. Patrick, Rivière du Loup, addressed to a gentleman in the United States, who is now connected with copper mines up at Sudbury.

An hon. MEMBER. Mr. Ritchie.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was the name, it was addressed to Samuel J. Ritchie, of Akron, Ohio. I can give the hon. gentleman the date, the place, and I can produce the document.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not believe it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does the hon. gentleman deny the statement?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is it true or is it not? Let us meet the fact. Does the hon. gentleman deny that at the time I refer to, Sir John A. Macdonald wrote a letter to Samuel J. Ritchie?

Mr. McDOUGALL. What was the time?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Shortly before the election of 1891, in the year 1890 or thereabouts.

Mr. McDOUGALL. No such thing.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will bring down the document, I do not want the hon. gentleman to back out. At that very time when they were telling these miners in the island of Cape Breton that if coal was made free they would starve, and when they were scaring these men into voting for the Tory candidates on that ground, at that very moment the Conservative government had made an offer of free coal to the United States government. That is what the records show of the policy of the late government in dealing with the labouring men and with the coal industry of Nova Scotia.

Mr. CLANCY. What were the conditions?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The condition was that the document was to be kept secret for the present! You can do this, but for obvious reasons don't publish it just now—that was the condition. Let the hon. gentleman be careful. I am not in the habit of making statements of that kind without authority. I am speaking of a document which is on record, and I think before the session is over I can find the facsimile of that letter of Sir John A. Macdonald's

Mr. McDOUGALL. Who is Mr. Ritchie?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Ritchie was the man who was engaged by Sir John A. Macdonald to negotiate with the United States, and if he was a good enough man for Sir John A. Macdonald to employ on this mission he ought to be a good enough man for my hon. friend to accept. Now, I want to come down to the question of the Dominion Coal Company, and I will be very brief. The hon. gentleman attacks the legislation which created the Dominion Coal Company. Let him go down into the county of Cape Breton and go on the platform to-day, and tell the people in that county that the legislation creating the Dominion Coal Company was bad legislation. I challenge him to do it, he dare not do it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I deny it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman did attack it time and again, if he did not join in the crowd, at all events he sympathized with them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. My hon. friend is mistaken. I say the hon. gentleman has no right to make a reference to that again. His organ in Halifax made a statement—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What are you referring to?

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman alludes to me as having used influence or tried to use influence to prevent that legislation passing. Is not that what he was saying?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He did not give me a chance to finish my sentence.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I allowed him already to go a little too far. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that in alluding to a statement that was published in his organ—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no organ.

Mr. McDOUGALL—at Halifax and published afterwards in the town of Sydney, to the effect that I was one of a number of Conservatives who went before the Governor General and tried to prevent the passing of legislation of my hon. friend at Halifax for the organization of the Dominion Coal Company—I say that statement was made by these people, and it was sent from this gallery down to these papers. The statement was as false as any words could be put together. I never did go to the Governor General, nor go to any of his advisers, or anybody else, or had any part from that day until this in opposing the hon. gentleman's legislation. But I never hesitated to criticise what I considered was improper and wrong about that legislation; and if the hon. gentleman will permit me just now, I will show that what I found fault with in connection with that legislation, was that it resulted in closing down prosperous industries like that at Cow Bay and at Victoria Mines, rendering the properties of people who had spent their money in them, practically valueless.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What the hon. gentleman or others may have done individually is not a matter with which we are concerned. The Tory party of Nova Scotia fought me day and night on that legislation, and I had to take my political life in my hand. What were the stories they circulated? They said: If you pass this legislation, the whole coal industry of the province will be monopolized in the hands of Yankees. It has not been monopolized. They said that coal would be greatly increased in price. It has been cheaper since than it was in the previous years. They said that the mines would be closed up. There are more men at work in the coal mines of Cape Breton to-day than ever before, they are getting better wages than ever before, and trade and commerce are flourishing there as never before. Then they circulated a story to the effect that we were going to bring in Poles, Scandinavians, and people from every other nation in the world to take the bread out of the mouths of our own people. Instead of that, our own people have more labour than before, and are working at good wages.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is not so, that coal is cheaper to-day than it was before.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not say that it is cheaper now, the prices of nearly all commodities have advanced of late, but coal was made cheaper by the legislation, because the company introduced steam and electricity and all modern improvements, which the smaller mines did not have. We were told that the Yankees would blow up the mines, and that if Her Majesty Queen Victoria sent a war ship to Cape Breton she would not be able to get coal there. Every mean and base fabrication was used by the Tory party to destroy the Liberals of Nova Scotia and their policy; but to-day we have the proud satisfaction of looking back and seeing that by that legislation the Island of Cape Breton has been made prosperous and it is to-day flourishing like a green bay tree.

Mr. McDOUGALL. My hon. friend referred to the increased shipments of coal from the Cape Breton collieries to the United States. My hon. friend knows that the records show that for many years after the organization of the Dominion Coal Company they failed to export any coal to the United States, and they had to avail themselves of the market in Canada which was provided by the policy of the Conservative party. Within the last year or two they have secured a market in the United States, and what is it? A market for culm coal, which, though it weighs just as much as round coal, is not worth nearly as much to the operator nor to the people engaged in the industry. To show that it is not, I may say that every local consumer is compelled to-day to pay a dollar a ton more for coal than they paid before, while the operators are compelled to sell their coal in the United States for a dollar less. My hon. friend refers to the increase in wages, which he boasts of as a result of that enterprise. That increase in wages extends all over the country and applies to every industry.

Mr. McMULLEN. Because there is a good government in power

Mr. McDOUGALL. Because the same thing prevails all over the world; because the demand for the products of the different industries of this country is greater than ever before; because our manufacturers, who were able to establish their industries through the protective policy of the Conservative party, are able to furnish to the markets abroad what they could not furnish before. My hon. friend had to be schooled for twenty years before he was taught that it was necessary to have a protective policy in order to enable our people to place their products on the markets of the world.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In these growing times, will my hon. friend give me this extra vote for these officers?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will, if the hon. minister will increase the salary of the officer at Sydney.

Mr. DAVIN. This item includes $1,500 for the North-west Territories. I do not wish to discuss it just now, but will the hon. gentleman bring down, before we discuss the next item, a list of all the customs officers in the North-west Territories, with the date of their appointment?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. In a general way, I may say that the increases in the different provinces are necessary because of the increased business of the country, and they are also accounted for in part by the fact that in the previous year I did not take a sufficient vote, and a portion of the salaries of some of the officers for the year 1898-9 had to be paid out of the vote for the year 1899-1900. I may say that J. Beatty, for whom a gratuity of $187.33 is voted, was an officer at Port Hope. We have three officers there, and it was thought that we could do with two. I may say with reference to Port Morien, Charles R. Bowen was a collector who died. Mr. Macdonald was appointed in his place, and Mr. McInnes is a preventive officer. We are working that port with two officers instead of three.

Mr. WALLACE. What are the salaries now paid there?

Mr. McDOUGALL.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. $400 for the collector and $100 for the preventive officer.

Mr. WALLACE. The collections are only $48.61.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are now, as there were under the hon. gentleman's administration, many places in the lower provinces where the salaries exceed the revenue.

Mr. WALLACE. There are men who are appointed as preventive officers and not as collectors. We have this preventive officer getting $100, but the other man performs his duty as collector and gets $400 for collecting $48.61.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am told that the officer who died was getting the same salary from the late government. In 1895-6, the collections were $221, and they are now $48.61.

The committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 9, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—TRANSPORTATION OF TROOPS.

Mr. POWELL asked:

1. What was the total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway in connection with the transportation of the first and second Canadian contingents to South Africa, including transportation of equipment and supplies?
2. What was the total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway in connection with the transportation of the Strathcona Horse, including equipment and supplies?
3. What was the total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway in connection with the transportation of the militia to Halifax, as a garrison, including equipment and supplies?
4. What was the total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway in connection with the transportation of supplies to Halifax and St. John for the British army?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway in connection with the transportation of the several contingents to South Africa, including transportation of equipment and supplies, is $25,778. 2. The total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway, in connection with the transportation of the Strathcona Horse, including equipment and supplies, is $8,357.73. 3. The total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway for transportation of the militia to Halifax, as a garrison, including their baggage, is $1,252.35. I have not been able to get an answer to the fourth question, as no period is named in the question, but I have telegraphed to the general manager.

Mr. POWELL. The words, 'in connection with the South African war,' should be in the question, and have been omitted either by myself in copying or by somebody else.

Mr. FOSTER. Let that part of the question stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That might stand.

Mr. BELL (Pictou) (by Mr. Gillies) asked :

What were the total earnings of the government railways for transport of men, horses and materials due to the war in South Africa?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway in connection with the transportation of men, horses and materials, due to the war in South Africa, was $35,388.08.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—DEFICITS AND SURPLUSES.

Mr. CALVERT asked :

What were the amounts of the deficits and surpluses in the working of the Intercolonial Railway for the various years from 1867 to date?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) :

Year.	Profit.	Loss.
1872-3	.....	$308,434 34
1873-4	.....	951,745 07
1874-5	.....	670,996 19
1875-6	.....	426,336 33
1876-7	.....	507,228 22
1877-8	.....	432,326 78
1878-9	.....	716,083 53
1879-80	.....	97,131 23
1880-1	$ 542 65	.....
1881-2	9,605 18	.....
1882-3	10,547 83	.....
1883-4	6,981 30	.....
1884-5	.....	78,547 90
1885-6	.....	133,905 79
1886-7	.....	262,252 69
1887-8	.....	383,445 69
1888-9	.....	276,846 73
1889-90	.....	547,835 87
1890-1	.....	684,946 56
1891-2	.....	493,935 03
1892-3	20,181 59	.....
1893-4	5,838 29	.....
1894-5	3,815 21	.....
1895-6	.....	55,187 52
1896-7	.....	59,940 65
1897-8	.....	209,978 66
1898-9	272,645 23	.....

There was no Intercolonial Railway prior to 1872-3. There were merely a couple of short detached pieces of railway.

MAIL SERVICE IN MANITOBA.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Since a tri-weekly mail service has been organized along the line of the Emerson branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Manitoba, why was not a similar service provided for St. Pierre, La Rochelle and St. Malo, from Otterburne station, as it has been asked for in a petition signed by the leading business men of those localities?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I think the form of this question is objectionable, being argumentative. If the question were amended, by omitting the first clause, so as simply to ask why a tri-weekly service was not provided for the points named, I have the answer.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I have no objection to amend the question. I did not mean to cast any reflection.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The reason a tri-weekly service has not been provided for the points named, is the great cost as compared with the revenue.

THE DISMISSAL OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR McINNES.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Prior) asked :

1. Did the Secretary of State in August last convey to Lieutenant-Governor McInnes instructions respecting the attitude he should adopt in certain matters towards his ministers in a letter marked 'confidential.'

2. Did the Secretary of State of Canada subsequently write another letter upon the same subject to the said Lieutenant-Governor McInnes marked 'strictly private'?

3. Were the instructions of the Secretary of State to Lieutenant-Governor McInnes, in regard to said letters, or any of them, to the effect that said letters should be destroyed?

4. Were the letters referred to in questions 1 and 2 purely personal communications from the Secretary of State or did he give the said instructions to the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia in regard to the conduct of public business in said province, as the official mouth-piece of the federal government?

5. Why were the said letters marked confidential, and why was the Lieutenant-Governor instructed to destroy them?

6. Why did the Dominion government, before dismissing Lieutenant-Governor McInnes, not await his official report, as requested by him in his telegram of June 19, as having been mailed from Victoria, B.C., on June 15?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The answer to the first five questions is, that the Secretary of State sent no confidential communications whatever to the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, but Mr. Scott wrote to Mr. McInnes as a friend to a friend, certain purely personal letters, and for such letters Mr. Scott is not answerable to this House. To the sixth question, the answer is that when Mr. McInnes was removed from the office of Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, the government was in possession of his last words.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose, then, that the letters sent by Mr. Scott, not as Secretary of State, included no mandatory of, or directory instructions?

The PRIME MINISTER. Nothing at all.

EMPLOYMENT OF ARTHUR PARENT.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Whether there is at present employed in the service of the government, as foreman or otherwise, at the graving dock at Lévis, a man named Arthur Parent?

2. What are his duties?

3. What salary does he receive?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1, 2 and 3. Mr. Parent is employed as timekeeper by the contractor.

MILITIA CAMPS—TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. To whom was given the contract for the transportation of the 7th Field Battery to and from the Deseronto camp this year?

2. What were the terms upon which the work was to be done?

3. What amount has been paid or is to be paid for the work?

4. What amount was paid, and to whom, for the transportation of troops to and from the Niagara camp, and upon what conditions?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Thos. Nihan, St. Catharines, Ont. 2. Eight hundred and seventy-five dollars from St. Catharines to Deseronto and return, including all dues and charges. 3. No amount has yet been paid: $875 is to be paid. 4. No amount has yet been paid.

THE DUTY ON HAY.

Mr. RICHARDSON (by Mr. LaRivière) asked :

1. Is the government aware that, owing to the long-continued drought in the province of Manitoba, there will be a shortage in the hay crop, and that hardship will be experienced in procuring a sufficient supply of fodder for stock the coming winter?

2. Will the government remove the duty of $2 per ton on hay, to enable the settlers to procure hay from the extensive low-lying hay lands immediately south of the international boundary?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I am glad to know that recent information from the province of Manitoba, encourages the belief that the condition of the crops is very much better than was anticipated a little while ago, and we hope that the expectation of the hon. gentleman who put the question will not be realized, so far as the shortage is concerned. In any event, however, it is not our intention to propose any tariff changes during the remainder of the present session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

TATAMAGOUCHE HARBOUR SURVEY.

Mr. BELL (Pictou) (by Mr. Gillies) asked :

By whom was the survey of Tatamagouche harbour made in the spring of 1899? What was the purpose of said survey? Have all amounts in connection with said survey been paid, and what was the total cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. By Assistant Engineer Thos. J. Locke. 2. To dredge a channel forty feet wide in the harbour and river, up to the village of Tatamagouche. 3. Mr. Locke is paid a monthly salary. His travelling expenses were $9.10. There is no information in the department that any accounts for the survey are unpaid.

FISHING BOUNTY CLAIM.

Mr. BELL (Pictou) (by Mr. Gillies) asked :

Did John A. Chisholm and W. A. Chisholm, of St. Francis Harbour, Guysborough County, make application to the government, or any officer thereof, for fishing bounty during the past year? If so, what was the amount of the claim; was it paid, and if not, why not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Yes. 2. Four dollars and fifty cents each. 3. The claims were not paid because they were not filed within the time specified in the regulations.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—FIRST CONTINGENT LIFE INSURANCE.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Were the lives of the members of the first contingent, now in South Africa, insured for $1,000 each by a company doing business in Montreal?

2. If so, have not a number of claims for this insurance become due, and has not the government received official notice from Sir Alfred Milner of several of these deaths?

3. Does the government intend to take any steps towards the payment of these claims?

4. If not, what procedure is necessary on the part of the relatives or friends of the deceased men to obtain said insurance?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not exactly understand what is the particular company to which my hon. friend refers. If my hon. friend refers to the company with which the hon. the leader of the opposition has, more or less, to do, I may inform him that I myself gave Sir Charles Tupper an authentic copy of all the information we had up to that time, and I do not know that we will have any more for some time to come.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to know whether the government have received official notice of the deaths from Sir Alfred Milner?

The PRIME MINISTER. I gave an official copy of the information I received from Sir Alfred Milner to Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. PRIOR. That does not indicate in what manner the relatives and friends of the deceased men are to apply to obtain the insurance—whether to Sir Charles Tupper or the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think the government have anything to do with the matter.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to renew my request for a return of the dismissed officials from the Railway Department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I hope to have it before the end of the sitting.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House concur in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 180) respecting and restricting Chinese immigration. He said: The amendments are as follows: The Senate have provided that the Governor in Council may make regulations for the carrying out of this Act. They have made a verbal amendment to section 6. Section 4 they have amended by adding this proviso: 'Any woman of Chinese origin, who is a wife of a person not of Chinese origin, shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed of the same nationality as her husband, and the children of the same nationality as their father.' The Senate have also provided that the Governor in Council may make the regulations necessary to prohibit the entering into Canada of any greater number of persons from any foreign country than the laws of such country permit to emigrate to Canada.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY—HOMESTEAD ENTRY IN MANITOBA.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). I regret that at this late stage I have to take up the time of the House, but the matter I wish to bring to its attention is of such importance for the good administration of public affairs that I cannot remain silent and leave it in the dark. We have in the province of Manitoba, connected with the Department of the Interior, a dual administration with regard to the public lands. We have the land office, which is directly under the department at Ottawa, and we have also the immigration branch, which interferes, more or less, in the administration of the department. I must call the attention of the House to the abuses that are committed in connection with this administration.

A quantity of land was disposed of some years ago, either by purchase or as homesteads. And, as the regulations under the Land Act have not been complied with in some of these cases, the sales or homestead entries can be annulled. As new settlers come in, they look over the lands and when they see a lot unimproved or unoccupied, they take note of that; and, if the regulations have not been complied with, upon application made by the new settlers, the sale or homestead entry previously made may be cancelled and the newcomer recognized as the first claimant either to purchase the land or enter it as a homestead.

I wish to call attention more especially to one case—and I am sorry to say there are others of a similar nature. The case I wish to refer to is that of the south half section 25, township 1, range 3 east. It appears from the books of the land office in Winnipeg, and also in the department that this whole section had been originally sold to Mrs. S. McCaul, of St. Thomas, Ont. But, as only a partial payment had been made upon the land and other payments were not forthcoming, the department was asked to cancel that sale. On December 15, 1897, one August Schmitke, a German, who had come into the province to settle down, wrote the following letter to the agent of the Dominion lands in Winnipeg:

Dominion City P.O., 15th, 1897.

Dear Sir,—I want to apply for the cancellation of the present entry for section 25, township 1, range 3 east, as I understand that the land is not paid for. If cancellation takes place, I would like to homestead the south-west quarter, and my son, twenty years of age, will take the south-east quarter.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) AUGUST SCHMITKE.

Agent Dominion Lands, Winnipeg.

A communication in reference to this letter was sent by the Dominion lands agent in Winnipeg to the secretary of the Department of the Interior, inclosing the application of Mr. Schmitke and asking for instructions with regard to the matter. On January 7, 1898, the assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior answered the agent of Dominion lands and informed him that he had advised one W. J. Whitley, who had made some inquiry about that land for German settlers. It appears that this Mr. Whitley who was also looking for that same piece of land, did not ask for the cancellation of the former sale; but merely asked the department as to the present holders of the land, so that he might communicate with them and purchase their right. The communication in which Mr. Whitley spoke of this matter was written on November 11, 1897. On January 27, 1898, the immigration commissioner in Winnipeg, Mr. McCreary, suggested that the sale to Mrs. McCaul should be cancelled and this land sold at auction to the highest bidder. This view, it appears, was favoured by the department; but when the offer was made at public auction, nobody bid for the land, so therefore, it remained as it had been. On April 11, 1898, one George Christie, a land agent, applied for the purchase of this land on behalf of one Andreas Wahlman and his three sons. He did not apply to homestead, but to purchase the land. On April 25, 1898, the assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior notified Mrs. McCaul that the land sale made to her was cancelled. Thus, it was only from that date that the land became public property and could be dealt with in the regular way. On the same day, the assistant secretary of the department notified Mr. McCreary of the cancellation. On September 7, 1898, the Dominion lands agent in Winnipeg wrote to the Department of the Interior that tenders had been asked for, as I have stated and that none were received and asking for further instructions. On the 24th of the same month, an answer came from the Department of the Interior that homestead entries be accepted for the section. On October 17 following, the agent of the Dominion lands at Winnipeg notified the Department of the Interior that he was notifying August Schmitke that he could take the land. August Schmitke came to Winnipeg, made his entry for the land for himself and his son and paid the fees, and went to the land and started work upon it. Later on, Mr. McCreary, the Dominion immigration agent at Winnipeg, went to the land office and insisted on the entry that had been allowed in favour of Mr. Schmitke being recorded in the book and that the money be returned, because, as he pretended, there was a prior application.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Do I understand my hon. friend to say that this person, Mr. Schmitke, actually got an entry?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. He actually signed his entry paper and deposited his money.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Got his entry receipt, did he?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Did not get his receipt, but he signed his papers and deposited the money.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend speaks of the entry being cancelled. The entry could not have been cancelled unless it had been made, and if he had made the entry he would have had his receipt. The hon. gentleman understands that very well.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I do not know whether I said cancelled, but at the same time he signed his papers he deposited the money and went home, because his money was in the hands of the officials of the department and was returned afterwards. Well, this man, Geo. Christie, when he saw Schmitke taking possession of the land, started off for Winnipeg to ask why this land had been allowed to be entered by that man Schmitke, as he himself had applied for it; and he ascertained that his application in favour of Wahlman was subsequent to that of Schmitke. Christie went back home, and then he heard that Mr. W. J. Whitley, another land agent in Emerson, had written on a prior date asking for some information with regard to this land, and asking who the owners of the land were. I have here a copy of the letter, and it is nothing else but an inquiry for information. Then Christie comes back with the letter from this man Whitley stating that the parties for whom he was inquiring were the Wahlmans, the very same men on whose behalf Christie himself was acting. On the strength of that, the money that had been deposited by Schmitke was returned, and he was informed that he could not get the land. I have here a copy of the official letter, dated October 17, 1898, of the Dominion lands agent in Winnipeg, to the secretary of the department in reference to this matter, in which he says, amongst other things:

On the 3rd inst. I notified August Schmitke, of Dominion City, that the land is available for himself and his son on the terms which govern the disposal of Dominion lands.

I am, sir.

E. F. STEPHENSON,

Agent Dominion Lands.

Then Mr. McCreary, commissioner, writes the following letter to the Deputy Minister of the Interior about this matter:

Office of Commissioner of Immigration,
Winnipeg, October 21, 1898.

Re South Half 25-1-3 East.

Sir.—Mr. George Christie, Emerson, came to see me the other day in regard to this land for which he had made an application on behalf of a German family named Wahlman. On going to Mr. Stephenson's office I found that the first applicant was one August Schmitke, but on looking into the files, it would seem to me that Whitley made application to Ottawa at about the same time as Schmitke, or probably before. Now, I would be pleased if you would have one of the clerks send me an exact copy of the application made by Whitley, Christie, Schmitke and Scott, with the dates when they were received. Schmitke has come in to make his entry on receiving notice from Mr. Stephenson's office, but when I called their attention to the fact that they did not have a copy of Whitley's application, and consequently were not aware but that it might be prior to that of Schmitke, they held his papers until these documents had been received.

Yours truly,

W. F. McCREARY.

James A. Smart, Esq.,

Deputy Minister of the Interior.

Now, Sir, this is the first interference of Mr. McCreary in this transaction. In answer to this, the secretary of the Department of the Interior transmits to Mr. McCreary a copy of Mr. Whitley's letter to which I have referred, and perhaps it would be well that I should read that letter to let the House understand what it may be worth. It is dated November 11, 1897:

To the Commissioner of Dominion Lands,
Ottawa.

Could your department give me the addresses of the parties who purchased section 25, township 1, range 3 east, from the government some years ago? I want to try and make arrangements to purchase these lands for some German settlers I am putting in in this township, and if I get the address of the parties holding the land I might be able to buy their interest and make the balance of the payment to the government. Any information you can give me will be thankfully received.

Yours truly,

W. J. WHITLEY.

This was merely an informal application for information, it was not an application to have the sale cancelled, or to secure land for settlers as homesteads. It is true that the contention of Whitley is that he wants to settle some German families. He does not name them, he does not say who he is acting for, he does not say what kind of a transaction he is going to make with those Germans. The fact of the matter is after having written that letter, we hear no more of Whitley. The land changes hands, the land is settled upon by Schmitke, and we hear no more of him until his letter is filed for the benefit of Geo. Christie's protégés as against the interest of the Schmitke family.

In the early part of this session, I moved for all the papers in connection with this transaction; but I am sorry to say that I only received about half of them, I did not get a complete file, and the best proof is that I have in my possession several original letters written by officials of the department in connection with that matter, which are not included in the return that I now produce before the House. I regret that these important letters should have been left out, and that the department did not bring down a complete return.

Now, Sir, I have stated that the fees that had been deposited by Mr. Schmitke were returned by the Dominion land agent. In an official letter bearing date December 13, which is not included in the return, I find the following:

Department of the Interior,
Office of Dominion Lands,
Winnipeg, Man., December 13, 1898.

Sir,—With reference to your application for the S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  25-1-3 east, I beg to inform you that upon consideration of the case, it is found that there was an application sent in a month previous to yours, and as the parties are ready to make entry, I am asking Mr. Charles A. Jones to return the \$30 which was forwarded as entry fees for yourself and your son.

I was advised some time ago by the department that it was probable that the N.W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  17-3-3 east, would be made available for entry if applications were received and if, after looking at the land, you think it likely to suit you, I shall be glad to communicate with the department at Ottawa. There is also the N.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  22-2-5 east, which is available for entry.

I return herewith the letter from the department authorizing you to make a second entry.

I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,
E. H. TAYLOR,

For Agent Dominion Lands.

August Schmitke, Esq.,

Emerson,

Manitoba.

This, of course, did not satisfy Mr. Schmitke, and he wrote to the commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg, who had also written to him, protesting against the treatment that he had received. Here is the answer that the commissioner gave to him:

Winnipeg, January 11, 1899.

Dear sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 9th inst. inclosing $30, the amount which I had just returned to Mr. Schmitke.

Mr. Schmitke returned the money to the immigration commissioner, insisting upon his entry being accepted, and would not take his money back.

I inclose amount again, and at the same time would let you have the following statement in regard to this matter.

Mr. Schmitke, when at the land office, was distinctly told that entry had been applied for, for this land, but that in order to save him a further trip to Winnipeg they would take an application from him which would be forwarded to the head office, and that the decision would have to come from them in regard to this entry.

This statement, I must say, en passant, is emphatically denied by Mr. Schmitke, who says that there was no such agreement with him.

There was seemingly six prior applications to Mr. Schmitke's—

If it were parliamentary language, I would say that Mr. McCreary was telling a lie, that there were not six applications made prior to that of Schmitke. There was only one letter, which, by the officials of the land office, was not considered to be an application written by Mr. Whitley. All the other applications that might be considered as such were posterior to that made by the Schmitke family.

There were seemingly six prior applications to Mr. Schmitke's, and although everything was done in this office to try and obtain this land for the party mentioned, the land commissioner could not look over the fact that the other parties had a prior right, and consequently ruled against Schmitke. This was explained to Mr. Schmitke at the time, and he will now have to abide by the decision of the department. He is very foolish to have taken any premature action in regard to this land, and will have to suffer the consequences.

The premature action was that he had returned home, taken possession of his land, begun to break it and to haul up lumber to build a house after he had been told by the land office, in an official letter, that he could get the land as a homestead. The immigration commissioner tells this poor German immigrant, ignoring the laws of the country, that he is very foolish to have taken any premature action in regard to this land, when he simply took action after having received the official information that he had received from the officers of the land office in Winnipeg.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to know what Mr. McCreary had to do with it?

Mr. LaRIVIERE (reading):

And he will have to suffer the consequences.

That is what he said to a poor immigrant, who has been deceived by the officers of the department. He will have to bear the consequences of the maladministration of the land office.

I am informed by Mr. Taylor, of the land office, that they have advised Mr. Schmitke of this fact—

That is another lie.

—and have also notified him of other land in that district for which he could obtain entry.

I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) W. F. McCREARY,
Commissioner.

W. W. Unsworth, Esq.,

Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.,
Emerson, Man.

Kindly acknowledge receipt and oblige.

This is another of the letters which have been kept away from the files that I applied for, but I have the official document addressed to Mr. Schmitke's solicitor and signed by Mr. McCreary's own hand.

Mr. DAVIN. It is nothing extraordinary to have a letter kept back.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. In the same file, not the official file, I find also a letter dated January 20, 1899, addressed to the solicitor of Mr. Schmitke, by Mr. Taylor, who was acting for the Dominion land agent:

Department of the Interior,
Dominion Land Office,
Winnipeg, January 20, 1899.

Sir,—The commissioner of immigration has forwarded to me your letter of the 12th instant regarding the S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  25-1-2 east, and in reply I beg to say that the application of Mr. Schmitke was made on the 15th December, 1897; whereas an inquiry of Mr. Whitley on behalf of some German settlers, was dated 11th of the previous month.

I do not think I am acquainted with this gentleman, Mr. E. H. Taylor, who was acting in an official capacity during the absence of the Dominion land agent, but I must say on his behalf, that he is too honest to treat that letter of Mr. Whitley as a regular application. He speaks of the application of Mr. Schmitke, which was made on December 15, 1897, and says:

This inquiry was overlooked when the land was offered to your client, and before entry was granted to Messrs. Paul and Andreas Wahlman, a statutory declaration was required from Mr. Whitley that these were the same settlers on whose behalf he wrote in November, 1897.

I regret the inconvenience caused Mr. Schmitke and have written him offering him entry for several other pieces of land at no great distance from Emerson. None of them, however, appear to suit his requirements.

I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,

E. H. TAYLOR.

For Agent Dominion Lands.

W. W. Unsworth, Esq.,

Emerson.

Manitoba.

It seems that Whitley's letter was merely a letter of inquiry without any definite object, except, perhaps, as he said in his own letter, that he might purchase that land from the then supposed owner, and hand it over to some German settlers whom he did not name, and make a speculation on the property by that transaction. A legitimate speculation it would have been if he had purchased the land from the party who was then supposed to own it; because in that case the land would not be held by the government. About the same time, that is, on the 17th of January, 1899, having heard of the circumstances of the case, I myself made some inquiry. I wrote to the Dominion lands agent in Winnipeg, asking for some information, and here is the answer I received from him:

Dominion Lands Office,
Winnipeg, January 23, 1899.

Sir.—I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 17th inst., and to say in reply that the S $\frac{1}{2}$  of 25-1-3, east, is entered by Messrs. Paul and Andreas Wahlman.

These were the two protégés of this man Christie, who, after Schmitke had returned his money, were allowed to enter for these lands. The letter goes on:

The applicants for the land were as follows: W. J. Whitley, November 11, 1897; August Schmitke, December 15, 1897; John Molloy, January 8, 1898; Michael Scott, April 6, 1898; as well as subsequent applicants.

Here is a list of four applicants given to me by the Dominion lands agent in Winnipeg, in which the first appears to be one Whitley, of whom we have heard before, who had merely applied for information, as I have stated; and then comes Mr. August Schmitke, who makes direct application for the land as a homestead entry. The immigration commissioner in Winnipeg answered Mr. Schmitke: 'There are six applications prior to yours.' Here is another official in the land office who says there are six, but Mr. Whitley is the first. If his letter can be considered an application, Mr. Schmitke comes in as the second. Therefore, even if that application of Whitley's had been a proper one, Schmitke would be the second in the list, and therefore there could not be six applications prior to his. The letter of the Dominion lands agent goes on:

Mr. August Schmitke was authorized, on the 3rd October last to enter for this land for himself and his son, it being considered that the letter of Mr. W. J. Whitley did not constitute an application for the land. A protest was entered on Mr. Whitley's behalf, and the whole matter being submitted to the deputy minister during his recent visit, he decided that Mr.

Whitley must be considered the first applicant, and the latter made declaration that Messrs. Wahlman were the settlers on whose behalf he inquired in November, 1897.

Now, Sir, here is the third gentleman stepping in and with his high authority interfering in this matter between the two other officials, the head of the land office and the head of the immigration office, and deciding in favour of this man Christie, who has made this man Whitley his tool in order to attain his own object. This letter goes on:

I have made several efforts to find other land suitable for Schmitke, but apparently none have proved satisfactory.

I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,

E. H. TAYLOR,

For Agent Dominion Lands.

A. A. C. LaRivière, Esq., M.P.,

St. Boniface, Man.

This letter did not form part of the file which I have now before me, and which has been laid on the Table of the House by the Minister of the Interior, though I asked for every paper in connection with the whole matter. As I have said, on the 20th of December, 1898, the two Wahlmans, on whose behalf this man George Christie was acting, were allowed to make their entries and pay their money. I then received some information from the district where this transaction and other similar transactions have taken place. In one of the communications I have received is the following:

Before Schmitke made entry in October last, Christie had the effrontery to offer to sell the land to him for $200. Failing to grab from Schmitke, he resurrects the Wahlman application. A cursory perusal of the letters I send you will show many charming blunders. In your letter the matter was submitted to the deputy minister. In my letter of the 11th January, 1899, it was the land commissioner. In your letter there is only Mr. Whitley ahead of Schmitke. In the commissioner's letter there were seemingly six. On the 13th of July, Mr. Stephenson—

That is, the land agent at Winnipeg—

—writes that the land is not in the hands of the government; but on the 9th December, the secretary of the Department of the Interior says the sale entry was cancelled in the March previous. This last will be found to be correct, and therefore any applications prior to that should not be taken notice of. Please note that they speak of Whitley's as an 'inquiry,' while that of Schmitke was an 'application.' Then, again, the practice is to give twenty days' time to complete application by depositing, fees, &c. This would knock out all those enumerated in your letter, and make Schmitke first in line with his money. I think you will find that the deputy minister's recent visit was coincident with Mr. Christie's visit to Winnipeg, when he made entry and paid the fees for the Wahlmans, or rather for himself in their names. But then, again, who really was it decided—the deputy minister or the land commissioner?

On the 15th March, 1897, I stated already that the two Wahlmans were allowed by the Dominion lands agent to enter this land, through their agent, Mr. Christie. I am not saying that this was done with their knowledge, since they state later that they never knew that their names had been taken in the land offices as homesteaders for the land they were occupying because another transaction had taken place in the meantime. Mr. Schmitke, feeling that he had been wronged in this transaction, sent a protest to the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, insisting on the land being returned to him, as he was fully entitled to get it as a homesteader. This document I will read to show in what state of mind this poor German settler is after having been treated in this way:

Emerson, March 15, 1900.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—When the south half of 25 S. 1. R. 3 east, was opened up for homestead I made application for the S.W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  and my son for the S.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  and our application being first the department notified me that they would give me so many days to appear and take out my entry papers on receiving the notice I made preparations and went to Winnipeg two days after receiving the notice to take out my entry papers and paid the fee of \$15, the department held the money until I would go home and send up my son's fee of \$15 and promised to send the two entry papers back together. I trusted to them to do as they agreed and went home and on the 20th October, I sent up \$15 for my son's entry expecting everything was all right. I commenced to build and improve my homestead expecting my entry papers along every day but I never heard anything about them until about January 5, 1899, when I got my money returned and stating that I could not get the homestead after going to the expense of a trip to Winnipeg and improving the homestead. I returned the money on January 9, but it was returned to me again and is now in Emerson. Under the circumstances I think it is the duty of the department to grant me my entry papers. Hoping this explanation is satisfactory I hope to hear from you by return mail.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) AUGUST SCHMITKE,
Emerson, Man.

To this an answer was sent by the secretary of the Department of the Interior, which I shall read, because there is an important statement in it:

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, March 24, 1899.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, and in reply to inform you that a copy of it is being sent to the local agent, in Winnipeg, for report and you will be advised after he has been heard from. I am to add for your information that there appears to be several applicants for the land, the south half of section 25-1-3 east, who seem to be entitled to consideration ahead of you, their applications having been filed some time in advance of yours.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) JOHN R. HALL,
Secretary.

August Schmitke, Esq.,
Emerson, Man.

Here is another false statement, Mr. Speaker, but this time coming from a higher source. This time it comes from the secretary of the Department of the Interior at Ottawa. This letter, dictated probably by the minister or his deputy, contains another false statement in the line of that of the immigration commissioner at Winnipeg, to the effect that there were several applications ahead of this poor man's, while there is not a single letter that could be treated as an application, but only a letter asking for information.

I have here a copy of another communication, this time from the agent of the Dominion lands in Winnipeg, addressed to the secretary of the Department of the Interior, and giving the history of the whole affair up to the date of that letter :

Department of the Interior,
Dominion Lands Office,
Winnipeg, March 29, 1899.

Sir.—I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 24th instant, file 400312, and to say in reply that the facts connected with the S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 25-1-3 east, are as follows:

On the 3rd of October last, this land was offered to Mr. August Schmitke and his son, but before he appeared to enter for the land, on the 17th idem the Dominion immigration commissioner called here and protested against entry being granted until copies had been received of the various applications. They were submitted to the deputy minister when he was here in November, and he decided that the letter of Mr. W. J. Whitley, of November 11, 1897, must be treated as an application and must take precedence of that made by August Schmitke, on the 15th December 1897, provided Whitley filed a declaration that the German settlers whom he nominated for entry, are the same men on whose behalf he wrote in November, 1897. This was done and entry granted to Mr. Whitley's clients.

I may say that recognizing the delay and expense which has been caused Mr. Schmitke in this matter, I made several efforts to offer him other land in the neighbourhood, but none of these have apparently proved suitable.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) E. H. TAYLOR,
For Agent, Dominion Lands.

The secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa.

This shows that it was not the agent who was considered the proper officer to adjust these matters, but the deputy minister himself. It was for that gentleman who decided whether or not Mr. Whitley's letter asking for information was really an application for the homestead. The secretary of the Department of the Interior wrote to Mr. Schmitke, in answer to his communication complaining about the way in which he had been treated :

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, April 7, 1899.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 15th ultimo, I am directed to inform you that a report has now been received from the local agent in Winnipeg, by which it appears that there were prior applicants for the south half 25-1-3 east, entitled to consideration before you and as the land has been entered for by them, it cannot be made available for your purposes. The agent reports he has been endeavouring to assist you in finding some other suitable location, but so far without success. He is now asked to make another effort to help you in the matter and you will hear from him in due course.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) JOHN R. HALL,
Secretary.

August Schmitke, Esq.,
Emerson, Man.

While this correspondence was being exchanged, rumours were afloat that there was still something worse. There were rumours that there was a deal behind this privilege sought by this man Christie in favour of the two Wahlmans, as against the honest, straightforward application of Schmitkes, who were bona fide settlers. After having heard the details, I wrote to the Minister of the Interior the following letter, during the course of last session :

House of Commons,
Ottawa, May 12, 1899.

Hon. C. Sifton,
Minister of the Interior, &c., &c., &c.,
Ottawa.

Sir,—There appears to be something crooked in connection with the entry and the granting of a homestead privilege to two Germans named Wahlmans, on section 25, township 1, range 3 east, and I would say that an investigation be made in this case. One Christie is accused of having acted as middle man and has or is to receive undue consideration for his share in the transaction. It is currently reported that this man Christie has been offering the privilege of entry on this land to several people at a high consideration, and that bona fide applicants after having deposited the fees and having entered the land, and prepared for building, were informed that they could not get it. This same man Christie has purchased the timber from these people and it is reported that he is to receive five thousand dollars or thereabout for the deal from the present homesteaders, who have as yet done nothing on the land.

As you see this is a very serious matter and as I do not intend to bring it before the House, unless it is attended to, I beg to ask that you see that justice be done to the rightful applicants, Schmitke, father and son, also Germans.

Yours very truly,
A. A. C. LaRIVIERE.

To this I received the following answer :

Minister of the Interior, Canada,
Ottawa, May 15, 1899.

Dear Mr. LaRivière,—I have your letter of the 12th instant, asking for an investigation in regard to the granting of a homestead entry to two Germans named Wahlman on section 25, township 1, range 3 east. The matter has not heretofore been brought to my attention, but I will direct that an investigation be made at once.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) C. SIFTON.

Hon. A. A. C. LaRivière, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

It took some time to get that investigation, but I must say that the hon. Minister of the Interior has always shown to me a willingness to sift this matter to the bottom; though I have to complain that after having done some thing, he has not seen fit to have justice done to whom justice was due.

The assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior wrote the following letter to the agent of the Dominion lands at Winnipeg:

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, May 19, 1899.

Sir,—I am directed by the commissioner to hand you the inclosed copy of a letter to the minister from Mr. A. A. C. LaRivière, M.P., regarding the entries of two Germans named Wahlman for part of section 25, township 1, range 3 east. You will be good enough to make inquiry into the matter at once, and report for the information of the department. If necessary, the homestead inspector should be instructed to obtain the necessary particulars.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) LYNDWODE PEREIRA,
Assistant Secretary.

The Agent of Dominion Lands,
Winnipeg, Man.

The machinery was set in motion, and the result showed that the rumours which were in circulation were correct. The agent of the Dominion lands in Winnipeg sent one of the homestead inspectors to Emerson, and this inspector had the two Wahlmans brought before him. For the information of the House, let me give the letter of the agent of the Dominion lands on this matter, when instructed to make an investigation:

Department of the Interior,
Dominion Lands Office,
Winnipeg, May 29, 1899.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 19th instant, file 400312, and to say in reply that I am instructing the homestead inspector to take the evidence under oath of Paul and Andreas Wahlman as to what their arrangement with Mr. George Christie was, by which entry was secured for the S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 25-1-3 east.

So far as is known in this office, there is little to add to the explanations contained in my letter of the 29th March last, except that it was at Mr. Christie's request that the Dominion immigration commissioner protested against the entry being granted to the Schmitkes. The original application of Mr. Christie on behalf of the Wahlmans, dated April 11, 1898, is inclosed for your information, together with the letter and declaration of Mr. W. J. Whitley, setting forth that it was on behalf of this family that he made the inquiry of the department at Ottawa, on November 11, 1897, which it was ruled must be treated as an application for entry. The declaration made by the Wahlmans at the date of making entry through their agent, Mr. George Christie, will also be found inclosed.

Since writing the above, Mr. Paul Templin, a German pedlar of this city, called here to complain of Mr. Christie's treatment of his fellow-countrymen, and to find out exactly in what position the land stood in which they are interested. He states that the Wahlmans are entirely ignorant that they hold entry for the land above mentioned, and being required by Christie each to give a note agreeing to pay \$500 at the end of three years for purchase of the quarter section, refuse to go into occupation. He claims that a similar transaction has taken place between Mr. Christie and Louis Felsch, a German for whom the former made homestead entry on September 22 last, for the N.W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  1-1-3 east. The application that this land should be made available was made by Mr. Christie on Felsch's behalf on April 11, 1898, and Templin claims that Mr. Christie has agreed to sell the land to Felsch for \$500 and hold his note for that sum on which no payment is to be made until expiry of three years, but in each of the first three years he is to deliver to Mr. Christie eight loads of hay as payment of interest on the purchase. Templin says that Mr. Christie supplied part of a farm outfit, for which Felsch is to pay the value in addition to the purchase price of the land.

If you think it well to have the Felsch transaction investigated by the homestead inspector, please instruct me.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) E. H. TAYLOR,
For Agent Dominion Lands.

The Secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa.

So, outside of the case I am bringing before the House, the agent of the Dominion lands, in his official capacity, informed the department that this man Christie was carrying on other transactions—that he was actually selling the public domain and putting the money in his pocket, while he was deceiving the people by getting the land for nothing in their name.

Mr. DAVIN. Who is Christie?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. He is a shark.

Mr. DAVIN. Does he live in Winnipeg?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. He lives in Emerson, I am sorry to say—he is in my county. Now, while this was going on—it took some time—I was getting anxious to see the end of it before the session closed. So, while I was in Ottawa, I became very pressing with the Minister of the Interior to have the investigation completed as soon as possible. On June 6, 1899, having received some further information, I wrote the following:

House of Commons,
Ottawa, June 6, 1899.

Dear Sir.—Following my letter of the 12th ult., I beg to submit further information in regard to the granting of a homestead entry to two Germans named Wahlman on section 25-1-3 east, and in reference to which I have suggested an investigation.

The information goes to show that there is something crooked in the transaction made, to the detriment of bona fide settlers who are still waiting for a just treatment on the part of the government.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. A. C. LaRIVIERE.

Hon. C. Sifton,
Minister of the Interior, &c., &c.,
Ottawa.

This was accompanied by the following memorandum:

I have learned a few additional particulars since my last letter to you. One of the Wahlmans tells me 'the paper we got from Christie we think no good'; he promises to let me see it. Whitley also now tells me that Christie paid him (Whitley) $50 to nominate the Wahlmans as the persons who first made inquiries to him for these homesteads. Then Christie obtained a set of blanks, had the Wahlmans appoint him agent, and so made the entry and paid the fees. This being done, Christie had a contract drawn up between the Wahlmans and himself whereby they contract to pay $500 for each quarter at the end of three years. In the meanwhile, the scheme is to make them pay in kind or cash sufficient to cover his outlay on account of entry fees, and they go on improving the land for Christie's benefit, who will bluff them out of a deed to himself as soon as the patent issues, unless they put up their respective $500. Up to the present, however, the Wahlmans have made no attempt to begin homestead duties.

The minister, through his deputy, sent me the following letter in answer:

Ottawa, June 10, 1899.

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 6th instant in regard to the granting of homestead entries on section 25-1-3 east first M., to persons named Wahlman or Woolman, and in reply beg to say that this matter has already been brought to the attention of the department, and the agent of Dominion lands at Winnipeg has been instructed to have a full and careful inquiry made into these cases. As soon as the report is received from the agent, I will be in a position to consider the matter fully.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) JAS. A. SMART,
Deputy Minister.

A. A. C. LaRivière, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

I read all these letters because this is a matter the facts of which require to be put on record. We must not allow the public domain to be used by land sharks for their own benefit; we must not allow officials of the department to connive with these men and protect them as against the poor settlers, especially the German or other foreign settlers who cannot speak English and are ready to accept the ipse dixit of an official, thinking that he cannot be wrong, while, judging by this correspondence, the officials themselves stand self-convicted, because they contradict one another's statements and, in some cases, tell what is clearly not true. Following what I had already written, I addressed another letter to the minister for I thought it was taking a long time to get to the bottom of this matter. That other letter was as follows:

Ottawa, June 27, 1899.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior, Ottawa.

I have received some further information in the Wahlman matter which I beg to inclose herewith. There appears to be some miscarriage of justice in this case, and I hope you will press the investigation which you promised and see that justice is done to whom justice is due, and that the guilty parties will be punished.

Yours truly,
A. A. C. LaRIVIERE.

This is the information which accompanied my letter. It is composed of part of a letter I received on the subject from a person who was well posted, and it contains the following:

I shall be glad to hear what progress has been made in the Schmitke investigation, particularly as the whole transaction turns out to be worse even than I thought it was. Since writing you last, one of the Wahlman's called upon me and gave me the inside history of it. Brief, they never knew this land was homestead land, never made entry for it and never authorized an agent, to make entry for them. All this notwithstanding the fact that Schmitke made personal and bona fide entry, paid his money and got his receipt a month before Christie contrived to induce Winnipeg officials to substitute Wahlman's name for Schmitke's and to return the latter his money. Christie, on his return from Winnipeg after succeeding as above, told Wahlman he could now sell them each a quarter section for $500 a piece. They agreed and gave Christie a joint note on demand for $1,000; he making them believe that it was only a matter of form and that he did not want any money for three years—only seven or eight loads of hay a year and the taxes. Subsequently, in February last, Christie told the Wahlman's to come and fix the papers for the form. They signed some instrument of which there was no copy and which was retained by Christie—probably a quit claim deed. Mr. Forrester, however, (Christie's solicitor) presented them with the inclosed 'statement of claim' which they cannot read, but which they were led to believe was in some way connected with their title to the land and they carried it carefully home in this belief, never dreaming that they were being sued on their note. Of course they put in no defence and judgment is now actually registered against them for $1,000. The first inkling they had of the true nature of the document was when I read and explained it to Paul Wahlman a few days ago.

There is no mistake about it Christie, McCreary and Smart conspired to deprive Schmitke of his homestead and helped Christie to obtain a $1,000 judgment under the false pretenses.

How could they take entry in the land office without the proper forms of authority to agent being filled out and signed; the Wahlman's never signed a form of any kind, and yet Christie got them entered without either their knowledge or authority.

For of course, you see, he could not enter himself and if he had asked for their authority to act as agent to make the entry for them, he could not then have fooled them into 'buying' the land at $500 per quarter.

I may add that one Wahlman has done nothing on his quarter and the other one has put in eight acres.

Well, Sir, we are getting into the inside of this transaction. In answer to that last communication inclosing an extract from my informant in Emerson I received an acknowledgment from the Deputy Minister of the Interior. The minister himself was becoming so disgusted with the transaction that he put it in the hands of his deputy and would have nothing more to do with it. It is dated Ottawa, 3rd of July, 1899:

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 27th ult., addressed to the Hon. Mr. Sifton, in regard to the Wahlman matter, and beg to say that as you were advised on the 10th ult., the matter will be gone into carefully as soon as the report from the agent of the Dominion lands is received.

Yours truly,
JAMES A. SMART.

A. C. LaRivière, Esq., M.P.

Now, Sir, an investigation took place, as I have stated. The agent of the Dominion lands in Winnipeg instructed one of the inspectors there, a man of some standing in Manitoba and a good friend of the hon. gentleman opposite, a man who sits to-day in the local legislature of that province, and whose word must be taken as the word of a man who has fulfilled his duty in a conscientious manner. The whole matter is worth putting on record, and I propose to read the report of Mr. Taylor, acting agent of Dominion lands in Winnipeg.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at one o'clock, I was just about to give the result of a partial investigation which was made into the case that I spoke about in the forenoon. I say a partial investigation, because the full investigation that the case called for was not made. Charges that had been made against the parties concerned were not investigated at all, and the only whole investigation was confined to the taking of a couple of declarations from two of the parties concerned in the case. In regard to the other charge nothing was done. At the same time enough has come out of this investigation to show that there was cause for the complaint, to show that a wrong had been done, and to show that a very bad speculation had been made with these poor ignorant strangers coming to this country to settle. I will read now the report made by the acting Dominion lands agent in Winnipeg, transmitting to the Department of the Interior here the result of the partial investigation that had been made. I shall also, afterwards, read a couple of declarations that were forwarded to the agent in Winnipeg by the party who held the investigation :

Department of the Interior,
Dominion Lands Office,
Winnipeg. July 3, 1899.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 5th ult., file 400312, and to inclose, as requested, the report of Homestead Inspector Jerome, and declarations of Paul and Andreas Wahlman, regarding the transaction with George Christie, by which they acquired S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 25-1-3 east. The letter instructing Mr. Jerome to inquire into the case of Louis Felsch, of the N.W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  1-1-3, reached him too late to be inquired into upon his recent trip. It will be noticed from Paul Wahlman's declaration——that he has been sued and judgment recovered for \$1,000, which is claimed by Christie for services in procuring these two homestead entries, and a serious wrong appears to have been done these foreigners.

Paul Wahlman is one of the victims of this man Christie.

This is an official document.

You will remember that Mr. Christie only secured entry for these men by being able to procure W. G. Whitley's declaration that the application which he made in November, 1897, was on behalf of these two men, and in talking over this matter with Mr. Jerome—

The homestead inspector—

—I learned from him that the Wahlmans had never applied to Mr. Whitley for land.

The Wahlmans, whose applications has been entertained in preference to the bona fide application of these two Schmitkes, have been held by the department to have priority on account of one Whitley writing to the department that he wanted some information about land on behalf of some Germans. It is the solemn declaration of Homestead Inspector Jerome that they never spoke to Whitley about the land, and therefore, Whitley's letter to the department could not have been in their behalf. This, I take, Mr. Speaker, from an official document, from a letter addressed by the head of the Dominion lands office in Winnipeg, making an official report to the secretary of the Department of the Interior at Ottawa. This letter concludes with the following sentence :

Evidently, therefore, there has been collusion between Christie and Whitley.

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) E. H. TAYLOR,

For Agent Dominion Lands.

The Secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Now, let us see what the homestead inspector, Martin Jerome, has to say. Mr. Jerome, as I have said before, held the position of homestead inspector in the land office at Winnipeg until he was elected a member of the local legislature in Manitoba. He is the political friend of my hon. friends on the other side of the House, and therefore, the work he did on that occasion should be satisfactory to them. Mr. Jerome writes from St. Malo, in the electoral division of Carillon, for at that time he was canvassing for his future election, while at the same time doing government duty :

St. Malo, June 24, 1899.

Sir,—Inclosed please find the declarations of Andreas and Paul Wahlman re the S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 25-1-3 east. I have inspected their two quarter-sections. There is no improvements whatever on the S.W.  $\frac{1}{4}$ ; on the S.E. there is about twenty acres of breaking recently by Paul Wahlman, and he is still breaking on the land. I must say, for your information, that the Schmitkes own the N.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 24-1-3 east, and the Wahlmans have no lands.

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) MARTIN JEROME.

The Dominion Lands Agent, Winnipeg.

Now, here are the declarations referred to in the letter :

In the matter of the S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  25-1-3 east.

I, Andreas Wahlman, of the S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  25-1-3 east, of Manitoba, in the county of Provencher do solemnly declare that in the month of December, 1898, I met Mr. George Christie at Emerson, where he proposed me a bargain. He said he could purchase a good land very cheap for me, and he said the same to my brother Paul, which was the S.W. 25-1-3 east, and for the S.E. 25-1-3 east. It was agreed between my brother Paul, myself and Mr. George Christie, that we had to pay him \$1,000 in three years for the two quarter-sections mentioned above; he never told me that he or any other party had made a homestead entry for me; he therefore said that August Schmitke had not as much money than himself, and he was sure to get it for me, and he went to Winnipeg; after he got back he said to me to go to build a house and break upon the land, and my brother and I both signed a joint note for \$1,000, payable in three years. We also signed another paper. I never done any improvement on the land, because I did not know that it was a homestead, but I am now ready to make all the necessary improvements required by the Homestead Act.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

I also declare that I never sold any timber to Mr. G. Christie.

(Sgd.) ANDREAS A. WAHLMAN.

Declared before me at Emerson post office, of Manitoba, in the county of Provencher, this 21st day of June, A.D. 1899.

(Sgd.) MARTIN JEROME,
A Commissioner, &c.

Now, Sir, this is followed by another affidavit which reads as follows :

In the matter of the S.E.  $\frac{1}{2}$  25-1-3 east.

I, Paul Wahlman, of the S.  $\frac{1}{2}$ -1-2-3 east, of Manitoba, in the county of Provencher do solemnly declare that in the month of December, 1898, I met Mr. George Christie at Emerson, where he proposed me a bargain. He said he could purchase a good land for me very cheap, which was the S.E. 25-1-3 east. He said the same thing to my brother Andreas, for the S.W. 25-1-3 east. Then it was agreed between my brother, myself and George Christie to buy the said lands for \$1,000 at the end of three years from that date for the lands mentioned above. He never told us that he or any other party would make a homestead entry for us; it is only about three weeks ago that I was informed by a pedlar that it was my homestead; then, after that, I went to Christie and told him that I was told that the land was entered for as homestead; he said that is all right, but I wanted the money for my trouble. I had signed a joint note with my brother to George Christie for \$1,000 for three years, as we have thought, but in February he sued us, saying that the note was due. I have now eighteen acres broken on the S.E.  $\frac{1}{2}$ , and like to keep it. Mr. Aug. Schmitke never done any improvement on the land.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

P.S.—I also declare that I never sold any timber to George Christie.

(Sgd.) PAUL WAHLMAN.

Declared before me at Emerson, of Manitoba, in the county of Provencher, this 21st day of June, A.D. 1899.

(Sgd.) MARTIN JEROME,
A Commissioner, &c.

It appears from the evidence taken by the homestead inspector, Mr. Jerome, that this man George Christie has imposed on these two men to the extent of $1,000. It is proven that they signed a joint note and that when the note matured they were handed a writ by Mr. Christie's solicitor, the nature of which they did not know, and they were told to put it away very carefully in their pocket. They went home happy thinking that everything was right. But the writ being unanswered in the court, a judgment was taken by Christie by default against these parties, and that judgment is now registered in Manitoba. What was the consequence of this? The consequence was that after a while, these people began to feel uneasy and they wanted to be relieved of the liability they had been led to assume. I asked that this matter should be reconsidered and the Schmitkes who were really the first applicants for this land should be confirmed in their application, and that they be allowed these two pieces of land to be taken by them as homesteads, yet, in the face of all these declarations, and in the face of his officials declaration, the Minister of the Interior still insisted on making further inquiry. He was very reluctant to decide against this man Christie. And what did the minister do? He communicated these two affidavits to Christie. I do not say it was very objectionable to do so, but Christie had these two men and under the fear he inspired in them, he got them to make before his own solicitor an ex parte declaration denying the one they had previously made openly and without any coercion before the official of the department who was appointed to make the investigation. It was not Mr. Jerome that examined these men again. Not at all. Jerome was told that he also should get a declaration from Christie as well as the one he had from Wahlman. He did get a declaration from Christie, but he had a great deal of trouble to obtain it because Christie was very reluctant to make that declaration. I am sorry that I cannot put my hand on that document just now, but at all events the inspector says that he met Mr. Christie and that at first Mr. Christie declined to make any declaration at all, but after awhile he consented to say something that was so ambiguous that it did not amount to anything at all. The inspector goes on to say in his report that he put many questions to Mr. Christie which Mr. Christie would not answer. Afterwards Mr. Christie went of his own accord and made another declaration before a commissioner, but he did it in the secrecy of the office. As I have said he brought these two men before his own solicitor in the solicitor's office, and under threat or otherwise, got them to contradict the statement they have made themselves freely before the official of the department who was sent to make the investigation. Perhaps in order to complete the case I should read some other documents in connection with this transaction, but as I have already detained the House long enough I shall conclude by stating that the result of this transaction has been to drive away from the country one of these poor unfortunate victims of this land shark Mr. Christie. One of the Wahlman's under the burden of that judgment that is hanging over his head was obliged to abandon the land that he had intended to occupy, and he went across to the other side of the boundary. The other man has not yet done any improvements on that piece of land. He has not built a house upon it, he has not resided upon it, and a complaint has been lodged in the land office against the entry and an application for the cancellation of that entry has been made. But, he has the support of the department, because he has the support of Mr. Christie who still holds that judgment of $1,000 against him. The poor fellow, if he can manage to get along and get his land, then when his three years have expired and he obtains his patent he will find himself overburdened with a mortgage of $1,000 on that property which has been stolen from him. While the government is spending so much money to induce immigration to this country, and while we are voting thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to bring in settlers, what do we find? We find government officials around Winnipeg protecting these land sharks who are robbing the settlers, and who are squeezing out of them thousands of dollars. These two cases I have mentioned are not the only cases. In the correspondence that I have read, a reference is made to another similar case by the same individual who robbed $500 from another German. These men take advantage of the ignorance of these poor foreigners coming into this country and they impose on them by selling them land which is actually the public domain and which they could obtain from the government by simply paying a fee of $10 or $15. These foreigners do not know that, and the land sharks are protected by the officials of the government. That is the charge I have to make against the government. I charge that when these investigations were made and that when it was proven that there was bribery and corruption and robbery on the report of their own officials, the government stood by the men who have been victimizing these poor foreigners, and the government still stands by them. Justice has been meted out in one case, because they could not help it; the man had left the country. But there is the other man Schmitke who is waiting for his piece of land which he is entitled, and on two occasions the government had the means of doing justice to this man but they declined to do so. One of the Schmitkes is still without his land while his father has succeeded in getting his share. With regard to the other case I do not know what has become of it. One man has been treated in the same manner and I say that it is a shame that these land sharks should be protected by the department at the expense of the interests of the poor settlers. I said Mr. Speaker, in the beginning of my remarks that there were two institutions in Manitoba in connection with the Department of the Interior one of which I have nothing to say against, but the other of which affords good cause for complaint. I refer to that political institution organized by the present Minister of the Interior, with Mr. McCreary at its head—the immigration branch of the department. Who is that officer Mr. McCreary? He is nothing but a political machine. When an election comes along he musters around all these under him, clerks, land agents, guides, immigration agents and all sorts of officials. He brings them all in from the North-west and from the United States as was the case in the last local election in Manitoba, and he spreads them all over the province to do political work. They have been brought down from so far as Regina, and they have been compelled to go out and work for the good cause of the Liberal party.

More than that, they have their men who not only meddle with politics, but who take upon themselves to meddle with the school question. There is one man named Paul Wood who styles himself agent for the Galicians. He is a official of the Department of the Interior if you please, who went around the Galician settlements influencing them with reference to the school question. Most of these Galicians belong to one part of the Roman Catholic Church, that is the Orthodox Greek Church and he has been canvassing them in opposition to separate schools, and he comes out in the public prints with a letter signed by himself offering to the Winnipeg papers a document whereby he said: That the Galicians did not want any separate schools. By lying he induced half a dozen Galicians to sign a protest against separate schools, a thing that they never heard about and did not know anything about, and this man sent a letter to the Winnipeg Free Press, and he signs his name in his official capacity as Dominion agent for the Galicians, and he says that he has been entrusted by these poor Galicians with a protest against separate schools. I am not going into the merits of separate or public schools, but I will ask every member of this House, is it the business of an official of the government to interfere in any way in the matter? Is it his business to interfere in matters affecting the creed, the language or the nationality of any settlers coming into this country. No, Sir, it is not the business of officials to interfere with these immigrants, whether they be right or wrong. I say that the administration of the whole Department of the Interior to-day in Manitoba and the North-west, is on about a par with the administration of the department in the Yukon territory

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I had a good deal of difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to why my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) should indulge in such a very lengthy address at this late period of the session, but the hon. gentleman in the course of the last ten minutes has succeeded in showing to the House his animus upon this question.

Mr. LARIVIERE. I have been looking for my hon. friend for the last four months, but he has not been here.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the least objection to my hon.

friend making the address he has made; he is quite within his rights; but the subject-matter of the earlier portion of his remarks did not indicate the necessity for such a lengthened address, and I fancy I know my hon. friend well enough to know that he would not have made a lengthy address on this subject if he had not been animated by some of the motives which he has disclosed in the last ten or fifteen minutes. I am not going to follow him in his reference to the school question. That is not a fair subject for discussion in connection with a matter of this kind. What my hon. friend has brought before the House is a purely departmental matter, and will be treated by me as such. Nor do I think it necessary to enter into an extended defence of the conduct of the officers of the department in general. I think I am justified in saying that my hon. friend has not been so anxious in the course of his remarks to attack me or the department as he has been to attack a gentleman named Christie, whose name has frequently appeared in connection with the papers which my hon. friend has read. It is no part of my duty as the head of the Department of the Interior to defend Mr. Christie or in any way to justify anything he may have done; nor is it part of my duty to support the attack which has been made upon him. It is nothing at all to me what Mr. Christie's character may be or what his relations may be with people who come into the country; and it is not my duty as head of the Department of the Interior to see that any particular person in the province of Manitoba or in the North-west Territories is honest in his dealings with his fellow-citizens. No such authority as that is conferred upon me as a member of this government, and it is quite impossible for me to enter into matters of that kind. The question which I have to decide, as head of the Department of the Interior, in connection with the particular case which my hon. friend has brought before the House, is: First, whether the officers of the department have acted correctly in assigning to a certain person the homestead entry for this land; or, if they have not, whether the circumstances are such as to justify me in interfering with their action and setting aside their decision. That is the whole question. It is a very simple question, and when it is reduced to a nutshell, it does not take very long to state it.

My hon. friend made a complaint in regard to which I think perhaps he was quite justified—that the return brought down was not complete. It is not my intention to justify the bringing to the House of an incomplete return. The return was prepared in the ordinary way, and no doubt the officers who prepared it and sent it to the House thought it was complete. The explanation, however, appears on the face of my hon. friend's remarks. It appears that the officers of the immigration branch of the department had some correspondence with reference to this matter; but that fact appears to have been overlooked by the officers who prepared the return, so that the correspondence of the officers of the immigration branch does not appear in the return. If my hon. friend had brought this omission to the attention of the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), who was acting as minister in my absence, he would no doubt have had that correspondence brought down. However, I am glad to see that my hon. friend was not inconvenienced, because he was able to supply the correspondence which did not appear in the return.

There were certain sales of land in the department known as time sales, that is, sales made to individuals on long terms of credit; and one question I had to deal with when taking office was what to do in reference to these time sales. Persons had made small payments and lived, in some cases, in eastern parts of Canada, in other cases in the United States, and in other cases in other foreign countries. There was no apparent intention on the part of many of them to go and complete the payments; and I came to the conclusion that if these people failed to pay up the balances due, we would cancel the sales and open up the lands for homestead entry. That is the way this particular piece of land came to be on the list for homestead entry. At that time it was considered advisable also to furnish the immigration commissioner at Winnipeg with a list of the lands opened for entry, for the convenience of intending settlers or persons who might come into the country, and who would perhaps more readily be brought into contact with the immigration commissioner's office than with the land office. That was done for the convenience of the settler. In the course of time this particular piece of land was applied for by several people, and my hon. friend has given fairly enough a statement of what took place in connection with it, with this exception, that I think he has hardly done justice to the officers of the department in describing the way in which they dealt with the matter. It came before them in this way. There were several applications made and several letters written with regard to this land, and the officials in charge therefore decided that the land should be put up to be disposed of to the highest bidder. That had been the practice in some cases before I took charge of the department, in cases where there were a number of applications for homestead lands, and it was difficult to decide which were entitled to priority. It was not a plan which I favoured, because, as a rule, it was easy enough to decide who was the prior applicant, and I myself decided to adhere to the rule of giving in every case the first applicant the first chance to get the land. No difficulty arose in this particular case, however, because, when the land was put up to be given to the highest bidder, there were no bidders upon it, and the matter, therefore, reverted to its former position. Then an examination of the records showed that there were several applications. There was an application of the 11th of November, 1897, by one W. J. Whitley, on behalf of some German settlers; an application of the 16th of December, 1897, by August Schmitke and son; an application of the 8th of January, 1898, by one John Molloy for part of the land; an application of the 6th of April, 1898, by one Michael Scott; an application of the 16th of May, 1898, by W. W. Unsworth. Let me say that we have been compelled to adopt a well-defined rule in regard to applications of this kind. That rule is this. We do not hold down the applicants to any definite form of application. The man who writes to the department in regard to a particular piece of land in the most vague and indefinite way, which in any sense indicates that he desires to get that land, is regarded as the first applicant. We could not adopt any other rule. These applications are made in the proportion of ten to one by men who have not literary ability and who have little knowledge of business. They generally write their letter and complete it without saying that they started out to say; but they generally say something which gives the officer of the department an indication of the particular piece of land they are inquiring about. It does not make any difference how vague or definite it may be, we regard such a letter placed upon the file of the department or placed upon the file in the land office as an application for the land; and, when the land comes to be opened for homestead entries, our invariable rule is that the first man who has made inquiry in regard to that land is given an opportunity to get it.

In this particular case, Wahlman's application seems to have been overlooked by the officer of the department at the land office, and Schmitke was told that he should have the entry. He put up his money, but, apparently, was not given the entry. The matter seems to have been held for the purpose of taking the ruling of the department. A short time afterwards, the deputy minister being in Winnipeg, the matter was submitted to him; and he decided that Wahlman's letter came within the rules of the department respecting applications, and that it must be considered to be the first application. Of course, I know nothing about the matter personally; it is only when a real dispute arises in connection with these matters that it is possible for me to give personal attention to them. But, I am quite clear in my own mind that the deputy minister was correct in the ruling he gave on the question, to the effect that Wahlman's letter was an application within the rules which the department ordinarily recognizes. I should have ruled the same myself, if the matter had come before me. Upon that ruling of the deputy minister, the two Wahlmans were given the entry for the land, and Schmitke was notified that he could not have the land. What I want to make clear is, that this is not a case of a man being put off his land and the land being left vacant; this is a dispute between two sets of men, Schmitke and his son and Wahlman and his brother. My hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) has said a good deal about the abuse of the settler; but, so far as the settler is concerned, there is nothing in that. If Schmitke and his son got the land, Wahlman and his brother would not get it; and then some one would rise and speak on behalf of the Wahlmans, and would say that by giving it to Schmitke and his son, we have driven away two deserving settlers. We have to go upon clearly-defined rules in dealing with these cases; and, so dealing, when a dispute arises, some one must lose. The Wahlmans were given the entry. My hon. friend from Provencher shortly afterwards brought the matter to my attention. I need not go over the details of what took place; but the inspector was sent out for the purpose of making an investigation and arriving at the facts. He sent a report which, upon the face of it, was not complete; and the deputy minister sent to Mr. Christie the statement of what had taken place, and asked for his version of the case. The statements and reports by Mr. Christie were then placed on the file, and the matter came before me. It came before me only for this purpose and for this end—that I might decide whether or not it was wise and proper to cancel the entry of the two Wahlmans and give the land to the Schmitkes. That was the only action I could take in connection with it. My hon. friend from Provencher seemed to think it was my duty to in some way punish Mr. Christie. But, I wish to point out that I have no jurisdiction to do so. Mr. Christie has nothing to do with the land, and is not subject to my jurisdiction. If what he has done amounts to a fraud, those who are aggrieved have their remedy; but I have no power, nor has any member of this government power to afford any relief. It is a matter for which the parties must take such action as they see fit and may be advised. It certainly does not suggest itself in any way to me that I have any power whatever in connection with affording them any relief they may desire as against Mr. Christie. The only action I could take would be to cancel the entry of these two men, the Wahlmans. But, if I were to cancel their entry, what good would that do them as against Mr. Christie? That would not make them any better off; it would make them worse off. They would be in no better position to relieve themselves of any obligation they may have incurred to Mr. Christie, and they would not have the land upon which they had been expending their labour for the last year or year and a half. And we did not know that the Schmitkes would take the land, and so we might have lost two settlers. The only question that could come before me was whether I would disturb the two men in possession of the land they had occupied for a year or more, and which they had declared they wished to occupy, and, occupying it, to become bona fide settlers. I have no hesitation in saying that if my hon. friend from Provencher had had to settle the case, he would not have disturbed the entries of these men and put some one else on their land. Whatever their misfortune may have been—and it is a matter very difficult for any person in this House to decide such a case, because nothing is more difficult than for a person who is not in the position of a judge, who has not heard the viva voce evidence on a point of that kind to decide whether the transaction had been a bona fide transaction or not—surely, it will be clear to the House that I could not remedy the alleged fraud against the two men. Wahlmans, by depriving them of the only thing they had in the world, the land; and that would be the only possible action I could take. So far as I was concerned, there did not appear to me to be sufficient ground to cancel the entry of the two men, and it would be no advantage to them, no remedy for any obligation they may have incurred, to cancel it; that would only leave them penniless and still liable to Mr. Christie for any judgment he may hold against them, any note of theirs that he may have, any liability they may have incurred. I am at a loss to understand what my hon. friend would have me do, or what he would have the government do; I am at a loss to imagine what course he would suggest for the government in a case of this kind. He wound up his address by saying something which the facts he stated to the House did not justify—that the officials of the government were defrauding settlers. There is nothing in these papers to indicate, directly or indirectly, that the government officials, in any way, shape or form, have done anything improper—

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) to say that I charged the officials of the department with having defrauded people?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. So I understood.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. No, I did not say that; what I did say was, that they had protected those who defrauded people.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am glad I misunderstood the hon. gentleman on that point. It seems to me that we are not justified, even by the most extreme view of what the hon. gentleman has laid before the House, in coming to any such conclusion as that. But, I understand him now to say that the officials of the department are protecting men who defraud settlers. In the name of common sense, what power has an official to protect a man who commits a fraud? Here it is alleged that a man named Christie has got a note from these unfortunate men who are homesteaders, and whom my hon. friend, when he described their misfortunes, wants me to put in a still worse position by cancelling their homestead entries and putting them on the road. These men seemed to have signed certain obligations to Mr. Christie. My hon. friend says, on hearsay evidence, that these obligations had been fraudulently obtained. Well, what power has an officer of the government to protect a man who does anything of that kind? In what way, will my hon. friend please explain to the House, has any officer of the government protected such men; in what way can an officer of the government protect a man who commits a fraud upon a fellow-citizen? There is no possible way by which such protection can be extended by an officer of the government; and, as a matter of fact, the officers of the government have done nothing except to send to the head office of the department the report of their proceedings, upon which I have decided—what? I have to decide whether I would turn these two men off their farms, put them on the road, and deprive them of their homes; and I decided that, however, unfortunate they may have been in the past, it was not going to help the matter for me to deprive them of what little they had, to deprive the country of two settlers, the other two men, as my hon. friend says, having gone to Dakota. I do not know that there is anything else to be said in connection with it. I do not think that any member of this House, filling my position, and called upon to decide what to do under the circumstances disclosed by these papers, would have done any differently from what I did, that is to say, leave the matter as it stood and leave these men in possession of their farms.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I wish the galleries were crowded with people from the North-west and Manitoba, to have heard the earliest speech made by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), after returning from his four months sojourn in Europe. What is the position this parliament has to contemplate, as exposed by the hon. Minister of the Interior? My hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) exposed one of the most oppressive transactions with regard to settlers which have ever come before my notice. He brings to our notice some Germans who have been put in the talons of swindlers and land sharks, the actions and machinations of these land sharks being aided by officers of the Interior Department, one man driven from the country by these land sharks, with a judgment of $1,000 against these two settlers, another settler deprived of a homestead to which he had a right. But we find the Minister of the Interior getting up and saying: What in the name of goodness can be done? How can I help them? Will it help the matter if I put these two Wahlmans in a worse position than they are? What can be done? It is true this Christie is a swindler, it is true this wrong has been perpetrated, but what can be done? At the close of the hon. gentleman's speech, he showed that he saw what was the real issue, namely, the character of the officers of the department, whom he has employed in the North-west. What happened? Schmitke got an entry for himself, and his son paid $15, and arranged to send the other $15. Then McCreary, an officer of the hon. gentleman, the gentleman who, when mayor of Winnipeg, aided him to pay his indebtedness to the city of Winnipeg, and of course, therefore, has the minister by the hip, and in a position that a minister should not be in—McCreary comes, in the blustering way of a master, to the land office, and he says to them: Schmitke cannot have that land, he must not have it. And then they trump up a prior application, as it is called, on the part of Whitley, not on the part of Wahlmans, but on the part of Whitley himself, a person not a principal. It is not the habit of the land agents in the North-west Territories, it has not been their custom in the past, to consider the application of a middleman, even if it were prior, and made regularly, after an entry has been granted to a bona fide homesteader.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is incorrect. It is the universal practice of the Department of the Interior in the North-west, in the land department, to receive applications which are made by third parties. It is the common custom, it has always been done; such an application is received and treated precisely in the same way as if it were made by an original.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman is perfectly wrong about that. But suppose he were correct; this was not an application, it was in inquiry, as shown by the papers. Those Wahlmans have no knowledge whatever about an application. When the commissioner goes up from the Department of the Interior to inquire into this, what does he find? Here we have the affidavits of the two Wahlmans, and they swear positively they knew nothing about any application for a homestead entry. They swear:

We have to pay him $1,000 in three years for the two quarter-sections mentioned above. He never told me that he or any other party had made a homestead entry for me.

Therefore, this man Whitley could not have made a homestead application for them, because they themselves, the principals for whom it is alleged he had acted, had no knowledge of it. It was altogether an afterthought. Then after McCreary had thus bull-dozed Mr. Stephenson and the agent of the land office, there is a dispute, and the whole facts are brought before the Department of the Interior. Then the dark figure of this drama appears—and this is not the only thing that this dark figure has done—then the confidant and close officer of the hon. gentleman, Mr. Smart, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, comes up. He locks into the whole case, and with the facts before him, although he knew well according to the evidence before us, that Whitley had merely inquired, and could not have made a bona fide application for a homestead. Mr. Smart wants to oblige his friend, McCreary, who is always ready to do the kind of work my hon. friend speaks of, and Mr. Smart there and then decides, as he did in another case, according to the evidence before this House at the present time, when he decided, in order to please a political partisan against the evidence, just as he decided against the evidence here, and in favour of these land sharks. I say a more lamentable spectacle has rarely been presented to the people of Canada, than when the Minister of the Interior, with these facts before him, throws up his hands and says: I am helpless, we are helpless. Sir, if he were the Minister of the Interior that he ought to be, and if his first loyalty were to the people of Canada, and his hands were free to deal with his officers, as they ought to be, then he would come here, not saying: This rascality has been done, I am helpless; my officers have been engaged in it, I am helpless. But he would come here and say: There has been an atrocious wrong perpetrated and my officers sanctioned it, but these officers are no longer officers of mine. But he has not the power to do it, because these men have the whip hand over him, and, therefore, as long as he remains at the head of the Department of the Interior, we can expect nothing better than transactions of this sort, shady transactions, land sharks like Christie, his accomplice, like McCreary, engaged as an officer of the Department of the Interior, all working together to filch money from the settler; but the department is helpless, because, as I say, all these gentlemen are familiars of the Minister of the Interior, and it is the same way as it was. My hon. friend struck the true key note. The Minister of the Interior sent up men to the Yukon in the same way, men who were his dear friends and counsellors, and know all about him, and he is helpless in their regard, too. It is a lamentable situation. I am glad that he has at last come back. I wish I could compliment him on having effected the purpose for which he went, because he seems to be about in the same condition—I regret that—as when he went away; but, Sir, I am glad he came back in time, in order that the people of Canada may see what is the position of things under his rule in the Department of the Interior to-day.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Department of Trade and Commerce, including $700 to Miss Shaw, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act... $8,870

Mr. FOSTER. What is the exception that makes it necessary to take a jibe at the Civil Service Act?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The hon. gentleman will recollect that Mr. Buck had a salary of $700 or $750. He sent in his resignation, and as Miss Shaw had been for a number of years in the department, and was recommended as a very excellent official there, I promoted her from $550 to $700.

Mr. FOSTER. Was she in the class of temporaries?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Third-class clerk?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes. She was not an appointment of mine. She was appointed before I entered the department.

Ocean and mail service between Great Britain and Canada ..... $150,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is the arrangement made this year? Last year, I think, we had a temporary arrangement.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Advertisements were published calling for tenders for a two years' service. One period the service was to be from the 1st of June to the 1st of November from Rimouski to Merville, and Merville to Rimouski, to be performed within an average of seven days. The other period of the year was to be from the 1st of November to the 1st of June, between Halifax and St. John and Merville, and it was to be performed in eight days. This service was tendered for, and tenders were received from the Allans and from one other company. The Dominion Company appear not to have tendered. The contract was awarded to the Messrs. Allans, but owing to the breaking out of the Boer war the Allans declined to fulfil their contract, and we were obliged then to make the best terms that could be made with the only other parties who could be induced to tender for the service, the Elder-Dempster Line. They received the contract for two years.

Mr. BERGERON. On the same terms that the Allans had taken it?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. At something less, not much less, but somewhat less. I see by the memorandum submitted to me that the Allans contract would have figured out to $161,817, while the contract on the part of these other gentleman was about $150,000. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that the contract was given to the Allans in the first instance, but owing, as they alleged, to the British government having seized their vessels, or having taken possession of their vessels, they declined to carry out the contract and left me at that time to make the best arrangement that could be made with the only other parties who could be induced to tender for the service.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date of the contract?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The time for receiving tenders, according to the advertisement, in the first instance, terminated on the 1st of August, but it afterwards was extended to the 14th of August. I see that my recommendation to council was made on the 16th of August, recommending the acceptance of the Allans tender. On the 19th of September the Allans declined on the ground I have stated. Then, negotiations ensued with them. I was rather anxious that they should go on with their contract, but they would not do it unless they were permitted to go for a number of trips to Portland in place of St. John.

Mr. FOSTER. Calling, I suppose, at St. John?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, they declined to call at St. John. They wanted to substitute Portland as the terminus.

Mr. FOSTER. Absolutely?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Absolutely, with a certain deduction on the service. In view of the policy which had been adopted on a former occasion, by our predecessors, as well as by ourselves, of attempting to make St. John the winter port, council did feel at liberty to vary this condition of the contract. These negotiations were spread over the greater part of October, and on the 20th of October, 1899, a contract was entered into with the Elder-Dempster Company.

Mr. FOSTER. On the same conditions?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not quite.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the variations?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The variations were these: Whereas, the Allans were to make the trip in seven days Elder-Dempster people required seven and a half days in summer, and the average in winter was to be eight days. The rate was to be $2,500 for each round trip from Montreal to Liverpool and return, and $3,500 for each round trip from Liverpool to St. John and return, touching at Halifax. We thought it only fair to allow them an additional $1,000 per trip when they started the service to St. John and Halifax. It is precisely the same service excepting on somewhat lower terms than the Allans undertook to do it for. It is about $11,000 or $12,000 lower.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it a trip contract with the Allans? What did you give them per trip?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Allans were to have received, in the first instance, sums varying according to the vessels that they supplied. For the Bavarian and the Tunisian they asked £750 per trip, which, in round numbers, would be about $3,750 in summer, and £500 per trip for the Parisian and Californian. As we moneyed it out, this made $161,817, supposing that they adhered to the proposal they made and gave us the services of these two superior boats during the most part of the summer.

Mr. FOSTER. Were there any other variations allowed the Elder-Dempster Company?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. None but the one I have named.

Mr. FOSTER. None, but the half day?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. None but the half day.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the comparison as to the class of vessels?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The vessels that they gave us in the first instance were considerably better than those with which they carried out the service. They pleaded that the British government—I am not quite sure that they had a legal right to do it—but they pleaded that the British government had sequestered two or three of their vessels. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) took one of their vessels for the purpose of sending Strathcona's Horse to South Africa. We have been obliged to do with a somewhat inferior service to that which I contemplated having.

The question of the reductions to be made are now under the consideration of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to make reductions in proportion to the deterioration in the class of vessels?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, the class of vessels has considerably deteriorated?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It has considerably deteriorated.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the average of the voyages kept up?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. To what extent has that lapsed?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Speaking generally, I should say that the voyages have been a matter of twenty hours worse than in the case of the Allans.

Mr. FOSTER. At least?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. At least, I think. I say candidly to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that I am not at all satisfied with the service we have got, and if it had been under any other circumstances than those I have mentioned, if I had not reason to know that it was due to the stress of war and the imperative necessity on the part of the British government, and to some extent on our own part, to secure the vessels, I would have dealt very much more sharply with them. But, it was rather a difficult position to be placed in. The British government were demanding these vessels. We ourselves, through the Militia Department, were taking one of the vessels, and the company had some excuse for saying that there was a sort of force majeure on them to give up these vessels for the public service. I admit frankly that the service has not been done up to the contract.

Mr. FOSTER. After this deterioration of the vessels became evident, was there any negotiations with the Allans, to allow them a part of the contract or anything of that kind, with similarly low-class vessels?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will see that it would be very unfair to make a hard and fast contract demanding superior vessels, and then, when by stress of circumstances the good vessels were drawn off from both these lines, that the contract should be given to the Elder-Dempsters, with an altogether inferior service, without any chance for the Allans to put on a similarly inferior service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The contract was not given until the Allans had declined. Before finally closing the matter, I directed my deputy to go down to Montreal and propose to the Allans to join forces with the Elder-Dempsters, and divide the service with them, but they declined to do anything of the kind, as he reported to me.

Mr. FOSTER. What power has the minister over the contract?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I can cancel it, or I can deduct what appears, after full investigation, to be a fair amount for each particular trip.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman say that he intends to do it?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do. I intend to make a deduction upon it.

Mr. BERGERON. After the Allans had refused to carry out their contract, no new tenders were asked for?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There was absolutely no time. We were obliged to keep the service going. Negotiations went on with the Allans after they had declined, and for nearly five weeks the Allans on this side of the water appeared to expect that they would be able to make a contract which we might accept. I was willing to go very far, under the circumstances, in order to prevent difficulty about it, foreseeing that there was danger of that service not being done as well as I could wish. But, the members of the firm on the other side of the water would not agree to make a contract unless, indeed, as I have mentioned, we would abandon St. John, to a partial extent at all events, in favour of Portland. That involved a question of public policy, and, on the whole, I thought it was the lesser of two evils to stick to St. John, which has now become our winter port, and in which the trade has largely increased; rather than to allow a diversion to Portland again. These are rather grounds of public policy than commercial grounds. We have been embarrassed ever since Portland was discarded as a terminus. The chief lines have a very great preference, I may say, for going to Portland.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman has spoken of want of time to call for tenders, but he has forgotten to tell us whether any offers were made to the other steamship companies, like the Dominion Line?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. And the only company which accepted, under the circumstances, was the Elder-Dempster?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They were the only ones which could be got to offer at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Did they go to St. John?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They went to St. John.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do? Is he going to keep on this service?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The whole matter is at this present moment under negotiation and consideration. I must say that I am not satisfied with the service, and unless I can get better, and very decidedly better, I shall have to consider the expediency of closing it, as I have the power to do.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any stated time for the mails to leave Montreal on each trip?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The contract was that they should average eight days on their winter passage, and seven and a half days on their summer passage.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that mean a mail every eight days?

Mr. BERGERON.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is a weekly service, but the average time we consumed between Rimouski and Merville in summer should be seven and a half days, and between Halifax and Merville in winter it should be eight days. But the service is to be weekly.

Mr. CLARKE. That is an average of how many knots in the summer and how many in the winter?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Seven and a half days would, I think, be about thirteen knots.

Mr. FOSTER. But, they do not do it. You are probably getting a nine-knot service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. More than that.

Mr. FOSTER. I doubt if you are getting more than that with some of those vessels.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There has been a very considerable difference always between the summer service and the winter service.

Mr. FOSTER. I believe the minister was quite justified in not going back on the policy of making our own ports the port from which these vessels should sail. I agree with him entirely in that, but, I do not agree with him, if it is his idea, to keep this inferior service going another season. I hope he has made up his mind not to continue such a service as that. It is practically almost as good as none. All this brings to view the wretched state of circumstances that has come in the wake of the government not pressing with vigour the fast line service when they had the opportunity of doing so. If the work had been carried on in good spirit from where it was left when the late government went out of power, there is not much doubt that we would have had, for some time past, a good, adequate fast line service between Canada and Great Britain. As it is now we have really a worse service than we had before the agitation commenced for a fast line. We have a worse service now than we had in 1896.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. You will remember that in 1896 they sailed from Portland.

Mr. FOSTER. In 1896, before we went out of power, the policy had absolutely been fixed that there should be, from the time the contracts commenced in that season, sailing from St. John and Halifax alone. But, owing to pressure which was brought upon the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) and his friend, they gave them one year's further grace, and they were allowed that year to sail from Portland. They had their excuse for it, which we, at the time, did not think, and do not think yet, was valid. But, that was the fact. The steamship companies believed they did not have sufficient notice, although, I believe, they got sufficient notice, and on that ground they were allowed to go another year, and then the policy which had been adopted before was carried out in full in that respect. Here we are to-day with a service which is growing worse instead of growing better. I think the hon. gentlemen should confess their sins, in the first place, and, in the second place, try as speedily as possible to get a better service or else to stop the waste of money—for I am convinced it is very close to a simple waste of money to spend it on this service, which is given by what, in comparison with fast Atlantic steamers, you might describe as tugs, and they are really not much better than that.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have expressed on former occasions my own concurrence in what the hon. gentleman says. I will point out this to him, however, without in the slightest degree wishing to disparage St. John, which we are trying to build up in every way possible, that it is infinitely easier to get these important lines of steamships to give us a good service, especially in the winter season, which is the difficult season, from Portland than from St. John. The reasons are obvious. I may say that we have very largely increased the trade with St. John. I had a communication from the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities the other day, in which they intimated that whereas in former years the freight they carried to St. John amounted to 35,000 tons, it has now become 193,000 tons. The trade has increased very largely, which itself, I hope, will enable us to get a better service. My hon. friend is perfectly right in saying that the present service is very far from being what it ought to be.

Mr. BERGERON. Can my hon. friend say whether the volume of mails carried by the Canadian lines has increased or diminished since 1896? I believe a great deal more mail matter goes by the United States than went formerly.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I cannot give the hon. gentleman an exact statement as to the volume of mail matter, but I have here a memorandum in reference to the amount paid to the United States. Apparently we have not paid to the United States more of late years than we did before.

Mr. FOSTER. You have to take into account the lessened postage.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will leave the Postmaster General to deal with that. The statement submitted to me shows that the United States transit charges were as follows:

1895.....	$36,016
1896.....	35,974
1897.....	35,928
1898.....	35,249
1899.....	34,924

I do not know whether my hon. friend the Postmaster General pays the United States on any different basis from heretofore.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We pay according to arrangement fixed by the International Postal Union for periods of five years.

Mr. BERGERON. I am advised that merchants and others in Montreal who are interested in having their mail matter carried as fast as possible, are accustomed to send their mails by the American instead of by the Canadian line.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think there cannot be two opinions as to the fact that the present system is not only far inferior to the old system, but far inferior to what Canada should have at the rate now paid. I am told that the hon. gentleman stated that the tender of the Allan Line and the Dominion Line was $160,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That was what they tendered for.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In my time as Postmaster General they were receiving $125,000 per annum.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That was from Portland as a terminus, the vessels calling at Halifax.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was for the purpose of the Canadian service, and it was a very much smaller consideration for the service they were rendering than the rate we are at present paying to the Elder-Dempster Line.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. On the contrary, they would take a much smaller rate to go to Portland.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not see that at all. The amount given to the Elder-Dempster Line is $150,000, and it must be recollected that the average time of the Allan Line and the Dominion Line has been eight days.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not quite.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes. I know my hon. friend is usually accurate, but I am absolutely accurate in this instance, because I have gone into the figures. I have here a letter from Mr. John Torrance, in which he says:

I notice that you spoke of the Allan and Dominion Lines' time as being about ten days. It has been nearer eight than ten, and I thought I would like to correct this.

If the hon. gentleman will take the sailing times of all the steamers between British ports and Canada and vice versa, he will see that I am absolutely correct. The other day, in discussing the point from the standpoint of the postal service, I stated that the average time was ten days, and it was in consequence of that statement that this letter was addressed to me by Mr. John Torrance, and I am perfectly satisfied that any hon. member who knows Mr. John Torrance will take his word.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have the time before me, and I can give it to the hour.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would be very glad to have it given me, and, as a reciprocal compliment, I will give the hon. gentleman the time of the Elder-Dempster Line.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have that, too. I admit that owing to the circumstances which I have stated, the Elder-Dempster Line has not done as well as the Allan or the Dominion Line. I have not the slightest desire to deny that, and under other circumstances the matter would be more strictly dealt with. The average time from Halifax to Merville is 9 days, 8 hours, 9 minutes, and the average time from Merville to Halifax is 9 days, 18 hours, 24 minutes. The memorandum supplied to me is as follows: Allan Line—Halifax to Merville, 9 days, 3 hours, 11 minutes; Merville to Halifax, 9 days, 17 hours, 4 minutes. Dominion Line—Halifax to Merville, 8 days, 7 hours, 40 minutes; Merville to Halifax, 9 days, 6 hours, 18 minutes. The Allan Line time is very little better than 10 days.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. For the purpose of my argument, ten days are quite sufficient. I do not question the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's information. I think my own is equally good.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am speaking of what was actually done, but not of the present year's service. I cannot tell what that is.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It must be remembered that all the new ships of the Allan Line and the Dominion Line have been chartered by the Imperial government as transports to South Africa, and the conclusion I draw from that is that if the contract were still in the hands of the companies who performed the service so well for Canada during a number of years, they would shorten the time still further with their new ships. As the hon. gentleman knows, the contract with the Elder-Dempster Line terminates at the close of navigation in 1891. The contract time was eight days between Merville and Halifax, and when that time was exceeded evidence had to be given by the contractor as to the cause of the delay. If we pay for an inferior service, it is right that parliament should know whether any explanations have been given by the contractors as to the cause of delay, because, if not, the government will be doubly within its duty in exacting an explanation, as there is a penalty attached to the non-fulfilment of the contract.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Undoubtedly my hon. friend is quite right. They have not been paid in full for their services, and explanations were demanded from them. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, will not care to hear the whole details read, but the upshot was that in three or four cases, in which I had complained against him, they gave abstracts from their log books as evidence of their steamers having experienced severe weather. That constituted their chief excuse other than the one I have mentioned, that the British government have taken away the boats on which they had depended to make a fair average passage. The matter remains in the hands of the government for settlement and adjustment as to what would be, under all the circumstances, a reasonable and fair deduction for their default in carrying out their contract.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Then it is the intention of the department to exact further information from the contractors and charge them for any delay that is not explained to the satisfaction of the department.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I want to draw attention to this fact, that since the contract has been entered into between the government of Canada and the Elder-Dempster Line, except on two occasions, they have never fulfilled the condition of their contract which fixing a time limit for each trip. This is exactly the time their trips have taken, according to their log. One voyage of the Ashanti occupied nineteen days sixteen hours and thirty seconds. There may have been rough weather, but that certainly shows that their boats are not fit to do the work in the fall in the time agreed.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am not sure whether this vessel broke down or not, but it certainly experienced very rough weather. I objected strenuously to having any more to do with the Ashanti.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Another voyage took over fourteen days, by the Yola. There were two voyages by the Lake Huron and Lake Superior, over thirteen days and over twelve days respectively. Two voyages of over twelve days by the Lake Ontario and the Etolia. There were five ranging between nine and ten days, and five ranging between eight and nine days. The average time of the Allans was less than ten days.

It was also remarked the other day that the Allans and the Dominion Lines had refused to make a terminal port in Canada. My information is the very reverse. These lines carried the mails to Halifax and went on to St. John, during the winter of 1898-9 at a very heavy sacrifice and at a lower price than paid the Beaver Line the previous winter, which had not given satisfaction to the department, and from which consequently the contract was taken. In consequence of the service being so unsatisfactory, letters are all sent via New York. Again quite lately, on May 29, the Lake Superior left Liverpool and passed Cape Ray on June 11, at 2 p.m., while the Parisian, which left Liverpool on May 31, got into Quebec on June 9, and the Postmaster General will remember that the recent additions to the Allan Line were all chartered by the Imperial government, as I have said. As to the fact of the bulk of mail matter being sent on American bottoms, there can be no question. I know it from personal experience when in London, and have questioned my hon. friend the Postmaster General upon that point, and he knows that the facts are absolutely as I have stated. My hon. friend knows that we are paying a very large amount of money for a very unsatisfactory service, which is driving the mails away from the Canadian Pacific Railway and its Pacific Ocean fleet, subsidized by Canada to an enormous amount, and is running down the fair name of Canada in so far as our means of communication are concerned. We have paid a large amount to build up the Canadian Pacific Railway. We make fast time crossing the continent, we make fast time crossing the Pacific Ocean; but all the time saved on these routes is lost by a trip of nineteen days, sixteen hours and thirty minutes. You might as well send the mails by sailing vessels.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That steamer broke down.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a broken-down line.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, it is a broken-down line. It is a line that the government of Canada, having due regard to the interests of this country, should not have given the contract to. The average time was over fourteen days. In these days when cables cross the ocean, when there are telephones in every village, when competition moves at electric speed—is it possible for Canadian trade with British merchants to be upon a proper footing, when we have the mail contract given to a broken-down line? Can we expect that letters will be sent by such a line when they can be sent by American ships, which carry letters in six days at the utmost? I say that the government should immediately cancel that contract, because the money which is paid to the Elder-Dempster Line is absolutely thrown away, Canada receiving no benefit therefrom whatever. I hold the government responsible for giving the contract to a line that was known in England to be one that could not carry out a contract of that kind, and, in doing so, took that contract from a line that had been the pioneer in the ocean-going trade of the St. Lawrence, and had done the work well, and at a much lower price. Fancy an increase of $23,000 given to a line incapable of doing the service, so that while they are paid that money for carrying our mails, our mails are carried in American ships. The mails for our own Pacific coast, and for the Australian colonies which, if we had a proper service, would come through Canada, are sent by American ships to American ports, across by United States railways to the Pacific coast, the letters for British Columbia going to Vancouver, and those for Australia, going direct from San Francisco. This contract with the Elder-Dempster Line should be cancelled without delay, for every day it continues, it means so much of the public money of Canada absolutely wasted.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) was not in his place when I made a statement with regard to this matter. Had he been in his place, he would have learned that I gave the contract to the Allans in the first instance, that they, of their own proper motion abandoned it. It was on August 16, that I recommended to council that the contract should be given to the Allans, and they undertook it. But the Allans subsequently, about the middle of September, withdrew from the contract. After that I went on negotiating with them longer, perhaps, than I should have done—four or five weeks, trying to arrange a modus vivendi with them, because I understood that the British government was subjecting them to considerable pressure. I will read to my hon. friend my memorandum of October 13—after a considerable number of attempts to bring them into line:

A letter was received from Messrs. H. & A. Allan stating that their Glasgow firm had advised them that the requirements of the British government for transport steamers were so pressing that their offer of Saturday last——to run five steamers between Liverpool and St. John via Merville and Halifax for the carriage of mails would have to be withdrawn.

Mind—

I have not acted hastily; I have done all that a government could be expected to do, to secure the services of the line that the hon. gentleman refers to. They proposed to perform a service between Liverpool and Portland, via Merville and Halifax, with such vessels as the British government should leave available. But we did not think it wise to turn our backs on our own winter port of St. John, and go back to Portland. I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact, that he is not justified in speaking of the Elder-Dempster as a broken-down line, whatever their defects may be—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They are a slow line.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. But the hon. gentleman knows that the Elder-Dempster Company have sent a class of extremely fine and valuable vessels to Montreal. I think they are considerably larger than those sent before; so far as regards the purposes of the St. Lawrence trade, this company have been, to a great extent, the pioneers of what you might call the great traders. It is true they were a line for freight purposes, rather than for passenger traffic. But I was in this position—it was not a question of choosing between the Elder-Dempster and the Allans. I did not do that. It was a question of getting any line at all under the circumstances, which the hon. gentleman forgets. The British government had pretty nearly swept the sea of every available vessel for transport purposes. It is true that there were two vessels that made bad voyages, the Yola and the Ashanti. But vessels of the Allans had been nearly as slow. They made the voyage in thirteen days on more than one occasion. In—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have the figures at hand. The Numidian occupied 13 days, 6 hours and 45 minutes, on one westbound trip. However, I am not denying the substantial accuracy of the hon. gentleman's main statement—that the Elder-Dempster Line have not been able to give as good service as they promised, or as I expected—for the reasons stated. But when he blames the government for having chosen them, he should remember that we had no choice. The Dominion would not tender, and the Allans would not carry out their contract. I negotiated with them up to the last possible moment, as the hon. gentleman will see by the papers. They finally offered to go to Portland for a portion of the service. Had I felt free to go to Portland, I could have made a much better bargain; but that would have been to go directly in the teeth, not only of our own policy, but of the policy which the hon. gentleman's own friends inaugurated. All these steamship lines prefer to go to Portland.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. For their cargo?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes. They repeatedly offered to do the service for less money, if we allowed them to go to Portland. But our object is to build up Canadian ports. We are obliged to make some sacrifices; we are obliged to pay a great deal more, or accept a much inferior class of service. Among other difficulties that affect this service, is the fact, well known to the hon. gentleman, and to everybody who has paid any attention to the matter, that the British insurance companies, for reasons best known to themselves, have discriminated heavily, and, in my opinion, unfairly, against St. John and Halifax. They put very much higher charges on vessels going from St. John and touching at

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Halifax, than on vessels going from Portland and touching at Halifax. That, in itself, is a very serious obstacle in our way. However, the whole matter is engaging our attention; and I am as desirous as the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) can desire me to be, to obtain a better service. I desired to say one thing to my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster), and it is this—I think we must recollect that in 1896, when we came in, the Allans and Mr. Huddart, who, I think, were the only two tenderers, had not made us a proper tender. All they offered to do, was this—if we would give them four or six months to look about them, they would tell us at the end of that time whether they would accept the contract or not. They were to be allowed to hawk our offer about, and make whatever bargain they could; and, if it did not suit them, they would not carry it out. In their letter they laid down a variety of conditions, which would have nullified the chances we had of obtaining a fast service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The point I want to make is that the tender has failed in accomplishing the object. I agree with the hon. gentleman that in a service between England and Canada the terminus should be in a Canadian port; I am as anxious as the hon. gentleman to build up a Canadian trade. I also agree with him as to the absurd discrimination of the underwriters against the St. Lawrence route and against Halifax and St. John. I also agree with the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), that it is time some portion of our Canadian capital should be invested in underwriting covering partly or wholly risks coming to Canada, or from Canada to Great Britain. I think that will operate wonderfully upon the English underwriters and cause the rates to come down. That is the only means I can see of putting an end to these discriminating rates, which are also unjust. Now, the hon. gentleman has stated that the Allans took four months to look round and decide whether to accept the contract or not. He is not absolutely accurate in his facts, if he will excuse me for saying so. A clause was inserted in the contract which the government of Sir Charles Tupper signed with the Allans—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I never heard he signed any contract.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, I meant to say proposed to sign. The hon. gentleman knows why it was not signed. It was all ready, it had been discussed between the contracting parties, and all the conditions had been agreed upon. The four months' clause was put in at the request of the Allans, who said: If we sign a firm contract now with the government of Canada we shall be helpless in the hands of the great railway corporations of this country.

We want to make our conditions with the railway companies, and for that purpose we ask for a delay of four months before signing the contract. The hon. gentleman knows better than anybody else that the Allans did not require to make any financial arrangement with any parties in Great Britain; their own means are quite sufficient to build any fleet and to carry out any contract which they may desire to enter into. Mr. Dunlop, their agent, when he was in London, went to the high commissioner, then Sir Donald A. Smith, and stated that he was prepared to give up the four months' clause and to enter into a contract without it. But a mistake took place. His Excellency, upon the advice of his constitutional advisers, thought fit not to sign that contract, because the present government fancied they were going to make a much better one. The brilliant success which they have achieved is now before the country, and proves whether this government were right, or whether the leader of the late government, Sir Charles Tupper, was right when, after he had left office, knowing the importance of that line for the trade of Canada, knowing its importance for the good name of the St. Lawrence navigation, wrote to the right hon. leader of the present government asking him to induce his colleagues to advise His Excellency to sign that contract. The hon. gentleman refused, he said that they were going to make a much better contract. The much better contract, if you please, was the bottle-necked fast line of steamers which have never materialized, and which have caused an enormous amount of trouble to my hon. friend from Quebec West. They have kept him away from his constituents for the last year or year and a half; for every six weeks he has had to go to England to get a peep at these bottle-necked steamers. The only thing we have seen about them is the model that was exhibited in the lobby here. The commercial men of Montreal laughed at the whole thing as being an absurd scheme impossible of realization. Those are the facts. The country knows that the cause of the delay in obtaining the fast line was because the leader of the government refused to advise His Excellency to sign an excellent contract; whereas, if he had signed it, we would have had two years ago a fast line of steamers instead of having, as now, to depend upon steamers that take nineteen days to cross the Atlantic.

Now, the mail service, to my mind, is of the greatest importance. We all know how conservative trade is. We know that once commercial men adopt a route they rarely leave it. Trade follows one route, and very seldom gives it up for a new one. When commercial men find that they can send their letters across the Atlantic in five or six days over an American line, they are going to adopt it. Now, why pay $150,000 to the Elder-Dempster Line? Why not cancel that contract immediately? The hon. gentleman says that he agrees with me upon the interpretation of the contract; he agrees with me that under that contract they are limited to eight days, and that there is a penalty attached to the violation of that contract. He agrees with me that except in a couple of instances they have never carried out the conditions of that contract. Why not impose the penalty immediately after each trip, when the contract gives the minister power to do so? That would lead them either to give up their contract or else improve their line in such a way that Canada would have the benefit of the money which she is paying. But I think it is criminal to allow the people of England to remain in the belief that they have got to send their letters over an American line when Canada is paying so large an amount of money for a Canadian line. They look upon us as men who have not a business instinct when we allow the government to pay $150,000 a year to carry letters which never go over that line because the steamers take fourteen days, thirteen days, twelve days, fifteen days, sixteen days, nineteen days.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There were only two cases, one of fourteen and one of nineteen.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Well, I am right in so many instances that they confirm my argument that the contract should be cancelled immediately and a penalty should be imposed. Now, the hon. gentleman has said, what I am prepared to admit, that the Elder-Dempster Line is a freight line, and nothing more. They have constructed their fleet almost for the sole purpose of carrying freight. The newer steamers have an enormous tonnage, a large carrying capacity, but they are not built for the purpose of speed. If there is any reason in our subsidizing a line for carrying mails, it is that this line may compete with the fast services of the United States. I will leave it to the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) himself to say if letters sent from Canada to Great Britain are not sent via the United States. I know in the old days I have seen returns which indicate that a large proportion of the mail goes via the United States. As to coming from Great Britain, I think the whole of it comes except letters which are of no importance whatever as respects their time of delivery.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). If my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) wishes to argue that we are only to give this subsidy to the particular vessels which are fast enough to command the mail service, then I am afraid we shall not be able to get that service from the lines which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. It is an admitted fact that a large proportion of the mails go via New York, but it also was a fact under the contract with the Allans.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not to so great an extent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Possibly not to so great an extent. While the service has increased in its efficiency from year to year, there has been but a moderate degree of improvement in regard to the Canadian service as compared with the service via New York, and I quite realize the difficulty there is in keeping up with New York in the race. Even when the Allans had the contract it is a fact that the bulk of the mails went via New York.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, not the bulk.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, there is a certain class of matter, the package mail, that is bound to go by our service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. And other matter too.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been no time in ten years when the service between Great Britain, Montreal, Halifax and St. John could be compared as to efficiency with the New York service, and necessarily letters are sent via New York. Then, there is another consideration which should be kept in mind as explaining the reason why letters are sent via New York, and it is that there there is a vessel leaving on almost every day of the the week. If a person writes a letter on Monday he is not going to wait until Thursday or Saturday in order that it may go via Canada. Even on the very day that our Canadian mails will be sailing many people will mark their letters 'via New York,' because they believe that their letters will arrive more quickly. The Elder-Dempster Line is not a very fast line, but I would be sorry that any hon. gentleman should say anything in the discussion upon this question which would cast a reflection upon it. This line has done a great deal for the trade of Canada. I notice that in the papers it is stated that the Elder-Dempster Company has just put on a new 12,000-ton ship which is the largest ship coming to our waters. At the particular time that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce made this contract the Elder-Dempster Line was the only service available. It was not a contest between the Elder-Dempster people, the Allans and the Dominion Line. It was a question as to whether we should have the Elder-Dempster Line or nothing. We have had a Canadian mail service between Canada and Great Britain for a number of years, not only for the mails, but, because, in the interest of our trade, we desired to have established lines of steamship communication. I held that it would be a great pity to break the connection that existed before, and that even if we should have a poorer service for a couple of years, it would be better than that we should cease to have fixed communication between Canada and Great Britain. I very well remember when the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce submitted to me the proposition from the Allans that they should continue the service if they were permitted to make Portland one of the terminal points. Both governments had laid down the principle that we would not give this subsidy to any line of steamers that would not make its terminal point in Canada, and in doing that we were trying to give direction to trade and traffic. The question for our consideration was not what lines would do at some future time, or what they might have done in the past. No doubt the Allans have done very much for the trade of Canada, but at that particular time owing to the demand in connection with the South African war, the Allans were not able to comply with our conditions and we had to accept the Elder-Dempster service or go without any. The question was whether we were to have a service at all. Though it might be somewhat slow, it was better than nothing, and we made a contract for a service between Canada and Great Britain, thus preventing the continuity of the service being broken.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The continuity is broken. The mails do not go over these lines. The hon. gentleman knows very well the custom of the trade to-day in Canada. People write their letters to Great Britain on one day—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is past and gone now. People write their letters to Great Britain every day.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Because we have vessels that are quite useless for the purpose. I do not want to run down the Elder-Dempster Line. The hon. gentleman has said that the Elder-Dempster Line has done a great deal for the trade of Canada. Well, utilize the Elder-Dempster Line for the purpose for which it was designed. Do not utilize the Elder-Dempster Line to carry the mails when it takes nineteen days to make the passage.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is not quite fair. It only took that on one occasion.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. gentleman is enabled to show that the mail matter for Great Britain will go across the Atlantic by such vessels, I am prepared to give up the discussion, but it is impossible for the hon. gentleman to deny, that, under the present conditions, we cannot expect mail matter to go from Canada by such vessels, but that under present conditions we must expect that almost the whole of the correspondence exchanged between Great Britain and Canada will continue to go as it goes now, by American lines. If that be so, where is the justification for paying $150,000 a year to the Elder-Dempster Line? The continuity as to travel is being kept up. The Allan and Dominion services are improving every day, and had it not been for the unfortunate trouble in South Africa the finest steamers would have been on the line, and we would have obtained the benefit of these modern improvements, and also of the large amount of money expended by the Dominion Line upon the service between Great Britain and Canada. But, what I insist upon, and what I want to have explained, if there is any explanation for it, is why Canada is called upon to pay $150,000 to carry mail matter which does not go by the Elder-Dempster Line. The people of Canada will hold hon. gentlemen to account for the manner in which they are spending this money, and this is one of the things for which they will demand an explanation when hon. gentlemen will go before them. That contract should be cancelled immediately, the penalty should be imposed without delay. Whatever agreement has been entered into between the government and this line should be carried out in its entirety.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In the hon. gentleman's zeal for the Allan Line he is not quite aware of the actual condition of the case. There were two bad voyages which he has alluded to, one by the Yola and one by the Ashanti, but the average of speed would be very little in favour of the Allans as against the Elder-Dempster Line having reference to their service in the past. I have here a statement of the service of the Allan Line for 1895 and 1896. From Moville to Halifax, westbound, the average was 10 days and 10 hours in 1895, and east bound it was 9 days, 6 hours and 22 minutes. In 1897 the average speed of the Allan Line from Moville to Halifax was 10 day and 22 hours. That is, I think, quite as high as the average of the Elder-Dempster Line, barring these two bad voyages that I have alluded to. Their average from Halifax to Liverpool east-bound was 9 days, 22 hours. I may just remark en passant that apparently the Beaver Line did considerably better in 1898 than the Allan Line did. Their time from Halifax to Moville was 8 days, 19 hours, as against the figures I have given; and from Moville to Halifax it was 10 days, 3 hours, as against 10 days, 22 hours. There is no doubt about it that for several years back we have not had a good mail service, but I must call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that in 1895-6 and in 1896-7 there was no improvement at all. The first improvement was made by the Beaver Line. Curiously enough, the Beaver Line did better than the Allan Line during these two years.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Allans were building their new fleet.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. But they would not give us their new fleet. I would have been delighted to take them if I could have got them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Of course they could not anticipate the war in South Africa, but even then my information is from their own books, and when the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) speaks of my zeal for the Allan Line I may tell him that I am really quite impartial about it. The fact of my comparing their service with the Elder-Dempster Line shows that I am merely quoting facts without any feeling one way or the other. I have had no occasion to see the returns which the hon. gentleman has, but it appears from the Allans own books that their average time has been a little less than 10 days. The hon. gentleman brings up the average of the Elder-Dempster Line by putting aside all their slow ships. He says we will not consider the 19 days or the 14 days, but he draws an average from their best voyages and on that argument he says they come very close indeed to the Allans. I took the average of the Allan Line for every one of their ships, and I took it during the number of years they have been serving Canada, but the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) puts aside the Ashanti and Yola.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have here the average time including the Yola and the Ashanti, and that actual time is 10 days, 13 hours and 36 minutes. The net time as it is called is 11 days, 11 hours and 40 minutes. That is from November 12 down to the end of the voyage of the Yola. I will give the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) the benefit of the 14 and the 19 days' voyages and he will see that the difference is mighty small.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. How is that possible? Here we have one voyage 19 days, 16 hours and 30 minutes, another 14 days, two voyages at 13 days, one over 12 days, two over 10 days, and then five ranging between 8 days and 9 days.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will send the list over to the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron).

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am quite prepared to take the statement of the hon. minister, but my figures are taken from the Allans' books and they must be correct. At all events the hon. gentleman must admit that the time made by the Elder-Dempster Line is far behind the combined service given by the Allan and Dominion Lines.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think it is as good as the Allans but not quite as good as the Dominion.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The contract was divided between the Allan and the Dominion Lines, and if you take their combined time you will find that my average of inside of ten days is correct. That will dissipate the argument in favour of the Elder-Dempster Line.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have got here that the average time of eighteen trips, including the Ashanti, which practically broke down through stress of weather, and it was 10 days, 1 hour and 25 minutes. It is quite true that the Elder-Dempster cannot compete with the Allan and Dominion Lines combined, and I was very anxious to get the Allan or the the Dominion Line to conjoin with the Elder-Dempster, but they would not, for reasons of state, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I call the attention of my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) to the contract to which he has referred regarding what he was pleased to call the fast line and which the late government intended to enter into with the Messrs. Allan. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) led the House to infer that that line was to run at an average speed of about twenty knots an hour.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not refer to any speed.

Mr. FOSTER. He never mentioned any speed.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I never referred to any speed whatever (as every hon. gentleman who heard me knows), for the simple reason that I was not discussing that part of the contract. I spoke of the four months' clause.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman abandons that I will not refer to it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not abandon anything. I never abandon anything I say.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman makes no contention as to the rate of speed I will not take up time in discussing it. I call attention to the four months paragraph and I will content myself with reading what the Allans stated when my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) came into power, as to their contention with regard to that. On the 9th of June, before the present government was sworn in, the Allans wrote to the late Hon. Mr. Ives, Minister of Trade and Commerce :

The proposed undertaking will greatly exceed in extent any existing service between Great Britain and the American continent. It will involve the expenditure of much money, the conversion of the Allan Line into a company under the Limited Liability Acts, and the completion of several important negotiations. We have reason to believe that we shall have no insuperable difficulties in completing the financial and all other necessary arrangements within four months of the acceptance of this offer; but should we, from any unforeseen cause, fail in doing so, we reserve the liberty to resign the contract at or before the end of that period.

When the present government came into power this is what they said about that four months' condition :

Our tender was accepted subject to the following conditions:

1. We are to have four months from date of completion of contract in which to float a company with necessary capital, and to carry through certain necessary arrangements. Should we, from any unforeseen cause, fail in doing so, we are to be at liberty to resign the contract without penalty.

That is exactly what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said, namely, that they had four months to rescind the contract if they did not float their company as they intended.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries need not have got up to repeat word for word what the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated if that is all he had to say. If the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) will continue to read from that book which he has in his hand he will find that Mr. Dunlop went to Lord Strathcona and stated that they were prepared to abandon the four months' clause. I have given the reason why the four months was insisted upon. It was not at all to allow the Allans to find time to make financial arrangements, because the Allans had all the money they wanted to build any fleet they required, but it was because they had not entered into arrangements with the large railway companies and before they signed the contract with the government they wanted time to complete these negotiations. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will find that in the correspondence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot find in this a corroboration of what the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) says. The letter which I have quoted is a letter signed by Andrew Allan on behalf of himself and the other members of the Allan firm.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think too great sympathy ought to be extended to the Elder-Dempster Company in taking the matter of penalties into consideration, because the swifter vessels have been taken away, and I imagine that those taken by the British government made a pretty good financial arrangement for the company. The company is not losing by the fact of the swifter vessels being taken off, and I do not think it should be relieved of the penalty for the very poor service it is giving, compared with what the contract requires. One other point, by way of reprisal to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He seems to have a great objection to the Allans, a very responsible firm—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman should not misrepresent me. I have no objection whatever to the Allans, and expressed none.

Mr. FOSTER. He seems to have a very great objection to the Allans, a strong firm financially, and a reputable ship-building firm, who have been in business for years and years, and are known to carry out their contracts, having four months in which to complete their operations: but, he has no objection at all to giving the contract to a mere ship broker, and allowing him nearly three years' time to hawk it around the streets of London.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is most unjust in misrepresenting me in that way. I have no objection to the Allans; on the contrary, I feel as strongly in favour of the Allans as the hon. gentleman does. What I said was that the Messrs. Allan wrote to the present government stating that they understood their contract to be that they were to have four months to float their company, and that if they failed, they were to have the privilege at the end of four months of resigning the contract without any penalty. I simply contented myself with reading the paragraph to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. And what did the hon. gentleman use that argument for—merely to take up the time of the House, or as an argument against this side of the House, to show that we had not made a firm and fast contract, and, consequently, that they had a right to sweep it away, because the Allans had not made arrangements in four months, though the government afterwards gave Mr. Petersen, a mere ship broker, two years' time to hawk the contract around the streets of London, and failed in the end?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was no contract with the Allans.

Steam service fortnightly between St. John and Liverpool, Great Britain, during the winter season of 1900-1, not less than ten round trips ..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. Who is doing this service?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That service has virtually not been done as a separate service for some years.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the money not been expended?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The money was expended in the case of the Beaver Line in 1898-9. They demanded $1,000 additional for going from St. John to Halifax, but nothing was done. This service is specifically between St.

John and Liverpool. It is left as a sort of supplemental vote, and will probably not be used. The service in the past season was performed by the Elder-Dempster Line.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the intention of my hon. friend to use this for next year?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is quite possible that I may have to use it, in case I get a service more to our satisfaction.

Steam service between Halifax and St. John's, Nfld., and Liverpool, from July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1901..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. What was done with that last year?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That service used to be performed by what is known as the Canada and Newfoundland Steamship Company. This year they had to transfer their service to the Furness-Withy & Co., who, since that time, have performed the service.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the service?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. From Halifax to St. John's, Newfoundland, then to Liverpool and back again.

Mr. FOSTER. How many trips?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They sail at intervals of seven-teen days.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a freight service?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, to all intents and purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the object of that?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The object of it was largely, no doubt, to encourage communication with Newfoundland.

Mr. FOSTER. Have we not a much-better line of communication with Newfoundland by way of North Sydney? Does the hon. gentleman think this is a service which gives us the worth of the money?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It is a freight service, practically, between Halifax and Great Britain. The Elder-Dempster Line calls at Halifax for the mails, but takes very little freight.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How is it that the government refuse to recognize the service which is giving a great deal of benefit to the farmers and producers of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island? So far, that service has not received a dollar at the hands of this parliament. I can understand the Minister of Trade and Commerce paying very little attention to this matter, but I cannot understand the Minister of Finance refusing to grant this service, although it is connected with the Newfoundland Railway, such aid as is given to other steamers engaged in similar services. It carries a large quantity of live stock, butter, cheese and other farm products of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island to the Newfoundland market. It carries the mail three times a week each way between the port of North Sydney and St. John's, Newfoundland, and points on the line of the Newfoundland Railway. Although that service has been in operation three or four years, and the country is getting a great deal of benefit from it, would be of still greater benefit if it were not discriminated against. Here is a boat subsidized from Halifax to carry freight only once a fortnight to the port of St. John's, Newfoundland, and getting a subsidy for doing that, and, if I understood the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce correctly, getting a subsidy for carrying the mails. The people only get these mails once a fortnight, and possibly they are not sent by this boat at all, unless without the knowledge of the people who are forwarding the mail matter. These people would naturally prefer sending their mails by the steamer which runs between North Sydney and Port au Basque, three times a week. I brought this matter up last year and the year before, and I am curious to learn what kind of an excuse the hon. minister can offer, for not granting the subsidies to this service. The matter was brought before his predecessors, and the promise made that whatever grants were given to other steamboats carrying the mails between Halifax and St. John's, Newfoundland, a grant would be given to Mr. Reid, for this service between Sydney and Port au Basque, but, no doubt, when my hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce came into office, that put an end to the fulfilment of the promise made by his predecessors.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The promise of my predecessors was not brought to my notice.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I called my hon. friend's attention to it three years ago.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I found this service we are now discussing had been promised by the late government, a subsidy of $20,000, from Halifax to St. John's, Newfoundland.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That was before the present service of which I speak was established. That was the only service they had at that time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am not unwilling to consider applications at the proper time, but cannot grant all the applications made to us from every quarter. As a rule, we confine ourselves, in granting subsidies, with the exception of those which had been existing for a number of years, to lines between Canada and European countries or Great Britain.

Mr. McDOUGALL.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Surely a most necessary service to receive recognition is such a one as this.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That may be the opinion of the hon. gentleman, but there are a great many other demands made upon us, and we cannot all at once grant them all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would be quite impossible for us to keep track of all the promises made by hon. gentlemen opposite. If the hon. gentleman drew my notice to the fact that a particular promise had been made to that particular line, it escaped my notice.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentlemen was present when I repeated the statement, year after year, since he came into power.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That only adds one to the very large number of promises hon. gentlemen opposite made when they had no power to grant them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There was no occasion for granting this one until after my hon. friend came into office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What the people of the lower provinces are chiefly concerned in, is not the subsidies, but the steamships; and inasmuch as the service to which the hon. gentleman refers, has been regularly and faithfully performed right along, without these subsidies, I fail to see in what way the public service has suffered severely. I am not in any way reflecting on Mr. Reid's enterprise, which is in every way worthy of praise.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will my hon. friend allow me to tell him that frequently Canadian freight is left over at the port of North Sydney, while American freight is taken in preference to Newfoundland, and we cannot blame the company, because they have no contract with the government to do our work, and consequently are at liberty to take what they think best first.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If they take American freight to the exclusion of Canadian freight, that is a very poor reason for giving them a subsidy.

Mr. McDOUGALL. They could not carry both, and had to give preference to the freight from the United States.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not unless they wanted to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Yes, if they wanted to build up a business.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is a very poor advocate. His statement goes to show that this line is trying to discriminate against Canadian trade, and I do not think that a company which does that, is in the position to claim a subsidy from this government. I hope my hon.

friend is mistaken. I do not think that Mr. Reid would take that course. Probably at the time there was some defect in the railway connection between the ship and the trains, and, no doubt, that has been remedied. I admire the enterprise of Mr. Reid very much, but I understand he is under contract with the government of Newfoundland to perform that service, and there is not the slightest danger of its being neglected. At the same time, it may be that a case will be presented in such a form that we may be able to grant a subsidy. There has been some consideration given the subject already, and I do not wish to be understood as passing final judgment upon the question, as I have great admiration for the enterprise which Mr. Reid has taken up. I understand further that every pound of mails which that boat carries, she is paid for, so that there is no grievance on that account.

Mr. McDUGALL. I wish to be properly understood, and do not want my hon. friend to run with side issues at all. With regard to this service leaving Canadian freight and taking American freight, that is due to the fact that the steamer had, at that particular time, more freight than she could carry. She had missed a few trips on account of the heavy ice, and the local freight was left behind, while that from the United States—a great deal coming from as far as Minneapolis and St. Paul—was, no doubt, sent forward under special conditions, and Mr. Reid, not being obliged to give any preference to Canadian trade, did, as any business man would, take the freight he was pressed to deliver in the shortest possible time. The other lines of steamers running to ports in Newfoundland, and to Ste. Pierre, get subsidies, and are obliged to carry Canadian freight, which prevents their giving a preference to outside freight. That is my reason for asking that a subsidy be given this line, and I think it is one which the people who send freight to Newfoundland will consider very important.

Mr. GILLIES. I have only a word or two to add in this connection. I fail to see how any good business reason can be given for this vote of $20,000 for a steamship service between Halifax and St. John's. Before the Reid route, so-called, was opened, two or three years ago, there was every reason why this steamship communication between Halifax and St. John's should be supported. But, if the minister will look into this matter and follow me for a few moments, I think he will agree that I am right. No one in Halifax now will take the steamer from Halifax to St. John's. How does he go? He goes by rail to North Sydney, thence by steamer to Port au Basques, six hours distant, thence by railway to St. John's—arriving in St. John's from Port au Basques in less than 24 hours, the whole trip from Halifax to St. John's occupying 38 hours. But if he takes this steamer, which is subsidized to the extent of $20,000, it will take him 60 hours to make the voyage, a difference of 22 hours in favour of the North Sydney route. I presume the hon. minister did not scrutinize this closely enough before making his appropriation; but, with the argument I have given against it, there can be no earthly reason that I can see for the repetition of this vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies), it seems to me misses the real point in this case. This is practically for steamship connection between Halifax and Liverpool, England. The fact that it calls at Newfoundland, makes it none the less worthy.

Mr. GILLIES. But this is a special steamer from Halifax to St. John's.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. According to my hon. friend, it does not compete with the Reid route.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My attention has been drawn to the fact that in speaking a short time ago, I used the name Munro, when I should have said Dunlop. I take the opportunity of reading to the hon. minister (Sir Louis Davies) what he could not read or find—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I found it and read it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This is taken from sessional paper No. 28, 1896. It is in a despatch from Sir Donald Smith to Sir Charles Tupper, dated 10th July, 1896. Mr. Dunlop is well known as the agent and a partner in the Allan House:

I may add that Mr. Dunlop informed me, before my interview with Mr. Chamberlain, that his firm were prepared to withdraw from the stipulation, to be given in the form of a letter, that the contract should be given to them subject (without penalty) to their succeeding in floating a company in four months. I communicated this statement to the Secretary of State, although Mr. Dunlop has not yet placed it before me in writing.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hear, hear.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. minister may say 'hear, hear.' But I stated simply that the stipulation of four months had been abandoned by the Allans, and the despatch of Sir Donald Smith proves it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And I call my hon. friend's (Sir Adolphe Caron's) attention to the fact that three days afterwards, on the 13th of July, the Allans wrote over their own signature to the Premier of Canada that, so far from abandoning that condition, they adhered to it, and their tender was subject to that condition. At page 19 of the papers brought down, is the following:

Our tender was accepted subject to the following conditions:

1. We were to have four months from date of completion of contract in which to float a company with necessary capital, and to carry through certain necessary arrangements. Should we, from any unforeseen cause, fail in doing so, we are to be at liberty to resign the contract without penalty.

Mr. FOSTER. Where was that dated?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is dated Montreal. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) quotes a conversation which Mr. Dunlop had with the high commissioner in England, which was never reduced to writing; and here we have a statement in black and white, three days after the despatch referred to by the hon. gentleman, in which they say that they adhere to that condition.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Dunlop was conducting the negotiations with Sir Donald Smith on behalf of the Allans, and it was this very portion of the contract which Mr. Dunlop was authorized to withdraw.

It being six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in Committee.)

A line or lines of steamers to run between St. John and Halifax, or either, and the West Indies and South America. $80,700

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a small increase here of $2,700. That is due to the service being doubled, by agreement with the British government.

Steam communication during the season of 1900, that is, from the opening to the closing of navigation, between the mainland and the Magdalen Islands..... $9,000

Mr. FOSTER. What vessel is carrying that out now?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. At present it is the Amelia. The one under contract last year was the Lunenburg, but the parties who were being served objected to her, and since that time the company purchased the Amelia. She is a steamboat built in 1894, and is larger than the Lunenburg, about the same size as the St. Lawrence. Mr. Lisley, of Halifax, is the owner.

Steam communication during the season of 1900, that is, from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Prince Edward Island and the mainland..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What vessel is doing this work?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The vessel that was doing it was the Wanderer, and we are making a bargain with Mr. Tatton, of the Grand Manan, to give us a little extra service. We are, at present, getting three trips, and we are to get four trips per week in the summer and two in the winter. There will be a supplementary vote of $1,000 for this vessel.

Steam communication from July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1901, between Quebec and Gaspé Basin, touching at intermediate ports ..... $7,500

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What steamers are used, and who has the contract with the government?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Wanderer is the name of the steamer now providing that service, her proprietor is Mr. Webster, of Quebec.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Is that the coal merchant?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I understand so.

Steam communication between a port or ports in Prince Edward Island and a port or ports in Great Britain ..... $5,000

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Would the minister tell me what is being done with respect to steam communication between Prince Edward Island and Great Britain?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The last time we endeavoured to make arrangements with the Elder-Dempster Company to provide that service, but they only gave us one trip and only got paid for one trip. They have lately tendered for this service again, and the service is being performed by a gentleman named Hazard, of Prince Edward Island. He is giving one trip, and will give another on the 5th or 6th of this month. We hope to get one or two more in the course of the season.

Mr. MARTIN. How much is paid each trip?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It varies from $1,500 to $2,000 per trip.

Mr. MARTIN. How much was paid last year, all told?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. $2,000 was paid to the Elder-Dempster Line.

Mr. MARTIN. That is all that is expended of the $5,000?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, because this $1,500 to pay Mr. Hazard will go into the $5,000 that was voted for last year's service. The Elder-Dempster had promised to give us three trips, but for the reasons that interfered with their main mail service, they were only able to secure one vessel.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman knows that he can hardly take the present trip out of last year's vote.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The trip which was completed in the month of June came into last year's service. The present trip, of course, will come under this year's service, that is to say, the vessel that will sail on July 6.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to call the attention of the minister to the great disadvantage under which the province of Prince Edward Island labours at present. A great deal of our produce has to go to Great Britain. In the first place in order to accomplish that the shipper has to go to a large expense to ship his produce in the first instance to Halifax, and in many cases the freight on these goods from Charlottetown to Halifax is 50 per cent of the freight from Halifax to Great Britain and probably more. It is very necessary, in view of the relative situation of that province with regard to the other provinces, that there should be a regular service on which shippers can depend. I notice in these estimates that almost every province in Canada has direct communication with Newfoundland—all the maritime provinces.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken: Nova Scotia is the only province that has such communication. There is none from New Brunswick to Newfoundland.

Mr. MARTIN. Halifax has such communication. There is hardly one of the lower provinces whose trade with Newfoundland is greater in the produce of the farm than Prince Edward Island. Our means of communication with Great Britain are so slight that it is very necessary for the government to take some steps to provide direct communication with Newfoundland, which is one of our best markets. The greatest part of our pork, butter, cheese, grains and cereals find a ready market in Newfoundland, but we have to ship our products by a roundabout way. If we ship by Cape Breton from the port of Sydney, there are a great many transshipments, and if we ship via Halifax, there are a great many transshipments. I think it is necessary, in the interest of that province, that there should be direct communication with Newfoundland. The hon. gentleman will notice the very small sums that are in these estimates for Prince Edward Island. There is here an item of only $1,200 for steam communication between Pictou, Murray Harbour, Georgetown and Montague Bridge. That is a very important service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Look a little higher and you will see an item of $10,000 which will really be $12,000. I am afraid, for communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not a bit sorry if it will be $12,000. If it is $12,000 it is because the company which is performing that service is doing it in a way which can hardly be overrated. The hon. gentleman knows that this service is provided for by the terms of union with Prince Edward Island and Canada cannot shirk it. As I was saying the service between Pictou, Murray Harbour, Georgetown and Montague Bridge is a very important one indeed. It not only takes in these points but it takes in Charlottetown, the capital of the province, and if my memory serves me right, Yarmouth and Nova Scotia. The company is not a strong one, and an additional subsidy would enable it to place a large boat on those routes, and it may be possible, if the company receives a sufficient subsidy, to make the route include Newfoundland. When you look over the estimates, totalling $724,000, you will agree that it would not be too much that the province of Prince Edward Island should have $7,000 or $8,000 more out of that amount. I hope the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce will take these matters into his serious consideration. The small subsidy given to this company is much the smallest on the list.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am doing a little better for Prince Edward Island than was done before. I have put in this $5,000 which is for the island.

Mr. MARTIN. I hope it will be expended this year. It was placed in the estimates last year and it was not expended.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not at all; most of it was.

Mr. MARTIN. I think even if the whole of it was expended it would be a very small grant for communication with Great Britain.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say, in reply to the hon. member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Macdonald) who introduced the subject, that very special efforts were made by myself this year to have one of the larger steamship companies supply a service between Prince Edward Island and Great Britain for this subsidy. I went to Montreal and conversed with Mr. Campbell, of the Elder-Dempster Line at great length. We discussed the possibilities and prospects of the traffic and he came to the island and saw some of our leading merchants on the subject. He thought that if we made Chatham, N.B., one of the ports of call in addition to Charlottetown that he would be able to induce his company to build a boat specially for the purpose, and I gave him the assurance, after conversing with the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, that if he could get his company to build a boat and give a regular service the government would be disposed to go a little further than this amount in the estimates now. The company were kind enough to say that they would send him home to England to consult with the directors at the head office. I have had a number of communications from him since he saw the directors of his company and I was in hopes that he would be able to induce them to build a boat specially for the purpose, but, he intimated that they were unable just now to do so, because so many of their boats had been drawn off to South Africa and they were not in a position to establish this service at present. However, he held out hopes that they might do so in the future. I corresponded specially with the Allans, who, I hoped, would tender, but they did not see their way to do it, although, at first they thought they would be able to have one of their steamers that leaves Quebec and makes five trips in the season call at the island. But, after having thought the matter over they determined not to tender. There was hardly a steamship company that might possibly tender that I did not communicate with and I hope, when the steamers which have been called off to South Africa return, we will be able to get one of the great companies to tender for a reasonable sum to carry on a stated and fixed service between the island and Great Britain, making at least five trips in the year. That is the impression which my correspondence and conversation with the Elder-Deupster people gave me as to what will be the result. Although we are only for this present season getting two trips, we hope to get two more in the autumn, which, I suppose will use up the $5,000 now being voted.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has given this subject his attention, but I am very sorry that his efforts have not been very successful. The province of Prince Edward Island has been leaning on a broken reed for two years. There were a great many promises made, but they have not been very well fulfilled. The hon. gentleman's hopes are bright for the future, and I trust, in the interest of the people of Prince Edward Island, that his expectations will be realized. Last year the hon. gentleman professed to be very anxious to see this service established. He might have seen that tenders were not called for before the 1st of June, the very day in which the service was to begin. The service was to begin in June, and tenders were called for in June. The farmers of Prince Edward Island had prepared their freight for the old country and they were very much disappointed. When they expected the steamers the tenders were called for. Of course, I am very much gratified that the hon. minister has given his attention to the subject, but I am very sorry that he has not had better results from his efforts. I hope that the bright dream he has for the future will be realized for the sake of the people of Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Fortunately the hon. gentleman is about the only disappointed one. The people of Prince Edward Island are pretty well satisfied with what has been done.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Direct fortnightly steam service between Montreal, Quebec and Manchester, England, during the summer season, and between St. John, Halifax and Manchester during the winter season. $38,933 33

Mr. FOSTER. We would like to have a good explanation of this vote.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This has been done by the Manchester Liners, Limited. They agreed to give us a fortnightly service, and the steamers, as soon as they can construct them, are to be of 8,500 tons dead weight; able to carry 650 head of cattle, and to be fitted with cold storage. The service the first year was not as satisfactory as the contract called for, and the subsidy was reduced by one-third. Last year they have done considerably better. They have given us more trips than they agreed to, although all the vessels have not been quite up to the contract mark. Our reports go to show that the introduction into Manchester of goods direct from Canada, has been on the whole, very advantageous, and likely to add considerably to our trade with England.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman any statistics of that trade?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is almost impossible to discriminate between goods of Canadian produce and goods of American origin which are brought into Montreal. But we know that a very large quantity of Canadian produce has been shipped, and I am in considerable hopes that we will establish our hold firmly in Manchester. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows, Manchester is the centre of the largest consuming population in England. There is within a radius of twenty or thirty miles of that city, a population amounting to—I am almost afraid to mention it—amounting to between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000. It is an extremely densely peopled region. The corporation of Manchester are, I believe, interested in this line of steamers, and they sent a special deputation to us. They erected, at great cost, very excellent cold storage warehouses, into which these steamers unload directly, and which is not provided at any other port, except perhaps London. I am told by the deputy minister, that Manchester is better in this respect than any other port in England, although they have somewhat similar warehouses in London. This cold storage accommodation is of great advantage to our products. I may mention that the contract expires this year, and we are not, of course, obliged to renew it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is on that point I wish to speak. The hon. gentleman knows that when he gave a contract to a line of freight steamers out of Montreal, he was aiding them in competing with numerous lines which have been trading with the port of Montreal for many years, and which have never received any subsidies. This is exclusively a freight line. I, for my part, raise no very strong objection to this at the outset, because I think that the introduction into Manchester itself of vessels plying direct from Montreal, was worth the expenditure of a certain amount of money. But it is a grave question as to how long that invidious subsidy, so to speak, should be given to one freight line plying to one particular port. The hon. gentleman would be well advised, if he would make this self-sustaining as soon as possible, and not continue the subsidy longer than he can help. If the Manchester Ship Canal, and the approaches to it from the mouth of the Mersey, turn out to be successful, as I am advised will be the case, and when the initial difficulties in the way have been overcome; other lines of steamers would use that route, and it would be necessary for the minister either to provide a subsidy, or to give up the idea of subsidizing one particular line.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is much force in what the hon. gentleman has said, and it shall receive due consideration. Prima facie he is right, but we must remember that Manchester is a very valuable point of distribution for Canadian produce.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and for a little time I am not adverse to a subsidy being given. We are too late in the session to do what we ought to do, namely, to have a conversation extending over, at least, two days, on this whole subsidy business in regard to steamships. The time has come when we ought to require each year from the Minister of Trade and Commerce a pretty full statement, as to what these subsidized lines are really carrying, as to whether they are simply sentimental subsidies, or a real benefit to trade, and whether or not that trade is growing. We have all along rather dodged that issue—probably the old government as assiduously as the present one—but the little talk we have had to-day, tells this House how little we really know as to whether these lines are carrying what they ought for the subsidies or not. We are spending three quarters of a million dollars a year for this purpose, and it is a large amount of money.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No doubt.

Mr. FOSTER. If there is an election next year, I will not say much about it, but if there be no election, and the present government continue in power, we ought to take up these steamship subsidies a little earlier in the session, and to go over the whole question for the past eight or ten years. I think the deputy minister might be assigned a little duty with regard to making up a tabulation of the facts, so that we shall have these statistics on hand. It is business foolishness to be giving three-quarters of a million dollars, and not knowing whether these lines are nearing the self-sustaining point or not.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In practice, the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is carried out, but we have not brought down these minute details, it not being the habit to inquire for them. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is well deserving consideration. I shall not object to it, for my part. As the hon. gentleman remarks, just before an election is not a very convenient time for him or for me to discuss this, but I do not, in the least, object to his cross-questioning on any of these subsidies.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright), is in very good humour now, and I ask him to make a promise, which he will carry out as nearly and as promises can be carried out, that if he is in office next year, he will bring these estimates down at an earlier period of the session?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have been ready and willing for a long time.

To promote direct communication and trade between Canada and South Africa..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This was not used last year for obvious reasons. We could not get hold of any vessel while this war was going on, but I thought it as well to keep the vote in the estimates, because I am engaged, at the present time in making inquiries as to what can be done in the way of promoting trade with South Africa. When things resume a proper condition there, and when better laws, I hope, will be in force in the great mining regions, I do not at all despair of opening up a very tolerable trade with South Africa, although, as the hon. gentleman knows, in some respects the Australians have rather the pull upon us. They communicate a good deal more easily than we do with South Africa, and we must send a good deal of our trade, I fancy, through New York. At best, it will be a difficult matter to develop, on this side of the continent, at any rate, a large direct steamship trade with South Africa, unless we are prepared to subsidize pretty heavily. On the other hand, we may do something from the Pacific coast by and by. At the same time, we are endeavouring to collect all the information we can on that subject, and I hope we may be able to develop some considerable trade. Perhaps some of our returning friends from South Africa will be able to give us some useful information on the subject.

Mr. KAULBACH. Would a steamship in that trade be required to go direct to Cape Town, or would it call at the Gold coast, and would it be permitted to go around the Cape of Good Hope to the east coast?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. So far as my present information goes, I do not think it would be possible to call at the Gold coast. Of course, the hon. gentleman will see that this is a merely experimental vote. The utmost that could be done with $5,000 would be to get a single vessel chartered. I apprehend that it could call at one or two points on the west coast of South Africa, go to Cape Town, and possibly around to Durban.

Mr. KAULBACH. Has the minister decided on the Canadian port of departure?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. At present, I think, Montreal.

Mr. KAULBACH. That would only do in the summer time. Halifax would be a better port and less costly.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As we could only employ one boat, it would probably sail during the summer time.

Mr. BERGERON. In these different votes for services between Montreal and the old country, I do not see anything for the French line.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is authorized by statute.

Mr. BERGERON. The statute is there, but I do not think it amounts to anything. There is a new French line plying between Montreal and Havre, which I understand does not get any subsidy at all. I see a vote of $38,000 for a fortnightly service between Montreal, Quebec and Manchester. We always vote these sums of money for steamship services with great facility, because it is in the interest of Canada to encourage trade between this country and the old country; and I do not see why a French line plying between Montreal and Havre should not be encouraged in the same way, as it promotes trade between France and Canada. I am sorry that there is nothing here for the line that is operating to-day.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If I am correctly informed, the vessels the hon. gentleman speaks of are French vessels with a French register and flying the French flag.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a French line, but a good many Canadians are partners in the company.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I doubt that it would be consistent with public policy to subsidize any foreign line. If, for hypothesis sake, the line were half registered, in Canada and half registered in France, and the French government were subsidizing as well as our own, it might be a fair subject for consideration; but the hon. gentleman could hardly expect us to subsidize a line of ships belonging to a foreign country which might be taken up by the government of that country for its own purposes.

Mr. BERGERON. The Bossière Line which was subsidized by the Conservative government was entirely a French line.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think anything was paid for that line.

Mr. BERGERON. That was a French line flying the French flag. I do not think you could get a Canadian line to undertake that service; you must have a line from the other side.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said there was a line under the statute, but he did not help the statute by putting anything in the estimates for that line. I am quite certain that if the Minister of Public Works were in Canada to-day, he would appeal to his colleagues to grant some money for a line between Canada and France, or else, owing to the success he has achieved in France, he might not require any money from Canada, but might have got it all in Paris. The Bossière Line was subsidized by the late government to the extent of $50,000 a year up to the time it gave up the service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think the hon. gentleman is in error in supposing that any money was paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no; money was paid.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am quite certain money was paid, though to what amount I am not prepared to say without consulting the records. Irrespective of any other consideration than the advancement of trade between Canada and any other country with which trade can be advanced, I think it is quite right for us to ask for some money to encourage a line of steamships between Canada and France, because of the commercial relations which exist between the two countries. I think it would be fair not only to leave the French line upon the statute-book, where it is quite inoperative, but to add to the statute subsidy that would promote the commercial relations between Canada and France. I think that if the hon. Minister of Public Works were present now, he would urge that on the consideration of his colleagues on the Treasury benches.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Well, the matter might be considered.

Steam communication during the season of 1900, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Baddeck, Grand Narrows and Iona, and one trip each fortnight to Big Pond and East Bay..... $4,000

Mr. McDOUGALL. I may say that the service is performed now twice a day.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I move to amend that by striking out the word 'daily.' As a matter of fact we have better than a daily service.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Do I understand from the hon. minister that he strikes out 'daily' without putting anything in its place. I may say that the service is performed now twice a day, from about the 1st of June until about the 1st of November, and once a day from the 1st of May to the 1st of June and from the 1st of November until the close of navigation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The reason that I omit the word 'daily' is this. Occasionally it is absolutely impossible for them to perform daily service. The boat must be overhauled occasionally and lie off. If we put in the word 'daily', the Auditor General would probably rule that unless we can show that the work was performed every day, he will not pay, and he would be right, according to the strict construction of the vote. But it is not unreasonable that the boat should be allowed to be inspected and overhauled.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not think that that is sufficient reason for dropping the provision for a certain number of daily trips. I happened to be there when the boat was last inspected, and there was a great deal of complaint on the part of the passengers coming and going by train to connect with that boat. It was on the Queen's Birthday when a great many people were travelling on excursion rates by train, and they came to that point with the view of making a trip to Beddeck and returning in the evening. Coming from Sydney to Grand Narrows, they found the boat tied to the wharf by order of the inspectors of boilers and hulls. The people complained of not having been notified of the fact that the boat was not going to perform her regular trip that day. The captain could not help it, but I considered it very wrong on the part of the officials of the department to have the boat tied up on that day, when they knew that the public wanted to take advantage of the round trip by boat and train, and on a public holiday. All that the captain could say was that he could not help it. The very same day, the inspection was going on at the other points. Those inspectors, for their own convenience, selected this day at different points, and the owners of this boat could not get one of the other boats to perform the service. Had the inspectors arranged the matter a little better for the convenience of the public, this difficulty might have been avoided. The department should see that the boat is inspected at a suitable time so as not to interfere with its connections with the railway, which could very easily be managed.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will make a special note of the hon. gentleman's complaint. He is quite right. It showed great carelessness and indifference to the public convenience to select that particular day.

Mr. McDOUGALL. In the next place, I find that only one trip a fortnight shall be performed to Big Pond and East Bay. Big Pond is a place about ten miles from the railway terminus at Grand Narrows, and East Bay is about twenty miles distant. We had usually two trips a week from the boats running on the lakes there up to last year, or year before, and I cannot understand why this reduction has taken place. The people of Big Pond, in order to get to the railway, must either go to Sydney, a distance of about thirty miles, or take this boat. That is the nearest railway to them overland, and the nearest by water is at Grand Narrows, about ten miles. The people of East Bay are certainly within fourteen miles of the town of Sydney, where they can connect with a railway, but yet it is a round-about way for those people who have to drive to Sydney and then travel back by railway, whereas they were in the habit of getting communication with St. Peter's and Grand Narrows by line of steamers. There is no steamer between St. Peter's and East Bay except this fortnightly service, which is practically no good at all to them. The people are coming and going by train every day, and there is only one day in the two weeks when they can get across the lake. On the other side, a boat comes from Mulgrave by St. Peter's Canal down the lakes and calls at Marble Mountain and on the opposite side at Irish Cove, and provides that service twice a week. That is quite proper, but I cannot see why the south side—Big Pond and East Bay—and East Bay north side should not enjoy the same convenience. The people of Marble Mountain are twelve or fifteen miles from a railway, but the people of Big Pond are thirty miles from the nearest railway point, except by water to Grand Narrows. I would like if the hon. gentleman would make that service at least once a week, if not twice a week, as it used to be years ago.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I cannot pretend to possess the local knowledge which the hon. gentleman does. We have endeavoured to arrange this so as to give the best service possible. I cannot always compel the steamers to give all the service everybody would desire over those routes. They seem to be giving a considerable amount of service for the amount of subsidy granted, and I was in hopes this would have satisfied the people along the region referred to. I am informed that the amount of traffic at this point is very small.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Yes, because the trips are so seldom.

Steam communication daily during the season of 1900, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Port Mulgrave and St. Peter's, to extend twice each week to Irish Cove and Marble Mountain ..... $4,000

Mr. GILLIES. At what date did this service begin this season.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The contract provides that it shall begin on the opening of navigation. I believe it began about the middle of April this year.

Mr. GILLIES. I will not trouble the minister, as he does not seem to have the information at hand. But, I can tell him that it was unusually late in commencing this season.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) remember when it commenced?

Mr. GILLIES. It commenced some time in June, although navigation commenced unusually early this year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Is the hon. gentleman quite certain he is correct, because I am informed quite differently?

Mr. GILLIES. Quite certain. I understood from some of the people connected with the steamer that the delay arose from the small amount of the subsidy given by the government, $4,000. They wanted their subsidy increased; and I see in the supplementary estimates a vote of $1,000 for this service, which goes to show that this was clearly the cause of the delay. I wish to bring to the minister's notice the fact that this is a very important service, as these services go, and that the steamer running on this route accommodates a large number of people and a large section of territory. It is a very excellent service, the minister will be glad to know, the steamer running very regularly. But, I would ask, for the convenience of the people, that they should not be subjected next year to the delay in the commencement of the service which took place this year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I increased this once, and I am increasing it again in order to endeavour to accommodate the people and give them a better service. It was $7,000 for these two services, and it is now $8,000, and there is a further supplementary vote.

Mr. GILLIES. No, I am afraid the hon. minister is mixing them up a little. The service for which $7,000 was paid was from Port Mulgrave to St. Peter's and down to East Bay. But, at the completion of the railway, the late government thought it was not necessary that the steamer should run daily to East Bay, but should run daily to St. Peter's and three times a week down the lake, and the subsidy was lowered to

Mr. McDOUGALL.

$5,000, under the administration of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). By the hon. minister (Sir Richard Cartwright) the subsidy was reduced to $4,000. But the steamer refused to perform the service for that amount, consequently, this difficulty arose, and the hon. minister found it necessary to provide $1,000 additional. I am drawing the minister's attention to the matter, so that the inconvenience suffered by the people this year in consequence of the refusal of the government to grant this small sum of $1,000 should not be allowed to occur this year, because the time of the year when this service is the most required is during the months of April and May, when the travel by road is bad, and connection with the railway, for that reason, difficult to make.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). With regard to the refusal on the part of this company to start the service earlier in the season, this arose, as the hon. member from Richmond (Mr. Gillies) said, from the fact that they insisted that the subsidy was insufficient to enable them to perform the service of semi-weekly trips from the Strait of Canso to Marble Mountain. I may say that, for my part, I impressed upon the minister the necessity and the urgency of providing a service for the people of Marble Mountain, in view of the very extensive works, lime and marble works, that are going on there, and the rapidly growing population. I insisted, therefore, that the boat should perform a semi-weekly service between the Strait of Canso, Port Mulgrave and Marble Mountain. I may also say that members of the company offered to run once a week to Irish Cove in the constituency of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) and once a week to Marble Mountain, in the constituency I have the honour to represent. I protested against this and appealed to the minister to grant this $1,000 in addition to enable the company to serve the two counties in the way indicated. This having now been granted will secure a semi-weekly service. I may say that this is a very important service to both counties, much more so, indeed, than the service in the sparsely-settled district of East Bay or Big Pond, on the eastern end of the lake. The fortnightly service would certainly be calculated to suffice for all the traffic that could be expected in that quarter, whereas, in the instances I have just cited, a semi-weekly service is urgently necessary. I make this explanation in order to show that the minister yielded the grant of $1,000 in order to meet the additional requirements of the county of Inverness.

Steam communication during the season of 1900, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation between Gaspé Basin and Dalhousie, and the continuation of service after close of navigation at Dalhousie to December 31, 1900 between New Carlisle and Gaspé Basin.. $12,500

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Has there been any change in this line of communication? And what steamer is carrying on the service and who are the owners?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The steamer is the Admiral, owned by the North American Transportation Company. They have to make sixty full round trips between Dalhousie and Gaspé Basin, and, after the close of navigation, the contractors agree to continue the service between New Carlisle and Gaspé Basin to December 31.

Steam communication from April 1, 1900, to March 31, 1901, daily between Port Mulgrave, Arichat and Canso; three times a week between Port Mulgrave and Guysborough; and from the opening to the close of navigation in 1900 twice a week between Port Mulgrave and Port Hood, such trips to be extended once a week to Margaree and Cheticamp..... $8,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I move to strike out the word 'daily.'

Mr. GILLIES. If the hon. minister strikes out the word 'daily' from these votes, what control has he over the service? If you strike out the word 'daily,' then how can you compel them to perform a daily service?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman is aware that as a rule they do give a daily service, but we do not propose to compel them to do it. It is represented to us that, practically speaking, during a great portion of the year, four times would be sufficient. The objection my hon. friend raises might be overcome by putting in the words 'not less than four times a week.'

Mr. GILLIES. That would be satisfactory, because it would simply mean four times a week if not a daily service. But I would advise the minister to leave the word 'daily' there and hold them up to their contract. If you leave out the word 'daily' and substitute another word, you will have no end of trouble.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If my hon. friend prefers 'daily,' we will leave that in.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the same objection apply to the preceding votes? Suppose you strike out the word 'daily' in these other votes, what is the House to understand they are getting?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In the other cases they are getting more than a daily service, in some places they are getting twice a day. One reason for striking it out is that I have mentioned, occasionally an inspection takes place, when they cannot run.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I suggest that the word 'daily' remain there, and stipulate that they may have a day off for repairs or for any other necessary purpose. But does it not strike my hon. friend that in leaving out the word 'daily' he is losing control over his contract?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not propose to lose control in any contract. The fact is that this was done chiefly in deference to the somewhat stringent rules of interpretation which are affixed to these votes by my esteemed friend the Auditor General in so comparatively small a matter as the question of inspection for one day, he has occasionally raised the point that this vote must be construed to the extremest letter of the law. That is the reason why I was disposed to modify it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the minister struck out the word 'daily' for that vote between Baddeck and Grand Narrows?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, the word 'daily' is struck out. We just leave the steam communication as per contract.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am sure that will lead to serious difficulties.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think not, the contract itself provides for the number of trips. I am simply taking a precaution against what is perhaps a little strained construction enforced on us by the Auditor General.

Mr. McDOUGALL. At this point at Grand Narrows, and at Iona, there are six trains leaving daily with passengers, and two trips a day would only connect with two of those six trains; so the minister will see the importance of making it at least two trips a day. I hope the company will not take any advantage of the minister under our vote in the estimates. If it were possible, I would like to have three trips a day at least, in order to accommodate the travelling public.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As a matter of fact I am advised that the contract does provide for two trips per day.

Steam communication between Halifax, N.S., and the Island of Porto Rico ..... $8,000

Mr. FOSTER. What has been done there?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. James T. Hamilton, of the city of Halifax, has contracted for eight trips, one sailing in each month, beginning with October, between the port of Halifax and Porto Rico, with the steamer Tyrian.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). Mr. Chairman, while I am very anxious indeed, to encourage trade between the port of Halifax, N.S., and Porto Rico, I want the House and the country to understand that this vote is not in the interest of the people of the county I represent, as an immense amount of capital is invested by them in a fleet of sailing vessels, and in view of this, by the government aiding a steamer with a subsidy, such as this is intended to do, to provide a service between Halifax and Porto Rico, it is depriving a large number of seamen and master mariners of the profits which should legitimately flow from their calling, were this subsidy not granted. By this means the government are not only interfering with the shippers of fish and other products, but they are depriving them of a profitable market, for the reasons I stated some years ago, when a subsidy of this kind was brought up in this House of a similar character. When the people of Porto Rico, and the other parts of the West India Islands, learned by cable, of a steamer having left Halifax for a given port, intending purchasers will not buy anything during the time that the steamer being on her voyage between Halifax and her port of destination, expecting to be supplied from the steamer's cargo. Any of the cargoes that might arrive in sailing vessels in the meantime, previous to steamer's arrival, would have to wait the arrival of the steamer to see what the prices might be. Fish are oftentimes slaughtered on the market in Porto Rico when large steamer cargoes arrive, thereby shippers of fish by sailing vessels are prevented from getting fair prices for this article. I am sorry that I have to repeat what I said some years ago, and I think that I have named it each time that an item of this kind has appeared in the estimates, that this subsidy is not in the interest of the county I represent, because we have a very large fleet of vessels, I might say, correctly, as many vessels as there are in the remainder of the province, taking into consideration, the increase in number that we had during the last few years. It will be remembered that previous to the Island of Porto Rico being ceded to the United States, I had correspondence with the Canadian government urging that they ask the British government that they approach the American government with a view of their being allowed only to take over the Island of Porto Rico with the understanding between Great Britain and the United States, that all articles of shipment from British ports to the Island of Porto Rico would be entered on the same terms as articles going from the United States. Although that appeal was made in the most earnest manner on behalf of the shipping interests of Canada, nothing was done. I also then urged that they should see that the coastal trade done between Porto Rico and the maritime provinces, via part of the United States, should not be interfered with, but no recognition—whether it was neglect or otherwise—was given to my appeals, and as a result we in Nova Scotia have been suffering: because of our vessels, going to Porto Rico, being compelled in many cases to return in ballast for want of a return cargo, which they would not infrequently have from Porto Rico to an intermediate port in the United States before that island was ceded to them. These circumstances have so materially affected the trade in fish that in many cases parties engaged in the trade with Porto Rico have been obliged to divert trade channels or give it up entirely. This condition of affairs not only affects the trade of our port, but affects mechanical labour as well, because, when trade with Porto Rico is injured, we find the shipbuilding industry is in a measure crippled, and fewer vessels built, which discourages the mechanics, because the shipbuilder employs a less number of blacksmiths, sailmakers, caulkers, carpenters, painters, &c., and thereby deprives the master mariner, fishermen and sailors of their living in consequence of the unfair position the government assume in offering a subsidy such as this trade for steamship communication between Halifax and Porto Rico. Porto Rico trade is of greater importance to our fleet of sailing vessels than any other island with which steam communication is established. I objected when communication with Jamaica and other islands was provided for by government subsidy, but no attention was paid to my protest. I would ask the government to consider this matter carefully and to view it in the sense that I have tried to convey my views to the House, and if they do so, I feel satisfied that they will agree that this subsidy had better be withdrawn in the interest of the province as a whole. It may be in the interest of Halifax, but it certainly will not be in the interest of the county I represent. I particularly urge upon the government to see if some arrangement cannot be made, whereby the coastal trade is not interfered with, so that our fleet may engage in that trade in future, as it has done in the past. I believe that if the American government were approached in a proper spirit, by the Imperial government, upon advice from this government, our wishes in this respect would meet with recognition to a very great extent. When I state to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, that on each quintal of fish, the loss is so great, that it amounts in cases to thousands of dollars in one ordinary shipment, he will see that it is a matter of great importance to us, and that this item is really an injury instead of benefit to my port, as it interferes materially with the employment of our sailing fleet. While I am anxious to see the port of Halifax benefit in every way possible by trade communication between it and West India ports by this proposed steamer subsidy, still, West Indian merchants and shipowners of Lunenburg County are materially interfered with, and in consequence, I would ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to view the matter carefully and withdraw this item.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In respect to striking out the subsidy, I am not able to say to the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) that I will venture to do that. In respect to the other point that he has named, which is of very great importance to Nova Scotia and to the maritime provinces generally, of obtaining the same privileges of trade with Porto Rico that were possessed prior to its acquisition by the United States, I can only assure him that over and over and over again that matter has been pressed by us on the consideration of the British government; and the British government—both through their ambassador at Washington and through the direct intervention of Lord Salisbury, the Prime Minister—have been using every possible exertion to induce the Americans to make those concessions. How far they may ultimately succeed it is difficult to say. The Americans treat Porto Rico as an absolute conquest, and apparently are not disposed to extend any particular consideration to other countries in their dealing with it. Nevertheless, the matter has been strongly put before the attention of the United States cabinet, and the Congress too, for that matter, and it may be that we may be able to obtain such concessions as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) desires. He will note that this is entirely within the power of the people of the United States. They now absolutely own Porto Rico, and they are in a position to do with it as they see fit. The only way in which we can appeal to them, is in view of the good-will which they profess to maintain towards the British Empire, and the well-known fact that the British government was, to say the least of it, friendly neutral during the Spanish war which resulted in the acquisition of that island. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) that every possible exertion has been used by us and by the British government to endeavour to get the Americans to take a liberal view in this matter.

Mr. KAULBACH. We have a strong argument in favour of our trade between the British possessions and Porto Rico, in view of the fact that when the war broke out between Spain and the United States the policy as laid down by the United States, was that they were only seeking the independence of Cuba. But they went beyond that and interfered with the Island of Porto Rico which was at that time a law-abiding and peaceful population, and who were in no way aggressive towards their motherland, Spain, or towards any other country. The United States instead of confining their operations or hostilities strictly to Cuba, planted their flag in Porto Rico, and not only that, but they went to the Philippines and sought to obtain territory there as well. As a matter of fact Cuba is to-day in no better position than she was under Spanish rule. I think this government should approach the Imperial government and place before it the conditions under which Porto Rico was taken over by the United States, and impress on the latter country that as England did not interfere at the time with the United States, the United States should now be sufficiently conciliatory to have the trade between Porto Rico and the British possessions placed upon a similar basis as that of the trade of the United States.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. All that was very strongly presented over and over again.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand that at present no Canadian vessel can take cargo between the United States and Porto Rico?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid that is true.

Mr. FOSTER. What tariff do we meet with in Porto Rico as compared with the United States?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I believe the United States have only exacted 15 per cent of their general tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. At one time it was settled at 25 per cent.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There was a compromise made, and I believe it is now 15 per cent. What I understand the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) to refer to is, that formerly you could send a ship from any part of the maritime provinces to Porto Rico, discharge her cargo, go to any American port and then go back. Under the operation of the American coasting laws at present that cannot be done, and it was very hard lines indeed on the maritime provinces and on British commerce generally, that the result of their friendly neutrality should be to deprive them of the valuable trade which they formerly enjoyed. We lost no time in calling the attention of the British government to that in every possible way, through Lord Herschell, through Lord Pauncefoot, and direct to the home authorities. To do them justice I have every reason to believe that they used their utmost exertions to retain for us the trade privileges which we have heretofore enjoyed. Up to the present date, although they had some little encouragement, they have succeeded in obtaining no concession, except professions of friendship which do not weigh so much in these matters.

Mr. FOSTER. I should not think there is the least hope of obtaining any concessions. If the United States propose to treat Porto Rico as part of the United States territory, which appears to be their present policy they will not give up the coasting privilege.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid not.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the hon. gentleman to look into the question as to whether we do not pay the full United States duty in Porto Rico, and as to whether it is not the United States people who get their goods in at 15 per cent of the United States tariff?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They were desirous of conciliating the people of Porto Rico, who objected to paying the United States duty, and I think the 15 per cent applies to every one. However, I shall look into the matter and obtain the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. KAULBACH. Strange to say, the Island of Porto Rico takes nearly the whole of our catch of fish. I should think they take fully 80 per cent of all the fish caught, in Nova Scotia, whilst the remainder of the Archipelago, foreign as well as British, take but 20 per cent. That will prove to the minister the great disadvantage that our shippers are labouring under by the existing state of affairs. It represents a difference of about 60 cents per quintal which on a cargo, amounts to a very great deal. If we are going in any way to be relieved of that burden, the thanks of those interested in the trade and their blessings as well, will go to the government for a long period of time if they can restore to Nova Scotia the trade she previously enjoyed with Porto Rico.

Mr. FOSTER. The government need the blessing anyway.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I entirely appreciate the truth of what the hon. gentleman has stated. The matter is of great importance, I know, to the maritime provinces, and it was one of those matters which received our best attention during the rather protracted stay we were obliged to make at Washington about a year and a half ago. It was not owing to any lack of diligence on our part in pressing it upon the British government, and I do not think it will be from any lack of diligence on the part of the British government if we fail in getting what we desire.

Steam communication between Murray Bay and River Ouelle ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have the particulars of this.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Tenders were asked for this service last year; and we received three replies, but the boats offered were not suitable for the service. Arrangements were made with J. C. Kane, of Quebec, to commence the service next winter with a boat specially built for it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Who were the other tenderers?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will get them for the hon. gentleman if he wishes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

High Commissioner's Office—Contingencies $10,600

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a decrease of $1,100 due to the fact that the house formerly occupied by the high commissioner has been sold, so that the taxes hitherto charged upon it will not have to be paid. The present high commissioner has never occupied it.

Mr. TAYLOR. What became of the money?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it found its way to the Receiver General.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was received for it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the information, but I will get it for a later stage.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was sold for about half what it cost.

Contingent expenses in connection with the voters' lists ..... $32,500

Mr. McDOUGALL. When may we expect the voters' lists to be printed which have been delivered to the Printing Bureau or to the proper officer here some months ago? The Cape Breton voters' list, which was sent here last May, is not printed yet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the voters' lists of last year were duly printed.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What does my hon. friend call the last list?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What particular list does my hon. friend refer to?

Mr. McDOUGALL. The list of Cape Breton County prepared between last December and January. The final revision took place some time early in April or late in March. The lists were sent up early in May. I went to the Printing Bureau some days ago and nothing was done towards printing them, and could get no information as to when they would be printed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Those are the lists of the present year. During the session the Printing Bureau is exceedingly busy, and so far has not been able to attend to the printing of the lists. Immediately after the session, the printing of the lists will be their first work.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There is another difficulty that I learned on that day, and that is with regard to the old lists. The price of the list is kept up at the same rate, up to the very time when the new lists are printed, and whatever then remains on hand of the old lists is burnt or destroyed after the new ones are published. Would it not be better, when the time has arrived for the printing of the new lists, to sell the old ones at reduced price rather than destroy them. Take my own case. I want the latest list, and when I cannot get the new lists I shall be glad to get the old ones, but they are not of the same value; and if the new list costs $2, the old one should be sold at half that price. It would be in the interests of the Bureau to take a lower price for the old list rather than destroy them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall call the attention of the Secretary of State to the matter. The point is new to me.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The lists should have been published long before this. Take the county of Three Rivers and St. Maurice, the lists have not been set up yet. Suppose we had an election there, I should have to go out and apply to the local people in the district to get my lists and pay extra money for them. There is really no reason why these lists should not have been printed and delivered long before this time. The hon. gentleman says that during the session the Printing Bureau is very busy, but one of the first necessities is to give to the people of Canada the lists upon which they should be called on to vote. I have never heard any explanation that was satisfactory why these lists should not have been printed long ago and delivered, as they should have been, under the law.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am desirous to help on these lists and will make it my business to inquire and ascertain how quickly the printing can be expedited.

Mr. SPROULE. It is becoming rather a chronic farce—this inquiry about the lists and the little information given. We have been assured for the last four months that these lists would be printed and sent out as fast as the Bureau could supply them, but I do not know of one list that has been sent out to our part of the country. In a short time, the new lists will be revised. They commence revising them in August in our county, and shortly after that they will be available. But we have not the old ones. We are told that they are going to be printed. Is that the fact or is there an understanding that they are not to be printed? The latter is the only conclusion I can come to. All during the session we have been making inquiries about the lists and have been told that they are in the hands of the Queen's Printer, but so far as we can learn there is no intention of having them sent out. If there was, surely they ought to be out before this. It is a matter of great importance, during the session, that we should have them, if for no other purpose than for the purpose of mailing political matter to the electors, because they give the post office addresses and the names. We ought to have some more information.

Mr. FOSTER. Although we will let this item go through, I think the Minister of Finance had better ask the Prime Minister to make us a pretty full statement with reference to the present state of the voters' list and give the information whether the government propose to send us to the electorate before all the lists are printed or not.

Mr. WILSON. The voters' list for Lennox County were sent in on January 18, and those for East Northumberland were sent in on the same day. Mr. Cochrane has had his list for more than a month and I have not had mine yet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The lists were printed last year.

Mr. WILSON. I got none last year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The lists were printed last year in my own province.

Mr. SPROLUE. In our part of the country they were not. In my own riding and in East and North Grey and Cardwell and Wellington, there were no lists, so far as I have heard, printed last year. How is it they were printed for the hon. gentleman's province and not for others?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The lists are furnished at different times and do not come in together.

Mr. SPROULE. But we have not had any lists at all. The last revised lists were sent in six months ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will endeavour to get the information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item is set forth with such considerable detail in the appropriation that not much need be said further by way of explanation. When the rush to the Yukon occurred in the latter part of 1897, and the beginning of 1898, there were no banking facilities in that district. If funds were required there by the government or private parties they had to be taken in at considerable inconvenience and risk. If parties wanted to send out funds, they were unable to do so in the usual way, and very large expense had to be incurred.

The only facilities of the kind, I think, were those that were afforded by the transportation companies, which were willing to buy gold at very low rates and to issue drafts at very high rates. Under ordinary circumstances, our Canadian banking institutions, which are known to be very enterprising and progressive, are found ready to respond to every demand made for business of that character. However, in the case of the Yukon, the circumstances were so exceptional—that is access to the country was so difficult, the business so uncertain and the risk involved so great—that the banks did not seem willing to go into the district at all. We had some negotiations, informal at first, and subsequently they took formal shape, with a gentleman representing the Bank of Commerce; and it was ultimately agreed that they should establish a branch at Dawson with a view to meeting the demand not only of the government business but that of the public. It will be remembered that I presented to the House some correspondence on the subject soon after the arrangement was made. We agreed that the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Dawson should be the government bankers in the district, but required that the terms on which the business should be done should be reserved for further consideration and entirely subject to the Minister of Finance. It was felt—I felt—very strongly at the time that the business was in such a condition that we were hardly able to fix a fair rate; and we asked the bank to go in and undertake the business, with the understanding that in due time we would make them a fair allowance for it. Speaking from recollection, I think that before that time when the transportation companies issued drafts out of the Yukon district, they charged 5 per cent. Besides, for the handling of the gold, they paid themselves handsomely by buying it at very low prices. We thought it, therefore, very important to make this arrangement. The guarantee we gave the Canadian Bank of Commerce was that they would have the government business in the district at rates to be subsequently fixed by the Minister of Finance. There was another feature of the business. We decided we would give the miners drafts on the cities of old Canada free of charge—that is the government would pay the cost of the drafts, thus relieving the miners of the charges for bank drafts which were very heavy. About that time, another bank went into the district, the Bank of British North America. We agreed that this business of miners' drafts should not be confined to the Bank of Commerce, but that any miner paying royalty and desiring a draft on any city of old Canada might be allowed a draft at either bank on the same terms, and, in due season, we would allow compensation, the rate to be the same to one bank as to the other. That was the understanding on which the Bank of Commerce, and subsequently the Bank of British North America went in. After some considerable time, we undertook to adjust the compensation. The bank, like other people who do work, wanted to be well paid, and we wished to see that they did not get too much. The ultimate settlement of the matter is stated in detail in this vote. We agreed to allow for handling gold collected by way of royalty—because a considerable part was taken in gold—4 per cent. That included very heavy charges for insurance, 1½ per cent, and also 1½ per cent for freight and a charge for convoy and other expenses. And so, the 4 per cent, while it seems, in one way a high rate, when you consider that the bank had to pay these heavy charges, it will be agreed by any banker that this was not a heavy rate.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that a local insurance or an insurance in transit?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Insurance in transit from Dawson to where the gold could be marketed at the mint. We agreed to pay 2 per cent on the miners' drafts and 1½ per cent for whatever business they did for the government, that is, for moneys they received and moneys they paid out. It is worth remembering that in the case of business in a city of old Canada, a bank that undertakes to do business for the government is able to recoup itself from day to day, that is, money comes in as fast as it is paid out. But in the Yukon they have to carry the moneys to our credit for a very considerable time. All the receipts of the government come in during a limited period, and for the rest of the year we draw on them for any money that we need. So, the general condition of affairs was quite exceptional, and we had to pay for services rendered to us rates that we would not have thought of paying in any other part of Canada. For the next season the matter was somewhat readjusted, and we agreed upon lower rates. For handling gold we were to pay equivalent to 3 per cent. The transaction was somewhat changed in form, but that was the net result. The charges on drafts, instead of being 2 per cent were changed to 1½ per cent, and the charges for the management of the government business were reduced from 1½ per cent to 1¼ per cent. This covers the two seasons and brings us to the present year. We have made a change in one respect. As I have mentioned, a considerable portion of our royalty is paid in gold. The gold dust or nugget is still to a considerable extent the circulating medium in Dawson. We have concluded that, instead of trying to send the gold out, we will dispose of it in Dawson and invite tenders from the two banks for the output of the season. Tenders have been asked for, but they have not yet been received. We have asked the banks to specify a rate per cent at which they will take the business, they taking the gold, delivering it at the mint and accounting to us with mint certificates for the full value, in the meantime, giving us advances up to the approximate value. When we adjust the transaction through the mint certificates, we pay them the rate at which they may contract to do the work. Tenders are expected from the two banks in a day or two.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you fixed a maximum?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is a question of rates. They take the gold over at a nominal value of say $15 per ounce and give us credit, and we are immediately in a position to draw against that in any part of Canada. They send the gold to the nearest mint at which a market is found, which, I believe, is Seattle, where there is an assay office in connection with the mint in San Francisco. The mint will give the certificate showing the exact value of the gold, and we will pay the bank at the rate per cent which we have agreed to pay. This is the arrangement proposed on this point for the current year.

Mr. FOSTER. But, when asking tenders do you fix a maximum price?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not asking tenders for gold exactly; that is hardly the way it is done.

Mr. FOSTER. No, but it is asking for tenders for the percentage which they will charge. You are practically shut up to two banks and they might easily make a combination.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would be possible. The only guard we have is that if the price is excessive, we can take the gold and handle it ourselves. We do not anticipate having to take that course. The banks there are competing very keenly.

Mr. SPROULE. The government would have a good deal if they had a mint out there—say in British Columbia.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Does not the hon. minister think that the time is near at hand, if it has not come already, in the development of the rich gold fields of Canada, when we should have a mint of our own? I think we are losing a very valuable business which the Americans are controlling to-day. The hon. gentleman knows that if we had control of that gold, a great deal of the gold that is exported and which pays no royalty to Canada could be handled in this way—and that royalty might be imposed on all gold leaving Canada. If we had a mint the royalty might be imposed upon all the gold leaving Canada, and then the government might agree to accept the certificate from the mint as to the gold that is kept in Canada. I have heard it stated by gentlemen who have been out there that a great deal of the gold which is taken out of the Klondike leaves the country without paying any royalty to the government. If we had a mint and gave up the royalty, imposing a moderate duty upon gold leaving the country, I think we would secure much more benefit from our gold fields than we do at present.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend's remarks touch on two points which are not necessarily connected; one is the method whereby the royalty is collected, and the other is the establishment of a mint. With regard to the method of collection, of course it cannot be altered in the present year. Since the return of the Minister of the Interior from England, I have had some conversation with him on the subject, and the matter is under consideration. As to the mint, we have once or twice had a discussion on it in the House; and while I do not wish to be understood as giving judgment against the project, it is well to remember that the quantity of gold which we can use in Canada under our system of currency is not large. What I am afraid of is—and I do not wish my remarks to be taken as a decision against the scheme, I think I can see some plan under which, possibly, a mint might be made advantageous to us—but, my fear would be that if we had a mint in Canada, and we were to convert our Canadian gold into sovereigns, they would very probably be shipped out of Canada and be converted back into bullion in the United States, because we have not a field for the use of any large quantity of gold in Canada. There are some ways in which, possibly, that might be overcome. I agree with some of the suggestions of my hon. friend, and I can assure him that we are giving careful consideration to the question whether it is desirable that gold should be minted and handled in Canada, and there are advantages associated with it which I do not undervalue.

Mr. SPROULE. As long as the banks get these large commissions and these large rates, I think we can take it for granted that the moneyed institutions of the country will fight against the establishment of a mint. That is probably one reason why the government are not inclined to consider the question. There are two banks out there now, and till some time ago there was only one. I have no doubt they will come to an understanding of what the commission should be. I do not think there is anything like a keen competition between them, because monetary institutions are not so sensitive that they cannot easily come to terms when their interests point the way. I think we are paying a large commission now. They have been so long in the business, and the improved means of conveyance and security of conveyance are much better than they were a few years ago, that we ought to be able to get a reduction.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have made no terms for the present year at all, we have left them to be settled later on.

Mr. SPROULE. If this is granted without any reluctance by the House, it will be a basis upon which they will strike the rate for the future.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They will not get it, I will guarantee that.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not be disposed to offer a severe criticism on the first year's payment owing to the great difficulties which, as the minister has observed, have to be met in introducing banking institutions in the Yukon. But there are one or two things that I would like to say. I think the rate of four per cent, although I see by correspondence it was arrived at after considerable negotiation, was a very large rate to be paid, including insurance at  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, freight at  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, convoy and all other charges connected therewith,  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 1 per cent. The whole negotiation, as I understand, was carried on by the bank as giving them a clear profit of 1 per cent over and above all costs and charges, and that they claim as not too great, considering the business was new. I think that was the basis upon which ultimately the claim was made. I think the bank made a claim, too, that it was going to cost \$80,000, or something like that, to establish themselves there, and that they ought to have very generous payment in order to recoup them in part for that. That idea might be carried too far. They go there to establish themselves for general business, and they get a tremendous advantage when they get a cinch upon the whole government business from the start. They are initial organizations which propose to carry on a business as long as that country continues to provide business, which I hope will be for a long series of years. I think, therefore, that the 4 per cent was a very large remuneration. The Minister of Finance must know that, because he has brought it down, and they have consented to its being brought down, to 3 per cent. But even 3 per cent is large. Now, with reference to the tender. I hope there will not be a combination between the banks. Probably the competition is keen between them, and may be it will be so keen that they will actually compete for business, and so bring it down to a reasonable basis. But there is this I see about it. Two banks are not too many for the Klondike, which is rapidly increasing its transactions and rapidly increasing the output of gold; and if you by tender bind yourself down to these two banks, the Bank of Commerce and the Bank of British North America, without being at liberty to give business to any other bank that comes in, it is like giving a monopoly of business to two banks, and in some way I think the Minister of Finance ought to make a stipulation whereby other banks that come in there may have a portion of the business at the same rates. I do not think it would be fair to make an equal division between the new bank that went in as against these other banks, although in one way that is not too much, because the new bank would have all the initial expense of establishing itself, while the others would have been established two years before, and would be able to recoup themselves from government business and local business. But in some way I think that ought to be guarded, otherwise the government will be giving an unfair advantage to two banks who happened to get there first, and go there very largely because the government is willing to make a very generous bargain with them in order that they might go there. Therefore it would not be improper at all, when they are giving their tender, to have an arrangement with them that new banks coming in should have a proportionate share of the business at the same rates. That competition up there will be sufficient to get fair bank rates. There is one thing that I do not quite see the justice of. A poor devil who goes in there and spends all the money he has, and all he can borrow, and ruins himself, has to pay his draft charges and bank charges, and he gets no consideration at all, but the government pays for the man who strikes it rich and who has a large amount of money to send out, his commission on the drafts upon all the money he has to send out. It seems to me that when a man is fortunate enough to have money to send out, he could very well afford to pay his own costs and charges. I hope this commission, borne by the government, and the issuing of drafts to miners free, is not contemplated in the tenders which are asked for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have considered that, now the banking business is getting down nearer to ordinary business conditions, there is no reason for continuing that, and we do not propose continuing the free drafts. The tenders we are taking are only for the gold of the present season; there are only two banks in there now, and no other banks can get in during the present season, so that there is no use of extending the privilege to anybody else. We agree to this for one season only, and if other banks go in we will be able to take advantage of the competition.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad that the 2 per cent commission is dropped off. On revenue collection and cash payments 1½ per cent is a very large commission. Of course, we cannot compare conditions there with those in London, or even at our own banks here, but 1½ per cent is a very large charge. Why was the 2 per cent given on drafts for the North-west Mounted and Militia Defence? That seems to be rather strange. I should think that should come in upon the same basis as the usual business here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is because all drafts were paid at 2 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very high for drafts on government business. 'Three per cent less 2½ per cent for disbursements and insurance,' I do not quite see what that means.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It practically means a reduction of from 4 per cent to 3 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. For the same year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is for a separate year.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not feel like criticising it sharply the first year. I think that the charges were very generous indeed, but with the tender system introduced the commission taken off, the free drafts done away with, I think probably the hon. Minister of Finance has done all he could do for the present.

Mr. SPROULE. Who furnished the convoy? Was it furnished by the bank or by the North-west Mounted Police?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bank bring out a large quantity of gold, not only gold of the government, but gold purchased by themselves, and they will have to make arrangements for convoys. They charge us our proportion and the controller in Dawson gives us a reasonable assurance that the cost is just.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the convoy furnished by the mounted police?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is paid for out of their own pockets and for which they get paid. It is actually money which the bank have to pay, and we have to repay them.

Immigration—Salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries ..... $110,000

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words on this immigration business, but before I do so I would like to have the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) answer a few questions. I presume he will do it cheerfully. I see that he gave an interview to the Montreal Herald the other day in which he said that he expected a very large immigration this year. I would like to know, in the first place, upon what he bases that expectation. In the second place, I would like to know why he wants such a large vote this year as we have in the main estimates $395,000, and in the supplementary estimates $50,000, making in all $445,000. Then I would like to know whether he is going to give assisted passages, and whether he is going to make loans to immigrants when they come to this country to help them to settle. I would like to know whether he is going to appoint more immigration agents, and if so, where they are to be located. After he answers these questions I will go on.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The first question which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) asks relates to an alleged interview in the Montreal Herald. Well, I have no recollection of any interview in the Herald.

Mr. WILSON. Would you like to see the interview?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At the same time I have been seen by reporters, but as I have not seen the alleged interview I do not know what the Herald says. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to see the interview.

So far as the prospect in Europe is concerned, Hon. Mr. Sifton said that beyond a few matters of detail there is little room for improvement. There is the highest prospect for a considerable emigration of desirable settlers to Canada from Germany, Norway, Sweden and Denmark. 'I think,' he added, 'we can look forward to an increase from Wales, Scotland and Ireland. Should there not be an increase from England, it will be due to the strong desire to secure English settlers for South Africa, to which many people in the old land are now looking as a promising field for settlement.'

Substantially, that is what I said to the reporter; I am not sure whether it was the Montreal Herald, reporter or not. Having recently seen practically all the agents in the British Isles, and having spent some time securing information with regard to the position on the continent, I can say that the prospects are what I stated in that interview. There is nothing definite which would enable me to give statistical information. All that a person can do in regard to such a question, is to gather the impression of the agents who are in the field, and that statement simply contains the information I have obtained from them. The total amount in the main estimates is $395,000, and there is $50,000 in the supplementary estimates, making $445,000. I will give a general summarized statement first, and if any member desires me to itemise, I shall be happy to do so later on. The following are the items under the general head: Salaries of officers, as they exist at the present time, $110,000. Women's Protective Immigration Society, Montreal, $1,000. Girls' Home of Welcome, Winnipeg, $1,000. The High Commissioner's estimates, including $10,000 for miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, special delegates, and so forth, forty additional for continental bonuses, amounting to $120,000. United States general expenses and contingencies, $35,000; advertising and printing in foreign countries, including the United States, $40,000. Advertising and printing general immigration literature, $40,000. Bonuses on children, $4,000. Commission on settlers from the United States, $6,000. The usual grant to the Lake St. John Railway, $8,000. Grants to hospitals for work done, arising in connection with immigrant patients, $6,000. Extra clerks at head office, $3,000. General expenses and contingencies in Canada, $40,000. Special expenses at seaports, $8,000. Postage on immigration literature, $11,000. Repatriation grant to immigration societies, $5,000. Collection of exhibits, $5,000. Miscellaneous, $2,000. Total, $445,000.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to know what the minister did in 1899, with the $224,000 he spent in Canada, and which was mentioned by Mr. Pedley in the committee?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. To what does the hon. gentleman refer?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Pedley in his evidence before the committee gave the expenses for immigration in Canada, at $224,363.35 in 1899. I want to know how that was distributed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is for the fiscal year?

Mr. WILSON. There seems to be a difficulty about that, because most of the immigration business goes into the calendar year, while the other goes to the fiscal year. The appropriation for the immigration branch is the same as in other departments.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The appropriations for the immigration branch are the same as in the other departments.

Mr. WILSON. That may be, but while you only appropriated $225,000 for immigration in 1899, you spent $387,000, so that you see you get things mixed. I urged before the committee that this system should be changed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A difficulty does arise in the way the hon. gentleman suggests. The last day of the fiscal year, is the middle of the immigration season, and every officer is then busily engaged travelling or otherwise. The largest expenses are then being incurred and it is practically impossible on the first of July to close our accounts. The statement as to the number of immigrants and the result of the work only comes at the end of the calendar year. It is absolutely impossible for us to close our accounts in the immigration branch on July 1st with the same exactitude as they do in other branches. I am quite prepared to hear any plan which the hon. gentleman can suggest to make it better.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the minister, first: What is the policy of the government with regard to granting loans to immigrants after they arrive in Canada, to give them a start; and second: What is the policy of the government with regard to granting assisted passages?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The policy of the government with regard to granting assisted passages has not, I believe, been changed since I have had charge of the department. We have not given any assisted passages in the accepted sense of those words.

Mr. WILSON. What you intend to do is what I want to know.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. And I was going to say that no intention whatever exists at the present time of changing that policy. In fact, I have taken a very strong stand on that point in opposition to representations which have from time to time been made, especially from England. Last year, I think it was, the Queensland government, being very desirous of securing a larger number of immigrants from Great Britain, offered large inducements in the way of assisted passages as well as bonuses, and I was asked to consider whether I would ask my colleagues to adopt a policy to meet the policy of the Queensland government. I was told that if we did not do that, we would not be able to compete with Queensland in getting immigrants. I took the ground that no such step was necessary for Canada, and I am strongly of opinion that that will prove in the long run to be the best policy. Our present policy is not to go any further in that direction than to give the usual bonus to steamship agents to prevent them being hostile and advocating immigration to other countries; for that is what it means. No facts have been brought before me to induce me to change my opinion in that respect. I have no intention of appointing any new agents or of increasing the staff. A considerable increase in the staff has been caused by an immense increase in the work which has been thrown on the department by the necessity of taking care of immigrants when they came here. That has been very onerous, and has resulted in a large expenditure. I hope to keep the staff where it is or to reduce it a little. As to giving assistance to new settlers on their arrival, I have never intentionally inaugurated any deliberate policy of that kind. Any assistance that has been given has been for the purpose of saving people from want, and not on any general plan of giving them assistance to start farming. Our desire and intention is to avoid any outlay in that direction.

Mr. WILSON. I was very anxious to get the minister's views on this question, and I agree with him with regard to assisted passages and making loans to immigrants. I have always been opposed to both of these, because I have felt like a man who has reached middle life and has a family about him, and who has no friends nor relatives to assist him with a small loan or otherwise, is not a very good man to become a settler in this country. Once in a while such a man might make a good settler in this country. Once in a while such a man might make a good settler; but, as a rule, I think it would be a great mistake to import that class in large numbers. I think the announcement made by the minister, if I can rely on what his officers say, has entirely destroyed his hopes for a large immigration to this country this year. If he looks over their reports, he will find that they all agree that the policy which has been pursued for many years is a failure, and that unless some new policy is adopted, they will not be able to induce many immigrants to come to this country. I am going to read some extracts from the reports of the High Commissioner, Mr. Preston and Mr. Jury to show that the position taken by the minister is entirely different from the position taken by these gentlemen. The High Commissioner says:

The emigration returns for the year have not yet arrived. They will probably show a slight falling off in the emigration from Great Britain to Canada.

In 1899, there was a reduction in the number of immigrants from that country of 934 persons. Then he goes on:

For the last year or two, the United Kingdom has been in a very prosperous condition, and the effect of this state of things has been felt by every class of the community. There is always a tendency for emigration to fall off in these circumstances. . . We have arranged to still further increase our efforts to induce emigration to Canada during the coming year. I am afraid, however, although we may be able to sow useful seed, and to attract attention to the country, that our emigration is more likely to fall off for a year or two than to increase. This is explained, as already mentioned, by the prosperity which obtains here, by the fact that both capital and labour are fully employed, and that prices of all kinds of produce have had a tendency to rise in consequence of the troubles in South Africa.

I think the High Commissioner gives a very much better reason why we have no right to expect a very large immigration from that country than the minister has given—a reason which will commend itself to this House—that when capital and labour are fully employed, the people are doing as well as they can do under any circumstances. If a man who invests his money in any kind of industry, whether manufacturing or farming, is getting such a good return from it that he is encouraged to put all his capital into it, he can afford to pay good wages to his employees, and the result will be that they will be satisfied, and it will be hard to make any impression upon them in the way of inducing them to go to another country. It is true, as the minister says, that Queensland and some other countries are paying bonuses or giving assisted passages to immigrants. The High Commissioner says:

I am inclined to the opinion that it would be of advantage to the Dominion to offer some such assistance to farm labourers and domestic servants, and also to farmers who have small means, but not enough to enable them to start immediately they arrive in Canada.

It seems that the fact that the other colonies are lending money or paying bonuses to encourage immigration has influenced the High Commissioner to feel that we ought to do something in the same direction. I hope the minister will not yield to that demand.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
I am quite clear on that.

Mr. WILSON. I think we had better stand a little firm, even if we do not get as many immigrants. Then, we have a report from Mr. Preston, a gentleman who was appointed by the present minister to be a sort of superintendent of immigration from Great Britain and Ireland and the continent, and who has made himself also a commissioner to the Boers to see if he cannot induce them to come over here. The following statement in his report greatly disappointed me when I read it. There has been a good deal in the newspapers some years back about the desirability of getting tenant farmers from the old country. They are a class of people who have some means, some of them a good deal, they are considered good farmers, and they would be a very desirable class if we could induce them to come to this country; but it appears that Mr. Preston has given up the idea altogether of being able to induce them to come. Not only that, but both he and Mr. Jury hold out the idea that they would not be the best settlers that we could get for this country. Mr. Preston says:

A great deal has been said and written in Canada about the desirability of securing a movement on the part of the so-called tenant farmers towards the North-west Territories. But one has only to be thrown into contact with these people here to be assured that they are not likely to leave their positions of ease and comfort upon English farms and assume cheerfully the alleged responsibilities attached to pioneer life in a new country.

But the project to induce them to emigrate to Manitoba and the North-west might, in my humble opinion, be abandoned.

Mr. Preston has evidently made up his mind that there is not the slightest use of trying to get these farmers to come to this country and especially to the North-west. He said that they are living a life of comparative ease and comfort and would be entirely unfit to grapple with the difficulties of a new country and rough it as our farmers have to do. Then he goes on further to say :

In England and Scotland wages for agricultural labourers have reached an exceedingly high figure, while in the manufacturing centres great activity prevails, and consequently the earning power of labour has increased enormously.

That would most effectively dispel the idea that we could induce that class of people to leave a country, where they have plenty of work and good wages, and come to a new country where they would have to start afresh. Further on he adds :

To carry on successfully an immigration propaganda in Great Britain it is now necessary to go beyond the usual advertising, addressing public meetings and attendance at fairs. There must be a policy of personal contact between the government agent and the prospective emigrant—or in so far as possible, a personal canvass of every probable emigrant, carried on with the same system, but perhaps not with the pertinacity which characterizes life insurance business in our own country. Yet, under such circumstances, and with the continuance of the system of a bonus to booking agents, too much must not be expected from Great Britain. It will require every possible effort to prevent a continual annual decrease in the returns from here, on account of the adverse circumstances already referred to.

So far as Mr. Preston is concerned, he has become fully convinced that a desirable class of immigrants, such as farmers and farm labourers or labourers of any kind, are not going to be had without a great deal of difficulty. In fact, he says we will have great difficulty in preventing a decrease in the immigration from Great Britain and Ireland, and I think that is a reasonable conclusion to come to when you consider the great prosperity of the old country. When people are fully employed, it is not a very easy thing to get them to move to a new country where there is no certainty that they will be better off than at home.

Then we have Mr. Jury, who is the agent of the government in Liverpool, and who used to be a labour agitator in this country, very much opposed to bringing out any people here to compete with our own workmen. He reports :

My opinion is that the ordinary tenant farmer is by no means the most desirable emigrant or the one best adapted for doing pioneer work, either in the older or the new provinces of Canada. As a rule, the English farmer has not been used to the toil and hardship and self-sacrifice incident to such a life: judging by their appearance, they are, as a class, better off than the ordinary Canadian farmer.

It is not very likely that Mr. Jury will be able to do a great deal to induce such men to come to this country, when he himself is convinced that they will not better their condition, but make it worse.

The average British farmer would not improve his lot by becoming an average Canadian farmer, but in most cases rather the reverse. If some scheme could be devised whereby members of this class could be guaranteed employment on farms for the first year, so that they would not feel that they were giving up a certain living, though a poor one, for an uncertainty, I think quite a number of good British settlers could be got, both from the urban and rural districts, if the scheme were well advertised. But unless some new method is introduced and some extra effort made, I do not think the prospects for an increase in the number of emigrants in the near future are very bright.

These are the reports from three leading officials of the government, and these men have been on the ground four years, with the exception of Mr. Preston, who has been there a year and a half. They have been going over the ground, coming into contact with the people, and their reports are that, in all probability, unless a new system is introduced and some inducement held out to the ordinary farmers and farm labourers different from that laid out in the past, there is no reasonable probability of that immigration increasing. The deputy minister, Mr. Smart, himself was in the old country, and I notice by his report that he was strongly in favour of either helping them out to this country or helping them after they come to this country. He seemed to think that in that way we would get a desirable class of people which we would not be able to obtain in any other way. Another thing is that in every case in these countries, England, Ireland and Scotland, from which settlement is most desirable, there is likely to be a decrease instead of an increase. I do not think it is any great advantage to get such people as the Doukhobors, and it would be less advantageous to get the Boers, for the latter will introduce rebellion and want to live by themselves in an unprogressive manner, and be very undesirable in every way.

Before concluding, I would like to make some reference to Mr. Devlin, who has been in the old country ever since the general elections, and who a short time ago wrote to a friend of his in Ottawa indicating pretty clearly why he went over there. He was a fine speaker and promising young man, and I think would have liked to remain in public life, but when his party came to power, they knew he was bound, above everything else, to have justice done to his co-religionists in Manitoba and to have their separate school system respected. It does seem to me, if I can read between the lines, that he had an interview with the Prime Minister before he went to Ireland, and decided there was one of two things he had to do—either stay here and fight for what he believed are the rights of the minority in Manitoba or go to Ireland and become an immigration agent and be buried out of sight for some years to come. I think that he took the latter course, feeling that it was after all perhaps the better one, but he is not at all satisfied with it and does not feel at all comfortable in his present position. He says :

Do not imagine that the one which is my lot is more agreeable to me to-day than it was the first day I left the country, home and friends. True, I love the land of my ancestors, but it is not my native land; here I was not born, and I miss the circles in which I moved and lived. I am as much and as strong an Irish Canadian as I ever was. I hold and affectionately cling to the leanings, belief and doctrines during so many years.

It is not opportune—it would not be wise for me to return just now; and it is not my intention; I know that I am not missed and not wanted.

That is what Mr. Devlin said. Then, Sir, he explains according to his report—and it is not a very long report for a man getting $2,000 a year and his expenses—that the statistics are not kept in such a way that one can tell what number of immigrants come from Ireland and which do not. He says that he leaves all the outside work to Mr. Webster, and he sits in his office and answers inquiries, and so on. A good story is told about him. After he had addressed a public meeting—and every one who knows Mr. Devlin knows that he can do that well—an Irishman rose to move a vote of thanks. I am sure Mr. Devlin must have captivated him. When he moved the vote of thanks, he said to the people: you are not going to leave Ireland until all our grievances are settled. That would offset all that Mr. Devlin had said. There is one peculiar thing about the Irish office. The office in Scotland costs $9,283, according to Mr. Pedley's evidence, and from Scotland we got 1,337 immigrants. That is, it costs us $6.99 per head for our immigrants from Scotland. For the office in England and Wales, we spent $14,758.07, and from there we got 8,756 immigrants, or $1.72 a head. In Ireland we spend $11,034.53, and from that country we get 747 immigrants, or $14.77 per head, or twice as much as it costs for Scotchmen or eight times as much as it costs for Englishmen. It does seem to me—and I call the attention of the minister to this matter—that something ought to be done with these officers, not only in Ireland, Scotland and England, but in the United States, whereby the expense would be greatly reduced; because we are spending a great deal too much money considering what we are getting in return, as I shall take the opportunity to show pretty soon. Now, there are four offices of which I wish to speak particularly. I do not know how many the old government had, and do not care. I think the time has come when the business of this country should be done on business principles no matter what other people did. Here is Mr. W. T. R. Preston, who has a salary of $3,000 a year; and I will venture to say—and I do not think it will be very extravagant—that his expenses will be $3,000 more, because as I understand it, he has carte blanche to travel any where on the British islands or on the continent where he thinks immigrants for Canada can be had. Then we have Mr. Pedley at $2,500 a year. Of course, he will not be away as much from home as the other gentlemen, and his travelling expenses will not be as much, though, no doubt, they will amount to a considerable sum. Then there is Mr. W. F. McCreary, another gentleman getting $2,500. Then there is Mr. W. J. White, who receives a salary of $2,000 a year and expenses, I presume, when he is away from home. Now, I think the business in the office has been conducted on a very extravagant plan. In the Agriculture and Colonization Committee, we have spent a great deal of time trying to get information. I do not complain of the course pursued by the gentlemen who came before us, because I think they were willing to give us all the information they had. There was one difficulty. It was three months to a day after the session opened before the report of the Department of the Interior was laid on the Table of this House. We had to examine the deputy minister himself before the committee had that report in their hands. That ought not to have occurred this year, and I hope it will never occur again, no matter who is in power. For, after all, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) was not far out when he said 'business is business,' and we ought to adhere as closely as possible to these lines. I made up a table, as well as I could, from the Auditor General's report, of twelve of the agents in the United States. I believe there are two other gentlemen who live in Canada and do work in the United States—two clergymen, I believe, who are paid $500 a year, and I presume their travelling expenses when they are away. This is the table to which I refer :

Now, there are twelve agents employed by this government as immigration agents, and their cost is over $40,000. Then, there are two more at $500 a year each, besides travelling expenses, and their hotel expenses while they are away. Now then, we had last year, according to the statement made by the minister, about 100 agents paid by commission in the United States; this year we had 256 agents in the United States paid by commission, and they got in commissions, $5,077. Then, there was spent in the United States for printing of all kinds, pamphlets and advertising, $38,500, according to Mr. Pedley's statement, making a grand total of $83,500.

Now, I want to turn up Mr. Pedley's evidence and show you what these agents are doing. Here is a statement made up of the commissions that are paid, $3 on all males over 18 years, and $2 on females, and $1 on all others. Well, I find that a great many went out again. Here is one agent that got $2, another got $8, another got $6, another got $3, another got $2, and so on. It would seem as if these agents ascertained when people were going across the line and said to them: You take this certificate from me, and I will get the commission, whatever it is. The hon. gentleman may say that makes no difference, because we got the immigrants. I do not think that is the case, because, under the system now in vogue, as soon as the immigrants across the line the agent is entitled to the fee. I have another calculation to present. They report about one-fourth of the immigrants that came in as coming from the United States; I do not agree with them, but I have taken one-sixth, which I think is as much as they can show in any possible way. I take one-sixth of $224,000 and call it $37,800, which, added to the $83,500, gives us as the cost of the immigrants coming in from the United States, $121,310. Now, there is a difference of opinion as to which is right in the number of immigrants from the United States, the deputy minister or Mr. Pedley, the superintendent of immigration. The deputy minister says we got 9,839 immigrants from the United States, Mr. Pedley says we got 11,945.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think it is clear, from my knowledge of the figures, that the deputy minister must have been speaking of the previous year and Mr. Pedley of the last year.

Mr. WILSON. They both bear the same date, as the deputy minister will see by turning to his own report, page 12. Now, it is a well understood thing with the government that the only parties for whom we pay commissions to agents are either farmers or farm labourers, and I believe that only extends to Manitoba and the North-west Territories; it may extend to British Columbia, for all I know. But, I know that Mr. Pedley stated in the most emphatic way that they only paid a commission to an agent when he got a farmer or a farm labourer. That being the case, it will be a natural thing to suppose that farmers coming in from the United States, a large proportion of them, would take up land in the North-west or in Manitoba, and in that way would become homesteaders. Now the number of homesteaders reported by the deputy minister is 1,604; and according to his way of counting,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  persons for each homesteader would make 3,405 people that came in under that head. Then, they claim that 906 people came in to the Lake St. John district; the Repatriation Society of Montreal, they say, brought in 973; then, they say that 227 went into the Rainy River country, and Mr. T. O. Currie claims that he sent in 280, making in all, 5,791. Now, I will later on turn to Mr. Pedley's evidence, which, in my judgment, will prove that on the whole, 15,000 or 20,000 immigrants are reported to have come into this country that cannot be found, the hon. gentleman cannot account for them. Now, that makes 6,154 immigrants from the United States that are unaccounted for according to the report of Mr. Pedley. That means that we are paying for the immigrants we get from the United States at least \$20 for each man, woman and child. It does seem to me that this is a little too much. I will have to trouble the House to read another table. It is interesting to me, and I hope it will be so to the House, because I think there is some information in it that we have not had for some years. I may say that the committee spent more time over immigration this year than they have for several years in the past, and this is the result. I may remark that the government, as I said before, only allowed these agents their expenses while they were travelling, if they had a family at headquarters. If they, with their families, lived in Canada or anywhere else, they allowed them just as much. Mr. Davies is one of the men who had a family at home where he lived. Consequently, when he was at home he would not be entitled to living expenses. I will just read this table, because I am anxious to have it in the Hansard in the form in which it is here:

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that we have not the days travel by the two last named gentlemen, nor the days that they were in their offices; consequently, we cannot carry this table out fully. The superintendent of immigration, I think, has done his whole duty, because I see that these gentlemen were written to six times, and telegraphed to two or three times, advising them that a committee of parliament wanted these particulars. I think, unless there is some very good reason why these gentlemen should be retained in the service, they should be dismissed forthwith. Mr. Rogers said that he did not know that the department required this information, and that he kept no diary, notwithstanding the fact that six letters had been sent to him notifying him that this information was necessary, and that a detailed statement could not be presented to the committee, unless it was forthcoming. Now, I want to look for a few moments, at how economical some of these gentlemen were as travellers, lodgers and boarders, because I believe the people of this country are interested in that question. We will take the case of Mr. Davies. He only travelled fifty-eight days; consequently we would only be liable for board during these fifty-eight days. His fares would have all have to be spent in these fifty-eight days. That means that Mr. Davies cost this country, for the days he travelled $13.93, for fares, cab-hire, livery and pullmans, per day. Of course, he boarded in a very humble kind of way, and it only cost us $6.43 for his board and lodging, or a total of $20 per day, to keep this gentleman during the days that he was travelling. I do not know Mr. Davies, and I have no personal feeling in the matter, but if he could live in that style, I think he should be made a colonel at once. He certainly lives in the style that would be becoming to a colonel, and it does not require anything more to fit a man to be a colonel nowadays. The travelling expenses of Mr. McInnes, fares, &c., cost us $7.57 per day, and living expenses $6.50, making $14.37 per day that this gentleman cost this country for the days that he travelled. If he has a family at the headquarters, as I understand he has, as a matter of course, the department would not pay his expenses while he was at his headquarters. I understand that the government have changed that system, and that whether a man has a family or not at headquarters, they do not pay his expenses now.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They do not pay his living expenses when he is at headquarters.

Mr. WILSON. In 1899 they did it. I am glad to know that an improvement has been made. There are several others living in quite as high style. Now, I want to take up this other matter of population. The homesteads entries reported in 1899, were 6,689, but there must be deducted from these, the following :

Persons from the eastern provinces and British Columbia, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories .....	2,134
Persons who had previously entered.....	720
Austro-Hungarians, who are credited as Galicians .....	1,114

Total number of immigrant homesteaders.. 2,721

It is all very well to say these are immigrants in that part of the country, but they are certainly not immigrants in the broader sense of the word of being new comers into Canada. That leaves only 2,721 homesteaders to be accounted for and at the rate allowed in the report, viz., 31-5 per homesteader, that would give us a population of 8,707. Then we have the Doukhobors, that a great many people do not think are very desirable immigrants, to the number of 7,350 ; the Galicians, 6,700 ; the Scandinavians, 1,526 ; they claim to have sent into the Lake St. John district 526 ; the Repatriation Society of Montreal claim to have sent in 973, they claim to have sent into the Rainy River district from the United States 227 ; and sent into Canada by T. O. Currey from the United States, 280. This makes in all 26,669 that are accounted for, and not 44,543 as stated in the minister's report. This leaves a difference between those reported and those accounted for of 17,874.

Population as Figured Out.

*No proof of these.

Now, then, I might as well point to the evidence to show what I base this on particularly, in addition to what I have already stated. I quote from Mr. Pedley's evidence given on the 6th of June, page 63 :

By Mr. Clancy:

Q. That there may be no confusion, I will take the larger number you have given, the 43,000, and take the number of homesteads?

A. We have done that, and got 15,000 or 20,000 I did not account for.

On page 65 of the evidence of Mr. Pedley I read as follows :

By Mr. Clancy:

Q. When we left off, Mr. Pedley, a moment ago, we were endeavouring to account for the excess of something like 20,000 upon the whole. Have you any definite information to enable you to say that these persons are still in the country?

A. We have no definite information that anybody at all is in the country except those we see.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we are paying a good deal too much for the kind of immigrants we are getting, because if you deduct the Doukhobors, the Galicians and the Scandinavians to the number of 15,576, it will leave you, of what might be called desirable settlers, 11,093, and to get these we spent in the last calendar year $387,000, while there was only appropriated a little over $255,000. That is all the Auditor General's Report shows, because he reports for the fiscal year while these immigration returns are for the calendar year. I do not wish to be unfair at all, and I may be referred back to the years 1882-3, 1883-4, and 1884-5, when the late government spent a very large amount for immigration. But they saw the folly of it and they decided to quit and during the last year of the Conservative government they spent only $120,000 for this service. I will take the last three years of this government and the last three years of the Conservative government and compare them. This government is now asking the House for a total vote of $445,000 for immigration for this year, and that is a larger vote than we have been asked to vote for a great many years. It is asked for in the face of the fact that the reports of the officers of the department are that unless we are prepared to give bonuses or assisted passages, or invent some new scheme, we will not be able to get as many immigrants in the future as we got heretofore. For my part, I am entirely opposed to voting such a large sum for immigration, more especially when the signs of the times are against our getting a very large increase.

for the year 1900 the appropriation for immigration was $360,000, and the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) brought down a supplementary estimate to this House for $75,000, making in all $435,000, which we spent in the year 1900 for immigration, and I am satisfied that we got less than 30,000 immigrants for that money. The following figures, Mr. Chairman, will show the cost of immigration for the different years under the Liberal and under the Conservative governments :

*Increase, $34,000.

It will be seen from the above figures that the Liberals have spent in three years $749,775.86 more than the Conservatives spent during the last three years they were in power. I would like the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to give us a detailed statement of what was done with $224,363 that was spent in Canada for immigration last year. It is a very large amount of money, and while I am glad to know that so much was spent in our country yet we must be sure that it was profitably spent and not wasted. It does seem that the time has come when we should cry a halt in this matter. I have some letters here from Manitoba showing the dissatisfaction of the people there with the Doukhobors, but as the hour is late I will not read them to the House. I might mention that it would seem from the London interview with Mr. Preston that he thinks it desirable if we could get the Boers to settle in this country. He believes that they would forget their disloyalty and become good citizens. For my part I am not willing to risk the experiment. The Boers have done a great deal for Great Britain, in the sense that they made the empire a unit from one end to the other. The result of the South African war has been that the heart of every man in the British Empire beats in unison with his fellow-subjects of the Queen all over the world. But while we are anxious to be united as a great people, and while Mr. Preston thinks it would be a good thing to get the Boers away from South Africa and scatter them in some other land, I hope he and the government will scatter them somewhere else than in Canada.

Mr. McDOUGALL. And the Doukhobors too.

Mr. WILSON. These are not Doukhobors, but Boers, and I believe it will be admitted that they fight pretty well. A gentleman named Mr. Young from the North-west Territories was interviewed in Toronto in June in reference to these Galicians and here is what he said :

We have between 7,000 and 8,000 Galicians in Alberta now, said Mr. Young, and every person there wishes they would get out. The people are opposed to them because they are bad neighbours and poor settlers, and thus retard the development of the country.

This gentleman is the editor of a paper out west, and a man who has, I presume, had good opportunities of knowing these men. I have made some inquiries about him, and, so far as I have heard, he is a very respectable man.

Mr. DAVIN. John J. Young, editor of the Calgary Herald.

Mr. WILSON. That is the man. I have another authority to quote to the House. I do not purpose talking much longer, and I would not have talked so long only we have been deprived of the opportunity of discussing this matter because of the delays of the government in bringing down the returns. The hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) was in Prince Edward county on June 16 last, and the Globe reports him as saying :

The doctor opposed strongly the government policy of immigration. He did not see why we should be in such a terrible hurry to give the country away to foreigners or to induce all the poor people of Europe to take up our lands. We were whittling at the wrong end of the stick. His plan would be to develop the country, and bring the market within a reasonable distance of the settlers' homes.

That, I think, is the feeling of a good many people living in that country. While we are all desirous of doing what is for the best interest of this country, and while we believe it to be for the best interest of the country to fill it up with desirable settlers, if we can get them, I believe it is not for the best interest of the country to bring in people who live in communities, who make their own clothes, their own wagons and sleighs and everything they use, and give them special privileges. I understand that there is an arrangement with the Doukhobors that they are not to be required to take up arms in this country if the necessity arises. I wish to say in most emphatic terms that I am opposed to giving any immigrant who comes to this country any special privileges which we are not prepared to give to our own people. I think Canadians are as good men as those who come here from any other country, and I am not prepared to give to any man who comes here any special privileges over our own people. I move that the item for the salaries of officials be reduced by $10,000.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). Does the hon. gentleman think it is a privilege for a man to be exempted from fighting? I think a majority of our people think it is a privilege to be allowed to fight.

Mr. WILSON. I never saw a coward that did not want to be exempted. I like to see a man who is ready to take his coat off, if necessary, and we are not prepared to give special privileges to any class of people.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to state that it was practically impossible to keep the immigration accounts so that they will be made up to June 30, like all other accounts. I would like him to explain why that is practically impossible.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have already spoken of the difficulty of making the accounts correspond with the fiscal year. It is easy to make up the returns of the immigration work to the end of the calendar year. The work is done in the spring, the summer and the fall. At the end of the year the reports of the agents come in, and we know what has been done, whereas the fiscal year, as we all know, ends in the middle of the calendar year, just when our agents are at the full stretch and most of them are away from home incurring expenses in such a way that it is almost impossible to make up the accounts to June 30. I think the members of the committee will readily see the difficulty of adopting any other plan than that which exists at the present time, and no particular advantage would be gained if the report of the Immigration Department were made to conform to the fiscal year instead of the calendar year. The facts set out would be practically the same. I may say that I have no great fault to find with the criticism which has been addressed to the department by my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat, after giving his views at considerable length. For my part I would be only too pleased if the same attention which has been given to the subject this year were given to it every year by members of the House, because I fully recognize the fact that no minister can possibly hope to carry on the work of his department in such a way as to be free from legitimate criticism or from suggestions which may redound to the benefit of the work in the future. I cannot agree with all the conclusions at which my hon. friend has arrived, and I think that he has reached some of his conclusions upon somewhat insufficient evidence. On a number of smaller matters to which my hon. friend has referred, possibly a word or two would not be out of place. My hon. friend first referred to the reports of the various agents in England as indicating the great difficulty of getting the class of immigrants we would like to get. First he spoke of the English tenant farmers. No person can travel through England without being impressed most strongly by the fact that England is not, in the sense in which we understand the term, an agricultural country. A very small portion of the population subsist by agriculture, and it is rather a diminishing than an increasing quantity; and it is most difficult, as is pointed out in the reports of the agents which the hon. gentleman read, to do immigration work among the class of people to whom he refers.

Mr. WILSON. Might I call the hon. minister's attention to the fact that Mr. Jury said he did not think the tenant farmers were desirable immigrants?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Jury might not think they were desirable in the sense that they were people who would be likely to be satisfied to live such a life as new settlers are compelled to live on prairie farms. In that sense he might possibly be correct, although, if they were induced to come, they would no doubt weather the difficulties of pioneer life as they have done in many cases and proved to be desirable settlers; but there is very little that an officer of the Canadian government can place before the tenant farmer of the better class to induce him to come to Canada. Generally a man of considerable means, he lives in most comfortable style, surrounded by the society which it pleases him to mix with, and there is very little indeed which could be placed before him by any of our officers that would induce him to break his home connections and settle in this country. We have to some extent to make efforts to get this class of people to come and settle in the older provinces. I am not prepared to say that the efforts have met with very much success, and doubt if they will for some little time to come. But while my hon. friend was quite correct in calling attention to the facts to which he has adverted, it does not follow that there is going to be a serious falling off in immigration from the British Isles. It may be we will not be able to increase the number largely, but by continuing the expenditure and the work carried on in the past with increasing vigour, we may, with the advantage resulting from increased experience, continue to receive even as large a number as we are doing at present. I indicated, speaking to the reporter to which my hon. friend referred, that there might be doubt of our receiving as many immigrants from England itself during this year as during the last, but that is due, to some extent, to the fact that a very strong effort is being made to induce English settlers to go to South Africa—with what success it is not possible for any one to say.

Mr. DAVIN. I thought the hon. gentleman said that he had given no interview.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. I said I did not remember speaking to the Montreal Herald reporter, but that I had spoken to some reporter, and that what was reported was substantially what I said.

My hon. friend referred to efforts being made to bring people here to compete with the labouring men in Canada.

Mr. WILSON. I referred to Mr. Jury, in Liverpool, who, prior to his going over there, had been a labour agitator in this country, and declaimed against bringing out working men to compete with our labouring classes, and I called attention to the fact that I did not think he was the best kind of man to be an immigration agent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. While I am not in a position to state exactly what Mr. Jury may or may not have said, in the very large number of public addresses he delivered in Canada before he became immigration agent, his work so far has been fairly successful, and I have no fault to find with his activity or ability.

But I may say that no effort is made on the part of the officers of the department to bring people out to compete with our own labourers. The contrary is the principal on which they work.

Mr. WILSON. That being the case, are you not astonished that the few who have taken up homesteads are found on the farms?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will come to that in a few moments. Just now I desire to state, in connection with this particular point, what the policy of the department is and is likely to be. Since I have been in charge, and I presume in former years to some extent at least, our policy has been to avoid bringing out people of the class, generally known as labourers, namely, men who would go to the cities to compete with what is generally designated as labouring men. Farm labourers are considered in a different class altogether, because the farm labourer makes the most desirable citizen in a new country. After spending a year or two working with a farmer, almost invariably, he becomes a settler, and one of the best you can get.

My hon. friend made some reference to the work in Ireland. It is quite impossible, carrying on a large system of work such as we do in various countries, to say we will only carry on the work where we get the largest number of people for the smallest amount of money. Although to a certain extent, we must adopt that principle, we cannot adopt it absolutely. I do not think the hon. gentleman would agree that we should at once close up a certain work because the total expense, in proportion to the number of people we got from that particular place, were larger from some other place. We desire to get all the people we can of the proper class, and if we can get a larger number of people from Ireland by increasing the expenditure, I do not think that $6.97 per head, as the hon. gentleman figured it—

Mr. WILSON. $14.77 per head, while from Scotland it is little less than $7, and from England and Wales about $1.72.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that the expenditure the hon. gentleman has figured out is an excessive one. Let me call my hon. friend's attention to the expenditure, which takes place in connection with other institutions, which have found it desirable to settle up vacant lands. Take the expense incurred by the western railways. In the United States, they have for years past calculated that each head of a family placed upon land in that country costs on an average $500. This enormous expenditure shows the difficulties of doing successful immigration work, and these difficulties have been most seriously exemplified by their efforts than the efforts of any other institution. I would not think that the figures of the hon. gentleman, which I have not checked, but will later on, would be excessive if we can secure settlement from year to year. We have to make expenditures in certain places and watch results and be guided somewhat by circumstances. I may say to my hon. friend, on that point, that we have been overhauling the work in Ireland for the purpose of seeing if expenses could not be reduced without impairing the efficiency of the work. One man in the Dublin office, Mr. Webster, will possibly, be shifted to the North of England, Scotland, but that step has not been taken yet.

My hon. friend referred at considerable length to the case of Mr. McInnes, the agent of the department at Detroit. He gets $1,500 a year, and the expenses to which the hon. gentleman had referred. I do not think that his salary is excessive. He has been most successful in the work he is called upon to do. He went to Detroit and started his work there when there was no movement of any kind whatever from that place.

Mr. WILSON. I knew the agent very well who started the work in the United States, and that was the head centre, Captain Holmes, who lived in my town. McGinnes worked for him at $900 a year, and no doubt thought he was very well paid.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon gentleman is right in saying Mr. Holmes inaugurated the work in the United States. But I am sorry to say his efforts were not successful. I said that there was no movement from the agricultural districts about Detroit to Canada, until Mr. McInnes went there, and what I said was perfectly correct. But there has been a very considerable movement since Mr. McInnes went there to work. For the first few months after he went there, he was not successful in getting many immigrants. But, by persistent work, he has secured a large number of very desirable settlers; and since he made his first successful beginning, there has been a steady stream of most desirable people coming to Canada, as a direct result of the efforts he has made.

Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) referred to the commission that we pay on the people that come from the United States. He spoke of the fact, that as soon as an immigrant from the United States crossed the line, the bonus was earned. And the impression he left was, that for every person crossing the line the commission was paid. But my hon. friend, having looked into the accounts would know that that is not the case. Last year we paid a trifle less than $6,000 for bonuses on people, the number of immigrants who came in being 12,000. Then he spoke for a considerable length of time—called my attention to it again a few moments ago—on the question of accounting for the numbers that come over. I understand his argument to be, that in accounting for the number of these people, you take the number of homestead entries, and you allow so many for each homestead entry, multiply the number you have allowed and you have so many people, leaving a balance not accounted for.

Mr. WILSON. I did not say that, I gave you the homestead entries and a large number besides.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend then made an estimate of the number of persons who went into the several districts. But I want to point out that it is impossible for the department, under any circumstances whatever, to be able to account for all the people that come across by the number that take up homestead entries. We have a large increase in the number who took up homestead entries, but it does not follow that the balance of people, whom we cannot exactly locate have left the Dominion of Canada. Such is not the case. Those who are familiar with settlement in the North-west, know that that is not so. Some go to the city of Winnipeg; they spread out in the district around Winnipeg; they buy land from the North-west Land Company, the Hudson's Bay Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or some other railway company; and it is impossible for us to have an actual account of where each of these people have gone. We do show a phenomenal increase in the number of entries, quite as large an increase, as ought to be expected, considering the number of people that we claim to have come in. For instance, in 1896, the number of immigrants reported, was 17,464, while the number of homestead entries in the same year, was 18,557. We reported in 1899, 44,500 immigrants. That would be a little over two and a half times as many immigrants as in 1896. In that year, there were 6,689 homestead entries. Taking from that the entries made by Canadians, which would indicate there would still be about 4,000 homestead entries, which would indicate that the proportion of homestead entries has grown in just about the same proportions as the reported growth in the number of immigrants. I may point out, too, that a large number of the best settlers we have, are people who have come from the United States. Large numbers of them are Western farmers. Many of these people simply come there themselves, examine the country for themselves, decide where they are going to locate and purchase land; and there is no possible means of keeping an exact record of where they are located. It is a fact of common notoriety in Manitoba, and the North-west that settlement has increased with very much greater rapidity in the last three years, than in former years. In connection with homestead entries, to which my hon. friend refers, I wish to point out that the total number was 6,689 last year, but that does not include any of the entries that are to be made for the seven thousand odd Doukhobors. So if these were taken off, the total number of immigrants being a little over 44,000, that leaves the proportion of entries to immigrants much higher than in 1896.

Mr. WILSON. I accounted for all the Doukhobors and Galicians, except those who had homesteaded before; because they were accounted for before. I did not ignore the Galicians or the Doukhobors.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not mean to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson), ignored them; I am simply pointing out that the homestead entries have grown more largely in proportion to the number of reported settlers, and also that it is absolutely impossible that we should be able to give an exact account of the rest of the people. If we had the Russian system of passports, we could do so; but we cannot do it under our institutions. The only way we can do it is to keep as exact an account as possible of the people who come in. And we have no reason to believe that there has been any considerable exodus from the west. I think I am safe in saying that there is a general agreement among the people who are best acquainted with the circumstances, that the loss of population which did take place in Manitoba, and some other portions of the North-west to a very considerable extent some years ago, has been practically checked, and there is no serious loss of population going on at present.

Mr. DAVIN. What evidence is there of that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am simply referring, as my hon. friend (Mr. Davin), is aware, to what I believe to be the general opinion of the people in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, who are familiar with the facts of the case. I assert without any hesitation, that the fact is, that there is no substantial loss of population in Manitoba and the North-west by the departure of people to the south, as there was in former years. I make that statement without hesitation, and quite convinced that the best opinion of the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories will concur in what I say as being correct. The hon. gentleman asked me to give in some detail, if possible, so that he might locate it, the expenditure of $224,000, which was spoken of by Mr. Pedley, the superintendent of immigration, as having been made in Canada last year. The statement with which I am furnished, is as follows: Salaries, $73,000; seaport expenses, $23,000; expenses looking after settlers and locating settlers, salaries and general travelling and other expenses incurred in connection with the Winnipeg office, $44,000; Doukhobor bonuses, $35,000; advertising and printing pamphlets, $12,000; grant to Lake St. John Railway Company and Repatriation Society, $10,500; girls' homes, $1,500—that would be the Montreal Women's Home and the Winnipeg Girls' Home; bonuses on children, $2,300; collecting exhibits, $2,800; miscellaneous expenditure in Canada, including largely liens for grants paid for settlers, to which the hon. gentleman made some reference, altogether about $20,000. That makes a total of $224,000.

Mr. WILSON. I thought the hon. gentleman told us they were not making advances to settlers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I said we had made some advances under circumstances in which we thought it was necessary for the purpose of preventing settlers from coming to want, but I said we had no general policy of advancing money in this manner, and only did so under circumstances of great necessity.

Mr. WILSON. He is asking for $10,000 more this year to pay salaries than last year. Now, the hon. gentleman told us that he is not going to put on any more officers, therefore, I do not see why he wants any more money. It does seem to me that an expenditure of $44,000 on the Winnipeg office is outrageous.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The pay list at the present time for salaries of officers who are now in the employ of the department, amounts to $103,616.25 for the year. I can give the hon. gentleman the list of officers, if he likes.

Mr. WILSON. If he only wants $103,000, why does he ask for $110,000?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have put in a round sum of $110,000, leaving a margin of $6,000 or $7,000 to cover any changes which might be made. But, as I said before, I have no intention at the present time of appointing any new agents.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a few words with regard to immigration in general, before dealing with the specific items that are submitted for our consideration. I have been looking into the subject somewhat during the session, and have come to the conclusion that the expenses for immigration are growing very rapidly, without affording any adequate return for the outlay. For a number of years past we endeavoured to reduce the expenditure. In 1894, $202,235 were spent on immigration, and the hon. gentlemen opposite, who were on the opposition side of the House, declared that we were spending entirely too much on immigration, that the country did not get a proper return for it, and that the expenditure ought to be cut down. In harmony with that view the government endeavoured to curtail it, and in 1895 they reduced it to $195,652. The next year the same story was told, and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and his friends attacked the expenditure ferociously. Consequently, it was again cut down the following year, 1896, to $120,000. The present government then came into power, and notwithstanding that they had attacked the immigration policy of the preceding government so vigorously, they did not put their preaching into practice, for we find that in 1897 they increased the expenditure to $127,438; the following year they increased it to $261,194; in 1899 they made another jump and brought it up to $387,863; in 1900, the expenditure crept up to $435,000, and for the year 1901 they propose to expend no less a sum than $445,000 on immigration. And this, notwithstanding the fact that most of their agents in Europe declare that the outlook for getting immigrants is by no means bright; that the improvement of times in the old country, and the opportunity of profitable employment for labour, and the attractions of other countries, all tend to diminish the prospects of European immigration. Under these circumstances, the people of Canada will naturally ask how it is that the department spends this large amount of money without increasing the number of immigrants to a proportionate extent.

In looking over the items, one is struck with the way in which this money is expended. The Minister of the Interior said that he pays for agents, alone in salaries, $103,000. The fact is that the number of officers employed in the immigration department has gone up so rapidly of late years that now we have practically an army of them pensioned on the country at very large salaries and giving very little return. We have in the United States at present 256 agents who are paid by commission, receiving $3 a head for every male over 18 years of age, $2 a head for every female, and $1 a head for every child they bring into Canada; and the consequence is, that if they happen to find a man who is coming into Canada, it may be out of curiosity, and who intends to return again, they put him down as one of their immigrants and receives $3 a head for bringing him in. Now, in the Committee on Agriculture we endeavoured to ascertain how these agents managed to satisfy themselves that the commissions they received represented so many actual settlers brought into Canada, and they could not tell us that these people who came in all settled in Canada, they could only tell us that they crossed the line. When they were asked on what grounds they claimed payment of their commission, they said that if a man came over here to take up land, that was sufficient evidence to entitle the agent to the bonus. The result is that we have 256 agents who are collecting bonuses in this way in different states of the union.

In addition to that we have some twelve or fourteen salaried agents who are operating in the United States. The hon. Minister of the Interior told us that Mr. McInnes, who is operating in Michigan, had done some splendid work through the year. We have a return showing the number of immigrants that he has brought in from that state, and while there appears to have been a few brought in, it does not indicate that there is any great amount of work being done. In the state of Michigan, although there are three of these paid agents, there are in addition to them some dozen or two dozens commission agents. They got, in the year before last, ninety-seven people from the state of Michigan, and they ostensibly secured 126 settlers from that state last year. That was the result of the work of three salaried agents who were paid large salaries in Michigan, and of the large number of commission agents employed there.

Mr. SPROULE.

We are paying out that large amount of money to get the number of people that I have mentioned. We have an army of these agents. Let me give a few, as shown by the Department of the Interior. In the United States we have W. G. White, inspector of United States agencies; M. V. McInnes, D. L. Caven, James Grieve, C. J. Broughton, T. O. Currie. Mr. Grieve is an ex-member of this House and Mr. Currie was one of the leading spirits of the Patron organization, who corralled the Patrons and brought them into the camp of the Grits. He had to be recompensed for his services, and they gave him the position of immigration agent in the United States, which he is now filling at the large salary which he receives. Benjamin Davies, E. T. Holmes. Mr. Holmes, I believe, is a brother of the hon. member for West Huron. J. H. M. Parker, W. H. Rogers, William Ritchie, J. S. Crawford, W. V. Bennett, Rev. R. A. Burriss, on Rainy River and Thunder Bay immigration; C. O. Swanson, on Scandinavian immigration; Rev. M. Blais, on French colonization; Rev. H. L. Gouin, on French colonization; Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Colonization Department; Dr. T. A. Brisson, agent general Colonization Society of Montreal; Professor James Mayor, on European emigration. These are a few of the agents who are operating in the United States.

Then, we have a large number besides who are employed as agents in Eastern Canada: S. Gardner, immigration agent, St. John, N.B.; F. W. Annand, immigration agent, Halifax, N.S.; P. Doyle, immigration agent, Quebec, P.Q.; John Hoolahan, immigration agent, Montreal, P.Q.; Andrews Home, Montreal; Women's National Immigration Society; Dr. Barnardo's Homes; Children's Distributing Home, Knowlton, P.Q.; Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ont.; Canadian Catholic Emigration Society; Robert A. Dawson, Dominion S.S. Line interpreter; Ignatius Roth; Liverpool Catholic Children's Protective and Rescue Home; Scandinavian National Society, Montreal; Consul-General Schultz, on Austro-Hungarian immigration, G. Bogue, travelling immigration agent.

There are besides these the agents employed abroad as follows: High commissioner for Canada; inspector of agencies in Europe; G. H. Mitchell, agent, Liverpool; Alfred F. Jury, agent in north of England. Mr. Jury is now in England endeavouring to induce the labourers of England to come to Canada and he says that they comprised the only class of immigrants that we are likely to get, while, a few years ago, he was employing his time in decrying the Conservative government for bringing these labourers to Canada and placing them in competition with Canadian workmen. W. L. Griffith, agent in Wales; H. M. Murray, principal agent in Scotland; John Grant, agent in Scotland; Thomas Duncan, agent in Scouland; C. R. Devlin, Canadian Commissioner in Ireland; Edward O'Kelly, agent in Ireland; John Webster, agent in Ireland; A. Bodard, agent in France; D. Theau de Coeli, agent in Belgium.

Then, we have the agents in Western Canada as follows: W. F. McCreary, commissioner of immigration; Dr. C. S. Corbett, Dominion health officer, Winnipeg; W. Langmuir Watt, on settlement of Winnipeg vacant lands; J. M. McGovern, travelling immigration agent; J. W. Wendelbo, Scandinavian officer; Léon Roy, French interpreter; Thomas Gelley, French interpreter; C. A. Jones, German interpreter; Cyril Genik, Galician interpreter; C. W. Speers, general colonization agent; W. H. Paulson, Icelandic agent; agent at Brandon, agent at Minnedosa, agent at Dauphin, sub-agent at Swan River; J. S. Crerar, immigration agent, Yorkton; agent at Alameda, agent at Regina, agent at Lethbridge, sub-agent at Pincher Creek, sub-agent at Medicine Hat, agent at Calgary; Jos. M. Smith, land guide; Cook Myer, land guide; J. W. Burdick, land guide; C. W. Sutter, immigration agent; Thomas Bennett, immigration agent; agent at Edmonton; Gerhard Ens, land guide and interpreter; agent at Prince Albert, agent at Battleford, agent at Kamloops, agent at New Westminster. These are only a few of the number that appear in the report of the Department of the Interior that are to-day pensioned on the country, and we find that the return that we get from them is very small indeed. We find that the expenses for immigration purposes have crept up from $120,000 in 1896 to $445,000 for the coming year. Now, I do say that we are paying out entirely too much for this purpose. We heard the hon. Minister of the Interior say a few years ago that the great requirement of Canada was to fill up our great western country. He said that the illimitable possibilities of that country were such that we would be justified in paying out a large amount of money to bring people into the country and place them there. My answer to that was that I did not regard it in that light. I have never believed that it is a matter of very great importance that we should make our country as thickly peopled as the eastern countries. The condition of the people is, I believe, of more importance to the country and to have the people profitably employed and their labour properly distributed, every one deriving the full profit of his labour, than it is to have a very large number of people in the country. If the only consideration was an increase of population we might take China and Japan, which have 450,000,000 of people, many of whom are degraded so low that they are very little above the brute creation at the present time. Take those European countries that have such large populations. Where do you find the great mass of the people in the most abject poverty? It is in these countries. So that, it is not a matter of such great importance to have our country filled up with population as it is to have the population in our country profitably employed and able to support themselves. But we are told that it is very desirable to have an increased immigration to our country, and that we must have an army of agents employed for that purpose. Who are the people that they are bringing into the country? We have Doukhobors and Galicians, two of the outcast classes of nations of continental Europe. The Canadian government claims credit for bringing these races to Canada, when the country from whence they come have practically cast them from their shores. I stated a few years ago that I did not believe these were desirable immigrants, and this statement was stoutly combatted by the minister (Mr. Sifton), who read communications from his own agents who were sent out to get reports favourable to the government to refute it. Since then I have taken some interest in this question, and I taken some interest in this question, and I find the strange coincidence that after these people got to Winnipeg, the police reports showed that a large majority of the commitments were of Doukhobors and Galician immigrants. When the children of these were charged with theft, they said that their parents compelled them to go out into the streets and lanes of the city, and that they would beat them when they got home if they did not bring back something with them—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What authority has the hon. gentleman for that?

Mr. SPROULE. The police reports of Winnipeg.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Would the hon. gentleman refer me to any single such report?

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot just now, but I remember the facts very well. In addition I have the information from gentlemen living in the place that the commitments were very numerous, that the thievery amongst that class was very extensive, and that many of them were purloining and thieving everything they could get their hands on.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) give one single instance of a Doukhobor having been convicted of stealing in any part of Manitoba or the North-west?

Mr. SPROULE. The principal offenders in that regard were the Galicians, but my information is that they were both.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Will the hon. gentleman tell us who gave him that information?

Mr. SPROULE. I will not now, but I am satisfied that it came from a reliable source.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I thought you would not give it.

Mr. SPROULE. It can be verified by hundreds of people in the city of Winnipeg, and especially by those who attend the police courts. My information is from a gentleman who attended the police court and saw with his own eyes, and who had no object in distorting the facts. We have the sons of Ontario who are anxious to go to that country, but who cannot get assistance from the government, to the extent of one dollar to do so. They are native born people, accustomed to our manner of life; they have helped to make the country prosperous, but they are compelled to pay their own way; while Doukhobors, Galicians, Scandinavians and Finns, are encouraged and subsidized to settle in the North-west by this government. That is a crying injustice. It is an unjustifiable waste of public money which the people of this country will not endorse. There has been a rather startling proposition made by Mr. Preston, who proposes to go to South Africa to induce the Boers to settle in Canada. Have we not had experience enough of the Boers already, when we have been obliged to send our citizens to help England to maintain law and order in their country. Mr. Preston who says he has travelled nearly 20,000 miles in the last few years hunting up immigrants, proposes to bring the Boers into this peaceable and law-abiding portion of the British Empire. They cannot be kept in subordination where they are; they are in every way antagonistic to the sentiment of English law and English civilization, and yet we are invited to spend our money to enable them to settle down in this country. The people of Canada paid nearly $2,000,000 to send their sons and brothers to keep those Boers loyal to British rule, and now it is proposed that part of this $445,000 shall be spent in importing them here. If we had them here, we would probably have to spend thousands of dollars to keep them loyal. I believe, Sir, that the people of Canada will not endorse any such proposition as that. What are we spending this immense amount of money on immigration for? We are spending it for the purpose of giving bonuses to steamship companies who are supposed to distribute our literature, but Mr. Preston tells us that that literature is often found in large quantities in the cellars of the houses, and is not distributed. We are spending this money for commission to agents, for the Barnardo Home, for different societies that bring waifs and strays from every country to our shores, and many of whom become objects of charity when they get here. I want to say a word right here with regard to Mr. Preston's conduct when he was before our committee, and I state that he showed an insolent and impertinent disregard of the rights of that committee and the rights of this House which appointed that committee. The time at our disposal at each sitting of the committee was not sufficient to enable us to get the information we desired, and in fact Mr. Preston had to promise to secure that information from the department, as he did not know anything about it himself. The second or third time he appeared before us, he said he would not come before the committee again. We insisted that he was bound to, but he said he had taken his passage for Europe, and there was not another passage to be obtained until next fall, so that if he did not go then he could not go at all. I told him that Europe would not suffer much if he never got there. He said distinctly that he would not attend that committee whether we liked it or disliked it, and although he was instructed to return, yet at the next meeting it was announced that he had taken his passage to Europe and had entirely disregarded our order. Had I been at that meeting of the committee I would have reported Preston to this House to deal with him as he should have been dealt with for his insolent and impertinent bearing before that committee and his failure to give the information which we desired and to which we were entitled. That man ought to be brought home and put at some other work, because he is not fit for the position he occupies. We have a number of these agents travelling through the country distributing the immigrants on homesteads. C. W. Speers is one of these; and he gets, I think, $100 a month. To show his conduct, I have a letter written by Mr. James Armstrong of Toronto, who was connected with the York Colonisation Company for several years, and who, on going up there, saw this condition of things. He says:

On the way out I met W. H. Haines, a miller from Saltsburg, Pennsylvania. He was advised by the Dominion agent (Mr. Caven) to go to Calgary, and thence to a point midway between that place and Prince Albert. I had a talk with him and had his ticket changed from Calgary to Yorkton, promising him two homesteads from eight to ten miles from Saltcoats or Yorkton. On the train to Yorkton he met Mr. Speers, the general immigration agent of the Dominion government, and told him he would have to go forty or fifty miles from Yorkton to get a homestead. Speers, had left the train down the road before Haines told me. I have now had Haines to write a letter to the board of trade at Saltcoats stating the facts of the representation made by Speers. I purpose when I reach Yorkton having a list of homesteads made out, which I think will show that within fifteen miles of Yorkton there are 100 vacant homesteads.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Deserted.

Mr. SPROULE. Not by any means deserted. The hon. gentleman is a little too previous.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I know the country better than the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking from information given by a man who is quite as respectable, truthful and intelligent as the hon. member, who has travelled over that portion of the country time after time, who knows it thoroughly, and who is speaking of what he knows. Then I ask, why do Mr. Speers and the other agents advise people to go beyond Prince Albert to settle? A gentleman has given me a reason, which may or may not be the correct one, that is, that there is some kind of connection between them and the Mackenzie and Mann crowd who are building a railroad in that district. But why an agent of the government should directly falsify the situation, and tell the people that a homestead is not to be got within a radius of forty or fifty miles of that place, when hundreds are open for entry, is something I cannot understand. This conduct should not be allowed to continue, because it is unfair to people who desire to settle in that country. One objection which people have to settling in that locality is that the Doukhobors have settled there. I find that the lands of English-speaking settlers who happen to be located in close proximity to where those people are settled, have gone down in value from twenty to thirty and sometimes as high as forty per cent, because English-speaking people do not want to live near them. Why should we spend so much money in bringing immigrants to Canada and do so little for our own people? The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) told us that every immigrant who came here from Ireland cost $14.75, and every immigrant from the United States cost $20; and I think he is under the mark. Why should we spend $20 bringing a man from the United States to locate in Manitoba or the North-west when we would not give our own Canadian boys from Ontario or Quebec a cent to go and settle there? I say it is unjust to our own people. Therefore, the government are not justified in spending this money. The hon. member for Lennox has proposed to cut the vote down. I am heartily in favour of his proposal, and shall vote for it, because I honestly believe that we are spending money unwisely and extravagantly for the purpose of bringing immigrants to Canada a large part of whom are of a very undesirable class as settlers. There may be a fusion of the races in the future, but they will assuredly drag down the Canadian race. Instead of uplifting and bettering the condition of the Canadian people, they will rather make it worse; and I fear that there may be a time, it may not be in the near future, it may be in the distant future, when we shall be subjected to another such expense as we have had to incur in keeping the Boers under control in South Africa, and that will be for the purpose of taking care of and keeping in subjection the undesirable class who are pouring into our country to-day. In my judgment this government have been extravagant from the first day they came into power until to-day, that extravagance is growing very rapidly, and the people of Canada at the earliest opportunity will give it their condemnation at the polls.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite prepared to admit that great care and economy should be exercised in the expenditure of money for the purpose of bringing people into this country. When I sat on the other side of the House, I criticised the expenditure for immigration from year to year. I conscientiously believe that a large percentage of the money expended was virtually thrown away. I am glad to see that a great deal better work has been done in the last few years than was done before. We know that in ten years previous we spent about $3,300,000 upon immigration, and accomplished very little.

In the last few years, we have unquestionably brought more settlers into Canada than in any six years before. This is a good return for the money expended. I admit frankly that immigration agents are sometimes disposed to be extravagant, and I would warn the department to hold a tight rein on all these men and see that each of them is doing work proportionately to the amount of money he is drawing. If not we should certainly dispense with his services.

I believe that good work has been done through the establishment of agencies in the United States. These agencies have been the means of bringing a good many immigrants into this country, who will become the most desirable settlers we have. I do not know where you could get a class better fitted to succeed in our North-west than the people you can bring from the western states. But, great care should be exercised in the selection.

I have travelled with immigration agents and have remarked the style in which they travel, and in many instances it has struck me as absurd. It seems to me that there can be no reason why they should travel in a pullman from morning until six o'clock at night instead of the ordinary car, though the case is different when travelling by night. If an agent is extravagant, the inspector of agencies should be held responsible. He should see that these men do work in proportion to the moneys they receive. For my part, I am not prepared to endorse extravagance of any kind, and would insist on the department looking carefully after these men, for if you give them a loose rein they will be sure to go beyond the limits.

I hope we will continue to receive as many settlers from the United States as we have done in the past. We have had some criticism from hon. gentlemen opposite of the class of immigrants we are bringing in. The hon. member for North Grey, for instance, found great fault with the Doukhobors, and even went the length of making serious charges against them, but when brought to book and challenged to give his authority, he was utterly at a loss, and placed in a very humiliating position. I have seen these people and made inquiries about them, and from all I saw or heard they are very industrious, honest and good workers. But, I can remember the time when Mr. Daly was Minister of the Interior, and his brother an immigration agent in the United States. His brother went across to Chicago and brought into our North-west a lot of Jew pedlars, with packs of cheap jewellery and other nick-nacks on their backs. These people were admitted as immigrants, and it was only when some of them were arrested for swindling that the whole thing became exposed. I should say it is much better to bring in the Doukhobors, or even the Galicians, than Jew pedlars. No doubt immigration agents are sometimes deceived themselves, but Mr. Daly must have known what class of people these were, and he got the ordinary per capita allowance for bringing them in. This principle of per capita allowance is not a new one. The present government did not inaugurate it, but I question very much whether it is a good one. I question whether it would not be better to have first-class men at a fixed salary and trust to their honesty, instead of paying a per capita allowance.

I am glad to say that good work has been done during the past year, and I hope that the department will see that no expenditure is incurred beyond what the necessities justify. One pleasing feature on which we must congratulate ourselves is the fact that the exodus from Canada has ceased, to a large extent, and that we are having instead a large influx of population both from the United States and other parts of the world. What we want in Canada is increase of population. If we can get them to settle in the North-west and other sections of our country, that will tend to build up Canada and improve it as we can in no other way; and I should not think $8 or $10 a head an extravagant expenditure for every head of family that would become a settler and occupy our lands, or even do mining work. But, whatever expenditure should be made in the future, I would strongly urge on the department to see that we get the value of our money.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman had the grace to apologize for the expenditure on immigration.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. DAVIN. If his speech was not an apology, I do not know what it was. But I will say it was a defence in the shape of an apology. The hon. the Minister of the Interior had no explanation to give in reply to the demand of my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson), who wanted some explanation of the enormous expenditure on immigration and the enormous sum the hon. gentleman is asking for this year, $445,000. The Minister of the Interior got up and referred to certain items with regard to Ireland, and argued that an expenditure of $14 per head there was no reason why we should cease our immigration work in that country. But, he carefully avoided going into details. Take that very case in Ireland. The proposition of the hon. minister, that because the outlay in any given field might be in excess of the outlay in another, is no reason for abandoning that field, I grant you. But that was no reply to the criticism of my hon. friend from Lennox. Who doubts for a moment that the best proof we have that the expenditure in Ireland is excessive is the fact that the agent we sent there, Mr. Devlin, we sent not for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the staff, but for the purpose of decreasing the surface irritation in Canada. Mr. Devlin was sent to Ireland for no other purpose than to keep him from being a thorn in the side of the Prime Minister.

What did the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) who spoke before me, say? And, by the way he has fled the House as is his custom when anybody rises to reply to him. He says he is not going to apologize, but he says he is not going to defend extravagance on the part of the Minister of the Interior, he is not going to defend excessive outlay in the United States. He expressed the hope that this expenditure would be carefully looked into, and that next year it would be seen if there was any extravagance that extravagance would be done away with. Is not that apology? And in the very same speech in which that apology was made, he yet defended the present outlay of $445,000. I ask the attention of the people of Ontario, and I ask the attention of the electorate of Wellington to the speech we have just heard from this renegade from economy. He referred to the time when he used to speak from a bench on this side. And, in 1894, speaking from this side, he said, referring to a number of things that could be done in the direction of economy:

Then, we can save $200,000 a year on immigration. We have squandered an enormous amount in immigration. Three millions and a half of dollars have been spent in the last ten years to bring people into this country, and when we come to enumerate the population, we cannot find them in the country.

The expenditure on immigration for that year was $202,235. That showed that he thought that $202,235 was sufficient.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Judging by results.

Mr. DAVIN. That assertion of my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) is about the same value as the assertion of the Minister of the Interior when we asked him for evidence of the bold statement he made that there was no exodus now. I asked him for his evidence, and his answer was: That is the best opinion on this subject. Just as I have heard a lawyer who had no case, when the bench asked him why he stated such and such to be the law, not being able to quote a case, he could only answer: It is my belief that that is the law. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) can only go upon his own belief. However, I am now dealing with the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), one of the economical critics of other days, though he is now defending this expenditure of $445,000. When the expenditure on this service was $202,000, he said we could save $200,000. He stated the expenditure in the previous ten years at three and a half millions. But, if you look at it, you will find that it amounts to only $2,630,368, or he overstated it by $869,631. What I wish to call the attention of this committee to is that the hon. member for North Wellington like the rest of the party in the House—happily not like the rest of the party in the country, for the voice of the Liberal party in this country is as sound for economy as it ever was—stands for extravagance. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) asks to reduce this item by $10,000. Why not so reduce it? It is evident from his own report that Mr. Devlin for instance renders little or no service for the $2,000 a year and expenses paid to him. He sits in his office and leaves the work to be done by others—such work as is done—and, as a matter of fact, there is but a beggarly return from that office. Then, take Preston. I expected when my hon. friend criticised Preston that we should have some explanation; and I attended the committee for the purpose of learning what was the explanation of Preston as to why he was employed. And what was his explanation? Why is he paid $3,000 a year and expenses to go from hotel to hotel, to go from capital to capital in Europe? He told us in the committee that he went from agency to agency, and what did he find? Everything glorious. He had not a fault to find with anything, except that the literature of some of the old Tory activity was a little musty—and he made no effort to change it. So, you give a gentleman an opportunity to go all over Europe and enjoy himself at our expense—$3,000 a year and carte blanche for expenses; and the only return we get is that he comes and tells us that everything is very satisfactory. In these two men alone, you have nearly the amount of the $10,000. Then, take some of these men who are employed, and employed for political reasons. For, Sir, the unfortunate thing about the officers of the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior is that too many of them bear palpable evidence that they have been appointed solely on account of political exigencies. One appointment is made to reward a defeated candidate, another is made to get an undesirable person out of Canada and so on. And, I say to this committee, if it is to do justice to the facts before it ought to reduce this amount by $10,000. The hon. Minister of Interior made an argument as to the relation between the number of immigrants who have come into the country in 1899, and the number of homestead entries in that year on the one hand, and the number of immigrants who came in in 1896, the number of homestead entries in that year on the other; and he said the relation was about the same. If it is about the same, what ground can he have for saying that the relation of both to the exodus would not be about the same? The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and his faithful henchman beside him (Mr. Rutherford) laugh at that. But, surely, if the relationship between the immigrants coming in 1896 and the homestead entries in that year is the same as the relationship between immigrants of 1899, and the homestead entries of that year, would it not be a fair conclusion that if we lost a certain proportion of our immigrants in 1896 we should be losing the same proportion in 1899? Now, as to the exodus, my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster), who is not in his place to-night, on a previous occasion brought forward such facts as the amount of settlers' effects exported to show that the facts did not support the contention that the exodus had ceased. I shall certainly support my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) in seeking to reduce the vote and shall register my protest against these bloated expenditures. Let me say here that I do not say one word and never will, against any poor man from any country coming into Canada. But, I entirely disapprove of having any class of settlers; I entirely disapprove of the system of settling people in colonies. Above all, I entirely disapprove of discriminating against our own people. I say that anything you do for any immigrant coming in here, you should do for a Canadian. Do not make fish of one and flesh of another, particularly when you are making fish of your own countrymen, who have certainly as much claim upon us as a man coming in from one of the four corners of Europe.

Mr. BERGERON. I intend to vote for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson). This reminds me of what I used to hear in Quebec, concerning immigration during election times. Our friends opposite used to say that the government of Canada was squandering money upon immigration, that instead of spending it usefully, in helping to bring back our compatriots from the States, who desired to return to Canada, we were spending it in bringing in foreigners. In 1895, we spent $130,000 on immigration, in 1896, about the same amount; and now we are asked to vote $445,000, not to bring back our compatriots from the States, not even to help our Ontario boys who desire to settle in the North-west and Manitoba, not to help the people of Quebec who may desire to move into the North-west—but this immense sum of money is largely spent in bringing the worst kind of immigrants from the other side of the line. I want to tell my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, what I have seen of those immigrants. A good many of them come up by the New York Central to Montreal, where they tranship to the Canadian Pacific Railway. These people are so filthy that the railway company has to give them a special car, which they attach to the rear of the train. On one occasion, last year, when I was travelling on that road, I asked the conductor how it was that he seemed to have two ordinary tourist or immigrant cars hitched on to the rear of the train, instead of as usual having the parlour car at the rear, and he told me that he was obliged to put these immigrants at the rear of the train because they emitted so offensive an odour, that the people in the other cars could not endure it. That is the kind of immigrants they are bringing into Canada. I grant that the hon. gentleman is trying to do his best, but I must say, that in my opinion the Galicians and Doukhobors belong to a class of people that we should not spend any money in attracting to our country. Now, a word about the exodus. I have often heard hon. gentlemen opposite say that the exodus has discontinued. That is a mistake. The emigration of our people to the United States is just as great now as it was five or ten years ago. I do not blame the government for it. I am only mentioning the fact that no change has taken place in that respect. People emigrate just as they used to do, as some of my hon. friends from Quebec counties can testify. They go away to work in the States, some of them come back in the fall, and some do not. Now, Sir, we are voting such an immense sum of money this year, nearly half a million dollars, that even the hon. member for North Wellington is uneasy, and advises the government to use strict economy. For these reasons I shall support the amendment of the hon. member for Lennox.

Mr. PUTTEE. I understood the minister to say that he did not expect there would be any more appointments to the immigration staff, that the amount of money now asked for would be about the limit. I am glad the limit is about reached, and I hope the expenditure will not go any further. It is something to know that a half million a year will not be exceeded, and that the army of able-bodied pensioners are now in full strength. We are really spending a large sum of money, for which we get no adequate return. I believe that it is the general feeling throughout the country that neither in the matter of quantity or quality of the immigrants are we getting proper returns. While I do not wish to

to speak disparagingly of any race of men, at the same time, I must say that there are some people we prefer to others as neighbours, who are more desirable settlers and who will make more desirable citizens. It is well understood that the people of Great Britain and Ireland, and the northern countries of Europe make the best settlers, and those are the countries from which immigrants are expected in lesser numbers each year. The Deputy Minister of the Interior says that he does not expect much more immigration from the United Kingdom. As respects continental immigration, he says:

As to this class of immigration, it is undoubtedly true that the Germans and Swedes are among the best settlers who have located in the United States or Canada. But the laws enforced in those countries with regard to emigration are such as to preclude our making any direct effort to secure settlers from Germany and Sweden. This also applies to other countries. German emigration has greatly fallen off within a few years, and the same may be said of Swedish emigration. That is probably due to the fact that emigration has been discouraged by the respective governments of those countries. It will be necessary for the department, therefore, to direct its efforts to other countries where less restrictive measures are in force.

I think this is an unfavourable time to increase our immigration expenditure, when we have it on the authority of our blue-books that the very countries where we used to get good immigrants, are the countries where the volume of immigration is decreasing; because that means that the increased expenditure will be spread over other countries where we cannot get desirable immigrants. The deputy minister refers in his report to two sects of Southern Russia, as being likely to come over in considerable numbers. I think we now have a right to expect that immigration should be carried on without government assistance to the extent of the immediate past. It can be expected that from some of the districts in southern Europe there will be a steady stream to join those already here, without the government spending any more money for that purpose. I am sure we can depend on getting a sufficient number of undesirable immigrants, without going to the expense to obtain them. I do not think it is just to the people that are already settled in the North-west to place colonies of these Europeans around them to a greater extent than can be assimilated. I believe that at present, as in the past, immigration to this country is chiefly in the interests of the transportation companies and the land speculators. These parties have a direct interest in stimulating immigration. But in the interest of the people who are already settled in this country, I think the government should go slow in spending money for bringing in people from foreign countries.

I believe that a man who wants so much inducing to come is not the best man. Men who come to our country, who are going to make valuable citizens, are men who are more likely to come of their own volition. Then, there is also a political aspect to this affair, and it is a serious one. Where these various nationalities are being placed in colonies together, knowing the history of party politics in this country, we may expect to see all kinds of plans being made and tricks and schemes employed for securing their votes for one or other of the parties. To show how far this fad of immigration has gone—and it is now a fad—I might draw the attention of the committee to the report of Prof. Mavor in the blue-book. Prof. Mavor has evidently wandered all over Europe touching every little country and every little sect, all of which are reported upon fully. It is very interesting to any person who wishes to make a study of the various races which inhabit Europe, but why it is put in this blue-book I do not know. There is a paragraph on page 228 that I do not think would have been allowed in a blue-book if it had been observed. In speaking of the attitude of the United States towards the immigration question, he says :

The actual exclusion of the European so-called pauper immigrant has, however, been carried only to an insignificant extent, probably owing to the immense power in politics of the capitalistic interests, for it is clear that the 'generous welcome' implies among other immediate results increased competition for employment; and therefore apparently, and perhaps really, for the time being, the keeping down of wages.

Now, I am not going into that any further. Everybody knows that that is what it means. But, it always strikes me that we are a long suffering people, especially in some of our cities where we see the effect of these things, and where the people say so little in protest against them. We have our tariff policy, our customs tariff that increases the price of everything a man buys, that helps the manufacturer to sell all his goods dearer, and at the same time we not only do not extend this protection to labour, we not only allow labour to come in free, but we actually bonus it. That is a complaint which is a well grounded one, and it is one which should be done away with. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a bad time to increase the immigration expenditure. I am not finding fault specifically, because there has been great activity in immigration matters. Previous to the last general elections both parties tried to outdo each other in their promises as to what should be done to promote immigration. I believe we have seen this matter of immigration carried far enough. I believe that the North-west Territories can be left alone to a considerable extent, and that we should look more to the government of the country. It does look like an absurd proposition to spend half a million dollars to bring people into the country knowing, as we do, that in the past, and probably in the future, we have retarded settlement by railway land grants and exemptions. I will support the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, the committee will remember that the hon. Minister of the Interior is now asking for pretty nearly half a million of dollars for immigration. We have an experience, not of any new policy, as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) would have given the committee to understand, but it is simply a repetition of the old policy, whether good or bad. I am not stating my own opinion now, but I am stating the evidence that was given more than once, so that there is no mistake about it, that the policy of the present government, whether good or bad, is the policy practically of the preceding government. I am not going into a comparison between what has been accomplished by the respective governments. It is possible that it may be found that neither was as successful as one would wish, but it must be remembered that a very large increase is now being asked for, and if hon. gentlemen are to be judged at all as to what the future will be they must be judged fairly on what the record of the past has been. I am going to be very brief, but I must refer to some of the answers which the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) gave to my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson), who made what seemed to me a very useful, a very thoughtful and a very important speech on the subject to-night. One thing that the hon. gentleman complained of, and justly complained of, was, speaking in regard to some of the agents in Europe, that Mr. Jury's whole life was the opposite of the course he is taking now, and he pointed out that no man could turn around in his opinions so quickly and become a useful man. He quoted his report, and one thing in his report, that must be circulated in Europe, was, that he would not advise tenant farmers to come to this country because they would be worse off than if they remained in the old country, and also because their condition now in the old country was such that we could not expect them to come. That was rather throwing cold water on the whole thing, and the hon. Minister of the Interior might as well have recalled Mr. Jury. The hon. gentleman said in answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson): I am not able to say what all the deliverances of Mr. Jury were or how many speeches he made in Canada, but I know that he is doing very good work. If the hon. gentleman thinks that is a good answer he is not doing himself justice. The hon. gentleman is never wanting in argument when there is any answer to be made. He is not wanting in skill, in putting it in the best light, and therefore, we must conclude that he has no argument in regard to Mr. Jury, and that he thought he had better leave the complaint unanswered. In regard to what the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) has said, I think it is entirely too late to discuss the question of adding to the numbers of the people in this country. I believe we are all agreed that we should have this country filled up as rapidly as we can, but the number of the population of Canada no more determines the progress of Canada, as a single element stands out by itself, than it proves that a family of thirteen is infinitely better than a family of six. Neither would determine anything.

The immigration policy of the present government has been extremely unfortunate, and has been, in my opinion, detrimental to the best interests of our country. The government and their supporters may say what they like about this, but any defence they may make is utterly futile among the people who know them best. I believe, for my part, that if this immigration policy had not been entered upon, no man in his senses would attempt to inaugurate it in the light of our experience to-day. I ask the Minister of the Interior a question, and the answer to it may tend to shorten this discussion. Is it the policy of the Department of the Interior to encourage in the future as largely as in the past, the immigration of Galicians and Doukhobors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
No.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) says, No, and I am glad to hear that declaration from the government. The hon. gentleman sees now that his policy was a mistake. I can understand there being an anxiety to increase our population, but there never was a greater mistake committed than the importation of so many of these undesirable settlers. The Minister of the Interior has made an open confession, and it is a good thing for Canada that he has announced, on the part of the government, that their policy is not to repeat the mistakes of the past. When hon. gentlemen opposite go upon the stump they will, no doubt, claim credit to the government for increasing the immigration. But, let us analyse the results of their policy for a moment and see where they stand. I will not give my own word, because that unsupported might be worth little, but I will quote from the records. It appears that the government claim that last year there were 44,543 immigrants. They are called 'declared' settlers, and that is quite a diplomatic word to use. Now, that claim of the government is not borne out by the records and that being so, it may be set aside as thoroughly worthless. There are said to be 6,889 homesteads entered upon during the last year. It is an unjustifiable assumption that all these homesteads were entered by immigrants brought into the country, because no one will deny that many of these homesteads were taken by farmers already in the country for their sons. Of these homesteads, 2,134 were of persons from the other provinces, 720 by persons who had made previous locations. If you deduct these that would leave only 3,832 homesteads that can be assumed, with any reason whatever, as being located by immigrants. Taking the basis of three and one-fifth to each family, that would give you 12,272 people as being found upon homesteads. Let us see how we are going to account for these 44,000. There are 12,272 found to be located, 7,350 Doukhobors came in in addition. There were children brought in from the Barnardo home, and other homes of a similar character, to the number of about 1,100, who are entered as 'declared' settlers. I would ask the Minister of the Interior, if it is fair to enter up as declared settlers the little children that are brought in by these societies? Does that not make the report misleading to a certain extent. 906 persons are reported to have settled in the Lake St. John district, 973 are reported to have come in under the repatriation society, 227 in the Rainy River district, and 280 brought in by Mr. T. O. Curry. That leaves 23,000 in round numbers accounted for, including the little children and the Doukhobors and the Galicians and others, so that we have 21,434 that are not accounted for at all.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) allow me to ask him if he is not aware that a very large proportion of the immigrants from the United States do not take up homesteads at all? They come into the older settled portions of Manitoba, and they buy railway lands or lands from private owners. In the neighbourhood where I live there are no homesteads available at all, and we have an enormous settlement of these people who came in there and bought lands and settled upon them.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Rutherford) gives that as his opinion, but he cannot expect to have that opinion carry any weight simply because he lives in that country. The immigration department is supposed to account for the persons who arrive at Winnipeg, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rutherford) is entirely wrong, because the army of agents who are there to receive the settlers, and make account of them, take no notice of these persons, under the circumstances, the hon. gentleman speaks of.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. They are all declared settlers; they are brought in by the immigration agents.

Mr. CLANCY. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, does not wish to make a mistake, but it is impossible for these people to come in without our getting a record of almost every one of them, as they come in by well-known routes.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman has read the reports of his own department, he knows that it is alleged there that fully 5,000 have come in by other means, and that there is no account of them at all. If the hon. gentleman's statement is true, that of his agents is at fault. I say you cannot account for every person who has come in; but to say that there are 21,000, or one-half the alleged number who have come into the country, who cannot be found, is perfectly ridiculous. It proves, if one is to draw any reasonable conclusion, that they are not there at all. We are asked for nearly half a million dollars to bring into the country exclusively agricultural classes. Now, let us see what has been accomplished during the past year. Quoting from the reports of the agents at St. John, at Halifax, at Quebec, and at Montreal, I find that the persons brought from Europe, including farmers and farm labourers, and including every boy of twelve years of age and upwards as an adult, out of the 44,000 odd settlers declared in the hon. gentleman's report to have come in, only numbered 6,889. I am referring to the male population. I would like the hon. gentleman to give some explanation to the House and the country of this great discrepancy. If that statement has any element of truth in it, it discloses a most lamentable state of affairs. It means that the policy of the government has been a dismal failure. I am sure that the hon. gentleman will not admit that it has been a success. If these figures are correct, there is something radically wrong. When we sum up the whole thing, we find that of the 44,000 persons alleged to have been brought into the country, 14,000 or 15,000 were Doukhobors and Galicians—that one-third of the whole number have been of a very undesirable class as farmers. Let me read what the hon. gentleman's own agent at Alameda in the North-west Territories, J. S. Crear, says of the Doukhobors:

These people have now good buildings in their villages. They are very handy with axes and other tools. They are all mechanics of some kind—carpenters, blacksmiths, wagon-makers, tanners, shoemakers, harness-makers, &c.

These are the persons who are brought into the country as professed agriculturists.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. So they are.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman might as well go down Sparks Street and say the watchmakers are. Here is the opinion of an agent who was not discreet enough to withhold that from his report. If he had had the proper training from his minister, he would not have put it into his report.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. If the hon. gentleman will permit me a moment, I know those people. They are exactly the same as a handy Canadian farmer. They do the work for themselves; they are handy with tools, but they are all farmers.

Mr. CLANCY. How does the hon. gentleman know that they were all farmers before they came here?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Because they had no means of earning a livelihood except by agriculture.

Mr. CLANCY. And yet they have each been able to learn a trade. It shows how ready and how worthless the hon. gentleman's opinions are. They are as worthless and current as brass coppers.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but that certainly is strong language to use. I had an opportunity of watching and conversing with those people for months, and I know the people I speak of, but the hon. gentleman knows nothing about the subject whatever.

Mr. CLANCY. I am speaking of what I find in the report of the Department of the Interior against that immense knowledge of the hon. gentleman derived from conversing with these people for months. It is simply on the ground of assurance that the hon. gentleman gets up and gives his experience as against the report of the department. I have no doubt that if you were to take all the shoe-makers, wagon-makers and tanners in Ottawa and put them up there on farms, they would be engaged in farming, but that proves nothing. It shows that the class of persons stated to have been brought in have not actually been brought in.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What page is the hon. gentleman quoting from?

Mr. CLANCY. Page 150, of Mr. Crear's report. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he can account for the small number of persons that are said to have been brought into this country—I mean the adult population, from twelve up, forming the mass of the population of the agricultural classes out of the 44,000—have settled on land?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may say at once that I quite agree that the hon. gentleman's criticism is a fair and moderate one, though I cannot always agree with his conclusions. His first point is the number of agricultural settlers compared with the number of immigrants. He figures out that there are only 6,700 odd agricultural settlers out of the 44,000 immigrants. I presume that the hon. gentleman gets at that by taking the number shown in the returns from the ocean ports. That would not be a fair way to get at the number. In the first place, there are 7,300 Doukhobors in the returns of last year. As the hon. member for Macdonald says, they are all agriculturists, although, of course, there are among them persons practising handicrafts of various kinds. The agent says that these people are very handy with the axe and other tools, and in various kinds of handicraft, and that in their physique they will compare, both men and women, with any British settlers. But these people have always been upon land and have no intention of doing anything else than settle upon land.

Mr. CLANCY. They are included in that 7,000 or nearly 8,000, classed as agriculturists by the agents?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They could not very well be included in that. There were 7,300 Doukhobors, and the hon. gentleman says that there were only 6,700 agriculturists, so that the 7,300 could not possibly be included in the 6,700. In addition to the 7,300 Doukhobors, there are 6,700 Galicians. These people have practically all gone upon land. I do not suppose that out of the 6,700, there are 100 who have not, in one way or another, gone upon land, either as actual settlers, or as agricultural labourers. Take the rest of the 44,000, there were in the neighbourhood of 12,000 who came from the United States. It is safe to say that they are practically all agriculturists, though I do not say that there was not here and there a man who was not, especially in the colony from the neighbourhood of Detroit. There were, no doubt, a few people who intended settling as mechanics, among those they knew, who came from that part of the country, but the great bulk of the 12,000 came as agriculturists, without any intention of being anything else. There were therefore, these 7,300 and 6,700, and the 12,000, who may be classed as agriculturists.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman surely will not take the ground against the reports of his own agents at St. John and Halifax, Quebec and Montreal, who kept the record and got their information by inquiry.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No doubt they inquired the occupation and business of these people just as they would in case of settlers from the mother country. I freely admit that this is the first time this has been called to my attention, and I have not been able to give my personal attention to it, but, besides the theoretical explanation which I am now giving, I will be able to give my hon. friend an actual explanation the next time this matter comes up. But my hon. friend must remember that a great many people have gone to the North-west and followed agriculture, who never followed that pursuit before; and whatever may be the special avocations of these people, when they left their native countries, they certainly came here with the intention of settling on lands, and the great majority of them have done so. My hon. friend asked me if it was the intention of the government to encourage the immigration of Doukhobors and Galicians to as great an extent in the future, and I answered at once, that it is not; but in making that statement, I am not in any degree expressing any regret for the policy of the government in the past in connection with these people. It does not follow that because we do not desire to bring in 7,300 Doukhobors this year, we regret having brought them last year.

In the same way, we had considerable Galician immigration. I think that the number of Galicians that have come in is not excessive. If I had my way at the present moment, I would not lessen the number of Galicians who have come into the country. I think we shall be able to assimilate them, in fact, I have not the least doubt of it. I shall not go into the question in great length, because I spoke for a couple of hours last session on the subject of the Galician and Doukhobor immigration, and said about all I had to say; and no purpose would be served by my repeating that now, after two o'clock in the morning. My own opinion, as I say, is that we have not too many of them; and, as I said last year, I do not see any objection to a moderate number of these people, the Galicians, coming here year by year. I would not encourage them to the same extent to which we encouraged them in the past, because then there would be a larger number coming than it would be easy for us to handle. These people, not knowing our language and customs and not having any large means cannot well take care of themselves at the first and are apt to cause a good deal of work for the officers of the department.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. minister think it desirable to bring in any class of people who are unable to take care of themselves. I ask that in view of the statement he makes that they may easily come in in such numbers that the department cannot handle them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is quite correct in saying that they cannot take care of themselves at first. Being strangers, not speaking our language, not being accustomed to our ways, they are not able to take care of themselves in the same way that people from the western states are able to take care of themselves, and they need a great care and attention on the part of the officers of the government in the first year, and they require sometimes some assistance, too. But if the hon. gentleman will look into this matter attentively he will find that they are good people, that they are getting along all right, and will be substantial settlers. If the hon. gentleman will go back in memory to the coming of the Mennonite settlers, he will see that the same thing happened that has happened in the case of Galicians. When the Mennonites came in, the government of that day was blamed for bringing to Canada the scum of the earth. They were attacked with violence, even greater violence than has characterized the attacks upon this government in connection with the Galicians or Doukhobors. There have been some excessive attacks made upon me in this connection, as, for instance, where I was held responsible for the murder said to be committed by Galicians. But, apart from erratic remarks of that kind, the criticisms in the present case has been moderate enough. There was much more violent criticisms against those who brought in the Mennonites. I need not enlarge upon the point, but the hon. member (Mr. Clancy) and the House know that the Mennonite settlement has been most successful. Their habits, when they first came, were not all that we could desire. A Canadian going through the Mennonite settlement twenty or twenty-five years ago, as I did when a boy, would see many things that would not be very pleasant for him to see. But, to-day these people are a prosperous, substantial people.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. minister say that at any stage the condition of the Mennonites was precisely the same as that of the Galicians or Doukhobors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I venture the statement that the Galician people on the average, are in much better condition than the Mennonites were after having been a similar length of time in Canada. I have no doubt that any one familiar with the circumstances will say that. I may say, in addition to that, that while we differ politically, I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) will at least do me the honour to treat me as I do him—that is, listen to what I say and take the trouble to ascertain whether it is correct or not. I say, and the hon. gentleman will find it to be true, that these people are desirous of assimilating with us and becoming Canadians; they desire that the habits which attached to them in the land from which they come should be set aside and that they should become Canadians. And they manifest great facility in acquiring the language and habits of the Canadian people. I cannot say so much, in this respect, for the Doukhobors. They are somewhat like the Mennonites. They are inclined to remain together and become somewhat repellant in their ideas and habits. Assimilation, in their case, will be somewhat more difficult than in the case of the Galician. However, I am satisfied with what we have done; I would not undo it, though I am aware that is has subjected the government to some criticism by hon. gentlemen opposite which may produce more or less effect. I do not know that there is very much that can be said in connection with that subject further, except that I may make a slight reference to what my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) said. I am sure he could not have thought very carefully of what he was going to say when he made the statement that the Doukhobors and Galicians were a class of the people from whom the criminal class was largely recruited. I make the statement without fear of contradiction that the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in his facts. Of course, the debate springing up without either party having the records to prove their contentions, it cannot amount to more than the expression of the hon. gentleman's opinion on one side and the expression of my opinion on the other side. But, I make the statement, as head of the department and with the full sense of the responsibility, that I am satisfied the hon. gentleman cannot show that there has been a large proportion of either Doukhobors or Galicians who have come under the ban of the criminal law than of any other class of the population. On the contrary, I venture to say that, in proportion to their numbers the Doukhobors have been brought less in contact with the criminal law than any other separate nationality in Canada—certainly than any other nationality in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I am not saying that by way of reflection on any others, but it has been remarked there that these people are especially law abiding people who are not brought into contact with the criminal law in the sense the hon. gentleman speaks of. The Galician people I would not say so much for. It is true that there have been a number of cases in which the Galicians have been prosecuted for criminal offences. There were, unfortunately one or two cases of murder, one of them of a particularly atrocious character. But atrocious murders are committed even by Canadians sometimes, we are sorry to say. There is nothing to indicate that the Galician people are a criminal class or that they have criminal tendencies in an especial degree. The criminal offences committed by them, I think, were almost entirely petty thefts, and the number of cases arising was not so great as to indicate that they were more inclined to take offence than any other class of the population.

My hon. friend has criticised at considerable length the actions of Mr. Jury. Now, of course, I appreciate the act that when a gentleman who has been actively engaged in political matters and has made, perhaps, more or less enemies amongst my friends of the other side is appointed to office, it is only human to expect that they would address considerable criticism against him. Therefore, Mr. Jury and Mr. Preston and some other gentlemen somewhat in the same category must expect to get rather more than their share of criticism. However, I am sure that in their calmer moments hon. gentlemen will admit that these are men of fairly good ability and quite competent for the work they are called upon to do. Mr. Jury is a man, so far as I have learned, of much more than ordinary capacity. I think that every one who is acquainted with his character will say the same. Mr. Jury has been working hard, and I think it would not be fair to him to let this criticism pass without saying that he has earned the salary that is paid to him, that he has worked faithfully to do what he was sent to do, and I think he is doing it with a reasonable amount of success.

I wish to say a word too, about the general question of the expenditure. I am not surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) calls a halt; that he makes the statement calling the attention of the committee to the amount of the vote asked for this year. The amount is unquestionably large, but I am perfectly satisfied that the work in which we are engaged cannot be carried on for a smaller amount. That being said, we come to the question as to whether the work is worth the money. Upon that point I have myself no doubt whatever. There are no doubt hon. gentlemen who honestly hold the view of the member for East Grey, that we might just as well drop this expenditure and take our chances in regard to getting increased population. For my part I take the directly opposite view. I think that if we can get an accession of 40,000 or 50,000 to the population of Canada year after year for the expenditure which we are called upon to make, which would average about $10 per head, it would prove a great benefit and amply repay the outlay. I think the increased production of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and the effect that it will have upon the general prosperity of Canada, especially upon the manufacturing towns of eastern Canada, will be well worth the money. For my part, while I am prepared to admit that the subject is a debateable one, I am strongly of the opinion that the policy the government is pursuing is a correct one.

Mr. PUTTEE. I wish to say that when these immigrants are in our country we should see that they are protected and that they should be fairly treated, and we should treat them fairly ourselves. I think that is a matter the Minister of the Interior should attend to. Sometimes the railway companies employ large bodies of these men on their lines, and there was an arrangement by which they employed them through agents and deducted $2 a piece from each man for the agent's fee. The commissioner of immigration in Winnipeg undertook to supply these companies with men when they wanted them, of course without fees, with the intention of saving to the men the $2 fee. But I understand that recently there has been an arrangement made by which, although the commissioner supplies men straight to the companies, the agents still take $2 off the wages of these men for their fees. I think that is a matter that ought to be looked into and remedied at once.

Amendment (Mr. Wilson) negatived, and resolution adopted.

Women's Protective Immigration Society,
Montreal ..... $1,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This society was organized for the purpose of caring for female immigrants arriving in Montreal. A report is made annually to the department of the operations of the society, which is embodied in the departmental report. The report of the society for 1898 shows that 164 immigrants passed through the home during that year. Those who arrived at the home are kept there until such times as places can be procured for them.

Girls' Home of Welcome, Winnipeg..... $1,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This home in Winnipeg is under the management of an English lady named Miss Fowler, a philanthropic person of considerable means. She undertakes this work purely from love of it, and I was strongly pressed for the last three years to increase the assistance from $500, which we formerly have been giving to $1,000. We are giving $500 extra, which of course, is only a small portion of the amount that is spent in connection with the institution by this lady herself.

Contingencies in Canadian, British and foreign agencies and general immigration expenses, including salaries of extra clerks at head office..... $283,000

Mr. WILSON. I am sorry the minister did not see fit to meet us part way. I feel we are spending altogether too much money on this immigration business, and I move that this item be cut down by $83,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister explain to us what is the reason of the $24,000 increase in this vote over last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is difficult to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) an exact statement of where the increases come in because of the way in which the estimate is made up. We have estimated for the total expenditure. I can, however, give the hon. gentleman some items which will give the hon. gentleman an idea of the increases, although they do not show the exact amount. We have an item this year of $11,000 for postage, which we did not have last year. We did not pay postage last year because under an arrangement with the Postmaster General, all kinds of immigration literature were franked by the Post Office Department; but the Auditor General and the Minister of Justice decided that it was not lawful for the Postmaster General to frank immigration literature and now we have to pay the postage. Then, there is $52,000 for continental bonuses, as against $12,000 last year. That is a difference of $51,000. The total difference, as hon. gentlemen will see, is $24,000. That will show the increases in the two items which I have mentioned. There are other items running all through the estimates, in some of which there are decreases, and I could give the hon. gentleman a statement in detail, but it would not add greatly to his information.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that the hon. gentleman has included in his estimates a vote for extra clerks at the head office. How many extra clerks does he propose to employ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is $3,000 allowed for extra clerks, and it is allowed because, particularly, during the summer, and until December, the work at the head office is increasing. We hire clerks under the Civil Service Act, and pay them $400 a year.

Amendment (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

Mr. CLANCY. I wish to say to the hon. Minister of the Interior that it seems to me to be a great anomaly that we should have a calendar year for the departmental report, while the accounts are running for the fiscal. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should consider the advisability of having some conformity. Of course, there will be six months of accounts appearing at one time. That must happen if a change is made, but I am sure he recognizes the advisability of having the reports running for the fiscal year to be at all intelligible, and for the purpose of making comparisons from anything like an intelligible point of view as between two years.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman must see the difficulty there would be in adopting his suggestion. Supposing I wanted to make a report showing the operations of the department for the fiscal year; it would be absolutely impossible to tell what the real scope of the operations of the year were, because the fiscal year ends in the middle of the work. Of course, if the House insists upon it, we would have to make a report covering the fiscal year. I do not know that my hon. friend is not within his rights in saying that it should be done. I am quite prepared to consider what he says is desirable should be done.

Mr. CLANCY. I admit the difficulty that the hon. gentleman points out, but there is a difficulty both ways. It seems to me that it would be less by having the report made up in the way that I suggest. The report would always have to be six months behind, as there would be six months that you could not cover. We have passed this last fiscal year without having looked into account, and, of course, that will always happen. I think if the change were made it would, perhaps, serve a better purpose than the system which prevails at the present time.

Mr. SPROULE. Looking over the report, it seems to me that it would be very difficult to divide the accounts for the year, and there might be a very good reason for having the accounts as they are. I would like to say a word in reference to what the hon. Minister of the Interior said in regard to some of the agents he has in Europe. He said that some severe criticism had been directed against Mr. Preston and Mr. Jury. Knowing Mr. Jury very well, I made no unfavourable comment upon him, but I think we might be pardoned for criticising the conduct of Mr. Preston rather adversely. Most of the officers of the hon. gentleman's department, notably Mr. Pedley and Mr. Smart, did everything that men could do, and were desirous in every way to give information that the committee desired to have, but there was one notable exception, and it was Mr. Preston. I think his conduct justly merited any criticism that we directed against him to-night.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) knows that I was not here, but I am satisfied he will do me the justice of saying, that if I had been informed that any officer of my department had not treated the members of the committee with proper respect, I would have endeavoured to see that he did so.

General immigration expenses ..... $75,000

Mr. DAVIN. We cannot take any more to-night.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have been discussing the whole immigration question, and really the whole field has been covered.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows well that we did not cover very much of the question to-night. There were absolutely no details asked for. If it had not been so late, I should have inquired about the Winnipeg office and many other places.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let us go on.

Mr. DAVIN. We have passed four large items without the least criticism, and the hon. gentleman knows very well that ordinarily these items would be canvassed, and we would have asked more details. We cannot go further to-night.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not want to be unreasonable, but we have discussed this item as an item of $445,000 all night and we have also included the item of $50,000. Every hon. gentleman who has spoken has done that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) will have plenty of opportunity of discussing the immigration policy on going into supply. The Finance Minister wants to get these main estimates passed.

Mr. DAVIN. We have gone through the main estimates and there is only an item in the supplementaries. We cannot go any further to-night.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All right.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will the Finance Minister take up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe that Private Bills not dealt with will be the first order in the morning. Then we will probably take up the Post Office Bill and later in the day either the railway subsidies or supply.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Both.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly, both, if time permits.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.35 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 10, 1900.

PRAYERS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

ADDITIONAL SESSIONAL INDEMNITY.

Mr. G. E. CASEY (West Elgin). Before we proceed to the Orders of the Day, I have to call attention to a most gratuitous and uncalled-for insult directed against one of the leading nationalities of this country by the Conservative organ in Hamilton. The Spectator of Saturday last has the following:

Mr. DAVIN.

The French members of parliament are demanding additional sessional indemnity, and have gone on strike to compel Laurier to open the public treasury to their greedy grasp. The round robin was signed by Frenchmen only, the British members knowing that their constituents would not approve, and Sir Wilfrid, taking his cue from this fact, determined to do the right thing for once in his life. He is now trying to pacify the strikers by asking them to dine with him; but the cash patriots of Quebec insist upon 'ze mon.' It is not improbable that Sir Wilfrid will come down.

It follows up this gross insult by one or two similar ones. For instance, 'The Frenchmen in the House of Commons are a-round robin again.' The pun is very easily understood.

Will Sir Wilfrid's English head refuse, or his French heart agree to pay the increase of wages demanded by the striking French members?

In the first place, as an English-speaking member from the province of Ontario, I wish to protest against this gratuitous insult.

Mr. GIBSON. What paper?

Mr. CASEY. The Spectator.

Mr. GIBSON. You cannot expect anything better from it.

Mr. CASEY. We ought to expect something better than a purely gratuitous lie.

Hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. It is absolutely false to say that the demand came only from the French members of the House and the Liberal party. We all know that it came from a very large percentage of members on both sides, both English and French. The English members signed it, members from all over the Dominion signed it, and for my part I am not ashamed to say that I signed it myself.

Hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. At the same time I quite understand why it might be a bad precedent to take such a step at the fag end of the session, when a lot of the members have gone home. I am ready to defend the assertion any where you please that $1,000 is quite insufficient indemnity for a five or six months' session, and that it should be permanently increased if the sessions are to be as long as they appear likely to be. But that is by the way. My main object in rising was to resent this insult to the French nationality, and to resent it, as an Ontario man, who cannot help feeling disgusted and expressing his disgust that any journal in this province should have descended so low.

Hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad that my hon. friends opposite feel the same as I do on the subject.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I am very glad that my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) has brought this matter to the attention of the House, because I intended to do it myself if he had not. I was prepared to call attention to it when he rose. It is most unfortunate that any newspaper, especially in Ontario, should refer in this way to French members of the House, and especially is it unfortunate in a matter of this kind, when the facts are not stated, but absolutely misstated, and a false impression cast abroad in the country.

I agree with what the right hon. the Prime Minister said the other day about trying to weld the different parts of this country together, and I believe we are pretty well welded together, but there is no doubt that statements like this tend to excite feeling in the minds of the people of Ontario, who do not know the facts, against not only the French members of this House, but the French Canadians generally. I am very glad to be able to corroborate everything said by the previous speaker about the signing of this round robin. He says that he signed it, and is not ashamed of it, and I repeat that statement with regard to myself. I say this to defend the French members of this House from the aspersion cast on them by the Spectator and to repudiate the statements made by that paper. I have no doubt that this statement was made under a misconception of the facts. I would not like to think that the Spectator would make such a statement, knowing the facts to be the reverse. ♦

An hon. MEMBER. You do not know the Spectator.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not, but still I think hardly any newspaper would do that. It is very unfortunate that newspapers think it their duty, when any matter of this kind is mentioned about members of the House of Commons, to write in a strain reflecting on the members, and, in fact, giving the impression to the people that we are down here working absolutely for ourselves and not in the interest of the country at all. I can say strongly for every member of this House, as far as I know, and speaking for myself, that that is not the case at all. I hold that there is not a man in this House who does not come here at an absolute loss to himself. Even if the indemnity were increased, that fact would still remain the same. I cannot imagine any man who is not in business of some kind, for the most of us have to be in business in order to support our families, and no one in business can come here and spend four or five months here every year without suffering loss. It is very unfortunate that the newspapers should feel called on to cast aspersions and slurs on the members of this House when they endeavour to do what they think is justice to themselves and those who depend on them. With reference to this increase of indemnity, there are two precedents, though I am not particularly wedded to precedents, and if I think a thing is right, am willing to support it without looking back to see if somebody else has done the same thing some time previous. I prefer to judge by the conditions existing. In 1885 we had an increase of $500 of indemnity. That was given because the session was a long one, lasting six months. The Franchise Bill had been under consideration, and the members of the Liberal party thought it their duty to vigorously oppose the Bill, and even obstruct it, in every possible way, and on that account the session was prolonged. At the fag end of the session, the government brought in estimates to give the members an additional $500, because they had been so long in session. There was very little objection to it, but some recrimination as to who caused the length of the session. I might perhaps discuss the reason for the length of this session, but do not intend to do so. I know that there are hon. members opposite who have said that the session has been prolonged by the opposition, but it cannot be proved by Hansard that the opposition have done anything to unduly prolong it. We have discussed the different measures that have come before the House, it is for that purpose we have been sent here. If the opposition did not discuss all the measures that come before the House, the country would condemn them for their want of diligence. In fact, the only power the opposition has is to discuss measures and expose them to the country. As has been truly said by a newspaper some time ago, the opposition are really the attorneys of the people. It is their duty to expose the measures that the government bring forward, and show their weak points.

Just imagine, if the opposition did not discuss the questions, what would happen. I maintain that the opposition—and I speak not of this opposition alone, but of any opposition—saves the country millions of dollars every year. For, I do not care what party is in power, there is such pressure brought to bear upon that party by their supporters outside that, were it not for the fear of criticism, they would not resist. The opposition here have not done more than their duty. On the other hand, it might be argued, and it might be said by some that the government have prolonged the session, that their estimates have been late in coming down, and their railway subsidies also were late. But what I contend is that neither side has the right to accuse the other of prolonging the session. I go further and say that, from my observation, I am led to believe that the sessions hereafter will not be less than four months except under special circumstances, and they will probably last between four and five months. Why? Because new countries have developed—the North-west, British Columbia, the Yukon, and so on. These new countries take time. If we look through Hansard we shall find that most of the time this session has been taken up in discussing the interest of these new countries. It may be said that parliament could do better if it were smaller. But we have to deal with things as they are. It must not be forgotten also that private legislation occupies a great deal of time, and it is increasing. The country does not suppose that we are going to pass everything without criticism. We are here to criticise fairly and to decide with mature judgment on the matters that come before us. Passing from 1885, when the precedent was made for the granting of an increase, I come to 1891. In that year, the House sat for five months. At that time a measure was brought down to give an increase of $500 to the members of the House by the government, and I notice that the resolution was supported by the leader of the present government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I want to read a few words of what he said, because I agree with it all. I might read every word of his speech, for it is all good, but I will be brief. The present Premier said :

I am prepared to approve and endorse every word which has been spoken on this occasion by the hon. Minister of Finance. The necessity of the measure which has just been introduced does not require to be defended on the floor of this House ; for the public at large will realize, I am sure, that all the members of this House, with perhaps not more than four or five exceptions, are men who have to depend on their labour for their living—men who are not capitalists, and who have no income but what their daily labour gives them. Under such circumstances, it is absolutely impossible for men to continue to discharge the duties which devolve upon them as members of parliament if the sessions are to last, as this one has lasted, five months in the year.

The present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said :

There is no doubt, Sir, I think, that the statements made by the hon. Minister of Finance and by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, will be most fully appreciated on both sides of this House. Whether they will be equally appreciated outside, I am not quite so sure.

I wish to remark that, so far as I heard, not a word was said against this increase of indemnity to members. I never heard the slightest objection to it ; in fact, I know that people in the country thought we were quite justified in voting it and accepting it, and I believe that to-day the same feeling prevails. It is possible for a newspaper to stir up some feeling on this as on any other subject ; but when the people are left to themselves, now that sessions are—through the fault of nobody—prolonged to about five months, there will be no objection to an increase in the indemnity. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) went on :

But under the circumstances I, for one, am perfectly prepared to share the responsibility and to justify the action of the government. There is no doubt whatever, as my hon. friend has stated, that from the first day of February last up to the present first day of October, the vast proportion of the members of this House, who are dependent upon their professional exertions for their maintenance, have suffered very great loss.

The present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) made some opposition, not to the principle itself, but rather to the way it was introduced. He said :

I would say that it would be more becoming, in my judgment, for the future, if it is not deemed wise to adopt the suggestion at present, that there should be legislation on the statute-book providing for exceptional sessions such as this, so that all will know in advance how exceptional sessions should be dealt with. Such legislation should not be the work of those who are going to benefit or suffer by it, but be applicable to succeeding parliaments alone. If this resolution be adopted, I trust that the administration will, before another session rolls by, introduce a measure that can be discussed by those who are not to be affected by it—a measure applicable only to succeeding parliaments.

That is all right, but it was not acted upon then, and this government have not acted upon it. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) advocated that some statute should be passed. Why has he not introduced—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not advocate that. I said that if—

An hon. MEMBER. Careful.

Mr. CRAIG. The hon. gentleman said it would be more becoming, certainly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not referred to my remarks since, but my impression is that when the proposal came before the House I said that as an alternative it would be more fitting, instead of the parliament of the day voting money into their own pockets, if they dealt with the subject at all they should deal with it in the form of legislation making it applicable to future parliaments. I did not express myself in favour of the proposition.

Mr. CRAIG. The Postmaster General objects to my saying that he advocated it—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not express an opinion.

Mr. CRAIG. I did not mean to say that the hon. gentleman expressed an opinion. He said that instead of voting the additional indemnity for that session a Bill should be passed. But we cannot suppose for a moment that the Postmaster General would say that members should sit here for six months for $1,000. I cannot imagine him believing that; and I do not think anybody in the country believes it. If sessions are to be permanently lengthened longer than they were, as I believe to be the case, and the indemnity is to remain at $1,000, you could not get men to come here, except men who are in politics exclusively or men who are independently wealthy—or as a member near me has suggested, men who are coming here to make money out of politics, and I do not think there are many of that kind here. I wish also to read some few remarks of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). He took some exception to the proposal. He thought there ought to be a definite understanding as to the allowance to members of parliament and thus avoid calling upon members from time to time to vote money into their own pockets. He said:

It is certainly a great hardship that we should have to remain in Ottawa for five months during the hot season of the year; and I am quite sure, if the experience of others had been like mine, that $1,000 would hardly pay their incidental expenses in this city.

Now, I have something stronger to read than anything I have read yet. It is from the present hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Mills), who was then a member of this House. I am going to presume on the patience of the House to recall a little more fully from Mr. Mill's speech than I did with the others, because I agree with everything he says, and because the hon. gentleman took strong ground on this question which, I believe, will commend itself to every elector:

I was not in when this motion was proposed, and I feel it is necessary that I should make a few observations with regard to it. I believe the proposition is a reasonable one, one that is in the public interest, and I have no disposition to apologize in any way for supporting what I believe to be proper. I feel that I ought not to undertake to represent a constituency if I am not as ready to defend what I believe to be the rights of myself and my fellow-members as I am to defend the rights of the people.

It was well said by Mr. Burke, many years ago, that no system of government which was undertaken to be established upon the heroic virtues could ever end in any other way than that of corruption. I think that is a sound political maxim, and it is the more necessary in a country like this, where you have not sitting in parliament men of great fortune, but men like the rest of the community, who are obliged to pursue some useful avocation in order to obtain for themselves and their families the necessary means of subsistence. That being the case, it is right and proper that a reasonable indemnity shall be allowed to the members while they are here, and we have always before us the fact that we are responsible to the people for what we do. The question is as to what is a reasonable indemnity for the services we are performing, or rather for the loss we individually sustain through our devotion to these public duties.

Then the hon. gentleman goes on to say:

I think $1,000 is a reasonable indemnity for an ordinary session.

Meaning at that time a three months' session.

I think the indemnity ought never to be fixed at a sum that would invite candidates to run for parliament for the sake of the indemnity which is offered. That is one thing to be guarded against, and in order to guard against that, members who have business of their own to discharge must always undertake the duties at a considerable loss to themselves; but whatever expense they are put to, whether during the session or during the period when parliament is not in session, which is a necessary outcome of their position as members of parliament, is an expense that the members are called upon to bear from the amount of indemnity which is granted. We might sit here for three months. It is possible for the government to keep back important measures that they might think unpopular measures, and then rush them through when every member is anxious to get away. Under the ordinary system of indemnity, without any provision for its being supplemented, the longer a member is here the worse he is off, the greater the loss he sustains, as well as the loss he sustains by being away from his own residence. It is always in the public interest that, when important measures are under consideration, or important subjects are being investigated, parliament should remain in session, and the duties that devolve upon it should be carefully and efficiently discharged. In order that that may be done, if you require members to sit beyond the ordinary period of a session they ought to be protected against loss in consequence of remaining, and you can only do that by giving them a per diem or some other allowance in addition to what they receive for the ordinary period of three months.

Members will see that Mr. Mills at that time advocated keeping the indemnity at $1,000 for three months, and if the session lasted longer, giving something additional.

My own opinion is in favour of a per diem allowance after ninety days have expired, a very moderate allowance, an allowance that would be no temptation to the man in the most straitened circumstances to remain longer than necessary. If you were here ten days you would get something. If you were here twenty days you would get something more. If you vote a lump sum for a period of two months, such as we have spent here beyond the time of the ordinary session, you have no rule laid down for anything less than two months; but if you had a per diem allowance for anything over the ninety days, no matter how small it might be, you would still have something. Last year we sat for over four months, and there was no additional indemnity. I do not think that was fair to the House, and I think it is always easier for the public at large to bear the additional loss that arises in consequence of a protracted session than it is for the individual members who sit in this House. The five millions outside are better able to bear that than the two hundred inside this House.

In conclusion the hon. gentleman says :

I say here, as I say to those I represent, and as I say to the whole country, that the country is bound to see that this House shall give them the best service in the power of those who represent them in the interests of the community, and that the community shall protect the members of this House against actual loss on account of the services they faithfully and honestly perform.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to endorse every word that was said by the present Minister of Justice, then Mr. Mills. I think he spoke common sense, he spoke it boldly, without any concealment. There is no doubt at all that $1,000 was intended for a three months' session: in fact in 1873, when the amount was increased from $600 to $1,000, the sessions lasted about ten weeks, and for five or six years afterwards as I find on looking up the Hansard they lasted for about ten weeks. So I say that if the indemnity was increased from $600 to $1,000 when the sessions lasted about ten weeks on the average, what should we say about sessions lasting five months and a half, and perhaps more? I hope we may get through this week, but nobody seems to know.

Mr. SEMPLE. There is too much talking done, and too little business; that is the cause of the long sessions.

Mr. CRAIG. I am glad the hon. member said what he did. If every member of this House exercised the opportunity which he might exercise and spoke about fifteen minutes a week on every subject that came before the House, the session, instead of being five months long, would be six months long. I do not deny that some members talk rather long, but there are many members who never open their mouth in this House, they do not feel that they are called upon to do so. But I hold that every member has a perfect right to express his views on every question that comes before this House. I say that if every member spoke only half an hour a week in this House, the sessions would last at least six months without anything being done at all but talking. It is the duty of members to talk: and while I would be very glad to vote for a motion limiting the length of a speech to one hour, we have to take things as we find them. While it may be said that there is too much talk, how are you going to stop it? This is a free parliament, and members have a right to talk if they want to. But the members who do not talk are here to represent their constituents, and are they to be bound, because somebody talks too much, to keep silent? After all there are very few members who talk at all in this House, comparatively speaking, and there are very few of whom it might be said they talk too much.

Then if we look at the Act what do we find? We find that members of parliament are allowed by the Act to draw pay at the rate of $7 a day, and it goes on to say that a balance shall be retained until the end of the session. Now, I am speaking of this to show that the session was never intended to last anything like the time it lasts now. That when the indemnity was made $1,000 it was intended to last only about three months in a year. I may mention at the same time that when we compare the indemnity paid here with the indemnity paid in the Ontario legislature, that sits about eight weeks, and they get $600, and with the Quebec parliament, sitting about the same time, and they get $800. I never heard anybody complain of that. Somebody was pointing out to me that the door-keeper of the Senate gets $900 a year for his duties. I merely mention that fact to show that the members of this parliament, lasting between four and five months, are getting an indemnity that is far too small. I take that ground deliberately, and am prepared to stand by it.

After all, what is the indemnity for? It is to recoup the members for the loss which they suffer by coming to parliament to serve the country. It may be said, You need not come here unless you want to. That is true enough, but after all men do come here, and the indemnity is supposed to prevent them from suffering any loss. I hold that the indemnity does not prevent them from suffering loss. If the indemnity is not increased there are two things that will happen. If the session is going to last four or five months, only wealthy men will be able to come to this House at all, which I am very sure the country would not like. While I like to see some wealthy men in this House, it would be a most unfortunate thing if the House was composed of wealthy men, because we would find in many cases that they would be legislating for their own interests. But when we get men here who are not wealthy men, they have no interest to legislate on except the interest of the public. They come in with the rest of the people whom they represent: they have no money invested in large interests, and would not be tempted to legislate in behalf of those interests. I believe the farmers and the workingmen of this country would not desire to see a state of affairs where only wealthy men could afford to sit here. The people would not be satisfied with that state of affairs, and we find as a rule that they do not prefer wealthy men when they have a chance to elect their representatives. But another thing might happen, men might come here and would come here for the sake of the thousand dollars, men who could not make a thousand dollars anywhere else. That would be an unfortunate thing, too. I think the House of Commons as constituted to-day, with all classes of men in it, men who have no money, men who have a little money, and men who have a good deal of money, is about right, and represents the country fairly. But in order to continue that state of things it will not do to keep the indemnity at $1,000 for sessions lasting four or five months of the year, because there are men who are not able to afford it.

Now, there is a great deal of talk about robbing the people and all that sort of thing, but I agree with the present hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Mills), when he says that 5,000,000 people in Canada are better able to bear it than the 213 members of this House. If $500 were granted to each member what would it amount to? It does not come every year. It is nearly nine years since an extra indemnity was granted, but suppose you take it for this year, and apportion the cost to your own constituency. Take my own constituency, for instance; there are 5,000 voters in that constituency, and $500 would mean 10 cents apiece. I am satisfied that if I took the trouble to go around amongst them, they would give me 10 cents apiece. But the fact is that I have not time to do that. I would rather get it in an easier way, even if I wanted to do that. I do not think there is a voter in my constituency who would grudge giving me 10 cents for sitting here an extra two months.

Mr. PRIOR. The Grits would.

Mr. CRAIG. No, I am satisfied they would not. They may hope to elect a member themselves for that constituency some day, and if they did, I would not object paying that small amount. I put the case in this way, to show that after all it does not amount to so very much as we might sometimes imagine, in view of the fact that some talk so much about it. I believe with the hon. Minister of Justice, that the people are better able to stand it, that each man is better able to lose 10 cents, than I am able to lose $500. It has been suggested that there is great disparity between the salaries of members of the cabinet, and members of the House, and if there is to be no increase in the allowance of members of the House, I suppose we may look for some legislation to be introduced by the government to make the salaries of members of the government proportionate to those of members of this House. The members of the House do not claim to be men of such eminent ability as the members of the government, but we think that there are some members of this House who have as much ability as some members of this government. I am not very hopeful that any such legislation will be granted, because a little while ago the government brought in a measure increasing the salaries of some of its members, who took office at $5,000, to $7,000 a year. I am not saying anything against that at present, but I want to say that that is the way to look at it. I do not intend to say anything more. I have said about enough, I think, for one member of this House on this question, but I feel satisfied that whether the country agrees with me or not, I am expressing the views of a great many hon. members on both sides of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CRAIG. I am satisfied that I have endeavoured to put the matter fairly before the country. It may be that some of the newspapers will single me out for a little adverse criticism. I remember once in my constituency, the Liberal organ gave me a good deal of abuse. My wife was rather offended at it. She did not like it. She felt rather hurt. I said: Never mind; it is all right. I went in to see the editor, and I said to him: I have not the slightest objection to your doing this, as long as you do not charge for it. Go right ahead; you are doing me good. I hold that if newspapers criticise me unfairly it can do the object of their criticism no harm. I am sure the country will justify a member in getting up and voicing what are his views on the question, and what he considers to be the views held by a great many members of this House, without regard to politics. I have endeavoured to put the case fairly, and all I ask from the newspaper press is that instead of trying to make a few little headlines, or to produce something sensational, they will put the matter fairly before the country. I hope that some day some of the gentlemen representing the press will sit in this House as the representatives of constituencies, and if they do I am sure that I will be willing to give them the same consideration that I am now asking from them. I have no more to say, and if the House does not insist upon it, I will make no motion.

EXERCISE OF CLEMENCY IN CAPITAL CASES.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I invite the attention of the government to a matter which is at the present moment exciting public interest to a very great extent in the province of Quebec. I refer to two cases of murder. Sometime ago a man named Dubé was convicted of the murder of one Mooney. The wife of Mooney was also tried for murder and acquitted. Improper relations had existed between Dubé and the woman Mooney. She was tried for the murder of her husband and acquitted. Dubé was tried before Judge Bossé, convicted and hanged a few days ago in the city of Quebec. Another murder occurred about the same time in the city of Quebec. A policeman by the name of Cazes, in a drunken fit, in broad daylight, rushed into his house, pulled out a revolver and shot his wife dead. He was tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged. In the case of Dubé, the sentence was carried out. In the case of Cazes, the sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life. Of course, I do not wish to criticise in any way the manner in which the prerogative of clemency has been exercised, because in such cases, I believe in allowing the responsibility to rest upon the executive whose painful duty it is to investigate these matters and decide them, but, from the nature of the crime committed by both of these men, it appears to people who have given some attention to it, to be impossible to understand the distinction which would have allowed, in the case of Cazes, a commutation of the sentence, and required, in the case of Dubé, the carrying out of the sentence. Both cases were tried by Judge Bossé. The eminent judge has, no doubt, sent in his report on both cases to the hon. Minister of Justice, and my reason for calling the attention of the government to the cases, is for the purpose of asking the government to bring down the report of the judge in these two cases.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It would hardly be right to comply simply with the request of the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron), to bring down the reports of the judge. The whole proceedings should be brought down. Under the constitution, the pardoning power rests upon ministerial responsibility. The right of His Excellency, representing the Crown, must be exercised on the advice of his ministers, and, therefore, since this right has to be exercised on the advice of his ministers, it is only right and proper and in accordance with the principle of elementary justice, that parliament, to whom the ministers are responsible, should be put in possession of the facts. Orders have already been given to have the papers brought down in these two cases. There has been some feeling, I understand, in the city of Quebec, in regard to these two cases. The public at large hardly appreciate the reasons which have induced clemency in one case and the refusal of clemency in the other case. Both cases were simply shocking murders, and if you look at the case of Cazes, simply from the facts that are apparent on the surface, there would seem hardly to be any reason for the exercise of clemency in his favour. His case was a most outrageous one. But, there was this, in his favour, and it was the reason that induced us to advise His Excellency to exercise clemency. Horrible as the crime of that man was, the shooting of his wife without provocation or motive apparently; the trial judge expected the jury to do one of two things, either to bring in a verdict of manslaughter or a verdict of murder, with a recommendation to mercy. The jury did neither of these. They rendered a verdict of murder without a recommendation to mercy. The opinion of the judge was that a verdict of manslaughter would have been justified. Under the circumstances, I suppose every one will agree with me that it would be a monstrous thing to execute that man, if the judge who tried the case and heard all the evidence came to the conclusion, that in that hazy line which divides manslaughter from murder, the jury would have been warranted in rendering a verdict of manslaughter. Under such circumstances, the executive came to the conclusion that it would not take the responsibility of sending the man to the scaffold. That is the reason why the sentence on Cazes was commuted. The papers will be brought down. In the case of Dubé, there was no redeeming circumstance, except that he was young, and that, apparently—though we cannot say exactly—he had been induced to commit the crime by another person. There was no doubt whatever that Mooney was murdered by Dubé. Dubé had improper relations with the wife of the man whom he murdered; he had been living with her in adultery, and after the husband, who had been away for some time, returned, the man who had been living in adultery with the wife, killed him. Under those circumstances, the government could not see that there was any reason why the sentence should not be carried out.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO VOTE.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to remind Mr. Speaker that there is a decision due to the House on that point raised by Sir Charles Tupper, as to the right of directors, being members of the House, in a company, a Bill with reference to which is before parliament, voting on that Bill. The Speaker undertook to take the matter into his consideration and to give the House a formal decision upon it. We wish for that decision of the Speaker, so that there may be no doubt as to the proper mode of procedure in that respect.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. I have received a return from the Minister of Railways in answer to an order of the House for the employees dismissed or retired from the service of the government on account of alleged partisanship since July 1, 1896. The whole return brought down is simply a statement that sixteen employees were dismissed from the Department of Railways and Canals on account of political partisanship, and in each case the dismissal was preceded by an official investigation. What I wanted was the names of those dismissed, and in every other return they have been given. I ask the right hon. gentleman that he should require the department to supplement the return in this way. It is almost incredible to me that in the Department of Railways and Canals no persons have been dismissed for offensive partisanship except sixteen, from July up, and all these after investigation. We have had in this House time after time the assertion of the minister (Mr. Blair), with reference to special cases brought up, that they were dismissed for partisanship, and that he did not consider it necessary to hold an investigation. I do not want to distrust the return, but, perhaps, there is a mistake about it. I ask the First Minister to call the attention of the department to that point, because I think there is a misapprehension somewhere. I am pretty certain there must have been more dismissed.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I cannot say at this moment how the matter stands. I was careful to instruct all my colleagues to comply strictly with the orders of the House. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) seems to be surprised at the moderation of the minister (Mr. Blair) with regard to dismissals. Perhaps he is entitled to credit for that fault, but I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. We also are waiting for the papers with reference to the Stewart claims and the cement claims, and the papers connected with the Gilbert Dredging Company in reference to the Galops Canal.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will take a note of that.

ELECTORAL FRAUDS—JUDICIAL INQUIRY.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Prime Minister give us any information with reference to the Royal Commission to inquire into electoral frauds? When does the commission propose to go to work? Are there to be local or other solicitors in addition to and in help of the two counsel who are employed, one on each side? The fear is that if they are left without any recourse to the help of local solicitors, that the commission is very likely to take on the same appearance as that one in Ontario, which did not seem to be satisfactory in regard to probing into these things.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot give any information to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) at this moment. I will have to inquire from the Minister of Justice, and tomorrow I will do so.

HON. MR. TARTE.

Mr. FOSTER. I see it stated in the newspapers that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has sailed for home. Is that good news correct?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not been informed that the Minister of Public Works has sailed for home, and I do not believe it. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has also seen in the papers that Mr. Tarte was to be replaced by Mr. Fabre as commissioner at Paris. There is no truth in that rumour.

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing is too good for Tarte yet.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). I wish to remind the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) that I am waiting for the papers with reference to the dismissal of Lieut. Foyle to be brought down. I call the attention of the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies) to the dismissal of pilots at the port of Louisburg, Cape Breton. I want to know from him why the commissioners of pilots called upon the pilots of that port on May 5 last, by letter, to return their licenses within three days?

When it was found that some of these pilots did not comply with the request of the commissioners, they were dismissed. I would like to have my hon. friend give some reason for that action; and if he is not in a position to do so to-day, I would like him to bring down the papers. There was no complaint against the pilots, and they were, I think, without exception, efficient. I think it is only proper that the reasons which led the commissioners to take this high-handed action should be made plain.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not aware of the facts to which my hon. friend has called my attention. Whatever was done, was done by the commissioners in the exercise of their statutory powers, not by the government at all. I will see if there is any record of papers in my department; I am not aware of any.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There is no statutory power.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then they must have acted illegally.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will my hon. friend bring the papers down?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will see if there are any papers bearing on the subject, and will let my hon. friend know later.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If there are any, will he bring them down? I want them before my hon. friend's estimates go through the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot promise to bring any papers down until I see if there are any.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I want my hon. friend to be reasonable. When people are treated in this way, surely the minister has papers in the department, and why should he wish to conceal them?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no knowledge of the existence of any papers, but I will take the first opportunity to inquire and ascertain if there are any, and let my hon. friend know.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). With reference to the inquiry of the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), the case is substantially as was stated by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan), who is Surgeon-Major of the 94th Battalion, the battalion in which Mr. Foyle was a lieutenant. Lieut. Foyle was about to be appointed to the captaincy of a company when the question of his physical fitness came up. It was reported by the two medical officers of the battalion that Lieut. Foyle, being subject to epilepsy, was unfit for promotion—was, in fact, unfit to hold a commission in the militia. The matter was referred to the Director General of Medical Affairs here, who reported on the 19th of May that Surgeon-Major McLennan's certificate clearly established the fact that Lieut. Foyle was unfit for service in the militia, and the Director General accordingly recommended his retirement. That is all I know about the case. I can only say that I approve entirely of the action taken, and I do not see any reason for reopening the case.

Mr. McDUGALL. Does my hon. friend approve of a certificate about the health of an officer being made by a medical man without a personal examination?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That was not done.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Does the hon. minister contend that it is necessary for an officer to submit to a medical examination before promotion? That is quite new to me: I never heard of that before. The practice is that when a commission is given first the recipient has to undergo a medical examination; but I never heard of an officer having to go through a second medical examination on being promoted. If he was given a commission without a medical examination, when once he has his commission, there is an end of it. I do not know of any regulation that would require him to submit to a medical examination before promotion.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did not intend to give that impression; but for some time before the question of promotion came up, the question of Lieut. Foyle's health had been raised.

Mr. PRIOR. By whom?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the Lieut.-Colonel himself reported. Mr. Foyle had been for a long time lieutenant, and it is quite possible for a man to have epileptic fits without the fact being generally known; but after Lieut. Foyle received his commission, it became known to others that he was an epileptic; and when the question of his promotion came up, it was reported that he was an epileptic and ought not to hold a commission at all, and it was then that action was taken.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). As the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee is in his place, I would renew my application to the Prime Minister to be informed when the Public Accounts Committee is going to meet again, or, if it is not going to meet again, when the report is to be brought down.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I have been waiting at the service of the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), or any other hon. member opposite who wanted a meeting called for any business, and for that reason I wanted to put off the final meeting to as near the end of the session as possible. There will be a meeting called either to-morrow or the day following to prepare our report.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). I wish to call the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock) to the fact that a return which was ordered on the 10th of July, 1899, a year ago to-day, has not been brought down. I think there has been sufficient time to enable the officials of the department to prepare this return; and although it may not be of very much service to me this session, still I would like to see the order of the House complied with, and I would ask the acting minister to see that that is done.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The hon. gentleman brought this matter to my attention a few days ago, and I at once communicated with the deputy minister, who informed me that the return would involve a great deal of labour and expense. I think it was for information beginning either at or prior to confederation.

Mr. GILLIES. It was a return in reference to the public works constructed in the different provinces of Canada at the expense of the public treasury from a certain time up to a certain time. I do not think the expense of getting it out can be very great. I could furnish it myself to the Minister of Public Works; but I wanted to have upon it the imprimatur of the Public Works Department so that I could use it. Whether it was expensive or not, it was an order of the House, which ought to have been complied with long ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not defending the Public Works Department for not complying with the order, nor do I wish the department to treat the order of the House with any disrespect. I had forgotten what the order was; but now I remember that it called for a detailed statement of the expenditures on all the public works of Canada since confederation. Any hon. gentleman will see that that would involve a great deal of time, labour and expense.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would renew my application to the Minister of Militia with reference to Corporal Courtney. The hon. gentleman promised to bring down the papers several days ago and make a statement.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have been waiting for the hon. gentleman, who was absent a number of days.

Mr. TAYLOR. Only two.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have the papers here. The case is one of regimental discipline, and I am satisfied that the action taken was legal and proper and one which I have no power to review. Corporal Courtney was ordered on certain duty by his superior officer, and twice refused to carry out the orders. The matter was reported to the commanding officer who immediately appointed a court to inquire into the matter. The court was composed of Major J. N. Caines, commanding 15th Battery, Captain W. O. Tidswell, 13th Battalion, Captain W. J. Morgan, D.S., 15th Battery. The prisoner pleaded guilty and was sentenced to degradation to the ranks.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the order?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was to take charge of a squad of men and conduct them to the canteen and see that each man received only what he was entitled to. Each man was entitled to a glass of beer or its equivalent.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought there was no beer at the camp?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This was not in camp but at the depot at Kingston. It is a rule of the canteens in those depots that on certain days, of which the Queen's Birthday is one, the men are entitled to a glass of beer or its equivalent in tobacco, cigars or anything else. There is a popular impression that a canteen is solely for the sale of liquor, but that is altogether wrong. A canteen contains all sorts of supplies which the men in the depot are supposed to require. A statement of his character, as shown by the defaulters' book, was produced before the court, and contains the following entries:

For using improper language, twice; being dirty on parade, once; abusing horses on parade, once; breaking out of barracks when a defaulter, once; insolence, once.

Corporal Courtney had been at the time eight months and eight days in the battery. The court sentenced him to be reduced to the ranks, and the sentence was confirmed on May 29, by the officer commanding A Battery. Lieut.-Col. Stone forwarded the papers with the following remarks:

There are no grounds for considering that Corporal Courtney was detailed for duty which he was justified in objecting to perform from conscientious motives.

And Lieut.-Col. Vidal, officer commanding Canadian militia, reported to me as follows:

This N.C.O. was ordered, on May 24 last, to perform canteen duty, and to see that a certain free issue of beer was correctly made. (2) The order to perform the duty above mentioned was a 'lawful order,' and 'in accordance with the well-known and established customs of the army,' see 'Manual of Military Laws,' page 23. (3) Corporal Courtney, having refused to obey the lawful command of a superior, has been properly tried by court-martial, and reduced to the ranks.

The order given to that non-commissioned officer was legal. Queen's regulations allow the establishment of canteens, and order and discipline must be maintained in them. Non-commissioned officers must be detained to perform canteen duties and see that everything be properly carried out.

Corporal Courtney refused to perform this duty and was reduced to the ranks; his only excuse is his 'principles.' Here is the law on this point: Manual of Military Law, 1899, paragraph 11, page 23:

But so long as the orders of the superior are not obviously and decidedly in opposition to the law of the land, or to the well-known and established customs of the army, so long must they meet prompt, immediate and unhesitating obedience (a).

12. Religious scruples, however bona fide they may be, afford no justification for neglect or refusal to obey orders. An officer cannot (for example) plead conscientious scruples as justifying a refusal to go into the trenches on a Sunday, or to pay marks of respect enjoined by superior authority to a religion different from his own.

CENTRAL VERMONT RAILWAY.

The House again resolved itself in committee on Bill (No. 171) respecting the Central Vermont Railway Company—(Mr. Gibson.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Has the hon. the Solicitor General submitted the Bill to the Justice Department, and are the provisions all approved of?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I did not submit it to any one, I looked at it myself.

Mr. HAGGART. To me the important point is the obtaining of property by a foreign corporation in Canada.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Foreign corporations have absolutely the same powers in Canada as local corporations. Perhaps there is a distinction with reference to railways. No individual can own a railway and no corporation can own a railway except by consent of parliament, and we have introduced a section into this Bill making the company subject to all the laws of Canada except with reference to its internal organization, such as election of directors, &c.

Mr. WM. GIBSON (Lincoln) moved that the following section be added to the Bill:

6. Nothing in this Act contained or done in pursuance thereof shall take away or prejudice any claim, demand, right, security, cause of action or complaint which any person has against the Montreal and Province Line Railway Company, nor shall it relieve such company or its properties from the payment or performance of any debt, liability, obligation, contract or duty.

7. Nothing in this Act contained shall take away, annul or affect any agreement or stipulation made in relation to the line of railway belonging to the Montreal and Province Line Railway Company with any municipality which granted or which was part of a territory granting any bonus, aid or assistance to either of the said lines of railway; but the said Central Vermont Railway Company shall, in the event of such lease, sale or amalgamation, carry out the conditions under which such bonus was granted.

8. The Central Vermont Railway Company, in purchasing, leasing or operating the Montreal and Province Line Railway Company, shall assume and be liable for the charges and rights secured to Jacques Franchère, doctor of medicine, and others of the village of Marieville, in the district of St. Hyacinthe, by deed of sale passed before Maître G. Bombardier, notary public, the 19th day of June, 1877, under the No. 865, which rights and charges are mentioned in the deed granted by the sheriff of the district of Montreal, to Farrand Stewart Stranahan, in trust, in the year 1896, by which deed the said sheriff sold and handed over to the said Stranahan, in trust, the said railway belonging now to the Montreal and Province Line Railway Company.

9. The Central Vermont Railway Company may, after acquiring the said roads as herein provided, enter into an agreement to transfer or lease them to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is very unreasonable to propose so many long amendments, which are read hurriedly, making it quite impossible for any member to get an intelligent idea of what the effect of them will be. This is particularly objectionable when done at this stage of the session. It is unfair to the House and every member of it, and I am inclined to think that it results in imperfect or undesirable legislation going through and is a practice that should not be encouraged.

Mr. GIBSON. I am sure that my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is under a misapprehension as to the nature of these amendments. These amendments have been before the House for nearly a month.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. member (Mr. Gibson) tell me where they are to be found by an ordinary member of the House.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, in the Votes and Proceedings of the House. May I be permitted to use your own name, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Brodner), and say that these amendments were given notice of by yourself in order that the county you represent and some of the adjoining counties through which the road runs should be protected in any claim they have against the Central Vermont Railway.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are local matters.

Mr. GIBSON. And, as my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) suggests, these only affect local interests, and those interests, very properly, looked after by these amendments proposed by yourself. So far as the amendments are concerned, they have been before the House, I am quite sure, for three or four weeks.

Mr. SPROULE. I have no objections to the amendments so far as they are correct, but I am only objecting to the loose system adopted in passing them through in such a way that members cannot have an intelligent knowledge of them.

Mr. GIBSON. I may say, in a word, that these changes were not suggested by me. But they were proposed, and I brought them before the company, and they were accepted by the company. The Bill has been, as I said, three or four weeks delayed by one thing and another before the company would accept these amendments. That being all cleared away, the constitutional question came up last Friday, it being suggested by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), very properly, that the Bill should be referred to the Department of Justice so that the Solicitor General might have a conference with the railway company and see if there is anything in it that would affect the rights of the Dominion of Canada in foreign corporations coming into Canada to operate lines. That matter has now been finally disposed of. And, it being important that the Bill should be put through the House with as little delay as possible, the Prime Minister was kind enough to ask unanimous consent for the Bill to be brought up this morning.

Bill, as amended, reported, and read a third time.

Mr. GIBSON moved that the Bill do pass and the title be 'An Act respecting the Central Vermont Railway Company (foreign).'

Motion agreed to.

RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO VOTE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I want to say to the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) in reference to the question he raised respecting the right of a member to vote on a question in which he is personally interested, that I have looked into the matter and find that it is one of those questions that the House does not entrust to the Speaker to decide, but keeps it in its own hands and settles each particular question on its merits. I may just briefly quote the English practice according to Mr. Speaker Denison :

Any hon. member having a direct pecuniary interest in the question before the House is not entitled to vote. But it is the usual practice of the House to hear the hon. member whose vote is challenged, and then a motion can be made 'that the vote be disallowed.' The question is one for the House to determine. The vote is challenged and the motion made after the division.

In view of these circumstances I thought that as it was a matter the House kept in its own hands it was not necessary for me to draw the attention of the House to it. However, since the hon. member for York raised the question, that is the conclusion I reached. I may say further, that in looking at the English cases the English parliament appear to have interpreted the question very broadly, because many members there are found to be interested in public enterprises as shareholders and contractors and it appears that the question there is treated in a very wide manner.

RELIEF OF J. W. ANDERSON.

Order called for consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 108) of the House of Commons, to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of J. W. Anderson.—(Mr. Cargill).

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Is the promoter of this Bill going on with it ?

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). In the absence of the promoter, I move that these amendments be concurred in. All the parties interested in this Bill have agreed to let it go as it is.

Motion agreed to, and amendments concurred in.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 191) to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I would like to have an explanation of this Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill proposes to amend section 26 of the Post Office Act as it was amended by the statute of 1898, by inserting in the 22nd line of the section, after the word 'weight,' the following words :

For transmission beyond the province or territory wherein they are published, and at the rate of one-eighth of one cent for each pound weight, or any fraction of a pound weight, for transmission within such province or territory.

The effect of the amendment is simply to reduce the rate per pound on newspaper matter, namely on publications that are by that section made subject to pay half a cent a pound, to reduce the rate within a certain distance to one-eighth of one cent per pound, that distance being, in the case of a province, the province of publication, and in the case of a territory, the territory of publication.

Mr. FOSTER. On what principle do you introduce a provincial boundary ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The object is to reduce the rate for limited distances and you have to introduce some system of limit. This country is so vast that a rate on great quantities of mail matter that are shipped by the ton, as newspapers now are, would be reasonable within a limit and would not be reasonable over a vast continent such as British North America. It is difficult to apply a mileage limit, as for example, the radial system which applies to ordinary publications. I think in the United States they adopt county boundaries for certain classes of publications. But that will not work very satisfactorily, because that is a mere distance limit, and there would be these narrow lines, and publications might be published near the confines and part of the circulation would be in other counties or in other counties as in the United States, and in that way they would not have the benefit of a fairly liberal area. By adopting a provincial limit you give a very large area to each publication. It is not the same everywhere, it is true, but practically I think it will work out pretty much the same. Take a province like Prince Edward Island. I am not aware that they have any publications there with a Dominion circulation; so that by giving a provincial area to publications in Prince Edward Island you are really meeting all the requirements of that province. The same may be largely said of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What about Quebec ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose it will largely meet the requirements of the province of Quebec; but whether it does or not, it will meet the requirements upon this principle, that it will give this reduced rate within the province affected, and a province of considerable area, some hundreds of miles in length. The same with Ontario. It would be unreasonable, if you admit the soundness of the principle of making any charge at all for the transportation of newspapers—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not think so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, to those who do, it would be unreasonable, in their judgment, and it would be in mine, to convey car-loads of mail from ocean to—ocean at the same rate as you convey them within the limited area of your own province. If any publication within any particular province happens to have its chief circulation either without or within the province, that does not affect the question at all, it simply affects the question as regards that portion of the circulation within the province. It is an attempt, at all events, to reduce the charge on newspapers, and to that extent it is an advantage to them.

Mr. FOSTER. I was a little curious before I came here to know what excuse the minister would give for the legislation which he proposes, the peculiar limitation which he puts upon it. I must say that it is about the most inconsistent and absurd explanation that I ever heard a minister or any one else attempt to give of a measure in this House. Now, the only ground upon which the hon. gentleman justifies himself in putting down the limit, is based upon the cost of carriage. He says it is absurd to think that you should carry car-loads of stuff for immense distances at the same rate for which you carry car-loads of stuff for a shorter distance.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not use the word 'stuff.'

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman objects to the word 'stuff,' we will take another word and call it mail matter. What is the whole theory of the carriage of mails in this country? I put a two-cent stamp on a letter, and that goes to the Yukon. I put a two-cent stamp on a letter, and it goes no farther than to a street address in Ottawa. In one case it is carried for thousands of miles, and in another case it is carried a few rods. Would the hon. Postmaster General be listened to for a moment in this House if he attempted to make an arrangement by which, if you send letters outside of your own county or your own province, you pay more than if you send these letters within your own county or your own province? The same principle holds good in regard to newspapers. I put a cent stamp on a newspaper and the newspaper is carried to the Yukon; I put a cent stamp on a newspaper and it is carried to a house on a street in Ottawa. The same amount of postage is paid in each case, and I think the hon. Postmaster General would be hard set to it to get even such obedient followers as he has on that side of the House to follow him in attempting to grade, according to mileage, newspaper and letter postage in this country. That is what he is doing in this case. He proposes that he shall reduce the newspaper postage to one-eighth of a cent per pound, but he says that he will only reduce it on newspapers in so far as their distribution is confined to the province in which they are published. The hon.

minister says that it would be absurd to say that you should carry newspapers a long distance at the same rate as you carry them a short distance. Take the case of a newspaper published in the city of Montreal. One half of its issue goes to the province of Ontario and a few miles out of Montreal, comparatively speaking, it is met at the border. On all that class of issue the old rate of postage has to be paid. We will say, for illustration's sake, that the mass of it does not go farther west than the city of Toronto. There is another part of the issue of that paper published in Montreal which goes down as far as Gaspé and all over the province of Quebec, 500, 600, 800, or, it may be, 1,000 miles distant from Montreal. That portion of the issue the hon. minister carries for one-eighth of a cent per pound, while he refuses to carry the other portion for a few miles into the province of Ontario, except at four-eighths of one per cent per pound. Is there any principle of reason, or businesslike common sense in an arrangement of that kind? There is a distinctly vicious principle in this matter. So long as you confine it to zones, you do not bring in that vicious principle, because you make no provincial distinctions, but the moment you provide against going outside of provincial limits, you fine the newspaper for extending its circulation, which introduces a vicious principle into the legislation of this country. You are legislating according to provincial lines. You are saying to a newspaper in Quebec: Do not try to do business in any province outside of Quebec. Do not try by enterprise to extend your circulation in the province of Ontario. Do not try to bring the light and leading, which your newspaper is calculated to spread broadly, to any other province but the province of Quebec. If you do we will fine you. Confine yourself to your own province. If this is the effect, what is the result? It works against the unity of the provinces, founded upon a unity of knowledge and the interchange of that knowledge that the newspaper carries to and fro. Is that a good thing in this country? It is a vicious thing. It is un-Canadian. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), speaking on the prohibition question the other day, distinctly laid down the principle that it was against national development, and national growth and against every principle of legislation on national grounds, that we should in reference to the sale of intoxicating liquors, legislate in a certain way within different provincial boundaries. Here is a mighty pervasive influence in this country—the influence of the press. The best newspapers will be the newspaper that will be most widely circulated, and which will spread their light most widely, and you are proposing to put a fine upon them for endeavouring, in their enterprise, to extend their circulation as widely and broadly as possible in this

Mr. MULOCK.

Dominion. It is a distinct benefit to the province of Ontario that the people in that province shall have the Quebec view, presented in the newspapers published in Quebec, sent just as broadly as possible through the province of Ontario, and vice versa, it is a distinct benefit to the province of Quebec that the Ontario view, as represented by the newspapers, should be sent as widely as possible through Quebec. It is a distinct benefit that the British Columbia papers shall have as wide a circulation as possible in the east, so that we may know what is going on in business, social and political circles in British Columbia, and the same principle applies to all the provinces in the Dominion. But here we have the hon. Postmaster General, by his miserable attempt at legislation, saying to one of the broadest educating influences in this Dominion: You are fined if your enterprise leads you into any other province than your own. Upon what principle does the hon. gentleman proceed? None, except that given by the Postmaster General, that he cannot carry a long distance as cheaply as he can carry a short distance. The whole theory of the post office is, that the distribution of mail matter shall be made at equal rates, no matter what the distance may be. I am not going to take up time. I simply make my protest, as strongly as I can, against this legislation, and I will back that protest up by a statement which I read in the Montreal Witness last night, and which is as follows:

The Postmaster General's new Bill, reducing to almost nothing the postage on the newspapers within the province of publication, far from mending the deliberate injustice of his former measure—

I agree with that entirely.

—of placing a distinctive tax upon city publications, while giving preferential privileges to country newspapers, is a serious aggravation of that tyrannical injustice. Why Mr. Mulock, of all people, desires to develop provincialism in the newspapers of Canada, and keep one province from intercourse with another, it is hard to conceive. He has been talked of as an expectant knight for the breadth of his policy in breaking down the lines of demarkation between one British country and another, and for that feat he certainly deserves the honour. Yet here he sets up distinctions between the provinces of Canada such as enormously favour his own province and gives him effective vengeance on the Montreal papers, which so vigorously condemned him. How can he and Sir Wilfrid Laurier now face each other—Sir Wilfrid who went into such rhapsodies of patriotism against the iniquity of giving one province a deliverance from drink-selling that another did not have, and the prospective Sir William, who deliberately fines newspapers for going beyond their own provinces or out of the country. This new Bill is little else than a special tax and handicap on certain Montreal newspapers, which are the only ones which have the bulk of their circulation outside of their province. We have always favoured newspaper postage, but we are not favourable to its being collected off a few papers, and thus making them pay for the carriage of their rivals.

That is a stinging article, but it is stinging because of the truth that is in it. The hon. gentleman, who broke down distances in his advocacy of a two-cent postage all through the British dominions, largely on the ground of the unifying effect it would have on the British dominions, yet goes to work and develops this petty provincialism for what reason no man on earth knows not even the Postmaster General.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the House further than to say that I entirely agree with what has been so ably said by the leader of the opposition. It is difficult to understand the principle that has led the hon. gentleman to take this step. He cannot justify what he is doing on the statement he makes, namely, that it costs him more, or that the railways charge him more for long distances than for short distances. That, as the leader of the opposition has so ably shown cannot apply to distances fairly, because he would have to pay more for a distance within the province which might exceed the distance outside the province. Not only that, but to go deeper into the principle, you go into the whole question of transportation, and if the Postmaster General has gone as fully into it as from his position he ought, he knows very well that the cost of transporting any weight over a vast distance is very small compared with the apparent extent over which it is to be carried. Once you have set the force in motion to carry a weight across the continent then, as all scientific railway men know, the cost after the first expense is incurred is comparatively small. I shall move, seconded by Mr. McDougall:

That the Bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months.

If this amendment is voted down, then, when we go into committee I shall move that the clause shall be amended by changing the  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent per pound to  $\frac{1}{4}$  cent per pound. Let the Postmaster General do this and he will to some extent retrace the retrograde step he took when he decided to tax knowledge some time ago. Every one knows it was a large liberal policy to allow newspapers the freedom they had prior to the Postmaster General taking this step. Any way, as he is going to tinker with this clause, I will propose in committee, if the second reading of the Bill is not postponed that the  $\frac{1}{4}$  cent rate shall apply generally.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). I wish, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words on the question now before the House, and it would have been necessary for me to enter at greater length into the discussion were it not that the speeches made by the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) and the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) expressed my views somewhat fully, and I believe, Sir, that they express not only my views, but the views of the people of the country generally. The Postmaster General seems to have rather an erratic way of conducting his department. He appealed to the sentiment of the empire when he reduced the postage and he gave as a reason for that course that it would introduce more unity than had existed between the component parts of the Dominion and the greater component parts of the British Empire. To-day we see the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) introducing a post office law whereby he proposes to draw distinctions even between the provinces of the Dominion. I thought that the hon. gentleman's idea was that there should be uniformity and that the rate of postage all over the Dominion should be the same, but it seems now that the policy has taken a different shape. The hon. gentleman practically proposes that the circulation of newspapers shall be limited to the provinces in which they are published. That is neither good postal law nor sound public policy. What right has the Postmaster General to propose to circumscribe the circulation of the newspapers? The press is the channel through which the people of one province learn of the doing of the people in another province. We mingle in parliament here from different provinces and can interchange views and devise means for the welfare of our country, but the people generally have not that opportunity, and they can only avail of it by reading the press of the different provinces. If the newspapers of Quebec go to the province of Ontario and if the newspapers of Ontario come to our province, is it not the very means of carrying out the programme which the right hon. gentleman has announced, namely, to unite the people of Canada as a whole. The Postmaster General gives as his reason for this change that it would cost more to carry tons of newspaper matter over the railways than if it were limited as he wishes. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has shown the absurdity of that argument. The Postmaster General has entered into a contract with the railways for conveying mail matter all over the Dominion, and the contract is not going to be affected by the quantity of mail matter. That the hon. gentleman knows well. The contract is framed in such a way that the distance really amounts to very little. This policy of the Postmaster General discriminates another way as against the provinces. The province of Quebec, for instance, pays more than one-half of the money which the Postmaster General receives since the introduction of postage upon newspapers. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) proposes to-day a divisional policy, and one not in the interests of the Dominion as a whole.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

I think the policy of making this distinction between the different provinces, is antagonistic to the best interest of Canada. We want to become more and more every day a united people. We do not want the people of Quebec to be in a position to say: The Postmaster General has imposed a tax which prevents our papers circulating through Ontario or the maritime provinces, or the North-west, and showing to the people of those parts of the country how the people of Quebec feel and think. This is, to my mind, a retrograde step when he re-imposed the postage on newspapers; but if he wants now to come back to the policy followed by the Conservative party, which the government have pretty well adopted in every other respect, let him abolish the postage altogether. If he does not do that, I am prepared to vote for a six months' hoist; and if that does not carry, I am prepared to vote for the  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent postage, as proposed by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, if the House will pardon me, I will endeavour to put this question, if I may say so, in its true light. I do not think it has been properly understood or explained by hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the other side of the House. I take issue with my hon. friend who has just spoken (Sir Adolphe Caron), and with my hon. friend from York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), who have taken the view, that all mail matter should be treated indifferently, whether it be newspapers or letters. There is all the difference in the world between a letter and a newspaper. A newspaper is merchandise; a letter is not. Letters are written conversations between two parties, with regard to business, pleasure or anything else; but there is no intrinsic value attached to them. A letter simply conveys to somebody the views and thoughts of another. But newspapers are merchandise, and the publisher of a newspaper is a manufacturer of merchandise which he sells. Now, I do not see any reason why this class of merchandise should not pay freight for its transportation as well as any other class of merchandise. It is true, there is some difference; newspapers are a class of merchandise by themselves. You cannot term them groceries, but everybody knows that they are an article or merchandise sold by one man to another, and nobody can object if freight is charged for the carrying of that merchandise. Two years ago my hon. friend the Postmaster General introduced the system of charging freight for the carrying of newspapers at the rate of one-half cent a pound. Now, the object of the present proposition is to reduce the rate from one-half cent to one-eighth cent a pound. It must be remembered that at the present time there is a free zone for a certain class of newspapers. Under the law introduced by the Postmaster General two years ago, it is provided that weekly newspapers shall be carried free of postage, within a radius of forty miles, while all other newspapers which are not weekly, have to pay freight at the rate of one-half cent a pound. My hon. friend proposes to decrease the rate of freight, and I do not understand that there can be any objection to the proposition as far as it goes. We may be told that the proposition of the Postmaster General does not go far enough. That is a fair subject for debate; but so far as it goes, it ought to be acceptable to every member of this House. I do not, for my part, object to hon. gentlemen on the other side thinking they are serving a good purpose, by opposing the decrease which the Bill makes in the rate; but I do not think they are consulting either the interests of the country or their own interests in doing so, because, as they say, it does not go far enough. I should think they would be willing to accept it as far as it goes, or move to make it still broader. But at the present time they refuse to accept the reduction proposed by the Postmaster General.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We want to abolish it.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not the motion of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia. His motion is to kill the Bill. If that motion carries, the Bill will be killed, and the freight on all newspapers will remain as it is to-day, at one-half cent a pound. If that is the view taken by these hon. gentlemen, I have nothing to say; let them take their own course in that respect. But I appeal to the fair sense and the intelligence of the House. Everybody knows that the increase of the rate was for a transient period. At the present time my hon. friend the Postmaster General, thinks the revenue of the Post Office Department is sufficiently buoyant to enable him to take his first step in cutting into the freight on newspapers; and suppose the Bill passes, what will be the consequence? There will be a free zone for newspapers of a certain class. Then, there will be another zone in which all papers, which to-day pay one-half cent a pound, will be carried for one-eighth cent a pound, which will be a saving to the papers in Montreal, on which my hon. friend shed a tear a moment ago, amounting to several thousands of dollars a year. But my hon. friend says he does not want that saving to the newspapers; he wants things to remain as they are, because the saving does not go as far as he thinks it should go. The only criticism which is worthy of consideration, is that as to the nature of the zone which is created.

I think that the establishment of zones—a free zone, a limited zone and then a full zone—must commend itself to the judgment of the House. A fair criticism was made by the hon. member for York when he said that a province zone was not a good one.

Well, a different one might be established, but that is a question which might be well discussed in committee. The object of this Bill is not to prevent newspapers being circulated in the other provinces, and it might be well to have a zone established by miles. I suggested this to the Postmaster General in conversation, but my hon. friend thinks there are very serious objections to it. In the committee, however, all these questions can probably be debated, but it seems to me that the principle of the Bill ought to commend itself to both sides.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Despite the evident threat of my right hon. friend against those who are prepared to support the six months hoist, I desire to explain that it is the principle of the Bill we object to. We have always been opposed to the tax on newspapers. We were opposed to the first tax, which my hon. friend himself has found so improper that he is obliged to come before parliament and ask to modify it. What are we dealing with to-day. My right hon. friend the Premier says that newspapers are merchandise; but in that I cannot agree. I look upon the press as an educator; and the more we circulate the press, the better it will prove as an educator to the people. I am further opposed to this Bill because it discriminates against that section of the country from which I come. There can be no doubt at all that the newspapers of Montreal city have paid more than half the tax imposed on all the newspapers in the country. I would not go so far as to say that the hon. the Postmaster General desires to punish some of the Montreal newspapers, but it looks like it. The Montreal Star is largely circulated all over the Dominion, but I am not here to protect that newspaper because it is well able to do that for itself, and I have read in the Star not long ago that it would be better for the government not to touch that tax at all, and that that newspaper was ready to pay. Neither am I here as an advocate for the Montreal Witness, another newspaper largely circulated throughout the whole of Canada, and looked on as a religious paper. I have no doubt that many of its subscribers rank it next to the Bible. That is another paper which will be heavily taxed by this amendment brought down by my hon. friend. Nor am I here to defend La Presse, which can well afford to pay any tax the government may impose. But these three newspapers will pay more than all the other papers in the Dominion together. La Presse is not circulated so much in the other provinces as the Star and Witness, but it has a very large circulation among our compatriots in the United States. There it does good work, bringing them news of home and keeping alive in them the love of their native country, and a desire to return, and no doubt if any of them do return and settle amongst us again—good citizens whom we were sorry to lose—that is due in great measure to La Presse, and no doubt also, to La Patrie, which also circulates among French Canadians in the United States. I look upon these papers, therefore, as different from merchandise, as something that touches more patriotism than business. I have always been opposed to any tax on the press, and am opposed to this measure, not only because it is a tax, but because it discriminates; and if there is one thing which the Dominion government should not do, that is to discriminate against any one province. I repeat, therefore, in spite of the threat of my right hon. friend, that I shall vote for the six months' hoist. Let him bear the odium of having imposed a heavy tax on the newspapers, and let the public know exactly how the thing stands rather than have the pill administered to it with a little coating of sugar.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). It looks to me as if the hon. the Postmaster General were coming down very considerably before the general elections. He announces half a cent a pound as the tax that has been imposed was imposed, but now he says the tax will be one-quarter what it was before. That is an acknowledgment that he must have been wrong in his previous imposition of a tax of half a cent a pound. The right hon. the First Minister told us that he views newspapers very differently from letters, that newspapers are merchandise, and he elaborated that opinion. If they are merchandise, why should the people of Canada be called upon to carry merchandise for nothing or nearly nothing—one-eighth of a cent per pound. It costs ten times that much to carry them, perhaps twenty times as much, and if they are merchandise they should be made to pay as such. There is no obligation on the people to have a post office department which can carry merchandise for one-twentieth of the cost. I am quite sure that in our postal parcel the government have lost sight of that very important principle and view it largely in the light of letters and have decided on carrying postal parcels—that is merchandise—for very much less than the cost of carriage. They tell us that the Postmaster General himself has quite a personal interest in those matters, that last year he had no interest in the newspaper business, but this year he is very heavily interested as a stockholder in a Toronto newspaper. If that be the case, it may account in some degree for his change of front in regard to this matter. But the important point that I wish to call attention to is this—that the Postmaster General has proposed, so far as a large portion of the newspapers are concerned, to reduce the postage to one-quarter of what it was before. What was the total income from the charge of one-half per cent a pound—can the Postmaster General tell me?

Mr. BERGERON.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not got the figures at hand.

Mr. WALLACE. Was it not $60,000?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not the figures.

Mr. WALLACE. We should proceed upon some principle in this matter. If the principle laid down by the Postmaster General is correct that newspapers should pay for their carriage—or as further elaborated by the right hon. First Minister, that newspapers are merchandise—they ought to pay like other merchandise. For myself, I take the ground that the Conservative party and government have taken all along—that newspapers should be carried postage free. We lay down the principle that newspapers are not merchandise, but as the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) says they are a means of communication as a letter is. As the hon. minister says, it is like a conversation between those in different parts of the country, and spreads intelligence. If anything is done in the matter, it should be to wipe out all imposition upon the newspapers and make them free. Suppose that the income from this rate of one-half cent per pound on newspapers has been $80,000 a year. Reducing it to one-quarter, as is proposed would mean a revenue of $20,000. This is an amount so insignificant in comparison with the total revenue of the Post Office Department, and so insignificant in comparison with the cost of the service performed that it is an absolute farce. It would be better by far to transmit newspapers free of postage, as was done before. This is an imposition upon the newspapers of the country. It does not reach the subscribers, because the imposition is too small to have any effect upon the price of the newspapers. The newspapers have not suffered so much, because the prices of paper have been falling during the last few years, and the money they have saved in the price of their paper they have been compelled in part to contribute to the government in this little vexatious tax. This tax has nothing to justify it. If the principle were to be adopted of charging the newspapers for the cost of their carriage this would not pay one-tenth of the charge. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I think this is another example of the bungling administration of the Postmaster General.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I do not agree with some hon. gentlemen who have spoken. I have always believed that there should be a postage charge on newspapers, but that it should be imposed on all papers alike, irrespective of their radius of distribution. I do not see why we should carry newspapers free any more than we should carry letters free. It may be a little difficult to adjust this tax between the publisher and the subscriber, but that is a thing that can be done and ought to be done. I regard it as most objectionable to put a tax upon a newspaper that is circulated within a radius of ten or twenty miles, and, as soon as it gets outside of that zone, to increase the tax. I do not think that is a correct principle, and I am against it. I would rather have seen an amendment proposed in the direction I have indicated, than to kill the Bill entirely. But, since the motion is before us and as it may result in bringing about the thing which I would have preferred, I am prepared to vote for it. However, in my opinion, the tax should be put on all newspapers, regardless of where they are circulated, and, whatever the tax is, let it apply alike to all.

SUPPLY—WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). Before you leave the Chair, at the request of a large number of the people of Canada, I desire to call the attention of the House to a subject of great interest to the people of this country at large. It is not a controversial question, and consequently, I trust, that it will receive the consideration that it deserves on its merits. I make this proposition at the request of a great number of the women of this country, who ask this honourable House to remove from the statute-book the disabilities under which they are labouring.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MOORE. They ask us to remove from the statute-books of Canada, the disqualification which prevents them from voting at Dominion elections. I am of the same opinion, and I think the hon. members of this House will be of the same opinion, as Sir Stafford Northcote, who thus expressed his views upon the question in the British House of Commons, in 1884 :

If you make a capable elector, the test you will find that you are bound to go very much further, and in a very different direction in some respects to what you have done in order to complete your definition. I take the case of the female franchise. There cannot be a doubt if you ask who are capable electors, you will find it very difficult to declare that the females who are in a certain position as taxpayers and ratepayers, and who are electors for municipal purposes, are not capable citizens, and that they should not be included in the franchise.

I believe that about one-seventh of the electors of the municipalities of the kingdom are females, and on the principle on which you are proceeding you will find it difficult to say that they are not entitled to vote.

The conditions in England in respect to this matter and the conditions in Canada are analogous, and an argument that will apply in one case, will apply equally well in the other. They claim that mentally, morally and intellectually, they are not the inferior of men, and to deny that, would be to insult our mothers, our wives, and our daughters, and would not reflect any great credit upon ourselves. We would not have to dig very deep into the pages of history to find instances and testimony sufficient to prove that they are not incapable of exercising the suffrage by reason of their mental or intellectual incapacity. It is claimed that the three greatest and brightest eras in British history have been those when the British Empire was ruled by Queens instead of Kings. I refer to Queen Elizabeth, Queen Anne, and last, though not least, to Victoria, the greatest and best Sovereign that ever graced any throne. I would refer to Maria Theresa, Austria, and to Isabella of Spain, who pawned her jewels to help equip a fleet to enable Columbus to discover the great American continent. I will not take up your time by going into details in regard to the position that women have taken in literature. I will only cite one instance, and refer to a book that was written by a lady of the United States, that passed through more editions in the same length of time than any book on record, that has had more readers and has influenced a larger number of people than any book that has ever been published on this continent. I refer to Uncle Tom's Cabin, written by Harriet Beecher Stowe. That book had more to do with the emancipation of the slaves in the United States than anything else that occurred in that country. Not only are women intellectually capable of exercising the suffrage, but they are amenable to our laws; they are obliged to obey the laws we make, and yet they have no hand in the making of those laws. It has been the boast of British subjects all over the world that British law is no respecter of persons. That every man, woman and child stands upon an equality. But, I think we will find, on consideration, that in respect at least to the exercise of the franchise, they do not stand on an equality with men, and consequently a great injustice is being done to them. I think, Sir, that upon any platform throughout the country, throughout the United States and throughout the British Empire, taxation without representation has been most vigorously condemned. If I remember correctly, the present hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said in 1885, that it was a great injustice. Here we have half of the population of this country who are taxed, who have no voice in levying the rate of taxation, or electing the men who are entrusted with the duty of making our laws. This matter is not new in this House, or in this country. It has been agitated throughout the country, to some extent, and the result of it is that, for municipal purposes, in some of the provinces, the right has been granted to women to vote for municipal purposes. I will refer to a speech which was made on the subject of woman suffrage on August 19, 1884, by Bishop Carlisle:

When woman satisfies every condition but that of sex then it seems to me impossible in reason, and I believe it will soon be impossible in fact, to deprive her of a vote.

If a woman is a householder, still more if she be an employer of labour, and one through whose employment a number of men possess votes, what is there in the mere accident of sex to make it right to say she shall have no political influence.

Rev. Canon Kingsley, speaking on this subject, made this statement:

Women who are, or who desire to be, self-supporting, have no rights at all. They owe the same allegiance as men. They are favoured by no privileges, indulgences, exceptional legislation, from the state, and ask for none. They are just as capable as men. Why are similar relations, similar powers and similar duties not to carry with them similar rights? To this question the common sense and justice of England will have soon to find an answer.

Mr. Henry Fawcett, M.P., made a statement on the floor of the British House of Commons, October 13, 1884, as follows:

Search through the speeches that have been made in favour of the enfranchisement of the rural householder, and I say there is not an argument or an appeal that has been made which does not bring into striking relief the injustice of saying that no woman shall be admitted to any share in the government of her country. There is a saying, 'be just and fear not.' On a thousand platforms we have declared that taxation and representation should go together. Is it just that woman should be taxed without their consent?

We heard it announced on the floor of the British House of Commons not many months ago that the enforcement of the unwise policy of taxation without representation cost England her great American colonies, and to-day the booming of cannon and the rattling of musketry are heard in South Africa for the enforcement of that principle. British rights were invaded, British subjects were denied the privilege of representation although they were taxed, and to-day the cost in blood and treasure to the British Empire is very heavy in vindication of the principle that British subjects should not be taxed without representation. Woman suffrage has been agitated in the United States, and many years ago the state of Wyoming was selected as a place in which to test the subject. It was tried in that state and found satisfactory. It has been tried in Utah, in Kansas and in other places in the United States, and in all of the places where it has been tried it has proved to be satisfactory. It has been tried in New Zealand, in one of the colonies belonging to the British Empire, and the result has been highly satisfactory in that country. We have the statement of Mr. Courtney, a member of the British House of Commons, who said :

Women are elected for boards of guardians and it has proved successful, and also school boards. On these important boards having proved satisfactory, is reason why they should be eligible to parliamentary franchise.

It has been advocated in the House of Commons of this country and the principle was introduced into the Franchise Bill of 1884 by Sir John Macdonald. The principle of the right of women to vote met with a good deal of favour in this House in 1885, and I am glad to say that very many hon. members on the other side of the House, and some ministers of the Crown were in favour of that principle being incorporated in the Franchise Act. The present hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Postmaster General and others made the statement on that occasion that it was the only good provision in the Bill, and the women of Canada had a right to expect when the present government came into power, and a new Franchise Bill enacted, that women would be given a right to vote. It was advocated by other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, among them, by the late Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald and by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, but it was finally withdrawn on account of the opposition that it met with from various sources. It was advocated in the House of Commons in England, and here is what Mr. Herbert Spencer, who, it will be admitted, is a very good authority on a question of that kind, stated :

The extension of the law of equal freedom to both sexes will doubtless be objected to on the ground that the political privileges exercised by men must thereby be ceded to women also. Of course, they must, and why not? We are told, however, that 'woman's mission' is a domestic one, that her character and position do not admit of her taking part in the decision of public questions, that politics are beyond her sphere. But this raises the question, who shall say what her sphere is? As the usages of mankind vary so much, let us hear how it is to be shown that the sphere we assign her is the true one, that the limits we have set to female activity are the just and proper limits. Let us hear why on this point of our social polity we are exactly right, whilst we are wrong on so many others. We must conclude that, being required by that first requisite to greatest happiness, the law of equal freedom, such a concession is unquestionably right and good.

Here is an authority that cannot be questioned and from one of the greatest statesmen that ever lived in England or in any other country. I refer to the late Mr. Gladstone. In his speech in the British House of Commons, on May 3, 1871, Mr. Gladstone said :

Modern law has extended the right to women in the municipality, so far as voting is concerned. With respect to the school boards we have done wisely in giving both the franchise and the right of sitting on the school board to women. Then comes a question, with regard to parliament. We are to ask ourselves whether or not we shall go further. There is a more presumptive ground for a change than some of the opponents of the measure are disposed to own. Women obtain, in some important particulars, much less than justice under social arrangements. In the case of farms, I believe, to some extent, in the competition for that particular employment women suffer in a very definite manner in consequence of their want of qualification to vote. So far as I am able to form an opinion of the general tone and colour of our law on these matters, where the peculiar relation of men and women are concerned the law does less than justice to woman. The man who can arrange a safe and well adjusted law as to political power bearing upon the welfare of woman, will be a benefactor.

Lord John Manners, speaking in the British House of Commons, in March, 1884, made the following statement :

Take the case of one large and influential section of the female ratepayers—I mean, female farmers.

The census shows that in 1881 there were upwards of 20,000 female farmers in England. Not one of these has the vote for parliamentary purposes.

Pass this Bill, and every carter, every ploughman, every hedger and ditcher, every agricultural labourer, who receives wages from the female farmer will have the privilege of voting. But the female farmer, who pays the wages, who is so important a factor in the economy of the parish, will remain without a vote. Will you tell me that the anomaly will not be greatly increased, and the sense of it embittered to the female ratepayer whom you are going to treat in this cavalier manner.

I have another declaration from one of England's great statesmen, Mr. Benjamin Disraeli, the late Prime Minister of England. Disraeli, replying to a memorial of the Women's Suffrage Association, on April 29, in 1873, penned the following statement :

I was much honoured by receiving from your hands the memorial signed by 10,000 women of England, among them some illustrious names, thanking me for my services in attempt to abolish the anomaly that the parliamentary franchise attached to a household or property qualification when possessed by a woman should not be exercised, though in all matters of local government, when similarly qualified, she exercises this right. As I believe this anomaly to be injurious to the best interests of the country, I trust to see it removed by the wisdom of parliament.

That question was discussed for many years in the British House of Commons, and divisions were taken on it. I shall quote the result of these divisions for a number of years, commencing in 1867, and coming down to 1884 :

Divisions in House of Commons, England.
	For.	Against.
1867.....	75	196
1870.....	94	220
1871.....	151	220
1872.....	143	222
1873.....	155	222
1875.....	152	187

Divisions in House of Commons, England.—Con.

	For.	Against.
1876.....	152	238
1878.....	140	219
1879.....	103	217
1883.....	114	130
1884.....	135	271

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I am wrong in my advocacy of woman suffrage, I, at least, have the satisfaction of being wrong in very good company. Let me read to the House a brief list of some of those who have advocated this policy in the parliament of Great Britain, and elsewhere in the mother country :

Benjamin Disraeli.
Wm. E. Gladstone.
John Stuart Mill.
John Bright.
Jacob Bright.
Herbert Spencer.
Sir Stafford Northcote.
Bishop Carlisle.
Rev. Canon Kingsley.
Lord John Manners.
Col. King Harmer, M.P.
Mr. Courtney, M.P.
Prof. Lindsay.
The London 'Times.'
Mr. Joseph Cowan, M.P.
The 'Pall Mall Gazette' (in an article written by Mrs. Henry Fawcett).
Mr. Chisholm Austey.
Mr. Henry Fawcett.
Lord Brougham.
Lord Iddesleigh.
Mr. Forsyth, M.P.
Mr. Hugh Mason.
Mr. Woodall, M.P.
Baron de Worms.

In conclusion, permit me to say that if there is one thing more than another which we require for the welfare of this country, it is purity in elections and the purification of the ballot box. If there is one thing more than another that this country desires, or should desire, it is to elevate our standard of political morality, and to cultivate a healthier political moral sentiment. From the revelations that have been made during the last few years, of ballot slipping and ballot stuffing, and the substitution by officials of false ballots for genuine ballots, by which honest Canadians have been cheated out of their votes; it should be quite clear to us all that rascalities have occurred in connection with our elections which ought to make every honest Canadian hang his head for shame. I think it will be admitted by every hon. member in this House, that the purification of the ballot box is necessary if we are to become a righteous nation. That happy result would be speedily brought about, in my opinion, if this parliament should decide to endow the women of Canada with the franchise. Woman is better, morally, and she is as good, intellectually and mentally, as man, and to endow her with the vote, would be a move in the direction of purifying our elections. I regret to say, Sir, that at the present time there seems to be an impression abroad in this country that the ballot is given as an article of merchandise, instead of being vested in our citizens as a sacred trust, to be used only in the interests and for the benefit of the country in which we live, and to be the true palladium of the rights and liberties of the people. I submit, Sir, that if we give to the ladies of Canada the right to vote, it will place our country in a higher position than she occupies at the present time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have just one word to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Moore), and that is to remind him that the question of the suffrage has been relegated by this parliament to the provinces. Without expressing any opinion upon the views which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Moore) has presented today, I submit to him that the proper sphere to propagate them is in the legislatures of the provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. MOORE. I would point out to my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that he is somewhat mistaken in that contention. The Electoral Franchise Act, which passed through the House this session, deals with the qualification of certain voters, and, therefore, it is plain that the House has not divested itself of its power in that respect. We have provided in that measure that certain voters shall be disqualified, and surely, if we can do that, we can provide that certain classes of our citizens shall be qualified to exercise the franchise for elections to the federal parliament.

THE COAL INDUSTRY OF CANADA.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, there is a matter which seems to me important enough to justify a reference to it, even at this late date of the session. I speak of the coal industry of Canada, and I refer more particularly in this connection to the coal industry of Nova Scotia. This is a question which has engaged the attention of the House for very many years, and, particularly, for the last twenty years. This parliament came to the rescue of that great industry in 1878, and in almost every year since then legislation looking to its development has been enacted. There were two periods, however, at which the subject received more than ordinary consideration at the hands of this House and the people of the country. Recently, the impression has gone abroad that the efforts of the parliament of Canada were, to some extent, wasted on this industry, on account of the means which parliament adopted for its encouragement and development. Outside of this House, and sometimes in this House, a great deal is said about our coal industry, and it is often said at random, and said without a knowledge of the real facts. To the people of Ontario especially, who made great sacrifices for over twenty years in consenting to a measure which had for its object the encouragement and development of the coal industry in Nova Scotia, particular reference should be made. I, as one of those who come from a coal county, know, from personal knowledge, the difficulties that members of my own party had in influencing, not only those who were opposed to us in politics, but also those who were with us, to give that support, by means of a duty imposed upon the product of other countries which entered into competition with us, and which protection we considered necessary to give to the coal industry what we would call fair-play. The people of Ontario, as hon. members know, cannot expect that a large quantity of coal from the lower provinces will enter their province.

For that reason they were obliged to draw their coal supplies from the United States. When we received the protection which we demanded for our coal, it naturally worked against the interests of the people of Ontario, and year after year we had to offset that by meeting a demand from the people of Ontario for protection on their flour. By an arrangement with our friends from the province of Ontario we were able to secure for the coal industry that measure of protection which we thought necessary in order to enable our operators to compete with the coal producers of the United States in the markets of our own country, especially in the markets of the St. Lawrence up to the city of Montreal. Now, when these people hear the statement made that all that has been done for that industry has been wasted, it is important for them to understand whether such a statement is founded on fact or not; and that is my apology for troubling the House for a few moments at this late hour of the session. My contention is that such a statement, which is frequently made in this House and outside of it, and sent broadcast throughout the country, is without foundation, and I propose to bring before the House certain facts in proof of what I say. In 1874—and I do not propose to go further back in the coal history of our country—the total coal sales of the operators of the province of Nova Scotia, which covered all the coal that was mined in Canada at that date, was 749,127 tons. In 1878, after four years of the rule of the Reform party, during which that industry received no assistance whatever at the hands of the people who then governed the country, the sales were reduced to 693,511 tons, or a decrease of  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in four years. When I refer to the operations in my own constituency, Cape Breton, I find that while the sales of 1874 amounted to 337,016 tons, they were reduced by 1878 to 299,055 tons, or a decrease of  $11\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. Hon. gentlemen will remember that as a part of the National Policy the Conservative party in 1879 imposed a duty on American coal in order to encourage the coal trade up the St. Lawrence as far as it could reach by navigation. The result of that policy was that in the year 1880, the sales of the province of Nova Scotia increased to 955,659 tons, or an increase of 39 per cent over the sales of 1878, and the sales in the county of Cape Breton increased to 380,848 tons, an increase of 30 per cent. That was the result in two years, with the experience of only one year of protection. Five years later, in 1885, the sales of the province of Nova Scotia reached 1,254,510 tons, or an increase of  $31\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, and the sales of the county of Cape Breton reached 617,975 tons, or an increase of  $62\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. At the end of the next five years, that is, in 1890, the sales of Nova Scotia amounted to 1,786,111 tons, or an increase over those of 1885 of  $42\frac{1}{2}$  per cent; and the sales of the county of Cape Breton amounted to 916,994 tons, or an increase over those of 1885 of  $48\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. In 1893 a change took place in the management of the coal industry of a portion of the province of Nova Scotia, for which a great deal of credit is claimed for the development which that industry has experienced since. For that reason I take that year for the next comparison, and I find that in 1893, the coal sales of the province amounted to 1,997,543 tons, or an increase of  $10\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in three years, and those of the county of Cape Breton amounted to 1,284,381 tons, or an increase of 40 per cent in three years. I might mention that in 1893 the government of Nova Scotia changed the fiscal year for calculating the coal business, making it end with end of September instead of, as was formerly the case, at the end of December. I refer to this change so that persons looking at the records will not be misled into supposing that 1,400,000 tons were the sales of that year instead of 1,997,543 tons. Then, taking the year 1898, at the end of five years after the change to which I have referred was brought about by the legislation in the province of Nova Scotia for which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance frequently takes a great deal of credit to himself, I find that the increase during those five years was only 8 per cent, the smallest we have had in any period of five years, extending over twenty years. The total sales of the province of Nova Scotia, at the end of the five years, after the organization of the Dominion Coal Company, were 2,135,397 tons, and for the county of Cape Breton the increase in the five years was  $8\frac{1}{4}$  per cent, or 1,390,596 tons—the smallest increase for over twenty years.

I want to point out that while things were going on as they were from 1879 to 1893, we had a larger percentage of increase from year to year than we have had since then up to 1898, and I might say to the House that the full year 1898 is the last record available in this House for the purposes of comparison. But I think my comparison is reasonable when I take five years from the time that legislation had passed and compare that period with any one of the five year periods preceding.

I want to put the matter in another light before the House. Hon. gentlemen will remember that at that time all the coal fields operated in the county of Cape Breton were amalgamated into this one concern, known as the Dominion Coal Company, except the General Mining Association property at Sydney mines. That is the oldest of our coal mines. In 1885, the sales of that mine—and when I speak of the sales, I speak practically of the whole production of the mine except what is required in connection with its operation—in 1885 the sales were 103,917 tons. In 1890, at the end of five years, and under the national policy, the sales of that mine increased to 150,468 tons, or an increase of 45 per cent over 1885.

In 1893, at a period when the other coal mines in the neighbourhood were handed over to the Dominion Coal Company for three years operation, the sales were 164,078 tons, or an increase of 8½ per cent over 1890. This percentage is very much the same rate as the percentage which took place in respect of the other collieries and the total product of the province of Nova Scotia. In 1898, five years after the passing of the Dominion Coal Company's Act, and the amalgamation of all the other mines—and when the General Mining Association was not worked with this great modern plant, according to statements frequently made, but just as it was before and by the same people—the production of this colliery ran up to 243,638 tons, or an increase of 48½ per cent. I hope that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will make a note of this, that while the increase in this mine was 48½ per cent over what it was five years previously, the total increase which took place, taking all the mines, was only 8 per cent, which goes to show that instead of the Dominion Coal Company properties increasing its output in the ratio in which the output of the mine which was not incorporated increased, it fell to so far below as the difference between 8 per cent and 48½ per cent. My contention is that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and those who speak as he does, are speaking without being backed up by the facts, when they say that the organization of the Dominion Coal Company was the cause of any prosperity or of a great measure of the prosperity that we have to-day in that industry. I say that while these people are doing well, while they are spending a large amount of money, employing a great deal of labour, and in some instances giving higher wages, those facts are due to circumstances other than any to which the Minister of Finance or any of his friends can make any claim.

Another argument is that through the organization of this company, a large market was secured to the United States, and that to that market is due the measure of prosperity we now enjoy. I take issue on that also, and I want to show that in 1898, after the operations of five years on behalf of that company, with influential members of that company residing in the United States, commanding great avenues in the

Mr. McDougall.

United States, possessing great influence in the legislatures of the United States, and with the consumers of that country, instead of our being able to market any large quantity of coal in the American market, we failed to do so up to the end of the year, 1898, for which I have the figures and for which only figures are available in this House. I tried to get the figures for the subsequent year, but was not able. However, for the purposes of my argument I think I can fairly take five years operations and compare that with any five years beginning 1879, and what do we find with regard to where this coal is marketed. We find that in the province of Nova Scotia itself, in 1898, our operators marketed 657,250 tons; in New Brunswick, 266,789 tons; in Prince Edward Island, 62,051 tons; in Newfoundland, 93,241 tons; in Quebec, 944,160 tons; in the United States, 98,027 tons. That is to say, in the United States, we marketed about 4,000 tons more than we marketed in the colony of Newfoundland and only about 30,000 tons more than we marketed in the little province of Prince Edward Island. And this is the great market to which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) calls our attention as the market which was secured to the people engaged in that coal industry by means of the legislation passed in Nova Scotia when he was Prime Minister of that province. In other countries we marketed 3,877 tons. This made a total production for the province of 2,281,454 tons. Now, let us examine into another feature of this market. Of the 98,027 tons that we marketed in the United States in 1898, only 12,956 tons were what we really called coal, that is coal for domestic purposes, for steam purposes and so on—round coal—while the remainder of 85,071 tons was culm or slack coal, which goes into the United States market under a duty of 15 cents per ton. More than that, I am quite sure that I am within the facts when I say that not one single ton of that coal marketed in the United States has yielded the operators a ten-cent piece of profit. Rather than that, I venture to say, there is a loss on every ton of it; and that loss has to be made up on the quantity of coal they send to other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). They must be great fools to send it there.

Mr. McDougall. That is not our business.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) give the figures for 1899?

Mr. McDougall. I could not get them; they are not in the library.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I have them here.

Mr. McDougall. I sent to the library twice and could not get them. The hon.

gentleman may be favoured ; I am not favoured. His friends in Nova Scotia may have sent a copy in advance to him before sending it to the library.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not want to give the figures ; they would not suit his speech.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am willing the hon. gentlemen should bring forward anything he has in that respect. As I said, the hon. gentleman will have plenty of time when I am done. I am quite willing to have any figures of the years since 1898—only one complete year can be available—from the returns presented to the House of Assembly of Nova Scotia. I have no hesitation in saying that an increase has taken place in the sales in the United States. I do not want to deny that for a moment. But my contention is this—that if a further increase has taken place, it is a mere bagatelle.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Is it not nearly double ?

Mr. McDOUGALL. If it is double or quadruple, what is that to speak of ?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). It would not suit the hon. gentleman's speech to give the figures.

Mr. McDOUGALL. When I speak of coal, I mean coal that is saleable in any part of Canada. How many tons of culm or slack coal would be sold in Montreal or more than a very few miles from the coal mines, except for the purpose for which it is brought to the United States. The coal sent to the United States by the Dominion Coal Company is consumed in a manufacture which is carried on by themselves—gas works, or something of that kind. It is a cheap class of coal. It is the coal that the company may consume ; but I say the coal that our operators live by is the coal that they sell to our own people, mainly for carrying on the industries of Canada, industries that were encouraged by the national policy. This is what they reap the profit from, and not from the coal shipped to the United States. It will be enough for my hon. friend to make a claim of benefit from the market in the United States when returns actually come from it. But, so far they have not got a dollar of return from it, and so they need not boast.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. McDOUGALL. No. They are sending this coal to the United States against a duty of 15 cents a ton. But what is to prevent the people of the United States from putting up that duty to 75 cents a ton or putting it up to where they had it in 1867, to $1.25 a ton. The only way we can get a market in the United States with any stability about it or one in which we can place any dependence is by some sort of reciprocity arrangement under which the duty will be fixed for a number of years. But a market to which we send a few thousand tons against a duty of 15 cents a ton and under a loss is nothing to brag of. On the other hand, look at the increase of our trade in the other provinces of Canada which I have already given. These are the markets we should seek, these are the markets we can always depend upon. We may be able to send a large quantity to the United States one year and, perhaps, the next year cannot send any. I have given the export to the United States for 1898, the last year for which I have returns. If the hon. gentleman follows me and gives to the House the figures for 1899, I would like him to name the proportion of round coal, screened coal, or run-of-mine coal even, that goes to the United States and also the proportion of slack or culm coal. That explains what kind of coal we are sending to the United States. What benefit are we getting from it ? This culm coal was only waste some years ago in Cape Breton, and that comes in and creates a market for this material.

It is possible that their experiments will result, after some years, in creating a large and permanent market. But it must be remembered that this was being done under difficulties, that we were sending coal to the United States at a time when we were met by a higher duty than we are met with now, and, therefore, so far as we are concerned, it is not worth looking after. It may be worth looking after for those who are engaged in the business, but for my part, I would not attach any importance to it. The market to which I attach importance, is the market where the coal industry is now being developed, and the Montreal market, and the market of the great centres of Canada, where we have no duty against it. In 1867, we had a market in the United States for nearly all our coal, we sent that year 450,000 tons to the United States. That was partly due to the fact that the coal mines of the United States were not so fully developed, and the markets in the great centres of eastern Canada were not what they are now. The rates were high, they had to pay two or three times present prices for the conveyance of coal from the coal countries of the United States to the New England markets, and because the only way of disposing of our coal then, was to send it by water. In 1867, when the United States found that our coal was being sold to that extent in the Atlantic cities on the seaboard, they put on a duty of $1.25 a ton, and that knocked our coal out. They can do that any time they see fit, and the very moment they do it, they shut us out. Then, what must we do ? We have turned our attention to the American market altogether too much for our coal. I say no man of good sense will undertake to engage in business under conditions of that kind. The coal miners want the Canadian market, they want the home market, every market they can reach. In 1898 we sold of round coal to Prince Edward Island, 25,498 tons, instead of 12,000 that we sold to the United States; and we sold to Newfoundland, 89,972 tons, instead of the 12,000 that we sold to the United States. But we only sold of slack coal, 3,269 tons. I hope the Minister of Finance will be more careful when he speaks outside or inside this House, and boasts that the legislation for which he claims so much credit, brought about such a great measure of prosperity. I hope he will be more careful to give us some better facts to sustain that contention, than he has so far given; in fact he has given us nothing, he made bald statements in this House and outside of this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To whom is the hon. gentleman referring?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am referring to my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does the hon. gentleman know that he is out of order?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not think that I am out of order, the hon. gentleman very frequently refers to that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has made a statement which he knows is out of order. I do not want to interrupt him, but I ask him not to do it again.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I say that the Minister of Finance for years has been claiming credit for benefits accruing from the legislation which he passed before he left the legislature of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is quite correct, I endorse that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But, I say that these statements were made without being supported by facts. There is another cause of complaint in my constituency in regard to that legislation, and that is that it closed down some collieries that were prosperous at that time. The mine known as the Gowry mine, in 1885, produced 7,580 tons of coal; in 1890, 124,641; in 1892, 138,413. Now, this mine was closed after that legislation was passed, and the people who were engaged in working that mine lost their employment at their homes. A great many of them had established homes for themselves, and these homes were rendered valueless to them. They were obliged to abandon them without being able to get any return for them. In the mine known as the Victoria mine, in 1885, the production was 39,926 tons; in 1890, 77,367 tons; and in 1892, 108,332. The House will see that those mines were doing about the same rate of business as the other mines which were incorporated with them, as the property that was made over to the

Mr. McDOUGALL.

Dominion Coal Company. In the case of both mines, a large number of people who were engaged in working the mines and had saved money during a period of some twenty years, had bought land and built houses for themselves, shortly after the passing of this legislation were obliged to abandon those homes. Not only was that the case, but a number of these people had to crowd into other collieries, where they found it difficult to get employment, and where there was little employment enough for those already there.

Now, I do not wish it to be understood that I find fault entirely with that legislation. I am willing to admit that that legislation did some good; but I am not willing to admit that it has done any more good than was done through the development of those collieries under the old system and under the old management. Those mines and the people who worked them were already enjoying a fair measure of prosperity during the fifteen years previous to that legislation, and I think it would have been better to let them remain as they were before the change took place, a change which was made at a sacrifice of so many interests of the people concerned. I say that so long as things were going on well, no disturbance should have been made. There was a way by which this legislation could have been accomplished without bringing about these troubles which I complain of, for so many of our people.

My hon. friend's policy was to bring about this amalgamation, cost what it would. Now, it was the duty of the company to get such concessions as would enable them to carry on that business in a business-like and profitable way, and nobody can find fault with them for so doing. They were not going into this business for the benefit of the workmen who were engaged in that occupation. They were going into it with the view of advancing their own interests, and if the interests of the people conformed with their own interests, well and good. The Minister of Finance should have seen that the interests of the people were guarded. But, the hon. Minister of Finance brings about another change in the condition of things. A short time before this these coal mines paid a royalty of 8 cents per ton on their output. That was a tax on the labour of the workman, and we considered that it was a high enough tax. We consider so still. But, the hon. Minister of Finance went to work and imposed a tax of 12½ cents a ton royalty on coal under the new conditions. It is not unreasonable to suppose that this organization expected a quid pro quo, and it got it in this way, that, previous to the passing of that legislation, any man who held a coal mine without working it would forfeit it to the Crown, and anybody might acquire it under the laws of the province. The hon. Minister of Finance goes to work and changes that part of the law and allows this company to hold these properties whether they worked them or not, they paying no royalty on them, and giving no employment to anybody.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did you ever know of one to be forfeited under the old condition of things ?

Mr. McDOUGALL. No, because they were being worked.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, they were not being worked, and the hon. gentleman knows it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not know that my hon. friend can go very far in that direction without being put right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman knows that scores and miles of them were not worked.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There were very few properties in Cape Breton that were not worked.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were scores of leases in Cape Breton, and a pick was never put into the ground.

Mr. McDOUGALL. We are not talking about leases. I am talking about opened and developed mines. The difficulty then was that there was more coal than there was a market for. More of them would have been worked if the market had been there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman says that he is speaking of developed mines. The Block House mine was a developed mine, it was not worked, and it was not forfeited.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman knows very well that only two years ago a proposal was made by his successor, Premier Murray, of Nova Scotia, to the company for giving up its Victoria mine, and that he then went so far as to offer a reduction in the royalty, owing to the pressure brought on him by the people and workmen, after the closing of the mine.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is another question.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That is a question that bears very strongly on the question at issue.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman undertakes to state a fact. The hon. gentleman said that the conditions of the old law required that a mine should be worked or forfeited. I said that there were scores of leases on which a pick was never put, and that they were not forfeited. Then, he said that he had spoken of developed mines. Then I took the case of a developed mine that was not worked and that was not forfeited, so that what he stated as a fact did not exist at all.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am not talking about what the practice was. I am not talking about those who had the power to put the law into operation, but I am talking about the law as it existed, and it was that a property must either be worked or given up to the Crown. The hon. gentleman changed the law, and, no doubt, the company acted within the law. If he had left the royalty where it was, and not unduly tax the company, but in consequence of the increased royalty these people are paying just now more than $100,000 a year, and they have to economize where they can.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear. Where does it go ?

Mr. McDOUGALL. My hon. friend says 'hear, hear.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where does it go ?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Into the provincial treasury.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But, where does it come from ? It comes from the operator, and from the hard working labourer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The operator has got higher wages than he got before.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Precisely, but he is getting that everywhere else. Where is the place that the hon. Minister of Finance can name where he cannot get better wages now than he got at that time ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is a Liberal government in power now.

Mr. McDOUGALL. On the question of exercising the power of closing a mine, it was never intended to forfeit a mine unless the government saw fit to do it. Those mines which were opened were then producing enough coal for the market. It is not the case to-day. People who had gathered around the Victoria mine or the Gowrie mine, and taken up properties there with the intention of living there for the rest of their lives, were compelled by this legislation to abandon them. I do not mean to blame the company. What they did they did legally, under the law that the hon. gentleman passed. Could they have done it under the previous law ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, certainly, just as readily.

Mr. McDOUGALL. They could not, because the laws of Nova Scotia would not allow them to hold these mines without working them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman knows that the same mine was closed under the old law and was not forfeited, the very mine he speaks of.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That might possibly be in regard to any of the mines, because there was more coal produced than there was a market for. Take the company known as the General Mining Association, operating a colliery on each side of the harbour, with ships coming into the harbour; they found that they could only get a market for 100,000 tons of coal, and they closed down operations at the mine across the harbour, known as the Victoria, because they could produce all the coal that the market required on one side. That is the reason that the General Mining Association did not work that mine for a while.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). What about the Lingan mine? It was owned by the General Mining Association.

Mr. McDOUGALL. They worked the Lingan mine, and then they removed their operations to the Victoria mine. I believe that the coal was exhausted in the Lingan mine. We had the closing of mines then; we had them practically forfeited.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They forfeited them, how?

Mr. McDOUGALL. There was the Block House mine on Cow Bay. During the hard times, from 1874 to 1878, when our coal mines had difficulty in keeping their operations alive, when the whole production was only a little over half a million tons, the Block House mine on Cow Bay got behind with its royalty, as did every other coal mine in Cape Breton. The owners could not market their coal, and when they did market it they were obliged to market it at a loss. The Block House mine was indebted to the government of Nova Scotia for royalty. The manager of the Block House mine happened to be, in politics, opposed to the present hon. Minister of Finance, who was Prime Minister of Nova Scotia at that time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He was an American citizen, and did not have a vote.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not know that there is very much need of referring to that, since the hon. Minister of Finance's greater man, Mr. Whitney, has no vote in Cape Breton.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not an objection that he is an American citizen, but when the hon. gentleman says that he was opposed to me in politics, I simply call his attention to the fact that he had no vote at all.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not think the hon. gentleman would object to the support of some people who have no votes, even if they are American citizens. This man was opposed to the hon. gentleman in politics. He was like the rest of the coal operators in Cape Breton; when they were looking to the party of the hon. gentleman for a policy that would encourage the great coal industry, they found they could not secure it at the hands of the hon. gentleman and his friends. Therefore, it was, that they supported the people who advocated that policy which they believed to be in their interests. Mr. Belloni, who managed that mine and the majority of the workmen supported the Conservative party. He supported me in 1878. He was in arrears for royalty, as were nearly all the coal mines in Nova Scotia at that time, but when my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) came into power in 1882, one of the first things he did was to go to work, and finding Mr. Belloni in arrears for royalty, for labour, and for material; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) took advantage of the law and he sent down his legal missionary to Cow Bay and seized on the plant and rolling stock of Mr. Belloni.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) knows it was a long time after I came into power.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It does not matter; you closed him up anyway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But it does matter. The hon. gentleman says that the very first thing I did when I came into power was to interfere with this poor man's business, but as a matter of fact he was allowed to go on for several years without paying one penny.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not know whether it is one year or two years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then if you do not know you should not talk about it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It does not matter what time it took place; it had the effect of destroying that man's business, and more than that, it prevented him from paying his labourers. That is worse than the condition to which my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) referred, as to the coal mines not being closed. They could have been closed if the law had been put in force.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And you say we could have forfeited his property and did not do it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The reason you would not do it was because you knew you would have a white elephant on your hands the same as you had in the Eastern Extension Railway, and you did not know how to handle the white elephant. I say, Sir, that under the law it is our duty to encourage every one who operates a coal mine, and whether that be Mr. Whitney or any one else, we should not take an unfair advantage of him. Mr. Whitney was perfectly justified in closing these mines if he saw fit, because he did it under the law passed by my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding). Our quarrel is with the people who passed that law. So long as Mr. Whitney complies with the law that was passed for his benefit, and under the pretense of being for the benefit of the whole people of Nova Scotia, we have no quarrel with Mr. Whitney, but we have a quarrel and we will continue to have a quarrel with my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) and those who were associated with him in passing that Act. They had a remedy at their hands. There was a means by which they could have promoted the interests of Mr. Whitney and at the same time protected the interests of the people, and we claim that they were derelict in their duty in not adopting that remedy. I say that the coal industry was unduly taxed by that legislation. The coal industry is a business that has to be carried on with great danger of loss, both to the mine owner and to the workmen, and for that reason it should not be taxed as it has been in Nova Scotia. There is no coal mine in Canada to-day that should be taxed to pay 12½ cents a ton royalty. The only reason ever given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) for taxing that coal industry was to get a revenue for the province of Nova Scotia. I will not at this late hour of the session go into details as to how that increased revenue was disposed of in the province, as compared with the revenues enjoyed previously. If I compare the disbursement of that revenue with the disbursement of the revenue previously, and which was smaller than it is now, I could show with the greatest ease that the increased revenue from the coal royalty was of no advantage at all to the people. This, Mr. Speaker, is a matter which not only Nova Scotia, but the other provinces of the Dominion are interested in. The more we develop our great industries, whether coal or iron or steel, or anything else, the more we do for the general good of our country. I say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has unduly taxed that industry, and he and his associates will have very little peace until that tax is reduced and until justice is done. Now that a large increase has taken place in the production of coal, there is not the same necessity for a high royalty, and for that reason, I hope the day is very near when we will have that tax reduced, and an opportunity given to open up again the undeveloped mines we have in Cape Breton. We have immense coal properties there, and it is the duty of this government and of the provincial government as well, to enable us to supply the market for coal which we now have, and to create new markets. I might deal with the question of the iron and steel industry in Cape Breton, for the development of which the Liberals outside of this House—aided by the statements of the Finance Minister—are trying to take great credit to themselves, but I do not think it is necessary to do so at this stage. I believe that the Canadian people have too much good sense to be carried away by such baseless statements that are indulged in at random by the Liberals of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The question that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) has discussed at such great length is somewhat local in its character: although I will not say that it is not interesting in some quarters. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) will agree with me that there are manifest indications that the question does not interest the House very much at this present stage of the session. The question is well understood, however, in the county of Cape Breton, where all the facts which the hon. gentleman has stated are well known, and where the things he has stated which are not facts are also perfectly understood: and in the presence of the conditions as they exist in the county of Cape Breton it is really not necessary for any one to say much on the subject. There is an illustration frequently quoted of a tablet in St. Paul's in London, placed there to the memory of the great architect who designed that stately pile. It gives the name of Sir Christopher Wren, and says: 'If you would see his monument, look around.' The Liberal candidate in the county of Cape Breton, when the necessity arises for one, will only have to say that if the people of that county wish to see the results of the Liberal policy, all they will have to do will be to look around at the prospect.

Mr. McDUGALL. Does my hon. friend refer to the monument he erected in Nova Scotia, known as the public debt, which casts its shadow over the door of everybody in that province?

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—THE TRANSPORTATION BUSINESS.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I desire to bring a matter to the attention of the House, and my reputation for short speeches is so well established, that hon. gentlemen need not have much apprehension. The idea prevails very generally in this country that the government should turn as much of its business as possible into the hands of Canadian subjects; but I wish to call attention to the fact, that the freights of materials sent to South Africa, were very largely handled through American brokers, to the exclusion of Canadian brokers. My hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills), before he left for home, had looked into this matter, and it is more on account of the trouble he took in connection with it, than any direct interest I have in it myself, that I now bring it before the House. It is a matter that affects largely the province of New Brunswick and certain citizens of St. John; but it affects others as well, because, as is well known, the business of freight shipping is very largely conducted in the maritime provinces. This matter was deemed sufficiently important to warrant soliciting the assistance of some members of the government to endeavour to obtain from the gentleman who had charge of the business, Mr. Robertson, the dairy commissioner in the Department of Agriculture, some attention to the claims of these Canadian ship-brokers. There may be no just ground for complaint, and there may have been no harm done; but the matter which I have been asked to bring to the notice of the House is this, that the business done by the Department of Agriculture, with regard to handling and exporting materials, largely the produce of Canada to South Africa, was almost exclusively conducted through firms of brokers resident in Boston; and the parties in Canada most interested in the matter, the firm of Scammell & Co., of St. John, are inclined to feel that they have not been very fairly used in this connection. They almost go the length of saying that they were to a certain extent misled in connection with the matter; or, if they were not misled, there was something very inconsistent in the results achieved by them with the correspondence they had with the dairy commissioner, Mr. Robertson. I quote a letter from Messrs. Scammell & Co., addressed to a member of this House (Mr. Mills), because it contains the gist of all that is to be said on the subject, from their point of view:

I beg to advise that the following steamers have loaded here on the government account for South Africa, and with the exception of the 'Mohican' (fixed by Wm. Thomson & Co.), have all been chartered by American brokers, who, apparently, had early information as to the government's requirements, and consequently the preference on the business. We did our best to secure some of this business, but apparently could not come in touch with the government. They declined the 'Manhanset' from us, and afterwards took her from a Boston firm, with whom they did the most chartering.

The vessels chartered as given in this letter were: The Massapequa, 1,935 tons, two trips; the Janeta, 2,197 tons; the Manantia, 1,760 tons; the Masconomo, 2,738 tons; the Mohican, 1,749 tons; the Fashoda, 1,782 tons; and the Manhanset, 1,742 tons. These gentlemen inclosed in their letter a telegram, showing the peculiar way in which this business was done. On March 8, they had a telegram from Mr. Robertson saying:

Not yet ready charter April sailings, and will not require sailings before April 23.

Early in April, within a month or so after the date of that telegram, a charter was made for an April sailing steamer, by Mr. Robertson, without further communication with these gentlemen; and it looks as if the government, or the gentlemen who had charge of this business, had not made any effort to bestow the very lucrative business that would arise from these charters, upon Canadian firms. I find that another firm in St. John had the same impression—that they were not very well treated. I quote a letter from Wm. Thomson & Co., of St. John, dated April 2, to Professor Robertson, in which they say in reference to the steamer Manhanset:

We note confirmation of your fixture of this boat through Messrs. John G. Hall & Co., which we presume will consign to us in St. John; but the agency fee here is only $50, whereas Messrs. Hall make six times that amount in commission on her charter. In regard to the matter, Messrs. Hogan write us:

We have fixed this boat on same terms and conditions as 'Mohican' with Prof. Robertson. We regret that in fixing these boats some arrangement could not have been arrived at whereby both of you could participate, but we have considered the only fair way was, after we received intimation that you would like to have a boat placed through yourselves, to name the same price and conditions to all the brokers, and then, of course, Prof. Robertson would be the one to decide which should have the fixing.

You will see by this that the whole matter is in your own hands, and as Messrs. Hall have now fixed five boats with you, and we have only had one, we hope you will give us the preference on the 'Massapequa,' which we have wired you would accept $29,000 and £55 per day demurrage.

They go on to say:

Messrs. Hall have made a very handsome thing out of the five charters, and we do hope you will not give American brokers all the commissions.

The result was that as far as the papers show—and I have those brought down in reply to a motion made in the House, which contain a portion of the correspondence, but manifestly not the whole of it—that with the exception of the steamer Mohican almost the whole of that very lucrative business—and it is stated that the brokerage in one of these cases would amount to $1,000 a trip—went into the hands of this Boston firm. So far as I know, the gentlemen in St. John who did not succeed in getting the business, are supporters of the present government. Therefore, I do not think I could put up a case to show that the government are favouring their own supporters as against their opponents. But out of respect to my hon. friend from Annapolis and his correspondents, who are prominent business men, I thought it proper to bring the matter to the notice of the House in this very brief fashion. These gentlemen claim that they made every reasonable effort to secure a share of the business and conclude that their failure was due entirely to the manner in which Prof. Robertson of the Agriculture Department conducted it. I do not suggest anything wrong, but I see no good reason why the business should not have been done by Canadian firms. The articles exported were the produce of Canada, and the business was that of the Imperial government, and should have been given to Canadians. If there was preference shown to a firm of foreign brokers, that was a mistake, and one of those with which the people will not be disposed to be patient.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If my hon. friend had told me he was going to bring this matter up, I would have had the details to present to the House.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I had intended waiting until we were in committee, but as there is great anxiety to get through with business, I took this opportunity of bringing the matter up, and must apologize to the hon. minister for not having sent him word.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only speak from memory, not having the details at hand, and not with that accuracy which the question deserves. In the fall of last year, when we were seeking for vessels to take hay across from the port of Montreal, we applied to all the ship-owners and brokers of Canada to make us offers, and found great difficulty in getting any, and the best we did receive came from this American firm. We afterwards had to get more ships and applied to the Canadian shipowners, and several ship brokers in the maritime provinces wrote to the department or telegraphed, in some instances, asking for an opportunity to offer ships. In every instance they were given an opportunity, but invariably we found the offers made by the New York firm considerably the best. In some cases, the New York firm offered the same ship at a price equal to $5,000 or $6,000 for the trip less than that at which the same ship was offered to us by brokers in Canada. Under the circumstances, we felt it to be our duty to the Imperial authorities, whose agents we were, to accept the lowest offer. I expressed my surprise more than once to Prof. Robertson, and he said that the ship brokers had told him that there were so many more ships chartered in New York by those firms that they could do the business cheaper and to greater advantage than Canadian firms.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The firm that did all the business was not a New York firm, but a Boston firm—John G. Hall & Co.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I think the hon. gentleman is right, but of course, I am only speaking from recollection. We felt it to be our duty to get the work done as cheaply as we could. As a matter of fact, none of the ships were Canadian ships with the exception of the MicMac, which was chartered from a New Glasgow firm. As far as Prof. Robertson was concerned, he consulted with me and I share the responsibility with him, although, of course, I left the matter almost entirely to his judgment. But he put the facts before me and showed me he was doing the very best he could to ship this hay at as low a price as possible. While it is true that this foreign firm did a good deal of the business, that was not due to any desire on the part of the department to deal with foreigners or to any desire on the part of Prof. Robertson or the department not to put this business in the way of Canadian ship brokers.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John City). I trust that the minister will refresh his memory and make a further statement to the House on this subject. As I understand the complaint of Scammell Bros, they made application to Professor Robertson to place a ship, and Professor Robertson notified them that no ship was needed at that time. In the meantime, an application was made to a Boston firm, I think, and they placed a ship. Scammell Bros. maintain that if they had been furnished with the information that the ship was required, they could have furnished it. I am not finding fault with the minister (Mr. Fisher), but am merely making this statement so that he can inquire into the matter and satisfy public opinion at St. John as to the facts of the case. Because one can readily understand that in a maritime port like St. John, where there are a great many carrying on business as brokers, there is considerable feeling at the admission of American brokers into the Canadian business—particularly business such as this was. A Canadian broker naturally has advantage for carrying out arrangements for shipping from a Canadian port. I shall be glad if the minister will look into the matter, particularly with reference to Scammell Bros.' complaint. I am not so well acquainted with the complaint of the Thomson Company, but I would like a better explanation as to the whole case.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will do so.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). It would appear from what has been stated that there is some misunderstanding. The statement of the minister is entirely at variance with what has been stated by others. Some time when the estimates are under consideration, the hon. minister might refresh his memory and give a fuller explanation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall be glad to follow the wish of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) and my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell). I am satisfied that I can put the case in such a way that they can understand it thoroughly. A limit was put upon the cost of this hay to be delivered in South Africa. That limit regulated the amount of hay that we could send, and also, to a very considerable extent regulated the price that could be paid for hay in Canada. The less we paid for freight, the more we could pay for the hay; therefore, it was in the interest not only of the Imperial authorities but also of Canada that the freight should be secured as cheaply as possible.

SAULT STE. MARIE CANAL.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I wish to draw the attention of the House, and particularly the Minister of Public Works, to a grievance that exists in the town of Sault Ste. Marie. I made reference to this matter some time ago—making the statement that though we had spent millions of dollars in building probably one of the finest locks in the world for the purpose of facilitating the transport of freights between the east and the west, the steamers of deep draught could not stop at the town of Sault Ste. Marie. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) contradicted the statement and said that the reason why the Canadian Pacific steamers went to the American side of the river was because they got their supplies of coal there.

Mr. GIBSON. Free of duty, I said.

Mr. TAYLOR. Free of duty—yes. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) contradicted me and said that there was plenty of water for steamers at the docks on the Canadian side. I made inquiry, and I want to read a resolution of the town council of Sault Ste Marie, and also a letter from one of the captains of the Northern Navigation Company. The letter is dated Collingwood, 9th of April, 1900, and reads as follows:

Dear Sir,—Replying to your favour of 5th inst., government dock at 'Soo,' Ont., has 14 feet water, 180 foot face and 200 foot sides; international dock, 14 feet water and 180 foot face. Plenty of dock room at canal piers, with twenty feet of water. I am not aware that boats going through locks stop all night on American side. No reason why they should unless they have business there, such as orders, coal, mails, &c. I do not think dock room would help matters there, but for the local trade there they require more water at the government and international docks, and more dock room. Local boats would require at least eighteen feet of water, as they would be drawing that on down trip loaded with flour and wheat. They often have freight for Canadian 'Soo,' which we cannot unload on account of the depth of water at docks.

Yours truly,

JAMES BASSETT,

Captain.

Here is a copy of a resolution passed by the town council of Sault Ste. Marie:

The council of the town of Sault Ste. Marie most respectfully submit:

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., has no dockage facilities that will permit any of the larger class of steamers landing on the Canadian side when laden, either on up or down trips.

The 'Majestic' has from time to time refused freight for this port, or when she did accept any quantity, landed same on canal slip and paid expenses of moving same to consignees.

The Canadian Pacific Railway steamers do not, and cannot, call at Canadian docks, neither can the Beatty steamers when loaded; they are forced to use the American docks. The Canadian Pacific Railway steamers do not coal at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, but take on coal at Owen Sound, where it is stored in bond, and neither they nor any steamers plying those lakes pay duty on such coal as they consume; they can coal 'in bond' at Canadian ports.

The government dock is in a disgraceful condition, and positively dangerous for ordinary traffic. Horses frequently break through the rotten covering, and last season one was killed. There is not sufficient depth of water at either of the docks on the Canadian side to enable steamers, 'except those of light draught' to land, and the channels by which the docks are approached are dangerous because of the boulders that exist and impede navigation.

Nearly all supplies for this section from Manitoba, such as flour, feed, bran, &c., has for years been landed on lights at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, or taken to Owen Sound and transhipped to local steamers and taken to Sault and other shipping points.

The loss in general trade to this country by steamers being unable to call is very considerable, and their landing at our docks yearly becomes a more important and desirable addition to our trade. The loss to the hotels in Sault, Canada, by the large passenger steamers being unable to land is a very serious item, and severely felt, while the delay, loss of time, worry and inconvenience every traveller from Canada is subject to, is incalculable.

Surely the most important town in Algoma, commercially and geographically speaking, with large ship canals and immense industries being developed, is much more entitled to the immediate attention and action of the government than many places where the population is practically nil and the traffic equally so, but to take care of a traffic that does not exist, large sums of public money is being voted. The present average depth of water at the government dock is about fourteen feet.

Mayor.

(Town seal.)

I think that ought to be enough to prove the statement I made before that there is a grievance there. It is a scandal that this country should have spent millions of money to make the best waterway there is in the world on the Canadian side of the Sault and have our trade driven over to the American side. When I went up there last year, I asked for a ticket for the Sault, and when the agent asked me, which Sault, I answered: The Canadian Sault. I was landed on the American side by the Canadian Pacific Railway steamer, and had to get aboard a little ferry boat that ferried us over to the Canadian side. I found that the same was done with all freight to the Canadian side. The late government made arrangements for a government dock, with the intention of making it part and parcel of the Canadian transportation system, the plan being that all the Canadian trade should stop there. But this government came in, and the matter is left as it was. They spent millions on other places, but they have not spent a dollar there and the trade of that port is driven to the American side, just because a few thousand dollars has not been spent in deepening the waterways, so that the steamers could come to the Canadian side of the river. I found, while at the Sault, that it was a great grievance that steamers could not touch there on account of the lack of water. As I say, when I made the statement, the hon. member for Lincoln contradicted me and said that the steamers went to the American side because they got their coal and supplies free of duty. Now, the town council shows that they can coal in bond at any Canadian port, and that they could go to the Canadian Sault if there was a sufficient depth of water there. While I was there last year, a boat had blocked the channel and there were about two hundred steamers on the American side waiting for a chance to pass, and not one on the Canadian side. They stayed there for three or four days until the obstruction was removed from the channel. If facilities had been such that they could have landed and tied up at Canadian piers, our Canadian merchants would have received a portion of that trade. Since the government is making so large an expenditure of money this year, I think that Sault Ste. Marie should receive their first care. They should give that government dock as well as the international dock each a sufficient draught of water to allow at least our Canadian Pacific Railway steamers to pass, so that they can call at Canadian ports instead of being forced, as now, over to the American side of the river on account of the shallow water.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

REVIEW OF THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) At this stage of the proceedings, in pursuance of the notice given to the Minister of Finance, I wish to make a few remarks and to conclude by a motion. The motion itself and the remarks as well have to do with the position of the government and the taxation and expenditures of the country. The subject-matter is probably not new to the House, and in its various phases has been discussed at every session since the accession to power of hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not propose to do anything more than give a brief resumé of the question as it strikes me, and as I think it will strike the vast majority of the electors of Canada. The Liberal party came to power in 1896, after a pilgrimage in the wilderness of opposition of some eighteen or nineteen years, during which time they were vigorously impressing upon the electorate the lines of their policy, what they were opposed to, what they would do if they came into power. I do not propose to follow the multitude of promises that they made, nor go over the many lines upon which those promises were laid, but to confine myself to a very few and the principal ones of the number.

In the first place they proposed to reduce the volume of the taxation of the country. The answer to that is given, since they came into power, by the citation of a few facts. In 1894-5 the taxation raised from the country was $25,446,198; in 1899-1900 the taxation raised from the country, in round numbers, is $38,000,000. Their reduction of the volume of taxation, their fulfilment of the solemn promise they gave in that regard, is read in the increase of $12,500,000 in the volume of taxation, comparing 1894-5 with 1899-1900. It will be remembered that their promise to reduce the volume of taxation officially commenced in 1893, and continued uninterruptedly from that time until they came into power. I have taken the year 1894-5, because it marked the lowest period of taxation reached by the Liberal-Conservative party, after the reduction of the large volume of taxation by taking off the duties upon sugar and the three tariff revisions that took place between 1891 and 1894. After 1894-5 a part of the sugar taxation was restored. They promised to decrease the public debt, they deplored the way in which it mounted up, they declared that it was a menace to the liberty of trade and to the business interests in the country, that it ought not to increase and that it ought to be diminished. They have fulfilled that promise by increasing the debt, in round numbers by $8,000,000 from 1896 to 1899-1900. They have made this increase to the public debt in face of some of the most buoyant years of revenue that the Dominion has ever experienced, in face of some of the largest surpluses that the Dominion has ever enjoyed. Notwithstanding this immense revenue, and notwithstanding the large surpluses, instead of diminishing the public debt, they have increased it by, as I have said, $8,000,000. They promised to cut down expenditure, in definite and absolute terms they made that promise. The answer is found in the fact that whereas, in 1896, the total expenditure on all accounts amounted to $41,702,383; in 1899-1900, the expenditures on all accounts were $53,050,000, being an increase of $11,300,000 in round numbers. This increase has been general, it has ranged over the whole list of the services of the country, from the interest on public debt, which has increased by 3½ per cent, the administration of justice by 7½ per cent, to arts, agriculture and statistics, where the increase has been 22½ per cent; civil government, where the increase has been 1½ per cent; geological survey, where the increase has been 12 per cent; immigration, where the increase has been 110 per cent; quarantine, where the increase has been 42 per cent; Indians, where the increase has been 12 per cent; lighthouse and coast service, where the increase has been 16 per cent; mail subsidies, where the increase has been 9 per cent; militia and defence, where the increase has been 90 per cent; miscellaneous, where the increase has been 8½ per cent, ocean and river service, where the increase has been 80 per cent; penitentiaries, where the increase has been 8½ per cent; pensions, where the increase has been 12 per cent; public works, where the increase has been 50 per cent; railways and canals revenue, where the increase has been 200 per cent; superannuation, where the increase has been 4½ per cent; customs where the increase has been 16 per cent; railways and canals, where the increase has been 11 per cent; and trade and commerce, where the increase has been 800 per cent. That is comparing 1895-6 with 1898-9. If the comparison is made with the year just ended, it will make the increases larger than those which I have read. I might go on to give instances of the individual increases, but I will not do more than give the list which I have read to the House, except to mention the increase, which is tremendous in the expenditure on account of immigration, which, in Liberal-Conservative times, ran from $150,000 to $200,000, and which, in 1899-1900, has gone up to $425,000, while under the present estimates, $455,000 is asked for immigration alone, the great proportion of which, and the largest by far, is expended on agents' salaries, contingencies, and the like of that. Another single instance of the extravagance of the government is afforded in the matter of commissions. I have had the curiosity to look up the record of this government in the matter of commissions. I find that, leaving out the Behring Sea Claims Commission, and the Commission on Seal Life, during the three years, 1896-7, 1897-8 and 1898-9, this government has expended on commissions, $116,380.39. Most of these commissions have been the reward, and used only for the reward, of earnest and partisan followers.

The party, when out of power, promised that they would obtain reciprocity. Well, Sir, they have been in power for four years. They have given the United States free corn, given them free twine, given them free wire in many numbers, and they have largely reduced the customs taxation upon the large lines of exports from the United States. For all this they have not reaped the advantage of one single cent in compensations granted by the tariff of the United States. In addition to that, they spent $34,600 of the people's money in an importunate and unavailing attempt to persuade the commissioners of the United States government that after having been given all these things, they ought, in Christian charity, if for nothing else, to give something in return. They failed, and only a year ago, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself made his public recantation of his error in reference to the supposed desire of this country for reciprocity in the hearing of the House and before the country.

They promised to abolish protection. Well, Sir, my answer to that is, that the average of protective tariff from 1892 to 1896, under Liberal-Conservative rule was 17·47 per cent, and that during the three years from 1896-7 to 1898-9, under the present government, the average was 17·17 per cent, so that if you take the average of the last five years of Liberal-Conservative rule of protection, and the average of the three years that hon. gentlemen opposite have been in power, you will find that, on the average, they have reduced the tariff by the amazing sum of thirty one-hundredths of one per cent.

They promised to open new markets. They declared that this was the great need of Canada. They came to power and they have been in power for four years. Where is there a single new market open? If you ask the question whether they have opened up new markets in Canada for other countries, the answer is in the affirmative. The first year that they were in power, as a result of an attempt at legislation, they opened up new markets in Canada for some thirty of the great trading countries in the world, giving a preference in our markets, and getting no preference in any single market in return. If you ask the question whether or not they have opened up, in other countries, any heretofore unknown market for Canadian products, the answer is an absolute negative, for no country and no quarter of any portion of the habitable globe allows Canadian products to enter its markets at the slightest reduction over what had been granted to Canada before these hon. gentlemen came into power. They have succeeded in raising discriminative tariffs against Canada in some of the large trading countries in Europe, but in no single country in the world has a single bar been taken down or any advantage given to any Canadian product.

They promised to abolish railway subsidies. One of their oldest, most respected and leading members, he who was supposed to voice the financial and trade policy of the party, particularly, Sir Richard Cartwright, I mean, made common cause with the Patrons, and one of the planks of the Patron platform, as of his, was that railway subsidies were corrupting in their tendency, and were a source of untold peril and a menace to the health of the body politic, and ought not to be continued. They came into power, and in three years they brought down to this House railway and bridge subsidies, in 1897, to the amount of $4,053,944; in 1899, $6,540,000, and in 1900, to the amount of $3,600,000, being in all, $14,200,000 of railway subsidies. Nor is it possible, until these contracts are made and the coutracts ended, to fix the liability of the country or to place the sum at what it will exactly be, owing to the entire change in the manner of paying the subsidies, by which an indefinite sum running between two limits may be paid largely as a matter of agreement or arrangement between those who build the road and the minister, and the minister decides what it is to be paid. Outside of these subsidies they have paid to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway and for the Drummond County road, $5,300,000; and they have put under a ninety-nine years lease, which means in perpetuity, an annual sum to be paid to the Grand Trunk railway, which represents in capital no less than $13,800,000.

But one of the least gratifying features of all this business, is that the government has gone far towards to arranging valuable franchises for their friends; for profit, for sale. If ever there was in this country a happy hunting ground for the go-between, we have it to-day. It is well known all through our provinces. People point to these men, as they pass up and down, and it is coming now to be a matter of jibe and comment, that in certain quarters, in order to get what you want, certain persons have to be named go-betweens. There was no more signal instances given of the improper granting of a franchise than when a year or so ago—against the protest of this side of the House—the government absolutely made valuable, and immensely valuable, a franchise for a railway running from Edmonton over the Yellowhead Pass, gave it and a subsidy to a number of their friends, who have since, as I have been informed on very good authority, sold it out to the only persons to whom it was really useful and necessary; just as it was prophesied in this House that it would be done.

Well, Sir, they promised to protect the independence of parliament. Every gentleman who is in this House to-day, and who was in this House when the Liberals were in opposition remembers the plaintive appeals that were made by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the government, by the Postmaster General, and all their supporters at that time to protect the virtue of members of parliament, by not dangling office before their greedy or innocent eyes (whichever you like), and by not making promises of emoluments and of office. Well, Sir, this government came in and these plaintive tones had scarcely ceased murmuring around the halls of this House of Commons, until they began the insidious process, headed by the right hon. the Prime Minister himself, and the hon. gentleman, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). And up to date they have seduced from the paths of independence and of parliamentary virtue, no less than fourteen members of their own party. As partisans of the first water while they were here, those gentlemen did good party service for the Liberals, and they now sit in places of honour and emolument, no longer independent members of parliament, but gathering the rewards for which they asked, the promise of which hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in opposition declared to be unworthy, subversive to good government, and highly corrupting and dangerous to the body politic.

They promised to introduce purity of elections. What has been done by the party as a whole is written in public records, and it is open and known to all men. There is no need of repeating it here. Let Huron and Brockville answer.

They were to be a business government. The first essay they made in that, was to endeavour, before parliament met (a very short time before), to give an unheard of contract to two gentlemen to build a narrow gauge tramway, 150 miles, between two ice points, and to give them 5,000,000 acres of picked gold lands in the Yukon territory as a reward for their services. They did not allow these to wait until the House should have time to pass on that contract before they should go to work, but the government made it obligatory that these gentlemen should proceed with the undertaking forthwith. Obedient to the mandate of the government, they went to work. This House passed the improvident contract. Fortunately the Senate rejected it. Since that time, without the expenditure of one dollar of money by this business government, one of the best—and I am inclined to think the very best—routes has been opened up into and out of the Yukon, and is now being used without the cost of a single dollar to this government. But there is a residuum, bitter possibly to the taste of the government, for I understand that a neat little bill of about $334,000 has been handed to the Minister of Finance and the government, and payment requested for what were legitimate expenses paid out by the contractors under the order of the Canadian government, and which this Canadian government is now face to face with, as a matter of justice and equity. Will they pay it? Will they repudiate it? That is a question which they themselves have to answer; but the bill is before them. That is the first business act which this business government performed. The next was with reference to the fast line. What a humiliating confession we heard only yesterday in this House from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), that Canada in this age; in this year of progress, is doing a service between this country and the old country with vessels that have been able to make the voyage in nineteen days, in fourteen days, in thirteen days, and a bright spot like an oasis in the desert is pounced upon by the minister, when he could point on the paper to a vessel which had crossed the Atlantic in nine days, or in eight and a half days. This government found ready to its shaping, an arrangement by which Canada could have had a fast line service running now for months; a service perfectly equipped, thoroughly up to the times, and in keeping with the needs of the country. They saw fit, as a business government, to do nothing; rather to undo something and to destroy the progress of this arrangement towards its fulfilment. And as a business government they gave a firm of shipping brokers the right to dangle about the markets of London, for some two years, a possible contract, whilst the member without portfolio (Mr. Dobell) made his peregrinations on the salt water to and fro, in vain search for that bottle-nosed contingent of ships which was to revolutionize trade across the Atlantic. And to-day on two occasions, we have had the Minister of Trade and Commerce confess to this House, that the time when Canada shall see a fast Atlantic service of her own was so far distant, that it was not worth while contemplating it, because, first, of the rise in the price of material, second, because of the pre-occupation of the ship-builders of Great Britain, and lastly, because of wars and rumours of wars.

This was to be a business government, and a business government generally thinks somewhat of contract after tender, and of tender in the case of all contracts for public works in this country. That rule has been set aside by this business government. Here are only two or three instances of the many which one may give of this. One is the celebrated instance—unfortunately not an isolated one—where the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), invited the father-in-law of his son, who knew no more about dredging than I do, probably less, invited him to take part in a contract. He fell before the invitation, undertook it, and carried on a contract in dredging to the amount of $23,000 or $25,000, without stirring out of his place of business in Montreal, and at a happy percentage of profit to himself. That is business; whether it is best for the country, or best for the father-in-law, remains to be seen.

The Minister of Railways ignores the healthy law of tender and contract; and we have the examples staring us on every page of the estimates and on almost every page of the Auditor General's accounts. It is not necessary to particularize them. You may take the cement business, gone into against the advice of the engineer in charge of the work—

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you mean to say that was done without tender?

MR. FOSTER. What I say is that it was done against the express recommendation and wishes of the engineer in charge of the work—

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon—nothing of the kind.

MR. FOSTER.

MR. FOSTER—because a political supporter persuaded the hon. gentleman to contravene the interest of the public works of this country and the advice of his engineer, and, as a result, a neat little bill—I have not the return: the hon. gentleman would rather have all his front teeth pulled than to bring them down; but I venture to say that probably $20,000 will be the loss to this country on that business. Then, business methods are used by the Minister of Railways, when, as a result of failing to get legislation to expropriate a man's private property, he enters upon the possession of it himself; but he had no more than done so when he was kicked out, and, as a result, the country has to pay $30,000—I do not know how much more—for that little business act of the minister. There is going on dredging, or sweeping, or whatever you may call it, in the channels of the river and canal service by a tug at the rate of $425 a day, on an arrangement entered into, I am informed, without tenders being called, which has eaten up the people's money already to the extent of $131,000. Why any tug or dredge should have the immense daily wage of $425 for sweeping a channel, and that without tender, may make itself patent to the average business man; I doubt myself very much whether it does. You have the oil contract on the Intercolonial, where under the system of the late government oils were tendered for and contracts given upon tenders after the analyses were made. The hon. gentleman who presides over the Department of Railways and Canals found those tenders called for, found them accepted, found competent and satisfactory analyses in his department when he came in. He took occasion to turn down the page, and I believe without an order in council quashed the tenders, and gave a contract without tender to the Galena Oil Company, under which he is paying very much larger sums, and I believe mulcting the country in very much larger sums than he need have done under a system of tender and contract.

These are instances of a business government's management. But a most signal instance is given by what has occurred in the Department of Militia and Defence in connection with the emergency food business. That is a dealing which can be appreciated by business men very easily—it is a distinguishing mark of a business government—where a food is taken under the circumstances in which this was taken, offered in one hour, and the contract given the next, and nobody in the department, I am charitable enough to think, knowing in the least whether it was a food which had ever been tested; whilst every one in the department from the minister down ought to have known, if they did not, that there was no test, and that it was not the same food as had been tested in Kingston months before. But a political partisan having undisputed authority in the department, and over the minister, and over the director of stores, gains the ear of all, and palms off a worthless food, and puts in his pocket as the result of that little transaction some $3,400; and a worthless emergency food, which was meant to sustain men's lives in times of exigency and stress, when no other food is to be had, is sent to our boys in South Africa. That is a business transaction; and yet the swindler is not to be prosecuted—he is too good a political partisan; and yet the convenient medical director of stores, I suppose, will have his salary increased because he was blind to everything that went on. No officer in the department is to be even reprimanded—by the government or by the majority of the party which supports them; but I miss my judgment entirely if the country composed largely of common-sense business men, does not see the exact force and the exact scope of transactions like this.

This business government undertakes another thing. Where it cannot deceive the people in any other way, it undertakes to deceive them by false book-keeping. The Postmaster General cabbages all the revenues upon mail matter going into the Yukon and out of it in the years 1897-8 and 1898-9, puts it to the credit of his account, and the Finance Minister so enters it in the books of this Dominion; but when it comes to bearing the burden of the mail-carrying into the Yukon in 1897-8 and 1898-9, $3,000 of it is thrown on to the shoulders of the Minister of the Interior, and $47,000 is thrown on to the shoulders of the mounted police, and paid for with money, not one dollar of which was ever voted for that purpose or should have been used for that purpose. By that simple expedient the Postmaster General has posed before this country as having a deficit of some $50,000 less than it otherwise would be; but it is at the expense of honest statement and clean and clear book-keeping in Dominion accounts.

The Minister of Railways charges to capital account what his predecessors charged to the revenues of the Intercolonial Railway, to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and then goes through the country boasting that he has a surplus, whereas his predecessor had to show a deficit. This is an extraordinary business method. I commend it to the hon. member without portfolio (Mr. Dobell) for the province of Quebec, who, I venture to say, would not keep his shipping and other business accounts in that way.

I stated at the outset that I did not intend making an extended series of observations. One point alone I will now add in reference to this business government, and that is the management of this session. The delays and procrastinations which have taken place, the fact that we are here now in our sixth month, and nearly one-half of that month past—and any man can take stock and see what has been done by this parliament in those five and a half months. Down to the very end of the session every important business has been kept and then launched upon the House. Tired, decimated as to its members, and in no condition at all to consider and come to a fair conclusion with reference to legislative measures. And to-day we have before us, with the end of the session just in view, a supplementary estimate involving some seven of 800 items, all of which ought to have close consideration, but on none of which, under the circumstances, can possibly be given anything like consideration by this House.

These are the ways in which this business government conducts its business. For making pledges and absolutely repudiating them, this government carries away the palm, an unenviable palm. We leave them to carry that out soon to the country and display it before the people, before whose honest eyes they waved the flag of retrenchment and reduced taxation in 1896. We have talked of all these things in this House, and have made up our minds on both sides, though I venture to say that these minds are not expressed as fully as they might be by hon. gentlemen on the other side. We leave the issue now with the electorate of the country to punish the men who made promises to get into power, and who then forgot every one of them and who seem to labour under the delusion that the people will not call them to account for their utter failure to keep faith with the country. I therefore beg to move:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following added instead thereof: 'the Liberal party, in their published platform and through their leaders, sought the support of the electors of Canada by making the most definite and solemn pledges to reduce the burdens of taxation and lessen the expenditure of the country. That the following are examples of the pledges thus solemnly made:

'We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt, and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion, and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the government that had been continuously in power since 1878; and we demand strict economy in the administration of the government of the country.'—(Liberal Convention, 1893.)

'The Liberal party says that several millions may be lopped off the present expenditure without injury to the public service.'—Hon. (now Sir L. H. Davies.)

'The Liberal party, if in power, could at once reduce the public expenditure and effect other savings to the extent of five million dollars per annum without impairing the efficiency of the service.'—(John Charlton, M.P.)

'If we get in power we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie; and I say that, although we may not be able to bring the expenditures to what they were under him, we can reduce the amount two, yes, three millions of dollars per year.'—Hon. (now Sir) Wilfrid Laurier.)

'For my own part, I do not hesitate to tell him that I consider a yearly expenditure of a time when there was not government business on the Order paper ready to be proceeded with.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Some hon. gentlemen opposite say 'oh, oh.' But my statement will be verified by the facts. There was nothing to be gained by loading the Order paper with a multiplicity of affairs while those on the order paper were making no progress. At a reasonable hour of the session, the estimates were submitted to the House; they have been in the hands of hon. members for a long time; and there is no ground whatever for the complaint that the business of the House has been delayed by the action of the government. I desire that point to be clearly and emphatically made, because I believe that the public records will show that I am correct. What, then, has caused the delay in the business of the House? The House has been delayed by the determination of hon. gentlemen opposite to exercise their undoubted right to discuss all sorts of questions at great length, and very often to make lengthy speeches on no question at all. The extent to which the procedure of moving the adjournment of the House in order to introduce some subject of debate has been followed this session is exceptional; and I trust that the time is not far distant when some amendment may be made to the rules of the House so that the abuse of this system shall no longer be allowed. We have again and again, when the government was ready to proceed with the business, found business interrupted by some hon. gentlemen opposite calling attention to some matter that brought on a discussion, and when you, Mr. Speaker, at a later stage, decided that the discussion should not proceed in that form, the motion has been made for the adjournment of the House, and the discussion continued. There is a principle with respect to moving the adjournment of the House that we should recognize. It is a method which should be occasionally used to allow the discussion of a subject brought before the House; but, in the past, and especially during this session, that principle has been abused; and, in the interest of public discussion, it will be necessary in future sessions, I believe, to make some rule which will prevent the continuance of that abuse.

Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) referred to the question of railway subsidies. He has given the House to understand that there was some new and wonderful policy introduced by this government with respect to the railway subsidies, some decided change for the worse. I want to tell my hon. friend that the only point in which there has been any change in the manner of voting railway subsidies is a point very much in favour of the present government. We have voted large sums, it is true, for railway subsidies: but, my hon. friend, while he has condemned them generally, has never been able to bring his courage up to the point of saying which of them were wrong. He condemns them in a general way, but he will be prepared to admit with me, that in the present condition of our country, the granting of these subsidies is necessary. Wherein have we made the change? In the first place, we have made a change with regard to the amount. In the old days, a railway costing $10,000 or $12,000 a mile would receive a grant of $3,200 a mile; and a railway costing $18,000 a mile would receive the same amount—except a special vote was taken, as was done in a few cases, for a double subsidy. It did not seem to be quite fair or reasonable that the same subsidy should be paid to a cheap road as to a more expensive road. Now, though the change made is one that brings some difficulties and embarrassments, still, the principle on which it is based is a sound principle—and that is, that the subsidy to be paid by the government shall bear some reasonable proportion to the cost of the road itself. That is one point of importance in which a change has been made under our government in the granting of railway subsidies as compared with the government of hon. gentlemen opposite. There is another point. Hon. gentlemen opposite granted their subsidies to railway companies practically without conditions. We have placed recently in our subsidy acts conditions which certainly are of benefit to the public. The condition has now been included in these railway grants, that where the government has business with the railway in the way of postal service, or other public service of any kind, we shall have that public service rendered free until we shall have received a return interest on the subsidies we granted to these roads. To the extent of the interest of these subsidies we have an annual claim for services to be performed for the government as respects the postal department or any other department of the government.

Then, my hon. friend had something to say about the Mackenzie & Mann contract. According to my hon. friend's view, that was a monstrous contract, something utterly unheard of and entirely indefensible. But, he must not forget that a greater than he—in rank, I mean—the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), when he had that contract first placed before him and the policy of the government was made known through the public press, declared that it was a good contract, that it was a policy which the country ought to adopt, and he commended Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann as the one set of contractors in the Dominion of Canada who were able to carry out such an undertaking successfully.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the hon. minister if he will persist in declaring that the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), when he signified his approval in the newspapers of the conditions, had the contract or the particulars of the contract before him?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract itself was not in print, but the general purpose of the contract was certainly before the public, and with the knowledge of that, the hon. leader of the opposition, at a moment, I am sure, when his mind was unbiased, and before he was taken hold of by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) gave expression to his frank and honest opinion that that was a good contract for the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. He had never seen the measure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He had seen the public announcement, the substance of the whole transaction. My hon. friend had something to say about the post office accounts, something to say on behalf of clean and honest book-keeping. Now, what is the ground of his complaint? That the Postmaster General procured a portion of the service of the postal department to be performed for him by the Interior Department and by the Department of Mounted Police, and that it was not until after the close of the public accounts that that service was accounted for. The Postmaster General has, in his own departmental report, fully explained the matter, and shown that the statement in the public accounts, as to the revenue and expenditure of the Post Office Department, is subject to that qualification as respects the service in the Yukon. But my hon. friend says that is dishonest book-keeping. He would have the post office accounts show clearly in the actual public accounts that are issued every year by the Minister of Finance, he would have these accounts show the earnings of the Post Office Department and the expenditures of the Post Office Department fairly and squarely. Why, he said, was it right for the Postmaster General afterwards to pay to the other departments claims that were due for that service?

Mr. FOSTER. No, the hon. gentleman must not misrepresent me. I did not say anything about paying them afterwards. That proposition never has been before the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, the point my hon. friend makes is that the Post Office department only adjusted this matter after the accounts were closed in the Finance Department, and that therefore they do not correctly show in the general statement of the revenue and expenditure of the year.

Mr. FOSTER. No, my ground of contention was that the Postmaster General received service for 1897-8 from other departments, and did not either charge the expenditure to his own department nor did he repay the other departments that did the work.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But in his own public report he accounts for the matter which, so far as the public are concerned, is all the same thing. It would have done no good if he had then made the transfer and paid the money into the hands of the other departments. I fail to see wherein the difference would come, seeing that it affects the ratepayer in the same way, whether it is paid by one department or the other. But I want to call attention to this, that the hon. gentleman insisted upon clean and honest book-keeping in the public accounts and the Post Office Department. How does he propose to excuse the fact that his Post Office Department went on year after year issuing through the Finance Department and in the public accounts, statements purporting to show the expenses of the year, when in reality there were large sums still due for services which were not shown? We had the question out the other night, and the best he could say for it was that there had been a practice whereby the accounts for one year were carried over into another. What does he say of the fact that in 1895 there was a post office deficiency, there were $618,000 of unpaid accounts, which did not show in the public statement? And if he pleads that that was the result of a bad practice extending over a number of years, and the hon. gentleman thinks that helps him out, then let him take note of the fact that by the time he reached the close of the year 1896 that deficiency had increased to $680,000, showing in that one year there was a direct loss on the operations of the post office to the extent of $70,000 which was not shown in the accounts at all? Yet, as my hon. friend reproaches the Postmaster General, not because he has concealed any statement of his affairs, but because he shows a certain part of the business in his own departmental report and does not happen to show it in the statement issued by the Department of Finance.

Mr. FOSTER. We fought that out the other day. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is free to say so, of course. Then, my hon. friend had something to say with regard to the policy of this government upon the tariff. Why, he says, did not this government undertake to change the tariff materially when they were going to reduce the protective element?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not put it so candidly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He gave us to understand that the government made no material change in the tariff, that is to say upon the whole list of duties. The hon. gentleman is great upon the doctrine of averages. He says the average duty before was so much, the average duty now is so much, therefore, the reduction in the tariff is only so much. Well, let it be so. Then, if we are able to show that we have carried on an enormous business the past three or four years without any increase of the tariff, but by reducing it even in the smallest degree, it is something to be proud of, and we can go to the country on it. But my hon. friend knows that we went into this at the earlier stage of the session; he knows that the principles of averages is a very unfair way in which to approach this question. He knows, for I pointed it out—but he did not need to have it pointed out—that you may make changes in your tariff which will not reduce the average a bit, and yet on the whole would amount to a material tariff reform. You may make such changes in your tariff that you increase the average, and yet there are great and material changes. If you increase the duties on your luxuries and at the same time make material reductions upon the articles that enter into common use, then you are making a material reform, though your average duty may be as high as before.

But he says now that the change does not amount to anything. Well, I must remind him again of that speech made by his hon. friend the leader of the opposition when the tariff policy was brought down. We were not told then that no changes were made. We were not told it was only an infinitesimal change. Do we not remember how the leader of the opposition sat there and told us that he heard the wail, the sorrowful wail, that was rising up from the artisan and from the manufacturer of this country, who were going to be crushed into ruin by that policy? That was the story then. They tried to lead the whole country to believe that trade was going to be destroyed by the change that we were making. Then they stood around and waited for the calamity to come. They expected to see the tall chimneys come down, and to see factories closed up. Day after day they waited, and what happened? The tall chimneys grew higher, and in the factory that formerly had twenty men they discovered there were forty. As you went into the large manufacturing towns you discovered that these factories were not able in the hours of the day to do the work that was on their hands; you passed through the streets at night and you found them blazing with light, men working extra hours for higher wages, and the factories busier than ever before. Then when my hon. friends found this state of affairs, it occurred to them that they had better go round on the other side of the circle, and they started in to say: Well, there was not any change in the tariff after all. Well, Sir, his own friends know better. My hon. friend went to Toronto, and made an important speech there, and I happened to cut out of a newspaper an account of it. I do not quote what my hon. friend said, because, of course, he is taking a new tack now that there was no change in the national policy. But the chairman of the meeting seemed to know better, for he is reported as follows:

The chairman, in introducing the speaker, said this was a gathering of Canadians, who were meeting to hear something of the national policy, which was being torn in tatters by the government in power.

So we discover that the opposition thought then, only a few months ago, that the national policy was being torn into tatters by this government; but, to-day, the cry is there no material change, there is no reduction of taxation, we have not attacked the principle of protection at all.

Then, my hon. friend had something to say about emergency rations, and the negligence of the officers of the government. Granted for a moment that officials of the department were not as careful as they should be—

Mr. FOSTER. Nor the minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman knows very well that there is no evidence to show that the minister was negligent. I do not hesitate to make that statement here. But what were the circumstances? The hon. gentleman knows very well that at that time the whole Department of Militia was in a constant rush. What if, in a case of four or five thousand dollars, a minister had to rely upon his officials? What if, in a case of that amount, everything that was proper to be done, had not been done? There is talk about the constitutional responsibility of a minister; there is a constitutional theory whereby a minister is responsible for everything. I have some officials out in British Columbia attached to my department: if they should go wrong there I am constitutionally responsible for them. But, while I would be liable in a constitutional sense, would it be held that I could be held responsible for their action in a moral sense? That I could be held responsible, if I had taken the precaution of sending capable and trustworthy men there, for any mistake that might occur? It follows that if the hon. Minister of Militia put this affair in the hands of trustworthy officials and if some things were neglected, much as we might regret it, it is not a matter which the hon. gentleman need get very much excited over. But, I am talking of the amount now. The hon. gentleman is aggrieved because there has been possibly some mismanagement in a transaction amounting to some $4,000. Does he know that his government permitted a contractor to substitute an inferior material for the better material that the contract required, and that, according to the evidence, which is now available—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You will get the name—and that according to the evidence that is now available the loss to the public treasury on that series of contracts was $150,000. Hon. gentlemen ask the name—The British American Bank Note Company of Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did not prosecute, he did not inquire, he did not do anything. It is now a matter of evidence, although the court has not given judgment yet as to the amount, that inferior material was sent into the offices of the government year after year, that the contractor collected the price of good material, and that the difference between the value of good material and the value of inferior material aggregates a sum of about $150,000.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) if he speaks from a decision which has been given by the court?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman asks me if I speak from a decision. No. Will the hon. gentleman say that the material supplied was the right material? Will he deny that an inferior material was supplied? Why, the only hope the contractor has of escaping the consequences of his action is to prove before the court that the government permitted him to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course I cannot carry on a discussion with my hon. friend, but I wish to say that I entirely deny the statements which he has made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The case is passing through the courts.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman had better leave it to the courts to give their decision.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Evidence has been given, and we have evidence which puts it beyond question that inferior material was supplied. That is not disputed. We have the fact that the contractor got the price of the better material and supplied the inferior material, and the matter has been referred to officials to ascertain the exact amount of the difference, and from the best information we can get it is about $150,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not a fair statement.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You shared in the spoils.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is one point in which the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) is consistent. There is not much consistency on that side of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. A remark was made by an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House (Mr. Landerkin) which I do not think ought to have been made. The statement was that I shared in the spoils. I think that might be withdrawn.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then you are sorry you did not.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a statement that should not be made.

Mr. SPEAKER. I was not paying any attention to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin). Certainly such a remark should not be made. I hope hon. members will allow the hon. minister to proceed.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I hope they will.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not affect any one, but it is not seemly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) has in one point been consistent, but there is not much consistency amongst hon. gentlemen opposite. We find their swords pointing at each other in their several versions of the so-called Conservative policy. We have one hon. gentleman suggesting that the fiscal policy of the government ought to be condemned because we have reduced the tariff, and we find another hon. gentleman suggesting that it should be condemned because we have not made the duties lower still. But, there is one point upon which they are consistent, and that is in the policy upon which they entered four years ago of trying to alarm the country at the extent of the expenditures of this government. In the very first session that this parliament had under the auspices of the present government the leading men on the other side of the House began to alarm the people and to try and scare them out of their lives at our expenditure. They said this government was plunging the country into a lavish expenditure, and they predicted that deficits and financial disaster would be the result. What has followed? All these predictions have proved to be entirely false; all these predictions have been shown, in the light of experience, to have been entirely unwarranted. Canada has never before enjoyed a period of greater financial prosperity than that which has marked the time during which the present government have been in power and during which hon. gentlemen opposite have been trying to alarm the public on this question. They have not been successful, because the public have got tired of these alarms and scares. The public understand what they amount to. The hon. gentleman spoke of the matter of the increase of the public debt. We have increased the debt in four years, or practically, in the three years that we have had control of the finances, to the extent of something over two and a half millions per annum. If you deduct from that the amount of the expenditure which had to be made to meet the unpaid bills of the old government, which the actual increase of the public debt is much below that point, but take it, if you like, at two and a half millions. My hon. friend will not be able to draw very much comfort from that because his government increased the debt $6,500,000 for every year of the eighteen years that his party were in office. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that we need be afraid to go before the country with a comparison of $6,500,000 of increased debt for every year that the Conservative party were in power as against $2,500,000 for every year that the Liberal party have been in power? I think that is a state of affairs upon which we can safely appeal to the public.

My hon. friend had something to say about the cost of commissions. He says that we have spent a lot of money on commissions. He could not object very much to it, for you might take account of quite a number of these commissions, and find that their cost is not equal to the $80,000 or $90,000 spent by the hon. gentleman for the commission on the liquor traffic. I do not think my hon. friend can make very much out of that. He would have the country understand that if they could be prevailed upon to change governments they would have a policy of economy under hon. gentlemen opposite. There are some things that they may have some hope of imposing on credulous people, but I venture to say that there are no people in the Dominion of Canada so absolutely foolish as to expect a policy of economy from the hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition. We have had some evidence of that. On the last occasion, an occasion corresponding somewhat with the present one, when, on the eve of an election, because it cannot be very many months before we shall have an election, on the last occasion that the hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition had the privilege of propounding a policy under somewhat the same conditions, we had the same professions of virtuous economy that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has manifested to-night. I hold in my hand an extract from a speech made by the present leader of the opposition in this House in 1878, when hon. gentlemen were in opposition just as they are now. He was complaining bitterly of the extravagant expenditures of the Mackenzie government. The Mackenzie government increased the expenditure in four years by a very small amount indeed. But the hon. gentleman then started in to give the public to understand that if they would permit a Conservative government to come into power, they would have a policy of economy. It was said on the Liberal side of the House that the policy of these hon. gentlemen would lead to large expenditures. No, hon. gentleman opposite said, when we come in there will not be large expenditures. We merely want to readjust the expenditure and taxation so that the people may find employment and may get the means of paying the taxation. Now, that I may not misquote the hon. leader of the opposition, I am going to quote from Hansard of 1878 a portion of a speech made by that hon. gentleman :

I trust that I have satisfied the House that it is not a question of high or low taxation any further than this, that inasmuch as we governed the country with a small taxation, and inasmuch as we are prepared to govern the country again without those extravagant expenditures made by the present government since they have been entrusted with power, all we ask is, not that the taxation of the people shall be increased—

I want to ask the particular attention of the House to what follows :

—because we do not require as much money as hon. gentlemen opposite, as we have shown by our economy in the past, and as we are prepared to practice in the future, but that the money shall be levied in such a way as to furnish employment for the people and provide the means of paying the taxation that is levied upon them. What we ask is not an increase of the taxation, but a readjustment of the taxation. . . . .

I ask the House to bear in mind that in that speech, Sir Charles Tupper, then, as now, occupying a very prominent place in the Conservative party, solemnly declared to this House, and to the people of Canada, that his party were prepared to carry on the government with less money than was expended by Mr. Mackenzie :

We do not require so much money as hon. gentlemen opposite.

That was his pledge. Now as to the fulfilment of it, and perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), will discover that there have been more breeches of promise in this matter of expenditure than he imagines. The expenditure of the Mackenzie government in 1878, was $23,500,000, and Sir Charles Tupper said it was too large.

They did not need as much money as Mr. Mackenzie.

That is what Sir Charles Tupper said, and the Conservatives came into power. In their first year, they spent $24,500,000 ; in the next year they spent $24,850,000 ; in the next year they spent $25,500,000 ; and in the fourth year of that parliament, before they went to the country, these gentlemen who said they did not need to expend as much money as Mr. Mackenzie spent, in that last year of their first parliamentary term, spent $27,000,000 against the $23,500,000 which Mr. Mackenzie had spent. (I am speaking entirely of consolidated revenue account in these figures.) And, Sir, before the Conservatives went out of power they increased their expenditure by leaps and bounds, until it reached $39,000,000 in one year. In the light of that promise made by Sir Charles Tupper, and in the light of the manner in which it was carried out, I will leave hon. members in this House, and I will leave the people of the country to judge of the faith that can be placed in the professions of the Conservative party, that if placed in power, they will carry out a policy of economy.

Let us understand what is economy. We have spent a great deal of money; we admit it. The hon. gentlemen opposite boast that they spent little, but their little was extravagance, because they did not have the money to pay. They spent little and they ran the country into debt. We have spent much, but we have had the money to pay it. We have paid every bill, and we have had a reduced rate of taxation, as is admitted by gentlemen opposite. We have spent these large sums; we have met the demands of the people, we have paid the bills, and we have had a handsome balance from year to year on the right side of the ledger. I was in the western part of Ontario some months ago with the right hon. the Prime Minister, attending a series of meetings, and I was much struck by a motto which stretched across the street, in one of the beautiful Ontario towns. That motto was: 'Wise expenditure is true economy.' I believe that that is the basis of sound finance. Economy does not mean parsimony. It does not mean niggardliness. It means the meeting of the reasonable demands of the people by an honest expenditure, designed to comply with all the requirements as far as possible. That, Sir, is I believe true economy. A young lady was spoken to by her aunt who said: Mary it is a very serious thing to get married; and she replied: Yes, aunt, it is, but it is a much more serious thing not to get married. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), came to a large appropriation in his estimates for the Intercolonial Railway the other night, and the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Foster), said: Is the minister not really afraid of this large item? The minister replied: I am not, but I would be very much afraid, if I should come down to this House and have to acknowledge that I was not prepared to provide the funds necessary for carrying on the public business of the country. It is a serious thing, Sir, to provide these large estimates, but it would be a much more serious thing if we had to stand before parliament and the country to-day in such a position, that these hon. gentlemen opposite could point to us and say: You are afraid to give the people the means which they require to carry on and to develop the trade of the country. We are not afraid to meet parliament and to meet the public with this bill of expenditure. In the first place hon. gentlemen know that it is useless to try to scare people with the amount of the estimates. There is always an important difference between estimates and actual expenditure. It has always been so and will always be so. A very large estimate does not necessarily mean that there will be a very large expenditure. There will be for various reasons, considerable sums voted in the estimates which will not be expended. There will be what are called lapsed balances. Why, Sir, in the very appropriations we have to-day before the House, there are no less than $2,000,000 of revotes, which means that these were moneys appropriated last year which the various departments were not able to expend, and so they appear in our estimates again, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), has the great luxury of counting them against us twice. He counted them against us last year, and now he counts them against us this year. It will be a comfort to the public to know that though they may count twice in these estimates, they only count once in the expenditure. It is very desirable that we should get the fact understood, that the expenditure of the country ought to be considered in relation to the services rendered, rather than in the aggregate. It is useless to talk about this expenditure, unless we are prepared to look at the various departments, and see what the money is expended for. This is indeed a growing time, and it would be a monstrous thing, in the face of the present condition of our business, if the government did not respond to the reasonable demands of the people, to sustain and to encourage that business.

But, Sir, there is an important distinction between increased expenditure and increased taxation. There is a large increase in the public expenditure of Canada, but there is a decrease in the rate of taxation. And in so far as we are able to carry on the various obligations that are arising without increasing the rate of taxation on the people, I feel sure that the public opinion of Canada will sustain us. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster), quotes the aggregate taxation, but he has forgotten to say that that has not entailed any increased burden on the people. That aggregate taxation is an evidence of the prosperity of the people which has enabled them to become large consumers, and with a reduced rate of taxation, to provide themselves more liberally with the things which they could not buy if times were not prosperous. Then we may ask ourselves is this expenditure merely keeping pace with the growth of population? I think, Sir, that a careful examination of the facts will show that while the aggregate expenditure is increasing, it is not increasing beyond the growth of the country. We have also the further fact that a great deal of this increased expenditure is balanced by increased receipts on the other side, but hon. gentlemen opposite never mention that. Take the case of the Intercolonial Railway. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) has to ask for large increases in the appropriations for the working expenses of that road, and that goes to swell up our annual estimates. Hon. gentlemen opposite say: See the immense increase in the expenditures by this government, but they do not tell us that for every dollar of that, one and a half million dollars increase in the expenditure of the Intercolonial Railway, a dollar comes back to us in the shape of increased receipts from the road. Would it be a reasonable thing, if for fear of criticism of that character, we should refuse to provide the Intercolonial Railway with the necessary facilities for carrying on the business of the country?

Then, take the case of the Yukon. There again we have had to spend very large sums of money. Hon. gentlemen opposite will talk about increased expenses; but they will not tell the people of this country that in the case of the Yukon, for every dollar that has been expended we get a dollar back. I have made that statement before, and I can make it now in the light of later information supplied to me by the Interior Department, which may be taken as substantially correct. It covers the years 1897-8 1898-9 and the six months of the year 1899-1900, up to December 31 last; and what do we find? That in the various departments we have expended in the Yukon during those two and a half years, $3,215,765. Oh, hon. gentlemen say, see how these people are increasing the expenditure—three millions and odd expended in the Yukon! Yet, hon. gentlemen forget to say that though that swells the total expenditure of the country, it does not add a cent to the burdens of the people. On the contrary, so far as the people of old Canada are concerned, it is a positive relief, because against that expenditure, we have received from the Yukon, $3,867,000.

When hon. gentlemen talk about the expenditures of the country, they should, in all fairness, let it be clearly understood that the increased expenditure does not add to the burdens of the country, but is caused by the desire of this government to provide facilities for handling the business of the country. On this point I have a quotation from a speech of a prominent member of the opposition, made before the last election, which I have never heard contradicted. I am going to quote it to show that when hon. gentlemen opposite talk so frequently about their expenditure of 1896 as being $37,000,000, or a fraction less, and try to convey to the public the idea that under their administration the business of Canada could be carried on upon any such terms, they themselves know very much better. In their main estimates for 1896-7, they brought down votes amounting to $38,200,000, and they had other estimates behind which have frequently been the subject of discussion in this House, and which we contend would have brought their appropriations for that year up to $42,000,000. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper is quoted as having made this speech shortly before the last election.

I take the responsibility for saying that whether my party or the other party be successful at the next election, I have not the slightest doubt that the expenditure of this country will increase instead of diminish. And I will go further and say that, provided wisdom presides over the system of management and expenditure, I hope, and devoutly hope, that the expenditure will increase instead of diminish. This country, as it grows, this country, as it successfully develops, certainly this country as it accumulates a larger population, will and must require a larger amount than $40,000,000 a year for its government.

So that when hon. gentlemen opposite were able to show an expenditure for 1896 of a fraction under $37,000,000, they knew perfectly well, from evidence which I have quoted, that that was not a fair statement of what the business of the country could be carried on for; and if they had continued in power they would have been obliged largely to increase the expenditure. I read a statement at an earlier stage of this session which was calculated to show, and I think did show, that viewing the matter from a per capita standpoint, the expenditure of the country had not increased; for if you make allowance for the greater growth of population, which, I am sure, we all feel we have had during the last two or three years, you will find that the rate of expenditure chargeable to consolidated account has not been any more per capita in our time than it was under the late government.

But, there is another test, which is a very fair one, of the growth and progress of the country, and that is the total trade. Look at the figures for a moment. In the whole eighteen years of the Conservative government, the increase of the total trade was $64,000,000, whereas in three years of the Liberal government, the increase was $82,000,000. Is there any man in the Dominion of Canada who supposes that a country increasing its trade at this rate can carry in its business without any increase in the public expenditure? If a merchant's business is increasing he must have some increase in his expenditure; that is inevitable. If he can carry on the business and his expenditure only keeps pace with the growth of his business he does not consider that a failure.

Now, look at the expenditure of the country on consolidated account in its relation to the total trade, which I think is a fair way of viewing it. The country started out in 1867-8 with an expenditure on consolidated account which was about 10 per cent of its total trade. That increased after a few years, especially under hon. gentlemen opposite, until in 1885-6 it was as high as 20 per cent of the total trade of the country. In that year it was a little higher than usual, owing to exceptional circumstances, and I would not refer to it without this explanation. But, if you look at other years about that time, you will find 17 or 18 per cent as the prevailing proportion. Coming down to our time, you find that in the last three years the average expenditure on consolidated account bears the proportion of only 13½ per cent to the total trade as against 16 per cent, the average in the last three years of the late government. I claim that the increase in the trade of the country, while not the only test, is a fair measure of the increasing business and prosperity of the country; and, therefore, it is perfectly reasonable to consider that when you are considering the total expenditure. Whether you look at the growth of the country by population or at the growth of the country's trade, you will come to the conclusion that these increased expenditures have only borne a reasonable proportion to the general development of the country.

Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the time is coming when we must appeal to the people. Sir, we recognize that fact, and we look forward with the utmost confidence to what the verdict of the country will be.

Mr. FOSTER. You are a goner.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend's friends have for a number of years been using that goner argument. For a number of years they said, 'Mowat must go,' but he remained. They have been using the goner argument a long time, but it does not amount to anything. We do not fear a comparison of the record of this government with that of the government which preceded us. I believe the people will return this government to power, for two reasons: First, because the record of this government is good; and, second, because, even if its record were not so good, they would rather have this government than go back to the government of 1896. We shall appeal to the people, Sir, with a record of which any government and any country may be proud. We can point to a record of four years of good government—four years of clean government, unstained by the blotches which marked the career of hon. gentlemen opposite; four years of splendid development of Canada, both in her material interests and her national advancement; four years of remarkable success in the financial and commercial development of this country; four years of a truly Imperial policy, which has given Canada a position in the eyes of the empire and the world such as she never occupied before; four years of that kind of settled government which commands the confidence of capital and of industry; four years of busy activity among the working classes of Canada, who have found themselves busier, happier and more prosperous than ever before; four years of peace, instead of that condition of affairs which at one time threatened this country with serious differences of a religious character—four years of peace, four years of progress; four years of such prosperity as this country never before knew.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). A number of things, Mr.

Mr. FIELDING.

Speaker, have been omitted in this debate that I do not think it would be fit to leave untouched in so important a crisis in our parliamentary history. It is perfectly clear from the speech we have just listened to, that we are on the eve of a general election, and therefore, we are looking back over five sessions and four years and a month of the administration of the present government.

The hon. gentleman who is leading the opposition (Mr. Foster) in a brilliant, cogent, convincing speech, went over a number of items, a number of great questions and great administrative transactions on which this government stands convicted before the country. The hon. gentleman spoke of the dealings of the Minister of Public Works with Mr. Gauthier and Mr. Robillard, and he referred inferentially to the dealings with regard to the Edmonton bridge and a number of other matters that have disgraced the conduct of the Public Works Department.

He referred to the Railway Department, which at this moment is regarded as a pear that has the yellows, by the people of Canada. He referred to that department, the administration of which, now that we are closing these four years, the people are beginning to understand, and with regard to which a frightful revelation has been made in another place.

He referred especially and particularly to the $425 per day for the dredging of the Galops Rapids, in regard to which not one word has been said by the hon. the Minister of Finance. Why? No doubt because not one could be said. The hon. gentleman was here the other night when we wanted information from the Minister of Railways. Could we get any information or any explanation? We could get nothing from him but what I regret to have to describe as what we should not expect from a minister of the Crown. What we should expect from a minister of the Crown is candour, confidence in parliament, ingenuousness and readiness to give information. You would not expect from him the insolence of an illiterate and dragged up person. I do not say that the hon. gentleman is such a person, but I say that I never saw a nearer approach to vulgar insolence than we got from the hon. gentleman when we wanted to know what was the meaning of this tremendous charge of $425 per day for a dredge. Not one word was said about that incident by the hon. the Minister of Finance. Not one word did he say about the oil contract or about that change of contract by the Minister of Railways, which places him in the same category as the emergency food business has placed the Minister of Militia. Where that has placed the Minister of Militia is understood by the people of Canada, and all the glowing words of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat and given such a nice little defence, cannot relieve his colleague, the Minister of Militia, from the charge that is in the people's minds against him as the head of that department. Either one of two things—either he is an imbecile or he is corrupt.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not in order.

Mr. DAVIN. If that is out of order, I withdraw it. The hon. gentleman will see that I put it alternatively, and if I wished to argue the point, I think I could show that I was not out of order, but I withdraw it at once, because I have no desire to be out of order. I will say this for the Minister of Finance. There is one thing great about him, and that is his audacity. He commenced by saying that the present government is in no way responsible for the delays that have taken place this session. He said that there was not a day when the government was not ready with business, and tried to throw the blame on the opposition. Why, it was the 23rd March before the hon. gentleman brought down his budget. Parliament opened the 1st February, and it was the 23rd March before the hon. gentleman gave us his budget. And what is the business of the country? It is to discuss the budget, the estimates, the supplies. What happened subsequently? We had a fire in Hull. On the day of that fire, we met here to do business, but the right hon. the Prime Minister got up and with an ingenuousness on which I cannot compliment him, he said: We will not have any more light for some days, and had better adjourn, and on his motion we adjourned until the following Tuesday. There was no reason for the adjournment because there was plenty of light, except the reason that the government had no business to go on with. Yet the Minister of Finance has the effrontery to stand up here and say that the government was always ready. Then who does not remember the junior member of Halifax moving an amendment on the preferential trade on the motion to go into Committee of Supply?

Is the hon. gentleman aware of the record of the Liberal party with regard to railway subsidies? Unable to defend himself he has recourse to the plea that there had been some slight difference in the way the Liberal party has dealt with subsidies as compared with that of the previous government. I leave that to the public to judge.

Then we have the hon. gentleman's defence of the McKenzie & Mann contract. Did he defend it on its merits or say it was a good contract? Did he say it showed the heaven born genius of the young Napoleon or the wise genius that presides over the council chamber of seventeen heaven-born ministers? Not at all. All he said was that it was sanctioned by Sir Charles Tupper, so that all that the Minister of Finance has to say of this scheme that was universally condemned by the people, that was thrown out by the Senate, and that the government never dared to revive—all that he has to say is that it was approved by Sir Charles Tupper. But, as a fact, it was never approved. The defence the hon. gentleman makes has not a single inch of ground to stand upon and I will tell you why. Sir Charles Tupper was in Montreal when the contract with Mackenzie & Mann was announced, and saw the newspaper paragraphs with regard to it as he was coming upon the train; and when he got to Ottawa he gave an interview to a reporter. He endorsed the general scheme, but not one word did he say as to the merits of the transaction. So, the defence of the Minister of Finance falls to the ground.

Now, we come to the tariff. And we need not be surprised that the hon. gentleman made no defence on that subject. He said: We are accused of only making small changes in the tariff. Well, he could not say they had made great changes, although he had on his right his leader—that leader who had declared that if he got into power he would take a sponge and wipe away protection; that leader who went from end to end of Canada declaring that the Upas tree of protection should be pulled up; that leader who came to Manitoba and the North-west Territories and who in Regina and Moosejaw declared that the farmers should be relieved of the oppression of the protective system; that leader who with his prospective Minister of Agriculture at his side allowed that hon. gentleman to declare that the 20 per cent duty on implements was oppression, thereby declaring, by implication, that if they got into power, that duty would be done away with; that leader who afterwards took the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) into his cabinet, a gentleman who had run the campaign for Dalton McCarthy as well as for himself on the cry of 'free implements.' And yet they have been in power five sessions and there is still a 20 per cent duty on implements; and the cheaper cottons are taxed higher than ever; and coal oil is dearer than ever, and no relief for the consumer. The Finance Minister knew all these things. He was like a man skating on thin ice; he glided over the traffic as quickly as he could. As to the tariff, there is not a man, but especially the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior, and the Minister of Agriculture—there is not a man belonging to the old leaders of the Liberal party in parliament here that does not stand before Canada forsworn—their lips are blistered with their perjury to the people of Canada. No wonder the Minister of Finance glides away from the tariff question.

What is his defence on the emergency ration? Why, he did not see the point. The point is that you have a Minister of Militia closeting himself with a contractor, receiving from him a tender and giving him a contract, the whole thing done in this sleight-of-hand manner. And you have not merely broken biscuits in paint cans sent to our soldiers—that is not the gravamen of the charge; but the gravamen of the charge is, as a Liberal speaking behind them said, it smells of something that we must not name in this chamber at least in connection with the name of any hon. member; but it is named and will be shouted throughout Canada. The gravamen is that it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that somebody in that Department of Militia was conspiring with Devlin. Who he is I am not going to say. And how does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) defend it? Why, he says, it was only the small sum—$4,000. As if this would make any difference, if it were only forty cents—if there was fraud and villainy and infamy beneath it. But the minister (Mr. Fielding) glides off and says that something similar took place under Conservative rule. Is that any defence? The leader of the opposition (Mr. Foster) traversed what he said: Is this the kind of government we have—that they cannot defend a single charge except by saying that somebody else did something as bad? You call me a thief, and I say you have purloined a pocket handkerchief. You say my virtue is not what it should be, and I ask you if you are chaste? It is talk only heard in the unnamable purlieus of great cities. You see two people with arms akimbo and jaw to jaw howling, 'you're another, you're another.'

When the hon. gentleman came to the expenditure, there was the gliding on thin ice. I suppose he learned to slide in Halifax. I should like to see him on skates. Here is a government whose members, in a hall within earshot of this chamber, declared that if they were returned to power they would reduce the expenditure and reduce the public debt, both of which they characterized as fearful. But after four years we find that they have increased both. And what is their defence? 'We have not increased them as much as you did.' Why, this is the language—I suppose I may name the hon. gentleman as he is now in Paris—this is the language of Tarte. As he says: We have spent much, but we have made much. 'We.' It is not the ploughman in the field, it is not the mechanic in the shop, it is not the merchant, it is not the toiler, who have made Canada prosperous but 'we,' sitting in 'our' offices or making 'our' little speeches in parliament. Why, Sir, the expenditure, as the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has shown, has gone up to a frightful extent. But the answer is: If you will look at it closely, it will not look quite so bad, because the country is prosperous and can bear it. This is the language of a young spendthrift who has come in for a great fortune. He has promised his father that he will economize and will look carefully after the estate. But after four years the father finds that he has been indulging in the most licentious extravagance; and when spoken to about it the young spendthrift says: Is it not my own? Have I not a fine income and a great estate? He has both, though he did not do anything to create them. Hon. gentlemen opposite came into a great estate, I grant you, an estate that had been managed for eighteen years with consummate skill, with such skill as to lay foundation for expansion to the present proportions. But, coming into that estate, they say: It is we who have made it all. The Prime Minister points to the great canals sweeping through the vast domain, canals that have been deepened by his predecessors and says: Is it not magnificent? I did it all. But one who hears that begins to think: Well this man has only been on the estate for four years; and I think I have heard about one John A who used to be here; and I think I have seen these canals deepened years ago. But no, the Prime Minister says: I did it all; I made all this prosperity. The argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) with regard to the expenditure is worth noting carefully. He says, with regard to the expenditure that that expenditure is not so bad, because it has been kept within the receipts. Has he done that? Why, Sir, one of the ways that it appears to be kept within receipts, is this, that you are charging to capital account things that should never be charged to capital. The Minister of Railways and Canals the other night had to reduce, at the bidding of my hon. friend, one item by $7,000. The hon. gentleman saw it was improper. Among those items, we had $5,000 for a snow fence charged to capital. If we could only get a glimpse at that snow fence, we should see still more clearly that it is a scandal to book-keeping to charge a snow-fence to capital. But in that snow fence there is a nigger. He has a rubicund face—I will go no further.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman, in claiming credit for the extension of income, forgot to say that the price of every commodity has gone up. You are under a complete delusion. You are deceiving the people unconsciously, when you say there have been much larger purchases than in years past. The fact is that the price of everything has so gone up that these gentlemen are collecting tolls on that advanced price, and they are working the whole out of the expenditure of the country. Then the hon. gentleman felt uneasy about economy, he felt the dart of the leader of the opposition sticking under his fifth rib. What was his defence? What was the final defence made by these hon. gentlemen the last time they will sit on those Treasury benches for many a year? What is their defence for not having brought about the economy they promised? Why, Sir, they read a speech of Sir Charles Tupper made in 1878. Sir Charles Tupper said in 1878, that they would be more economical than Mr. Mackenzie, and were they not? Did the hon. gentleman prove that the Conservative government did not carry out his promise to be more economical? When he said he would be more economical, he meant that the incompetence and maladministration that had characterized the Mackenzie government, would not characterize his administration, and that he would on the lines of administration of Mr. Mackenzie be more economical than he; and if you make a comparison of the two administrations you will find that that promise was carried out. And the hon. gentleman to-night points to the expenditure in 1881-2, in order to show the vast extravagance of the present government was not so bad after all. When, in 1879, the Conservative administration came into power, a new sense of life rushed through the veins of the country. Great schemes were put forward. At that time the government of Sir John A. Macdonald had entered upon the greatest work that any people of ten millions or twenty millions had ever entered upon, that of building the greatest railway in the world, a work which put back-bone and body, breadth, as well as length, into Canada. The government of Sir John A. Macdonald entered upon a career of great public works, and yet the hon. gentleman puts his hands on his heart, and says: It is I who built all these canals. There they are, false to every promise, false to the promise of tariff reduction, false to the promises of economy, and then, strutting about like a jackdaw in peacock's plumes, saying that the achievements of better men who preceded them, are their achievements. It is by such means that they hope to capture the people. Sir, the people know them from the Prime Minister to the Minister of the Interior, from the Minister of the Interior to the Minister of Public Works, from the Minister of Public Works to the Minister of Railways and Canals. Why, there is not a man of them who is not convicted before the people of Canada to-day. And yet the minister says: We are going before the people, we will be accepted and returned again. Yes, returned again. Do they indeed suppose the people at this hour, are capable of being humbugged to the extent they think they can humbug them? The policy of this government on which it got in, and on which it is living to this hour, can be described in just one word: Humbug, humbug, humbug. I was surprised to read the other day in the Gazette of 1877, that a constituent of the right hon. gentleman, had at that period actually done what it took some of us a couple of years to do. A constituent of his wrote a letter to the Gazette quoting a speech that the hon. gentleman made when he thought that only French ears were listening to him. He was talking about the tax on tea, and he said: The tax only affects Irishmen, because Irishmen only are fond of tea, potatoes and whisky. The writer of this letter is an Irishman who resented this insult to Irishmen. And he then states that he had heard the hon. gentlemen in different parts of his constituency, and that his habit was to say one thing on one platform, and another thing on another. We know that is his habit. But, Sir, 'in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird.' The people of this great community have been taken once, but now the net has been spread so palpably that the game cannot work any longer. The right hon. gentleman came up west and spoke in his calm, nice way and charming manner, and the people took him at his word and they said: He is going to give us what he promised at Moosejaw, lower freight rates, free implements, cheap coal oil; he is going to give us complete enfranchisement. Now, they believe that if they gave him power again, he would not touch one of the things he promised, no not with his little finger.

Now, Sir, need we be surprised that under these circumstances we find yourself, Mr. Speaker, and other hon. members of this House refusing, some of them refusing out of fear and some of them because they will not face the people under the weight of the odium, under the crushing weight of broken pledges and falsified promises that any man who shoulders the task of running as a candidate of the right hon. gentleman has to face and to bear—refusing to again offer themselves for re-election to this House. Where are they going? They cannot be elected. I have been in some of the constituencies. I have attended some picnics in the west, I have made some speeches, and the people of the country, if I may use a vulgar expression, are on to them and on to them all.

The hon. gentleman glided very rapidly over very thin, thin ice. He did not dare to touch Gauthier, my son's father-in-law, or Robillard. The charming way that Robillard gets a note from the secretary of the department: Please tender! You remember the connection by marriage with one of the sons or daughters, I do not know which it is, of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Please tender; and then Robillard tenders. Robillard is more wide awake than Gauthier, and what does he do? Now, Mr. Speaker, I commend this to your consideration. Robillard antedates his application so as to make it appear that it preceded the invitation to tender. But, he forgot, when sending it, with that guileless innocent of an Israelite indeed, to tell the clerk in the Public Works Department not to stamp the letter, because it is the custom when a letter comes into the department to stamp the date upon which it arrives, and we have that guileless letter of Robillard dated after the invitation to tender was given. Then Gauthier, I believe, is a quill driver. Fancy Gauthier advancing to dredge the rapids with his quill in his hand! When the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Foster) or myself asked the hon. Minister of Public Works: 'Who is Gauthier? Is he a relative of yours?' 'No,' in his rather bluff, emphatic way, 'He is no relative of mine.' 'Is he your son's father-in-law?' and then the heroic manner in which the hon. Minister of Public Works said: 'How can I help it if my sons do have fathers-in-law?'

The hon. gentleman glided over the cement business and he never said a word about $425 for a dredge. We want to know what kind of a dredge it was? Four hundred and twenty-five dollars a day! I was speaking to a man, not very far from a minister of the Crown, and he could not understand how any dredge would cost $425 a day. Eight dollars an hour is a good price for a dredge or $80 a day. Eight dollars an hour is what Gauthier gets, I believe. He gives $5 and sits there in his office, writing away with his quill; the dredging is being done and he takes $3 an hour. Is it not a nice thing to be the father-in-law of the son of a minister? It is one of the best assets in Canada to-day to be a relation of one of the ministers. I think we have heard of a relation of a minister who had a sleeping interest in a railway contract. And, we had the young Napoleon. I do not know whether the hon. leader of the opposition said anything about Burrows. These marital relations are so embarrassing to the government. One is the father-in-law of the son of a minister, another is the mother-in-law and Burrows is the brother-in-law of the hon. Minister of the Interior. I exposed how Burrows got an opportunity away from all competitors, without fulfilling the conditions of an order in council, passed to enable him to get hold of these timber limits, and how he was enabled to make $25,000 at a snap. These relationships are a great thing. Then, my hon. friend gave us a proverb. This government is strong on many things. It is strong on tu quoque, but it is especially strong on proverbs. It commenced its career with 'Business is business,' enunciated by the hon. Minister of Public Works, and now we have the hon. Minister of Finance telling us that he is a great admirer of what is written up in the west. 'Wise expenditure is true economy.' The Galena oil deal, the Crow's Nest deal, the Drummond County, the Galops Rapids, the Edmonton Bridge, the Mann-Mackenzie deal, and in face of these we have the proverb, 'Wise expenditure is true economy.' Then we have last, but not least, the emergency ration business. It is only $4,000; what signifies it? It is not $4,000 that the people are caring about. We had better have it dragged out into the light at once because we know we have a man at the head of the Militia Department whose character ought to drive him from that position. We know that the Prime

Mr. DAVIN.

Minister knows it because I know that the facts are in the possession of the Prime Minister, and it is scandalous cowardice on our part that we will not drag into light the infamous use that is made of the authority of a minister who uses his ministerial power to gratify the errant impulses of a corrupt nature. There are transactions known to the Prime Minister in regard to that man that should have prevented the Prime Minister from placing him in a position where he would have the opportunity of gratifying his greed, to put it mildly. I say it is scandalous, and if the Prime Minister had had a proper sense of what is due to himself and due to the people of Canada the hon. Minister of Militia would not have been in his present place, and we should have been spared these developments in regard to Devlin which are as disgraceful to Canada as they are dangerous to our young men.

Then the Minister of Finance said that the aggregate taxation was a proof of prosperity, and that the country was merely keeping pace with it. Increased expenditure; increased income; and he harped upon that. The thing is so utterly baseless, that the strongest admirer of the Prime Minister in Canada, the gentleman who writes in the Sun, has had to abandon a defence in regard to these matters and to come out and say that there can be no defence for it. It is all very well to see these ministers in the second and third year of their term, coming to the House with their shoulders swaggering as we have seen them, coming in feeling that their pockets are well lined, and that they are in power and can drive about in their carriages; that is all very fine, but now when they are about to go before the people of Canada and to render an account there is an unwonted pallor and an unused humility in their demeanour. What was the minister's (Mr. Fielding's) defence about the Yukon. He said: I have just got the figures from the Minister of the Interior, and for three years, 1897-8, 1898-9, and into 1900, the receipts were $3,869,000, and the expenditure $3,215,000. That would make a surplus of $653,000, or for the three and a half years $187,000 a year. That is the profit from a Golconda; that is the profit out of the cream skimming of the richest gold-bearing land in the world. Why, Sir, if the Minister of the Interior had managed that territory in the interests of Canada and not in the interests of Wade and McGregor and his pals, instead of having $187,000 a year we should have had a million in the coffers of Canada. Did the Minister of Finance try to show there was no mismanagement? Not at all. His duty was to have defended the sending of the militia there which is perfectly indefensible, and to have defended the numberless mal-administrations on the part of the minister (Mr. Sifton), but all he did was to say there was $187,000 a year profit out of the richest gold-bearing lands on the face of the globe. It is a scandalous record, and there is no part of the somewhat bold defence of the Minister of Finance bolder than that.

Then, we had his peroration: Four years of good government; four years of clean government. Clean government! Why, Mr. Speaker:

Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks;
The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets
Is hushed within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear it.

Clean government, forsooth. Corrupt government, a government so corrupt that it is putrid now. The Minister of Finance said: Look at us. We had a bath this morning; our face is washed; we have a paper collar and a new tie, and a white shirt that we got done in the Chinese laundry; see how spick and span we are. Yes, Mr. Speaker, look closely at them. Why, Sir, you cannot go near them without having evidence to more than one sense that there has the foulest of all diseases crept into that government. You cannot talk with a man on the street car but he tells you—sometimes a Liberal, and sometimes a Conservative—that the moment this government appeals to the people, they will be swept away by the indignation of the electors at their misconduct. I grant you that from a popular government or from the administration of any government, you cannot wholly keep away much that you would like to. Corruption will steal in. But it is a form of corruption that may leave ministers comparatively pure. Under pressure of politics, sometimes more men may be employed or something of that sort, but what we see in the present government is that into every part of the House, into their parlour, into their study, and into the holy of holies, so to speak, of the internal management of the government things that we do not like to speak of have crept. You cannot think of the Department of the Interior, with its Wades, its McGregors, its McCrearys, its deals—and all more or less connected with the minister—until that minister is so discredited, that when the Minister of Finance yesterday or the day before tried to get up a cheer for him, and the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) to-day, they could only just clap their two miserable hands together. There was not an echo from another member. And when the minister (Mr. Sifton) rose to speak after being four months away, presumably ill, allegedly ill, and when the party should have some tenderness for him, when he rose in his place twice to vote, there was not a cheer. An attempt to cheer from the ministerial benches ended miserably as I have described. It was vain to try and get one up, and those who did had to clap their two miserable palms together in vain.

Let me say here in regard to the Minister of the Interior. We may discuss it. He has come back, and I am sorry to say that he is not a bit improved. I know what his disease is, and I honestly regret to say that it is incurable. The technical name for it is non-purulent otitis media catarrhalis. In ordinary language it is called dry catarrh of the middle ear. It is incurable. It may go on as it is for years and years, and the hearing remain about the same, but every aurist knows it is impossible to make it better. One of the best aurists in the world is Dr. Buller, of Montreal, and yet we read of the Minister of the Interior going here and going there, speaking in London and speaking in Paris, when he could have consulted the very best professional advice at home. What was to prevent him coming across to Canada? It is only a nine days trip. What was to prevent him coming across the ocean and spending a night with us, and giving us some explanation, and going with us to one of the committees. No, Sir; he never spread his wings for Canada until the rumour came that this House was about to close. Take Mr. Tarte. Nobody need have any tenderness in speaking of his health. The man who can go about making speeches from one part of the continent to the other (and making such speeches) nobody thinks for one moment that it is illness that keeps Mr. Tarte away. The reason why both these gentlemen have kept away from this House was to prevent us doing what we would have done if they were here, namely, arranging them as you could not arraign them in their absence. That is the reason they remained away.

Take the conduct of the Minister of Public Works. Take his carpet scandal, take the scandal of the fence around the park. Take the scandal of the Edmonton bridge. Why, Sir, I said in regard to that bridge, and I repeat it, that I put the handcuffs on his wrists in such a manner that no power under heaven can take them off. Mr. Tarte will stand for ever before the people of Canada with regard to that Edmonton bridge, with the handcuffs on his wrists, because the facts as shown by the documents to be found in his own department, bring guilt home to him.

These things being so, fancy the boldness of the hon. gentleman. I said the other day that if my friend the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) were dissected, I would like to get his gall. But what would the gall of the member for North Wellington be to the gall of the hon. gentleman who has just defended his government? He told us a story about some young lady and about marriage. It was a nice little story and very appropriate. I suppose I may tell a little story that will apply to this government when they go with their sunny ways and offer the boy Canada an orange, and he refuses, as I think he will to take the orange, or to be taken in by the smile; and the reason will be illustrated by this story. There was a doctor who used to give sweets and candies and oranges to a little boy. One day he gave the boy an orange, and afterwards, to see how the boy would take it, he hid himself and threw aside a curtain which concealed a skeleton such as doctors sometimes have. The boy ran away frightened. The next day the boy was at the other side of the street, and the doctor said, 'Come, won't you have an orange to-day?' 'No, no,' said the boy, 'I will have no more oranges of yours; you know I saw you naked yesterday.' When the hon. gentleman goes with his sunny ways and offers the boy Canada taffy and oranges, if his taffy and his sunny smiles do not have the same reception as they used to have, and the boy Canada gives him the cold shoulder and a wide berth, let him remember that the boy has now seen him naked. The skeleton of the Liberal party is before the people of Canada, and the sunny ways and the taffy will avail no more.

Amendment negatived.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Dominion Rifle Association—Allowance for a building on the Rockliffe rifle range... $1,500.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Was a contract given for that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden), This building was constructed by the Dominion Rifle Association, under the direct charge of Lieut-Col. Tilton. A portion of the work is done by contract, but I am positive that the expenditure has been very carefully considered and full value obtained.

Mr. BERGERON. Has any contract been let for the rifle range at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, for about $33,000 or $34,000. I think the contract was given to White & Lyons, of Ottawa, who were the lowest tenderers.

Compensation to E. W. Armstrong, 14th Field Battery, for injuries received at annual drill, June, 1898..... $500

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have a report here of that matter. During the annual drill at camp Fort Nope, June, 1898, driver E. W. Armstrong was thrown from his seat and injured by the horse stepping on him and the wheel passing over him. As a result he has been deformed ever since. Considering the condition of the patient and his sufferings, we have recommended compensation, and also in view of the fact that unless liberal treatment is given in case of accident, recruiting will be much discouraged.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I approve of this grant. Armstrong lives in my constituency, and, knowing all the circumstances, I endorse this vote.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). I had to call attention, two or three years ago, to the case of an accident, but could obtain no allowance for the victim. As, however, the policy of the department has evidently been changed, I shall have to call the attention of the minister to the matter again.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Each case must be taken on its merits, and this vote does not constitute any precedent for undertaking to pay everything. This is not the first instance of a compassionate allowance having been granted.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Will the hon. minister grant a military investigation in the case of Lieut. Foyle ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not see how I can do that, but I will look into the matter, and if any injustice has been done will see that it is remedied.

Mr. McDOUGALL. In the first place, the hon. minister (Mr. Borden), should have brought down the papers, as he promised on Saturday to do. But, he was kind enough to show me the report of an official of his department with regard to the case of Lieutenant Foyle. From what I can gather from the papers, and from what I have heard from Lieutenant Foyle, it seems that a medical certificate was sent to the department by a man who did not examine Lieutenant Foyle himself, but who spoke on the authority of some one else who was called in. And the House heard the hon. member from Inverness (Mr. McLennan), that he had made the certificate with the assistance of another medical officer who was in command of the battalion. And the only information on which that certificate was given, was that Lieutenant Foyle had fallen in his chair, while the doctor was administering medicine to him, or something of that kind. But, I cannot see that that is sufficient ground for a medical officer to make out a certificate that would terminate the official of an officer in the militia. The hon. member (Mr. McLennan, Inverness), tells us that the medical man who assisted him, told him that Lieutenant Foyle had fallen in his chair. But he might as well tell us that this very officer who had given him the information, and whom as commanding the regiment, had fallen off his horse.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Who fell off his horse ?

Mr. McDOUGALL. The commanding officer, and what is the difference between falling off his horse and falling in his chair ? Did that gentleman fall off his horse because he had an epileptic fit ? I do not consider the ground of the certificate as satisfactory or sufficient to disqualify Lieutenant Foyle. Julius Cæsar himself was an epileptic—there is no question about that, but that did not render him unfit for the discharge of the great duties devolving upon him. But Lieutenant Foyle, in the opinion of the hon. member for Inverness, is unfit to discharge the duties of lieutenant in the 94th Battalion, because somebody who had fallen off his horse, told him that Lieutenant Foyle fell off his chair while he was administering to him. We do not know what he had been administering to him—something to make him fall, perhaps. All that Lieutenant Foyle asks is a military investigation, and I cannot see any reason why the hon. minister should refuse it. Will not he say that he will grant that ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The whole question turns on whether Lieutenant Foyle is, or is not, an epileptic. If he is, as represented by two surgeons of the battalion—

Mr. McDOUGALL. They never examined him.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). The hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) is talking of what he knows nothing about—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE—by the two surgeons of the battalion, confirmed by the lieutenant-colonel, who is himself a surgeon—if he is as they say, a confirmed epileptic, any one who knows anything about military matters, will agree that he is not a man to be an officer in the militia.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What about Julius Cæsar ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He was not a lieutenant. I can only say that I will look over the evidence again, and, if there is any doubt, I will take further testimony on the subject. I do not believe there is any. If the man is an epileptic, it is not necessary to see him in an epileptic fit to be able to decide as to that fact. I am told it is notorious in the neighbourhood where Lieutenant Foyle lives, that he is an epileptic and has been for many years.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The hon. gentleman from Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), certainly pays me a high compliment professionally, in taking the view of my certificate that he does. I have given my certificate upon this case, upon evidence which is perfectly clear, and quite sufficient; and I declare to the hon. gentleman and to this House, and I will stake my reputation on the fact, that from my personal knowledge and from having examined Lieutenant Foyle professionally, I know that he is an epileptic. I am backed up in this by the evidence of Dr. Macdonald, another medical officer of that battalion, a fellow townsman of Lieut. Foyle. Dr. McDonald, of Baddeck, practices his profession within a short distance of where Lieut. Foyle lives. Dr. McDonald's certificate as to the fact of Lieut. Foyle being an epileptic is in the Militia Department as well as mine. And yet, my certificate is questioned simply because a Dr. McKeen has given a certificate not at all to his credit, and with whom I would not care to be put in comparison professionally or otherwise. I declare, Mr. Chairman, that the two certificates were officially given, backed by the evidence of Dr. Bethune, and I would ask this House whether they are to be set aside by the opinion of the hon. member for Cape Breton, who knows nothing about epilepsy except what he hears about Julius Cæsar being afflicted in that way. I think his knowledge of the health of Julius Cæsar is on a par with that of his knowledge of Lieut. Foyle. I have given that certificate and I stand by it. I do see on what ground the member for Cape Breton can doubt the validity of that certificate. It is notorious in and around Baddeck and through the county of Victoria that the lieutenant is an epileptic and has all the characteristic symptoms of a chronic case of epilepsy. As I said the other day, there are cases, even in an asylum, of epileptics who have lucid spells like others afflicted in this way, and even a professional man such as Dr. McKeen claims to be, without his attention being called to the fact that a person is epileptic, might pass him as rather a healthy man.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think my hon. friend will have to offer us something in the way of a margin in addition to speaking of his reputation, before this House can accept the statement of a gentleman occupying his position and undertaking to give a certificate of the kind he did in respect to Lieut. Foyle. Without having examined the man, he told us that he was in the field with him on two occasions, and yet he was unable to detect in Lieut. Foyle the conditions which he certified to in his certificate, and he was therefore obliged to call in two doctors to give him some knowledge, and those two doctors had never examined this man. So, on the strength of hearsay my hon. friend comes and gives his official certificate to the effect that Lieut. Foyle was discharged because of some affliction of which he knew nothing. Imagine, Mr. Chairman, any insurance company accepting a certificate of a medical man in respect of a man they were insuring, on the strength of that medical man going and asking somebody else what he knew about his health. I never heard of anything of the kind before.

Guard at Welland Canal..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I move to reduce that item to $1,700. The accounts have been received from the accountant, and he thinks that $1,500 might be enough, but advises that $1,700 be voted in order to make sure.

Motion agreed to.

War in South Africa—Expenses of Canadian regiment, temporarily serving in garrison at Halifax to replace Imperial regiment, the removal of which was caused by the war in South Africa.... $160,000

Mr. FOSTER. How long are they to be there?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This regiment consists of 1,000 men who are stationed at Halifax for the time being to replace a portion of the Imperial garrison which was required to serve in South Africa. The government does not know yet when the garrison will be relieved of this service.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). This may be the proper place to renew my request for the names of the parties who bought the horses that were sent to South Africa, and the amounts paid for them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I promised my hon. friend that information twice, and I am sorry that I have not got it with me. I think it will come more properly under the supplementaries for next year. I will make a memorandum of it and bring it down when we get through these items.

Mr. SPROULE. When that item comes up I may not be in the House. The hon. gentleman might leave it on the Table or send it to me in an envelope.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will do that.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Concerning the pay of the volunteers in South Africa, are they retaining that pay until they get back to Canada? Have they retained the pay of the volunteers who were sent to South Africa? I protested at an earlier period in this session when it was announced that the volunteers were not to be paid by the Canadian government until they returned to Canada.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the understanding was that that would be the course of procedure. At any rate, no amount has been paid to them since their arrival in South Africa on account of extra pay.

Mr. WALLACE. I think this is an outrage. These men have been undergoing all sorts of privation, and they have required money. I say it is a shame, a scandal and a disgrace for the government of Canada to retain that money without a particle of reason for doing it. What is the reason? The reason given was, that there might be somebody here who had some claim. Suppose that a man has a wife here. I understand the patriotic fund is providing for the people at home. Is the government paying the wives of any of these soldiers who are left at home?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, that is the regular allowance for the permanent corps; but, I mean outside of that?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The separation allowance is being paid outside of the permanent corps.

Mr. WALLACE. That is the separation allowance they are entitled to receive. But, what about the pay of the soldiers?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Nothing has been done with that.

Mr. WALLACE. In the case of the militia soldier it has not been paid. These men who have been sent thousands of miles away, require, as Canadians, more in the way of necessities than the British soldiers have been accustomed to, and they require money. Although money is due from the Canadian government, it has not been paid to them. There is not a shadow of reason for it. I know there is a necessity for the money. Did we not read the other day in the paper about two or three Canadian soldiers who had returned to England convalescent, who were being sent to a ship some distance away, and who had not money to pay their street car fares? But for some benevolent persons these poor wounded soldiers, who had not strength to walk, and who had no money, would have been unable to get along, although the Canadian government knew very well that this money was due to these men, and that it had not been paid. I know there are a great many cases of hardship besides this, and there is not a shadow of excuse for the government having refused to pay these men.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think that the criticism is scarcely fair. I am not aware that there have been any cases of hardship. These men are precisely in the same position as all the other soldiers of the British army, and I have not heard that there has been any suffering through want of money. No doubt there has been suffering in many cases, but on many occasions millions of money would have been of no use to them when the soldiers were away from the base of supplies and where there were no supplies that money could secure.

Mr. WALLACE. What about when they were at the base of supplies?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. When they are in the presence of supplies the British government gives them ample supplies. I have had letters from officers, and there has not been the slightest complaint on that score. I received several letters, one only the other day from Dr. Ryerson, of Toronto, who has been out there in the interest of the Red Cross Society, who has done very valuable work, and who has distributed a great deal of money for that society. He has never hinted at any suffering from the cause mentioned by the hon. gentleman. So far as the hon. gentleman's reference to the cases in England is concerned, these men were in charge of the War Department. The Imperial authorities undertook, when we delivered our volunteers in South Africa, to return them, and to take care of them, and they gave them the same treatment that they gave their own soldiers. If they choose to bring them back by way of England, as they do in many cases, they will transfer them from place to place. If anything of the kind has occurred, such as has been mentioned by the hon. gentleman, it must be because the Imperial authorities have made some mistake in the matter, and not because it was not intended to provide fully for these men.

Mr. WALLACE. If they had had a dollar of the money which they had earned in their pockets they would have been able to pay 10 cents or 20 cents street car fare. I have letters stating the necessity for money, and they are from those who are not extravagant in expenditure either. The money is required there.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They did receive their pay there.

Mr. WALLACE. I know they received British soldiers' pay there.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Yukon—Further sum required ..... $50,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Twenty thousand dollars is to repay the North-west Mounted Police for supplies of wood and rations. This $20,000 is really a matter of book-keeping between the Militia Department and the mounted police.

Mr. FOSTER. When was that incurred ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you pay it directly ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was supplied by the Northwest Mounted Police, and we are returning the money. The remainder is for the construction of a barracks in the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. What for ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman will remember that I said the barracks would probably cost about $40,000. The accountant says that for the construction of the barracks in the Yukon $50,000 has been paid out of the ordinary votes for pay, supplies, transports, &c. The cost has been greater than was anticipated.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of the permanent force have you up there yet ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have not any there now. They will be here in a couple of days.

Mr. FOSTER. You have taken them all out ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. I do not know how many have come out, but there were 100 in the Yukon last year.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total cost of that whole militia business, from start to finish ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not able to tell the hon. gentleman at this moment. I will give him the information when we reach a small item that appears in the supplementary estimates for next year.

Mr. FOSTER. What is done with these barracks now ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The mounted police are using them ; but they are larger than are required.

Militia—For pay and maintenance of Yukon field force..... $30,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This item I propose to reduce to $20,000, and it will be made up as follows : pay of force to July, including good conduct pay, $5,000 ; transport from Dawson to Vancouver, $7,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How are you bringing them out ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. By rail and boat. The memorandum I have here gives the rate from Dawson to Vancouver as $75 per man as per contract with the Canadian Development Company. From Vancouver to permanent corps stations, $5,000. The first-class rate from Vancouver to Montreal is $76.75 ; second-class, $64.50, with one-third off ; meals for officers, 75 cents ; for non-commissioned officers and men, 40 cents. The third item is for supplies in the Yukon during June, and contingent expenses, $3,000 ; making a total of $20,000, which will wind up the expenditure in connection with the militia in the Yukon.

To provide for the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law..... $9,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister say how that is to be expended ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). This is the same amount as was taken last year. Last year less than $600 was expended. Nineteen agents have been appointed throughout the Dominion. The only permanent agent appointed is E. T. Bremner, for the province of British Columbia. He is to have $1,500 per annum so long as his services are found by the government to be necessary. His duty is to examine into all branches of the Alien Labour Act so as to prevent as far as possible alien labour coming into the province of British Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is there an agent in British Columbia and not in the other provinces ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have appointed agents in other places, but not under salary. They are to be paid according to the work they do.

Administration of justice in the Yukon territory ..... $50,500

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I promised the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) to give him the statistics which justify the appointment of an additional judge in the Yukon. Mr. Ogilvie, the commissioner of the Yukon territory, and also the Bar Association, have pressed for the appointment of two additional judges, but the government has not seen fit to make more than one appointment. An inquiry made in December last reveals the following facts : The number of civil cases standing on the list on January 1, 1899, was 50 ; on the 15th of June, 1899, it had increased to 80 ; on the 15th of September it had increased to 96, and on the 13th of December last to 118. It was then reported by the clerk of the court that it was unlikely that the end of the list, as it then stood, would be reached by the 15th of June, 1900. My attention has been drawn to the fact that a great deal of the time of the court is taken up in hearing appeals from the magistrate's courts and preliminary objections, and it has been necessary to take examinations of witnesses before the clerk of the court. In the year 1898, 348 cases were instituted in the court, and up to the 1st of January, 1900, the number had increased to 799.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. SPROULE. What class of cases ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. These are all cases which in the province of Quebec would be Superior Court cases, in which the amount involved exceeds $200.

Mr. FOSTER. As the judges do not leave Dawson, I do not see why there should be $1,500 for travelling allowances.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have no information on that point. I am willing that that item should stand until I get the information.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an increase of $1,500 in the sheriff's salary.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A salary of $500 is provided by statute, but provision was made that in addition to that sum he should have certain fees. The statement of fees was not received, and in the meantime the salary was fixed at $1,200. Judging by the fees it has been found that they would justify a salary of $2,000. He is obliged to account to the government for all the fees in connection with the office.

Mr. FOSTER. What do the fees amount to ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The memorandum I have received is, that from the fees he would be entitled to a salary of $2,000. I infer from the memorandum that the statement of fees has been received, but it has not been submitted to me.

Mr. FOSTER. The Solicitor General might bring that down with the others.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the clerk ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give the name of the clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we had better let the item stand; the minister is not ready for his work.

Interior Department—To improve road at Grand Falls ..... $400

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. (Mr. Sifton). It is for needed repairs on the road leading north and south to Beau-lieu's Mills, on the ordinance land. The land was owned by the Dominion government, and the municipality declines to do any work on the road. From 1885 to 1895, the Federal government expended about $7,000 on this road. From 1895 until last year there was nothing done, and upon earnest representations, I asked for an appropriation of $400. My information is that $400 more would make the road fairly passable.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Was not the expense of making the road in the first instance, incurred in order to effect the sale of the lands ? If the lands have been sold, why should this government maintain the road ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The land is sold, but is not paid for, and there is considerable difficulty in securing payment. The parties think they pay too much, and there is considerable dissatisfaction. I fancy that unless the government show some disposition to assist them in this matter, the difficulty will be all the greater. Under the circumstances, it does not appear to me to be an unwise policy to spend a little money.

Mr. FOSTER. The lands are all sold ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the lands are all sold to private parties, and will the minister tell me in what other place we build roads on lands belonging to private parties ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The position of the government is that of being an unpaid vendor, and the government has, therefore, a very large interest in the matter. If the land had increased in value since the sale, then the government would be independent, but my advice is that the land had decreased in value, and if we sold it again, the possibilities are that we would not be so well off.

Ordnance lands ..... $1,300

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is the same vote as last year for the management of ordnance lands, and is made up as follows : $200 for advertising sales ; $200 for legal and other expenses connected with sales ; auctioneer's expenses, $500 ; and caretaker's expenses, $380.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there any buildings on the lands to take care of ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are some buildings that were formerly used for military purposes, but they are not, I suppose, of any special value from an intrinsic point of view. I think the farm at Longueuil, a considerable portion of which was sold last year, had some buildings.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any rent to be received from these lands.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, there is some small revenue. I think in connection with the lands near Ottawa, they are of some value.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me we are paying a big price for auctioneering, $500. Why pay that amount if no sales are contemplated.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are simply providing in case sales should take place. If anybody applies for these lands, they must be sold by auction, and if there are no applications there will be no auction fees.

To compensate members of the North-west Mounted Police for services rendered carrying mails between Bennett and Dawson during the winter of 1898-9, 64,013 miles, at 10 cents per mile ..... $6,401 30

Mr. SPROULE. That is where the Post Office Department gets the benefit.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). No, the police carried the mails during the year referred to and the cost was fixed by the controller at some $47,000, which was charged up in the Postmaster General's Report. But the controller thought that the police themselves should receive some extra pay for this extra service, and he recommended the payment of this amount.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman, out of the post office vote, paid the mounted police the $47,400 due them for carrying the mails?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Parliament voted last year a bulk sum for the service of the police, some $300,000. A part of that item was a joint vote to be applied for certain common services and was so applied, according to the order of parliament. But these policemen were not specially engaged to carry the mails, and the controller thought they should be compensated for this extra work.

Mr. FOSTER. As the Postmaster General will not answer my question, I ask the Minister of Finance whether in the item for 1898-99, in the expenditure of the Post Office Department, the sum of $47,400 is included, which was paid the mounted police, or whether that is charged against the mounted police in the public accounts and not against the Post Office Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). In the public accounts that money is entered as paid to the North-west Mounted Police, but the Postmaster General, in his report, has charged the Post Office Department with the amount, and to that extent diminished the surplus he would otherwise have.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the Postmaster General paid that amount out of the Post Office revenue? I am putting the question to the Minister of Finance.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Postmaster General may be said to have done so, because that money was voted by parliament to be applied in a certain way and was not handed over to the Post Office Department, but with the hon. gentleman's own consent and at his own suggestion and on his own demand, it was voted in that way, and the vote was carried out literally according to the direction of parliament. The money was applied as parliament directed, and the hon. gentleman must be well aware of that fact.

Mr. FOSTER. The Postmaster General knows that he has never paid one cent out of his post office revenues or appropriations of that $47,400 for the mail service performed by the mounted police. He knows that it is a dishonest transaction, as far as the keeping of the public accounts is concerned. He made a speech in this House in which he declared that his deficit was a certain amount, and the Toronto Globe, in its report and editorial comments, makes the deficit exactly the same, and that deficit takes no account at all of the $47,400 paid for carrying the hon. gentleman's mails by the mounted police. I have never known such a gross case. I do not know which most to condemn, the petty, miserable quibbling of the Postmaster General, the action of the Minister of Finance, or the utter blank dishonesty of the transaction.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If it is dishonesty, I will give the hon. gentleman a case of greater dishonesty. His administration, dishonestly—if we are to use strong language—withheld from the public accounts by robberies of future appropriations of parliament a deficit which had accumulated to the extent of $685,000. He got the service carried on for years, by robbing Peter to pay Paul, by eating into the next year's appropriation; and went on until we had a deficit of nearly one-fifth of the parliamentary appropriation, yet not one farthing of the expenditure appeared in the public accounts. In the year 1896, he pretended to wind up with a certain expenditure; yet, when the accounts came to be audited, it was found that for the last year they were in office, that they had not expended the whole parliamentary appropriation for that year, but for that one year they had accumulated a deficit of $70,000—that is $70,000 extra which was not charged against their expenditure for 1895-6. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that he is simply trying to destroy the force of good administration by his petty fogging quibbling in connection with this service. He knows that in his own administration they did do what he wants us to do. He knows that his administration deliberately passed an order in council declaring that a large amount of expenditure in connection with the carrying of the mails in the North-west should be charged to other departments of the government. I have told the hon. gentleman twice and I tell him the third time—he knows full well that under his own administration, the wretched makeshift which they dignified with the name of a service to the Yukon was a dismal failure, and they did not even pay their liabilities but left them for us to pay. He established a service by the mounted police in the Yukon, and you will not find anything for this service charged to the Post Office Department during the hon. gentleman's regime. He placed the carrying of the mails in the Yukon in the hands of the mounted police, and did not pay them for it; and the expense does not appear as an item in the Post Office accounts. Why, then, is he so anxious that we should do what he did not do? We have treated the matter in a fair way. We have given in the Postmaster General's report the cost of the Yukon service and the revenue from it, and we have also given the revenue and expenditure for the rest of Canada. There are two distinct accounts that anybody can understand, and that can be compared with the accounts for similar service under the late administration. If the hon. gentleman wants to add the two together, let him do so. Adding the $47,000 or whatever is the excess of expenditure over income, gives him the total. Let him take all the comfort he can out of it, as an offset to the disreputable record of maladministration of the post office under his own administration. As the Minister of Finance, he said that there would be a deficit of $800,000 for many years to come, and he had no expectation of improving it. Will the addition of $47,000 to the postal deficit under this administration extricate him from the difficulty in which he finds himself, owing to the complete failure of his predictions? Let him take all the comfort he can out of this $47,000, and you still have the fact that the service under this government is carried on with only half the deficit that characterized it under the government of which he was a member, while postal rates have been reduced 33 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two or three things to say. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has acknowledged his fault, but has attempted to justify it by saying some things which might be true in part, and he has said other things that are not true—but whether true or not, they make his position no better. His position is that all the receipts and the expenditures are put down in the accounts of the Post Office Department. But the other fact lying alongside of it is that in some way he got another department to carry $47,400 worth of his mails into and out of the Yukon, and he has not paid for these charges, he acknowledges that, but says the figures appear in his report. But that does not exculpate him, because when you come to the public accounts you will see that his receipts are there and his expenditures are not there. If you wish to find his expenditures on this service, you must look at the North-west Mounted Police accounts. The hon. minister acknowledges the whole thing. And yet he is willing as a cabinet minister and as Postmaster General to go to the country year after year with the false pretense that his revenue, as compared with his expenditure is so and so, when really his expenditure is $47,400 more.

The hon. gentleman says, in order to exculpate himself, that that transaction is not to be compared in turpitude with another transaction. He says that the Post Office Department, at the end of one year had overexpended and had consequently dipped into the vote for next year. There is not a department in his government that has not done that this year, there is not a department which will not do it to a greater or less extent—I hope it will be to a small extent. But I will tell the hon. gentleman what was not done by the Post Office Department with regard to that $617,000—they did not attempt to conceal it—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They stole it altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. No, they neither stole it nor concealed it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They took it improperly.

Mr. FOSTER. No, the post office service was paid for out of the post office vote. But the post office service in this case is concealed in the North-west Mounted Police vote. And the public accounts which go to the country from the hand of the Finance Minister contain that assertion also. Now, the hon. gentleman says that I have done the same thing with regard to the Yukon service in my time. There was no Yukon service until 1896.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, there was.

Mr. FOSTER. Testimony is given both by his own deputy and by Mr. White, of the North-west Mounted Police, that up to 1896, there were practically no mails into or out of the Yukon. Mr. White gave his testimony on oath to that. His statement simply was, that what was taken in was so small that it was carried in a despatch bag and the steamers took it in and charged nothing for it. Then, there was no filching from another vote in that respect. Then, from 1886 to 1888, there were three different contracts entered into with the post office for small sums, and all paid, so far as they were paid, by the post office. Those were the facts of the case, so far as they came out in the evidence. But the hon. gentleman is willing to sit in this House and claim that his deficit on the post office transaction of 1898-9 was $393,000, when it was $393,000 plus the $47,000, which is covered up in the North-west Mounted Police vote.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman thinks it is very honest, I suppose, for him to take money that was voted to carry on the service from July 1, 1895, and with it to pay debts for a previous year. Is that his idea of carrying on administration? I will concede that trifling expenses may not be closed up during the year in which they are incurred, and being trifling may run into the next year, or there may be some cause of delay, and necessarily the unpaid account has to be paid out of a future appropriation. But, that is an entirely different thing from adopting the principle, and in deliberately doing it as the hon. gentleman himself on the floor of parliament declared that it was done, not by accident—it did not happen because the accounts were not closed up—but it was deliberately done, knowingly done, and done with all the impropriety that one can attach to such a transaction. It is just as improper to take money that was voted to carry on a service from July 1 forward and apply it to a service for another year, as to take money from one department and apply it to another. That is my view. It is improper to apply money for a purpose for which parliament did not vote it. But, so far as this item of $47,000 is concerned, it was applied as parliament voted it. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well the discussion that took place a year ago on this floor. He knows that he himself and his leader both agreed to that mode of voting the money and to that mode of expending the money. They both agreed that that was the proper way to have this service performed by the police. When it was done, as the hon. gentleman knows, it was not possible to obtain details in time to meet the requirements of the audit office and to apportion it in the public accounts, and months elapsed before Controller White adjusted the amounts, but as soon as he adjusted the amounts, the particulars were set forth in full in the Postmaster General's report.

Mr. FOSTER. I deny entirely the statement made by the hon. gentleman. The whole basis of the transaction of that vote arose in this way. I attacked the principle of the hon. gentleman getting his work done by other departments than his own and not paying the bill. I did not object to the mounted police doing the work, because they could do it more economically; but I took the ground that the amount of work that was done for the post office by the mounted police should ultimately be charged upon the Post Office Department itself. The hon. gentleman agreed to that, and the proposition was that when the accounts were made up there should be the proper allocation to the Post Office Department of the amount of work which was done and charged for by the mounted police. The hon. gentleman got the work done, but he has made the mounted police pay the bill. Now, Mr. White testified that he charged nothing but the actual expenses, he charged nothing for the extra time of the police, nothing for posts, nothing for permanent equipment, but he just charged the extra amount in men, and dogs, and food, which was necessary, and he so made up his accounts. Now, this is an amount of money which the controller of the police thinks ought to be paid to the men for their extra work in carrying the mails. Mr. White testified that instead of paying $47,400, if the Postmaster General had done the work himself, he could not have done it for less than $100,000. That is what the Postmaster General would have debited to his account if he had done the work himself. But the police undertook the work, they did it for $47,000. He has not paid a dollar, and he will not even pay the little douceur which should be granted to the police.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If we are going to rearrange the public accounts so that the public can have a correct idea of them, I hope the hon. gentleman will correct them in respect to that $685,000.

Mr. FOSTER. There is nothing that needs correcting.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman left $685,000 of unpaid bills. He compelled us to apply to parliament and to add this $685,000 to the public debt. That $685,000 was never charged against the expenditure of the Post Office Department. You will find nothing in any of the accounts of that $685,000. How are you going to correct that? The hon. gentleman is entirely in error, in saying that there was no attempt on their part to establish a Yukon service before 1896. There was an attempt in 1894, and an attempt in 1895, and a continuation of that in 1896. They attempted several times to get people to undertake to go in. It is true that they got a Mr. Hamilton to agree to carry the mails in, and they agreed to sponge on him and pay him nothing. They agreed with another man in the fall of 1895 to carry the mails in for $600. He undertook to do it, but he abandoned the mail, and the late government never paid for the service. The department when it came under my charge, had to pay for that.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, when the account was adjusted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some time in 1896 we recovered the bag and we paid for it.

Mr. FOSTER. Could you pay for it before?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman was so proud of his service, why did he not pay for the services that the department succeeded in getting performed? He did not pay one of his accounts, except one of $100, and he left a number of accounts for his service unpaid. Why did he not pay them and allow them to be charged against his service? Why did the hon. gentleman not pay his bills and allow them to go into the report for the proper year? The hon. gentleman is quite inaccurate when he says that because the services performed for his administration by the police, were small, no allowance should be made. It is quite true that the mails were small, but yet they had to be carried, and if the hon. gentleman, instead of utilising the police had had to carry in a small jag of mails and to carry out a small jag of mails, if he had not endeavoured to do what I did, utilise the police, what would it have cost him to send in a handful of mails and bring them out again? It would have cost him probably just as much as it cost us, and yet because he was able to utilise the police, he is not to be charged with anything. If the argument is good, it is good to the full extent of it. If he got the police to carry one pound of mail matter in there, the Post Office Department should have been charged for the service so rendered. It is no excuse to say that it was not a large quantity. It was a valuable service performed for the Post Office Department, and if the police had not been utilised, a more expensive system would have been adopted. So, with us. In my case, we had the frankness to charge the Post Office Department with the expense of the service that was performed, and to put it in black and white in our report.

Mr. FOSTER. You did not charge the Post Office Department with it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman knows quite well that we did.

Mr. FOSTER. You did not, and you never paid it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman may assert and reassert, but that does not displace the fact.

Mr. FOSTER. When did you pay for it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Parliament voted the money to be applied in a certain way. Parliament placed the money under the control of the police, and not under the control of the Postmaster General. The police are under the control of another minister, and parliament gave the money to the other minister to be applied for the carrying of the mails, and the performance of police duties. The controller of the police, in due time, apportioned the cost and he fixed $47,400 as the fair value of the services rendered to the Post Office Department.

Mr. FOSTER. And you never paid it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman knows we did pay it.

Mr. FOSTER. The Post Office Department never paid it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would not dare to override a pledge to parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. You pledged parliament you would have the accounts distributed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have had them distributed.

Mr. FOSTER. No payment has been made by your department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman may assert and reassert, but his statements do not displace facts.

Mr. FOSTER. I know that not a cent has been paid by your department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman knows he is quibbling. He knows he is making himself ridiculous. He knows that there is set forth in black and white, a full and frank statement of the transaction and he knows that it compares most excellently with his record when he utilised the police and when he failed to put anything in the public accounts showing that the police had performed any service. I challenge him to put his finger on a single account for 1894 or 1895, to show that he charged the Post Office Department with the service which was rendered. If the service was valuable to the Post Office Department, it should have been charged to the department. Now, the hon. gentleman says that these very services should be paid for by the Post Office Department.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That proves nothing. The hon. gentleman is incapable of forming a fair judgment upon anything connected with my department. The hon. gentleman has never been very economical in his criticisms of my department. I challenged him to show by reference to anything he has ever said in this House, that he has ever once ventured to utter one single word of approval of anything that I have ever done in public life, and I have just one prayer, and it is that he never will.

Mr. McDOUGALL. You will not have reason to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not expect to have his approval, and I hope I never shall.

Mr. FOSTER. The Postmaster General should not make a spectacle of himself; he is a cabinet minister.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have submitted to your freedom of speech a good deal, and I will submit no longer. You will get back just as good as you give. The hon. gentleman has had his full swing at me, and he will have it no longer. I propose to defend myself from him from this time forward.

Mr. FOSTER. You are a fine old warrior.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have been charged already with $47,000—

Mr. FOSTER. And you have not paid a dollar of it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is misstating the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. You know you have not. You are a good old quibbler.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If there is any quibbler in this House the hon. gentleman is a master.

Mr. FOSTER. Stand up and say you have paid a single dollar of it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was paid in the way parliament said it should have been paid, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows it. He only chooses now to be obstinate. If I could get the statutes for 1899, I could show how it was paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you not get it, and not be talking about it all the time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman should not be so discourteous.

Mr. FOSTER. The post office never paid a dollar of it, and he took all the revenue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Your statement proves nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. Deny it if you can.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would ask the hon. gentleman to conduct himself with decorum.

Mr. FOSTER. You are setting me a bad example.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You should not object to a bad example.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been used to it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And you imitate it well.

Mr. FOSTER. I will try not to imitate this one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The controller of the North-west Mounted Police fixed on 10 cents a mile as a fair allowance to the police for the extra service rendered by them. I asked him whether he thought that amount ought to be charged to the Post Office Department, or if the $47,000 included that, and he said it did, and that it should not be charged to the Post Office Department.

Mr. FOSTER. They were doing your work, which you never paid a dollar for.

Mr. SPROULE. The object of book-keeping is to show the parties interested the exact income and outlay of a service, and if that is so, the Postmaster General is not familiar with the first elements of book-keeping. His books should show what the post office service cost the people of Canada, but he is misleading the electors in this case, because he gives all the receipts from the service, but when it comes to giving the outlay and item of $47,000, which does not appear in his books at all, but is paid from another source. He justifies this by saying that his predecessors kept their books badly. But two wrongs do not make a right, even if what he says is true. According to his own statement he started in with a better system of book-keeping when he obtained power, but we now find out his system of book-keeping is of the very worst kind. The people of the country are misled by it. I have heard it stated very frequently that the Postmaster General was entitled to credit because, although he had reduced the postage he had been so economic that the deficit in the post office service was not as large as it had been for years previous. Now we see that he gains this credit by conducting an improper system of book-keeping, and that services are performed for his department which are not charged against his department. The people of Canada have just ground for complaint because they are misled by the system of book-keeping he has adopted and is carrying out.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I have no desire to waste the time of the House, but it seems to me that the government do not desire to have these items passed, and, therefore, we might as well occupy a little of the time of the House in getting at these details. But, as the hon. Postmaster General has travelled so far from the record, and brought up for the fourteen hundredth time a matter which any schoolboy of ten years of age could understand, I do not think it out of place if we occupy a little time in discussing it. Some two or three years ago, when this bugbear of $600,000 of debt was brought out by the Postmaster General, I confess I actually thought that there was something wrong—that some money was lost to the country; but, to my great surprise, in listening to the debates in this House during the last week or two, and hearing this matter thoroughly ventilated, I discovered that the whole thing was a mare's nest. The Postmaster General has to-night declared the transaction to be an illegal one. As I understand it, year after year, when July 1 came, there was a quarter's salary due to the postmasters and mail couriers. The salaries could not be paid on June 30, the vouchers had not been sent in nor the cheques drawn; but the money had been paid in, and that, I understand, is the huge debt left on July 1 to be paid by the party now in power. This practice had been going on year after year, and I cannot conceive that the first cent of loss to the country occurred from doing business in that way. In fact, it had all the appearance of a reasonable business transaction. We can easily understand the reason why there was not money to the credit of the Postmaster General on July 1, 1896, to pay those salaries. Simply because the opposition, in the session of 1896, absolutely refused to allow any estimates to pass. The Postmaster General tells us that it was an illegal transaction. Now, who is to decide whether it was or was not? I fail to see that there was anything wrong or illegal about it. The Auditor General is the officer of this parliament who in every instance determines whether payment is legal or illegal, and he had declared year after year that that mode of paying these officers was legal, because he invariably sanctioned it, and we are bound by what the Auditor General sanctions. Therefore, it does not lie in the mouth of the Postmaster General to say that in this matter the former government was guilty of an illegal transaction. If the Auditor General allowed these payments to be made year after year, and hon. gentlemen opposite regard them as illegal, why do they not impeach the Auditor General? I know of no better principle that could be adopted. It is known all over the country, and the postmasters and mail couriers do not expect to get their pay until about three weeks after the expiration of the fiscal year. The money is voted to the Postmaster General for the mail service, and out of that money these salaries are paid in a way which the Auditor General declares to be perfectly legal; and I would like to know what we are sitting here for night after night discussing a transaction that has been pronounced a perfectly legal and honourable transaction by the man who governs the finances of this country? It seems to me to be perfectly childish to bring up matters of this kind and declare there is something wrong in them. Now, are we going to stop this discussion and allow the estimates to go through? For my part, I am willing to do so; but, if hon. gentlemen opposite are going to keep us sitting here until three o'clock in the morning, I am going to have a turn.

The committee rose and reported progress.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.
—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I stated the other day that there would be no new estimates to be submitted, but that possibly there might be some revotes which were omitted. I find that there is quite a large item for the port of Colborne, which was in the estimates of last year, and should have been revoted. Also for Hull public buildings $19,300, and a bridge over the Chaudiere slides $19,300. These will have to be revoted, and I propose to submit new supplementaries covering these items. I beg to present a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows:

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending June 30, 1901, and in accordance with the provisions of 'The British North America Act, 1867,' the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, July 10, 1900.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the message of His Excellency together with these estimates be referred to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—SIDINGS ON INTER-COLONIAL RAILWAY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to have an understanding with the Minister of Railways and Canals as to the information that I have asked for. He has promised me that information many times.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McDOUGALL. When?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the morning.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will not be here in the morning. I have waited for this information for a long time. It is not to the credit of the hon. gentleman to use such tactics to deprive me of the information to which I am entitled.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by 'tactics.'

Mr. McDOUGALL. I want the hon. minister to understand that in the administration of his department he has not treated me properly. As a business man I was doing business with his railway and he did not treat me fairly. Now, the least he can do is to give me the information he promised me. I waited to the last moment in order to get it, and before the Chairman left the Chair the hon. minister was going to give it to me. And now again he wants to put it off. I will not be here in the morning—and that is what the hon. gentleman is looking for, a chance to deprive me of the information. If he has the information, why can he not give it?

Mr. FOSTER. I think that the hon. minister (Mr. Blair) having promised the information should tell the hon. gentleman what he proposes to do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not got the information, though I expected to have it. I told the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) that I would give it to him in the morning, but he tells me that will not answer. If he likes, I will send it to him. If I had the information I would give it to him.

Mr. McDUGALL. The hon. gentleman has promised me the information for a week and now he is putting it off day by day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not putting it off. I expected to have the information, but not having it I cannot give it.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.15 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 11, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

I.C.R.—TRANSPORT OF SUPPLIES FOR BRITISH ARMY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. POWELL asked :

What was the total amount charged by the Intercolonial Railway in connection with the transportation of supplies to Halifax and St. John for the British army in South Africa?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I cannot find that any supplies were transported over the Intercolonial Railway from St. John and Halifax for the British army in South Africa.

Mr. McDUGALL.

Mr. POWELL. At least, the Intercolonial Railway transported a very large quantity of hay for the army.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The manager at Moncton tells me that the only thing he knows of is some hay that was carried to South Africa, but he is not able to tell me the quantity. He would have to pick out the amounts from the way bills, and that information he will forward as soon as he gets it. Nothing ever went from here for the British troops in South Africa that we know of.

Mr. POWELL. It may be that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) could give that information, as the work had the oversight of his department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If we can get the information, it will have to be by taking it from the way bills.

Mr. POWELL. It ought to have been collected by this time.

POSTAL RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FOR YUKON SERVICE.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Does the $3,693,177.53, given as postal receipts in the Public Accounts of 1899, column three, page (1) III., include the receipts from the postal matter carried into and out of the Yukon during the year 1898-9?

Does the $3,603,788.10, given as postal expenditure in Public Accounts, 1899, column five, page (1) VIII., include the sum of $47,400 paid by the mounted police in the year 1898-9 for carrying mails into and out of the Yukon, the $3,000 paid by the Department of the Interior for similar service in the same year, and the sum of $750 paid by the mounted police for postal matter sent by boat via the ocean and river route in the same year?

If not, are the $47,400 and the $750 included in the $865,415 in column four, Public Accounts, 1899, page (1) VI., under the head of mounted police expenditure, and in what column and under what heading is the $3,000 above mentioned included?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I think that question has been so fully answered in debate that I can add nothing to the information the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) already has on the subject. But if the hon. gentleman desires it, I can repeat the substance of the answers given.

Mr. FOSTER. I certainly desire an answer to the question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The total receipts of the Post Office Department for all branches of the service in all parts of Canada are correctly set forth in the Postmaster General's report for the fiscal year closing 30th June, 1899, and that, in conjunction with the public accounts, correctly sets forth all the particulars of receipts connected with the post office. The same remark applies to the inquiry as to the expenditure, with the exception of the $3,000 referred to, and the $750 referred to. I think that the $3,000 referred to is included in the expenditure by the Department of the Interior, as set forth in the statement of Controller White, or the Deputy Postmaster General, before the Public Accounts Committee. I do not remember about the $750 transaction referred to here, but I will get the information on that point for a later date.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that I did not ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) the question which he has answered. I asked definite questions of the Finance Minister who is, I suppose, responsible for the public accounts; and I would like to have the answer of the Finance Minister as given by his officers. I think the attempted answer by the Postmaster General is an attempt to evade such as I have ever scarcely before seen in this House. Is the question a fair one or not as to the public accounts? If so, I would like to have an answer. I am going to ask the government to allow that question to stand, and later, to answer it directly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has referred to me, I can only say that the money in question was appropriated for the North-west Mounted Police, issued in cheques for the North-west Mounted Police, and had necessarily to be charged against them. That is all I can say so far as the Department of Finance is concerned. As to the details of the Post Office expenditures I leave my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) to deal with that.

Mr. FOSTER. That was not the question I asked of the Finance Minister. The question was:

Does the $3,693,177.53, given as postal receipts in the Public Accounts of 1899—

—That is the account for which the Minister of Finance is responsible——column 3, page (1) III., include the receipts from the postal matter carried into and out of the Yukon during the year 1898-9—

—and so on. That is a definite question, and it has to do entirely with the public accounts. I am not asking anything from the Post Office Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is aware that the question has been answered half a dozen times during the present session. He knows, as ex-Finance Minister, that the Finance Minister can only credit in his receipts what the Postmaster General sends to that department. Every penny that he paid directly into the hands of the Receiver General is credited in the statement. Nothing more can be stated.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I understand the government do not propose to give a fair answer to a fair question?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but I want the House to understand that it is not a fair question.

Mr. FOSTER. I will read the question, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, and allow the House to judge whether it is a fair question or not:—

Does the $3,693,177.53, given as postal receipts in the Public Accounts of 1899, column three, page (1) III., include the receipts from the postal matter carried into and out of the Yukon during the year 1898-9?

Does the $3,603,799.10, given as postal expenditure in Public Accounts, 1899, column five, page (1) VIII., include the sum of $47,400 paid by the mounted police in the year 1898-9 for carrying mails into and out of the Yukon, the $3,000 paid by the Department of the Interior for similar service in the same year, and the sum of $750 paid by the mounted police for postal matter sent by boat via the ocean and river route in the same year?

If not, are the $47,400 and the $750 included in the $865,415 in column four, Public Accounts, 1899, page (1) VI., under the head of Mounted Police expenditure, and in what column and under what heading is the $3,000 above mentioned included?

That is a matter solely for the accountant of the Finance Department to ascertain and answer, and he alone can do it. It is as to that item of the public accounts that I asked a plain question, and it is evidently a fair question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose to answer the hon. gentleman at once. The postal receipts in the public accounts of Canada include all the receipts which were reported to my department by the Postmaster General. The details which go to make up that total are a matter for the Postmaster General to deal with. The postal expenditure as shown in the public accounts includes all the sums of money placed by the Finance Department in the hands of the Postmaster General for the service of the Post Office Department. The details of the expenditure are a concern that the Postmaster General will have to deal with.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not a correct answer in the first place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is quite correct.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is absolutely wrong.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

POST OFFICE EXPENDITURE.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Does the $3,593,647.47 shown in Public Accounts, page (1) VIII., column five, as post office expenditure for the year 1894-5, include all sums for service on post office account up to June 30, 1895 ?

If not, what amount accrued for said services of 1894-5 are not included ?

Does the $3,665,011.30, shown in same column as post office expenditure for 1895-6, include all sums due on post office account for services up to June 30, 1896 ?

If not, what amount accrued for services of 1895-6 are not included ?

And similarly for the $3,789,478.34, expenditure, 1896-7 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). In answer to this question, the item of $3,593,647.47 shown in Public Accounts as the public expenditure for the year 1894-5, does not include all sums due for services on post office account up to June 30, 1895, but omits the sum of $616,712.99 reported by auditors, Mr. W. H. Cross and Mr. W. F. Munro, as the amount of certain outstanding accounts up to June 30, 1895, but not paid, and therefore not included in the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

With reference to the rest of the question, the answer is as follows : At the close of the fiscal year 1895-6, the debts of the department in excess of all parliamentary appropriations applicable thereto, amounted to the sum of $685,447.03. The existence of these debts was not known to the Postmaster General when the accounts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895-6, were closed, but was ascertained as the result of an audit by Messrs. Cross & Munro, which audit began in the fall of 1896 and was completed in the early part of 1897, and reported to parliament, whereupon parliament passed a special vote of $685,447.03 to recoup that amount to the vote of 1896-7, which had in the meantime been drawn upon to pay such indebtedness.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another question similarly for 1896-7.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is answered by the previous answer.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all, that is another year entirely.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get the answer for that.

MAIL CARRIAGE, KAMOURASKA.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Is the Postmaster General aware that the mail carrier carrying the mail between Kamouraska, St. Paschal and St. Paschal Station does not now exchange mails with the mail clerk on the maritime express going east at 20.07 ?

2. Has he been relieved of this service ?

3. If not, will the Postmaster General compel him to do his duty in the premises ?

Mr. FOSTER.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. I have been so informed. 2. Yes ; as it is not considered necessary, the mail arriving there at 8.07 p.m., too late for delivery that night, and is returned by train passing west at 6.38 the following morning, in time for delivery. 3. This mail contractor is doing his duty in so far as the department is aware.

POSTMASTER AT ROUND HILL.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Who was the former Postmaster at Round Hill, county of Annapolis, Nova Scotia ? What was his salary and allowance for carrying mails from the railway station, and why was he replaced ? Was there any reduction in his salary since 1896, and if so, what ? Who has taken his place, what is his salary and allowance for carrying the mail ? What distance was the old and is the new post office from the railway station ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Mr. Jas. A. Whitman was the late postmaster at Round Hill, N.S. His salary as postmaster was $90 per annum. For carrying the mails from the railway station—a service of 12 trips per week—he received ten cents per trip. He was replaced as postmaster, having tendered his resignation of that office. Yes, $10 a year. Mr. Samuel E. Bancroft has been appointed to the postmastership in Mr. Whitman's stead. Mr. Whitman is still performing the mail service, under an agreement, dating from July 1, 1898. The postmaster's salary is $90 per annum, and the amount paid for mail service ten cents per trip ; the same amounts as were paid the previous postmaster at the time of his resignation. No change is reported as having been made in the distance between the old and new post office and the railway station.

THE OLIVER EQUIPMENT.

Mr. WALLACE (by Mr. Sproule) asked :

1. Whether it is the intention of the Militia Department to make any further purchase of the 'Oliver Equipment' ?

2. What number of such equipments have been ordered, delivered and paid for ?

3. What is the cost of each equipment, and what is the weight ?

4. Whether they have been found sufficiently successful in South Africa to justify any further purchases ?

5. Is it the intention to issue this equipment to the militia ?

6. Has experience shown that the water bottle has been thrown away as useless after a short trial of it, and that there are other serious defects ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Not at present. No more required. 2. 35,000 sets ; nearly all of which have been delivered and paid for. 3. $6.45 per set ; weight, 8 lbs. 4. No special report upon the Oliver Equipment has been received in the department from South Africa. But a letter from a British colonel, who has been in South Africa, has been published in Army and Navy Gazette strongly commending the Oliver Equipment, and saying that disasters which have attended British arms in South Africa would have been avoided had the Oliver Equipment been adopted by the War Office. 5. Yes. 6. No.

RECEIPTS AT SYDNEY.

Mr. GILLIES (by Mr. Sproule) asked :

1. What was the total amount of receipts of the Intercolonial Railway at Sydney and North Sydney respectively, as returned to the Auditor General, since the 30th day of June, 1899, to the date of the last return ?

2. What is the date of the last return ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The total amount of receipts of the Intercolonial Railway at Sydney from July 1, 1899, to the date of the last return is $269,396.21. The total amount of receipts of the Intercolonial Railway at North Sydney from July 1, 1899, to the date of the last return is $41,446.20. The date of the last return is May 31, 1900.

2. The date of the last return is May 31, 1900.

POSTAL NOTES.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

1. What is the regulation regarding the payment of postal notes ?

2. Is there any provision made for the postmaster to have on hand funds to pay postal notes, or can they refuse payment at their will ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The answer to the hon. gentleman's question is found in the general regulations respecting the issue of postal notes, a copy of which has been furnished me by the department, and if my hon. friend would like to peruse them, I will send them to him. They are too lengthy to form part of my answer.

BROCHURE ON IMPERIAL FEDERATION.

Mr. BOURASSA asked :

1. Is the government aware that a brochure has been printed and published by the Government Printing Bureau under the title 'Imperial Federation : by the Right Hon. W. E. Forster, M.P.,' with an introduction by the Hon. R. R. Dobell ?

2. Has that brochure been printed with the consent or authorization of the government or of the Secretary of State ?

3. How many copies were issued ?

4. Has it been printed free of cost of publication ?

5. If not, what was the price charged ; by whom and when was it paid ?

6. Does that brochure express the opinion and the policy of the government on the question of Imperial federation ?

7. Is it distributed by order or with the authorization of the government or of any of its members ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Yes. 2. No. It was not done under the authority of the government ; nor of the Secretary of State. 3. 400 copies. 4. No. 5. The price charged was $46.11, and paid for by the Hon. R. R. Dobell personally. 6. No ; the question has never been considered by the government. 7. No ; it was distributed entirely by Mr. Dobell, in fulfilment, as I am informed, of an understanding arrived at between the members of the British Empire League at their last meeting, held in this city during the month of March last.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT ACCOUNTS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to read an item in the Appropriation Act of 1899, which was appealed to last night by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), but which was not read, and I ask the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to the same :

North-west Mounted Police—To complete service of the year ..... $385,000

This sum covers certain expenses for carriage of mails, rents, services, &c., on account of the Post Office Department, the amount of which, when ascertained, is to be charged to that department.

I leave that with the hon. Minister of Finance, believing, of course, that he will carry out the enactment of the Bill.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Prime Minister got any supplemental information to that report on dismissals ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In looking at the report I see that the officers of the department have complied with the request of my hon. friend. He had not asked for names, but simply for the number, and the number was given.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I will try and get the names through the day.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the minister if that return is inclusive of all the dismissals or resignations—the sixteen—all the employees that were dismissed for partisan reasons in the hon. gentleman's department ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So far as I can ascertain, that is correct.

SOULANGES CANAL—THE STEWART CLAIM.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Minister of Railways and Canals no information with reference to the Stewart matter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have here the original papers which I now lay on hand to the hon. member.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister then found that he was wrong in thinking that he had given them yesterday to the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) heard what took place. I said that Mr. Jones had gathered up the other papers and had delivered them to the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals was not here. I state the facts as they are stated to me by my deputy. I am not speaking from personal knowledge. I do not know what the hon. gentleman anticipates in regard to these papers. I have to refer to the officers of my department and I cannot give any more information than I get from them.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he had given the papers himself to the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. If he will look at Hansard he will see what I said. I spoke from personal knowledge as to the papers in regard to the cement and the other papers which I personally handed to the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. I do not think that the hon. member understood what occurred.

Mr. BERGERON. I was only telling the hon. gentleman what I understood. If I am mistaken I am very glad to hear it.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 191) to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, may I ask, before you leave the Chair, whether the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), after having thought the matter over, has come to the conclusion to modify his Bill in any respect?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, Mr. Speaker, I am quite convinced that the measure, as now before the House, is the best proposition that I can submit. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has anything to offer, but in committee we will have an opportunity of considering all these propositions. He has not favoured us in advance with any, so that this, being the best measure up to date that I can suggest, I can only submit the Bill to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister did not explain to the House on what basis he placed the estimate of one-eighth of a cent a pound. The rather startling theory was advanced yesterday by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that newspapers were simply merchandise. It will be interesting to know whether the hon. Postmaster General coincides with that view or not. If we start off on the same ground that is taken and held firmly by the Prime Minister that newspapers are mere merchandise, we then have to discuss the proposition as to whether the post office is a medium for carrying the merchandise of the country either free or at less than cost. That is a proposition which, stated in that way, would be very easily answered by every man, whether the post office is to constitute itself a carrier of merchandise for the people of the country either free or at less than cost price. If you stand by the principle of carrying merchandise free or at less than cost price, where are you going to stop? The absurdity involved in a contention of that kind will, I think, make itself apparent to the House, and I do not believe it will be accepted by the House that newspapers are merchandise and that they should be treated simply as merchandise. I have not yet heard from the Postmaster General on what basis he has placed the rate at one-eighth of a cent a pound. Was the half cent a pound that was charged sufficient to carry the postal matter that went under that rate? Was it sufficient to pay the cost, or is the reduction to one-eighth of a cent per pound a reduction to cost, or if the minister is carrying this matter at less than cost, on what principle does he base his first rate of one half cent a pound, and on what principle does he base his reduction to one-eighth of a cent per pound? These are pertinent questions which we ought to have answered. In reference to the arbitrary adoption of a line, I think I showed yesterday that there was no just principle in it. He simply makes the provincial boundary line the limit beyond which you shall not go. If there is any argument at all from the post office point of view for zones, you may then regulate by some uniform plan the cost of carriage to a certain extent, and thus prevent the post office from being obliged to carry long distances for small rates. That is the basis upon which the zone system is established. But this system does not even have the merit of the zone system. It is an arbitrary line, and if a publishing house happens to be situated close to the border, and has a general circulation outside of its own province, you are face to face with this, that in its legitimate field of enterprise in the other province, where it comes into competition with other newspapers, you tax it by a large discrimination and you justify that on the ground, that you cannot carry for long distances at such a small rate as for short distances. Then you turn around and carry for a hundred or a thousand miles in the other direction merely because it is within the province, for the same low rate. I cannot see any business principle which underlies that, but I do see two objections to it, one the establishment of provincial lines beyond which, if newspaper enterprise directs its circulation, it will be fined when it crosses the border. That is a very unjustifiable proposition. The other is the unfair nature of this change. The hon. gentleman, who is very largely interested, I am told, in a newspaper published in the city of Toronto, takes care that he shall have the advantage of the reduction in postage.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Now, does the hon. gentleman assert that himself?

Mr. FOSTER. I have been told that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then you have been misinformed.

Mr. FOSTER. If that statement is given to us here, the hon. minister will have to deny it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Make the statement and you will get your answer.

Mr. FOSTER. At the same time the argument is just as strong, although it would be a little more reprehensible on the part of the hon. minister, if that were the case. But the argument as to the unfair discrimination is a very strong argument. Take, for instance, the Montreal press; a very large proportion of their circulation is outside of the province of Quebec. They are, in every respect, national newspapers, and on 80 or 90 per cent of their circulation you tax them one-half a cent a pound, in competition with other papers in different provinces that are bounded by provincial lines. It seems to me that this is not a fair principle to go upon. It is a discrimination which I do not think has anything to warrant it, either upon the ground of necessity, or for any other reason.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). I fully agree with every word which has fallen from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) who has just resumed his seat. But I go beyond that. I think the Bill is directed absolutely against the enterprise of the press of the province of Quebec. The hon. gentleman must know that some of the papers published in Montreal have a circulation extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. That is well known in the Post Office Department and outside of it. And it is also well known that the Globe and the largest papers published in Ontario have a very small circulation outside of that province. That is absolutely a fact. The right hon. the Prime Minister knows as well as I do that some of the papers published in Montreal, the Montreal Star, for instance, has a circulation extending over the Dominion from Halifax to Vancouver. Is it reasonable, is it businesslike, is it giving encouragement to the enterprise which has made the Montreal Star one of the greatest newspapers on the continent, that the Postmaster General should now propose to tax it, and to discriminate against it in favour of papers which do not circulate outside of their province. Why, Sir, I am surprised that the Postmaster General should have brought in such a Bill as this, and I am still more surprised that the Prime Minister and his colleagues in the cabinet should have sanctioned it. The Toronto Globe and the Toronto Star circulate outside of the province of Ontario to only a limited extent, and hence it is that this Bill is a tax on the business enterprise of men in the province of Quebec, who control newspapers the circulation of which is world-wide. The Bill should not be sanctioned by this House. I have already expressed my views against taxing newspapers at all, but, outside of that question, it seems to me that any hon. gentleman who wants to give fair-play all around will not vote in favour of this Bill, which discriminates against the newspapers published in Montreal.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I stated yesterday that newspapers were merchandise, and I find that proposition controverted by gentlemen on the other side. At this stage of the session, I shall not take up time by giving arguments in support of my view, but I am quite satisfied to leave it to the common sense of the House. If newspapers are to be put in the same class as letters, that would be an end to the argument. But, the Montreal Star, which my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) has alluded to, is said to have made a large fortune for its proprietor, and, at all events, we can fairly say that the proprietor of that newspaper is selling newspapers and making a profit out of the business. He is not selling coffee or tea, and there is a difference, I admit, but, in the generic sense, the proposition is quite true that he is making money out of selling newspapers. Of course we know that the selling of books or any product of intellectual labour, must be put upon a different footing from the product of manual labour. However, it is all the result of labour, and it is distributed in the community, and that is what makes it trade and merchandise. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) says that if you class newspapers as merchandise, then you must class letters as merchandise. There is a fallacy in that proposition, because while we realize that newspapers are merchandise, it would be absurd to treat them as every other class of merchandise is treated, and in no civilized community is that done. We carry newspapers which are a special class of intellectual food for the community, through the mails, and there is a difference between carrying newspapers and ordinary merchandise, just as there is a difference between carrying newspapers and carrying letters.

Mr. FOSTER. Any one can see that.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, if that be true, there was good reason in the proposition made by my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) two years ago, to introduce a special rate of one-half cent a pound for carrying newspapers. Since that time the newspapers of a certain class within a certain radius are exempt from postage, but all other newspapers were carried at the one-half cent rate, and I submit to the House that it was good legislation and beneficial to the community. If a newspaper proprietor sells 100,000 newspapers, and sells them to make a fortune if he can, or to make money anyway, there can be no injustice done to him if we ask him to compensate the mail service, to some extent although not fully, for the work which it does for him.

Mr. FOSTER. Put them all on an equal footing.

The PRIME MINISTER. I maintain that they are all on an equal footing. If you put a two-cent stamp on a letter it carries it to the extremity of the world, but it also takes two cents to carry it to your next neighbour. My hon. friend (Mr. Mulock), introduced his measure two years ago, and he stated then and there, that for the benefit of the reading public, weekly newspapers circulating in the vicinity should be exempt from the tax—I will not call it a tax, but, exempt from the postage paid to Her Majesty for carrying those newspapers. The Postmaster General then laid down, that all other newspapers should be treated differently and should pay for their carriage through the mails, in order to recoup the government for part of the expense incurred. The proposition now before the House is to amend this law and to reduce the postage paid by newspapers from one-half cent to one eighth of a cent per pound within a certain radius. My hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) said there was discrimination in this. What discrimination is there? A paper which has an extensive circulation and an extensive business gives more labour to the mail service to transmit it, and it naturally should be made to bear its proportion of that extra labour. There would be discrimination against Quebec in favour of Ontario if this legislation were intended to prevent the papers of Quebec from circulating in Ontario; and to force the newspapers of Ontario to come to Quebec. But, the moment the Ontario newspapers come to Quebec, they are submitted to the same postage rate as are the Quebec newspapers which go to Ontario.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But the Ontario papers do not come to Quebec.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, they do.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Globe newspaper circulates all over this continent, though not to the same extent, perhaps, as the Montreal Star or La Presse or the Daily Witness.

Mr. GIBSON. They do not give the Globe away for nothing.

The PRIME MINISTER. That does not matter. When the Globe newspaper goes to the province of Quebec it will pay this rate just at the Star newspaper will pay the same rate when it goes to Ontario. Therefore, all papers are placed upon the same basis. There would be discrimination if different conditions were applied to one paper from those applied to another; but when all are placed on exactly the same footing, there is no discrimination. I am sure that the Montreal Star has a circulation of several thousands in the province of Quebec alone, and this reduction from one-half cent to one-eighth cent a pound will benefit the Star to the extent of thousands of dollars a year. So with the Herald, the Witness, La Presse, La Patrie and all the other papers in the province of Quebec. In the province of Ontario, the Globe, the Mail and all other papers which to-day have to pay one-half cent a pound on their papers wherever they go, will have to pay only one-eighth cent a pound for those which circulate in the province of Ontario. The same is true of the papers in the maritime provinces and in all the other provinces of the Dominion. Therefore, when the proposition before the House has for its immediate object and its ultimate result that these papers shall pay to the treasury less than they did before by several thousands of dollars a year, I cannot understand the zeal of hon. gentlemen opposite in saying: 'Don't do that, but keep the postage at one-half cent a pound, because we say the reduction should be applied in a different way.'

Mr. FOSTER. What is the radius of the new arrangement?

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman knows it as well as I do, because he knows the geography of the Dominion; he knows that it will be confined to provinces. As I stated yesterday, when we go into committee, that is a question which, for my part, I shall be prepared to have discussed, as well as every other sensible suggestion made by the other side. The proposition that the radius should be a certain circle of so many miles is one which could be defended; but as to the principle of reducing the postage paid to-day, that is one which I submit in all fairness to the House cannot be disputed.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the Prime Minister knows by this time that it does not pay him or the leaders on the Treasury benches for the ruck of his party to indulge in unparliamentary demeanour in my regard.

Mr. BRITTON. You set a pretty bad example last night.

Mr. DAVIN. I spared the hon. gentleman, I did not expose his relationship with the Gilberts, and he should not talk.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You should not talk either.

Mr. DAVIN. Why shouldn't I talk?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Because you talk too much.

Mr. DAVIN. There is not a man in Canada who can prevent me talking.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You talk nonsense. You are always talking nonsense.

Mr. DAVIN. I spared the hon. gentleman the other day.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not want you to spare me.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, please. I would suggest to the House that we come to order.

Mr. DAVIN. The right hon. gentleman started out by saying that he would expose the fallacies uttered by my hon. friend from York, (Mr. Foster), but he did not expose any fallacies. He referred to the statement of the hon. member for York, that newspapers were not merchandise, and said he thought they were merchandise, but he at once proceeded to point out that the government of Canada through the Postmaster General treated them as if they were not merchandise. Why is it that you make a difference in your treatment of newspapers from the treatment you deal out to iron or cattle or any other form of merchandise? The right hon. gentleman declared that newspapers were not letters. Well, strictly speaking, they are not letters, and yet he could not help yielding to the proposition that as a fact they are treated more or less as if they were letters. And, Sir, what are newspapers? Are they not, after all, open letters addressed to the community generally, and why is it that we make a special arrangement in regard to letters? It is because it is held to be for the good of the country generally that intercommunication between the citizens of the country should be promoted; and the communication of fact, of the events of the day which is effected through newspapers, has always been held to be a very important matter—so important that Mr. Gladstone, when doing away with the duty, not on newspapers, but on imported paper, actually defended that action on the ground that the duty on paper was a tax on knowledge. If the duty on printing paper is a tax on knowledge, then in proportion as you tax the carriage of newspapers you are taxing knowledge; and the hon. gentleman is perfectly aware of that, because he deals with newspapers differently from the way in which he would deal with any other form of merchandise. In one sense a newspaper is merchandise. It is sold for one cent or two cents, and the newspaper man is a vendor of news. But in another sense, from the point of view of public policy, the government does not treat newspapers as merchandise, but treats them on lines strictly analogous to letters.

I was very glad to hear the right hon. gentleman say that when we go into committee he will be ready to consider any amendments to this Bill. He said that if the conditions were equal, there would be no discrimination, but the conditions are not equal. Take a paper that is published on the borders of one province and is largely circulated in the adjoining province. Take, for instance, the Star which is published in Montreal, and has a large circulation in all the other provinces. You cannot say that the conditions are the same in its case as in that of a newspaper which is published at Toronto and circulated mainly in Ontario, and therefore, enjoys all the advantage of the change, whereas the Star and the Witness get very little advantage from it. The right hon. gentleman spoke as if only newspaper proprietors were interested, but the readers and purchasers of newspapers are also interested, for we know that when the price of paper went up, the newspapers had to increase their charges. You cannot give easy conditions to certain newspapers and give less easy ones to other newspapers without discriminating, and therefore, exercising injustice. That is the reason why I moved the motion I did yesterday, not because I was hostile to lowering the rates on newspapers, but because I was opposed to the principle of the Bill as an unjust one, and when we go into committee I intend proposing an amendment which I hope will meet with approval. The right hon. the Prime Minister did not attempt to answer the argument of my hon. friend, and he himself described the press as a superior class of intellectual food. Well, if that be the case, it should not be treated as merchandise.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I do not consider this at all a party question. The Conservative party are not united on this any more than the party opposite, if we go into particulars. There may be a difference of opinion as to whether newspapers should pay postage, but that is not the point under discussion, for this Bill is really a measure to reduce the postage, and it ought to please those who think that newspapers ought not to pay anything for their carriage by mail. I am in favour of this Bill because it will operate a large reduction in the cost of postage to all newspapers, and I do not believe that it is at all a discrimination against the province of Quebec. We have newspapers in Toronto and Hamilton and other parts of Ontario which are circulated all over the country just as are papers published in the city of Montreal. Theoretically we may discuss the question of creating provincial zones, but we cannot make any Bill perfect theoretically; and the right hon. the First Minister has declared that the government are prepared to accept some change in this respect. There is a great deal of force in the contention that the city newspapers, which are circulated largely out of their own province, are making large fortunes and can well afford to pay postage, while country newspapers are in a different position in this respect. While the proposition to allow country newspapers to go free of postage within certain limits, which was in the former Bill, has been criticised largely by the city papers, I am heartily in favour of it because the country newspapers are a great convenience to the communities they serve, by keeping them posted on local and other news, and it is only right that the government should allow these papers to circulate free of postage within certain lines. I am practically in favour of the principle of the Bill because it is a reduction in postage.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). In so far as the reduction of postage is concerned, I am in favour of the measure, and am also of the opinion of the hon. member, who has just taken his seat (Mr. Craig), that this is not a party question. But so far as the spirit of the Bill is concerned, I entirely disagree with him, because I consider that it is not a sound one. It will operate against that national unity which we all desire to promote. We all want to unite this country, we want the people of the different provinces to know each other better, we want the people of Quebec to know what is going on in Ontario, and the people of Ontario to understand the views that prevail in Quebec, and if we wish to create a really national spirit we should encourage instead of preventing newspapers circulating in the provinces other than those in which they are published.

So far as the province of Quebec is concerned, this Bill certainly discriminates against the leading papers published in the city of Montreal, such as the Star and Witness, which have a larger circulation outside their own province than I think any other paper published in any other province. It discriminates also against the French newspapers published in Montreal, which find a large constituency in the great mass of French Canadians who are living outside of the province of Quebec, both in the other provinces of the Dominion and in the United States. This Bill, therefore, involves no less than direct taxation on all the French Canadians outside the province of Quebec. I am not, however, considering this Bill solely from the point of view of my own province, for if the situation were reversed and the papers of the province of Ontario equally discriminated against, I would take exactly the same view. What I find objectionable in the Bill is that it creates a provincial rather than a Dominion taxation, and I do not think that this parliament is justified in imposing any tax which will affect any one province more than another, or discriminate in favour of any one province against another. What we are here for is to impose taxes when necessary on the people of Canada at large, and not upon each province separately. I think it is against the spirit of our constitution, against the spirit that should animate this House, that of creating good feeling between the different classes and different nationalities in this Dominion. Therefore, if any amendment is suggested to this Bill to do away with this provision, I shall certainly vote for it.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). I quite agree with the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Craig) in his general view of this matter. As to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), I would point out to him that the condition is not made any worse by this measure. The Bill, as I understand it, draws lines within which the lower rate shall prevail. I do not agree with the Postmaster General that the best lines have been adopted. So far as the lower provinces are concerned, the smaller newspapers will, by the operation of the Bill, be confined within a comparatively small radius. Take, for instance, the province of Prince Edward Island, the area of the province within which the newspapers published there will circulate at this lower rate is very small indeed. The richer the newspaper the better able it is to pay this tax, and so the impost does not fall equally upon the business of newspapers. I have a special grievance against it so far as the city of St. John is concerned, but not in connection with any paper in which I am interested. For instance, take the newspapers of St. John. The two principal morning newspapers serve the whole shore of Nova Scotia, forty miles distant. The mail is carried in a steamer subsidized by the government. We voted the other night $12,500 for that steamer. I do not know whether she gets anything extra for carrying the mails or not. On all the newspapers going from St. John to Nova Scotia this tax would be imposed. There is an injustice here. I do not know that I could propose anything to overcome it, unless I should suggest to the Postmaster General to make all the maritime provinces one territory. It would work better and be far more equitable than the present plan and would help the newspapers in Prince Edward Island to which I have just referred. Generally, I agree with the Bill heartily, because it reduces the tax.

Mr. M. J. F. QUINN (Montreal, St. Anne's). I was very glad to hear the hon. member for Labelle speak as he did on this subject. He certainly expressed the idea I wish to express, and did it in so much better form than I could that I am satisfied that he must have benefited by his late visit to Ontario and the North-west. I think the hon. gentleman's speech this morning, as contrasted with his previous speeches, is the strongest possible argument for the position he favours here to-day. It is only a few days since we heard the hon. gentleman speak in what many of the members of this House would consider a most narrow-minded manner upon a subject which was being discussed. If there was such a thing as limiting him in his travels to the province of Quebec, the possibility is he would remain in the darkness in which he was three or four weeks ago. But it is by the enormous amount of money that has been expended by the Dominion to provide the best means of transportation for the people of this country from one province to another, that such as he are enlightened. It is due to this, that we see the splendid development in broad-mindedness that the hon. member for Labelle shows this morning. I quite agree with him that this Bill is a retrograde movement on the part of the government. The Postal Union of the world is endeavouring in every way not only to have the letter carriage reduced to a minimum all over the world, but to have newspapers of every country circulated throughout the world at the lowest rates. What is the object of this? It is simply an outcome of the progress of our civilization, the idea being that the different peoples of this world may exchange their ideas so that they may learn to live harmoniously together and avoid wars in the future. And we here in Canada, among ourselves are working in the same spirit. Look at the amount of money we have spent in the attempt to unite the different provinces of Canada into one grand Dominion. Look at the millions upon millions we have spent on the Intercolonial Railway, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, in building our canals, in deepening our rivers—in every means of communication between the different provinces. Yet, after all that work has been completed, after we have started a nation, after we have built up a nation even—at the very last moment we put in a block in the wheels of progress by this measure declaring that the people of these different provinces shall not communicate freely together, shall not be allowed to circulate their newspapers for the enlightenment of one another, but that on newspapers passing from one province to another, there shall be high postal duty. It seems to me that this is a subversion of the principles of the confederation for which we have so long struggled and the perfection of which we see in the near future. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) and some of the other hon. members say that this is not a direct blow aimed at the newspapers in the province of Quebec. I do not wish to say that it was intended maliciously as a blow at certain papers in that province; but, even if I did go so far as to say that, I think there is something in the conduct of the Postmaster General in proposing this matter which would lead the general public to believe that it might be even a malicious attack on those newspapers. What are the facts as regards the English papers in the province of Quebec? You must understand that the English portion of the province of Quebec is in the neighbourhood of 300,000. So that those newspapers, which include two of the largest newspapers in Canada, the daily Star and the daily Witness are limited, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, to a clientele of 300,000 individuals—say 60,000 families. But the Globe of Toronto and the Mail and Empire, and all the other English papers in the province of Ontario have a clientele of nearly three and a half millions. Would it be fair to say that because there was only an English-speaking population of 300,000 in the province of Quebec, that the daily Star and the daily Witness, which, by their enterprise and the money expended in them have secured a circulation in every province of the Dominion should be charged a tax the moment they leave the province of Quebec and enter any other province. It is most important that the ideas and sentiments of the people of the province of Quebec should be communicated to every other part of Canada. It is important that the sentiment of every Canadian, even in the most remote parts of the Dominion could be known to every other Canadian, no matter what part of the Dominion he may inhabit. Is not this an attack upon the very interchange of ideas and sentiments which all the people, certainly all the good citizens of the Dominion of Canada desire to promote.

Now let us take the case of the French newspapers of the province of Quebec to which reference has been made. They have a very large circulation in their own province. But, owing to the numbers of French Canadian people in the Dominion, we do not find them confined to the province of Quebec alone. We find them in the extreme east of the Dominion, we find them in the extreme west of the Dominion, we find them in the very heart of the province of Ontario, and wherever we find them they are anxious to read the French newspapers of the province of Quebec, the only province I believe in which there is a newspaper of any importance published in the French language. These French newspapers circulate not only in Canada but all through the United States; but we find that the very moment one of these newspapers is sent to a French Canadian in Manitoba or Ontario, or any of the other provinces, it is charged with a certain tax by the government of this country. It seems to be an anomaly, a retrograde step, on the part of the government. If that was the intention of the Postmaster General when the first tax was put upon newspapers in this country, I think it would be well that he should reconsider it to-day and wipe out the tax altogether. It seems to me to be a retrograde step, it is not in keeping with what our Postmaster General has learned in the Postal Union of the world, it is not in keeping with the ideas of progress which characterize civilization in this beginning of the twentieth century. Speaking more particularly for the newspapers of Montreal, I think the hon. gentleman ought in all fairness to those papers to arrange the limit in such a way that they can circulate throughout the Dominion of Canada at the same rate that they can in their own province.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). To my mind this Bill is in the highest sense of the term calculated to promote provincialism. It aims at preventing the interchange of knowledge between the various provinces, and outside of the province in which the newspaper is printed. Whether intentionally or otherwise, it seems to be aimed particularly at the newspapers in the city of Montreal. Take the newspapers published in Toronto, they have a radius of circulation of about 200 miles; but the newspapers published in Montreal have a much more circumscribed area, it is only about forty miles from the city to the limits of Ontario, therefore you give them a radius of circulation amongst their own reading public of only about forty miles. There is another objection to this Bill. Outside of the city of Montreal there is no large paper printed in the French language. In no other part of the Dominion is there a French settlement large enough to support the publication of newspapers in that language, and whatever information the people may get in their mother tongue must come from newspapers published in the province of Quebec. But this Bill says they shall not get the knowledge they are entitled to without being subject to additional taxation. I think that is unfortunate, and it is unwise. Whether the hon. gentleman intended it or not, his Bill is a blow at the French newspapers in the province of Quebec. I am in favour of the reduction of postage on newspapers, but I am against the principle that is set forth in this Bill.

Mr. QUINN.

Mr. W. C. EDWARDS (Russell). We have had this morning an exhibition of provincialism, but if hon. gentlemen could only be large enough, and broad enough, and intelligent enough to be free traders in that which feeds the material man as well as in that which feeds the intellect, we would not require discussions of this kind in this House. Now, we see a very strange anomaly. We have the hon. member for St. Anne's division, Montreal, (Mr. Quinn), complaining of a reduction in the taxation upon newspapers, and at the same time advocating the principle of free trade in newspapers, because a newspaper is one means of feeding the intellect. But if men could only be a little larger, and nobler, and go the length of absolute free trade in the food of the body as well as in the food of the mind, we would not have in this Chamber discussions such as we are having this morning.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. DAVIN. I beg to move that the words 'for transmission beyond the province or territory wherein they are published, and at the rate of one-eighth of one cent for each pound weight or any fraction of a pound weight for transmission,' be struck out and the following be substituted:

That one-eighth be substituted for one-half in lines 20 and 21, after 'fraction of' in line 20.

The result of the amendment will be to make a flat rate of one-eighth of a cent throughout the entire Dominion, instead of having it graduated as it is now. The only objection there can be to this is the loss of revenue. But this motion will give one-eighth within all the provinces. For instance, the great papers of Toronto have their main circulation in that province, therefore, the amount of revenue that the Postmaster General gets from the circulation of the great dailies of Toronto outside Ontario is very small. In the case of Manitoba, I suppose the circulation of the daily papers of Winnipeg outside of that province cannot be large, and the revenue from that source would be infinitesimal.

The same thing applies to the North-west Territories, the lower provinces and British Columbia. The only revenue that would be lost, is the revenue that the Postmaster General at present gains, and that will not be very considerable. It might be something of importance to a trading concern, but the amount of revenue that is got from the Montreal Star or the Herald, which is forcing its circulation, or the Witness, would be a certain amount, but it would after all be very little. I ask the right hon. gentleman's attention to the principle that underlies his utterances this morning, and he evidently does not believe in discrimination. He himself admitted that geographical zones would have been a juster system to go upon than provincial lines, and that he had suggested it to the Postmaster General, who had pointed out to him that there were difficulties in the way. What is the use of making this change for the small revenue which will be the residuum after this change is made, because all the revenue you get from the law, as it exists, is in consequence of the large circulation of such great papers as the Mail and Globe, and other papers within the province? I make the motion which I have read.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I do not think that the government can accept the proposition. It is too low a rate to propose. We have the case in point of the rate that prevails in the United States. The rate in the United States, is one cent a pound for the whole union. Ours at present is one-half of a cent, or only half of what it is in the United States. That is a pretty low rate as it is, and the proposition before the committee to reduce the rate within the province, instead of discriminating against circulation outside of the province, will promote circulation outside of the province. A newspaper company, like any other business enterprise, has many features of its enterprise that are more or less paying. Some branches do not pay at all, but are regarded as aids towards the general enterprise. A newspaper which has a circulation throughout the whole province, and which is necessarily published in one province, if it has an extra provincial circulation, if there is a saving upon its circulation within the province, by reason of the reduction of the rate of postage, that enables it the better to promote its circulation outside of the province, because the working expenses are reduced upon the amount of the circulation within the province. Take, for instance, a newspaper posting one hundred pounds of newspapers. We will say that half of them are for circulation within the province of publication, and that the other fifty pounds are for circulation without the province. The cost at present would be 50 cents upon the 100 pounds. We will suppose that one-half of the circulation is within the province; instead of paying 25 cents on fifty pounds within the province, they will only have to pay 6½ cents for that circulation within the province. They will not have to pay any more for the circulation outside of the province, but will be saving on the fifty pounds within the province 18½ cents, which will aid them in furthering their circulation beyond the province. It will aid circulation without the province, and, therefore, it commends itself to the committee. As for myself I am in favour of the freest interchange of opinion throughout every part of the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIN. Is it a fair thing to take the proportion that the hon. gentleman has taken? He has supposed that there will be 25 cents to pay within the province and 25 cents outside of the province. The Globe would have its preponderating circulation within the province.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suggest the proportion just for illustration.

Mr. DAVIN. For illustration, I should think that the number of Globes that would be circulated within the province of Ontario, would certainly be ten or twelve times the number of Globes carried outside of the province of Ontario.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose we say nine-tenths within the province, for illustration?

Mr. DAVIN. Very well; I know that the Montreal Star circulates largely in the Northwest Territories and in the province of Ontario, and I should think that the circulation of the Star outside of the province of Quebec would be four or five times what it is within the province of Quebec.

Mr. QUINN. Nine times.

Mr. DAVIN. What I want to ask the Postmaster General is what amount of income will he lose, suppose he were to adopt my suggestion, or what amount of income is he retaining from say, the Globe, or the Toronto papers, by keeping up half a cent a pound on the transmission of their papers outside of the province?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I just want to take the converse case. The hon. gentleman took exception to my illustration. I gave the suggestion of a newspaper having 100 pounds of newspapers, half of which are circulated within the province, and half without the province, and my argument was that the reduction on the circulation within the province would aid in promoting circulation without the province. The hon. gentleman thought my illustration hardly a representative one, and he cited the Toronto Globe as perhaps a fairer illustration. Let us assume that the circulation of the Globe within the province of Ontario is nine-tenths, and that the circulation without the province is one-tenth. Suppose that is the case; I do not know whether it is or not. At present of the 100 pounds of Globes, according to the suggested estimate, ten pounds would circulate outside of the province, and the postage upon that quantity would be 5 cents, while the ninety pounds would circulate within the province, under the reduced rate, instead of costing 45 cents, it would cost 11½ cents. The people would make a saving of 33½ cents, and it would be all the stronger to promote the circulation outside the province.

Mr. QUINN. Take the Star which has a 10 per cent of a circulation in the province of Quebec, and 90 per cent outside.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman might work that out for himself.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the Postmaster General answer the question as to what would be the loss of revenue if the suggestion were adopted that the tax be reduced to one-eighth of a cent all round.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would simply mean the loss of three-quarters of whatever is collected.

Mr. CLARKE. If the amendment of the Postmaster General is adopted, then the further suggestion of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) would entail only a very small further loss to the revenue. Can the Postmaster General say what that would be?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is impossible for us to give the proportion of the circulation of the various papers within and without the province of publication. All we know is that our cars are being loaded with newspapers. Hon. gentlemen are entirely in error in assuming that the length of the journey does not make extra cost. It lays the foundation for extra claims by railways and there is in the department at present a demand on the part of practically all the railways in Canada for increased payment. It is quite impossible to treat newspaper postage in the same way as letter postage. A letter is carried as a separate item of mail matter at a uniform rate of two cents per ounce, and it would be impossible to apportion the charge in regard to the distance carried.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Why not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If you fix a small maximum rate you could not find a division of coin sufficiently small to enable you to put a postage stamp on for the shortest distance. It is practically impossible to apply a rate to letters for a certain radius.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They used to be charged according to distance.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the infancy of postage there were zones for letters, but it was given up in view of the difficulties in the way. A man posts his own letter and puts a stamp on it, but the newspapers send their letters to the post office by the ton and the whole wagon load is weighed and the stamps are then in bulk attached to the sheet and not to the mail matter itself. A ton of newspapers at one-eighth of a cent per pound would be charged $2.50. A ton of newspapers would contain, say, 20,000 separate pieces, and the proposition is that we should carry those pieces over the continent, organize a staff of mail clerks, provide bags and expenses of all kind and deliver these 20,000 pieces in many cases, at $2.50 per ton.

Mr. DAVIN. How many tons of the Globe do you send outside the province of Ontario?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no information behind the scenes as to the Globe. I know nothing except what is printed on the newspaper, and I fancy that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) from his experience as a newspaper man would know more about it than I do. Let me illustrate the absurdity of charging $2.50 a ton for that kind of mail matter. The cheapest kind of merchandise sent by freight cars would not be lower than one-half cent per ton per mile.

Mr. DAVIN. You are arguing against your own proposal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are various anomalies in all business. A railway classifies the freight carried and the same car that brings one class of freight will bring another class of freight at a far cheaper rate. There is no uniformity in the matter. I can discover no fixed principles upon which railways classify their freight except that they try and make the goods they carry in a sort of average way bear the cost of transmission and some reasonable profit to those who have invested their capital.

Mr. DAVIN. The Postmaster General is joining issue with no one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, I have not intruded myself on the attention of parliament this session, and I hope I may be permitted now to clear up some points that have been discussed. I have not changed the postal rates that have been fixed by my predecessors for many classes of mail matter. There are four or five classifications. You will find engraved plates charged at one rate and printed matter charged at another rate; a sheet of music will be transmitted through the mails at one rate and a picture at another rate. These are anomalies and I have not interfered with them, but they are there to illustrate the difficulty of having any fixed principle regulating rates of postage upon mail matter. The proposition we now make is to reduce the rates on newspaper postage within the several provinces. It will promote the circulation of provincial papers beyond the province, and to that extent it entirely answers the argument of those who suggest that it is of a provincial character. If my hon. friend has any fairer basis of fixing the rate, I would like him to suggest it. But the proposition of $2.50 a ton to carry 20,000 pieces of mail matter from the point of publication to the homes of the people all over this country is one which I think the government should not seriously entertain.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the one-eighth cent a pound cover the cost of the newspaper postage within the bounds of each province ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no calculation made as to whether it will or not.

Mr. FOSTER. On what basis, then, did the Postmaster General fix the one-eighth cent ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For the purpose of lowering the rate of postage to assist the newspapers. There was a complaint made, and the hon. gentleman, I think, or his leader, took exception to the rate, and this is a reduction of the rate for the benefit of the newspaper world.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman devoted the greater part of his speech to repeating the argument which he made originally when imposing a tax on newspapers, and which had no bearing whatever on what he is doing now. For the most part, he was arguing against his own Bill. We wanted an argument against the position we took up, if there is really any good ground for discriminating against people outside of a province. We are not dealing merely with the newspaper proprietors ; we are dealing with the people. I take the Globe and Mail as illustrations because it affords the strongest argument against myself, because I know of no papers that circulate more widely outside of their own province ; and unless the hon. gentleman can controvert my argument, he is in no position to resist my amendment. I say that the weight of Globes sent outside of the province of Ontario is so small that the loss of revenue would be trifling, and there is no reason why we should fall back upon a vicious principle especially when no end is accomplished. But take the case of a Montreal paper circulating widely outside of the province. In that case there is a discrimination, and yet the amount of revenue on the bulk of newspapers altogether circulating outside of the province will be, under the hon. gentleman's amendment, very small. What I say to the hon. gentleman is this : You are taking a right step ; as you acknowledge, you are acting on the suggestion of the leader of the opposition ; you say it is in consequence of the criticism—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I did not say it was in consequence. I cited his utterance.

Mr. DAVIN. Then it is not in consequence, though it is post facto. The hon. gentleman quoted Sir Charles Tupper, and he is taking the right course in taking off some of the taxes on knowledge. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has made a good argument against it, and I was glad to hear that argument—that this is essentially narrow and provincial legislation. What I say is, why should you be narrow and provincial, even if you gain something ? But you should never be narrow and provincial if you gain nothing. The hon. gentleman has not attempted to answer that argument.

At One o'clock the committee took recess.

The House resumed in committee at Three o'clock.

Mr. DAVIN. I am afraid the hon. the Postmaster General is the unwilling father of an unloved measure, judging by the way he has argued against his own Bill. It would seem to have been forced upon him by the majority of the government, and that he himself is not in favour of it, and I would recommend him to look at the matter from a large, statesmanlike point of view. I have tried to make a calculation here, which I propose to put before the House. Take half a ton or 1,000 pounds as the basis. On its circulation outside the province a newspaper pays 50 cents per 100 pounds postage, and on its circulation within the province it pays 12½ cents per 100 pounds. A newspaper, therefore, which sends 900 pounds outside the province, will pay $4.50, and on the 100 pounds which it circulates within the province, it will pay 12½ cents, or $4.62½ in all, and thus save 37½ cents on the 50-cent rate. A newspaper which sends 800 pounds out of the province in which it is published, will pay $4, and on the remaining 200 pounds within the province, it would pay 25 cents, or $4.25, making a saving of 75 cents. A newspaper sending 700 pounds outside the province would pay $3.50, and on the other 300 pounds it would pay 37½ cents, or $3.37½, and thus save $1.12½. A newspaper sending 600 pounds outside the province would pay $3, and on the remaining 400 pounds it would pay 50 cents, or a total of $3.50, making a saving of $1.50. 500 pounds would pay $2.50, and 500 within the province 62½ cents, or $3.12½, or a saving of $1.37½. 400 pounds would pay $2, and the other 600 pounds 75 cents, making $2.75, or a saving of $2.25. Or, tabulating the figures, they appear as follows :

½ ton (1,000 lbs.) at 50c.		Will pay $5		On ½ ton (1,000 lbs).
900 lbs. at 50c., $4.50 ;	100 lbs. at 12½c., $0.12½ ;	will pay $4.62½ ;	will save $0.37½.
800 " 50c., $4.00 ;	200 " 12½c., $0.25 ;	" $4.25 ;	" $0.75.
700 " 50c., $3.50 ;	300 " 12½c., $0.37½ ;	" $3.87½ ;	" $1.12½.
600 " 50c., $3.00 ;	400 " 12½c., $0.50 ;	" $3.50 ;	" $1.50.
500 " 50c., $2.50 ;	500 " 12½c., $0.62½ ;	" $3.12½ ;	" $1.87½.
400 " 50c., $2.00 ;	600 " 12½c., $0.75 ;	" $2.75 ;	" $2.25.
300 " 50c., $1.50 ;	700 " 12½c., $0.87½ ;	" $2.37½ ;	" $2.62½.
200 " 50c., $1.00 ;	800 " 12½c., $1.00 ;	" $2.00 ;	" $3.00.
100 " 50c., $0.50 ;	900 " 12½c., $1.12½ ;	" $1.62½ ;	" $3.37½.

Thus a paper with nine-tenths of its issue published outside of its own province, and one-tenth inside, would save 37½ cents on 1,000 pounds, or half a ton, whereas a paper with half its circulation outside and half inside, would save $1.87½, and a paper with only one-tenth of its circulation outside and the balance inside its province, would save $3.87½. Thus a paper with nine-tenths of its circulation outside would pay $4.62½. Whereas one with only one-tenth of its circulation outside would pay only $1.62½, or $3 per half ton less than the former. This is very grave discrimination, and at the same time the revenue gains very little. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should make the rate a flat rate of one-eighth of a cent all over, and thus have a measure that will not be provincial and discriminatory, but be national and large and statesmanlike.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). I think, perhaps, that the hon. the Postmaster General is perfectly right in retaining the rate he has on newspapers. It was a mistake, I believe, on the part of the late government to take away the rate altogether. I do not see any reason why a newspaper should not pay something for its carriage through mails as well as letters or anything else, but I think my hon. friend makes a mistake when he confines the area of the advantage given the newspapers to the provinces. The question of carrying letters and papers throughout the country has been discussed again and again, and the determination arrived at that the proper way after all was to impose a uniform rate on letters and papers throughout the country in which they are distributed. The question of distances was considered and threshed out long ago, and the principle of a discrimination within certain distances abandoned in every country in the world. Look at how this measure affects newspapers in the Dominion. One newspaper in Montreal has nine-tenths of its circulation in the other provinces, whereas other newspapers published in Toronto have nine-tenths of their circulation within the province in which they are published. You can see at once how a newspaper published in the city of Montreal is handicapped. It pays double as much postage to the Dominion government, or nearly so, that is paid by a newspaper published in Toronto. What is the reason for that? The Postmaster General argues that the reduction of the postage on newspapers enables them to push their circulation outside the provinces in which they are published. But, after all the circulation of a newspaper is a matter of competition, and if one gets its material for one-half the price that the other has to pay, that is an immense advantage to it over its competitor. Suppose a newspaper proprietor can get his paper at a less rate, he can publish cheaper and get more subscribers than one who had to pay the higher rate, and the same argument holds good in the matter of postage. I will venture to say that nine-tenths of the circulation of the Montreal Star and Witness is outside of the province of Quebec, and these papers pay double the amount of postage that the papers published in Toronto do. I see no reason for this discrimination. It is against the principle adopted in every country in the world of a flat rate on newspapers and letters circulated in every part of the country. Besides this measure gives to newspapers a provincial character, whereas, what we want is higher politics in the country than those of provincial newspapers. We want national newspapers that can speak for the whole Dominion and not merely from a provincial standpoint; but under this measure a newspaper which wishes to be a national one is under the disadvantage of having to pay double newspaper postage. Take English newspapers published in Montreal, there are only 300,000 English-speaking people in the province of Quebec altogether, and if that newspaper wants to have a large circulation and influence in the country, it must seek for it outside that province, but it is handicapped by having to pay a double postage rate on nine-tenths of its circulation, compared with newspapers published in Ontario.

Then, as my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) stated, look at the disadvantage to the papers of the little province of Prince Edward Island. This prevents them from seeking anything but a local circulation, and compels them to remain local newspapers all the days of their existence. What I would recommend to my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) is to decide upon the amount of revenue which he expects to get for this service—and what he proposes is but a moiety of what will be needed to cover the expense—and let him increase the flat rates from one-eighth cent a pound to whatever may be required to raise that revenue. This would not interfere with the circulation of newspapers and would not compel them to be provincial instead of Dominion.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I am sorry I cannot agree with the ideas expressed by many hon. members. I am as much in favour of newspapers being Dominion in circulation as anybody, but I think the county paper, the town paper, for the next quarter of a century, will be more important for us than the Dominion paper.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Though some hon. members say 'no,' yet, I believe that to be the fact. A great newspaper makes a reputation by its greatness, and the charge for postage would not hamper it. But that which is important to the people is the paper in the village, which gives the people information about their own home affairs, which tells what is taking place in the county. Not only does such paper give the local news, but if there is anything worth while in that newspaper it will be found in the local paper also. The provincial paper also is important—such papers as the Halifax Chronicle and the Charlottetown Patriot. Were it not for the cheapness of the great Dominion papers, very few of them would be bought. I venture to say that the ordinary farmer would prefer the paper published in his own town at a dollar to one of a national character published at the same price. The people have neither time nor desire to read the large papers, with so much of their space taken up with general matters. I was amused at the ex-Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron) saying that it was most important to encourage the circulation of the French newspapers in other provinces.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When did I say that ?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I thought it was the hon. gentleman, but, if not, it was some other hon. gentleman on that side. In Nova Scotia, we have a French paper, the Evangeline, which circulates largely among the Acadians in the maritime provinces, and that is the paper they want. It relates the news of the lower provinces, particularly happenings among their own compatriots, and it is all they require. I venture the assertion that of the large French newspapers in Montreal, there are not two dozen circulated in our whole province.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). In my own county, where there are two sections of French people, there is not one of these papers taken.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman, probably, does not receive the French papers, while his French constituents no doubt, do.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I venture to say there are not two dozen bona fide subscribers to the French newspapers among the Acadians in Nova Scotia, and in my own county, as I say, there is not one of them taken. What the people want is a nice paper like the Evangeline, published in Nova Scotia, and one that not only has the news of the day, but has much in it about the Acadians themselves, who are different, in many respects, from their fellow-citizens of French origin in the province of Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. But, when that paper goes into New Brunswick, it would have to pay the higher tax.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I do not object to that. You must draw the line somewhere. It may be said that provincial lines are not the best; but, we do divide on provincial lines, and I do not see how you could get any better lines for this purpose just now.

Mr. MONET. Why make any difference at all ?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I do not see any better way out of it.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Why not adopt the suggestion of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) and have a flat rate of, say, one-quarter cent a pound all around ?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Well, if you like to do that, that is a different thing altogether. But, can that be carried out ? These questions of postal rate are very difficult of adjustment; and this service must be paid for by somebody. I confess, I have a great deal of sympathy with the view expressed by my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards), that we seek to draw too fine lines in this matter. After all, this whole discussion is with respect to one or two papers in Montreal; and I do not think that one or two papers only should be considered in deciding this matter. I would say the same if it were the Globe or Mail that was concerned. One thing is certain—these great newspapers will always find a ready sale if they are of the kind that hon. gentlemen opposite say; and, if there must be some hardship, it is better to let it rest upon the large papers than upon the county papers that are circulated in the immediate neighbourhood of the place of publication. I have the greatest sympathy with the county newspapers. Many of them are run under great difficulty; yet, I have seen in them just as good writing as in the city newspapers. While saying this, I sympathize with the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) as to the broadening influence of one province upon the other. And, by the way, he read hon. gentlemen opposite a salutary lesson, which should prevent them from saying or thinking again that he seeks to set province against province.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough) has been urging that the county newspaper, the local newspaper, should get a cheap rate. Does not the hon. gentleman know that under the present law such a newspaper does not pay a cent ?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). If they go all over the province they do.

Mr. TAYLOR. But, the hon. gentleman was speaking of the local newspapers, the county newspapers, distributed immediately around where it is published. He ought to know that newspapers circulate free within forty miles of the office of publication.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). But, that does not cover the county—my own county is 200 miles long.

Mr. TALYOR. But, what my hon. friend was talking about was the local newspaper circulating near the office of publication. I leave it to hon. gentlemen on both sides if it is not so.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). They circulate free within forty miles—I know that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I agree with the suggestion made by the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Haggart), that there should be a flat rate, that instead of saying with the present Bill, one-eighth of a cent for the province and one-half of a cent for outside the province, make it such a rate that it will make up the loss the revenue would sustain, if it was all made one-eighth of a cent; raise it another sixteenth, or to one-quarter of a cent. Why should people who are living in the counties of Russell, Glengarry, Stormont and Cornwall, be obliged to pay more than their friends who live across the provincial line? The charge may be the same, but from whom does the loss to the publisher come out of? It comes out of the public. From whom does he take it? From the workmen who are printing the papers. Somebody has to pay it. A French paper published in Montreal cannot be delivered as cheaply in one of these counties as it can to the man living in the county of Soulanges. What the publisher has to lose he will take out of the men who print the paper. Therefore, make it a level thing, so much per pound, so much per hundred, to cover the entire Dominion. Whatever the department would lose would be very little. The revenue would be maintained if you raised the rate to a quarter of a cent. I should say three-sixteenths would be about the right rate.

Mr. CLARKE. There were one or two questions I wanted to ask the Postmaster General. One is, what was the total revenue derived last year from this newspaper tax; and the other is, what loss the revenue would sustain by the coming into operation of this amendment?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I might perhaps, be allowed to amend the question from my standpoint. When the hon. gentleman buys a ticket to go home, he does not call that a tax, it is a payment for services rendered, I am not able to give the revenue for the fiscal year just closed, but I can state to the House that the revenue for the six months, from July 1, 1899, to June 30, was about $22,000. At that time the rate was one-quarter of a cent. The full rate of half a cent came into force on July 1, so if you multiply that by 4, you will get $88,000, which is probably in the vicinity of a year's revenue. As to the other question of the hon. gentleman, it is impossible to tell what loss the revenue will sustain, unless we were furnished with statements as to the distribution of the papers, what proportion of the circulation is in the province of publication, and what is not.

Mr. QUINN. I regret to see that some members who advocate the interest of the local paper, should think there is any attempt on the part of city members to legislate against the country paper. That is not the object. I think that possibly the ideas which have been expressed by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), spring more from the supposition that there is such an intention in the minds of city members, than from any conviction he has that the course which we wish to adopt is incorrect. The intention of those who support the views of my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), is to secure that papers should be circulated throughout the whole Dominion at as little cost as possible, either to the publisher or to the reader of the newspaper. We do not want to discriminate against the local paper at all. We say the local paper ought to be distributed freely throughout the county in which it is published; we go further, and we say it ought to be distributed as freely as possible throughout the Dominion, consonant with the revenue to be derived by the Postmaster General. But we say also that if the local paper is to be distributed freely in the immediate vicinity of the place of publication, that is the large paper, it ought to be distributed throughout the whole Dominion at a minimum rate, so as to afford as much revenue as possible for the Postmaster General, and also in order that the expense may not operate as a tax upon any particular newspaper, or upon any particular class of newspapers in the Dominion. The hon. member for Guysborough made, I think, two statements which are not quite accurate. He said that the farmer would prefer a paper published in his immediate vicinity to one of the large city newspapers. I think he is mistaken. I think if the farmer could get a paper published in the city of Toronto, or the city of Montreal, which would give him the latest market reports, for example, from a large commercial centre, and at the same time the latest reports from the European markets for the produce which he grows, if he could get that paper at the same rate as a county paper, he would prefer to have it, not to speak of the advantages which he would derive from the large circulation, from the employment of the cleverest editors. My hon. friend surely would not pretend that the farmer would prefer a small county paper, whose ramifications must be confined almost to the place of publication, to the city newspaper, which could give him the news of the whole world, at the same price. So when the hon. gentleman says that the farmer would prefer a county paper, he must add to that, because the county paper is cheaper. Now, is it not our duty to try to put the very best literature in the form of newspapers into the hands of the farmers of this country? I do not say that there should be any legislation to hamper the county newspapers. The county newspaper has its sphere, it is doing a useful work, and we ought to endeavour to encourage it. But at the same time it is our duty to put into the hands of every farmer in this country, the very best newspapers that are published, and at the lowest rate. That is the object of the amendment which my hon. friend makes, and which I heartily support. In the next place, the hon. gentleman says: You must draw the line somewhere, in imposing a rate of postage on newspapers. Now, that is contrary to the progress which has been made in postal matters within the last ten or twenty years. The idea of the great postal authorities of the world has been to enlarge the circulation of literature as much as possible, to make it possible for newspapers to circulate throughout the world at the very lowest rate of postage. So I say the hon. gentleman is wrong when he says that we must draw the line somewhere. There ought to be no such thing as drawing the line within a province. A newspaper published in the most obscure town of Canada should circulate as freely in the province of British Columbia or the province of Nova Scotia, as a paper in either of those provinces.

There should be no such thing as drawing the line. Why should there be? Why should a farmer in Quebec, for example, be prevented from reading the Toronto Globe? Because, forsooth, the hon. Postmaster General thinks that a line must be drawn somewhere, and in his wisdom he says that that line must be drawn at the border of the province of Quebec. To me it seems that this is taking a backward step altogether. Instead of drawing a line we should try to enlarge the limits of the circulation of our newspapers. My hon. friend says that a Montreal newspaper cannot interest a farmer as much as a paper published in his own county. I join issue with him there. The farmer gets the Montreal newspaper report of the great commercial metropolis of Canada, and I speak of Montreal, as I am more deeply interested in Montreal.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Does he not get that in the local papers which give the markets of their own particular province? Before the Montreal papers reach the farmer they will be two or three days older than his own local paper.

Mr. QUINN. I will answer my hon. friend's question. The local paper of which he speaks is published once a week.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). No, I mean the daily papers. There are weeklies, tri-weeklies and dailies.

Mr. QUINN. My hon. friend speaks about daily papers. He is not talking about the local county paper of which he spoke a moment ago, and in order to be fair with the committee he must admit that.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Certainly.

Mr. QUINN. When he speaks about a daily paper he speaks about the class of papers which will come under this Bill.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). No, not in the various provinces.

Mr. QUINN. When he speaks about a county paper he speaks about a weekly or a tri-weekly paper. It may contain the latest market reports from the principal town of the province, but would he accept that as a good guide for our farmers, particularly our farmers of the North-west Territories? Do we not want our farmers in the North-west Territories to be able to judge from the Montreal markets what should be the prices of the grain they are growing?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The market quotations are in the dailies published in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and these reach the farmers of that portion of the country days before the Montreal papers reach them.

Mr. QUINN. My hon. friend says that the information contained in the papers published in Montreal and Toronto will reach the farmers days after that published in the local papers. When will the information contained in the weekly papers reach them? After it is a week old. If they take the Montreal or the Toronto papers the information will be two or three days old only, before it reaches them, but if they have to rely upon their weekly paper, it will be a week old. And then, can they place the same reliance upon the market reports of small county journals that they can upon those of the Toronto Globe, or the Montreal Star, or the Witness?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman must surely know that all these county papers get, before going to press, from the chief city in the province, the market reports at that moment.

Mr. QUINN. No, they do not. But I will take my hon. friend on that. He says they get the reports of the markets at that moment. But they have to wait until their next edition comes out, which is probably in the middle of next week, and in the meantime the markets have fluctuated two or three times. They have no idea from the local papers of the fluctuations of the markets, while if they had a daily paper they could keep themselves familiar with the market as a doctor by feeling the pulse of his patient, keeps himself informed as to the condition of his patient. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) argued before luncheon that there was no discrimination. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong there. There is discrimination against the paper of one province the moment you compel them to pay that duty or tax, call it what you will. There is discrimination against the newspapers of one province the moment you make them pay anything at all upon going into another province. My hon. friend says that they are all on the same footing. That is quite true, but he will not pretend to say that the Montreal Star is on the same footing with the newspaper published in St. John, if you charge half a cent a pound postal duty for bringing that newspaper from Montreal to St. John. As regards the city of St. John and the province of New Brunswick the Montreal Star is not on the same footing as a newspaper published in St. John. He will not pretend that it is on the same footing as a newspaper published in Toronto, the Globe, or the Mail, where the Montreal Star has to pay half a cent a pound before it will be allowed to go into the province of Ontario, when the Globe and Mail can circulate all through the province of Ontario at a very much reduced rate of postage. Surely there is discrimination there. Call it by another name, if you like. If the hon. gentleman does not like the term discrimination then we should coin a word and call it what it is. There is certainly an embargo of more than a quarter of a cent a pound on the newspapers published in Montreal as compared with newspapers published in Toronto. Of course, difficulties must present themselves to the Postmaster General in solving this question of how a revenue is to be derived from the large quantity of newspaper matter that is carried through the mails, but I think the only way that it can be done is to make a uniform rate throughout the whole Dominion. The revenue will not lose at all by creating a uniform rate. Although there is a discrimination in favour of county papers, leave them free as they are to-day, but when papers are circulating between different provinces you should have a uniform rate all over the Dominion and then there will be no discrimination whatever. Take, for instance, a paper published in the city of Montreal. I said before luncheon that nine-tenths of the circulation of that paper is outside of the province of Quebec.

Mr. PARMALEE. Nonsense.

Mr. QUINN. I beg pardon ?

Mr. PARMALEE. You are exaggerating.

Mr. QUINN. I do not think so.

Mr. PARMALEE. Yes.

Mr. QUINN. I have it from a newspaper man in Montreal that the circulation of the large Montreal dailies is nine-tenths outside of the province of Quebec. What is the effect? Let us take 100 pounds of newspaper mail matter; 10 pounds are circulated in the province of Quebec, and the payment made by the newspapers is 1½ cents, while on the other 90 pounds they have to pay 45 cents, which makes altogether 46½ cents. Under the system which exists at present they pay 50 cents all round. They save 3¼ cents on 100 pounds by the reduction made to-day. Take the case of a newspaper which has a very large circulation such as that which is found in the province where the English language is spoken by the majority of the population. To-day that newspaper pays 50 cents on 100 pounds, while under the reduced rate of one-eighth of a cent per pound it pays 12½ cents. The proprietor of that paper saves 37½ cents upon his home circulation, and pays 5 cents, as he does to-day, on that going outside of the province. Thus, he makes a net saving of 32½ cents, as against 3¼ cents saved by the English newspaper which is published in a province where the population is largely French as it is in the province of Quebec. If this is not discrimination, I would like to know what it is. I think this is a most unfair discrimination. I think this is a discrimination that will work very largely against the establishment of powerful papers in such a place as the city of Montreal, which, being the commercial centre of the Dominion, must have large and enterprising newspapers. I am informed that the hon. Postmaster General says that the total revenue derived from newspaper postage is $88,000 a year. If my information is correct, under a rate of half a cent a pound one newspaper in the Dominion pays nearly $30,000 a year postal charges. Who will say that this is not a tax? Who will say that it is not a very heavy tax on that newspaper? It is a large amount of money, and if they are only going to gain at the rate of 3¼ cents for every 50 cents under the proposed reduction, it will be a reduction in their favour of only $2,000 in $30,000. On every newspaper published in another province where the population is largely English the proportion saved would be something like $15,000. I submit this to the consideration of the committee and I ask them in all seriousness to say whether we should treat a Canadian newspaper in that way. Our ideas are to spread as much as possible the influence of the Canadian county newspaper, but at the same time to give the farmers the benefit of the best literature published in the Dominion at the cheapest possible price.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I have listened to this long discussion, and I find that one or two important points have virtually been lost sight of. It is well known that the country press has, as a rule, a struggle to get along financially. Their subscribers are limited, and it is most desirable that encouragement should be given to them. On the other hand what you might call the Dominion press has a large circulation, when in consequence of that large circulation, it gets very high prices for its advertisements. The Montreal Star will charge you probably ten times as much for an advertisement as would an ordinary country paper, and that is because it has a circulation not only in the province, but throughout the Dominion. Men who want to reach the ear of the Dominion will advertise in the Star, the Witness, the Globe and the Mail. They have a monopoly of the very best paying work that newspapers get, and I would like to know why they should not pay at least some of the cost which this country is put to in order to circulate their papers, and from which distribution they reap such great advantage. On the other hand the country press is limited in its sphere and its financial resources. In the face of the very great reduction the Postmaster General has made in the rate of postage, the metropolitan press should be made to pay for a portion of the work at least, that is done for them. Let us compare the rate paid in Canada for newspapers with the rate paid in the United States. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) says that a newspaper in the city of Montreal pays at present $20,000 a year in postage. Let me tell him that if that paper were published in the United States it would pay $40,000 for the same circulation. I believe that my esteemed friend (Mr. Mulock) has acted wisely in this matter, and I believe his action will benefit both the local press and the metropolitan press, the latter of which can well afford to pay postage.

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). I have listened for two days to doctors and lawyers talking on a pure matter of business, but I have not heard a business man speak about it yet. Are the publishers issuing these newspapers for the good of their health or are they doing it to make a profit? If it is to make a profit, why should the country help them? Why should I ask the Postmaster General to afford me facilities to get my goods into my warehouse at a less cost than I do now. If the Montreal Star is making many thousands a year—

Mr. GIBSON. He is a millionaire.

Mr. WOOD. Yes, and if he can afford to give large contributions to the election funds of hon. gentlemen opposite, the proprietor of the Star can afford to send agents all over the country to point out to subscribers the advantage that they would have in getting this paper and paying the postage as well. It is simply a matter of business. Newspaper publishers should just be as liable to pay postage on their newspapers as I am to pay freight on the goods I put in my warehouse. I do not think that the papers published in Ontario are asking for any advantage. I am a stockholder in a large concern and I have never heard any one find any fault with paying postage on the newspapers. If the people of Montreal whom my hon. friend (Mr. Quinn) represents so earnestly and efficiently, want to circulate their newspapers so as to let the Ontario people know what the Quebec people think of them, let them send agents out to hunt up subscribers, as I send agents out to hunt for orders. Why should the country be called upon to do that for them? I am quite satisfied that the law introduced by the Postmaster General is in the general interests of the country, and that the publishers in the different provinces of the Dominion will be perfectly satisfied with it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood), is no doubt quite satisfied with this proposal because he is a large stockholder in a paper, the circulation of which is in his own province and this law is calculated to keep out competition. The law will affect him beneficially if it is calculated to keep out the Montreal Star and Family Herald, and therefore, I do not wonder that he supports it.

Mr. WOOD. Let them send out their agents to get business.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not give them an opportunity to do so on equal terms? As to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen), I would point out to him that the local papers have a radius of about forty miles of free circulation, and there is not one out of a hundred of them which circulate beyond that. This does not touch the local papers; it applies to the metropolitan papers that circulate all over the country.

The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) says every one wants to take his local paper, because it reports the markets up to the hour of going to press. That shows how little the hon. gentleman knows of the way the local papers are conducted, because they only report the markets of their own villages and the neighbouring villages. What the farmers want are the markets of Toronto, Montreal, London, Hamilton, Buffalo and the outside world generally, which they do not get in their local papers. They want these markets more than once a week; they want them every day, if possible; and many farmers take the daily papers for that reason. There are twenty or twenty-five local papers published in my county; but I find in the rural districts more of the Montreal Star and Family Herald than of the local papers. I ask the farmers why they take it, and they say in reply, because it gives them information in every line, as well as the markets of the world, and a large amount of general reading matter in addition. The hon. member for Guysborough says he has seen splendid political articles in the local papers; but a great many of the local papers have no politics in them at all; and if you want to get information on the political questions which are engaging the attention of the public, you have to get it from the city papers. The Toronto and Hamilton papers have never made any complaint in regard to this proposed postage, because they circulate largely in their own province; but the papers published in the city of Montreal have reason to complain, because they circulate largely among the farmers of Ontario, and the greater you make the burden upon them, the greater you make it upon the farmers who read these papers and find them valuable.

Mr. QUINN. The remarks of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and those of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) have, I think, let the cat out of the bag as to the motive which several hon. gentlemen have in supporting the postage on papers going from one province to another. The full argument of the hon. member for North Wellington was this, that inasmuch as the county newspaper had difficulty in getting along, and its field was limited, and inasmuch as the city newspaper charged higher rates for advertising and had a wider field, there must be a tax put on the city newspaper to protect the county newspaper. That is his argument put in a nut shell. The hon. member for Hamilton follows on the same line, and says: 'I do not want these Montreal papers to come into Hamilton, because they compete with the paper in which I am largely interested.'

Mr. WOOD. I did not say that.

Mr. QUINN. Put in a nut shell, that is his argument. I do not expect that the hon. gentleman will say that I have expressed his idea in the words he would select; but that is his argument, going to the bottom of it. Now, I ask the hon. members of this House who have broader minds than that, and who are interested in the advancement of the country, to put into the hands of the people the best newspaper material they can; and they can only do that by establishing a uniform rate of postage all through the Dominion. The hon. member for North Wellington attempted to answer me by saying that the newspaper in Montreal that pays $3,000 to-day, if circulated in the United States, would be obliged to pay double that amount. But my hon. friend lost sight of the fact that if it were in the United States it would have a possible clientele of 70,000,000 population, whereas here we have only five or six millions. There is no law in the United States which limits the circulation of a newspaper, or puts a tax on its circulation beyond the state or city in which it is published; but every one of the 70,000,000 people in the United States is free to subscribe to the New York Herald or any others of the large dailies published in the city of New York without any discrimination against him. Why could those papers not afford to pay a very much larger rate when they have such a large clientele? Once more, I would ask the members of this House who are not governed by these narrow ideas, who perhaps are not dependent on a county newspaper for their election to this House, or who have not their money invested in some little newspaper in their county or city, to put aside these considerations and look on a newspaper as it is—not merely as a commercial venture, but as a great educator—as one of the most powerful influences we have in the Dominion for the education and advancement of our people; and let us place in the hands of the people the best newspapers we can, which are undoubtedly the great newspapers published in the large cities.

Mr. D. D. ROGERS (Frontenac). It is quite evident that when the tax was first put upon newspapers it was done to prevent the abuse of the privilege granted to them. That tax, which was put in the shape of postage has had a good effect, we have derived quite a revenue from it, and I believe the people are very well pleased with it. I have heard very little complaint from any of the newspapers of the province of Ontario on account of it. We know that many of the large papers in the cities are wonderfully pressing for government pap.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROGERS. The other side is that many of them want the other fellows to get into power and give them big advertisements, some times at double what they are worth. Hon. gentlemen will remember the time the Empire was started, when the Mail was a grand independent paper. They will remember that $250,000 or $300,000 was subscribed in a few weeks to start the Empire, in opposition to the Mail when it was independent. In a couple of years that fund was exhausted. I am a reader of the Montreal Star; I have had it in my house for a number of years; and it obtained its great footing in Ontario when it was an independent paper. I have many clippings in my house taken from the Star at that time advocating Patron principles. The fact that it was an independent paper enabled it to find its way into the homes of many of the farmers of Ontario. I wish to say, in the interests of our local papers, that many farmers do not care to take too many papers, and as a general thing they want the local paper, because it gives the local news. If the circulation of the local papers were retarded or checked, it would be a very serious thing for them, because they could not get so many advertisements, and the more outside papers go to the farmers' homes, the worse it is for the local papers. The Montreal Star and other city papers are fine papers; but we know there is a great deal of useless matter in them, whereas the local papers are thoroughly read. The more the city papers circulate among the farmers, the more they tend to drive out the local papers, and prevent them having the scope they otherwise would have. Then, the local paper has more independence, which we sadly need in this country. The larger papers are bitterly partisan, and it is not in the interest of the masses that they should displace the local papers. In my opinion the Postmaster General is perfectly justified in raising a revenue from newspaper postage. I am only sorry, so far as I am concerned, that he has reduced the rate from one-half cent a pound. I am sorry that he reduced the rate from one-half to one-eighth on newspapers circulated within the province of publication. That does not affect the local papers, that should particularly be encouraged for the better news they give. We have local papers that give commercial news as regularly as the Star and a day or two ahead of it.

Mr. CLARKE. I regret very much that the hon. the Postmaster General is not able to give the information necessary to ascertain in what way the revenue will be affected by the proposed alterations in the law. I understand, however, that, in round numbers, the total revenue derived from the distribution of the newspapers in the mails during the past year was some $88,000. That is on the basis of half a cent a pound on the papers liable to this tax. If the intention of the government were to reduce the rate charged from one-half to one-eighth of a cent, the loss to the revenue would be $60,000 to $65,000. If we could ascertain from the hon. gentleman how much the revenue will lose by the proposed change, we will be able to arrive pretty accurately at the further loss the revenue will sustain if the suggestion of my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) were adopted, but, unfortunately, we have not that information at hand. I venture to assert, however, that it would not involve a further loss of revenue of more than $10,000 or $15,000 at the very outside.

Mr. DAVIN. Not that.

Mr. CLARKE. And, in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman is making a reduction, that seems a very small amount. It is difficult to understand on what principle the taxation for the services rendered by the post office to the newspapers is based. The Postmaster General appears to be re-establishing the old system of charging by zones or areas and applying that only to newspapers and not to other mail matter. A county zone has been established, within which newspapers are distributed free, and the local press that has benefited by the present law is discharging a peculiar function to its locality that no provincial or Dominion paper can possibly discharge. And these local papers are not, because of their position, materially injured by the influx of provincial or Dominion papers into the districts which they serve. The local papers have to be taken for the local news, which can never be supplied by papers that occupy the more pretentious position of provincial or Dominion journals. But, in addition to this county zone, the Postmaster General proposes to establish provincial zones, inside of which the provincial newspapers will be distributed at one-eighth of a cent, and a further zone, extending beyond the limits of the provinces, in which newspapers shall be charged postage at the rate of one-half cent per pound. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he knows that such a system of distribution of newspapers is in force in any other Post Office Department in the wide world? On the contrary, that system was abandoned long since, and the reintroduction of it is a blur on the administration of the hon. gentleman. Besides, our provinces are not at all of the same size. Take, for instance, the province of Prince Edward Island, which is not as large as some of the counties in Ontario and Quebec. The island is about 200 miles long, and, probably, 20 or 30 miles wide, and a newspaper published in it is circumscribed by that smaller provincial area just the same as newspapers published in the larger provinces. Why should not papers published in Prince Edward Island be permitted to circulate over as wide an area and at the same rate as those published in Ontario and Quebec? If the Postmaster General deems it sound policy to apply this principle of distribution by zones, charging a smaller fee for distributing newspapers in a definite area and a larger fee for their distribution in a larger area, why does he not apply that principle to the distribution of letters and postal cards and circulars? Again and again representations have been made to him by the great centres of population on the unfairness of charging drop letters in the cities the same price as letters mailed to the ends of the earth. It must appeal to the common sense of the committee, that if it is sound principle to charge on the scale of distances on newspapers, the same principle ought to apply, especially with regard to drop letters in the cities and towns. But, the Postmaster General has been obdurate, and so far we have not been able to convince him that it is unwise to continue charging on these drop letters a higher rate than they can be distributed at by private hands in the various cities of the Dominion.

Mr. WOOD. Who is responsible for making the drop letters pay two cents?

Mr. CLARKE. I presume the hon. gentleman is aware that the postage on drop letters was reduced some years ago and afterwards increased.

Mr. WOOD. By whom?

Mr. CLARKE. Because the revenues of the department were not as large as now, and the service cost more when a smaller number of drop letters were distributed.

But, with the vastly increased number of drop letters, the cost of distribution has been substantially reduced, and there is no reason why the people should not receive the relief and assistance in this respect that they are entitled to. I cannot understand on what principle the department is working in allowing local newspapers to be distributed free within an area of twenty or thirty miles, and charging one-eighth of a cent within the limits of the respective provinces, and one-half on the circulation beyond the confines of those provinces. That system does not obtain in any other postal service in the world, and I think, in view of the very slight further reduction that will be made in the revenues of the department, it would be well if the Postmaster General would see his way clear to adopt the suggestion, and either make the rate one-quarter of a cent per pound uniform, or make the rate of one-eighth of a cent apply generally. There would be practically no difference in revenue by adopting the suggestion of the hon. member for Assiniboia, and in view of the buoyant position of the revenue, newspaper proprietors might fairly ask the Postmaster General to make this concession.

Mr. BERGERON. I would ask my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), if he would be kind enough to put before the House the names of all papers that have been affected by this tax, and the amount paid by them respectively? That would enable us to calculate the difference between the price asked now and the one proposed by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron), asks that at a very late stage in the session.

Mr. BERGERON. I ask it when the Bill is before us.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But he asks for the details at a very late period of the session. I submit whether what he asks would be fair to the newspapers. A year ago, a motion was made in this House for a return, showing the amount of postage paid by each newspaper, and, it not appearing to me to be objectionable from a public point of view, I caused the return to be prepared and laid on the Table. But immediately afterwards I received communications from a number of publishers of newspapers complaining that the publicity so given, gave information to their opponents as to the state of their business, and they objected. But when a motion was made this session of the same character, I called attention to that objection, and the motion was not pressed. The hesitation I have in bringing down the information is simply for that reason. But, as I have said on a previous occasion, there would be no objection on the part of the department to allowing any member of the House, in confidence, access to the records, for his own guidance.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was in answer to a question asked by me, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock), made the remark to which he refers.

Amendment (Mr. Davin) negatived. Yeas, 27; nays, 44.

Bill reported.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. I move, in amendment:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but it be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending the section substituted by section 3 of chapter 20 of the Statutes of 1898 for section 26, as amended by this present Bill, of the Post Office Act, by substituting in line 20 and 21, after the words 'fraction of,' in line 20, the words 'one-eighth' instead of 'one-half,' and to omit the following words: 'for transmission beyond the province or territory wherein they are published, and at the rate of 1 cent for each pound weight or any fraction of a pound weight for transmission within such province or territory,' inserted after the word 'weight' in the 23rd line.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). When the Bill was in committee I did not understand that that amendment was before us, until the vote was taken. I should be in favour of the amendment, were it not for the ridiculously low figure fixed by it. I take it by this amendment the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) gives expression to his opinion that the carriage of newspapers should be free—for one-eighth of a cent per pound is practically free. If the rate proposed by the hon. gentleman were one-quarter or one-half of a cent, I should be in favour of his proposition. The principle that I favour, is that there should be a poundage rate on newspapers, and that it should be uniform. I think that in committee we have struck a very bad principle in discussing how this measure would affect different newspapers and different businesses. The whole trouble, probably, arose from the fact that when the postage rate was charged against newspapers, a free zone was allowed the country newspapers. This made the city newspapers jealous; and I think that if the country newspapers have a right to a free local zone, the city newspapers are entitled to cheap provincial zone. If the amendment fixed the rate at one-quarter or one-half of a cent, I would be glad to support it.

The House divided on amendment (Mr. Davin):

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden) moved that the order for the third reading of Bill (No. 155) to amend the Militia Act, be discharged, and that it be referred back to the committee.

Motion agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I desire to add two amendments to this Bill, and before proceeding to explain the amendments, I wish to say that I have had the advantage of discussing this Bill with several military gentlemen in the House, including the two hon. gentlemen opposite who for so many years occupied the position of Minister of Militia and Defence, with the result that an understanding has been come to with reference to the Bill. I agree with the views of those gentlemen that for the future it would be wiser to limit the appointments of honorary colonels and lieutenant-colonels, if any are made, to cases where it is desired to reward military men who have served with honour, and with distinction in the military service of this country, and I have undertaken that the regulations under which appointments of this kind have been made, shall be cancelled, and a new regulation issued in accordance with the statements that I have just made. With this preface—I propose the following amendments in order to make the Bill entirely workable. The first amendment that I propose is in the first section, line 8, to strike out the word 'the' and insert the words 'not below that,' between the words 'rank' and 'of' in the same line. That is to say, that whereas now the rank which a district commanding officer shall hold is limited to lieutenant-colonel, under the Act as amended power will be taken to give him the rank of full colonel. This I think is very desirable in the case of officers like Colonel Otter and others, who have served a long time, and who are now approaching the age limit. Both on the ground of long and distinguished service and also because receiving the rank of full colonel will give them a longer tenure of office, I think power should be taken to confer the rank of full colonel upon these gentlemen.

Then in the second section I propose the following amendment: To strike out the words 'according to' and insert between the words 'and' and 'under' the words 'officers now on the retired list holding commissions as lieutenant-colonel may be promoted to the rank of colonel.' That is, power is taken to promote any deserving lieutenant-colonel now on the retired list to the rank of colonel on the retired list, without his having to return to the active militia in order to receive promotion. These are the amendments I propose. I may say that I have discussed them with the two gentlemen who have occupied the position that I now hold, and I think they meet with their approval.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). The hon. gentleman is quite correct in saying that he consulted me, and I have no objection to what he has proposed. But I would like to draw his attention to one point which I consider important. The hon. gentleman is taking power to appoint colonels, and as an instance of merit he has named Colonel Otter. I think he is quite right. But there is one danger about that power. These positions are given to men who are deserving of them on account of long service. The title of honorary colonel, as I understand, in England is a title which confers as much honour on the regiment over which he holds the rank of honorary colonel, as it does upon the individual himself; that is to say, that nobody would think, in England, of appointing an individual to be a colonel except for services which would be looked upon as equivalent to military service, that is, valuable services rendered in the branch of public service to which he belongs. I merely rise for the purpose of suggesting to my hon. friend that if that list is going to be extended beyond proper limits, it will destroy the value of the appointment and the title given to the recipients of that honour. I may say that when I heard that a lot of gentlemen who are very deserving of every civil honour, but who had never seen any military service, were appointed honorary colonels and given the rank of full colonel, and allowed to go about the city of Montreal in military uniform without having served a day in any branch of the service, I thought it was a great mistake, and a mistake which is not to the credit of the military organization of Canada. Of course the hon. gentleman promises to cancel that order, because it would never do that such honours as the commission of a full colonel should be given to civilians who have not served in the force. If it is not extended beyond proper limits, I would be disposed to give the necessary authority to the minister to give these commissions. But, if it is extended beyond the proper limits it would destroy the value of the position.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). The ex-Minister of Militia and Defence must be mistaken in the statement as to the granting of the rank of a full colonel. If I understood the hon. Minister of Militia rightly in his statement he said that no full colonels had been appointed at all. We looked up the Militia Act and we found that he had only power to make lieutenant-colonels. I drew his attention to the anomaly that there was no such rank in the English service as an honorary lieutenant-colonel at all. I understood from the hon. minister that these were only honorary lieutenant-colonels. I ask the hon. minister if his Bill or any other Bill gives him power to promote colonels to the rank of honorary lieutenant-colonels, and if so, has he promoted colonels to the rank of honorary colonels?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. HAGGART. And you do not intend to do so.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). The point that the hon. gentleman raises is, that under the Queen's Regulations it was claimed that they had power to make honorary colonels, that they had it in England.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In reference to what the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) has said, I would point out to him that he is quite correct in saying that we have no power to create any officer higher than a substantive lieutenant-colonel, excepting in two cases, and therefore, in giving the honorary position, we were limited to the position of lieutenant-colonel because we had not the power. In nearly all cases we have made these officers honorary lieutenant-colonels. There is no power by this amendment to promote them, so far as I understand it. I suppose there would be another way in which it might be done in the case of military men. I do not think it should be done in reference to any other. In reference to what the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) has said, I now give the House the assurance that it is the intention of the government that the position shall not be given to any one who has not had long service and who has not distinguished himself in the position of lieutenant-colonel. That is the statement which I make here, and the government, I am sure, will be governed by that statement. There is no desire on the part of anybody to reduce in importance a position of this kind. Possibly some of the appointments that have been made ought not to have been made, but I think, on the whole, the appointments that have been made do not reflect any discredit upon the militia. But, the principle will be changed in future and the positions will be given only as rewards to military men of long standing and to those military men who have distinguished themselves.

Mr. BERGERON. On what rule do you appoint civilians as lieutenant-colonels?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is given up. I do not wish to convey the idea that any of the appointments which have been made have cast discredit upon the militia, but I would like to know why a civilian should be made a colonel any more than a man should be made an archbishop, simply because he is a good man. I claim that the militia is a profession, like any other profession, and I claim that because a man may be a distinguished statesman it is no reason why he should be made a colonel any more than he should be made an admiral, or anything else. Such a practice as that only makes such appointments ridiculous. I saw a gentleman in Montreal who had more gold lace than Lord Roberts probably wears. He had never served a day in his life in any branch of the service, and yet he is a full lieutenant-colonel sporting his gold lace. I think he was present with the hon. Minister of Militia distributing the medals at the Arena in Montreal. At any rate, his uniform was quite new. It evidently had not been exposed to hard service in so far as I could judge, and he had more gold lace than probably Lord Roberts ever wears.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). Mr. Chairman, with all due deference to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, he will permit me to say that in justice to the entire militia service of Canada, I cannot concur in the views expressed by him, the promoter of this Bill, as the object is, to my mind, wrong in principle. The idea of making honorary colonels or lieutenant-colonels out of civilians is wrong in principle. It should be confined strictly to the militia officers meriting promotion, and none other, but to permit any civilian without having acquired any knowledge of military training, or any prestige as a militiaman or a soldier, is, to my mind, an injustice to the officers and the militia service, who have been lifelong soldiers, and I consider it as well an injustice to the whole militia service of Canada. As was properly said, the government might as well introduce a Bill to make a civilian, without any knowledge of theology, an honorary bishop or archbishop, because of his money, his influence, or political stripe. The principle, to my mind, is precisely the same as to make a civilian a lieutenant-colonel or colonel without any previous military rank or distinction as a soldier. Besides, I contend this Bill is contrary to the Queen's Regulations and Orders, inasmuch as it enables a civilian, if it become law, to leap in the dark into the position of lieutenant-colonel, over the heads of all majors, captains and lieutenants as well as over all officers of the staff, thus ignoring all real officers meriting reward or promotion as good soldiers who have borne the burden and heat of the day, and bestowing rank and honours on parties unworthy of honours or positions of this sort, not being military men, but only recognized for their political cast without any merit or military training. The Queen's Regulations require that no officer shall take precedence of his neighbour, unless by consent or unless he is an efficient officer. Unless an officer has been derelict in his duty it should not be in the power of the department to appoint another over his head. I say military titles should be left to military men. I do not object to the lieutenant-colonels who are holding commissions in the active militia, or who have retired and are on the reserve list, receiving the honorary rank of colonel, but I do object to those who have never taken any interest in military service at all and who were never attached to any corps of the service having this honorary rank bestowed upon them over the heads of others. I, myself, have been in the active militia and holding a commission for nearly twenty years as lieutenant-colonel in command of the 75th Regiment, having risen gradually from a lieutenant and adjutant to the command of the regiment, and spent much valuable time and means in the service to have it efficient, and in referring to myself as a lieutenant-colonel. I do most strongly object to the principle involved in this Bill in giving priority to parties in no way deserving of a rank or title of this sort. In doing so I am fully convinced I express the sentiments of my brother officers, who will be only too willing to concur in the views I have thus submitted, that the passage of an Act of this sort would be not only an act of injustice to all militia officers, but a serious injury to the entire militia service of Canada.

On these grounds, I do not feel justified in concurring in the appointments that have already been made. If this law is to take effect only from to-day, then I want an explanation from the minister as to what is to become of the colonels who have already been appointed without any legal authority, on the part of the minister. My hon. friend beside me, says that the appointments have only been of lieutenant-colonels, but I suppose this Bill means that those appointed as lieutenant-colonels will now receive the rank of colonels.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. KAULBACH. I offer these remarks to the House, in support of the position taken by majors, captains, lieutenants, and staff officers of our militia, who have communicated to me their objections against this proposal. If the appointments that have been made are not to continue, save in certain exceptions, it is all right; otherwise, I object.

Mr. TISDALE. There seems to be some confusion in the minds of hon. gentlemen as to what this Bill is. I state now that I concur in the amendment which the minister has made to the Bill to-day. When there is nothing in the Militia Act bearing on a question, the Queen's Regulations apply, and the minister acting under the impression that the Militia Act did not forbid him appointing lieutenant-colonels. My personal opinion is that the Militia Department had not that authority, because the Militia Act does speak of the officers who should be appointed. The minister further tells us that he will repeal that order and not act under that authority again. That settles that question. The minister can only do two things under this Bill, as it is now. First, in retiring an officer from the active militia to the retired list, he can make him an honorary colonel; and second, an officer who has been retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, can be made an honorary colonel. That is all there is to it. The objections to the original Bill have been removed by this amendment, and so far as the law is confined to military men, it will be satisfactory to the militia of Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. The Bill goes further, and it allows the government to promote the honorary lieutenant-colonels to be full colonels.

Mr. TISDALE. No.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It refers to men who have actually served and who have earned their commissions.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In order to make progress, and to relieve the feelings of my hon. friends on the other side, I will resign my commission.

Mr. DOBELL. I am perfectly willing to follow the example of my right hon. friend, if it will expedite business.

Mr. KAULBACH. It is my personal wish that the right hon. gentleman should retain his honorary colonelcy, and I am sure there will be no objection so far as he is concerned. I have had correspondence from officers in the active militia, objecting to the Bill which was originally introduced; but having had explanations from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden), and the other members of the government, I am satisfied to let the matter remain as it is.

Mr. KAULBACH.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, ST. JOHNS, P.Q.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DOMINIQUE MONET (Laprairie and Napierville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is carried, I wish to call the attention of the government to the conduct of Mr. H. W. Wood, collector of customs at St. Johns, in the province of Quebec.

For over a month some newspapers have published in their columns certain charges which have become of public notoriety and which are attributed to Mr. Wood. In its issue of the 25th of June last, the Canada Français, of St. John, reproduced those charges in these words:

Thanks, Mr. Wood.

We have learned, of late, a very edifying story, and one which speaks volumes as to the feelings of Doctor Wood, collector of customs in this city, towards the French Canadians.

It was at the time of the students' disturbances in Montreal, and the valorous doctor who has undoubtedly a good deal of leisure time, outside of his official duties, was discussing the merits of the Transvaal war, at the Grand Trunk station, when finding himself nonplused, he gave utterance to these words which show what kind feelings he entertains towards us:

'In 1837, he said, the British hung several French Canadians; well, they ought to have hanged them 'all; so we would be rid of the whole breed.'

Brave words these, coming from the doctor!

Therefore, we think we are voicing the feeling of all the French Canadians of this city in conveying our best thanks to Mr. Wood for his kind remarks addressed to our race.

Decidedly, we have very warm friends among the British Tories. How kindly these people feel towards us!

At all events, men cannot help experiencing a strange feeling when they meet on the street one of these gentlemen whose very look and smile reminds one of Radcliffe, and who seems to say: 'There goes a fool whom a slip-knot would fit better than a sailor's knot!'

Really, it makes one's blood run cold.

Now, in order to show that the matter was brought to the notice of the community, outside of St. Johns, let me quote from a Montreal paper, La Patrie, of the 26th June, which published the following article under the heading: 'Is it True.'

We are informed that a serious complaint has been made to the Minister of Customs against Dr. Wood, collector of the department at St. Johns, Quebec. If the facts brought to the knowledge of Hon. Mr. Paterson are true it becomes his duty to dismiss this officer without delay.

Mr. Wood is accused of having declared in a public place in the presence of several people that the English authorities in 1837 should have hung high and dry all the French Canadians, and if this rigorous measure had been adopted Canada to-day would have been freed from this pitiful breed.' Mr. Wood is a public servant, paid by the money of the French Canadians as well as by the English, and we repeat that if it is true that he used this outrageous language he should not be allowed to remain in the public service five minutes longer.

We hope that Mr. Wood will be able to refute the accusation laid against him, but if it is proven we trust that the Minister of Customs will not be slow to act.

Mr. Wood, realizing that he was accused in the way I have just stated, undertook to reply to his accusers in the columns of the News of St. Johns, in a letter which he signed in his quality of collector of customs. That letter which bears the date of the 28th was published in that paper, and it runs as follows:—

To the editor of the 'News.'

Sir,—After reading the cowardly attack made upon me in a recent number of the 'Canada Français,' of this town, and the exaggerated statement in 'La Patrie,' of the 26th instant, it becomes necessary for me to place myself in a proper light before those people whose respect I covet.

Living in a community where one-half of the citizens at least are Boer sympathizers, who have talked treason every day since the war in South Africa began, and have gloated over every misfortune that has befallen the British arms, it is not to be wondered that a man, who was born a loyal British subject, and has continued to remain so for more than half a century, should become enraged at continually hearing disloyal utterances.

After hearing one of these Boer sympathizers say that the government had no right to send men to South Africa; that our brave soldier boys had no business there, and that he hoped they would all be shot, and that not one of them would ever return, I made the remark to him that the British hung several like him in 1837, and that they ought to have hanged more.

Now, if the 'cap fits' the editor of the 'Canada Français,' or any others who read this, he or they are at liberty to put it on.

My remark was intended for such men as the Boer sympathizers above mentioned, and not for such men as Major Pelletier, Dr. Fiset and the other brave French Canadian boys who went to South Africa; whose actions have been such that all loyal British subjects are justly proud of them.

In conclusion, I may say that I have been a civil servant for more than ten years, and have been sober and attentive to my business, and have not defrauded the government to the value of a farthing, and if under these circumstances the government sees fit to dismiss me from the service because I am loyal and have lived up to the oath of allegiance which I have taken, and am unwilling to listen to disloyal talk without protesting against it, I must submit, but I shall not hang my head in shame, nor be obliged to seek a refuge in a foreign country.

Yours, etc.,

H. W. WOOD,

Collector of Customs.

St. John, June 28, 1800.

As a matter of fair-play, and in justice to Mr. Wood, I deemed it my duty to read that letter in English before giving a translation of it; and I have endeavoured to make that translation as literal as possible.

The Montreal Gazette has partly reproduced the articles which I have just brought to the notice of the House, and I find, in this morning's Citizen Mr. Wood's letter reproduced under the heading:

A PLUCKY CIVIL SERVANT.

He is not afraid of Tarte and his disloyal organ.

Now, this is the question I want to put to the government: Does the government think, from the letter which Mr. Wood has written to the News of St. Johns, on the 28th of June last, that he has shown that he can be impartial enough in the discharge of his duties to be maintained in his position? I hold that he has not; and moreover, I think the intention of our constitution in forbidding civil servants to take an active part in politics aims only at securing that impartiality which all those who are connected with the government of the country ought to show in the discharge of their duties. Todd, in dealing with the matter, says that it is a well known rule of constitutional government that all public officials should abstain from participating in active politics, by remaining absolutely neutral in that regard.

Now, as to Mr. Wood's reply to that man Poitevin, a poor labourer—for he is the man referred to in his letter of the 25th June—I understand perfectly well that the utterances of that man, unwarrantable and inhuman as they were, were such a provocation to the just feelings of Mr. Wood, namely, his desire to see the British arms prevail in South Africa, that I could easily forgive him for having replied to Poitevin in the way he did. But I think he should not have gone beyond that, and he should have refrained from making an attack upon the French Canadians and using such outrageous language with regard to the patriots of 1837. However, it is not that altercation between Poitevin and Wood which is the ground of my complaint. The subject of my complaint is that he wrote a letter to the News, in which he reiterates his charge and declares that the Boer sympathizers are all traitors to their country. 'Living,' he says, 'in a community where one-half at least of the citizens are Boer sympathizers, who talk treason every day, it is not to be wondered at that a man should become enraged at hearing such utterances.'

As I said, can a civil servant living in the midst of a population where one-half of the citizens are Boer sympathizers be impartial in the discharge of his duties when he has to deal every day with matters in which French Canadians are interested, when, I say, he has to render justice to a French Canadian whose father he says the British ought to have hanged in 1837; can that civil servant under such circumstances administer equal justice to all alike, French and English? As I understand it, the only reason why public officials are forbidden to engage actively in politics is to secure the most absolute impartiality in the administration of public affairs. Now, can it be said that Mr. Wood, as collector of customs, is unbiassed and impartial? I emphatically say that he is not; but he pleads provocation, saying that he was enraged at the utterances of Boer sympathisers. But it must be borne in mind that with the exception of the case of that man Poitevin, he does not point out a single other case of any man having used such offensive language as that he complains of. Now, in his letter he states that one-half of the population of the city of St. Johns are Boer sympathisers and talk treason every day.

Let me ask the House here whether the French Canadians in the province of Quebec or throughout the country have not the right to sympathise with the Boers and to hold the views held in Great Britain by Englishmen? As a matter of fact, I do not know whether one-half or ninety-nine per cent of the population in the city of St. Johns are Boer sympathisers or not. But I may say one thing and I speak knowingly, as I have occasion to go down there every week to attend to my professional business before the courts. I know that a great many French Canadians were opposed to that war, being of the opinion that there was no just cause for it; they were also opposed to our participating in that war and to our contributing men or money towards it; but I do not know of any other individual besides that poor man, Poitevin, who can harbour such an inhuman sentiment as to hope that all our soldiers sent to South Africa would be shot. As I said, that altercation between that man and Wood is not the ground of my complaint, because the latter was acting under provocation; but what I have reason to complain of is when he states in his letter that one-half of the citizens of St. Johns who are Boer sympathisers are traitors to the British Crown. Are Morley, Bryce, Clarke, and many other British statesmen to be branded as traitors for having publicly declared that the war now being waged in South Africa was an unjust war? Does the 'stop the war committee' which has been started in Great Britain, speak in different tones from the language used by those French Canadians who are Boer sympathisers? Why, Sir, was it not out of sympathy with the Boers that 125 members in the British House of Commons voted against the war subsidies? Did ever Mr. Wood dream of sending over to England a halter to have all those Englishmen hanged who think and talk just as some French Canadians do?

Mr. MONET.

We have had enough of these heated appeals to prejudices; we have had enough of these race and creed wrangles and of that campaign of hatred conducted by certain newspapers and politicians in the province of Ontario and in other English-speaking provinces against the French Canadian population. When the newspapers are the initiators of such agitation, we have to put up with it; but when such appeals come from a salaried public official, from a man whose salary is paid out of the money of the French Canadians as well as the money of the English, it cannot be tolerated, and if the government indirectly shields that official, they will be held responsible for his insults to our race.

As to the insulting reference made by Mr. Wood to the patriots of 1837, I may say that never did a man use language which was more offensive to the population of St. Johns. The city of St. Johns and all the neighbouring country, and as a matter of fact the whole district witnessed the events of 1837. The population now living in the district of Iberville and in the neighbouring parishes is nearly entirely composed of descendants of the men who took an active part in the events of 1837 and 1838, and we are all proud to descend from the patriots of those times. That country is still reeking with the blood shed by our ancestors in the battles fought in that portion of the country. Now, as Mr. Wood is an old citizen, claiming as he does that he has been a British citizen for over half a century, he should have realized how offensive was his language, under the circumstances, when attacking the French Canadians of 1837.

Mr. Speaker, there may be a difference of opinion as to the events of 1837 considered from a religious standpoint; and as Catholic divines hold that rebellion is practically unwarrantable under any circumstances, even when directed against a tyrant, we have to leave it to the Almighty judge of the oppressors and their victims to settle that side of the question. For our part, all we have to do is to consider the generous sacrifices of the men who laid down their lives and shed their blood for securing to us responsible government. If they were human, in so far as they failed in their efforts, they rank as demigods owing to the magnitude of their sacrifices and we cherish their memory, for the sacred inheritance they have bequeathed to us.

There is no difference of opinion as to the generosity of the sacrifices made by the patriots of 1837, and Mr. Wood knew perfectly well how deep a wound he was inflicting when using such outrageous language. But, as he said, the patriots of 1837 have not all been hung, and although there are but few men left who bear the names of those who died on the scaffold, and although but few Papineaus have been spared, still, thanks be to God, there are enough broad-hearted men left in the province of Quebec and in the other provinces who resent the attack made against our race and who will never put up with insults such as were hurled against us by Mr. Wood.

Again, I ask, have the French Canadians in this country less rights than their English-speaking fellow-countrymen? At the very moment when the citizens of the city of Toronto are erecting a monument to the memory of William Lyon Mackenzie, the chief rebel of 1837, in Upper Canada, is it becoming on the part of certain Englishmen to throw mud at the French Canadian patriots of 1837, and to insult the memory of those men who have bequeathed us the political freedom which fanatics are now using against us?

I think I am but echoing the voice of the citizens of St. Johns, in protesting here against Mr. Wood's letter, and I ask the government to inquire without delay into the circumstances which preceded and accompanied the publication of that letter. If the charges laid against Mr. Wood are proven, I ask the government to dismiss him.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation.) As my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is not familiar with the French language he has asked me to reply to my hon. friend from Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Monet), and I think it would be more proper that I should give my answer in English.

Mr. Speaker, the matter which has just been brought before the House by my hon. friend from Napierville (Mr. Monet) is one which, up to two days ago, was altogether unknown to the Government, as no complaint had been made against the official in question. It appears that an altercation took place in March last between Mr. Wood, collector of customs at St. Johns, Que., and a man named Potvin, who, I believe, is an employee of one of the railways in the same city. A discussion arose between them in connection with the troubles which had taken place one or two days before in Montreal in regard to the students of Laval University. Mr. Potvin, as I understand the matter, stated that, in his opinion, the government had no reason whatever to send the contingents to South Africa, and he desired for his part that they should all be killed. Mr. Wood is said to have retorted, that the British government had hanged several French Canadians in 1837 and 1838, and that it was a pity that more of the same race had not been hanged. My hon. friend from Napierville very properly said, and I am glad to repeat his statement, that he attached no importance whatever to this altercation nor to the language uttered by Mr. Wood, reprehensible as it was, under the circumstances; but the subject of the complaint of my hon. friend is, that Mr. Wood afterwards wrote a letter to the press, and, therefore, acted deliberately, in which he repeated what he had said before, that it was a pity that more French Canadians had not been hanged in 1837.

Mr. FOSTER. Was not that drawn out rather by the article in La Patrie?

The PRIME MINISTER. The first article appeared in Le Canada Français, and was reproduced in La Patrie. But, Mr. Wood repeated, and rather gloried in the statement, that for his part he was sorry that more French Canadians were not hanged in 1837. I do not hesitate to say—and I am sure I voice the feelings of every man in this House—that such a sentiment expressed by any citizen of Canada in this year 1900 is certainly most unfortunate, and in a public official, most reprehensible. Mr. Wood might have remembered that there were not only French Canadians hanged in 1837, but also English Canadians, who, like many French Canadians, took up arms, not with the object of separating Canada from the British Crown, but simply to vindicate the rights which are the privilege of every born British subject. I would prefer that at this time we cast a veil over those events, and act rather in the spirit of the Toronto city council, which, at this moment, as I understand, is erecting a monument to the memory of the chief rebel of 1837 in Upper Canada, William Lyon Mackenzie, whom the judgment of the people of Canada has long proclaimed as one of the fathers of Canadian liberty. I can say with equal truth that the Canadian people are of opinion that those who fought for the same cause in Lower Canada were also the fathers of Canadian liberty; and now that we enjoy the fruits of the seed then sown with so much misery, I am sure that we all agree that it is most unfortunate that any man, especially a civil servant, should recall, in a spirit of hostility to the French race, the events of that day. There is one thing, however, to be said in favour of Mr. Wood; that is, that he pleads provocation. He has a right to be heard and to have his full conduct inquired into, and it would not do for the government at this moment to offer any opinion as to whether he is guilty or not guilty. Though I, for my part, very severely repudiate and denounce the language he has used, we know that language, which is unfortunate and reprehensible, may sometimes have, not justification, but some excuse. It would not do for the government, which has to hold even the scales of justice between all parties, to pronounce any opinion on the matter at this moment, and I am sure the hon. member who brought it to the attention of the House does not wish that either. In fact, he concluded by asking that Mr. Wood's conduct be investigated.

Mr. BERGERON. No, he asked that Wood be dismissed.

Mr. MONET. If found guilty.

The PRIME MINISTER. That may follow or not, according to what we find as to the language used by Mr. Wood, which I think everybody must admit was most reprehensible and offensive, and such as could not be tolerated in a free country like this. At the same time, Mr. Wood has a right to say that he was acting under provocation, and to present his views before the government take any action. I will simply say that it will be the duty of the government to look into the matter very carefully; and I may add, in conclusion, that I do hope that henceforth we all endeavour to live in peace. Though Mr. Wood said he was living in a community where half the people were Boer sympathizers, yet, there is no one living in St. Johns, or in French Canada or in English Canada—because there are some who believe, like Mr. Bryce, Mr. Morley and others in England, that the war was unjust—there is no man in Canada who could harbour such a horrible sentiment as to hope that all our soldiers sent to South Africa would be killed. That would be a most inhuman sentiment, which I repudiate with all the power I am capable of, and which has also been repudiated by my hon. friend from Napierville. But when, unfortunately that unfortunate occurrence in St. Johns has arisen, it behoves the government to approach it without fear, without favour, and with the intention of giving justice wherever justice may be due.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). The Prime Minister has treated this question in the spirit that should prevail in the inquiry which the government propose to hold; and I think it is very important, in order that the matter should be dealt with properly, that the facts should be stated exactly as they are. As my hon. friend from Laprairie and Napierville has properly said, the accusation which he brought is not based upon the personal quarrel that took place between a man named Wood, a collector of customs, and a man named Potvin, an employee of some railway company. The important fact is that, after a month had elapsed after the quarrel took place, when there was no provocation possible and no question of anger or personal feeling at the moment, the collector of customs, signing his name as such, deliberately wrote a letter in which he said that all people sympathizing with the Boers were traitors and should be hanged, just as the men who fought for liberty in 1837 should have been hanged.

Mr. BEATTIE. He did not say that.

Mr. CRAIG. He did not say that.

Mr. BOURASSA. He said it in so many words:

Living in a community where one-half of the citizens at least are Boer sympathizers, who have talked treason every day since the war in South Africa began, and have gloated over every misfortune that has befallen the British arms,

Mr. MONET.

it is not to be wondered that a man who was born a loyal British subject, and has continued to remain so for more than half a century, should become enraged at continually hearing disloyal utterances.

Then, further down:

My remark was intended for such men as the Boer sympathizer above mentioned, and not for such men as Major Pelletier, Dr. Fiset and the other brave French Canadian boys who went to South Africa.

Therefore, in that gentleman's opinion, the people of Canada are divided between those who believe in our sending Canadians to fight British battles in South Africa, and those who do not believe in the justice of the British cause and in Canada taking any part in that war. The latter he declares to be disloyal, and the former the only loyal people in the Dominion. If all those who are opposed to this African war should be hanged, that would give a great deal of work to Radcliffe or the regiment of hangmen whom the government would be obliged to employ, since in St. Johns City alone more than half of the people think exactly as we do. Leaving aside the small question under discussion, I am very glad indeed to have this occasion of pointing out that a man who favours the intervention of Canada in the war is obliged to admit in a public document that, in the particular locality in the province of Quebec where he resides, more than half the people think and speak exactly in the same way as a few members of this House have had the courage to think and to speak. There can, therefore, be no doubt as to the offence committed by Mr. Wood in that letter. If we refer to some years ago, I think the members from the province of Ontario will recollect that a gentleman by the name of Myer, who was either a county attorney or held some other office under the Ontario government, was dismissed because he spoke in favour of annexation. Well, if it is a public offence for a civil servant to speak in favour of a political change for the whole Dominion, it must be a far greater offence to the whole community to say that men who speak and think in the same way as many thousands do in that community as well as in England and Scotland, should be denounced as traitors and hanged. And this public official has increased his offence by publishing letters which are reproduced by Tory organs, accompanied by compliments on him as being a plucky civil servant who is not afraid to defy the sentiments of a large portion of the community. The offence in his case is far greater than in Myer's case, because it is directed against the feelings and sentiments of a large portion of our people, and is, therefore, a position hostile to our nationality, taken by a public servant.

I am anxious that Mr. Wood should enjoy the same liberty as any other man in this country. I am too much a lover of liberty and freedom of speech to maintain that a public servant has not the right to think and talk freely on any question. But as long as it is contended that public servants, being appointed and paid by the whole community, comprising all classes and all nationalities, and all political parties, have no right to take part in political discussions; when an example has been set by the Ontario government, who laid down the principle that a civil servant has not the right to be an annexationist; surely a public officer should not have the right to say that at least a million and a half of people, who are as loyal as any other people in the country, should be hanged because they differ in opinion from that of the apparent majority of this country on the question of the South African war. The offence committed by Mr. Wood, I contend, is far greater than that committed by Mr. Myer, and for which Mr. Myer was dismissed. If a man is to be dismissed from a public office, who takes an active side with either political party in this country, surely a public servant who thus denounces a large number of our people, and even goes the length of saying that so many loyal subjects should be hanged, should not be allowed to go scot-free.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I think that the manner in which my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) has spoken emphasizes the necessity for very great care, that care which the right hon. the Prime Minister himself promises he will take before any judgment is delivered at all in this matter. The hon. gentleman has generalized very widely upon the assertion, which, it appears, was made by Mr. Wood. As I understand it from the newspaper, Mr. Wood was told by Mr. Potvin, in the course of a very heated discussion, that Canada had no business in sending troops to South Africa, and expressed the hope that every Canadian who went to fight Britain's battles in that country would be shot, to which Mr. Wood replied that the man who made that statement and other men who talked like him ought to be hanged, and that it would have been well if the government had hanged many more than they did who held such sentiments. That is a very different thing from being simply a Boer sympathizer.

Mr. MONET. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, Mr. Wood plainly said that he did not refer exclusively to Mr. Potvin, but that he was living in a community where thousands of the citizens were Boer sympathizers, and talking treason every day. He does not address himself to Mr. Potvin particularly, but says that if the cap fits the editor of Le Canada Français, or any other gentleman who reads his letter, they are at liberty to put it on.

Mr. FOSTER. Quite so. There is no occasion for any heat in the matter at all, and the hon. gentleman who introduced it spoke without heat, and the right hon. the Prime Minister as well; but I was sorry to hear the generalization made by the last speaker, because I do not think it is warranted, and I wish to make that matter clear, as we all must admit that there is need to proceed in a matter like his with the absolute truth.

Mr. Wood said further, as reported:

Living in a community where one-half of the citizens at least are Boer sympathizers, who have talked treason every day since the war in South Africa began and gloated over every misfortune that has befallen British arms, it is not to be wondered that a man who was born a loyal British subject, and has continued to remain so for more than half a century, should become enraged at continually hearing disloyal utterances.

The hon. member for Labelle admits that the majority are Boer sympathizers, and proceeding further, Mr. Wood says:

After hearing one of these Boer sympathizers say that the government had no right to send men to South Africa; that our brave soldier boys had no business there, and that he hoped they would all be shot, and that not one of them would ever return.

I made the remark to him—

That is, not to a Boer sympathizer, but to one who had said that our brave boys had no business in South Africa, and he hoped they would all be shot—

I made the remark to him that the British hung several like him in 1837, and they ought to have hanged more.

More what? More like him—that is more like the man who would say that our brave soldier boys had no business in South Africa, and he hoped they would all be shot.

Mr. BOURASSA. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), allow me—

Mr. FOSTER. No, I think I shall get through better this way. The mistake that the hon. member for Labelle made, was that he generalized upon a statement made to Mr. Potvin, and spoke of it as applying to all French Canadians. That is doing violence to the statement as it appears in the paper. I want to call attention to that as emphasizing the necessity for us all holding our opinions back until we know exactly what the circumstances were, what the provocation was, and what was said. Then, I am sure that justice, and nothing more than justice will be done. It is a case that ought to be treated very carefully. We do not want such cases to multiply, if we can help it; and we should treat them in as calm a manner as we possibly can, and not go any further than the exact utterances that we have to deal with.

Mr. BOURASSA. But the men who were hanged in 1837 did not desire that the soldiers going to South Africa in 1900 should be shot. Therefore, if he wanted men like them hanged, he wanted men hanged, loyal British subjects, who demanded only British liberty in this country.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I have seldom heard such a gross misrepresentation of any man's case as has been made here, more particularly by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). He has misconstrued the language, and, I am sorry to say that the right hon. First Minister has done the same. What did the First Minister say? He said, and he repeated it three times, that Mr. Wood had stated that several more French Canadians ought to be hanged. Mr. Wood made no such statement. What Mr. Wood said, was:

After hearing one of these Boer sympathizers—

Referring, presumably, to Mr. Potvin——say that the government had no right to send men to South Africa—

That is the next thing.

—that our brave soldier boys had no business there, and he hoped they would all be shot and that not one of them would ever return—

That was the beautiful expression that the First Minister had not the slightest tone of condemnation for, and that the hon. member for Labelle condones and justifies.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have never justified that.

Mr. WALLACE. And misrepresents the man who objected to this expression.

Mr. BOURASSA. I think I have a right to raise a point of order. I never justified the language of Mr. Potvin, and the Prime Minister has condemned it.

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) did not justify it, he condemned the man who censured such vile, outrageous language.

Mr. SPEAKER. In the face of the declaration made by the hon. member for Labelle, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace), is bound to accept the statement.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa), did not mention Potvin's name, but what he did was to condemn the man who censured such vile and outrageous utterances. And now they are to have a trial, they tell us, to have this man punished. I would like to see them punish a man in this country for using loyal language, a man who has not said what the First Minister imputed to him—

The PRIME MINISTER. I imputed no language to Mr. Wood, because I had not his language under my eye. I was speaking of what had been quoted as his language.

Mr. BOURASSA.

Mr. WALLACE. If the First Minister had had Mr. Wood's statement in his hand, he would not have made the statement he did make. But he stated three times—and Hansard will show it—that Mr. Wood had said that several more French Canadians ought to be hanged, and that that was outrageous language for Mr. Wood to use. He used no such language.

Mr. BOURASSA. He wrote it.

Mr. WALLACE. No, he did not. I have his letter here. This man Potvin had said that our brave soldier boys had no business in South Africa, and he hoped they would all be shot, and none of them return. He said nothing about French Canadians, or men of any other nationality. And, I think the man who utters such language as this of Potvin's, if he be a Canadian citizen, or a British subject, should be put upon his trial, instead of a man who stood up loyally for the country, or for the soldiers whom the government sent out to fight our battles. All Mr. Wood said was that the British had hanged men like him in 1837, and they ought to have hanged more of them. The right hon. First Minister compared them to William Lyon Mackenzie, whom he spoke of as one of the fathers of Canadian liberty. He was a man who made a bargain to hand this country over to the United States, a rebel, a man who did not follow constitutional methods, as was done in other provinces for the redress of grievances, but was trying to cause bloodshed, and did cause bloodshed, in this country. In my opinion the language of Mr. Wood was very moderate. He made no attack on the French Canadians.

Mr. BOURASSA. He spoke of Boer sympathizers.

Mr. WALLACE. He made no attack on Boer sympathizers even. The attack he made was on the man who said that he hoped our brave soldiers would all be shot, and that none of them would return.

An hon. MEMBER. Read it.

Mr. WALLACE. I will read it, and I will not misrepresent it, as was done by the hon. member for Labelle, and the hon. member for Napierville and Laprairie.

Mr. BOURASSA. In what way did I misrepresent it?

Mr. SPEAKER. To say that an hon. member has misrepresented, is not a parliamentary expression, and I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) will avoid such expressions.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to have some word that expresses it better. I say that the man who was guilty of such vile, treasonable utterances as that, is the man to be condemned, and not the man who resents it. Now, let us read the second paragraph :

Living in a community where one-half of the citizens are Boer sympathizers, who have talked treason every day since the war in South Africa began, and have gloated over every misfortune that has befallen the British arms, it is not to be wondered at.

I hope it is not true that half of this community referred to are Boer sympathizers. I should regret it very much, that when Canada arose as one man to the defence of the empire and to the resistance of invasion of British soil by these Boers, that there should be any community in Canada one-half of whose citizens sympathized with this attack on the empire. I say that it would be a matter of very great regret if it were true. I hope there is not a word of truth in it, but the hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Monet) says 'hear, hear.' He is delighted to think that it is true. Here is the reply he makes to those who are Boer sympathizers :

It is not to be wondered that a man who was born a loyal British subject, and has continued to remain so for more than half a century, should become enraged at continually hearing disloyal utterances.

This is the reply that he did make. He says that he had become enraged at the continually hearing these disloyal utterances. What loyal man would not? Would the right hon. First Minister be pleased to hear such statements as those made in his presence? Would the members of the government, who have declared their loyalty, be pleased at hearing the utterances of Potvin, or would they be enraged as Mr. Wood was enraged at hearing disloyal utterances all around him? That was the only language that could be applied to persons who are Boer sympathizers who wished that our brave Canadian soldiers would be shot and that none of them would return to Canada. Mr. Wood said that such men as he were hanged in 1837, and that they ought to have hanged more. They are going to try this gentleman for this offence. The First Minister says that these utterances of his are most reprehensible and most improper. He says that his language was offensive, reprehensible, and such as should not be tolerated. The First Minister says that he had not the letter in his hand. I presume that he had not read it, or that, if he had read it, he had forgotten it. I do not see where that letter is offensive, reprehensible, or such as should not be tolerated. The First Minister condemns it. He says: We will give this officer a trial, but we ought to punish him, because his language is reprehensible, offensive, and such as should not be tolerated. This reminds me very much of an old Dutch magistrate, who tried a case and said: I have heard all of the evidence, I will take two weeks to consider my verdict, and after that I will fine the defendant $5 and costs. That appears to be the course mapped out for Mr. Wood. We will look with a great deal of interest for the result, so as to see what punishment Mr. Wood receives for having said that a man who uttered such disloyal and such disgraceful language as that used by this Mr. Potvin, an agent for some railway, ought to be called to account. Apparently by his smiles that language meets with the approval of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

Mr. BOURASSA. Not at all; neither apparently nor otherwise.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman can get up and misstate what Mr. Wood said, but he has not a word of censure for what Potvin said. If a man used such language as that, and if others used such language as they are said to have used, we should see that the liberty which is given to the people of Canada is not turned into license and employed for the perpetration of such foul language within the Dominion.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

It being Six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in Committee.)

Department of Public Works—Increase to T.

F. MacLaughlin, second-class clerk ..... $100

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). This gentleman has been in the Public Works branch for many years. He has had no increase for four years, and has been highly recommended by Mr. Ewart, the architect. I desire to add these words: 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' The Auditor General objects to paying any vote of this kind for over $50.

Public buildings—Ottawa military buildings, new store (revote, $19,000)..... $25,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a new building for military stores which is being erected in rear of the drill shed on Cartier Square. We discussed it a few evenings ago in the supplementaries. At present the Department of Militia and Defence occupies some premises that are to be taken possession of for the purpose of a central railway station. A year ago parliament authorized this work, and it is under construction now. It will be ready within about a year, and will cost $50,000. Nothing so far has been paid, because the first estimate has not yet come in. The contractor is Mr. Bourque, who was the lowest tenderer.

Harbours and rivers, Manitoba—St. Andrew's Rapids, Red River (revote)..... $125,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Last session parliament voted a certain sum, and specifications and plans were prepared and tenders invited. They came in late this spring, and in the meantime the government had decided to incorporate the fair-wages principle in the construction of these works, and accordingly new tenders were invited, and the advertisement is now current. Tenders will not be due until the 20th of this month. The engineer estimates that it will cost half a million dollars to complete this work, and that it will take two or three years. I would not like to give a more exact estimate, because the matter is now before the public for tenders. Tenders for the whole work are now being called for.

Mr. BERGERON. What is to be the advantage of this work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is going to provide navigation over a stretch of unnavigable water between Lake Winnipeg and the city of Winnipeg. It is going to make a large country tributary to the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. SPROULE. What number of feet of navigation do you hope to get after that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About ten feet.

Transportation facilities—

Lévis graving dock—Lengthening dock (revote) .....	$ 85,000
Montreal Harbour (lower division)—Improvements below St. Mary's current (revote) .....	300,000
Port Colborne—Harbour improvements (revote) .....	50,000
	<hr/>
	$435,000

Mr. BERGERON. What about the Lévis graving dock?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to lengthen the dock from 484 to 600 feet. A contract was made with Thomas Powers, of Lévis, on the 23rd of October, 1899. The amount of the contract is $94,976, and the allowance for superintendence and contingencies $5,024, making the total probable cost of lengthening the dock $100,000. The expenditure up to the 30th June was about $15,000, leaving a balance of $85,000 which is asked for here. About $12,000 has been paid to the contractor, and the date of the completion of the contract is the 23rd April, 1901.

Mr. BERGERON. Was the contract given by tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was let after public tender. I have no personal knowledge of it, but the chief engineer informs me that it was awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that nothing has been done?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the contract was let on the 23rd of October, it was very near the close of the season of navigation. The contractor has been paid $12,000 for work done, and has more under way.

Mr. BERGERON. Did we not vote $110,000 last year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Then your estimate is $10,000 less than your estimate of last year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) that it was felt by the merchants and shipping men that that work was absolutely required, and I express my own view, when I say that the government did entirely right in carrying out that work.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the $100,000 finish the whole work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is the whole contract.

Mr. BERGERON. In what state are the Montreal harbour works now? The Connors syndicate were to do certain work there, and carry out certain plans to be approved by the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister been called upon to sign the plans and specifications, and in what condition is that matter at present?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This work my hon. friend knows better than I do. This is in the lower part of the river, the Connors syndicate work being in the harbour of Montreal proper. With regard to the arrangement between the harbour commissioners and the Connors syndicate, the harbour commissioners approved of the plans and specifications and forwarded them to the Department of Public Works, and I submitted them to the Department of Railways and Canals and the Public Works Department, and both departments carefully examined and approved of them. This particular vote is for a dock or pier to be erected in the lower division of the harbour and to be 1,000 feet long by 272 feet wide. It is now up for tender, and the tenders will be due on the 20th of this month.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this upon the recommendation and the plan of the harbour commissioners? As I understand, this is away down below the present harbour.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is beyond the jurisdiction of the harbour commissioners entirely.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, I think it is wasting money. The harbour commissioners of Montreal are business men who ought to know the situation quite as well, if not better than other people. The work they are now doing in the harbour is of a most commendable and useful character; but, to commence the construction of piers practically outside of the city limits is a waste of money. It would cost as much to transport goods from there up to the city as it would cost to bring them half way from Liverpool. If there was such a development of trade as there was not room to accommodate in the harbour, there might be some justification for building piers down there; but, I think this expenditure will be largely money thrown away.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) need not feel at all alarmed about this vote, because there will be no money spent down there. This is a continuation of a bluff that was made by the Minister of Public Works about four years ago to satisfy the eastern part of Montreal, which is represented in this House by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Prefontaine), and two or three of the neighbouring counties. There will not be a cent of this vote spent. It is not an honest vote. It would be a great deal better for the government to come out in a manly way and say: We will not vote money for this purpose. Tenders will be received until the 20th of July for immense works involving an expenditure of $500,000; but the whole thing is a sham. I want to draw the attention of my hon. friend to this fact, that under the Connors syndicate arrangement, certain works are to be done in the eastern part of the harbour of Montreal, which is under the supervision of the harbour commissioners. This is another occasion on which the people have been played with. Mr. Connors, under his contract, is to build elevators in the centre of the harbour of Montreal, within what is called the Windmill Point. He was to build three-million elevators, and these are now reduced to one and a half-million elevators, and he is to build some elevators in the eastern part. Like the hon. member for East Grey, I would be tempted to oppose the expenditure of any such money there if it were not spent in the proper way, if the Connors syndicate arrangement had been carried out honestly, and if there had not been an underhand understanding between the Minister of Public Works and his friends and the Connors syndicate that the eastern part of Montreal was to be entirely sacrificed. The Booth Company have been asking for the last two or three months for a berth in the harbour of Montreal; but they cannot get it because the Minister of Public Works, and some of his friends have shackled the whole harbour of Montreal and put it into the hands of the Connors syndicate, who have done nothing yet, so that the harbour is in the same condition that it was in two years ago. Although the plans have been sanctioned by the harbour commissioners, who are creatures of the Minister of Public Works, and who were threatened with dismissal if they did not sanction everything he wanted, and although the Connors syndicate signed a contract in January, the capacity of the elevators has been reduced 50 per cent. The Booth Company asked the harbour commissioners for a place where they could unload their grain, but they could not get a place, because the whole harbour has been signed over to the Connors syndicate. The merchants said it would cost them nearly as much to transport the goods from that part of Montreal to their stores as it would to bring them from Liverpool; but there is plenty of room there to build elevators and warehouses for the transshipment of grain from the west, and it might as well go there as anywhere else. But, nothing is done, because the whole harbour of Montreal is shackled in the hands of the Connors syndicate. What is the Connors syndicate? It is composed of politicians, who have put the whole harbour of Montreal into the hands of Mr. Connors, and he is doing nothing, while the harbour of Montreal is suffering. This House can vote this $300,000 without any danger, for not a cent of it can be spent; it is impossible to spend it. The Connors syndicate is in the way. I would be glad to have my hon. friend give some explanation about this $300,000, if he can say something new.

Mr. SPROULE. If what my hon. friend says is correct, this item is not needed here at all. It is here either for political purposes or for business purposes. If it is here to be spent, we want to know all the conditions surrounding it, so as to decide whether it will be wise to spend it. I agree with the hon. member that it would be a good place for grain elevators, because it would not matter very much, when you had your grain in barges, whether you went a mile further or not. But when you build storehouses and land your goods there, I am told that it will cost nearly as much to transport them thence to the wholesale houses as from Liverpool to the docks. Besides there is a large dock already right in front of that place. Is this dock being used to-day? It is a long dock and a new one, and I am told that there is seldom a boat landed there except boats coming with unrefined sugar for the sugar refineries. Why is that dock not used? It is either because there is sufficient room in the upper harbour, which is a more convenient place for vessels, and they do not need it, or it is so far out of the road that the trade will not use it. If it is not intended to build this dock, the estimate should not be voted.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to know whether what is said about the Conners syndicate is correct or not, for if so it is quite impossible for the Department of Public Works to expect us to vote this amount. As I understand it, the Conners syndicate submitted its scheme to the harbour commission of Montreal and that commission agreed to the application, and so did the Department of Public Works.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that my hon. friend from Beauharnois is at all correct when he says that this item is put in for show.

Mr. BERGERON. It has been voted for two or three years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say anything about the past, but I am proceeding in good faith when asking for this vote, and when tenders are received, the lowest will be accepted, if it is a proper tender. I made a little error in saying that the lower part of the harbour was not under the jurisdiction of the harbour commissioners. What I meant to say was that this particular work was not under their jurisdiction. Montreal is a very growing city, and we look to its becoming much more important, and this pier will serve a useful purpose. The Conners syndicate have nothing to do with this pier.

Mr. BERGERON. I quite appreciate the position in which my hon. friend finds himself. He cannot be expected to be acquainted with all these matters, but he can find out from his officers whether this is a part of the $500,000 voted last year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is.

Mr. BERGERON. This was voted last year for the purpose of building storehouses and docks down in the eastern part of the harbour of Montreal, principally elevators, warehouses and a dock if possible.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. BERGERON. That was the explanation given last year, and nothing was done. I know the ground well, and I know that the hon. gentleman cannot do anything with this $300,000 now unless the Conners syndicate allows him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Conners syndicate has no possible control over this work or the policy of the government with respect to it. This money is part of the cost of the construction of a pier, of which I will give the hon. gentleman a description, and will be so applied or not at all.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to know whether this vote has been submitted to the harbour commission and received its sanction and approval.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am informed that the harbour commission are in entire accord with this vote. This will be a high level pier, with an approach 1,000 feet long, and 272 feet wide, and the foundation will be in thirty feet of water. These are the substantial details of the proposed work. The location is to be at the boundary line between Montreal and Maisonneuve, and between the two lower level piers built by the Montreal Harbour Commission.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) signed the arrangement as Minister of Public Works between the harbour commissioners and the Conners syndicate?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I mentioned that the harbour commissioners sent to the department for approval of the plans and specifications of the improvements to be made by the Conners syndicate under their agreement. These were approved by the officers of the department and by the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals, and also by the two ministers. The matter is out of our hands. We simply acceded to the request of the harbour commissioners and gave authority for what they had agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not wish to repeat what has been said in former sessions. But, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has said, this is out of our hands. That is the kind of thing I have protested against as long as twenty years ago. Anything in the hands of the harbour commissioners, we cannot control, and yet it is public money that is being spent. The Minister of Public Works twenty years ago, used to say, when complaints were made: I cannot do anything; it is in the hands of the harbour commissioners. I say that every cent of public money that we vote here should be under our direction. I do not blame my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock), but I am sorry he has authorized this. I would like to have asked him, before putting his signature as Minister of Public Works approving that arrangement, to insert a condition that the Conners syndicate shall be called upon to carry out work in the eastern as well as in the western part of the harbour. Under the agreement the Conners syndicate must build elevators and other structures in the western and eastern parts of the harbour. But now that this is signed, they will make one or two elevators in the western part of the harbour and will do no work at all in the eastern part. The consequence will be congestion in the western part of the harbour, while, in the eastern part they will be doing nothing. Worse than that, when Mr. Booth, of the Canada Atlantic, or anybody else wants to secure a place in the harbour, he will be told that it cannot be done, because the Conners syndicade hold it. The Conners syndicate hold the whole thing by their contract with the harbour commissioners, but they will not use the eastern part. To build a wharf where the hon. gentleman proposes to build it, under present circumstances, is like building it in the middle of Lake Superior. But all these great wharfs should be used. Mr. Booth brought down last year, I believe, about sixteen million bushels of grain. This grain comes down in barges; it might easily be transferred to vessels at the eastern part of the harbour. There might as well be from seven to ten steamships loading there, not interfering at all with the other trade of Montreal. I am sorry that the Department of Public Works is not au courant with these things. I do not blame the officials, but I have no word strong enough to blame the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), who is at the bottom of the whole thing, and who has humbugged the whole eastern part of Montreal for political purposes, and probably to revenge himself on some of his political friends. But the city of Montreal suffers for it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would again like to ask the minister whether what he is proposing has the sanction of the harbour commissioners of Montreal. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) has expressed disapproval of some things. I am not as familiar with the question as he is; but I have no doubt that the harbour commissioners of Montreal have gone into this whole matter and are agreed upon it; and if the department is working in accordance with the views of the harbour commission, I do not see how we can oppose this vote, and I do not consider that it will be worth while discussing this point any longer. The harbour commission ought to take their responsibility as administrators of the money which is loaned by the government for the improvement of the harbour.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) is quite right in putting the question. The harbour commissioners have given their approval of this proposition. That is on record in the department.

Mr. BRITTON. I do not understand what the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has been saying in reference to tying up matters in Montreal harbour. I have understood that all the Conners syndicate got was a concession of about 1,800 feet, whereas everybody who knows Montreal harbour, knows that it has a very large frontage, so that arrangements can be made with Mr. Booth, or with anybody else hereafter for the erection of warehouses and elevators. I do not understand that what the Conners have got, may be called in any sense a monopoly, they have only got a concession. It may be a very valuable concession, I would think, perhaps, it is. But they have come under very heavy liabilities in regard to it, and if they carry out their part of the contract, it will certainly be for the benefit of Montreal harbour. The Montreal harbour commissioners surely know their business, and what is best for the interests of the city. I do not think Montreal is to-day in the hands of that syndicate to their prejudice. Now, I want to ask a question in regard to the other item, the $50,000 for dredging Port Colborne harbour. I saw advertised in the papers the other day a large amount of dredging work for the Port Colborne entrance of the Welland Canal, and I believe the contracts have been made. I want to ask whether the line is well defined between the work that is to be done under the supervision of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and that which is to be done under the Minister of Public Works; in other words, I want to know where this Port Colborne harbour ends and the entrance to the Welland Canal begins?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would explain to my hon. friend that two departments are interested in the harbour improvements of Port Colborne, the Railway Department as having to do with the canal system, and the Public Works Department, as having to do with the construction of public works. The Railway Department is extending the piers at the entrance of the canal, some 600 feet out into the lake; then there is a space of perhaps half a mile between the southern terminus of these two piers and the shoal, where this breakwater is to be constructed. The breakwater is to be constructed, commencing at a point on this shoal, and extending in a westerly and northerly direction towards a point known as Sugar Loaf Point. If that pier is completed unbroken, it will be about three-quarters of a mile in length. But it is not expected it will be necessary to construct the whole of it. A small portion will be constructed opposite the mouth of the entrance to the canal, by the Public Works Department. As to the separation of the work between the two departments, the statutes define the jurisdiction of the various departments and what portion of the public work is to be regarded as an incident to the main work itself. The Railway Department will keep within its own jurisdiction.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me the hon. member for Beauharnois has made certain allegations here which, if correct, would offer a serious objection to our voting this money. He says that the Conners syndicate have practical control of the lower harbour, and of the upper harbour as well, in so far as they have a right to build elevators and boats, that they are holding that control over the lower harbour, while they are not expending any money there for the purpose of carrying out their contract; that they are expending money at the Wind-mill Basin, and building an elevator there; and that they are doing that to the detriment of other corporations, notably the Canada Atlantic Railway, which might go down and build an elevator if room was available at the lower harbour, but it is not, on account of the contract made with the Connors syndicate. I think this House ought to know whether that is the fact or not. If it is a fact, it is a serious objection to voting this money; if it is not a fact, we ought to know it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand that the Connors syndicate have made an arrangement with the harbour commissioners whereby the syndicate agreed to erect certain public works at a point, at least two miles westerly of the place where this pier is to be built. The Connors syndicate's jurisdiction covers about 1,800 feet out of eight or nine miles of harbour frontage in Montreal. Their jurisdiction does not come within 10,000 feet of where this particular pier is, and they have no more to do with the location of this pier than the hon. gentleman or myself.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I assume the minister has looked over the contract and has grounds for what he says, because the contention is made just as strongly on the other side. Now, I understand the minister to say that whatever rights the Connors syndicate had in the lower harbour—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They have none.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say a moment ago that they had a right to build elevators down there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, permit me to explain. I rely for my information on the officers of the department who are familiar with the rights of the parties, for myself, I have not looked into the documents. The departmental officers inform me that the Connors syndicate had a right to construct certain elevators, and are under obligations to construct certain elevators and other works at a point in the western end of Montreal harbour, for a distance of about 1,800 feet, and that the easterly limit of their concession is not within 10,000 feet of where the proposed pier is to be built.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a contract between the harbour commissioners and the Connors syndicate which gives the Connors syndicate the right to build their elevators, as I understood the hon. gentleman, up in the Wind-mill Basin. The hon. member for Beauharnois says that they have also the right to build elevators at the lower or eastern end of the harbour. Do I understand from the hon. minister that they have?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Connors syndicate have an option to build an elevator in the lower division, but that does not give them any monopoly over the whole district there. To that extent I qualify my previous observations as to whatever area will be involved in the building of that elevator.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister takes back at least part of his contention, and it may be that when we get further information he will take back a little more. To that extent the hon. member for Beauharnois is correct in saying that they have the right to build an elevator in the eastern harbour. The next question would be this: Have the harbour commissioners bound themselves not to allow any others to have room for elevators where they are building these piers until the Connors syndicate avail themselves of the right they have to build their elevator?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, they have no location assigned to them yet, and they have no right to the ground except the place where this pier is to be erected.

Mr. SPROULE. So far that is all right. I am informed that they have the right to the use of 1,200 to 2,000 feet for themselves whether that is the place where this pier is to be erected or not. The next question: Is the allegation correct that the hon. member for Beauharnois made that Mr. Booth could not get ground down there to build upon because of the control over this ground by the Connors syndicate? If that be the case there must be something covering that point in the contract which binds the harbour commissioners to refuse this right to others.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am unable to say whether the commissioners may or may not have refused Mr. Booth. The commissioners are in possession of the harbour in so far as they may concede rights to other people.

Mr. SPROULE. I assume that they would not refuse these rights to other people unless there was something in the contract that made it impossible for them to give another concession.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is nothing to show that they refused Mr. Booth. Perhaps Mr. Booth asked for something that they were unable to grant. I think that the harbour commissioners are most anxious to bring business to their harbour and that they would grant any reasonable request that Mr. Booth might make.

Mr. SPROULE. I believe that the harbour commissioners, being intelligent men, are able to judge for themselves what is right if they are left untrammelled, but the control exercised over them by the Minister of Public Works was such that they were practically forced into adopting what in their judgment was not the best thing to be done in the harbour; or, in other words, the minister would not allow the money to be expended where it was necessary it should be expended for making it a good harbour.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The harbour commissioners are perfectly free to make any arrangements with Mr. Booth if they can make terms. There has nothing taken place to deprive the harbour commissioners of the right to grant to him any concession. It depends upon the two parties being able to make an arrangement.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it has been exactly what I said it was; the baneful influence that the hon. Minister of Public Works exercised over the harbour commissioners has trammelled them to such an extent that they cannot exercise their free and unbiassed judgment as to what ought to be done there. I am told that that is really the situation and that it is the condition on which this money is voted. Before the harbour commissioners can spend one cent of this money they have to work in harmony with the Minister of Public Works. I want to make some inquiry about the Port Colborne harbour. Has there been anything done in regard to the Port Colborne harbour since last year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, specifications are just about completed. Nothing has been spent yet. It will take the best part of a month to get the specifications completed. The engineers have been at it for a considerable time.

Mr. SPROULE. My remembrance is that last year the hon. minister could not tell us very definitely what the estimated cost of the work would be. Could he give us any closer estimate of the cost of the work now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I stated last year that it would cost about $150,000 to build about 1,700 feet of the breakwater.

Mr. SPROULE. To what depth of water?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is variable. There is a bit of ridge and the breakwater will be built upon this ridge. The ridge is perhaps 5,000 feet from the shore. It will give a splendid harbour when it is made available in other respects.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that there will have to be some dredging done.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The material dredged will be utilized as filling for the pier at the same time. The two works will go on together.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the estimate is that this pier will cost $150,000 or $170,000. In addition to that, of course, the dredging will have to come in. Am I correct in that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The dredging will be rock work and the dredged material will be utilized for rip-rapping, so that what is taken out by the dredge would be utilized for filling in the pier at the same time.

Mr. SPROULE. I know, but is the $150,000 or the $175,000 simply to be used for building the pier?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are two things going on at the same time, the making of the harbour and also the building of the pier with the same expenditure. The contractor will be required to get his filling, or rip-rapping right in the harbour. He will be deepening the harbour and he will there get his rip-rapping.

Mr. SPROULE. And the deepening of the harbour and the building of the pier will only cost $150,000?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is for about 1,700 feet, which may meet all the requirements. You cannot tell until the breakwater is constructed whether it will be long enough to meet the requirements, but if commerce and shipping warrant it may be advisable to extend the pier. It may be, if a great deal of shipping comes there, that it will be necessary to have a longer pier.

Mr. SPROULE. What depth of water will there be for this 2,000 feet?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About twenty-two feet.

Mr. SPROULE. In all of the harbour?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not in all of the harbour.

Mr. SPROULE. As a result of this expenditure and without any more?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There will be 100 acres in that harbour. When you get in towards the shore on the west side it shoals up to nothing. The hon. gentleman asks me what depth of water there will be to the north of the breakwater. It is not of uniform depth at all.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister either is playing with words or he does not desire to give the information. What I say is that there must be a certain portion of that harbour which the boats will use and which will require to be of a certain depth. I want to know will this expenditure of $150,000 give a sufficient depth of water for the needs of navigation, without a large additional expenditure. I am told that it will cost $300,000 or $400,000 to make the improvements which the Minister of Public Works has mapped out. If $150,000 or $175,000 will be sufficient, I do not think any one would object, but if it is going to cost half a million, then I think the outlay is of very doubtful wisdom. When this $150,000 is expended, will the vessels coming there, be able to use the harbour?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the $150,000 is spent in the construction of a breakwater and taking up whatever riprap there is there, and doing the work that is required, there will be a navigable channel of at least twenty feet from Lake Erie to the entrance of the canal. When you come to the entrance of the canal the Department of Railways and Canals provides for the navigation after that.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister will ask for tenders for the work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. It will be let by contract.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will.

Halifax—New public building ..... $25,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) has asked me to answer the question. Under a vote of last session a site was bought which will enable the department to proceed towards the erection of a building. It will be a building adapted to the business of the city of Halifax. The business of the Dominion government is at present carried on in a building which was there before confederation, but as it is not large enough they have been obliged to rent premises in various parts of the city. The old market building is purchased as a site. It may be necessary to take down the old building, but the material would be used, I suppose, to advantage in the new structure. When the building is erected all the Dominion offices will be accommodated in it.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the plans, and what is the proposed cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The plans have not yet been completed, but judging from what buildings of that character in a similar city cost, the cost would be from $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not the more business method to perfect the plans before you take a vote, so that we might have some idea as to the cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is sometimes impossible to wait until you have your plans completed. We all know that a building such as this put up in the capital city will cost a large sum; probably as much as a similar building in the city of St. John. To wait until we have the plans and specifications ready would involve delay which I do not think the community would be satisfied with.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you expect to do with this vote of $25,000 on a building which the Minister of Finance says will cost $150,000 or $200,000?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When this vote is passed the officers will prepare the necessary plans and specifications and tenders will be called for. It is not very likely that much can be done in the way of expenditure this fall, because the building season will have terminated. But the contractors will probably be able to get to work in the spring.

Mr. FOSTER. As nothing can be done before parliament meets again, would it not be preferable that the House should know the plans and the proposed cost before the contract is entered into? You simply put in a little sum of money with which you can do almost nothing on a building that is expected to cost $200,000 or more; in fact there is no limit.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. While there is no limit in a sense, it would be limited by the ordinary requirements of a Dominion building in such a city. It is certainly desirable that some idea should be given to the House as to the probable cost, and the officials of the department say that from the inquiries they have made, the building would cost about $150,000, and that would occupy two years in construction.

Mr. FOSTER. The department has no plans and no figures as to the cost of material or labour, or anything else, and under such circumstances, you might as well ask the chairman of the committee to give you an estimate as the officers of the department. If we vote this, we may find ourselves bound later on by a plan and contract entered into for an expenditure of $200,000. I point out that this is a very bad method of proceeding with such work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Even if it did cost $200,000, it would not be out of proportion to the cost to public buildings elsewhere. But the architect of the department who has examined the ground and made inquiries, is of the opinion that $150,000 would put up the structure. I understand that the custom-house at St. John cost $200,000, and I do not think that would be an extravagant sum to spend on a like building in the city of Halifax.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not object to the cost, if you have a cost which is based on an intelligent working out of the scheme. I have no objection to your taking the vote for $25,000 if you say you will not let a contract until we meet here again. I have no objection to your giving the people of Halifax a taste to indicate that you propose to go on with the work; but I do not think you should enter into a contract until you get a vote in proportion to the cost of the building which you intend to erect, and after knowing what you are going to build.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a certain hot place said to be paved with good intentions, and I am afraid the good people of Halifax would not be satisfied with our good intentions. They want to see the work go on; and subject to the ordinary limitations as to the cost of public buildings elsewhere, I think the department should be willing that the work should be begun.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not object to the erection of a building in Halifax, but I am not prepared to express an opinion as to the amount of money that should be voted, for the simple reason that I do not know what is expected to be the cost of the building. I think the hon. minister is wrong in coming down with this vote without having a plan. He simply says: In St. John you put up a building which cost $200,000, and somewhere else you put up a building for the same purposes for which this building is required, and so we are asking this amount of money. But the government, in asking parliament to vote money for a public building, should be prepared to say exactly what they want, as a result of an examination and estimate by the architect; and upon that statement laid before parliament by the Minister of Public Works, we would be quite prepared to consider the amount to be voted. But we do not know whether the minister wants $100,000 or $250,000. He only says: I notice a building somewhere else which seems to me to be suitable for the purposes for which we require a building in Halifax, and I think it will cost $150,000. That is not the way to appeal to the representatives of the people in parliament. I think the minister should be prepared to lay before parliament a plan made by the architect or the engineer of his department, which will indicate what the cost of the building will be.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The error of my hon. friend's statement is in assuming that I said that in my opinion the building would cost $150,000. That is not my opinion; it is the opinion of the chief architect of the Public Works Department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is only an opinion, and it is not worth any more from the architect or the engineer than from the hon. gentleman, unless it is based upon a plan laid before the minister, and which the minister could lay before parliament.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What my hon. friend contends for is impossible—that no vote for a public work could be taken until there was a plan prepared in all its details. The hon. gentleman knows that that could not be done. As to the usefulness of the work, I do not think there can be any debate. My own department, and some of the offices of the Customs Department and the Inland Revenue Department are in hired buildings in different parts of the city. The hon. gentleman says that the architect should make an examination. He has made an examination, he was sent to examine the site, and he has given his opinion that the building can probably be erected for $150,000. But I will say this, that if the Public Works Department, after inviting tenders, finds that the cost will exceed $200,000, I for my part would consider that was an extreme sum, and I would not ask them to go on without coming back to parliament and having the matter further considered. But we know that a customs house for a city with a population of 40,000 or 50,000 cannot cost an enormous sum. I should say that $200,000 was the outside figure.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman absolutely agrees with me, for he does not know any more than I do as to what the new building is likely to cost. I am not objecting to the vote, but simply desire more information.

Liverpool public building—To complete... $2,150

Mr. FOSTER. What will this cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $20,000, including fittings and the site and everything.

Mr. KAULBACH. I certainly must acknowledge my disappointment in not finding an item in the supplementary estimates for a public building at Bridge-water in my county. After the many and earnest appeals made by me every session of parliament since the sad calamity that befell that picturesque town by fire, when the very centre and business part of it was swept away, I certainly expected this government would have come to its rescue and placed an amount in the estimates, even at this late period this session, sufficient to have started a suitable building. This was due to the citizens of that place at the first opportunity appearing after the sad calamity occurred, and the government's failure to come to their rescue was not for the want of a reminder, as I have brought the subject to the notice of the government at the commencing of each session since the sad event occurred. St. John, N.B., and Ottawa each were assisted by a tangible money grant, and the city of Hull was not only assisted with a money grant, but arrangements were made for a new public building as well. Now, I have no hesitation in saying that none of these places were more deserving of aid, considering the loss pro rata with the population, than was Bridgewater, possessed of no ordinary degree of enterprise, full of loyalty to the Crown, and unquestionably loyal to hon. gentlemen opposite. But, notwithstanding all this, hon. gentlemen opposite have not only turned a deaf ear to all approaches and appeals for a grant for a public building, suitable for a post office, customs, savings bank, shipping office, &c., but never have offered, so far as I am aware, even an expression of sympathy considering the devastation that befel them by said fire. This is certainly not only a sad state of affairs, but treatment such as the people of Bridgewater least expected and are least deserving of. However, I suppose I must consider this now as the third and last time of asking, and rest my soul in patience till a better opportunity offers, when my appeal in this particular will have better recognition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman should have exercised some of his zeal on behalf of Bridgewater when he was in a position to exert some influence. However that may be, Bridgewater is a very thriving place, and, last but not least, a very gritty place, and I am quite sure the people there have intelligence and judgment enough to be patient, hopeful that in due season their patience will be rewarded.

St. John, N.B.—Immigrant building ..... $5,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for the construction of an immigrant shed, as there is none there for the convenience of immigrants.

Mr. McALISTER. There was $19,000 voted last year for repairs to the Dalhousie post office. Was that contract given by tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My deputy informs me that Mr. Lamarche, of Montreal, made an offer to perform that work at a certain price, which was referred to the architect, and he reported the offer a very reasonable one, and a contract was entered into.

Mr. McALISTER. What was the amount spent?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not that information at hand, but I will get it for the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Public Works—Chargeable to income—Public buildings, Quebec—Buckingham public building (revote, $3,000) ..... $8,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This should read 'revote $5,000.'

Mr. KAULBACH.

Mr. FOSTER. What will be the cost of this building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Between $8,000 and $10,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What does 'public building' mean?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is for a building in Buckingham to be used as a post office.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Then it should be called a post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is customary, I believe, to describe these as public buildings. They are available for the purposes of any department. I do not think there is any customs or excise officer there, but should these officers be appointed, the building could be available for carrying out the work they have to do.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But if the building were required for only one department, it would naturally cost less money than one to be used by three or four departments.

Victoriaville—Public building (revote, $3,000) ..... $8,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is Victoriaville?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In Arthabaska.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the cost of the building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $13,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the post office revenue?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Postal revenue, $1,989.91; customs-house duties, $7,482.59; money orders issued, $3,222; money orders paid, $7,252.

Chicoutimi—Public building ..... $5,300

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to make provision for the purchase of a site to erect a public building at Chicoutimi, and on account of the building. The building is to be used for post office purposes, &c. The postal revenue last year was $1,876; customs duties, $1,098; money orders issued, $8,793; money orders paid, $5,476. Chicoutimi is the chief place in the county of Chicoutimi, and has a population between 2,000 and 3,000 in a parish of 5,000. It is the terminus of the Lake St. John Railway.

Drummondville—Public building ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What are the statistics of this place?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Population, 1,955; postal revenue, $1,045.37; money orders issued, $7,362.61; money orders paid, $4,163.31. Drummondville is an incorporated town in Drummond County, has two railway stations, lumber mills, shingle mills, and foundries, and has a branch of the Banque Jacques Cartier. It is an old established town.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the building to cost ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $8,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the site been purchased ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the $8,000 include the site ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy thinks that $8,000 will cover the cost of site and building.

Quebec cartridge factory—Rolling mill.... $11,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is called for by the Department of Militia and Defence, and the hon. minister (Mr. Borden), will be able to explain the object.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Hitherto we have had to import the shells in which our cartridges are put up. It was found very inconvenient to do that, and it is not wise to rely upon getting them from outside. By having this rolling-mill, we shall be able to manufacture the whole cartridge in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Where have you been getting them ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In England.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they not reputable makers there ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, but we think it is in the interest of the country and of our safety, in the case of any trouble, to be in a position to manufacture the whole cartridge here.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The government has been receiving the metal for these shells from Woolwich—at least that is where it came from in my time. I think we might have waited for some time to come, rather than to put up this rolling-mill for the purpose of rolling this metal. Of course, the hon. gentleman has been over the cartridge factories, and he knows how these metal sheets are sent over from the old country. They come out in an absolutely perfect condition, and at a much lower cost than is represented by the initial amount which will be required to establish this rolling mill. It seems to me this is an expenditure that we might leave in abeyance.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

We have had a good deal of difficulty. The shells have by no means given satisfaction. The gentleman in charge of the cartridge factory is, as my hon. friend knows, a very able man. Major Gaudet has very strongly urged that this should be done, and after looking into the matter carefully I am entirely in accord with his views. I believe it is a sound expenditure, and there is no reason in the world why we should not manufacture cartridges in Canada, and the sooner we begin the better.

Hochelaga—Post office ..... $10,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Hochelaga is a suburb of the city of Montreal, and has a fast growing population of about 10,000. The building is estimated to cost about $20,000. The site has not been bought yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the plans been prepared ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Just an election vote.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it has been asked for by the people of Hochelaga. They are pressing for it, they have presented a petition asking for the erection of a public building.

Granby—Public building ..... $5,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is estimated this building will cost between $8,000 and $10,000. The population of Granby is 2,795, according to the municipal census of 1898. The postal revenue is $3,712; customs duties, $10,509; money orders issued, $21,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the estimated sum include the site ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, that is approximate, the site has not been selected yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the plans of the building been prepared ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Another election vote.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I want to enter my protest against these votes. The Minister of Public Works comes down and asks parliament to vote money for buildings, before a site has been selected, just on the eve of a general election. He has not a single plan upon which he can form his opinion as to what the building is going to cost. I have never known since I have been in parliament estimates brought down as these are without stating how much money would be required to purchase a site, or without the architect, at least, having expressed an opinion what the building was going to cost.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I remember dozens of instances in which votes like this were brought down in the last days of the session when the Conservatives were in power, and the hon. gentleman was a member of the government.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Point out one.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got them under my hand, but they can be pointed out. The hon. gentleman says that a vote of this kind ought not to be asked for until a site has been chosen, and until plans have been drawn. The site cannot be purchased until after the department is sure it is going to have the money to pay for it. The site will, of course, be in a central position in the town of Granby. I am not prepared to discuss all the other items for public buildings, but I can safely say that there is no place where a public building is more justified than it is in the town of Granby. Granby is a growing manufacturing town, and the population has increased enormously in the last few years. There are several well established factories which in former years were not as prosperous as they are to-day, factories which have been increasing their output, and increasing their number of hands during the last three or four years, to such an extent that the public buildings which are now leased for public purposes are utterly inadequate. Granby is to-day paying into the public treasury over $150,000 a year by its several offices, and I think this amount justifies a vote for a public building.

Mr. FOSTER. I only yield to this vote as having to yield to force majeure. We have these estimates of $7,250,000 thrown upon us on the 161st day of the session, and we are absolutely physically, or in any other way unable to sit here and discuss these 800 items before us as they ought to be discussed. We made our protest last night in a general resolution, and we throw the responsibility on the government for all these votes, and they have got to take the responsibility. But I may be allowed to say here that in no preceding years, even up to the last three years of the present administration, have we had the spectacle of all these votes brought down at this inconvenient season, and in this inconvenient way. What is the use of having your officers to estimate the cost of public buildings and to draw up plans therefor? All you have to do is to get up and say: We propose to put up a public building in a certain place, we have no site, no plans, we do not know what it is going to cost at all, but we guess it will cost so and so. Now, where has the theory gone about putting up public buildings in villages? Here is one village of a thousand people, Drummondville; here are Buckingham, Victoriaville, Chicoutimi and Granby—they are all what you may call little towns. Time was when the Liberal party, headed by Mr. Mills in this House, followed by the whole rank and file of the party, declared that it was simply outrageous to put up these public buildings in places with a population of 2,000, 3,000 or 4,000 people. That was what they believed in then, passed by a solemn resolution and canvassed before the people. To-day they come in and they propose to place public buildings in all the little villages of the country and to incur large capital expenditures. We might stand here and talk to the day of judgment; we are not strong enough to prevent the vote, it will go through and they must be responsible for it. These are undigested estimates. The hon. acting Minister of Public Works has no plan put before him, he has no site, he does not know how much the land will cost, he has not a single reasoned calculation in reference to the matter, and this is the class of votes that these hon. gentlemen are putting through.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the way you used to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. The only answer we can get is the utterly imbecile answer: You're another; and even that is not true.

Mr. GIBSON. It is true.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose it were true, was not this government pledged to a better course? In the preceding estimates we had three or four of the same class of public buildings in other provinces. Here the government are dotting large capital expenditures in little villages all over the country. Formerly, it was the cardinal policy of hon. gentlemen opposite that this was not a proper kind of expenditure. To-day it is the expenditure upon which they rely and to which they give the whole force of their influence and power.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. gentleman includes all the votes just made in his general observations. I did not say anything on the vote for the immigration building at St. John.

Mr. FOSTER. I am speaking of these public buildings.

Mr. ELLIS. In regard to the site for this building it is quite understood that the site will be supplied by the city.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). How about Marysville? Was that voted by the hon. gentleman?

Mr. FOSTER. Marysville is a revote and I have not challenged revotes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is on the same principle.

Mr. FOSTER. Everybody knows that the Marysville building vote was voted eight or ten years ago. There was a vote on this basis, that we gave so much and Mr. Gibson was to furnish the site for the building, and build the post office with this small sum. There never was a proposition brought before the House that was more opportune or more economical. That has been kept in the estimates. I affirmed a year ago what was said in its justification. I know it is a revote. We have all we can do to challenge some of the worst of the new votes without taking up the revotes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You cannot have a site until you get the vote first. Surely you must have the vote before you can know about the style of the building that will be required.

Brockville—Drill hall (revote) ..... $9,000

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Chairman, I would like again to draw the attention of the hon. acting Minister of Public Works, and of the government to the condition of the Toronto drill shed, if I may be allowed to say a word about it under this item. Some twelve years ago the city of Toronto expended $14,000 in procuring a site which was presented to the government, and upon which a drill hall was to be erected. Plans of the hall were prepared. These plans showed accommodation for cavalry and artillery. The plans have not been executed in their entirety, and again and again representations have been made by the military authorities of the city of Toronto asking that the government shall fulfil its part of the contract by completing the building. The city of Toronto supplied the site at a cost of $14,000 for the purpose of this drill shed on the understanding that it should be built in accordance with a certain plan. I appeal to the hon. acting Minister of Public Works, after this matter has been brought before the Department of Public Works and before the Department of Militia and Defence time and time again, that it is only fair that the government should fulfil its part of the contract and complete the building for which a free site was given. I do not see any vote in these estimates to complete this work. I have appealed to them a dozen times in this matter, and I do not propose to make any further protest except to draw the attention of the committee to what I regard as a breach of contract.

Mr. WOOD. Why did you not make your friends do it?

Mr. CLARKE. Why do you not get up so that you can be heard and not sit mumbling in that way?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Mr. Chairman, it is quite true that the members for Toronto and the mayor of Toronto, representatives of the militia and others have called to my attention the fact alleged by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) that an understanding existed at the time of the construction of the drill hall at Toronto that certain accommodation should be afforded. Unfortunately, this is not a matter of record in the department. I am not going to say that I doubt the allegation made, but unfortunately there was neglect somewhere. At the time the understanding was arrived at to which the hon. gentleman refers there was no record made of it, and there are no papers, so far as I can find, which indicate that such an agreement existed between the government and the city of Toronto. However, altogether apart from that, there is every desire on the part of the Militia Department and the government, as fast as possible, to afford all the accommodation required. I think the hon. gentleman will find that the infantry in Toronto has increased perhaps more than was contemplated at the time of the construction of the drill hall, and that certain space, which would have been available for the artillery, at any rate, is not so available because it was found necessary to give greater accommodation to the infantry. As a matter of fact, the militia of Toronto is fairly well accommodated now. As Minister of Militia I would like very much to see an addition made, and I am in hopes that in the near future it will be made. It is unfortunately true that the friends of my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) did not, at the time they were constructing the building, and when he says the contract was deliberately made between this government and the city of Toronto, carry out their agreement. That was the time to have done it, and that was the time it would have been much more cheaply and more easily done than now. I think it is rather hard to hold us accountable for the failure on the part of my hon. friend's political friends to carry out the solemn agreement which he says they entered into.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman is blowing hot and cold in this matter. He says that there is no record in the department that any agreement was made and then he finds fault because that agreement was not carried out by his predecessors in office. The hon. gentleman knows that since he has occupied the position of Minister of Militia, all branches of the service have made representations to him over and over again asking that this agreement be carried out and that the building be completed. The hon. gentleman knows that the volunteer force has been largely increased in Toronto as a part of the policy of the government, and that they have taken the place unfortunately of the artillery and cavalry, and it is all the more incumbent upon the government to supply additional space for the cavalry as the Cavalry School was established in Toronto since the building was erected. Up to that time the cavalry had their accoutrements and arms stored in the old government building. The necessity for giving additional accommodation in the drill shed has become more apparent since that time. There is space enough, as sufficient area of land was acquired upon which to complete the shed as it was originally intended. The hon. minister has never before presented the argument that there was no agreement or understanding with his predecessors to have the shed completed. The hon. gentleman said that he would try to get a sum placed in the estimates as soon as possible, but that the government could not place a sum in the estimates last year or the year before.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. A large delegation waited upon me some time ago, headed by the mayor of Toronto, and the matter was discussed, and I pointed this out to them.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister admits the necessity for the addition to the building. It is not an unreasonable request to make, that when the city was induced to purchase a site large enough, at such enormous cost, to have this building completed, that it should be completed without delay. We are not taking exception to these items for drill sheds, and so on, throughout the country, but in a military centre like Toronto, having such a magnificent volunteer force, the government should no longer hesitate to provide the necessary facilities.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). There was $2,000 voted last year for an armoury in the town of Cornwall. A deputation was here to see the minister not long ago, and they informed me that the probability was that there would be money in the estimates this year to do that work, and probably to extend it by building a drill hall. What is the present condition of that matter? What was done in connection with the expenditure of the $2,000 voted last year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a vote in the estimates for $35,000 for the construction of armouries, and when that vote is reached I will give the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) the information.

Deseronto—Public building ..... $5,000

Mr. WILSON. What will this building cost, and has a site been secured?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Deseronto is a very important and growing town.

Mr. CLANCY. That is the old story.

Mr. WILSON. It is true about Deseronto.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is a large manufacturing town, and its exports from 1888 have ranged from $404,000 to $641,000 a year; while the imports have ranged from $64,000 to $91,000 a year. The duties collected have ranged from $10,000 in 1888, to as high as $82,000 in a year. The postal revenue is $5,226, and the population 4,000.

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. FOSTER. Deseronto is a nice little town. What will the building cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the vicinity of $20,000.

Mr. WILSON. Is that all?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Have you got the site?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That will be purchased as a first step.

Mr. J. M. HURLEY (East Hastings). The site is given by the town of Deseronto. This is really a revote, but it was left out for a year or two. The Minister of Public Works said: Why won't you give the site, and I told the town this, and they made a present of the site to the government. It is a lot in the centre of the town.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. That will do.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister knew nothing about it, he said he wanted the money to buy a site.

Mr. WILSON. Deseronto is my next town, and in comparison with the money we have been voting for buildings in other towns of not so much importance, it is entitled to a better building than a $20,000 one. Deseronto is one of the most enterprising towns in the country, and it has one of the best firms in Canada, namely, the Rathbuns.

Mr. GIBSON. Make it $40,000.

Sarnia—Public building (revote, $10,000).. $15,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The site for this is purchased at a cost of about $8,000, but the building has not been begun yet.

Picton—Public building ..... $13,000

Mr. WILSON. Where is this building to be located, and what will it cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been a site purchased.

Mr. WILSON. There are two sites. There was first a site down near the wharf, in a very prominent part of the town, and there was some dispute about that, and I understand there was a lot bought in the middle of the town.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The site first purchased was exchanged for the site now to be used, which I believe has a frame building upon it.

Mr. WILSON. What will the building cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $13,000, I think.

Mr. PETTET. The late government purchase a site for $4,000, and when they were defeated they had $13,000 in the estimates for a public building at Picton.

There was some dissatisfaction with the first site, and this lot was purchased afterwards in the centre of the town.

Toronto post office—Improvements, including automobile cars (revote)..... $10,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The object of that vote is to purchase automobile cars, and to make structural changes in the post office for their accommodation. Tenders are being invited now for five cars.

Mr. FOSTER. How many have you?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We own none; we are merely experimenting.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the estimated cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will depend on the design. My own impression is that we shall select cars which have steam engines in them, with gasoline for fuel. The storage battery is hardly sufficiently advanced yet, I think, to be made generally available on our Canadian roads. When we receive the tenders a selection will be made; but I do not consider that the designs which we shall now select will be at all final, though they will be the best up to date.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What will be the approximate cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The representative of the company in Hamilton which makes the automobile with a steam engine, using gasoline for fuel, was here the other day, and my recollection is that he told me that the cost of the size we require would be between $1,000 and $1,100. We shall also endeavour to have smaller ones for rapid delivery. The larger ones will be for the collection of mail matter.

Mr. FOSTER. What will the automobiles do—simply transfer mails to and from the post office, or gather mails from the boxes?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will in time displace the system of horses altogether. They will be used for transferring bulky mail matter from the station to the post office, and vice versa, and will also be used for transferring the mails collected from the letter boxes. Considerable quantities are gathered together at central stations, and wagons go to these central stations and gather the mails and bring them to the post office.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any calculation been made as to the relative cost of the new method compared with the old?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Bennett, who is acting inspector for cities, thinks it will not cost as much as the present system, and it will be infinitely more rapid. In addition to the five which we want, we may get some smaller ones for rapid delivery.

Mr. FOSTER. You are making the experiment in Toronto before introducing them anywhere else.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hope to try it in Montreal before the end of the season.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But before going to greater expense, you will try them in Toronto, and if the experiment is satisfactory there, they may be applied to other large centres like Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the distributors on the mail trains now distribute the mail matter, so that on the arrival of the train in Toronto these machines will be used for quick delivery, so that the mail may reach the people in the forenoon instead of the afternoon.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will be used for that purpose as well.

Toronto Junction—Public building ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have the statistics of this.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Toronto Junction is a suburb of the city of Toronto, and is a large and growing place. The postal revenue last year was $4,645. There are some large manufactories in the town, it has a custom-house, it is an outport, and it is rapidly becoming a prominent business centre.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be expended there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not determined yet. This will be expended for a site.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The site may be presented.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It might be, but I have not heard of anybody proposing to present the site.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the town ought to give the site, as Deseronto does.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I understand that a deputation from Alexandria waited on the minister this session, and that he promised that a sum would be put in the estimates for the erection of a post office at that place. I would ask if it is intended to put anything in the estimates for that purpose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A deputation from Alexandria waited upon me and impressed upon me the importance of Alexandria for a public building. Unfortunately, they came when the estimates for public buildings had been settled for the year, so that it was too late to deal with the subject this session. They presented a strong argument in favour of Alexandria, and I have no doubt its claims will be entitled to recognition; but there is nothing in the present estimates.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I am very glad to hear that there is some chance for Alexandria. I would be very much pleased myself to see a post office erected there. I went so far as to offer a site, and I would be glad to do anything I can in the interest of the place with regard to a post office or anything else. I think we are entitled to some consideration at the hands of any government, but we have never got very much, though we have contributed to the revenue of the country for a great many years. There is very little that we can get unless it is a building, and I hope the government will consider the request of the deputation. I am sorry the government cannot do something this session, for I am a little afraid they will not have the opportunity in another year.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand that this $5,000 is to buy a site in Toronto Junction?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will be used as far as necessary to buy a site. Anything over would be available for a building; but I have no idea of what it would cost. Land in Toronto Junction is not very expensive just now, I think.

Mr. CLANCY. Probably the hon. gentleman would say what the probable cost of the building will be.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are many prices. It would depend on what you would select.

Mr. CLANCY. This is a sort of padding out, I suppose, as in many other cases.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not understand the term.

Mr. CLANCY. It means that the hon. gentleman comes down with estimates which the House is not warranted in voting.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Which one is not warranted?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is trying the patience of the committee a good deal when he comes down with estimate after estimate, and is unable to say what the probable cost of the buildings will be. Surely the hon. gentleman has some idea of what he is pledging the country to.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the acting minister, if he proposes to place parliament under contract to build the building, or is he simply taking this vote for the site, and will ask for a vote later and give information as to the kind of building before giving the contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Supposing I were to say that if the building were to cost more than $25,000, no contract would be let, without first submitting it to parliament?

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman ought to go no further than the site on this vote, because it will not build anything.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps it will just do a little more than buy the site. If the hon. gentleman will allow the vote to pass, I will answer his question definitely either to-morrow, or on concurrence.

Toronto—Custom-house and examining warehouse, paving ..... $4,515

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the sidewalk business?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is for paving the lane at our customs-house and the city pays one-half. It is for the convenience of carters.

Ottawa—Fitting up and furnishing offices for Customs Department, Wellington Street ..... $6,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for the statistical branch, and applies to the building adjoining that just taken by the Imperial Bank on Wellington Street, next to the vacant lot west of the Rideau Club. We have arranged to rent it from Mr. Ahearn at $1,500 a year for ten years, which is the same rate as paid by the Imperial Bank for the adjoining building. The owner is paying $1,265 towards the repairs, which we will make ourselves, and at the end of the ten years they will be his property, except in the case of those which are removable.

Mr. FOSTER. How many clerks will be in that office?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. As many as forty or fifty.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the Minister of Customs to give a comprehensive explanation of what he proposes to do before we close, as it seems to me that there is almost a pilgrimage to the city from various parts of the Dominion?

Kingston Royal Military College—Additional building, gymnasium and hospital. $8,000

Mr. BRITTON. The site is one of the best in the Dominion, and as this is a Dominion institution, it seems to me that any money expended in repairs should extend to adjacent property which may be considered part and parcel of the institution grounds. Cedar Island is just off the main shore to the west, and the Martello Tower on Point Frederick may be considered on the college grounds. The storm has taken off the weather roof and injured the appearance of the tower, very much to the disparagement of the college itself. We are justly proud of that institution, and certainly $1,000 at least, ought to be expended immediately in repairing these buildings and improving the walls. The greatest care ought to be taken to have at least the gymnasium ready for the opening of the college on October 1. It would also be true economy for the government to erect a building between the post office and the customs-house in Kingston, where there is a vacant lot, which could be erected at a cost of, at the outside, of $8,000, for the examining warehouse and inland revenue, and save the rental we now pay of $1,000 per year. And there would be this additional advantage—that the caretaker of these buildings would occupy the new building between the other two.

Windsor—Drill hall (revote, $4,000)..... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is that to cost ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Tenders are now being invited.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the estimate ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is $40,000.

Rideau Hall—Fire protection, renewals, repairs, alterations, remetalling, &c... $11,800

Mr. FOSTER. We would like an explanation of this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to provide a system of fire protection and to make alterations, repairs, &c.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the principal details ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The fire protection system is estimated to cost, with excavating of rock, hydrants, water pipes and other equipment, $3,000. A new conservatory is estimated to cost $3,500. The woodwork of the present conservatory is decayed and the building has gone so far that it cannot be repaired.

Mr. FOSTER. Before going into that, please explain as to the fire protection system.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is proposed to make connection with the city waterworks.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they not had that before ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, but not in a manner to supply a sufficient quantity of water for the purpose now proposed.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the pressure be sufficient at that height ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The architect is of opinion that it will, and I have no doubt he has tested it as well as he could. Mr. Ewart is the architect, and he is a very capable and careful man. He made a personal inspection. Then there is the conservatory, $3,500 ; alterations in the basement, $1,700 ; heating and hot water apparatus, $1,500 ; incidentals, $300 ; painting, papering, &c., $1,767.05 ; incidentals, $22.95—

Mr. WILSON. I would like to call the attention of the acting minister (Mr. Mullock) to some of his utterances when he was on this side of the House. When the Liberal-Conservative party were in power he used to think they were extravagant in their expenditure on Rideau Hall. I am sorry the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is not now present. He must have gone out knowing that this was coming up. Here are some of the recent expenditures under this government on Rideau Hall: Usual annual vote, $17,000 ; heating, water and light, $8,000 ; a new wing to the building $14,000 ; and for furnishing the same, $5,000—a total of $44,000. I am afraid hon. gentlemen opposite are not showing very great improvement over the late government. I call particular attention of the acting Minister of Public Works to this, because he was one of those who were most anxious that these expenditures should be kept down.

Mr. FOSTER. What did he say ?

Mr. WILSON. He said the country could not possibly stand such extravagance.

Mr. CASEY. That was when we had deficits.

Mr. WILSON. But the money comes out of the people's pockets just the same. I was amused at the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) the other night trying to make the people believe that the taxes were less now than they were under the Conservative government. But they find that the government gets the money out of their pockets just the same—$12,000,000 a year more than the Conservative government used to take. I think it is time for hon. gentleman opposite, who have expressed such opinions, to look into this matter, and when they are called upon to make further expenditures, they should say: We would be glad to do as you wish, but we have pledged ourselves to the people that we cannot afford it.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the acting Minister of Public Works give us any idea who looks after those old carpets nowadays ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. CRAIG. Are not hon. gentlemen opposite making a mistake in providing fire protection for Rideau Hall? Better let it burn, then they will have a chance to put up a good building.

St. Thomas—Drill hall and armoury..... $8,000

Mr. INGRAM. I quite endorse this vote, because we have a first-class battalion there, and they have no place to store their arms. But, I wish to say a word about the purchase of the site for this building.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Take it on concurrence.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not ask hon. gentlemen opposite to excuse me for taking up the time now, because on the 19th of February last I asked for a return of the correspondence between the department and Dr. Wilson, the owner of this property, and the return was only completed on the 10th of July—so it was not my fault if I did not discuss the matter before. Last year I drew the minister's attention to the fact that the price they proposed paying for this site was altogether too high—that I knew the property well and flattered myself that I knew what the proper valuation should be. When the hon. gentleman said that something in the neighbourhood of $8,000 was asked for it, I said it was not worth more than $3,000 at a fair valuation. But the department had paid Dr. Wilson the equivalent of $7,500—that is $6,000 cash, and the old drill shed. The hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) promised last year that he would have a fair and proper valuation of the property made. And how did he proceed to do that? Dr. Wilson has the patronage of this government in that riding. And whom did the hon. minister ask to recommend a valuator? He applied to Mr. Donald McNish, who is the representative of West Elgin in the local legislature, entirely overlooking the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) who, I think, would have recommended a gentleman who would have given a fair valuation on the property. The minister asked his own officer to interview Alexander Darrach to find out about this property. And who is he? He is the person whom Dr. Wilson recommended to this government for an appointment in the Department of Customs. His officer is asked to interview Mr. Alex. Darrach, who has handled this property for Dr. Wilson for years, and has collected his rents. He is under obligations to Dr. Wilson, he owes to Dr. Wilson the position he holds as collector of customs. I do not wish to bring the private matters of Dr. Wilson up in this House, but I want to show the Minister of Militia and Defence that he has been imposed upon by a gentleman who should have the interest of this country at heart, because it is he who is supposed to have the patronage for the government in East Elgin and in the city of St. Thomas. But, instead of dealing with the government honestly, he misrepresents the facts for the purpose of getting a large price out of this property. What did they do? Instead of writing to my hon. friend who represents West Elgin (Mr. Casey), he writes to Mr. McNish, and Mr. McNish, M.P.P., recommends the president of a loan company who holds a mortgage against this property, and a loan company only a short time ago valued it at $80 a lot, and it is now valued at $300 a lot, and he makes the government pay that for it. I say that having warned the minister last year, both privately and publicly, that the property was too high, the hon. gentleman, in my judgment, has not exercised reasonable care and caution in the purchase of this property. It is well known to every person in St. Thomas that the property is not worth half the money that the hon. gentleman has paid for it.

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. CASEY. How large are the lots?

Mr. INGRAM. There are thirty-two lots in the property, which is eight acres and five-eighths in extent. The property lying alongside of it, known as the race course property, that has buildings upon it for the accommodation of the races and the agricultural show, was bought at less than one-half what the government is paying for this property. So, I say, without detaining the House any longer on this question, that the sooner the hon. gentleman gets his advice from some other quarter the better it will be for the country financially, and politically for the government.

North-west Territories—Red Deer—Court-house, lock-up, &c., $5,000; land office, $700 ..... $5,700

Mr. DAVIN. Why do you have two separate buildings? Instead of putting up a $5,000 and another $700 building, it would be better for the town, and more suitable to the public interest, that one building, costing $7,500, should be erected for the purpose of the court-house and land office. I do not see why the land office should not be in the same building with the court-house.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say why it was done. I can only say that this $700 is asked for by the Department of the Interior in order to provide accommodation for their office, which is now in a separate building. At present the Department of the Interior rents a small building at $96 a year, and the accommodation is reported to us as wholly inadequate.

Mr. DAVIN. I see the Minister of the Interior in his place, and I would like to ask him if he has a land agent at Red Deer?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Prince Albert—Artesian well, &c. .... $1,100

Mr. FOSTER. Are they experimenting for water?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Regina—North-west government buildings—To refund to the government of the North-west Territories amounts disbursed by them, 1897-8, for repairs, renewals, fittings, &c. .... $1,773 87

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to recoup the North-west government the expenditures they made on the government buildings. The sum is made up of a great number of small items, such as freight, carpets, curtains, stoves, pipes, curtain poles, window shades, lumber, hardware, two carpenters, caretakers, glazing—pages of such items.

Mr. WILSON. Had the North-west government a right to order these things just as they liked? If we have to pay the bills we ought to have something to say about the things that are purchased.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are all on government buildings. We have no officers there, but these were certified to by Mr. Dennis, deputy commissioner of the Department of Public Works at Regina.

Dominion public buildings—Salaries to clerks of works, assistants, &c. .... $9,000

Mr. FOSTER. What does that cover?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for clerks of works. Formerly the salaries of clerks of works were charged against the respective buildings, and now they are grouped altogether in one item.

Mr. FOSTER. And are not to be charged to different buildings?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are not to be charged to different buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right.

Construction of armouries ..... $35,000

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I would like to ask the hon. minister what this covers?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As I explained when the militia estimates were under consideration, it is necessary to have armouries at regimental headquarters, in order to take charge of the new rifles, and in other cases it is necessary to have proper accommodation for caring for cavalry and artillery outfit. In the militia vote for maintenance and repairs, there is a certain amount of money voted which may be used in the case of buildings that the department already possess for changes or additions to these buildings, which they intend to use for central armouries. This vote is for the construction of certain new armouries. I regret to say that the vote is not as large as it ought to be, but in answer to my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan), I may say that buildings are required at the following places: Woodstock, Ont., infantry armoury; Sussex, N.B.,—

Mr. FOSTER. Cost?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will speak of the cost when I go over this list.

Mr. FOSTER. It will save time, if you give the cost in each case.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In some cases $500 is all that will be necessary, in other cases $1,500 will construct a building that will be suitable, while in the more important towns, where larger accommodation is required, the cost will be $2,500, and in some cases $4,000.

Mr. FOSTER. As the minister goes over the list, let him give the cost.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Woodstock, infantry armoury, cost, probably about $4,000; Sussex, N.B., cavalry regimental stores, cost between $3,000 and $4,000. I am not able to give the exact amount, because it will be necessary, before expending this money, to have some officer of the department go around and see the different localities. We have plans, of course, for armouries according to the size of regiments, but it will be necessary after this vote is taken to look carefully over the ground, and see what the requirements are.

Mr. FOSTER. What the minister is really doing, is taking an omnibus vote.

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is precisely the case. Then, there are to be buildings at Cobourg, Cornwall, Woodstock, N.B., Sarnia, Gananoque, Guelph, Port Hope—

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). What is it proposed to do at Cornwall?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is proposed to build an infantry armoury, but to construct it in such a way that later on a drill hall may be added to it. The expenditure will not be a large one.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). What will the first expenditure amount to?

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Probably $2,500.

Mr. I. J. GOULD (West Ontario). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), whether there is any provision made for building an armoury in Ontario County?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At what place?

Mr. GOULD. Uxbridge. We had a nice drill hall there, but it got out of repair, and the government finally tore it down and sold it. We expected that they would have given us a new drill hall, but they have not done so. I was hoping that we would have an armoury, as we have a very good company, and as the battalion band is located in our town. I believe that our company stood first at Niagara. I think some provision should be made for our battalion at that place.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We cannot undertake to construct buildings, except at the headquarters of battalions.

Mr. GOULD. Uxbridge is the headquarters of our battalion.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then, I may tell the hon. gentleman that provision will be made at the earliest possible moment.

Department of the Interior—Steel file cases with drawers, &c. .... $12,500

Mr. FOSTER. There are a number of items calling for the expenditure of a large amount of money for steel shelving. Can the hon. minister give us any idea as to the amount expended within the last three years under this one item of steel file cases with drawers? It must have amounted to a very large figure. How far is it going to go?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy is not able to-night to give any information that would really be accurate, but I will endeavour to get a statement by three o'clock to-morrow on that point.

Livingstone's Cove—To complete wharf... $2,500

Mr. FOSTER. We would like a complete explanation of every one of these, with plans.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Detailed?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, detailed, with the plans. I suppose before these estimates are discussed, the hon. gentleman will lay the plans on the Table. There will not be more than 800 of them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A vote of $2,500 has been called for by the chief engineer to complete the breakwater which was commenced in 1898, which was estimated to cost $6,000, but which, through the mismanagement of the foreman, and owing to other causes, will exceed that amount by about $2,000.

Blue Rock—Breakwater, repairs ..... $2,000

Mr. KAULBACH. Where is Blue Rock?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In Antigonish.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have a Blue Rock in my county, and I thought perhaps this might be it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No such luck.

Gabarus—Breakwater (revote) ..... $3,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cost of the whole work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $20,000. Nothing has been expended on it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it being done by tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has not been determined as to how it shall be done.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it is understood it shall be done by tender and contract?

Mr. GOULD.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I myself personally favour that system, and always adopt it where it is possible, but there are some cases where it would be proper to do it by day's labour.

Mr. FOSTER. But this is a new work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There will be no difficulty in having it done by contract, and therefore it will be done by contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Have all these places been visited by the officers of the department and reported upon?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, the chief engineer so informed me.

Mr. FOSTER. In every case?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In every case.

Ecum Secum—Wharf ..... $3,000

Mr. KAULBACH. In which county is this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is on the boundary line between Guysborough and Halifax counties. The wharf is in Guysborough County.

Mr. KAULBACH. Can vessels use this wharf to load and discharge?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is 160 feet long and 10 feet at extreme low water.

New Harbour—Breakwater (revote, $2,000). $9,000

Mr. McALISTER. Is this the place the government were not able to locate a year ago?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has been discovered since.

Porter's Lake—Dredging and breakwater at entrance of channel (revote) ..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is this?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is in Halifax County. It is a small arm of the sea and it is proposed to dredge the entrance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is two miles east of Halifax.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a place of large commerce?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a navigable lake and when this channel is cleared it will connect it with salt water. The trade is not so large as in Montreal, but it is considerable.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cost of the work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The vote was $9,000 last year and it is found it will cost about $3,000 more. It will not be possible to spend more than $4,000 at the present time. It will have the two-fold purpose of enabling the water to escape rapidly from the lake which now overflows the surrounding country, and of creating a harbour as well.

Mr. KAULBACH. It is practically a canal for the safety of boats passing from the lake into the sea.

Luxenburg, N.S.—Dredging harbour, $5,000; blasting rock at entrance, $200.....$5,200

Mr. KAULBACH. This work is much needed, and should have been attended to long ago. All I am anxious about now is to see the work carried on.

Mr. FOSTER. In view of that explanation, I think we had better pass these two votes.

Broad Cove, N.S.—Repairs to breakwater.. $500

Mr. KAULBACH. Is that work in my country?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Will all these works be let by tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These repairs could not be done by tender.

Mr. DAVIN. Will those of $5,000 and over be let by tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The principle of letting by tender, where it is possible, will be adopted—where the work is new; but the repairs cannot be let by tender.

Pinette Pier, P.E.I.—Repairs..... $500

Mr. MARTIN. This is a very small vote for Pinette. This is one of the places the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) championed in the House for about fifteen years. I inquired last session whether or not a petition had been received in the department from this section, and the reply was that there was none. But during the progress of an election last fall, a letter was sent down stating that the petition was in the department, and this raised the expectations of the people that a pretty large sum of money would be voted. I think the petition was signed by 400 people. A good deal of dredging is required there, and I hope the anxiety which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries exhibited in years gone by has not altogether dwindled away.

Wood Island, P.E.I.—South breakwater extension ..... $7,000

Mr. MARTIN. I would like an explanation of this.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This work will be let by tender. This vote will be applied towards the extension of the southern breakwater, 400 feet seaward, and dredging a channel 50 feet wide between the piers to a depth of seven feet, low water, spring tide. The total estimated cost is $14,000—$10,000 for the extension, and $4,000 for the dredging.

Canoe Cove—Breakwater (revote) ..... $10,000

Mr. MARTIN. Will the hon. minister give the assurance that this will be expended this year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Tenders are now being invited.

Mr. MARTIN. I am a little bit anxious, because I notice in the Patriot, a paper published in that province, that at a public meeting held there the other day, the Premier of that province had to give his assurance that the money was to be expended. An election was then going on, in which the Minister of Marine was very much interested. The newspaper reports that at the meeting in question, Premier Farquarson was asked if the Dominion government intended building the breakwater, and he gave his word that tenders would be called for at once, and if any one tenderer complied with the conditions required, he would stake his reputation that this work would be accomplished. So it appears, whether the tender be high or low, the government is bound to accept it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken, the election is over, and we have carried the district by 311 majority.

Mr. MARTIN. That is not astonishing, in view of the fact that the Premier of that province had to go on his knees and pledge his word that this sum would be expended.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the last thing that the Minister of Marine ought to gloat over that his party carried a county, because the Premier of that province went down, and with the promise of the Minister of Marine at his back, assured the people that if they would vote right this work would be done.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Tenders had been called for and were received, but were found too high, and we called a second time.

Campbell Cove—Breakwater, reconstruction $5,000
Annandale Pier—Reconstruction of pier head ..... $1,250

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). What is to be done at these places?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Annandale pier is a work of reconstruction. This money is to be applied to reconstruct the pier head, and also to effect repairs to the shore abutment. At Campbell's Cove, the breakwater will be reconstructed to its original length, with an additional block of 30 feet, and the existing work will be strengthened.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). That work can be done to much greater advantage at once than by leaving it to the autumn. I would advise the hon. gentleman to ask for tenders without delay, and in the case of Annandale pier it is likewise of great importance to have it done before the fall, having regard to its usefulness at that particular season.

Souris Knight's Point—Strengthening of breakwater (revote) ..... $8,000

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to call the attention of the hon. minister to a claim against the government, a few years ago, by Whiteman & Bellish, who had a contract for building a breakwater at Souris Point. They were not allowed to proceed with the work on account of delays in completing the contract, which was due to the engineer not having the plans ready. A storm came on and carried a great part of the work done away. I brought the matter to the notice of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) two sessions ago, and he said at first that these men had no claim, but, on my explaining the matter more fully, he said he would look into it the second time. Is there anything in the department to show whether he has done anything or not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the first time the matter has been brought to my attention, and I think it had better be left over until the return of the Minister of Public Works, as nothing can be done now.

Mr. MARTIN. Perhaps the hon. minister would look over the papers and see if the Minister of Public Works has come to any conclusion, and let me know?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will inquire and let the hon. gentleman know.

Summerside Harbour—Breakwater (revote) $20,000

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Has anything been expended on that yet?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contract was let on May 25, and the probable cost will be $59,000.

Mr. DAVIN. I am assured by a gentleman who knows the island well, not a member of parliament, that the $20,000 especially is palpably a political vote, and the same is true of most of the others.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is very badly informed. This vote has been in the estimates for some years, and was put there by the late government and supported by the hon. gentleman himself—so it could not be political except in the larger sense of being a benefit to all.

Mr. MARTIN. It has been in the estimates for the last four years. I am very glad the government are proceeding with it, and I hope it will be successful.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) The vote is absolutely necessary for Summerside harbour, the second harbour of importance in Prince Edward Island. It needs it first for the breakwater to shelter shipping, and next for deepening the harbour.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Since this has come up, I venture to say, that it will do no good so far as deepening the harbour is concerned, as the harbour of Summerside has all the water the trade of the port requires. So far as the shelter is concerned it may be of some use, but I doubt it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, P.E.I.) is mistaken. The harbour of Summerside, though a good harbour, has been filling up towards the mouth, and we have had to have it dredged to enable the steamer Stanley to come in.

Dipper Harbour, N.B.—Breakwater..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. What will be the cost of this work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $25,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the contract been let?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the plan?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The proposed breakwater will be 235 feet long, 44 feet wide on top, with a height of 8 feet 9 inches in high water, and 32 feet 9 inches at low water. It will be placed inside the site formerly occupied by the original breakwater on the western side of the harbour. Dipper harbour is 24 miles from St. John; it is a mile long by a mile and a half wide, and it is open from east to west. The original breakwater was swept away by a storm. There are 43 boats and six small schooners of from ten to eighteen tons in that harbour, all engaged in the fisheries.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the work to be let by tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Chance Harbour, N.B.—Breakwater ..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for a breakwater 250 feet long by 38 feet at the other end.

Mr. FOSTER. How far is this from the other?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is 19 miles from St. John—about four and a half miles from the other.

Mr. FOSTER. These are two very expensive works. Are the government making harbours of refuge within such a short distance of each other. What will be the cost of this work at Chance harbour?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $25,500.

Dorchester, N.B.—Breakwater ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is being done at Dorchester?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is required for the construction of a breakwater at Westmoreland on the bank of the Peticodiac River.

Mr. DAVIN. That is a new work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. The breakwater will be 995 feet long, and 20 to 30 feet wide. The estimated cost of the whole work will be $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the purpose to be effected by this immense expenditure?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a very large shipping point, and the work has been petitioned for by the people. They state that twenty-one million superficial feet of deals were shipped there last season. A large quantity of this lumber had to be handled by lighters, and the traffic was very much incommoded in consequence.

New Brunswick—Campbellton—Wharf extension and repairs, &c..... $6,700

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for repairs to the ballast wharf and the approaches, with the view of affording to the public the free use of the same for shipping purposes, as prayed for by the citizens of Campbellton in a petition transmitted by Mr. McAlister, in February, 1895, and recommended by the chief engineer in 1896.

Campbellton—Dredging ..... $5,000

Mr. McALISTER. What dredging does that include?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Dredging a basin about six hundred feet long by four hundred feet wide, opposite the ballast wharf at Campbellton, to a minimum depth of sixteen feet at low water, by the removal of small shoals which now obstruct that part of the harbour.

Mr. McALISTER. There is no provision made for dredging the basin. In the present state of the harbour, vessels cannot take a full cargo at that wharf, vessels of five or six hundred tons, but they have to take part of their cargo below the bar.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The necessity for this work is recognized. The difficulty is that there is no dredge available at present. We have not enough dredging plant.

Mr. McALISTER. Like my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaubach), I have from year to year pointed out the necessity of providing some means for a ferry landing in the town of Campbellton. At present we have no ferry landing at all for the ferry running between Cross Point in the county of Bonaventure and Campbellton. The place at present used for a landing is on private property, the owner of which can stop the landing of boats at any time, and should he do so there would be no landing at all. When the Minister of Public Works was there two years ago this was pointed out to him, and he promised that an engineer would be sent down immediately to examine the situation, and that he would have an appropriation made at the next session for building a ferry landing. That has not been done. Any person who will go down there and see the situation will see exactly how the matter stands. There was a part of the ferry landing built some years ago, but it is utterly useless for the purpose for which it was intended, and cannot be used unless some $1,500 or $2,000 more are expended upon it.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to ask my hon. friend the acting Minister of Public Works whether these New Brunswick items were arranged for before the Minister of Public Works went away, or were they arranged for by the hon. gentleman?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These items have been accumulating, and they were dealt with before the hon. minister went away in some cases. In many cases, I think in almost all of these cases, if not in all, the matters have been reported upon by the local engineers and the officers here.

Mr. DAVIN. I consider that these items for New Brunswick, as the items for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, that we have been passing at this hour of the night and at this time of the session, with a thin House, are a most striking and eloquent commentary on the financial system that has been adopted by this government, a financial system that, in order to appear to have a surplus, charges up items to capital that should be charged to current expenditure.

Mr. CHARLTON. These are all charged to income.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand that, but by charging up items to capital that should be charged to current expenditure it enables the government to have money for these purposes.

Mr. CHARLTON. We are not dealing with such items now.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand that, and the hon. gentleman will please allow me to make my protest. The protest I make is this, that boasting of a fallacious surplus, members of parliament and prospective members of parliament can go to the hon. Minister of Finance and to the hon. Minister of Public Works, and have items like this put into the estimates. There has never been such a carnival of inconsiderate extravagance as these estimates show.

Mr. FOSTER. It is now midnight, and we were here last night until a very late hour.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think we have made reasonable progress to-day, and I beg to move that the committee rise.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 192)—from the Senate—to amend the Bank Act Amendment Act, 1900.—(Mr. Fielding).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood that the railway subsidies were to be the chief order of the day to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It will either be that or supply. If the Minister of Railways and Canals is in his seat to-morrow, we will take up the railway subsidies.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.20 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 12, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PAY OF STRATHCONA CONTINGENT.

Mr. OLIVER asked :

Will supplementary pay be provided for the members of the Strathcona contingent as in the case of the first and second contingents ?

If their Imperial pay is not to be supplemented to the Strathcona contingent, will any separation allowance be given the dependents of officers and men of that force ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The matter is under consideration.

Mr. DAVIN.

LIEUTENANT MILLER, 4TH FIELD BATTERY.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Is Lieut. Miller an officer of 'A' Battery ?
2. If so, when was he appointed ?
3. Is he still drawing pay as a customs officer in Hamilton as well as his military pay ?
4. If so, how much money has he drawn from the public chest since January 31st last ?
5. What rank has the gentleman now at Deseronto camp who signs himself 'Col.' McRae, Guelph ?
6. Does his name appear on the militia list ?
7. What are his qualifications ?
8. Why was he appointed D.A.A.G. camp quartermaster ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. No, but there is a Lieutenant W. T. Miller, 4th Field Battery, attached for duty to "A" Field Battery. 2. He was authorized to be attached for duty on February 19, 1900. 3 and 4. W. G. Miller has been paid his salary as a customs officer since January 31, 1900, for four months, at the rate of $39.28 per month, amounting to $157.12. 5. The rank of lieutenant-colonel in the reserve militia. 6. The names of the officers of the reserve militia are not included in the militia list. 7. M. S., 1st class. Also a second-class artillery certificate. 8. Because he was recommended for the appointment by Lieut.-Col. Stone, inspector general of artillery and commandant of the camp, and was known at headquarters to be eminently fitted for the duties.

GOVERNMENT WHARF, PORT DUFFERIN.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. When was the shed upon the government wharf at Port Dufferin or Salmon River, in the county of Halifax, completed ?
2. Was this shed built by contract or how otherwise ?
3. What amount has been paid on account of the cost of construction of this shed, and what bills have been rendered for on account of the cost of such construction ?
4. What wharfage has been collected in respect of the government wharf at Port Dufferin or Salmon River, in the county of Halifax ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The department has telegraphed for the information asked for here, but the answer has not yet come. It may be here by to-morrow.

WHARF AT GORDON POINT.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) asked :

Has the Minister of Public Works received a petition from certain inhabitants of Searlton, Prince Edward Island, and vicinity asking for an appropriation for a wharf or pier at Gordon Point, and if so, is it the intention of the government to grant the prayer of such petition ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Such a petition was received, and the matter was referred to an engineer to make an investigation and report. He made a careful examination, and reported that the cost of the proposed work would amount to some $22,500. In view of the large expenditures involved in improvements at Summerside and other places in Prince Edward Island, it was not deemed possible to provide an item in the estimates at the present session for this work.

LIEUT.-COL. MCGILL, ROYAL MILI-TARY COLLEGE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Is Lt.-Col. McGill acting staff adjutant at the Royal Military College, Kingston ?
2. If so, what is his salary ?
3. Is he paid monthly ?
4. If so, how much is he paid per month for salary and how much for lodging allowance ?
5. Has he been paid for the months of April, May and June last ?
6. Has Lt.-Col. McGill been devoting all of his time to the management of the Frontenac Loan and Trust Company, of Kingston, since the first day of April last ?
7. Is he the manager of that company ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DE-FENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. 2. His salary is $1,400 a year. 3. I believe he is paid monthly. 4. $116.66 for salary and $25 per month for lodging. 5. He has been paid for the months of April, May and June last. 6.
In March last, Lieut.-Col. McGill, an old officer of seventeen or eighteen years' standing, and a most efficient and painstaking officer of the Royal Military College, applied for leave of absence for three months. During all those years he has served, he has never had a longer leave at any one time than ten days, and has served during the vacation at the college. This application for leave was strongly recommended by the commandant, Lieut.-Col. Kittson, and was granted. 7. I have no means of knowing, nor do I care, nor do I think it is a matter of consequence to the people of Canada, what Lieut.-Col.
McGill may have done, or how he may have utilized his time during the period of his leave of absence.

ELECTORAL FRAUDS—JUDICIAL IN-QUIRY.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, is the First Minister prepared to make any statement with reference to the Elections Commission ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry to say that I am not in a position to make the statement that I expected, but I shall endeavour to do so during the present sitting.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting subsidies to railway companies and towards the construction of railways and works therein mentioned. (Hansard, page 9333.)

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before that motion is carried, I think the minister had better give us a general explanation of what he proposes to do with these subsidies.
It is not the right way to commence an expenditure of $3,500,000 by simply running into committee without any explanations.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That is not the practice.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois).
That is the practice. He spoke for an hour and a half last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Though I do not think that the practice has been generally followed, I have no objection to making a few brief preliminary remarks upon the subject of the resolutions which we now ask be referred to Committee of the Whole. These resolutions,
Mr. Speaker, outside of the particular railway enterprises that it is proposed to subsidize, do not differ materially from the resolutions which have usually accompanied the submission of these grants during the present administration. We have not departed from the principle, as respects the amount of the grants which we propose to make, from that which we adopted in 1897. We have seen no reason to think that that method of aiding undertakings of this character was not a wise and judicious method, and is not greatly to be preferred to the system which was in vogue under the previous administrations. I have, therefore, no excuse to offer for including these resolutions with the general resolutions which are to be referred to the committee.

If any particular criticism is directed against this policy, I should be very happy to offer any remarks that may occur to me in defence of the particular resolutions to which these objections are taken. I am aware, however, that this plan of providing for a sliding scale, in accordance with the cost of the roads, is one that has not commended itself to hon. gentlemen opposite.
It is not one which seems to meet with the approval of their newspaper press, but there has been, it appears to me, a complete and total absence of any argument at all in support of the objection which has been generally taken by our opponents to this principle. I think we might very well take exception to the attitude of these gentlemen and of their leading press, upon this question, because they have made, not, perhaps, a successful, but at all events, a very desperate effort to mislead the public mind as to the exact character of this principle and as to its effect generally in its application to railway undertakings. The impression is sought to be created that to allow payment of additional subsidies up to $6,400 per mile in respect of roads which cost over $15,000 a mile is to adopt a principle which would involve the payment of this double subsidy in all cases, and is one which does not admit of any limitation at all. This is the attitude, which I understand is being taken, at all events, by the press of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I think I can fairly say, in effect taken by hon. gentlemen themselves. I will, if you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, call the attention of the House for a moment to what has been put forward by the leading organs of the opposition in the country. I will refer to the leading organ of the party, the chief exponent of the views of the party and the paper, I think, which regards itself as entitled to speak with more authority than any other as to what the views and policy of hon. gentlemen opposite are, in reference to government measures. I find in an issue of the chief Toronto organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, of no more remote a date than July 11, that, in respect to the resolutions which are now about to be submitted to the committee, these remarks are made. The article embodies a general attack, as was to be expected to the granting of railway subsidies by this government. It implies that subsidies ought never to have been granted by this government. It is announcing a policy for us to adopt in the granting of railway subsidies, but not detaining the House in reference to that particularly. Let me read what the Mail and Empire says :

If the road costs $15,000 a mile to build, the country pays $3,200 per mile as a subsidy; but if the cost exceeds that, and it always does, we pay half the additional price, but not more than $6,400 per mile in all. The system of doubling the subsidy, so far as it has gone, has resulted in the double subsidy being paid.

Further on it says :

This session the bonuses so far proposed are for 720 miles of railway on the sliding scale basis, aggregating $6,400 a mile, which, of course, will be paid, $4,508,000, and for bridges, $650,000.

Anybody who refers to this organ of Conservative opinion for information as to the facts, I think, must generally find himself most egregiously misled, because here is a statement emanating from the leading organ of the party which, I would be sorry to know, would be written by any one so ignorant so as not be aware that it is incorrect, and yet, I would be sorry to think that any one had deliberately penned so inaccurate and untrue a statement.

Mr. POWELL. What paper is that ?

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am reading from the Toronto organ of the Conservative party, from the Mail and Empire, of July 11. The statement is not true that all the railways which are subsidized under the Acts passed since 1897, or which will be subsidized under the resolutions and the Bill found upon them, will be paid the subsidy in full. There is nothing which would justify any such statement or anything approaching it. It is utterly and absolutely misleading, yet these are the gentlemen who honestly try, as they say, to enlighten the country as to the conduct of this government as and to the effect of its policy, with their eyes wide open, deliberately misrepresenting the facts. I have no fear at all but that upon a fair consideration of the character of these resolutions they will justify themselves to any fair-minded man, and to any one who is at all in favour of aiding undertakings of this kind. I do not say that they will justify themselves to men who are entirely opposed to the granting of subsidies at all. I think there are very few gentlemen of that opinion in this House or in the country. I do not think that parliament has come to the conclusion that this Dominion has reached that perfected stage of its development in which we can afford to refuse parliamentary assistance towards the railway development of our country, certainly not in the west. It goes without saying that we must assist railway development in the west, and, I think, in the eastern provinces as well. Therefore, I say, that those who are disposed to look with favour upon a reasonable and moderate contribution in aid of the construction of these great developing works in this country, must favour the policy also of giving the assistance in proportion to the cost of the undertaking to which the aid is given. We have, I think I may say, with confidence, placed the minimum amount of cost before the operating clause of our principle will begin to apply at a high figure. We have placed the cost of railways, to which a subsidy in excess of $3,200 per mile will be paid at $15,000 per mile, a very safe amount, an amount so safe that when you see how that law has operated, those who are in favour of granting assistance, will say that it is an unreasonable limit, a limit in excess of the amount at which it should be placed. I have a statement prepared in reference to this very subject, with the view of enlightening the House as to the exact facts. I do not think the House requires to be informed that all the railway companies subsidized by this government, have not received double subsidy. There is not an hon. gentleman in this parliament who does not know this to be the case. There is not a thinking man in this country who does not know that it would be utterly absurd to put forth any such statement, and yet this organ of public opinion, has so poor an opinion of the constituency to which it is addressing itself, that it makes this statement, expecting it to be believed. Now there has been subsidy contracts entered into by this government since we came into power in all to the number of forty-seven.

Mr. BERGERON. Will you name them ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, if the hon. gentleman desires. There is the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway Company, the—

Mr. BERGERON. Have you the amount opposite the name of the railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have only the amount of the subsidies which have been paid.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you the amount paid to the St. Lawrence and Adirondack ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The amount is $84,480. The following are the railways: The Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway Company, the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company, the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, the St. Stephen and Milltown Railway Company, the Montfort Colonization Railway Company, the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company, the Gulf Shore Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Drummond County Railway Company, the Ottawa and New York Railway Company, the Restigouche and Western Railway Company, the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company (Limited), the Tilsonburg Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the East Richelieu Valley Railway Company, the Pembroke Southern Railway Company, the Dominion Eastern Railway Company, the Cobourg, Northumberland and Pacific Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, the St. Gabriel de Brandon and St. Emilie de l'Energie Railway Company, the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company, the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway Company (2), the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company (2), the Great Northern Railway Company, the York and Carleton Railway Company, the Phillipsburg Railway and Quarry Company, the South Shore Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company (3), the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company and Ottawa and Gatineau Valley Railway Company, the Nova Scotia Southern Railway Company (Limited) (2), the Canada Eastern Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company (2), the Midland Railway Company, the Central Railway Company of New Brunswick, the Great Northern Railway Company, the Massawippi Railway Company, the South Shore Railway Company (2), and the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company. This makes forty-seven subsidy contracts that have been entered into by this government.

Mr. BERGERON. Although the minister has not named the amounts, I suppose they will go into Hansard ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the amounts, but I will state the facts with reference to the amounts. I am only able to give the sums paid up to date in respect to these contracts, and I will give that if the House desires. Seventeen of these companies have been paid subsidies out of the forty-seven. Of these seventeen only three have received any additional subsidy under that clause. And, Sir, out of these three—far from fortifying the statement that every company that gets a subsidy will be paid the whole of the $6,400 a mile—there is only one of them that has received $6,400 a mile.

Mr. BERGERON. Which one ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That one is the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway. Of the other two companies, one, the Restigouche and Western Railway, earned, in addition to the $3,200, only $1,493 per mile, and it received, not $6,400 a mile, but $4,693 per mile. The other, the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company, instead of receiving $6,400 per mile, received $4,909 per mile, or $1,709 increase on the ordinary subsidy. You see, Mr. Speaker, that gentlemen opposite have sought to alarm the people, but when the facts are known, they will find, I trust, that they have done so without success.

We have endeavoured, Sir, to establish a principle which is just and equitable to the railway undertakings of the country. We have sought to put the railways in a position in which, when they have bona fide and actually expended a larger sum than the $15,000 as the maximum figure for the lesser subsidy; when they have bona fide and actually expended a larger sum than that, we have established the principle that they should get an additional subsidy, but, not unless they have done so. I want to know whether any one who is at all disposed to think that railway undertakings in the country should be aided by the government to any extent, believes that they can be aided upon a juster and sounder or fairer principle than according to the cost of the undertaking.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the minister if he will state with reference to the seventeen railways on which subsidies have been paid: How many of these have been totally completed so that all payments are made and the accounts adjusted? And, also: As to whether any others besides the three that are mentioned have made claims for extra payment beyond the $3,200 per mile?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None have made any claims, so far as I know, or so far as is known in the department, beyond the three I have mentioned, and so far as these seventeen railways are concerned. Did I say seventeen—I should have more properly said sixteen railways, because one of these is a bridge. So far as these sixteen railways are concerned, I am of opinion, and I believe—though I would not like to state that with absolute confidence—I believe that these sixteen companies have been paid the full amount of their subsidy for the completed work. That is what I think at this moment, but I will verify it further and qualify it, if necessary, if I am asked later on. I asked for a statement that would show the amounts of the subsidies paid in full, and there are none of them marked here 'paid on account.' None of them represent payments so made, so far as I am aware.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is only one other matter which, at this stage, I will mention to the House. The government had had, for some little time, in contemplation a question as to the desirability, if we are to continue these subsidies, of granting them upon such terms as shall have the effect of stimulating the manufacture of steel rails in Canada. There is every prospect that this industry, with a little proper and judicious encouragement might be established with advantage in this country. We had determined upon that policy, and it was in our minds that we would incorporate a clause in our subsidy-contracts giving effect to that policy, and we were of opinion, and are still of opinion, that such a clause would answer a very useful purpose. We believed it would suffice to embody it in the contract without making it part of the law of the land. But, on further consideration, it has appeared to us that it might be preferable in some ways if we would add an additional clause to these resolutions, embodying that idea, so as to make it on the face of it, apparent that such was the design of the government and of parliament.

The insertion of this clause in the Bill might, perhaps, make it known more generally so that it would have the effect of stimulating the object we have in view.

Mr. FOSTER.

better than if we had not given it publicity in that form. When the House resolves itself into committee on these resolutions, I shall propose an additional resolution to the following effect:

The Governor in Council may make it a condition of the grant of the subsidies herein provided, or any heretofore granted by any preceding Act of parliament as to which a contract has not yet been entered into between Her Majesty and the company for the construction of the railway, that the company shall lay its road with new steel rails made in Canada if same are procurable in Canada upon terms as favourable as other rails can be obtained, of which the Minister of Railways and Canals shall be the judge.

With that exception there is nothing, I think, in these general resolutions which is novel or which differs in any material degree from the ones which have heretofore been discussed and adopted by parliament in other sessions, or which need call for any further comment from me at this time. I might point out before I sit down that the total amount of the subsidies proposed in these resolutions, upon the basis of $3,200 per mile, and with the bridge grants, will be $3,493,000—an amount which, having regard to the importance of the various undertakings which are provided for in part by these resolutions, will not, I think, strike the House as being at all excessive, but which I think will appear on all sides to be very moderate and reasonable. I saw what our proposals in this direction were anticipated to be in the press—I will not say the press of both parties, but the press which espouses the cause of hon. gentlemen opposite. I saw that it represented that we were going to bring down subsidies which would aggregate twenty odd millions of dollars. I do not know whether our hon. friends are disappointed that we did not do that, or whether they are pleased.

Mr. CLANCY. We are always disappointed when you do right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I notice very little evidence of disappointment on their part, and I take it that we do not always fall into error. I think some times we must make proper and reasonable proposals, yet they have not produced the effect which the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the minister whether he has laid on the Table, or proposes to lay on the Table, any correspondence and information which always precedes the proposal of the government to grant a subsidy, so that the members, when we come to take up the items in committee, may have that information to go upon? I do not suppose it is imaginable that the ministry have discussed and considered, and have proposed to the House $3,400,000 of subsidies without a very careful investigation on information afforded; and certainly the House has an undoubted right to have that information placed before it, before it is called upon to consider these measures. I suppose the minister has that ready, and can put it on the Table of the House before we take up the items.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I admire the calm seriousness with which the hon. gentleman rises in his place and makes the statement which he has just made. I think one cannot fail to elicit admiration who can with such an air of seriousness make such a statement. The hon. gentleman asks me, am I prepared to bring down the plans and correspondence and statements which have always been laid on the Table of this House when the railway resolutions have been submitted.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no use of the minister misrepresenting me. I did not say have always been laid on the Table. I said I supposed that no government would propose three and a half millions of expenditure to the House without having such information before them, and I said it was the right of members of this House to have that same information, as far as it could be given in correspondence and all that, which precedes the affirmative action of a government upon the propositions that are put before it. That is what I said, and I think that is a fair proposition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I take the hon. gentleman's statement as to what he said, though I followed him very closely, and I am bound to say that what he now says he said did not strike my ear, and my hearing is not particularly defective.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble is not with the hon. gentleman's hearing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman now tells us that no government can be supposed to propose the granting of subsidies to the amount of three millions and upwards, without putting all this correspondence and all the information and all the material upon which their proposals are based, upon the Table of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Again I beg leave to correct my hon. friend. I made no such statement. What I stated was that I did not suppose it was imaginable that any government would propose a vote of $3,600,000 for various lines of railway without having had all that information before them upon which to base their conclusions; and then I said I thought it was right that the members of this House should have that information, or so much of it as was possible to be brought down, in order that they might have the benefit of the information when they were making up their minds to give the vote; and I think that is fair.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman may rest assured of this, that we would have to furnish a very slim quantity of information indeed if we did not supply it as amply and fully as it was supplied during the administration with which the hon. gentleman was connected; and I can assure this House that, as respects each and all of these applications, we shall be prepared to give to the House good and sufficient reasons why the House should join with us in adopting the resolutions.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you plans for all these?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would be very sorry to tell the hon. gentleman that we have. I think it would hardly be a reasonable expectation that we should have plans for all.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know. I think it should be done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Plans are very rarely drawn for railways until people get sufficient encouragement to believe that they will have aid and be able to finance the undertakings. They very seldom engage in very large expenditures until then, and the expenditures would have to be considerable in order to prepare plans, until they have some encouragement that they will be able to get on with their work. No, we have not plans.

Mr. BERGERON. I asked that because the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) would never allow any subsidies to go through until the plans were laid on the Table of the House, so that everybody could look at them.

The PRIME MINISTER. Plans of bridges, not railways.

Mr. BERGERON. Plans of railways, too.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think my hon. friend will find on inquiry that he is quite in error in that. I have taken occasion to look over the reports of Hansard as to what transpired during the submitting of previous railway resolutions to parliament; and I can assure the hon. gentleman that if he does the same, he will find that no such condition was attached to them by any member of parliament. Somebody may have complained, but to say that the government of the day yielded to all the complaints or furnished the information the hon. gentleman refers to, is quite a misapprehension on his part.

Mr. BERGERON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have seen this table loaded with maps representing the different railways and the subsidies that were granted. In the Hansard of 1894, the hon. gentleman will see a speech of the Minister of Railways on the very same subject, giving all these particulars.

Mr. FOSTER. The earnestness and the controversial spirit with which the Minister of Railways began what we asked as a general explanation on the particular measures brought down is a fine example of how not to do it, so far as putting information before the House respecting the measures directly under our consideration is concerned. I did not ask the Minister of Railways to set up a newspaper article that he read, putting the paper up within fair striking distance and making a pugilistic display before it with all the heat and fire of simulated combat. What I asked for was information, and of that we have got very little. What I asked for was that in proposing a vote of three and a half million dollars, the hon. minister might condescend to give some general information with regard to the nature of the enterprises for which the money was to be voted, and I do not think that was an unfair request, but the whole House sees how the hon. gentleman met it and what information we have got as the result.

There are some things we may learn. I notice that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce got to his feet as quickly as he could and left the room when the Minister of Railways began his proposition. No wonder he left. That gentleman who, I suppose, is a valued member of the Liberal party, expressed his views very strongly through a series of some ten or twelve years at least, from 1882 to 1896, and I can recall no single occasion on which he did not express himself as most unqualifiedly opposed to the whole system of subsidizing railways, root and branch, not only on account of the expenditure of public money, but also on account of the corrupting influences which, he declared, these railways exerted on the public mind. In fact he used to go the length of declaring that there was very little more basis for the most of these than simply an attempt to cajole and seduce the electorate. There were equally as strong expressions made by other members of the present government. I notice that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is not just now in the House, and neither is the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), and it would be extremely interesting and point an extremely valuable lesson to the people, if we only had a little time to go through the pages of Hansard from 1882 up and give choice excerpts from the speeches of these gentlemen with reference to measures similar to those before the House to-day.

In 1882, the government at that time undertook the policy of subsidizing railways, commencing with the initial idea that wherever capital would put itself into the work of constructing and carrying out a railway, if that railway would, was considered for the benefit of the country, if it were a proposition which worthily demanded aid. The government would aid it to the extent of providing a subsidy sufficient to rail the road after all the other expenditure had been carried by private capital.

At that time $3,200 per mile was considered sufficient, but later on, as steel rails decreased in price, that subsidy did more than that, but that was the general basis of the subsidy. Then again, in the case of certain roads which had to contend with great natural difficulties, the government, after considering each case, came to a conclusion either to grant or not to grant a larger subsidy than the $3,200 per mile. If they decided to grant a larger subsidy, they justified their decision by the nature of the construction and the money was voted, and it was possible for the country to know what its liability would be as regards the construction of each mile of railway and for the country to know, without any goings on between the minister and the company itself, without any manipulations of accounts or anything of that kind, just exactly what it could expect to pay when this road was finally passed by the engineer who had to report upon it. That policy, the present Liberal government, representing the Liberal party, from its head down to its foot, vigorously denounced. So far as lips and tongue could go they were eloquent and fiery, perfectly sanguinary in their denunciations of that policy introduced in 1882, and never did a subsidy vote come before the House that these gentlemen's mouths were not active and their tongues not nimble, but of course very different results often happened when the individual items came up. Then we saw men with the nimblest tongues leave their seats and their coat tails flying as they rushed from the Chamber. We saw the Minister of Justice at one time, who was one of the most eloquent denouncers of these railway subsidies, rush from this Chamber quicker than a flash of lightning when a subsidy was proposed having something to do with his own county.

I am not going to take up the time of the House by reading these denunciations from year to year of hon. gentlemen opposite, from the right hon. gentleman down to the humblest member of his government. They are on record in Hansard, so that any enterprising and curious person can read them.

What else have we? Most vigorously did these denunciations flow from these hon. gentlemen concerning the period at which these railway subsidies were brought down. First, because there was not information enough to go upon, and secondly, because important legislation of this kind was kept back until the dying hours of the session. There was no honest heart there beating in a Grit bosom, which did not swell with most vehement denunciation of this unstatesman-like, miserable and totally unparliamentary plan of throwing millions as railway subsidies on the Table of the House just a few days before the expiry of the session, when the members were neither in a position to investigate these matters or in sufficient number to control, by any fair criticism and consideration, the course of legislation in that respect. All these things are written, and if you wish, you can find them in the book. They are a matter of history. And then this wide country through, where was the hustings that did not ring with these denunciations of railway subsidies. Where are the Grits, who to-day move and live and have their being in the militant ranks of the party, that did not then use their maxim guns and quick-firing apparatus over and over again on the hustings. What since happened? To-day we have the Minister of Railways arising and challenging any intelligent man to stand up and oppose the system of granting subsidies to railways. Why, he says, the country would stand still if you did not do it: it is against all progress; only fools would contend against a policy of this kind. And he is not content with going that far, but has made a distinct departure.

But for the tender susceptibilities of the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards), I would expatiate more upon this last proposition of the Minister of Railways and Canals. But I forbear, on his account and on his account alone. What was it we used to hear?—Protection the bane and curse of Canada; protection the rampart of the monopoly holder; protection the feudal castle of the robber baron from which he sallied down and took the hard earnings of the burghers and peasants living on their ill-tilled lands. But now the Minister of Railways and Canals is going to propose—and the hon. member for Russell will obediently vote for it—that you are to make it an absolute condition that a man shall not buy steel rails where he wants to. Alas and alas for freedom of purchase. Alas and alas! for the statement that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) so eloquently directed to the voting bulk of the population showing that it was intolerable that people should be dictated to by tariff legislation where they should purchase their tea and their cottons, and so on. But the Minister of Railways and Canals with the consent of the right hon. gentleman, with the consent of the hon.

member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), with the consent of the hon. member for Russell, actually puts into legislation that if a set of men propose to build a railway and to avail themselves of the assistance the government offers them those men shall be told: Go down to my one factory of steel rails and buy your steel rails there, or you shall not get the subsidy that the government has provided for you. Where is free trade? Where is the liberty of purchase? We are living in growing times, in moving times; and the Grit party seems to have grown out of any semblance of respect for its previous pledges and its previous principles—if we go to the length, by way of courtesy, of saying that they ever had principles or ever made pledges based upon conviction in regard to these things. The Minister of Railways and Canals flouts at the demand which is made that the loyal commons of this country shall have a little of the information that the minister has as to these lines of railway, upon which information, of course, after a well-reasoned investigation, he and his colleagues have decided to choose these railways to receive the benefit of subsidies. He flouts the assertion that any information was ever laid on the Table of the House before; and he asserts in that large and generous way which is peculiar to him that it was never known that any information was laid on the Table of the House at such a period as this. On these points, let us have a word or two. I take up Hansard of 1894, and I find that on the 19th day of July of that year the railway subsidies came up for discussion. I find that the leader of the opposition of that time said:

Several times in the past we have had to complain of the manner in which these resolutions for railway subsidies were introduced in this House. In fact, every time they have been introduced they have been introduced as they have been to-day, within thirty-six hours of prorogation, and this year the proceeding is worse than ever, because formerly, as a rule, we have had the correspondence on which these resolutions are based placed in our hands at least twenty-four hours before the day set for the discussion, but this year we have not had a word of correspondence until twelve o'clock to-day—

Now, there is a statement made by the present Prime Minister, the leader of the opposition in 1894. I presume his statement was correct—I have no doubt it was. I have perfect recollection that, not all the correspondence was brought down—we do not ask that to-day—but that the principal papers relating to these matters were laid on the Table in time for the members to have a look at them before the discussion came on. There is my answer to the large and generous assertion of the Minister of Railways and Canals that such a thing had never been known. I refer him to his own Prime Minister:

—until twelve o'clock to-day, when the minister placed on the Table a batch of letters which it has been utterly impossible for any one to go through before this discussion came up. I enter my protest against such proceedings.

Will the right hon. gentleman help me to protest now? What was right as a principle of legislation in 1894 is correct now. I shall wait with great anxiety to see whether the right hon. gentleman will rise in his place after I sit down, and, turning around to his Minister of Railways and Canals, will say to him: Sir, I protest with all my force that you should have had these letters down at least at twelve o'clock—you should have had them twenty-four hours before, in order that we might have a look at them, and have some of the information that you yourself have. Will the right hon. gentleman make that protest? No. Why? Because he had no conviction when he made this protest in 1894, and he has just as much just now. Further, he says:

I enter my protest against such proceedings; the session has lasted four months, and the government have had more time than was necessary to prepare these resolutions.

Will the right hon. gentleman rise and say to his Minister of Railways and Canals: The session has lasted five and a half months, and you have had infinite time for the preparation of these resolutions; why did you not prepare them and bring them down earlier? Will he say it? No. Is the principle he enunciated in 1894 right to-day? Yes. Why, then, will he not protest? Because he had no conviction in 1894 in regard to this matter, and he has just as much now. Still further he says:

How is it possible that this House can discuss these resolutions intelligently, covering as they do about sixty different railway schemes and involving an amount aggregating over three millions of dollars?

Will the Prime Minister rise when I am through and turn to his Minister of Railways and Canals and say: How is it possible for the House to discuss these resolutions of yours intelligently—resolutions involving $3,500,000? No, he will not. Why? Because he was talking to the gallery then as he will talk to the gallery now. There was no conviction in either case, and again:

It is quite impossible, under such circumstances, that any man in this House can give intelligent attention to this question.

It is equally impossible to-day, if it was impossible then. Well, Sir, Mr. Mills, the present Minister of Justice was in the House at that time, and he followed up in the line of the right hon. gentleman who was then leading the opposition. I am not going to read what Mr. Mills said, but it will be found at 6380 of Hansard of 1894. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) was also in the House. And what did he say:

Mr. FOSTER.

This abuse is one of long standing, and therefore, all the worse. We ought, in all conscience, at the time of the budget or about that time, get a description of what our obligations are, and what further obligations it is proposed the country should incur.

Was that right in 1894? Was it uttered by a sane and honest man? Is it any less right to-day? Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce any less sane and honest than he was in 1894? Why is he not here to make the same statement to-day, or why was not he in his place as the strong member for the province of Ontario to see that these resolutions came down about the time of the budget, so that we might know what our obligations were, and have time to consider them? But he is not here, the big policeman is on strike. He goes on to say:

Here we have had a long discussion as to the railways of the country, as to the extent of our resources, and our obligations, and, all told, there are about four millions of dollars of obligations of which we had no hint the time the discussions were going on. More than that, every human being knows that this practice of putting these railway resolutions off until the end of the session is carried on for the express purpose of stifling and preventing inquiry.

Was it true in 1894? Is it not equally true now? Who are attempting to prevent investigation and stifle inquiry? The Minister of Trade and Commerce himself, the Prime Minister, and all those who howled so in 1894, and further:

It is owing largely to that that the very objectionable grants in the past have been through from time to time. We have no opportunity of getting printed what meagre information is given us—

There again the information was given, but the complaint is that there was not time to get it printed so that it could be examined before the legislation was asked:

—so that the majority of the members can avail themselves of it. One or two may possibly look through the returns which are brought down—

So you see, 'one or two may possibly look through the returns which are brought down,' showing that they were brought down.

—but the great body of the members in the House know nothing of them, and vote on all these things in the most perfect ignorance of what they are doing.

Well, Sir, Mr. Mulock was in the House at that time, Mr. Mulock is a member of this government, he is not in his seat to-day. What does he say?

I concur in the remarks that have fallen from my hon. friends, and I think they could have put the case with even greater force.

He says amen to every denunciation I have read, but he puts a caution on that, he does not think it is quite as strong as it ought to be.

We are called upon not only to consider the propositions involved in these resolutions, but we ought by rights to consider the whole situation with a view of determining whether this is the wisest mode in which to grant aid in promotion of railway enterprises.

And so on through half a page.

One-half the House has gone home. A week ago the government gave notice that practically the work of the session was over; to-day we have scarcely more than one-half the House sitting, and not one of us has had an opportunity of communication with the outside world before we are asked to vote away public money.

The claim was not that they had not the papers, they were on the Table, brought down that day at twelve o'clock; but the complaint was that they had not time to have them printed, had not time to communicate with the outside world, with the public, before they voted away the public money.

It is on a line, Mr. Speaker, of the financial administration of this government.

How about it to-day?

They are practically engaged in wrecking the finances of Canada to-day.

So said Mr. Mulock then. How is it now? Look at last year. Yes, Sir, you have old, accomplished and professional wreckers who are wrecking the finances of this country to-day. There they sit, accomplished hands who know just how to do it. Any man who sat here last night and saw us go through at race horse speed the 800 political votes in the supplementary estimates of seven and a quarter million dollars, will agree that this is on a par with the financial administration of this government—estimates which were only entered into on the 161st day of the session, when the House was decimated and the members away, and no opportunity to communicate with the outside public. That is what was being done in 1894, so say these members. Where is the Postmaster General to-day to give us his opinion about that? He said:

A government that has shown less regard for the finances of Canada has never occupied the Treasury benches since we have had responsible government. Hon. members may be surprised. I am but voicing, as I believe, the sentiments of the thoughtful people of Canada.

Well, the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), to go from greater to less, from large to small, the hon. member for North Wellington occupied a seat in this House at that time. He had his voice on this subject, as he generally had on all subjects, from the carpets and spoons in Government House up to millions of dollars to a railway company, always on the line of rigid economy, based upon indestructible Puritan principle with regard to the management of the public finances of a country. What did he say:

I concur in the views expressed by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock).

How natural it is, and how long continued it has been, this concurrence with the member for North York. They concurred when they were in opposition on the Governor General's salary, they concurred that it ought to be reduced—on the reduction of the salaries of ministers, altogether too high, and ought to be reduced. A beautiful and sentimental concurrence. On the matter of expenditures all through they concurred. Since this government has been in power how beautifully the stream of concurrence rolls on—never a ruffle, not even the dimple that a small pebble thrown into water would cause to circulate towards the shore, has yet been discernible in this unrestrained and constant concurrence between the member for North Wellington and the member for North York. He goes on to say:

I concur in the views expressed by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) with regard to the objects and aims of the government in bringing up these resolutions and forcing them through an almost empty House.

How full is the House to-day?

Now, they are setting on foot here about forty railway schemes, with regard to which there is not one tittle of evidence that a financial basis is already laid down with the view of carrying out these schemes.

What about the thirty or forty grants to-day? Is there any information, any tittle of evidence?

Many of them are new, just recently formed under a charter, or the renewal of an old charter. The government are virtually offering bonuses to some particular corporation that will control the charter for three or four years, and peddle it around with the hope of being able to make money out of it. It is a most debasing and demoralizing scheme from beginning to end. It is a very great pity that the Tory party are driven to such extremes that they are compelled to carry on a corrupting system of this kind—

Does the hon. gentleman object to a system of this kind?

—by offering to build with the people's money, or to subsidize, roads through sections of country where they think they may possibly secure some political interest in their favour. It is done for that purpose. Before the last three elections we always had these subsidies brought down, new schemes set on foot, members sent home with the announcement to their constituents that they have got a grant towards the construction of a road through some portion of the constituency that they represent, and they will, no doubt, say that if the government is only sustained—

How beautifully he hits off the present.

—if the government is only sustained the probabilities are that the road will be built, and if they are not sustained, of course they cannot hope to get any aid. These will be the arguments used.

No doubt, now, as well as then.

Now, I sincerely deplore the condition to which political morality has dropped, as exhibited by hon. gentlemen opposite.

In this concrete instance, because he was speaking particularly with regard to railway subsidies.

Any scheme, any movement, any sacrifice of money that will possibly contribute to their retaining their positions on the Treasury benches, is resorted to unblushingly and without the least hesitation.

But, last night, near the midnight watches, a member of this government rose and announced that they had carried the constituency in the province of Prince Edward Island for which a vote for $10,000 passed through last night which had been promised previously by the Premier of that province, to be used as a threat, on the one hand, and as an inducement, on the other, to the community to vote right, and, consequently, to get the expenditure in their locality.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How many years had that vote been standing?

Mr. FOSTER. How many years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It served its purpose for hon. gentlemen opposite. It was there dangled, until at last, in a critical extremity, the Premier of the province had to go down and make a solemn oath that this time it would be carried out, if they would only vote right. Last night the promise was carried out, when it was found that they had voted right. What is the necessity of multiplying testimonies? The book is full of them. Every Hansard, from 1882, is full of them, up to 1896. After 1896 there is a wonderful change in the style and tone of Hansard literature in that respect. We cannot find a protest from any Liberal member in the Hansard, from 1896 up to the present time, in reference to this matter; not one. Here is another illustration, that I did not sooner see, in the year 1894. Then, a protest was made so strong because the information had come down late that the subsidies actually were allowed then by the government to stand over at the request of the opposition until they had had an opportunity of looking into the papers which were brought down so as to be placed in a position to fairly investigate and fairly look into them. For what purpose have I risen to-day? To call the people's attention to this, because I would not have spent one single bit of time or one atom of breath in appealing to hon. gentlemen opposite. They are passed any salvation in that respect, but I still have hopes that the great heart of the people beats right. My aim in getting up before this House and making these statements to-day is, to show again, for the thousandth time, before the people, as an object lesson, the lack of conviction of hon. gentlemen opposite, both in promises and in positions taken by them, the utter and absolutely polar contradiction of their working when they are in office, and of their statements, pledges and promises when they are out of office. Now, let us be candid and let us get down to the real position. Why am I making this statement? It is a statement which ought to make hon. gentlemen opposite think, a statement which contrasts their past professions with their present performances, and it is a statement which is to go to the country to show the direful change with regard to the public in a party which make solemn pledges when out of power and consistently repudiate them when they get into power. The position of the Liberal-Conservative party is clear. In 1882 they adopted the principle of aiding in this new country the building of meritorious lines of railway and of giving a small proportion of the cost by way of subsidy. Each one was to be taken on its merits. That government is open to criticism, as every government is, as to whether every railway which received aid was a meritorious road or not. You might contend, and contend successfully, that roads were aided that should not have been aided, but I assert the policy of the Liberal-Conservative government was to aid deserving roads, to pick out from the large number of applications those which were the most deserving, and in so far as the treasury would allow to grant them some assistance. That is the position of the Conservative party to-day. We are not opposed to railway subsidies as a whole. We are not opposed to aiding necessary works in this new country, although, personally, I take the ground that the time is rapidly coming, if it has not altogether come, when we can afford to allow capital in this country to aid the development of the country in reference to railways, except maybe in some very large undertakings, which are national in their character, and which would appeal, therefore, to the national fund. We are in favour of the granting of judicious aid. All I want to do, and I think I have done it, is to call to these hon. gentlemen's minds the professions they made and the utter and absolute contradiction they are making to-day of all these professions in reference to the expenditure of the country.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I would not have risen to make any reply to my hon. friend if it had not been for the very discourteous manner in which he referred to me as a humble member of this House, when I was in opposition, in criticising public expenditure. He said that I was in the habit then of dealing with expenditures in connection with such things as spoons and carpets. There is one thing I have to say to the hon. gentleman, and it is, that I never stole any other man's spoons, nor have I ever treacherously trod upon any other man's carpet. The hon. gentleman says that he objects first to the principle embodied in the resolutions regarding the purchase and use of steel rails manufactured in Canada on roads built in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that it is worth while making a denial, but I may say that I did not object. I simply showed the amazing inconsistency of hon. gentlemen opposite in proposing it.

Mr. McMULLEN. All I have to say is, that it has been the policy of the people of Canada, both of the Reform government in Toronto, in the province of Ontario, as well as of governments elsewhere, to pay a bounty to encourage the production of pig iron in Canada. We have done in this House that which has been done in Ontario. Having brought about by an act of that kind the production of pig iron, the next step is to encourage the production of steel rails. We admit steel rails free into Canada at this present moment. The measure which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals now brings before the House simply provides that if, in the opinion of the minister, steel rails manufactured in Canada are equal in quality to those which are imported, the party getting the bonus shall use Canadian steel rails. There is nothing wrong in regard to that. Allow me to say to my hon. friend, that if the present government brought down bonuses to roads on the same principle that he brought them down when he was in power, I should undoubtedly oppose them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, but what is the position to-day? Every railway that receives a bonus from this government receives it on the condition that any work performed in the carriage of mails or otherwise shall be applied to the payment of interest at the rate of 3 per cent on the subsidy. I challenge the hon. gentleman to get up now and tell this House of one single road in Canada to-day that is not earning enough now to pay interest at the rate of 3 per cent on $3,200 per mile.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no such provision in the statutes.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is such a provision in regard to the bonuses that are granted.

Mr. FOSTER. None.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister of Railways has brought in a law which provides that any road getting a grant to the extent of $3,200 a mile or $6,400 a mile, if that road earns in its operation a sum sufficient to enable it to pay 3 per cent upon the money so granted, it shall be applied for that purpose. That is the law to-day. Under that law we are granting aids to roads, and in doing so, we are simply making them a loan. It is not a grant; it is a mere assistance.

Mr. BERGERON. Where do you find that law?

Mr. McMULLEN. Although the Conservatives boast of possessing all the statesmanship and wisdom that is to be found in Canada, they never had the statesmanship to inaugurate a principle of that kind. It remained for the present government to inaugurate this improved policy of granting this assistance to roads, and if they brought down these resolutions in the old Conservative way, they certainly would have my opposition. Look at the condition of things which existed under the bonuses granted by hon. gentlemen opposite. Take the Carquet Railway owned and operated and constructed by Burns, who sat in this House many years ago. There was one of the most scandalous pieces of extravagance. It was in fact pledging the resources of this country for party purposes, and $620,000 of the money of the people was given towards the construction of that road. Where is it to-day? It is in the sheriff's hands, and not an engine or a train is running over it. It is lying there as a monument of the recklessness of the Conservative government in granting railways bonuses. Where is there an instance of the present government granting assistance to a scheme of that kind. Show me and I will vote against it. I admit that it is desirable that railway subsidies should be brought down in fairly good time. When we advocated that principle in opposition, we advocated it honestly. Perhaps we were not as fully aware of all the difficulties that beset ministers in coming to a mature decision as to whether, and what roads should be aided or not, as we now are when we are on the Treasury benches. There is no doubt that there is great difficulty in deciding on these applications. For instance, the Minister of Railways must have the advice and consult with his confreres before it is possible for him to mature his scheme. I admit that it would be well if the railway subsidies could be brought down earlier in the session, but hon. gentlemen opposite have kept us day in and day out, and night in and night out, talking; everlastingly talking about matters that are absolutely frivolous, in place of giving the government an opportunity to bring forward the business of the session. There was no end to their wind, and they have all become Davins, whatever is the matter with them this parliament, with the result that the public business could not be transacted. I congratulate the government on the new scheme they have adopted in granting aid to railways. I believe that every one of these roads that are proposed, if they are built, will easily earn a sum that will enable them to pay back into the treasury of this Dominion 3 per cent of the money that is advanced and which we are borrowing at 2½ per cent. Is not that a great improvement upon the method adopted by the Tory government, which gave the money away and asked nothing in return. Yes, Sir, it is a very great improvement, and the government are to be congratulated upon it.

Mr. W. C. EDWARDS (Russell). I do not rise, Sir, because I have been challenged by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Foster). I intended to speak on this question anyway. It is not my desire to embarrass, in any respect whatever, my own political friends; nor do I particularly care about gratifying hon. gentlemen opposite. I say, Sir, that any principle I hold, I will advocate in this House, so long as I am a member of parliament, and I will advocate it outside the House as well. I am a well known free trader. I recognize fully that Canada has lived for many years under the terrible disease inflicted upon her by protection. I was the first man who said in this House some years ago, that free trader as I was, I would not apply the remedy in such a drastic way as to destroy the patient. If you ask me whether an immediate fiscal revolution would be desirable in the interests of the people of Canada, my answer is that I believe it would. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to see that sudden revolution under our present conditions, because of the immediate deleterious effects, that I know it would have. I will support no government which does not as rapidly as the conditions will permit—and perhaps more rapidly than a great many men would desire—bring about the freest trade in Canada that possibly can prevail. I dissent, and I dissent absolutely from the proposition laid down by the Minister of Railways, which imposes upon the buyers of railway material, a condition which will not permit of them buying their steel rails in any way and in any place they choose. If they can buy with advantage from a Chinaman, I say: Let them buy from that Chinaman. The proposition made by the minister (Mr. Blair) is a retrograde step. I believe, Sir, that the remedy for protection as it exists today should be brought about gradually. I am not prepared to condemn the government because they do not hasten on improvidently towards the goal of free trade, but I as a free trader, must protest against any advance being made in perpetuating the protective system. I consider that this proposal is an advance, and a very improper advance, in that direction.

Mr. McMULLEN.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am also like my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards), a free trader, though, perhaps, I am not as sound in the faith as he is.

Mr. BERGERON. But you have the free trade medal.

Mr. FOSTER. The member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) should get that now.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that I am guilty of any departure from the principles of the Cobden Club in this matter. Whilst I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) entirely, that every man should be free to buy wherever he wants to buy, I will call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the proposition which we have placed in this resolution is not a departure from that principle. No one will be compelled to buy in any other market than that which he desires to buy in.

Mr. FOSTER. But you fine him if he does not.

The PRIME MINISTER. We do not. If parliament chooses to decide in favour of a Canadian enterprise, such as the building of a railway, it is no violation of the principle, if we say to the man to whom we offer the bounty: You can have the bonus if you want it for the construction of your railway, but we make it a condition that if you can buy your steel rails in Canada, at the same price that you can buy them abroad, then you should buy from a Canadian producer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is what we are doing, and I do not know that we are, in any way, deviating from the principles of free trade. Of course, the constructor of the railway will be at liberty to do as he pleases. He will be at liberty to buy abroad or not to buy. But, after all, is it not a fair thing to say, that if we aid a Canadian to build a railway, we should also say to him: You in your turn should give help to the Canadian manufacturer of steel rails.

Perhaps my hon. friend will not agree with me; perhaps he will think this is a deviation from the principles which he and I hold dear; but this is the answer which I have to make to my hon. friend, and I invite him to look at it seriously from the point of view I have taken; we do not by law compel any man to buy in any market which he does not wish to buy in. If we were to introduce a law to that effect, then my hon. friend and I should agree; but we make the acceptance of our policy purely optional on the construction of a railway, and do not make it an absolute condition. My hon. friend from York has reiterated the complaint made in former years that these subsidies are brought in late. He said, quoting my words, that the House had not the necessary information until the resolutions were actually before the House, and speaking of me he said: 'He had no conviction then, he has no conviction now.' The hon. gentleman repeated these words three or four times, so pleased was he with them; but when a man by his own confession has had moments of weakness, no doubt he thinks that is also the case with others. If the hon. gentleman wanted to quote me correctly, why did he not quote everything I said? In the session of 1894, I complained that there was no information laid on the Table of the House in regard to the railway resolutions, though we had again and again made requests that all information relating to them should be placed on the Table before the resolutions were moved. I am not aware that any such demand has been made on this occasion. In 1894, the Minister of Railways said:

Nearly every one of the resolutions which the House will be asked to consider, giving assistance to any road, is in favour of a road that has already been in existence, some portions of it built, and it is for the extension of these roads that the assistance is asked.

That was the excuse why the information was not brought, and it is an excuse on this occasion also.

Nearly all the roads have been under consideration by the House in previous sessions, and the House has had their favourable qualities explained.

That was the explanation then given, and it may be repeated on this occasion.

Nearly every one is a necessity, for only those that were absolutely necessary were included in these resolutions as worthy of assistance. With reference to the lateness in bringing down the correspondence, it is only two days since I got the resolutions through council. It was impossible for the department to make copies faster than we did, though I gave instructions at once.

What was the position I took then? I said:

I will withdraw one-half of my charge, and blame the hon. gentleman for having brought his resolutions down so late.

When the Minister of Railways at that time informed me that it had been impossible for him to get the information earlier, I accepted his statement at once, and said: 'I withdraw one-half of my charge.' In the face of that, what becomes of the statement of the hon. gentleman that I had no conviction then and that I have no conviction now? I leave him to the statement he made.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (Western Assiniboia). I will tell the hon. gentleman what becomes of that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. You will?

Mr. DAVIN. And I may tell him this, that last session, when it was proposed by leading members on this side of the House who are now within my hearing that in resentment of conduct which was disgraceful on the part of hon. members opposite the Prime Minister should be received as they received certain hon. members on this side of the House, I said: 'I won't have it; don't do it in resentment of anything that may have been done to me; treat the Prime Minister with respect.' I want to show what becomes of the statement of my hon. friend from York, that the Prime Minister had no convictions in 1894, and has no convictions now. What that means is this, that when two or three days before prorogation the Minister of Railways comes down with resolutions for vast subsidies without laying any correspondence on the Table in reference to them, the Prime Minister sits there quietly and never protests against what he protested against in the strongest terms when he was on this side of the House. If it was wrong in 1894 not to bring the correspondence down late, is it not tenfold more wrong in 1900, on the part of a Minister of Railways led by the hon. gentleman who protested in 1894? What the hon. member for York pointed at was the inconsistency of the hon. gentleman, so glaring that it is impossible to account for it in any other way than the way in which the right hon. gentleman accounted for the action of his Minister of Trade and Commerce at a celebrated dinner, where he told his hearers and Canada and the world that for seventeen years his Minister of Trade and Commerce had been playing a false part, had been uttering opinions in this House and on the hustings while all that time he hugged to his bosom opinions totally different from those expressed. Therefore, taking the description of him given by his leader at that dinner, we have to say of that hon. gentleman—how can you say anything else?—he had no convictions at any time during those years, and he has no convictions now. But if we have to credit the Minister of Trade and Commerce with convictions, then, in proving traitor to those convictions, in all those years, he stands in a worse, a maligner character.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is he now?

Mr. DAVIN. When the hon. Minister of Railways commenced to make that extraordinary speech in regard to these resolutions, the Minister of Trade and Commerce adopted a ruse de guerre which is characteristic of this ministry: he disappeared from the Chamber in order to deprive of point such comments and quotations as the hon. member for York has made. It would have been edifying to watch the countenance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he had been in his place as my hon. friend read his utterances in 1894. So with the Postmaster General, who was not present either. It would have been edifying to have watched his face while my hon. friend read those excerpts; and it was most edifying to watch the demeanour of the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) when he rose in his place to reply. Why, Sir, the excited state of that hon. gentleman when rising to defend his conduct has only a parallel in the excited condition of the Minister of Railways when rising to make what we supposed would be a statement. We thought that at the instigation of the leader of the opposition the Minister of Railways would have got up and told us what he proposed to do with regard to giving us information; and what did he do? He was well described as going through a pantomimic pugilistic exercise for the benefit of the gallery.

At One o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. DAVIN. Before recess, I was dealing with the hon. gentleman's reference to an article which appeared in the Mail and Empire. Was the writer of that article without justification when he said that the bonuses so far proposed this session for 720 miles of railway, on a sliding scale basis, aggregating, at $6,400 per mile, $4,508,000, will be paid? That depends very much on the railway projectors and contractors. It depends on whether the conditions will come into existence that would compel the payment of this sum. But the hon. minister must have had another object in directing our attention to this article. He no doubt did it because he resented the fact that when he was about to bring forward those extravagant bonuses to railways, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who had always denounced such bonuses, suddenly decamped, and this article does not so much deal with the Minister of Railways as with the position of the government, as illustrated in the person of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The writer begins by quoting the Winnipeg Tribune, which is the true Liberal organ in the west, the organ that is regarded by all Liberals in the North-west and Manitoba as the real Liberal organ. That paper denounced railway bonuses as barefaced robbery. The writer calls attention to the fact that Sir Richard Cartwright in other days, wrote a strong letter to the Patrons, which I will refer to in a moment, and then goes on to refer to the tribute pronounced on that hon. gentleman by the First Minister:

Sir W. Laurier, in his recent tribute to Sir Richard, drew two remarkable pictures of the venerable knight. In the first place, he declared that for eighteen years Sir Richard had stated what was untrue to the public on the tariff question. Viewing Sir Richard in the light of this eulogium, it might be safe to conclude that his anti-bonus speeches and writings were as deceptive as his free trade deliverances. But then Laurier gives us a second picture of the knight. He says Sir Richard opposes in council projects which he believes to be wrong; but appears in public and supports them in a most loyal and manly fashion once the government has decided to push them through. Canada, Sir Wilfrid adds, little knows how much it owes to Sir Richard for doing that sort of thing. This description of Sir Richard's attitude suggests that possibly he is convinced that the subsidies are 'bare-faced robberies,' and that he supports the steals after his colleagues have agreed to them, with a view to increasing Canada's volume of indebtedness to him. Whatever may be the proper explanation of Sir Richard's changed position towards the subventions, one thing is certain, namely, that he is doing those things that he said he would leave undone. What is more, he is doing them with a vengeance. He and his friends are not content with giving subsidies; they must actually donate them at twice the old rate. The 'reckless Tory horde' asked in their day $3,200 a mile as grants to railways. But the economical new Liberals, who were to have stopped the grants altogether, provide in their Subsidy Bills that the bonus may climb up, according to the cost of the railway, to as high as $6,400 a mile.

I have here the letter which the Minister of Trade and Commerce wrote to the innocent Patrons, and in that letter what did he say about railway bonuses? Having declared that on the question of the tariff, the Liberal party saw eye to eye with the Patrons, and having denounced the ministers of that day as ignorant charlatans who had foisted this precious protective system on Canada in 1878, he asked what are the other planks in the Patron platform:

Economy of administration, purity and independence of parliament, a tariff for revenue only, reciprocal trade, protection from labour monopolies, no railway bonuses.

And he added:

Now, there is no single one of all these objects which the Liberal party have not been fighting for, moving resolutions for, and doing their best to obtain any time during the past twenty years.

And so they were, not only the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but the Prime Minister also. Can any one doubt what the leader of the opposition has said that not one of them had any principles in 1894 or has any now? Talk of the principles, there is not a child in Canada who would not laugh if any one were to credit any of the leading members of the administration with principles.

The right hon. the leader of the government sought to make out that his government is to-day, with regard to these bonuses, in the same position as that in which the government of 1894 stood. I propose to show that it is not in the same position, but even if it were that could not be a justification for his policy, because in 1894 he condemned the government on that policy and also condemned them for not having brought down the subsidies in time and for not having brought down the information with regard to these subsidies in time. Yet, to-day, his Minister of Railways comes forward to propose these resolutions, without having placed the requisite information on the Table. Let me refer to what took place in 1894. On July 16th, Sir John Thompson moved that the House resolve itself into committee to-morrow on the railway resolutions, and the right hon. the First Minister, then leader of the opposition, said :

I would call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the fact that we have not had a particle of information in the way of correspondence which should accompany these resolutions. It will be impossible to discuss them until we have such correspondence laid on the Table.

Was the resolution pressed on the morrow ? Not at all. Mr. Haggart did not move the House into committee on them until the 19th, and before doing so he placed the correspondence on the Table, so that there is no analogy whatever between the late government's position and that of the present, and I repeat that even if there were any analogy, that would be no justification for these hon. gentlemen. Are we to be perpetually met by this defence, when we complain of the inconsistency of the administration, that something of the same kind was done in 1894. But what was done with regard to railway bonuses in 1894 is no justification for exorbitant bonuses in 1900 ? Is the time never going to arrive when these bonuses shall cease ? Ontario, in years gone by, had a lot of land to be colonized, and there was some justification for bonusing railways in that province, but at present when Ontario has reached a high position of settlement and civilization and when Quebec and the lower provinces are in the same position, it is monstrous for this government to ask us to bonus railways in these provinces. The only place where such bonuses can be justified is an unsettled country, where the railways will act as colonizers and over which we still have complete control, because we exercise all the provincial powers over the North-west Territories with regard to railways. But where you have highly organized and settled provinces, the same necessity does not exist. Where is the sense of asking us to bonus in such provinces a railway twelve miles long, another nine miles long, and another seven miles long ? Where is this going to stop ? Are you going to give a bonus for a railway three-quarters of a mile long from the manor house to the pig-sty ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why do you not move to strike them out ?

Mr. DAVIN. I would move, if hon. gentlemen opposite would support me. But what is the use of moving ? Every man pledged against these things, including the ministers, would vote me down.

The PRIME MINISTER. What was the use of moving an amendment yesterday ?

Mr. DAVIN. I thought I might be able to move the Postmaster General (Mr. Mullock). I give my honour to the House that I thought the hon. gentleman would yield to me ; and I told my friends here : They are really going to take the right course after all. If the Postmaster General had been in a more tractable mood, I could have moved him ; but he was in a stubborn mood, and I could not move him. There is no justification for these bonuses, and I protest against them. And the whole country is protesting against them. My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) is connected with an excellent paper in Winnipeg called the Voice. You would hardly think that Voice could be the same as the one that votes so continuously with hon. gentlemen opposite. But the Winnipeg Voice last week denounce these bonuses. No doubt, we shall hear from my hon. friend from Winnipeg with regard to that. Here is the Weekly Sun, a paper that professes to be, and is, I dare aver, the most truly Liberal paper in Ontario. It is not a machine paper ; it is not a paper in the hands of gold speculators ; it is not a paper like the Globe, which has abandoned the high position that a great Liberal gave it and has become a mere recreant thing in the hands of these gold seekers. The Weekly Sun is the organ of the farmers, and the leading writer is a radical of the radicals. The editor is a man well known to me, and he is a Liberal. This is what that paper says about these railway bonuses, criticism regarding which on the part of the Mail and Empire put the hon. Minister of Railways a little aside from his propriety, so that there was not that calmness of demeanour, that reticence and balance that usually characterizes that hon. gentleman's utterances. The Weekly Sun says :

Mr. Blair has introduced resolutions granting railway donations amounting to $3,943,000. Following the usual practice, he has held back the resolutions until the hour of prorogation has almost arrived, when the sittings are almost continuous, and the members, tired out after a long and wearisome session, are anxious to get to their homes.

The amount of the proposed donations is less than the sum voted a year ago, but it is just $3,943,000 too much. It is said to be fairly distributed among the people of the various provinces. As a matter of fact, but little of the money will go to the people. It will go to the political and professional promoters, and to the two great railway corporations. A good share of it will, according to Mr. Osler, go back to the politicians who make the grants, to be used for the purpose of electoral corruption. It is not the subsidies, but the taxes out of which the subsidies will be paid, that will be distributed among the people at large.

The Conservatives now have an opportunity to show that they are sincere in their professions of economy. If they do not make a fight against these donations, they will indeed prove themselves to be as a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

We will make the best fight we can, but what can we do? Here is a cast-iron majority opposing us on which no argument can make any impression. We protest and we fight as much as we can.

Now, the right hon. Premier, in reply to my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) made an argument that I think, curiously illustrates his own psychological get up. The hon. member for Russell declared that he could not support one portion of the proposition of the Minister of Railways—that portion that provides that the recipients of these bonuses must, if they can find as good conditions, buy their iron and steel in Canada. That is not exactly the wording, but that is the sense. The Prime Minister says that is not protection, but it is quite optional for the receiver of the bonus to buy in Canada or not. I do not know exactly what he means by that. If the receiver of a bonus can get iron as cheap and as good in Canada, he must buy in Canada. I do not see where the option comes in. Who is to be the judge as to whether iron can be got as good and as cheap in Canada as elsewhere? Is it the man himself? If so, the clause is worth nothing. Is it the government? If so, then this is not only protection, but it is protection with the complexion of monopoly under corrupt conditions. If the government is to decide it, the government may not only tell him: You must buy in Canada, but you put it practically into the power of the Minister of Railways to say where in Canada he shall buy, and that moment you introduce an element of corruption—you introduce an element of monopoly which is the worst form of protection. When one of these railway builders comes to the minister for a subsidy, the minister can say: I know you can get iron as good and as cheap in Canada as elsewhere, and you must buy in Canada; I know you can get them as cheap from A or B—for instance, in the establishment of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood). I do not say that would be the place, but the minister might say that. And if he said that, the person seeking the bonus would have to buy there. He is in the position of receiving benefits. That is the way the Prime Minister put it—that the railway builder receiving this bonus from Canada, what grievance would it be to compel him to buy his iron in Canada, if he bought it as cheap as elsewhere? Now, I wish to deal for a moment with my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). He grew quite dithyrambic. I thought really that he must have been reading the way the Bacchantes used to act when the frenzy came on them, and that he was giving us one of those dances that, under such conditions, those inspired persons give. Now, why did he get so excited?

Mr. DAVIN.

He was in this position, that he is supporting subsidies more extravagant than he ever denounced. He concurred in 1894 in all that was said by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, in all that was said by the Prime Minister and by the present Postmaster General. But now he gets violently excited in denouncing us because we criticise him. Now, here is the reason why he is able to support these extravagant subsidies.

Resolved, that every company receiving a subsidy under this Act, its successors or assigns, and any person or company controlling or operating the railway or portion of railway subsidized under this Act, shall each year furnish to the government of Canada transportation for men, supplies, material and mails over the portion of its line in respect of which it has received such subsidy, and, whenever required, shall furnish mail cars properly equipped for such mail service, and such transportation and service shall be performed at such rates as are agreed upon between the minister of the department of the government for which such service is being performed, and the company performing it, and in case of disagreement, then at such rates as are approved by the Governor in Council—

This is the clause that justifies the hon. member:

—and in or towards payment for such charges the government of Canada shall be credited by the company with a sum equal to 3 per cent per annum on the amount of subsidy received by the company under this Act.

Is it not palpable that that last clause, is of no value to the public in so far as carrying mails and other government business is concerned? If you run through the various items and if you ask what mails or what goods of the government will be carried over these, you will see that in nearly every instance it is merely delusive. The idea is held out to the people that they are getting something when they are getting nothing whatever of value. Take the Northwest Territories while an arrangement was made with the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway, with the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, and I think with the Alberta and Athabaska Railway; an arrangement was made for carrying police supplies and mails. That is a solid service. There you had from 800 to 1,000 mounted police to supply. But holding out that over a little branch line there is going to be a great service performed for the public—the whole thing has the appearance of mere humbug. There is nothing in it whatever, and I am surprised that a business man like my hon. friend has got so very excited on a matter so very sodawatery as this is. I will not suggest there was a reason in connection with his becoming director of one of those railways that may ultimately get a bonus, but the hon. member for Kent, Ont. (Mr. Campbell) who is one of the principal promoters of that line, would not say that they would not ask by-and-by a bonus.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What line is that ?

Mr. DAVIN. I am speaking of your transportation company. I will not say that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) by becoming a director in that transportation company, was influenced by that hope. But if he is really sincere in telling us that he has been influenced by that clause the hollowness of which I have exposed, then he is filling his belly with the east wind.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Before the House goes into committee on these resolutions, I wish to enter my protest against them. I have no past, so far as this House is concerned, at any rate, that makes my words sound as the crackling thorns under a pot, and no records that embarrass me in the position I take on these resolutions. I protest earnestly and emphatically against granting these bonuses, these bonuses in particular, and the bonus system generally. By the list we find on the Order paper of forty bonuses, it appears that the thing is now systematized. It is apparent that the bonuses are distributed over the whole country. That is probably because no member will then feel altogether free to protest against them; in fact the leader of the opposition has twitted the members of the old opposition with having, in those days, vacated their seats when bonuses affecting their districts were under consideration. But, I refuse to look on these bonuses as grants to provinces; I look upon them as bonuses to groups of men, to promoters, to politicians, to charter-mongers. If it were absolutely necessary, in order to secure the construction of railways, that this parliament should grant one-fifth the cost for that purpose, it would be a very dangerous duty to impose on any government, because it is inconceivable that it can go on long without grave abuses growing up under it. I oppose the system of bonuses because I believe the people want and are ready for a new policy; because I believe we are ready to assume a new relationship towards the railways of this country; and especially because in the past the system has resulted in erecting great corporations whom even this government seems powerless to control, and which have such a power that they are fast becoming a menace to political freedom in this country.

Mr. BERGERON. This morning when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals read the names of those forty-seven different railway companies, I asked for the amount of money given to each of them, and he gave me an answer in one case, the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Company. I understood that the paper would be put in the hands of the reporter and that he would copy the amounts, but I am told that this has not been done, so that if my hon. friend will be kind enough to read the amounts, if he has them, they will then go in Hansard. Besides that I want to ask my hon. friend if he will be kind enough to give the House the number of railway companies which have been thus subsidized, and which carry mails according to the clause which has been put in the statute by my hon. friend providing for the carrying of mails, the carrying of men or troops, or anything the government of Canada might want. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) emphasized that clause a great deal this morning. I want to find out how many railways so subsidized have been acting according to that statute. In particular I want to ask my hon. friend if the mails are carried by the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway according to that clause, and if not, why is not the statute obeyed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I intended to make a few remarks at the close of the debate, and in doing so, I shall take occasion to answer the questions that the hon. gentleman has asked, if no person wishes to speak upon the motion.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend at this late stage of the session, to take up any considerable time in discussing these railway votes. My position in regard to the railway question, and railway bonuses, is pretty well known in this country. I am utterly opposed to the system of bonusing railways, and if my memory serves me correctly, I protested against the railway subsidies last year. I believe, Sir, that the time has come when this country and this parliament ought to stop giving bonuses to railways. It seems to me a monstrous proposition, that, especially in the old settled provinces of this country, we should continue this system of railway bonuses. The fact of the matter is that the Dominion of Canada, the provinces and the municipalities, have contributed $198,000,000 in cash for the construction of railways in this country, about $50,000,000 of which went into the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. We own that road ourselves, and the statement which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was able to present to this House the other day, goes to indicate, that, under proper conditions, with shrewd and careful management, we will be able to make that road pay interest. I think that the time has come in this country when a different policy ought to be adopted in regard to railways. It is a fact that we have given this large amount in cash, and we have also given 40,000,000 acres of our best lands for the purpose of aiding railways, to say nothing of the lands which have been contributed in the province of British Columbia. It is my belief that if these lands were properly administered and adding the large amount of cash which we have given, the country has contributed in cash and lands practically sufficient to build the entire system of railways in this country. If that is a fact, does it not occur to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. members of this House, that we should own these roads ourselves. If we have built them, why should we not own them? Let us see what the experience in the Australasian colonies has been: The Australasian colonies, as hon. gentlemen know, own all the railways in the colonies, and the governments of those colonies have expended £130,000,000 in construction. The net return for the financial year 1896-7, was equal to 3.27 per cent, and as the actual rate of interest payable on outstanding loans was 3.96, the deficit on the whole system, was 0.69; so that you see, in a country that is just as sparsely settled as ours, the Australasian colonies have been able to build this vast system of railways, giving rates very much better than those which prevail in our own country, and are able practically to pay interest on the entire cost.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What are the Australasian rates?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can give the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron), the rates later on, if he will come to me. I have all the data in my desk, but I do not happen to have it available at my fingers' ends at the present moment. If this can be accomplished in the Australian colonies, why not in Canada? Are we to go on eternally bonusing these railways, and are these bonuses to be granted without any proper conditions being imposed? We are not able to exercise the control that we should, over these railways. I cannot help but feel that the country is rapidly coming to the conclusion that the time has come when this system of bonusing shall cease. We have practically paid in cash and lands for the whole of these roads, because of the double exploitation of provincial and federal parliaments. The exploitation of the provincial and Dominion treasuries has been such that we have in many instances contributed sufficient to build the entire roads which have been subsidized. If this is the case, does it not appear that the people of this country should, at least, own these railways, and should they not be in a position to exercise more control over them, or of owning them. The government should, at least, provide one transcontinental line in this country, to be under government control. That is why I protested very strongly last year against giving those vast subsidies to the Ontario and Rainy River Railway. The government of Ontario had contributed $4,200 a mile, the Dominion government $6,400 a mile, and the Greenway government had offered to contribute $1,000,000 to the same enterprise. I thought that inasmuch as these governments were giving enough to build that entire road, they should unite in owning and controlling the road, and in that way they could form a connection with the Intercolonial Railway, and we would then have a government controlled system from the wheatfields of the west to the Atlantic Ocean on the east. I do not propose to move a resolution with regard to the matter, but I would like earnestly to ask that the government should give its most careful consideration to these facts that I have presented, and if possible, let us get rid of this vicious system of the country paying for railways which are owned by private corporations, and over which little or no governmental control is exercised. The people are getting their eyes opened upon this important question. They realize that these bonuses are frequently, if not generally, given, not so much for the benefit of the country, as for the benefit of the men who ask for them. I may say in regard to many of the railway enterprises in the west, that we are constantly told that the country is contributing large sums of money for the purpose of building our railways. My own belief is that these subsidies are not pressed for, so much by the people in the west, as they are pressed for by the exploiters who expect to, and who usually do, make money out of them. For these reasons which I have presented to the House, I desire to enter my protest against these railway bonuses.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in reference to one point that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) has touched upon. I understand him to argue that we might still have railway appropriations either for government roads or for subsidized roads—that is perhaps a minor matter—that we might still have railway subsidies for roads in what he calls the new country in the west. I presume that means for roads in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. The fallacy of my hon. friend's argument is in assuming that the older provinces are well supplied with railways. There are portions of the older provinces which are yet without railway communication. I know that is so in the maritime provinces, as it is so in parts of Ontario and parts of Quebec. I can speak more particularly of the portions of the Dominion with which I am more familiar, and I know that in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia there are important sections of the country which are practically without railways at all. These people have been contributing for generations to the construction of railways elsewhere. They have contributed their share of the very large expenditures for the development of the great west. Surely, if companies can be found to give these people railways now, it is not unreasonable to say that they shall not be denied the privileges which have been given so generously to the other sections of the Dominion. It only requires a little knowledge of the conditions of the older provinces to see that the argument of the hon. members (Mr. Richardson and Mr. Puttee) is based on an entire misconception of the condition of affairs in Ontario and Quebec I think, and certainly in the maritime provinces. Undoubtedly, there are sections of our country which are, so to speak, gridironed with railways, and sometimes gentlemen representing these sections say, in a spirit of generosity, that we should cease giving railway subsidies; but, it is a fact that in parts of Ontario and Quebec, and most certainly in the lower provinces, there are considerable sections of the country which have not received the railway accommodation they need, and which is necessary to the building up of the country. I say this because I do not think that some gentlemen in the west fully appreciate the situation in the other provinces, or else they would not advance the unreasonable argument that it is all right to bonus railways in the west, but you must not bonus railways in the older provinces.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I did not say that you should bonus railways in the west and not in the east. I entirely dissent from the principle of bonusing railways, and the Minister of Finance must have misunderstood me when he attributed to me the remark that I was willing to have railways bonused in the west and not willing to have them bonused in the east. When I quoted the sum of $198,633,000 as being contributed by Canada, I meant that that sum was contributed by the Dominion, provincial and municipal authorities, and not by the federal parliament alone.

Mr. D. D. ROGERS (Frontenac). It is well known that one of the many planks in the Patron platform is against bonusing railways; and as that organization existed in every province, this plank would apply generally. It is quite evident there was some good reason for that plank being placed there. It was one of the planks that was somewhat criticised, and it was said that in some cases bonuses might be necessary. However, the argument generally was that the principle of the thing is wrong, and that it had been so abused in the past that it was time the taxpayers should call a halt with regard to it. In times past, when the country was new, there might have been more excuse for it than in the present day. We all know that instead of capital being scarce there is plenty of it on hand waiting for paying investments. There is no doubt that we should not continue the system of bonusing as we have hitherto, and if we change it at all it must be along the lines proposed by the present government, by which there is some check applied. I do not think I, individually, would object to aiding the railways if the government retained a claim over these railways so that some return might come back to the treasury, and I am glad to see there is now a move in that direction. Some people have not much hope that this idea will result in good, but, for my part, I am willing to give it a fair trial. I have not been too hide-bound in this matter. I do not think that the leader of the opposition can criticise the policy of the government very much, because when I brought in a resolution stating that we should have a lien on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, so that we might get some return for what we gave, there was not a gentleman on either side of the House to second that motion. My proposal was in the line of what the American people do with their railways, and by which they insist on getting full return for the bonuses given. I believe that the people of this country are tired of giving free gifts to railways, and in the next campaign I am certain that the people will exact from the candidates a pledge that this system must not be continued longer.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I do not desire to repeat any of the stock arguments for and against railway bonuses which are tolerably familiar to the House, but it occurred to me that I might say a word in reference to the views expressed by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee). There are two resolutions here relating to North-west roads, one the bonus given to the Canadian Northern Company for 100 miles of an extension westward towards Prince Albert, which will go through the Red Deer and, to some extent, the Saskatchewan valley; the other is the proposed bonus for the extension westward of the Waskada branch. I desire to say that the statement made that these bonuses are not pressed for by the people of the localities interested is altogether incorrect. The Waskada branch is in my own constituency, and I am familiar with all the facts. It will be a short branch, which will run through a country that is very well settled, and which, at the present time, is so situated that the farmers who, to a large extent in fact, almost exclusively engage in grain-growing, have a very long distance to transport their grain. They have pressed long and continuously for closer railway connection, and it is only a fair and reasonable measure of justice in the interest of the people there, and the country at large, that this small extension should be provided for. I may say, in regard to the general question of railways in the west, that the question is one which, in order to be understood, must be studied in the light of its history. The lack of progress in the North-west, particularly in the province of Manitoba, which was so apparent nine or ten years ago, was almost entirely due to the fact that men who had gone in to engage in grain-growing found themselves so far away from a railway that they could not profitably market their crops. It is quite true that, to a very large extent, these difficulties have been overcome, and the system of branch lines of railways which exist there at the present time meets, to a very large extent, the difficulties which formerly existed. I have no doubt it is true both in the province of Manitoba and in the eastern provinces, that there are to be found sections of the country which are well supplied with railways, and where the people are not so anxious that railway bonuses should be granted as are the people living in these sections which are not so well supplied. In other words, the people who feel the want pressing upon them are more anxious about it than the people who are already well supplied. But my own experience of the public mind on that question is that the people who are well supplied with railways are not so selfish when the matter is fairly put before them as not to be willing that their fellow-citizens shall be supplied as well as themselves, but are quite ready to approve of a liberal policy in that respect. As for the bonuses which have been granted by this House in respect to North-western railways, I think it will be found that they have conduced very largely to the settlement and proper development of the country. I think it was last session that we granted a subsidy for an extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway into the Moose Mountain country; and my hon. friend from Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) can tell my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) that a very large and fertile section of country was practically prevented from being depopulated by that extension. Another two or three years of the absence of railway facilities would certainly have depopulated that section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would it have been built without aid?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would not have been built without aid. Pressure had been brought on the company to build that line year after year, and it was impossible to induce them to build it until a subsidy was promised. Then, if you take the case of the Canadian Northern Railway, I would say to my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) that the workmen, and the mechanics whom he represents are more interested in the construction of that railway and in the filling up of those great fertile valleys with a population that would be tributary to the city of Winnipeg, than any other people in Canada—certainly much more interested than the people in immediate proximity to the road. That extension is largely for the purpose of making it possible to colonize a large and fertile territory; and it has become impossible to direct a movement of population to any part of that western country where there is not an immediate prospect of a railway, or unless a railway is already there. Fifteen or twenty years ago people would settle a long distance from a railway, accepting the promise of the government that a railway would go to a certain place: but people have been so often seriously disappointed that at the present time they will not do that. In order to secure the settlement of those fertile valleys, it is necessary to give some guarantee that a railway will be built within a short period. There is no hundred miles of railway that can be built in Canada that will be more fruitful of results than the hundred miles mentioned in that resolution. I venture to say that within a year, certainly within two years, after the railway is constructed, it will not be costing the country a dollar, because the return which the country will receive in the carriage of the mails which would otherwise have to be provided for out of ordinary revenue will be more than equivalent to the money we have contributed to it in the shape of a bonus. I do not wish to take up the time of the House: but I thought, in view of what has been said, that one or two observations would not be out of place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has asked me to inform the House as to the amounts which have been paid on subsidy account to the different railways which have contracted with the government. I did not read them before, having handed the list to Hansard, which I thought would have suffered; but as the hon. gentleman thinks it will not, I will take a few moments to read the amounts that have been received by the several companies: To the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway Company, $349,312; to the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company, $84,480; to the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, $90,400; to the St. Stephen and Milltown Railway Company, $3,648; to the Montfort Colonization Railway Company, $64,400; to the Gulf Shore Railway, $15,299; to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, $3,116,250. This is the railway from Lethbridge through to Nelson—the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. This subsidy, as hon. gentlemen may remember, was a specific sum, and was not operative under the clause.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that comprised in the forty-seven?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but not in the sixteen which I mentioned, nor in the three which received more than $3,200 a mile. It could not properly be so included, because it did not receive its subsidy under that clause. To the Drummond County Railway Company, we have paid $136,000; to the Ottawa and New York Railway Company, $172,384; to the Restigouche and Western Railway Company, $46,930; to the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company, $16,739; to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, $271,- 628 ; to the East Richelieu Valley Railway Company, $69,952 ; to the Pembroke Southern Railway Company, $64,000 ; to the Phillipsburg Railway and Quarry Company, $2,112 ; to the South Shore Railway Company, $14,725 ; to the Canada Eastern Railway Company, $8,000.

Mr. BERGERON. That is only seventeen.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I stated that there were only seventeen which had received subsidies from this government under contracts entered into by us.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood the hon. gentleman to say this morning that there were forty-seven.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me to this extent, that while we had paid subsidies to only seventeen companies, we had contracted with forty-seven, and the remaining companies had received no subsidy. The hon. gentleman asked me to inform him whether the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company had any contract with the government to carry its mails and supplies. There is no such contract clause in the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company's contract, the reason for that being that that contract was entered into before this clause was adopted in our Subsidy Acts. We introduced that clause in the last session of parliament, whereas the contract with the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Company was made in October, 1897, nearly two years before.

Mr. BERGERON. So that the speech of the hon. member for North Wellington amounts to nothing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the speech was entirely in point, because from that time to to-day there has not been any contract entered into between the government and any railway company without that clause in it.

Mr. BERGERON. Which are those ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am going to give them to my hon. friend. I was answering his question, whether the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Company had such a contract. I will now give him the names of the companies that contain that clause. All contracts entered into since July 1, 1899, contain it: the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, the St. Gabriel de Brandon and Ste. Emilie de l'Energie Railway Company, the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company, the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway Company, the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, the York and Carleton Railway Company, the Phillipsburg Railway and Quarry Company, the South Shore Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, the Nova Scotia Southern Railway Company, the Canada Eastern Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Midland Railway Company, the Central Railway of New Brunswick, the Massawippi Valley Railway Company. These contracts have all contained the clause referred to.

I would like to say a few words in answer to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Foster). As to a very great deal of the speech he has just given us, it appears to me that it would be very much more appropriate in a debating club, in which each member was trying to rival the other in rhetoric and get a little training in debate, rather than in a serious body like this. The hon. gentleman took up a great deal of time endeavouring to establish the charge of inconsistency against certain members on the Treasury benches. I might retort that having failed, despite his many efforts, to impress that view upon the country, it was scarcely worth his while taking up the time of parliament at this late day of the session in trying to impress it upon the parliament and country again. It seems to me that if the hon. gentleman were properly seized with the dignity of his position, he would leave such an attempt to gentlemen on his own side of the third or fourth rank, and that, as the acting leader of the opposition he would deem it scarcely of sufficient business importance to read for the thousandth time, at this hour, what was said by hon. gentlemen on this side on the subject of subsidies in the past, or on the lateness of the period when they were submitted to parliament. It is easy to establish the inconsistency of any public man. It would be difficult to name a public man of any importance in any country, against whom such a charge might not be established. In fact, I think there are only two instances in which we can fairly affirm that a man is not consistent. He is not inconsistent if he is a fool or if he is dead ; but there is not an honest thinking, or a sound politician, against whom you cannot quote opinions delivered at one time in opposition to those delivered at another. But are the ministers so very open to the charge in this instance ? I very much doubt it. I think it would be assumed by any one disposed to rationally consider the whole question that an expression of opinion as to when these subsidy resolutions should be brought down, could be honestly and conscientiously given, and yet those who gave them would not be open to the charge that they were entirely wanting in conviction, as the hon. gentleman has said with respect to the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet. They are not necessarily inconsistent, because when in opposition, and without that personal experience with respect to a particular class of measures, not having been in any government before which these questions actually came, they formed an opinion honestly that such measures could be brought down at an earlier period than they were brought down by hon. gentlemen opposite in their day. Hon. members know that applications of this kind come to the government continuously. They know that down to the very last moment of the session, you will have meritorious applications, well supported by the people of the particular localities concerned, strongly supported and pressed upon the government, and properly so, by members of parliament, and you have to consider them, to give them due weight, and cannot throw them aside. And when you come to mature your views with regard to them, even though it be late in the session, you have to bring them down. So it was in the days of the late government, and with the experience I have had in this administration, I do not think they were properly open to the charge of having deliberately delayed the presentation of these resolutions, but believe they were constrained to do so by the circumstances surrounding them, and to which all governments are subject. My hon. friend took the occasion to draw the inference—and I think it was a very offensive and entirely unjust inference—that because the Prime Minister expressed a strong opinion, when the late government was in office, on a certain matter, and has not in this government acted up to the full measure of that opinion, therefore, he is open to this accusation. The hon. gentleman made the charge that the Prime Minister had either no convictions then or has none now, and he asked this House, and through it the country, to assent to the proposition that the Prime Minister was not a man of conviction at all. I think that that was a very offensive statement to make, and I tell the hon. gentleman that, in my opinion, his judgment with regard to the Prime Minister will fail completely to strike a responsive chord in the judgment of the country that the fair name and fame of my right hon. friend will survive on the pages of Canadian history when that of my hon. friend, the acting leader of the opposition, as a carping, captious, and hair-splitting critic, has long been forgotten.

But is the hon. gentleman prepared to have the same measure meted out to him that he undertakes to mete out to the men who administer public affairs on this side? Does he believe that every man who expresses his firm and solid convictions on any question of public interest, who day in and day out declares that his honest judgment and conviction on any question is to be taxed later on, when he changes his mind, with not having held honestly the opinions he expressed and with being a man utterly destitute of convictions. If he is prepared to live up to that view with regard to a minister of the Crown, he must accept a similar judgment on his own record regarding important public matters, and admit that he was a man without convictions on a certain question which he declared to be a burning one. No one went before the country in the past and declaimed more loudly and with greater vehemence, and a greater appearance of sincerity than he, the opinion that prohibition was a principle that should be adopted and enforced in this country, and that the time had come when parliament could and should deal with it. I have heard the hon. gentleman myself express the opinion long years ago, before he became a minister of the Crown, before he had put on him the mantle of governmental responsibility, before he knew the difference between expressing views when he was not occupying a responsible position, and when he was clothed with all the responsibility of office—I have heard him in those days affirm that not only was this country ripe for prohibition, but rotten ripe, and yet we know the course which the hon. gentleman has since taken.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend quoting me literally?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the very words he used.

Mr. FOSTER. I never aspired to such eloquent classical language.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I think that the experience we have had of the hon. gentleman's diction in this House will justify us in saying that less elegant phraseology than I have quoted has often fallen from his lips. I have often had the opportunity of hearing the hon. gentleman speak on the question of prohibition, I went to hear what he had to say, and I well recall to mind the occasion in Fredericton when he told the people that not only was the time ripe for prohibitory legislation, but rotten ripe. My hon. friend ought to give some little evidence of modesty of disposition, which would recognize the possibility of other men falling into errors as well as himself. I have never, in this parliament or elsewhere, charged the hon. gentleman with being at all deficient in honest conviction on the prohibition question, and do not do it to-day. I have never charged him with want of sincerity when he expressed that view. But when he sees good reason to change his mind, and to recede from his position as an impossible position for a public man to hold on that subject, I think he ought to have a little sense of consideration for other men who have had occasion to change their views, on a public question, and he ought not to speak as if he occupied a position in this country too high for other men to reach, and to call upon the people to look up to him as a demi-god in these respects.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a good argument for railway subsidies.

Mr. WILSON. And a good way of getting on with the business isn't it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Though it is a little late in the session, yet I think it well that what I have said should be said. There are gentlemen who have sat in this House and allowed themselves to be lectured by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), who is not worthy to lecture anybody. I do not attach any particular blame to the hon. gentleman, as I have said, for the course he had taken on the prohibition question; but when an hon. gentleman has not only had moments of weakness, as he himself confesses, but year in and year out has suffered in a condition of prostrated judgment, I think it would be more becoming in him if he would recognize that other men as well as himself are human. I think that he and others in this parliament occupying the position of critics of the government should remember that no government with which any of the present ministers were connected ever had the present policy of railway subsidies to deal with. He should recognize that governments are largely children of circumstances in respect to the order of business in parliament; they must bow to the conditions that surround them; and that if we come late in the session to make these propositions, it is not because we do not desire to make them earlier, but that we have found it impossible to do so. Let me say a word with regard to the question that the hon. gentleman and others as well referred to—that they have not been furnished with the information, with the correspondence and so on which they desire. It is true that he has not been so furnished. But why? For the very good reason that he did not ask to have this correspondence supplied. When the hon. gentleman rose in his place after I sat down, he did not ask to have these papers submitted, but he claimed, rather, that it was the invariable practice to lay on the Table petitions and correspondence with regard to the different applications for subsidies before those subsidies were considered in this House. My experience in this House has been very limited in point of time. But since I came in I have been an observer, and before coming here I have read the Hansard reports of what took place on these occasions. And while my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has been able to refer to one instance in 1894, when the correspondence was brought down at the time when the resolutions came up for consideration, he would find it difficult to refer to many instances of that kind. What I am saying will be justified by the recollection of older members of this House. This is the 8th day since these resolutions were laid on the Table. Twenty-five of the railways affected by these resolutions have been looked into and considered by this parliament before. We are extending and revoting subsidies to twenty-five railways that we have discussed in previous sessions, and as to these the hon. gentleman is not suffering for want of information. But, I have had the correspondence here all morning, having brought it down ready to supply at the request of hon. members. If they think the time is not sufficient to enable them to give the questions such consideration as they desire, I have no doubt that further time will be given. As to the others besides the twenty-five I have mentioned, we can furnish all proper and reasonable information. Various members of the House are informed with regard to each of these railways, and know how important they are. Many of them are entirely new roads which, it is expected, will develop and improve the country. My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has referred to one important road, and this and the others can be discussed, as we reach them with the information we are able to supply. Now, before resuming my seat, I desire to say a word on one other question. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) said there was nothing in the law which made it the duty of the railway receiving the subsidy to carry the mails or render services—

Mr. FOSTER. Who said that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that across the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. I made no such statement. I have a little common sense, and can read English.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must have misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I thought he had made that statement and that it was repeated by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron.)

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) explained that provision of the statute. I did not make such a statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood that the remark was made across the floor to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen.)

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) asked me where the law made that provision.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister (Mr. Blair) would like an explanation, I can give it to him. The statement was made that the bonused railways would have to pay 3 per cent on the subsidies. I contradicted that statement. There is no such provision in the law.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) must have misunderstood me—I said that they had to pay back in earnings, if they performed services for the government.

Mr. FOSTER. That was your revised statement, but, the first time, you made the other. I do not intend to take up time following the hon. minister. He complains of having been lectured—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Spoken.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I am in order, just as much as the Minister of Railways and Canals. He spoke twice—the first time when he moved the Order of the Day. The hon. minister proves himself so stupid with reference to the rules of the House that it is necessary that he should be lectured, and I have now to deliver him another lecture—a short one. He had better read up the rules of the House. He has taken up time in a manner not sanctioned by the rules of order, but I am not going to follow his example—because he has said nothing to reply to.

Mr. T. DIXON CRAIG (East Durham). I have no intention of discussing the general question of subsidies. But I merely wish to say in starting, that I do object to having these important propositions brought down at this late stage of the session. I must vote for or against these subsidies, and when I am asked why I voted one way or the other, I must confess that I did not know what I was doing. I have not any idea about them at all. We have no time at this stage of the session to get explanations on them. Now, I think that in 1894, the Liberals were quite right in criticising the action of the Conservative government in bringing these down very late; but I think the Liberal government, too, are quite wrong in justifying their action in bringing them down as late as they do. The minister said just now, that it was not because they did not want to bring them down earlier, but because they could not. Now, I have to accept that statement, but I really do not accept it in my heart. What are the facts of the case? Suppose this session had lasted only four months, then we would not have had any subsidies at all brought down, because we have been in session over five months, and it has taken all that time to bring these subsidies before the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have had them on the paper eight days.

Mr. CRAIG. Yes, eight days, and the House has met every day at eleven o'clock in the morning and discussed other matters. Now, what time have members to discuss these subsidies during the last few days of the session? I hold there is no time at all to discuss such important matters. I have not had time to do it. I have only had time to get up in the morning and get my breakfast, come up here at eleven o'clock, and sit here till after midnight, and then go home and get to bed; and besides, I have been doing that these last few days at my own expense, unfortunately. That might be some excuse to my constituents when I have to tell them that I do not know anything about these items, it is because I was not paid to know anything about them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Has not that ten-cent business materialized yet?

Mr. CRAIG. I have not had time to go round yet.

Mr. MORIN. There is a good time coming.

Mr. CRAIG. Now, we have had to-day a good sample of what we have had all this session. I have made no charge that the government side were prolonging this session, but I think to-day has been an example of what we have had all the session. I maintain that the opposition is here to criticise the government, that is our business; and I hold there is no reason at all to blame the acting leader of the opposition because he does criticise, and sometimes criticises a little strongly. That is his duty, he is here for that purpose; and I hold that the Minister of Railways and Canals has no right to get up and lecture him on prohibition and all that sort of thing, and charge him with inconsistency. Evidently the Minister of Railways and Canals does not want to be criticised at all. We have seen several times during this session, that when members of the opposition have criticised these matters, members on the government side have got up and have taken up just as much time, or more time, than the members of the opposition. I hold they have no right to do that, when they find fault with the members of the opposition for taking up time, because it is the function of an opposition to criticise. I say there has been no obstruction this session on the part of the opposition. I heard an hon. member this morning call out something about blocking progress. Surely the cabinet is blocking the way, in bringing down such important measures so late; surely the voting of three millions and a half of money deserves some discussion. I repeat that I cannot give an intelligent vote on every one of these resolutions, and I complain that we have not time to consider them properly.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee on the resolutions.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. Now that we are in committee, perhaps the minister might give the rest of that prohibition speech.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the only point that struck me.

1. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated), which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of 50 per centum on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as shall be in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile. The expression 'cost' used in this resolution means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost, and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge, up to and not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus, but shall not include the cost of equipping the railway, nor the cost of terminals and right of way of the railway in any city or incorporated town; and such actual, necessary and reasonable cost shall be determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals and upon the report of the chief engineer of government railways, certifying that he has made or caused to be made an inspection of the line of railway for which payment of subsidy is asked, and careful inquiry into the cost thereof, and that in his opinion the amount upon which the subsidy is claimed is reasonable, and does not exceed the true, actual and proper cost of the construction of such railway, the lines of railway being as follows, that is to say:—

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any change in this from the clause in the previous subsidies?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the minister to tell us shortly, how he proceeds to satisfy himself in the case of a road that claims more than $3,200?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer sends one of his engineers over the road in question, when application for the payment of a subsidy is made, after the road is constructed. It will be impossible for us to have frequent visits made by the engineers during the progress of the work, but after the work is completed, we send an engineer, and he makes a report. If the sum claimed exceeds the normal and usual amount of $3,200, he then makes a very careful inquiry as to the cost of the work. He gets a statement from the company as to what the road has cost, they are required to furnish vouchers, establishing the cost, and that will be required with more particularity in cases where there is the slightest doubt as to whether the cost would entitle the company to the double subsidy. There is only one case in which the full amount of the double subsidy was applied for and granted, that is the case of the St. Lawrence and Adirondack. Our engineers reported that the cost of the road was far and away above the amount required to pay the double subsidy. I think any one who has travelled over the St. Lawrence and Adirondack road and has noted the road-bed, the rails and the grade, will agree that the subsidy was well earned.

Mr. BERGERON. A first-class road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where there is any doubt that the amount is likely to be less than $6,400, or not over that sum, then an inquiry is made very particularly, in the first place, as to what the company paid for it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is especially of their accounts and vouchers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. And then the engineer himself goes over the work, makes his estimate and forms his judgment as to whether that amount is a reasonable cost, because you will find that the clause requires that we shall not only know the cost, but that it must be a reasonable cost.

Mr. FOSTER. Is any rolling stock or equipment counted in?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, that is not taken into account in estimating the cost of the road.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, we have had a statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals as to how he gets at the cost when it is more than $3,200 a mile. After the road is constructed, after which it is almost impossible for any man, even an engineer, to make a close estimate of the cost of construction as he has not seen the construction, he makes his estimate. He simply sees the finished road.

Mr. GIBSON. It is easier afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. The chief engineer of railways does not agree with the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), because the chief engineer has put it in a report that it is very difficult to make an estimate after the road is all finished. I should think if any business man would have the same idea, because the work is all covered up.

Mr. GIBSON. All the rails and ties can be seen, the tunnels are all to be seen, the character and extent of the grading can be ascertained by levels, and the whole work can be better seen after it is done than before.

Mr. FOSTER. The work can be seen, but it stands to reason that no man can estimate the cost of labour and construction in a finished road after the work is entirely covered up.

Mr. CHARLTON. What part of the road that is finished is covered up?

Mr. FOSTER. That is one point. After the road is finished—

Mr. CHARLTON. What part of the road that is completed is covered up, so that an examination of the work after its completion cannot take in every part of the work? Can you not measure the cubical contents of the embankments, the cubical extent of the excavations, count the number of ties, ascertain the weight of the rails to the yard, the amount of timber used, the number of cattle guards and everything else? Everything is there to be examined after the road is completed, and it is a better time to get at the cost than before.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the hon. gentleman's opinion, and I will let him keep that opinion. Others who are more practical than myself can advert to that point later. I have come to my opinion from an authority that, I think, is just as good as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton). It is the common sense view that if I ride over a road after it is finished it is not possible to make as careful an estimate of its cost as if I were there when the work was going on.

Mr. CHARLTON. You do not want to ride over it. You want to walk over it, and take it all in.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister says that the cost of the road is ascertained in the second place by the examination of the accounts and vouchers. The accounts and vouchers would show the actual money expended for labour and material which had gone into the road. In the third place he says that no rolling stock is to be taken into account in the adjudication as to what is to be paid over the $3,200 a mile. Would the hon. gentleman be surprised to learn that he is already paying over and above the $3,200 per mile in the case of roads which have not been gone over by the engineer, in regard to which the engineer states that it was very difficult to arrive at a knowledge of the actual cost, where there were no accounts seen, no vouchers had, and that in the ultimate, when all these things were lacking, which should have been there, but were not there, the actual apportionment was made after taking into the total cost the amount of money expended for rolling stock as well?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware of it if that was done.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the papers brought down in reference to these roads, so that we can see what the basis of apportionment was.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What are these roads that the hon. gentleman alludes to?

Mr. FOSTER. I am alluding to one of the roads which has got more than $3,200 a mile. I am speaking on information which I have.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Which one?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a matter for myself at present. I am told that it is very difficult practically for the accounts and vouchers, in the construction of a road in this way, to be kept and to be ascertained, and it seems to me that there is no other way by which you can get at the cost than by an examination of the costs as they are shown by the accounts and vouchers, showing the actual money payments that go into the labour and construction. The hon. gentleman knows that the Auditor General has had trouble with this system of his, and that he has put it on record that it is practically impossible to arrive at any true statement as to the cost under the conditions. He has advised the hon. gentleman to adopt some other method on a basis by which it would be possible to more accurately apportion the real cost, so that the basis upon which the payment is made, may be a basis that practically can be carried out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no hesitation in saying, that, as respects each road, and the amount of subsidy which you are going to give to it, there is no other way of ascertaining what the cost of the road would be upon the pro rata principle of payment than the method which has been adopted by the department. I admit at once that this is a plan which is attended with a great deal of difficulty and trouble, and that unquestionably it is not free from objections, but I do not think that there is any ground to fear that any subsidy will be paid in excess of the proper amount. There are reasons for believing that the company will not succeed in getting as much subsidy as it is entitled to, but I do not think there is any reason for believing that it will get more. I do not know of any instance that has occurred in the department of the character that the hon. gentleman mentions. I said before the hon. gentleman spoke that in respect to the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway, there was not felt by the engineer of the department to be the same occasion for requiring the production of accounts and vouchers as there was in regard to other applications that came in.

Mr. FOSTER. And in that case they were not required.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume in that case they were not required. The engineer had no trouble whatever in advising that the railway cost more than it need cost to entitle the company to this double subsidy. As to the other two roads, I cannot conceive that what the hon. gentleman says did occur in respect to some one railway which he has not chosen to name, could have occurred. I know that there was no end of visits, no end of interviews with the engineer, and of examinations of accounts and vouchers made as to both of them. There was only one question that occurred in respect to the Tilsonburg road, and that was as to whether the cost of the road should include any portion of the terminals.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not bear upon it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not, and it was not allowed.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister bring down the papers in reference to the Tilsonburg and Adirondack roads before we concur in the resolutions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will send for them now.

Mr. FOSTER. To whom was paid the $84,000 for the St. Lawrence and Adirondack?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say who personally received the money. It did not come before me except in a perfunctory way, because the engineer's report was abundantly clear and without doubt or controversy.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no doubt it is a first-class road.

Mr. R. R. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I must dissent from the proposition laid down by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) that it was easy to estimate the cost of a road after it is completed. I do not believe there is a practical engineer in Canada who has any respect for his reputation, who would endorse that statement of the hon. member (Mr. Gibson). It is impossible to estimate a road accurately when it is completed. There is, for instance, side-hill work which you cannot estimate when the road is finished, because you cannot find the round of the hill and you have to make the measurements in the bottom and top, in this way take the average, which is not correct. There are rock cuttings, such as we have on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and where there is a price for loose rock and boulders, you cannot make an accurate estimate when the road is finished. Two-thirds of the material in the cutting may be rock, and when that is taken out the sand which is between the crevices makes the formation of the slope, and it looks like an earth cutting. On the Canadian Pacific Railway there were boulders over 100 yards, many of them on the surface, and when they were blasted and put in the embankment, it was impossible to estimate them. No man of practical knowledge in that kind of work would say that when a railway is completed you can accurately estimate it. I could give you a hundred instances to prove that it cannot be done and the very best engineers will agree with me. It is nonsense to speak of making a correct estimate after the work is completed. If you are going to subsidize a railway, and if you think $3,200 a mile is not enough, then, when the man makes an application to you for more, you can inquire into it, and you are then in a better position to estimate the cost than after the work is done. The first clause of this Bill will create a great deal of trouble. It is encouraging men to act dishonestly with the government, and I venture to predict that the government will find out by experience that the greater number of these subsidies will amount to $6,400 per mile. The minister takes the statement made up by the contractor.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). In many cases the contractors will endeavour to get all the money they can out of the government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not governed by the statement of the contractors.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). This is a very foolish clause, because you are putting the country under obligations, the extent of which you do not know. You lead the people to suppose that you are only subsidizing railways to the extent of $3,200 per mile, whereas, in fact, it may be $6,400. You are placing the country at the mercy of those who want to make money out of the government, and I am sorry to say that very often people think it a legitimate business to take advantage of the government, as we all know has been the constant practice since the Liberal party came into power. I was speaking to a contractor not long ago, and he gave me to understand that he was sharp enough to see that he would get the larger subsidy. I warn the Minister of Railways to look after this matter more closely than he has done in the past. I can tell him that an estimate was made by an engineer after a certain work was done, and his estimate was $50,000 per mile for work that could be very easily done for $14,000 or $15,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When was that?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). That was in regard to the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. The whole clause is a very foolish one, and should not be incorporated in this Bill. If you want to give $6,000 a mile, give it, and let the public know what you are paying, but do not mislead them with the idea that you are only giving $3,200 per mile. It is altogether an unbusinesslike way of doing things.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In my opinion, this is one of the best clauses in the Subsidy Act, and I am sorry to find that an experienced railway contractor like my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) should view it in the light he does. I admit there is some difficulty in enforcing it, and if any better means can be suggested to attain the object in view, I am sure there will be no objection to adopt them. What you do by this clause is to give the railway builder $3,200 per mile and if by actual experience it is found after the work is done that the building of the road has been very expensive, then it would be his right to get more. The proposal is so fair and reasonable that I am surprised that an experienced contractor like my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) should oppose it. If you could afford to have an engineer all the time on every road in Canada, watching the work as it goes along, I have no doubt that you could make a more correct estimate than when the work is finished; but that is entirely impracticable. As a rule engineers have sufficient knowledge of such work to enable them to make a fair and correct report. The clause is so fair and equitable, that until some better one is suggested, my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) should not hastily condemn it.

Mr. GIBSON. I admit that the hon. gentleman from Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) has had considerable experience in railway building, but he knows that he is not paid by the contractor, if he has a sub-contract, until the estimates are made, and accurate estimates cannot be made before the work is completed. The hon. gentleman says that large boulders are met with and that they are blasted and distributed in the embankments, but this is against the hon. gentleman's argument because if there are no boulders to be seen when the work is completed, if there are no obstacles to be seen and no insurmountable difficulties to be overcome, this railway will not receive from the government $6,400 a mile. As to the side hills and cuttings, my hon. friend knows that all these are cross-sectioned very accurately, and the measurements made by the contractors will be available to the government to show the number of yards of rock-cutting. All the quantities allowed to the contractors will be brought forward in order to prove to the government that the company should receive $6,400 a mile. The engineers are not going to make cross-sections and profiles of the railway for the purpose of defrauding the government. In my judgment—and I have had considerable experience in building railroads in the last thirty years—it is easy for the government engineers to go over the railway and judge by an examination of it whether it is entitled to $6,400 a mile; and whether the Dominion government is Conservative or Liberal, I have faith that these men will do fairly by the country, and will make such a report and be able to produce such evidence to the Minister of Railways as will warrant him in deciding whether he should give the increased subsidy or not.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). We would be very glad to receive that evidence now with reference to the subsidies which were granted last year on the same conditions. I do not think the minister will undertake to say that he has the cross-sections and profiles made by the engineers of all the roads that were subsidized as stated by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson). I am sure he has not, and there is nothing in this Bill or in the statutes to compel the companies to give them to him. They have their own engineers, and the government have nothing to do with them. The whole thing is in the hands of the company themselves. The minister is present, and I will venture to predict before he says anything, that he has no report of cross-sections sent in by any of the companies which received subsidies last year. He is completely at the mercy of the contractors as to whether the larger or smaller amount should be granted. The Minister of Finance said this was a most fair arrangement, which would be regulated by a sliding scale, and under which justice would be extended to everybody, and that you could not give $6,400 a mile without knowing anything about the work. I do not think we should give even $3,200 a mile without knowing something about the work; but I will venture to say that most of these subsidies are granted without an estimate a map, profile or tracing or anything placed before the government to show them what they are doing. Our experience in the Railway Committee is that charters are applied for without the slightest information being given to the committee. It is all a hap-hazard sort of business, and it is time there should be an end to it. If a railway is entitled to $3,200 a mile, give it; if it is entitled to $6,400 a mile, give it; but first look into the matter and decide how much it is entitled to. This sliding scale is going to encourage dishonesty on the part of men who receive subsidies.

For a railway from a point at or near the junction of the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway to the village of Minden, in the county of Haliburton, Ontario, not exceeding twelve miles ..... $33,400

Mr. FOSTER. Let us know what this is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a vote to enable the existing road to be extended from the point of junction with the Grant Trunk Railway to Minden, which is on the lake.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Has the hon. gentleman any estimate of the cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). What are you voting this subsidy on? We want to know whether the subsidy is too large or too little.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We give every company that presents a meritorious application, this subsidy of $3,200 a mile. They have to build in accordance with the contract, and when they ask for a contract, we require them to furnish the plans. They have to build under conditions which regulate the grades and quality of the work. Except in some few exceptional cases, where the companies were required to make profiles of their lines, and determine their routes, before we asked parliament for a subsidy, we do not require these companies to furnish estimates and plans. After they have ascertained that they will get such assistance as will enable them to proceed with the work, they submit their plans and profiles.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). You admit that you do not know anything about this road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). You have no plan, or map, or tracing, or estimate ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Have you in the case of any of the others ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Do you know anything about any of them—the cost or the nature of the building ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have told the hon. gentleman that we have followed the course always adopted.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). This is a deplorable state of affairs. We have a Minister of Railways giving $3,000,000 odd in subsidies, and he has to admit that he does not know the slightest thing about the roads—has no maps or estimates of cost, or profiles or cross-sections, or anything to give us the slightest information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know that my hon. friend is something of a humourist, and I appreciate his humour on this question. Would the hon. gentleman carry the joke so far, as to require a company, before it knows whether it can get any assistance, to determine its route, with sufficient accuracy, as to have profiles and cross-sections made and all the necessary plans, grades and curves determined upon, and all the engineering material which would be required in order to make a contract. Does he think that would be a reasonable suggestion in this joke which he is perpetrating for our benefit ?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I do not think that the hon. gentleman enjoys it as a joke at all, nor do I think the electors or this House will look upon it as a joke. I do not claim that he should have all the engineering plans. How can he tell about the cost if he does not know anything about the work ? You should have a tracing or a map to place on the Table and give information so that we could deal with this intelligently before asking us to vote. That is a very humiliating confession that the hon. gentleman has had to make. I did not really think that he would place himself in the position of having to say that he simply knows nothing about any of these railways to which subsidies were granted last year and this year.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the traffic on that road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The statement is made, and confirmed by representations from other sources, that this piece of line will open up a very well wooded section of country, and good, fertile land. It is said that the hardwood, tan bark and pulp wood is very considerable. It will also extend to a series of lakes and waterways, and enable people living upon the borders of these lakes, to have railway connection with the Grand Trunk Railway and the competing lines.

To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway Company, for a railway commencing at a point at or near Caradoc station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and extending to the town of Strathroy, Ontario, not exceeding seven miles (revote)..... $22,400

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the road which is within a stone's throw of another ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not within stone's throw. This vote was passed three years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. How comes it that the road has never been built ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume the company had difficulty in raising the necessary funds. That is the experience of a good many companies which have obtained subsidies. Many of them were only built after struggling for many years.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that company own any other road, or is it chartered for this alone ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The whole line is thirty-one miles, I believe.

Mr. CALVERT. Twenty-four last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, seven miles—three years ago, and it is hoped this will enable them to complete it.

For a line of railway from a point on the Pembroke Southern Railway at or near Golden Lake, towards a point on the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway at or near Bancroft, Ontario, for the further extension of such railway westerly from the western terminus of the twenty miles granted by Act 60-61 Victoria, chapter 4, for a distance not exceeding twenty miles ..... $64,000

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. minister the plan of that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I will show it to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. This is a mere township plot and affords no idea of proportion or relation to the railway system of the country. It is not worth shucks. What is the ground on which this subsidy is voted?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The district which is to be traversed by this railway is represented to be a very extensive mineral district, and in part suitable for agriculture. The original line of the Pembroke Southern runs from Pembroke, and the whole distance from Pembroke to Golden Lake is fifty miles.

To the Algoma Central Railway Company, for twenty-five miles of its line of railway from its terminus at Michipicoten harbour, Lake Superior, towards the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for a further extension of this company's line of railway from Sault Ste. Marie towards Michipicoten River and harbour, Ontario, towards the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, twenty-five miles in all, not exceeding fifty miles ..... $160,000

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Is the portion between Sault and Ste. Marie and Michipicoten built?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Forty lines were subsidized last year and construction is in progress.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Is this for the extension from Sault Ste. Marie to the pulp district?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. Last year we gave a subsidy for forty miles, of which, as I understand, twelve miles have been completed, and the rest is under construction.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there a bonus from the Ontario government?

Mr. A. E. DYMENT (Algoma). Yes, a land grant. Twelve miles have been completed, with trains running over it, and ten more have been graded, and the rails laid alongside ready to place in position, and ninety miles more are under contract.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the general nature of the country through which the road goes, and what is the cost of construction—you have the actual cost for twelve miles?

Mr. DYMENT. That twelve miles cost about $30,000 a mile. The rest goes through a similar country—difficult to build through. The country has been prospected considerably, and a large deposit of iron ore has been located—I suppose the largest in Canada. This deposit is being worked extensively, and the iron ore carried out on the railway.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). If all the roads subsidized had the merits of this one, there would not be much difficulty about the system. I know the country very well. The twelve miles from Michipicoten have cost about $40,000 a mile. The road is built to an iron mine. The people interested have expended in the building of this twelve miles of road and other transportation facilities and docks about a million and a half of dollars. These twenty-five miles covered by this vote will cover the extension toward the Canadian Pacific Railway, which will give an outlet, at Missanabie, I think, for the whole mining district. This iron mine is a celebrated discovery in Ontario, and a most important one. There are a great many gold prospects in that section. The main line from the east runs to another point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and is estimated to be over 100 miles. The Ontario government have given a large land grant under conditions requiring colonization. There is seventy miles of the road contracted for and under construction. It all goes through a wilderness, so whatever opinion hon. gentlemen might have—and I have my own—as to the extent to which we ought to call a halt in the subsidizing of railways, this one must be considered as a colonization road, and there should be no hesitation in making this grant, as it will be a great thing for that part of the country. And it would be a great thing for other parts of Ontario if we could get other roads of this kind built by subsidizing them. For my own part, I would rather give them a much larger subsidy and stop subsidizing some of these roads in the older parts of the country, the subsidizing of some of which may well be criticised.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Probably hon. members are not aware that the people who are promoting this enterprise and building this railway are the Sault Ste. Marie Power Company, and they are spending a large amount of money in developing this portion of the country. They represent to me that they have more than 1,000 men employed in the mine to which this road leads. They have an immigration bureau, and are encouraging people to come in, and people are coming in, many of them from the United States,

They say they will have five thousand people brought here inside of five years—people who, but for their efforts, would not go there. I understand that there is a condition in connection with the grant made by the Ontario government that they shall carry on the work of this kind. That is what Mr. Clergue, who represents the Sault Ste. Marie Power Company, tells me.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, this is the Clergue business?

Mr. HAGGART. I have no objection to a grant for laudable purposes, but I am sorry the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) is not here that I might draw his attention to the fact that this railway is subsidized for the purpose of being built to a mine. He seemed in other days to have great objection to granting subsidies for any such purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand there is a provision under which 3 per cent of the money of this grant will be returned to the government each year for carrying the mails. I would like to ask the Postmaster General what sum he would consider a fair amount to pay this railway of fifty miles for carrying the mails each year? I want to ascertain whether the government will actually get back the 3 per cent which the hon. member for North Wellington promised us would be returned to the government each year. Three per cent of this money would be $4,800; would the Postmaster General consider that that was a fair compensation for carrying the mails fifty miles on this road, or would he consider it too much? If it is too much, then the government is not getting back the three per cent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I should have to consult the controller of the railway mail service in order to ascertain what, in his judgment, would be the value of the service. The hon. gentleman will see that in the case of an unoccupied country the mail service would be limited, in order to give an intelligent answer to such a question we would have to lift up the veil that shrouds the future. I have no doubt that the government will be getting on an average fully the 3 per cent that the Act calls for, and will be receiving services to the extent of what would represent the payment to the railways of 3 per cent. We have our present experience to guide us when establishing railways all over Canada, and I think the amount we have to pay averages between $90 and $100 per mile for the use of the railways of Canada by the government for this purpose, in some cases more and in some cases less. But, for the mails alone, the service will be an expensive one, and when the road costs a great deal the service costs a good deal. It would cost us more to employ teams to carry the mails into this district than it would into more accessible districts, and in districts along which there might be more travel and more profit to the mail couriers in the way of parcels and passengers. I have no doubt that even at the commencement the account against the government for carrying the mails will be considerable.

Mr. HENDERSON. The calculation is made on the basis of $3,200 per mile. The Postmaster General tells us that about $100 per mile is the ordinary sum paid for carrying the mails, which would make the sum about $5,000, or about the equivalent of 3 per cent on the money. But, I assume that in most of these cases where $3,200 a mile is put down, ultimately it will mean $6,400. I think we can rest assured of that, so that instead of 3 per cent which the government says will be recouped to the country for these railway bonuses it seems it will simply get 1½ per cent.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if the policy of the government this year is the same as last year; if the 3 per cent is not earned by the railways for carrying the mails, whether it will be written off, or whether they will carry it forward and charge it against the company? I understood by an answer the hon. gentleman gave me last year, that if the money was not earned in the year, at the end of the year it was written off, and not carried forward as a charge against the railway. If that is the case, the argument of the hon. member for North Wellington is not correct, because we are not making a loan on which we will get 3 per cent, and we will simply get whatever happens to come in that year. If this is a bona fide business transaction, it seems to me that if the money is not earned in one year it should be carried forward to the next year, until they did earn it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I may say in reply to my hon. friend, that I have looked into this matter. Take, for instance, the Canadian Pacific Railway. If the government that inaugurated the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway had put in a provision of this kind when the company were granted twenty-five millions of money for building that road, 3 per cent on that sum would be $750,000. Now, we are paying the Canadian Pacific Railway for carrying the mails alone $621,854. That shows that the roads as a rule are earning sufficiently to cover this amount. But, if the government that made the bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway had put in a clause that that principle should apply only after ten years, see what an amount of money the treasury of Canada would be getting to-day in return for the assistance it gave the company. But, in place of that the hon. gentlemen opposite gave the entire sum to the Canadian Pacific Railway and exacted no conditions, in return, and the result is that the millionaires of the Canadian Pacific Railway pocketed all the money, and the people of Canada got nothing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member (Mr. Wilson) properly asked whether there was any distinction between the clause as introduced this year and that of last year. My reply is, that there is none. If it should happen that after a longer or shorter period there is a demand that a particular railway should carry the mails, and if we should have no government supplies of any kind to be carried, then it would earn nothing in respect of such carriage which would be entitled a charge against it. But the hon. gentleman is proceeding upon an improper presumption. I know from some experience in my own province that the very moment a railway is built there is a demand in the locality that the railway should carry the mails. This demand immediately arises and is pressed with such persistence that the department is obliged to accede. So, I cannot conceive that there will be any considerable portion of the railways that come under the authority of this clause that will be likely to escape having to comply with it. We know that many of them are travelling through countries which we expect will be filled up. The amounts of the obligations which the government will have to contract with these roads will be much in excess of the amount that we are deserving here. We are asking 3 per cent interest, which represents the full capacity of the government, and if we get that there is really no gift to the railway company. We are making an investment which answers all the purposes of payments to the railway company and we get interest upon it.

Mr. Haggart. The hon. gentleman has not answered the question of the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson), which was whether this was cumulative or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said last year that it was not, and I say that there is no difference between the clause last year and this year.

Mr. Wilson. Last year I pointed out to the hon. minister, when he said that they would have to carry the mails, that there was not much business about that and the minister's answer was that they were not doing this on strictly business principles. I am not discussing the question as to whether they are going to earn money or not. I know that some of the roads will not earn money, but if you are going to give them this money as a loan let it be done on business principles and make them all pay alike.

Mr. McMullen.

If it is a business transaction why should it not be done on business principles and if they do not pay one year they should pay another year.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us agree as to what it really is. There is no use of misrepresenting it on either side. It is a misrepresentation of the case to say that in all these cases where we subsidize these roads they return interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum on the amount of the subsidy you give them. They do not do that. If the road, after it is constructed, carries mails, it carries them free to the extent of 3 per cent on the subsidy. If the amount earned for mails is above 3 per cent the railroad is paid for the overplus. If it carries less mail than amounts to 3 per cent it does not make up the deficit to the government. You get the right to demand of the railway that when you put your mails or services on it you shall not pay up to an amount equal to 3 per cent upon the subsidy which you have given to the railroad company.

Mr. POWELL. It is payable specifically out of the fund, I understand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is right.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), at one time in his checkered career, had a strong objection to any of the public money going into the construction of a road which was built into a country where mining operations were going on, and that when the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) proposed a subsidy to a road running into the coal areas near the Crow's Nest Pass the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) then declared himself something like this: This is a private enterprise, these men are mining for their own benefit, and their own health. What right, under heaven, have we to give the public money to aid in the development of this property.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). You had better give chapter and verse.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend needs the actual text?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give it to him before we get through.

To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for a further extension of their railway from, at or near Bancroft to a point on the Canada Atlantic Railway between Whitney and Barry's Bay, Ontario, not exceeding twenty miles ..... $64,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a piece of railway in further extension of one to which we granted subsidy last year from a point upon the Central Ontario Railway to Bancroft. That line has been built. I think the point of departure from the Central Ontario Railway is Ormsby. They have constructed up to Bancroft. This Central Ontario Railway is a very important line, which I know, from personal knowledge, having been over the line. It is doing considerable for the development of that part of the country. It is a very useful line and its extension, I am sure, will be very much in the public interest. They have built to Bancroft under the subsidy of last year. The work is not altogether completed, but good progress has been made. The intention is to give them a subsidy for twenty miles further towards a point upon the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway, now called the Canada Atlantic Railway, which point would be located somewhere between Barry's Bay and Whitney. The whole distance which will have to be built to connect with the Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway will be forty miles, but we are now giving a subsidy for twenty miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Before we pass the next item I will fulfil my promise to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). Behold it is written in this book entitled 'Debates of the House of Commons, Dominion of Canada, session 1894, vol. II,' and at the 6396th page thereof, on a railway subsidy proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), at that time Minister of Railways, for a line of railway——which will afford means of transportation from the coal mines to the junction of the Elk and Kootenay rivers—

And so on and so on, my hon. friend is thus reported, and it is written in the records :

For whose benefit is this to be developed?

But we do not own a scrap of this coal. Let people who own it develop it. Why should we be called upon to tax the ratepayers of Canada $108,000 for the development of some valuable coal mine, whether it belongs to the British Columbia government or to private individuals? What justification is there for heaping on our overburdened people all these expenditures for enterprises of the merits of which we know nothing at all, and which, if they be one-quarter as valuable or one-tenth as valuable as they have been represented to be by the hon. gentleman, ought to be able to pay their own way. I object to the whole system, for the matter of that, but particularly, it seems to me, that going into the wilderness in this fashion, or the vague statement that there are valuable coal mines, in which, even though they are as valuable as they are represented, the people of Canada have no interest, is something worse than throwing away our money. Who are the parties who own this coal?

&c. &c.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). What did you say justifying your measure on that occasion?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has just informed us that this road, which is going forth into the wilderness, is approaching very nearly to the mine which the hon. minister tells us will be employing 1,000 men before many months roll by.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are 1,000 men employed there now.

Mr. FOSTER. Who owns this coal mine? For whose benefit? Why should we overburden the taxpayers of this country by asking them to put their money into this enterprise, for the benefit of other people?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What were your arguments in contravention?

Mr. FOSTER. They did not seem to convince you.

To the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company, for a line of railway between Little Current, on Manitoulin Island, and Sudbury, Ontario, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, the company undertaking to bridge between Little Current and the mainland, the bridge to be so constructed and maintained as to afford suitable facilities, in the opinion of the Minister of Railways and Canals, for free vehicular traffic, the same as upon a public highway, the work to be begun and prosecuted from Little Current and Sudbury, one-half of the subsidy to be applicable, as earned, in respect of the work beginning at Little Current and carried on towards Sudbury, and one-half thereof to be applicable, as earned, in respect of the work beginning at Sudbury and carried on towards Little Current, the course of the line of railway to cross the Sault Ste. Marie branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not exceeding sixty-six miles ..... $211,200

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have an explanation of this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This line of railway is to give to the Manitoulin Islands railway connection with the rest of the world. I may say, the railway will pass through a very important mineralized section, the future of which is exceedingly promising. We are given to understand that there are already opened four or five important mines in which a good many people are employed. The government have been bombarded with petitions from those interested in the construction of the line.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it not necessary to have a bridge there? It crosses the channel of navigation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you an estimate of the cost of the bridge? It seems to me it will be very expensive.

Mr. DYMENT. This is a vote that is no doubt well known to all the members of the old government, as the late government subsidized forty-one miles of this road. This is for an extension of the old road into the mineral belt that surrounds Sudbury.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the width of the channel there?

Mr. DYMENT. It is very narrow.

Mr. HAGGART. Four hundred feet.

Mr. DYMENT. Not more than that. It is going to be a splendid outlet for the surplus products of the farmers of the Manitoulin Islands to the mining districts. It will be the making of the island.

For a railway beginning at a point northerly twenty miles from Parry Sound, and extending from that point to the French River, Ontario, not exceeding thirty-five miles..... $112,000

Mr. HAGGART. What is the object of this road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Last year, we gave a subsidy for twenty miles from Parry Sound in that direction. No progress has been made, but we are assured that the work will be undertaken to connect Parry Sound with the French River.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this subsidy to be given to any particular company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. There are two companies incorporated which have power to build.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the province of Ontario has also made a grant for seventy miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Who is applying for this? It must connect with either the Canada Atlantic or the Grand Trunk Railway.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The district around Parry Sound is rich in mineral wealth. Lately there have been large copper discoveries in the vicinity of Parry Sound and up towards the French River. At French River the road will doubtless receive a good deal of custom in lumber; and in time the road may be extended across the river until it reaches the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the meantime the vote is not assigned to any company but is merely an extension of the subsidy given last year.

For a railway from a point twenty miles easterly from the village of Haliburton, via the village of Whitney, towards the village of Mattawa, Ontario, not exceeding forty miles..... $128,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is an amendment to this which I shall propose. At the request of Mr. BLAIR.

the hon. member for the district (Mr. Klock), I move to amend the resolution by substituting the word 'northerly' for the word 'easterly' in the first line, so as to make it read 'twenty miles northerly from the village of Haliburton.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It runs 'easterly' too. I presume every one knows where it is intended to go.

Mr. KLOCK. It runs northerly from this point and the resolution should read in that way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why not say 'north-easterly.' I think that would answer the purpose.

Mr. KLOCK. It is more 'northerly' than 'easterly,' but I see no objection to accepting the suggestion of the Minister of Railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very well; we will make the resolution read 'north-easterly.'

It being Six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in Committee.)

To the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company, for a branch line of railway to iron mines in Bedford township, Ontario, not exceeding twelve miles..... $38,400

Mr. HAGGART. Where is this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is from a point on the Kingston and Pembroke Railway, near Harrowsmith, directly north-east to the mines in Bedford Township.

Mr. HAGGART. You are doubling this in two or three places. There is another line of road connecting the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, and the Bancroft road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That goes in the opposite direction.

To the Thousand Islands Railway Company, for an extension of their railway from the present northerly terminus to a point easterly thereof, not exceeding two miles..... $6,400

Mr. HAGGART. What is this?

Mr. HURLEY. The Grand Trunk Railway is moving its station two miles east from Gananoque, and this is to build the Thousand Islands Railway to that station.

Mr. HAGGART. The Grand Trunk Railway has not moved its station, and, so far as I know, has no intention of moving it.

Mr. HURLEY. There is no doubt that the Grand Trunk Railway intends to move its station. That is the central point between Toronto and Montreal; and where the present station is, the ground is rocky, and there is no room for sidings. It intends to call the station the Thousand Islands siding, which is two miles east of the present station at Gananoque.

And also for an extension from a point on the railway to connect their railway with the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, the Bay of Quinté Railway, the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway, or the waters of the Rideau Canal, the balance remaining of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Vic., chap. 5, not exceeding nine and one-half miles (revote)..... $30,400

Mr. HAGGART. Where does this connect with the Brockville and Westport Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At a point in the township of South Crosby, I would judge, very near to the line dividing it from the township of Bastard.

Mr. HAGGART. This railway overlaps the two miles which you have just provided for.

Mr. HURLEY. This is a different road altogether.

Mr. POWELL. Where does it cross the Brockville and Westport line?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are alternative points of connection.

Mr. HAGGART. The Kingston and Pembroke Railway runs northerly from Kingston, and evidently the intention is to utilize the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, or make connection with the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway, but that latter railway is not in existence at present or very likely to be soon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman object to this item?

Mr. HAGGART. No, but I want to know where the road goes.

Mr. HURLEY. The Bay of Quinté road runs over the Kingston and Pembroke, from Kingston north to Hastings, which is a very short distance west of Westport. The Thousand Islands road is only about fourteen miles east of Kingston, and Westport is some eight or ten miles east of the eastern terminus of that road. All these roads come in here together, but there are some mines between Harrowsmith and Westport, and Westport and Harrowsmith are north of the Grand Trunk, and the Thousand Islands Railway is south of the Grand Trunk Railway. These nine and a half miles will go towards connecting the roads the company own.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has forgotten that the wording of this vote is exactly the same as the vote passed seven years ago, when he was Minister of Railways. The Thousand Island Railway Company, by their petition, say that it has built a line between the town of Gananoque and the Thousand Islands Junction, and has kept the same in operation and cheapened the rates of transportation between the points named, and assisted many industries and developed business in the town of Gananoque and along the said line, and that it proposes to extend the line in a general northerly direction, but owing to the various streams and rough country the difficulties are such it requires an additional subsidy for the completion of the said extension, which is of the highest importance to the many factories in Gananoque and that district. I am not familiar with the geography of the place.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand the geography of the place thoroughly. It is true that the Kingston and Pembroke runs northerly to Harrowsmith, and if this vote is for the purpose of making connection between Harrowsmith and the Thousand Island road, it must go through the township of Bedford and connect at Westport or Newbury, and thence run down to Gananoque. You will then be just paralleling the road we gave a grant to immediately before, namely, the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company, for a branch line of railway to iron mines in Bedford township, not exceeding twelve miles. That road runs exactly in the direction that this road would run from Harrowsmith to the other place. The evident intention is to get an extension of the road from Gananoque for the purpose of joining the Sault Ste. Marie Railway, commonly known as the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway.

Mr. BRITTON. There is no intention at present of extending the Bay of Quinté Railway eastward from Sydney, which is its most easterly point, but the object of this grant is to put the Thousand Islands Railway nearly to the mines that are north of Gananoque and to make connection with the Brockville and Westport Railway, which of course, is a running road. The Kingston, Smith Falls and Ottawa Railway is mentioned, but there is no such road in existence and not much possibility of its being built. I doubt myself if they will build this road; of course, if they do, it will open up a section of the country which is in need of being opened up, and will develop a mining region which has not so far been developed.

Mr. POWELL. Would nine and a half miles reach any railroad from that point?

Mr. BRITTON. No, there is no railroad so near as that, but that would bring them into a region where there are undeveloped mines, and they only get power to extend the road that far.

Mr. HAGGART. That is all their charter gives them.

Mr. BRITTON. They had the bonding power only for that extent of railway. They will not be able to build any more, without coming here for legislative authority. Hon. gentlemen who know that part of the country, are aware that the road cannot be built for any such sum as the bonus. If these gentlemen are willing to put their own money into it, for the purpose of extending it into that section of the country, I am satisfied it will be a great benefit to that part of the country.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no objection to the bonus, the objection is to the wording of the grant.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let it stand in the meantime, and take it up later.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we might as well dispose of it now.

Mr. HAGGART. We will vote it, and let the hon. gentleman fix the wording in his Bill.

For a railway from Dymont on the Canadian Pacific Railway to the New Klondike mining district, Ontario, not exceeding seven miles ..... $22,400

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway called Dymont. The object is to go from this point into an extensive mining region. Somewhat over $400,000 have been expended in this mining region, and what is called a customs stamp mill has been placed there. They are hampered in this enterprise from the need of getting railway connection into the mines, they cannot get ore down to their stamp mills.

To the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company, for an extension of their line from its easterly terminus to a point at or near Bond's Lake, Ontario, not exceeding four miles ..... $12,800

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The work of construction has begun on a railway between Schomberg and vicinity of King's station, at a point on the Grand Trunk Railway, and that easterly point is some miles westerly at Yonge Street, Toronto. By extending it four miles or thereabouts further east, it will also connect with the Metropolitan Railway that goes down to Toronto.

In aid of the Ottawa and New York Railway Company's bridge over the St. Lawrence River, and for the Canadian portion of such bridge, not exceeding.. $90,000

Mr. HAGGART. That bridge was completed a year ago, was it not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. This is the bridge, a part of which went down. The cost on the Canadian side is between $600,000 and $700,000.

To the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, towards the cost of the rebuilding and enlargement of the Victoria bridge over the St. Lawrence River, Quebec, in addition to the amount received by the company on account of the subsidy granted by 60-61 Vic., chap. 4, viz., $270,000, to make up the grant in aid of the undertaking to $500,000, not exceeding ..... $230,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This bridge is practically completed, and we have ascertained what the cost has been. I may say at the outset that a large portion of the material which went into the bridge could not be obtained in Canada. In round figures, 45,000,000 pounds of steel were consumed in the superstructure, and of that quantity, 9,261,666 pounds were obtained in Canada. The company obtained all they could in Canada. They made every effort to secure from the home manufacturers as large a proportion of the material for this structure as it was possible. The amount they were able to secure fell short of the whole by 35,387,011 pounds. They were obliged to import this quantity from abroad, upon which they had to pay $227,000 duty. Of course this sum went into the revenue and went for to reduce any assistance they got from us under our grant of two years ago. The whole cost of the superstructure is $1,400,000; the cost of erecting the steel in the bridge was $253,000; the cost of freight was $67,000; the cost of the superstructure up to May 3 last, was $99,416.80. To complete the construction there will require to be expended in retaining walls, rip-rapping to protect the banks, finishing grading and paving approaches, sidewalk paving, tracks for tram service, &c., $250,000, which make a total of $2,131,565, as the actual cost of this structure. Under all the circumstances, the government felt that the grant that is here proposed would not give the company more than the aid which was proposed under previous legislation.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this simply a railway bridge?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is a highway bridge as well.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been told that the traffic tolls over this bridge are out of all reason, that they practically prohibit the use of the bridge by farmers desiring to cross the river.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. Subsidizing this bridge so largely, I submit that it should be, as you propose the inteprovincial bridge here shall be—free for vehicular traffic and foot-passengers.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am informed that this bridge offers good facilities to the farmers. It is not altogether a free bridge; but those who are in a position to know tell me that the tolls are very much below those charged by boats between Lougueil and the city.

Mr. SPROULE. The last time I was in Montreal, a gentleman told me that these tolls were quite unreasonable, and he said that as there was a prospect of the government giving an additional subsidy, provision should be made for the abolition or at least the reduction of these tolls.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the schedule of tolls for the carriage way?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of the cost of the bridge is due to the fact that provision has been made for its use by vehicles?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not give that accurately. As the highway portions are simply built on projecting arms, I should think that the cost of these ways on either side would not be more than $75,000 or $100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) informs us that making a railway bridge into a bridge for vehicular traffic and passenger traffic—a bridge over the St. Lawrence at that place—would only add to the cost about $75,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no figures before me, and am only giving my own impression. But I should be surprised if it added to the cost of the bridge more than $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. When we gave the subsidy to this bridge, it was distinctly agreed—was it not?—that for the sum of $300,000 then given, they were to complete the bridge. How does it come that we are now asked to make it $500,000? At that time, the Drummond County Railway deal was going through, and it was claimed that very liberal terms had been secured from the Grand Trunk Railway. Is it possible there was some understanding that the subsidy they got was to be supplemented by another that would make up for the concessions they were supposed to have given? I do not see any justifiable reason why we should give them so large a sum as $200,000 in addition to what we gave before. The minister says that more steel went into it. But, I should think that the engineer ought to have been able to calculate how much steel would be required and, at the market price, how much it would cost. This additional subsidy seems to me quite unreasonable.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I would make one suggestion with regard to this matter and that is that the government should have control of the tolls. There is really reason to complain of the present tolls, and I do not know why the Grand Trunk Railway has made such a tariff. The bridge certainly does not receive the patronage from the public that it should receive, the reason being that the tolls are too high or are wrongly distributed. I think they charge twenty-five cents for an ordinary cart with a carter and ten cents for every person carried.

Mr. FOSTER. How is that?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I understand it is twenty-five cents for the cart, and ten cents for every person carried. That tariff is not a good one even in the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there a good deal of traffic?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There would be a good deal of traffic under ordinary circumstances, if the tolls were well arranged; and I think, therefore, that the government should see that they control these tolls in such a way that the public will have benefit from any bonus that is given to the bridge.

Mr. FOSTER. This seems to be a vote which marks a distinct departure from anything we have hitherto done in the way of railway subsidies. I am sorry that the vote is proposed, and I am more sorry for the explanation which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals gave. The only reason that he gave to justify it was that they had paid certain duties upon material which went into the construction of the bridge and that in this vote we were paying them back those duties. Is it to be accepted as a principle that we are to relieve these large corporations, and more than relieve them, outside of the very generous contribution that was their due from a railroad point of view, by remitting the duties on material brought in for the construction of these works? The fact is, when you come to boil it down, this government has surrendered to the corporations, body and soul, coat and breeches—simply surrendered everything to the corporations. I have the impression that a year or two ago the president of this road said to the shareholders in Great Britain that it would be so arranged that this bridge would not cost them anything. They knew whereof they spoke. They knew that they had a facile government under their thumb. They knew how much they had squeezed from them, they knew how much more they could squeeze from them, and this vote to-night fills the bill. They have got their bridge, and I do not think it stands them for the fixed charges one cent out. How much has it cost us up to date? Three hundred thousand dollars is what we have already voted and we are now asked to vote $230,000, which make $530,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Five hundred thousand altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought it was $300,000 that we voted before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have not got more than $270,000 to date.

Mr. FOSTER. There was $300,000 voted, and that will leave $30,000 which they will still get.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They cannot get it. Read the grant.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, then; we will say that you are only giving them half a million. The hon. minister has put the cost of the bridge at the outside at a little over $2,000,000, counting in the approaches, rip-rap protection work and everything. The bridge that the Canadian Pacific Railway built for its enormous traffic, and its largely increasing traffic, cost less than $1,000,000. This is a bridge for the whole Grand Trunk system. It is a bridge that has cost twice as much as the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge. How much has been paid by the government? The government is paying to the Grand Trunk every year for the use of that bridge, $40,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that not the amount that is being paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the amount they originally asked for.

Mr. FOSTER. What is being paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We took $10,000 off the gross amount they asked for.

Mr. FOSTER. Off the bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Off the whole.

Mr. FOSTER. Forty thousand dollars is the amount paid for the use of the bridge. Now, let us make a calculation. Suppose that the bridge cost $2,000,000; you are paying them $500,000 out of the Canadian fund. Then, there is $1,500,000 left. You are paying them $40,000 a year, which is certainly the interest on $1,300,000. There is provision for $1,800,000 of the cost, and I will venture to say that their tolls will come up very close to carrying the rates on what they have actually expended on that bridge. That is the way that the Dominion government has put its hands into the people's pockets in order to pay this enormous sum to this corporation, that has had these gentlemen for two or three years between its thumb and forefinger squeezing them as it pleases and helping them as much as it likes. It has squeezed the government until the cost of carrying that immense structure is reduced to almost nothing, if anything, and the ratepayers of this country are paying the bill. Why do the government pay more than the munificent donation they gave towards the cost of the bridge, $300,000, one-third of the cost of a sufficient bridge? If the Grand Trunk choose to build one that costs twice as much as that, that is for the Grand Trunk to decide, if it is in its own interest, but there remains the fact that we are giving them one-half at least, and probably more than half of the whole cost of a sufficient bridge over the St. Lawrence River, in addition to which we are paying them this $40,000 a year in perpetuity. That is the state of things. The $300,000 that was paid at first was thought by this parliament to be a princely donation. So it was. It is supplemented by $200,000 more. It does seem to me to be simply a monstrous transaction.

Mr. FOSTER.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think we can safely put aside the very high words of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has made use and come to a simple business discussion of this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Now we will hear a business discussion.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, we can safely put aside the very high words of the hon. gentleman about the government being between the thumb and finger of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and come to the discussion of this matter. The policy was introduced nearly twenty years ago of aiding in the construction of railways and railway bridges. This policy has been accepted by both sides of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. When?

The PRIME MINISTER. In the long process of the years which have followed its introduction since 1882. There may have been individual expressions of dissent from that policy, but it never was made a party question between the Liberal and Conservative parties. This country, above all things, is a country of large rivers. For railway bridges which were to cost less than $100,000, the policy was to give no aid at all. For other bridges the policy was to give 15 per cent of the cost. But, there are bridges in this country which we think should receive aid in excess of the 15 per cent. We have these large bridges across the St. Lawrence River which are beyond any comparison at all and the like of which are not to be found in the world.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, my!

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes; perhaps there may be one or two bridges which may be comparable in length with the St. Lawrence River bridges, the Forth bridge, for instance; but, as a general thing, there are no such bridges across the rivers of the world as we have in Canada. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) made a comparison between the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge at Lachine and the Grand Trunk bridge at Montreal. I say without hesitation that there is not the slightest comparison to be made between the Grand Trunk bridge and the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge. First of all, I believe the difference in length is more than half. Anybody who knows the locality knows that the depth of the river at Lachine and at Montreal is not to be compared. The foundations of the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge are upon rock in perhaps three or four feet of water. The foundations rest upon solid rock, and, moreover, there are islands which also serve for the foundations of the bridge. They have nothing of the kind at Montreal. The bridge of the Canadian Pacific Railway, if I remember rightly, cost $900,000. I am sure that the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) will not say, if the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge cost $900,000, that the Grand Trunk bridge would not cost at least double that amount, and more than that. The Grand Trunk bridge is more than double the length, and there are also the foundations to be taken into consideration. I will give the figures to show what the bridge has cost, and the House is startled at the amount. The number of pounds of steel that went into the bridge exceeds 44,000,000 pounds, the cost of which is very nearly a million and a half of dollars, $1,400,000.

Mr. POWELL. The first cost?

The PRIME MINISTER. The first cost. That is only for the material. The laying of the superstructure cost $250,000. The freight alone amounted to $67,000. The substructure, the masonry, and it is not completed yet, has cost about $100,000. There are accounts in the Railway Department rendered by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and submitted to the examination of the engineer of the department, and very largely passed, amounting to $1,881,000. The bridge is not yet completed. And when it is completed it will cost $2,231,000.

We propose to give a subsidy which will be in the neighbourhood of 25 per cent on that, and I leave it to the judgment of the House if that is an exorbitant subsidy for a work of that kind. There is another consideration to which the hon. gentleman attaches no importance, but which has its own weight in my judgment. It is not an argument upon which I would rely in presenting this matter to the House, but it is one which has its own bearing. When the government asked parliament to grant this subsidy of $300,000 no objection was raised; I was in England at the time, but so far as my memory serves me that was the case. The Grand Trunk Railway have not received that $300,000, but assuming that they had received it with one hand, and with the other they paid into the treasury of the Dominion $227,000—

Mr. FOSTER. Does not every railway that is constructed do that?

The PRIME MINISTER. But every railway is not constructed under the conditions that this was. They calculated that it would be possible to get steel in this country, but that was found impossible, and they had to go abroad, and whilst they would receive out of the treasury $300,000, they would put into the treasury $227,000, so that practically they have been helped not to the extent of $300,000, but to the extent of $70,000. Under such circumstances, can I not say with some degree of confidence that there is reason, and ample reason for the subsidy which we now ask parliament to grant to the Grand Trunk Railway. My hon. friend does not discuss the question upon its merits. But he says: That we are paying to the Grand Trunk Railway in another direction so much a year. Well, we get value for that. It is an independent transaction and I am not aware that whenever the parliament of Canada has helped any railway company, that it has balanced against that help any subsequent transactions with it. We have now taken a new departure as to the carriage of the mails for the first time. There is no argument at all in the proposition that we must in this case take in consideration the fact that in another transaction which has been approved by parliament we are paying a certain amount of money to the Grand Trunk Railway. Whether that transaction was wise or unwise it has been approved by parliament, and the two things are quite independent one of the other.

Mr. HAGGART. Both sides of the House have agreed as to giving subsidies to railways; but both sides have refused to grant subsidies for the purpose of repairing roads already constructed. Parliament has never agreed to the proposition that when a railway which has been constructed for thirty years, wants to renew its bridge, forsooth, it should be given assistance for that. It is a most vicious principle to adopt. It is altogether wrong. The right hon. gentleman entered into calculations to show what the Grand Trunk Railway had expended for the purpose of making this improvement, but he forgot to tell the House that a half interest in perpetuity in that bridge is owned by the people of Canada who are paying $40,000 a year for the privilege. The people of Canada have the right to use over one-half of the bridge, and the Grand Trunk Railway was bound to deliver that bridge completed when the contract was made. They got a grant of $300,000 in the first place, contrary to all the principles that ever guided the granting of these subsidies before, and they get for the use of the bridge $40,000 a year, which they can exchange for $1,300,000 in cash at any time. I leave it to any railway man in the country if that, with the $500,000 extra which they get, would not complete a road and bridge equal to the Grand Trunk Railway property in that particular place. The right hon. gentleman says the Canadian Pacific Railway were able to build their bridge for $900,000, because there is only three or four feet of water at that particular part of the St. Lawrence. The right hon. gentleman no doubt believes that, but it is impossible that the St. Lawrence even at that point, should be only three or four feet deep where the piers are laid.

The PRIME MINISTER. I say so advisedly. Perhaps in the middle of the channel it might be deeper, but for the greater part of the width of the river I believe that is the case.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, no. That may be the case in some places near the shore, but when you get towards the middle of the river the depth must be considerably more. However, that would be a small consideration in the building of a bridge of that kind; the construction of the piers would not be one-quarter of the total cost of the bridge. Here is a bridge built by the Canadian Pacific Railway without one cent of subsidy for the construction of the road there or the building of the bridge. How do they like the idea of a rival company situated below them on the river and competing with them for the same business, getting a subsidy, not alone for the building, but for the alteration of their bridge and for the railroad as well. I do not say that the subsidy given to the Grand Trunk Railway was not for the benefit of Canada, and I believe that the road is a credit to Canada, but they receive $20,000,000 towards the construction of that road, while their corresponding road, the Canadian Pacific Railway, did not receive one cent. It is a bad enough system to subsidize the construction of the railroads, but when you get into the policy of repairing a bridge and a railway already built out of the exchequer of Canada, there is no end to the expenditure which the people of Canada will be called upon to pay in that regard.

Mr. SPROULE. The old Act provided that we should give them 15 per cent of the cost not to exceed $300,000. The explanation then given was that it was very desirable to have that bridge enlarged, so that it would be suited for the traffic of vehicles and foot-passengers; and though it was going to be a very costly affair, we thought we knew the exact cost, and supposed that was going to be the limit. The grant of $230,000 more to-day seems to be indefensible, and I can only think it is through some private understanding with the Minister of Railways for some consideration, that this would be brought out in the future and that they would build up a case to justify the additional grant. As the ex-Minister of Railways says, it is a most vicious principle, and the House should not allow this vote to pass, for which no justification has been given. In connection with this subject, I said that I understood from information received that the tariff of that bridge was very high. The answer of the First Minister was that it was very low. To satisfy myself, I sent and got the tariff, which I will read to the House; and I think a good many members will agree that it is very high, especially to the poor people of the rural districts who wish to cross the bridge to reach the markets of Montreal. It is as follows: Foot passenger, 5 cents each way; bicycle, 10 cents one way, 15 cents both ways; tandem bicycle, 20 cents one way, 30 cents return; hand vehicle, used by rag pickers, scissor grinders, &c., including person in charge, 15 cents one way, 25 cents both ways; vehicle hauled by goat or dog, including the driver, 15 cents one way, 25 cents return; horses and mules in droves, per head, 15 cents each one way; cattle, 10 cents each one way; sheep, 3 cents each one way; calves, 5 cents each one way; swine, 5 cents each one way; horse and driver, 15 cents one way, 25 cents return; light vehicle drawn by one horse, 20 cents one way, 30 cents return; vehicle drawn by two horses, 30 cents one way, 50 cents return; larger vehicle drawn by one animal, 20 cents each way; larger vehicle drawn by two horses, 40 cents each way; vehicle drawn by three horses, 55 cents each way; vehicle drawn by four horses, 70 cents each way; milk van, driver free, drawn by one animal, 25 cents return; drawn by two animals, 50 cents return. I think this justifies my statement that the tariff is high, and there is a good deal of force in the suggestion of the mayor of Montreal that the government should have power to reduce these tolls, especially in view of the large assistance we are giving the Grand Trunk Railway to build this bridge. But in the first place, I condemn the principle of giving assistance to any railway company to rebuild its line after we have subsidized it once, and I see no justification for giving the Grand Trunk Railway Company $500,000 to assist them to build a bridge after they have partly worn it out, and used the earnings derived from it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I certainly think, from the tariff that has been read by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that he has made out a very good case for his statement that the tariff is excessive. I presume the rates are based upon the ferry charges, and, as the great bulk of people who cross the river would prefer to pay the same amount to go over the bridge to going by the ferry, except foot-passengers. I apprehend that the company thought they could charge those rates; but it seems to me that the imposition of such rates is really calculated to defeat the object in view—to prevent, rather than encourage, the use of the bridge for vehicular traffic. I think there is a good deal in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve, and I would propose to insert in the 6th line of the clause, after the word 'highway' the words 'upon condition that the tolls upon the bridge for passenger and vehicular traffic shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.'

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I am somewhat surprised to see this amount to subsidize a toll-gate. We had a good deal of discussion last year in regard to the grants given to the Drummond County and Grand Trunk Railway. I understand that $300,000 was given to that railway last year for this bridge, and I have no doubt that every man in the country outside of the government believed that that grant should not have been made. The tolls charged on this bridge have been read by the hon. member for East Grey, and I think they are extortionate charges imposed upon the people in the immediate neighbourhood of Montreal for crossing that bridge. Yet the Minister of Railways and Canals proposes to give the company another grant of $230,000 towards its cost. I do not know what his justification is for doing so, in view of the tolls they are charging, which will no doubt bring them in a very large revenue. As the ex-Minister of Railways says, other railway companies are building bridges without receiving subsidies. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company built their bridge without a dollar of subsidy from this or any other government; and why the Grand Trunk should get $500,000 to help them to build this bridge and yet impose such tolls upon the people who cross it, I fail to see.

Let me read some of the tolls charged by this company on this bridge, which has been subsidized by the government to the extent of $530,000, and I do so because it is very difficult to convince hon. gentlemen opposite when they are doing something detrimental to the interests of the country: Foot-passengers, 5 cents one way; bicycle and rider, 10 cents one way, and 15 cents over and return; tandem or social bicycle and one or two riders, 20 cents one way, and 30 cents both ways; extra bicycle, 5 cents one way; bicycle or tricycle or similar vehicle, ridden by more than two persons, each person 10 cents one way, and 15 cents both ways; hand vehicle, used by rag picker, scissors-grinder, &c., including persons in charge, 15 cents one way, and 25 cents both ways. Hon. gentlemen opposite laugh. This may appear funny to them, but not to the people who have to pay it. There are many other items but I will not take up the time of the House in reading them. This company charges a fare on everything that crosses that bridge. What justification can there be for this? Why should the government subsidize this company to build this bridge, out of which the company are bound to make a very large revenue, in the shape of tolls. If I take a contract, I include all cost of material, and am not entitled to any special aid from the government to carry it out. We are all purchasing goods and have to pay the duties, without any reduction being made to anybody, yet here are these people, making money out of this bridge, and getting besides a subsidy from the government. The hon. Minister of Railways misrepresented the cost last year when he stated that it cost $10,000,000 to build the Victoria bridge. He knows that it never cost anything of the kind. Why then did he make such a statement? The Grand Trunk Railway Company got more than they were entitled to. They were allowed at the rate of $50,000 a mile for a road that could be built for $14,000 a mile, and they were allowed in Montreal, over that flat, level country, for a road into Montreal, not including buildings, or anything of that kind, $80,000 a mile, and then they were allowed this enormous amount, which capitalized, would amount to nearly $5,000,000 for the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway. I have nothing against the Grand Trunk Railway, nor has any gentleman on this side, but when that company has got more than it was entitled to, why should it be subsidized in this way, $300,000 or $400,000 every year. The schedule of prices which it is charging for crossing that bridge is more than would pay for the cost of maintenance of that bridge. No doubt a large amount of money is collected in tolls and the hon. minister cannot justify our throwing away money in this fashion. The cost of the Drummond County Railway and the deal with the Grand Trunk Railway, which extends over ninety-nine years, was more than sufficient, without giving any further grants, and I would ask the hon. minister to explain his reasons for granting this additional $230,000, besides the $300,000 granted last year. And despite all these grants, we have this company charging tolls more than sufficient to keep this bridge in repair. They are in a position to charge these tolls, and are allowed besides $40,000 per annum for ninety-nine years on that bridge, and then we are paying them some $230,000 to $300,000 a year. I cannot see why they should get all these subsidies, and still charge these tolls to the public. Are we going to have these grants continued? No, because the hon. minister will not be in a position to give them anything, and it is unfortunate for the country that should be in a position to-day to commit the extravagances in the way of railway subsidies and bridge subsidies and estimates, which he is committing to-day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman expect to be Minister of Railways?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). No, I expect nothing. I am not like the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who are making a general scramble for everything in sight.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member was not here when I made the explanation, and I do not think it is fair to ask me to repeat it.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the hon. gentleman receive any communication from the city council of Longueuil about this subsidy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. It is true that the Grand Trunk Railway will not allow the Montreal Electric Railway to cross the bridge over to Longueuil and St. Lambert?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know about that, but I know that the municipality have passed a resolution on the subject, expressing the wish that the Grand Trunk Railway be compelled to do that. That would necessarily involve the use of the double railway tracks by the electric railway company. I think that the extent of the railway traffic would hardly make it advisable to run electric cars as well as regular railway trains on that bridge. At first blush, it does not strike me favourably.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). As a representative of the people in this House, I consider that I have certain rights, and I will insist on those rights. One of them is to be furnished with information to enable me to judge of the measures put before us by the government. I have asked for some idea of why this money was granted, and I insist upon some answer. The minister will get along just as fast if he will give me some kind of answer as to why this money is granted to the Grand Trunk. I think the minister, as a matter of courtesy and fair-play, should give me this information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should be very sorry to treat my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan, Glengarry) with any want of courtesy. But does not he think that it would be a bit unreasonable if every hon. gentleman who absented himself from the House till business had been proceeded with, should come in and demand that explanation which had already been given should be repeated? Do I understand my hon. friend that he desires to be informed on this subject that he may know to what conclusion he should arrive at upon it? Because, I rather gathered that he considered himself sufficiently informed to have made up his mind to condemn the proposition. Having con-deemed it in such an unqualified manner, it looks as though the hon. gentleman were asking me for information which could not have the slightest effect upon his mind, and that he would not think worthy of consideration. He has delivered judgment; does he expect the argument now? However, I have no objection in stating to the hon. gentleman that the government have felt that this undertaking of the reconstruction of the Grand Trunk bridge is a very large one indeed. Any person who speaks of the cost of the structure as a whole, as being represented by a million and a half or two millions of money, is speaking either without knowledge or in spite of what his better information teaches him.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, the hon. member (Mr. McLennan, Glengarry) wanted an explanation, and not an attack upon me.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland). Give the information without so much talk.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I labour under the disadvantage that neither my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), who is hankering for information, nor the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), even if they were overwhelmed with information would attach the slightest value to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Now you are making another diversion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is not fair for the hon. gentleman to speak of this structure as one that could be built for even four times the amount of money which they have stated, much more than it could be built for the sums they have mentioned. We know what has recently been done in respect of the—

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). If the hon. minister does not wish to give the information, at least he need not take up so much time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan, Glengarry) is not willing that I should make my statement, I will take my seat.

Mr. FOSTER. What he wants is that you should make your statement and not take up time pitching into somebody else.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. minister has referred to me. I am not hankering so much for knowledge as I am for information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the difference?

Mr. COCHRANE. The difference is that we might get a little information without so much talk. I always thought that a minister of the Crown was a servant of the people, but it appears to me that the present minister does not so consider himself. The government make complaints about the time occupied by this session. I want to tell the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that if he and the other ministers would take less time and give no more information, we would get through the business of the session a great deal sooner. When asked for information they commence to make a speech—as the boys in the country would say, begin to palaver around the subject.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to appeal to my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane)—
