House of Commons Debates.

FIFTH SESSION—EIGHTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 8, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RETURNS, &c.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved :

That an order of the House do issue to the proper officer for a return showing what rails, rolling stock or other material, if any, have been sold or parted with by the Intercolonial Railway each year since the 1st day of July, 1896, to whom the same were sold or otherwise parted with, and whether the sale was made by public contract or tender.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg to lay on the Table a return in accordance with the motion just passed.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). With the consent of the Prime Minister, I would like to move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the return brought down last night by the acting Minister of the Interior, being a report of Mr. Ogilvie's, be printed forthwith. I want to call the attention of the acting minister to the fact that on the sheet for the receipts and disbursements, on page 83, the revenue and disbursements are not given. That table will have to be added to make it complete.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I would like to make a statement across the House to the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) with reference to a complaint which he made yesterday or the day before regarding a return from the Marine Department.

I could not, at the time, of course, have reference to the return which he spoke of ; but I was somewhat astonished, as I have taken very particular care that all the returns from my department were brought down promptly, and I thought I had a clean sheet. If I have not, I am prepared to supplement the return and give every information I can. But, I went, with the deputy, over the statement made by my hon. friend, and I asked him whether there was any information asked for between 1896 and 1897 which had not been given in the return. He told me that there was none, that there had been no dismissals for offensive partisanship on the report of any commission in that period. I asked him to make sure of it, and give me an official answer ; and he has given me the following memorandum :

(Memorandum for Minister.)

In examining the 'Hansard' for Wednesday, the 6th June, I find that the Hon. Mr. Foster, in commenting upon returns furnished by this department in regard to dismissals from office, refers to a return furnished on the 17th June, 1897, which forms Sessional Paper No. 73a of the House of Commons, and states that no name is given in the return of any official dismissed. I find by reference to the return called for that the names of dismissed officials are not called for.

The return furnished, however, in 1899, No. 103, gives information in regard to dismissed officials, stating both the names and post office addresses.

In regard to the statement of Mr. Foster that there is an important hiatus from August, 1896, to April, 1897, in which no information has been given, I may observe that there were no dismissals during the period referred from office on account of political partisanship as a result of investigations held by commissioners.

I think it will be found that the return furnished in 1897 and that furnished in 1899, together with the return supplied during the present session, will give very full information in regard to the inquiries of the hon. gentleman.

(Sgd.) JOHN HARDIE.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the hon. gentleman's reports which have been brought down include all the dismissals?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Include all the dismissals.

Mr. FOSTER. The statement is, that up to April, 1897, no dismissals were made as a sequel to these reports.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman was tardy in making his dismissals. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to call the attention of the acting Minister of the Interior to the fact that Mr. Ogilvie's report on the Yukon, referred to in the report of the Department of the Interior for 1899, and about which the hon. gentleman telegraphed in May to Mr. Ogilvie, has not yet been brought down. The report which the hon. gentleman laid on the Table does not seem to be that report, and it is necessary that that report should come down. Has the hon. gentleman yet received any answer to his telegram as to that?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I have received no answer, and only this forenoon I wrote officially to Mr. Ogilvie asking for an explanation as to why the report was not sent, and why the three telegrams, which, I understand, were sent since this matter was referred to in the House, were not answered. I did, as my hon. friend knows, the very best I could. I have collected every possible information in the department with regard to the Yukon district which came from the commissioner.

Mr. FOSTER. I believe the acting minister has done everything he could to get the report; but I would call the attention of the government to what is rather a serious matter, that although Mr. Ogilvie has now been telegraphed to three times by the acting minister to forward that report, he has not even answered the telegrams, and now, in the last days of the session, the minister is reduced to sending an official communication to him asking for an explanation. Mr. Ogilvie has a great many absolute powers, but he ought not to have the absolute power of disregarding the orders of the acting minister.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think the hon. gentleman should be loth to say that he is disregarding the orders of the minister.

Mr. FOSTER. Three telegrams?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, but the Yukon is a very uncertain country. Mr. Ogilvie may be in the interior or absent somewhere else. I would not be disposed to assume that Mr. Ogilvie is acting in defiance of the order of the minister. Of course, we shall have an explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that another telegram be sent. Though we shall be here for some time yet, I am afraid we shall not be here long enough to get a letter to the Yukon and an answer by letter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I felt very much the same as the hon. gentleman did about it, and I asked for an explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), has asked me to call to the attention of the hon. minister his request that Mr. Ryley's statements should be placed in his hands before he takes up that matter, so that Mr. Ryley's counter statements may be known.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I read over the remarks of the hon. member for Pictou with Mr. Ryley, and there were one or two references in them that neither of us could understand. I have been waiting the return of the hon. member so as to have an explanation from him, and I promise that we will then immediately have Mr. Ryley's explanation placed in his hands.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Pictou would like to know what answer Mr. Ryley has to make.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would be difficult for Mr. Ryley to give a complete answer when he does not understand exactly what the hon. member for Pictou refers to.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know also when the papers promised, respecting the order of February 7, 1900, with reference to Dominion Creek, will be brought down?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have explained to the hon. member for Pictou privately, that there are no papers in the department, except one or two, and I hope to lay them on the Table this afternoon. Any papers in the department will be laid on the Table this afternoon or to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have a statement of the work done by the registrar, Mr. Girouard, in the Yukon, as registrar, from the time he began his office work down to the latest date possible.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—HOISTING OF THE FLAG ON AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY'S BUILDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I would crave the indulgence of the House with respect to a remark by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), on Wednesday last, regarding a matter which he considered important, though I did not. He said that the company which is manufacturing stamps and bank notes for the government had not exhibited the flag on the occasion of the celebration, so general in the city, of the occupation of Pretoria. While I do not attach any importance to the point as to whether they did or did not raise the flag, it is due to the company to say, that I received from its representative, Mr. Myers, a letter, in which he says: 'I personally raised the Dominion flag on Tuesday morning, the 6th instant, on learning the news from Pretoria.'

Mr. G. E. TAYLOR (South Leeds). In reply to the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance, I may say that when I made that statement in the House, the flag was not up, and had not been up that day. My hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie), drew my attention to it, and I went out at noon, and looked for myself, before making the statement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have made no statement of my personal knowledge, but have simply read the words which the manager, Mr. Myers, wrote me. He says that he personally raised the Dominion flag, on Tuesday morning, the 6th instant, on hearing the news from Pretoria and I know Mr. Myers to be a gentleman of good repute.

Mr. T. BEATTIE (London). If he hoisted the flag, he must have taken it down as soon as he raised it. Mr. Klopfer, Mr. Carscallen and myself, were around there and did not see it.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock), found out whether there was any sufficient reason given by the caretaker of the Bathurst post office, for not having raised the flag the other day, and for having refused to raise it on the day of the relief of Mafeking? The newspapers have called attention to this, and an injustice may have been done the caretaker.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The postmaster at Bathurst has his instructions as to the days on which to hoist the flag, and on that particular morning, he telegraphed to the department for instructions, and was instructed to hoist it, so that his hesitation was due to his waiting for instructions, and was not intentional on his part at all.

TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. F. A. MARCOTTE (Champlain). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the House to an article which appeared recently in Le Journal. It is in connection with a letter from Mr. Larose, chief of the translating staff of the Hansard. The article runs as follows:—

The French 'Hansard.'

The chief of the translating staff, Mr. Larose, writes to the 'Journal' and informs us that his duties, as well as those of his colleagues, are not confined to translating the speeches of members from English into French. He says:

'It must not be lost sight of that as there are no other translators of the debates than those who are always called, I do not know why, French translators, it is also upon them that devolves the task of translating into English all the French speeches delivered in the House of Commons.'

That goes to show still more forcibly that there should be added to the staff three or four good French translators, in order that the French edition of 'Hansard' should not remain more than two or three days behind the English edition.

As to the translation of the French speeches into English, as this is quite a distinct work, it should be done by a separate staff.

There is not and there will never be found a translator with such a mastery of the genius of each language as to translate from French into English and from English into French with such a degree of perfection as is required from official translators. Parliament does not pay the official translators sufficient salaries to remunerate a man of so rare a merit.

As the translation of the Debates is in a backward state, I particularly call the attention of the Prime Minister to the opinion expressed by such an experienced man as the chief of the translating staff.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will allow me to remind him that the matter to which he has just called the attention of the House does not come, properly speaking, within the province of the government. It should be referred to the Debates Committee, which is represented in this House.

Let me assure the hon. gentleman that any suggestion the committee may offer will always receive the best consideration at the hands of the government.

THE PILOTAGE ACT.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 11) to amend the Pilotage Act.—(Sir Louis Davies.)

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). This Bill has been reprinted in accordance with the amendments made in the committee, and I merely want to move it forward a stage. I move that the committee rise and report the Bill.

Bill reported.

THE SAFETY OF SHIPS.

Bill (No. 12) to amend the Act respecting the safety of ships (Sir Louis Davies), read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). This is merely, as I explained in introducing the Bill, to correct a clerical error made in the Bill of last session. There is no change in the law.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the clerical error?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hon. members will remember that the time for taking deck-loads was extended at the request of the shipping interest for twelve days, and that has been carried out by the Act and was a great boon. But the Bill in extending that time limited it to the end of the year, and it should read between March 16 and October 12.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 156) to amend the Civil Service Act.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Would my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) briefly explain this Bill; and particularly would he deal with the point as to whether under this Bill any change is made that affects the status of officers now in the service.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Bill does not affect the position of any officer now in the service, except as it may afford opportunity for promotion to some who would not otherwise have that opportunity. The chief object, as I explained at a previous stage of the Bill, is to provide for a grade of civil servants to occupy the place between the temporary clerks who may be employed at a minimum of $400, and the second-class clerks who may be employed at a minimum of $1,100. The view we take is that the difference between the two grades is too great. In former years, we had a junior second-class grade, which grade was afterwards abolished, and a third-class grade, which was also abolished, I think, when the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) was in office, no doubt, for good and sufficient reasons as they appeared at the time. We have found an embarrassment arising from the fact that there are occasions when we need to employ gentlemen in the civil service who can hardly be expected to enter the service at so low a salary as $400, but to whom we do not wish to give, at the outset, so high a salary as $1,100. Many cases could be cited in which the absence of such a grade has proved quite embarrassing. We propose to create a grade of junior second-class clerks. As the Bill stands the minimum salary for this grade is set at $600; but when the Bill is in committee, I shall propose to amend that so that we may make a man a junior second-class clerk and give him the rank and thus start him on his way upwards without necessarily giving him so high a salary. Though he may not get much more at the time of his appointment as second-class clerk than a temporary clerk, he will be in the way of promotion. Another proposal is that the maximum salary of packers and sorters in the Post Office Department shall be $600 instead of $500 as at present. I intend to propose to amend that by including also the messengers of the departments in Ottawa. Their maximum salary at present is $500. There are cases of men who have been in the service a long time, men of special intelligence, and we think that for these men a maximum salary of $500 is hardly reasonable. One difficulty we have in that relation is the dissimilarity of remuneration between the messengers in the departments and the messengers in the House of Commons and the Senate. We pay larger salaries to some messengers in the House of Commons and the Senate, though the service is only for a portion of the year, than we pay the messengers in the regular service who work during the whole year. We do not propose by this Bill to equalize them, but we think that $500 is too small a maximum for the messengers in the regular service. Therefore, if the Committee of the Whole will agree, I will propose to amend the Bill which, in this respect applies only to packers and sorters in the Post Office Department, so as to apply to messengers in the inside service. Then there is a provision, in line with one in the Civil Service Act now, that if a man, in addition to the usual qualification, has passed in two out of three optional subjects—book-keeping, typewriting and stenography—he may be given an extra $100 a year. We propose to extend that so that for special cause in the case of a graduate of the Royal Military College or of one of our universities, a man to whom you would wish to give more than the ordinary salary, you may start him at $800. Then we propose to re-enact the clause of the Civil Service Act which was in force several years ago, but which expired in 1896, whereby persons who were already in the service when the Civil Service Act took effect may be promoted without having passed the regular examination. We propose to renew that for a period of two years. It will apply to those who were in the service in 1882, and have been continuously employed since. It simply provides that such persons shall be treated as qualified for promotion though they may not have passed the examination.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the Bill provide that a person may come immediately into the service, into the second class, if eligible, where the minimum is $1,100 a year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, he could, if necessary, be placed in the second class directly, as at present. There is no change in that respect.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). In so far as temporary writers are concerned, it does away with the necessity for the experience which was found advantageous in those who were coming into the service before they were taken permanently on. I think the government will find the same difficulty as was found before, that men put directly into the service will be found very often not qualified for it, or for any special duties. They will be found lacking in that experience which they get in temporary employment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is nothing in this that prevents them being temporarily employed previously.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They may not necessarily be temporarily employed; they may be taken from the outside at once.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And those who have been temporarily employed and who have had experience, may be passed over?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the case at present. You can make a man a second-class clerk without any previous temporary employment.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). The proposal of the Minister of Finance is to do away with the legislation which, as he says, was introduced when I was Minister of Finance, after a good deal of careful consideration, and with a sincere desire to take away from the country a burden which it was thought was unnecessarily large, owing to the fact that you had a large proportion of clerks, who, in a grade, could go from $400 to $1,000, and in practice a large proportion of them got to the $1,000 mark. Of these third-class clerks, nine-tenths of them did nothing more nor nothing better in service to the country than could be done by writers who could be employed for a salary of from $300 to $600. I do not think there was the least doubt about that being the state of things. The result was that we had a large number of clerks drawing $1,000 when they got to the maximum, and of somewhere between $800 and $1,000 after they had been in the service a little while, and they were practically doing merely clerical work that any bright young man or bright young woman with a good knowledge of the English language and some knowledge of routine business work, which is easily acquired, could perform with equal satisfaction and equal efficiency. And so the government then determined to do away for the future with the grade of third-class clerks, allowing, of course, those who were already in the service to work themselves to the other gradations. Then in the course of time we would have the writers' class, which did simply clerical work and which was a class getting salaries from $300 up to $600, a large class in the service of any government, and which would have been a large class in the service of this government, taking in many grades of ability, out of which it would not have been difficult for the government to pick the brighter and better minds and transfer them, if such became necessary, to vacancies that occurred in the second-class clerkships. But there was also another source of supply. It is a grievance to a great many in the service that those included in the third class who have got up to their maximum of $1,000, have very little chance of preferment, because the vacancies that occur in the upper grades are few in comparison to the number that occur in the third class. Consequently they have little chance for preferment. Now, when you made the writers' class and had no appointments to the third class from the time of that legislation onward, what happened was this, that all that number of third-class clerks were eligible, in so far as their ability and experience made them able to do the work, for promotion to vacancies that occurred in the second-class grade. There is an abundant supply in the third class of good, honest and capable workers who are now up near the maximum, or at the maximum, and some of them have been at the maximum for years; there is abundant material there to supply any vacancies that take place in the second class, in what we may call the ordinary third class clerkships. It always will happen that every once in a while, in the upper grades, you will want a special clerk, and you may not be able to find one with just the qualifications required in any of the grades below. It is always then open for the minister who has charge of that department to come down to parliament and explain the necessities of the case, and by an enactment in the estimates and Supply Bill to appoint the necessarily qualified clerk to that position. But that is a very different thing from making a class, and consequently getting in the course of time a class filled up with high grade clerks, a large number of whom are doing just exactly what we have previously been doing by taking on bright young men or young women who have a fair knowledge of things and are abundantly able to do the work. Now, the hon. gentleman is going to do away with that legislation, which I am perfectly certain was a salutary piece of legislation. Gradually we would come to have a good class of writers, and that lightened the financial burden, because at that time we had a superannuation system and the privileges of superannuation did not accrue to that class. Consequently, we were gradually getting rid of a whole class that entailed the burden of superannuation. Under the present legislation the superannuation business is done away with in one grade, and it is kept up with reference to insurance superannuation, which is also to a certain extent a burden upon the country, inasmuch as the country gives a larger rate of interest to the deposit which comes from contributions of all these clerks to the superannuation fund. It was found from the experience of Great Britain, where it has been tried for many years, that this class of writers do the work effectually and well and at a minimum of cost. Now, the hon. gentleman is going to do away with that. It will not be admitted, I think, by the common sense of the House, that it is not possible by one or two methods always to get the right person for a vacancy that may occur in the second class—that is all you have to provide for; a vacancy that takes place in the first class can be made up by promotion from the second class. I should be sorry to think that any vacancy could occur in the second class where you could not get out of the third class some person who would be quite able to take that vacancy and fulfil the duties. Therefore, all you have to provide for would be an occasional clerk in the second class whom you could not find in the whole range of the third-class clerks, or in the range of writers of more or less experience in the service. Is it reasonable to think that many cases would arise in which, if a second-class vacancy occurs, you could not find in the whole range of the third-class clerks or in the still wider range of the writers—who have had now some six years' experience, and who are gaining experience from year to year—that you could not find any one of all those clerks to fill a vacancy in a second-class grade? Granted that it would occur now and then; but instead of establishing the high class grades of junior second-class or third-class clerks, the easiest way to meet special cases would be the appointment of a special man that you could not get from the other two classes. Select him from the outside, and bring down an estimate for that person, explaining the reasons, and if the reasons are satisfactory, the person could be appointed, as is done every session. You have done it this year. Where is Mr. Marchand? You have taken a man who never was in the service, who had no experience of the service, whose life was foreign to it in every respect, who knew nothing about the routine of work in the Department of the Interior, and it is largely a routine department, you have transplanted him out of an atmosphere foreign to it, put him in at a salary of $1,100 a year, and left five or six clerks in the second class who are engaged in the revenue work, in the accounting, and who are as capable as men could be, sitting there without promotion, and you have introduced this man over their heads. You do not need any junior second-class grade in order to do that. You did it, you gave what excuse you had for it, you got your vote through, your followers supported you, and the House voted the money. I protest with all the earnestness possible against establishing an expensive grade of clerks or making the way for it. The moment you do it there is no limit, you will find that you will have to submit to the pressure of your followers, and before we know it we will have a large junior second-class grade built up. Where is all this talk that we heard so often about the burdens of the civil service? Where are those promises that told us in the good old days that the civil service burden could be reduced to one-third of what it was upon the hill of Ottawa? It was an absolute step in the way of diminishing the burden of the civil service when we substituted a grade that began with $300 and worked up to $600, for a grade that went from $500 to $1,000, and did just as efficient work. That is working itself out, and in the course of a dozen years from to-day you will find few third-class clerks, but you will have a class of writers, men and women who are doing the work at from $300 to $600 a year, and doing it just as well as it was done by a class of clerks getting from $600 to $1,000 a year. The new grade which you are creating will be filled up inevitably. Open up a junior second-class grade, and in the course of eight or ten years you will have it filled up with men and women who are doing the work of writers, and at a high class of salaries when you can get plenty of people who will do the work neatly and well for a much less salary. Where are all these protestations against the weight and burden of the civil service? Where is this consuming idea of lessening the burden and getting the people's work done for a fairly reasonable amount? There are Liberals, there is the present Finance Minister, there are gentlemen who sit behind him, there is my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) who, whether for good or ill, first put that notion of the writer class into my head by remarks which he himself made more than once as to the English system, and why we did not adopt it in this House. It was adopted and has worked well, and I must appeal to the hon. gentleman to come to my rescue now against his expensive and extravagant colleague the Minister of Finance and help me. He and I together! What a stroke of work we could do! By the way, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has not yet notified me if these envelopes are ready for our joint addresses to go out. I accepted the offer; I notify my hon. friend that I am ready now. I am ready to have my speech placed in the envelope alongside of his and circulated with it. It saves handling and expense in the post office, and as both of our speeches will go they might as well go together as apart. I appeal to the House to pause before it puts an expensive, a useless and an unnecessary grade of civil servants upon the finances of the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has pointed out a good many things with which I quite agree in regard to the second-class clerkships which can be filled up. The hon. gentlemen, however, I think, has entirely missed the point and object of this Bill. He has pointed out that under his own direction the government of which he was a member did away with any further additions to the third-class clerkships, and substituted a class of writers, or temporary clerks, who are engaged from time to time, and who, although they have passed the civil service examination do not belong to the permanent civil service. It is for the purpose of enabling those who have shown aptitude and extraordinary diligence in their work to become members of the civil service and to reap the benefits of being in the permanent service, and to keep these people in the service rather than have them leave the service which we are finding is our experience, that this measure is proposed. The class of writers that the hon. gentleman brought into existence commence their service at $400 a year. They are allowed a statutory increase of $30 a year until they reach the maximum of $600 a year. There are bright young men and women who will not enter the public service at all at $400 a year, and if they do they will not stay in the public service after they have gained a few years' experience at only $430, or $460, or $490 a year, as, by the terms of the class which the hon. gentleman created, they are only able to stay. They will not stay even for $600 a year, and the result is that we are face to face with the dilemma that we either have to let those who are specially qualified for their work leave the service altogether or else make them second-class clerks at $1,100 a year. My hon. friend would not, for a moment, suggest that it would be a proper thing to take young men or women who are at the head of the class of writers getting $600 a year, and at one jump, and without any graduation at all, make them second-class clerks at $1,100 a year. I am not speaking of where a vacancy occurs amongst the second-class clerks which has to be filled, but I am speaking of the case of a temporary clerk who is getting even $600 a year, whose services are efficient, but who will not stay in the service at that rate of remuneration, and whom we cannot blame for that feeling, because such people are efficient, intelligent and capable enough to deserve a greater remuneration than $600 a year.

They can get it elsewhere, and they are tempted to leave the service, as in many instances they have done. Under these circumstances the government have thought it best that they should bring back again that class of third-class clerks who are called junior second-class clerks under this Bill. Practically it is a renewal of the third-class clerkships in order that we may be able to retain the services of young men and women who are best equipped for the public service, best fitted to do the work efficiently, and who could not expect to be given second-class clerkships at $1,100 a year. There is a wide difference between $600 and $1,100 a year, and there is abundant room for the adequate payment of efficient men and women in the service between these figures. My hon. friend has asked: Where are these protestations of the desire to make the public service less expensive which we expressed when we were in opposition? My hon. friend received an answer to a very considerable extent, when, a few weeks ago, an hon. gentleman on this side of the House, asked a comparison in certain departments of the public service of the expenditure upon these departments to-day and the expenditure before we came into office. The answers to these questions show, that in three or four departments, although the service is much larger and more onerous than in 1896, the actual expenditure on civil government is less than it was in 1896. That is the way we try to fulfil the promises we made when in opposition. I do not think that it would be wise to adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), to appoint more second-class clerks, so as to give them the promotion they may fairly expect.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not advocate that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If you did not advocate that, do you mean to say that all these writers should be kept for ever as writers, and only be promoted as there is a vacancy in the second class?

Mr. FOSTER. What else do you want to promote them for?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. So as to keep them in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. You know it is very easy to keep your service sufficiently filled up.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are doing that, but efficient men will not stay in the service at $600.

Mr. FOSTER. Let them go elsewhere.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And you would lose the best men you have.

Mr. FOSTER. No, you would not, you always have plenty.

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. You will have plenty of an inefficient character.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all. How many have left?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One left in my own department last year.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very large proportion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are a large number of these temporary clerks, who have told me that unless some such inducement is held out to them they will not stay in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. Let them go.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, and the result would be that you would have nobody in the service that would be thoroughly efficient. If we are to retain the best men in the service we must give them promotion, and if we do not do that we will be driven to create more second-class clerks. Since I have been in the department I have been more and more convinced that the repeal of the Act in 1895 was a mistake. I believe the government were actuated with very proper motives at the time, but it certainly did not make the improvement that was expected.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What does the present law prevent the minister doing, except appointing a lot of raw men permanently in the service. If you have a special reason you can make a second-class clerk now, and if there is a vacancy you can promote a man. The Bill of 1895 was to prevent the appointment of inexperienced men permanently in the service, and this Bill will enable you to do that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And the hon. gentleman suggests that in order to prevent the best men leaving the service we should create more second-class clerkships?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not at all. Will the minister tell me how many of all the civil servants have left during the last three years?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say exactly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, that is very important, because the hon. gentleman founds his argument upon it. Who was the man who had left in his department?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He was one of the assistant patent examiners whom I appointed, and I gave him $600 but I could not keep him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where did he go?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He went to the States and got a higher salary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Quite so, but you are not suffering because he is gone.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was obliged to create three more second-class clerkships, and give them $1,100. I was willing to do that in that particular instance, but in most instances it would be too great a payment for the services rendered. If we carry out the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) and make more second-class clerks, we will create more expense to the country than if we passed this law.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When we were discussing the estimates, the minister said these new men were worth $1,100.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why did you not pay that to the man who left?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because I had not a second-class clerkship to give him, but I had to do it since in order to get the men.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is a new experience.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I repeat that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues made a mistake when they did away with the third-class clerkships, and we are now remedying that mistake, and will make the service more efficient than it is to-day.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is a serious step, and must have been under the consideration of the government. How many cases are in view in which these junior second-class clerks are to be created?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is a matter we must know.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Votes will have to be brought down in every case.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, but there must have been some basis for framing the Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This Bill will not appoint any one.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We cannot get young gentlemen to come from outlying portions of the Dominion to Ottawa to take a position in the service at $400. It is not fair to offer a graduate of a college or of an academy that salary. But to offer him $1,100 is, we think, too much. We think that a reasonable sum would be $600, if we re-established the third-class clerkships.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the minister any difficulty in getting men?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. We cannot get these young gentlemen to stay unless you pay them extra by a special vote of the House every year, as has been done. That is one of the principal reasons why you have in your estimates every year 'notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.' It is said that this is done for favouritism, but it is nothing of the kind. You cannot get good men to enter the civil service at $400. They cannot live on it. $1,100 is too high, and we think that $600 is a reasonable sum to start on. Many of those clerks who were appointed at $400, and receive a special vote every year, might be recommended for this new class. When I came into my department I found two or three clerks who had to get extra pay in one way or another. Would it not be much better to appoint these men to a class where they would receive a fair remuneration, and I do not think that $600 is extreme. I remember the case of Mr. Brophy, stenographer to Mr. Venning, who got $700 a year, but he would not remain. He went off to the States where he has been getting $1,000 ever since.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You got another one, though?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. What was the salary of the former third-class clerk?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He started at $500 and went up to $1,000.

Mr. McNEILL. You are starting with $600.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. Practically, it is the third-class clerk over again, as the Minister of Agriculture has stated.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). I have listened with some interest to hear the Minister of Marine and Fisheries point out that for this work gentlemen of exceptional training were required.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no; not exceptional training.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, the hon. gentleman said: We cannot get gentlemen who are graduates of academies or colleges to come. I was not aware before that selections might not be made from among the bright young men of this country, who are not getting such salaries elsewhere. I am not saying that they are too well paid, but there are thousands of young men who would be glad to come to Ottawa and take their chances of rising on their intrinsic merit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no promotion for a temporary man.

Mr. CLANCY. There is nothing to prevent the hon. gentleman promoting any young man who shows that he has intelligence and industry enough to go forward. The law does not promote him, but he may be promoted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The leap is too great.

Mr. FOSTER. The leap was not too great for Mr. Keyes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He could not get it under this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. You can get over anything when you want to.

Mr. CLANCY. If it were shown that the class of men required for that work could not be obtained under other circumstances, that would be some reason for this measure; but this class is being created in order that permanent appointments may be made, leading to all the consequences which the hon. member for York pointed out as having obtained in the past. Surely we should profit by the experience of the past, and hon. gentlemen have not made the shadow of a case for the change. A young man who has a fair English education can do any part of that work. The experience of the past was, that the service was being constantly filled up with political appointments. It may be said that young men are unwilling to come to Ottawa at the salaries given. That was not the experience of the past. It may be said that they cannot live well on those salaries. The country is not obliged to tell the young men how well they are to get along. The experience of the past is that you cannot keep a young man back if he is industrious; he is bound to rise in the service, unless he is unfairly treated by one or other of the great political parties.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. G. E. FOSTER, (York, N.B.) I am opposed to amending the Act, and I propose to give my reasons why. One thing that has been urged is that you are at a loss to find men to put into the second-class vacancies. Let us see how much there is in that. In the Privy Council you have eight men who are third-class clerks. Every one of these is eligible to promotion to any vacancy that may occur in the second class. I will ask any gentleman in this House if he does not think there is quite sufficient material there for promotion, without making a new class. Will the Prime Minister himself say that these third-class clerks are so dull, so incapable for the execution of clerical work, as to be not fit to take any places which may become vacant in the second class? He will not say that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Nor does the Act say so, nor is it intended to have that effect, nor will it have that effect.

Mr. FOSTER. There are only two reasons for this Act. One is that given by the Minister of Agriculture, that his heart bleeds and his eyes weep because he sees young men and women whom he would like to promote and cannot. The other is that you cannot get material with which to fill up your second-class vacancies when they occur. In the Privy Council there is material enough to go upon for many and many a year without creating another class. In the Department of Justice, while there are not so many third-class clerks, there are still some who are available. However, that is a somewhat technical department, where a different grade of clerk is sometimes necessary from what is required in most of the other departments; he must have a knowledge of law in order to perform his duties. Coming to the Department of the Interior, you find a whole host of third-class clerks, some of them up to their maximum, and others in all grades of the service, from $600 to $1,000. There is evidently abundant material in that department from which to make promotions to any vacancies in the second class which may occur. The Department of Inland Revenue is the same.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Only two.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, I would exhaust the two before forming another class. In the Department of Customs, there are names of third-class clerks whom I know very well, who have not reached their maximum to-day, and are well able to fill second-class positions if any vacancies occur. So, I might go through the whole service from one end to the other. Take the Post Office Department, it has some four pages of a list of third-class clerks, running from $1,000 down to as low as $600 or $700.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is not the slightest intention of passing them over.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, when you want to fill vacancies in second-class clerkships, that is where you ought to go for your material, and there is no necessity to form another class for the kind of work which is done by the clerks in the second and higher grades. My whole contention is based upon this fact, that the kind of work which is done by the third-class clerks is not the highest grade of work; that it can be so arranged, if it is not now, that all the work which was formerly done by the third-class division can be done by the writers' class, running in salaries from $300 to $600 a year. You may talk as you like about what is to be done. I have been in the department, and I know what is done. I know that the vast majority of the work is simply clerical routine work. Here is a paper that requires to be copied, here is an account that requires to be run up, here is a piece of mechanical work that requires tabulation. Any one who thinks for a moment knows what all that class of work is. You do not want a man at a salary of $1,100 or $1,400 to do that class of work when you can have bright young men and women, who will do it quickly, neatly and well, and who are in the writers' class. Oh, but, says the Minister of Agriculture, those bright young men, the time comes when they do not want to stay any longer at a salary of $600. If they do not, and there is no place to which they can be translated in the regions above, they entered the writers' class knowing the conditions, and if they can better themselves outside, I would advise them in heaven's name to do so. For if there is any class into which a bright ambitious young man or woman should not remain it is the lower grades of the civil service. Just come to the common-sense view of it, without any high faluting as to the great work that is to be done, and any one with practical experience knows that the vast majority of the work done in all the departments is simply this routine, mechanical, clerical work, which does not require any higher class of men or women than are getting from $300 to $500 per year. Suppose you come across a difficulty, suppose you want a special class of work done, and you cannot find, in all the unused remainder of the third class, one who is able to do it, and when you cannot find any one in those that fill the writers' class, at from $300 to $600 per year, fit to do it, what would you do? A special case can be specially provided for. It is much cheaper to provide for a special case now and then, when it occurs, than to establish a class, which you will be always tempted and urged to fill up more and more and keep filled up with men and women at a high salary. I do not think any good reason has been given why we should form another class of highly paid men and women to do what is really third-class work. But you say there is some high-class work to be done that you cannot get done by any of the third-class clerks. There is an easy solution of that. The ministers, looking over the departments, will find that some of the second-class work done by men who are paid second-class salaries, is a kind of work which could be just as well done by the writers' class, so that by shifting that class of work to the writers' class, by weeding it gradually out from your higher grades, there will be less to be done in the second or first class, and you will not need to add to your force. The great merit of having the writers' class is to keep all that kind of work, which is simply clerical, down to that class, and the high grade work is none too highly paid for. I suppose my hon. friend is determined to push his Bill through, but I venture to hope he may see differently. These gentlemen are going to make some friends in the meantime by doing this. They are going to fill up this class during the short period of political life which remains to them, but when their political life ends, as it will soon, we will have an elephant on our hands—an expensive piece of machinery that we will be obliged to continue or take the onus and trouble of getting rid of it. If there is no other feeling dominant in these gentlemen's hearts, let them have a little pity for us who are soon to succeed them, and let this thing lay over a year or two, and I venture to say that when we attain office, we will do the service of the country with the writers' class at present existing just as well as it is now done, or as it will be done under this new Bill, notwithstanding the opinion to the contrary of the hon. Minister of Customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I can understand the course taken by the hon. gentleman, who was one of those who established the writers' class, which, in my opinion, was not a change in the best interests of the service. The committee will agree in this opinion if they look at the matter in a broad light. You have the option now of bringing a man into the inside public service at $400 per year, or $1,100 per year. The mere mention of that fact ought to carry a great deal of weight, and it is that which carries weight to my mind with reference to this Bill. I think that the difference is altogether too great. It ought not to be necessary that we should give as high as $1,100 to a person on entering the service to do a certain kind of work, but you must either do that or secure the services of one who values his services at only $400. The distinction is too great, and the object of this Bill is to put ministers, when they require additional help, in the position of obtaining that help without having to pay $1,100 per year at the start off or else employ some one who values his own services only at $400. But, taking that $400, the most he can look for under the law, is an advance of $30 per annum; and when his salary reaches $600 the increases absolutely cease—there is no further promotion for him. That is the difficulty that weighs with me. I do not know that there is the desire to create any large class. The object is to attain efficiency in the public service, and I think that under the plan proposed, that object will be attained, together with economy. It has been stated that you can fill your second-class clerkships from those who are remaining in the old third class, as it was before the law was amended. That is true, and as a rule, I fancy that is what would be done. But if vacancies occur in the second class through death or resignation, or the necessity for extra help, and you promote a third-class clerk to the vacant position, you create a vacancy in the third class.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the intention of the enactment.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Quite so. As the law stands, one of the temporary employees, whom the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) calls writers, cannot be put into that class, for if he is put in as a temporary clerk to do the work, he still gets only $600 and with no chance of advancement. Why should there not be an intermediate grade, to which one of your temporary writers, who has obtained the maximum of $600, may pass, and so be given an opportunity to work his way up? The ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), and other hon. gentlemen opposite, have found fault with the government, because they have withheld the statutory increases, which, they say, should mechanically raise the salaries of the civil servants by $50 per annum; and yet these same hon. gentlemen object to this opportunity for advancement and increase of salary on the part of officers in the civil service. It does seem to me that it is more unjust to promote a man to a place made vacant by the death of one who was receiving $1,000, and still pay him only $600, with no chance of an increase. Let me illustrate the point by a case in my own department. Two years ago, a first-class clerk in the employ of the Customs Department, died. He was engaged in the work in which the ex-Finance Minister has referred—largely clerical work. He had gone on year after year, getting his advance, until, at the time of his death, he was in receipt of $1,700 or $1,750. His death took place after the estimate for his salary had been voted in the Committee of the Whole. But before the estimates were finally passed, I moved to reduce them by $1,750, and, in the supplementary estimates, I placed a vote for $1,750, with the words, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.' My idea in doing that was this: I found I could get what I considered two capable men, one of whom would take the place of the man who had died, while the other would be of use, as the department was short-handed. And so I got the two men, paying no more than had been paid before. But this was done under special legislation, and every year—this year—I have to come to parliament and propose these votes 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.' Hon.

gentlemen opposite will see that if we had a class of the kind proposed, there would not be the necessity for this special legislation, but that when a salary lapsed through the death of the man to whom it was paid, the government should be free to put in a man at a much lower salary, and with the prospect of promotion. The ex-Finance Minister would tell me, I suppose, that when a first-class clerk dies, I should fill his place with a man from the second class, and fill his place with a man from the third class. But the vacant place in the third class could only be filled by giving the work to one of the writers who had obtained the maximum of $600, but who could not be promoted stage by stage with the others, though doing his full share of the work with men in receipt of from $700 to $1,000. Though I have no doubt that the law now in force was adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite with the best intention, I must say it struck me from the moment I got a grasp of the working of the department, that there was this difficulty in the case. The third class no longer exists under the law, but this will have the effect of bringing back that class.

Mr. CLANCY. There is no necessity that we should keep the third class as full as it is now. The object was that this class should finally pass out altogether.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That means that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is in favour of those who are to-day doing the higher class of work, being paid $1,100 from the start. While it is true that there is a class of work which faithful men can perform, and are ready to perform at comparatively low salaries, there is a certain class of duties that we cannot find men to perform, paying them only a maximum of $600 a year. I say again, in conclusion, that the broad fact struck me that for the government to be shut up, either to give a person $1,100 or be content to fill any vacancy that may occur, with persons who are willing to give their services for $400, is a position that we should not be confined to. It does not work in the interest of the public service, and I believe the creation of this class will result in economy.

Mr. McNEILL. At the present time, I understand, there is no possibility of promoting a deserving man from the writer class.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Except to the second class, which is $1,100.

Mr. McNEILL. He can be promoted now to that class?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, to $1,100.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But I thought my hon. friend was arguing that he could not do that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I was arguing that it was not desirable to be forced. If you wanted to put one in that position, to give him $1,100, that there should be an intermediate class in which he might start at $800, or something higher if he had special qualifications, and in which he could gradually work up. From $800 to $1,100 is too great a difference to start with.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has made unto himself graven images, and he bows down and worships them. He worships class, he is struck with a great reverence for first class, second class and third class clerkships.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is the law.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems to be the pivot around which the hon. gentleman moves when he discusses this question. I am not looking at class at all, I am looking at grades of work. He says it is an unfair thing when a vacancy occurs in a second-class clerkship to take a third-class clerk at $1,000 and move him up to fill that vacancy, and then to take a man at $600, and put him into that place to do what the $1,000 man was doing. That is the hon. gentleman's argument. I say that what you are to look at is the grade of work. When you take your third-class clerk out at $1,000 and promote him to do a grade of work worth $1,100 in the second-class clerkship, then you have a vacancy in the third-class clerkship, and a portion of the inferior work which was being done in the third class drops down to its proper level amongst the writer class, and is just as effectually done by the man or woman who is doing work in that writer class. The point of view from which the legislation started was this, that your third-class clerk was engaged largely upon work which was not of a sufficiently high grade to make it proper that salaries should be paid ranging up to from $800 to $1,000. We are just working that off, and in proportion as you promote a man into the higher class he is put into higher class work, and you are simply drawing down the work which was done by the better paid clerk to its own level where it is just as efficiently done by a writer for $400 to $600. The gravamen of the charge against the whole service was that you had hundreds and hundreds of clerks who were getting from $600 to $1,000 for doing work which was not of a quality and character which made such high pay necessary. The fact was that it could be done by what you may call a cheaper class of men, by the writers class. In a commercial establishment all the mere routine work is done by a low class of labour, and that class which requires responsibility and initiative is the class that the merchant puts at a higher grade, and pays higher salaries. Is there a grievance to a bright young man who comes into the writers' class? I think as a matter of course that you will have two classes in that writers' class. You will have a class who are willing to go in for life at $600 a year; you will have another class who will go in and do their best work, and pass that pilgrimage as a stepping stone to help themselves to something better in the outside world. You say those do not make the best class of clerks. I believe they make the best class for that kind of work.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. To give them that promotion you have to give them the $1,100.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the Minister of Customs see that it is not simply the grade which makes the salary but it is the work, and if the work done in the second class is of that kind which is worth $1,100, the leap is a proper leap. But if my hon. friend does not want to leap, he need not for the term of his natural existence. In the third-class clerkships in the service taking them all through, there are hundreds of men who are willing to be promoted to the higher class work. You can promote them, you need not make the leap.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman speaks of what business men would do. I venture to think that any business man having clerks in his employ at $400 per annum and rising to $500 or $600, if he found that he could not recognize their merit by regulations that had been made, perhaps, by his partners, without jumping them up to $1,100, he would feel that that was a very unfair condition. He would say: Here is a bright young man whom I would like to advance. I do not think he is worth $1,100, I am willing to give him $600 or $700, but here is a regulation made by my partners which prevents me from promoting him unless he jumps up to $1,100.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman reasons in that way, let him follow out his argument to its conclusion. Let him simply resolve the service into a business matter, abolish all classes, and let each minister pay each clerk what he thinks he is worth.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is proposing something which is absurd and which he knows cannot be done. There is, however, one portion of the hon. gentleman's argument with which I sympathize a little. He seems to be anxious to draw a wide distinction between those who are of the class of writers and the class who compose the permanent staff. He did not wish them to consider that they had a right to promotion, as their work is clerical and temporary in its character. To some extent, I sympathize with that view. I do not want the idea to get abroad that a man who has the rank of a temporary clerk has a good and just claim to promotion, unless under exceptional circumstances. But, let us see the effects of the hon. gentleman's view. I think we are all agreed that we want a permanent civil service in this country. I think we will admit that the service in Canada is getting better than it was, although we are still a very long way from the English system. We have heard about these bright young men whom we want to enter the service and to give their life to it. Suppose you have one of these bright young men, you propose to put him into this writer class, and if he is a bright young man he will ask himself: What is going to happen to me in this writer class? I will only get $400 a year to start with; I do not mind that, because I am just out of college, but what is going to happen to me in two or three years? Even if I get $600 I have no chance of promotion, unless some minister will take me out of the $600 class, and at one step place me in a position to receive $1,100. My chances are so poor that I will leave the service when something better offers. Such young men have no hope of being appointed to a permanent class. Four hundred dollars is not very much, $600 is not very much, and if a young man, such as I have spoken of, is fit for anything, he will not stay in the service for more than a few months. He will not use it as a stepping stone to something better in the service, but to something else outside. Should we not be able to hold out to some of these bright young men an inducement to go into the service of the country with the expectation of a reasonable promotion in their class, and ultimately into another class? As the law stands to-day your bright young man, if he is fit for anything, will not go into the writer class with any intention of remaining there.

Mr. CLANCY. One of the arguments of the hon. gentleman is that it is difficult to get this class filled, and another argument is, as presented by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that it was unfair to jump these clerks from $600 to $1,100. If the first class can be filled, the service will not suffer. Let us bear in mind that these are all political appointments. I will venture to say that you can get many efficient men in the third class who are better than some of the men in the second class. It would be a strange thing, under our system, if that were not the case. Now, then, if that be true, I want to ask my hon. friend where that grade of work is between $600 and $1,100? There is absolutely no grade of work, and the first permanent clerkship is a second-class clerkship beginning at $1,000 at least. If the hon. gentleman can point out that there is a middle grade of work for which you must supply a middle grade class, there is a case, but there is no middle grade of work. The clerk is on trial as a writer until a vacancy occurs in what is the first clerkship that is permanent, namely, a second clerkship at $1,000 a year and the writer steps into the class of work that belongs to a second-class clerk. He may look forward to this $1,100, or $1,000, and he has a perfect right to do so. Let us recognize, first, that a permanent clerk has to be a second-class clerk, and let us recognize that there is no medium between a writer and a second-class clerk. If there never had been third-class clerks established under our system, the hon. gentleman would be without a shadow of excuse in urging that there should be a junior second class. Until the hon. gentleman can point out that there is a class of work standing between the writer and the second-class clerk, there is not a shadow of excuse for creating a class of clerks for which there is no work corresponding to a graduating salary going upwards. It is all very well to say that this does not look businesslike, but we cannot put the service on an entirely business basis. We cannot pay all the clerks according to their merit under our system, but we can come as near that as possible. We have adopted a system of employing a class of temporary writers, and there is no difficulty in getting any number of persons to take these positions. While I think we are all anxious that the condition of the service should be improved, it does not seem that such a backward step as is proposed will accomplish that end. The few years' experience that we have had since the abolition of the grade of third-class clerks has shown that the change was a wise one. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) says: We will do away with the third-class clerks. I would like to have the hon. gentleman point out what there is specially about that class to which he referred as such. What is the nature of the work that belongs to it? This work has been referred to as being of a clerical kind which belongs to the writers. The work which was done by the third class was writers' work. If that is done let it be done by the writers, and the moment you come to a higher grade, if you require a higher class of work, pay for it without any hesitation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will just give the illustration that I gave before. The hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) is not reasoning fairly, because he knows that he has to consider the Bill in connection with the existing law of the land, because we have to deal with the law as it exists now. If a minister had some means of getting so conversant with the work that he could arrange the work, classify it, and say such work is worth so much, that might be different, but that is not the way it is in the public service. You have now under the law these classes, and this Bill is in reference to these classes. The work comes by classes. It does not come in the way the hon. gentleman says. Although the work of the first class being done in my department, the position having become vacant, I took the promotion which I would be able to do under this Bill without having recourse to special legislation; I dropped the vote for the $1,750, and took that amount to be expended, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, in the employment of two men. One man I put to discharge the duty of the man who died, and I had another man to engage in other necessary work. I do not know how the ex-Minister of Finance arranged in the Finance Department, but it is my experience—and I think my predecessor (Mr. Wallace) will agree with me—that sometimes the duty of third-class clerks are as responsible, perhaps, as the duties of second-class clerks, or even first-class clerks, in some branches.

Mr. FOSTER. What is your inference from that?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That under the system of civil service promotion and mechanical advances of salary that prevailed under the old law, this has gone on whether the class of work required it or not until you have these high salaries being paid. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will find that what he lays down theoretically will not work out in practice.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not the argument of the minister, that occasionally you find first-class clerks who are doing third-class work?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot call it third rate work, but you will get some bright young men at $700 or $800, who are competent to do good work if they have a prospect of advancement. The contention of the government in this Bill is that we will get them at less than $1,100 provided they may have a chance of being advanced gradually.

Mr. FOSTER. When the service was first started, the basic idea was not that you should nominate a certain number of men as first-class clerks, a certain number as chief clerks, and a certain number as second and third-class clerks, and then that you should apportion the work amongst them. When the service was started, the grades of work was first divided and the men were then appointed and classed because of the kind of work they could do. If we get to any other position, great injury will be done to the civil service. What the Minister of Customs said was plain proof that in his first-class division he had a lot of third-class work being done.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. When this man died, that was getting $1,750 a year, he found he could get a man to do it for $1,000 and that he could appoint another man at $750. That was because it was low grade work.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is not so.

Mr. FOSTER. I presume you will find that in some of the departments first-class clerks are doing nothing more than clerical work.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What did you do with that?

Mr. FOSTER. I would put that kind of work where it belongs, in the writers' class, and keep the first-class clerks for first-class work. I see that the Prime Minister is impatient. Does he want this Bill to be rushed through without discussion?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is altogether wrong. What reason has he for saying that?

Mr. FOSTER. Here you are with a grade of third-class clerks running from $500 to $1,000, and you put right alongside of them pari passu what you call junior second-class clerks at the same salary. What under heaven's name do you want with two grades of clerkships which are exactly the same? Every time you make another class, when it comes to make the promotion you multiply the trouble and the heart-burning in each department. If you are going to do this at all you had better reenact the old third-class clerkships and not have two grades exactly the same.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I admit that practically this new class is the same as the third-class clerkship called by another name. I have no doubt that if you were now constituting a new civil service for the first time, you could with your experience of thirty years frame a much better system than we have. I dare say that you would provide that one man should not step from one class to another without undergoing a very rigid examination for the higher class. But now you are dealing with a state of facts that you find at your hand, and are you going to shut the door to many young men throughout this country who may have a proper ambition and desire to enter the civil service? It is absolutely essential for the future good government of this country that a proportion of the best young men of the country should enter the civil service. It is all very fine to have ministers at the head of the department carrying out a certain policy and altering it from time to time, but to have effective government you must have first-class civil servants and you cannot have them unless you are supplied with a good stream from the bottom. There is not an inducement to a clever young man to enter the service to-day. If a vacancy occurs in the second class now, you have to go to the remnants of the third class, or very rarely you can bring in a man at $1,100, but practically there is no hope of entering the service at a higher salary than $400, and then merely as a temporary clerk without any permanency assured to him.

Mr. McNEILL. I have listened very carefully to this discussion, but I have not heard my hon. friend answer the question of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster): Why establish this new class? Why not establish the third class?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend stopped me in the middle of what I thought was a strong argument. I say you must offer inducements in order to get a portion of the best-educated young men in this country to come into the service and make their future in it. What inducements do you offer to-day? I say absolutely none. You do not offer a permanency nor any hope of promotion; you only offer $400 a year to begin with and an increase of $30 a year up to $600 and then stop. Will any educated young man accept an offer of that kind? He will not.

Mr. McNEILL. Can you not put him in at $1,100?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. member for York says you cannot bring a man from the outside at $1,100, because the third-class clerks are waiting for any vacancies that may occur. So that you are excluding from the civil service of this country the very class that you should attract to it. I do not say that $600 is much to offer them, but you offer that with the prospect of rising to $1,000, and a fair hope of rising to the higher positions afterwards.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman has not answered the question I asked: Why establish this new class?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is only a difference of name. The third class was abolished, and we are reviving it by calling it the junior second class. The rights of the third-class clerks now in the service were retained at the time the third class was abolished.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman not paying a larger sum than the country has a right to pay for clerical work?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From my experience of my own department, I tell the hon. gentleman that I am not paying one man in my department more than I think I ought to pay him.

Mr. CLANCY. But if the hon. gentleman introduces this system, he will pay more for the work than he is paying now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not necessarily. I have appointed four clerks in my department, and in each case I had to get a special Act providing, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, before I could give him an increase of salary. There they are, fixed without a permanency at $600, three of them graduates of colleges.

Mr. HENRY CARGILL (East Bruce). Does the hon. gentleman find any difficulty in getting a sufficient number of clerks at varying salaries from $1,100 upwards to do the work connected with the different departments? Is there a lack of men at the present time? Does he find any difficulty in getting a sufficient number of men to fill the positions?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no.

Mr. CARGILL. Does he find any difficulty in getting a sufficient number of men to enter the service at $400 per annum, with the prospect of an increase to $600?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, we find very great difficulty in getting men to come in at $400, with the prospect of rising to $600.

Mr. FOSTER. You could get a thousand to-morrow if you wanted them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not of the right kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Of the right kind.

Mr. CARGILL. I have been in parliament a great many years, and I have made frequent attempts to get several very efficient young men into the civil service in Ottawa, but up to the present time I have failed. I have never been able to get a single young man into any of the departments in Ottawa, even when my colleagues were in power. Now, I can supply any number of young men from East Bruce, and I will obtain from a good guarantee company of the province of Ontario a guarantee for them. I will guarantee these young men to have the necessary qualifications to discharge the duties required of young men who are paid salaries of from $400 to $600. If that be the case, why create offices for men to whom you propose to pay between $600 and $1,100? I cannot see the necessity of it. I was very much taken with the suggestion made by the Minister of Finance that the present government are proposing to conduct the business of this country on business principles. If there were more of that done by the government, it would be a grand improvement. Business men, when they employ a man for their office, know what the minimum salary is and what the maximum salary is. They take him into the office, and promote him according to merit. As soon as he reaches the maximum salary, if he says he can do better elsewhere, his employer says: 'Go, we are quite satisfied we can get plenty of men to take your place at that salary.' That is the way the business men of the country conduct their business, and I cannot for the life of me see the necessity of this change. If it is possible to get a sufficient number of young men, who are anxious to get into the civil service at $400 to start with, with the prospect of that being increased to $600, and you have plenty of men to do the more technical work at salaries varying from $1,100 to $2,000, why create offices for men to whom you propose to pay $700, $800 or $900 when you can get the same work done for $600 ?

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I think I can point out to the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) the necessity for this Bill, and I am glad to see the government introducing it, because to my mind it is a confession of weakness. They see their coming doom; they know that they have every corridor and every room packed with writers; they know the course they pursued when they came in of dismissing officials; and they know that these officials, if without permanent appointments, will be dismissed. They want this Bill put through simply for the purpose of giving these clerks, who are on the temporary list, permanent appointments, so that when these hon. gentlemen opposite go out, as they will in a few months, and we come in, these new appointees will expect to be kept on permanently, having been appointed by order in council. That is the only necessity for this measure.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). I cannot at all agree with the spirit in which the discussion has been approached by some hon. members opposite. I do not think it is at all fair to say to a clerk in the civil service, who has done his work for years faithfully, and who desires an increase: We can get somebody else to do the work at the same price and will not give you any increase. That, I am sure, is not what the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) does in his own business. We all employ people and give them increases of salaries, not because they are doing different work, but because they have been doing their work for a number of years. I have a book-keeper in my office who does the same work as he did ten years ago, but his salary has been increased regularly since and so has every clerk in my office, and I am sure that business men generally follow the same practice. It is not fair to say to a writer who has done his work faithfully for a number of years: You can go adrift, if you are not satisfied, because we can get some one to do the work at the same salary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Under the present Bill they get an increase.

Mr. BELCOURT. Up to $600.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that too little for a man who simply does copying ?

Mr. BELCOURT. They are not restricted to copying. They are often called on to do other work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What other work ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Making compilations, for instance.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps the hon. the Minister of Marine can tell us ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It depends on the department they are in.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not care what kind of work they are called on to do, when a man has been doing work for a number of years, that entitles him to an increase of salary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Up to a certain limit.

Mr. BELCOURT. Of course I would not pay $2,000 to a man who does work that is well paid for at $1,000, but people cannot live in a city like this and bring up families on $600. It is all very well for members of rural constituencies, where living is much cheaper, to talk about the salaries paid in the civil service.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Our rural constituencies do not get $60,000 per year each to do their own local improvements.

Mr. WALLACE. Nor do they get into the Yukon jobs.

Mr. CARGILL. You must not class the rural business men of Ontario with the lawyers of this country. They have not the same facilities for making money.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am not going to notice interruptions of this kind. I think that these comparisons are very invidious.

Mr. FOSTER. As a humble member of a rural constituency, I protest against the slur cast upon us by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not mean any offence, I am only stating what is the case, that year after year we have gentlemen in this House who represent rural constituencies—and I am not saying that they are not entitled to as much consideration as others—making attacks on the civil service.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a great deal of breezy common sense among the rural constituencies.

Mr. BELCOURT. I say that the civil service has been made the legitimate prey of these gentlemen. There are abuses, no doubt, which ought to be remedied in the service, but I do not think it deserves to be made the butt of such attacks as it is from year to year in this House.

Mr. CARGILL. When did I make any attack on the civil service ?

Mr. BELCOURT. My hon. friend—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Your rural friend.

Mr. BELCOURT—has had his opportunity of addressing the House, and I would ask him to have a little patience.

Mr. CARGILL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put him a question? When did I make any attack on the civil service?

Mr. BELCOURT. What I meant by attack was that hon. gentlemen from year to year get up in this House and say that the Ottawa civil servants receive too big salaries.

Mr. CARGILL. I never said so.

Mr. FOSTER. It was the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) who said that.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am not singling out any side in particular. I say that these attacks have been made by hon. gentlemen on both sides, and let him whom the cap fits put it on. At the moment it certainly fits many gentlemen on the opposition benches. I appeal to every hon. member whether it is businesslike to have clerks getting from $400 to $600 per year, and who cannot get any promotion except you jump their salaries to $1,100 per year. That is a state of things that cannot commend itself to any business man.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We all appreciate the high and mighty airs of the hon. member for Ottawa, but with all due respect to him, rural members have just as much right to speak on matters of administration as those gentlemen who represent urban constituencies, and have just as much knowledge of the civil service. The hon. gentleman has, no doubt, behind him a great force who are anxious to come into the civil service, who see him morning, noon and night, and who want to get as much as they possibly can. No attack has been made on the service from this side by any gentleman to whom I have listened, but we say that a class of work which can be done by writers whose ability demand no more than $500 or $600 per year, should not be paid $800 or $1,000 per year. No doubt there are technical branches in the service which require special men, and the government have every opportunity for appointing those men and paying them salaries commensurate with their ability and the duties they are called on to perform. I am opposed to this Bill for two reasons. First, it will load up the permanent service. The object of the former Bill was to employ men temporarily and make them serve a period of apprenticeship in which they would have an incentive to secure the good opinion of those above them, on whose good opinion they would have to rely in their struggle to obtain permanent positions. But the object of the government is to enlarge the permanent civil service of the country for political purposes. It has not been shown that in the practical working out of the present law any injury to the public service has been done. The government have had good service. Occasionally they have to come here with a special clause in a vote: 'Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act,' but it is better to do that than appoint men permanently who are not specially fitted for their positions, and who are consequently fastened on to the public service without special qualifications. While a great majority of the civil service are very excellent people and do their work well, and earn their money, I know instances of men who were put in the permanent service as third-class clerks who have gone on year after year, partly by political pull and partly by friendship pull, up to the maximum, and to-day are getting $1,000 a year—and they are not doing work worth $300.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who are they?

Mr. WOOD. How long have they been in the service?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Long enough to get their promotion to the maximum of their class.

Mr. WOOD. Who appointed them?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not care who appointed them or who they are. I know lots of such cases, and any gentleman who has had anything to do with the departments knows of such cases.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That occurs under the statutory system.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is quite true. Men were dumped into third-class clerkships and made permanent officers without qualifications. And they are getting more to-day as officers of the government than they would get in any other business place in Canada for twice the amount of work. Mind, I say these are exceptional cases; I am not attacking the civil service, for the civil service is, on the whole, a body of able, intelligent hard-working men. But, it was to guard the public service against the drone in it that the existing law was introduced in 1895. And, if carried out, it would have that effect. We have heard a great deal of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) with regard to what business men pay their employees. I know something of what business men pay; I know something of what banks pay in this country. Let any hon. gentleman go to-morrow and ask to have one of his sons put in the Bank of Montreal, one of the strongest institutions in this country or in the world, and what will the lad get? He will get $200 a year.

Mr. PUTTEE. Is that enough?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I rely to some extent, at any rate, on the judgment of financial institutions being as good as that of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee).

The PRIME MINISTER. At what age are men paid that amount ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. A clerk goes in at 16. He gets a certain amount of increase every year. He does not get in permanently.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is a permanent institution.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, but let him not do his work—

Mr. GIBSON. It is the same here.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, that is just the difference between the Bill we introduced, and the Bill hon. gentlemen opposite have introduced. We would employ these people as temporary writers. We proposed to test them as to their energy, ability and industry. And if we found them up to the mark in this respect, we made them permanent clerks. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) proposes, under this Bill, to make them permanent clerks at once, and that is the reason I am making these objections today.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) are very unfair to the civil servants. He said there were men in the departments who were getting $1,000 who were not doing $300 worth of work. Now, I do not believe that there are any such men in the departments, and if he knows of any such men, he ought to be man enough to name them, and not cast a slur upon the whole civil service of this Dominion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I desire to point out, from the standpoint of my own department, the necessity of this clause. There are in the inside service of the Post Office Department, at the present time, fifty-eight temporary employees whose maximum salary cannot exceed $600. There are also a number of clerks in the inside service, some sixty of whom are receiving less than $1,000, while many of them are at the maximum. I should like to have the temporary writers feel that there was some prize open to them that was reasonably within their reach, that there would be a fair opportunity for them to be drawn upon for promotion into the junior second class, whereas, the long step to the second class, with $1,100 as a minimum, must be almost impossible. I am satisfied, therefore, so far as the Post Office Department is concerned, that the adoption of this clause will be a great advantage to the service. In order to leave no doubt as to the efficiency of the staff, I would say that, after careful attention to the staff of the Post Office Department, I am not aware of any one who is drawing $1,000 who is not entitled to his money. We have an excellent staff; and, whatever views might be held by those who have no practical acquaintance with the work of the staff, I can say that, while there are degrees of merit, while some may have been promoted a little beyond what they were entitled to, and some may not be in receipt of as much as they are entitled to for their services, yet there are many in the lower grades who might, with great advantage, be drafted into the higher positions of the service to the improvement of the service—if the system is not abused, as I do not think it will be. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) suggested that this was practically a restoration of the third class. Not so. It is very much easier to go on by annual increments of $30 or $40 a year from $400 to $1,000 than to go from $400 to $1,000 when there are two distinct classes. Therefore, in the division of what was formerly the third class into temporary writers and junior second class—if you choose to consider these two together as making a third class—I think the provision of the Bill makes a wholesome check against an unwise increase of salary, and, at the same time, offers a fair incentive to those in the lower class to look forward to promotion on their merits. I make these remarks because the hon. member for York appeared, in the earlier part of his argument, to intimate that in establishing this class it was designed to pass over all who were in the service that it was a way of bringing in outside people; and so, he proceeds to go through the list of third-class clerks, and asks why this one or that one has not been promoted to the second class, suggesting that it is intended to pass them over. I do not so regard it. He argued from an entirely false premise in suggesting that that was the scope of the Bill. Those in the lower grades will be as likely to receive promotion as before, and scope is offered for the meritorious in the lowest grade to rise.

Mr. CARGILL. Is not the object of this proposal to enable the departments to give from $700 to $1,000 for work that they are now getting done for $600 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. At the utmost, the highest salary at which, under the Bill, one can commence will be $800. The object of the Bill is to provide that if an additional officer is to be appointed, you can get him for from $600 to $800 instead of being obliged, as without the Bill, to pay $1,100.

Mr. CARGILL. I understand the intention of the minister is to select a few men and give them an increase of $800, and then let them work on up to a higher salary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe this Bill will not add one to the list of persons employed in the civil service. But we cannot do what my hon. friend says without coming down to parliament and taking special votes for them. But if we attempted to take any large number of persons who are now doing work at $600 and give them rank and promotion, that would be a fair subject for criticism. In that case we would have to come before the House and explain what we were doing.

Mr. CARGILL. At present the third-class clerks are doing work at a maximum salary of $600.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman means the temporary writers.

Mr. CARGILL. Now, the mere technical work commands a salary of from $1,100 up. I understand that the object of this Bill is to enable the government to pay the men who are at present receiving a maximum salary of $600, to pay them $800 for doing the same kind of work that they are doing at present for $600.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, that is hardly a correct statement of the case. It does not necessarily follow that one single man of the temporary service must be appointed to these grades at all, but they may be. This temporary class is still to be continued for what might be called the ordinary office work, such as copying, &c., you will still have the writer class for this work. But if there is in any class a bright young man who has been a temporary clerk and who is capable of better work and we wish to select him for promotion, we can do so. But I do not anticipate that any such general use of the Bill will be made in that way.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not see why the civil servants of this country should not be treated on business principles in the same manner as a business man treats his own clerks. If I were to engage a man and tell him that I would start him at $400, and that for all time to come he need not expect to get any more than $400 or $600, I would find great difficulty in getting men. I do not think the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Cargill) treats his own men in that way. He says that he has never been fortunate enough to get any individual appointed in the service. I may tell him frankly that he is a very lucky man, because the moment he got one of his friends appointed he would be immediately beset by that person and by his friends to procure for him a raise of salary. This Bill is a step in the right direction, because it gives the government power to increase the salaries of men who are really deserving of an increase, owing to the nature of the work that they are performing. Because a man has been in a certain class eight or ten years, it does not necessarily follow that he is more able to do the work after all that period than he was when he entered. But there may be a man who has been in that class for ten years, and who performs his duties more efficiently than when he entered the service at $400, and for all time to come must that man remain at the salary at which he entered the service, that is, if he merits an increase, unless he has a political pull by which he can rise to $600? I think this Bill commends itself to every member of the House. When men in the service know that they have an opportunity of promotion by reason of faithful service, they are going to do better work. The promotion is not to be by leaps and bounds. As has been pointed out by the Postmaster General, he has 58 men in his employ, and he cannot pay one of them more than $600, he cannot advance any one of those men into another class unless he gives him $500 of an increase at one step. We must admit that $500 is a very large increase to give any man unless it is given for very special service. I say that the government is wise in taking this power without having to come down to parliament and appeal specially for any man in the service. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) advanced the idea that the government was going to be defeated and they wanted to put their friends into the permanent service before the Conservative government came into power. Now, we can understand exactly what his idea of politics is. His idea is that the knife is going to be brought into play by the Conservatives the moment they get into power. What was all this squealing about the first session of this parliament when the Conservatives were imploring the Liberals not to remove some Conservatives from office? In 1878, after the Mackenzie government was defeated, there was not a man in the service that had been appointed by that government, who was not dismissed within 24 hours after the Conservative government took office unless he was tied down by order in council. So it appears that the same thing is going to be repeated when the Conservatives get into power. Let me tell my hon. friend that he will not be in the House when the Conservative party gets into power. I say the government ought to be supported in this measure, by which they take power to promote efficient men in the service and not be obliged, as the member for Hacklmand (Mr. Montague) says, to retain men in the service at large salaries who are not worth $300 a year. I say that the minister would be derelict in his duty if he had not brought in a Bill to relieve the government from the necessity of paying men more than they are worth.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When I was a member of the government I began the cleaning out process from the moment I started, and I was attacked very bitterly for it. It appears to me that the courtly gentleman from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) made his statement under a little excitement. I see in the press to-day something which throws a little light upon the question of government patronage. I see by the Toronto Mail that a delegation of French Canadian Liberals waited on Messrs. Belcourt and Hutchison, the members for Ottawa, and presented to them the protest of about a thousand French Canadian Liberals against the way the government patronage is distributed in Ottawa. Messrs. Belcourt and Hutchison said that they would bring the matter to the attention of the proper authorities. Whether they have done so or not I do not know, but the government is anxious, apparently, to put through this Bill; and if the passing of this Bill will relieve my hon. friends, the junior and senior members for Ottawa, from the pressure of these 1,000 Liberals, then, I say for heaven's sake let us pass it.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to have a little information about this matter on one point that I have not been able to understand as yet. Why is it that the government are pursuing the course that they have pursued in regard to this measure? I presume that they are going to carry this clause. As I understood the Minister of Finance, his object is to secure men to do technical work at a lower rate than the government are now compelled to pay.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not necessarily technical work, but good work.

Mr. McNEILL. What has been called technical work in the course of this debate, second-class work. I presume they are going to carry this clause. But I have not yet been able to understand why it is that they introduced this new clause, and why they do not abide by the old divisions into second and third class clerkships. I want to make one other remark. I think the member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) scarcely intended to be so severe on rural members like myself, as some of my friends on this side of the House thought he did. I did not understand that he meant to say anything very offensive to poor, ignorant rural representatives like myself in this House. But, I think I have heard hon. members, like the hon. member who spoke a moment ago, speak as though members on this side of the House were attacking the civil service. This is one of the most extraordinary statements that I have ever heard, although I have been a member of this House for eighteen years, and I have heard some very curious things said. If there is one thing we have been accustomed to more than another it has been the most violent attacks from the hon. members who are now occupying the Treasury benches upon the salaries paid to the civil servants of this country. We have, upon this side, been defending the civil service. I quite agree with what the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) said a moment ago, and I think it is a matter that ought always to be kept in view in discussing the civil service, as to the necessity of endeavouring to induce men to remain in the service. I am not quite sure if that point of view has been as strongly insisted upon as it might have been in this discussion. I do say to the hon. gentleman that when he puts that position before the House as strongly as he did to-day, I wish he would go as far as the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) asked him to go, and asked the government to go, and let us have the decision of the courts so that we may know whether the members of the civil service are not being robbed, at present by this government, of their statutory increase. I do not say that the government is doing so deliberately, but I say that it is deliberately withholding a statement as to the condition of the law from the civil servants which the civil servants are entitled to have. These men entered the service with the understanding that they were to have their statutory increase. I believe, and it is the opinion of many of the best lawyers in the House, that they are entitled to have their statutory increase. The hon. leader of the opposition has asked the government to have a case laid before the courts so that we may know whether they are by law entitled to this increase, and up to this time the government have refused to do the civil service the common justice of doing this. So that I think it ill-becomes hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to twit hon. gentlemen upon this side of the House with any desire to do an injustice, either by word or deed, to the civil service.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I wish to say a word in regard to one point. I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that there is nothing in the name itself. I would say that what was the third class, under the former system, and the junior second class, will be practically the same, and call for the same salary. So that, whether you call them by one name or another, it can have nothing to do with the merits of this Bill. I think there is a convenience in distinguishing between them, because third-class clerks under the former law come under the Superannuation Act, so that there is a convenience of distinguishing between those who are officers, who came under that law, and officers that do not.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend can hardly carry that out. Is a gentleman put into a second-class clerkship, by the legislation you are passing through now, eligible for superannuation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Under the new system, yes. The superannuation system that he would come in under is different from the other. We have, strictly speaking, no superannuation now. We have a savings fund. These gentlemen will come in under what I may call the new savings fund system, but they will not be under the old superannuation system.

Mr. TAYLOR. I just want to say a word in reply to the hon. member for Ottawa

(Mr. Belcourt). He made the statement that no person could live in Ottawa on $600 a year. There are 312 working days in the year, and $1.50 a day would be $468. There are plenty of people living in Ottawa to-day on $1.50 a day.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 120) to incorporate the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.—(Mr. Frost.)

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 172) respecting the Canada Mining and Metallurgical Company (Limited).—(Mr. Casey.)

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 156) to amend the Civil Service Act.

On section 2,

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Is there any objection to put the word 'only' in there, so as to make it read 'and only after.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It does not strengthen the meaning of it. It cannot be done before.

Mr. FOSTER. But it is done before, and you will need all the stiffening you can.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). There is no objection to that.

On section 7,

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). I would like to ask the minister why a graduate of the military college should be given a preference over others having the full qualifications to do the work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It applies not merely to graduates of the military college, but to graduates of any university. The idea is that in special circumstances we may give a little recognition to a man who has taken the trouble to qualify himself by a college education. If a man has spent years taking a course of instruction at one of our higher institutions of learning, it is not a fault that we should give special recognition to that fact.

Mr. CLANCY. I deny that such a distinction should be made in the civil service of Canada, which belongs to men who, in many cases, are unable, owing to their position in life, to secure a college education, while well able to perform the duties required in the service. A university degree does not give a man any special advantages for those duties. I will venture to say that, generally speaking, there is not a particle of work done in the service that might not be done efficiently by persons unable to take such a degree. There is no doubt about that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is much doubt about it.

Mr. CLANCY. While university graduates should be encouraged to come into the service, I do not see why a preference should be given to them, thus placing at a disadvantage other young men who may be quite as bright, if not more capable. The fact that a man has passed through and taken a degree in any of our universities is no measure of his qualification to be a good accountant.

Mr. MONTAGUE. A good many of them do not know anything about accounts.

Mr. CLANCY. As my hon. friend says, a good many of them do not know anything about accounts. I say it is unfair to give them a preference over other men who can do the work as efficiently and, in some cases, more efficiently. The special training is no argument that the work will be better done.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that we may safely lay it down as a rule, that even if a man is to be a hod carrier, a college education will make him a better hod carrier. I speak feelingly on this subject as one who has not enjoyed all the advantages of that higher education. I do not hesitate to say that in any walk of life a man may be engaged, he is all the better for having enjoyed a university training. That training does not belong exclusively to the sons of wealthy men. Our educational institutions in every province are, fortunately, in such a condition that they can afford to the sons of poor men the advantage of university training almost equally with the children of wealthy men. When the hon. gentleman says that this is unfair to some one else, I may say it is unfair to the son of a poor man, who has struggled hard to obtain a university education, that in the public service of Canada there should be no recognition of that struggle.

Mr. FOSTER. Like the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) I may be taking the unpopular side, but I do not believe a word of what the Finance Minister has said. It sounds well, but I do not believe it can stand the test, and I am speaking now in the face of one of our university men from the maritime provinces. Take two men who have commenced the struggle of life at the same time. The circumstances of the one have enabled him to take a collegiate course, but the other has had to content himself with a business course, and after finishing his superior school education he goes to a business college and thoroughly fits himself for business. He will probably be better fitted for the work of the departments than the man who comes out of a university, and has got his degree, and who, in nine cases out of ten, has to learn the special work which he is called on to do after he gets through his college course.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He starts with a trained mind.

Mr. FOSTER. It all depends on circumstances. Other things being equal, the university course gives him the advantage, but it is only when other things are equal, and your hod carrier might turn out a much better hod carrier if he had never seen the inside of a college. I think the hon. member for Bothwell has the right idea. If you have a special kind of work, which requires a higher grade of training, you look to a university man, but you ought to show that you have that kind of work to be done. When that is shown, you can start this man at $800. The Auditor General is very partial to university men. He has always held that, other things being equal, he would rather take a university man and start him at $800 or $900 than one without university training at a less amount. But what ought to be shown is that there is a grade of work to be done which requires that kind of man. But take a young chap who struggles just as hard, and in nine cases out of ten much harder and for a longer time probably, to fit himself for work than one who was fortunate enough to have friends to put him through a university, I do not think you ought to give a premium to the more fortunate one who has been able to get a university training and who is not more fitted for the class of work you require to be done than the one who did not have that advantage. This clause provides that the Governor in Council may, for special cause shown, appoint a graduate of the Royal Military College or of any university in Canada. What is that special cause? This section would be interpreted to mean that the special cause was the fact that the person applying is a graduate of a university, and on that ground alone he would start at $800, although he had no special training for the special work of the department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The special cause would be special qualifications for a particular work. It does not follow from the section that because a man is a college graduate, he must get $800. There must be special cause shown.

Mr. FOSTER. Consisting in what?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have been trying for three years to get a graduate of the Royal Military College in my department as a draughtsman. Parliament fixed the salary at $600 and I cannot get a man at that price. I tried to get one by raising the salary, but Colonel Kitson told me that even now the salary is too low, and these men with special qualifications will not accept that figure.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). What does the hon. gentleman say with regard to business colleges? They are taking a very high stand now in the province of Ontario, they have confederated among themselves, and have a regular standard of examinations which their graduates have to pass. These graduates are much more specially fitted for the work of the department than university men. They are taught practical work, such as banking and stenography and book-keeping, and when our leading firms want book-keepers they apply to a business college. They are specialists to a much higher degree for the business required to be done in the department than university men. I regret, with the Minister of Finance, that I had not a university education. But it is a fact that cannot be denied that men come out of our universities, particularly pass men from our universities, without any qualifications for business whatever. In many cases, the very fact of their having spent four years in this work of the university, in my judgment, sometimes actually unfits them for business. But, putting that aside, if we give this advantage to the university men, I think we ought to give it to the commercial college men.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not say that I agree with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) in all that he has said; but, I may point out, that his view is met, to some extent, by the provision in regard to the optional subjects. A gentleman who has gained a certificate in the commercial college can pass in the optional subjects, and thus begin at $700.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And you will not examine him?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, he will have to pass an examination in two subjects.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why should he?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To get the extra $100.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But, why should he be examined when the university man is not examined?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The degrees of the universities are recognized throughout Canada. I do not think we could use the general expression 'commercial college,' and treat every holder of a certificate of a so-called commercial college as being equal to the graduate of a university. I do not think the hon. gentleman would wish to push his argument so far as that. There are commercial colleges and commercial colleges.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That does not apply to Ontario.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But, this is a law for the whole Dominion. The commercial colleges are doing good work, but I do not think there is a standard of commercial college education that would justify us in treating their certificates in the same way as a university degree.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Montague) knows that the existing Civil Service Act discriminates between a university course and other forms of education, because the holder of a commercial college certificate must pass the civil service examination the same as anybody else. We simply follow the rule in this case, except that we provide that on passing in two subjects of a commercial college course, the candidate can get an additional $100.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would point out further, that some of the best men for the civil service in Canada are school teachers. Why should we allow the university men to get in without an examination, while compelling the school teachers to submit to it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the present law, and I only have not proposed to depart from it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But, I think it should be departed from. A man may be a teacher of a school in a large town, a man of the highest qualifications—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is he not usually a university man?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But, if he is principal of a school?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) knows nothing about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is so with us.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With us, the principal of a large school is usually a university graduate.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am afraid the universities in the east do not maintain such a high standard as do ours in Ontario. It is much easier to get a degree there, I am afraid—

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, these hon. gentlemen can discuss the matter with their colleague the Postmaster General (Mr. Mullock).

Mr. CAMPBELL. Question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) would keep quiet—he knows nothing about this part of the matter. The principals of our public schools are not, in one case in a hundred, university men.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, dear!

Mr. MONTAGUE. I appeal to my hon. friends from Ontario on both sides of the House. There is not a gentleman in the House who will say I am wrong if I say not one in two hundred, but they are thoroughly educated men, men of the very highest qualifications. Principals of our high schools are all graduates, but the principals of our public schools have very few graduates among them. I venture to say that there are not two men at the head of big public schools in Toronto who are graduates of universities. Why not admit the holders of these positions to the civil service without compelling them to undergo an examination?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The same standard does not apply throughout the Dominion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is unfortunate.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). Speaking for my own province, I do not know a principal of a school who is not a graduate of a university.

Mr. POWELL. High school?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). All our high schools and public academies. We would not think of having it otherwise. That is the reason why our education is of a much higher character than that in Ontario. The argument the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) uses itself shows the wisdom of this. He says that teachers would be good men for the civil service. With us, almost every graduate is a teacher. He has to teach between times—that is the way the majority of them get their education. And I can tell the hon. gentleman that these graduates know as much about general business and matters relating to book-keeping and so on, as most of the young men I have seen who have passed through the commercial colleges. They have to teach all branches of mathematics and they are perfectly competent to do it. Let me tell the hon. gentlemen that I have known men plucked in our universities to go up to the large universities in the upper provinces and pass with a great deal of credit. History everywhere shows that the smaller the country the better the colleges. Go to Aberdeen and Edinburgh, and where do you find better colleges? They may not have the fame of Oxford and Cambridge, but that is because they have not the population about them, but they have sent out as well-trained and as highly educated men as any colleges in the world. I would not have referred to this matter had not the hon. gentleman suggested that our colleges did not amount to anything. While it is true that some self-made men are better than college graduates—for instance, Elihu Burritt was a man of marvellous learning, though self taught—no man will say but that the college graduate is a better man in every respect and can do his work better than if he had not the advantage of a college training. If you allow teachers and many more in, there is no use in the civil service examination. You must draw the line somewhere; and, in my opinion, there is no better way than to say that a graduate of any university in Canada may be admitted without examination, and that those who have special qualifications shall be given advantages on demonstrating that they have those qualifications. It is only another way of saying that the passing of a college course is in itself evidence of the possession of due qualifications which other men must show they possess by passing an examination.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest an amendment to this section so as to make it read:

The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the head of the department, setting forth that the person to be appointed has special qualifications for the duties to be performed, and concurred in by the Treasury Board, appoint, and so of—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not like to accept that off-hand. But, let the clause go as it is now, and before the Bill finally gets out of committee, I will give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) an answer. I quite see the purpose of the amendment—it must be for special reasons with regard to the man and the duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and that is the work of the deputy.

On section 9,

Mr. FOSTER. I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to a point which I think is worth consideration. The government seem to be agreed that this is going to rehabilitate the third-class section. To my mind you are doing this: The third-class clerks exist, there are a large number of them, they are in the service, and many of them have been for a considerable length of time. They will be known as third-class clerks. You are superimposing upon those a junior second class. That junior second class will by its very name take precedence of the third class; so that whenever you come to promotions into the second class and so on, it will be the junior second class division from which these promotions will come.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not necessarily.

Mr. FOSTER. It would naturally be so, as the hon. gentleman will acknowledge. Now, that would be an injustice. If you were now to make a class and put it over the old third class in which there are so many deserving men, it would be an injustice. I think something like this should go in to remedy that:

After the passing of this Act all third-class clerks now in the service shall be styled and known as junior second-class clerks.

There are two things you do by that. You certainly place the third-class clerks where they ought to be, and you get rid of having two classes when one class is quite sufficient.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will make the same answer to that as I did in regard to the other amendment. I will take it into consideration. So far as their substantial position is concerned, there is really no difference between these two classes. I do not attach the utmost importance to the names. I do not think there would be that discrimination. But if the hon. gentleman will allow that amendment to stand, before the Bill finally leaves the committee we will consider that. Now, I would like to call attention to the amendment which I announced in my introductory remarks. Section 10 now reads:

The salary of a packer or sorter, employed either permanently or temporarily in the first or inside division of the Post Office Department, may be increased to a maximum of $600.

I propose to enlarge that so that it shall apply to messengers also. Instead of applying it strictly to the post office staff, it will apply to the civil service generally and include messengers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was going to suggest that it shall apply to the Customs branch. I think the most underpaid men in the whole service are the men who do the manual labour.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Section 10 will now read:

The salary of a packer, messenger, sorter or porter, employed either permanently or temporarily in the civil service may be increased to a maximum of $600 per annum, by amounts not exceeding $30 in any one year, such increase to be granted only upon an order in council passed on report of the deputy head, and concurred in by the head of the department, that such messenger, porter, sorter or packer is eligible for such increase and is deserving thereof.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does that apply only to the inside service? Why should a packer or sorter in the city of Ottawa, in the inside service, get more than one in the city of Toronto? If the hon. gentleman passes that it must apply to all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think in the Post Office Department the salary of messengers in the outside service is already $600.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is not in the Customs.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On page 195 of the Civil Service List you will see, letter carriers, sorters, stampers, messengers, box collectors and porters get salaries from $360 to $600. When that clause was drafted it was not necessary to extend $600 to the outside service, because they already get $600.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think in the Customs branch, where men work very hard, the salary of messengers and porters is $500.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the Customs it is $200 and $500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps we should make it clear that it shall apply to messengers generally.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Minister of Finance had better make a little revision of that whole matter. He will find that goes a long distance, and if it is fair for one outside man who works so many hours at manual labour to go up to $600, it is equally fair for another outside man who works at manual labour for an equal number of hours.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Suppose we take the clause in its amended form to apply to messengers, packers and sorters, and I will look into it and see what other classes there are.

On section 11, subsection 3,

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. Minister of Finance know how many of them are eligible?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I could not give my hon. friend the information.

Mr. FOSTER. Why say 1901?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The idea is not to make it a permanency.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thought the supply had become exhausted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are one or two yet, I think.

On section 12,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In regard to section 12, I want to make a slight change in the phraseology. In the fourth and fifth lines, instead of saying, 'under the provision of the Civil Service Act,' I propose to say 'than the minimum salary of the class.' I beg to move that the section be amended in this way.

Mr. FIELDING.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose that the Bill be allowed to remain in committee, and that it be not reported at present, that we may give it further consideration.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY—THE PACIFIC CABLE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I want to bring to the notice of the House, and of the government, a matter which I deem to be of considerable importance. My justification for doing so is the information contained in certain despatches which I shall read in a moment. I feel further justified in trespassing upon the time of the House, because I have been asked by the Board of Trade of Ottawa, a body which displays a good deal of intelligent zeal in the public interest in dealing with questions of importance, to lay before the House a series of resolutions passed by this board of trade some months ago, and which I have had in my possession for some time. The series of resolutions refer to the scheme for the construction of the Pacific cable. The resolutions read as follows:

Resolution No. 1.—That while the proposed Pacific cable would foster trade and intercolonial intercourse, it would at the same time constitute the initial link in a system of cables to all British possessions around the globe, that such a system would form a new bond of Imperial unity of inestimable value.

1. That this board regards it of vital importance that the Pacific cable should be completed as a state undertaking, without delay.

2. That in view of the great object to be attained, this board is strongly of the opinion that it would be wise policy to make full provision for ultimate state ownership in any arrangements hereafter made to lay cables by private companies between British possessions in any part of the globe.

3. That this board recommends that the principle of state ownership be especially provided for in the cable proposed to be laid by a private company between South Africa and Australia.

Resolution No. 2.—That this board attaches so much importance to the resolution respecting the Pacific cable, that it especially requests the members for the city of Ottawa to bring the subject before the government and parliament.

Resolution No. 3.—That a copy of the resolution respecting the Pacific cable be transmitted to the principal chambers of commerce in the United Kingdom, with the request that they will move the home government to reserve the right to Her Majesty to assume possession of the cable in any arrangement for laying a cable by a private company between South Africa and Australia.

I do not propose to take up the time of the House in going over the details of the agreement entered into about a year ago between the Australian colonies, the Imperial government and the Canadian government, for the construction of the Pacific cable. That the cable should be constructed, is a matter upon which, I think, every member of the House is agreed. I only want to remind the House that the principle which was sanctioned, when the scheme was entered into, was the principle of state ownership, in reference to a certain portion of the cable, and I think, looking also to state ownership ultimately in reference to all cables laid between British possessions. Since that agreement was entered into a great many delays have occurred, and a great many obstacles have been thrown in the way of completing the scheme. These obstacles have been occasioned largely through the opposition of a monopoly called the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company. It would seem that matters are now getting to a serious pass, so far as the principle of the state ownership of this cable is concerned. The success of the project is seriously impaired, if not imperilled, by certain negotiations that are now going on between the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company and certain Australian colonies. I want to read to the House an article which appears in the Nhill Mail, of the date of May 5, a paper published in Australia. It is as follows :

We desire to specially call our readers' attention to an appeal 'To the British People in the Australasian Colonies,' sent by the last Canadian mail by the eminent engineer, Sir Sandford Fleming, to our worthy townsman, Mr. J. C. Lockley, with a request that the same should be made public. The appeal, which is published in another column, should go so straight to the heart of every true Britisher that anything further urged in its favour hardly requires to be put forth. The British people own one flag and should have all interests in common, and in furtherance of this most noble sentiment, which we know the people of Australia most heartily reciprocate, the Canadians have asked us to join with them and with Great Britain in a practical connection by telegraph cables which will bring all together, and within a few hours' speech of one another. To assure such being an integral part of the flag somewhat in the same way as the British navy is, and, in fact, to act in conjunction with the navy, it was proposed to make these telegraph cables, with their stations, British in every sense of the word—that is to say, to be owned and controlled by the self-governing British states of the empire. The adoption of the first part of such a laudable project, the Pacific cable, was agreed to by Great Britain, Canada, and nearly the whole of the Australian colonies, inclusive of New Zealand. This work should have been accomplished to-day, and we have no hesitation in saying would have been accomplished had it not been for outside influence of a most powerful nature permeating in every direction in which such influence has been of use to the monopolists who control the greater portion of the world's submarine telegraph cables. The monopolists do not like the idea of any state-owned cables. In such a case their large dividends would disappear, for they know only too well that the self-governing states of the British Empire, with Great Britain, can obtain capital at a very low interest, and since these cables would be laid for the good of the British people in the development of commerce and its protection, a low tariff would only be required to assure a sufficient revenue for payment of interest, sinking funds and maintenance, and this is fully proved by the postscript to Sir Sandford Fleming's appeal. To nip such a project in the bud the cable monopolists have agreed to forego a subsidy of £32,000 per annum for twenty years, which they at first required, and to lay a cable via the Cape of Good Hope, provided the Australian governments will give them certain concessions, viz., permit them to open their own offices in the Australian capitals. Prior to the proposal of a state-owned Pacific cable, they did not ask for such a concession, and it is doubtful if they would have accepted the same had it been offered to them by the governments. On the face of it, the concession seems very innocent, but it empowers its holders to make secret contracts with clients for a term of years, allowing rebates on published prices.

The only fair way to deal with this problem is for the governments to fix a tariff, to collect all messages as at present, and to leave the question of route entirely with the sender of a message, and any objection to such a system can only mean that the objectors are to be looked at askance. Again, for such a concession given to the present monopolists the Australian colonies were given to understand they would obtain a new all-British cable via the Cape and the islands of St. Helena and Ascension. Did they receive it, or are they likely to do so? From published reports, we are informed that the cable actually laid goes to the island of St. Vincent, which is Portuguese territory. This certainly does not convince us that the new cable will be all-British. Certainly there is a West African costal cable which may be called all-British, but if we are correct this was submerged and in operation long before the promise of a new all-British line via St. Helena and Ascension was made in return for the concessions asked. In conclusion, we would most strongly urge all true British people in the Australasian colonies to see that they are not put off by any compromises with private companies that would tend to even delay the practical realization of the Pacific cable as the first link in a system of all-British state-owned cables connecting all the larger British possessions in the world into one great Imperial whole.

I find that the Melbourne Argus in its issue of the 5th of May contains a despatch which must necessarily give alarm to those who are anxious to see the construction of the Pacific cable at the earliest possible date. I wish to point out that Victoria and New South Wales are two of the colonies which are parties to the agreement entered into about a year ago for the construction of the cable. It will be apparent from the following quotation, that these colonies have entered into negotiations with the Eastern Telegraph Company to grant that company concessions which cannot be exercised if state ownership is to be preserved.

The Cable Schemes.

When the Postmasters General of Victoria and New South Wales completed their conference in respect to the Cape cable scheme of the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company on Thursay afternoon, Mr. Crick had to leave for Sydney before a clean copy of the amended and proposed new clauses had been made. Yesterday Mr. Watt forwarded to Mr. Crick a full copy of these, and Mr. W. Warren, manager in Australasia for the company, who is at present in Adelaide, has also been supplied with the result of the conference's deliberations. It is understood that Mr. Warren has referred the amended and new clauses suggested by Mr. Crick and Mr. Watt to his directors in London for their consideration. From Adelaide Mr. Warren will proceed to Freemantle, but his absence from Victoria will not hinder the conduct of negotiations, which will be continued by telegraph if necessary.

Adelaide, Friday.

The alterations in the proposals of the Eastern Extension Company for laying a cable from the Cape to Glenelg, as suggested by Mr. Crick and Mr. Watt, have been submitted to Mr. Warren, the Australasian manager of the company. The ministers mentioned telegraphed to Mr. Warren, inquiring whether the company would insert in the agreement a purchase clause, to be read in conjunction with the arbitration clause. Mr. Warren replied that the arbitration clause had been cancelled, and that the purchase clause would depend upon its conditions, and upon whether it was approved by the contracting colonies before he submitted it to his board in London. He added: 'The agreement having been completed with the three colonies of South Australia, Western Australia and Tasmania, cannot be altered, and will be strictly adhered to.'

The last extract with which I will trouble the House is this: On the 23rd of May the Times published the following in its report of the proceedings of the Imperial House of Commons. I would point out that the despatch was read in the Imperial House of Commons by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The Eastern Telegraph Company.

In reply to Sir C. Dilke (Gloucester, Forest of Dean),

The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Sir M. Hicks-Beach) said.—Arrangements have been made with the Eastern Telegraph Company by which landing rights will be given for the cable to St. Vincent, one of the conditions of which is the laying of a cable from Ascension to Sierra Leone. The Eastern Telegraph Company has entered into an agreement with the colonies of West and South Australia and Tasmania to construct with all convenient speed the line from Durban to Mauritius, Rodrigues, Cocos and Freemantle in West Australia, and thence to Glenelg, South Australia, as soon as landing rights have been granted. Landing rights have been granted in Natal and in West and South Australia, and the company has been informed that Her Majesty's government are prepared to approve the granting of landing rights at Mauritius, Rodrigues and Cocos, and will issue licenses as soon as the general form of license now under consideration has been settled.

If the information contained in these despatches is reliable, it is quite evident that the object which Canada was so anxious to have realized, namely, the ownership by the different colonies and the home government of the cable, will be utterly impaired if not imperilled. It may be said that some of the points referred to in these despatches do not cover the matters provided for in the agreement entered into between the different colonies and the home government, but my object in bringing the matter before the House is to ask not only that the Canadian government shall make such representations to the Imperial government as will insure the ownership of this cable by the different governments, but also that all cables which shall in future be laid between British possessions shall be laid under a provision looking to state ownership in the future. In these days when we hear so many plans for promoting Imperial unity and prosperity, it seems to me that we should give our attention and our efforts principally to these projects which are practical and business-like, and which, to my mind, will bring about Imperial unity and prosperity far surer than a great many of the sentimental and hysterical schemes that are propounded. No scheme will tend to promote more efficaciously the strength, unity and prosperity of the British Empire than an all British line of cable uniting the British possessions, and encircling the globe. I ask that the government shall make such representations to the Imperial authorities, if they have not already been made, as will prevent the granting of concessions to this huge monopoly, the Eastern Telegraph Company; concessions which must in the future render it impossible to have state ownership in the cables now contemplated, and in other cables which in the future it may be desirable to lay between British possessions. I think, Sir, that in recent times, Canada has shown such an interest in Imperial matters that we can with very good grace; in fact, that we have the right to make representations of this sort, in a matter in which not only the Dominion, but the empire is deeply interested. I trust that if the Canadian government has not already made the representations to which I have alluded they will lose no time in bringing them to the attention of the Imperial authorities.

Mr. GEORGE CASEY (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has again brought this important subject to the notice of the House. The hon. gentleman has done so in a most practical way, he having done so at the request of the board of trade of this city, a body whose opinions on such a matter cannot be lightly overlooked. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) in urging upon the government the necessity for immediately representing in the strongest manner to the Imperial authorities, that in any agreement allowing the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company to land its cable at Mauritius or Cocos, or at any other point on British territory on which it must land, there should be a clause providing for government purchase. This House and the government have strongly held, ever since the bargain was made between the mother country, Canada and the leading Australasian colonies, that any action tending to endanger the success of the Pacific cable would be a breach of good faith on the part of those concerned. It happens, however, that there are certain colonies not included in that arrangement whose action may give rise to a similar state of things to that which we have been objecting to, namely, the establishment of dangerous competition with the government cable. Also, the proposals made by the Eastern Extension Company to some colonies which were in the bargain, appeared on their face tempting, and not unfair to the colonies concerned. It has apparently become impossible, then, to secure the prohibition of cable construction by the Eastern Extension Company to those colonies. The solution now proposed, that of a purchase clause in any of the agreements made by any colonial government, or by the Imperial government, with that company, seems to be the only way out of the deadlock. If such a clause be included in any arrangements made, the construction of the cables referred to, by the Eastern Extension Company, will not be so dangerous. It is true, they institute competition with what is intended to be a government cable; but if that competition can be removed by government expropriation and purchase at any time, the objection becomes less. I have great pleasure, then, in supporting the proposition that we should approach the British government with strong urgency to secure the adoption of such an understanding.

Let me speak for a few moments in general terms about the claims of these two enterprises—the extension of existing cables by the Eastern Extension Company, and the building of a government cable. Judging by extracts which I have seen from Australian papers, the editors of these papers have not got a clear idea of what it is proposed to do. They speak of the proposed Pacific cable as being controlled by a company. They do not see why any one company should have a monopoly of the cable business between those colonies and the rest of the empire. Now, it cannot be made too clear that the proposed Pacific cable is not to be built or controlled by any company. It is not a private enterprise. Nobody stands to make anything out of it. It is to be built and managed throughout by a trust representing the British government, the government of Canada, and the governments of the other colonies which come into the bargain. It is no more of the nature of a private enterprise than the postal system which pervades the empire. There is no more reason in urging that there should be competition with this government cable in order to secure the lowest possible rates for the populations concerned, than there is for urging that there should be competition with the government postal system throughout the empire. We all know that governments in all ages, since post offices have been introduced, have agreed to prevent competition with that postal service. It is illegal to compete with the post office in the carriage of mails in any civilized country, and it should be so. It is one of the services which a government can do cheaper than any private corporation. It is of the nature of a monopoly, and it should be controlled by the people for the benefit of the people and not for the benefit of private investors or speculators. Sir Sandford Fleming, in a letter to the people of the Australasian colonies, calls attention to some very notable considerations in this connection. He says:

If in the United Kingdom charges on messages have been lowered in some cases to one-twelfth what they were when the telegraph lines were in private hands, are we not warranted in the conclusion that in the larger field like results would follow a like cause. If the application of the principle of state-control in the United Kingdom has lowered charges on messages to one halfpenny per word for all distances, under the same conditions may we not look forward in the near future to the charge on ocean telegrams throughout the empire being reduced to one shilling per word, or even less? This, I conceive, is by no means too sanguine a view to take; I have given the matter much consideration, and I am perfectly satisfied that if at this juncture the Australasian colonies follow a wise course they will be instrumental in conferring on the British people throughout the world the inestimable blessing of a state-owned cable system, by which eventually the very lowest tariff on messages will be obtainable. I much hesitate to express my full and deliberate views on this point lest I be regarded as a visionary. If, happily, the present difficulty be overcome, the Pacific cable proceeded with, and the larger scheme followed up, I am satisfied that one of the chief objects to look forward to in a few years will be a uniform six-penny tariff the world over for ocean cables; precisely on the principle of Imperial penny postage.

Sir Sandford Fleming has sometimes been called a visionary: but it is a remarkable thing that most of the schemes, for the promotion of which he has been called a visionary, have been realized, have come into practical effect, and have been beneficial to the public and the empire at large. I think there is every reason for believing that in this connection he is right. The illustration of the Imperial penny postage is exactly apposite. No private concern could pretend to carry the mails at the rates at which they are carried by the postal services of the different countries concerned in the penny postage scheme. In the same manner no private enterprise could possibly send telegrams at as low a rate as a government telegraphic service. If the one system is good, the other system is good; the two go exactly pari passu, and the arguments which experience has produced in favour of the one are convincing in regard to the other.

So much for the merits of the case. Let me say again, a few words as to our right to speak on this matter. In the first place, the government of Canada was amongst the first to take up this scheme of Imperial telegraphic communication. The government of Canada was the first to bring it to what may be called a practical stage, by assisting the governments of the Australasian colonies in pressing the matter upon the Imperial government.

In the second place, it is a matter which concerns the whole commonwealth of the British nations—not merely the British islands, nor merely any one colony. And, Sir, it cannot be denied, that in fact, although not in form, the commonwealth of British nations has become a unity to-day. It is a united commonwealth. We have had discussions for many years as to how this commonwealth of nations could be united, whether by confederation, or representation in the House of Lords—whether by this scheme or that—but now spontaneously that union has become a fact. There is no constitution yet for this great commonwealth, except that which has been written on the sands of Africa in the blood of brave men—men of all the colonies, men of the empire—but the fact remains that the British nations are to-day one great unity. Any one member of that unity has a right to speak on any matter concerning the interests of the whole body, and above all, Canada, the leading member of that unity, has a right to speak on a matter of this kind. I think we have proven, not only our right to interfere in matters of this kind, but our sense and judgment and foresight in connection with such matters. Let the establishment of Imperial penny postage itself speak on that point. Surely if ever there was an Imperial measure, drawing its principal support and assistance from Canada, that is one. It has been accepted enthusiastically by the greater part of the empire, and recognized as a complete success. Let us then come forward boldly and firmly and strongly, and impress upon the Imperial government that this thing ought to be done, and that the crisis now puts the responsibility upon their shoulders. If the Imperial government had been as anxious to see this great Imperial scheme carried out, as we are, that cable would have been laid and carrying messages to-day. It has been delayed and postponed from time to time, and given the cold shoulder, for reasons into which this is perhaps not the occasion to inquire and which perhaps we would be unable to get at. At all events the Imperial government has been slow to move when the colonies have been ready. Now is the time for the Imperial government to take action, which will prevent the establishment of a fatal competition with the Imperial scheme of cables between the different colonies, for if these cables are now established, without such an expropriation clause as has been suggested, the chances for the Pacific cable of the empire will be very poor indeed. I must say that the government have been active and urgent in the past, and have accomplished a great deal. They have kept the matter before the British government, and the discussions of this House have had their effect, and are having their effect in Australia, as we see by the extracts which were read to us by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt). The idea of an expropriation clause has been accepted there, and is pressed on the Eastern Extension Company. With all this to encourage us, I hope to hear from the government that some active steps have been taken to carry out the views which I think are unanimously those of this House, on the subject.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I unfortunately was not present, Mr. Speaker, when this subject was brought to the notice of the House, and perhaps it would be more convenient for the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), if I were to make a few observations before the government say anything on the subject. The subject was put very clearly and succinctly before the House by my hon. friend the Postmaster General, when he brought up for the action of this House this important question of the Pacific cable, and I think we all agree that not only commercially, but from a strategic point of view, the construction of the Pacific cable from Vancouver or Victoria to Australia, is a matter of deep moment. It is impossible, in my judgment, to overrate its importance to Australia. It is also commercially and in every other way, a matter of great importance to Canada, and of still greater importance to the United Kingdom. It is quite possible that, under the existing condition of things, the whole position of Australia may be imperilled. It is known that the Eastern Extension Company's lines are liable to be interrupted, and that communication between London, the heart of the empire, and Australia could be easily cut off, and a long period elapse before any intercommunication could take place. In the case of war between a European power and England, the communication with Australia could be easily cut off, and a great deal of damage done by the enemy, before it became known. Canada is not so directly interested, but Canada is a component part of the empire, and as such deeply interested in everything that tends to a closer commercial intercommunication between the various parts of the empire. Anything that will make Canada the highway of communication between Australia and Great Britain, anything that would help the section of the empire exposed to very serious assault and damage, cannot be too seriously considered. After the discussions that have taken place in this House on this question, it does not require a word to enhance the great importance to England, Australia and Canada, of cable intercommunication. Everything that Canada could be asked to do, she has done, and it would be greatly to be deplored, if any action should be taken by any one of the parties concerned, without the absolute consent and approval of the others. Not having been here when the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), brought up the subject, and not having heard the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Casey), who has just taken his seat, I do not know whether the attention of the House has been drawn to what took place in the House of Commons on May 22. But I hold in my hand the Times report of the proceedings in parliament of that day, and, in my judgment, they are of a character to attract the very serious attention of any person who takes an interest in this very important question. In answer to a question regarding the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company, asked by Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, said:

Arrangements have been made with the Eastern Telegraph Company, by which landing rights will be given for the cable to St. Vincent, one of the conditions of which is the laying of a cable from Ascension to Sierra Leone. The Eastern Telegraph Company has entered into an agreement with the colonies of West and South Australia and Tasmania to construct, with all convenient speed, the line from Durban to Mauritius, Rodrigues, Cocos and Freemantle, in West Australia, and thence to Glenelg, South Australia, as soon as landing rights have been granted. Landing rights have been granted in Natal and in West and South Australia, and the company has been informed that Her Majesty's government are prepared to approve the granting of landing rights at Mauritius, Rodrigues and Cocos, and will issue licenses as soon as the general form of license now under consideration has been settled.

Having given this subject a good deal of attention, I regard that action as absolutely fatal to the Pacific cable from Canada to Australia ever being constructed unless one of the conditions made in granting the licenses in these various places by Her Majesty's government is that the Imperial government may at any time, under equitable conditions, come into ownership and possession of those cables. I have no doubt the attention of the government has been drawn to this subject and that they are quite apprised of the real condition, and that, as this question is one of almost vital importance to the empire and of great importance to Canada, they will take every measure possible to prevent any action being taken that will destroy our hopes in connection with this great undertaking.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The question which has been brought to the attention of the House by the hon. senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) is of sufficient importance to justify even at this late stage of the session, our giving a little time to the consideration of the present situation in regard to it. The House has been taken fully into the confidence of the government both as to the views of the government and the attitude of the government in regard to this threatened danger to the successful accomplishment of the scheme. Nothing official has transpired since I last made an announcement to the House that goes to show any further development of the proposed concession of rights to the Eastern Extension Cable Company. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has read an extract from the London Times intimating that an agreement had been made with West Australia, South Australia and Tasmania to allow landing powers in all or one of these colonies, and that the Imperial government, in return, was prepared to grant landing rights at intermediate points on British territory between South Africa and Australia. And it has been suggested by my hon. friend the senior member for Ottawa and other hon. gentlemen who have spoken, that this government should make representations to the Imperial government to preserve the rights of expropriating the cable as a condition of granting these concessions. The government has no intimation that either on the part of the Australian colonies that were partners in the Canadian Pacific scheme, in regard to which we legislated last year, or of any of her other Australian colonies, or of the Imperial government, has any change in the situation taken place. We have read in the press and probably have had communications of an informal character announcing that concessions would be made to the Eastern Extension Cable Company which this government regard as threatening the success of the Canadian Pacific cable, but otherwise we have no further information. I can perhaps go this far without being pressed to produce documents—so far as we know, the negotiations are being carried on by the Pacific Cable Commission in England with a view to carrying out the scheme on the lines of our legislation. I believe the commission is actively proceeding with a view to putting the cable under contract at an early day. It would seem strange if the commission should proceed with the Hsblity endorsement of the Canadian parliament and people if such an arrangement, as has been referred to has been in contemplation or had been made and no official communication made with the Canadian government. I cannot conceive therefore that there is any real foundation for this rumour and the Imperial government not take the Canadian government into its confidence. I agree with the leader of the opposition that the failure of this scheme would be a national calamity. Perhaps he is right in saying that it chiefly concerns Australia. When I took up this subject, I was of that opinion and had difficulty in discerning the Canadian interest in it. But, as I studied it,

I came to the conclusion that we were common partners in the scheme, and, without nicely weighing the relative interest of the different parts of the empire in it, it is a scheme that so concerns the empire that, whether Canada is more or less concerned in it, if we are to take an interest in what concerns the empire, we should give this scheme our unqualified allegiance. I concur with the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) that if anything should interfere with this scheme, it would be both a commercial and political calamity to the empire. And believing that other parts of the empire are quite as much alive to the interest of the whole empire as Canada is, the Canadian government and the Canadian people may safely assume that no party to the scheme will permit an enterprise such as the construction of a cable from South Africa to Australia to be carried out under such conditions as will imperil the cable scheme. It would be a great accomplishment to the empire to girdle the earth with a cable touching only British soil in its circle of the globe. It may be realized sooner than we expect to-day. Once this cable to Australia is completed, we practically have then a British cable from Australia to Great Britain, and but a small portion remains to be done to complete a British state-owned cable around the globe. I think we may confidently look forward to such a result. Whether the government, under the circumstances, having no official intimation of the concessions that are supposed to be granted, would feel warranted in making representations to the Imperial government as to what they should or should not do, is a matter that the government will seriously consider. It might be regarded as an unfriendly act by the Australian colony. It is to be borne in mind that the three colonies referred to are not parties to the Pacific cable scheme. There are four colonies which joined with Canada and Great Britain in that scheme, Queensland, Victoria, New South Wales and New Zealand. With them there are obligations that are perhaps not binding upon other parts of Australasia. It might be by them regarded as an unfriendly act on the part of Canada were we to interfere with a purpose they regard as of supreme importance to themselves. Therefore, we should approach that subject with great caution. Perhaps it would do more harm than good, and even defeat instead of advancing the object we all have in view, if we were to approach the subject in an unskilful way. However, I can tell the House that the views presented here to-day will be carefully considered by the government, and the government will continue, until the scheme is either successfully launched or defeated, to take a lively and active interest in its advancement.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I know that hon. gentlemen are anxious to get into supply, but I must claim the indulgence of the House for a few moments to make some remarks with regard to what I consider is a most important matter, in fact one of the most important matters before the Canadian House of Commons to-day, I refer to the immigration of Chinese and Japanese into this country. The hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell), when he brought up the same question on a previous occasion, said that members of parliament had many disagreeable duties to perform. It is a disagreeable duty for me to perform to have to get up every year in this House and bring this matter before hon. members; but I do so in common with all the other members from British Columbia, because we feel so strongly on the subject, and we know our constituents look upon it as a burning question. Last session when I was speaking on this subject I was constantly interrupted by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and I believe by one or two on this side, asking me to stop, as they were tired of hearing it. Well, Mr. Speaker, if they are tired of hearing about it now, they would be still more tired if they had the same influx of Chinese and Japanese as we have in British Columbia to-day. I cannot find words properly to express the intense feeling that there is on this subject, especially among the working classes of British Columbia. As hon. gentlemen know, it is on the Pacific coast that all these undesirable immigrants land, and it is the working classes of British Columbia who are brought into competition with them in the various lines of industry they undertake. I may say that the people of British Columbia have a right to expect that the government should take some stand in this matter to try and stop the influx of these men; they have a right to expect it, because the right hon. gentleman who leads the government has promised that action would be taken. I remember very well when, just before the election of 1896, a telegram was sent, of which I have a copy here, from Vancouver. It was as follows:

Vancouver, May 23, 1896.

Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, Windsor Hotel, Montreal.

Do you favour restriction of Chinese immigration and reserving Canada for Canadians, and not the Mongolian race?

(Sgd.) J. C. McLAGAN,
Editor Vancouver 'World.'

The answer came back as follows:

Montreal, May 25, 1896.

J. C. McLagan, Vancouver, B.C.

Chinese immigration restriction not a question in the east. Views of the Liberals in the west will prevail with me.

(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that seems to me about as strong a promise as any hon. gentleman could make to an elector. This telegram was read with the greatest glee by all Liberals from one end of British Columbia to the other, and I may say that it was the means of gaining to the right hon. gentleman and his supporters hundreds of votes. The workmen were like hungry trout with their mouths open for some promise, and this telegram was the worm that dropped into them. I may tell the House that so long a period has elapsed without this promise being fulfilled that they are more hungry now than ever. The right hon. gentleman says that Chinese immigration restriction is not a question in the east. Well, Sir, it is a long time since he made that statement, but I must differ with him. It is only a question of time when it will be as great a question with the people of the east as it is now with the people of the west. I also remember that at a public meeting held at Vancouver in December, 1898, on a question being asked by Mr. G. Bartley as to what prospects there were of an anti-Chinese Bill being pushed through the House at the next session, the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) stated:

After his first speech in the House, he had felt its pulse on the question, and found that a good deal of lobbying and personal talk with the members was needed; also a good deal of 'drumming' the question into them. Premier Laurier had, when speaking of the subject, privately said: 'If you want it you will have to get it, but it would be best to leave the matter till another session.'

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was in the year 1898. The people of British Columbia have waited one year, two years, three years, four years, for the government to do something, but as yet they have done nothing but disallow the legislation that the provincial government had passed with the view of stopping this influx of yellow men. It is now late in the session of 1900, and I was led to believe by the right hon. gentleman himself, who has twice so stated to the House this session, that the government intend to bring in some legislation. But as I said, it is getting on so near the end of the session, at least we hope so, that I feel it my duty to bring this matter up in the House and to find out whether the government intend to do anything.

I am not going to enter into details to show why this immigration is so detrimental to all classes of labour in British Columbia. I went into it fully last year and the year before, and on several occasions all the members from British Columbia have expounded their reasons why the people of British Columbia are so antagonistic to this immigration; and anybody who wishes to see those reasons and to study the question can find them all in the Hansard. I do not think that at this hour of the session I am called upon to go into the details. These Chinese and Japanese are still coming into British Columbia by the thousands, ship load after ship load. A large number of them pass through into the States, but still a great many of them make their permanent abode in that province. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) some time ago brought down the figures of that immigration, and I think they showed that during the present year something like 9,000 had come into British Columbia. Hon. gentlemen will understand that every Chinaman and every Japanese that comes into the country makes competition with white labour more severe. As every one knows, they are willing to work for a very much less wage than any white man can do. They can live on one-tenth of what a white man, especially if he has a wife and family to support, can do under the most advantageous possible circumstances. I would take this opportunity of warning hon. gentlemen in this House of what will occur if the influx is not stopped. One of the papers in British Columbia, I think, the Victoria Colonist, stated that the representatives of British Columbia in parliament could do far more than they have done in training the minds of the people in the east to look upon this question in a proper manner. I contend that they have done everything that possibly could be done, both inside and outside of the House, but, there seems to be a feeling amongst the people in the east that the danger is very small to those who live in the east. I would once again say that every gentleman who has the welfare of Canada at heart ought to study the question, and see whither we are drifting. I saw in a paper the other day that in the city of Montreal over 200 Chinamen, the owners of wash-houses, or the employees of wash-houses, had been summoned for not paying the tax imposed by the municipality. You can see them every day in Ottawa and Toronto in increasing numbers. It is only a question of time when these men, every one of whom is hard-working, frugal and industrious, will drive white men and women out of some employment. I would like to bring to the attention of the House what I consider to be the best object lesson that has occurred in Canada since the first Chinaman landed. That is afforded by the action that has been taken by Mr. Dunsmuir, the large colliery owner of British Columbia, a gentleman who has been employing Chinese and Japanese in his mines. He is a man of great wealth, employing thousands of men, and there has been a keen fight between himself, or his colliery company, and the provincial government as to whether he had the right to employ these men or not. Restrictive legislation has been passed by the provincial legislature, which Mr. Dunsmuir has constantly fought, from the provincial courts to the Privy Council in England. He has won his suit at last. It was declared that the legislation was ultra vires, and he is enabled to employ all the Chinamen he likes above or below ground, but, a few days ago I was very glad to see that that gentleman made the public statement that now that he had vindicated his own opinion, and had shown that he was going to run his business as he thought fit and right, he would voluntarily give up what he had been contending for, and he has given orders to his foremen to discontinue the employment of Chinese underground. He says that after years of experience he has come to the conclusion that the employment of Chinese is a detriment to the country, and he has made up his mind that he will not employ them underground any longer, but that he will fill their places with white men as quickly as he can get them, and as soon as other people give up employment of Chinese above ground he will do the same. I think it is a striking lesson that a man of his experience, who has employed so many Chinamen, and who will lose thousands and thousands of dollars a year by paying higher wages to whitemen, should give up the employment of Chinamen. He must feel very strongly upon the subject, because it touches his pocket very severely. The only way to stop that influx is for the Dominion government to largely increase the tax of $50 per head. I heard it rumoured, I heard it from one gentleman who was lately a member from British Columbia, and who went home disgusted and disgruntled, that the best the government could possibly think of doing was to increase the tax by $50 per head, making it $100 per head. I will tell the right hon. the leader of the government that if he only intends to increase the head tax by $50 it is worse than worthless. If you put on a tax of $500, as the Australian colonies did, you may keep them out, but nothing short of that will have any effect whatever. These men do not come in of their own volition. They are brought in as slaves, by Chinese contractors, who farm them out just as slaves and serfs would be treated. They see nothing of any contract that may be made for them. If a large railway or mining company wants a thousand Chinamen it simply comes to the Chinese boss and says so, and these men are driven out to work like so many cattle. If the tax is only $50 a head they can pay it, or they can pay $100 per head, but they will not be able to pay it if it is raised to $500. I feel convinced that the raising of the head tax to $500 is the only means of stopping this undesirable influx of Chinamen into British Columbia. The Japanese are looked upon by a majority of the working classes, at all events, in British Columbia, as almost as detrimental to the interests of the country as the Chinese, but, I must confess, that, owing to Imperial interests, as we heard it so well explained by the right hon. leader of the government last session, we must give up all thought of trying to restrict them in this manner. The interests of Great Britain demand that the Japanese nation should be treated with friendship, and I am well aware that the government look upon any scheme for keeping them out by taxing them as an unfriendly act. But, there is another way in which these Japanese can be kept out, and it is by bringing into force the Natal Act, which the members of the government know perfectly well is now in force in other portions of the empire, and has had, I think, a most desirable effect, so far as I can hear.

At all events, it seems to be the wish of the majority of the people in British Columbia that the government should bring in the Natal Act and put it in force so as to restrict the influx of Japanese.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How does the Natal Act restrict them?

Mr. PRIOR. By making them pass an examination when they come in showing that they are able to read and write, and to answer questions in some European language. I believe that is the principal clause in it.

The PRIME MINISTER. That would apply to all Asiatics, not only to Japanese.

Mr. PRIOR. I confess that it would; it would apply to all nationalities as well as Japanese, but if it were brought into force it would apply to Japanese, and these are the people in British Columbia that we wish to prevent coming in. At the present time, I may say the gentleman who is now Premier of British Columbia is stating that if he gets into power he will bring in legislation that will stop this Chinese and Japanese influx. Everybody who has watched legislation in this House must know that any legislation like that is only humbug. It is not in the power of any province to pass such legislation, and if it is passed, it will be immediately disallowed here. I only make that remark so that the people of British Columbia may see how foolish it is to believe that any legislation of any use upon this question can be passed by any legislature except this House. I would, in conclusion, press upon the government my strong opinion that it is their duty, not only to the people of British Columbia, but to the people, especially the workingmen, of Canada, that they should immediately bring in a Bill putting a $500 tax per head on Chinamen coming into the country, and that they should also bring the Natal Act into force so that the influx of Japanese might be stopped.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have just one word to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) and that is that on Monday a Bill will be placed on the Order paper, to be introduced as soon thereafter as the rules of the House will permit, upon this question.

Mr. PRIOR. I am very glad to hear it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say at once to my hon. friend, that I fail to see exactly the position which he takes on this question. The hon. gentleman seems to be of the opinion that so far as the Chinese are concerned, that the most effective way of dealing with them would be to increase the capitation tax from $50 to $500, and that in the case of the Japanese, the most effective way would be to introduce the Natal Act. Well, if the Natal Act were introduced I do not see what necessity there would be for the increase of the capitation tax, or, in fact any tax at all. If the Natal Act were introduced the provisions would be all Asiatics landing at any port in Canada would be subjected to an examination and if it were found that they could not speak and write any of the European languages, then they could not have admission to the country at all. If that Act were put in practice here, neither Japanese nor Chinese, nor indeed any Asiatics whatever—except, of course, a few of the better classes who would come in as merchants or professional people or the like of that—would be admitted. I might remind my hon. friend of the words I used in the House last year when I said we could not treat the Japanese as we could the Chinese. In view of the possible complications which may arise in the Orient, we should not do anything that would imperil the friendship of the Japanese government. We could not, therefore, apply the Natal Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a matter which we must treat very delicately. I would direct the attention of the hon. gentleman and of the House to the fact that Great Britain, being engaged in war at the present time, and in view of the possible complications which may arise in China at any moment, it would be unwise for us to do anything which would in any way jeopardize the friendship of the Japanese government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a question which will require a good deal of consideration, and I am not prepared now to say what will be the provisions of the Bill we will introduce. I can only repeat that on Monday the Bill will be put on the Order paper to be proceeded with as soon as the rules of the House will admit.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Dominion Lands ..... $110,932

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). What is the increase of $4,200 for?

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). There is $500 increase for the salary of E. F. Stephenson, Crown timber and land agent and inspector, and $2,500 for extra clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are these clerks to be appointed, and what is the salary of each appointee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The deputy informs me that the salaries depend upon the duties they are asked to perform.

Mr. FOSTER. But you cannot make an estimate like this unless you know where the clerks are to be appointed, and what they are going to be paid.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed by the deputy minister that these extra clerks are generally paid about $75 a month.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are they to be appointed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is only one man at present in the Yorkton office, and he will require an assistant at $75 a month. The agent at Alameda will require an extra clerk at the same salary. One will be required at Lethbridge at about the same salary. There are no other officers at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. What are these clerks doing at Yorkton?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is only the land agent there at present. It is represented that he requires assistance.

Mr. FOSTER. You are doubling the amount of clerical work there. Has the labour doubled?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. More than doubled, owing to settlers coming in.

Mr. FOSTER. Whom is it proposed to appoint?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No appointment has been made, and there is no person in view at present.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). I understand that this work to which the hon. gentleman made reference is paid out of the Immigration Department.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The duties of the land office are quite different, and the work there is the greatest when the settlers are making entries of land.

Mr. CLANCY. According to Mr. Stephenson's report, there were last year less than 6,000 entries and some 2,200 cancellations. That is not a vast increase over the work of the previous year. What extra work is to be done at the Lethbridge office to require an additional clerk?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Application has been made for assistance, and it is expected that the work will be very considerably increased during the present year.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is an odd comment on that. At page H-74 of the Auditor General's Report I find that the Dominion lands revenue at Lethbridge was $17,000 odd in 1897-8, and $8,000 odd in 1898-9, a decrease of $8,891. If the land revenue has fallen off more than 50 per cent in the last year, the increased work which you base doubling the clerical staff is hardly borne out. In the revenue from timber agencies at Lethbridge there has been a decrease of about 30 per cent. What is the minister's explanation of that?

Mr. CLANCY. Has Mr. Stephenson made a request for the appointment of those clerks for which the hon. gentleman is now making provision?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no doubt that the report of the inspector with regard to these matters would influence the department altogether. He would be the one who would advise us whether extra assistance was required or not.

Mr. CLANCY. I find the following paragraph in his report:

There have been few changes in the personnel of the staff of the respective agencies. Owing to the death of Mr. W. J. Scott, agent at Battleford, a vacancy occurred which was filled by the appointment of Mr. R. F. Chisholm. The other changes were few and of minor importance.

Did Mr. Stephenson bring pressure on the department to have these extra clerks appointed? There seems to be nothing in his report to suggest that they are required.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly, the necessity has been pointed out to the department, or else this would not be in the estimates at all.

Mr. FOSTER. We have not had any explanation of why you are going to double the clerical service when the revenues have fallen off more than 50 per cent. Does it not show that the work is not so great as it was?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Because there was a large payment of money received it does not follow that the work was not greater.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has not shown that it was. That is only a supposition. I do not want to be insistent; but we are asked to give $900 for an extra clerk at Lethbridge, and when we ask the reason why we get the statement, that it is because there is more work to be done. It would be utterly foolish to ask for an extra clerk and add 100 per cent to the working force unless you backed up your request by the statement that there was more work to do. But look at the actual results. The land revenue and timber revenue have fallen off more than 50 per cent, and it is a fair supposition that the work of the office has fallen off in proportion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite admit that that is a fair supposition, but I am informed that the difference between the two years may be accounted for by some large payments of money. There is no clerk at present in that office, and the land agent is asking for assistance.

Mr. FOSTER. He got along without one before. And now that only half the revenue is coming in, I cannot see the reason for giving an extra man.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The former agent was unable to do the work, and applied for assistance, and a man who was thought more capable, was put in his place, and he too finds he cannot do the work alone.

Mr. FOSTER. The explanation is not satisfactory, but I do not want to keep discussing this item all night.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will furnish the hon. gentleman any more details I can obtain on another occasion. There has been an addition to the agent's salary at Calgary of $200, which makes his salary $1,400. There has been the appointment of another homestead inspector for Prince Albert district. His name is James McArthur, and salary $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of adding $500 to the salary of the first officer there, Mr. Stephenson? He is now getting $2,500.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He has been a long time in the office, and his duties have increased very largely. I have made careful inquiries, and find that he is a very efficient officer, and deserves this increase.

Mr. CLANCY. He made but seventy homestead entries during the last year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will bring down a comparative statement, showing how his duties have increased.

Mr. CLANCY. The agent at Calgary had 208 homestead entries, and the agent at Yorkton only 261. Both together would be scarcely a man's work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have explained that there will be a very large increase in the number of settlers going into that particular district referred to. At Yorkton there will perhaps be over 1,000 entries this year. If those entries are not to be made, a clerk will not be appointed. The information in the possession of the department, leads us to expect a large number of settlers, and it would be very poor policy not to provide for assistance, so as to meet the wants of the settlers as promptly as possible.

Mr. CLANCY. How many clerks in the Dawson office?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Only two, the agent and the clerk.

Mr. CLANCY. How many at Edmonton?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are three at Edmonton.

Inspector's expenses, travelling expenses of commissioner, superintendent of mines and homestead inspectors, contingencies of Dominion lands and Crown timber agents; and at head office, removal expenses, stationery, printing and expenses connected with forestry protection ..... $31,000

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose that includes the salary of the forestry inspector, Mr. Stewart?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The item of salaries does.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman intend to carry out Mr. Stewart's recommendation with regard to enlarging the service for what is called timber protection?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Stewart has shown great enthusiasm in his work. His recommendations will be carefully considered and, if deemed in the interest of the country, will be carried out.

Mr. CLANCY. Whatever his enthusiasm, he seems unable to give much information in his report or otherwise. Whatever the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) may contemplate, I fancy the House will want much better information than Mr. Stewart seems to be in possession of before voting money for this service.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. After Mr. Stewart has had an opportunity to visit the different sections of the country, I have no doubt his reports will become more valuable. But, if not, of course his recommendations will not be acted upon.

Mr. FOSTER. In the meantime, he will have had a nice visit.

Salaries of extra clerks at head office, advertising, &c. .... $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion of that is spent in advertising?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is estimated that $5,957.50 will be paid for salaries, leaving $1,042.50 for miscellaneous advertising. This in connection with licenses to cut timber and so on.

Mr. CLANCY. I believe that Mr. Jerome was in the department before he resigned to run for the local legislature, and my information is that he is still in the employ of the department. Is that the case?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not find his name on the list, so he cannot be employed permanently. But the deputy informs me that he has been employed at different times temporarily as homestead inspector and Crown timber inspector, and when so employed he would receive $4 a day.

Mr. CLANCY. How many days was he so employed last year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not that information at hand, but I will ascertain the facts.

Mr. CLANCY. Is Mr. Jerome employed by the department now?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Dominion Lands chargeable to capital—
To provide for the amount required for surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, and including $10,000 for irrigation surveys, &c. (Salaries of temporary officers and clerks may be paid out of this vote at rates exceeding $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $200,000

Mr. FOSTER. What surveys are to be carried out this year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This information is furnished by the surveyor general: Survey of townships, southern Manitoba, one party, estimated to cost $6,000; Swan River district, four parties, $24,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What part of the Swan River is that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A new district, one that has not been surveyed. Prince Albert Canadian Pacific Railway reserve, two parties, $12,000; Edmonton, one party, $6,000. Then, there is what the surveyor general calls the Finnlander's reserve in the Red Deer district, two parties, $12,000; Crow's Nest and Southern Alberta, one party, $6,000; Southern Alberta, one party, $6,000; railway belt, two parties, $12,000. Then there is the Swan River belt, subdivision work where surveys have already been held, three parties, $15,000; Edmonton, two parties, $10,000; Finnlander's reserve, three parties, $15,000. Then the exploration of Chesterfield inlet, one party, $8,000; irrigation surveys, $10,000; and Yukon survey, $20,000. Head office expenditure, $31,000, and miscellaneous, $7,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be done with that $20,000 as regards Dominion lands in the Yukon chargeable to capital?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought I had a report here in detail as to what surveys were to be carried on, but I find I am mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the minister had better let that item stand. There is one matter he might explain. In the last year's accounts of the Auditor General, Dominion lands chargeable to capital, there was an item of $349.77 for expenditure on account of Doukhobor immigration, Mr. Hubbell and his party. That clearly is an item of expenditure on immigration, and how does it come to be chargeable to capital account?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The deputy informs me they sent Mr. Hubbell up with the Doukhobors to show them the lines of the various townships, and to point out to the settlers where the land was that was allotted to them. That accounts for the expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. But how can you charge to Dominion lands an expenditure for taking immigrants out and showing them where they are going to settle?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not see any objections to that, that when settlers go in there they should be shown the lines. It is to fix the points in the various townships of the lands to be located by the immigrants. Mr. Hubbell, the surveyor, was sent up to define these lines and fix the division between the various townships where the Doukhobors were to settle.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman say these lands were never surveyed before?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Some part of them were never surveyed. Very little land in that district had been surveyed, and this was on account of new surveys.

Mr. CLANCY. How many surveyors are employed for the purpose of doing this work?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think there are 21; there is a surveyor in charge of each party.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it done by contract?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For the men who are on permanently the pay is fixed by the regulations of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Is any of it done by contract? That is, does a surveyor take a contract for doing so much and furnish his own party?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed that the department had let several by contract this year. But several of the surveyors are permanent officers of the department. In that case the government fits out the expedition and hires the men.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another item, H-49, locating the Doukhobors, John Francis, $482.70. Please take a note of that, because it would seem that some of this money which is voted on capital account is used for surveys. The only thing that you can use capital for is to expend money for the survey and the original laying out of the townships. We have often debated in this House as to whether there should be any such thing as capital, whether it should not always come out of revenue. However, the two different classes, partly revenue and partly capital have been kept, and the charge to capital is for the original survey of unsurveyed ground. When you come to locating Doukhobors on lands, that does not seem to be a charge to capital. I would like the hon. gentleman to give me an explanation of that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the wording is unfortunate. I would agree with him, though not saying anything, on the spur of the moment, as to whether this should be charged to capital. But I agree that if it was used for the purpose indicated by that language it would be wrong. But I am satisfied it was not used for that purpose at all. I will be glad to get a memorandum of the work that was done.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we cannot pass that item until we get an explanation about the Yukon surveys.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In regard to this $20,000 for surveying in that country, it would be almost impossible to give any detailed information. I can give the hon. gentleman an idea of what was done last year.

Mr. FOSTER. What was done in Yukon surveys last year? I do not quite understand the nature of the survey in the Yukon. There is not much arable land to survey.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mainly mining claims. There is a great deal of surveying to do. There is advertised for sale up there next month, over 2,000 claims.

Mr. FOSTER. Mining claims?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mining claims.

Mr. FOSTER. Are we sending expeditions up there to survey mining claims?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Districts have to be surveyed. For the want of surveys a great deal of trouble has arisen about claims. Disputes have arisen by reason of locating or staking claims before the surveys are made. In the report of the work done last year, I see that Mr. Gibbon made a survey, under the instructions of the commissioner, of West Dawson, and that Mr. Cautley made a survey of part of the town site of Selkirk.

Mr. FOSTER. That is intelligible where you survey a town site for Dominion purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are many to be attended to yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any part of this $20,000 for town site surveying?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is almost altogether for that sort of work.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are you surveying town sites?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I said to the hon. gentleman, it will be impossible for me to give the details without having a report from the Yukon, as to what are the surveys that the commissioner would ask to have done there during the present year. But, I was going on to give the hon. gentleman an account of the work that has been done.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you made an estimate for $20,000 for surveys for next year, and have you not had Mr. Ogilvie's report and his request upon which to make up your estimates? Are these estimates made up without any basis from Mr. Ogilvie, as to what he thinks is required?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, I think these surveys are pretty clearly set forth in Mr. Ogilvie's report. He starts by giving, as I was giving it to the committee, an idea of the work that was done there by the surveyors last year. I will follow up those that I gave before. Mr. R. J. Jephson made a survey of a division of Dawson, on the top of the hill. The returns and plans of this have just been completed, and are now being examined before confirmation. Mr. Gibbon completed a survey of Bonanza Creek, from No. 60 below Discovery, to the mouth, and he has also made a survey of Hunker Creek. Mr. Cautley made a survey of Sulphur Creek and part of Dominion and Gold Run Creeks. Mr. Dumais arrived in August, and he was instructed to make a survey of the town site at the Canyon, and one at White Horse. Mr. Coté was instructed to make a survey of Indian River, commencing at the mouth and tying his work on to that of Mr. Gibbon or Mr. Cautley. It is also necessary to make a survey of Quartz Creek. Mr. Dumais has just completed, and is now engaged in the preparation of the returns of a survey of the system of roads from Dawson to several creeks. Mr. Ogilvie says:

When his returns are in it will enable us to tie the surveys on both the Klondike and Indian River mining divisions on to Dawson, and thus accurately connect them with the Yukon River.

In addition to the above official work of a professional character, Mr. Thibodeau made a very hurried reconnaissance survey of Stewart River, which has proved to agree very closely with that made by Mr. McArthur, though Mr. Thibodeau did not know that Mr. McArthur had made a survey.

Mr. FOSTER. What was done last year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Part of it was completed last year, and the work will have to be carried on this year.

Mr. Thibodeau also made a reconnaissance survey of the Klondike River and its several branches, and has furnished us with much more reliable information of that stream and the adjacent country than anything hitherto given.

Instructions were also issued for the survey of coal lands near Cliff Creek; also on Kentucky Creek, a branch of Chandindu River; also on Sock Creek, known here as Rock Creek.

Instructions have been given for the survey of hydraulic concessions in the Forty-Mile district, on Clinton Creek; on Australia Creek; on Indian River; on Quartz Creek; on the Klondike River; on Ten-Mile Creek; and several supposed ancient bed of Stewart River.

My hon. friend will see from the work to be carried out, that they have hardly made a reasonable beginning in the required surveys, and I do not think the sum we are asking for, will be considered too large.

Mr. FOSTER. That is according to what you are going to do.

Mr. CLANCY. It would seem by the reports, that the work of locating the Doukhobors was done last year. Mr. Coté and Mr. Woods make reference to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have promised my hon. friend that the deputy will bring down a statement, showing what was done last year in regard to these people.

To provide for the cost of investigations and demarcations, and other astronomical work of the Department of the Interior. Salaries of temporary officers and clerks may be paid out of this vote at rates exceeding $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the work to be done for the coming year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In regard to the boundary survey, there is one clerk with a salary of $840, one draughtsman, $1,200, one photographer, $780, one carpenter, $750, one extra computer, $730, and one surveyor, $1,700, making $6,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the same as last year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. Books, stationery and contingencies of office generally, $800, observatory contingencies, $200, determination of latitudes and longitudes, $1,000, travelling expenses, $500, boundary surveys, examinations, &c., including delimitation of provisional boundary about the head of Lynn Canal, $6,500.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there a party up there now?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is at the head of it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. King himself went up at the head of the party this year.

Expenses and salaries connected with the commission appointed to inquire into half-breed claims in North-west Territories, out of which payment may be made to J. A. Coté as half-breed commissioner, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $5,000

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to change Mr. Coté's initials in the item. It should be 'N. O. Coté.'

Mr. FOSTER. Who are those commissioners?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. McKenna and Mr. Walker, and Mr. Coté and Mr. McLeod.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Are they the same as last year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was the brother of Mr. Côté who was out there last year. They are both in the department.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Yes, I know, but the others are the same as acted last year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. How is it the government did not see their way to appoint one of the leading half-breeds to act on that commission, as has been the practice heretofore? In former years, Mr. Roger Goulet was a member of that commission, and, in fact, the soul of that commission. I understand that his health did not allow him to act on the commission this year, but Mr. Pierre Deschambault was very strongly recommended by some friends of the Liberal party. He was not appointed, however, although last year he acted in an unofficial capacity. He certainly should have formed part of the commission. He is a man who has been born and bred in that district where the commissioners are going to exercise jurisdiction, and he was the best qualified man that could have been selected. He is a man against whom the Department of the Interior could not say anything, even politically.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not aware that there was any reason, even politically, in the appointment. One of the half-breeds has been appointed in the same position this year, a man who lives in the district and knows the people well. Mr. Charles Fisher has been appointed as secretary to the commission, and he is familiar with all these matters.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Is that the same gentleman who is now a member of the legislature in the North-west Territories?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think he is the same gentleman.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Well, I may say that he is perfectly qualified to act as secretary, but I think he ought to have been appointed a commissioner. The fact of the matter is, that the vast majority of these half-breeds are of French origin, and with the exception of Mr. Côté, who was sent from Ottawa—and he is a good appointment, I believe—there is not another gentleman on the commission who can speak French. Mr. Côté, I repeat, is, I believe, a good appointment.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. LaRiviere) is mistaken. Mr. Fisher is a French half-breed.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I mentioned the commissioners; Mr. Fisher is only the secretary.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is an important appointment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I know Mr. Fisher, and he is a good appointment, but he ought to be appointed to a higher place as one of the commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the details of the expenditure last year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not the details of last year's expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. The department should not have allowed the hon. gentleman to come down here without having a detailed statement. He should take all the wool off the top of the head of some of his officers for not having furnished him with more information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know that it has been customary in the past to give details of such an item.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg pardon. Whatever faults the present Minister of the Interior may have, when he was here last year he gave the fullest explanation that ever was given by any minister in this House—I will not except any—of his departmental estimates. He was told it would be expected and as Hansard will show, he gave most full and explicit statements in reference to every question that was asked as to expenditure. The department ought to have been even more careful to have this information for the acting minister than for the minister himself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will give my hon. friend a statement, which I think ought to be satisfactory, of the use to which the whole of the money is put for this year and next year, amounting altogether to $18,000. It is estimated that there will be six months' services of two commissioners at $10 a day, $3,600; six months' services of two commissioners at $5 a day, $1,800; one head clerk at $5 a day, $900; three clerks at $100 a month each, $1,800, making $8,100 on account of salaries; transport, contingencies, camp outfit, wages of cooks, boatmen, &c., $7,000; supplies and living expenses of commissioners, clerks, interpreters, cooks, boatmen, teamsters and other persons it may be found necessary to employ, $3,000; making the total amount for the present year and next year, of $18,100.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are the commissioners?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. McKenna and Mr. Walker. Mr. McKenna is an officer of the Indian Department.

Mr. FOSTER. What is his pay?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He receives $6 a day in addition to his salary. Mr. Walker is not an officer of the department. He lives at Calgary. He was, I believe, at one time superintendent of the mounted police, and is considered well acquainted with western life. He receives $10 a day.

Mr. FOSTER. On what principle do you take a salaried officer of the department and give him the pay of a commissioner in addition to his regular pay? Is not his whole time at the disposal of the department? There has been instances this year in which officials have been placed on commissions and simply paid their salaries, with of course, their expenses. What is the reason a different plan is adopted in this case from what is adopted in other departments?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it has been customary, in taking officials from a department for duties for which they are particularly well qualified, to give them an extra allowance.

Mr. FOSTER. No, they have been given their extra expenses.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not prepared to dispute the hon. gentleman's statement in regard to any particular case; but in my experience as a member of this House we have repeatedly voted to different officers extra allowances for extra duties. It was thought that in this case an officer of the department ought to be one of the commissioners, that his knowledge of the official working of matters in the department would enable him to protect the government very much. One would naturally suppose that local commissioners might be influenced by the surroundings and the people more than an officer of the department. I am inclined to think that parliament would be quite willing to allow an officer with the qualifications for such an important and responsible duty, where thousands of dollars are involved, a small allowance in addition to his salary.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary does he get?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. $1,400.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Coté, one of the officials of this commission last year and this year, was also one of the officials of the commission which settled the half-breed claims in 1885, and I think he was treated then just as Mr. McKenna is treated to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. McKenna a private secretary as well?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He also acts as private secretary of the Indian Department, I think. I must have been mistaken in stating that he received $6 a day, for the estimate is made up at the rate of $5 a day.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. McKenna is receiving his salary of $1,400 as clerk, his allowance of $600 as private secretary, and in addition this extra amount of $5 or $6 a day as commissioner?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. He is paid as private secretary without doing the work, he is paid his salary for his work as a clerk, none of which he is doing, and outside of that he is paid $5 or $6 a day, and all his expenses on this commission. I think that is a very fat little office for Mr. McKenna. An officer of the department who is as well paid as he is might very well do this outside work for the department for his pay and extra expenses. Will the hon. gentleman now give us a general idea of what these men have to do?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Applications are made by the half-breeds for scrip. The commissioners have to investigate their claims and take evidence whether they are entitled to scrip or not, and their duties are very important.

Mr. CLANCY. How many claims are there supposed to be?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have answered that question in the House before, and I forget now the number but it is up in the thousands.

Mr. FOSTER. Over what territory are they travelling?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the principal number of the half-breeds are in Saskatchewan and Assiniboia. There are some at a very long distance. I remember in a conversation with Mr. Côté, before the commission went away, he said it was doubtful whether they could reach some of the outlying points before the winter season.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is doing the work of these clerks while these men are away?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The other officers of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. There is plenty to do the work when they are gone?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The work may accumulate, but at any rate there have been no complaints so far.

Mr. FOSTER. They give this scrip to the half-breeds, as they arrange the claims, while on their travels.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They give certificates on the spot, and each certificate entitles the bearer to an issue of scrip.

Mr. FOSTER. How do they get the scrip?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The certificates are sent on through the banks or post offices or storekeepers or other people in whom the parties have confidence. A great many of these certificates are transferred to others.

Mr. FOSTER. I find in a Toronto paper that this scrip is offered for sale at 80 cents on the dollar.

The PRIME MINISTER. You cannot avoid that.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. gentleman last year said he was going to correct the abuses that existed in the time of the preceding government, but his commissioners are simply paying out the scrip without any conditions attached to it at all. That shows what an immense farce the whole thing is. The idea was that in some way or other these half-breeds should be given lands or if they wished to go into stock or the ranching business they could be assisted to do so, but instead they have been given scrip payable to bearer. The half-breeds then part with the scrip for a song, and sometimes for worse than a song, to the speculators, who have followed on the track of these commissioners, and the result is that, in many cases, the half-breeds derive no benefit at all from this settlement. It does seem a pity that so much money should be spent to satisfy the just claims of the half-breeds and yet be spent in such a way that these people actually do not get the benefit. This plan of the right hon. gentleman, like many other plans of the government, was better in theory than in practice.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I may say that the commissioners have made every possible effort to induce the half-breeds to take land scrip and they report that a much larger proportion of the half-breeds are taking lands than formerly.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend, the ex-Finance Minister, forgets what took place last year. The commission started with instructions to pay out scrip that was not transferable, so that the half-breeds would invest it in the purchase of land and not sell it to speculators. But, as was explained in the House last session, when the commissioners came to deal with the half-breeds—the commissioners were the Hon. Mr. Laird, a man of great prudence, Father Lacombe, a man who has been the friend of the half-breeds all his life,—I forget the names of the other members—the commissioners found that the half-breeds would take no other scrip but scrip similar to that which had been issued by the late government. They held meetings and notified the commission that they would not accept the scrip that was offered to them. They had been accustomed to have their scrip transferable and immediately convertible into money. The commissioners had to deliberate what they would do. They were ready to leave in the morning if their bills were not accepted. The Indians with whom we wanted to make a treaty were assembled, and the commissioners had to consider whether the Indians should be left to go back to their homes discontented or whether they should not meet their views and issue scrip as in former years. There is no man who has taken a stronger view than Father Lacombe against the excesses resulting from issuing scrip, or who saw less benefit in its results to the half-breeds. But, in view of the determined attitude of the half-breeds he issued a report to the government that he had advised that the old system should be resorted to, and the scrip in the usual form issued. That was not the best way to deal with the half-breeds—we all admit that. But, after all, the commissioners came to the conclusion that it was better that the half-breeds should be satisfied, even though they do not derive the same beneficial results which would accrue to them if the new form of non-transferable scrip had been issued.

Mr. FOSTER. Land scrip?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no other, then?

The PRIME MINISTER. It entitles the holder, as I understand it, to pay it for its face value as cash upon any payment for Crown land. This year, I understand, the half-breeds were making use of the scrip in larger proportion than formerly for the purchase of their land, and thus we may suppose the half-breeds will receive greater benefit from this new issue of scrip than from former issues. At any rate, we shall have satisfied the claim of these men. They have always been discontented, feeling that the government of the country had not settled with them, had not given them their due. If we have gained nothing else, it will have been worth all the money that it cost the country. In 1870, after the rebellion, we issued scrip to the half-breeds, which was squandered, every dollar of it, I believe. But we gained this at any rate—that there were no more claims against us. We cannot afford to have a large section of the population of the North-west or any other part of the country feeling discontented and asserting that the government of the country has not given them what is their due. We must give them what is their own. If they squander it, so much the worse for them; if they profit by it so much the better; but at least, we get them satisfied.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did not understand me when I used the expression commonly used in the department 'money scrip.' There are two kinds of scrip; one kind is good for 240 acres of land. That is the kind that I said the House would be glad to know the half-breeds were taking more generally. The other kind is transferable, and can be applied on the payment of any Crown lands by the holder of the scrip.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all redeemable in land, but some is transferable and some is not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is hardly the distinction. One kind represents an actual quantity of land, and the other a money payment on the purchase of any quantity of land.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am sure the House will be pleased to know that many of the half-breeds are taking the scrip that represents the land. For the benefit of those who take the old form of scrip, an effort is made to keep the price as high as possible, so that they may get as much benefit out of it as possible.

Mr. CLANCY. It does not seem to me there is much difference in value whether it is transferable or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. The point is that sometimes the half-breeds sell the scrip for a mere song.

Mr. FOSTER. The question undoubtedly was a difficult one, and there is some force in the way the Premier puts it. The course taken, can only be palliated on the ground that every effort was made to cause the half-breeds to study their own interest and not throw their scrip away. We are not wholly free from responsibility unless our officers joined with such men as Father Lacombe, who is on the ground and who has great influence with the half-breeds and others whom they trust to find a way by which they could be helped to help themselves. It certainly makes a difficulty when a man like Father Lacombe himself, after talking with them, finds that he cannot persuade them. How much of this scrip has been issued since this commission began? I suppose it is not issued to others than half-breeds?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not very familiar with the scrip business.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the hon. Minister of Finance to look into it and see if it is not time that the unauthorized issue of what are practically government bills should be taken out of the hands of the department. The Minister of the Interior himself has the power under the Act to issue scrip I think.

The PRIME MINISTER. I believe the scrip is about all issued.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is the expectation that every claim will soon be settled.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) speaks of unauthorized scrip, I suppose he has no special case in mind, but fears that it might be abused.

Mr. FOSTER. The issue of what is practically money is not generally left to the discretion of a minister.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It only affects the Department of the Interior, and only as respects lands.

Mr. FOSTER. But, so long as you have lands to sell and do sell them, this scrip partakes of the nature of a bank bill.

Mr. CLANCY. Are there certain localities for which the land is to be taken up for the scrip?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A half-breed accepting scrip can take land wherever Dominion lands are to be granted; and if it is transferable scrip, it is accepted as payment on lands from any person who may owe the Crown.

Miscellaneous—Expenses of government in district of Keewatin ..... $2,190

Mr. FOSTER. What is this spent for? Is it an appendage of the government of Manitoba?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What was spent last year, and what for?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Out of this appropriation, the secretary to the governor gets $600 and the clerk $480. The lieutenant-governor looks after this expenditure, it seems to be altogether under his jurisdiction.

Maintenance, construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Springs reservation near Banff station, N.W.T. .... $11,920

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be done with this money?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The salaries appear to be the same, $2,420. Last year $2,000 was voted for repairs to buildings, which is not necessary this year. Repairing roads, there is an increase of $500, the whole amount to be expended is $1,000. Last year we voted $500 for new roads, nothing is required this year for that purpose. New buildings required this year, $1,500. There is a new bridge over the Cascade River to cost $500. The care of buffaloes and other animals is the same. There are twenty-one or twenty-two buffaloes. They were doing very well when I was there last year. An increase of two is reported this year. A man is employed to take care of them, who rides round on a pony. Then, there is required for heating apparatus this year, $700; clearing land, $500; contingencies, $1,000. The superintendent at Banff is Mr. Douglas, formerly a resident of Calgary.

To provide for the survey of the boundary between the Yukon territory and British Columbia from Teslin Lake to the Alsek River ..... $14,000

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The amount to be spent is divided as follows: Astronomical party, $6,000; survey, $8,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How near is this work to completion?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They made a few observations last year, and it is to be hoped it will be completed this year.

Mr. FOSTER. For this amount?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. Mr. White-Fraser is the astronomer, and Mr. St. Cyr is the surveyor.

To provide for the relief of distressed persons in the North-west Territories. $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. I do not understand this vote. What was spent out of that vote last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This is a new vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Last year there was a sum to recoup members of the North-west Mounted Police for relief given to destitute half-breeds. What is this for?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This has been put in upon the application of the Hudson Bay Company.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I will ask the hon. minister to let that stand until some of the North-west members are here.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All right.

Expenses of relief party and furnishing provisions to distressed people on the Liard and Dease Rivers..... $20,000

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The explanation of what has been done in this matter is in a letter from the Hudson Bay officer, which is as follows:

Hudson's Bay Company,
Commissioner's Office,
Winnipeg, Dec. 13, 1899.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of December 1, I beg to state the accounts for relief of destitute miners given by the Hudson's Bay Company on behalf of the Dominion government, have just been received, and are being prepared for your approval and will be sent forward without delay.

For your information, I have to state that in accordance with your telegraphic instructions of May 10 and subsequent communications, the company's steamer 'Strathcona,' which was then laid up at Port Simpson, was immediately put in commission, and a captain and crew were despatched from Victoria on May 15 to join the vessel.

The supplies which were considered necessary were at once shipped to Wrangel to meet the steamer 'Strathcona' upon her arrival there. The 'Strathcona' was promptly launched and prepared for service, and arrived at Wrangel on May 29.

In proceeding up the Stikine River on the first trip, the boat unfortunately met with an accident which necessitated her return to Wrangel for repairs. These were effected without unnecessary delay, and the boat left Wrangel for Glenora on June 10.

In the meantime, as it was impossible to find out what other animals, if any, were available at Glenora for the transportation inland of the supplies from that point to Dease Lake, a contract was entered into with Mr. Pike, of the Casca Trading Company, for the sending in of sufficient men and pack animals to enable the inland transport to be carried out.

Mr. FOSTER.

Upon the arrival of the 'Strathcona' at Glenora it was learned that the report of destitution had been considerably exaggerated, and it was not considered advisable to send in all the supplies which had been forwarded, and in the interest of the government the contract which had been entered into with Mr. Pike was cancelled. As, however, Mr. Pike had already incurred considerable expense, he requested compensation therefor, and this was settled by paying him the sum of $1,500. The needed supplies were then sent forward by the Hudson's Bay Company's pack train at a cost of $464.36, and as the total amount payable to Mr. Pike under the contract which had to be first made with him was $4,800, there was a saving to the department by the cancellation of the contract of $2,835.64.

On June 20 the government relief supplies left Glenora for Dease Lake in charge of the Hudson's Bay Company's officials, and all possible assistance was given to those needing relief.

The first of those in distress reached Glenora on June 18, and these parties had already been assisted by the Hudson's Bay Company at their inland posts. From time to time others arrived until September 4, when it was necessary for the 'Strathcona' to leave on her last trip to Wrangel on account of the low stage of water in the river. Altogether the 'Strathcona' made seven complete trips between Wrangel and Glenora, and brought out 155 men, to whom transportation, meals and accommodation were afforded. In addition to these, there were some thirty who worked for their passages, thus effecting a saving to the government. From those to whom relief was afforded certificates were taken that they were in destitution and had been given the assistance described.

The majority of those receiving assistance expressed their gratitude to the Hudson's Bay Company, as the agents of the Dominion government, in affording them relief, as well as for the treatment they had received at the company's posts which they had passed upon their long and arduous journey. There were some, however, who, disappointed by failure and hardship, were discontented, and were not so appreciative of the government's action and the efforts which had been made to relieve them.

Practically the last of the sick and destitute in that part of the country were brought down on the final trip of the 'Strathcona,' and it is hoped that the assistance which the Hudson's Bay Company has been enabled to afford, and which has only been carried out with much difficulty, may be considered by those who have been benefited as a generous and beneficent action on the part of the Dominion government.

It is possible that some small accounts may yet be received from some of the inland posts with which communication is difficult, but it is not anticipated that the amount of the present account, approximately $29,500, will be much exceeded.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) C. C. CHIPMAN.

Mr. FOSTER. So that the amount was $29,500?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The account is $29,500, and the deputy informs me that in looking over it, they have reduced it some.

Mr. FOSTER. What is this vote of $20,000 for this year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They had a vote last year of $25,000, and these accounts not having been settled, it lapsed. They paid a little over $12,000 on account of this $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole account will be $29,900 ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, but the deputy thinks it will be cut down some.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we have done a pretty good night's work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend is willing to allow the item of $10,000 for the relief of distressed persons in the North-west Territories to pass, we can take the discussion later.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the right kind of way to pass estimates.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am sure that I will be willing to give every possible opportunity for discussion. This money was spent, and it had to be spent to relieve the destitution of people in the North-west. This will finish these items, if the hon. gentleman will agree.

Mr. FOSTER. They will not go to the Senate any quicker, or be available any sooner.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If there is any discussion, every opportunity will be given. I do not think there will be any objection.

Mr. FOSTER. No, we had better let that stand, and get the explanation at the same time.

Yukon—Mounted Police ..... $500,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Prime Minister give us some information about this ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This vote is intended for a force of 250 men. There are 197 men there at present. We have withdrawn the military force from the Yukon and we estimate that we can do with a police force of 250 men. The officers are Supt. Perry, who took the place of Col. Steele, and Supts. Wood, Primrose, Scarth and Rutledge. There are two districts, the Dawson and the Tagish districts, and the men are distributed over a number of stations in these districts.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they boarding out, or have they accommodation for themselves at each station ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I speak under correction, but I think they all have stations for themselves. These stations are thirty miles apart, and we not only provide for the police, but for travellers, miners and so on.

Mr. FOSTER. If the travellers take provisions, do they pay for them ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The instructions are to take money for provisions supplied, but very often they have no money to give.

Mr. FOSTER. It ought not to be so much now.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not now, but everything has been of a very confused character until now, when things are becoming more systematized. When the police went there first they had to act as policemen, teamsters and mail carriers, and customs officers, and so on. We do no post office business now, but I believe we will continue to do some customs business, but not so much as in the past. Every one, I think, will agree that the force has been of great benefit to that country. They have built their stations themselves, and they have performed all the other duties that I have mentioned.

Mr. CLANCY. Are these emergency men at the different stations ?

The PRIME MINISTER. At Regina and Tagish and Dawson, the headquarters, we have a certain number of men always ready to do any kind of work they may be called upon to do.

Mr. FOSTER. Have there been any casualties amongst the force ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Very few.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they been met with force in any case ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not that I have been informed.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the supplies bought outside, or do you buy them in Dawson ?

The PRIME MINISTER. About 80 per cent of the supplies are bought outside and 20 per cent in Dawson.

Mr. FOSTER. The rule is to buy by contract from outside ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I believe so, except small supplies that are bought on emergency.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Prime Minister give us an honest expression now ? Was not the taking in of the militia force to the Yukon a failure ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot say that. I am glad to say that the services of the militia were not required, but I believe that the presence of the force had a salutary effect. My hon. friend will remember that when we asked an appropriation for the force in the spring of 1898, there was no opposition to it from any quarter. We knew there would be a rush of a population of a rather rough character, and in anticipation of possible disturbances, we thought it advisable to send the force there. I believe, for my part, that it was the old maxim: If you want to have peace prepare for war. The presence of the militia, no doubt, had a deterrent effect. It is possible that if we doubled the number of mounted police the same result might have been attained.

Mr. FOSTER. Why was Col. Steele recalled ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot give any information on that matter, because that portion of the force, though nominally under my supervision, was left to my colleague the Minister of the Interior, who had the organization of the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just the point. If the Prime Minister will allow me to express the opinion, it does not seem to me that the Minister of the Interior ought to have anything at all to do with the disposition of the mounted police, except by way of advice to the First Minister. I think a serious mistake has been made in turning everything over to the Minister of the Interior, who has had, not only too much to do, but who has had, what he never should have had a control in other departments, and used it in a way which has not been good. I hope the First Minister, when he is the head of the mounted police, will be its head right through, no matter where the mounted police goes. I have confidence in the First Minister—in a guarded way, of course—and very great confidence in the efficient deputy who has charge of that body; and I should like to see it kept in charge of the First Minister and his deputy, and not turned over to any other minister. I believe it has been used by the other minister as it would not have been used by my hon. friend.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must take exception to the too flattering remarks of which I feel very proud, from my hon. friend towards myself, and I must say that his criticisms of my colleague, the Minister of the Interior, are hardly fair. It was felt at the time that it would be better—and I am not prepared to give up my judgment on this point—to turn over the whole administration of the Yukon to one responsible minister. Different departments had to do with that administration; but the Yukon is so exceptionally situated, and is so far from all communication, that it has to be treated exceptionally, and I believe that the system we followed was, after all, the best we could follow under the circumstances. It would have been almost impossible to carry on the administration under another system. Now, I put another question to my hon. friend. He put a question to me a moment ago, which I answered calmly. Does he not think that, after all, the administration of the Yukon has come out more successfully than he anticipated at one time, and that on the whole it has been reasonably satisfactory?

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite ready to give my right hon. friend an answer according to my lights. They say that a drunken man escapes most wonderfully sometimes when he tumbles about, and the administration has got out of it a little better than at one time I feared they would. But I cannot say, and I do not believe in my heart, that the administration of the Yukon has redounded to the credit of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. FOSTER.

I do not think that under the surface, things have been as they ought to have been; and yet, the disposition here in Ottawa has been to close the ears and steel the mind against anything that was not complimentary towards the administration of affairs in that far-off country. The minister and the ministry would have done better if they had taken it a little more for granted that there were grievances, and if they had not steeled themselves against every representation of a grievance which came from there. I make up my mind largely from talking with friends who have passed months and some of them years in the Yukon, men whom I know, and in whom I have great confidence; and I am bound to say that I do not believe the Yukon has been administered by the Department of the Interior as successfully as it should have been, by a great deal. I am not going to say that the distance, and the very great difficulties of communication at first, are not to be taken into account; and we cannot expect any man to do superhuman things. Fair toleration must be allowed when we take these circumstances into account; but taking them into account, I cannot say very much for the administration of the Yukon. The government did not do what would satisfy the people of this country, and be a benefit all round, namely, have a fair and impartial investigation by a Royal Commission into the charges that were made. Then, if the charges were unfounded, the government would have had their own vindication. If they were well founded, the right hon. gentleman must acknowledge that it is the duty of the government to correct every grievance, and have every wrong righted. If that commission had been given, the clamour would have been stilled for one of two reasons—either that the charges would have been proved to have been false, or they would have been proved true to a certain extent, and the government must have remedied the grievances. But the Minister of the Interior seems to have gone on the assumption that every word or story of wrongdoing in the Yukon, was to be construed into an attack upon himself and his administration, and he steadily denied and resisted. The great mistake the government have made in connection with the Yukon, if they ask a candid opinion, is in not putting in there a commission of judges, a first-rate commission, who would have carried the confidence of the country through and through and letting them go to the bottom of the whole matter. That would have satisfied the country, and indicated the grievances, and affairs would have been much better managed than they have been. I hope if I have not satisfied my right hon. friend with the tenor of what I have said, I have satisfied him that I have given him my honest opinion.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is what I wanted to have. I suppose my hon. friend and myself might discuss this matter till doomsday without coming to an agreement. I admit that in 1898, the condition of things in the Yukon were rather chaotic. They could hardly be otherwise. There was a rush of population into the country; Major Walsh could not reach his destination in the winter, and many imputations were made upon his conduct for which I hold him absolutely blameless. Major Walsh was succeeded by Mr. Ogilvie, who, whatever be his demerits, is beyond doubt, an honest and painstaking man. Gradually things have been improving, and I do not know that in the summer of 1899, or this year, there have been any very serious complaints, if there have been complaints at all.

Mr. CLANCY. All the time.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not very serious. Of course, you will always hear complaints from a distant country; but, no serious and well-founded complaints have been made against the administration. Suppose there were. There may be faults of administration, little delinquencies of one kind or another; but, on the whole, I submit that the administration has been reasonably satisfactory. Taking in view the construction of houses and roads and everything else, and the fact that the whole thing had to be done at a great distance from all communications, I think that the Minister of the Interior has done better than he has been given credit for.

Mr. FOSTER. We will require to have a discussion on the Yukon, and my colleague from Pictou has a word or two to say on the administration of that district, and I also have my own views to express as regards the council, which I hope to bring before the attention of the right hon. gentleman in a day or two. In the meantime, I would like to have back the return he borrowed from me.

Mr. CLANCY. While there may have been a change in the administration of the Yukon, I must say that the complaints have not ceased. I have many letters in my possession that have no political aspect whatever—letters written by parties to their friends, which were never supposed to be seen by any other persons, and which disclose the fact that these people are under the impression that it would be much better for them to remain quiet than to air their grievances. I feel quite sure that the hon. gentleman can hardly enjoy that peace of mind and consolation on which he congratulates himself as to the perfection that may exist up there.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perfection does not exist anywhere.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I was asked the other night to ascertain how it happened that a vote for schools in unorganized districts in the North-west we were able, on an appropriation of $2,000 to spend more than that amount. I could not explain it at the moment, but I find, on inquiry, that several years ago a clause was inserted in the Supply Bill by which this item was treated in an exceptional manner, and the balances passed from one year to the other instead of lapsing. For the present year, we will follow that rule, but, for the future I do not see any reason why we should not follow the general rule.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. (Saturday).

ELECTORAL FRAUDS—JUDICIAL INQUIRY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With reference to the promise made the other day to my hon. friend on his suggestion with regard to the commission of inquiry now issued, I told him that I would give him the opinion of the Minister of Justice upon the subject, as laying down the policy the government intends to follow. The House will be interested in being given communication of the grounds taken by the Minister of Justice upon the several propositions and suggestions made by the hon. leader of the opposition:

(Memorandum in Respect to the Proposed Commission.)

Office of the Minister of Justice,

Ottawa, June 11, 1900.

The undersigned learns from the speeches of the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper and Mr. Borden (Halifax) that they are of opinion that the scope of the commission under chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes of Canada and the amendments thereto, is not sufficiently broad to make the inquiry of the commission effective.

The undersigned is of opinion that this conclusion has been reached by overlooking the amendments made by 52 Victoria, chapter 33. The powers under this statute, as it now stands, enables the Governor in Council to appoint a commission to inquire into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada, to confer upon the parties appointed to make the inquiry, by their commission, the power of summoning before them witnesses, and to require such witnesses to give evidence on oath, and to produce such documents and things as such commissioners deem requisite to full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.

Such commissioners are clothed with the same power to enforce attendance of witnesses, and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases.

It is expressly provided in that statute that no witness examined before such commissioners shall be excused from answering any questions put to him on the ground that the answer thereto may criminate, or tend to criminate, him; but no evidence so taken shall be admissible against any such witness in any criminal proceedings, except in the case of a witness charged with having given false evidence at such inquiry, or having procured or attempted, or conspired, to procure the giving of such evidence. In the opinion of the undersigned, chapter 114, as it now stands amended, is sufficiently ample to meet the requirements of the investigation, as suggested by Mr. Borden (Halifax).

Sir Charles Tupper suggests that the commission should be enlarged by adding the following words: 'And any fraudulent practices, persons or means connected therewith.' The present commission authorizes the commissioners to inquire into the fraudulent conduct of any person in relation to the alleged wrong-doing in respect to the ballots, and so these words are, in the opinion of the undersigned, unnecessary.

Sir Charles Tupper suggests that, in the employment of counsel, the leader of the government (the Prime Minister) shall name one counsel, and he shall name the other. The undersigned is of opinion that it is better the appointment of counsel should rest with the commissioners, as they will be present for the purpose of aiding the commissioners in accomplishing the object had in view—the ascertainment of the facts in the constituencies in which it is found necessary to conduct an investigation.

As to the suggestion that the witness should be asked how he voted, the undersigned is of opinion that no attempt should be made by legislation to compel a witness to give evidence that it may have been the express intention of the law should not be given. Whether a witness shall be compelled to testify how he voted or not, is a question which the commissioners will undertake to decide in conformity with the law. The present Ballot Act was introduced into parliament by the late Chief Justice of the province of Quebec (Sir A. A. Dorion), at the time he was Minister of Justice. At that time, it was intended by him, on ground of public policy, to have parliament to so legislate that the ballot could not, under any circumstances, for the purpose of ascertaining by whom it was marked, be inquired into, in a court of justice. In this respect, the Ballot Act of Canada differs from the English law, and also from the law of Ontario, where, upon a scrutiny, the law provides that it may be ascertained from the ballot itself how each elector voted. The ballot being itself the primary evidence, it has been said that there is no other safe means than by its production, to show how a party voted, and it would certainly be very hazardous to permit a party to testify how he voted. The witness, were he to give false testimony in this regard, would do so without the slightest fear of detection, and without its being possible, except by the ballot, to establish that his evidence was wrong.

In the case of the Haldimand election, the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court (Sir Henry Strong) held that to permit a voter to testify how he voted would be a direct violation of the Act—that secrecy is imposed as an absolute rule of public policy, and that it cannot be waived. The whole purview of the law is different from that of the English and of the Ontario Acts.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Some judges have held to a different opinion, but the commissioners, who are all judges of ability, may be safely left to interpret the law for themselves.

In the opinion of the undersigned, it would be extremely improper to permit the evidence taken before the committee in the West Huron case to be made evidence before a commission, as the importance that the commissioners may attach to the evidence of a party, and the impression made upon their minds may depend upon his demeanour in giving his evidence, it is most important that the parties should appear before the commission and testify in the ordinary way.

Sir Charles Tupper states that he was advised that it is impossible for the commissioners to compel the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to do what is required of him in this commission. In that view the undersigned cannot concur. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is an officer of the Crown, through whom the Crown issues the writs calling upon the parties to whom they are addressed to make a return of a member to the House of Commons within the time specified. He, as an officer of the Crown, is subject to the summons of the commissioner, as much so as any other witness whose attendance may be required.

Respectfully submitted,

DAVID MILLS,
Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I am sorry that the government have arrived at the conclusion they have with reference to this matter, because I am sure it will prevent the accomplishment of what the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said was its object, and that was to have a thorough and complete examination of the subject. I took exception to the scope of the commission, and was anxious it should also embrace 'any fraudulent practice, persons or actions connected therewith.' What possible objection there could be to the addition of these words and to this addition to the scope of the commission, I am at a loss to conceive, if the government wishes a fair, full and complete investigation into this matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). What is the difference between 'fraudulent practices' and 'fraudulent conduct' which is to be inquired into?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Even supposing that my hon. friend (Mr. Blair), is right in saying that the point I desire is already covered, there could be no objection to adding the words 'fraudulent practices, persons or actions.' In the next place, the Act under which this commission is authorized is stated in the Canada Gazette—for I find that the commission has been gazetted in anticipation of any action by this House or any expression of opinion here—is chapter 114, and it is appointed to inquire into, investigate, and report upon certain election frauds. The English Act to which I drew attention, provides specifically that the commission shall inquire into the matters committed to them 'by all such lawful means as to them appear best.' It also provides:

For the more effectually prosecuting any inquiry under this Act, every person who has been engaged in any corrupt practice at or connected with any election of members or a member to serve in parliament for any county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place to which any inquiry under this Act relates, and who is examined as a witness, and gives evidence touching such corrupt practice before the commissioners appointed under this Act to make such inquiry, and who upon such examination makes a true discovery to the best of his knowledge, touching all things to which he is so examined, shall be free from all penal actions, forfeitures, punishments, disabilities and incapacities, and all criminal prosecutions to which he may have been or may become liable or subject at the suit of Her Majesty.

This is 15-16 Victoria, chapter 57, and the language is adopted by chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes. In the case of this commission, such complete immunity is not provided as, I hold, is absolutely necessary, in order to reach the truth in this matter. If the object is, as my right hon. friend professes, to have a thorough and complete investigation, to probe these matters to the bottom, what possible objection there could be to the adoption of the language of the Imperial statute I cannot imagine. It is true that under the Act under which the commissioners are appointed, they would have power to undertake that any evidence given by a witness should not be used against him. But that does not cover the case. You must give him absolute indemnity as well as against his evidence being used to bring forward other persons, and thus give him every encouragement to disclose the truth and the whole truth. I think the suggestion I made was a reasonable one, and I do not think that any of the statements made just now by my right hon. friend at all covers the case or gives any sufficient ground why my suggestion should not have been adopted. Then I drew attention to the point concerning the payment of witnesses, and suggested that it would be impossible, that everybody knew it would be impossible, to have a complete investigation unless you provided for the payment of expenses of witnesses.

The PRIME MINISTER. We intend to ask an appropriation for that object.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is another thing. I think the commission should provide for that. It is the right of the parties to know what witnesses will be paid, and to have it in the Act, and not left to the judgment of the government or any person else as to that point. Under the Corrupt Practices Act, there is this power, and if it is not intended to cripple or defeat the object of this commission, I do not see why you should not give such an indemnity to the persons giving the evidence, as the Imperial statute give, nor do I see any reason why you should not provide, by law, for the payment of expenses of witnesses. The other suggestions that I made are matters to which I do not attach so great importance, though important they certainly are. I see that the choice of counsel by the commissioners is limited to Queen's counsel, thus not leaving the judges free to appoint any counsel they please. They must appoint Queen's counsel. That being so, I do not see why the suggestion I made as to the choice of these counsel should not be adopted. I suggested that the commissioners should be advised to consult my right hon. friend as to one of the counsel to be named, and that the leader of the other party in this House, and this country, should be in a position to suggest the other. There could be no ground of objection, there could be no partiality in that. My right hon. friend has certainly offered no sufficient objection to what I proposed. But I went further and suggested that these counsel having been appointed, one at the suggestion of the leader of the government and the other at the suggestion of the leader of the opposition in this House, they should be authorized to obtain the assistance of other counsel. And for a very obvious reason. Every person knows that it is impossible for any counsel, however able and distinguished he may be to deal with a question of this kind, unless he is in a position to call to his aid other persons, and these persons would be required to be sent to investigate and to learn what evidence was to be forthcoming and what evidence could be brought. Why should it be thrown upon two counsel without any assistance whatever to deal with a question of this magnitude? It is utterly impossible, with any regard whatever to the time they should occupy in making this investigation, that it should be confined to two counsel. My right hon. friend has not seen proper to adopt my suggestion with reference to that point, to which I attach the greatest importance, because I think the greatest success of the investigation must inevitably depend largely upon the assistance that counsel are able to give; and if they are limited to their own exertions and cannot obtain aid and assistance from other solicitors in dealing with this question, one of two results follows: The time occupied in this investigation will be so lengthy as to deprive it of its utility, or it will be absolutely impossible to have that complete investigation to which my right hon. friend pledged himself so emphatically.

The PRIME MINISTER. Speaking under correction, at this moment, I do not remember that when this matter was last before us my right hon. friend suggested there should be more than one counsel on each side.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suggested there should be one counsel named by the right hon. gentleman and another named by the leader of the opposition, and that they should have authority to obtain such assistance as was absolutely necessary to secure a thorough investigation. My right hon. friend will find that suggestion in the remarks I made if he will consult Hansard, which is generally very correct.

Then, as to the question of examining witnesses as to how they voted, I must express my great surprise at the decision arrived at in view of the evidence that we have before us, that the government have now in their possession. The gravamen of the charge in the Huron election rests upon the right of the electors to testify how they voted, and the right hon. gentleman, knowing that the whole case rests to a large extent upon that fact—I am surprised that there should be any hesitation in passing an Act that would enable the judges to ask the witness how he voted. The Committee on Privileges and Elections ruled that as the seat was not affected, and as it is not proposed to affect a seat by the decision of these judges, the case would be exactly in the same position as it was before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on which my hon. friend has an absolute majority, and which ruled that in order to have any proper investigation it was absolutely necessary that witnesses should be permitted to state how they voted. Yet that is, for some reason best known to my hon. friend and to the government, refused, although it is the very first step towards getting a prompt and searching investigation, the very first step towards discovering the ground upon which frauds in the West Huron election to a large extent rest. My right hon. friend knows that in one case in which forty men voted for a Conservative candidate, there were only thirty ballots found in the ballot box, and it would be utterly impossible to reach that fraud unless these men tell how they voted, and unless they do this, it is absolutely impossible to expose the fraud, and you break down the whole machinery by which a pure election can be held. My right hon. friend knows that the testimony of at least forty men—and an hon. gentleman beside me says there were more than forty—had gone in before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, their sworn and solemn testimony confirmed on cross-examination; and I say that under these circumstances it would appear that one of the objects in removing this matter from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which had ruled that such questions should be asked, and given to a Royal Commission, is to get rid of that evidence, and prevent testimony being given that has been proved to be absolutely necessary in order to expose one of the most scandalous transactions that has taken place in the case of the West Huron election.

I am also surprised that any question should arise, in order to expedite this matter, as to the sworn testimony taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections being utilized in the present case. Why should it not be utilized? Is there any reason why this testimony should not be used? Every person knows the immense difficulty of bringing a hundred or more witnesses before a court; and when it is remembered that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) declared that the result of that investigation was not to establish anything that would materially affect the gentlemen on the other side of the House and the party with which they are connected, it is the more strange that the judges are not to be permitted to use that testimony which, at great public expense and enormous inconvenience to the public, had been procured. Their sworn testimony is on record, and why should it not be used as sworn testimony is used when it is transferred from a committee of one session of this House to a committee of another session? I must say that I am greatly disappointed to think that the extremely moderate and reasonable suggestions which I ventured to make to my hon. friend, have all been thrown over. It would seem that instead of my right hon. friend being anxious to implement the pledges that he gave to this House to promote a thorough and searching investigation, the object now appears to be to get rid of an investigation at all that will be of any value, and to cripple and confine the commissioners in such a way as to prevent witnesses from testifying in the same way they had testified in the first place, because they are not to receive the indemnity that the Imperial Act gives to witnesses under similar circumstances, and they are not permitted to give the testimony that, under the decision of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, they have already been allowed to give. Therefore, that is another reason. I suppose, why this investigation is to be crippled and hampered by restrictions that are calculated to prevent its having the effect that is desired.

Now, I drew my right hon. friend's attention to another thing, and that was the desirability of taking the Brockville and West Huron elections first. I did not catch what decision he has arrived at with reference to that matter.

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not speak of that. I said the other day that upon this matter as well as others, the government did not feel justified in giving any instructions to the judges, but preferred to leave them to conduct the inquiry as they saw fit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My right hon. friend seems to forget that the reason of this commission being issued is because one of the most frightful scandals has taken place, being an attempt to deprive the electors of this country of their independent franchise, and to substitute spurious members, returned by a gang of ruffians who invaded the constituency and tampered with ballot boxes, who switched ballots, stole ballots, substituted ballots; and this commission was appointed because this country became convulsed from one end to the other at the scandalous practices that were proved to have been carried on. My right hon. friend did not deny that. In his speech he agreed to submit this matter to an independent body of judges competent to investigate all that has taken place, and I want to know, if that be the case, whether this House and this country have not a right to know why the investigation into these two elections is not to be proceeded with, which are the cause of the issue of this commission, and in regard to which the right hon. gentleman said that a prima facie case had been made out sufficient to justify the submission of the case to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? He was prepared to have a thorough investigation and it was sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with the result that one hundred witnesses came before the committee, whose evidence was so overwhelming and so alarming to hon. gentlemen opposite who had no doubt taken part in these elections, that my right hon. friend drew back from his position, changed front, declared as being an improper course that which the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) concurred in as a legal act, which the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) declared was all right, legal and proper a year ago, and, when this startling proof came out, when he found that his party were going to be overwhelmed with evidence of the most overwhelming rascality and corruption and fraud in connection with these elections, the right hon. gentleman, having got a legal opinion, suddenly changed front, when he found that the evidence that was presented was so grave, so serious and so strong of the disreputable means by which the independent electors of this country had been stricken down, when it was found that proofs were to be reported to this House of the machinations of a gang of scoundrels, sent from one constituency to another, and when he found that he would have to face the ordeal of public opinion in this House and this country, he declared that he would have a Royal Commission, that the Committee on Privileges and Elections was not sufficient to deal with the subject, and that he would have a Royal Commission to have a complete, a thorough and a searching investigation. We have now a refusal to adopt such suggestions as are copied from the Imperial statute, and instead of adopting the suggestions, the adoption of which is absolutely necessary in order to have a full, complete and thorough investigation, the Prime Minister insists upon issuing this commission under an Act that does not cover the case, an Act that does not provide power for an investigation of a searching character as the Imperial Act upon the same subject does. My right hon. friend recedes from the position which he took, and says: We will refer the case to a committee of judges appointed under a law which will hamper them at every step; we will appoint a committee of judges under a commission that will hamper them at every step, and which does not give them the right to grant indemnity to witnesses or to provide for their payment, or to provide such assistants as counsel would absolutely require in order to have a searching investigation into this matter unless they intend to take two or three years to do it. In the face of the circumstances under which this Royal Commission was granted, you say that you are going to send this judicial commission back four years to commence their investigation and allow the difficulty which the year now elapsed has caused to intervene before this case shall be reached. If you will not do that which, on the face of it, the people of the whole country insist shall be done, unless this great case which has been so thoroughly established as to compel the issue of a Royal Commission is promptly taken up, unless you have a thorough and prompt investigation into the Huron and Brockville elections the country will hold you responsible. Let me say to my right hon. friend, and let me say it in all seriousness, that unless he insists upon securing a prompt investigation of the Brockville and Huron elections before there is an appeal to the people in order to give them a report upon that which lies at hand, and which is the gravamen of the whole charge, he might as well put a plea of guilty before the people of the country at once, and say that the reason that he changed his mind, that he changed the opinions of himself and of his friends behind him as to the propriety of referring this important question to the Committee on Privileges and Elections was for the purpose of preventing the electors from having that which they were entitled to have as to who had led and who had been behind these men who had led to such a perversion of justice in striking down the independent electors of this country. The right hon. gentleman has tried that on one or two occasions before. He has refused a judicial commission for the prompt investigation of matters brought before the House, but I can tell him that there is a higher court than even the hon. gentlemen who sit behind him, and that, as he stands to-day overwhelmed and condemned by a province that stood at his back a year ago, if he attempts to snatch a verdict from the electorate before the Huron and Brockville elections have been thoroughly examined into and reported upon by this commission, he will find himself in the same position and he will find that he has courted the same verdict from the independent electorate of the Dominion of Canada that he has received from the province of Manitoba in reference to his Minister of the Interior. I regret to be obliged to deal with this question with any heat, but, when you contrast the solemn pledge given by the hon. gentleman, here, a short time ago, when he found that there was going to be a stampede of his followers who would not vote for the view of the hon. junior member for Halifax, when he declared in this House that there should be a prompt, a searching, a complete and a thorough investigation, with the position which he has taken to-day and with his refusal to conceive it to be his duty to bring in an Act to give these eminent judges power to control all these cases, it is evident that the Prime Minister misjudges the temper of the people if he thinks that any advantage can thus be secured for his party by thus postponing the evil day possibly until it may be too late to get the subject before the electorate. I regret more deeply than I can say, that the Prime Minister has turned a deaf ear to the moderate, reasonable suggestions that I made in order to implement the pledge which he himself gave to the House and without which that pledge is a mockery. I regret that my right hon. friend has taken such a course, and I say that it will fail, in my judgment, in securing any of the objects that he has in view. I said before, and I say now, that I have no objection to going back as far as by the commission is required. But here is a burning case, now alive, in which the whole country is interested, in regard to which a hundred witnesses have been examined, a case which has been practically established, and when you say that you will turn back several years in order that these facts upon which the country are feeling such a deep interest, I can tell my right hon. friend that he will entirely fail to secure the objects which he has in view. We hail with delight the appointment of this commission. If there is a man in the Liberal-Conservative party, I do not care what position he may occupy, against whom you can bring home such gigantic fraud and such scoundrelism as took place in the West Huron and Brockville elections, we want to see that man exposed and punished. I care not how far back you may go with your inquiry; you may go to the Greek Kalends if you like, but there never was a case where for the honour of the House of Commons of Canada, it is more necessary that the right hon. gentleman should, as he is in duty bound to do, have a prompt, thorough and complete investigation into these frauds that we know have taken place. We do not 'think' they have taken place, for we have the evidence before the House and the country that they have taken place, and I say that the perpetrators of these frauds—no matter how high the position they occupy, should be brought to condign punishment.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman conclude with a motion?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My right hon. friend can make a motion if he wishes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) while he was speaking, but I certainly would have done so if I thought he did not intend to conclude with a motion to adjourn the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I will conclude with a motion if necessary. It is well, perhaps, that one or two observations should be made on what the leader of the opposition puts forward as defects in the composition of the commission, and in the powers which have been conferred upon it. If any evidence were wanting to satisfy the fair-minded members of this House that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has simply been indulging in political manoeuvring in this whole transaction, he has furnished that evidence to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The hon. gentleman says that the professed object of the leader of the government is to pretend to make inquiry into these matters, but that he has so formed the instructions given to the commission that the commission must fail. The whole country knows that is not so. It is quite patent that the object of the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has been to demand that some changes should be made in the language of the commission, so that in the event of these changes being accepted by the government, the hon. gentleman and his friends and his press could circulate broadcast throughout the country, that the government commission was defective in most important particulars and that it would have failed to make a proper inquiry were it not that the opposition forced the government to introduce the amending words.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Am I to understand that that is the ground on which they are refused?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is, undoubtedly, the object of the leader of the opposition in making these proposals. It is not that he believes there is anything of material importance in his suggestions; not that he believes there is any defect in the phraseology of the commission, or that its scope will be strengthened by these words, but that he might be able to say that he had compelled the government against their will to alter the commission and make it more perfect. Failing to do that, the hon. gentleman gets up in his place to say that the government has taken such a course that this inquiry will utterly fail in eliciting the facts and establishing the wrong-doing which he alleges to exist. Sir, the government is open to no charge in that direction. I can show, by a brief reference to the commission itself, and to the law upon which it is framed, that there is no reason why this commission should be amended. If the government is convinced, as it is convinced, that every ground that it is proper and necessary to cover has been covered by this commission, and that every ground which fair-minded men think necessary has been covered; then, I want to know why we should yield to the request of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) to make some footy alterations, just to enable him to say that we have been compelled to make them at his demand.

After referring to the character of the inquiry that should be made, the commission goes on to say:

They may also inquire into 'any fraudulent conduct' in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes, or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents, of the ballot boxes.

Everything relating to the ballots, everything relating to the ballot boxes, everything relating to the poll books, and everything which it is necessary to inquire into for a full and thorough elucidation of all the facts, can be inquired into under these words. Do not the words 'fraudulent conduct of the parties' refer to fraudulent practices? If you use the word 'practices' a thousand times, would that word be any more expressive than fraudulent conduct? If you use the word 'means' would that be any? You have already got it, because the commission authorizes an inquiry into the fraudulent conduct, not of any one individual, but of all individuals. It is utterly ridiculous and absurd for the leader of the opposition to press any such contention before this parliament. He is addressing intelligent men; men who understand the meaning of the English language, and he ought to know, and he does know, that the very terms which the government have carefully framed in this commission are full and ample to cover everything he has suggested. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) asks: Why is there not some provision here with regard to the payment of witnesses? Let me tell him that there is every provision for that, when it is supplemented by an appropriation which the Prime Minister has assured the House and the hon. gentleman that he will ask parliament for. The money is to be voted for the purpose of paying the expenses of the commission, for the purpose of bringing the witnesses there and paying their expenses, and when it is voted it will be at the disposal of the commissioners, and can and will be applied towards paying the expenses of the witnesses on the one side as well as on the other. Is it not a frivolous pretense, is it not a hollow sham, to declare that unless there is something specially put in about paying the witnesses, the commissioners will not be warranted in doing so? You might as well say that the commissioners would not be warranted in paying counsel or officers of the court. When the appropriation is passed they will have all the authority that is necessary to pay all the legitimate expenses that is necessary for carrying on the inquiry, and among the rest the paying of the witnesses. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) says also: You have limited the character of the counsel who may be employed, and you have perpetrated the outrage that you have compelled the commissioners to select Queen's counsel only. I do not know what are the conditions in Ontario—I suppose the lawyers will be from the Ontario bar—but, if the conditions in respect to the Ontario bar are the same as obtain in my own province, then you cannot get a lawyer of any eminence, you cannot get a gentleman whom you would employ for such a purpose who is not a Queen's counsel.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, my friend; I cannot afford the time, I have only got a moment. I would not admit that you could not find an able man in the Liberal party who is a Queen's counsel, and if you cannot find amongst the Conservatives a sufficiently astute and able lawyer among the Queen's counsel to efficiently discharge duties of this kind, then the bar must be in a very deplorable condition. However, I know better than that; I know it is not so. I know, too, that when you have the assurance that the lawyers chosen shall be Queen's counsel, you are giving a guarantee that the two most eminent men of the bar can be selected to discharge this duty.

The hon. gentleman tells us that proper provision has not been made for indemnifying the witnesses against prosecution. The hon. gentleman, or those who instructed him for his statement the other day, had not taken account of the Act, 52 Victoria, chapter 33, in amendment to chapter 114, reading in this way:

No witness examined before such commissioners shall be excused from answering any question put to him on the ground that the answer thereto may criminate or tend to criminate him; but no evidence so taken shall be admissible against any such witness in any criminal proceeding, except in the case of a witness charged with having given false evidence at any such inquiry, or with having procured, or attempted, or conspired, to procure the giving of such evidence.

That is as far as it would be proper for this commission to go, and as far as parliament authorizes it to go, in indemnifying a witness against any criminal prosecution for any evidence that he might give. It is there in the law, and why pass another law to the same effect? Would it not make the leader of this government ridiculous if he were to introduce a Bill to do what was already done several years ago? This amending Act of 52 Victoria, provides a full and ample indemnity to all persons who may give evidence before that commission. From a second remark which the hon. gentleman made in this connection, I thought he expressed the opinion that we ought to go further and indemnify anybody from prosecution arising from evidence given before this commission. Did I so understand him?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman did not intend to go that far, which would be a most absurd and ridiculous length, he cannot go any further than to ask that the witness himself who gives evidence before the commission, shall be free from prosecution; and I do not think there is any lawyer on the other side of the House who will say that the words of this amending statute do not amply cover the ground.

My hon. friend says that these commissioners ought to use the evidence which has already been given before the committee of this House on Privileges and Elections, and draw all their deductions and conclusions from that evidence, and dispense with the necessity of bringing the same witnesses before the commission. There are very cogent reasons, which must be apparent to any gentleman who has had any experience in the trial of cases, why such a course of procedure would be exceedingly inexpedient, improper, and not attendant with the results which the hon. gentleman would have us believe he desires to accomplish. Such evidence would simply be read by the commissioners. That evidence contains all sorts of testimony—testimony which may have been legal or which may not have been legal, testimony which was proper, and testimony which was simply hearsay. It contains testimony which was admitted by the committee under circumstances which were not proper, favourable to the proper elucidation of the facts, or to the holding of a proper inquiry; and I will tell the House why I think so. When the question came before that committee as to whether certain witnesses should be compelled to state for whom they had voted, the question of the admissibility of that evidence was very properly raised by counsel. The result was that the newspapers of the opposition cried out that the committee were stifling inquiry; and the reason that evidence was admitted afterwards—I was present when a portion of the discussion took place, and also when the evidence was finally admitted—was not because in the opinion of the majority of the committee, it was proper or legal evidence, but because they felt that the whole object of the opposition and the opposition press, was to create the impression that the majority wished to suppress the evidence and stifle the inquiry, and, therefore, they felt that it would be better to allow of this violation of the law, rather than to put it in the power of hon. gentlemen opposite to represent to the country at large, who would not know the rights or the wrongs of the matter, that we had refused to permit everything to come out, or to allow the widest possible inquiry. My hon. friend says that it would be proper to allow this evidence to be used by the commission, and that we should pass a law for that purpose. I think he will search in vain throughout the whole legislation of this country or the mother country, to find an instance in which parliament undertook to pass ex post facto legislation for such a purpose. We would be taking away from electors the privilege of voting in secret, so that the way they cast their vote would not be known. We have no right to deprive them of that privilege. Therefore, the question with which the commission may properly deal, is a very simple one. If, under the law of the land it is proper to ask each witness, as he comes up, for whom he voted, and to do that in the absence of the ballots, and long after their destruction, then the commission will so judge; they will make their determination in accordance with the law, and not in violation of any principle or rule. You will be getting a solemn adjudication at the hands of gentlemen who are competent to make it, in accordance with the existing law of the land. If, on the other hand, this is not a question which may be properly asked, and answered, these commissioners will be able so to determine. But what the hon. gentleman asks us to do, is to introduce a law to have a retroactive operation, providing that the privilege which these men thought belonged to them when they cast their ballots, shall not continue to belong to them, but shall be taken from them, and that in this inquiry everybody will be compelled to state for whom he voted, whether he will or no. This would be unjust, and I think it might fairly be characterized as most iniquitous legislation. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has no just reason to complain. The commission will be found amply to cover everything; and I hope the hon. gentleman and his friends, when they find how utterly futile and unreasonable have been the objections which he has made to this commission, and how fully it will cover all the ground, will be frank enough to acknowledge that these furious diatribes of his have been utterly unfounded. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton). The hon. gentleman who has just spoken introduced his speech with the remark that there was some manœuvring in this matter. The manœuvring, in my mind, is to sidetrack an investigation which had been begun under the auspices of this House, into the Brockville and West Huron elections. We were half way through the trial of those cases, when the government, for what reasons it is not now necessary to discuss, decided to stop without a conclusion of them; and public opinion was undoubtedly aroused to a very healthy condition, when it was learned that the government did not intend to go further into matters, which, at any rate, looked serious enough to be sifted to the bottom, according to the pledge given by the Prime Minister last session. That subject came under discussion this year, and the government endeavoured to show the unfitness of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to deal with the cases of the West Huron and Brockville elections. The whole discussion was concerning those two elections. Some hon. gentlemen, supporting the government, endeavoured to use the tu quoque argument, and made counter charges which had never been sent to any committee, and were only thrown in as a last resort at a desperate stage of the debate, and finally, to the surprise of his followers, the right hon. the First Minister was forced to announce that these questions would go to a Royal Commission.

Why these other matters, to which I have referred, should have been imported into the commission at all I could never see, but the hon. the leader of the opposition and his supporters did not see fit to raise the slightest objection to the scope of the proposed commission going far beyond the West Huron and Brockville elections. And undoubtedly, the country will be amazed to learn that the government propose to break off the inquiry which parliament had begun, and take up matters of ancient history, comparatively, so that if the chronological order should suggest itself to the commission, they may think proper to begin at the beginning, and thus throw off from the public mind, for a long time, the consideration of the very matters that brought about the existence of the commission, and with which parliament was dealing last session, through one of its committees.

The hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) has made some statements which, coming from a lawyer, are of a very extraordinary character. He pretends that the statute chap. 33 of 52 Victoria could not have been read by the hon. the leader of the opposition or the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) when they pointed out in what respect the commission was defective. But, chap. 33 of 52 Victoria, when compared with the Imperial Act 15-16 Victoria, referred to by the leader of the opposition, and our own statute, chap. 10 of the Revised Statutes, will show that the Minister of Railways could not have given the attention and study to this subject which, being a lawyer, one would have expected him to do, and I am amazed that any Minister of Justice would have put his signature to the statement furnished by the present Minister of Justice. It is clear that if the minister read, as, no doubt, he did, 52 Victoria, chap. 33, he never read the Imperial Act to which the leader of the opposition referred or the clause in the Corrupt Practices Act which the leader of the opposition quoted.

We had 52 Victoria, chap. 33, before the House last year, and I then raised the same point with reference to the Ogilvie commission that my hon. friends have raised with reference to this commission. It was found in the Ogilvie matter, that the miners were handicapped and had to withdraw, because, in order to prove wrong-doing in the Yukon, they had to confess to being parties to it. Although it is provided in 52 Victoria, chap. 33, that if a man gave evidence it could not be used against him, that would not prevent an indictment being preferred against him for the offence he admitted having committed; and witnesses before the present commission will be in exactly the same position. Mr. Blake, who was a lawyer of equal standing at least to the Minister of Railways, saw that in connection with inquiries into corrupt practices, in which you are trying to ferret out crime, you must rely on criminals to a large extent, and use their evidence; and in order to obtain the fullest evidence the courts must have power, not merely to do as in ordinary cases of public inquiry, but to go further and absolutely pardon the witness, so that no indictment could be preferred or warrant proved against him. It is clear that this point was not considered by the Minister of Justice, when making out his written opinion; and when the Minister of Railways taunts the leader of the opposition with ignorance of the statutes, he has simply laid himself open to the charge of never having taken the trouble to read the Imperial statute to which the leader of the opposition referred, and which was followed by Mr. Blake in framing the Corrupt Practices Act. Take the clause in the statute referred to by the Minister of Railways, 52 Victoria, chap. 33:

No witness examined before such commissioners shall be excused from answering any question put to him on the ground that the answer thereto may criminate or tend to criminate him; but no evidence so taken shall be admissible against any such witness in any criminal proceeding, except in the case of a witness charged with having given false evidence at any such inquiry or with having procured, or attempted, or conspired, to procure the giving of such evidence.

Mr. Blake thoroughly understood that that did not go far enough, if you want it to get at the very bottom of corrupt practices. He understood that it is not sufficient to hold that bait out to a man who had been implicated in the fraud. You must put another power in the court, and that power was this, given in section 9, chap. 10 of the Revised Statutes, entitled 'an Act respecting Corrupt Practices at Elections':

Provided always, that when any witness answers every question relating to the matters aforesaid which he is required to answer, and the answer to which may criminate or tend to criminate him, shall be entitled to receive from the commissioners, under their hands, a certificate stating that he was, from this examination, required by them to answer one or more questions relating to the matters aforesaid, the answer or answers to which criminated or tended to criminate him, and had answered any such question; or if any information, indictment or penal action is at any time thereafter pending in any court against such witness in respect of any corrupt practices committed by him previously to the time of his giving his evidence at any election concerning which he has been so examined, the court shall, on production and proof of such certificate, stay such proceedings, and may, in its discretion, award to him any costs to which he has been put; provided, that no statement made by any person in answer to any question put by the commissioners shall, except the case of an indictment for perjury, be admissible in evidence in any legal proceeding.

Now, any lawyer, or any layman for that matter, will see the difference between that clause, which empowers the court to grant a pardon on the spot as against criminal proceedings and the clause that stops short with prohibiting the evidence tending to incriminate being used against him, and leaves the man to be indicted and confronted with other evidence. And the start of the prosecution, the initiative, the detective work, may be the very evidence extracted from him on the stand. Consequently, as Mr. Blake says, if you are going to ferret into corrupt practices, you must go as far as the English Act has gone, and you must go a little farther in order to use the criminal whose evidence is so important. In 1876, Mr. Blake said :

We can see very clearly what the consequence of this may be. In the first place, it adds strength and vigour to his testimony, supposing he was guilty; in the second place, it proves the fact, morally, at any rate, that he is guilty, and is consequently some argument in favour of a more extensive indemnity clause. But whatever the argument may be, it is absolutely essential for this part of the investigation that there should be a clause to indemnify witnesses who attend and give evidence.

But not for witnesses who refuse to speak or who cannot claim a certificate of indemnity on other grounds. The case is one not of indemnity, but of privilege for the use of his evidence.

But not for witnesses who refuse to speak or who cannot claim a certificate of indemnity on other grounds,

So, it is clear that the Minister of Railways and Canals, who has spoken so positively, has never compared the legislation referred to by the leader of the opposition and has simply followed the very superficial—I say it with all respect,—opinion of the Minister of Justice on that point. Even in the case of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, which was not referred to by the Minister of Railways, but by the Prime Minister, I think, and also by the Minister of Justice. I have a word to say. There were very able lawyers in parliament when the Elections Act was put through this House, and the Prime Minister, I am sure, will remember, that, while there were no very positive opinions expressed as to what power a court would have over the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and over the parliamentary records and documents in his charge and custody, it was stated by eminent counsel, and it is the opinion of eminent counsel to-day, that it might well be that an ordinary tribunal with the fullest power in connection with the trial causes would hesitate before dealing with a parliamentary officer and parliamentary documents; and, therefore to remove all doubts, to make it absolutely clear, there is, in a similar case, the trial of election petitions, express statutory provisions under which subpoenas run to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; and by this legislation, all doubt is removed as to the power of the court to see that he obeys the subpoenas and produces these documents. So that, as was stated by the leader of the opposition, not that it was clear beyond all doubt that this commission would not have power to subpoena the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, but that it would be well, remembering the course that had been taken in the case of election petitions, to follow the precedent there set, and to pass an Act in this connection so as to remove all doubt and prevent these proceedings being wholly abortive. The suggestion put forward by the Minister of Railways and Canals to-day that, whether these suggestions of the leader of the opposition were good or bad, he, for one, as a member of the government, was afraid to adopt them, lest it should be said that he had been forced to do so by the leader of the opposition. A more humiliating statement never was made by a Minister of the Crown. I thought I could see a blush mantling the cheeks of his colleagues when such a reason was put forward. There is no other reason for not adopting these suggestions, for not following the former practice in these cases, for not removing all doubts and making the matter clear and certain. After parliament has been prorogued, if these doubts are well founded, the business of this commission may come to a very sudden end, and delay be caused for which, I am sure, the public will hold the government accountable.

Then, in connection with the pay of witnesses,—there is no other reason against it except the ridiculous reason given by the Minister of Railways and Canals. It is true that you may make provisions by an Act of Supply for the payment of any one, including witnesses; but what happened in the Ogilvie case? They had money galore; when money was wanted for any purpose whatever, in connection with the Yukon it was forthcoming one way or the other. But witnesses appealed to the commission, appealed to the legal officer representing the government sitting with him for their expenses and their fees, putting before them the great loss of money and time they were put to. Many witnesses could not be got because of the lack of money. And months and months elapsed after the commission had closed before a dollar was paid to any of the witnesses, and then it was only paid to those who had run the risk and attended. This is a point of the legislation that the government has overlooked, and the Minister of Justice has overlooked. By the course that the government propose to follow, instead of the matter being left in the hands of the commission, it is left in the hands of the government. The Corrupt Practices Act contains provisions that the Supply Bill will not have. The provisions of the Supply Bill must be carried out by officers of this government; they must be put in force in accordance with the form and ceremonies of the Auditor General's office as in connection with all government expenditure. But, in the case of the Corrupt Practices Act, as pointed out by Mr. Blake, the court has statutory authority over all the procedure, including the payment of witnesses and paying for assistants in the way of witnesses. The Minister of Railways and Canals suggested that parliament would vote an amount that could be resorted to. No one suggested—certainly the leader of the opposition did not—that parliament would prorogue without making full provision for all expenses. The point is that in England and Canada this ample power for obtaining evidence was handed over to the commission. The First Minister says: We want to leave so much for the commission; we do not want to interfere. Why not, then, give them such power as such commissions usually have in the case of inquiries into corrupt practices, and not put the commissioners in the position of making requisitions to the government for the amount voted in supply, the government taking the responsibility, as would be necessary under the Supply Bill, as to how this money was to be expended. Then the Minister of Railways and Canals was driven to some extraordinary statements respecting the observations of the leader of the opposition as to counsel. Now the Prime Minister will, I am sure, do the leader of the opposition the justice to say that he never in the slightest manner questioned the propriety of naming Queen's counsel on the commission. The leader of the opposition, in his reference to Queen's counsel, had simply in view as he expressed it, another argument on another point, and that was that the government was not consistently following the idea suggested by the Prime Minister of not controlling this commission in any way; that because it named Queen's counsel it had undertaken to limit the authority of the judges, it would not give them in that regard unlimited discretion; and if they had limited their discretion, why did the government refuse his suggestion that a counsel named by the leader of the government on one side, and another named by the leader of the opposition on the other side should be employed by the commission? The Minister of Railways and Canals was so desperately driven that he misrepresents entirely the views of the opposition by saying that we had objected to Queen's counsel being employed. No one ever made such an absurd suggestion, and no one but the Minister of Railways and Canals ever thought that any one could make it.

Then in regard to the use of evidence. Again the extraordinary confession is made that though the government had a parliamentary majority on the Privileges and Elections Committee when the Huron and Brockville elections cases were before them, and though they all entertained the strongest views in regard to the character of the evidence that should be produced there, they were afraid to advocate or carry out those views, and they bowed to public opinion; because the opposition press had lashed on public opinion and shown the cowardice of the government, therefore, the government did what was entirely wrong. But now, defying public opinion altogether, they propose to resort to this commission, and relying on the law as laid down in the Haldimand case, if it be applicable, that the judges, as buffers between them and the public, will prevent this evidence being given, the leader of the opposition contended that whatever the law might be in the courts this thorough probing, this full investigation, could not be made unless that evidence be given. Parliament undoubtedly has control and discretion to receive any evidence it pleases. But there is to be a nice question, if you please. This is shoved from the Election Committee of this House and given to a Royal Commission because of one reason only that is given here—it partakes of a partisan character. But we find in this debate that there are other reasons for referring it to that commission, and that commission is to be cribbed, cabined and confined, that commission is to be restricted, it is to be shorn of its powers in other respects, and instead of a wide tribunal, there is to be the narrowest possible tribunal, subject to all the technical rules of evidence. Is that what the public wish? Has any part of the public for a moment suggested or inferred that when this matter was relegated from a partisan tribunal to a non-partisan tribunal, there would not be given to that non-partisan tribunal the fullest powers that our own committee had for the ascertainment of the truth in regard to these charges? I think the public will be shocked when they find that not only is there to be a narrowing down of the scope of the inquiry, a limitation of the powers of that investigating tribunal as compared with our own, a deprivation of those advantages, and aids, and assistance which are usually given to tribunals appointed for the investigation of corrupt practices, but there is a suggestion from the Treasury benches that they are not to probe into this matter at all by means of the advantages of examining persons as to how they voted in connection with charges of switching ballots, and so forth.

Then the other objection mentioned by the Minister of Railways and Canals was that this evidence was very bulky, that a great deal of it was irrelevant. Well, is it to be supposed that any importance could be given by this commission to such evidence? Does any one wish to give importance to irrelevant evidence? Will they not be able to sift that as well as the evidence that may be produced before them? And all this talk about bringing witnesses is met fully by machinery in the courts adopted every day in connection with the most important matters. Where, for instance, you have witnesses at a distance, witnesses who are dead, witnesses that cannot be got, you may by commission obtain all that evidence; and here is evidence obtained by a commission at great cost, ready at hand. At one time the argument of expenditure was dwelt on by the Minister of Railways and Canals. I think it was stated that this evidence had cost $10,000. Now, we have a proposition that this evidence shall cost $10,000 more, and that that money shall be absolutely wasted, that that evidence taken shall under no circumstances, be used by this commission. I think the public will see through that just about as quickly as this House. We certainly can see through it without much difficulty.

Now, the hon. gentleman referred to the scope of this commission, and if there be anything in it, there remains nothing but the extraordinary objection that they will not accept a suggestion in this matter from the opposition. Well, I hope the public will take note of that. We have got down to this condition of things, that the government are afraid to take a suggestion from the opposition lest it might be supposed that it was forced on them by the opposition. Now, what is the position of the government in regard to the suggestion by the leader of the opposition? The Minister of Railways and Canals endeavoured to show by a reference to two or three lines of that commission that it covered not merely the fact of a corrupt act—it undoubtedly does that. For instance, the stuffing of a ballot box is covered. But the point, if I understand the leader of the opposition, is this; It may be, from the language used as to that, that as soon as it is proved that a corrupt act has been committed and there has been a switching or stuffing of ballots by John B, you may not call the evidence to show that John C combined with John B to do this criminal and improper act, that you may not show that there was an organization, for instance, for carrying out a crime. And how can this commission report on what we desire to be investigated, so as to guard ourselves against the repetition of the methods of an organization which is corrupt and criminal? Is there any danger that by this language they will be confined and consider themselves confined to acts themselves and nothing else. Now, for instance, supposing the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), and the hon.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), had undoubtedly conspired with these men to go into all these rascalities, had paid them for their wrong-doing, and actively engaged them in all these schemes, is there any language that would permit the judges, if it were established that wrong had been done, to go beyond merely that wrongful act?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Undoubtedly.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think so, and I will give you my reasons.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Undoubtedly.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) gave us two or three words, in which he argued that the language was sufficient, and he said that there was here power enough to cover the widest scope suggested by the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition, but he would not adopt it lest it should be said that the hon. leader of the opposition had forced this upon the government. The commission begins by reciting that in elections:

Frauds were committed by returning officers, deputy returning officers or other parties in several of the electoral districts either while the votes were being polled or thereafter by the spoiling of the ballots marked by the electors—

That is one case.

—or by the fraudulent substitution of other ballots for those so marked—

That is another case.

—or by other fraudulent conduct in respect of the ballots at any time before and up to the return of the writ.

That is another case. All this is the language read by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. These are the only cases in which the language is specific.

The PRIME MINISTER. Read on.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (reading):

And it being most desirable—

The PRIME MINISTER. No, that is not it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am reading the language of this commission, because I cannot follow the construction which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals put upon it:

And it being most desirable that all such alleged frauds should be investigated, and the recurrence thereof, if any, prevented—

That is where I would look primarily for the scope.

The PRIME MINISTER. But, my hon. friend did not read it all:

—or by reason of any fraudulent conduct—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have read it.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, you did not read this :

—or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents, of the ballot boxes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not in the first paragraph.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is in the commission.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am reading from the 'order in council appointing a commission to investigate election frauds.'

The PRIME MINISTER. You will find a copy of the commission at page 6569 of Hansard.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not the copy I have. I am reading from the order in council printed for distribution amongst members. Let us begin at the beginning. This commission cannot go any farther than the order in council goes.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have it here, and my hon. friend has left out that portion which I read.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will come to that. Whatever may be in the commission, it gets its force and strength from the order in council. There is no question that this is not correct, because it is a document printed by order of parliament.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Does that profess to be the order in council or the commission ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is the order in council.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is what we have in Hansard, and it should be the same.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will read it again.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is the preamble you are reading from.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (reading) :

On a memorandum, dated June 2, 1900, from the Minister of Justice, submitting that whereas allegations have been made that during and for several years prior and subsequent to the general elections of 1896 for the election of members to the House of Commons of Canada, frauds were committed by returning officers, deputy returning officers, or other parties—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does not that include everybody ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (reading) :

—in several of the electoral districts, either while the votes were being polled or thereafter, by the spoiling of the ballots marked by the electors, or by the fraudulent substitution of other ballots for those so marked, or by other fraudulent conduct in respect of the ballots at any time before and up to the return of the writ, and it being most desirable that all such alleged frauds should be investigated, and the recurrence thereof, if any, prevented, to the end that the return may show the actual vote by the electors who vote in each electoral district:—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is merely the preamble.

The PRIME MINISTER. Read the enacting part.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (reading) :

—to inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes, or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents—

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (reading) :

—of the ballot boxes, whether by way of fraudulent alteration, addition, withdrawal or otherwise, during and until the close of the election, and until the return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

I do not think it has been presented to this House at any time as a positive opinion, as positive as lawyers can be, that the government are wrong and that the opposition are right in the construction of this language, but the argument advanced from this side of the House was that it might possibly be, and it seems to me, and with abundant reason, that this particular language that I have now read confines the commission to those acts that are specified. I am not speaking even as positively as a lawyer might speak. I say that there is room for doubt. No one will say that it is clear, that it is beyond all cavil or question, that it covers what the language suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition covers, and, consequently, will the government stubbornly stand out and say: We all construe it as you do, we think it bears the interpretation you wish to put upon it, but we will not use your language lest it be said in the country that you had forced something upon us? That is not a creditable position for the government to take. If we are all one as to what we want investigated, why not accept the two or three words which have been suggested, which would remove all doubt and estop up from afterwards using the argument which we would be bound to use if this turns out as we say, that the government have not intended to allow these commissioners to go beyond actual acts committed by these different officers. They have power; there is no question about their power. Here is a case in which the government have power to act. I need not refer to the hon. member for Halifax, a gentleman holding a responsible position in the profession, having suggested doubts. In that commission why not remove all doubts and throw away all reason for cavil or complaint in regard to a matter that concerns us all equally, and adopt the amendment proposed by the addition of these few words?

Mr. McNEILL. What are the words which it is proposed to add?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The exact words are very few. Coming after the last language I read, it is proposed to add 'and any fraudulent practices, persons or matters connected therewith.' That is what they do not want; at least, that is what the country will say. I was not proposing it in that spirit, but, undoubtedly, I shall come to that conclusion if their only reason for rejecting our suggestion is that it may be suggested that we forced it upon them. We certainly have the right to make suggestions in parliament, and the government is bound, in fair-play and honour, to adopt them unless the suggestions are wrong. Here the government profess to have in view what we have in view, and if this language would be satisfactory to our side of the House and there is no objection to it, why not use it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I regret the temper with which this question has been approached by the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and in a minor degree by my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I do not think the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), was happy when he spoke of the judges as being buffers between the government and public opinion. The judges selected are of the highest character possible.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As to whether I showed any improper temper, that is a matter of criticism. None was intended. As to my reference to the judges, nothing was further from my thoughts than to use the slightest language directly or indirectly by way of insinuation or otherwise, that would suggest that I had any other opinion of them, than that they would do their duty. I used the word 'buffers,' as in no sense reflecting on them, but as to the language of this commission in hampering them in the discharge of their duties.

The PRIME MINISTER. I accept the explanation as fully as the hon. gentleman puts it, but I still think the expression was unfortunate as applied to the eminent men who compose the commission. Temper was uncalled for in this debate, because there is no disposition on the part of the government to do anything else than to have the fullest inquiry, applying to all parties—applying to accomplices as well as to prime factors, who have been actually guilty of fraud. Let us discuss, in a judicial way, the observations which have been made by the hon. the leader of the opposition. First, as to the scope of the inquiry. The hon. gentleman suggests that we ought to add to the commission, the following few words. 'That the inquiry should extend to any corrupt practices, persons or means connected therewith.' I will not enter into a criticism of the verblage, but I will take the sense of the proposal. The sense of the hon. gentleman's suggestion is that the commission should be searching and should apply to all parties—to those who have been actually guilty, as well as to those who have been instrumental in procuring the guilt of others. I may say by way of preface, that I am sorry that I have to discuss this matter at all, because I would prefer to have it discussed by the legal officer of the government, and by gentlemen versed in the law on the other side. I call attention to the wording of the commission:

—be appointed commissioners under the said Act in respect of the election of members for the House of Commons of Canada, to inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of any fraudulent conduct—

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). What does that 'by' mean: 'Or by reason of any fraudulent conduct.' What?—by reason of any fraudulent conduct.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think my hon. friend has exercised his ingenuity in constructing these words. However, that is a new criticism. The criticism of the leader of the opposition was that the commission was not wide enough to include accomplices:

—or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes, or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents, of the ballot boxes.

'What should have been the lawful contents of the ballot boxes,' is broad enough to include all categories of offenders. The moment you give power to the commissioners to investigate the conduct of those who may have been connected with what should have been the lawful contents of the ballot boxes, you bring in every one who in any way attempted to interfere with the lawful contents. The lawful contents of the ballot boxes are the honest votes of the electors, and you give the power to the commissioners to investigate the conduct of all persons, and of any person who attempted to remove what should have been the lawful contents of the ballot boxes. In other words, if there is any conspiracy whatever between the parties who committed the deed and the parties who instigated the deed, then, the language of the commission gives power to the commissioners to investigate the conduct of such persons. It seems to me that the words are just as broad as it is possible to make them. At all events, what I did to-day was merely to bring down the opinion of the Minister of Justice on the points that have been raised previously. Lawyers as doctors will disagree, and an ingenious lawyer can very often drive a coach and four through any Act of parliament; but after all, common sense must be applied to the interpretations of our statutes, and if you apply the ordinary laws of common sense here, it seems to me that the opinion of the Minister of Justice is fully substantiated, and that the language of the commission embodies exactly the idea of the hon. the leader of the opposition.

Mr. POWELL. I really cannot understand; I am honest about the matter, and I do not think the Prime Minister himself can understand this clause. Is it meant to inquire into 'fraudulent practices respecting the poll-books, ballot boxes, or the lawful contents or what should have been the lawful contents of the ballot boxes?' Does the inquiry mean to go into that?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. POWELL. Then what is the significance of the meaning of the words: 'Or by reason of any fraudulent conduct?'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). They appear to be surplusage.

Mr. POWELL. It is worse than surplusage. It is limiting the proceedings in some way. The words destroy the sense.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will not discuss that matter just now. My attention was called the other day to certain objections made by the leader of the opposition, which were referred for an opinion to the Minister of Justice, and my hon. friend (Mr. Powell), brings up a new objection now. That is a question for the Minister of Justice, and for the lawyers on the other side of the House. I am simply dealing now with the objections advanced the other day by the leader of the opposition. I failed to understand the argument of my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), as to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery which was to the effect that an ordinary court of justice might hesitate to issue an order of subpoena to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. There is no doubt that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is an officer of the Crown, and not an officer of parliament. And if he is an officer of the Crown, the moment the commission gave the power to the judges to summon him, the objection is met. He being an officer of the Crown, then the Crown can delegate to the judges the power to summon him, and he is bound to appear. Now as to the indemnity of the witnesses. That is not part of the commission, because I assume there can be no doubt whatever, that all the expenses connected with the commission—the payment of the commissioners, the registrar, the stenographer and the witnesses—must be provided for by this parliament; and the appropriation which we are to make must be ample to cover all the expenses, and must be placed at the disposal of the commission themselves, to be applied as they, in their judgment, deem best. So that I do not see what can be the hon. gentleman's objection on this point.

Then, my hon. friend would have us introduce legislation to compel witnesses to divulge the secrecy of the ballot. This is a question which has been before the courts for several years, and the law on the point is not quite certain. Some judges have held that the secrecy of the ballot could not be broken; others have held the opposite. Under these circumstances, I think it would not be advisable for us to introduce ex post facto legislation, and have a new law to apply to facts which arose a few years ago. The witnesses called before this commission will have to testify to what took place under the law as it was when they were called upon to cast their ballots. Any ex post facto legislation is always dangerous. Parliament will not resort to it in matters of substance; we can perhaps do so in matters of procedure; but the Minister of Justice has come to the conclusion, in which I fully share, that we had better leave the eminent judges who compose the commission to apply the law as they deem it to be. Last year the Committee on Privileges and Elections determined that the law permitted them to force the witnesses to give evidence as to how they had voted. Their judgment on that point was either right or wrong; at all events, that was their judgment; and we may safely leave the eminent men who compose the commission to determine by their own judgment what the law is on that point. If they determine that they have power to compel witnesses to give evidence as to how they voted, they will compel them; but if they determine that under the law which existed in 1896, 1897, 1898 and 1899, no voter could be compelled under any circumstances to state how he voted, I think parliament should not pass a law to compel a voter to give evidence which, under the law which existed at the time he voted, he would not be compelled to give.

My hon. friend also objected that we do not compel the commission to take advantage of the evidence given before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I submit to my hon. friend, as a matter of justice, whether he thinks it is fair or right, when the judges themselves are empowered under this commission to investigate this matter, to require them to use the evidence of witnesses whom they have not had the opportunity of hearing and seeing. It is a principle of law which every one deems to be fair and useful, that the party who is to give the verdict in any case should see the witness for himself, so as to form an opinion as to his credibility by his demeanour in the box. I contend that this is one of the strongest elements of procedure for arriving at truth and justice; and therefore, I submit that the ends of justice would not be so well served by the procedure which my hon. friend wishes us to adopt as they would by having the witnesses give their evidence in their own way before the commission.

My hon. friend has spoken very strongly in favour of the view that we should direct the commissioners how they are to proceed—that we are to tell them to proceed in one case before another. I repeat that in this matter we have thought it preferable to leave the judges absolutely untrammelled. They know the cases; they have become public property. All interested parties can go and lay complaints before them. They know the state of public opinion; they cannot be ignorant of what is current history; and we leave them without any instruction, from the government or the opposition or anybody else, to proceed in the way in which, in their own judgment and conscience, will be most conducive to the public interest. For this reason, I do not think it is advisable, notwithstanding the strong language used by my hon. friend, to give the commission any specific instructions, but to leave them absolutely free and untrammelled.

I would say the same thing as to the appointment of counsel. The hon. gentleman has suggested again to-day that he should be allowed to select a lawyer and I another. Does he not think that in this, as in everything else, we can safely leave the selection to the judges themselves. They know that there are two parties in this matter; they know that party spirit runs high in this country; but they also know that constitutional government cannot be carried on except by party; therefore we think it is better to leave them to select the counsel who, in their opinion will be best qualified to assist them in carrying on the investigation. The judges are all from the province of Ontario, because the offences which they will be charged to investigate chiefly occurred in the province of Ontario. They are perfectly familiar with the members of the bar of that province, and they know better than either my hon. friend or I can know, who will be the best counsel to advise them. The government therefore, do not think that it would be advisable to change the instructions which we have given to the judges, but they think it better to leave them absolutely free and untrammelled. With regard to the scope of the inquiry, the Minister of Justice has come to the conclusion that it is ample.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Prime Minister has not referred to the statement, which I think, was not unfairly made, that the Minister of Justice could not have made a comparison between those two statutes. He does not profess to have done so.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am glad my hon. friend has called my attention to that. I never understood it as it was presented a moment ago by my hon. friend from Pictou, who says that the indemnity to witnesses, given by the Act 33 Victoria, chapter 32, of 1889, is not as ample as the indemnity given in cases of corrupt practices. That may be, and I will call the attention of the Minister of Justice to that point. But I have to say this at present to my hon. friend. The Act for the investigation of corrupt practices is an Act which dates from the year 1876. The Act relating to investigations by royal commissions is an old Act, which has been on the statute-book for many years. The last Act is chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes, which was consolidated in 1886. The other Act for the investigation into corrupt practices was passed in 1876, and also incorporated in the Consolidated Statutes of 1886. The two Acts were in the Statutes of 1889. Then the late Sir John Thompson, who was Minister of Justice at the time, thought it advisable to amend chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes providing for the investigations by royal commissions. He amended it in certain particulars so as to give greater latitude to witnesses. He amended it in this way:

No witness examined before such commissioners, or before any commissioners appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of any province of Canada to conduct an inquiry into and concerning the good government of such province, or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof, or the administration of justice therein, or in reference to any municipal matter, shall be excused from answering any question put to him on the ground that the answer thereto may criminate or tend to criminate him; but no evidence so taken shall be admissible against any such witness in any criminal proceeding, except in the case of a witness charged with having given false evidence at any such inquiry, or with having procured, or attempted, or conspired, to procure the giving of such evidence.

When Sir John Thompson introduced that amendment, he had before his eyes the Act for the investigation of corrupt practices, and did not think it advisable to extend the provisions of that Act into the amendment he was proposing to chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes, but rather limited that Act by his amendment which I have just read.

My hon. friend says that the law does not go far enough. He says that the Act of 1889 should have gone further. He says that chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes should have contained the same provisions as the Act for the investigation of corrupt practices. Well, that is a point upon which I am not prepared to give an opinion at this moment. The amendment of 1889 appeared sufficient to the Minister of Justice of that day, whose authority nobody will question, and in face of that I am not surprised that my hon. colleague, the Minister of Justice, thought it safe to follow the precedent set by Sir John Thompson. The point, however, is one which requires some consideration, and I will refer it to the Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My right hon. friend has interpreted one part of my argument incorrectly. I did not quarrel with the amendment of 1889 as an amendment to the general Act, but I pointed out that this general Act refers to public inquiries in general, but that when we come down to specific acts of corruption, there is necessity for a provision such as Mr. Blake introduced into his Corrupt Practices Act, and which might not be necessary in an Act dealing with public inquiries generally.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). There is a strong impression in the country to-day, due to the result of the commission appointed by the provincial government in Ontario, that these commissions are issued for the purpose of preventing information coming out rather than eliciting it. As regards giving the commission greater scope, so long as that will not have the effect of preventing facts coming to light, which we desire to see ventilated, the public hail the suggestion with approval, but it is the bounden duty of the government to see that the widest possible scope is given this commission for the purpose of eliciting the facts. The enlargement of the commission, therefore, cannot be too great, and no doubt it will do its work better, if it is enlarged in every direction, than if it is circumscribed, as we believe the wording of the commission does circumscribe it to-day.

Then, the public will expect that the West Huron and Brockville elections should be the first inquired into. These are the two special elections in which the corrupt practices took place over which the country is so much exercised. There are two members representing these constituencies in this House to-day, although the information brought to us clearly indicates that they are sitting here by virtue of the most corrupt scandalous political practices ever perpetrated in Canada. It is therefore desirable, in order that the fullest light should be thrown upon these practices, and that all the facts should be in possession of the electorate before the next general election, that this commission should begin at once its work in these constituencies.

The desire has been expressed that the investigation should go back further. Well, we on this side have not the least objection to the commission going back any length of time or calling before them any witnesses, politicians or others, who have taken any part whatever in the elections, either before or since 1896. But I think it is of the most vital importance that the conduct of these two elections of West Huron and Brockville, which are the ones that really gave rise to this commission, shall be the first inquired into, and that the finding of the commission should be put before the people before they are called upon to give their verdict at the next general elections. Unless that is done, the conclusion will inevitably be reached by the public that the government desire to prevent the facts, which were partly investigated by a committee of this House last year, being made public until after they have gone before the people.

The hon. the Minister of Railways took the position, which I thought was rather a strange one for a lawyer to take, that the law of the land never contemplated that the secrecy of the ballot should be violated, and gave in support of his argument the ruling of the court in the Haldimand election, and he followed his argument up by an appeal to us to trust to the wisdom and judgment of the commissioners who are able judges, as to the interpretation of the law. But it is a matter of vital importance to the country whether the law ever contemplated that the secrecy of the ballot should be exposed or not, and if that be the intention of the Ballot Act, let me say that the secrecy of the ballot is of very small importance in the minds of the electorate compared with the ferreting out of the frauds committed during elections and the punishment of the guilty parties. And, if necessary, the Ballot Act should be so amended that there will be no hindrance to the bringing out of the evidence and the information the people desire should be brought to light. What the people want is to have the whole truth laid before them.

And even though it may never have been contemplated that the secrecy of the ballot should be infringed, I hold that that secrecy should not be held for one moment to prevent the commissioners going behind the ballot and asking every man how he voted and expecting him to answer, if it is necessary to bring out the information that is desirable in connection with these election frauds. The country wants this information brought out, and if the commissioners fail to bring it out by reason of the failure of the government to make the scope of the commission wide enough or to amend any law that may stand in the way, the public will hold the government responsible. Another question was to allow the commissioners to be charged with the responsibility for selecting their own counsel. We have had an example of this course in the commission that has been sitting lately in the province of Ontario. That commission, I venture to say, has been a perfect farce.

Mr. COWAN. How?

Mr. SPROULE. By reason of the very limited scope given to the commissioner, and because the different political parties were not allowed to select counsel who, if they had been selected, might have brought out information which it was desirable should be made public, but which is not now brought out. There are lawyers who have been connected with these matters for months and years, and have become experts, as it were, in that line. They are in possession of a great deal of information which enables them to ferret out wrongdoing that could not be brought to light by others. Yet these are the men who, it is very likely, under this commission, would not be selected by the commissioners. The people will be justified in coming to the conclusion that the government, in not allowing each political party to appoint its own lawyer, desired rather to prevent information being brought out than to make the facts of the case public. The Minister of Railways and Canals says: Oh, if we accept suggestions from the opposition, it will be said that we had to accept suggestions from that source. Why, if the suggestions are good, what matter it where they come from? What will the country care who makes the suggestions, so long as the work is well done? It is desirable that all suggestions should be adopted that will better enable the commission to do efficiently the work with which they are charged. If the results are to bring out facts that the public should know and that would not otherwise be brought out, then, these suggestions should be acted upon. The excuse given by the Minister of Railways and Canals was the most flimsy answer ever made to an argument in this House, and it is one that will not satisfy the country nor will it satisfy the intelligent members of this House. The government should be willing to accept all suggestions and enlarge the scope of the commission in any useful direction. They cannot bring out too much information or lay bare too many of these nefarious transactions. I need hardly give my interpretation of the law, because, I suppose, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) would set little value upon it. But, I venture to say, and I have as good a right to say it as any member of the House, even any lawyer in this House, that if the commissioners were to act strictly under the language of the commission, they could not go beyond the conduct of the officials connected with the election. They would not be able to find out who gave the money to Pritchett and Macdonald, and who raised the money—they could not inquire where the conspiracy first originated, who outlined the plan and got others to carry it out, and, in carrying it out, to perpetrate these fraudulent and corrupt acts. It is believed, by the people, properly or improperly, that certain ministers of the Crown are indirectly connected with this and responsible for it. That is a matter of common conversation and common belief. Yet, acting under the scope of this commission, the commissioners could not go so far as to inquire into that matter. So long as the language thus circumscribed the powers of the commission the government will be held responsible for not enlarging the scope of the commission to the extent the leader of the opposition desires should be done.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I would like to call the attention of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to the wording of this commission. If he will look at it, I think he will see that my hon. and learned friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) was not supererogatory in calling attention to it. It is an extraordinary jumble of ungrammatical construction. It says:

—to inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes, or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents, of the ballot boxes, whether by way of fraudulent alteration, addition, withdrawal or otherwise.

I think if he will call the attention of the gentleman who is responsible for the drafting of the commission to the jumble, that gentleman will see that the language requires to be recast. For instance, the form of expression is departed from in the first clause:

To inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling—

There you are using the present participle. Then we come to——substitution—

And then we revert to the present participle—

—defacing, marking, spoiling or tampering in respect of election ballots——and so on. Now, let us analyse that clause. It runs thus—the judges are to inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alterations in respect of election ballots, defacing in respect of election ballots, marking in respect of election ballots, spoiling in respect of election ballots, substitution in respect of election ballots or tampering in respect of election ballots. Then you come to:

—or by reason of any fraudulent conduct.

And so on. What do you connect 'or by reason of' with? 'By reason of,' if excised, will make the sentence better.

The PRIME MINISTER. It may make it better, possibly.

Mr. DAVIN. One word as to the scope of the commission. Surely the right hon. gentleman is not going to confine this inquiry, which the public and parliament thought would relate to fraudulent practices in elections, and to every kind of corruption that can mar the efficacy of our electoral system. Is it to be confined? You make your commission, and you are going to confine it merely to irregularities connected with the marking, or spoiling or substitution of ballots. It seems to me that is not what the public expects, and it is not what parliament expected; and surely it is not what is called for in the interest of the purifying of our electoral system. Nothing can be clearer than that our electoral system has been got hold of by conspirators against the freedom of the electorate. The public mind is deeply impressed with it, and it is not enough that this commission has to inquire only into irregularities that may be perpetrated by those who are, after all, only the instruments of the worst criminals in these matters, only the persons that will be employed. For instance, Pritchett's conduct would come under the scope of this inquiry, and the ballot-slipper would come under its scope; but the men that set these criminals at work, I do not think this language would cover their conduct. I think it will be confined to such men as Pritchett and Cummings. The evidence all taken shows that these men are merely creatures of far worse criminals. Take, for instance, Preston—I do not see how this commission will be able to inquire into the achievements of Preston; and yet, unless the universal impression is altogether astray, Preston belongs to a class of men whom it is most desirable to strike. the large culprits, the heroes of all this infamy, these are the men it is desirable to strike. And here we are having three judges, two of them judges of the Superior Court and one of them a county court judge, assisted by counsel, who are going to inquire into the conduct of the minor villain, and the large culprits, the heroes of all this infamy, are to be let go. I should be very glad if the Prime Minister, or anybody on those benches, will be able to show that the conduct of these men will be inquired into.

To inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes—

We are still confined to misconduct in respect of ballots, tampering with them in any way, interfering with them or the ballot box.

—or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents, of the ballot boxes, whether by way of fraudulent alteration, withdrawal or otherwise.

Still confined to manipulation. The conduct of the men, therefore, that would set the Pritchetts and the Cummings at work, would be entirely outside this commission, and therein the commission would be altogether too narrow.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). I should like just to make one remark before this discussion closes. I think we are now discussing, without any doubt, the most important question of domestic politics that can possibly engage the attention of this parliament; and I think that, under such circumstances, both sides of the House ought to join together to endeavour, if possible, to eliminate any chance of a complete breakdown of this investigation—or a miscarriage of justice, as an hon. member suggests. Now, my right hon. friend, I think, sees himself that there is, at least, a great deal of force in the arguments that have been brought forward on this side of the House to show that these words do not go as far as we would wish them to go, and as my right hon. friend wishes them to go. Now, just take these words and read them, and I would ask my right hon. friend himself if he is prepared to say that they are without doubt,

To inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots—

Let us suppose that the clause stops there.

The PRIME MINISTER. But it does not.

Mr. McNEILL. Let us suppose, in the first instance, that it does. Would my right hon. friend say that these words are devoid of doubt?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. McNEILL. Very well, now let us take the second part of the clause. That has not reference to the ballot,—dealing with the ballot itself; it has reference to dealing with the ballot box, or the contents of the ballot box.

The PRIME MINISTER. Or, what should have been the contents. That is broad enough to cover everything.

Mr. McNEILL. In that case, my right hon. friend implies that the first part of the clause is mere tautology, is not required at all. If this second part of the clause, 'the ballot box or the lawful contents,' covers the whole ground, then the first part is tautology. The judges will not hold that. I think it is clear the judges will hold that this has reference to the ballot box as distinguished from the action upon the ballot itself before it is placed in the box. It seems to me that it is, at all events, very doubtful, to say the least of it, whether these words will go as far as the House wishes them to go; and if there be any doubt, why in the world should we hesitate to put in words which will remove that doubt altogether? I do not pay the slightest attention to the suggestion that was made, that the opposition desired to show that they have forced the government to do something which the government were desirous of not doing. We all understand that in cases where Bills are brought forward, or any document is brought before the House, it is the duty of both sides to endeavour to have that Bill or document so framed that there shall be no misapprehension as to its meaning. Now, under the circumstances, why in the world should my right hon. friend insist upon having this clause so framed as that it shall be in a form which, at all events, many members of the House hold to be sufficient for the purpose it is intended to carry out. The other point which impresses me very much is in regard to the disclosure of the manner in which the ballot was marked. It is a question as to whether the judges may decide that the elector has the right or has not the right to disclose the way in which he marked his ballot. If it is decided that he has not the right there is an end to the inquiry. The whole inquiry collapses if the elector cannot disclose how he has marked his ballot. Surely the right hon. gentleman does not want that. I think it is absolutely essential if we are going to deal with this matter intelligently and thoroughly, that we should arrange it so that the elector shall have the right even if he is not compelled to disclose how he has marked his ballot. It is useless to go into this inquiry without that. I think we had very much better simply say that we drop the whole matter and that the whole thing is of doubtful expediency. It is better that we should do that at once than leave it in doubt as to whether the elector can disclose how he has voted. The judges have no power in regard to this matter to go outside of what they deem to be the law in regard to it. We want to give them that power. We ought to say what we want done in regard to this matter. We want to provide what ought to be the practice before this commission. I do not want to take up the time of the House further, but I would ask the right hon. gentleman to consider these points.

Motion (Mr. Blair) to adjourn, negatived.

RIFLE CLUBS—INDIAN FAMINE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to draw the attention of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to two points. As he is no doubt aware there is a movement on foot to carry out a system suggested by the Marquis of Salisbury in regard to rifle clubs, and parties are taking a great deal of interest in the establishment of these clubs. A gentleman has offered prizes for those who start these organizations, and if it commends itself to the government, I would like to suggest that provision should be made for furnishing rifle clubs with free ammunition by the government under proper regulations and restrictions, in order that the parties forming these clubs should have an opportunity of perfecting themselves in rifle practice to as great an extent as possible. I would make that suggestion for the consideration of the right hon. gentleman and of the government.

There is another matter. I do not know whether the attention of the government has been called to it, but I see the statement going the rounds of the papers contained in a despatch to Washington that:

In the Senate to-day Mr. Perkins, of California, presented a petition from organizations and individuals in that state asking congress to make an appropriation for the relief of the famished people of India, and he asked that it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

My right hon. friend and the House are aware that the public in Canada have been called upon, in connection with the patriotic fund and in connection with the great fire that took place here, to make very great and unusual outlay from private sources, and, of course, that would very much interfere with initiating a famine fund such as was provided in Canada a few years ago. With the great distress there, it has occurred to me, that, under the circumstances, the government might be disposed to consider the propriety of bringing down an appropriation for those who are suffering by the famine in India.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) if he is prepared to lay on the Table those papers in regard to the emergency rations. He told us that he would bring them down the next day, and at this late time of the session it is important that we should get them as soon as possible. I would like also to remind him of those missing canteen papers that are very important.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). In regard to the emergency ration papers, I am now prepared to lay on the Table the papers which were read the other night, and some additional papers. I have been holding them expecting to get the originals of the affidavits which were made by the men upon the tests which were made at Kingston. It seems that they are in the hands of a notary in Montreal. They were promised to me, but I have not received them. I think perhaps it would be better that we should wait until to-morrow so that I may be able to lay them altogether on the Table of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. There would be no very great difference between to-day and to-morrow in that respect. I would ask for all the papers, not only those that were read, but all the papers.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I would also remind the hon. gentleman of those missing canteen papers.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not been able to find them. The papers are papers which had been sent to me privately and were kept amongst my private correspondence. I am looking over my private papers and trying to find them. They were never on the file in the department, but notwithstanding that I have no objection to bring them down. In fact, I want to bring them down because they were used in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I would also like to mention the Yukon report of Mr. Ogilvie. That was ordered to be printed and to which was to be added a statement of the accounts and revenue.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have just received a copy, and I will put it into the printers' hands at once.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. DAVIN.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. A paper published in the North-west Territories makes a statement about what took place in this House on the 30th of May, and it says that on the Grain Inspection Bill, that was then before the House, when it came to the 40th clause, Mr. Davin never spoke a word.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not believe that.

Mr. DAVIN. It says that on the clauses before and after I spoke, but when we came to that clause I never spoke a word. The curious thing is that in the Tribune a correspondent implies that the same thing was the case, the fact being that the moment the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) moved this clause in regard to section 40 I got up and opposed his motion and ultimately called for a division.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I am ready to give assent to my hon. friend (Mr. Davin).

Mr. DAVIN. When we went into committee the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) supported the clause, and I rose, and to the best of my ability combatted the reasons which were offered by the Prime Minister. I find five columns of Hansard with my speech combatting the right hon. Prime Minister. What happened? The Prime Minister then got up and took back his clause and proposed another which was virtually a repeal of the objectionable clause which I had opposed. So that the statement is palpably untrue.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR— TIMBER LICENSES.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. Was there not a large sum due the Department of the Interior by Edwards & Co. within the last month—even at the beginning of the present month of June

2. How much was that sum, when and how was it paid; whether in cash, by cheque, note, draft, or how?

3. How long was that sum or any part thereof due and payable?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There was an amount due by Edwards & Co. in connection with timber licenses. The sum was $2,727.97. The amount was paid in full with interest.

ELECTION LISTS—MONTMORENCY.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

From what municipalities in the county of Montmorency have the electoral lists been received, as stated in the answer of the right hon. the Premier to question No. 9 by Mr. Casgrain on the Order paper of the 16th of June instant?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The whole list for Montmorency had been received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on May 28 last. The list for the parish of St. Francois had to be returned for correction. It has now been received corrected. The whole of the list is now in.

MILITARY PARADE GROUND—ST. THOMAS, ONT.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. Have the government purchased the military parade ground at St. Thomas, Ont.? If so, what was the price paid, and when was the payment made?

2. To whom did the property belong?

3. Did any officer of the Militia Department value the said property, and if so, what was his report?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. The price paid was $8,000, made up as follows: $6,000 cash and the old site, where the old drill hall stood, accepted at $2,000. Payment was made May 21, 1900. 2. The property belonged to Dr. J. H. Wilson, of St. Thomas. 3. No, but valuation was made by a real estate valuator, who placed a value of $9,800 on the new site purchased by the department, and $1,500 on the old site and building, transferred to Dr. Wilson. The property was examined by an officer of the Militia Department, as to its suitability, and was favourably reported upon.

THE MISPEC RIVER, ST. JOHN, N.B.

Mr. GANONG (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Has the present government given permission to any person or persons to build a dam or other erection across the Mispec River, in the county of St. John, N.B.? If so, to whom was the concession granted? When was the concession made, and what was the nature of said concession? Was the permission given by order in council.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). So far as the Department of Public Works is concerned, no such permission has been given. Perhaps it belongs to some other department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was permission given by order in council?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no knowledge of an order in council in reference to the subject.

THE PLAINS OF ABRAHAM.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Are the government aware that the last battle which took place in 1759 between Wolfe and Montcalm, was not fought on the ground which the government declare they are prepared to purchase at a reasonable price in order to make it a public park ?

2. When the government state that such purchase might be made in order to perpetuate the memory of a great historical event, to what historical event do they refer ? Is it the battle of the Plains of Abraham, which did not take place on the ground which certain private parties are interested in selling to the government, or does the reference apply to some other historical event, and what event ?

3. Is there any truth in the following statements published in 'Le Soleil,' of June 5, under the heading 'Les plaines d'Abraham' :

'We are credibly informed that, thanks to the efforts of His Honour Mayor Parent, an understanding is about to be reached.

'The price is to be some $10,000—a reasonable figure—and the amount will, it is stated, appear in the estimates for this present session' ?

4. Have the government come to a decision in the matter, and if so, what decision ?

5. In case the government decide to purchase the property referred to, might they not at least refrain from saying that it is done to perpetuate the memory of a battle which certainly was not fought on the ground the said parties are striving to induce them to purchase ?

6. If the government entertain doubts in this matter, would it not be well to remove such doubts by suitable inquiry ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government are not aware that the last battle which took place in 1759, between Wolfe and Montcalm, was not fought on the ground which the government declared they were prepared to purchase ; but tradition says that the battle was fought on that ground. The government have not considered any other statement than the one which has just been made. Le Soleil was misinformed. The only exact information on the subject is the information which has several times been given to the House, that the government were prepared to buy the Plains of Abraham at any time if that property could be obtained at anything like a reasonable price.

SEIZURE OF ILLICIT STILLS.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Was Mr. V. A. Emond, of St. Roch de Quebec, condemned, on or about December 1, 1898, to pay a fine of $200 for having in his possession a still, contrary to law ?

2. Did he pay the said fine ?

3. If not, why not ?

4. Who intervened in his behalf ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). 1. No. 2. No. The answers to the first two questions render it unnecessary to answer the last two questions.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. On or about December 19, 1898, was Mr. Edouard Lapointe, of Quebec, hotelkeeper, condemned to pay a fine of $1,000 as proprietor of a still in the cellar of Mr. C. S. A. Langlois, of Quebec ?

2. Was Mr. Langlois condemned to pay any fine whatever for being found in possession of a still, contrary to law ?

3. Was he even prosecuted for such breach of the law ?

4. If not, why not ?

5. Who intervened in his behalf ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). 1. He was condemned for this offence to pay $500. 2. No. 3. No. 4. The prosecution was taken against Lapointe, the owner and operator of the still, who was considered to be the principal offender. 5. I do not consider this a proper question.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Whether on or about March 10, 1899, a still was seized on the premises of one Elzéar Savard, proprietor, or joint proprietor of a park in the immediate vicinity of Quebec ?

2. What was the capacity of the said still ?

3. Was it not the largest still seized by the officers of the district of Quebec in many years ?

4. Was the said Elzéar Savard condemned to pay any fine whatsoever ?

5. Was he so much as prosecuted for this breach of the law ?

6. Did the Department of Inland Revenue issue any instructions in this matter, and what instructions ?

7. To whom were they given ?

8. Who intervened to arrest or prevent the usual judicial prosecutions in like cases ?

9. Who are the partners of the said Elzéar Savard in the ownership and keeping of the said park, known as 'Parc Savard' ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). 1. Yes. 2. About 200 gallons. 3. I believe so. 4. No. 5. No. 6. Instructions were sent to proceed against Savard. The proceedings were subsequently stayed on receipt of a solemn declaration from Savard that he was the proprietor of the house where the still was seized, that he had rented it to a man named Rousseau, that he was not aware of the existence of the still on the premises until the seizure was made, that he was not in partnership with Rousseau, and that had he known of his illicit distilling he would have cancelled the lease. 7. To the Department of Justice. 8. I do not consider this a proper question. 9. I do not know.

NEWMANVILLE-MERRICKVILLE MAIL CONTRACT.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. To whom was the contract given for carrying the mail from Newmanville to Merrickville, in the county of Leeds and Grenville, Ont. ? 2. What is the contract price ? 3. Were tenders called for, and was the contract given to the lowest tenderer ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. To George E. Johnston. 2. $48 a year. 3. Tenders were called for, and the contract was given to the lowest tenderer at the rate of his tender.

REGIMENTAL BANDS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has the commanding officer of a militia regiment the authority, under the Militia Act, to order out the members of the regimental band to play music at any other than military functions?

2. If so ordered out, do the department hold that the members of such regimental bands are compelled to obey such orders?

3. In filling other than military engagements, by what authority are members of regimental bands permitted to wear their military uniforms?

4. Has the Minister of Militia received any correspondence as to the matter referred to in the above question? If so, from whom, and what answers have been given?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Not unless the members of the regimental band are at the time subject to military law, as specified in paragraph 82 of the Militia Act. 2. Yes, if at the time they were ordered out the members of such regimental band were subject to military law. 3. There is no authority for their so wearing them unless they are at the time subject to military law. 4. A petition and a few letters from the Toronto Musical Association re interpretation of the Militia Act as regards members who belong to military bands were received in the department in the months of April and May, 1900. The reply to the above was a quotation of paragraph 57 of the Militia Act.

THE MARCHMONT PROPERTY, QUEBEC.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to acquire the Marchmont property?

2. For what purpose?

3. At what price?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Marchmont property was never offered to the government for sale, and they have never considered the advisability of purchasing it.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 110) to amend the Weights and Measures Act.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière).

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The only question that remains for consideration is the last amendment, which refers to binder twine. This question was considered in committee the other day by my hon. friends on both sides, and some changes have been suggested to the amendment introduced. I will give way to my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMullan, and my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who have studied the question carefully, and who can explain the changes which they consider ought to be made.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). I think there should be put on the stamp the name of the importer or manufacturer of the binder twine. Then, I want struck out the number of pounds in such package, ball or parcel, for this reason, that a large quantity of twine is left over every year, and it will shrink in weight; but as long as the number of feet to the pound is retained, that will be sufficient, because the lighter the weight is the greater will be the length of binder twine to the pound. While I want to see the interests of the farmers secured, I do not want to see any injustice done to the manufacturer or importer, which I think would be the case if we required the weight of the package to be maintained. I would like also to strike out the words, 'agent or dealer,' and insert the word 'manufacturer' so as to limit the responsibility to the importer or manufacturer. I would like also to substitute ninety days for thirty days as the time for taking proceedings. The most of the farmers have their twine bought at the present time, but they cannot test it properly until they use it in harvest, which will reach to the end of August. That amendment would then be all that could be desired as far as I can see at present.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think the committee will agree to accept the clause with the following changes. The amendment of Mr. Frost reads as follows :

Said subsection 1 of the section substituted by section 2 of chapter 28 of the Statutes of 1899, as aforesaid, is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

18a. Upon every package, ball or parcel containing binder twine offered for sale there shall be a stamp or a stamp shall be attached thereto stating the number of pounds in such package, ball or parcel, and the number of feet of twine per pound in such package, ball or parcel.

Every importer, agent or dealer who neglects to comply with the provisions of this section shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $20 for each offence, to be recovered under the Summary Convictions Act, but no deficiency in the number of feet contained in any such package, ball or parcel shall be deemed a contravention of the above section unless such deficiency exceeds 5 per cent of the amount or length stated upon such stamp. Any proceedings under the above section shall be taken within thirty days from the sale of any such package, ball or parcel.

In paragraph 18a, I propose to add after the word 'parcel,' the following words: 'with the name of the manufacturer or importer.' And instead of the words: 'stating the number of pounds in such package, ball, or parcel, and the number of feet of twine per pound,' I would strike out the words 'the number of pounds in such package, ball, or parcel.' The paragraph will then read :

Upon every ball or parcel containing kinder twine offered for sale, there shall be a stamp, or a stamp shall be attached thereto, with the name of the manufacturer or importer, stating the number of feet of twine per pound in such package, ball or parcel.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not want to place any obstruction in the way of passing the Bill, but there may be some difficulty in working it properly. In order to ascertain the number of feet in a ball of twine, it will be necessary to unwind the ball, and once the ball is unwound, it is utterly useless.

Mr. McMULLEN. It would be sufficient to unwind one pound and not the whole ball.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then half the ball would be useless.

Mr. McMILLAN. You can take a ball of twine, weighing four and a half pounds, and measuring 600 feet, and unwind a quarter of that, say 150 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. How can you force the importer to put on the number of feet per pound? He has no personal knowledge. It is only the manufacturer who can tell that.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This Bill will only take effect after a certain time, so that the importers will have ample opportunity to make the manufacturers understand what they want. Some of the manufacturers live in a foreign country, and we cannot deal with them. We have to hold the importers responsible.

Mr. CARGILL. And the importer will have his recourse against the manufacturer.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. When a man buys one of these balls of twine, he is not obliged to unravel the whole ball to find out whether he has been deceived or not. Should the farmer begin to suspect that he is not getting the proper length, he can easily ascertain, by unwinding part of a ball to the weight of a pound, and measuring the part thus weighed.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). As I was not present at first, I hope the hon. minister will allow me to ask him a question. In case of the proper length not being given in a ball of twine, is it left with the purchaser to be the complainant, or does the government officer undertake that duty. I do not see any great difficulty with regard to the twine manufactured in Canada, but I do with regard to twine imported into Canada. The importer is sometimes not known, and even where he is known, it is impossible for the importer himself to know that the twine he is bringing in is up to the standard. There should be some inspection before it passes into the hands of the importer, for instance at the custom office. Sufficient examination should be given at any rate to warn the manufacturers that they run risk in not giving full length.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Under the Bill, the importer becomes answerable, as he has put his name on each ball. In case of anything not being satisfactory, the farmer can at once refer to the importer. The importer will be in the same position as those who import any other goods. I think it will be very difficult to entrust to the customer the task of unwinding these balls to see if their contents are correct. The amendment calls upon the manufacturers to put their name on the balls, so that it will be possible for the farmer to know to whom to refer in case of anything unsatisfactory being found.

Mr. CLANCY. But the importer will not undertake to put his name on each ball. The twine comes in car lots or in ton lots, the balls being done up in sacks. The importer would not undertake to put his name on each ball or if he did, it would only be by getting an advance on the price to compensate him for his labour. But if it were provided that the manufacturer had to put his name and the number of feet to the pound in each ball that would overcome the difficulty. I call particular attention also to the point that if you leave this matter to the consumer to prosecute the importer, it will not be done. If it is left to the consumer, we might as well not pass the Bill, the imposition will go on the same as ever. But both these difficulties will be overcome—for there would be practically no need of a prosecution in that case—if twine were allowed to be imported only under stringent conditions on the lines I have indicated.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. But under the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Clancy's) suggestion, the Customs would be obliged to open all the parcels. I do not see why the importer should not open the parcels; he will have to do so sooner or later, and I cannot see great difficulty in his putting his name on each one of the balls. It is a great safeguard to compel him to do so.

Mr. CLANCY. Why should not the officers of the department, when they are going the rounds inspecting weights and measures, inspect such twine where they find it, and assume also the task of punishing the parties who deceive their customers the same as those who use false weight or measure? A very few lessons in the country will teach the persons who are committing this fraud—if I may use the word—to be more careful, and the cases of fraud will become very exceptional. That will overcome the difficulty. But if we leave it to the farmer to become the complainant and to prosecute, it will be a perfectly dead letter, because he will never undertake it.

Mr. JAS. McMULLEN (North Wellington). My hon. friend forgets one fact, it would not meet the purpose of this Act to compel the manufacturer, say, in the United States or Germany, to put on the weight of the ball and the number of feet to the pound, because he could not be held amenable to a law passed here calling for a forfeiture if the twine was not up to the standard marked on it. The only way we can reach him is by having the importer's name put upon it, and the weight and number of feet. The importer can be reached in Canada, and will be equally responsible to the agent or the farmer for the twine. But, if it is manufactured in the United States, and the manufacturer stamps on it the number of pounds and the number of feet, how are you going to fine the importer?

Mr. CLANCY. I would make a law that the importer who found that stamp on it would be liable.

Mr. McMULLEN. That twine may pass into the hands of several individuals, and when it reaches the farmer it has the name of the maker merely and not the name of the importer. How are you going to find that Brown was the importer of the twine unless you have the importer's name upon the tag fastened to the ball and that is passed and inspected; then you can prove he is the importer. We must reach the importer in Canada. This law will be still another restriction to the free importation of binder twine, and I am sure the hon. gentleman will concede that that of itself is still an assistance to the manufacturers of twine in Canada. It will certainly be some restriction to the importation of twine. A man importing twine will have to compel the manufacturer in the United States to comply with the conditions made in Canada, or else he will have to see that they are complied with himself, because he will forfeit the $20 if he does not.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The suggestion made by the member for Bothwell exactly meets that. He desires to have the twine inspected where it is imported, at the custom-house, and it must be in some importer's name. But, the member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says that he cannot find the importer after it is sold. It stands in the importer's name then, and if the inspection is made then and there, why you have the responsible party to deal with. But, after it is retailed out through the country and gone through two or three hands, it is much more difficult to find who is the responsible party.

Mr. McMULLEN. The question with regard to the number of yards to the pound, and the number of yards to the ball, will never come up until it reaches the hands of the consumer. Then, when it reaches the hands of the consumer, if he finds it is not up to the requirements of the law, he would have a claim against the man from whom he bought it, or against the importer, against the man whose name was on the ball as importer. Unless his name is on as the importer, it is going to be a difficult thing to trace it back. For instance, you buy twine from Brown, and a hundred others buy from Brown. He goes back to Grey and says he got it from him; Grey says he got it from White, who imported it. Now, if the name is not on the twine, how are you going to trace it back through all these different parties and satisfy any judge or jury that White is the man that should pay the penalty, if his name is not on it?

Mr. CLANCY. How is the farmer going to tell how many feet there are in a ball of twine?

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman, perhaps, was not in the House when the member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) asked that question a moment ago. Suppose a ball of twine contains so many pounds, four and a half or five pounds, and in that there are so many feet. Now, it is not necessary that you should unwind the whole ball. The farmer knows how many feet there is to the pound, and if he cuts off what will weigh a pound, he can test the balance of the ball. If he unravels what will weigh a pound or half a pound he can test the weight of the balance of the ball.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think the hon. gentleman ever used any twine, or he would not make that statement. The ball unravels from the centre until there is nothing left. If it were wound on the outside it would not run, and as for using it on the binder, it would become entirely useless. Here is the difficulty. Supposing you unravel a ball of twine at the customs-house, there would have to be some provision made, where the twine was found to be all right, that there should be no loss to the importer or to the person who is quite innocent. Where the importer is not innocent, there would neither be sympathy for the party bringing it in or compensation. But, to have the test made involves some difficulty. I am sure the farmer could not attempt to do it, because he would throw away a ball of twine each time he made the attempt.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. CLANCY. I think that hon. gentleman has had no experience. I fancy there is not a farmer in this House who has ever seen twine wound upon the outside of the ball and used in a binder.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Take the inside and throw away half a pound.

Mr. CLANCY. That would be no test at all. Perhaps that twine does not always spin out at the same thickness.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Would you suggest unwinding the whole ball?

Mr. CLANCY. I suggest that the farmer should not be at expense or loss if the twine turns out to be short.

Mr. McMILLAN. After having handled hundreds of balls of twine, I can say that it is easy to take a ball of twine and take half a pound out of the centre. In spinning twine or yarn, any man knows that when you get a uniform article of raw material, you spin a uniform thread from beginning to end, and you can tell exactly by weighing half a pound how it will turn out in the whole ball.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I do not see how you can tell the length of the twine without unravelling the whole of the ball. I think the farmers are intelligent enough to find out whether they are fairly dealt with or not. I know that there have been good grounds of complaint, and hence the necessity of settling this matter.

Mr. G. E. TAYLOR (South Leeds). I am afraid the legislation of the hon. gentleman is putting through will have the effect of increasing the cost of twine to the farmer by a cent a pound. Twine, when imported from the United States or any foreign country, is put up in bales of eight balls to the bale. These balls are made by various manufacturers all over the United States and sold for export, and they are not branded and will not be branded. Where the law compels the importer to put this card on them, giving his name and the number of feet to the pound, the importer has got to open these sacks and brand each ball separately. It will cost an average of four or five cents a bale to do that. If the twine was all made in this country the manufacturer could comply with the law quite easily. The manufacturer can comply with the law quite easily, because he could have his tags, and he puts up each ball with a tag on it. But, you compel the importer to stamp it when he receives it, and if he has to open each bale to put a separate tag on each ball, it will increase the cost to the farmer by a cent a pound. The suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell, is the right one to adopt; let it be inspected at the port of entry, and there the importer will get a certificate from the producer that it runs so many feet to the pound, and if he fails in doing that, let it be confiscated, or let the penalty be enforced. You cannot do otherwise without increasing the cost of the twine, because, if the importer has to go as far as branding every ball, he must charge the cost of branding to the farmer, and the farmer has to pay for it. When we only had manufacturers of binder twine in this country, as we had a few years ago—

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman laughs, but, a few years ago, practically every pound of binder twine was made in this country, but now it is practically all imported in the country.

Mr. MCGREGOR. This is a growing time.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a growing time for other countries. The legislation that you are forcing through the House will have the effect of increasing the cost of binder twine to farmers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I just wish to say in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor), who has just taken his seat. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well, if he has gone over the statistics in regard to the use of binder twine, that it has increased ten times over within the last ten years in Canada. He heard the hon. Solicitor General make a statement to the House a few days ago, pointing out the enormous increase in the use of binder twine. There are about eight thousand tons in use in Canada, and there are only about 500 tons manufactured in the Kingston penitentiary. The enormous increase in the use of this commodity, is the reason for the increased importation into Canada, but the hon. gentleman is prepared to advance any argument that will suit his purpose. He says that we should make an examination of imported twine at the port of entry. Suppose that an examination is made, that the consignment is entered; suppose that a loose entry is made, that a consignment, which is supposed to contain so many feet and so many pounds, does not contain that amount, and that it passes in, who will be held responsible for that? Will the Department of Inland Revenue be called upon to make it good, because one of its officers has not seen that the proper precautions have been taken? The hon. gentleman assumes that it is going to be quite a task to put the name of the importer on the tag. But the importer already has on each ball, the number of pounds and the number of feet to the pound, so that all the importer has to do, is to write his name on the tag. He and his manufacturer have an understanding, and he can make it plain to the manufacturer that if he infringes upon the law, he will be responsible for a fine of $20. If you do not do that, leave it an open question. It is going to be a difficult thing for the farmer to get justice.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see how you are going to secure a conviction if you leave it to the farmer, because the farmer is not going to unwind and measure the ball of twine. If it is examined at the boundary, where the customs-house office is, how are you going to follow the importer, when it passes through two or three different hands, until it reaches the farmer? I do not think it can be done successfully, and if it is going to amount to anything, the inspection must be made at the customs-house by some responsible party when it is imported. In regard to what is made in the country, there can be no difficulty, because the manufacturer, knowing this in advance, will certainly stamp all his twine.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Not to criticise the Bill any further, but for information, I would like to ask the hon. minister if he proposes the $20 as being the penalty for each infraction of the law. Does he mean that a penalty of $20 will be imposed for each package, or each ball of twine that is found short in the measurement or will $20 apply to the whole car-load? In the event of its applying to a car-load, $20 per ball would amount to about $100,000 of a fine. I think it is quite indefinite as the Bill stands now, as to what the offence would be, whether a shortage of one ball will complete the offence, or whether each separate shortage will be treated as a separate offence.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. Chairman, I must acknowledge that there is something in that. Balls of twine are pretty much of a certain size. I think a ball is generally considered to be 4½ or 5 pounds. Instead of leaving it in such a state of uncertainty, which might have deplorable results, I think it might be better to say what the fine will be per ball, and then, of course, it would be much more moderate than that. It might be 50 cents, or $1, or 25 cents. I would like to have the opinion of some of my hon. friends who are familiar with the question on that point. I would say that we might place it at 25 cents per ball.

Mr. SPROULE. That will be so very small that I am afraid it will not have the effect.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I propose to make the penalty of 25 cents per ball, instead of $20.

Mr. SPROULE. In the event of a complaint being laid, I suppose there would be one complaint in regard to a sack of eight balls. Would one prosecution suffice, and would the fine bear any proportion to the number of balls contained in the package?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think it is clear enough. These balls contain four or five pounds of twine, and the fine would be 25 cents for each ball. If there were a great many balls in the bale, they would have to bear the consequences. They would multiply the number of balls by 25 cents.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is done, it would seem to be a fair thing, because the ordinary sack has eight balls. Supposing a farmer bought two balls, would these be the basis of any indictment. If the fine were only 25 cents—

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I mean per ball.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a farmer buys four balls, does the amendment permit him to institute a prosecution to recover the penalty of one dollar?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If the farmer buys twine in March or April, he will not know it is too short until August or September, and therefore thirty days is too brief a period to allow him to institute a prosecution. It should be four months.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I have no knowledge whatever of the practical matter intended to be dealt with by this section, but it seems to me that the amendment might lead to difficulty in enforcing the section. In the first part of the section you use the words 'package, ball, or parcel,' but in the latter part of the section you simply use the word 'ball.' That may cause difficulty in enforcing the section. I would also suggest that the penalty of twenty-five cents a ball is not a very effective penalty. The penalty should be something that would be a deterrent to fraud. If you put in a provision that the person would be liable for a penalty of ten dollars, together with an additional penalty of twenty-five cents for each ball, it would be more effective.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I would move the last amendment namely: That this section only come into force, on November 1, next.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the minister making any provisions against a person removing the tag or stamp. There ought to be a penalty provided for that.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is very difficult to provide for everything, and I do not see how we can provide for that.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the Act will be practically unworkable, so far as it applies to the importation of twine. The importer will sell to the wholesale man, the wholesale man to the retail dealer, and the retail dealer to the farmer. To whom is the farmer going to look for redress when he finds that his twine is short? It is sold to him by the hardware merchant in his own village, but he has only the importer to look to. He will have no redress at all.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Surely the hardware merchant will know from whom he bought the twine. I do not see why there should be any more difficulty in obtaining redress in connection with binder twine than there is in connection with anything else.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose an importer at Halifax imports a lot of twine, and sells it to Wood, Vallance & Co., of Hamilton, or to Bate & Co., of Ottawa, and they sell it to a wholesale man in Toronto, who supplies a hardware man in the county of Grey, from whom the farmer gets his supply. Suppose the farmer finds that this binder twine is short; how is he to find the importer in Halifax in order to get redress? Is the farmer in Grey likely to proceed against the importer in Halifax?

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). The seller in his own interest will follow up the man from whom he purchased. You can safely leave that difficulty to be disposed of between the merchant and the importer.

Mr. D. D. ROGERS (Frontenac). In this as in many other matters it is difficult to frame a law to meet every case. If the farmer finds that any particular brand of twine is not satisfactory or is short, he will not buy any more of that twine, and it will be sufficient punishment to the manufacturer or the importer to find his twine getting a bad name. The very fact of having a law on the statute-book to compel manufacturers or importers to stamp the twine will be a sufficient safeguard to the farmers. You will find that it will hardly be necessary to put the law into effect; but I think it will be very satisfactory to the farmers.

On the preamble,

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). I would like the minister to hold the Bill and not put it through its final stages this evening, for this reason, that I understand it was not known that there was to be legislation of this character with regard to salt, and some of the largest importers of salt in the city of St. John are opposed to it, and have telegraphed to me to that effect, adding that they are writing. Therefore, I would like the minister to hold the Bill until the objections of these importers may reach me, and I may be able to state them to the committee. I am not aware myself what they are.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I had fondly hoped to get the Bill through this evening, but it is very difficult not to grant the short delay my hon. friend asks for, on the ground stated. Under these circumstances, I will ask that the Bill be reported, but that it stand for its third reading until another day.

Bill reported.

DOMINION OF CANADA RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden) moved the second reading of Bill (169) to incorporate the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association. He said: This association is a very old and useful one and is perhaps doing more useful work this season than ever before. I have been asked by its president and executive to introduce this Bill the object of which is to enable the association, which after many years has acquired property in different parts of the Dominion, to hold this property and transact business relating to it.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time; considered in committee; reported; read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). I have to bring up, Mr. Speaker, another case relating to the maladministration of the affairs in the Yukon. We have had Mr. Wade's connection with several transactions referred to this session as well as last. There was the case of the John C. Barr, in which this gentleman, by means of his position in the government service and his connection with the collector of customs, enabled that vessel to drive through the laws for the protection of shipping; and there was the steamship Yukoner in which this gentleman, employed against the ship, was able to serve his clients by having the laws again ignored by the collector of customs, and the greatest injustice done to the vessel. There is also the case of the water front, which was referred to in the debate of last year to some extent, and included in the charges I made from my place in this House, and in which Mr. Wade again figured, his connection with that transaction, being, to say the least, of a most suspicious character. But that is not all. In connection with the so-called leasing of this public property at Dawson, every rule that should guide the government officers was set at naught and an extraordinary favour done to protect Mr. Wade's clients.

Mr. Wade at the time held a number of offices. He was connected with the Dominion lands as general registrar, he was clerk of the court; he was Crown prosecutor, and he filled various other important positions. This man was undoubtedly, as far as I can see in the record and as I am informed, in the pay of two men who wished to make a large sum of money; and if the information and the evidence be correct, these men did make a very good thing and were able to pay Mr. Wade, out of their profits, a very large sum. In short by paying $30,000 to the government, and about $10,000 to Mr. Wade, to induce him to violate the laws of the land and become a criminal subject to indictment, they made $120,000 or thereabouts. And in connection with this matter the government are content, as in other matters, to stand by, to see a farce enacted by one of their officers, Mr. Ogilvie, a mockery of justice, and treat with contempt his report upon the evidence. I have taken some trouble to dissect the evidence given in the presence of Mr. Ogilvie, and how he ever came to the conclusion that he did in this matter respecting Mr. Wade, is more than I can understand, unless he ignored most of the evidence given before him. But there is more evidence than was taken by him, because that examination partook of an ex parte character. Mr. Wade, and his counsel appeared, but there was no one representing the government, and no cross-examination of either Mr. Wade himself or the witnesses who were examined by his counsel, and even Mr. Ogilvie, when he began to inquire into the matter, apart from counsel, allowed himself to be stopped by Mr. Wade's own interference.

The charges which I made last year were that Mr. Wade had been appointed to all these official positions I mentioned, and referring to the Land Titles Act, which contained a provision to prevent his transacting business within the Land Titles Act other than his duties as an officer or clerk. I went on to charge that he practised his profession of law in this district while holding these various positions. And, as the acting Dominion lands agent and so on, he had accepted retainer, fees or remunerations for procuring or promising to procure titles to or possession of Dominion lands; while holding these positions he was individually and personally interested in the disposal of lands known as the water front. These are serious charges, charges of offences against the Criminal Act, and not merely of irregularities in performance of his duties. The government's defence, through the Minister of the Interior, partook of this character, so far as the water front is concerned—you will remember, I dare say, Mr. Speaker, that it was a plausible defence if it was supported by evidence from any source—that Mr. Wade in connection with the leasing of the water front, called for tenders on certain conditions, and the reasons he had not advertised was that there were no newspapers in the district and the highest tenderer had obtained this public property. There might be some show of truth in that statement. But it so happened that in the investigation before Mr. Ogilvie Mr. Wade destroys the whole of that statement by his own evidence. There was not a word of truth in that statement. According to my own recollection, the Minister of the Interior informed the House that he had received this information from Mr. Wade. But Mr. Wade explained that nothing of the kind had happened. There was no such regularity in the proceeding. The returns brought down to this House this session, coupled with Mr. Wade's testimony before Mr. Ogilvie, show a most extraordinary state of affairs and wholly apart from any charge of my own, or any evidence I might bring forward to show his corrupt connection with this transaction, because these papers disclose that Mr. Wade undertook, without holding these positions I have mentioned, without instructions from any superior officer, without any authority invested in him under the law or instructions brought down to parliament to enter into correspondence with various gentlemen in regard to this property. He never submitted any proposition of any kind. The different letters are brought down, but not all from Mr. Wade in reply to them. These letters to Mr. Wade are in the nature of offers. They came from one and another. They were addressed to Mr. Wade as Crown counsel; they were addressed to Mr. Wade as registrar of lands; they were addressed to Mr. Wade as Dominion lands agent, and so on. And Mr. Wade writes back that he has recorded these applications made to him, and he is of opinion that leases might be given for a certain period, and so on. But in no place is it pretended, nor does Mr. Wade pretend in his evidence that he ever said to two men or any body of men, in order to serve the public interest: These are the conditions on which that lease will be granted; what do you offer? There was no public notice. That is admitted by the Minister of the Interior, and the reasons he suggests was that there were no newspapers. But his other statement was that Mr. Wade—or I think it was Mr. Fawcett, he said—offered this lease under certain conditions to certain responsible parties. That statement also is erroneous. Referring to the return of the papers before the House, I observe particularly the tender of Alexander McDonald. He puts in a tender on the 26th of March in the form of a letter. Other tenders were made. The whole thing bears on its face some evidence of this—that as soon as an offer would come in that was not from McDonald or Morrison, Mr. Wade would acquaint Mr. McDonald with that fact. Because, on the 28th of March we find a higher offer from McDonald & Morrison, and that offer was ultimately accepted, accepted early in April. And Dunsmore & Spencer and some one else, on the 29th of March, offer a large amount. But no conditions are stated. Mr. Wade writes a letter of acceptance, giving certain conditions never put before or communicated to any of the different parties who seemed willing to make a deal. Now, it is of importance, in considering a matter of this kind, to notice the defence, or excuse or justification that was subsequently attempted. When Mr. Wade was put on his oath to explain this transaction, he seemed to think it a great justification—that his clients—I call them his clients for reasons that will appear—accepted what he called a very precarious lease. He went on to explain that these men had accepted a lease under which the government or the land agent could terminate it at a month's notice, while still holding them for the $30,000 rental. And this was a lease for a year. In the bargain that was made—for there was no formal lease, though they talk of a lease constantly—in the letter there was no authority for them to sublet. It was a most precarious lease, and having regard to these facts, I say it was a lease that no sane man would have entered into, unless he was absolutely sure of the powers that be, that is, unless he knew that Mr. Wade would stand by him and at least would enable him to enjoy that property. Otherwise, it would be ridiculous for him to accept the terms, because, as Mr. Wade points out in illustrating the precarious state of this lease, not only could the government take it out of the hands of these men at any time they choose, but these men were bound, without indemnification from the government to make certain improvements on the water front. Not referring to the reservation of streets and so on, they were to construct sidewalks and certain buildings which are particularized, while, without any provision of subletting—which is what they contemplated, because it was by subleasing they got the huge profits from the property—they threw themselves on the mercy of Mr. Wade. And these arrangements and conditions are drawn up between these parties, no other parties having an opportunity to tender upon them at all. Consequently, I say with full confidence that that is strong evidence of the fraudulent and improper relations between Mr. Wade and these men. From the facts I shall refer to—not at great length—I think that is a fair one. In fact, Mr. Wade admits, under oath, that these men who got this valuable property, were his clients. He acted for the Crown in these capacities he had undertaken to control Mr. Fawcett, as Mr. Fawcett's evidence shows, as gold commissioner. But his point was that they were not his clients when the lease was made. But his point is this: They were not my clients at the time that lease was made. I have no doubt my information is correct that they were his clients, and I think there is considerable evidence produced by him that points in that direction. But I would not commit myself absolutely to an opinion of that kind, and therefore, I do not ask the House, in the resolution I propose, to come to any conclusion as to the guilt of Mr. Wade, for it is a crime that has been charged against him. I only ask the House to join me in pressing and insisting upon a full and satisfactory inquiry into this matter. It cannot be said that the present inquiry is satisfactory, because it does not even give us the information that some returns give. You cannot deal with the history of this matter by referring to Mr. Ogilvie's report, strange to say. There is evidence in possession of the government, there is evidence now in possession of parliament which existed when Mr. Ogilvie was supposed to be inquiring into this. None of it is produced by Mr. Ogilvie, and he makes the astounding confession that he knew so little of the importance of his duties as royal commissioner that he himself, outside of court, ex parte, secretly, made an inquiry from a certain Grotshier in regard to a very important matter, and he reports that he found his evidence did not amount to anything, and so this man is not produced. But he, knowing as I say, so little of his duty and the responsibility of his position, admits that he had made an inquiry, the result of which he gives, whereas his duty to the government was to report the evidence. But the evidence he leaves out.

There is another important thing in connection with this statement. Mr. Ogilvie had reported in a letter to the minister in February, that this commission, under which all this evidence was given had broken down, and the man who had made the charges had retired. It was after that that Mr. Wade comes there with counsel; he, a lawyer himself, comes with counsel before Mr. Ogilvie, and is examined, not cross-examined. He is there with counsel to examine Mr. Morrison and Mr. McDonald; they are cross-examined, no counsel representing the Crown, no counsel representing the public interest; but these men go there and make this statement off-hand. And yet it is from this statement that the suspicion is again suggested; and without following the matter with prejudiced mind, I myself have come to the conclusion that the information which was given to me is not only capable of proof, but has to a large measure, been sustained by the evidence that has been produced. Although I would not ask, as I say, an absolute conclusion to be made from that; I would, if Mr. Wade resisted a proper inquiry, I think that would be evidence of his guilt. If the government resisted pressure for a proper and regular inquiry after this mockery gone through by Mr. Ogilvie, I think that would be evidence from which a very unfavourable impression would be drawn regarding every one concerned. I have mentioned, for instance, that there was no provision as to subletting, and that was a most important thing, for the reasons that I have given. The information as to the value of this property given to me by a reliable man, and in my possession last session when I made this charge, was to this effect:

When Ogilvie surveyed out the site for Dawson, he reserved a strip of land on the water front as government property for the purpose of landing supplies, &c. He then marked out the streets parallel to the water front. The river at Dawson has a rapid current, some six or seven miles an hour, but right at Dawson there is a curve in the river which enables boats to swing in and out of the current, and therefore able to land. These lots were bought by parties who have built on them—some to the value of $40,000 and $50,000, with the understanding that nothing should be between them and the water front. Alexander McDonald got a lease of this land from Fawcett. Wade got $15,000 as lawyer, and also $15,000 from the Yukon Sawmill Company. He turns round now and says it was for drawing up the papers.

And this is the important part of this information :

McDonald subdivided it into lots, and is renting it out for $120,000 to $130,000 a year.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). What page are you reading from ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am not reading from any evidence that has been published. I say that last session, among other testimony I had in my possession, was a statement from a reliable man whose evidence was as follows :

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). What was his name ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not give his name then, and would not give his name now. It is no use producing these names unless a tribunal is appointed, and I undertook last session to produce not only the names, but the witnesses :

A man who went in with me is paying $12 a day for a five foot front for a saloon and the whole front is taken up in that way with little slab huts and is a great damage to the people who have built on the town site, and the front is all taken up, so that there is no accommodation for landing.

That was a part of the information, but as to the particulars you will see what his statement was. These men were obtaining a handsome profit. They carried out this deal with a man who undoubtedly at the same time was their lawyer, under a heavy salary, as he himself admits, whom I charge as their lawyer at this time, and that the moving consideration with Mr. Wade was the consideration in cash that he got from these men to violate his duty as a public officer. And, Mr. Speaker, in that connection it must not be forgotten that the report to the Labour Bureau at Washington by officers of the United States at Dawson, corroborated this statement as to the huge profit that was made by McDonald & Morrison, and I have referred to that in the resolution. There is a statement which the member for Guysborough can see, and I do not suppose that the fact that he was an American official will destroy the value of his evidence. This whole business struck the government, I think, as a most extraordinary matter. It was always difficult to get from the minister what ideas the government had about this thing. The minister always spoke to Mr. Fawcett granting this lease. Then we discovered no formal lease had been granted. There was an informal correspondence, then we discovered the correspondence was not with Mr. Fawcett, but was with Mr. Wade. Then, we discovered that the government had never formally approved of this transaction, that Major Walsh had approved of it, but that the government as a government had never approved of it. Now, the disposition of all this property was put into the hands of the Minister of the Interior by parliament. It was not in Mr. Wade, nor in Mr. Fawcett, nor in Major Walsh, under any legal authority. To this day there is no positive straight statement that the Minister of the Interior approved of his transaction, ratified it and confirmed it, and was ready to stand by it. But in regard to that there is a shifting of responsibility. Mr. Fawcett attempts to show that he had nothing to do with it except to sign the documents under Mr. Wade's direction. Mr. Wade says that Mr. Fawcett was the man with authority, and there they come into collision and contradict each other in important particulars.

Now, on the question of the character of the lease, I have to ask the House to follow this statement. I have made the statement, from reading the letters, that no reasonable man, unless he had some monetary relations or some influence over the government official with whom he was dealing, would put himself in the position these men put themselves in. That idea struck Mr. Wade, but he refers to it for a different purpose. I only refer to it in order to show that the character of the transaction was suspicious ; Mr. Wade refers to it in order to show how carefully he guarded the public interest. This is what he says on page 17 of the small book :

Then McDonald & Morrison were put in this position: they were bound to take that lease for a year. The government was not only bound for a month, and could terminate the lease at any time. It was, therefore, in the interests of the government of Canada and not in the interests of Morrison & McDonald. They were to keep the streets open necessary to go to the river; they were to establish public sanitary conveniences, and to build sidewalks, and so on.

Now, I say that the excuse put forward is a most suspicious thing. To suggest that reason as a reason why he ought to be considered guiltless is to me an additional reason for saying that McDonald & Morrison had no plan in regard to the building, going to expense, or the termination of their lease. As a matter of fact they were the clients of this officer of the government, and the only difference is as to whether they became clients before the letter of acceptance was received or not. Morrison omits to say whether they paid him before or after the signing of the lease. Morrison swears that Wade told him that he had paid $15, or $25, or $50 for drawing up the lease, because he did not want to draw it up himself, being an officer of the government. He was selling his position as an officer of the government. But, it was not a lease regularly drawn up at all. The documents that were referred to as the lease in the Department of the Interior did not amount to a lease at all. The lease is represented by two letters. That is beyond dispute ; the hon. Minister of the Interior admits it and every one admits it. These documents are the only documents that Morrison is referring to, and for drawing them Wade paid $15 or $50—he does not know which. Wade told him that he had these documents drawn. During the inquiry the commissioner seemed to pause, but only for a second or two, to sift statements that were being made by Alex. McDonald and Morrison, and he attempted to cross-examine in regard to these statements when he was stopped by Wade. Though Wade had his counsel there, Wade rushed in, and when a very important point was reached stopped the inquiry. At page 10 of the further report, Mr. Wade tells us what occurs. Mr. Morrison is being examined, and the commissioner says :

His government position here—

That is, Wade's.

—did not enter into the consideration at all.

A. Well, his government position here and his business—those were two different positions.

The Commissioner—I wanted you to say if you had that in your mind.

Wade interrupts with this remark :

I am not responsible for what he had on his mind.

Then, I mentioned that the commission had fallen through before this inquiry was taken up. Months before, Wade, Morrison and McDonald are examined, and in a further report on February 20, 1899, Mr. Ogilvie wrote to the Minister of the Interior :

I regret to inform you that this Royal Commission for the investigation of charges against officials has, to an extent, fallen through.

He goes on to explain that the parties who were pressing the charges, I think very wisely, had withdrawn owing to the ruling that the commission was not as extensive as the order in council. The order in council did not direct that a limited commission should issue, limited to the charges or facts up to August 25. There was no such limitation whatever in the order in council, but the commission itself did contain words of limitation, and according to the ruling the commission was restricted to such charges or facts as had occurred before that date. I believe it was after this that this commission was taken up in a cursory manner. I refer to the fact that the commissioner had gone outside of his duties and position to inquire into this matter, and had made private inquiries without giving the evidence to the House. That was referred to at page 225 of the evidence. We find that Mr. Ogilvie went out and made a private and ex parte examination of witnesses upon the matter in question. At page 225, this is what occurred. The commissioner says :

The Commissioner—I heard this statement of Mr. Grotshier, and I went to see him about it. I came to the conclusion he knew nothing. Alex. McDonald made certain statements to him in a loose way, and I wanted him to make his declaration, but I found nothing in it. I was going to have the parties that he implicated examined, but I found it was simply hearsay, and it was no use taking the declaration of a man on what he had heard.

That might have been very proper, but it is not what this gentleman was asked to do, to go out on the street, outside of the court room, and make an inquiry without giving the public and parliament any of the facts he discovered, but giving his conclusion upon these matters. I think, in a hurried way. I have gone over the important points in the evidence, I have put them together for convenience. I think, from a sense of fair-play, and they lead up to the conclusion I ask the House to come to upon the facts in the evidence. It is not unimportant that I myself made serious charges of this character, prior to the time that this evidence was before the House, that there was a convincing case before the House, and that the evidence of Wade, Morrison and McDonald is corroborative of the statements I made. It must not be forgotten that I stated last year, and it has never yet been contradicted in this House or out of it by Major Walsh, that Major Walsh had informed a member of this House that Wade had made $10,000 out of this transaction, and for the purpose of corroborating this statement I have read from the witnesses whose evidence I read on a previous occasion, and whose statements I, for the first time, read on this occasion. Bearing these facts in mind, I ask the House to conclude :

That it is not in the public interest that officers having authority to alien any part of the public domain, should be permitted to accept or receive retainers from or to be or remain in the employment of persons applying for grants or leases of such public domain.

That in the interest of the public and of the public service the matter of the leasing of the water front and the connection of Mr. F. C. Wade therewith, and his relations with the successful tenderers, Messrs. Morrison & McDonald require a prompt, thorough and searching investigation under oath.

I will read the resolution, because in it I put succinctly the references to the evidence and the documents from which I ask the House to draw a conclusion, and not an unreasonable conclusion, but, to stamp these men as undoubtedly guilty, to say that the investigation that has gone into the matter has not been thorough, that the result of which is not such as to entitle Wade or any one connected with that matter to the conclusion that Mr. Ogilvie drew. The resolution is as follows :

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof :—

'On June 28, 1899, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, a member of this House, stated from his place in parliament, that he was credibly informed and believed that with the same co-operation (and through the supervision of the Department of Justice) as was given by the government of

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Canada to the Hon. Clifford Sifton in the case of the Manitoba election frauds (so-called) he could establish before a commission comprised of eminent judges and clothed with proper powers the following among other facts and charges:—

That Mr. F. C. Wade was appointed Crown prosecutor, clerk of the court, and registrar and acting Dominion lands agent for the district of the Yukon on August 26, 1897.

That section 31 of the Land Titles Act, 1894, provided that no registrar or clerk in any land titles office should advise for any fee or reward or otherwise upon titles to land, nor practice as a conveyancer, nor should he carry on or transact within the land titles office any business or occupation whatever other than duties as such registrar or clerk.

That Mr. Wade actively practiced his profession of the law in the said district while holding the official positions aforesaid, and appeared before the court of the district, the gold commissioner and other officials as the paid advocate of private parties having business transactions with the various departments of the government.

That the acting Dominion lands agent, registrar, clerk of the court and Crown prosecutor has accepted retainers, fees or remuneration to procure or for procuring, or attempting or promising to procure grants or title or possession of Dominion lands.

That Mr. Wade while holding the position of registrar of lands, clerk of the court, and Crown attorney, was financially and personally interested in the disposal of lands known as the water front.

That subsequent to the statement of said charges a copy of a further report of William Ogilvie, Esq., and of the evidence accompanying the same, were laid before parliament, and further and other papers respecting the so-called water front lease were brought down during the present session.

That from the reports and papers now before parliament it appears:

That in 1897 (prior to Mr. Wade's arrival in the Yukon district) Mr. Fawcett, the gold commissioner refused to allow buildings on the water front. 'There were a large number of buildings there, and he would not like to have them removed; he thought it would be inflicting a great hardship on them.'

That the present commissioner of the Yukon district, Mr. Ogilvie, reported on April 14, 1899, to the Minister of the Interior, as follows: 'My impression with all due respect to the past officials, was that it was a very impolitic act to have leased it at all.'

That 'lots in the government addition of the town of Dawson' were ordered by Major Walsh, when commissioner, to be 'properly valued and public notice posted so that the lots might be sold in accordance therewith.'

(Report of Major J. M. Walsh, Interior Report, 1898.)

That this procedure did not obtain in the case of the water front (so-called) lots.

(Major Walsh's report above.)

That without securing a proper or other valuation and without issuing public notices, Mr. F. C. Wade entered into negotiations and carried on a correspondence with certain individuals respecting the leasing of the said water front, as in the case of one William Rourke, to whom Mr. Wade wrote with respect thereto that his application 'was duly recorded by me.' . . . 'I do not think it advisable that such a lease should be given for a longer period than one month at a time, to be renewed from time to time if thought advisable.'

That on March 26, 1898, Alexander McDonald (one of the firm of McDonald & Morrison, hereinafter mentioned) submitted to Mr. Wade a tender for a lease of the water front at $1,500 a month on special conditions.

That on March 28, 1898, Messrs. Morrison & McDonald offered Mr. Wade a rental of $2,500 a month for the said water front.

That on March 29, 1898, Densmore, Spencer & McPhee submitted a tender to Mr. Wade offering a rental of $25,000 for a year's lease of the said water front, to be paid monthly.

That on April 9, 1898, Thomas Fawcett, gold commissioner, and F. C. Wade, Dominion lands agent, formally accepted the offer of Messrs. Morrison & McDonald of March 28, 1898, subject to certain conditions, among others the following: 'With power to the Dominion government, the gold commissioner or the Dominion lands agent to terminate it on giving one month's notice to the lessees.'

That on April 14, 1898, Messrs. Morrison & McDonald accepted the said terms, with one exception, adding: 'You will, of course, see that the front is cleared off.'

That officers of the United States government officially reported that the said water front yielded to the lessees thereof about $10,000 a month.

(Bulletin, Department of Labour, November, 1898, Washington government printing office.)

That touching the responsibility for this transaction, the evidence taken before Mr. Ogilvie was unsatisfactory and contradictory.

That Mr. Wade testified under oath:

'I came with instructions from the Minister of the Interior not to act as Dominion lands agent exactly, but to take over what is called the land application book.'

That there is no record in the Department of the Interior of these instructions.

(Return to order of House of Commons, February 7, 1900.)

That Mr. Wade testified under oath that his action was approved of by the department at Ottawa.

That when asked in this House, 'Has the government approved or confirmed the action taken by the officials in Dawson respecting the so-called 'leasing' of this property to Morrison & McDonald,' the hon. Minister of the Interior replied: 'The government has taken no action respecting the lease referred to.'

That there is no record in the Department of the Interior of any note or memorandum of approval of the department at Ottawa, referred to on page 19 of the said further report of Mr. Ogilvie, where it appears that Mr. Wade testified as aforesaid.

(Return to order of House of Commons, February 7, 1900.)

That the following question and answer were stated in this House:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

'1. Under what statutory authority, if any, were Messrs. Morrison & McDonald put in or allowed to take possession of or enjoy the control of the land known as the water front in Dawson?

(a) Has the government approved of or confirmed the action taken by the officials in Dawson respecting the so-called 'leasing' of this property to Morrison & McDonald?'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Under section 4 of chapter 22, Revised Statutes of Canada, the Minister of the Interior has the control of all Crown lands except those under the control of other departments mentioned in this section. The public lands in the Yukon territory are under his control, and Mr. Thomas Fawcett was authorized by the Governor in Council to act for the Minister of the Interior in matters relating to the administration of the Yukon territory. The question whether Mr. Fawcett's action regarding the water front was within his powers, has never been formally determined.'

That Mr. Fawcett, with respect to the leasing of the said water front and the negotiations and correspondence relating thereto, has given the following evidence:

'Mr. Wade, as Dominion lands agent, attended to all terms of this letter, and for the minister I signed it.'—(Page 220, Ogilvie Commission.)

'I heard that there were other tenders, but did not know what they were.'—(Page 221, Ogilvie Commission.)

'That Mr. Wade had powers over Dominion land.'—(Page 221, Ogilvie Commission.)

'That his (Mr. Fawcett's) duty was to sign on Mr. Wade's advice.'—(Page 223, Ogilvie Commission.)

'All I had to do was to put my name to the document.'—(Page 230, Ogilvie Commission.)

That Mr. Wade, respecting the same matter, has testified under oath as follows:

'I went to work and leased that front.'—(Page 15, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

That the hon. Minister of the Interior informed this House on April 4, 1899:

'Mr. Wade and Mr. Fawcett called for tenders for a lease of this water front upon certain conditions. There were no newspapers at the time.'

That Mr. Fawcett testified under oath that he took no part except signing the lease.—(Page 221, Ogilvie Commission.)

That Mr. Wade testified under oath: 'I consulted with him (Fawcett) as to the question of inviting tenders by public notice. We both agreed that was not advisable for this reason:

'At the time we were under the impression that the lessee, whoever he might be, would have to go to work and build their buildings to accommodate the sub-lessees, whoever they might be. In fact, we were going to require that the lessee should put up substantial buildings and build sidewalks and put in sanitary conveniences, and so on. It was therefore necessary to deal with a responsible party; for that reason it was agreed not advisable to call for public tenders.'—(Page 16, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

That there is no evidence that the absence of newspapers had anything to do with the course adopted by Mr. Wade.

That it appears that neither Mr. Wade nor Mr. Fawcett, in calling for tenders, prescribed or specified any conditions, although the Minister of the Interior informed the House on April 4, 1899, that Mr. Wade and Mr. Fawcett called for tenders for a lease of this water front upon certain conditions.

That the evidence of Mr. Wade and Mr. Fawcett is in other respects unsatisfactory and irreconcilable and contradictory.

That Mr. Wade testified under oath:

'I got the offer of Densmore, Spencer & McPhee of $25,000. . . . I was on the point of closing the tenders, when McDonald & Morrison sent in a letter . . . in which they offered $30,000. . . . The figures had gone clean beyond anything that Mr. Fawcett had anticipated; he thought it was getting too high. I consulted with Judge McGuire. . . . he thought it was very exorbitant.'—(Further report, Mr. Ogilvie.)

That Mr. Justice McGuire notified Mr. Wade he was prepared to make an offer.—(Return to order of House of Commons, February 7, 1900.)

That the returns before this House show that the letter of Messrs. Morrison & McDonald is dated on the 28th day of March, 1898, one day before that of Densmore & McPhee.

That Mr. Fawcett was examined as follows:

'Q. There was an appearance of tender and you gave it to McDonald & Morrison without saying anything about the other tenders?—A. I heard that there were other tenders, but I did not know what they were.'—(Page 221, Ogilvie Commission.)

That evidence has been given tending to establish that Mr. Wade while holding the official positions above recited and while conducting or completing the negotiations aforesaid on behalf of the government was the paid and retained solicitor of Messrs. McDonald and Morrison.

That the agreement between Mr. Wade and Messrs. Morrison and McDonald for a lease of the water front was 'extremely precarious' according to Mr. Wade's evidence.—(Page 17, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

That the agreement to lease was of a character that any ordinary citizen having no monetary relation with the officer of the government in charge would be most unlikely to accept, in that the government was at liberty to cancel it on a month's notice but the lessees were bound for a year; it contained no provision for sub-letting and the lessees were required to construct a board sidewalk, public privies with pits, to the satisfaction of the gold commissioner.—(Return to order of the House of Commons, February 7, 1900.)

Mr. Wade's explanation on oath is as follows: That 'McDonald & Morrison were put in this position: they were bound to take that lease for a year. The government was only bound for a month, and could terminate that lease at any time. It was, therefore, in the interest of the government of Canada and not in the interest of Morrison & McDonald. They were to keep the streets open necessary to go to the river; they were to establish public sanitary conveniences, and to build sidewalks, and so on.'—(Mr. Wade's evidence, page 17, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

That a member of this House has stated to Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, upon the authority of Major Walsh, that Mr. Wade received $10,000 for granting this lease to Messrs. McDonald & Morrison.

That the foregoing fact was communicated to this House by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper on the 28th day of June, 1899.

That Mr. Wade told Mr. George that 'he had immediately after his decision, which gave Morrison & McDonald the water front, been retained by Alex. McDonald for his attorney for one year, and had been given a handsome bonus as a retainer fee. . . . My information was that it was $10,000.'—(Page 228, Ogilvie Commission.)

That this evidence has not been expressly contradicted by Mr. Wade, although he had an opportunity of doing so, and was examined after the evidence had been given.

That Mr. Morrison (of Morrison & McDonald, the lessees) testified under oath that Mr. Wade told him 'he would get some one else to draw up the papers, or words to that effect.'—(Page 10, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

'He said he paid $25 or $50 for making the lease.'

That no formal lease outside of the correspondence above referred to was ever drawn up.

That Mr. Morrison was unable to say whether Mr. Wade was retained before or after the water front lease.—(Page 10, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

That the following incident occurred during Mr. Morrison's examination: 'Q. His government position here did not enter into consideration at all?—A. Well, his government position here and his business—those were two different positions.'

'The Commissioner—I want you to say if you had that in your mind.'

'Mr. Wade—I am not responsible for what he had on his mind.'—(Page 12, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

That Mr. Alex. McDonald testified:

'Q. To your knowledge did Mr. Wade profit in any way by the water front lease?—A. Not from me. What money I gave Mr. Wade it was for his other services.'—(Page 14, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

That Mr. Wade testified: 'The retainer was purely for my legal services.'—(Page 17, further report of Mr. Ogilvie.)

That the evidence of Messrs. McDonald, Morrison and Wade was given after the following statement was written by Mr. Ogilvie to the Minister of the Interior:

'Feb. 20, 1899.—Sir,—I regret to inform you that this royal commission for the investigation of charges against officials has, to an extent, fallen through.'

That none of the witnesses were cross-examined by counsel for the government.

That the commissioner, Mr. Ogilvie, did not call for the production of books, documents or other papers by any of the said witnesses touching the date of the said retainer or of fees paid by the said McDonald & Morrison to the said Wade.

That no counsel attended before Mr. Ogilvie to represent the government, the only counsel attending represented Mr. Wade and the commissioner, and did not attempt a searching inquiry into the statements of Mr. Wade or of his clients, Messrs. McDonald & Morrison.

That Mr. Ogilvie, a commissioner under royal commission, made a private and ex parte examination of a witness touching the matter in question.—(Page 225, evidence, Ogilvie Commission.)

That notwithstanding the foregoing facts and the ex parte character of the inquiry, Mr. Ogilvie reported: 'Mr. Wade is entirely acquitted of all charges made against him in connection with the leasing of the water front to Morrison & McDonald.'—(Page 1, further report, Mr. Ogilvie.)

That Mr. Wade still holds the important position of Crown prosecutor in the district of the Yukon.

That the Prime Minister stated in this House on June 29, 1899: 'We must probe the Yukon delinquencies, so-called, to the bottom. No officer of the government must be allowed to rest under any suspicion.'

That it is not in the public interest that officers having authority to alien any part of the public domain should be permitted to accept or receive retainers from or to be or remain in the employment of persons applying for grants or leases of such public domain.

That in the interest of the public and of the public service, the matter of the leasing of the water front and the connection of Mr. F. C.

Wade therewith and his relations with the successful tenderers, Messrs Morrison & McDonald require a prompt, thorough and searching investigation under oath.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to occupy the time of the House very long in reply to the hon. gentleman. I had fully expected that in bringing this matter again before the House, he would by this time have produced some new evidence. The hon. gentleman, by special pleadings, which clever lawyers are able to make, and by insinuations against the commissioner and the commission, and against the officers of the Crown and the gentlemen with whom they had dealings, has endeavoured to make it appear that there was something wrong in the leasing of the water front. I hardly think my hon. friend has made out a case to justify an expensive investigation such as he asks for. When parliament is called upon to take such a step, there ought to be at least some substantial evidence to show that there are good grounds for such an investigation. My hon. friend expressed a lot of opinions; but these matters do not appear to other people as they do to him. He laid great stress on the statement made by Mr. Ogilvie that the commission had fallen through, and he tried, not by a direct statement, but by some kind of innuendo, to make out that it fell through, because the commissioner had not full power and was not willing to undertake a full investigation. Now, I think the facts do not bear that out. On the contrary, the complaints and the wild statements that have been made in this House and out of it, and in the press of the country, with regard to the conduct of affairs in the Yukon, concerning which the investigation was asked for, were about transactions which took place prior to August 25. The commission was granted, and if the commission fell through it was because the parties who made these grave charges were unable to get evidence to substantiate them. I do not think there can be any doubt about that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was relying on Mr. Ogilvie's own statement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Ogilvie's statement is that the commission fell through because these people were unable to furnish any evidence.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think the hon. gentleman has read it. This is what he said—

Mr. MCGREGOR. You had your chance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman need not interrupt. He is interested very closely in this matter. He might very well cease his interruptions when he has a relative who is associated in these transactions,

Mr. MCGREGOR. I can take care of myself.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. So can your brother take care of himself. Mr. Ogilvie says :

I regret to inform you that the Royal Commission for the investigation of charges against officials has, to an extent, fallen through. Mr. Armstrong, chairman of the miners' committee, who drew up the memorial which led to the issuance of the commission, and Dr. McDougall, the secretary of the committee, withdrew from the investigation when they learned that the scope of the commission only included what occurred previous to August 25, the date of the memorial.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perfectly true, and the offences with which they were charged, had all occurred previous to that time. Surely if you had any evidence at all against the officials or any one else for malfeasance of office—and in their petition to the government they stated that these things had occurred previous to that date—why should they have made the flimsy excuse they did for withdrawing from the commission. Their conduct was utterly dishonest and disingenuous. They retired because, as Mr. Ogilvie says, they were unable to sustain, even to the slightest extent, any of the charges they had made. However, I do not propose to take up the time of the House in discussing these charges. The people of this country have heard so much about this matter that they are tired of it, and they thoroughly understand that the parties who got up these charges were irresponsible, miserable vagabonds. All of them, I understand, without exception, have left the country, and are afraid to return, lest they should be prosecuted.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Dr. McDougall is in Dawson now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was not one of those who were active in making the charges, or if he was, he was made a dupe of by the editor of the Nugget, and those men who came to this city and consulted him, in order to try and make out a case. They are well known to be characters of the worst description.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You are the first man who ever said it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is not the case. What I have said is proved in the Canadian courts of justice. These men had to leave the country.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I deny that, and you cannot produce evidence of it. The hon. gentleman says that the evidence is in records of the department.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, but I said it was in the records of the courts of justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I defy you to prove that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. These people had to leave the country to avoid being arrested and imprisoned, and every one of them is known to the people of the Yukon, as being a man of the worst type of character.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman include Dr. McDougall in that description?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, I do not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He was one of the men prominent in the commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Any man who makes insinuations and serious charges against respectable citizens, without having any evidence, when the time comes to produce it, is a dishonourable citizen, whether Dr. McDougall is to be included or not, or any one else in this House, or out of it. No more dishonourable and disreputable conduct can a man be guilty of, than to make serious charges against a fellow-citizen, without having any evidence to back it up. And whatever irregularities may have occurred, the great majority of all these statements and charges consisted of nothing but gossip from the lowest kind of characters. The hon. gentleman has given no new evidence on which to base a demand for an investigation. He had insinuated, to a great extent, that this transaction of the leasing of a water front was a very irregular one. I am not so sure that business is not done even in the older parts of the country, in a much less regular way; and we must not lose sight of the condition of affairs which existed in that part of the country at the time. It was a new country. Thousands of miles from communication, with a large number of people of all kinds, under the excitement of gold finds, rushing to the country, and with no government, municipal, or otherwise. Two or three gentlemen were sent up to represent the government, and they had to take hold of matters affecting this large influx of population and deal with them as best they could. What do we find in the evidence? We find that it was thought well to rent this water front, and we find further, that instead of tenders not being had tenders were received by Messrs Wade and Fawcett. Before the terms of the lease were settled with Messrs. Morrison & McDonald, tenders for the water front had been made to Messrs Wade and Fawcett. Mr. W. Rourke had offered to pay quarterly a rent of $3,000 per annum; Mr. D. Keizer had offered an annual rent of $7,500 for the whole front, or one of $120 for each lot of 25 feet; Messrs. Dunsmore, Spencer and McPhee had offered an annual rental of $25,000, payable monthly, in advance; Mr. John Cameron had offered a monthly rental of $2,050, and Messrs. Morrison & McDonald had offered one of $2,500 per month, or $30,000 per annum. A part of the tract, about 100 feet frontage, which it was proposed to reserve as a site for government offices, and all the front which extends from a point fifty feet to the north of Third Street to the Smith addition to Dawson, being all that afforded sufficient water for steamboat landing purposes, were excepted from the land covered by the lease. Evidently, therefore, the matter must have been pretty well known, since so many persons sent in tenders. My hon. friend states that Morrison & McDonald made a very large amount out of this transaction, but in support of that statement, he has furnished none but hearsay evidence. Well, on the other hand, I have heard it stated very frequently by people who have been in that country, that Morrison & McDonald complained very bitterly that during the excitement, they paid too much for the lease and lost money on it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. However, that may be, it is only a matter of hearsay. It seems to me, at any rate, that they paid a very heavy rent, and I am sure much heavier than could be obtained from the property now, under the regular system of leasing water fronts, and they were entitled, if they made a fair lease, to any profit they could make.

My hon. friend again asked for an investigation. But to investigate what? What evidence has he produced? Morrison & McDonald, who were both on oath, swore that all the statements made with regard to this transaction were untrue. Then he attacked Mr. Wade. My hon. friend seems to have no confidence in the legal profession. He seems to think that if a man once acts for an individual firm or corporation, he must necessarily be corrupt, and that any action he takes in the discharge of his professional duties, must be influenced by some corrupt motive. I was not aware that the legal profession was quite so bad as that. We find that Mr. Wade, on oath, flatly contradicts these charges, made on the evidence of parties who, no doubt, had reasons of their own for imputing improper conduct to Mr. Wade. Mr. Wade, under oath, said:

As to the other questions, whether I received a dollar out of the water front lease, I want to be most explicit and emphatic. A long time has elapsed before I had the opportunity of doing this. I have been industriously slandered throughout eastern Canada for a large portion of the year. Every dirty political pen and every mean pen that could be used to do me harm has been used. This is the first opportunity I have had of stating the facts under oath, and I say now that neither previous to the granting of the lease nor at the time nor since have I ever had any arrangement to receive a dollar from anybody, or did I ever receive a dollar for the leasing of the water front. This is the first opportunity I have had for saying so under oath.

As against the hearsay evidence of men of well-known bad reputation, men who have being proven since, in the courts of justice of Canada, to be men of bad repute, we have the sworn statement of a member of the legal profession to which the hon. gentleman belongs,—a man well known in Canada; of good standing in his profession, of very considerable talent, and always looked upon as an open, frank, outspoken, honourable man—and yet the hon. gentleman will give the preference to his hearsay evidence. As to the merits of the transaction, the hon. gentleman had to do a great deal of special pleading and hairsplitting to point out that it looked as if there was something suspicious. I am inclined to think that, whatever may have been the result as to McDonald or Morrison having made or lost money, this was a very fair arrangement and a very fair rental. The fact seems to have been that the interest of the public was carefully guarded. Mr. Wade, as a professional man and a man of some experience, realized that the conditions there might change and that others might soon be there to represent the government, with authority, while he was only acting as assistant, as it were, to Mr. Fawcett, the gold commissioner, who was overcrowded with the duties he had to perform, owing to the unexpected influx of population. Mr. Wade made the lease on the part of the government so that it was liable to be cancelled by the government within thirty days. I do not see that there is in this any ground for suspicion of his conduct; but, on the contrary, it is proof that it was not intended, as hon. gentlemen opposite have insinuated, as a job that they could make a lot of money out of. If that had been the object, they would have made the lease for a length of time. How could these men promise to pay Mr. Wade a large amount of money, when they did not know but that within thirty days they would have to leave the property.

Mr. CLANCY. They were pretty certain that they would have it for some time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They had no reason to be certain. The commissioner was soon coming in, and, so far as they knew, might cancel their lease at thirty days' notice. That was what they had a better right to expect. Mr. Wade knew, because he had accompanied him part of the way, that the commissioner was coming in. Instead of this very indirect insinuation that because Mr. Wade, acting for the government, took this precaution, I think it is a proof of the honesty of the transaction that it was made only a temporary and easily terminable lease, as the commissioner with authority, was coming in. In view of the sworn testimony of all the parties interested that there is not a word of truth in the charges made, I do not think that the House would be justified in spending a large sum of money, probably more than we receive from the lease, to investigate the case. We have a right to be influenced by the sworn testimony of Mr. Wade, who showed that he was only too anxious to make known the facts, who went before the commissioner and gave his evidence with regard to this subject. For myself, and I think I may say for the government, we should be most anxious to investigate if there was any reasonable evidence at all that the matter was one that ought to be investigated. But it is a long time since the event referred to took place, and, in view of this and of the fact that no new evidence has been brought out and of the sworn testimony of all the parties interested, voluntarily given, that there is no truth in these charges, it seems to me that there is no reason why a further investigation should take place at the present time.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Of all the lame excuses ever presented to this House, I think that we have just listened to is the lamest. It would not do credit to a twelve-year-old schoolboy, to say nothing of a minister of the Crown. Charges are made about as serious as any that could be brought against any man. Here is an officer of the government sent up to the Yukon with authority as clerk of the Crown, Crown prosecutor, and land commissioner. And we have it plainly charged that this man accepted a fee to represent a client in relation to a matter in which he was representing the government on the other side. In this bargain, he is the go-between of the two parties—he virtually makes the contract with himself. He lays down conditions that safeguard the public interest and then he takes a retainer from the party on the other side—whether he took it before or afterwards does not affect the case in reality—to represent their interests. He has been on oath and has not denied the fact, that he got $10,000 from his client for services done or to be done.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Surely, the hon. gentleman has not read the evidence.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quoted that, and gave the page.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) quoted somebody else as saying that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Two statements have become confused. Last June, I stated that a member of parliament, on the authority of Major Walsh had stated that Mr. Wade had received $10,000 out of this water front matter. The statement referred to by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is that given in the motion, the page of the evidence being quoted, that a witness swore before Mr. Ogilvie that Mr. Wade had told the witness that he had got a large amount from McDonald & Morrison after this lease, and the amount, he thought, was $10,000.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It was not for this transaction. Read the evidence.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. SPROULE. The question is not whether the money was paid immediately before or immediately after—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but whether it had any relation to this transaction.

Mr. SPROULE. There was no other transaction mentioned between these people and Mr. Wade.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the contrary, Mr. Wade positively swears that he got his money for professional services after that.

Mr. SPROULE. He admits that he was retained for a year.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Where is that?

Mr. SPROULE. It appears in the resolution, quoted from the evidence.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will allow me, I will give the page where it is stated that Mr. Wade got this money.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is what somebody else stated.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But Mr. Wade told him.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That all took place after the lease.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On page 227.

Mr. George being called and sworn, testified as follows:

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who is Mr. George?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not know that that is explained.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was he not one of the proprietors of the Nugget?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). And he had to leave the country.

Mr. FOSTER. His oath is just as good as another man's.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As to his having left the country, I do not know anything about that. My point has nothing to do with this man's credibility or otherwise. I say that after this man specifically swore to a statement made by Mr. Wade, and Mr. Wade being on the stand in the hands of counsel representing him, it is a singular thing that he did not contradict this statement in the sense that lawyers mean.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A man could not do it in more explicit language.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (reading):

Q. Will you be good enough to tell us what you know about the water front; you are conversant with everything. Tell the court all you know. I think that is the best way?—A. I should judge that any information at my disposal which you would be interested in, would be that regarding an interview I had with Mr. Wade regarding the water front. He was very frank in a great many matters, and, as is my wont, I put many impertinent questions. I remember one question distinctly: 'Mr. Wade, what part of this money did you get of this water front?' He said: 'I got no share of it.' I waited a while and repeated the question again: 'Is there any of this money coming to you?' He replied (by the way, I would like to preface my remarks by saying that this was a public interview; it was for the press; I had my note-book and pencil in my hand at the time). He replied, none, unless a certain fee he had received from Mr. Alexander McDonald could be considered in that light of a division of the profits. I got him to make me a statement of what that fee consisted. He said he had immediately after his decision, which gave Morrison & McDonald the water front, he had been retained by Alex. McDonald for his attorney for one year, and had been given a handsome bonus as a retainer fee. I asked him what the amount of the retainer fee was, but he didn't tell me; I asked him if it was $10,000, and while he didn't say (I don't recollect whether he said yes or no), he left the impression on my mind that that amount was the retainer fee.

The Commissioner—The amount can be ascertained.

It never occurred to the commissioner to ask that question of Mr. Wade.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is anything clearer than that, I do not know where to find it. Here is a transaction that takes place between an officer of the government and a firm who desires to get a very valuable water front. The officer of the government has it in his power to negotiate a bargain on behalf of the government, and he also has it in his power to negotiate a bargain on behalf of his clients, and he succeeds in doing it to the satisfaction of both. Immediately thereafter his services are retained for a year—I presume that is merely a pretext—and he gets for that a very large amount of money. Whether it is $10,000 or more is a matter of very little importance. The transaction is so shady in its nature that I say there is scarcely an honest man in Canada who could come to any other conclusion than that that money was given to him for the consideration that he in turn was giving to his clients. Yet the acting Minister of the Interior says that the government would be only too anxious and willing to investigate if there was anything to investigate. They are always anxious and willing to investigate, but when it comes to be done, no matter how shady the transaction is, they do not investigate. The acting Minister of the Interior says that the people of the country thoroughly understand this. Yes, I can tell him that they thoroughly understand that the whole management of the Yukon from first to last is rotten, there is no doubt whatever about that. There is not a man who has lived in that country, there is not a man who has been there and returned, unless he be a government official, but who speaks of it in exactly the same way. From every quarter of the country comes the same information, that the officials are rotten, that the whole management out there is rotten, that there is not an official in that country that cannot be bought up, and many of them are bought up over and over again. There is scarcely an official belonging to the government who has remained there any length of time but what comes back loaded with money. They have made immense wealth in a short time, not out of their salary, because their salary is not so large as to enrich them. They come back with large amounts of money, and they boast of it. Every person seems to know it except the government, and they plead ignorance or innocence. Now, the hon. gentleman says there has been no charge made and no fresh evidence. Here is evidence:

That the acting Dominion lands agent, registrar, clerk of the court and Crown prosecutor has accepted retainers, fees or remuneration for procuring or attempting or promising to procure grants or title or possession of Dominion lands.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Does the hon. gentleman call that evidence?

Mr. SPROULE. I call it an allegation, a charge upon which an ex-minister of the Crown is asking the House to grant an inquiry. And it is supported by a good deal of sworn evidence that cannot be refuted, no attempt is made to refute it:

That Mr. Wade, while holding the position of registrar of lands, clerk of the court and Crown attorney, was financially and personally interested in the disposal of lands known as water fronts.

That is the charge made by a responsible member of this House in his place in parliament, and yet the Minister of the Interior says there is no charge, that only flimsy allegations are set forth, unsupported by evidence from responsible parties. Yet an ex-minister of the Crown makes this statement, and stakes his reputation upon it, and is prepared to prove his allegations if only the government will afford him an opportunity:

That lots in the government addition of the town of Dawson were ordered by Major Walsh, when commissioner, to be properly valued and public notice posted so that the lots might be sold in accordance therewith.

But when they come to sell the water fronts there is no valuation put upon them, no conditions attached to the notice when asking for tenders. What is the nature of the tenders asked for? What information has been given to the public who are asked to tender? Why, the whole transaction bears on its face the features of jobbery from first to last. These lots were not valued, there were no conditions attached to the notices that were given out asking for tenders. Mr. F. C. Wade, the Crown prosecutor, the land commissioner, and clerk of the court, the man of all lines out there, entered into negotiations with certain individuals :

That without securing a proper or other valuation, and without issuing public notices, Mr. F. C. Wade entered into negotiations and carried on correspondence with certain individuals respecting the leasing of the said water front as in the case of one William Rourke, to whom Mr. Wade wrote with respect thereto that his application ' was duly recorded by me.'

Showing that he was carrying on negotiations on behalf of the government and doing it on behalf of his clients as well.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Will the hon. gentleman permit me to read one line ?

In fact we were going to require that the lessee should put up substantial buildings and have a sidewalk put in, with sanitary conveniences, and so forth.

Mr. SPROULE. Did they ever require that to be done ? Did the lease show that that provision was in it ? There was no lease whatever, nothing to show that the sidewalk was to be put in. And if it be a fact that the requirements of the lease demanded that they should make this outlay for public improvements, do you think any company would make that upon a month's lease, that they would make that outlay if there was not an understanding that they would retain it for more than a month, and that the lease would not be cancelled at the option of either one of these individuals at the end of the month's time ? The thing is so absurd that there is not a man who is capable of carrying on any financial or business transaction who would entertain the idea for one moment that such an arrangement did exist or could exist between the parties. I say that the very fact that the representative of the government, the land commissioner there, who was charged with authority and power to lease that land was acting with this firm and endeavouring to lease it, that he was leasing it to the firm with himself representing both sides of the transaction, shows that it is one calling for investigation. Wade testified under oath that his action was approved by the department at Ottawa. Then, we have the statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior, that it was never approved of. Who is telling the truth, the head of the department or his official ? Either one or the other must be saying what is not true, and we are not able to ascertain who is telling the truth. The hon. the acting Minister of the Interior says that there is nothing worth while inquiring into. He says that these allegations are not supported by evidence coming from a reliable source when the very reverse is the case. These are allegations made by a responsible member of parliament, and supported by sworn evidence that the hon. gentleman did not refute. Will the government allow an inquiry to be made ? The hon. gentleman informed the House that Wade had called for tenders, and that he had leased the water front on certain conditions. This is entirely inaccurate. There is no knowledge or record of any such conditions. If such conditions were laid down why were they not presented to the House as they should have been when the return was asked for ? We should have been in possession of them here to-day. The hon. gentleman does not say a word about that. He only refers to the conditions, but he does not say what record there is of them. What record have we that there are conditions attached to any proposition that we should receive tenders for the water front ? Then, we have the fact that, so far as the evidence discloses, and we believe it to be reliable, these men who leased the water front received over $120,000 a year for it, while all they paid the government was $30,000 a year. They could well afford to give away $10,000. It was a mere bagatelle, a mere trifle, a small percentage of the transaction, not even the percentage that a lawyer would claim who carried out a transaction of such importance. You may call it a retainer for his services, or a bonus, or a gift, or what you like. But it was a payment made to him for the purpose of controlling him in the discharge of his duty as an official of the government. All these allegations are made, and they are supported by evidence that this official has been doing other than his duty, that he has been guilty of acts for which he might be languishing in a penitentiary if properly prosecuted. Notwithstanding these charges made by a responsible member of the House, and upon his responsibility, the government come to the conclusion that there is nothing to inquire into, and therefore, they will not grant a commission. There is a day of retribution coming when the people will pass judgment upon them for their action in connection with this matter. They cannot hoodwink the electors of this country. The hon. gentlemen have a majority behind them to vote down and prevent an inquiry, as they did vote down an inquiry into the Yukon last year, but there is coming a time when public opinion will speak out in condemnation of their course. If the government will not take warning in time I can only tell them that the day is coming when they will wish they had granted this commission, or something to inquire into these charges, because they are charges of the most scandalous and corrupt work by an official of the government, and I believe that they are susceptible of proof if a proper tribunal is constituted and proper provision made to inquire into them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the resolution is put, I would like to say a word or two in regard to it. The hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) has taken the ground that everything in connection with this transaction, which has been brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), is perfectly regular. He has made a defence by using harsh language in regard to men who made certain charges which were investigated to a certain extent by Mr. Ogilvie. He has called them blackguards, he has said that they were guilty of crime, and that they have left the country. When challenged by the hon. member for Pictou to state whether he made that charge in respect to Mr. Armstrong, the Chairman of the Miners' Committee, and in respect to Dr. McDougall, who is a highly respected gentleman, now living in the Yukon, he did not venture to repeat his assertion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was Dr. McDougall examined?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Dr. McDougall was secretary of the Miners' Committee which made these charges.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did he swear to them?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) said that the men who had made these charges were blackguards, that they were guilty of crime, and that not one of them remained in the country. That is his attitude to-day in regard to this matter, that is the defence which he makes to a case of this kind, that these men are blackguards and scoundrels, and that they have left the country. That is why the charge against Wade was not investigated. That is the answer of the government to the motion which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has brought before the House. Now, he has ventured to join issue with my hon. friend, and he has told the House that tenders were called for and that specifications were stated. I would like some hon. gentleman on the other side of the House to show in any of the records, in any of the evidence on this question, that is available to the House, in any information which has been brought before the House, what these specifications were, and how tenders were called for. There is not one syllable of evidence to be found to support the hon. gentleman in the defence that this was a perfectly fair and regular transaction, a transaction in the public interest. He takes a position that would justify the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in removing him from his office as acting Minister of the Interior. He says that it is perfectly and regular thing for Wade, having given the so-called lease to McDonald & Morrison in this irregular manner, a lease which was subject to termination at the will of Mr. Wade himself, to accept a retainer or bonus of $10,000 from these very men. Let me put to the right hon. gentleman what the position taken by the hon. acting Minister of the Interior involves. Mr. Wade was an officer of the government, having charge of this matter at the time, subject to the control of the government, a control which they have never seen fit to exercise, because the hon. acting Minister of the Interior has stated that the government have not yet determined whether that lease was regularly granted by Wade or not. It is certainly a matter which in the public interest they should determine. Mr. Wade has seen fit to grant a lease from which it appears that Messrs. Morrison & McDonald made a profit of many thousands of dollars. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) stated here last year that the government had not yet come to a conclusion as to whether that lease was regular or not? Is it not high time that the government should come to some determination on the regularity of that lease; a lease from which, according to a return sent to the United States government, Messrs. McDonald & Morrison made a profit of $7,500 a month, or $90,000 for the twelve months. Yet, we have not the slightest information from the government as to whether that lease was regularly granted or not. Mr. Wade was acting for the government in respect to that. He was acting for the government exactly in the same way in which Mr. Sifton would be acting for the government if he were dealing with the matter at Ottawa. Suppose Mr. Sifton had granted to Messrs. McDonald & Morrison at Ottawa, a lease determinable at his will, for $2,500 a month, out of which they made a profit of $7,500 a month, and suppose that Mr. Sifton the next day took from the same Messrs. McDonald & Morrison a retainer of $10,000 to secure his legal services, would that be regarded as a proper style of administration in this country? Let us rest this case a little further. Suppose the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) was granting a contract to some person for a supply of engines and cars for the Intercolonial Railway; suppose Mr. Blair granted the contract, as Mr. Wade did in this case, subject to his determination at the end of one month, or two months, or any number of months; suppose that was a contract out of which the contractors could make a profit of $7,500 a month; would it be regarded as an administration of the affairs of this country in the public interest that Mr. Blair should take a retainer of $10,000 the next day from the men to whom he had given the contract? Suppose Sir Louis Davies, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, were to grant a profitable contract in the way Mr. Wade did. Suppose Sir Louis Davies, who is an eminent lawyer, should have his services retained by these very contractors with a fee of $10,000, would that be a matter into which it would be desirable to have an investigation or not?

The acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) has taken a most extraordinary position with regard to this matter. It makes not the slightest difference whether this retainer was given before or after, when we consider the peculiar terms of the lease; because if it were given before, surely no one would say it was a proper thing for Mr. Wade with one hand to be granting a lease to Messrs. Morrison & McDonald out of which they made a profit of $90,000 a year, and with the other hand for Mr. Wade to take a retainer from the $10,000 for legal services. If it were given after, then he accepts a retainer from persons whose title to a profitable lease depends on his will. Mark you, although Mr. Wade went into the witness box, we have not the slightest suggestion from him as to what were the legal services which he rendered to Messrs. Morrison & McDonald. Is it not desirable in the public interest that we should have some intimation as to what the legal services were, particularly in view of the statute which forbids any registrar or clerk employed in the land department of this country from engaging in any other business whatever. That statute was violated when Mr. Wade undertook to go outside of his duties as an officer of the government and to practise as a lawyer. The whole difficulty originated there. The Minister of the Interior was guilty of a very great fault when he undertook to give Mr. Wade any such permission as that. If Mr. Wade were to act as a representative of this government in parting with the public domain in the Yukon, it was not a proper thing that he should have received instructions from the Minister of the Interior that he could practise his profession, because that led to the very abuse which is complained of here. That an officer who is dealing with the public domain should take a retainer from the very people with whom he is dealing as a representative of the government, is certainly not conducive to honest and fair administration in Canada. I have stated that, in my opinion, it makes not the slightest difference so far as the necessity for the investigation arises, whether or not this $10,000 was paid to Mr. Wade before or after, and I will tell you why. If it was paid before it certainly was an improper thing that Mr. Wade, acting as a representative of the government, should be dealing with men who had given him so astounding a retainer as the sum of $10,000—or, to use his own language, 'a retainer which would be regarded as very high in the east.' If the money was paid to him afterwards, the position of Mr. Wade with respect to this matter is worse. The position, then, would be, that Messrs. Morrison & McDonald have a lease from Mr. Wade as the representative of this government which can be terminated at any time upon the will of Mr. Wade; and they secure Mr. Wade's goodwill, it might be thought—his determination not to act adversely to their interests, by the next day retaining him as their paid solicitor, and paying him $10,000 for services, as to which he has not seen fit to give us any information whatever. Therefore, it seems to me, that when the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) stands up in this House and uses harsh language with regard to the man who made charges which are not now in question, and then undertakes to say that this is a perfectly regular transaction, he takes a position which I should think the right hon. gentleman who leads the government would find it a little difficult to support.

It has been suggested by the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) that this matter has already been investigated before Mr. Ogilvie. Now, what kind of an investigation did we have before Mr. Ogilvie? We had Mr. Ogilvie sitting there as a commissioner, a gentleman without any legal training, a gentleman with no idea of what was evidence and what was not evidence, a gentleman without any practice in extracting the truth from witnesses. We had the government, so far as any question between Mr. Wade and the government is concerned, acting absolutely without counsel and depending upon Mr. Ogilvie. Any gentleman who examines this evidence can see with what degree of thoroughness Mr. Ogilvie inquired into the conduct of Mr. Wade in this matter. Mr. Wade, however, was represented by counsel. Not only was he represented by counsel in respect to this inquiry, but he took part in the investigation himself, and whenever the commissioner was getting on dangerous ground, Mr. Wade intervened and stopped any further inquiry. The very first thing that a counsel acting for the government in this investigation would have done would be to inquire of Mr. Wade as to the exact date of his retainer, as to the exact amount of his retainer, as to the exact services which he rendered to Messrs. McDonald & Morrison for that retainer. Not a word about that do we find in the investigation before Mr. Ogilvie. In fact, so far as any charge against Mr. Wade is concerned, the investigation from beginning to end is little more than a farce. The government, therefore, stands in this position, that this questionable conduct of Mr. Wade has not been investigated in any proper sense of the term. Mr. Wade, the representative of the government, did deal with Messrs. Morrison & McDonald, and did deal with them to their benefit, so that they made a very large sum out of this water front. He did that, being retained either at the time or immediately afterwards, by the very men who, through him, made that profit, and who, according to his own sworn statement, gave him a very large retainer. It is true that Mr. Wade says the $10,000 had no relation whatever to the water front, but was given in consideration of legal services. The exact point, then, comes up for inquiry as to what the legal services were, and why it happened that Messrs. Morrison & McDonald, at that particular time, saw fit to retain this particular person with respect to some particular matter which demanded so large a retainer as that. Now, I do not wish to weary the House, but I do think the administration of affairs of that kind, whether in the Yukon or anywhere else, demands inquiry. My hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior based his case to some extent on the fact that the Yukon was a distant country, that it required a long time to communicate with officials there, and that you could not possibly expect as regular a course of dealing there as you could elsewhere. Mr. Speaker, I join issue with my hon. friend in that respect. I say because the Yukon was far away, because it was difficult to communicate with officials there, the officials who were sent to the Yukon should have had instructions which would ensure, so far as instructions could ensure, a course of dealing which would have prevented abuses of this kind arising. The fact that the Yukon was distant and that it was difficult to communicate with officials or with opportunities such as these was a reason in the first place why his instructions should have prevented him engaging in such a transaction as this, which, to say the least, in the absence of an investigation on the part of the government other than that held by Mr. Ogilvie, will tend to raise suspicion in the minds of the public, and will tend not only to the discredit of the government, but to the discredit of Mr. Wade as well.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, before the House is called upon to pass judgment upon the motion, which has been introduced by my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), I would ask both sides of the House to consider very seriously and dispassionately the character of the accusation which is brought to-day by my hon. friend, and which we are asked again to investigate by judicial inquiry. The whole character of the accusation of my hon. friend rests upon one fact, and one fact alone. It rests upon the fact that Mr. Wade, acting at that time in his capacity as the land agent of the government, rented a certain property known as the water front of the Yukon River, to the firm of Morrison & McDonald. Having stated that fact, I ask the House to look at the conclusion of the motion of my hon. friend. It is in these words :

That in the interest of the public and of the public service, the matter of the leasing of the water front, and the connection of Mr. F. C. Wade therewith, and his relation with the successful tenderers, Messrs. Morrison & McDonald, require a prompt, thorough and impartial investigation under oath.

You would imagine, from the fact that we are asked to investigate the transaction which took place between Mr. Wade and Morrison & McDonald and the circumstances connected therewith, that the government had suffered from the action of Mr. Wade; you would imagine that Mr. Wade had sacrificed the interest of the country for the benefit of the firm of Morrison & McDonald, who were said to be his clients. If the transaction of which complaint is made really bore the character which I now describe, if it were contended and could be shown by any statement which has been made by my hon. friend, or by any fact which we have before us, that Mr. Wade, acting as land agent, had forgotten the duties he owed to the government whose agent he was, and had made a bargain by which the interests of the country had been sacrificed for the benefit of the party with whom the transaction took place, then I could understand that there would be something to investigate; but the transaction which is brought to the attention of the House does not at all bear that character. Taken by itself it is a very honourable transaction; there is nothing wrong in it; the interest of the government never suffered in any way at all. I call the attention of hon. gentlemen, on the other side especially, to the evidence which we have on this subject. I read from the report of Major Walsh, who, upon the facts, does not seem to be contradicted. This is what he said in his report :

I also found on my arrival at Dawson, that Mr. Wade and Mr. Fawcett, as the representatives of the Dominion government, had leased to Messrs. R. Morrison and A. McDonald, for $20,000 per annum part of the water front of Dawson. Before the terms of the lease were settled with Messrs. Morrison & McDonald, tenders for the water front had been made to Messrs. Wade and Fawcett. Mr. W. Bourke had offered to pay quarterly a rent of $3,000 per annum; Mr. D. Keizer had offered an annual rental of $7,500 for the whole front, or one of $120 for each lot of twenty-five feet; Messrs. Dunsmore, Spencer and McPhee had offered an annual rental of $25,000, payable monthly in advance; Mr. John Cameron had offered a monthly rental of $2,050, and Messrs. Morrison & McDonald had offered one of $1,250 per month, or $30,000 per annum. A part of the tract, about 100 feet frontage, which it was proposed to reserve as a site for government offices, and all of the front which extends from a point fifty feet to the north of Third Street to the Smith addition to Dawson, being all that afforded sufficient water for steamboat landing purposes, were excepted from the land covered by the lease. It was granted for but one year, and even this short term may be terminated by one month's notice from the government.

The transaction being one which I considered to be most satisfactory from every standpoint, I at once gave it my approval.

Now, Sir, what does this evidence disclose? It discloses the fact that a number of tenders were received for the lease of that property, that the highest tender was accepted, and that the price was $30,000 a year. But the charge of my hon. friend is supported by a second argument; the rent, though high, could have been made much higher. The rent, though high, did not really represent the value of the property, and for all we know it might have been $100,000 a year. Therefore, my hon. friend says if Mr. Wade could have obtained a much higher rent than he did obtain, high though it was, there must be some presumption of fraud in that respect. But, Sir, there is a conclusive answer to that assertion, and it is this: That the lease was made only for one year. The lessees were bound for one year; they had to pay the rent for that length of time, whether they found the transaction profitable or not. But—and this is a circumstance not to be forgotten—it was within the power of the government to terminate it at the end of one month. What greater precaution could have been taken than this? I ask any man in this House, who knows the confused condition of things that existed at that time in the Yukon, where rents were liable to great fluctuation, if that was not a most proper precaution on the part of Mr. Wade. Suppose it to be true that the government could have leased that property for $100,000 a year, as the hon. gentleman states Morrison & McDonald did afterwards get, this fact seems to be conclusive to my judgment that there could not have been on the part of Mr. Wade any desire to give any advantage to Messrs. Morrison & McDonald. He could not do that because it is stipulated that if the government found the price was too low, or if the government found it more advantageous to keep the property in their own hands, they could cancel the lease at any moment. Under the circumstances, is it not simply common sense to come to the conclusion that Mr. Wade could not have acted more in the interest of the government than he did. But even supposing, for the sake of argument, that he did wrong in leasing the property, he must have thought at the time that he was acting in the best interests of the government; and not willing to bind the government, keeping in mind that the values were likely to fluctuate, he put in a stipulation that if the government were not satisfied, they could terminate the lease on a month's notice. I do not see how he could possibly have exercised his judgment better.

But the hon. member for Halifax anticipating this argument, said this stipulation amounted to nothing because it was in the power of Mr. Wade himself to cancel or not to cancel the lease. I do not read the contract in this way. Mr. Wade did not keep in his own hands the power to put an end to the lease but reserved that to the government. Naturally what was in his mind was to forward the lease to the government at Ottawa, and then let the government, if they chose, put an end to it. That being the case, the contention of my hon. friend from Halifax, falls to the ground, that Mr. Wade kept this sword over the head of Morrison &

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

McDonald, to make them do just what suited him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Referring to the portion of the letter which I had in mind, I find that the lease gives power to the Dominion government, the gold commissioner or the Dominion lands agent to terminate it on giving one month's notice.

The PRIME MINISTER. But Mr. Wade was but temporarily land agent. It was never intended that he should be permanent, and shortly afterwards another man was appointed in his place, so that, not being the land agent, he could not cancel the lease himself. He was replaced by another official.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not the date, but I know that another agent was appointed long ago. Mr. Wade was land agent at the time no doubt, but he had gone in as Crown prosecutor, and as things were very much confused, he had been instructed to act as temporary land agent and was replaced shortly afterwards. So that when he put that power into the lease, he was not stipulating for himself because he was only there temporarily.

But my hon. friend says that the firm of Morrison & McDonald were the clients of Mr. Wade, and therefore we must read the lease in connection with that circumstance. If it were shown that Mr. Wade had sacrificed the interests of the country in favour of Morrison & McDonald, there might be something in the position taken by my hon. friend. You might say: No wonder, because Wade was the attorney of these men and there was personal interest between him and them. But if it be true that in that lease there is no advantage in favour of that firm as against the government, it matters not whether McDonald & Morrison were clients of Mr. Wade or not.

Moreover it is stated that Mr. Wade received $10,000 from the firm of McDonald & Morrison out of that transaction. What evidence is there of that? All the evidence which the hon. member for Pictou could discover was that of the man George, the proprietor of the Nugget. What does that evidence amount to? It simply amounts to this, that this man, who was a journalist by profession, was seeking an interview with Mr. Wade, and strange to say one of the questions he intended putting to Mr. Wade was whether or not he had not received money out of this particular transaction, or, in other words, whether he had not been paid unduly moneys by that firm. It appears to me that that was a very strange question for a journalist to put to a man from whom he was seeking an interview, but at all events Mr. George must have had a peculiar way of his own of managing these matters, for he said he put the question to Mr. Wade. Mr. Wade did not admit having received any money, but he gave an evasive answer, which Mr. George interpreted as an admission that he had received the sum of $10,000. That is all the evidence we have on this point.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That evidence is corroborated by Mr. Wade himself. Mr. Wade said that so far as George's statement as to the amount was concerned, he did not mention $10,000, but said that he had received a large retainer from these people at that time for his services.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, we have the evidence of Mr. Wade himself, who declared that he never received one cent out of that lease. If my hon. friend has the evidence of George, which purports to be an admission of Mr. Wade, is not the evidence of Wade just as good; and when Mr. Wade says, I did not receive a dollar, is not that as good, if not better evidence, than that which my hon. friend has submitted.

But that was investigated into by Mr. Ogilvie. Mr. Ogilvie is not a man learned in the law, but everybody admits that he is a man of very exceptional character and intelligence, and anxious to do right, and would not shield anybody who did wrong. The ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) now says that this investigation took place, but practically was broken down. But how did it break down? Simply because the parties who had made the charges against Mr. Wade and other Yukon officials virtually withdrew from the prosecution, and refused to appear before the commissioner. That is, after they had made the charge and when they were brought face to face with the accused parties and with their own allegations, instead of prosecuting these charges, instead of offering evidence, they practically withdrew from the prosecution and would not give evidence. But Mr. Wade, as an honest man, did not want to have this charge resting on his name, even though not prosecuted, and insisted on giving his evidence and upon having the facts brought out. And the result was that Mr. Ogilvie came to the conclusion that, from the evidence submitted that Mr. Wade was entirely free from the accusation with regard to the lease of the water front made to Morrison & McDonald. I submit to the intelligence and fairness of the House, I submit to the impartial judgment of the House, whether, when it has been shown that Mr. Wade made a transaction which was eminently satisfactory, in which there was nothing wrong, it would not be simply an act of persecution to have a further investigation into this matter? It seems to me that everybody will come to the conclusion that the matter should be considered finally closed, not to be reopened.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I do not intend to detain the House more than five minutes, but I am just going to state the case as it appears to my mind as a layman, and as, I am sure, it will appear to the people of this country. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), if I understand him, based the whole case upon this—that the country lost nothing by the action of Mr. Wade, and that the whole case is closed.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That is not exactly how I put it.

Mr. CLANCY. That was the strong point.

The PRIME MINISTER. No. My point is that this transaction which is made a reproach to Mr. Wade is one which, on the face of it, is absolutely fair and honest.

Mr. CLANCY. It might have that appearance, looked at in one way, but there is precisely the opposite side to the argument which the right hon. gentleman presented. The right hon. gentleman's contention was that Mr. Wade had guarded the public interest. And by what means? By means of retaining as a condition of the lease that it might be terminated at the end of one month. But looked at from the other side, what does that mean? It looks as though Mr. Wade exacted such conditions that nobody but one who was a party to a job would undertake it. The conditions were such that no sane man would undertake them unless he had protection—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Several other people offered nearly as much.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). One offered $24,600.

Mr. CLANCY. Very true, but I say that these conditions were such that no sane man would invest his money in an undertaking of this kind. They were obliged to build sidewalks, to undertake sanitary improvements and also to put up such buildings as would be suitable and substantial for those who wanted to occupy them. And yet, in the face of that—without provisions for damages in case of it being terminated, the lease might be terminated within a single month, or they might be compelled to keep it for a year. I ask if that is a transaction any one but an insane man would undertake?

Mr. BRITTON. People are taking leases from this government every day on just such 'insane' conditions.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) is a lawyer, which I am not. Every one knows that the Crown has a reserve power to terminate a lease. I am judging from common sense, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) should judge from common sense as well as from the knowledge gained in that profession of which he is a distinguished member. In the cases he speaks of, the Crown would not take away the lessee's right without compensating him.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Whether in the lease or not.

Mr. CLANCY. That would not make any difference.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so, and the same in this case; and everybody knew that.

Mr. CLANCY. I will take that as meaning that if the government had terminated this lease of Morrison & McDonald they would have compensated them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Or anybody else—that is what you are proving.

Mr. CLANCY. But, if that is the case, where is the protection to the public interest? The hon. gentleman must take one side or the other. Mr. Rourke was told, when he put in his tender that such conditions would be exacted. Did he put in another tender? He knew that it would be idle to do that. What complexion does all this bear except that of wrong-doing? Mr. Wade was a lawyer and knew there was a prohibition in the Land Titles Act by which he could not enter upon the practice of his profession without violating the conditions of his office. Is it denied that Mr. Wade disregarded every part of the Land Titles Act? Was Mr. Wade blind to the wisdom and necessity of putting such conditions in the Act? Not at all. But Mr. Wade did violate all these conditions from the start. And, having gone that far, what length could the government say he would or would not go? The moment he entered upon that course, in violation of the position he held as guardian of the interests of the people, he might fairly be suspected, and an investigation should have taken place. It is no use to say that the country did not suffer by this transaction, for it is not Mr. Wade's fault if the country did not suffer. But we are left to infer that Mr. Wade's receiving $10,000 in the way he did, was not a crime so long as the rental was paid under this lease. I think the country will take the view that in these transactions no man can serve two masters, and that a man cannot occupy such a position as that of Mr. Wade and represent private interests at the same time. He had one duty to perform, and he should have performed that duty or he should have resigned his office.

The government had winked at it, they had winked at that investigation. Everything has been conducted in a very slipshod manner, the investigation was of a very loose character, the people were not represented in any sense, but Mr. Wade was represented. Then, we take the conduct of the acting Minister of the Interior. Why, the whole transaction in his office is of so hazy a character that he knows nothing about it. He cannot tell what the condition of affairs is, whether Mr. Wade acted within his powers or not. All I can say is, that if Mr. Wade intended to pillage this country every opportunity was given him for doing so. If a great wrong has not come out of it, it is not because of want of opportunity to commit the wrong. Mr. Wade has been restrained in no way. He violated the law from the moment he put his foot in that country. He started out in a course of conduct in which it was impossible for him to act honestly. It would be almost impossible for any man to act honestly when he pursued such a course of conduct as Mr. Wade did. I have only this to say in conclusion, that the people of this country are convinced that there is every reason for suspecting wrong-doing on a great scale in the Yukon. If there has not been wrong-doing, it is a miracle. But the government refuse an investigation on the ground that it will cost something. Why, Sir, they could select no lower ground for refusing to investigate the grave charges that have been made over and over again into the administration of that country. The people of this country are quite willing to spend money in an investigation if it will act only as a check to prevent wrong-doing in the future. I say no lower ground could be selected than that the people cannot afford to pay the cost of investigating these charges. What is needed is to lay down a rule of conduct for our officers that will check them to a large extent and prevent similar scandals occurring there in future. The vast expanse of the country, the distance from the seat of government, the defective machinery—all this is an invitation to officials there to go wrong. Instead of the hon. gentleman pleading the cost as an excuse for not endeavouring to improve the administration, it is a reason for taking the precisely opposite course. Sir, I never more heartily supported a resolution in this House than I do this resolution of the hon. member for Pictou that the government should undertake to investigate these charges, for unless something is done, charges of a still graver character are likely to come before this House.

House divided on amendment (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

Organized Districts—Tuberculosis ..... $17,850

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) We must have an explanation of that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The item under discussion comprises $12,850 for organized districts of quarantine, and $5,000 for the further amount required for tuberculosis. These two items should not have been grouped together, as the quarantine relates to human quarantine and the other is for tuberculosis in cattle. The reason of this increased vote for quarantine this year is to provide for the increased expenditure at Williams Head, B.C., to provide quarantine as against Oriental traffic. We have had to do more there, as we have constantly to examine and fumigate all Orientals who come into the country, in consequence of the danger from bubonic plague. The staff has been increased, and a large amount of extra provisions have to be obtained for people coming in through the quarantine. Besides that we have had to add to the staff of Grosse Isle, Dr. Montizambert having said that it is absolutely necessary to provide a fumigating apparatus, to be able to fumigate the holds of any ships that might arrive with disease on board. No such ship has arrived yet, but we were obliged to engage another steamer, and get some more men who would be able to handle her. This has added $1,750 and $1,000, making $2,750. The extra arrangements at Williams Head have involved an outlay of between $4,000 and $5,000. Then, besides the preparations to keep out bubonic plague, we have had lately to spend considerable money in guarding against the introduction of small-pox from the United States. We have had to appoint a number of physicians all over the frontier, and I see an item here of about $3,000 for that.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Who are the physicians appointed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not certain that I have a complete list of them here. They have been appointed just recently. There are five or six in British Columbia, two or three in Manitoba, seven or eight in Ontario, and we have appointed an extra one in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Is that for small-pox?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is to guard against the danger of bringing small-pox in from the United States. I was in hopes at one time of the provincial authorities undertaking this, as being partly a matter for local boards of health, but the Department of Justice advised us that it is our duty, as a quarantine department, to deal with it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is the first time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the same thing was done in the latter part of the eighties.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think by the local authorities then.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, by the government at Ottawa. Physicians were then appointed at salaries of $100 a month all along the whole frontier.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). What do these men do?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They board trains and inspect everybody who comes from a district where they receive reports from the United States authorities that small-pox prevails. They are examined for vaccination.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed that there was a case at Windsor. Did the government look after that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, these physicians were not appointed then. It was partly in consequence of that case that these men were appointed.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he is quarantining all Chinese and Japanese that come to British Columbia? I see by the papers that six Chinamen have died in San Francisco, from what the press says is bubonic plague, and that Chinatown in San Francisco is strictly quarantined. There are vessels running all the time from San Francisco to Victoria and Vancouver, and they must pass the Williams' Head station. Are all Chinese and Japanese coming from San Francisco, Honolulu, China and Japan, quarantined for fourteen days?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, they are all fumigated, disinfected, bathed, and examined. Vessels coming from such a distance as Oriental ports, Dr. Montizambert does not consider it necessary to detain, if no disease is found on them. So far no vessel has arrived with any disease upon it.

Mr. PRIOR. Does not the hon. minister think that it would be a safe thing to quarantine all Japanese and Chinese coming from San Francisco?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I discussed that question with Dr. Montizambert, who, having received a report of the precautions which are being taken at San Francisco, where Chinatown has been quarantined, thought these precautions were sufficient not to require that we should detain these people.

Mr. PRIOR. I cannot help thinking that it would be a safe precaution to make them go into quarantine for a fortnight, because we do not want to bring that plague among our people if we can help it. They thought they would keep it out of San Francisco, but it has got in there, and there has been a fresh outbreak in Honolulu. In Vancouver and Victoria, there is quite a number of Chinese residents, and there may be danger of bringing it into Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will discuss it further with Dr. Montizambert. We are desirous of taking every precaution.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the hon. minister to say that these physicians were appointed to prevent the importation of small-pox on board the trains. Is there a physician at every point where a train comes from the United States?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not absolutely, I think. In Ontario they have been appointed at different ports, so as to intercept people coming from Michigan. I do not think there has been any person appointed at Windsor. I am speaking from memory, as I cannot state positively.

Mr. SPROULE. What is to prevent small-pox from being imported every day, unless there is some arrangement made at the different points where the railways cross, Niagara Falls, Windsor and the Tunnel. We might as well appoint none, as appoint a few, and allow intercourse to continue at places where railways cross the frontier.

Mr. PRIOR. Has the minister seen the report of Dr. Fagan, secretary of the provincial board of health in British Columbia. It is well worth reading. He gives a very good account of the bubonic plague. I have shown it to a good many medical men and they say it is a splendid report. It would be well if the Minister of Agriculture were to ask the province of British Columbia to send him a few hundred copies for distribution.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the names of the gentlemen appointed by the minister, and the localities in which they are appointed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They have been appointed within the last week or two and I have not the names here, but speaking from memory there is one at Fort William, one at Port Arthur, one at Sault Ste. Marie, one at Owen Sound or Collingwood or perhaps both, and one at Parry Sound.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there none at Windsor or at the Bridge?

Mr. PRIOR.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.
No.

Mr. SPROULE. What information has the minister about the tuberculosis test?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This vote is necessary in consequence of the very large demand for the testing of cattle for tuberculosis for the current year. I only asked $15,000 last year instead of $20,000 as the demand for testing was not so great the previous year and the vote was not expended, but this year, the demand has increased and the $5,000 is to pay outstanding accounts and to carry on the work.

Mr. SPROULE. If the cattle are found diseased, are they slaughtered?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are quarantined and the owner can slaughter them or not as he chooses, but he cannot sell the animals or their products.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the government pay compensation if the animals are slaughtered?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. The owner sends a written request to have the test made, and one of the conditions is that he shall not expect or receive compensation.

Mr. PRIOR. In British Columbia there is a veterinary surgeon appointed by the province who travels around testing the cattle throughout the province.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I had a conversation with Mr. Anderson, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in British Columbia, last fall, and he never told me about that.

Mr. PRIOR. I know very well about it, because I have a farm rented to a man and they destroyed forty of his cattle.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was probably on demand of the municipality that the cattle of the man supplying milk were diseased.

Mr. PRIOR. There is a Mr. Roper there who is paid by the provincial government, and he goes around making his inspection all over the province.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not know about that.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you want all this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You cannot separate the item. The particular item we desire is for the Paris exposition; and if it is necessary, any portion of the vote can be reserved for future discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. What is this money wanted for?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We got a vote of $175,000 for this year, and that vote was exhausted a week or two ago. The estimates supplied me from Paris show that on the 30th of June, we will require about $30,000 more to cover the expenditure up to date. I ought to explain that out of the amount of money voted we have been obliged to pay about $115,000 for space and buildings. It is the largest claim that has ever been made for accommodation at an exhibition. Not unfrequently the authorities have supplied the general buildings at a universal exhibition, but in Paris they have charged for the space granted to each particular country.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that known when the minister started out?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was not known at the time we accepted the invitation, but it came out very soon afterwards. The result is that we will have spent $115,000 on the space and buildings when they are paid for.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that cover all?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am speaking from memory of the estimate, but it will not be very much more, if any.

Mr. DAVIN. Does Mr. Tarte administer this money in Paris?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. The money is sent to the order of the commission in Paris, but Mr. Tarte has nothing whatever to do with the space. That was all arranged before Mr. Tarte was appointed.

Mr. FOSTER. What does Mr. Tarte do?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He represents Canada at the exhibition.

Mr. FOSTER. Tell us what he does.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He acts as chairman of the commission there and looks after the work generally.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he charge of the whole matter?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has charge of the matter in Paris now.

Mr. FOSTER. To what extent? Is he absolutely in charge?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I think I may say absolutely in charge since he has been there. While the preparations were being made on this side of the Atlantic in collecting the exhibits and making arrangements for the exhibits I acted as chairman of the board of commissioners. Mr. Perrault, one of the commissioners, was sent over rather early, and Messrs. Jardine and Scott were sent after. Mr. Tarte occupies the position of chairman of the commission in Paris in the same way as I did here in the early part of the work.

Mr. FOSTER. So that you have three commissioners there, and Mr. Tarte?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Do these commissioners act as a board, with the majority ruling?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not known them to have any vote or discussion as to that. Mr. Tarte being chairman, I suppose that if any difference arose his opinion would rule.

Mr. FOSTER. The business is not managed by the commission, but by Mr. Tarte?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By Mr. Tarte, with the advice of the commission, acting as chairman of the board.

Mr. SPROULE. We did not imagine, before we had this late statement, that we would have to pay so much for space.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That statement was made last year; but, I did not know that it was going to be so much.

Mr. SPROULE. When the minister found that it was going to cost anything like this, it would have been quite in place for the government to have withdrawn from the exhibition entirely. It is, in my opinion, a means of spending money for no good end. The minister says that Mr. Tarte is the chairman of the commission. I find by the press that he takes the responsibility of declaring that he will close up the exhibition if certain things are not done. That indicates that it is not the board that controls it, but Mr. Tarte, at his own sweet will. He seems to be credited with doing in Paris with the exhibition what he was doing here with the government. The minister says that by June 30 we shall have spent $205,000 on this exhibition, and I expect that it will be double that before we have done with it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, no.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister shakes his head, but the expenditure has gone so far beyond his expectation already that it is likely to cost a great deal more than we anticipate at the present time; and I do not think the country is getting any good return for this expenditure. I imagine there have been sent over to Paris a number of ornamental commissioners or heads of branches whose capability for spending money has no parallel in this country. A man who was at the exhibition in Philadelphia in 1876, Mr. Perrault, whose accounts have been scrutinized many times by the people of Canada, and which disclose such discreditable and extravagant expenditure of money as was never known before in connection with an exhibition, is sent to Paris to do practically the same work and exercise the same powers; and he has a man at his head with spending proclivities even greater than his own. This exhibition seems to be a means to enable certain gentlemen to go to Paris and have a good time there, go all over Europe and make speeches, and keep out of this House when it would be inconvenient for them to be here when inquiries are going on before the Public Accounts Committee, and when their estimates are going through this House. I am afraid that when we get to the end of this business, and come to look over the accounts, we shall have a very sorry exhibition of the expenditure of the country's money in a most extravagant and needless way.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been spent up to date?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $175,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the large items besides $115,000 for space?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have had the commissioners working a little over a year and a half—four commissioners. I ought to have said that in addition to the four commissioners specially appointed, there are four on the board who are public officials—Prof. Saunders, of the Experimental Farm; Dr. Dawson, of the Geological Survey; Prof. Robertson and Major Gourdeau. Major Gourdeau is in Paris at present, though he is coming back very soon. Prof. Robertson returned here yesterday, but I have not seen him since his return. The Hon. Mr. Gillmor was the fourth of the outside commissioners, but he was appointed to the Senate, and then ceased to be a commissioner. These commissioners were paid at the rate of $2,500 a year from the time they commenced their work, I think about February or the latter part of January of last year, and their travelling expenses when travelling in Canada at the usual civil service rates—actual travelling expenses and $3.50 a day living allowance in Canada and $5 a day while abroad. None of the officials who are commissioners draw any salary as commissioners. They get their expenses, but no additional salary.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the staff that Mr. Tarte has around him? He took over a number of ladies, I understand?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When Mr. Tarte went over, there were at that time in Paris Mr. Perrault, Mr. Jardine, Mr. Scott and Mr. Gourdeau. Madame Dandurand was appointed as a representative of the women of Canada. She went over at the same time that Mr. Tarte did.

Mr. DAVIN. What is her salary ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. She receives no salary, but she receives an allowance for living and travelling expenses. Another lady went over to take charge of the ladies room there, and to do official work under Madame Dandurand in connection with the meetings of women at Paris. Her name is Mademoiselle Barry, of Montreal. She is known in the newspaper world as 'Francoise.'

Mr. DAVIN. Is she connected with the Star.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. She wrote for the Star. I may say that there is another Miss Barry on the staff of the Star, who has gone to Paris as a representative of that paper.

Mr. DAVIN. Are they sisters ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. Then, there are two gentlemen from the Geological Survey, who are in charge of the mineral exhibit—Mr. Wilmot and Mr. Faribault. Mr. James Macoun, also of the Geological Survey staff, has charge of the forestry exhibit. These gentlemen receive no salary besides their regular salaries; they just receive their travelling expenses and living allowances. Mr. Cusson, of Montreal, is secretary of the commission; he receives $1,600 a year and expenses. Mr. Halkett went over with Major Gourdeau to help set up the fishery exhibit, and is in charge of it; he belongs to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Mr. Hay, of the Experimental Farm, who has been managing the exhibits of the Experimental Farm for several years back, went over to set up the agricultural exhibit. He is on his return now, having accomplished his work. Robert Hamilton, of Grenville, in the province of Quebec, went over in charge of the fruit exhibit.

Mr. DAVIN. What is his salary ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $6 a day, covering salary and living allowance in Paris. Actual travelling expenses from here to Paris and back are paid him. Mr. McKinnon took charge of Professor Robertson's cold storage and fruit products exhibits.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the cold storage arrangement ever found ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was arranged for satisfactorily.

Mr. FOSTER. It was lost for a while ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, but there was an unfortunate mistake. What is called the colonial building was for the accommodation of the British colonies. Canada has much the larger portion, but as it was not entirely given to Canada, what was called the colonial committee of the Imperial British Commission took charge of the building, and said we had no control of it in any shape. They informed us what it was going to cost us. The authorities of the Paris exhibition made a good deal of trouble as to the design, and insisted that the design should be submitted to them and accepted by them. When our commissioners went over, they were very much disappointed with the building, and Mr. Tarte has informed me that the building is not up to the specifications and plans accepted by us, and he has actually refused to make some payments on it. That is a matter still under discussion.

Mr. DAVIN. Who was the builder ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know his name. He was a contractor in Paris. The Imperial Colonial Commission made the contract with him according to plans which they sent to us, and which we accepted. We did not quite approve of them, but accepted them because we could not help ourselves.

Mr. DAVIN. Give us the names of all the officers over there.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is Mr. Turcotte, who has charge of the caretakers and cleaners in the exhibition, a gentleman from Quebec. He gets $6 a day, covering salary and living expenses. There is Mr. Hamilton and Mr. McKinnon, and H. C. Knowlton, and Mr. Como and Mr. Stewart, all getting the same rate. Mr. Como is a gentleman from Nova Scotia, and Mr. Stewart is from British Columbia. I have tried, as much as possible, to get representatives of the different parts of the country, so that questions on the part of foreigners regarding Canada might be answered by people who knew the different parts of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you administer the financial portion ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The board of commissioners was given a list of salaries, and the payments are made on the signature of two commissioners. An amount is put to the credit of the commissioners in Paris.

Mr. FOSTER. What latitude has Mr. Tarte as to expenses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are a number of incidental expenses of all kinds, and these have been left largely in the hands of Mr. Tarte and the board of commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. Without any restrictions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They knew what the vote was when they went over there.

Mr. FOSTER. They did not know that the hon. gentleman was going to ask for another $30,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A statement of the probable expenses was supplied me by Mr. Tarte and the commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. He has fixed the expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In one sense. The buildings was not by any means up to the specifications, and the interior was very bald and ugly. Mr. Tarte cabled me that he found it absolutely necessary to do something in the way of decoration. He and the members of the board had gone over and discussed it, and made up their minds that they would have to spend the sum of $3,000 or $4,000 on the interior of the building in the way of decoration and improvements.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that authorized ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It was stated in the newspapers that Mr. Tarte said that unless so and so were done, he would close the exhibition ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to believe the newspaper report.

Mr. FOSTER. Nor I. But I think the minister should have informed himself.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not think it worth while to cable over about the matter.

Mr. U. WILSON (Lennox). Why was Mr. Tarte sent to Paris at this particular time when he ought to be here answering for his department. I find that a most extraordinary proceeding. If he is able to discharge his duties there as commissioner, he ought to be able to discharge his duties here as Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is pretty well known that Mr. Tarte was in Paris last year, and submitted to a surgical operation of a very difficult character, from which he suffered a good deal. He returned, unfortunately before his recovery was complete, and went on with his work here as long as he could, until finally his physician recommended him to go back to Paris and put himself under the care of a physician and surgeon there. He was going to Paris in any case on account of his health, and we believed that he was quite able to do the work as commissioner of Canada, notwithstanding the somewhat failure of his health.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that Mr. Tarte not only performs his mission as chairman of the commission, but has been running frequently between London and Paris on other business. I understand that the hon. gentleman is not only directing this commission as chairman, but he has been running from Paris to London on other business ; he is not only doing the business assigned to him, but other business as well ; and we constantly see in the newspapers, reports of statements he has made. He can hardly be in such a very bad state of health as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher), says, or he would confine himself to the work that is absolutely necessary. In fact, if he is so sick a man, as has been stated, I do not see why he should go into this work at all. The country is quite willing to pay a minister who has faithfully discharged his duties, even should he be laid aside for a time. I think it gives greater reason for our complaints that the minister is not here to answer necessary questions in supply, when we find him in London and Paris making these unfortunate speeches.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). This message is the most extraordinary one we have ever had. I do not think that we have had such experience in regard to any other exhibition. My hon. friend (Mr. Fisher), may shake his head. There is a vast difference between the World's Fair at Chicago, or the Indian and Colonial at London, so far as their actual value to this country is concerned, and the Paris exhibition of the present year. My opinion is that if $25,000 were spent on behalf of the Canadian people for the Paris Exposition of this year, that would be enough. This large expenditure, is money almost wasted. I would like the minister to say what return the Canadian people may expect for these two or three hundred thousand dollars that will be spent ? I think it is an outrage. As the hon. minister knows, I am not one of those who make charges off-hand, with regard to the public service ; but I think it is simply an attempt to afford this man and that man passage to Paris at the expense of the government of Canada. I am not making any invidious distinction between the parties, but I think the government are simply acting in this matter without check or hindrance, and that there is a wasteful scattering of the public funds which will bring practically no return to Canada. The extravagance of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), is well known. His liberal ideas when he is seeking public money, we all recognize. I think that the Minister of Agriculture is acting very unwisely in giving to that colleague the power to spend public money there, or he is acting unwisely in spending it on that colleague's advice. We understand that a gentleman of Mr. Tarte's proclivity for popularity, is exceedingly anxious to cut a swell figure in Paris during this exhibition, and he does not care a rap—I say that advisedly—what it costs the people of Canada; nor does he care whether we get any return for that expenditure or not. There are ways in which money can be spent in the older lands which would be a very great advantage to Canada, but in my judgment, this is not one of the ways; and I believe that, when the hon. minister (Mr. Fisher), comes to submit the details of these accounts to parliament, he will find that extravagance of the very worst type has been indulged in by the people he has sent there, people who practically have the management of affairs in their own hands. The original vote was a sufficient vote, and the government should have tied the commissioners down to that. There does not seem to have been any order or proper arrangement or organization of the men in the beginning. We had this man going to Paris, and that man returning, and a general flight across the ocean of people connected with the government; and all the while Mr. Tarte is over there, and sending requisitions for more money. I do not want to utter any insinuations, but it appears to me, that nine-tenths of the money that is being spent will not bring a dollar of return to the Canadian people.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I realize that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague), is speaking as he considers, very moderately in regard to this matter; and I know he is not disposed to cavil at expenditures. But I think he is putting an unfair statement before the House in regard to this matter. In the first place, I do believe most sincerely, though I regret to differ with the hon. gentleman—that a large expenditure to make Canada cut a good figure at the Paris exhibition was a most justifiable thing on the part of this country. I am satisfied that the Paris exhibition this year will attract the greatest crowds of people ever gathered together on earth. I understand from those who have written from there, and also from one or two gentlemen who have been there, in a private capacity, that this is the case. They said that Paris was crowded in an extraordinary degree with people from the ends of the earth. It would have been a great pity had Canada not been adequately represented. I am glad to say, from statements made to me, by those who have seen it and also from reports from our own staff, that our exhibits are fine in quality, and are now exposed in such a way as to make a most excellent display. I understand that our exhibit of agricultural products is the finest thing of its kind at the exposition, and has attracted universal attention and admiration. Our mineral exhibit, while not on the grand scale of some of the United States, is still spoken of as of the highest quality, and as showing in a very marked degree the varied resources of this country. And so with many others of our exhibits. I may say also that the people of Canada showed a disposition and desire to exhibit at Paris. True, some of the manufacturers found themselves so busy that they were unable to prepare an exhibit, while some others did not send as much as they intended—not from any lack of a desire to do so, but because their factories were working overtime, and they were so busy they could not undertake to get up an exhibit. Notwithstanding that, however, we have what I venture to think is the finest exhibit of manufactured articles that has ever been sent out of Canada, without any exception. I think the Canadian exhibit will attract attention, not only from the people of France, but from a large number of people from other countries who are there, people from our own empire, people from all the countries of Europe, as well as our own rivals from the United States, and from Australia, who are in the habit of sending food products to the same markets that we do. With regard to what the hon. gentleman has said about the comparison of expenditure between this and other exhibitions, I have not under my hand at the moment the expenditure at the Chicago exhibition, or at the Indian and Colonial. But I may say that the expenditure at the Chicago exhibition, speaking from memory, was vastly greater than that which has been incurred or will be incurred for the Paris exhibition; and that, notwithstanding the fact that Chicago was at our own doors, while Paris is 3,000 miles away. As regards the officials, the hon. gentleman thinks that they are extravagant, but I can assure him that the commissioners have not been so at all. The arrangements that we made with our employees there were somewhat different from those made at other exhibitions. They are paid so much a day to cover both salary and living allowances, and in that way the payments made may compare favourably with those that were made at the Indian and Colonial exhibition, or at the Chicago and former Paris exhibitions. There is not that extravagance which the hon. gentleman believes to exist. It is true that the Minister of Public Works, who has been given, as was proper to a gentleman in his position, and occupying the post he occupies there a somewhat free hand. But I do not think the hon. gentleman need be afraid of what the Minister of Public Works will do, although I grant he wishes to see Canada worthily represented there and to make a good showing. Still, he has a regard for the way in which the money is spent, so I am not at all prepared to accept the strictures which the hon. gentleman has made against my colleague in that respect. I acknowledge that I regret the great expenditure in connection with space. At Chicago we did not have to pay for space, at the Indian and Colonial I do not think that we paid for space, at least not nearly so much. I am quite willing to admit that is a heavy expenditure at Paris, and one which I hardly think is proper in this sense, that I do not think the Paris authorities ought to have charged for space when they were inviting people to go to their exhibition. But still that was a rule of the exhibition which was laid down, and we either had to accept it or not go at all. But, believing, as I do, that Canada will reap a great benefit from this exhibition, I would have felt that we could hardly withdraw. I venture to say that the exhibition will redound greatly to the credit of Canada. I am glad to be able to say that I have received a couple of letters from exhibitors, which have just come in, one from the Massey-Harris Company, and one from Mr. Burton, an exhibitor of manufactured articles, both of whom express themselves as extremely pleased with the way in which they have been treated by the commissioners and the way in which the exhibits have been cared for. The Massey-Harris people are especially enthusiastic in praise of the management of the Canadian exhibit as a whole. I am glad also to be able to say that although there was at first some delay, and the exhibition was not ready at the date it was opened, as no part of it was ready then, or is quite ready yet, our Canadian exhibit was one of the most forward and ready of any exhibit in Paris.

Mr. DAVIN. What does this enormous staff find to do ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The staff are there to give explanations and information in regard to Canada, to look after the exhibits and see that they are properly installed; and having been installed, and set up, and properly prepared, they are there to watch over them and to give explanations in regard to them, in regard to Canada, and the way these things are produced in Canada, and to give such information as commissioners usually do at exhibitions.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the minister should tell us just how much money has been spent up to date, and how it has been spent.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can give the hon. gentleman the amount in a rough form.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think we should have it in a detailed form, because to my mind this money is being absolutely wasted, thrown away entirely, and if we spent it in establishing our reputation for food products in British markets instead of throwing it away in Paris on what I see one of the American papers calls an aggregation of fakes, it would be a good deal better for Canada. In my judgment, when the government found out that it was a money-making speculation and that a large amount was being charged for space, they would have been justified in retiring at once, and I think they ought to have retired. As to the advantage that is going to come from it to Canada, that is largely a myth. In my judgment nine-tenths of the money will be wasted. Before we vote any more I think the minister ought to tell us just how the money has been spent, and what it has been spent for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As I have already mentioned in answer to the hon. member for York, N. B., $175,000 has been spent.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How has that been spent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The items are here. Placed to the credit of the High Commissioner in London, $88,573. That was spent for the building. Below that another item, $16,800—

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much did the building at Chicago cost ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the Canadian building cost us about $40,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. More like $4,000. I happen to know.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I know, too. I am speaking from memory, but it was certainly nearer $40,000 than $4,000. But I want to point out this which the hon. gentleman knows very well, that the Canadian building at Chicago was not for Canadian exhibits at all; it was simply used as a reception room for visitors and that kind of thing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We paid for no space in that building.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I grant that.

Mr. BERGERON. It did not cost $40,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It certainly did not go to $10,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will bring the item down. The whole cost of the Chicago exhibition was something like $360,000. Then Mr. Perrault, when he went over to Paris, was given a credit of £1,000 for commencing the work and installing the exhibits.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How was that spent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got the details of that expenditure.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We ought to have these accounts in by this time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Perrault went over there to receive the exhibits as they were shipped from here. Somebody had to receive them there, to see that they were placed, and to pay freights and charges on them. We could only pay the charges here on the ship, and Mr. Perreault had to pay the charges from Antwerp to Paris, the charges of bringing them to the exhibition building in Paris, and storing them there until the building was ready. The government paid the expense of carrying the exhibits to Paris from Canada and setting them up, as has been done in every other exhibition.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it true that when Mr. Tarte arrived there he found things in a very unsatisfactory condition?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to use that word, but it was found that our building was not by any means ready and the exhibits were not placed. That is not the fault of our commissioners, but because the contractors, whose contract was with the colonial commission of the Imperial commission, had not lived up to their contract. That is the money we paid under contract.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What was the amount of the contract?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not tell you off-hand. This payment amounted to $88,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is Mr. Perreault going to account for all the moneys he received, and show how he spent them?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe that Mr. Perreault has been sending in accounts periodically.

Mr. BERGERON. Could not we have his accounts here?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will give the items of them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Perrault's items were very interesting in 1875.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These are on a different scale, and under different management.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is he the same gentleman?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but working differently. The system of accounts is entirely different. These gentlemen are given an allowance for living. In Philadelphia the Canadian commission engaged a house and got living expenses in that house.

Mr. BERGERON. How are they in Paris?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are paid so much a day, and allowed to do as they like.

Mr. BERGERON. Where does Mr. Perreault board?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know and do not care.

Mr. BERGERON. Does not the hon. Minister of Public Works keep house there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand the hon. Minister of Public Works keeps house there, and that it is paid out of the money furnished him by the government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No; if he does keep house he does it at his own expense.

Mr. DAVIN. Is there any limit as to what the hon. minister spends?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not fixed any per diem allowance.

Mr. DAVIN. He spends what he likes.

Mr. BERGERON. I have heard it rumoured in Montreal that the hon. Minister of Public Works keeps house in Paris, and that it is being paid for at the public expense.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. His wife has engaged a house there at her own private expense.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman says that the Minister of Public Works has a free hand. We know what the hon. Minister of Public Works is, and with his chauvinism in the most exalted state, we can easily understand how the money will go.

The PRIME MINISTER. They are very thrifty in Paris.

Mr. DAVIN. Thrifty some are, but, not the high kickers with whom the hon. Minister of Public Works associates.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They are very spendthrift.

Mr. DAVIN. The Minister of Agriculture represents the vast portion of the people of Canada, and it is a most important portion. We have not yet heard it explained to us in what way the agricultural population of Canada will be benefited by this exposition. We have an army of officials, an army of ladies and gentlemen taken over—some twenty-four in all. I spent two months at the Philadelphia exhibition, and I observed Mr. Perreault when he was a younger man than he is now. Twenty-four persons are going in connection with this exhibition. The hon. gentleman said that there was no jobbery. We have Mr. Gillmor, Mr. Jardine, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perreault and Mr. Tarte. What Scott is that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. W. D. Scott of Winnipeg.

Mr. BERGERON. What Gillmor is that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Gillmor is now Senator. He has resigned his position.

Mr. BERGERON. Who has replaced him?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has not been replaced.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Gillmor is a Senator. We are glad that there will be so much political economy in the Upper House. I have no doubt that it will be a great advantage, but on the face of it, can it be supposed that that was not a job? Mr. Gillmor was not needed. This has been proven because he was not replaced. As the representative of an agricultural district I want to know how their interests are to be subserved by this exposition, in which a building will cost us at least $115,000. When the exposition is over, will it be in any way an asset to the people of Canada?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The implement building near Vincennes will be sold for our benefit.

Mr. DAVIN. Fancy $115,000 for a temporary building.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Part is for space, and part for the building.

Mr. DAVIN. The whole thing is a monstrous use of that extravagance and recklessness which touches everything that the hon. Minister of Public Works is connected with from the first hour that his fatal malignant hand has laid its touch upon the ministerial life of Canada up to this.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the names of the ladies who are there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is Madame Dandurand and Mademoiselle Barry.

Mr. DAVIN. Are there any other ladies there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is Miss Galbraith and Miss Leboutilier, who are acting as typewriters.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the work of these ladies?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mde. Dandurand represents Canada at various conventions of ladies' organizations which are going to meet in Paris. The World's Women's Council will meet in Paris this summer. There is a large number of congresses going on during the period of the exposition.

Mr. BERGERON. Has anything of the kind taken place yet?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think any great congress has taken place, but there are meetings of ladies who are engaged in various branches of women's work.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. BERGERON. What advantage is that to Canada?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All countries are represented.

Mr. BERGERON. Madame Dandurand and Mlle. Barry are the lady commissioners?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Madame Dandurand is the commissioner, Miss Barry is an assistant.

Mr. BERGERON. And I suppose the correspondence which she sends to La Patrie is paid for by the country?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I stipulated with Miss Barry that she should send reports regularly to the papers.

Mr. BERGERON. And she sends only to La Patrie?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And to La Presse.

Mr. BERGERON. No.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. She sends to La Presse, but they may not publish them.

Mr. BERGERON. What do those other two ladies, Miss Gailbraith and Miss Bouthellier, do?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a ladies room where the ladies rest, and meet and gather and talk over things, and one of these young ladies is there all the time. They have their typewriters there, and they do the correspondence of the exhibition.

Mr. BERGERON. They are Madame Dandurand's typewriters?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No; they do the typewriting work for the whole commission.

Mr. BERGERON. Are there no other ladies there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Is not Mrs. Turcotte there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. She is in the Public Works Department and acts for the minister.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Surely the Minister of Public Works does not want his secretary and an extra typewriter on the other side of the Atlantic?

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Tarte has his secretary there—Mr. Haines—and Mrs. Turcotte is his typewriter as well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was not aware that the secretary was there. He is not on the Paris staff.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What are we coming to? The minister goes away for his health, and he takes his secretary and his typewriter. Is there any place where the men gather and meet and rest and take something?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a reception room in charge of Mr. Cusson, the secretary of the commission.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Tarte has his secretary there, and I suppose he pays him out of this $50,000 vote?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know anything about his secretary. If he has a secretary he is not paid out of the vote for the Paris exposition.

Mr. BERGERON. What does Mrs. Turcotte do?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know. She is not connected with the exhibition.

Mr. BERGERON. She is connected with the master of the exhibition.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That may be, but she is not paid out of this vote.

Mr. BERGERON. How does the minister know how these people are paid when he does not know any of the details.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Tarte informed me that he was going to take a typewriter, whether Mrs. Turcotte or not I do not know, but she was not to be paid out of the Paris vote. He said he might take his secretary, but I do not think he did. I am not speaking from absolute knowledge about that, but it is not to be paid out of the Paris vote.

Mr. BERGERON. The minister gave Mr. Tarte $50,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not.

Mr. BERGERON. Where did he get it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. It has been said here and never denied, that Mr. Tarte was given a credit of $50,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. Who said it?

Mr. BERGERON. I think the Prime Minister did.

The PRIME MINISTER. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. BERGERON. My right hon. friend has been sleeping for the last hour and he forgets.

The PRIME MINISTER. I remember what I said.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, what amount of money was given the Minister of Public Works when he left?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Three thousand dollars.

Mr. BERGERON. At an expensive time like this in Paris, where does the Minister of Public Works get the money needed to keep up the life he is living, and to keep up all this suite, with secretaries, &c.?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. Where did this $175,000 go to, then?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $88,573 went to the High Commissioner in London, $4,866 to Mr. Perreault—

Mr. BERGERON. Did Mr. Perreault get that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, and more too.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think Mr. Perreault had the expenditure of the amount sent to Paris, except what was sent to the High Commissioner. There was $3,800 sent to Mr. Hector Fabre for bills that had accrued there before the commissioners arrived, and there is a departmental item of $40,000, which, I suppose, means salaries and expenditure in preparation of the exhibition before the commissioners went over.

Mr. BERGERON. To whom was that $40,000 paid?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The accountant of the Department of Agriculture has the details.

Mr. BERGERON. Cannot we see them?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose so, but it is not usual to lay the departmental accounts before the House.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, we should remember that we are voting the money of the people here. I am convinced that a great deal of money is spent for nothing. It is the best thing that the government could do to give us details, because then we would be in a position to defend the government over this.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very likely.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is an item of $15,000 for printing maps, &c.

Mr. BERGERON. Who was that paid to?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the details here.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, we should not allow this vote to pass until we get the details. Here is $175,000 spent here, and the minister does not know how a cent of it was spent. Has Mr. Tarte the disposal of all this money?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, how is it spent?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is paid out on the signature of two of the commissioners.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it true that Mr. Tarte has been authorized to go to Brussels and deliver lectures to Galicians and Doukhobors to invite them to come to Canada?

The PRIME MINISTER. Do you believe all that?

Mr. BERGERON. I am telling the government what I believe. I believe a lot of things that are bad for the government. I saw a letter of Father Lacombe's stating that he is going to Brussels with Mr. Tarte to see the Galicians and invite them to settle in the North-west, and that he is going to Austria to ask the Emperor of Austria to help the Catholics who are in the North-west. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if the government have authorized Mr. Tarte to do that?

The PRIME MINISTER. If Mr. Tarte were to go to Brussels I would not be surprised at all; but if he were to go to Vienna or to Galicia, I would be surprised.

Mr. BERGERON. That is no answer. Has the government or the right hon. gentleman authorized him to do so?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Tarte has been authorized to go to Paris as commissioner. If he takes a holiday to go to Brussels. I do not think he needs anybody's permission.

Mr. BERGERON. I am asking the right hon. gentleman a fair question. Is Mr. Tarte authorized to go and give lectures or conferences at Brussels or in Austria, and invite any one to come to Canada? If Mr. Tarte is not authorized, how does he dare to go and travel at the expense of Canada?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not suppose that Mr. Tarte has to go to Austria to lecture to the Doukhobors; but if Mr. Tarte found time to go to Brussels to lecture on Canada, I would quite approve of his doing so, and he would not require the authorization of the government. I think it is quite within his duties.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think so. We all know that Mr. Tarte has been the master of the administration in Canada for years. But he could not be here during the session; he went across because he was supposed to be sick, which I do not believe, because a man doing the work he is doing there must be one of the strongest men in this country. I do not think he should be there and have a free hand in the expenditure of the money of this country, for we know the man, and we know that he is not scrupulous in the expenditure of money that belongs to the people.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order.

Mr. BERGERON. I am perfectly in order.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman is not in order when he says that the Minister of Public Works is not scrupulous in expending public money.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not in order. The expression he has used is too harsh to be used in debate.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the rule? I am here as a representative of the people, and I have rights.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has been called to order for using an expression which should not be used according to the ordinary rules of debate.

Mr. BERGERON. I contend that it is not against the rules. I think I know the rules a little, and I have a right to use the word unscrupulous, and to say that a minister of the Crown is not scrupulous.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. If the word unscrupulous were used alone, I would not say that it was quite a polite expression to be used in debate, but the hon. member used it in such a way as to insinuate some charge against the minister.

Mr. BERGERON. I said that the Minister of Public Works was not scrupulous when he spent public money, and that is not against the rules. We have the proof of that. He has increased the expenditure in every part of his department; that means that he is not scrupulous. He has given contracts without tender; that shows that he is unscrupulous. I have used a word which I find in the dictionary. The Minister of Public Works is a spendthrift and an extravagant man. Will that do?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no use of discussing that question. I understand that the hon. member does not want to charge the minister with doing anything that is contrary to morals.

Mr. BERGERON. As far as morals are concerned, I will leave him in the hands of Almighty God. I am not talking about morals—I will leave that to his own conscience.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I mean anything dishonest.

Mr. BERGERON. I will not use the word dishonest. I mean it, but I do not use the word. I want to get every possible detail of the public money that will go through the hands of the Minister of Public Works. If my right hon. friend were in Paris at the head of that commission, I would not ask for the details of one dollar's expenditure, for I have confidence that he would not spend one cent that was not necessary. I have not that confidence in the Minister of Public Works, judging by his conduct since he has been a minister over his department. I have confidence also in my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher); but I want every possible detail of the money spent at Paris by Mr. Perreault and Mr. Tarte. Before we vote this item I would like to get from my right hon. friend to whom the money has been paid, how it has been spent, and the vouchers. I know it has been said that the Minister of Public Works went across there because he was sick; but he could not be doing the work he is doing there if he were sick.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is close to his physician.

Mr. BERGERON. He will very likely bury every one of us. When I asked the right hon. gentleman whether he had authorized Mr. Tarte, who is in Paris as commissioner of the exhibition, to go around from one country to the other, and ask for immigration, the hon. gentleman said he had not asked Mr. Tarte to do so, but if Mr. Tarte did so, he would be ready to say he did right.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the hon. gentleman unbounded confidence in Messrs. Tarte and Perreault in the matter of economy?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe they are doing things as economically as they can.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What evidence have you?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My knowledge of the men.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend will lose my confidence, if he goes on talking like that.

Mr. SPROULE. What is likely to be the whole cost of the exhibition?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have asked in the estimates for next year, $50,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is safe to say the exhibition will cost $350,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should hope not more than $300,000.

Mr. SPROULE. With regard to the statement of the hon. minister that he pays no attention to newspaper reports, we see a report of the doings of Mr. Tarte, which was published, I think, in La Patrie, and which stated that he had refused to allow the representative of the British Empire to include Canada as a portion of that empire, and absolutely insisted on Canada being recognized entirely independent of Great Britain. He even went so far as to threaten that if President Loubet would not treat Canada as such, he would close the Canadian exhibition. That statement was published in many papers, and yet the hon. minister would not take any cognizance of it. It appears to me Mr. Tarte's conduct was too high-handed and significant to allow it to pass without comment. This indignity and insult to the British Empire is entirely incompatible with his duties and responsibilities.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman puts a different complexion on a newspaper rumour than from what I have gathered from any paragraph I have seen. I did see a paragraph to the effect that some question had arisen between Colonel Jekyll, the secretary of the Colonial Commission of the Imperial Commission, as to the precedence of the Canadian commissioners at the visit of President Loubet to the colonial building. I did not see any statement or suggestion that Mr. Tarte wished to divorce Canada from the empire in any way whatever.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what the papers say.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is absurd. Mr. Tarte did not dream of such a thing. As to the exact particulars, I have no official information, but no doubt will get particulars in letters from Paris, and will be glad to give them to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman took no trouble to get any information?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not think it worth while cabling about it.

Mr. SPROULE. If the statement is correct, it was a very high-handed and uncalled for proceeding on the part of Mr. Tarte, and quite out of keeping with his duties in the position he holds. It shows a great deal of carelessness and indifference on the part of the Prime Minister, as well as the Minister of Agriculture, not to take steps to ascertain whether the report was correct or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. I should deem it my duty to investigate any charge which would have some foundation, but when my hon. friend appears to think seriously that Mr. Tarte attempted to separate Canada from the British Empire, the charge is so absurd that if he is prepared to believe it, I am not. But if Mr. Tarte insisted that Canada should be considered separately by President Loubet as being a self-governing colony, having its own autonomy, I cannot blame Mr. Tarte for that. That would be quite consistent with our position in the empire. We are part of the empire, and are proud of it, and the British flag floats over our building. But if Mr. Tarte insisted that Canada should be given recognition as a self-governing autonomist colony, I do not think my hon. friend will find fault with that.

Mr. SPROULE. The statement was absolutely made that when it was contemplated giving President Loubet a reception in the building belonging to the British Empire, Mr. Loubet was to be received by Colonel Jekyll, as representing the British Empire, but Mr. Tarte emphatically objected, and said in effect that Canada was an independent country, and the reception should be made in the Canadian pavilion, or he would close the exhibition. In the first place I would like to ask what authority he had to close the Canadian exhibition. If as chairman of the board of commissioners, he was acting without consultation or advice with them, his proceeding was a high-handed one. And for him to entirely ignore the relationship of Canada in regard to the exhibition with the British Empire in a building belonging to the empire, was still worse.

Patent Record ..... $4,500

Mr. FOSTER. We will let these items go through with the understanding that on the main estimates we may have any questions answered.

Immigration ..... $75,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this large sum?

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I suppose if this whole question is to be discussed when the main estimates come down, all I need give is the items, as follows: To recoup for quarantine, $15,000; additional bonuses, $20,000; additional printing and stationery, $20,000; locating immigrants, $10,000; collection of exhibits, $5,000; miscellaneous expense, $5,000; $75,000. It will be seen that a large proportion of this is to pay for additional bonuses. Another cause of expense was the sickness which broke out, especially among the children of the immigrants while they were at Winnipeg. Measles and scarlet fever broke out, and there was a large and unexpected expenditure because of that.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). We are within eighteen days of the end of the financial year, and I can hardly understand why the minister should want so large an amount at this time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is all spent.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister has spent the money then, and merely comes to us for our endorsement of what has been done. A warning was given with regard to this last year. If this kind of thing goes on, we shall be obliged to move that the item be struck out. The minister has no right to spend a dollar of this without the consent of parliament, and should not have done so. I warn the minister he had better not repeat it, otherwise the House will have to take action, and his supporters will be compelled to give a vote that they will not care very much about giving. The money having been spent, I suppose it will have to go. But I hope that the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), from whom we expect much more than from the minister himself, will put a check on that sort of thing, and that we shall not be called upon to give another such vote as we are called upon to give to-night.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the amount expended over the appropriation could not be satisfactorily accounted for, the criticism would be all right. But, when we come to discuss the matter, I think these items can be shown to have been in the best interest of the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. Whether the money is spent well or ill, matters very little so far as the country is concerned—it is gone. I hope in future the acting minister will exercise healthy control over the expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems rather amusing to say that the money is spent, and the House must vote it, but we can give a satisfactory explanation later on, not now. The satisfactory explanation would be more satisfactory if it were given before the money was spent, because it is on the explanation that we judge whether it should be voted or not. I do not wonder at this expenditure, when I remember that there is an army of agents all over the country to spend it. I think there are 250 agents employed in the United States; and, if we had correct information as to the number of immigrants they bring in to the country, I believe it would be found they bring in an average of one or two each. We have no reliable information on that point. But we know that the government have succeeded in placing every political friend of theirs who was instrumental in securing the support of the patrons.

Mr. COWAN. Not all of them.

Mr. SPROULE. There may be a few like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan), but no doubt all hope to be brought in. There is Mr. Curry, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Green, Mr. Davies, the brother of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Holmes, the brother of the hon. member for West Huron, and the rest of the list. These men draw immense salaries, and considering the small return, it is no wonder that we object to this extravagant expenditure, and no wonder that the minister is obliged to come and ask for an additional amount of $75,000. I remember that a few years ago, hon. gentlemen opposite said that $75,000 was too much to spend on immigration altogether.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), will see that the items themselves show results. There is a vote for additional bonuses. The department last year spent $60,000 in extra bonuses, and this money would not be spent had not the immigrants come in. Then there was the unexpected sickness among the immigrants. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, does not object to that expenditure—he would not allow disease to spread through the country.

Mr. BERGERON. Where did he get the authority to spend the money?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We owe it.

Mr. BERGERON. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland), said it was all spent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is spent, but not paid.

Mr. WILSON. Is this $75,000 in addition to the $360,000 appropriated last year? I think there are two or three ways in which bonuses are paid, and the minister ought to be familiar with that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I appeal to the hon. gentlemen that in view of the arrangement which was made with the leader of the House, it would be better to defer this discussion until the item in the main estimates comes up.

Mr. WILSON. Will he be prepared to give us then all the explanations about how the bonuses are paid, and in what condition the bonuses are?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly. My hon. friend is entitled to every reasonable information and he must have it.

Militia and Defence—Annual drill—Further amount required for June camps. . . $125,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). This is to pay for the annual drill prior to July 1. Every year there is a similar vote to this. The vote in the main estimates was $300,000 which, with this, is estimated as the cost of drilling the whole militia in any one year. We propose to drill about 35,000, of these 20,220 are going into camps now. The first artillery goes into camp on June 5; the second artillery on June 19, the first division, London, camp on June 5, the 2nd division, Niagara, on June 12; the 3rd division, Kingston, on June 19; the 4th division, Laprairie, on June 26; the 5th division, Lévis, on June 26. The 1st artillery brigade number 400; the 2nd, 400; the 3rd 400. The London camp will number 3,850; the Niagara camp, 3,800; the Kingston camp, 3,670; the Laprairie camp, 4,000; the Lévis camp, 3,700. I have here a detailed statement of how this vote will be spent. The pay of the men will amount to $104,500, that is the pay to men and officers. Rations will cost about $15,000, that is an estimate of sixteen cents per man per day, all furnished by tender. I have all the prices here. 1,000 horses at twenty-five cents a day. All these sums total $122,250, and we are asking for $125,000. The transportation is not estimated for, because the bills will not come in until considerably later, and there is money enough in the main estimates to pay for that.

Mr. HENDERSON. When the estimate of the same character was before us last year, I drew the attention of the minister to the question of increased pay to the volunteers attending camp, and possibly he may have given that matter some consideration. I think there is a widespread opinion that the men ought not to be asked to leave employments where they earn $1.25 a day, and go out to camp for fifty cents. It seems to me they ought to be allowed some better compensation than that. I do not think the country should expect the services of these men even for the purpose of drill in such a way as to entail a loss upon them. I think a more fair and reasonable remuneration should be given them. It may be said that these men do not enter this service for the sake of money; but we must make them feel comfortable in the position, and I think that something better should be done for them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I remember distinctly the discussion we had upon this question last year. I am not able to say, however, that I can recommend any change. The present system has worked very well for many years. So far as I know, there is no complaint generally among the volunteer militia as to the rate of pay. In the first place the service is voluntary, men need not go into it unless they choose; in the second place, the men who go into that sort of thing usually do it from choice, they like it, they are fond of it, it is an outing, and gives them an opportunity to engage in something which they have a special fondness for. I think all they require is to receive enough to cover their actual outlays, to be indemnified for any personal loss. The hon. gentleman knows that the government supplies the food, clothing and transportation, and in addition 50 cents a day. It seems to me we are hardly called upon to make any change now.

Experimental Farm, Ottawa—Balances due contractors for construction of laboratory and root house, and for other works urgently needed in connection with buildings, fittings, fencing, &c. . . . . $4,100

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The laboratory was foreseen last year, but the root-house was found to be completely rotted, and we had to rebuild, and in rebuilding we had to put in a stone wall underneath rather than the wooden structure that there was before. That cost more than we could pay out of the ordinary vote for repairs. In building it we built a wagon shed. There has not been a wagon shed or a shelter for wagons and vehicles at the Experimental Farm.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.15 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 12, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

YUKON TELEGRAPH LINE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). I would like to call the attention of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to a motion that I will make, if he consents. Perhaps it would be better to state the nature of it, and unless the Prime Minister says that I should move it to-day leave it as a notice of my intention to move. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), early in the session, put a series of questions connected with the telegraph construction under Mr. Charleson; and being asked by the minister representing that department to make a motion for papers, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) gave notice of that motion on February 14. When this notice of motion was called on several occasions when the unopposed motions were taken, a request was made that it should be allowed to stand. And the hon. gentleman saw fit to drop the motion from the paper, in order that he might not be debarred, when this portion of the estimates was reached, from discussing the substance of that notice of motion. I have received information from one of the employees under Mr. Charleson which corresponds closely with the points suggested by these questions. I received yesterday also a communication from another party, not, as I believe, connected with the work, but a man who lived in the district while the working was going on; and the information in these two communications tallies so closely, and both the writers profess their readiness to attend before a committee or any formal body to testify to what they say, that, in order that the matter can be properly ventilated and discussed when the estimates of that department are reached, I desire to move that the papers on the point be brought down. Of course, the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will see the reason for my pressing for his favourable consideration of such a motion. I will not weary the House by going over the various points touched by the questions, and which are covered by the heads of the motion, but, I may state the main one substantially, not being held too closely to accuracy in my statement: In connection with the construction of the telegraph line contracts for different divisions were made by Mr. Charleson with different parties for the necessary poles, at very good prices. But, instead of using these poles, for instance, on the first section, the greater number of them were simply disposed along the shore of the river or lake next which the line took its course, and then the contractors utilized the trees growing along the route for swinging the wires, leaving the poles about ten feet above high water mark to rot. This went on for more than one section of the line, but I think it was on the third section that Mr. Charleson stopped this business.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Does the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) say that these are the facts?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has not followed me. I say that this is the information I get from a man employed under Mr. Charleson at the time and still employed, a man whom I know personally and whom I know to be reliable. He is perfectly ready to testify to this, either before a committee of the House or before any tribunal that may look into the matter. Then, weeks or months afterwards, a man who is not in the employ, but who states that he was in the district when this was going on, says he is willing to testify to these facts. Other points are that A. Boyer, assistant to J. B. Charleson in the construction, was to receive $150 a month, according to the statement of the Prime Minister on the floor of the House; but, as a matter of fact, Charleson pays Boyer $225 a month, or $75 a month more than the government engaged him for at Ottawa. It is further charged that Charleson filled the places on the telegraph system with foreigners; that he places his orders in Vancouver with merchants who agree to pay his nephew, Percy W. Charleson, 5 per cent commission, which he has received, Percy W. Charleson being at this time J. B. Charleson's agent here; that he paid his son $350 for expenses to Ottawa when he was not an employee of the government; that he awards contracts to his foreman, whom he brought into the country at the government's expense, without calling for tenders. These are a few of the points on which this man is ready to give information. I have not troubled the House with the letters. I give notice of motion in order that the Prime Minister may look into the matter and see whether he will not agree to have the papers covered by the motion I have referred to brought down forthwith; because, undoubtedly, this matter will be subjected to examination in the Committee of the Whole here, and I think much time will be saved if we have such papers as are on record in regard to the matter referred to. It will save putting a large number of questions.

The PRIME MINISTER. What papers?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The papers mentioned in the notice of motion of February 14:

1. Date of Mr. Charleson's return from Dawson.
2. Report on the telegraph construction work, full and complete accounts for the same.
3. Date when last in Ottawa; date he left Ottawa, and destination.
4. The names of the men employed by him from Bennett to Dawson, and nationality of each man.
5. Wages and allowances given to the men per day.
6. Time they were employed.
7. Date the men struck for further pay; when, and result.
8. Name of party or parties who supplied the poles for the wire; price; terms.
9. Number of standing trees en route used for stringing the wires; distance, approximately, in comparison with the distance where poles were used.
10. Amount the government paid for poles distributed along the route and not used. Number of poles not used paid for by the government.
11. Whether the linemen employed at Dawson, Ogilvie, Selwyn, Selkirk, Five Fingers, Lower Labarge and Tagish, British subjects, and to what nationality do they belong.
12. Whether the following men were employed: William McNamara, Oly Martinson, Carter, Laurity Oleson, Brown and S. E. Chambers; at what wages, and in what capacity.
13. Number of linemen employed.
14. The name of the contractor for the supply of poles; name of the sub-contractor.
15. Residence of the sub-contractor.
16. Whether the government chartered the ss. 'W. S. Stratton'; from whom, and on what terms.
17. Tonnage of the 'W. S. Stratton.'
18. The name of her master; whether a British subject when engaged or acting as master.
19. Price paid for the use of this boat.
20. Use made of the 'W. S. Stratton.'
21. Number of scows, if any, used for supplies.
22. Number of boats other than scows used for supplies.
23. Number of scows used, and on what terms.
24. Amount of money charged or paid for transportation by water other than by the steamer 'Stratton.'
25. Length of time during construction that Mr. Charleson was actually present with the construction party.

26. Whether the government bought or chartered the 'Lillie C.' above White Horse; from whom and on what terms; disposition of this boat, whether sold or disposed of; on what terms, and to whom.

27. Nature of arrangements made for supplies to the men.

28. Whether the government is aware of the price charged the men for boots, tobacco, pipes, linens, underwear, overalls, &c. Whether middlemen acted in this regard, or the government directly dealt with the men. In case middlemen were acting, nature of arrangement made by the government, if any, to protect the men from imposition.

29. Arrangement, if any, made with the men engaged at Bennett respecting pay for their time when returning from Dawson.

30. Amount of money already paid for the telegraph line under Mr. Charleson's charge, and amount now due, as per accounts rendered and certified.

This is the notice of motion that was given by the hon. member for Beauharnois, and I desire also the additional papers that I have referred to. I do not suppose it will be necessary, if the government consents to the order passing, to add to that, because the information would be as full, I suppose, as the government could make it. If there is no objection, I will move it now.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I suppose that a good deal of the information mentioned by the hon. gentleman, and to which I can see no objection will be brought down. There are some statements the need of which I question, but I will say nothing of these at the present time. But I must express my regret at some of the strictures made by the hon. gentleman upon Mr. Charleson, and which I would hesitate very much to believe, unless he becomes responsible for them, because I have known Mr. Charleson for at least twenty-five years, and have always known him to be a perfectly honest man.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). When this question was put on the Order paper by myself in the month of February, I have every reason to believe that nearly every question could be answered, but at the request of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), I had to give a notice of motion, and every time it was called the government asked that it should stand. I believe my right hon. friend could get answers to every one of these questions, unless he is unwilling to give them.

ACCOUNTS OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Has the Prime Minister looked over the report brought down yesterday?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes. Does the hon. gentleman insist upon having it printed?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is very bulky, and unless the hon. member has some special object to gain, which I do not understand, I cannot see why it should be printed.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not like to use the word 'insist,' but I think I shall have to. I, therefore, move that the rules of the House be suspended, and the third report of the Standing Committee, with reference to the Post Office Department, be printed.

Motion agreed to.

LETTER FROM LT.-COL HUGHES.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to mention that I saw in the Globe recently a letter which purports to be addressed by Lt.-Col. Hughes, to the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden). It seems to me strange that it should appear in a newspaper, and I desire to ask the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence, if he received that letter?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I understand the hon. gentleman refers to a letter which recently appeared in the Toronto newspapers, written by Lt.-Col. Sam. Hughes, and addressed to myself. I understand the hon. gentleman to ask whether that letter appeared in the newspapers with my consent or authority. I have no hesitation in answering him at once, and saying that I did receive a letter which I presume to be the same letter which appeared in the Toronto newspapers, though I have not compared them. I received it about the date of this publication. As a matter of fact, I had not read the letter, and had not opened it until the very day in which it appeared in the Toronto papers. I did not authorize anybody to publish that letter, and I know nothing more about it than the fact that it was published without my authority, given to Lt.-Col. Hughes, or anybody else. I did not receive the original letter until the date at which this letter was published.

YUKON—INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the acting Minister of the Interior to the fact that in the return he brought down the other day, which in other respects is very satisfactory, one of the most satisfactory returns that I have received—there are four points missing which I will mention. The amount paid in permits issued at Ottawa, from August 30, and subsequently, in thirty-eight cases. These should have been returned from the Yukon so that they could be in possession of the department, and I suppose they have been. Also, the amount paid on the permits in class B. Then Mr. McGregor's report mentioned on page 37 of the papers brought down; and Mr. Bliss's report mentioned in Mr. Ogilvie's letters of November 1 and 2, 1899. If the hon. gentleman will supply those, I would like to have them.

VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to repeat my question to the Prime Minister, with regard to the voters' lists. This session we are asked for a vote to pay for their printing, and we have no information as to how the Printing Bureau is getting on with the printing of the lists.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend shows a wise diligence at all events. I cannot satisfy his curiosity at this moment, but I will inquire into it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The right hon. gentleman forgets to tell me after he has inquired.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then the hon. gentleman will not forget to inquire again.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—THE EMERGENCY FOOD RATION.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I move for leave to lay on the Table papers and correspondence relating to the emergency ration supplied to the troops in South Africa. These papers are those which were laid on the Table a few evenings ago, and include some additional papers. But they are not yet complete; I have not yet received the certified copy of the affidavits made by the men upon whom the test was made at Kingston. I propose to ask for a supplementary order to complete these papers at a later date. There are also certain analyses of the food which was used at Kingston, and the food that was sent to South Africa, which are not yet complete; that is to say, some of them are complete, but they are not wholly complete; and I propose to lay the whole of these on the Table, probably within a few days. I mean that in addition to the papers that I am laying on the Table now, there will be affidavits of the Kingston men and the analysis of the two kinds of food.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Have these analyses been made subsequent to the debate?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Both before and subsequent.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, Sir, the Minister of Militia and Defence has taken a course that leaves him in a very bad position, unless he at once refers this question to a committee to inquire into all the facts. The fact that he has had an analysis made since the debate, proves that in his own mind there was a case to be inquired into, proves that in his own mind a prima facie case had been made by the hon. gentleman who brought this matter before the House, that the public mind would, therefore, be alarmed, and it was necessary to do something to appease the public mind. The fact that he has practically gone into an inquiry himself, makes it incumbent that we should have a full and thorough inquiry. I understand from what he has said that affidavits have been made, and analyses have been made. If so, are we only to have the affidavits?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interpose and say that the affidavits to which I refer, are the affidavits which were discussed here when this matter was first brought up, the affidavits of the soldiers at Kingston, who lived upon the emergency food for thirty days. These, as I explained to the House yesterday, were made three months ago. I explained yesterday to the House that the originals of these affidavits are not in the department, they are in the hands of a notary in the city of Montreal. I have been promised certified copies of the originals, and I propose to lay these on the Table as soon as I get them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The minister made another statement, he spoke of analyses made both before and after the debate.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand my hon. friend, in his interruption, to deal merely with the affidavits. But even sending for these affidavits made two or three months ago, is a course which places new material before the judgment of this House.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIN. Then the hon. gentleman will not deny that the fact of his having had an analysis subsequent to that debate, is taking a step to lay new material before the judgment of this House.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. DAVIN. If it is not what does it mean? What is the analysis for? The analysis must be of some food, either of 'Vitaline' or of 'Protose.' Whichever it is, it is intended that the result of the analysis should be placed before the House, and if the placing of the results of the analysis before the House is not the placing of new material before the judgment of the House, I do not know the meaning of language.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will explain, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), will allow me, again. The food which was used at Kingston in the test referred to in this House was analysed. The food which was sent to South Africa was analysed by the same chemist.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Some time ago,

Mr. MONTAGUE. When?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot give the exact date. It was before the debate and after the time that the food was sent to South Africa.

Mr. BERGERON. By whom?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Dr. Neilson has in his possession some of the food which was used at Kingston. He has also samples of the food sent to South Africa taken out of the original packages in transit at Halifax. It is now proposed in addition to the test which we have already made in the department, to submit to a first-class analyst, or chemist, samples of each of these foods, and have them tested.

Mr. DAVIN. That is exactly what I said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, certainly, it is what I said. I said that he was going to place before the judgment of the House the result of a fresh analysis, and he tells us that he is going to make that analysis by a skilled analyst. Surely if he is going to make it he is going to make it for the purpose of placing the result before the judgment of the House, and what is the object of doing it unless there is a position in which he finds himself placed that wants to be righted? What is the object unless there is a doubt in regard to this transaction in the public mind as there is a doubt in regard to the transaction in the mind of parliament. If everything is satisfactory, if there is no reason for any suspicion, why make this analysis? As the hon. gentleman has gone so far he must, in order to clear himself before the people of Canada go further and give us a committee. He must enable us to examine Dr. Devlin, he must enable us to learn from Dr. Devlin where he got this food, how he made it up, how he got it into his cans and everything connected with the transaction. Nay, Sir, I will tell you what we want to know; we want to know what transactions the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden), himself, has had with Hatch & Co. We want to know what transactions he has had with Dr. Devlin, we want to know who negotiated with Dr. Devlin, we want to get at, whether it was the hon. Minister of Militia or an officer of his department who dealt with Dr. Devlin, and we cannot get at it without a committee.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Make a charge.

Mr. DAVIN. Fancy that kind of a chorus: Make a charge. That comes from the cavernous bosom of that gentleman who is ready to take for himself and his family all that he can get from this government.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. If cavernous bosom is unparliamentary, I will substitute capacious for it. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter that can be bluffed or fobbed by any attempt to gloss it over, by laughter, or by a sense of amusement. The Minister of Militia knows well that it is a transaction in which there is no amusement. The minister knows well that we are face to face with something wrong in regard to his department. It may be that we shall find some officer who, in dealing with Dr. Devlin, has been guilty of something wrong, but anyway there is the fact that the same food has not gone out to South Africa that was analysed at Kingston. That is an admitted fact.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. DAVIN. It is another food. Hon. gentlemen say no. Why not let us inquire and sift it to the bottom? If it can be shown irrefutably by these gentlemen in the Militia Department that it was the same food which was tested at Kingston which went to South Africa why not have a committee? and if it is patent to the public that it is the same food why have this subsequent analysis? I am afraid the hon. gentleman is uneasy in his mind; the public is uneasy in its mind, and it cannot be set at rest by an inquiry of the sort that is described by himself as having been undertaken. This parliament shall not rise until we have got to the bottom of this transaction, for, Mr. Speaker, there is something rotten in the state of Denmark.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I might call the attention of the House to the fact that there is no occasion at all for going into hysterics in regard to this thing. The hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) is complying with the promise he made the other day to the House that he would bring down the papers, and he has brought them down. Moreover, I will remind the House, that, at the close of the debate, upon the inquiry of the hon. member for York, N. B. (Mr. Foster) I stated that if it was the desire, if it was the request of any hon. member that we should have an inquiry into the matter he would have an inquiry, and since the papers have been brought down, if there is still anything obscure in the mind of any hon. gentleman, if the papers do not clear everything that may be obscure, I hope he will feel it to be quite within his option to ask for an inquiry, and there is no objection to it.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I may say in reference to this matter that what the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has stated in his reply to my inquiry across the House is true. The only statement he made was that if the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) would make the charge that he believed fraud had been committed in this matter, he should have his committee. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier who has been absent for a day or two, is now present. He will be prepared, in the course of a few hours, anyway, within a day or two, or less, to make his charge, and we have the additional information to-day from what the right hon. gentleman has stated that a committee will be given.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I do not wish to detain the House, because I have prepared a motion embodying the charge which I intend to make, as requested by the right hon. the Prime Minister. But I would ask the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), since he has stated that much of this food in the original packages had remained in Canada, will he bring down those packages along with the papers, so that this House may see these packages.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If any are available.

Mr. MONK. Very well. Then there is another question which I wish to ask. Will the Minister of Militia, in bringing down the papers, place upon the Table of this House the order which was given from his department or from any other of the departments, permitting the free entry into Canada of the stuff which has been sent over to South Africa. Will he lay upon the Table of the House the order freeing that substance from the payment of duty.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not aware that there is any such order.

Mr. MONK. Does the minister say that no such order was given?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as I know.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). That would not be in the Militia Department.

Mr. MONK. I am addressing myself to the government generally. Will that order be brought down amongst the papers which the Minister of Militia has moved for permission to lay on the Table of the House?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The present motion is to allow the minister to lay certain papers on the Table of this House. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will have every opportunity to make his motion to have his committee of inquiry, and every possible information he can have he shall have.

Mr. MONK. My right hon. friend is not quite fair to me. The Minister of Militia announces that he will lay certain papers on the Table of this House, and is it not competent for me to ask for a document which is of great importance, and which shows that this stuff was brought from the United States, and that it obtained free entry here from the Canadian government.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Minister of Militia cannot make such a promise because if such an order were given it would not be in his department. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is going to make a charge within a few hours, and as soon as he makes the charge he shall have his committee, and the committee will have every information possible that may be in the hands of the government.

Mr. MONK. I am not going to take up the time of the House arguing the point with the Prime Minister, but I do not think that his answer is in any way satisfactory. I am aware that if I make the charge I will have the committee; I am secure about that now; and is it not competent for me to ask that the government shall bring down the order showing the free entry into Canada of the stuff that was sent into South Africa, showing that it came from the United States?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not aware of any such order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If there is any such, will it be brought down?

Mr. MONK. The Minister of Customs is in the House and he can answer. Surely this incident must have struck him. This stuff came from the United States, and it was allowed to enter Canada free of duty, because it was destined to be for the use of the government. Now, will that order—

Mr. SPEAKER. The First Minister has stated the position of the government, and I think it is only fair that the House should accept his statement. Every one who knows parliamentary practice knows that each minister has control of his own department, and this matter does not belong to the Militia Department.

Mr. FOSTER. But the Minister of Customs ought have no hesitation in saying that if there is any such paper in his department it will be brought down.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I have no remembrance at all of what the hon. gentleman mentions.

Mr. FOSTER. We did not expect the Minister of Customs would have, but cannot the Minister of Customs say that if there is any such paper it will be brought down.

Mr. MONK. I want to ask another question of the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), and that is the name of the analyst who analysed the substance which was sent to South Africa. We know who analysed the 'protose' which was tested in Kingston, but who is the analyst who examined the substance which was sent to South Africa?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have stated, Mr. Speaker, that I would lay these analyses on the Table when they are complete, and I will do so.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I happened to be absent the other day when this matter was brought to the attention of this House, but I have heard a great deal of this question since, and I want to state for the benefit of the House a few facts about it. This gentleman, Mr. Hatch, the inventor of this food, left the city of Buda-Pesth in Austria, and went to England to test it in a laboratory there, which was considered to be one of the best in the world. He could not obtain in England a laboratory complete enough to test his invention, and so he went to Paris. In Paris he was informed that he could not carry on his experiment unless it were for a French product to be used in France. He then returned to England and asked where he would go, and he was told there that the only place he could test his invention satisfactorily would be at the McGill University in Montreal. This it will be seen was a great compliment to Canada and to McGill University. Mr. Hatch, who is a chemist, came to Canada and he found at McGill what he considers, is perhaps, the most complete laboratory in the whole world. He was a stranger, and he got into partnership with a gentleman from Montreal, and the rest of the story is pretty well known. He was granted permission to make experiments on the men of 'A' Battery at Kingston, and these experiments proved satisfactory. Mr. Hatch has perfected his invention, and he is in a position to prove that there is 85 per cent nutritious food in his emergency rations. He had some difficulty with his partner, and they separated, and he learned a little while afterwards that his partner was fabricating or producing some such stuff as they were manufacturing in partnership. When he learned later on that the government of Canada had bought some of this other stuff his curiosity was aroused and he had it analysed. He not only analysed it himself, but he went to the chemist who analysed his own food, and he found out that there was only 15 per cent of muscle-forming food in the preparation that was sent to South Africa by this government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not want to call my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) to order, but I appeal to him, if the statement he is now making is not prejudging the case. The motion now before the House is simply to be allowed to lay papers on the Table, and the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) are not germane to the subject.

Mr. BERGERON. My remarks will, I think, help the investigation which is to be granted, because these gentlemen will be called as witnesses. I thought it would not be a bad thing for the country to know that we have in Montreal the best chemical laboratory to be found in the world.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorancy). I congratulate the Premier on the statement he made a moment ago. If I understood his words aright, they were these, that when the papers are tabled, if any member on this side of the House had any doubts left in his mind as to the transaction that had taken place or as to the regularity of the proceedings, a committee would be appointed if it were asked for. This statement was made before the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had mentioned that he was in a short time to make a charge and ask for a committee. I was not here the other evening, but I congratulate the hon. gentleman upon having found out at last that there was great unrest and anxiety in the public mind in relation to this matter, and he has again given evidence of the fact that the opposition is sometimes right. The other evening, if I can take Hansard as a correct report of what he said—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is proceeding to discuss the question.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am only discussing the question of bringing down the papers. I wish to say that not only the papers now before the House should be produced, but others, and I think I have the right to show that the other evening the right hon. gentleman said that if a charge of fraud were made, a committee would be granted. Now, the hon. gentleman does not say that; but he says that if anybody, after seeing the papers which are brought down, has any anxiety regarding the transaction, let him say so and he will get a committee at once. I simply want to point out the difference between what my right hon. friend said the other night and what he says now, and to say that the papers before the House are not sufficient to enlighten us. We want to be satisfied by the papers which have been brought down, and if not by them, by an inquiry, that there is an identity between the food—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, instead of dealing with the motion before the House, is proceeding to discuss the question on its merits.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am not at all doing that. I am only saying that the papers which have been brought down are not sufficient, and that we must have more papers to show that there was identity between the food which was analysed and the food which was subsequently analysed and sent to South Africa.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B. C.) I would like to ask the Minister of Militia whether he or any other member of the government has cabled to South Africa in respect to this food, and if so, what has been the nature of the cable.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PRIOR. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the hon. gentleman takes his seat I will go on. Mr. Speaker, there is a motion before the Chair, and until that motion is disposed of, the hon. gentleman has no right to put a question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The minister may answer any question he sees fit.

Mr. PRIOR. I have asked a plain question, Mr. Speaker, and I would like the hon. minister to give an answer. Does the hon. gentleman refuse to give an answer?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have no objection to saying that I communicated with two officers in South Africa; but I do not think it is desirable in any interest at this moment to disclose exactly the nature of those communications.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). I would like to ask the minister if I misunderstood him the other evening when, in answer to me, I understood him to say that the director general should report as to the second emergency food; that is, the food that was sent, of which there had been no chemical analysis.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did not say there had not been.

Mr. TISDALE. To-day I understood the hon. minister to say that there had been.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, both foods.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). I want to inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether the papers which are to be brought down with reference to analysis, show that any analysis of the food was made before it went to South Africa and after it was supplied to the department. I refer to this 'Vitaline' food.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the date, but it was about the time the food was sent to South Africa. When the papers are brought down, that fact will be disclosed.

Mr. MONK. May I ask the hon. gentleman one question?

The PRIME MINISTER. Spoken.

Mr. MONK. Do I understand the Prime Minister to refuse me the privilege of asking a question?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has been three times on his feet already.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I would like to ask the Minister of Militia where the food was delivered and who received it?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The food was delivered at Halifax. The papers which I have laid on the Table to-day show who received it. I do not remember the name, but I think the surgeon at Halifax, Dr. Jones, is one of the gentlemen whose names appear there as having certified to the food having been received.

Mr. WALLACE. Where did the analysis take place?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have given all the information I propose to give. In a day or two the papers will be on the Table.

Mr. WALLACE. The minister can either answer the question or refuse to answer. He says that the goods were delivered from the producers at the city of Halifax, but he cannot tell to whom they were delivered.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The papers contain the names of the people to whom they were delivered.

Mr. WALLACE. But the hon. minister does not know. If he does not know, we are asking for information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The papers laid on the Table show.

Mr. WALLACE. Matters have come to a curious stage when members of the House of Commons are to be denied information which they are entitled to receive. There has been pretty good evidence of an enormous piece of rascality, in which the monetary point of view fades into insignificance entirely compared with the lives of brave men that are at stake. If the food which was supposed to contain 85 per cent—

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon. friend is drifting into a discussion of the merits of the question, and I must call him to order.

Mr. WALLACE. I asked the Minister of Militia a question relating to the papers that he laid on the Table. I asked him if they contained certain information, and I asked the hon. minister to give certain information which was vital to the question. He has refused. He says the papers will disclose it. I say it is too serious a matter to be dismissed in the flippant style proposed by the hon. member for North Wellington or the Minister of Militia, who is on his defence. Why, the whole practice of parliament in England and in Canada has been that when a minister or his department has been in the slightest degree charged with wrong-doing, they should not only be willing but desirous and anxious to produce every information—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Does the hon. gentleman charge me with wrong-doing? He says, when a minister is charged with wrong-doing. Does he make a charge?

Mr. WALLACE. You may depend, Sir, that that transparent game of bluff will not do.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would again remind the hon. gentleman that he is drifting into a discussion which is out of order.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister of Militia interrupted me, contrary to the rules of parliament. If anybody was out of order, it was the hon. Minister of Militia and not I. I was discussing the question when he interrupted me, and I gave his answer—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WALLACE—and he will get up again and be out of order.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman is now—

Mr. WALLACE. I have the floor.

Mr. SPEAKER. I shall be obliged to call you both to order. I am in the judgment of the House. I think that my hon. friend from West York made some very strong statements respecting the administration of the Department of Militia. Perhaps he does not recollect them at the moment, but I think they were stronger than, perhaps, he intended.

Mr. WALLACE. Not half as strong as they will be.

Mr. SPEAKER. Reserve that discussion for the merits of the question. You must not discuss the question on its merits now.

Mr. WALLACE. We are on the threshold of the question and discussing the motion before the Chair. I have been continuing that discussion and will not be let off by any side issue raised by the hon. member for North Wellington or the Minister of Militia and Defence. There have been serious charges; these papers have been brought down in response to these serious charges. These papers are incomplete. Why should we have papers of the most important character demanded by parliament coming down in dribblets, incomplete, every day, so that the opposition are denied the opportunity which they are entitled to, under the laws of the land, of thoroughly examining the question with all the documents before them. The hon. minister tells us himself that the papers are incomplete. He tells us that the goods were delivered in Halifax. I asked him the question, where was the analysis made and where was the sample got from which this analysis was made. Was it got in Halifax or Montreal? And what certificate have we that that sample was a proper and correct sample of those goods? We want to know those things right away. We are not going to stand on ceremony. The lives of men are at stake in this matter, which the Minister of Militia thinks is a flippant matter and a good joke, but he is not going to prevent its being investigated. That investigation has started and is going on, and if any wrong-doing has been done—and there appears every indication of a scheme of the vilest rascality—the people of Canada will know it, and the whole thing will be exposed from top to bottom.

Mr. SPROULE. It was rumoured that these goods were paid for before delivery.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not think so; I have no reason to believe they were; I am quite sure they were not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the papers show whether the boxes were opened, in which this food was shipped to the government and certain samples taken out, and if so, who took them out?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The papers will not show that, but I will have a paper laid on the Table which will show that the boxes were opened in Halifax and samples taken from them, and that the sample which was tested here was one sent from Halifax, as I was informed.

Mr. WALLACE. Why did you not tell me that when I asked the question?

Mr. SPEAKER.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Because you never asked for anything as a gentleman should ask another.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. Recalling the hon. member's own statements, we had better drop that point of order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose we are permitted to ask for a ruling? The Minister of Militia was out of order in two respects. First, he did not address you, Sir, but a member of the House; and, secondly, he addressed a member of the House in offensive terms.

Mr. SPEAKER. What were the terms?

Mr. WALLACE. He said that I never asked a question as one gentleman should ask another.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not recall that. But I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is right in saying that instead of addressing the Chair, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, King's) spoke across the House.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I apologize for addressing the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace.)

Mr. WALLACE. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, King's) will apologize for his want of gentlemanliness—but, of course, that is too much to expect.

Motion (Mr. Borden, King's) agreed to.

SUPPLY BILL.

Resolutions 304, 305, 306, 307, 333, 336 and 371, reported from Committee of Supply, read the second time and agreed to.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $271,278.82 be granted to Her Majesty out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada for the financial year ending June 30, 1900.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 179) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th of June, 1900.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

THE CITY AND DISTRICTS SAVINGS BANKS, AND LA CAISSE D'ECONOMIE DE QUEBEC.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 177), to amend chapter 32 of the Statutes of 1890, intituled: 'An Act respecting certain savings banks in the province of Quebec.'

He said: I intend to propose, after the second reading, that this Bill be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, referred to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

SUPPLY—TIMBER LICENSES IN MANITOBA.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assinibola). On the 28th of March, a return was brought down, in obedience to an order of the House for which I moved, and I have refrained from calling attention to the facts disclosed by that return because of the absence of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). I hoped from day to day, and from week to week, that there would be some prospect of his returning so that he might be in the House when I called attention to the facts disclosed, and moved the motion which I now intend to move. The Dauphin railway was being built through a wooded country in Manitoba, and it seems to have occurred—you cannot avoid that conclusion on reading the documents which are now on the Table of the House—it seems to have occurred to the Minister of the Interior that an amendment might be made in the order of council governing the issuing of permits and licenses respecting the cutting of timber, in a way that would redound to the advantage of certain parties. Sir, the Conservative government which had been in power for some eighteen years, had, after they had been some years in office, made regulations governing the issuing of permits and licenses to cut timber so as to avoid the abuses which experience had told them were very likely to attend the administration of the forestry of the country. On the 17th of September, 1889, an order in council was passed governing the granting of licenses and permits to cut timber, which provided amongst other things:

That licenses to cut timber should be disposed of by public competition; that parties tendering should be required to state the sum or bonus per square mile which they would pay in addition to the ground rent and royalty, and that each tender should be forwarded in a sealed envelope and be accompanied by the cash or accepted cheque of a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Deputy Minister of the Interior for the amount of such bonus; that the limit should be awarded to the party offering the highest bonus therefor, that the licensee should pay an equal ground rent of $5 per square mile except for lands west of Eagle Pass, B.C.; that the licensee should pay a royalty of 5 per cent of the amount of sales of all products of the berth, and that saw-logs and other timber taken from the berth should be manufactured at the saw-mill of the licensee, to be operated in connection with the berth; that the licensee should furnish the Crown timber agent with returns accounting for sawn lumber and other products of timber manufactured and sold or otherwise disposed of, and pay Crown dues.

&c. Now, it will be seen that this order in council guarded the public interest, secured against favouritism, secured also, by holding up limits to competition, that there should be the largest amount paid into the treasury. There was an order in council passed on the 20th of January, 1892, amending the previous order in council, and which provided that:

A licensee should be required to construct a mill and commence the manufacture of the lumber from the timber on the tract covered by his license within one year from the date when he was notified by the proper officer of the Department of the Interior that the Minister of the Interior regarded such a step as necessary and expedient in the public interest.

Now, on the 28th of February, 1898, an order in council was passed providing that in the Yukon a license might be granted to any person who was the first applicant; that it might be acquired by competition as the Minister of the Interior might direct, and the bonus should not be less than $250 per square mile. The reason I call attention to that order in council is this: It will be seen that even with the present government the idea was deep and strong that there should be a bonus commensurate with the value of the franchises acquired. Well, Sir, on the 1st of July, 1898, an order in council was passed ordering and directing that certain annexed regulations should be substituted in lieu of the regulations issued under authority of an order in council dated September 17, 1889, and subsequently amended, and which I have recited. Now, here is the order in council, which will be found in the volume of Orders in Council of Canada, 1899. I have before me the order in council that was passed on the 1st of July, 1898, and by a comparison of the regulations of the order in council passed in 1898, repealing the orders in council of the 17th of September, 1889, and the 20th of January, 1892, you find that the regulations that were repealed are practically the same as the regulations enacted with one exception. Now, what is that exception? The exception is found in a section that will henceforth, I think, be known to fame as section 17, and which provided as follows:

In the discretion of the Minister of the Interior permits may be granted in Manitoba and in the North-west Territories to saw-mill owners to cut over a definitely described tract of land, not exceeding fifty square miles in extent, on payment of Crown dues at the rate of 50 cents per thousand feet of sawn lumber, and the further sum of 50 cents per thousand feet in lieu of bonus and ground rent; all other products of manufacture to be paid at the rate set forth in section 11, clause (a).

It will be seen that this puts in the discretion of the Minister of the Interior the power to get rid of the bonus, the power to get rid of the ground rent, the power to get rid of the Crown dues on certain conditions. First, that the beneficiary to whom the Minister of the Interior, in his discretion would give advantages out of this clause, should be a saw-mill owner; and he should cut over a definitely defined tract not exceeding fifty square miles, and he was to pay Crown dues at the rate of 50 cents per thousand feet on sawn lumber, and a further sum of 50 cents per thousand feet in lieu of bonus and ground rent. Now, these are the conditions. Well, Sir, when you come to the correspondence which is here you will find that according to the opinion of the department that clause was not intended to apply, according to statements made officially, to any saw-mill owners that were not in need of timber. I have the answer before me of the hon. acting Minister of the Interior, and it is very instructive. I asked the hon. gentleman on the 7th of May, 1900, a question, and in the course of the answer he gave to that question, he said:

The new regulations made the same provision as the old regulations with reference to the acquisition of timber limits, namely, that they should be acquired at public competition, but in view of a recommendation made by the Crown timber agent at Winnipeg, a provision was inserted that in the discretion of the Minister of the Interior, permits might be granted in Manitoba and the North-west Territories to saw-mill owners to cut over a definite described tract of land, not exceeding fifty square miles in extent, on payment of Crown dues at the rate of 50 cents per thousand feet on sawn lumber, and a further sum of 50 cents per thousand feet in lieu of a bonus and ground rent. The intention was that saw-mill owners might obtain timber to be manufactured at their saw-mills without competing with the public. Prior to 1885, timber berths could be acquired without public competition. The law was changed so that any person who desired to acquire a timber berth was compelled to compete for the same—

The law was changed in 1889, by the Conservative government.

—and the consequence was that in the case of millowners it proved a hardship when an expenditure had been made by them in exploring a timber limit, it was granted to an outsider who offered a larger bonus therefor, thus depriving the millowner of the timber he required for his saw-mill, and compelling him, in many cases, to pay the holder of the berth a considerable sum in advance of the amount which he had paid for the berth.

Later on, in response to my query:

Why was it repealed?

The hon. minister said:

Mr. DAVIN.

It was felt that while it could be fairly claimed as reasonable that saw-mill owners holding limits should, in order to provide timber for their mills, have the privilege of acquiring other timber by paying practically double dues under the suggested arrangement contained in section 17, yet demands might be made upon the department with regard to it which would have the effect of practically annulling the general policy of the department.

It is hard to avoid the conclusion that the hon. acting minister in giving that answer intended to have a blow at the minister in whose place he is, because the concluding words there strike at the minister as breaking and evading the regulations which he made. It will be seen that we have it authoritatively that the object of the clause was to meet the necessities of saw-mill owners and their saw-mills. I cannot avoid the conclusion, and I will state it now, that section 17, looking at the way in which it was administered, was constructed for two purposes; first, to enable the hon. Minister of the Interior to give an advantage to his brother-in-law, Mr. Burrows, and then to enable him to go to council, and to use a colloquial phrase, pull the wool over the eyes of his colleagues, and when they said to him: Why do you want to repeal the old timber regulations? Are they not working well? To make the argument that for the behoof of certain saw-mill owners it was necessary to make certain changes. The changes were contained in section 17. How would it help his brother-in-law? His brother-in-law could only be defined as a saw-mill owner by a pun upon the word. He had no saw-mill on the tract of country over which he wanted to cut timber. He had no saw-mill contiguous to it, but he was the owner of a small saw-mill at Dauphin, forty miles away which has the effect of allowing that word to convey a false meaning, and to represent that Mr. Burrows could be held to belong to the category contemplated by the section.

On January 13, 1899, an order in council was passed which, having recited section 17, said that 'whereas it has been ascertained that the provisions of the regulations hereinabove referred to' (i.e., the aforesaid section 17) 'are not working satisfactorily,' rescinded section 17 aforesaid.

The order in council of July 1, 1898, did not come into force until August 13, 1898. Before section 17 of the order in council of July 1, 1898, was rescinded several applicants for permits under section 17 were refused permits thereunder. And why? Because they had not fulfilled the conditions of the law and the spirit of that law. For instance, on September 16, 1892, Hooker & Co., of Selkirk, wrote to Foley, inspector of Crown timber limits, asking for permit under section 17. On September 22, Foley, assistant Crown timber agent, wrote to the secretary of the Department of the Interior, advising that the permit under section 17 be granted. On October 25, the assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior wrote to the Crown timber agent asking whether it would be in the interest of the school land fund to invite competition for a permit to cut timber on a certain section of land numbered 11. On September 4, 1898, Stephenson, Crown timber agent, wrote to the secretary of the Interior that it would be in the interest of the school land fund to invite tenders and giving reasons why Hooker & Co. might be expected to pay a larger price at that time. Accordingly no permit under section 17 was issued to that firm, because, in the opinion of the Crown timber agent in Winnipeg, if competition was called for Hooker & Co. might be expected to pay more. So that, you see, it is in the mind of the department, in administering this very section 17 that it should not be acted upon if it was probable that the department would gain more by calling for competition.

On July 30, 1898, Jefferson Caverly wrote Stephenson re his application for permit on Swan River. On August 6, 1898, Stephenson wrote to Mr. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior, inclosing Caverly's letter. Amongst other things, he said: 'Under the present regulations a berth can only be acquired after public competition has been invited. Under the new regulations which will be shortly in force the minister has discretionary power which would enable him to comply with Mr. Caverly's request.' On August 20, 1898, Pereira, assistant secretary of the Interior Department, by direction, wrote Stephenson, Crown timber agent, a reply in which he said:

It is noticed that you stated that under the present regulations a berth can only be acquired after public competition has been invited, and that under the new regulations the minister has discretionary power which would enable him to comply with Mr. Caverly's request. It is thought that you refer to the issue of a permit without the same having to be acquired by public competition. If this is the case, I have to draw your attention to the fact that the regulations provide that the minister may issue a permit without competition to saw-mill owners, and, therefore, unless Mr. Caverly has a saw-mill in operation, the provision of the regulations referred to will not apply in the case.

I ask the House to bear that in mind, because it would seem to be very important as bearing upon the palpable favouritism I am going to demonstrate has been shown by the present Minister of the Interior. On November 2, 1898, Mr. Pereira, assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior, by direction, wrote to Mr. Caverly as follows:

Impossible to comply with your request until you furnish the department with a definite description of the land.

I ask that to be borne in mind, because I think the inference is a fair one that Burrows got all the privileges he desired before he had furnished any definite description of the land. No request could be granted until he furnished the definite description of the land, and unless the applicant was a saw-mill owner with a saw-mill in operation on, or contiguous to the tract of land covered by the permit. On September 30, 1898, Pereira, assistant secretary of the Interior, by direction wrote to the Crown timber agent in respect to another case where a Mr. Robinson had applied for a permit, he being a saw-mill owner, and a person coming within the category, that taking clause 7 as bona fide, might be contemplated by it.

In reply, I have to say that, as Capt. Robinson is a millowner, you may issue a permit in his favour to cut timber in a certain prescribed area, not exceeding fifty miles, in accordance with the regulations.

On December 26, McArthur wrote to Stephenson, the Crown timber agent, applying for permit under section 17, on Red Deer Point, and after some correspondence that permit was refused to McArthur, presumably because, regarding the clause as bona fide, that its conditions were not filled by him. Now comes a very striking case as bearing upon one of the points at issue. On October 17, 1898, James Drake wrote to the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, applying for permission, under section 17, to cut sawlogs, and stating he had not sufficient timber on his berth. On the 11th of November, Taylor, acting Crown timber agent at Winnipeg, wrote the secretary of the Department of the Interior as follows:

I beg now to report that having ascertained that Mr. James Drake is the owner of a saw-mill, there would appear to be no objection to granting his request for a permit under section 17, aforesaid.

On November 17, 1898, Pereira, assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior, by direction wrote to Drake, saying that section 17 of the regulations:

—was intended to apply only to mill-owners who have exhausted their sources of supply and who have no more timber with which to keep their mills going. Please say whether this is your case, and whether you require the timber on the above tract to prevent the closing down of your mill.

If that means anything it means that the department could not properly, under section 17, give a permission unless the man was a saw-mill owner; unless his timber was exhausted and he needed it to keep his mill going. On November 22, 1898, James Drake wrote the secretary of the Department of the Interior, saying:

I do require the permit asked for to procure a supply of timber to keep the mill going. The timber berth on which my men are now working will only supply a part of the cut required for the coming season.

On the 2nd of December, 1898, Stephenson, Crown timber agent, wrote to the secretary of the Department of the Interior, saying:

Drake will be able to get sufficient timber on his new berth, No. 815, to keep his mill going for this winter. If later it should be found otherwise, he might then renew his application under section 17.

He goes on to say that Drake had commenced operations on berth No. 815, although the required survey had not yet been made nor license issued. This was contrary to instructions. He goes on to say, that Drake was written to and instructed to stop, and to advise the department of the quantity already cut, and Stephenson advises against considering his application under section 17. On the 29th of September, 1898, Pereira, assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior, wrote to Drake refusing permit. Why? Drake was a saw-mill owner. Drake had made the statement himself that he was destitute of timber. This is the reason given:

As it appears that you will be able to obtain sufficient timber on berth 815 to supply your saw-mill for the present—

He goes on to say, that it had been reported that Drake had commenced operations on berth No. 815 prior to the required survey and the issue of the license, which is contrary to the regulations.

On December 7, 1898, the firm of Shaw Bros. wrote from Dauphin, Manitoba, applying for a permit, under section 17. On January 4, 1899, Pereira, assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior, wrote by direction to Shaw Bros.:

That it has been decided not to issue any more permits unless they are acquired by public competition.

I want the House to bear in mind that on the 4th of January it had been decided not to issue any more permits. Well, Sir, on December 5, 1898, the Dauphin Lumber Company, millowners, applied for permits under section 17. On January 4, 1899, Pereira, assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior, wrote by direction to the Dauphin Lumber Company, as follows:

It has been decided not to issue any more permits to cut timber for barter or sale, without public competition.

William Irwin, on January 12, forwarded through Stephenson, Crown timber agent, application for permit, under section 17. Stephenson, writing to Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior, said he had:

—explained to Irwin that clause 17, fixing the dues at $1 per thousand to millowners, applied only to these mill men who are operating stationary mills, and who have an established business.

Operating stationary mills where? Why, on the track or contiguous to it covered by the permit.

Immediately after the order in council of the first of July, 1898, came into operation in Manitoba, namely, on the 13th of August, Theodore A. Burrows, a brother-in-law of the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, writing on the 21st of August, 1898, to the deputy minister eulogizes the new arrangement provided for by section 17 of the order in council of the 1st of July, 1898, which has just come into operation, and he applies for a permit under the same to cut timber on township 30, R. 22, W. 31, 32, and 33, R. 23 West, and 31 range 21 west. He says:

I cannot define by sections the timber I want.

I want to draw the attention of the House to this:

I cannot define by sections the timber I want. Where I made the mistake was in not including a larger area in the block which I was to choose, Berth 814. Now, Mr. Smart, I want this permit, and owning, as I do, Berth 814, I am entitled to first right of permit. Kindly have permit sent me. I intend cutting ties on it this winter. Sorry I did not see you when I was last in Ottawa.

Yours very truly,

THEODORE A. BURROWS.

I call attention to this fact that this gentleman, applying for the permit, evidently refers to some previous communication, because he says:

I intend cutting the ties on it this winter.

What ties? It must have been the ties they had spoken of in some communication that is not before us, or viva voce. Here is an extraordinary thing. He says:

I intend cutting the ties this winter.

Why, Sir, the clause is a clause not for tie cutting, ties or pole cutting; the clause is a clause that in its body and soul looks to the timber cut being manufactured in a mill. On September 3, 1898, Lyndwode Pereira, assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior, by direction, wrote to the Crown timber agent at Winnipeg, instructing him that even if the aforesaid Burrows should not be able to comply with the conditions of section 17, nevertheless, a permit might be issued under it, and another permit issued later on. I will read his words, and then you will see whether I overstate the case:

You will notice that the regulations provide that the tract of land to be covered by the permit must be definitely described. If Mr. Burrows is not in a position at the present time to furnish you with a definite description of the tract in townships 30, 31 and 32, range 23 west, and he wishes to obtain a permit to cut timber on the sections which he has described, there is no objection to a permit being issued, and another permit being issued later on to cover the remainder of the tract, not exceeding fifty square miles. Mr. Burrows has been asked to communicate with you in reference to his application.

Now, I have proved that one of the conditions was that there should be a definite description. He is told by the officer of the department that he can ignore one of these conditions. On September 6, 1898, James A. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior, telegraphed Burrows that his description was 'too indefinite. Am writing.' This letter, whatever it was, is not in the return brought down. The Crown timber agent at Winnipeg, on September 15, wrote to F. K. Herchmer, Esq., Crown timber agent at Dauphin, Man., inclosing the letter of September 3, and telling the Crown timber agent that Burrows had secured the right to a permit to cut timber under section 17 of the new regulations, and that 'the timber to be cut is for the Dauphin Railway and Canal Company, and will not be manufactured at a saw-mill, although Mr. Burrows is a saw-mill owner.' You see, this reads like a joke. It was as if the Crown timber agent said: 'Give him a permit; he is not going to manufacture the timber at all, although he is a saw-mill owner.' Not until January 17, 1899, was a permit issued to Burrows. Burrows never received a permit until four days after the order in council under which he got the permit had been rescinded, and he had cut a large quantity of timber illegally, out of which he manufactured ties and piles for the Dauphin Railway. He did this, as appears from the letter of the agent of Dominion lands at Dauphin, dated January 10, 1899, 'at a time when no survey of the lands had been made, and when it was not possible to give a description.' So that, every regulation, every principle, every idea and motive which could apply to that section 17 is violated by the Department of the Interior to put this great privilege in the hands of this gentleman, the brother-in-law of the Minister of the Interior, so that he might have an advantage above everybody else, and everybody else might be shut out. Is not this patent, Sir? Here is a railway running through a wooded country. If competition had been called for to cut timber for ties, is it possible that the lumbermen of that district would not have been glad to pay down $5,000 as a bonus for the privilege of cutting it? On January 18, 1899, five days after the date of the order in council rescinding section 17 of the order in council of July, 1898, Mr. Lyndwode Pereira, by direction, wrote the agent of Crown lands at Dauphin, saying:

There is no objection to a permit being issued to Mr. Burrows under section 17 of the regulations, to cut timber on the lands described by him, with the exception of those situated in township 32, range 22.

On February 8, 1899, Theodore A. Burrows wrote to the secretary of the Department of the Interior, saying he had mistakenly thought certain lands in township 32, range 22, were within the boundaries of the fifty square miles he had selected, and he says:

I beg, therefore, to ask that the lands I have defined in township 32, range 22, be included in the tract to be covered by my permit. On the 13th of February, Lyndwode Pereira, assistant secretary, wrote to the agent of Crown lands, Dauphin, telling him that it had been decided to allow the sections of land in township 32, range 22, west of the first meridian, to be included in his permit. On May 7 last, I asked the acting Minister of the Interior: How much timber did Burrows cut? And this is the answer he gave me: 1,523 fence posts; 1,730 cords of wood; 2,318 telegraph poles; 4,786 feet of piling, and 98,372 railway ties. The ties there are worth, I am told, 25 cents each, which would make them alone worth $24,593. I will now ask the attention of the House while I again read section 17:

In the discretion of the Minister of the Interior, permits may be granted in Manitoba and the North-west Territories to cut over a definitely described tract of land, not exceeding fifty square miles in extent, on payment of Crown dues at the rate of 50c. per thousand feet on sawn lumber, and a further sum of 50c. per thousand feet in lieu of bonus and ground rent.

So, that you see, Mr. Burrows got clear of a bonus, which would probably be $5,000; he got clear of the ground rent, and he never paid the 50 cents per thousand feet on sawn lumber in lieu of ground rent, because he never cut any. Among the many slick transactions accomplished by the present Minister of the Interior, this is the slickest of them all. Now, Sir, I have not painted in lines of sufficient shade the portrait of the Minister of the Interior in the light of this transaction; because, Sir, what is the fact? At the time when Mr. Burrows' complaisant brother-in-law passed that clause 17 in these regulations, who was he? He was the land commissioner for the builders of the Dauphin Railway, who, I may say, were Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann. So that you see, it is a beautiful transaction, a family compact all the way through. The land commissioner says to his brother-in-law: 'Here is fine timber; I want to cut ties; if you put it up for competition, I will probably have to put down three or four or five thousand dollars as a bonus, and I will have to pay so much per square mile as ground rent. Could you not, clever fellow that you are, manage in such a way, that we shall get rid of competition? If you put it up to competition, I might not get it, and I am the land agent for this railway, but I want to buy for myself, I want a nice little arrangement, could you manage it for me? Then the astute Minister of the Interior ponders, and what does he do? He draws a lot of regulations, practically the regulations he is ostensibly about to repeal, and puts in this clause 17, which will enable him to go before the council. The Prime Minister says: Why make these changes—he begins to be a little suspicious. The astute minister replies: You see, my Premier, here are mill-owners, numbers of them destitute of timber, and it is a pity, when they are destitute of timber, that you should ask them to compete with others. We will arrange that they shall be able to get the timber, but they must pay double dues. Then the Minister of the Interior declares Mr. Burrows, a millowner, and gives him this valuable franchise. Not a solitary condition is ever fulfilled, and the amount of dues paid by Burrows, as stated by the acting Minister of the Interior, would exactly correspond with the scale of dues, under another clause, so that it is proved to demonstration, that not a cent was paid in lieu of bonuses, or in lieu of ground rent.

Here are the figures: The railway ties, for which Burrows would have got $24,593.25, he paid for at 3 cents, under section 11, clause 'A.' That would give $2,952.16. He paid 5 cents for telegraph poles, which amounted to $115. He paid 1 cent for fence posts, or $15.23; and 25 cents for cordwood, $432.50; piling, $117.50. Total $3,632.29. So that the position is this: Supposing Mr. Burrows had been a saw-mill owner, supposing he had a saw-mill contiguous to the track, and supposing he cut the timber in his mill and paid the 50 cents per 1,000 feet for sawn lumber, and the 50 cents extra in lieu of the bonus and ground rent, still it would be impossible to avoid the conclusion that we were face to face with a piece of nepotism. But when he fulfilled none of the conditions, when he had no saw-mill, when he did not saw one inch of this lumber, when, therefore, he did not fulfil a single condition, not only are we face to face with nepotism, but with something very like rascality. We have the Minister of the Interior, who makes a regulation to suit his own family, and who, in order to help a member of his family, defies the conditions of that regulation. I say that discloses a very bad state of things. I beg to move, therefore:

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof:—'an order in council was passed on July 1, 1898, which, while in the main re-enacting the former regulations contained section 17 which placed the granting of permits to cut timber under certain conditions in the discretion of the Minister of the Interior.

That the aforesaid section 17 was rescinded by order in council of January 13, 1899.

That Theodore A. Burrows, a brother-in-law of the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, received a permit under section 17 of the order in council of July 1, 1898, aforesaid, on January 17, 1899, four days after it had been rescinded.

That the facts disclosed in the return respecting permits and applications for permits to cut timber under the order in council of July 1, 1898, indicate that the aforesaid Theodore A. Burrows had no mill on or contiguous to the tract of land covered by his permit, and that during the year 1898 he had cut large quantities of timber illegally.

That he did this as appears from the letter of the agent of Dominion lands at Dauphin, dated January 10, 1899, 'at a time when no surveys of the lands had been made and when it was not possible to give a description.'

That the timber cut by him was not manufactured at any mill, but was disposed of wholly or in the main to the Dauphin Railway, in the shape of ties, poles, &c.

That the said Theodore A. Burrows, though he did not intend to manufacture the lumber at any mill and though this was known to the department, was nevertheless granted a permit under section 17 aforesaid. That he never paid the Crown dues provided by the section 17 aforesaid to be paid in lieu of bonus and ground rent.

That as a fact he cut 1,523 fence posts, 1,730 cords of wood, 2,318 telegraph poles, 4,786 feet of piling, 98,372 railway ties, the ties alone being worth $24,593, and all he paid the government in dues was $3,632.

That the provisions of section 17 were intended as stated in official documents to be available only for saw-mill owners with mills in operation, and who stood in need of lumber to keep their mills going. That only a saw-mill owner who manufactured the lumber could pay the dues contemplated by the section 17 aforesaid to stand in lieu of bonus and ground rent.

That millowners who applied for permit under the provisions of section 17 aforesaid for the purpose of manufacturing lumber were in some cases refused.

That in granting Theodore A. Burrows a permit under section 17 aforesaid, the provisions of the said section were violated; that he could be held qualified to receive a permit under it only by a play upon words; that he never fulfilled its conditions.

That the facts recited aforesaid indicate that partiality has been shown by the Hon. Clifford Sifton, the Minister of the Interior, to Theodore A. Burrows, his brother-in-law, and call for immediate attention and investigation.'

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I have followed the statement of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), very carefully, to find out how the public interest has been prejudicially affected by any action taken under the regulations, to find out if the hon. gentleman had any charge to make against the Minister of the Interior, supported by any facts or borne out by any reasonable statement that would appeal to one's better judgment. But I have come to the conclusion that this is one more evidence of a deliberate policy on the part of certain gentlemen in the opposition, having no real substantial criticism of the department to offer, to resort to personal attacks—to mere mud-throwing. The minister must be attacked because he happens to have as a brother-in-law a gentleman engaged in what I believe to be a perfectly legitimate business, and a well-known and highly-respected citizen in the district in which he lives. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is not situated, I suppose, like most other people, as he has no relatives in this country. He thinks that all that is necessary is to show to the House and the country that a person occupying some position or engaged in some business is connected with some minister, and that implies fraud; and, without the slightest proof, he goes on to frame a resolution, the statements in which, I am free to say, are untrue.

Mr. DAVIN. I give the facts—here is your own return.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But there are other facts. The railway was being built in this district, development was going on at a very rapid pace and a large number of settlers were going in. It was represented to the department by the Crown timber agent, Mr. E. S. Stephenson—and, by the way, it is a wonder the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) did not say there was collusion between the minister and the Crown timber agent—

Mr. DAVIN. That is too thin—going behind an official.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is uneasy. He sees that this dirt-throwing, this policy of personal attacks on the character of respectable citizens, is not countenanced even by his own friends in this House and in the country; and when the facts are pointed out, he grows uneasy—though I must say that I do not think he is very sensitive about things of that kind. But I was trying to show what was actually done by the department. Mr. Stephenson, the Crown timber agent, made a report to the department that in this district it was desirable to give saw-mill owners an opportunity to get some timber adjoining the limits that they might have, where they had not enough timber to carry on their business and supply the needs of the community. The hon. gentleman seems to think it a terrible charge to make in this House, that the minister allowed certain parties to have permits to cut the timber to supply the railway. But the railway required the timber, and surely it was a proper thing to give that timber under the regulations.

Mr. DAVIN. Without competition, and in defiance of section 17?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was not in defiance of section 17. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) finds that he has made statements not strictly in accordance with the facts. As I was pointing out, on this recommendation the clause in the regulations was adopted which the hon. gentleman referred to. And how very different that is from the policy supported by the hon. gentleman himself for years while he was in this House, and while his friends were in power. They granted timber limits without competition, without any conditions whatever. All it required, during that time, was to be a favourite—

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) says that was changed in 1885.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That policy, I am glad to say, was changed. But the only modification was not to grant to favourites, as had been done by his friends before that.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) to say that the state of the law required the change made by the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and that under the former government it was always the rule to give timber limits without competition?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did say that for a great many years, during which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) supported the Conservative party, they granted these timber limits without competition and without conditions. I did say that that was changed, as I am informed, in 1885. The hon. gentleman says it was not changed until 1889.

Mr. DAVIN. I quoted the order in council of 1889; but I believe the change was made in 1885.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have been informed by the department the change was made in 1885. And what is the clause that the hon. minister adopted in the regulation? It is as follows:

In the discretion of the Minister of the Interior, permits may be granted in Manitoba and the North-west Territories to saw-mill owners to cut over a definitely described tract of land, not exceeding fifty square miles in extent, on payment of Crown dues at the rate of 50 cents per thousand feet on sawn lumber, and a further sum of 50 cents per thousand feet in lieu of bonus and ground rent; all other products of manufacture to be paid for at the rates set forth in section 11, clause (a).

What is the effect of that change in the regulation? Timber was required in that district by the settlers and by the railway. The payment of double fees on lumber would be more, as is well known to the officers of the department, than any bonus that had been received for the limits that were put up at competition.

Mr. DAVIN. He did not pay these double fees.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) will wait a moment he will be told the facts. He finds that he has made a statement that he cannot substantiate, and he is ashamed of it. He tried to make another point because one of the saw-mill owners, he said—and I have no doubt it is true—is a brother-in-law of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). The hon. gentleman says that this was done for his special benefit. But I find that there were others who got permits under this regulation. I find there were H. B. Mitchell, Capt. William Robinson, K. Finnsson, J. A. Christie, Alfred A. Wells, M. McKinley, L. E. Benz, Walter Humberstone and J. Caverly.

Mr. DAVIN. Every one of them fulfilled the conditions of the clause, but J. M. Burrows did not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Burrows did. That is where the hon. gentleman makes a statement that is not correct, in order to show that this man was treated differently from the others. Speculators and others were anxious to come in under this clause, but because the department was particular in seeing that the conditions were fulfilled before any grant was made, my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) accused them of favouritism. He has stated in his resolution that Mr. Burrows had not a saw-mill. I am informed on unquestionable authority—

Mr. DAVIN. What I stated was that Burrows had a saw-mill forty miles away and could not fulfil the conditions, and that, no matter where he had a saw-mill, he sawed no lumber.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The general impression that the hon. gentleman conveyed by his resolution and his speech was that Mr. Burrows had not a saw-mill and was not in the business.

Mr. DAVIN. Will the hon. gentleman excuse me? I have again and again used the word, that he could only be held to be a saw-mill owner under section 17, by punning on the word 'saw-mill,' because he palpably was not a saw-mill owner to saw lumber.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not want to be unfair to any person, but the impression I received from his whole speech, and the terms of his resolution, was that he was trying to give the people in this country to understand, by insinuation at all events, that Mr. Burrows was not a saw-mill owner, and did not own one; whereas the fact is he was a saw-mill owner, and came strictly under these regulations in that respect. Now, the public did not lose anything in respect to the dues or otherwise, under these regulations, because as I have pointed out, they gave the actual and legitimate saw-mill owner an opportunity of cutting an extended timber limit up to fifty square miles, if he required it in connection with his business, and the double dues would fully recompense the public treasury for the amount of bonus that was remitted.

Mr. CLANCY. Did he pay these dues?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly. Mr. Burrows does not appear to have benefited from any favouritism in that country. I have been looking over the list of limits given under competition, and I find that Mr. Burrows pays the highest amount per square mile for his limit, of any man in that district. The lowest I find to be $3.33 per square mile, and one of the very highest is $79.16. Now, Mr. Burrows, for the limit he received, pays $100 per square mile.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What regulates the price per mile?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is put up for public competition. What I want to show is, that the regulation is based upon experience in that district, and while it gave this privilege to those legitimately engaged in the business of the sawing and cutting of timber for the use of settlers in that district, the public treasury received as much under that regulation as it could receive under a system of competition. As has been frankly stated, it was found that under that clause men who were not legitimately in the business, endeavoured to take advantage of the regulations to get timber limits, and it was thought better to repeal that clause and return to the previous system, under which the policy of the department would be public competition. Now, I do not think the hon. gentleman has made anything out of these two points: First, that the public interest has suffered in any way; and secondly, that the Minister of the Interior showed any favouritism to his brother-in-law, or has granted him any privilege not granted to any other person who applied under that clause, and complied with the regulations.

Mr. CLANCY. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. If it occurs to the hon. gentleman that there was any irregularity or impropriety in this transaction, I would like him to point it out.

Mr. CLANCY. Did Mr. Burrows manufacture this identical lumber now in question at a saw-mill within the meaning of the spirit of the Act, requiring saw-mill owners to supply settlers, &c.?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not the particulars here, but I have not the slightest doubt that for any lumber cut under this regulation, he would have to pay the double dues, and that everything he took off the land, ties, telegraph poles, and everything else, were fully accounted for, and he paid dues for them according to regulation 17, which I have just read.

Mr. CLANCY. That would affect the Crown under the circumstances, because the license was refused unless certain conditions were complied with.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no doubt these regulations can be abused. The reason we put up these limits to public competition was to avoid favouritism, to avoid granting valuable lands to people without the public having every opportunity to bid on them. You will easily see that the saw-mill owners often have, in timbered sections such as that, a great grievance. A man has invested a large amount of money in a saw-mill, timber is scarce on his limits, and when he prospects, and surveys, and prepares a plan for application, he finds that people who have not spent a cent on it, bid against him and run up the price. I say that Mr. Stephenson, the Crown lands agent there, made representations to the department that it would be well to give these people an opportunity, that it was only fair to them and in the interest of the settlers, to make the grants under certain conditions, and that is the reason the change was made. But like many other good laws, it was found that this regulation could be abused, that here was an effort made by speculators and others, as agents of manufacturers and dealers in lumber, to take advantage of this clause. That is the reason it was repealed, and not for any such reason as the hon. gentleman insinuates. I have pointed out clearly that Mr. Burrows did not get any advantage under this clause, that was not granted to other saw-mill owners in the district, who complied with the regulations. If any hon. gentleman could bring forward anything to show that any individual, whether he was a relation of the Minister of the Interior or not, had received any undue advantage, the department would be liable to criticism and censure. But on the contrary, I think it has been clearly proven that the arrangement was in the interest of the settlers of that district, it was in the interest of the legitimate saw-mill owners, and the treasury has not suffered in the least. I find that the hon. gentleman from West Assiniboia, when he supported the Conservative government, took a very different view with regard to this matter. While he was speaking, I have been looking over some papers that I have, and I find that the Conservative government granted over 500 berths, 50 square miles, without competition, aggregating thousands of square miles of territory; and I find that the hon. gentleman himself was an applicant, and was granted fifty square miles. I suppose he had a saw-mill, I suppose he was a lumber dealer. He has read off the amount of money paid to the department by Mr. Burrows, but I find on referring to the return, that he never paid even the rent of this fifty square miles that was granted to him. So I think it ill becomes the hon. gentleman, without some better grounds than he has shown yet, to bring this matter up in the way he has done, and try to throw dirt—that is the only way I can characterize his language—against the Minister of the Interior, because, amongst these applicants to whom a limit was granted under this clause in the Act, after fulfilling all the conditions, happened to be a relative of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Would the minister lay on the Table of the House the return that he has just quoted from, showing that a timber limit was granted to the hon. member for West Assiniboia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have the statement in my hand, which the hon. gentleman may see. The returns are all accessible in the department.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not see what led the hon. member for Assiniboia to bring this question before the House. If he thought he was going to make any political capital out of it—and he could not have brought it up for any other reason—I think he has made a mistake. I do not see that he has brought it before the House for any other reason. As the hon. acting Minister of the Interior has just pointed out he has not shown that the public interest has suffered in any way by this timber limit being granted to Mr. Burrows, but, evidently, he wants to stir up a noise so as to impress the public mind with the idea that there is something wrong, simply because Mr. Burrows is a relative of the hon. Minister of the Interior. What are the facts of the case? The regulations were changed. On whose recommendation? On the recommendation of Mr. Stephenson, the Crown timber agent in the city of Winnipeg, and if the hon. gentleman is going to make political capital out of it, I may tell him for his benefit, that Mr. Stephenson is a son of Mr. Rufus Stephenson, the late Conservative member for Kent. Therefore, I do not think there would be any collusion between Mr. Stephenson and the hon. Minister of the Interior. Evidently Mr. Stephenson, in following out his duty as a public officer, and I think he is a first-class official, has made this recommendation in the interest, not only of the mill-owners, but in the interest of the people of Manitoba generally. After an individual, or a company has gone into a place and built a mill at an enormous expense it is not a fair proposition that, after having invested all their capital in the erection of the mill in making surveys and exploring tracts of timber, some speculator should be allowed to crop up, put in a bid against them, not with the intention of putting up a mill, but of mulcting the millowners. If Mr. Burrows is a brother-in-law of the Minister of the Interior, I do not think that alters the situation at all. Is Mr. Burrows to be deprived of his rights as a citizen simply because he happens to be a relative of the hon. Minister of the Interior for the time being? I do not think that is a fair proposition. In Dauphin last autumn during the elections in Manitoba this question was made a live issue. The opponents of Mr. Burrows issued a special edition of a newspaper published in that town containing an article headed 'Great Timber Steal.' The people of Dauphin, by reason of their being upon the ground, understand the facts of the case. Mr. Burrows received a majority of almost 500 votes, the largest majority received by any candidate in the provincial elections of the province of Manitoba. If there had been anything wrong, if there had been any crookedness of this kind is it reasonable to suppose that the people of Dauphin would have returned Mr. Burrows, after the charges made during that election, by that enormous majority? Of course, the hon. member for York said that there was something wrong with the lists, and that they had been stuffed at certain places. I want to point out to the hon. gentleman and to others, that, in Dauphin, where hon. gentlemen will admit there was no stuffing of the lists, and where the people knew what the facts were, this large majority was given to Mr. Burrows. I think it is only fair to conclude that the hon. member for Western Assiniboia brought this question before the House to try to make a little political capital for his party out of it, and I can assure the House that as far as the hon. gentleman himself is concerned he needs a great deal of political capital. If he expects to get back to this House he will have to do something far weightier than make the charges which he has made against the hon. Minister of the Interior to-day. What do I find in this return which the hon. acting Minister of the Interior alluded to a little while ago? It shows that during the Conservative regime, during the eighteen years that they were in power they granted timber berths to the extent of 26,000 square miles, that they actually gave away to their political friends, not to bona fide millowners, not to gentlemen who intended to go in and establish mills in the interest of the people, but to political heelers and friends, as the returns will show. There is hardly a leading Conservative in Ottawa, or in other parts of the Dominion, who is not represented here as having gobbled up fifty or sixty miles of timber limits in the North-west Territories. My hon. friend from Western Assiniboia had fifty miles secured before anybody else was able to get in. Fifty miles! He did not go to the breezy plains of Western Assiniboia to get timber, because there is no timber to be had there larger than would make a walking stick for him, but he came to the district of Saskatchewan and gobbled up fifty miles. Did he ever pay a cent for it? No. He never paid a cent of bonus or rent or anything, and it has not been shown that he ever owned a saw-mill. I do not think it has been shown that the hon. gentleman ever owned anything more than a buck-saw. Now, what does 26,000 square miles of timber represent? It represents, and I wish hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to pay attention to this, 16,000,000 acres of the timber lands of Manitoba and North-west Territories granted to the political friends and heelers of hon. gentlemen opposite without one cent being paid for it, without any competition or anything else. Now they get up and tell us that the hon. Minister of the Interior granted fifty acres of timber to his brother-in-law, and that there is something wrong in doing this. I do not want to take up the time of the House by reading this list of names. I see the hon. member for York is evidently afraid that his name is in it. I see the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), and several Conservative senators figure largely in this return. We have quite a number of Conservative members in the list.

An hon. MEMBER. Read the names.

Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. DAVIS. The list is too long. I see the power-house of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is looking this way. We have here the names of D. W. Cummings, Sherman & Pratt, Donald Gunn, A. Cameron, R. McIntosh, J. S. Armitage, E. Roberts, A. Hudson & Co., William Hardy, R. L. Rogers, Wm. Stubbs. I do not think the last named is the hon. gentleman who sits at my right. I see the names of Shields, Haggart, MacLaren. Evidently one of these gentlemen is the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, who is referred to, and another is one of our leading senators. They figure here as having got a large grant of timber in the North-west Territories. Chas. Whitehead, Howlew & Muirhead, Armitage & McCullough, Williams & Harrison, John McBeth, A. Watts, D. McFadden, and Shields, Haggart, MacLaren and Nicol. I suppose Nicol had a bigger pull than these other gentlemen, and he was able to scoop in a larger limit than they were. I am not going to give the whole of the list, because there are hundreds and hundreds of names in it. I see here the Cochrane Ranch Company. There is a gentleman in the Senate of the name of Cochrane. Then the list continues, Turner & Co., Hiram Robinson, J. A. Hughes, Drake & Rutherford, Fergus & O'Connor, Amos Rowe. I have heard that gentleman's name mentioned here before, and I see that he is down for a large tract. Then, there is another gentleman who figured in this House some years ago—John Adams. I suppose hon. gentlemen will remember Mr. Adams in connection with the Rykert business. D. McMillan is slated for fifty miles of timber in the North-west Territories.

An hon. MEMBER. He is a judge.

Mr. DAVIS. He was a good judge of timber at that time. Then there are Shorheed and Laidlaw, and Moore & Macdowall. This company of Moore & Macdowall figures very largely in these transactions. Mr. Macdowall, who was my predecessor from Saskatchewan in this House, managed to get a considerable amount of timber limits during the time he occupied a seat here, like the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), when he formed that famous joint stock company, and got $10 stock put into it so that he might dodge the Independence of Parliament Act and get government printing. Mr. Macdowall formed himself and another into a company so as to enable him to grab a number of timber limits in the North Saskatchewan. What little money he paid for them did not amount to a hill of beans, but during the eight years he was in this House, he managed to get enough timber limits to enable him to hypothecate them to the Bank of Ottawa for $80,000. That is the way the Conservative party handled the timber limits of the Territories. And yet, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) talks about timber limits being granted without competition. Here is the name of a gentleman well known in the city of Ottawa, Mr. McLeod Stewart, who got fifty miles without paying a cent. Here are some more names in which a Mr. Haggart appears.

Mr. COWAN. What Haggart is that?

Mr. DAVIS. I fancy it must be the ex-Minister of Railways. They are down for timber limits here, and they got them without competition and without price. Again, we have Mr. Dickenson, who was a member of parliament here, and Jacob Erratt, I do not know who he is, but he got a good slice. He must have stood high in the councils of the Conservative party, because he got a larger slice than some of the others.

Mr. MACKIE. He is an ex-mayor of Ottawa.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, that accounts for it; he had a political pull. Now, I hope the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) will not deny this, but, I would call his attention to timber berth No. 130, for he may have forgotten the number, and I find here from this return that one N. F. Davin got fifty square miles on the Saskatchewan River.

Mr. GIBSON. Did he pay anything for it?

Mr. DAVIS. He got it without money and without price.

Mr. McMULLEN. What did he pay for it?

Mr. DAVIS. He paid nothing at all, and there was no competition. It was handed over holus bolus to the hon. member (Mr. Davin), and I suppose nobody ever thought of asking him if he could build a mill.

Mr. GIBSON. Is it run by wind or by water?

Mr. DAVIS. It is a windmill of course.

Mr. COWAN. A windmill run by water.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, a windmill run by water, and something stronger at times. Here are some more who got these timber limits. There was C. C. Colby. I do not know who he is.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. A member of the Conservative government.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, they were not satisfied with giving it to the small fish, but here we find that members of the government actually got timber limits. Among others who got limits were Mr. Alex. Fraser, Mr. Skead, Moore & Macdowall again, Wm. Stubbs again, and Senator Sanford, who has, unfortunately, passed away. Then, there was P. MacLaren. He is one of those old gentlemen up in the Senate. It is no wonder the Conservatives could go to the Senate when they got fifty miles of timber limits without paying anything for it.

Mr. HAGGART. Did Mr. MacLaren get his timber limits without paying anything for them?

Mr. DAVIS. There was no competition.

Mr. HAGGART. Just read what he paid for them.

Mr. DAVIS. Five dollars a square mile. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) can have this return when I am done with it. He will find there the parties who paid a certain amount of ground rent, and the parties who paid none, and the parties who gave a bonus. I am reading the names of those who paid no bonus, and the hon. member from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) paid no bonus.

Mr. TAYLOR. And get no limit.

Mr. DAVIS. This is a very long return, and it comprises a vast number of names of Conservatives who got grants of timber lands from the Conservative government, without any competition and without giving any consideration whatever for it.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair before six o'clock, I was alluding to the number of timber berths in the Northwest Territories that had been granted by the late government to their political friends between the years 1878 and 1896. I must again apologize to the House for taking up its time on this question, because, with the session drawing to a close, the proper business of the House should be proceeded with, and questions of this kind should not be brought up. But hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have for the last week or more been bringing up various questions with the evident intention of making some cheap political capital for themselves. We have had the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) treating us on several days with a rehash of his Yukon charges of last year; we have had another gentleman bringing up the question of food supplied to the volunteers; and, last but not least, we have now the hon. member for Western Assiniboia retelling this ancient history about the timber limit which he says was granted to the brother-in-law of the Minister of the Interior. If these hon. gentlemen wish to go into matters of that kind, I suppose it is only fair and right that we should give them an answer to show what they themselves did in the eighteen years that they were in power. Now, I submit that the hon. gentleman who brought this matter up made no case at all. He argued the matter to a conclusion in his own mind; he said the inference was this, the facts led people to believe that, and so forth; just as the hon. member for Pictou picked up the gossip of the streets and said, Tom Brown said this and John Jones said that. If I were to take up all the gossip I have heard outside of this House, I could tell about having heard of some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House making fortunes out of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract and other contracts. Now, by the list which has been handed to me by the acting Minister of the Interior, I find that no less than 537 timber berths in the North-west Territories were granted to hon. gentlemen opposite between 1878 and 1896 without competition, and without a bonus or a dollar of any sort being paid for them. If timber berths had been given to people who would put their capital into the country for the purpose of developing it and opening it up, there would be no ground of complaint; but shortly after the North-west Territories were opened up we find that a whole horde of hungry followers of hon. gentlemen opposite invaded that country and gobbled up all the timber limits they could get from the boundaries of Manitoba to the foot of the Rocky Mountains. They did not confine their scope to one province or to one district, but gobbled up everything in sight from the Cypress Hills to the Saskatchewan River. They gobbled up no less than 16,000,000 acres of the timber lands of the North-west; and they were not millowners, but merely speculators, and amongst these people I find the names of a great many of the leading members on the other side of the House. It would be well for hon. gentlemen opposite to see that their own backyards are clean before they look into the backyards of their neighbours. I may say first that when I stated that Senator MacLaren had obtained timber limits in the North-west Territories, the hon. ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) said that he had paid his rent. He may have paid two or three years' rent; but he received those timber limits without competition and without paying any bonus—I suppose because he was a political supporter of the party then in power. There were 178 timber berths granted on which from one to two years' rent was paid, but no bonus. Three hundred and fifty-two timber berths were granted by hon. gentlemen opposite to their political friends without competition, on which no ground rent whatever was paid and no bonus given. As I said before, amongst the men who were feeding at the public trough in that way, I find the names of very prominent gentlemen on the other side of the House; and I am sure that hon. gentlemen opposite will like to listen to this, because their old sins are coming up and staring them in the face, and I am sure it will make very good reading. Now, in this list, which was furnished to me by the acting Minister of the Interior, I find the name of D. Tisdale, M.P. for South Norfolk, who received a timber limit. I find the name of R. S. White, M.P. for Cardwell, who received a timber limit. I find the name of R. C. McCuaig, M.P. for Prince Edward County, who received a timber limit. I find the name of C. C. Colby, M. P. for Stanstead, who received a timber limit. An hon. gentleman tells me that he was Minister of Agriculture, which makes the matter worse. Not satisfied with his followers gobbling up these timber lands, here is a minister of the Crown participating in this onslaught on the public domain. T. Kenny, M.P. for Halifax, received a timber limit. It was not confined to Ontario and Quebec, but from the shores of the Atlantic Ocean men came to gobble up the lands of the North-west Territories. I find the name of another gentleman who occupies a very prominent position in this House, a gentleman whom I see sitting day in and day out in front of the hon member for Western Assiniboia—J. G. H. Bergeron, M.P.; he was feeding at the public trough in this way. I find the name of L. H. Massue, M.P., George H. Howland, senator, I believe, John White, M.P., J. M. Farrow and Asher Farrow, sons of the M.P., who gobbled up some hundreds of miles of timber limits. I find a gentleman who was appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite to a very important position in the service of the country, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, W. B. Scarth. He also was in the business of gobbling up timber limits. I find the name of David Blain, William Richardson, M.P., H. A. Ward, Montplaisir, M.P., H. H. Smith, commissioner of Crown lands, who of all men should not be implicated in a matter of this kind. What would hon. gentlemen opposite say if the present commissioner of Crown lands had got hold of fifty or one hundred square miles of timber limits? You would then hear the breezy voice of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) reading the government a lecture on the evils of the Grit party. We find another gentleman, who occupies not a very small position in this House, the hon. Dr. Montague, ex-minister of the Crown. He figured very largely in this promenade over the North-west Territories, at a time when they were gobbling up timber limits. I also find the name of my illustrious and poetical friend from the plains, N. F. Davin. He got fifty square miles. These gentlemen would not take acres, nothing but miles would do them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How much did he pay?

Mr. DAVIS. He paid nothing at all. If the hon. gentleman had stuck to the breezy plains of West Assiniboia, I would not have so much of a grievance, but looking around those beautiful plains and not finding sufficient timber there to make telegraph poles and cord wood and fence posts, he went to the Saskatchewan and located fifty miles of timber. I find W. E. Sanford's name and John Haggart, M.P., the latter was connected with the company of McLaren, Haggart, Nichol and somebody else. I will give credit to the hon. member for West Assiniboia, that he was very modest in his demands. He only asked for fifty miles. I find the name of the ex-Minister of Agriculture figuring in two or three places in this book.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Then the hon. gentleman finds what is incorrect.

Mr. DAVIS. I will give the hon. gentleman the references and the numbers of the berths, because his memory may not be very good. So many of those things pass through his fertile brain, that no doubt he cannot remember them all. I understand that the name of the hon. member for East Grey appears in this book too.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey.) I want the hon. gentleman to understand that my name does not appear in that or any other account for timber limits, nor does it appear for any other lands in the North-west.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, and will withdraw the statement, but I find the name of Sproule. It may be the hon. gentleman's brother, and does not make any difference.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to set him right—unless he desires to create a false impression—I might give him this information. I put in sixteen or seventeen or eighteen applications for timber berths for men whom I never saw. I put in also an application for two of my brothers, who then contemplated going into the milling business, and who were living in Winnipeg. Of all the applications I put in, there never was one granted, and not a stick of timber cut. As for myself I have never, directly or indirectly, had any interest in any timber or grazing or other lands in the North-west, except such lands as I bought from private individuals and paid for.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You got no subsidy for the applications?

Mr. SPROULE. No, I am not in the habit of doing that sort of business as the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) is.

Mr. DAVIS. I am very glad to have the explanation of the hon. gentleman, and am very much pleased he did not get any timber limits. But he has acknowledged the corn. He has admitted that he put in applications for sixteen.

Mr. SPROULE. Fifteen out of the sixteen were Reformers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No wonder they did not get anything.

Mr. DAVIS. I am quite satisfied, if that was the case, but it must have been near election time. He has not given us the information whether those gentlemen ever got the timber limits.

Mr. SPROULE. I tell the hon. gentleman that the applications were sent me from all over the country, and so far as I know not one of the applicants got a timber limit.

Mr. DAVIS. That does not mend matters. The hon. gentleman says he put in applications from sixteen parties all over the country, whom he did not know. That appears to me to make matters worse.

Mr. SPROULE. They came from your own country.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman should not have put in those applications unless he knew the applicants were from bona fide millowners. But apparently he never asked a question.

Mr. BRITTON. Perhaps it would be in order for the gentleman to tell us whether he put in those applications as a land agent or as a politician.

Mr. SPROULE. Neither. I got them from a gentleman who was living in Bertram, and who is in the timber business. He had a mill out there. He sent these applications, and I sent the letters on, and never saw one of the fourteen or fifteen in my life except one man who happened to be from my riding, and who was a strong Reformer and voted against me.

Mr. DAVIS. I was sorry to hear the hon. gentleman make the statement he did, because I have a great deal of respect for him. But the idea of his standing up here and telling us that he put in sixteen applications—which I must call bogus applications—from parties all over, asking for from fifty to 100 miles of timber limits each, in the North-west Territories, without finding out whether there was a mill to be erected or people to be served or anything else—

Mr. SPROULE. I sent those parties copies of the regulations under which they were to act. I got their letters asking me to apply and sent their letters to the department, and sent them copies of the regulations under which timber limits could be granted. Any hon. gentleman would have done the same for those who sent in applications or have been guilty of discourtesy.

Mr. DAVIS. In cases of that kind, generally speaking, from my district, when a party wants to put in an application for timber limits, he sends it to the department and asks me if I will go to the department and interest myself in trying to get the thing carried out. As I have been informed on credible authority, these applications sent by the hon. member for East Grey were sent just before the general elections.

Mr. SPORULE. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIS. Sixteen applications handed in to the hon. gentleman from parties all over whom he did not know, and each of whom wanted fifty to 100 miles of timber limits in the North-west Territories. Things must have come dear in the good old days in this country.

An hon. MEMBER. Was there any money paid?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know, it seemed to me a go-as-you-please matter. The ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Montague) said that his name did not appear in the list. The list is so long I cannot go through it at the moment, but I can refer the return to him, and he will find his name there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) is quite right now. He said my name appeared there several times. It appears there once.

Mr. DAVIS. It is only in degree, then, that I am wrong?

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) will permit me—perhaps he will explain what there was wrong in that transaction, or if there was anything wrong. If he can do that, he will have some cause of complaint. Perhaps a name similar to mine does appear there. My brother was a saw-mill man in Manitoba, one of the first there; and when his saw-mill in Manitoba was burnt, he went westward looking for timber and took up timber limits. But, if he took them up, he took them up under the regulations. I see the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) smiles. I may say I never promoted railways in this House and made money out of them. I never made a red cent out of my public life, either through timber limits, grass lands or otherwise.

Mr. DAVIS. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) has acknowledged the corn. He wants to know what harm it was. I think there was a great deal of harm. The idea of a member of this House—

Mr. MONTAGUE. That was many years before I became a member of this House.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) tells us something about a man going west. The whole Conservative party about that time seems to have taken Horace Greeley's advice and gone west. They found plenty of timber limits and fertile lands, and they all seemed to be attracted. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) only got fifty miles; I am rather sorry he did not get more. What harm was there in the transaction, he wants to know. Well, what harm is there in the case the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) is trying to make political capital out of? Here is a mill-owner, one of the largest property owners in that country—

Mr. MONTAGUE. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) did not say I ever got a timber limit. A formal application was put in for me. I never owned an acre or received a dollar for it in my life.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, perhaps there was not enough to go round. But, like the Irishman who fired at his landlord and missed, I am sure the hon. gentleman did his best, and no man could do more. But, I was giving the names of prominent Conservatives in this return. There was Mr. McMillan, then a member of this House from Middlesex—

Mr. COWAN. No, a judge in Haldimand.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, he seems to have been a judge then—a judge of timber. Then, there is Mr. MacLaren, a senator. Now, I skip the name of the hon. gentleman from Haldimand (Mr. Montague), but it is there all right. Then, I find the name of Mr. Boyle, then member of parliament for Wellingland. And here is another name illustrious in the Conservative party—T. Mayne Daly. He was Minister of the Interior under the late government. As such he received a training, no doubt, which will assist him in picking out timber limits and coal mines in British Columbia. Then, there is Adam Brown, ex-member of parliament. I find here also the name of Mr. Caron—another minister of the Crown, I think. And here is another friend of ours who sits on the other side—Mr. W. J. Poupore, the representative of Pontiac. Hon. Mr. Hardisty, a senator, figures for fifty miles. I find the name of Dr. Orton, then member of parliament for Central Wellington, who is down for fifty miles. They do not seem to have arranged very well as to the quantity. It seems to me that a minister of the Crown in that government should have had a hundred miles, a member of parliament fifty miles, the deputy ministers and commissioners of Crown lands twenty-five miles, and then let the small fry have ten, five or two miles.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Davin got fifty miles.

Mr. DAVIS. I am not sorry, because I think he needed it. Then, I find the name of Mr. Macdowall, my predecessor in the representation of Saskatchewan. He did not confine his operation as the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) seems to have done. I wonder that those who supported the Conservative government in that House should allow this quiet, mild-mannered man to scoop in so much.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How much did he get?

Mr. DAVIS. I cannot stop now to figure out the total number of square miles; but he was able to hypothecate it in the Bank of Ottawa for $80,000. He was here for only two terms, eight years. So, he got $10,000 a year. The ordinary member of parliament puts in his time here for five months for $1,000. Another name in this list is that of George H. Bradbury. I have met him in the campaigns in the west, and I wondered why he was so energetic. His interest in the Conservative party may be accounted for by the fact that his name figures so largely in this return. I do not propose to take up the time of the House in reading the list of those occupying prominent positions on the other side who have figured on this timber lands return.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That would take a week.

Mr. DAVIS. It would take altogether too long. Why, Mr. Speaker, look at the size of the list. I can hardly count the pages—filled with names of prominent Conservatives, not only in Ottawa, but all over the country.

Mr. GIBSON. Does the name of Bergeron appear there?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly he figures here. The firewood was scarce, I suppose, in the town where he lives, and he wanted to get some timber limits. I think he is down for fifty miles.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Where do you find that?

Mr. DAVIS. In the return brought down by the minister.

Mr. BERGERON. Did I ever apply for it?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not in a position to say.

Mr. BERGERON. Exactly—the hon. gentleman does not now what he is talking about.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said that he received applications from Tom, Dick and Harry, and put them in. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is Tom, Dick or Harry.

Mr. BERGERON. If the rest of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Davis') speech is like this part, he had better sit down, because there is not a word of truth in what he says.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) will find his name in the return.

Mr. BERGERON. I know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) refers to. It is an old story and has been denied twenty times. It was exploded long before he ever thought of coming here.

Mr. DAVIS. I tell the hon. gentleman that he made the application on the 15th of February, 1882, and again on the 15th of February, 1883. If the hon. gentleman will brush up his memory a little he will come to the conclusion that I am right.

Mr. BERGERON. Not a word of truth in it.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, there is the record. I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not get 100 miles. But, Mr. Speaker, I am not going through all the names. The hon. gentleman from Beauharnois has seen fit to challenge my statement. I find here is the number of the file—'File 22,662, number of timber berth, 169, J. H. G. Bergeron, 50 miles on Lake Winnipegosis.' Given without competition. I am sorry the hon. member for Beauharnois did not get 100 miles, because he is a very good fellow, and he might have been a seignior up at Lake Winnipegosis. It is a great country for fish. The hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, when they were in power, made a great many lords, a great many earls, by giving them public lands in the North-west Territories, and now we might make a few more out of timber. Now, the hon. member for Beauharnois, we might call him the Count of Lake Winnipegosis. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia would shine as the Duke of the Pile o' Bones. The hon. member the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Montague), we might call him the Earl of Medicine Hat. Then we have the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), the ex-Minister of Justice, he might be called the Earl of Yukon. That would be a very good name for that hon. gentleman. We have lots of nice names in the North-west Territories that we can furnish to all the lords and dukes and earls hon. gentlemen opposite wish to make.

But I was going on to say that this is a very serious consideration for the people of the eastern provinces. What are they going to think of the fact that 16,000,000 acres of timber land, the finest timber lands in that country, have been given away to political friends and supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, without one cent being paid into the public treasury? Why, Mr. Speaker, 16,000,000 acres is an immense extent of territory. If we had a belt of timber two miles wide and a railroad running through the centre of it, that road would run for 13,000 miles through solid timber, or half way round the globe. Or if you take a belt of timber 100 miles wide, it would extend all the way from here to the city of Toronto. When the people of the eastern provinces think over this enormous amount of timber that hon. gentlemen opposite gave away to their political friends, they will come to the conclusion that it is no wonder we had a rebellion in the North-west Territories in 1885. But that is not all that hon. gentlemen opposite did. They gave away 66,000,000 acres of the choicest and most fertile land in the North-west Territories to railway corporations, out of which public rumor says that a great many hon. gentlemen who occupied seats in this House made a great deal of money. That is what public opinion says, I am giving it for what it is worth, and it is worth just as much as the statements made by the hon. member for Pictou, about the Yukon and just as much as the statements made by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia. I say that the people of the North-west have a right to feel alarmed when they know that 66,000,000 acres of the choicest and most fertile land was given away for practically nothing to supposed railway corporations. The land was given away but the railroads were not built, the charters were only on paper. Then they come down and give away 16,000,000 acres of the choicest timber land of the country. Yet, in the face of all this, we find the member for West Assiniboia getting up and taking exception to the fact that a certain gentleman, whom he claimed is a brother-in-law of the Minister of the Interior, got a small belt of timber down in the Dauphin country on which he has paid up to the present time $5,000 or $6,000 in cash; and it has been shown by the acting Minister of the Interior that he paid more for it than any other person paid for a similar berth. I say that, in the face of such a record of the Conservative party for the last eighteen years, it ill-becomes the member for West Assiniboia or any other hon. gentleman opposite to get up and make a statement of that kind. What are the facts of the case? The facts are that the Crown timber agent in the city of Winnipeg, Mr. Stephenson, a most highly respectable man, one of the best officials that we have in this country, a man not appointed by this government but by the late government, whose father was a Conservative member for the county of Kent—this gentleman recommended that the regulations be changed in such a way as to allow bona fide millowners to get a certain amount of timber in the locality in which they lived, without competition. I think that was a perfectly correct regulation. I think when a millowner goes in there or any other person, and invests his capital for the purpose of opening up the country, the government is in duty bound to protect him. I would not grumble at hon. gentlemen opposite giving away all these timber limits if they had given them to persons who were going to open up the country. But here was a millowner in the Dauphin country that wanted a small piece of timber. He was not the only one, the regulation was not made for his benefit, although the member for West Assiniboia tries to show that the regulation was changed because Mr. Burrows was a brother-in-law of the Minister of the Interior. I do not think that the hon. gentleman will get many members in this House, or many people in this country, to believe that Mr. Stephenson, the Crown timber agent at Winnipeg, would commit such an offence as to publish bogus reports for the purpose of allowing any one to get timber limits. Mr. Burrows was not the only man that got limits. Mr. Stephenson in good faith recommended that the regulation be changed in such a way as to protect the bona fide millowners, because, as I have said, when this timber is put up for competition there are often speculators, some of them, perhaps, living in the city of Ottawa, who will put in tenders, not with the intention of operating a mill or of benefiting that country, but with the intention of hanging up the millowner and mulcting him in $2,000 or $3,000 in order to get a timber limit afterwards. I say the member for West Assiniboia has not been able to show that there was anything irregular about that. He says it looks bad. Well, some other things look bad. Let me point him to the fact that if he goes down to the province of Nova Scotia he will find that the hon. gentleman who is leading the opposition in this House has a great many of his relatives occupying positions in the public service, and there is no one who says very much about it.

But I want to say again that this question is ancient history in the west; and if the hon. member for West Assiniboia or any other hon. member on the other side imagines for a moment that they are going to make any political capital out of it, they are greatly mistaken. They will make just about as much political capital out of it as the hon. member for Pictou has made out of the Yukon charges that he has been talking about in this House for the last two or three years, and they have fallen flat. I pointed to the fact that during the election in Manitoba last autumn this question was made an issue on the platform. The people of the district of Dauphin, living on the spot, understand the circumstances of the case, as they have had an opportunity of judging the merits. The local Conservative paper that was edited, I understand, by a gentleman sent from the Star office, in Montreal, for the purpose, tried to throw dirt on Mr. Burrows, by saying that he had been implicated in a timber steal. Mr. Burrows denied the charge upon the platform, and he got a majority of 425 votes in the district of Dauphin, or double the majority that the whole Conservative party got in Manitoba. He polled two votes to one right in Dauphin where he is known. I think my hon. friend who is returned from Marquette (Mr. Roche), will give the people of Dauphin credit for being intelligent, that they know what they are voting upon, and when they vote, how they are voting, and if there had been anything crooked about this transaction, they would not have voted as they did. I have nothing more to say. I am glad that some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have repented of their sins, and given up some of the timber limits they got in the good old days. I am sorry that my hon. friend, whom I alluded to as the power-house of the Conservative party, the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), had not any share in this. I do not see his name in the list that I have read over.

Mr. WILLIAM J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House has been edified by the cultured gentleman who has just addressed a few remarks to the House, and that hon. members have been captured, not only by his style, but by his elegant language, and by the so-called defence that he has put up on this question that we are supposed to be discussing this evening. The hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), spoke this afternoon about the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), being engaged in mud-slinging, but, I think, if there has been any mud-slinging indulged in, it has been from his own side of the House, and what the hon. acting minister has not seen fit to indulge in himself, he has relegated to the most appropriate person who has done full justice to himself in that role, the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). It is not my intention to follow the hon. gentleman through his devious meanderings, covering the last eighteen years, introducing a lot of irrelevant matter into the discussion which has nothing to do with the question before us, nor is it my intention to correct the many misstatements which he has made here to-night, in his own peculiarly offensive style, because the House has become so well accustomed to the hon. gentleman's style of argument, if such it can be called, as to know how much reliance can be placed on anything emanating from the hon. gentleman's lips. It shows the very great stress that hon. gentlemen opposite are driven to, and especially the hon. acting Minister of the Interior, when he goes to the trouble of preparing a long list of some hundreds of names of gentlemen who, during the eighteen years that the Conservative party were in power, obtained what he claims were special privileges, by getting these timber berths from the government, many of whom, he declares, got them for nothing, which is not true, and trying to leave the impression on the House that they were Conservatives, when, as a matter of fact, many of these names that have been read, I am personally aware, are those of Liberals, whereas, a great many of the names that have been suppressed by the hon. gentleman are those of Liberals, and, therefore, his whole argument falls to the ground. He spoke of these gentlemen, and he mentioned the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, amongst others, as having secured special privileges, by getting these berths for nothing, when they did not do anything of the kind. It is true that a number of gentlemen applied for timber berths, but, they did not comply with the law, they did not erect mills, according to the Act, and, therefore, these berths reverted to the Crown, and the country lost not a single dollar, nor did the gentlemen reap one single dollar of benefit from them. The hon. gentleman has entirely misrepresented the facts, and he has read a long list of names, trying to convey the impression that those who obtained timber berths benefited financially from their reception. The case brought forward by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is one, in my opinion, of very great importance, involving, as it does, the disposal of our valuable timber limits and particularly in this case, it would appear, that there is ground for suspicion that they have been disposed of by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), in the interest of his political friends and near relatives, because, we find that this Mr. Burrows is the local member for the constituency of Dauphin, that he is the brother-in-law of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and but a nominal millowner, who did not live up to clause 17, which enables millowners to obtain these privileges. We all recognize the value of our timber limits, and especially those of us who live in the west, where, at the present time, in many districts, that commodity has become a very scarce article. It is necessary that the government should dispose of them in the interest of the settlers, and not in the interest of their own political friends, and private individuals, who may amass huge fortunes at the expense of the public domain. It would appear that up to July, 1898, the old law disposed of these timber limits by public competition, by offering every one of them in the open market, by charging $5 per square mile as ground rent, and asking a bonus. It would appear that the hon. Minister of the Interior, when he came into power, undertook to reverse all this, and it seems a strange coincidence that while this order in council was passed, changing these regulations, on July 1, 1898, it did not come into effect until August 13, 1898, and within eight days thereafter, the first applicant was Mr. Burrows, brother-in-law of the Minister of the Interior, who applied for fifty miles, the utmost limit that the law will permit. Mr. Burrows was informed in a letter from the Department of the Interior, that he would have to specify definitely the land he desired to secure. Mr. Burrows replied that he was unable to do so, because the land was unsurveyed. However, this did not prevent brother-in-law Burrows from going on and cutting on that land without a license, without the permission of the government, without having a survey made, although that privilege was refused to other applicants, and thus we find that there was discrimination in favour of Mr. Burrows. As to this clause 17, it is in the hands of a designing Minister of the Interior to do a very great deal in the interest of his political friends and relatives, as was done at least in this particular instance to the detriment of the country at large. It is true that Mr. Burrows, was part owner of a mill in Dauphin, but the mill is forty miles away from his limits, so that it is an evasion of the provision of the law, which says that the mill shall be contiguous to the territory applied for. Then, it was intended that he should be charged 50 cents per thousand in lieu of the bonus, and 50 cents extra per thousand in lieu of the ground rent, per foot, board measure, for every foot sawn in the mill. Mr. Burrows absolutely did not comply with this regulation at all. According to the correspondence which has been read here by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, he did not manufacture one single foot of lumber, and how could he pay a dollar a thousand for this lumber? On the other hand, he acted in the capacity of a speculator, and I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. Burrows, when he was making his application, shortly after August 13, when this clause was put into the regulations, wrote a letter to the Department of the Interior, congratulating them upon the change in the law, as well he might, seeing that he was such a great beneficiary therefrom. He pointed out that when millowners had to face competition in the open market, the bona fide millowner was subjected to unfair competition at the hand of the speculator, who ran prices up. Did the country suffer by that running up of the price? Not at all. The acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) stated this afternoon that far from favouritism having been shown to Mr. Burrows in the past, he had paid as high as $100 per square mile. Well, that is exactly why the Act was changed and this clause 17 introduced. Mr. Burrows did not wish to be subjected to this unfair competition and to have to pay that $100, and the law was changed so that he could get that fifty square miles of valuable timber limits without paying a cent of bonus, without paying $1 of ground rent, without being subject to any competition, and without having to pay the cost of survey, which he also stated was a grievance and which the millowner had to pay in the past, or send a man to spy out the land. Did Mr. Burrows avail himself of the privilege to manufacture that timber into lumber. Not at all. He acted as a speculator. He occupied the position of land commissioner to the Canadian Northern Railway, Mann & Mackenzie's line; a position which, no doubt, he secured through the influence of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who is so very closely connected with Messrs. Mann & Mackenzie, the proprietors of this road. Mr. Burrows acted as land commissioner for that road, and he had special facilities in that capacity for spying out the very best timber land in that northern country. He utilized that position, to act as a speculator to obtain fifty square miles, not to manufacture the timber into lumber, and not on the ground of being a millowner, but to sell it for railway ties, telegraph poles, and so on. He did not manufacture one single foot which was cut off that valuable timber limit into lumber. It has been said that other gentlemen obtained this same privilege. That is true, but these other gentlemen were bona fide millowners and did comply with the law. Take for instance H. B. Mitchell, who was quoted this afternoon. He cut 578,122 feet board measure, but he manufactured that into lumber, and he paid $578.12 dues. He complied with the conditions of the law. If Mr. Burrows had received this privilege alone, and if all others were refused, then the thing would be too transparent, and those in power sought to avoid that. Captain Robinson of Selkirk was a bona fide millowner, and he manufactured the timber into lumber. He cut 2,031,500 feet, and paid dues amounting to $2,031.50. Those gentlemen who have been named here this afternoon were all bona fide millowners, and they complied with the clause 17, but what we accuse the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) of is in allowing Mr. Burrows to go without complying with that clause, and that is where the favouritism comes in. Mr. Burrows cut 1,523 fence posts, and he paid for them one cent each, they being 7 feet long and 5 inches at the small end. He cut 1,730 cords of wood, paying 25 cents a cord. I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that there is not a farmer in that district who has not to pay tribute for every cord of wood he cuts to Mr. Burrows, during the time that regulation was in force. Mr. Burrows cut 2,318 telegraph poles, 22 feet long and he paid 5 cents each for them, and one cent per foot for each foot over that. He cut 4,786 feet of piling. He cut 98,372 railway ties at 3 cents each, 8 feet long. Upon all this he paid the nominal sum of $3,632.29, and notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of the Interior states that is more than the bonus would be, I have to differ with him in that. If this system was so very beneficial to the revenues of the country over and above the old system, why did the minister rescind that order; why did he not keep it in operation; why did he not desire to obtain all the revenue possible for the country and stick to this system which he says brought in more revenue than the old bonus system. Why, Sir, the bonus alone would be more than Mr. Burrows had to pay. Anyway it is not a question of the revenue, so much as it is the special privilege that was granted to Mr. Burrows by allowing him to get this without competition, without tender, without paying his ground rent and a bonus as in the past. Mr. Burrows, as I said, made application, eight days after the order was put into effect by letter, on the 21st of August, in which he congratulated the government on their change in the regulations. He telegraphed on the 26th August for permit. But the strange thing about it is that while other gentlemen made applications for timber lands they were refused. Take for instance the case of Mr. Drake. Mr. Drake was recommended by the Crown timber inspector as a person qualified under the law to receive this privilege of getting a permit to cut over fifty square miles. Did Mr. Drake obtain this privilege? Not at all. Why was he refused? He was refused in the first place on the ground that the regulation only was intended for saw-mill owners who had exhausted their supplies and had no lumber to keep their mill running. Was this condition required of Mr. Burrows? No. No question whatever was asked Mr. Burrows as to whether or not he had run out of lumber. Mr. Drake was handicapped by the statement made against him that he had sufficient timber to keep his mill running. Even then, Mr. Drake met that objection by presenting evidence, backed as he was by the Crown timber inspector, that he only had sufficient lumber to run his mill for half the winter. But still he was refused this privilege, a privilege that was given to Mr. Burrows without a question being asked him as to whether or not he had timber enough to keep his mill running. I wish to point out that Mr. Drake, having been recommended by the Crown timber inspector, commenced operations without receiving his license and without having his land surveyed. He was immediately called down by the Minister of the Interior and castigated by him for doing something which was contrary to the regulations. But Mr. Burrows cut on un-surveyed land, and he cut without a license, and yet the Minister of the Interior never raised a question about that. Why, this discrimination again in the interests of Mr. Burrows. Mr. McArthur was refused the privilege, although he applied some weeks before this clause was rescinded. The clause was rescinded on the 13th January, and Mr. McArthur applied on the 26th December previously, but yet he was not allowed the privilege that was accorded to Mr. Burrows. Again there was a Mr. Caverley. He received a letter from the department that his application could not be entertained unless a definite description was given of the land which he had applied for. Mr. Burrows did not submit this definite description. The application of Mr. Burrows was allowed without a definite description, but the application of Mr. Caverley was refused because he could not give a definite description. Then the application of Hooker & Co., was refused on the ground that there was no competition in the matter of the disposal of the timber. That objection was equally as valid at the time Mr. Burrows received his privilege as it was then. Hooker & Co. were recommended by Foley, the Crown timber inspector. Then there was the application of Shaw Bros., of Dauphin, the rivals in trade of Mr. Burrows. However, they happened to be strong Conservatives, and they were refused the privilege, although they applied some time before the clause was rescinded. It is very strange indeed that Mr. Burrows was not accorded a license until after the clause was rescinded. No license was issued to Burrows before January 18th, and the clause was rescinded on the 13th January. Mr. Shaw was refused early in January, although he had applied early in December. Mr. Shaw was refused although he was a bona fide millowner; and although he was manufacturing his lumber, but he was a rival in trade of Mr. Burrows, and would not be accorded the same privileges by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). The acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) attempted to give a certificate of character to Mr. Burrows this afternoon, stating that he was a most estimable gentleman, and that nothing could be said against him. The members on this side of the House have introduced no question of private character into this debate. We are not accusing Mr. Burrows of anything. He simply obtained a business advantage over his rivals, but who we are accusing is the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) for having allowed this special favouritism to his own brother-in-law and for having allowed his own brother-in-law these privileges which he refused to other applicants, although they complied with the conditions of the law which Mr. Burrows did not. I can substantiate everything the acting minister has said with reference to the character of Mr. Burrows, but that has nothing whatever to do with this debate. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) stated as a valid defence for Mr. Burrows obtaining these privileges, that Mr. Burrows had such a large majority in the recent provincial elections. It is true that this was made use of against Mr. Burrows on the platform; but the action was issued not so much against Mr. Burrows as against the Minister of the Interior. Mr. Burrows was not accused of doing anything illegal; but the Minister of the Interior was accused of showing the greatest favouritism to Mr. Burrows. The hon. gentleman states that Mr. Burrows got some 450 majority, but he does not tell the House how he got that majority. One-half of it was got in a district where this timber limit is not situated at all, and in a constituency which is noted for the disgraceful manner in which the voters' list was stuffed. In four polling subdivisions there were 603 names, although there were not fifty inhabitants residing in those polling divisions; and the best evidence of the fact of the lists being stuffed is, that the local government abolished the old list, and in that list, out of 3,300 names, 893 names were struck off and some 600 new ones added in the preparation of the new one. This shows that Mr. Burrows got his majority by one-half of the people of the constituency being disfranchised. That is no defence for this timber transaction, and the hon. member for Saskatchewan knows it very well.

Now, I might just summarize, Mr. Speaker, the reasons why I intend to support the motion of the hon. member for West Assiniboia. Because I think it has been amply demonstrated beyond a doubt that Mr. Burrows had no mill within forty miles of his limit, although the law contemplated that he should have one contiguous to the limit. Then, he did not so cut the timber as to keep his mill running, as was demanded of his competitors. He did not define his timber limit, as the other applicants were required to do. He did not hand in until January 10, 1899, a statement of the sections which he had selected, and he then handed in some thirty-eight out of fifty, just three days prior to the time the order was rescinded; and his license was not issued until some days after the order had been rescinded on January 18. Mr. Burrows had gone on cutting timber before the land was surveyed. He cut timber in township 32, which was not within the limits of the timber sections which he applied for at all, and then he applied for the right to cut in that township too. Was he refused? Not at all. What was the use of having a brother-in-law if you could not make use of him? So, the Minister of the Interior came to his rescue, and on February 13 he included township 32, which was outside of his fifty-mile limit, although other gentlemen had been refused the privilege of cutting timber long prior to this date. Mr. Burrows did not manufacture a foot of lumber out of the timber. There again he did not comply with the law, while the other gentlemen did comply with the law in that respect. Mr. Burrows acted as a speculator, as the land commissioner of the Canadian Northern Railway; and the cutting of railway ties, piles, fence posts, and so on, did not benefit the settler one farthing. For these reasons, I intend to support the motion of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, and any hon. gentleman giving this matter his attention cannot fail to see that the grossest favouritism was exercised in favour of Mr. Burrows by the Minister of the Interior, and merits the condemnation of the House.

Mr. PETER MACDONALD (East Huron). Mr. Speaker, I think that our hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) made a mistake this afternoon in the interest of his party in bringing before this House the question of timber limits. If there is any one thing blacker than another upon the escutcheon of the Liberal-Conservative party of this country, it is the timber policy which they adopted early in their regime and carried out for a number of years, until the property which they undertook to dispose of was taken out of their hands. I say this knowing whereof I speak. Knowing the history of that period, I cannot refrain from placing before the House a few facts which, I think, the electorate of this country should know. I do not know very much about the merits of the case immediately under discussion. I take for granted that the acting Minister of the Interior has given a very good answer to the charges brought against the Minister of the Interior, and, therefore, I will not deal with them, but will rather show the methods with which the Conservative party dealt with the public domain of Canada from about the year 1881 to the year 1888. I have before me a return which was brought before parliament some years ago, showing that a large portion of our public domain, which was at that time in dispute between the Dominion government and the government of Ontario, was given out to a large number of members of the Conservative party during those years—so much so that out of 150 applicants who received timber limits, there were only about ten Reformers, and a number of those ten were persons who had weakened on the Reform side and went over to the Conservative party because they thought there was more money on that side than there was on this. No less than 50,000,000 acres of land situated in the province of Ontario and the North-west Territories and Manitoba were applied for by twenty-six members of parliament and their friends; and although they did not all get timber limits, it was because in the first place there were not timber limits for each, and, in the second place, before the matter was settled, many of the timber limits they were disposing of passed into the hands of the Ontario government by the action of that government. The late government gave to Charles Rykert fifty square miles, in the Cypress Hills, in Manitoba, for the small sum of $5 per square mile—$250 all told. There was no bonus, but the $5 was rent which had to be paid each year. At the same time, the government could not help knowing that the value of that land went up almost to the hundreds of thousands, for Mr. Rykert shortly afterwards united himself with a Mr. Adams, in the city of Winnipeg, and sold that very timber limit to a Mr. Sands, of Michigan, for no less than $200,000, and pocketed that sum, less the $250. In the face of that action of a few years ago, these very men place a resolution before the House to-day to condemn the Liberal party for giving a license to a man in Manitoba to cut timber for the use of the settlers. But, Sir, is that all? My hon. friend the whip of the Liberal-Conservative party will remember that in 1884, I think it was, they gave to the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company the right to cut logs upon a large territory, and the transaction was only stopped by the Hon. Oliver Mowat obtaining a mandamus from the courts to prevent the removal of logs from that territory, which was in dispute at the time. And what did the Conservative government here do? They actually supplied the funds with which to defend the case of the St. Catharines Lumber Company before the Privy Council of England, and sent Dalton McCarthy there as solicitor. It not only cost this government $8,000 for the fees of the solicitor, but, all told, nearly $80,000 was spent by the province of Ontario in defending its territory.

This lumber company had no mills, this company was on paper, there was no solidarity about it, it was a combination that came together for the purpose of doing this country out of that large territory. At the head of the combination was the president of the Liberal-Conservative party of Ontario. Yet, in the face of all these facts, these hon. gentlemen are seeking to impress the people with the idea that we are giving away without compensation the timber of the Dominion of Canada.

Look at what they did with regard to Hunter's Island. That is a large island in Lake Superior and was in the disputed territory. The late government sold the timber on that island for $7,500, and the company which bought it sold it to a Chicago syndicate for $650,000. Here was $643,000 to be taken out of the public domain and put into the hands of a foreign syndicate. How was this scheme prevented? The Hon. Oliver Mowat, ever true to the interests of Ontario, had a mandamus issued to prevent this property passing into the hands of the Chicago syndicate until the question of the boundary was settled, and when that question was settled, Hunter's Island came into the province of Ontario, and the transfer was never made. But the Liberal-Conservative party did all they could to have that transfer made and that same party in the Ontario legislature did their best to have this land transferred to a foreign syndicate, and if that land was saved to the country it was thanks to the efforts of the Liberal party.

But that is not all. There were some lands, a few years ago, given to Mr. Macdowall, who sat in this House a number of years. That land was situated in the Saskatchewan. Mr. Macdowall had to pledge it to a considerable degree in order to get money to establish a plant for the purpose of converting the timber into sawn lumber. He did not pay anything for the land but the ordinary $5 per square mile of ground rent. A bank in the city of Ottawa became possessed of a claim upon that land, and there is a gentleman in this House who went to that bank and offered as an option $200,000 for that property, but the bank would not accept the offer. And this Macdowall, mind you, was a member of this House and got this land for $5 per square mile while he was sitting in this House. If you think this is not true, I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman who offered to pay $200,000 as an option will corroborate my statement. I refer to my hon. friend, Mr. Mackie, who offered $200, 000 of an option for the land that Mr. Macdowall got for nothing, only a few years ago.

Mr. MACKIE. Six months ago.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). And we are told, in the face of those facts, that the Liberal party are those who are seeking to give away the public domain.

But there is another case I want to bring before you and that is the Robillard case. Mr. Robillard, formerly a member of this House from the city of Ottawa, who sat here many years, got a limit, in 1887 I think it was, from this government in the Whitefish Indian reserve, for which he paid $316. He united with him a man by the name of Riopel and another whose name I do not remember. Would you believe it, that land, which he got for $316, he sold six months afterwards for $50,000. I have this from the mouth of Mr. Riopel, who was one of the partners. Mr. Robillard received one-third for his trouble in getting the limits from the Conservatives who were then in power, and when he was a member of the House. Two years later, after a considerable portion of timber had been taken off the limit, it was sold for $100,000, and two years after that, when the limit had been worked to a considerable extent, it was resold for $200,000. And the original price paid by the Tory member to a Tory government was $316. One is surprised at the effrontery of these hon. gentlemen.

Thus I might go on step by step to show you how the public domain was parcelled out by the late government to this one and the other of their friends. Just on the eve of the elections of 1882, a large number of timber limits were given in order to strengthen the influence of the party and run the elections. That was the time when the hon. member for East Grey made applications for limits for himself and his friends.

Mr. SPROULE. I have already stated, in the presence of the hon. gentleman, that I never made an application for timber limits for myself and my friends, and he must accept my word.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The return says—

Mr. SPROULE. I call on you, Mr. Speaker, for your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must accept the statement. The denial of an hon. member is always accepted.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron.). But my statement was this—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must ask my hon. friend to accept the statement of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). But I have not made a statement.

Mr. SPROULE. He said that I had applied for timber limits for myself and my friends. I deny the charge and demand its withdrawal.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I said this—
Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Just allow me to make the statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to this point as to whether or not, Mr. Speaker, you are going to enforce your ruling.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I simply made this statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. Allow the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), to explain.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the hon. gentleman explains, I just wish to state my point. The point is that he made a statement—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). No, he did not.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope I may be allowed to make my statement—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Make a correct one, then.

Mr. FOSTER. I am to be the judge of the correctness of my statement and not the Postmaster General. He had better keep his mouth shut while I am speaking, or I will have to call your attention to him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). This was the statement I made—

Mr. SPEAKER. I shall have to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), to sit down. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) raises a point of order, and there is no getting over that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). You sit down, and shut your mouth.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Speaker is going to allow any hon. gentleman to rise in his place and tell me to shut my mouth, I would like to know what this House is coming to, and, if it is allowed to go on, the fault lies at the Speaker's door.

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). If the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) is permitted a word, I think he will explain. He was referring to a document, and was not permitted to finish what he was saying. I think if he is permitted to finish, there will be no difficulty between him and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Mr. MILLS. He (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), was making a statement that was denied.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member who leads the opposition (Mr. Foster), has the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. I have it for the purpose of asking whether a member is to be allowed, without reproof, by the Chair, instead of addressing me through the Chair, to address me direct, and tell me to shut my mouth?

Mr. McMULLEN. That is not the point of order that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) took the floor to raise.

Mr. FOSTER. But, surely, that must be settled. I think I have a right to ask the protection of the Chair. I must insist on this.

Mr. GIBSON. What did you say to the Postmaster General? You were the first to use that language.

Mr. SPEAKER. All I can say is, that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), used a phrase of that kind, he was out of order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I withdraw what I said about the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) shutting his mouth.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, I raise my point of order—

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Mr. Speaker, is he (Mr. Foster), to have the floor all the time?

Mr. SPEAKER. He must be allowed to state his point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald (Huron) made a statement with reference to my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule). The hon. member for Grey rose and denied it point-blank. You ruled, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), must accept the denial. He has not accepted it; he has not stated that he will accept it. And yet he goes on with his speech. My point of order is, that before any discussion goes on, the hon. gentleman from Huron must accept the word of the hon. member for Grey.

Mr. McMULLEN. Now, Mr. Speaker—
Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am speaking to the point of order. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), rose and interfered with the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald), before he had finished his sentence. If he had waited until the hon. gentleman concluded his sentence, he might then fairly ask him to retract what he says.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) said distinctly the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) had applied for timber limits for himself and his friends. I denied it. The statement was complete, and did not require any additional words in explanation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). My statement was this—

Mr. FOSTER. Before any discussion goes on, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I have the right—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. I only desire to ask—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), should allow the hon. member for East Huron to say a word in his own defence. The House is not afraid that that would be a breach of decorum.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The whole matter can be settled in a moment. If the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), had not broken in in the middle of my sentence—

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. I ask that the decision of the Chair, having gone forth, shall be enforced before any other business is taken up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Chair has permitted the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), to finish his sentence.

Mr. SPEAKER. I simply ask the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), to take his seat, and, in common justice, to allow the hon. member for East Huron to make what statement he wishes. There is nothing unfair in that.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). My statement was this—

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, order.

Mr. FOSTER. My point of order simply stated is this—that once the Chair has given his decision—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. FOSTER—no discussion or anything else is in order until the decision of the Chair is carried out.

Mr. SPEAKER. I desire to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The House will please come to order. We cannot transact business with the House in this confusion.

Mr. FOSTER. I insist upon my point of order—

Mr. SPEAKER. I have already said that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) is out of order. I ask the House to allow the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald), to complete his statement. The House need not be apprehensive as to the questions between the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald); I am sure the hon. member for East Grey does not feel that he will be injured by an explanation being made.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). This is the statement I intended making in the beginning—

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have already raised the point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not following up this matter because—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. I want order before I state my point of order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). My statement that I commenced to make was in this wise—

Mr. SPEAKER. I confess that I understood the words as claimed by the member for Grey.

Mr. FOSTER. I press my point of order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I could not have made such a statement. I was broken off in the middle of a sentence and did not finish it.

Mr. FOSTER. I press my point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. My recollection is—

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). If you are going to cut a sentence off in the middle—

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. member for Huron please sit down?

Mr. FOSTER. I never knew in this House of Commons before that it was ever ruled by a Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER. I want to say to the hon. member for Huron that my recollection of the statement is as the hon. member for Grey says. I must say I caught the words just as he presented them. Now, I think these words are unparliamentary.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I will not withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. Let me ask the hon. member one question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I did not make that statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. If he denies making the statement—

Mr. FOSTER. It does not matter what the statement was, I raise my point of order independent of it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) please sit down and raise the point of order afterwards?

Mr. FOSTER. I will not sit down. I will stand here for my rights if I have to stand all night.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Have you no respect for the Chair when the Chair asks you to sit down?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh; order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the House come to order?

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CHARLTON. May I be allowed to make a suggestion?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to state my point of order and have a decision.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a suggestion. I would suggest, Sir—

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am standing on my right to state my point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman will not accept the judgment of the Chair, but insists on taking his own way, why, of course, there is no alternative.

Mr. FOSTER. Will you allow me to ask you one question, Mr. Speaker? Is it the right of any member of this House to rise to speak to a point of order or is it not?

Mr. CHARLTON. Clearly, Sir, your authority as Speaker in this House has been defied, and I hold it is high time that the authority—

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CHARLTON. The dignity of the Chair should be vindicated, and if we have authority vested in you—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair, order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think there is any use prolonging the discussion. Will the hon. member for Huron take his seat?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Will the hon. member for York, N.B., take his seat also?

Mr. FOSTER. When there is order I will speak. If the Speaker cannot get order for me I will stay here until he does.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair; order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the House come to order. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will sit down for one moment.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the House come to order. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will sit down for one moment. Will the House come to order? It is utterly impossible to do any business. The moment the House reflect on the position they have put themelves in, I feel satisfied they will feel ashamed. Will the House allow the hon. gentleman to state—

Mr. SPEAKER.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am not asking you to allow me to state the point of order, I am appealing to the Speaker to give me my right to speak to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. member for Huron take his seat? May I ask the House for one moment calmly to come to order? The House is not losing any of its rights in allowing the hon. member for York—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The House is not losing any right.

Mr. FOSTER. I object to losing my rights.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). What is the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is this, that when an hon. gentleman, speaking on either side of the House, makes a statement which is denied by an hon. gentleman who rises in his place, being the one of whom the statement is made, and when the Speaker rules that the statement must be taken as made by the last mentioned hon. gentleman, my point of order is, that nothing can be discussed except the point of order until Mr. Speaker gives his ruling, and that when the Speaker has given his ruling nothing can be discussed until the decision of the Chair is obeyed.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order. I have the same right as he has.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think he has a right to discuss the point of order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). When a speaker is in the middle of a sentence and is broken off, a portion of the sentence not being uttered, is he not to be allowed to finish his sentence? That is just my position to-night. All I claim at the hands of my hon. friends on both sides of the House is liberty to make the statement that I desired to make, then, if it is not in order I will obey the Chair and withdraw it.

Mr. SPROULE. The question I understand to be this, and I ask whether it is not a fact: When a point of order is raised and the Speaker has given his ruling on that point, can there be any further discussion on it except an appeal is made from the Speaker to the House? The hon. member did not appeal to the House, but he endeavoured to go on and discuss it afterwards. That is the objection I raised on this point, and I would like to have the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The Speaker cannot rule unless he knows the sentence upon which he is asked to rule.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). He has not the complete sentence.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must say to the House that my recollection of the sentence that the hon. member for Huron used is exactly as the hon. member for East Grey states it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Now, let me finish the sentence.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order. Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. Perhaps the House will allow the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think this House wants to be unfair to anybody, and if the hon. member for Huron has cast an aspersion upon the hon. member for East Grey I am sure that the House will see that he takes it back.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). That is the statement of the hon. member for East Grey. Now, I—

Mr. FOSTER. I desire—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to have a ruling on my point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair. Sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. I simply want a ruling on my point of order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hon. member for East Grey—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I want a ruling on my point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Huron claims that he was in the middle of his sentence and that it was unfair to cut his sentence in two.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. I will restate my point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is unnecessary.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not seem unnecessary, because you have misapprehended it. The Speaker does not apprehend my point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. I simply ask for the ruling of the Chair on my point of order. If the Speaker wants me to repeat my point of order, I will do so. If the Speaker does not wish my point of order repeated, then I ask for a decision upon it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. Have I a right to a decision by the Speaker on the point of order that I raised?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, it is impossible in the confusion to understand what is the question, therefore, the House would be glad to have your ruling, and to abide by it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would say simply this to the right hon. leader of the House—

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for East Grey took exception to a sentence when the hon. member for Huron was in the act of making a statement. He said that the hon. member for East Grey, for himself, and his friends, had made application for certain timber berths—

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). That is right so far.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. member for East Grey got up and stated that he had distinctly made the statement that he had made no application on his own behalf whatever. That is the question of order that was raised, if I remember.

Mr. BERGERON. You decided that he should withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Huron pleaded that he was interrupted in the middle of a sentence, and that when he completed his sentence it would be found that he cast no imputation on the hon. member for East Grey.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) insisted that he should take back that half of the sentence without any further explanation. The hon. member for Huron asked to be allowed to finish his sentence to show that it had been misinterpreted. As my recollection is that he used words that he had no right to use he should withdraw them.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I do not deny it, but allow me to state—

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it would be better if the hon. member would withdraw the statement in regard to the hon. member for East Grey personally, and then he can proceed.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). My sentence was this.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I do not—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. MACLEAN. Withdraw and make a new statement, if you like.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I did not finish my sentence.

Mr. BERGERON. Withdraw.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I insist upon—

Mr. SPEAKER. If there is any dispute as to the actual words perhaps the reporter would give us the precise phrase.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). There is no dispute about the words. This sentence was not concluded.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. MACDONALD. Let me conclude the sentence.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw, withdraw.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I am in the right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). However, I accept the ruling of the Chair. Now, allow me to give you the sentence, and it will be seen by every one that what I said from the beginning—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). He has done so.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I accept the ruling of the Chair, but I am not going to be put in a false position that is not fair to me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, please.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). They do not want to hear it. The hon. member for East Grey made an application for timber limits for self and friends as stated in an official report brought down to this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I would appeal to the Speaker—

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I am not out of order now. Then, if the hon. gentleman did not make an application for self it is between himself and the official report of his own party brought down in this House a few years ago. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. In fairness I think you should allow the hon. member for East Huron to make an explanation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Now, Mr. Speaker, had I been allowed to finish that sentence, as I said I had not finished it, if it had not been broken off in the middle by these interruptions, would I not be in perfect order? All this fuss has been made because interruption from the opposite side of the House will break a man up in the middle of a sentence, and forsooth, he is put into a position into which he should not have been put, called to order and made to withdraw when he has no right to withdraw. If I had been permitted to complete the sentence which I had a right to complete, I would not have been put in this position. I will say this, that it is impossible for the Speaker to decide upon a point of order unless the exact paragraph or sentence, the complete words of any man are before him, and it is not enough for the hon. acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Foster) to take up part of a sentence and appeal to the Speaker to decide upon it. He is an old parliamentarian, he should know better, and hon. gentlemen sitting behind him should know better. Every one in this House from the Speaker down to the humblest member in this House, should know better than that. Every man has a right in this House, to complete a sentence or paragraph, or what he wishes to place before the House before he is called to order, and I say that under the circumstances it is not surprising that I should feel the indignation which I do at the way I have been interrupted by hon. members on the other side of the House. Now, I have gained the victory in the end.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). These hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House appear to be aroused this afternoon because this correspondence has been brought up. But they were the beginners of this agitation to-night. It reminds me of the story of the Irishman who was going through a field and met a bull, which bellowed at him and threatened to attack. The Irishman had a club in his hand and when the bull made a spring at him he caught the bull by the tail and brought the club down on the bull's back until the animal cried with pain. So it is to-night. We have brought down our clubs on the backs of the Conservatives yonder, until they have groaned with pain; but in the words of the Irishman to the bull we may say: Take it you brute, you were the one that began it.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Were it not for some remarks made by the member for Alberta (Mr. Davis), followed up by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), and by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald), I would not have spoken in this debate. Let me explain what really was done by members of parliament in connection with these North-west timber limits. There was a statement read purporting to be a statement made by the government, which I have not been able to look carefully over, but if it is an official statement of the government then the following heading is incorrect: 'List of timber berths authorized to be licensed upon the applicants complying with the provisions of regulations, &c.' That heading is not a true description of the contents. At the time these applications were made, regulations had been drafted by the government, in view of the scarcity of lumber in Manitoba and the Territories, that any parties who went into that country and erected a mill could get a timber berth of fifty square miles by paying $5 a square mile for it. A number of people applied for timber limits as was anticipated, and almost every member of parliament had letters sent to him from persons who did not understand in what shape the application should be made. I got a number of applications from a gentleman then living in Birtle, an acquaintance of mine who had previously lived in East Grey. So far as my memory serves me, he wrote that he did not know the regular form of application, but asking me to apply on behalf of so and so for certain berths, specifying as near as he could the localities. I did so, as I have no doubt any member of parliament would do it for a person writing to him under the circumstances. I sent him a copy of the regulations and I put in the applications. I afterwards got other applications from him in a second letter and I sent them to the department, requesting the department to enter the applications, and giving the particulars as near as I could from his letter. I got letters from other parties in the same way and I sent them as I did these. I received an acknowledgment of these letters and I sent these acknowledgments to the parties as far as I could learn their post office addresses. That is all I had to do with it. So far as my memory serves me, I never got a reply, saying whether or not the government had granted the application of any one of these men. Some of the parties went up there, looked over the situation, and as they considered it would not pay them to build saw-mills they gave no more attention to it. I had letters from these parties whom I had never seen, asking if the berths had been granted. I inquired in the department and found nothing had been done and I wrote to them to that effect. That is the sum and substance of all I had to do with this matter. The statement when first made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Davis), that I had applied for a timber berth was at once denied by me.

Mr. McMULLEN. You got up and said you had applied on behalf of your brothers but not for yourself.

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking with regard to myself personally, and the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) knows it or ought to know it. He need not be so crazy over it. When the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) repeated this statement, I denied it, and he said that he had it in an official document. I have never seen that official document, I do not believe it is in existence, and I do not believe the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) could show it. I denied his statement, and the hon. gentleman was bound to accept my denial, and when he refused I asked the ruling of the Chair to compel him to do so. The hon. gentleman from Kingston (Mr. Britton) made an interruption which was uncalled for. I trust he is in the House now because I want to tell him something. When I said that I had made application as I had been requested to do so by parties whether I was acquainted with them or not, and as I presume every other member of parliament had done; when I made that statement the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) asked: Did I do it as a political agent or as a commercial agent. He implied that I got a consideration for it, but I can tell him that I never got one dollar nor one cent for any work I ever did in this parliament, from any one inside or outside of parliament. My name does not appear on the public accounts of this country, as a man who fed at the public crib, like the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), to the extent of $3,000 for doing his work, not as a member of parliament but as a commercial agent or something else. I say that my name does not appear in the public accounts as does the name of the member for Kingston, and it comes with bad grace from him to throw out such an insinuation. Now, Mr. Speaker, you would think from the statement by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald), that he was a man of such immaculate purity that it was impossible for him to be found in any way connected with public business that would affect his position. I will not say anything about that, but I will give one other circumstance to the House, and I will let the House judge whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) has any right to lecture members of parliament and to insinuate that they received compensation or consideration on account of what they do for their friends. In the case of the application for the timber limit I should have remarked that some of the applicants were my political opponents. Let me tell the House, that at the present time there is a public work going on at Owen Sound, and the dredge 'No. 9,' has been doing certain work there. It has been doing it for the last three years to the tune of $80 a day. Now, who are the owners of that dredge? I have the names here: E. H. Horsey, physician, of Owen Sound, a son-in-law of the hon. member for East Huron; Lelai A. Horsey, daughter of the hon. member for East Huron; Maggie Macdonald, spinster, of Wingham, an unmarried daughter of the hon. member for East Huron; and A. G. McKay, Crown attorney of Owen Sound. Will any hon. gentleman, who knows the family, tell me that the hon. member for East Huron, ever gave to his daughters a dollar to invest in anything of the kind? The hon. gentleman is, I believe, profiting to-day by the work done there under government authority, and is only evading the Independence of Parliament Act, by using the name of his daughter. Under these circumstances has the hon. gentleman a right to get up and insinuate that any member of parliament receives money because he does what any member of parliament is bound to do, in courtesy for any man who writes to him? He is the last man to say anything on this subject, just as the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), is the last man to throw across the House the insinuations which he made. I would not have referred to this matter, if I had not been insulted by such remarks—remarks which either of these hon. gentlemen dare not make outside this House, because if they did, I would knock them down as quickly as I could reach them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to say anything on the merits of the case before the House. I have listened carefully to the statement made by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, and I came to the conclusion that there was something wrong in that transaction between the Minister of the Interior and his brother-in-law, Mr. Burrows. I came to the conclusion that either the regulations were changed for the purpose of enabling Mr. Burrows to secure the advantage he did, or the regulations were winked at, and instructions were given to accept his application, although he did not comply with those regulations. It is a shady transaction, which requires more investigation to bring to the knowledge of this House and the country the information which is required to enable them to judge whether the transaction was right or wrong. It is said that timber limits were given by the late government, without competition; but that government followed exactly the same regulations that were made by the Mackenzie government with this exception. When that government granted a timber limit, they allowed the person to whom it was granted to pick any portion or portions of the fifty miles, anywhere in the country. For instance, Mr. H. H. Cook had the right to select any portion of his fifty miles anywhere from Manitoba to the Rocky Mountains. But the new regulations adopted by the Conservative government, provided that the fifty miles must be all in one place. They adopted those new regulations in order to enable the settlers to get their lumber at a lower price than they formerly had to pay, which was about $50 a thousand. Under the new regulations made afterwards by the Conservative government, the timber limits were to be put to competition. That rule was continued until the Conservative government changed the regulations, in order to sell the timber limits without competition to their friends, and their own friends have benefited. If so much money was received for the timber in the past, surely there is stronger ground for supposing that if the timber limits were put up to public competition to-day, when settlement is increasing, when timber is getting scarcer, and when there is a greater demand for it in the country, even better results would be secured.

The hon. member for Saskatchewan said that the Conservatives gobbled up 16,000,000 acres. Does the hon. gentleman desire to be accurate, or to say what is true? I hold the return which I think the hon. gentleman had, and it does not say so. Applications were made for timber limits in a territory, which perhaps would aggregate 16,000,000 acres; but not one out of twenty applications was granted. How could they gobble up 16,000,000 acres? They had no interest in the land; they had only the right to take timber off the land, and they gobbled up no timber, except what they took under the regulations, which were open to the world. When they complied with those regulations and built a mill, and went on and cut timber, they received simply the usual benefit which every man received, who took out a license to cut timber.

The hon. member for East Huron stated that Mr. Charles Rykert got a timber limit for a very small consideration, and that he sold it for over $200,000 and pocketed that money. The hon. gentleman ought to know better, because that matter was discussed in this House. If the hon. gentleman knew the facts, and yet made that statement, it is discreditable to him. Mr. Charles Rykert is alive to-day, and the hon. gentleman dare not make that statement outside of the House, or Mr. Rykert would take him into court as quickly as he could do so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What did Rykert resign his seat for?

Mr. SPROULE. That is another thing altogether. I am not defending what Mr. Charles Rykert did. I am criticising the incorrect statement made by the hon. member for East Huron, a statement which he dare not make, except when he shelters himself behind the privileges of parliament. There are some gentlemen sitting in this House who know the explanation that was made of that transaction. While Mr. Rykert did what I will not defend, and what was not creditable to him, he did not do what the hon. member for East Huron alleged; he did not pocket any such amount of money at all. Therefore, I would give the hon. member for East Huron the same advice that I gave to the hon. member for Saskatchewan, to be a little more accurate and keep closer to the facts when he makes statements in this House, because he is making them in the presence of men who know the facts of these transactions a great deal better than he does.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). I understand the hon. member for East Grey to have said that I had received $3,000 a year from the Ontario government for doing nothing?

Mr. SPROULE. No, what I said was, that it did not come with very good grace from the hon. member for Kingston to throw insinuations across the floor against me, because I had never received a dollar in my life from the government for any services, whereas the hon. gentleman could not say the same, since he appeared in the public accounts of Ontario as having received $3,000 for services in connection with the ditches and watercourses.

Mr. BRITTON. The hon. gentleman evidently knows nothing about it at all. In the first place, I never had anything to do with ditches and watercourses. In the second place, I did hold a position under the Ontario government for some years, and to that position a salary was attached, but I believe I did the work faithfully and well.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. BRITTON. And received the salary attached to the office.

Mr. SPROULE. That is all I said.

Mr. BRITTON. But, the time came when the people of Kingston wanted me to run as their candidate, and, perhaps, unfortunately for myself, so far as money is concerned, I accepted the candidature and resigned the office. I have never received anything for nothing that I am aware of, and I am not aware that any fault has been found with the way in which I carried out the duties of the office I once held. I may say now, that the office was not sought for by me. The records of the Department of Justice of Ontario will show that it was offered to me without any application of mine or in my behalf. At that time, I held the office of county attorney, which was as good as the office I accepted under the Ontario government. The office which I held under the Ontario government was that of drainage referee, which had nothing to do with ditches and watercourses, and in order to hold that office I had to give up practice.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the difference between a ditch and a drain?

Mr. BRITTON. It is a matter of law. Ditches and drains come under the jurisdiction of the county, and as drainage referee, I had nothing to do with them. If the hon. gentleman will look at the law or consult some one who knows it, he will find that I am perfectly correct.

The debate we have just had furnishes a very apt illustration of the truth of the axiom that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. The mover of the resolution seems to have been one of those who live in glass houses, and some stones have been thrown at him, and apparently with considerable effect. As far as the charge is concerned, there is no evidence before the House of any intention on the part of the Minister of the Interior to benefit his brother-in-law, or any other individual, by the change he made in the regulations. The statement of the acting Minister of the Interior shows that the change was in the public interest. This resolution asks us to declare that the change was fraudulent, or that it was a play upon words, and that the spirit of the resolution, if not the letter, was violated. I submit that even if the spirit of the resolution was violated and not the letter, before this House can fairly be asked to investigate a charge of this kind and condemn the Minister of the Interior, some harm ought to be shown as having resulted. But none has been shown. It was all very well to state how many telegraph poles, and railway ties, and cords of wood, and fence posts were got out, and the comparatively small sums paid to the government for the stuff got out, but hon. gentlemen must bear in mind that the amount paid was fixed by regulations of which nobody complained. The complaint is, that one of the regulations, section 17, was altered. Well, the others were not altered, and there is no complaint about them, and, therefore, they must be right. Yet, every penny that was chargeable under the regulations was paid. There was no loss or fraud shown; and in the absence of fraud, even if the spirit of the regulations was violated, there is no need of taking up the time of this House discussing a change by which no harm was done. These gentlemen who brought this matter up had not the slightest desire to have an investigation, but were just taking this opportunity of trying to cast suspicion on the conduct of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. DAVIN. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what pane of glass in my house was broken?

Mr. BRITTON. If the hon. gentleman cannot understand the pretty plain language which was used this afternoon, it is impossible for me to enlighten him.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). We have been witnesses this evening of a most disgraceful scene. We could pardon the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) in throwing out his accusations right and left, because he can say anything he likes. He does not amount to very much in any case, and he was not here when all these charges were brought up in parliament before and refuted. But, I am astonished to find the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald), who was here years ago, getting up and making imputations against members in connection with timber limits, when he knows that these were all explained before. In 1886-7-8-9, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) brought up all these old charges, and read the names on this list, but when the hon. members, whose names were on the list, explained the whole matter, the hon. member for North Norfolk accepted their explanation. And now it is all coming up again, and why? Because the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) spoke this afternoon about the regulations having been changed by the Minister of the Interior. And the government, I suppose, having no answer, and hon. gentlemen behind the government wishing to show zeal, think they are doing something grand by use of the tu quoque argument and virtually saying. It is true that the Minister of the Interior has done something he should not have done, but look at the timber limits that have been taken by Conservative members years ago. It is a childish answer; and what we witnessed a few minutes ago was a disgrace to the House of Commons. I hope, for the honour of parliament, we shall see no more of it. Hon. members who sit here can go back to Hansard of ten years ago and get the answer to all that has been said by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald), and the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), who, as I said, is accustomed to bring accusations which he cannot prove.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the vote is taken, Mr. Speaker, will you allow me a word of personal explanation with reference to what has been said concerning myself. The way it was put was that members of parliament and myself had applied for timber limits. I never applied for timber limits since I became a member of parliament. I did apply years before. But what had to be done in order to acquire those limits? You had to go to the expense of surveying the land, and then you could not get it without fulfilling certain conditions. In the present case the expenditure was made by the applicant; but the mill was never put up.

Mr. POWELL. How long ago was that?

Mr. DAVIN. In 1882.

Mr. BRITTON.

Mr. POWELL. How long before you became a member of parliament?

Mr. DAVIN. Five years.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Davin).

Amendment (Mr. Davin) negatived.

Motion agreed to, House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Civil Government—Department of Indian Affairs ..... $47,530

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). There is an increase here of $830, which is made up of sixteen statutory increases of $50 each and one of $30.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). As we are discussing Indian affairs, I would like to call the attention of the acting minister (Mr. Sutherland) to some trouble that arose last year at St. Regis, in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that it would be better to take that up when we are on the vote for expenses in connection with that branch?

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to have an opportunity to discuss the matter. Will the item to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) refers come up to-night?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope so.

Department of Indian Affairs—Ontario and Quebec ..... $76,711

Mr. BERGERON. What is the meaning of this?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The distribution of seed grain is made during the early spring to these Indians, who endeavour to maintain their families by the cultivation of farms on small plots of ground.

Schools—Ontario, Quebec and maritime provinces ..... $38,765

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). I desire to ask the Minister of the Interior how many schools there are in the lower provinces, what amount is paid on account of the schools, and what system is followed in the classification of teachers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In Nova Scotia there are eleven day schools; aggregate number of children on the roll, 230; average attendance, 96. In New Brunswick there are six day schools; aggregate number of children on the roll, 142; average attendance, 74. There is one school in Prince Edward Island. I am informed the teachers require the ordinary provincial certificate, and they are under the provincial inspector.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Is attendance compulsory at these schools?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. An effort is made to have the children attend schools, but they are not forced.

Mr. POWELL. If they are wards of the government there is no object in providing an education unless attendance is made compulsory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The attendance is fairly good. But it is a debatable question as to how far you can force these people. You have to handle them rather carefully.

Mr. GILLIES. The minister says the schools are subject to the local inspection, and that the teachers are subject to examination as they are in white schools. If that is so, are these Indian teachers engaged by a board of trustees, and are the different Indian schools under a board of trustees the same as white schools?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are engaged by the department, and have to present their certificate to show that they are qualified to teach. They are subject to the usual semi-annual inspection.

Salaries of chiefs, Cape Croker and Gibson, and agent at St. Regis..... $150

Mr. BERGERON. Has the hon. gentleman heard that there is a state of war at St. Regis on account of the election of chiefs?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There has been no report made to the department of a state of war down there.

Mr. BERGERON. I am surprised the department has not heard of it. They may hear of it too late when they will have to shoot somebody. There is friction just now at St. Regis on account of the new rules and regulations made by the department. There is a good deal of disturbance, according to the reports in the newspapers, which I think are pretty accurate, because there are reporters on the ground. It seems that the American Indians have crossed over to St. Regis to stand by the Canadian Indians in trying to raise trouble.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no doubt that these matters are very much exaggerated in the newspapers. The Indians object to the lock-up that was ordered to be built, and after consultation with the member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), who made representations to me, I gave orders in the meantime that the building should be stopped, and the matter investigated. I am in hope that after the investigation the difficulty will be ended.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not altogether in consequence of the lock-up that there is friction at St. Regis, but it is about the election of their chief. I presume I may take this opportunity, while we are on this item, of calling the attention of the department to another matter. There have been some new regulations put into force by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) regarding the election of their chief. They are no longer allowed to elect their chief, and the government want to establish there some kind of municipal law. The government appointed some councillors and the Indians did not like it. I do not say whether the Indians are right or wrong, but I call attention to the fact that there is dissatisfaction. There was dissatisfaction last year for the same reason, and the department were informed of it, and the difficulty proceeded to a climax, and a man was killed by the chief of the Dominion Police, though acting, I believe, in the line of his duty. However, the incident has left on the reserve a very bad impression, and trouble has been brewing since that time. Now, we are voting money for the Indians and we call that money the Indian fund. When that trouble took place last year, although we have a Solicitor General who is supposed to do the legal work for the government, some lawyers were employed in order to give them patronage. That is the great weakness of this government, they desire to give all the patronage they can to their friends while they are in power, because they expect soon to return to opposition and to remain there for a long time. Consequently last year two lawyers were employed when they were not needed, as the Solicitor General could have done the work himself. The two lawyers were Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Brossoit, of Beauharnois, and for the edification of the Minister of Finance, I propose to give him the accounts of these gentlemen, these two country lawyers. They would become very wealthy if all their clients paid them as well as the government. This document, which was recorded in the Auditor General's Report, is published in the Huntingdon Gleaner, one of the most reliable papers in Quebec. It is criticising this government very much because the proprietor, Mr. Sellers, is a very honest man.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think this discussion does not properly come under the item now under consideration. We are called upon to vote :

Salaries of chiefs, Cape Croker and Gibson, and agent at St. Regis ..... $150

I do not think this discussion has any connection at all with that item.

Mr. BERGERON. I will explain to the Chairman, if he does not see it, why, I think, this discussion is in order.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not see what connection there is.

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. gentleman allows me, I will show him.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion so far has been in regard to the expenses of the Department of Justice. The discussion would come up properly under another item.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is an item to provide for the erection of a lock-up at St. Regis, and it may come up under that.

Mr. BERGERON. I have no objection to waiting until we reach the lock-up item, if the hon. gentleman does not drop it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will not drop it.

Removal of Lake of Two Mountains Indians from Oka to Gibson ..... $200

Mr. BERGERON. Why are we called upon to vote any more money for that? We have been called upon for eighteen years, since the government decided to transfer the Indians from Oka to Gibson to vote money, and we should not be called upon to pay $200 because, I understand, they have been all transferred to Gibson.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend will see that the same vote was granted last year, but no money was spent. I am informed that the department have put the vote in so that if any family wishes to move this vote will be available. The Indians look upon it as an evidence of good faith. If any occasion should arise for a removal it is here provided for.

Mr. BERGERON. Good faith with whom? I do not understand the meaning of saying that it is to keep good faith.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is under an old arrangement for the removal of the Indians. It was not spent last year.

Mr. BERGERON. How much has this country paid for the removal of the Indians from Oka to Gibson, purely and simply as a matter of caprice.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The official has not got the figures with him. If the hon. gentleman would like a statement I will be pleased to have a statement made out and brought down.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to have it, because I know it is a very large amount of money.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). This item has been in the estimates every year. I think, since I came to the House, about twenty-one years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. It commenced in 1881.

Mr. SPROULE. There has been an item for this purpose year after year, and the information has been given to us each year that it was thought the vote proposed would complete the removal of the Indians. But, still, we have that item every year. I do not think it lapses, although it may have lapsed last year. There ought to be an end to this transaction, and not allow it to run on for a quarter or half a century. The department is not proceeding with the work, or somebody is making a pension out of it while doing nothing. If it is not intended to use it, why put it here, and if it is intended to use it, why not say so?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is the policy of the government to remove the Indians from Oka to the Gibson settlement, and if any families decide to move they know that we have this fund to pay their expenses. There may be or may not be any removal this year, but the Indians are desirous that we should have this fund if any removal takes place, and we want this small vote to provide for that.

Mr. SPROULE. Every one is aware of the fact that the Indians do not intend to move, and there is no use of putting in that vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend will see that if there is no removal there is no expense.

Mr. SPROULE. What I object to is the voting of money without there is an intention to use it, and without it is clear that it will be needed during the current year.

To provide for the Indian Land Management Fund ..... $14,000

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to have some explanation of that item. It seems to me a large amount for managing land of that kind.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it always the same amount?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will give the explanation furnished to me by the department. It is as follows:

Ontario and Quebec—Indian Land Management Fund.

1899-1900. 1900-1901.

Provision for the Indian Land Management Fund..... $14,000 $14,000

This item provides for the amount of the grant to assist the Indian Land Management Fund under the terms of order in council of July 1, 1898.

The grant for the year 1898-9 was distributed as follows:

Province of Quebec Fund.....	$ 700
Indian Land Management Fund.....	13,000
Lapsed .....	300
	$14,000

When the plan for the gradual restitution of these funds was put into operation, the capital of each stood as follows (July 1, 1892):

Indian Land Management Fund .....	$ 72,788 88
Province of Quebec Fund .....	12,526 01
Indian School Fund .....	97,317 31
	$182,632 20

On July 1, 1899, the capital of the funds stood thus:

Indian Land Management Fund .....	$152,865 65
Province of Quebec Fund .....	73,465 73
	$226,270 38

During the seven years from July 1, 1892, to July 1, 1899, the capital funds have been increased as follows:

Indian Land Management Fund.....	$36,075 77
Province of Quebec Fund .....	2,799 72
Indian School Fund to June 30, 1898..	4,762 69
	$43,638 18

Precis of the new arrangement for the replenishment of Indian Land Management Fund and Province of Quebec Fund, under authority of order in council of July 1, 1898.

The Indian School Fund has been closed by a transfer of the amount standing at the credit of capital to the credit of Indian Land Management Fund and Province of Quebec Fund, $102,030.

This sum was, in 1876, transferred to Indian School Fund to meet payment of salaries to missionaries and teachers, which had been charged to Management Fund and Province of Quebec Fund. All these payments have disappeared from School Fund, now being paid either by the fund of the band interested in the school or by a parliamentary appropriation, the original capital has been retransferred to the credits of the funds from which it was taken. The whole original capital of School Fund having been expended for purposes of Indian education, the account is closed.

Province of Quebec Fund, with annual revenue from invested capital of $3,083.60, can bear an annual expenditure of $1,000 and create a sinking fund, which will in about fifteen years restore the capital to its original power, and produce an annual revenue of $1,162.08, which can be spent each for the purchase of supplies for the poor and destitute in the province of Quebec, and for other purposes.

The Indian Land Management Fund will be restored in probably twenty years, with the assistance afforded by the grant of $14,000, to its original position, when the grant will be at once diminished.

Mr. WILSON. What is the total amount of the fund now?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. $226,270.38.

To provide for the erection of a lock-up at St. Regis ..... $500

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman said that at the suggestion of the hon. member for Huntington (Mr. Scriver), he had given the order to stop the building of that lock-up. Let me say that the strongest criticism of the government, in this matter, comes from their own friends. In this case whether the prosecutor or the defendant wins, the cost comes out of the same pocket. All this difficulty has arisen out of the Indian Improvement Act, which was passed two years ago by the Minister of the Interior, and which was intended to supplant the old tribal customs of the Indians, by new municipal organizations. The Indians were opposed to that, and there was a collision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What Act was passed two years ago in connection with this matter?

Mr. BERGERON. The Indian Improvement Act. It was passed for Caughnawaga, as well as for St. Regis, and if there has been no trouble at Caughnawaga, it is because good advice prevailed. I have been consulted by the Caughnawaga Indians, assisted by their lawyer, Mr. White, of Montreal, and I have advised them to stand by the law until they can make their case prevail before another man than the present Minister of the Interior, who has declared that he would not hear them under any circumstances. The Indian Improvement Act may have been passed with a good object, but it was not acceptable to the Indians, and my impression is that we will have considerable trouble on account of the cast-iron rules laid down by the government. Here is an account of what took place:

The difficulty between a few government officials and the St. Regis Indians is again in evidence. It arose, as our readers will recall, in the Indian Improvement Act, intended to break up the old tribal custom and organize among the bands a modified municipal system. The St. Regis Indians opposed the enforcement of the new law from the start. Whether the Indians elected their chiefs for a term of three years or for life really concerned nobody but themselves—in fact, it did not matter whether they had chiefs at all, for the custom of having them is a survival of circumstances and conditions that have long disappeared, so that the position is almost a nominal one, little better than the honorary bestowal of the title of colonel among white men. The difficulty, however, was a welcome one to officials anxious to show their authority, and to the lawyers. Had Mr. Sifton acted as he ought to have done, he would have winked at the resistance of the Indians to the change in their method of choosing chiefs, but no, he fell in with the advice of the agent at Cornwall and sent a posse of Dominion police under Col. Sherwood to arrest those Indians against whom warrants had been issued. The events that followed are of so recent date that the reader's memory needs only to be refreshed by recalling the chief of them. Sherwood and his men embarked on a tug at Valleyfield and arrived early in the morning at St. Regis. Going to the house of Mr. Long, a messenger was sent to the cabins of the Indians wanted to tell them to come to the office of the Indian agency, where men were in waiting to arrange with them for stone to rebuild the collapsed piers of the Cornwall bridge. Two or three, unsuspecting any plot, hurried to the office, where they were seized and promptly manacled by the police. A squaw saw them throw down one poor fellow and put handcuffs upon him, and hurried to tell his brother. Furious at the intelligence, Jake Ice burst into the office and flew to release his brother. Col. Sherwood intercepted him and a struggle ensued, during which Col. Sherwood, stronger and younger than Ice, drew a revolver and shot him twice, the second shot being fatal. The police, with their prisoners, marched to the tug and left unmolested, although the whole tribe was gathered on the wharf and could have overwhelmed them, had they not been what they really are, a quiet and inoffensive people. Sherwood came to Huntington and surrendered himself. The inquest held on the body of Jake Ice resulted in a verdict of justifiable homicide, which cleared him of all danger of prosecution. Meanwhile, warrants for more Indians were sworn out, and, on learning of this, seven of them voluntarily went to Beauharnois to answer the charges against them. The government, however, by this time had come to understand how matters stood, and did not want to prosecute the Indians. They knew that before a jury such ugly facts would come out as that Jake Ice was unarmed, had not even a stick, that as a member of the tribe he had entered an office to which he had a legal right of entry during daylight, that there were three big policemen in the room, besides Sherwood and agent Long, and that there was no necessity for using firearms. There was no riot and the police were in no danger. The government saw it would be the police and not the Indians who would be on trial, and wanted the affair hushed up, so the Indians were let go on nominal bail.

Like many another outrage perpetrated on the Indian, the matter would ere this have been forgotten had it not been that the department insisted on paying all the law costs and expenses out of the funds in its hands belonging to the St. Regis band. Of the nature and extent of these accounts, the reader can judge by the two we print in another column. To read the items in those two accounts it would be concluded the prosecution was an arduous and exacting one, requiring the attention of lawyers day and night. As a matter of fact, the legal proceedings were of an elementary character, requiring no research. The charges never came up for hearing, no evidence was taken. Three times the magistrate opened the court, and three times the learned prosecutor asked for an adjournment, which was agreed to, the whole proceedings lasting only a few minutes. The fourth time the Indians were committed for trial without hearing, as they waived examination. The proceedings in court were brief and formal, yet for his attendance on these four occasions Mr. Mitchell charged $100. There are other items even more astonishing, winding up with his actually charging the country for making out his own bill. Mr. Mitchell charges $5 an hour for his services after dark; Mr. Brossoit lumps his evenings at $20 each, and impartially charges for Sunday and Saturday. More remarkable still, he charges $40 for the two days he was at Ottawa, and again, in the two last items, charges $40 each for the same two days, so that he got $120 for them, $12 more for his expenses, and $2.50 for visiting the Indians in jail, $134.50 in all. If this is a specimen of how Mr. Newcombe taxes bills, the sooner his services are dispensed with the better for the public interests.

The extraordinary feature in the government's conduct in the affair is that the bills of both lawyers are charged to the Indians, who are thus compelled to do what is expected of no white man, to pay for their own prosecution. Nay, more, they are charged with the expenses of the inquest, which was not held in their interest, for they did not shed the blood of the dead man, but was conducted to protect the police from prosecution.

All the accounts are not yet published; judging from those that have been, it looks as if they would amount to $1,500. The Indians object to this being taken out of their fund, and they are in the right. Supposing, for instance, a dozen men broke the law in this village, would the ratepayers submit if the government attempted to collect from them all the bills which lawyers and others put in for disposing of the twelve?

Now, the point which I wanted to make is that not only is that money all taken from the Indian fund, but it seems that the whole thing has been done to enable two country lawyers to make money, simply because they are friends of the government. From all parts of the country we hear the same thing. It is a disease. I am going to read the accounts to show to what a level we have fallen in this country, when men who are lawyers will come down to any petty way of trying to get money from the government, and when the government is too weak to refuse, and allows itself to be robbed. Here is Mr. Mitchell's account:

Huntingdon, May 18, 1899.

Dr., the Government of Canada, Department of the Interior.

To A. E. Mitchell, Esq., advocate, in the three cases of No. 98, the Queen vs. Jake Fire et al., riot, No. 101; the Queen vs. Louis Thomas, assault upon an officer, and No. 102, the Queen vs. Louis Sunday, assault upon an officer; of the records of the magistrate's court, Beauharnois, W. S. Maclaren, J.P.

There is a whole page of an account which amounts to $463.21; and there is this certificate at the bottom:

May 26, 1899.—I hereby certify that I have examined this account and taxed the same at $408.21 (four hundred and eight dollars and twenty-one cents).

E. NEWCOMBE,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

I am told that Mr. Mitchell is very angry because Mr. Newcombe reduced the account. Here is the other account:

Dept. of Justice to Thomas Brossoit, Q.C.—

I do not want to read the items, but it is a sad sight.

Mr. SPROULE. Read the items.

	$492 67

Mr. Newcombe struck off $31, and certified the account for $461.67. Now, the right hon. gentleman knows this man, and knows that he does not make $20 a day. These Indians gave themselves up and did not want to get out on bail; but they were let out on bail by the judge, who said there was nothing against them. They were not guilty; they had not killed anybody; but the judge let them out on bail because he said it was better than to set them at liberty, so as to give them the idea that they could be brought back again. This Mr. Brossoit was the lawyer on both sides, and was probably paid by both sides. He was the Crown prosecutor at Beauharnois the last term. These men were brought down and defended by some members of the Crown prosecutor's family. There was nothing against them at all, but the trial lasted a few days and he was paid $20 a day. This was a case I wanted to bring to the attention of the hon. gentleman who was in charge of the department. If he thinks that these people will stand the squandering of their money in that way, he is greatly mistaken. More than that, those Indians are a very intelligent class. They read the papers and know what is going on, and they know that we vote money for them here. Is it any inducement to them to keep the peace when they find out that some people are making money out of their own funds?

I believe it is a most injudicious action on the part of this government to build a lock-up at that place. The Indians look upon it as an insult. They are very respectable men and care a great deal about maintaining that respectable reputation, and they look upon the building of a jail there as a very serious reflection on them. I may tell my hon. friend that there is trouble breeding, and this is the cause. I would advise him not to go on with the building of that jail, and there is one not far off which he can utilize if necessary.

These men who were tried gave themselves up last year, and were declared not guilty by the criminal court.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have been informed that this trouble is not of recent origin. For some ten or twelve years back, there has been more or less trouble. No doubt what the hon. gentleman says with regard to the character of the majority of the Indian population is true, but he must admit that there is a small element, at least, of pretty rough characters. This matter came under my notice, and on consultation with the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), who seemed to be familiar with the character of the Indians, I did stop this work, although I was not familiar with the cause that led up to it. All I can say is, that the officials of the department are in communication with some of the chiefs, and if it is found that different treatment will bring about greater peace and harmony, I will advise that a different course be pursued. At the same time, the hon. gentleman must admit that where there is a disorderly population, whether white or Indians, the law must be enforced. He is mistaken when he says that this action was taken under a law passed by the present government. On the contrary, the department is simply trying to enforce the old regulations. I do hope that after careful consideration of the whole matter, and consultation with those people, we may be able to come to an amicable arrangement.

As to the charges made against the Justice Department, that will come up for consideration again, and will be explained by the Solicitor General. I find myself in a pretty hard place, between the Indians and the lawyers.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may say, in addition, that I am, to some extent, familiar with the causes of the trouble which, not recently, but for a great many years, have existed at the St.

Mr. BERGERON.

Regis reserve. I have had in my office, during the last two years, delegations of the Indians, and from questions I have put to them, I can form a pretty accurate judgment as to the causes. The causes are due, not to any recent legislation, because there has been none.

Mr. BERGERON. It has been put in force, then.

The PRIME MINISTER. All this has arisen out of the election of one or two chiefs.

Mr. BERGERON. I am afraid the right hon. gentleman is making a mistake.

The PRIME MINISTER. The reserve of St. Regis is on the boundary of the state of New York, and that boundary is purely conventional. There is not even a brook or picket to show it, and while we have a reserve in the province of Quebec, there is another Indian reserve in the state of New York of the same tribe, so that we have the American and the Canadian Indians practically on the same reserve, the boundary between them being purely conventional. The fact that the American agents come on our reserve is a prolific cause of disorder. Last year, after the trouble took place at one of the elections for chief, warrants had to be served upon some of the Indians. The chief of police, who is a discreet man, Colonel Sherwood, was sent to execute these warrants. He was assaulted and had to defend himself. He was carrying the writ of Her Majesty and had to execute it, and in so doing shot a man. He was brought before a magistrate and released immediately, as it was shown he had acted in the legitimate exercise of his duty. When an assault was committed on an officer of the law, it would be unpardonable weakness if the government had not asserted the majesty of the law.

Mr. BERGERON. How was it asserted?

The PRIME MINISTER. By arresting these men. They were locked up and taken to Beauharnois. After conference with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), we came to the conclusion that it was better not to prosecute them but to release them on bail. We decided it was better to do nothing more than assert the law. In this we had to employ lawyers. My hon. friend takes exception to the account filed by the lawyers. The Minister of Justice did not pay the account as it was presented; but the bill was taxed, and paid as it had been taxed. Could anything else be done? If my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) remembers Max O'Rell, he will remember that charges were made by some British barristers that would put this account to shame. I remember that one of these gentlemen charged his client for dreaming of his case.

Mr. BERGERON. But this man had no time to dream; he was working day and night.

The PRIME MINISTER. In that case, my hon. friend should not find fault.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not accept the idea that the services of Messrs. Mitchell and Brossolt were required at all. The Solicitor General of Canada could have done the whole thing himself. The right hon. gentleman has made no defence for taking this money from the Indian fund. As to these Indians being neighbours of the United States Indians, what the right hon. gentleman says is quite true. But, is not that another reason why we should have no cast iron rules concerning these Indians? Why should we not treat them as the American government treat those on their reserve, which would avoid friction? It may be true that the law which was put in force two years ago by the present Minister of the Interior, is an old law. But that only shows that the late government showed greater discretion in not putting it in force. These Indians do not want the municipal system; they want to continue their old institutions, and to be treated in the same way as in former times. The Caughnawaga Indians are asking the same thing. Why not treat them that way, if it does nobody any harm, and will avoid friction, as in the case we have spoken of? Before this item passes, I would like to ask the acting minister if he has received a memorandum—and I would apply the same question to my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier)—from the Abenaki Indians of St. François du Lac, from M. de Gonzague, missionary there, for $500 or $1,000 to assist the tribe in building a wigwam for the missionary? And, if such a memorandum has been received, what answer has been given, and what does the government intend to do about it?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have received several communications from Mr. de Gonzague but I do not recollect having received one of the nature referred to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no present recollection of having heard of such a communication; but I will make a memorandum of it, and if there is correspondence of such a character, I will get the information.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Referring to the newspaper extract read by my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), I may say that, so far as it refers to the conduct of Col. Sherwood, my understanding of the facts are not as they are stated in that newspaper. I remember that I gave attention to the facts at the time, and my distinct recollection is that Col. Sherwood used his weapon only as a last resort and in self-defence, and for the purpose of preventing greater loss of life. Having had personal acquaintance with him, and knowing something of his record, knowing something of the pluck and coolness and courage that have always characterized him, I would require very little evidence to assure me that this was the case; and I think the same would be said by any one who knows that gentleman. The newspaper extract having been read, I think, that in justice to Mr. Sherwood, this statement should be made.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I desire to say a few words with regard to this account that has been read. We have such accounts coming in from different parts of the country for work done by lawyers, who are supporters of the government. All are of the same extravagant character. It seems to me that this is growing to be not only an abuse, but a disgrace to the country. I have looked over a few of the bills, and the payments seem to be made on no principle, except to strike off a few dollars, and pay the balance, no matter how extravagant the charges may be, the slight reduction being supposed to satisfy everybody. There are two objectionable features of this bill that has been read here. The first is that the bill is enormously large and no adequate services were given for the money paid. And in the second place, the money is taken from the Indian fund, and to that extent, the Indians are impoverished, and their money is paid extravagantly to men who have done little to earn it. These Indians are wards of the government; the government is trustee of their funds, and should not squander them.

Mr. J. D. REID (South Grenville). I would like to ask the minister if there is a lock-up on this St. Regis reserve and a magistrate to deal with any one who commits a wrong?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The magistrate is the Indian agent on the reserve. There is no lock-up at present on the reserve.

Mr. REID. Is he a duly appointed magistrate?

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) knows that St. Regis is in the district of Beauharnois. It is not far from the jail of Beauharnois which is large enough to hold all the Indians who are guilty of wrong-doing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The question was whether he was a magistrate, and I understand that he is ex-officio a magistrate under the Indian Act.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no special magistrate, it is the same one who sits in Beauharnois. He does not live in the town, but comes to Beauharnois to hold sittings of his court. I repeat that it would be wise not to build the jail there.

Department of Indian Affairs—Nova Scotia
—Medical attendance ..... $3,000

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). There is an increase of $700. Why is that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is not exactly an increase. For some time a supplementary vote of $700 has been asked for every year; and it was thought better to put the whole in one item in the main estimates.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it not due to the fact that there is greater license in the way medical men are allowed to make their charges?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. The explanation is as I have given it. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) wishes, I can give him the expenditures in detail.

Purchase of twenty-five acres of land as an addition to the Indian reserve at Millbrook, Colchester County ..... $250

Mr. McDOUGALL. Would the hon. minister explain that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The reasons are set forth in a letter from Mr. Thomas Smith, Indian agent, Truro, N.S., to the secretary of the department. There are at present twenty-five acres on the reserve on which there are eighteen houses, and this is found to be insufficient. Mr. Smith applies for funds to purchase twenty-five acres of land of Geo. Benhall, at $10 an acre, this land being on the north side of the Millbrooke reserve.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is the land in wood or is it cultivated?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is some wood on it.

New Brunswick—Medical attendance and medicine for Indians ..... $1,740

Mr. POWELL. I would take this opportunity of asking the minister why it was that Dr. White was dismissed as Indian officer for the county of King's?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The department thought that a more economical arrangement could be made, as the medical service was costing about $400 per annum. There is but a small number of Indians, and we have put on a man at an annual allowance of $200. I have not got the name of the man who was substituted for Dr. White, but I will give the name to-morrow.

Mr. POWELL. Had he up to that time been a resident physician in Sussex?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no information with regard to that.

Manitoba and North-west Territories—
Annuities and commutations ..... $141,745

Mr. DAVIN. What is the cause of this increase of $5,900?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is on account of the new treaty known to the department as treaty No. 8. It covers the Peace River and Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. McDOUGALL.

Triennial clothing ..... $5,918

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) There is a large increase here, what is the meaning of it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In addition to what we had before, we have seven chiefs and twenty-three headmen under treaty No. 8, which accounts for $1,200 additional. Then every third year a suit of clothing is provided for each chief and headman, and this happens to be the third year.

Day, boarding and industrial schools.... $280,912

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). On this item, I desire to draw the attention of the acting minister to a matter that I have brought forward by way of questions both last session and the present session. I refer to the printing plant that was purchased by the government for the Indian industrial school at the town of Elkhorn, for the purpose of teaching the printing trade to the Indian pupils. The hon. gentleman will recollect that in the fall of 1893 it was decided by the government to teach the pupils the printing trade in connection with other trades, and for that purpose a plant was purchased and put into this school. Mr. W. J. Thompson was employed as instructor to teach the pupils and to manage and edit a paper. The paper was called the Elkhorn Advocate. It was a non-political paper, and it built up quite a little business; it was liberally patronized by the advertising community, and had a considerable circulation. It was a weekly paper, and was continued until the 1st of April, 1898, when, I believe, it was decided to cease teaching printing in connection with the teaching of other trades at this school. Mr. Thompson, having entered into contracts with advertisers, having accepted money for subscriptions in advance, and being desirous of continuing the publication of the paper there, made a visit to the city of Winnipeg, and had an interview with Mr. Forget, the Indian commissioner, the result of which was that an agreement was entered into between Mr. Forget, representing the department, and Mr. Thompson, by which Mr. Thompson was to continue the publication of this paper. He was to receive all moneys due for subscriptions and advertising rates and, until the termination of the subscriptions, he was to supply the paper. The provision was also inserted in the agreement that the agreement could be annulled by either party giving six months' notice. The Indian commissioner informed Mr. Thompson that undoubtedly he would be allowed to retain possession of this plant until such time as the department might again take up the teaching of these trades. But, little more than two months had elapsed after this agreement had been made when Mr. Thompson received his six months' notice. He was taken considerably by surprise, especially in view of the assurance given to Mr. Thompson that the plant would remain in his possession. No reason was given for the annulling of the contract other than that stated by the Indian commissioner, that it was done upon the authority of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), and in that connection I desire to draw the attention of the hon. acting minister (Mr. Sutherland) to the discrepancy between the reason given by the commissioner and the reason given by the hon. Minister of the Interior in reply to a question asked during the last session of parliament. Upon making inquiries, Mr. Thompson learned that they were giving this plant to a fellow Liberal, the editor of a Liberal paper called the Virden Advance, and it was given upon much the same conditions as Mr. Thompson had it. Mr. Thompson did not like to be treated in this harsh manner; he saw that the object was to squeeze him out and start the publication of a Liberal newspaper. It was in the constituency of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and no doubt being desirous of utilizing the plant, not being used there for the purpose of printing a paper in the government interest, the object of the minister was to squeeze out Mr. Thompson, in order that he might hand this plant over to Mr. Garrison, who would publish a Liberal paper, and no doubt publish these reports sent out by the puffery bureau from Ottawa and Winnipeg laudatory of the Minister of the Interior. There was no Liberal paper there before. This paper that Mr. Thompson published was not run as a political paper, it contained no articles condemnatory of the government or of any minister, and he therefore resented this treatment. But, anticipating the action that was to be taken, before six months had expired he purchased a plant of his own and continued the publication of his own paper, setting aside the government plant. Last session, on May 15, I placed upon the Order paper the following question:

Did the government lease the printing plant in Indian school, Elkhorn, to Mr. W. J. Thompson, of Elkhorn?

To which the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) answered 'Yes.' Question 2 was:

If so, was lease cancelled, and for what reason?

Answer. The lease to Mr. Thompson was cancelled by the Indian commissioner, the reason for the action not being given.

You will see that the Minister of the Interior places the full responsibility for the cancellation of the contract upon the shoulders of the Indian commissioner. That seems a rather peculiar statement of a gentleman who came down here stating that he was going to run his own department, and not allow it to be run as his predecessors had, he said, by his subordinates. And it seems strange to me that the commissioner should be allowed to cancel the contract without specifying to his superior officer the reason why he did this. The only reason the Indian commissioner gave Mr. Thompson for cancelling the contract was that he was authorized to do so by the Minister of the Interior, while the Minister of the Interior shoulders the responsibility upon the Indian commissioner. This is a discrepancy I would like to hear explained by the hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Was there not a question in regard to this matter this session?

Mr. ROCHE. Yes, I am going to refer to that. The third question which I asked was as follows:

Who holds the plant now? Has it been leased or purchased, and for what sum?

Answer. E. H. Garrison. Negotiations for the sale to Mr. Garrison are now pending.

They gave Mr. Thompson six months' notice that this agreement with him would be annulled, and at the same time they did not complete any arrangement with anybody else. If they were desirous of deriving a revenue from this plant why not sell it to Mr. Thompson. He would have purchased it, as he was anxious to purchase it. He purchased a new plant anyway. But that was not the object of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and he therefore had this contract with Mr. Thompson annulled while he states that negotiations were pending for the sale of the plant to Mr. Garrison in the neighbouring town of Virden. After the expiration of another year, and thinking that these negotiations which had been pending from last session would surely have come to a focus by this time, I put a series of question on the Order paper, to which the hon. acting Minister of the Interior gave the following replies:

1. Did the government lease or sell the printing plant formerly in Indian school, Elkhorn, since the Thompson lease was cancelled? Answer. No.

2. If so, to whom? Answered by No. 1.

3. Is the government aware that this plant is now used for the printing of a paper supporting the government in Griswold, Brandon constituency? Answer. No.

That seems very strange, because here is the Griswold Ledger, which is edited by a gentleman named Wildman, and it is a paper which is printed on the plant formerly owned by the government, and which was used in the Industrial school at Elkhorn. The acting minister does not know anything about it, and possibly his officers do not know anything about it, but if the answer had been given by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) it could not have been accepted as a truthful answer. I am bound to say that the hon. minister knows that within a few miles of his town of Brandon there exists a paper printed upon the plant that was used in the Industrial school at Elkhorn, and that it could not be printed unless he was cognizant of it. If these answers I received to the questions in the House this year are correct, the Department of the Interior should take proceedings against Mr. Garrison in the interests of justice, because he certainly has left himself open to a charge of larceny, for Mr. Garrison has disposed of the plant. Whether he purchased it from the government or not I cannot say, but it is stated that he sold it to Mr. Wildman. I cannot understand the answers that were given to me this session, but the information I am in possession of, is that Mr. Garrison sold the plant to Mr. Wildman for $350. My information is that the plant had cost the government $800. The minister stated that negotiations were pending a year ago for the sale of the plant to Mr. Garrison, and the hon. acting Minister of the Interior has stated this session that it has not been disposed of to him. Still, Mr. Garrison has sold that plant to Mr. Wildman, the present editor, for $350. These were the terms. He got $75 cash; two notes for $75 each, two notes for $50 each, and he wiped out a contra account he had against Mr. Garrison for $25, making in all, $350. The $75 cash was turned in by Mr. Garrison to the establishment of the Virden Advance, of which he was part proprietor. One note for $75 as transferred to the Toronto Type Foundry Company to wipe out a debt which the Virden Advance owed. That note has since been met and paid. Before these facts came out, Mr. Wildman had heard that Mr. Garrison was not authorized to sell the plant, and that he did not own it, and I am credibly informed that he wrote to Ottawa, presumably to the Minister of the Interior, and his answer was that it was all right. He went on and paid some few of these notes. I believe that fully one-half the purchase price of that plant has been paid by Mr. Wildman to Mr. Garrison up to the present. I desire to bring these matters to the attention of the acting minister, feeling sure that if he has not this information already in his possession, and if these are the facts, they are certainly worthy of investigation. If it is true that this plant has been sold by Mr. Garrison without having been purchased from the government, then Mr. Garrison has laid himself open to a charge of larceny. Mr. Garrison is a strong party man in the constituency of the Minister of the Interior, and so is this other gentleman, Mr. Wildman, and they are both supporters of the Liberal party. I can hardly believe that Mr. Garrison would take a printing plant that does not belong to him and sell it to another gentleman, and pocket the proceeds, and do all this behind the back of the Minister of the Interior, without his knowing anything about it.

Mr. SPROULE. What became of the Indian money that was paid for the plant in the first place?

Mr. ROCHE.

Mr. ROCHE. I know nothing about that, but if the plant has not been sold to Mr. Garrison, I would ask who is in possession of the plant to-day, and why was the agreement cancelled with Mr. Thompson, when, if the government wished to sell the plant, it could just as well be disposed of to Mr. Thompson.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) has, no doubt, made a statement that requires investigation. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no information with regard to it. I spoke to the officials about it, and they at once communicated with the Indian commissioner, Mr. Laird, making inquiry with regard to this matter. So far as the officers in the department are concerned, I am satisfied that their answers were perfectly honest. All we can do, in view of the statement of my hon. friend, is to have an investigation into the whole matter, and have a full explanation given to the House. It may be possible that that has been done by the Indian agent, and the report has not yet come. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) say it occurred last year?

Mr. ROCHE. It was in April, 1898, that the contract with Mr. Thompson was cancelled, and negotiations were then pending with Mr. Garrison.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I certainly shall give instructions to have a full investigation made with regard to this matter.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assinibola). I am glad that the acting minister has decided to have a full inquiry into this whole matter, because those who have unofficially inquired into it have come to the conclusion that, undoubtedly, the funds that belong to the Indians, the wards of the nation, have been put to a use not contemplated by parliament in voting that money. It would really seem that what was purchased by these funds was diverted from its original intention in the interests of party politics. I am very glad that the acting minister has decided to inquire into it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think the minister (Mr. Sifton) could have had any knowledge of anything of the kind being done.

Mr. ROCHE. I did not say that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As to the statement made, it is a matter that must be inquired into.

Mr. SPROULE. All this shows that the minister at the head of the department should be here discharging his duty. When a question like this comes up, we are told it was done by the minister, and as the department knows nothing about it, the House can get no information. Cannot the acting minister tell us if this plant has been sold, and if so, what has been done with the money?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no information in the department as to the sale having taken place, and there is no correspondence in regard to it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member (Mr. Roche) has given us information which certainly seems to be correct. It is not likely that he is mistaken in the statement that he has made. We find that this money was used to start a Reform newspaper, although it belonged to the Indian fund, and if the paper has been sold, it is not known whether the money has gone back to the Indian fund or not.

Now, with regard to these industrial schools, I would like to have some information. How many are there in the Territories?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. First, there is Rupert's Land school with 120 pupils. The next is St. Boniface, with 100 pupils, at $110. Then there is Elkhorn, with 100 pupils, at $120; Brandon, with 100 pupils, at $120; Qu'Appelle, with 225 pupils, at $125; Battleford, with 120 pupils, at $150; Red Deer, with 80 pupils, at $140; St. Joseph's, with 120 pupils, at $140; Calgary, with 50 pupils, at $130. Those are all the schools.

Mr. SPROULE. Under whose authority are these schools conducted? Is there a qualified teacher appointed by the government to take charge of them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed that the different denominations that manage these schools nominate the teachers, although they are appointed nominally by the department.

Mr. SPROULE. At places where there are two or three denominational schools kept up, how is the distribution of money made?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That would be a different class of schools. These schools are industrial boarding schools.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they taken charge of by any particular denomination?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In one district only one denomination has a school. Any children whose parents, for any reason did not wish them to attend the schools of their particular district, would have to go to the school of some other district.

Mr. SPROULE. My information is that in a certain locality, I think in the Prince Albert district, there was a school carried on for a length of time by the English Church, and there was one started later by the Roman Catholic denomination which gets all the money, though it was started later and has a smaller number of pupils. The authorities of the other school applied for an appropriation, but they were refused, because there was another school in the locality which gets the grant. I wrote to the department asking them on what principle the distribution was made, and if the school in question could not get any support. The answer was that the department could not assist any schools except those in operation at the present time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think we could very well give a grant to two schools in the one place; there would not be sufficient to do that. If my hon. friend will give me the name of the school, I shall be glad to get the information for him. I know there is a good deal of difficulty in trying to please the different denominations in the districts.

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot tell the name of the school or the exact locality where it is, as I have not the letter which I received on the subject. My object in asking was to ascertain on what principle these schools were assisted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know that there is any principle. In opening up the country, where a denomination has made missionary efforts, and makes application, it seems that where they were thought worthy the grant was made.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, it may be assumed that the institution to which I refer was not thought worthy of the grant.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no; but two schools are not assisted in the same locality.

Indians, British Columbia—Salaries..... $20,560

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) What is the increase of $720 for?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For another clerk in the office of the superintendent, who represents that the work has increased.

Indians, British Columbia—Medical attendance and medicines ..... $3,500

Mr. PRIOR. On what system does the minister call in the doctors? I notice a great change in the personnel of the doctors who have been attending the Indians in British Columbia.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand that that is controlled almost altogether by the Indian agent.

Mr. PRIOR. Are the Indian agencies instructed as to what medical men they are to require?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

British Columbia Surveys and Reserve Commission ..... $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is not that work all done?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The sum asked for is for the purpose of having reserves already laid off surveyed and completed, as much confusion and inconvenience often arises in connection with unfinished reserves, especially when they have been seven or eight years in that condition. In addition, there are several localities not yet visited by the commissioners, where reserves have to be made for the Aborigines. It is likely that next year will see the work finished.

Mr. PRIOR. I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the Songhees Indian reserve opposite Victoria. I would ask him to see if he cannot come to some arrangement to have the Indians moved elsewhere. Mr. McKenna was sent up there, and the last I can find out from the correspondence, is that, on behalf of the Indians, the government made an offer to the provincial government, which the latter would not accept, and there the matter stands.

J. A. Macrae, Inspector of Indian agencies and reserves, British Columbia ..... $1,800

Mr. FOSTER. Why is this increase of $200 ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Macrae has been in the service many years. He began at Edmonton, and was brought to Ottawa in 1893, and then appointed to the position of inspector of Indian agencies and reserves. He has a great deal of travelling to do, and is a very competent officer, and has not had an increase for some years.

Mr. SPROULE. It looks very bad to give one man an increase of $200 in one year, and allow a number of others, equally deserving and industrious, to go on from year to year without their statutory increase of $50.

Department of the Geological Survey .... $53,800

Mr. FOSTER. Why this increase of $500 ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is due to increases in the salaries of the different officials, made on the recommendation of the director of the Geological Survey, Dr. Dawson.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY.

A Message was received from the Senate acquainting this House,

That their Honours have agreed to the address of the Commons to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, congratulating Her upon the approaching termination of the war in South Africa, as foreshadowed by the recent successes, culminating in the fall of Pretoria, which have attended the British arms, by filling up the blank with the words 'Senate and.'

Also,—That they have passed an address to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to transmit the joint address of both Houses to Her Most Gracious Majesty, congratulating Her on the approaching termination of the war in South Africa, as foreshadowed by the recent successes, culminating in the fall of Pretoria, which have attended the British arms, in such manner as His Excellency may see fit, in order that the same may be laid at the foot of the Throne, and requesting the House of Commons to unite with them in the said address.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That the address to His Excellency the Governor General be concurred in by filling up the blank therein with the word 'Commons,' and a Message was ordered to be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours therewith.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What estimates will be taken up to-morrow when we go into supply ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has been called away on business, but I expect him to-morrow. If he is present we shall go on with the Election Bill. If not, we will go immediately into supply and take up the militia estimates.

QUARANTINE AT VICTORIA, B.C.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I would like to correct the statement I made last night in reply to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior). I said that I did not think Oriental people coming into Victoria from San Francisco were quarantined. I find, on consulting Mr. Montzambert, that they are quarantined for the full term of the disease. I think that this fact should be made known to the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. (Wednesday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 13, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BERGERON.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beaubarnois). Before the motions are called, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. In this morning's Ottawa Citizen, there is an account of yesterday's proceedings in which I read these lines :

On the item of $500 to provide a lock-up for the St. Regis Indian reserve, Mr. Bergeron criticised at some length and with considerable severity the action of Lieut.-Col. Sherwood in connection with the suppression of the disturbances on the reserve last year.

I merely wish to say that that is an error of the reporter. I only stated what I saw in a newspaper, the Huntingdon Gleaner. I did not give my own opinion unfavourable to Colonel Sherwood, whom I hold in very high esteem.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—THE EMERGENCY RATION.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege in connection with the statement I made yesterday, following which it was understood that I would make a charge. I now desire to read to the House the statement upon which I will base a motion, as soon as I have communicated the statement to the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend will pardon me. It is usual, and I expected from the hon. gentleman, that before taking any step to formulate his charge, he would notify me of it. I have received no notice at all.

Mr. MONK. I notified the right hon. gentleman yesterday, that within a few hours I would make that statement to the House and base a charge upon it.

The PRIME MINISTER. But I expected that the hon. gentleman would give me notice of the motion that he intends to make.

Mr. MONK. The motion is the usual motion, and refers to the charge which I intend to make before a committee.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not the usual motion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The promise of a committee was given, if he would make a charge.

The PRIME MINISTER. I appeal to the sense of fairness of the hon. member, if it is not proper that when a motion is to be made, the terms of the motion should be communicated to the leader of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton). Will the right hon. gentleman allow me to explain my interruption? That would be a perfectly fair position if the government had reserved its discretion as to whether the committee would go or not. But after having heard the hon. gentleman who has this matter in hand, the Prime Minister did say yesterday that if the hon. gentleman would take the responsibility of making a charge, the committee would be given at once. There was not, therefore, the reason that ordinarily obtains for submitting the terms of the statement to the leader of the House, because the Prime Minister said in advance that if my hon. friend would make a formal charge, the committee would be given.

The PRIME MINISTER. I stated that if the hon. gentleman would become responsible for a charge, the committee would go. Still, I submit that as a matter of convenience and of courtesy between one side of the House and the other, and in order to maintain the orderly procedure of the House, the terms of the motion to be made should be submitted to the leader of the House. I am not taking exception to the general idea or to the terms of the motion; I only say I would like to see it, before I pronounce upon it.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Yesterday, in discussing this question, I remember to have stated—it will be found in the Hansard—that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), would be prepared, in a few hours, to make his charge, I said certainly not later than to-morrow, meaning to-day. Last night I crossed the House, and in conversation with my right hon. friend, he will remember I told him that the member for Jacques Cartier intended to make his charge and motion to-day. The right hon. gentleman will remember that between us we discussed the granting of the committee, and the number of the committee; and as the motion was simply to refer the charges made to a select committee of the House, I took it for granted that that was quite sufficient notice, and I think I so stated in conversation to the right hon. gentleman. I told him that the charge would be made according to the terms stated by my right hon. friend the other day, when he told the House that if the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would make his charge, he should have a committee—if he charged fraud or wrong practice. My hon. friend does charge that, and his motion requires no very great scanning, because it is simply a motion to refer to a select committee of the House. But if my right hon. friend chooses to ask that this shall be made a notice of motion for to-morrow, and that it be spread upon the records of the House, I suppose that technically it is within his right to do so, but it keeps us back one day.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will say, in answer to my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster), that I did discuss the matter with him informally. I do not care to have a formal notice, but I anticipated all along that in this matter the terms of the motion would be submitted to me in advance of the motion. I insist upon that, I think it is only right. I do not want a formal notice, but I want the terms of the motion to be submitted to me.

Mr. MONK. I do not desire that there should be any misunderstanding. I understood from the right hon. gentleman yesterday, that I was expected to make a charge within a very few hours, and it was stated here in the House that, at the latest, I would make that charge to-day; and I have put myself to some inconvenience to reduce my charge to writing. But the right hon. gentleman, I think, is mistaken in one point. So far as I understand the procedure usually adopted in such cases, there can be no objection whatever to a member of the House rising on a question of privilege and making a charge without giving any notice in advance, not even such notice as was given here. But the consideration of the motion upon which the charge is based, may very properly be put off to another day. But in rising to a question of privilege, in order to make that charge, there can be no necessity for any postponement. I feel, in justice to myself, after what took place in the House yesterday, that there should be no delay whatever in my making this charge, but I have no objection to the consideration of the motion containing the charge being postponed to any day that will suit the right hon. gentleman. This is my statement:

That I am credibly informed and believe that I can establish by satisfactory evidence:

1. That in October, 1898, Surgeon Lieut.-Col. Neilson, director general medical staff of the Canadian militia, wrote to Henri Hatch, of Montreal, a manufacturer of concentrated foods, and the registered owner of 'Hatch's Protose,' a well-known food produced in Montreal by the Hatch Protose Company, and in use in hospitals throughout the country, informing the said Hatch that the Minister of Militia, the Hon. Frederick William Borden, was interested in Hatch's protein food, and impressed by the favourable results reported by the hospitals, and in consequence that the minister had instructed him (Neilson) to ask immediately for samples of the powder, and that, from the laboratory of the Hatch Protose Company, in Montreal, two samples of 80 per cent and 50 per cent proteid-strength were, without delay, sent by Hatch to the minister.

2. That in February, 1899, the Minister of Militia, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, then, as now, a member of this House, promising Hatch a first trial order for the mounted police in the Yukon, asked him if at any time a sufficient quantity could be had of the powder on short notice, in order to avoid delay in delivery in view of the difficulties in communication, so that depots might be established where 'Hatch's Protose' might be stocked for any emergency, to which the said Hatch answered that he had all the necessary machinery in his laboratory, and would keep ready for the department from half a ton to one ton of powder over 60 per cent proteid-strength, as per the average of the samples sent to Lieut.-Col. Neilson.

3. In March, 1899, the said Hatch employed and charged one Dr. Devlin, of Montreal, to solicit the permission from the department to make a military test of the said food, known as 'Hatch's Protose,' as an exclusive diet, in order to ascertain if soldiers on active service could live on it in perfect health, whereupon it was decided that the test would be applied to five soldiers of 'A' Battery, R.C.A., at Kingston, Ont., subject to stringent conditions imposed by the said Minister of Militia, namely:

(a) that the soldiers subjected to the test should answer satisfactorily a certain series of approved questions;

(b) that the test should last for one month;

(c) that the test should have to be stopped at once if any one of the five soldiers suffered uneasiness;

(d) that the test should be controlled by Lieut.-Colonels Neilson and Drury at Kingston, Ont.

4. That it resulted from the said test so made at Kingston upon five soldiers of 'A' Battery, R.C.A., that the food furnished for the experiment by the Hatch Protose Company, of Montreal, and controlled as above, was an eminently suitable food to serve as an emergency ration, and it was so reported by the Minister of Militia to Mr. Hatch himself.

5. When the first contingent of Canadian troops were preparing for departure for South Africa, Mr. Hatch, proprietor of the food tested in Kingston, as above, wrote to the Minister of Militia in reference to the supply of emergency rations to the said contingent, in the shape of food such as tested in Kingston, to which the minister replied, thanking Mr. Hatch, and expressing regret that under arrangements made with the home government, all supplies for the said contingent of Canadian troops were to be furnished by the War Office in England.

6. That the Minister of Militia had several interviews, principally in Montreal, but also elsewhere, with the said Henri Hatch, whom he knew to be the sole manufacturer of the food tested at Kingston.

7. That nevertheless, by a tender made on the 4th day of January last, and accepted on the same day, an agreement was arrived at between the Minister of Militia and the said Dr. Devlin (hereinabove mentioned) at Ottawa, by which the latter undertook to supply the Department of Militia and Defence with 2,333 pounds of vegetable proteid powder, in 7,000 tins, for the sum of $4,660.

8. That upon information received by him that the said agreement was being executed under circumstances calculated to excite grave suspicions, the said Henri Hatch, on the 25th day of January, 1900, wrote the Minister of Militia a letter, which was by him duly registered, in the following terms:

Your Excellency,—I just happen to hear of a large purchase of 'Proteid food' from Messrs. Devlin & Lyons, of this city, for the Canadian contingent. If such is the case, I consider it to be my right and my duty to inform you that such a supply can only rest upon a poor and fraudulent adulteration of my 'Protose,' as it is done without my knowledge, and has nothing in common with the product tested in Kingston last spring. This will be easily detected by analysis of the food supplied, to which end I intend to take the necessary steps in order to protect my interests. A sample of mine could, of course, have easily been obtained from any druggist, but the articles, if already supplied, are not mine, and cannot be identical with those used at the military test.

This I thought it advisable to bring to Your Excellency's knowledge, for any emergency.

Your humble servant,

H. HATCH.

9. That the Minister of Militia and Defence failed to acknowledge receipt of this letter, and did not promptly communicate with the troops of the Canadian contingent, or take any steps to verify the truth of the information conveyed to him by the letter above referred to of January 25, 1900, received from the person whose food he had, as above stated, caused to be tested at Kingston.

10. That as a matter of fact, the food or emergency ration supplied to the Canadian troops was not identical with the food tested at Kingston, known as 'Hatch's Protose,' but was a totally different article, of very inferior quality, containing scarcely 17 per cent of nutriment, whereas the food tested contained over 60 per cent of nutritive substance.

11. The said food, so supplied under said agreement, was never made in Canada at all, but was brought on from New York or some place in the United States of America, by the parties interested, packed in a certain number of large Saratoga trunks, containing each two large rough bags filled with a substance closely resembling broken biscuits; it was then ground in Montreal by ordinary milling process to a fine powder, and placed hurriedly in small tins, neither sterilized nor hermetically sealed, and must have deteriorated even if it had been suitable food, which it was not.

12. That the said tins bore a label indicating that the emergency ration contained in them were the product of the Vitalline Company, corner Craig and Bleury streets, Montreal, said company having no legal existence, and being irresponsible, and having neither manufactory nor known office in the said city of Montreal.

13. That the value of the said food, so brought on from the United States, does not exceed $500.

14. That a sample of the said food, so packed in the tins aforesaid, was obtained from the drug store where it had been packed, and was subsequently tested by Milton L. Hersey, M.A., Sc. (McGill), of Montreal, and found to contain only 17 per cent of nutritive substance, and said analysis was confirmed elsewhere.

15. Said tins were shipped to Halifax in large wooden cases bearing a large label, stating that upon the food contained in them Canadian soldiers had lived thirty days in perfect health.

16. The usual precautions as to inspection were not adopted by the Militia Department in regard to this shipment of emergency rations.

17. The substance brought in from the United States, as above stated, in Saratoga trunks, was detained by the customs officers for duty thereon, but under direction of the government it was allowed to pass without payment of customs dues.

18. The amount due under the agreement of the 4th of January, 1900, that is, $4,660, was paid to the contractor before the goods were actually delivered.

19. That under all the circumstances above set forth, the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence: (a) in making, with undue haste, the agreement hereinabove referred to of the 4th of January, 1900, for the supply of emergency rations to the Canadian troops in South Africa with irresponsible parties; (b) in not having the preparation of said rations controlled by competent men, and the supply furnished to the troops carefully and rigidly inspected and tested; (c) in neglecting, after he had received said letter of January 25 last, to take the steps commanded by the ordinary rules of prudence to ensure the protection of the troops; and (d) in paying the amount of the said contract, $4,660, in a case where he must have known that any recovery of the same was impossible, and without any investigation.

That, Sir, is my statement upon which I base the following motion, which is seconded by Mr. Prior:

That Frederick D. Monk, the member for the electoral district of Jacques Cartier in this House, having stated from his place in this House that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence:

Then follow the charges which I have just read. The motion concludes as follows:—

That the above statements be referred to a select committee of this House to inquire fully into the said allegations, with power to send for persons, papers, records and such articles as may be necessary for such investigation, and to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation, and that the committee do report in full the evidence taken before them and all their proceedings on the reference and the result of their inquiries.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion, in my humble opinion, this is not at all a case of privilege, which has been disclosed upon the facts stated by the hon. gentleman. Speaking at the first blush, upon hearing the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), I do not see that anything has been charged against the privileges of the House, and I doubt if it can be treated as a matter of privilege. But, as I stated a moment ago, it would be better to let the matter stand until to-morrow.

Mr. BERGERON. Put the motion anyway.

The PRIME MINISTER. I raise the point now that the motion cannot be put as a matter of privilege.

Mr. MONK. I assume that this is a question of privilege because it affects a member of this House, and as far as I have been able to ascertain motions of this sort are considered motions of privilege. It is on that ground I made it a matter of privilege, and also upon the urgency which exists, as shown by what the right hon. gentleman said himself. I ask that the motion be put.

The PRIME MINISTER. I stated yesterday that if my hon. friend made a charge of fraud, we would waive all other considerations and have the investigation. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has not chosen to act on my suggestion, but has taken his own course and brought it up as a matter of privilege. I make the point at present that the motion is not one of privilege, and I suggest that the matter shall stand until to-morrow as a notice of motion.

YUKON TELEGRAPH—MR. J. B. CHARLESON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Referring to the matter to which I gave informal notice yesterday, I beg to move for:

Order of the House for a return showing when Mr. Charleson last left Ottawa for the West, a copy of all reports made by him respecting telegraph construction work formerly and now under his charge; showing also the names of the men employed last season and this season between Bennett and Dawson and the nationality of each so far as possible; the wages and allowances for each man so employed, particulars as to any strikes on the part of the men for higher wages; the names of parties who supplied the poles for the telegraph wire, the price and terms for the same; whether standing trees 'en route' have been used for stringing wires, for what distance approximately, in comparison with the distance where poles were used; how many poles were paid for, how many of these paid for were not used; whether the linemen employed at Dawson, Ogilvie, Selwyn, Selkirk, Five Fingers, Lower LaBarge and Tagish are British subjects, and if not, the nationality of each; the names of sub-contractors for the supply of poles and the residence of each sub-contractor; the terms of charter of ss. 'W. S. Stratton' and the charterer's name; the name of her master and acting master and the nationality; the terms of the charter-party; the use made of this steamer; whether scows were used for supplies and what boats other than scows were so used; how many scows were used and on what terms; the amount charged or paid for transportation by water outside of the ss. 'Stratton'; the length of time during construction Mr. Charleson was actually present with the construction party; the particulars as to purchase of 'Lillie C.' the purchase, disposal or sale or transfer of his boat and the terms thereof respectively; the arrangements for supplies made and with whom; the arrangement made at Bennett respecting pay for men's time returning from Dawson; the amount already paid for the line under Mr. Charleson's charge. Copies of accounts rendered and of accounts paid in connection with this work, the rate of pay first and now allowed A. Boyer, assistant to Mr. Charleson; also a statement showing where Mr. Charleson places his orders in Vancouver in this connection and on what terms, and what commissions, if any, are paid to on these supplies and to whom; the name of Mr. Charleson's agent at Vancouver in this connection; the quantity of supplies in this connection obtained by Mr. Charleson from the United States; whether Mr. Charleson's son was paid $350, or other amount or amounts for expenses of a trip to Ottawa or otherwise, and whether he is or was there an employee of the government; whether Mr. Charleson awards contracts to his foreman, and whether the foreman's expenses were paid into the locality of operations at government expense, and whether tenders are asked for in this connection?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I did not understand that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was going to move this motion to-day. I undertook to find in the department all the information we could get, intending to bring it down without a motion. I do not care to raise any objection, but I think the hon. gentleman will consult his own interests just as well if he will allow us to bring down all the information we have at the earliest possible moment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am quite willing to let the motion stand. Yesterday I thought I had sufficiently conveyed to the Prime Minister what I wished to move. I stated very fully the points of the motion, and I sent across the House at the request of the Prime Minister the paper from which I spoke, and which was an old notice of motion given by Mr. Bergeron as early as the 12th February last. I thought it was agreeable to the Prime Minister that I should move in the matter to-day. As this is a matter for inquiry when the Public Works estimates are before the House, it would save a great deal of time if instead of putting questions to the minister, and he asking time to obtain the information, I should adopt this course. I understand the Prime Minister now wishes this to stand.

The PRIME MINISTER. We are endeavouring to meet the hon. gentleman's views and will bring down all the information we have at the earliest possible moment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If there is going to be any objection on the part of the government, then I will take the responsibility of moving, and the government, if they choose, can vote it down. If the right hon. gentleman wishes to let it stand I will let it stand, but from what the Prime Minister says now it is not proposed that the motion should be allowed to pass at any time.

The PRIME MINISTER. What I said was that orders had been given to bring down everything we have in the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the government is ready to bring down all they can, surely they can have no objection to the motion passing.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not see why the hon. gentleman should bring a motion, when we told him we were going to do it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. An order of the House is the proper proceeding. This is not a matter of courtesy at all. I have no doubt of the good faith of the Prime Minister, but at the same time, I am bound to take the regular course.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). This is not the regular course.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If it is objected to I am helpless, because the government has a majority. But I have the right to move—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). You cannot move without notice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I gave notice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was not put on the paper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am certain the Prime Minister will not make that objection, because yesterday when I mentioned the reason for proceeding in this way, all the Prime Minister asked was that I would give him notice which I did, and sent him across the floor an outline of this motion. I take the responsibility of moving, and the government can take the responsibility of objecting.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend misunderstood me. I asked him to send a list of the papers which he wanted, so as to send it at once to the Department of Public Works to have the papers prepared.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was a misunderstanding because my language is recorded in Hansard, and it was, that unless the Prime Minister objected I would move on the spot, and I abstained from moving—

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman knows that he could not have moved on the spot. There seems to be a threat in that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no threat about it. I make the motion.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then I ask that the hon. gentleman abide by the rules of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If I am driven to the rules of the House, that means that this goes among the notices of motion. At this stage of the session the right hon. gentleman knows that I would be the greatest fool under heaven to put that on the Notice paper because then I could not refer to the subject until it was called and it never would be called. If the right hon. gentleman drives me to the rules of the House to put this on the motion paper, it is practically asking me to drop the matter. I will not drop it; I will not put it on the Notice paper. I am ready to give the hon. gentleman a day's notice of this informal character, or two days' notice—anything fair; but I want the hon. gentleman to say whether he is going to take advantage of the rules and ask to have it ruled out of order, or vote it down. That will drive me to this. I shall have to obey the Chair if the Chair rules it out of order. If the Chair rules it in order, it will probably be voted down. That would drive me to avail myself of the privilege of any hon. member to put these questions in Committee of Supply, in order to obtain the information piece by piece and bit by bit.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not understand the fuss the hon. gentleman makes, if he will permit me to say so. When he sent me the paper yesterday, I took the precaution to have his wishes carried out, and to have all the papers that he mentioned brought down at the earliest moment. That ought to satisfy my hon. friend.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then, I will move my motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. In the face of the objection which has been taken, the hon. member cannot put his motion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I ask that the motion be put from the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. Without notice the motion is not before the House, because the First Minister took the objection that it required the ordinary formal notice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman takes advantage of the rule—

The PRIME MINISTER. I do, because I am trying at this moment to comply with the wishes of the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will get all the information before you get the supplies.

GROSSE ISLE QUARANTINE.

Mr. TALBOT asked :

1. How much value does the hon. Minister of Agriculture place upon the taking on board and pulling back on shore of the disinfecting apparatus in connection with the Grosse Isle Quarantine?

2. Has the hon. minister any reason to believe that the same number of men on board of steamer 'Contest' could have performed the same service as is now being done by the steamer 'Kathleen'?

3. Has not the steamer 'Contest' been reported by competent authority as good a boat as the 'Kathleen,' and offering more cabin room for passengers?

4. Can the hon. minister state why he is paying $1,000 more for the steamer 'Kathleen' than he would have paid for the steamer 'Contest'?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. From $270 to $300. 2. No. The minister believes more men would have been required. 3. Both the Contest and the Kathleen were reported suitable for the work. The Contest offered more cabin room for passengers; the Kathleen better accommodation for the disinfecting appliances. 4. The Contest has double engines, and the Kathleen a single one. The Contest would therefore require more coal and a larger engine room staff. The Kathleen, while having less cabin accommodation, has much better accommodation for the disinfecting appliances. Indeed there would have been some difficulty in placing these in the Contest. The putting on board and taking back of the disinfecting apparatus was included in the offer of the Kathleen. For these reasons the minister accepted the Kathleen, although the price asked for her was nominally $1,000 more than that asked for the Contest.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PURCHASE OF HAY.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

How many tons of hay were purchased by the Department of Agriculture, or by its instructions, as acting for the British government, from Mr. McCain, of Carleton County, New Brunswick; at what price, and where delivered? How many tons from D. J. Purdy, M.P.P., St. John,

New Brunswick; at what price, and where delivered? How many tons from Lieut.-Governor McLellan, of New Brunswick; at what price, and where delivered?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Hay was purchased from H. H. McCain, 1,450 tons at $9 a ton f.o.b. at Florenceville, Bath, and other points in Carleton County; D. J. Purdy, 100 tons, at $9 per ton, at St. John; W. E. Reid, 100 tons, at $9 a ton, f.o.b., who, I am informed, is employed by the local government at Salisbury.

IMPORTS FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHARLTON asked :

1. What is the total amount of imports from the United States for the ten months ending May 1, 1900?
2. What is the total amount of imports from the United States entered for consumption for the ten months ending May 1, 1900?
3. What is the amount of dutiable goods imported from the United States and entered for consumption for the ten months ending May 1, 1900?
4. What is the amount of free goods imported from the United States and entered for consumption for the ten months ending May 1, 1900?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). As the monthly returns of the department do not supply this information by countries, the answers given are in each case for the month ended 31st March, the latest date to which the department has such information. 1. $84,290,434. 2. $78,983,803. 3. Imported, $42,869,565; entered for consumption, $37,463,214. 4. Imported, $41,420,869; entered for consumption, $41,520,589.

DREDGING LEASES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

In what issues of the 'Royal Gazette' was the order in council, January 18, 1898, respecting dredging leases, published?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The order in council of the 18th of January, 1898, respecting dredging leases, was published in four consecutive issues of the Canada Gazette, namely, the issues of the 12th, 19th, and 26th of February, and the 5th of March, 1898.

POINTE AUX OUTARDES AND GODBOUT CABLE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Are the government aware that a cable connecting a telegraph line on the north shore, between a point near Pointe aux Outardes and Godbout, is broken and interrupted?
2. That the said cable is broken by the ice nearly every spring, and that the service in such case is performed by a boat?
3. Is it the intention of the government to continue the use of the cable, or to carry the line through by land between the two points aforesaid?

Mr. FOSTER.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Yes. 2. No. The cable laid seventeen years ago has been interrupted three times, and only once by ice. 3. The present cable has been tolerably free of trouble, and will be continued. Sixty miles of land line which would be required to replace 26 miles of cable would not be as free from interruption as the present cable.

YUKON TELEGRAPH LINE.

Mr. DOMVILLE (by Mr. Gibson) asked :

What date was the telegraph line from Lake Bennett, British Columbia, to Dawson City, Yukon territory, in operation?

What has been the earnings per month since that date to May 1, 1900?

What number of messages have passed over the line in the same period?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. September 28, 1899. 2. June, 1899, $46.40; July, $465.45; August, $1,060.69; September, $3,787.87; October, $7,552.90; November, $5,014; December, $3,788; January, $6,752; February, $5,366; March, $7,878; April, $7,345; total to 1st of May, $49,056.31. 3. Messages sent: June, 1899, 45; July, 452; August, 800; September, 2,024; October, 3,150; November, 1,505; December, 1,269; January, 1900, 1,831. No complete report has been received since January.

WOODSTOCK, N.B., COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. Is the government aware that F. H. J. Dibblee, collector of customs at Woodstock, New Brunswick, is a paid official of the town in the fire department thereof?

2. Has he been notified that he must either resign that position or give up his office on the ground that his whole time is required for the duties of his office?

3. What is the policy of the government in such cases?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 1. The government has been informed that Mr. F. H. J. Dibblee, collector of customs at Woodstock, N.B., is chief of the fire department of Woodstock, for which he receives $100 per annum. 2. Mr. Dibblee has been advised to resign such position in the fire department.

THE CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I desire to call the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to a promise he made to this House last week. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) brought up, on Friday afternoon, the question of Chinese immigration, and the right hon. gentleman replied that on Monday a Bill would be placed on the Order paper to be introduced as soon as the rules of the House will permit.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In answer to my hon. friend, I have to say that I have put a notice on the Order paper for the introduction of this Bill to-morrow.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EMERGENCY RATIONS.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). I would like to ask the hon. the Minister of Militia when he expects to lay on the Table the additional papers referred to yesterday with regard to the emergency rations.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Dr. Neilson, the director general, had to go away to camp and I expect him back to-day or to-morrow, and will then immediately have the papers ready. In his absence we cannot have them ready.

Mr. McNEILL. Are there any additional papers which the hon. gentleman can lay on the Table?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None.

Mr. McNEILL. Will the hon. the Minister of Customs say whether he has made any inquiry with regard to the order to admit the material imported from the United States free of duty.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I made inquiries and so far have not been able to find any orders or correspondence.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman has not been able to get any information?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not so far.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). I would like to call the attention of the different departments to the fact that no returns have been brought down showing the dismissals. Papers have been brought down as regards the commissions and the amounts paid, but as to the dismissals, none. I want to ask the hon. Minister of Marine one question anent the hiatus in the return from the 1st of July, 1896, to April, 1897. The statement read by him goes to show that no dismissals had taken place in that time as a result of the investigations made by the commission. I want to ask him whether or not there were dismissals for partisan reasons outside of that. Under the wording of the statement, the return would be perfectly clear if it did not bring down those that were made by the minister on representations of members or candidates.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Has the hon. gentleman the return there?

Mr. FOSTER. I have referred the right hon. gentleman to this so often—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman made the general statement that there were no returns brought down. The returns from my department are down. With respect to the question, I will make inquiries, but think the return follows strictly the lines of his motion.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be so construed. I meant to say any additional returns brought down since I referred the matter to the right hon. gentleman. I would like to ask the acting Minister of the Interior if he has any answer yet to his telegrams to Mr. Ogilvie for that supplementary report, for which he asked on three different occasions by telegram without getting any answer from the commissioner.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I have received no answer to the telegrams, and as I said will have inquiries made.

Mr. FOSTER. It is useless to correspond with Mr. Ogilvie now so as to get the information before the House rises. What I want is that the telegraph for which we have paid a very large amount, chiefly on the ground that public business would be facilitated by it, should be used to get the information or know the reason why.

I want to call the attention of the hon. minister to another fact, the fact that permits which were granted by Ogilvie from December 1898, up to April 13, 1899, and for which the department have repeatedly asked him, have not been sent down nor has Mr. Ogilvie answered the requisitions made to him for those returns. Those two things put together show a state of affairs which is intolerable and the minister's duty is to inquire into it instantly and by telegraph.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As far as I am personally concerned I am not here to apologize for the conduct of any officer. I have explained to the House several times that it is inexplicable why those telegrams at least should not have been received by him and answered. I have done everything in the power of a minister to do under the circumstances. At once, after not receiving the reply, I asked for an explanation, and I am as much disappointed as the hon. gentleman. And as to the return he asked for, it may be that Mr. Ogilvie will have some explanation—whether satisfactory or not—to offer; and every man is entitled to be heard. We must see what explanation he has to offer for not having furnished the information before now. There was no desire on the part of the department or the government to hold back any information. On the contrary, I did what I think was unusual—I went out of my way to have the information that the department had received from Mr. Ogilvie collected, and it has been brought down and ordered to be printed. That information, perhaps, will be much fuller in its details than anything that would be published in the annual report. I have made every possible effort to meet inquiries promptly and to bring down the information that the department had. Personally, I have put myself to a good deal of inconvenience to urge and hasten the bringing down of all possible information with regard to these matters.

Mr. FOSTER. If Mr. Speaker will allow me, I may say that I have not tried to imply any censure upon the acting minister (Mr. Sutherland)—quite the contrary. But, I call the attention of the First Minister to the extraordinary position of things, and I would ask that the government should, by a free use of the telegraph, find out why this information has not been sent. I would keep a pressing telegram on file until Mr. Ogilvie either answered it or came out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I had intended to say that I ordered a formal and official letter to be written to Mr. Ogilvie; and I might make a note of the matter and wire him again.

BRITISH COLUMBIA ELECTIONS— POSITION OF THE LIEUTENANT- GOVERNOR.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I wish to draw the attention of the leader of the government to the fact that the elections have taken place in British Columbia, and, according to the reports, the present government have suffered an overwhelming defeat. I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether he has sent any instructions to the lieutenant-governor as to the manner in which he shall proceed at the present time, so that the uncertainty that now reigns in the province and that is doing a great deal of harm to all business there, may be put a stop to at the earliest possible moment.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may inform my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) that the government does not propose to issue any instructions to the lieutenant-governor of the province of British Columbia. The lieutenant-governor has chosen to appeal to the people of the province and the answer is in their hands.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) evidently forgets the statement he made some time ago to this House. That statement was—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) cannot make an argument at this stage.

Mr. WALLACE. I was going to ask a question of the right hon. First Minister.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

In the statement to which I referred, the Prime Minister said the lieutenant-governor of British Columbia had assumed a serious responsibility—that the provincial elections would be held, and then the governor would be called to account. Now, the elections have been held and the decision has been given, by a very decisive majority, against the Prime Minister of the province and against the lieutenant-governor; and we would like to know, in view of the course foreshadowed by the Prime Minister as to what would happen if the provincial Premier and the lieutenant-governor were not sustained, whether it is the intention to recall the lieutenant-governor, or what is to be done in the matter. The Prime Minister, in his previous statements, indicated, in plain terms, that if the majority went against the provincial Premier and the lieutenant-governor—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) must not make any argument.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not making an argument, but I am asking a question, and I would like a reply.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows that this is too grave a question to be treated with levity. It is a matter which concerns the people of British Columbia. The elections took place last Saturday. It is impossible, so far as I know, to know what the returns are. If action is to be taken by the government, it is not to be taken on mere newspaper reports. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) will not be surprised if I tell him that before we consider the question at all, we must have something official before us.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Lord Aberdeen did not have anything official before him.

The PRIME MINISTER. He had the statement of the Prime Minister of the day.

Mr. PRIOR. I hope the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) does not accuse me of treating this matter with levity?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

AMERICAN VESSELS AND THE COAST- ING TRADE.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the Prime Minister if any applications have been received recently from American vessel-owners, praying that the privileges given them last season to engage in the Canadian coasting trade might be renewed during the present season. And, if so, what is the intention of the government with regard to that application?

The PRIME MINISTER. No such application has been received.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). In the same connection, I would ask the Premier if an application has been made on behalf of certain owners of American tugs for the privilege of towing logs between Canadian ports on Georgian Bay. The rumour is current that such an application has been made. If it has been made, is it the intention of the government to accede to the wishes of the American tug owners?

The PRIME MINISTER. At this moment, I am not aware that any such application has been made, but I will inquire into the matter.

ABENAKIS INDIANS OF ST. FRANCIS.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) if he can give me an answer to the question I put to him last night—has Rev. Mr. Degonzague applied to the Department of the Interior for the sum of $500 or $1,000 to build a wigwam for the missionary at St. Francois du Lac on the Abenakis reserve?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed by the officers of the department that no request has been received from the Rev. Father Degonzague, a missionary at the Abenakis of St. Francis, for the grant of $500 to assist in building a house for the missionary at St. Francois du Lac.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), as he has dropped the motion of which he had given notice relating to the salaries of judges, whether he intends to introduce any resolution respecting the salary of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). When the resolution was called, I said 'dropped.' It is dropped with the intention of substituting another resolution, because the last paragraph of this resolution was improperly drawn.

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E.I.) I also desire to ask the Solicitor General a question in regard to this resolution which he said was to be dropped. In his amended resolution does he propose to increase the salaries of judges in Prince Edward Island, who, I think, are the least paid of any judges in Canada?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has not given notice of his question. I may say, however, that the present resolution is defective in the last paragraph, which is not drawn to meet the necessities in the province of Quebec.

ELECTION ACT—AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 133) to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members of the House of Commons.

On section 80,

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). Before taking up this section, I wish to propose the amendment of which I have given notice, and which the hon. gentleman will find on page 562 of the Votes and Proceedings. It is an amendment which is to be found in the Revised Statutes of Ontario, and also in the Quebec Election Act, and is in the following terms:

79a. In case, through accident or irresistible force, riot, removal of documents or other cause of a similar nature, the nomination could not be held, or the voting could not commence at the hour fixed or was interrupted by similar causes before being closed, the returning officer and the deputy returning officer, in so far as it concerns either, shall adjourn to the following day, to recommence the operation, and day by day if necessary, until the nomination of candidates may be fully held; and in case of the polling, it is resumed by commencing at the hour fixed by sections _____ until it has lasted eight hours or ten hours, as the case may be, so that all the electors who wish to vote may have had the opportunity of so doing.

There is already a clause in the Bill to a similar effect, but it only relates to the nomination, and not to the polling. So far as I can see there is no machinery which could be put into operation to have a poll, in case the polling was interrupted by riot or otherwise. The hon. gentleman will remember a case in Quebec West, where the polling was interrupted by a riot; and I think a clause of this kind, which already exists in the Acts of several of the provinces, could properly be introduced here.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I think the best way, would be to go through the whole Bill, and adopt such clauses as do not require amendment; then we will take up the Bill again, and go over those clauses which have been left aside for amendment. I have gone carefully over these amendments of which the hon. gentleman has given notice, and I have practically decided to adopt almost the whole of them. But I want to have them incorporated in the Bill in their proper places.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for his statement. I suppose he will not object, as we go along, to my pointing out to the committee the amendments that I propose to suggest?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We may discuss the amendments as we go along, and after we have agreed upon them. I suggest that they be redrafted in conjunction with the whole Bill, for final consideration.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I want to suggest a change in the phraseology of this clause. In line 36, instead of the words 'votes given,' it would be better to say 'ballot papers cast.' Many votes are given for a candidate which are not counted, which have to be thrown aside for some reason. The intention of the clause is to count only those ballots which are good, and which have been cast for a candidate. Also, in the second paragraph, instead of saying 'in counting the votes,' I would suggest an alteration to specify counting those we have just mentioned, that is, to reject all those which have not been supplied.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This law has been in existence for many years past, and the words in this Statute Bill have been adopted from the statute we have had in force for a number of years. I do not really see that there is any good reason for a change in the phraseology.

Mr. BERGERON. Although it has been like that for many years, it is never too late to make an improvement. I acknowledge that the hon. gentleman is better acquainted with the English language than I am, but I think the object of the clause would be better served if this change were made.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If I come to the conclusion that it is an improvement, it will be done, but I do not like to make a verbal change in a section which we have had for so many years without some good reason being shown.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend can take a note of it, and if he considers it, I think he may come to the same conclusion.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). This is one of the most important sections of the Bill. All of those gentlemen who read the evidence taken in the investigation in the West Huron election, and are familiar with the Brockville case, will bear me out when I say that at the counting of the ballots upon the closing of the polls was where the greatest difficulties and frauds occurred. The hon. Solicitor General has said that this section is copied from the old Act, and as the same has been in existence for years, I intend to move an amendment to repeal that section and to substitute another instead of it. My object in doing so is to frame the section in such a way that no frauds can be committed by the deputy returning officer or the poll clerk at a polling subdivision. Section 80 is not capable of preventing frauds such as occurred in Brockville, West Huron and other constituencies. I wish to give notice that I intend to move an amendment to strike out that section and to substitute another.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Why not move it on the third reading?

Mr. INGRAM. I may be shut out on the third reading.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). If the hon. gentleman has a clause which he states will end the trouble that has occurred in the past it is altogether too important a matter not to be able to discuss in committee. Section 80 is capable of several interpretations, and we want to make the law as plain as it should be.

Mr. INGRAM. This is the amendment that I propose:

Immediately after the close of the poll, the deputy returning officer shall, in the presence of the poll clerk and the candidates or their agents—and if any of the candidates is neither present nor represented by an agent, then in the presence of such candidates and agents, if any, as are present, and of such electors, not exceeding three, as are at or around the polling station and willing to attend—proceed to examine the state of the ballot papers and count the votes in the manner following: He shall, before opening the ballot box, ascertain how many persons have voted and how many ballot papers should be in the ballot box, and shall carefully count the number of unused ballot papers and of spoiled ballot papers, and shall afford opportunity to the persons present to ascertain whether all the ballot papers are properly accounted for; after having so done, and not before, he shall open the ballot box and examine the ballot papers to ascertain that they are the ballot papers which he supplied, examining his initials on the backs, and shall count the whole number of ballot papers in the box to see that the number corresponds with the number of persons who voted, doing all this as far as possible without opening out the face of any of the ballot papers or discovering or disclosing for whom any ballot paper is marked; and should the number of ballot papers found in the box exceed the number of persons who voted, he shall, if possible, ascertain and reject such as were not supplied by him. After having so done, he shall open and examine both sides of the ballot papers and count the number of votes given for each candidate, exposing to the view of those allowed to be present the face of each ballot paper, and, when so requested, affording them opportunity for thorough inspection of any ballot paper; and in so counting he shall reject all ballot papers which have not been supplied by the deputy returning officer, all those by which votes have been given for more candidates than are to be elected, all those which are not marked with a black lead pencil in the white circular space opposite the name or names of the candidate or candidates, all those upon the face of which there is any cross elsewhere than in the said white circular space or spaces, all those upon any part of which the voter has intentionally placed any mark with anything other than a black lead pencil, and all those upon which there is any writing or mark by which the voter could be identified, other than the numbering by the deputy returning officer in the cases hereinbefore provided for.

This is on the line that we shall still continue to use the disc ballot, and to my mind the disc ballot is the only ballot in existence that is a safe ballot. That is the reason why I incorporate in the amendment provision for the disc ballot. I know that deputy returning officers, in the last few elections, have taken on themselves entire control of the polling booth. They have violated the law in every way imaginable, and carried on very high-handed proceedings, and so, I say that the only means by which these frauds can be prevented is not to leave the law open to inference, but to give plain and candid directions to these officers.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would like time to consider the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram). Certainly, listening to it being read, I do not think it is possible to accept the amendment in its present form. But, as we have to consider some other sections which we have left over, I am willing to allow this section to stand that I may consider the amendment.

Mr. INGRAM. The reason it is so lengthy is that it embraces certain sections following No. 80.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that this clause is to stand over. I believe that properly speaking, sections 96 and 97 should come before this one. This Bill seems to have been framed in a great hurry, and as my hon. friend is going to write his name on the back of it, I want to have the Bill as complete as possible. I believe that sections 96 and 97 should precede section 80. Clause 96 refers to what is going to take place in the morning before the vote is taken. Clause 97 is to prevent anybody saying for whom he has voted. That is during the day. Clause 80 deals with the work that should be done after the poll is closed, and therefore, I think clauses 96 and 97 should have precedence. I do not understand why they have been put in further on because there is no sense in it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the reason is quite apparent. Secrecy of voting is made applicable to all that takes place whether previous to the time the ballots are counted or afterwards.

Mr. BERGERON. But has my hon. friend seen clause 96?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. That deals with everything that should be done before the voting commences in the morning, and clause 80 speaks about work that is done at the close of the poll at night.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Read paragraph 7 of section 96:

Every officer, clerk and agent in attendance at the counting of the votes shall maintain and aid in maintaining the secrecy of the voting; and no such officer, clerk or agent shall attempt to obtain at such counting any information or communicate any information obtained at such counting as to the candidate for whom any vote is given in any particular ballot paper.

Mr. BERGERON. These are all the things which should be known before the poll is opened. I suggest that to the hon. gentleman anyway.

On section 82,

Mr. MARTIN. According to the notice I have given the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), I propose to amend subsection 2, line 19, by striking out the words 'in counting the ballots' and inserting the following after the word 'Act' at the end of the subsection. 'Such ballot papers being counted for the candidates for whom respectively they have been cast.' The reason I propose the amendment is that some returning officers might come to the conclusion that the objected ballots should not be counted at all; and it is necessary that the Act should be clear on that point.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let it stand.

Mr. McNEILL. It would be a good thing then if in this section there was incorporated the idea that the agent of either candidate should be at liberty to seal the envelope on behalf of the person he represents.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That seems to be a reasonable suggestion. After it is sealed by the returning officer I can see no objection to the agents of the respective candidates adding their seals for additional security.

Mr. INGRAM. I would move that the words be inserted 'such agents also affixing their seals if they desire.'

Mr. SPROULE. In some cases there are no agents present, and you should then make a provision that any elector might do this.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, perhaps that suggestion could be adopted.

Mr. McNEILL. If a candidate chooses to provide a seal for his representative, then, his representative should be at liberty to place that seal on the envelope. If the candidate does not provide a seal there is an end to the matter.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Perhaps you should say 'it shall be sealed or marked.'

Mr. McNEILL. You had better say 'sealed and marked.' I do not think you can take too much precaution. I could supply my agent with a seal peculiar to myself, and I could then easily discover if it had been tampered with.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). The word 'shall' is a dangerous word to use. Why not put in 'may be sealed and marked'? It is all right to say that 'shall' is permissive in matters of procedure but that is a disputed point.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will have to get that amendment properly drafted. Let the clause stand.

On section 83,

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the ballot boxes are often of such a character that the sealing of the box is of no use whatever. In the case of tin ballot boxes, when they are being carried about after they are sealed, the springing of the tin breaks the seal. Some precaution ought to be taken for making this provision really capable of being enforced. I remember very well in an election of my own, that when we came to the declaration we found that the seals of the ballot boxes were almost all broken.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The way to seal a ballot box is the same as to seal a cash box.

Mr. McNEILL. All I wish to call my hon. friend's attention to is, that as matters are now, the ballot box is so sealed that the sealing is really useless. I think some consideration ought to be given to that fact.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Has my hon. friend in mind any practical suggestion?

Mr. McNEILL. No, I have not. I simply wanted to direct my hon. friend's attention to the fact.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I would suggest that a good strong tape, put both ways across the ballot box and sealed on the top, would be effective. The tape which I have seen used is usually too light.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to draw attention to another matter. This section provides that the ballot box shall be locked and sealed with the seal of the deputy returning officer, and shall be forthwith delivered by the deputy returning officer to the returning officer or to the election clerk. What is understood by 'forthwith delivered'?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Within a reasonable time. That is a relative term, the meaning of which would vary according to distances and circumstances.

Mr. SPROULE. In many outlying districts ballot boxes are sometimes kept over night, sometimes for two days or three days, and sometimes a week in stormy weather. I think there should be some limited time within which they should be returned.

Mr. McNEILL.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If there is a suggestion that would remedy that difficulty, I would be glad to accept it; but the term 'forthwith' is an elastic expression which ought to meet every case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think you can improve on the word 'forthwith.' If an officer delays in delivering the ballot box for two or three days, he is violating the law, and should be punished. But, as the Solicitor General says, I do not think we can improve on the term 'forthwith,' because it puts the deputy returning officer to the utmost diligence to which any word could put him.

Mr. INGRAM. There are a great many cases in which the law has been violated in this respect, and I know of no case in which the person violating it has been called to account. In towns and cities there is nothing to hinder the deputy returning officers returning the ballot boxes on the night of the elections; and with that view I placed this provision in the Bill which I introduced last year and this year:

If the said ballot box has been used within twelve miles of the office of the returning officer, or of the election clerk, it shall be returned within five hours after the return of the poll.

In every city of the Dominion I think there ought to be a specified time within which every ballot box must be returned to the returning officer, so as to prevent them being tampered with. In my own county, in the last election, a competent deputy returning officer who acted during the day, went to Toronto and stayed three or four days, without returning the ballot box. I am satisfied that he had no dishonest intent, but was simply careless or negligent.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If there is negligence, as my hon. friend says, there is a remedy under the statute.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). In many ridings in the province of Ontario, there are three or four towns of no inconsiderable size, and the postmaster in such a town has a position of emolument which he is desirous of keeping. How would it do to provide that in all towns of which the returning officer is not a resident, each deputy returning officer shall, on the evening of the polling day, deliver to the postmaster the ballot box?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Does my hon. friend think that would add any security? I think it would be as well to trust our own returning officer as a postmaster with the custody of the boxes.

Mr. BENNETT. It is alleged that the deputy returning officers have left the boxes where they are accessible to other persons. If they were delivered to the postmaster of an incorporated town, which would be a town of over 2,000 population, or an incorporated village, which would be a village of over 700 population, the postmaster, knowing that his reputation, and, perhaps, his position as postmaster, was at stake, would be very careful of them.

Mr. McNEILL. I would again call the attention of my hon. friend to the matter I spoke of a moment ago. It is very important, as I am sure my hon. friend sees, that the ballot box should not be tampered with; and it is to secure it against that tampering that the provision for sealing is made. If the letter of the law can be complied with and the sealing be of no value whatever, certainly there is something wrong; and I would ask my hon. friend if he would turn the matter over in his mind, and see if some words could not be introduced descriptive of the manner of sealing, that would provide means against trouble of the kind to which I have referred.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the suggestion of the hon. member for East Simcoe would do at all. It would multiply the number of officials, and very much complicating the matter in the event of an attempt being made to ascertain whether the ballot box was tampered with or not. You had better leave it to the official who is appointed for that purpose, and who is sworn to do his duty.

Mr. INGRAM. In the case of an election in Ottawa, does the Solicitor General mean to say that the ballot boxes cannot be returned on the same evening? The poll closes at five o'clock, and in all probability the ballots are counted before six. Surely it is possible to return the boxes to the returning officer in a couple of hours, and I propose to state that they shall be returned in so many hours.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). That is not as good as 'forthwith.'

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, because 'forthwith' is violated all over the country. Take the British Columbia elections, some of the ballot boxes are not yet returned, and they do not know where they are.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think the suggestion of my hon. friend could be carried out in the rural districts. In my county 'forthwith' suits very well. If you start from St. Tite des Caps, forty miles away from the chief place in the county, I do not know how many hours you would have to fix, and then it would depend on the season. In the winter, sometimes it takes a day or two to get back from there. No doubt, however, there is a good deal in the objection of my hon. friend. I remember a case in which the deputy returning officer took time to take out all the ballots from the box and count them with his wife on the bed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is hard to fix any time because after all there are some polling booths in which the agents of the candidates are much more difficult to deal with in a recount than in others. In some polling booths, the counting up is disposed of in a very few hours, but in others, because of the characteristics of the representatives, it takes very much longer. I do not think we can improve on the word 'forthwith.'

Mr. BERGERON. In line 24, of section 83, the words 'counting of the votes' are used. I would suggest that 'counting of the ballot papers' be substituted. A vote is only a ballot paper after the cross has been made upon it and it has been counted as good. Before that it is simply a ballot paper.

On line 27, the words 'shall make out a statement' are used, but it is not said of what the statement is to be. I would suggest to add the words 'of the poll.' That will show what kind of a statement the deputy returning officer is to make.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Form Z gives that.

Mr. BERGERON. There will be no harm in adding those words. On line 31, of the same section, I find 'a special envelope supplied for the purpose.' I propose to add the words 'and addressed to the returning officer.' The statement is to be made out in triplicate—one attached to the poll-book; one retained by the deputy returning officer; and the third kept inclosed in a special envelope supplied for the purpose. I would add 'addressed to the returning officer.'

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Why?

Mr. BERGERON. It has to be addressed to him.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, the returning officer does not touch these envelopes in the counting up.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is put in the box and goes back to the returning officer.

Mr. McNEILL. With regard to the special envelope supplied for the purpose, supposing by accident no special envelope was supplied to the deputy in an out of the way part of the country, what then?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He will put it in any envelope of course. The intention is that stationery shall be supplied to carry out the Act; but if a special envelope is missing, the ballots will have to be put in another envelope.

Mr. BERGERON. I would suggest that in line 37, instead of the words 'votes given for each candidate' these words should be used: 'ballot papers cast and accepted for each candidate.'

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would not like to leave the deputy returning officer to decide what votes should be accepted.

Mr. BERGERON. They are already counted, and accepted.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are accepted by the returning officer, but on a recount they may be thrown out.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). Subsection 4, of section 83, provides that after the ballot box is locked and sealed it shall be delivered to the returning officer or the election clerk or to one or more persons specially appointed for that purpose by the returning officer. I think there is too much latitude given here for tampering with the ballot boxes. The more parties you may appoint to receive these boxes, the more danger there is of their being tampered with. I would propose that the words 'or to one or more persons specially appointed for that purpose by the returning officer' be struck out.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The law was amended in 1891, by the addition of those words 'one or more persons specially appointed,' etc., because it was found necessary to add to the number of persons who might be appointed for the purpose of receiving the boxes, and I do not know that any inconvenience has resulted from the operation of the law since then.

Mr. SPROULE. A good many deputy returning officers do not know whether it is their duty to deliver the boxes or wait until the election clerk comes round to receive them, and the boxes remain with the deputy returning officers until called for.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman's statement does not show that any inconvenience has resulted.

Mr. SPROULE. It multiplies the opportunities for fraud. Because, if you send men in pairs to gather up the ballot boxes, as is often done—two to the east, two to the west, two to the north, and two to the south—they gather up the boxes, and, in their travels stop at one hotel after another to get food for themselves and to feed their horses, and perhaps even to stay over night. There must be opportunities under these circumstances for parties to tamper with the ballot boxes which would not be offered if the deputy returning officer was obliged to deliver his ballot box over to the returning officer or to some one appointed in a certain locality to receive it.

Mr. McNEILL. I think the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Gillies) is a good one, and that we should confine the responsibility to as few persons as possible.

Mr. LAGRAM. Take the case of a very close election, and there is grave danger of returning the wrong man, if proper provision is not made for preventing any person from tampering with the ballot box.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

In my own county, we had one case where a ballot box was not returned on the night of the election. The election was a very close one, and when the recount took place, it was found that a number of the ballots in this box had been spoiled—tampered with. The contention of the Liberals was that those ballots were spoiled when they were put in the box, while, on behalf of the Conservative candidate, it was contended that the ballots were not in the shape in which they were left. By keeping that box over night and tampering with the ballots, they elected the wrong man. So, I say, something ought to be done to compel the delivery of these boxes on the night of the election.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland). Would it not remedy this evil to a large extent if the deputy returning officer were compelled to return the ballot boxes to the returning officer in each case, instead of having the returning officer and clerk, travelling hundreds of miles through the constituency to gather them up? You would then have only two parties entrusted with the ballot boxes. I would suggest also that the ballot box should be bound with tape and sealed at the crosses.

Mr. BENNETT. As I understand the Solicitor General, he objected to the proposition that in incorporated towns and villages ballot boxes should be delivered within three hours after polling to the postmaster, on the ground that the postmasters are not amenable under the Election Act. But that could be got over by making these persons responsible under some clause in the Act. Take for instance the riding of East Simcoe—we have there four large towns, Penetanguishene, Midland, Orillia and Gravenhurst. Of the postmasters of those towns, two are Liberals; but I would much prefer that the three or four ballot boxes in each of those towns should be in the hands of the postmaster after polling, rather than in the hands of the several deputy returning officers. The postmaster is in receipt of a salary of from $1,500 to $2,500, which would make him feel it incumbent upon him that every regard should be paid to the safekeeping of the ballot boxes committed to his care. An hon. friend asks me how about the ballot boxes in country districts. It might be extended to postmasters resident elsewhere than in incorporated towns or villages. I certainly think that there should be a positive enactment in the law that, within three hours after the closing of the polls in cities, the ballot boxes should be delivered to the returning officer. I remember an election in the city of Toronto in which it was in doubt on the night of polling which candidate was elected, and a great deal more in doubt where the ballot boxes were, though they might all have been delivered that night at the city hall to the returning officer.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not know whether it would be possible practically to carry it out or not, but if it could be arranged for, I think that the ballot boxes should be sealed by the representatives of the candidates, just as the envelopes are.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no reason why the same principle should not apply. I think we shall have to allow that section to stand over. But I would ask my hon. friends, in the meantime, to consider means of practically meeting the difficulties that have been pointed out. We see the difficulties, but what we need is some solution that can be incorporated in the law and made workable. With reference to the sealing, there is a way to remedy that. Of all the difficulties suggested that is the only one that I can see my way at present to cope with. However, when the others are considered, I may be able to adopt some of the suggestions made or give satisfactory reasons why they should not be adopted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the reasons for the amendment made in 1891, for the delivery of the ballot boxes to others than the returning officers?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give any reason except one that has been given by the Auditor General. He has taken the ground that if persons were appointed by the returning officers to collect the ballot boxes, it would save considerable expense. I can see no other reason.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as safety is concerned, it seems plain that it would be better to have the ballot boxes delivered direct to the returning officers, because the more you multiply the people who handle the ballot boxes, the more you increase the danger. Still, I can see that in a large constituency there would be reasons why some person should go round and collect the ballot boxes. In my own constituency, there are some polling places more than one hundred miles from Halifax, where the returning officer resides. One person collecting these boxes makes one journey to the city of Halifax; whereas, if each deputy returning officer had to journey to Halifax to deliver his ballot box, the expense would be much greater.

Mr. COCHRANE. The proposition is, I understand, that instead of travelling over a large riding, a returning officer should be empowered to announce the fact, that at a certain day he would be in a central town or village in the riding to receive the ballot boxes. I suppose there is no riding in Canada in which a deputy returning officer could not travel, in four or five hours, or half a day, from where the poll was held to the place named by the returning officer, to receive the ballot boxes. Human nature is about the same everywhere. Here is a man that starts from the office of the returning officer with a driver; he drives round a large constituency, and gathers up the ballot boxes, and arrives at night in the village with fifteen or twenty boxes in his sleigh. Would they be as safe in his custody as they would be with the deputy returning officer, to keep them until the day named for the deputy returning officer to deliver them up to the returning officer at a certain place?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I am inclined to think that the hon. gentleman who spoke last is perfectly correct, that it would be a dangerous innovation if you were to multiply persons responsible for the custody of the ballots. If anything is to be done in that direction, I would suggest to the Solicitor General that the only way we can effectually deal with it is by affixing, if that were necessary, still severer penalties against any deputy returning officer who may improperly tamper or part with the control of the ballot boxes committed to him. But I am bound to say, and I speak with a good deal of experience of elections under various conditions and different laws, that I would prefer to trust the deputy returning officers and the returning officer rather than interpose anybody between them. Hon. gentlemen must recollect that a great many of our elections, from the necessity of the case, may be run at periods when daylight is long past before the ballots are counted and finally sealed. I think it a risky experiment to send anybody round to collect ten, twelve or twenty ballot boxes at a comparatively late hour of the night. It appears to me that whatever the difficulties and inconveniences of the present system may be, you must be content to trust your deputy returning officers and your returning officer, punishing anybody who tampers with the ballot as severely as you please, and I for my part, as a member of the government, and as a private member of the House will do my best to forward anything that will contribute to the safety of the ballot. But I doubt very much whether you can do it by interfering between the deputy and the returning officer.

Mr. H. CARGILL (East Bruce). The more I listen to this discussion the more I am convinced of the necessity of appointing the highest class of men to the position of returning officer and deputy returning officer. The other night I pointed out that certain individuals throughout the country are precluded from acting as returning officers and deputies. Any one listening to this discussion must come to the conclusion that what is called chiefly in question, is the reputation or character of the men who are appointed to these positions. Reflection has been very frequently passed upon them. I submit that throughout this country the very men spoken of here, and who are precluded from occupying positions of this kind, are the men who should be appointed to those positions, that is, the clergy and judges of the country. We know they are non-partisan, as a rule they remain neutral in elections, at least that is my experience. They are deserving individuals. If there are a few dollars to be spent, I do not know of any individuals more worthy to receive it. In all seriousness, I submit that these individuals should be appointed returning officers and deputy returning officers in the different ridings. If such were done, I am quite satisfied there would be much less tampering with the ballot. These are gentlemen in whom every representative in the country has implicit confidence. I have always had confidence in the clergy of this country, as I hope every representative here has. I suggest that the Solicitor General seriously consider this matter, and I hope that in making his improvements, he will introduce an amendment of this character.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman limit the appointments to the class he refers, or only give them preference?

Mr. CARGILL. No, I would give them the preference, irrespective of denomination. There are in every riding a sufficient number of clergymen to fill these positions. As there are usually several denominations in each riding, there should be no discrimination in the appointments.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the idea is a very novel one. I would not trust every preacher in the country to be an election agent. Besides, I am afraid the denominations would be jealous of each other, one denomination would probably claim that it was discriminated against in favour of another in the appointments.

On section 84,

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest the addition after 'deputy returning officer,' of the words 'or of any other person whose seal is affixed thereto' because there is provision made that others may affix their seal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would be necessary to amend the section as we have amended the preceding section.

Mr. McNEILL. There should be a special instruction to the person having charge of the ballot box that he shall preserve the seal unbroken.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is provided for in section 84.

Mr. McNEILL. That applies to the returning officer.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It says:

And this he shall do without effacing or covering the seal of the deputy returning officer.

Mr. CARGILL.

Mr. McNEILL. I may be harking back on the last section. I do not think there is much fear of the returning officer's seal being broken, but the deputy returning officer's seal is liable to be broken in carrying the box from one place to another.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is in connection with the previous section.

Mr. McNEILL. Yes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We might allow that section to go through with the understanding that we will consider this amendment in reference to the seal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would suggest that we make it read as follows: 'And this he shall do without effacing or covering the seals thereto affixed.'

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, that will cover it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved to amend section 84, to read in this way:

And this he shall do without effacing or covering the seal of the deputy returning officer.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Referring again to section 83, I would make a suggestion to the hon. Solicitor General. Subsection 3, of section 83, reads as follows:

The poll book, the envelopes containing the ballot papers, the envelope containing the voters' lists, and all other documents which served at the election shall then be placed in the large envelope supplied for the purpose, and this large envelope shall then be sealed and placed in the ballot box.

I think besides the seal of the returning officer the envelope should also have the seals of the agents.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That would come in when we take up the other amendment.

On section 85,

Mr. GILLIES. Is section 84 passed?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, everything is open; we are discussing the whole thing.

Mr. GILLIES. Section 84 says:

The returning officer, upon the receipt by him of each of the ballot boxes, shall take every precaution for its safe-keeping and for preventing any person other than himself and his election clerk from having access thereto.

Why these words, 'and his election clerk?' The ballot box is confided to the care and custody of the returning officer. Why then should the election clerk have access to it? I would suggest to the hon. Solicitor General that the words 'and his election clerk' be stricken out.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Maybe the returning officer has died in the interval, or something has occurred that would prevent him taking part in the addition, under which circumstances the election clerk takes his place.

Mr. GILLIES. In the event of such a contingency provision should be made for it. I submit that the fewer who have access to the ballot box the better.

Mr. INGRAM. There are many cases where the ballot boxes are placed in the election clerk's office for safe-keeping.

Mr. F. FORTIN (Laval). Section 85 would be hard to work out. It says :

The returning officer, at the place, day and hour appointed by his proclamation, and after having received all the ballot boxes, shall proceed to open them—

And so forth. In the first place it might happen that the day and hour appointed by the proclamation would come before all the ballot boxes had been received.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is provided for in section 87.

Mr. POWELL. He can adjourn in that case under section 87.

Mr. FORTIN. Well, there is another point I want to mention to the committee. I would suggest that it be made to read that the opening of these boxes and the addition of the votes shall take place only after due notice has been given to the member elected and the opposition candidate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is issued in the proclamation.

Mr. FORTIN. At the time the proclamation is issued, but the candidates should get notice after the voting day. I remember that the law required such notice to be given. I make the suggestion, but I would not insist upon its adoption. It seems to me that an opportunity should be given to the candidates to be present.

Mr. POWELL. The best test in these matters is as to how they practically work out. I do not think that any trouble has arisen under the old law, which was exactly as it is here. They always got the declaration in some way or other.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we leave section 85, I believe it does not read very well, and I would suggest a change in the latter part of the clause. In line 16, you find :

From the statements contained in the several ballot boxes returned by the deputy returning officers of the ballot papers counted by them.

Those last words, I think, are not very plain. I would suggest that after the word 'candidate' in line 16, all the words following be struck out and that these words be substituted : 'As shown by the statement of the poll prepared by each respective deputy returning officer and contained in an envelope specially labelled for the purpose to be then deposited in each ballot box.' The only object I have in view is to improve the language of the section.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I fear there is a little too much of circumstance attached to the clause as suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron). He defines the votes that are to be counted as those contained in a statement, which is to be found in an envelope of a particular description. It might be that they could not count the votes unless they happened to be in that envelope; whereas the provision in regard to putting the votes in an envelope is plainly directory.

Mr. SPROULE. I have known it to happen that these statements were put loose in the ballot boxes when the ballots were put in an envelope and tied up with a string. The law now enables the deputy returning officer to count them as long as they are found within the ballot box. If you say that the returning officer shall count what he finds in an envelope and he finds nothing in the envelope how can he count then.

Mr. BERGERON. In future the deputy returning officer will have to put them in an envelope that is all. Now, I will suggest an amendment to paragraph 2. The law now provides that where there is an equality of votes, the returning officer shall vote and then declare the man for whom he votes elected. Now, suppose one of the candidates should ask for a recount, and that the result of that recount was that the votes were again equal. Who, then, would decide the election ?

Mr. TALBOT. If you take one from one man and give it to the other there would not be an equality.

Mr. BERGERON. If there is an equality of votes, when the boxes are opened the returning officer votes for one or the other of the candidates. Then, suppose on a recount before a judge, the man for whom the returning officer voted lost one vote. There would be an equality of votes again. I would replace paragraph 2 by this :

The result of the final addition of the votes shall be made public there and then by the returning officer, and the candidate who is found to have a majority of the votes shall be declared elected on the expiration of the six days' delay provided by section 92 ; or in case of a recount, so soon as the judge has handed his certificate of the result of such recount or final addition to the returning officer.

Under this, instead of counting the votes and declaring the man elected immediately, he would wait until the six days for a recount had elapsed, and then if there is still an equality of votes the returning officer preserves his right to vote for one or the other.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is provided for already. The first proceeding is to go before the returning officer, who makes an addition of the votes according to the statements placed in the ballot boxes by the deputy returning officers. In the event of an equality, then the returning officer casts his vote for one or the other. Then on the recount, the judge deals with the ballots and not with the statement in the box. He deals with the ballots exclusively. If he finds that there is an equality he then makes a return and the returning officer casts his vote.

Mr. BERGERON. Then the returning officer will vote twice.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. By two different processes. That is the law, and I do not think we can improve on that.

Mr. BERGERON. There is an anomaly. The first day the returning officer may vote for one man, and then when the judge makes his recount, he could vote for the other one if he liked.

Mr. TALBOT. He might be open to conviction.

Mr. BERGERON. There is that danger.

Mr. POWELL. The returning officer does not in any proper use of the term vote twice. The first time he does not place a ballot in the box at all, and so it is not taken into account by the judge on a recount.

Mr. BERGERON. What proof have you of that?

Mr. POWELL. The recount is a recount of the ballots put into the envelopes by the deputy returning officer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does not the returning officer put his ballot in the box?

Mr. POWELL. No; he takes the returns, and if the returns show a tie, he declares one of the candidates elected.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In practice, as far as I have seen it, the returning officer always casts a ballot. He cannot vote in any other way than by marking a ballot according to law.

Mr. POWELL. That does not mean that he deposits a ballot. The time for depositing ballots has gone by. With reference to the criticism of the hon. member for Beauharnois, it strikes me as a little too critical. If the section is amended as he suggests, the harmony of two or three other sections will be destroyed. The hon. gentleman is entirely in error as to the function of the sealed envelope. The sealed envelope he is referring to is an envelope put into the box and returned to the returning officer to be by him forwarded to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The statement which the returning officer takes as the basis of his count on declaration day is not that sealed envelope at all; it is the statement annexed to the polling book. I would suggest that as the election law has worked well in the past, it is not desirable now to alter three or four sections.

Mr. BERGERON. The light which has been thrown on the subject by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) does not make it any clearer to me. I still persist in saying that unless we make a change in the law, the returning officer will have two votes; but, if the proposition I make is adopted, he will only have one vote, like every one else. The proposition is, that he should not vote until the six days for the recount are past. If nobody asks for the recount, he will give his casting vote, and declare one of the candidates elected. But, if a recount is asked for, the court may find some bad ballots on both sides, and may still come to the conclusion that there is a tie; then, the returning officer will give his casting vote. That would prevent his voting twice. Anything that can be done to avoid the necessity of the returning officer casting his vote should be done. I remember in the local election in my county, in 1892, there was a tie, and the returning officer was called on to give his casting vote; and it was a sad sight, because the man was an employee of the government.

Mr. INGRAM. Let us look at this for a moment in a practical way. There are two candidates in an election, and there happens to be a tie. It is quite natural that the returning officer should cast his ballot in favour of the government candidate. As sections 85, 86, 87 and 88 all work in harmony as they are now, I cannot see any use of amending them; and the penalty provided in section 88 is much more severe than it was before.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not quite understand what the proposition of my hon. friend from Beauharnois is. I want to understand whether he wishes that the returning officer shall not declare any candidate elected until the expiration of the six days, whether or not there be a tie?

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, no; only in case of a tie.

Mr. McNEILL. I must say I think my hon. friend has made out a pretty strong case. Whatever the technicality may be, the broad fact is that the returning officer has voted. Whether you say he has deposited a ballot or not, the Act says he has voted. For many a long day we voted without a ballot. However, we have the ballot now, and the law says the returning officer can vote, whether he deposits a ballot or not. My hon. friend who has just spoken says that he cannot imagine the case of a returning officer voting against the government candidate, because the returning officer is appointed by the government. If the returning officer in my last election had voted, I think he would have voted against me; therefore, I do not think that argument of my hon. friend will altogether hold water.

I do not say whether we should alter the law or not ; but, the hon. member for Beauharnois has made out a very good case to show that the returning officer may vote, and afterwards may vote again.

Mr. WOOD. The vote only counts once.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman has not followed the discussion, I think. He can vote once at the time of the declaration, and he can vote again after the recount.

Mr. WOOD. But, his vote is not considered in the recount at all.

Mr. McNEILL. We have discussed that. The law says it is a vote. It counts as much as any vote can possibly count. It elects the man.

Mr. SPROULE. It is quite clear that the returning officer never uses a ballot at all, because the ballots are all sealed up. It is only when he counts up the statements of the deputy returning officers and finds that there is a tie that he gives the casting vote. When the judge deals with the question on a recount, he only deals with the ballots ; he has nothing to do with what the returning officer does ; and if, as the result of the recount, there is an equality of votes, the returning officer is called on, in the language of the Act, to give the casting vote the same as before.

Mr. McNEILL. All I am speaking of is the anomalous condition of things by which the returning officer may vote one way at one time, and the other way at the other time.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the South Shore Line Railway Company.—(Mr. Flint.)

ELECTION ACT—AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 133) to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members of the House of Commons.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

On section 88,

Mr. SPROULE. There ought to be some provision made, if the ballots are there and the statement is missing, authorizing the returning officer to open the packages and count the ballots.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would not like to have that. Paragraph 2 makes provision that in the event of a statement being absent from the box, the returning officer shall use all reasonable efforts to ascertain the exact number of votes given for each candidate.

Mr. SPROULE. But very often the statements are not made, and there ought to be some means of counting the votes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to look at the beginning of section 83, where, I think, by the amendment we have practically met the difficulty that he points out :

The deputy returning officer and the poll clerk, immediately after the completion of the counting of the votes, shall take and subscribe respectively the oaths in Forms 'X' and 'V,' which shall remain attached to the poll books; after which the deputy returning officer shall make out a statement in triplicate—

And so on. Then, at the beginning of section 80 :

Immediately after the closing of the polls, the deputy returning officer shall count the number of voters whose names appear on the poll books, and make an entry thereof on a line immediately below the name of the voter who voted last.

The difficulty pointed out by the hon. gentleman is a real difficulty, but I think it has been met in this way.

Mr. BENNETT. How many of the clauses of section 88 are new ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The whole of the last part, which is taken from the Bill of the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram).

Mr. BENNETT. That is, paragraph 4 is the only new one ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

On section 90,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would move to strike out the words on the 50th and 51st line, 'Or in the North-west Territories to a judge of the Supreme Court.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There might be a case where the deputy returning officer had improperly counted or improperly rejected no ballots, and yet the statement returned by him would be wrong. I remember one case mentioned by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery last year, a case where A had 100 votes and B 50 at a particular polling section. The deputy, in making up the statement, reversed the numbers and gave B 100 and A 50, and B was returned and sat throughout the succeeding sessions of that parliament. The mistake was not discovered until long after it had occurred. Would that case be included in the expression 'improperly counted?' Would it not be better to add something to cover a case where the statement of the deputy returning officer is incorrect ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the section at present would cover that case.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to call attention to subsection 5 relating to the packages that may be opened to see if the contents are in the several packages; first, the unused ballot papers; second, those rejected; and third despoiled ballot papers. In section 8 the judge has the powers of a returning officer as to the papers that may not be returned. I have in mind a case that may have been an accident or it may have been designed. Suppose a deputy returning officer puts in ballot papers in the spoiled ballot envelope, that might be counted afterwards by the judge for one of the candidates. When the judge opens that package he has no power to call witnesses, with respect to the contents of that package. His court is not a court of inquiry further than it would relate to the powers of a returning officer, and he could not act, even if it was known as a fact that the rejected ballots were put in the same envelope with the spoiled ballots. A designing deputy could defeat a candidate by putting them in the wrong envelope, and nothing but an election petition would give relief. I know a place where that took place. As a layman I am unable to suggest a remedy, but the hon. gentleman will see that that might be the means of turning the result of an election.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. But after the poll is closed the deputy returning officer is obliged to make a package of the ballots that he counted, then he makes a package of ballots that were rejected, and another package of ballots that he looked upon as spoiled. So you have got all the ballots in those three packages, and on a recount these would all be opened.

Mr. CLANCY. The spoiled ballots would be put in an envelope by themselves, but when the ballots are being counted it is found there are several other ballots marked in the same way. In the judgment of the deputy returning officer those ballots were improperly marked and would be rejected ballots. Now, by mistake or by design he puts those ballots marked in the same way in the spoiled ballot envelope, and the judge has no power to call witnesses to show whether that was done by mistake or by design.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the safeguard we have put around the counting of ballots will be sufficient to cover such cases.

Mr. CLANCY. But the rejected ballots are put in with the spoiled ballots.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I beg your pardon.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman does not seem to understand me. I say that the deputy returning officer may put, either by mistake or design, before the envelopes are sealed up, ballots that he rejected, into the envelope into which they are not intended to go at all, namely, into the envelope for spoiled ballots. If they go in there once there is no means of determining their value, whether put in by design or mistake. If they once go in there they remain as spoiled ballots. Although the fact is known to many persons that by mistake they were put in there, or by design, you cannot touch them afterwards. There should be some means of inquiring into that where a case arises.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I see the point that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) wishes to make. It is this: The deputy returning officer, coming across ballots that he believes are improperly marked, will put them into the rejected envelope instead of the spoiled envelope, or rather, in the spoiled envelope instead of the rejected envelope.

Mr. CLANCY. No, he puts them into the envelope for spoiled ballots.

Mr. PUTTEE. According to the law they are not spoiled, they are only rejected, and that can be done either through design or ignorance. As a matter of fact you will find that the deputy is often in doubt, and anything which is not properly marked he is very apt to put into the spoiled envelope. At the recount before the judge in Winnipeg he saw that difficulty in this matter. He found spoiled and rejected ballots, and he found out by the poll book that ballots were marked spoiled ballots which were really only rejected ballots. There was in one case two which were so spoiled, and these were thrown out. There were enough ballots to alter the result that were put into the envelope for spoiled ballots which should have been put into the envelope for rejected ballots.

Mr. GEO. LANDERKIN (South Grey). There is a difficulty in this matter which arose in a recount in which I was concerned. It was found upon examining the ballots which had been counted and had been placed in the respective envelopes for each, and which had been certified to by the returning officer and the scrutineers at the polls in this election that was held in my own riding, that four ballots had been taken out of the envelopes in which the ballots marked for myself were placed and four substituted bearing the name of my opponent. When it came before the judge the judge was at a loss to know whether he could reject the forged ballots that had been placed in the envelope, and which were forged after the election and placed in these envelopes. The judge was quite conscious, and stated so, that he believed them to be fraudulent, yet he scarcely had the power to set them aside, and there is a difficulty. Further, in this case, although they had stolen twenty-four ballots and forged twenty-four more, making in all forty-eight ballots, which was two more than my majority, we gained at the recount, and the result was not changed. Had it not been that there was a gain in the recount the forged ballots perhaps would have been counted, and the people would have been deprived of the majority candidate. So, there is a difficulty in that way, because the judge has not the power under the law to decide in reference to the validity, or invalidity, of these fraudulent ballots. These ballots were placed there after the election. There was no doubt of that, because the deputy returning officer and the two scrutineers, one upon either side, made a certificate as to the number of ballots that were placed in each envelope. There could have been no doubt about that, and there was no doubt about the ballots being fraudulent ballots. The judge was satisfied of that, and so expressed himself, yet he had not the power to set them aside, and he asked for an adjournment to see if the law would permit him to reject these fraudulent ballots and allow the majority candidate to be returned. Whether it is wise to open the door and allow the judge to call witnesses in such a case as this is a question to be considered. I agree with the hon. Solicitor General that it will scarcely be a wise thing to do, although we know that there are difficulties, and this is a case in which I saw the difficulty. The judge saw the difficulty, and it was only by the gains that we made in the recount that the will of the people was not set aside.

Mr. POWELL. While it is impossible to guard against error entirely, I would ask the hon. Solicitor General's attention to a suggestion which, I think, will help to cure or lessen the evil to a great extent. If he will direct his attention to section 80 of the Bill, he will see that it reads :

Immediately after the closing of the poll, the deputy returning officer shall—

Then insert the words : 'Put the spoiled ballots in envelopes to be provided for that purpose'; and then he writes underneath the poll book so that no name can be afterwards added, his name, and after that, in the order of sequence, he opens the ballot box. If you make it a condition precedent to the opening of the ballot box that the spoiled ballots should be put in the proper envelope and sealed, the deputy returning officer cannot possibly get the ballots mixed up. You cannot guard against stupidity entirely, but that would reduce it to a minimum.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would also involve an amendment to section 82.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How would it meet the difficulty ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It does not meet the difficulty entirely, but it renders it less likely that such a thing would occur.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As I understood it the point of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) was that the deputy returning officer, either wilfully or unconsciously, might take a certain number of ballots voted for Smith and put them into the spoiled ballot envelope, and thus when the spoiled ballot paper was opened the returning officer would have no power to count them because they were returned to him in a sealed paper as spoiled ballots. Then, if it appeared from the total of the count that there must have been some mistake made there is no means under the Act of enabling the returning officer to count these ballots.

Mr. POWELL. My suggestion goes upon the principle that prevention is better than cure. The difficulty is that the deputy returning officer gets them mixed up. He puts ballots into one package that should go into the other. But, if the only ballots he has are spoiled ballots he cannot get them into the other package, and if before he proceeds to count at all he puts them into an envelope labelled 'spoiled ballots,' there is no danger.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not think there is much danger of that arising with scrutineers on each side. They will see that spoiled ballots are put into the spoiled ballot envelope, and that the candidates' ballots are put into the candidates' envelope. I do not see how a case could arise unless there was collusion amongst them.

Mr. POWELL. No, it is not a case of collusion at all. In West Huron, where it was not a case of intentional fraud, they were mixed up together. You will see by the record that ballots which were rejected were actually included among those marked 'spoiled.' This suggestion I make will reduce the difficulty to a minimum.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In the North Bruce election ballots were all thrown loosely into the ballot box. I do not think that was done ignorantly; it must have been done wilfully, and the law should take cognizance of it and prevent recurrence of that kind of thing.

Mr. POWELL. You can only do it by punishing the offender.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It was a worse case than the West Huron case, and it was very apparent why it was done. The ballots were thrown loosely into the ballot box, and the judge had the greatest difficulty in coming to a decision at all.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. On the true construction of the statute there cannot be any difficulty if you take the law as it is; but, at the same time, the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) would obviate the appearance of difficulty, and it should be adopted.

Mr. B. RUSSELL (Halifax). The spoiled ballot is a ballot which is brought by the voter to the deputy returning officer, because the voter has inadvertently put some mark on it which would make it ineffective. What is to hinder the deputy returning officer from so effectually spoiling that ballot paper that it cannot possibly be used again?

Mr. CLANCY. The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland covers the whole case and should be adopted.

Mr. BENNETT. In a case where there is a senior county judge and a junior county judge, has the Solicitor General made any provision as to before which judge the recount shall be held?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I should think it would be a matter for arrangement between the two judges. In our province, where there are four or five judges sitting in one district, the judges arrange it among themselves.

Mr. BENNETT. In the province of Ontario there are constituencies which are made up in part of two different counties. After the general elections of 1896, there was one case which caused a good deal of comment. A riding was in part composed of two different counties. An appointment was made by one county court judge for a recount, and for reasons best known to himself, one of the candidates afterwards went to a judge who had jurisdiction over part of that riding, applying for and obtaining a recount, although an appointment for a recount had been made previously by another judge. It seems to me that the law should provide for some uniformity in this matter. I refer to the North Ontario case. Judge Mahaffy, in whose judicial district a large portion of the riding was situated, had issued an order appointing a hearing for a recount, and then Judge Dartnell, who was judge of a county, part of which went into the riding, made another appointment under which the recount was held. I would ask the Solicitor General whether he has considered a contingency like that arising?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Those who wish a recount should have it before whatever judge they see fit. Both judges are supposed to do what is right, and I do not see that it makes much difference. The junior judge gets a smaller salary, and I do not see why he should be debarred.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not the point.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the junior judge is qualified, I do not see why he should not act as well as the senior judge. The recount in which I was concerned was held before the junior judge, and no objection could be urged against him. He was equally as able and as honest and as straightforward as the other judge. If you are going to lay down a rule like that, you would discriminate unfairly against the junior judges, and I think it would not be a proper thing for this parliament to do.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. BENNETT. Let me point out the circumstances in the North Ontario case. The defeated candidate applied to Judge Mahaffy for a recount, and the order went out for a recount to be held. Then, the candidate who had been declared elected applied to the other judge for a recount and obtained his order. Such disgraceful proceedings as that should not be allowed. The result was that there was a conflict between the two judges as to which had the right. It degrades law and justice to have two judges conflicting on a point like that. Here was the defeated candidate going to a judge who had the largest portion of the riding in his judicial district, and getting an order for a recount; and although the other candidate had been declared elected, he applied for a recount to the other judge, and as the returning officer saw fit not to obey the order of Judge Mahaffy, he went before the judge who had granted the recount on the application of the elected candidate. This judge only counted part of the ballots and then declared the present member elected. The ballots were then brought down to Ottawa, and a further recount was defeated. I think it should be declared here, once for all, that the recount should be held before one particular judge of the district, and it should be granted only at the instance of the defeated candidate, not at the instance of the elected candidate.

Mr. McNEILL. We have passed away to some extent from the question of the spoiled ballots; but I think there is a good deal in what was suggested by my hon. friend from Halifax, if I caught his suggestion rightly; that is, that the spoiled ballots should be ear-marked, as it were, so that there should be no doubt about them. I should like to ask the Solicitor General: Does it not rest with the deputy returning officer to say whether a ballot is spoiled or not?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There cannot be any dispute about it, because it is a ballot that does not go into the box.

Mr. McNEILL. Then why should that ballot be left in a condition to be confounded with any other ballot? Why not let the deputy returning officer write 'spoiled' on it, or put a cross on it, or do something to the ballot itself which will make it impossible to have the ballot confounded with any other ballot afterwards? It is quite right, as my hon. friend from Westmoreland suggested, that the arrangement should be that before the ballot box is opened, the envelope should be sealed and disposed of; but suppose that should not be done. What then? I think it very strange that the judge should be prevented from dealing with that matter at all. Suppose ballots which are not spoiled happen to be included in that envelope; suppose this is done by design; suppose there is fraud in the matter, it seems to me, as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) said, to be an unfortunate condition of things that the judge should be prevented altogether from dealing with them.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think it possible, if the judge knows the exact number of spoiled ballots that ought to be in a package, that he can be precluded from counting any others which may be found in that packet. What is the packet opened for? If after he opens the packet, the judge comes to the conclusion that there are ballots there which are not spoiled, but which came there by mistake, what is he going to do with them? He must count them.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in regard to the practice. I can point to one case at least where the judge did not count the ballots in the envelope. He must leave the ballots as they are in the envelope unless he calls witnesses.

Mr. COCHRANE. I want to draw the attention of the Solicitor General to a case that happened in the riding which I have the honour to represent. I agree with him that there would be no use of the judge opening the envelope containing the spoiled ballots without seeing if there were any ballots in it which he could recognize as good ballots. In the case I speak of there was a recount, and with the spoiled ballots two ballots were included which the judge decided were not spoiled. They were considered spoiled by the deputy returning officer, but when the judge came to examine them he found that they had been marked by voters who wet the pencils more than they ought. They put the cross opposite the name of Mr. Mallory, my opponent, and when the papers were folded the cross made an impression on the opposite side. The judge found that they were marked properly for Mr. Mallory, and counted them for him.

Mr. McNEILL. I still think there can be no possible objection to having an arrangement by which the spoiled ballots would be ear-marked.

Mr. POWELL. If you get them out of the way, that will be sufficient.

Mr. McNEILL. Suppose you do not get them out of the way. If you provide that this envelope is not to be put into the ballot box at all, that is another matter; but it would be a double precaution to have the spoiled ballots ear-marked. May I refer to another matter while on my feet? Earlier in the day I asked my hon. friend a question with regard to a case where envelopes had not been provided and could not be obtained and where the ballots had to be put at the bottom of the ballot box under the books. That was a case which occurred at a particular poll in my own election. I think it would be well to have some arrangement made which would relieve the judge from a great deal of responsibility in a case of that kind.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think the judge ought to have any trouble in such circumstances. If the ballots are there and properly marked for identification, he ought to be able to count them. If the committee are of opinion that there ought to be a double security with reference to the spoiled ballots, a verbal amendment to section 73 will provide for the spoiled ballots being defaced to such an extent that when they go into the receptacle they will be spoiled beyond redemption. I think myself that the suggestion of my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) might meet the difficulty.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we go any further, I do not know whether my hon. friend has had his attention called to this. I find that this Bill is different from the old law in this respect, that there were four grounds for application for a recount in the old law and there are only three now.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) drew my attention to that. There are two or three amendments I have to make. In section 90, in addition to the amendment I suggested on lines 50 and 51. I would like to amend the section on lines 5 and 6, page 23: 'Or with the clerk of the said Supreme Court.' I propose to strike out those words. They apply to the North-west Territories. In the North-west Territories, application for a recount has to be made to a judge of the Supreme Court, but if you eliminate the judge of the Supreme Court as one of the tribunals to which application is to be made, you have to eliminate the clerk of the court when you come to make your deposit.

Amendment agreed to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. On line 13, I would move to strike out the figure 3 and substitute 2.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend has suggested that the difficulty to which I refer is covered by subsection 3, in line 1, of page 23, but that only deals with the case where the returning officer has improperly added up the votes. The point I made was, that subhead 1 and subhead 2 did not seem to meet the case where the deputy returning officer, although he had not improperly counted or rejected any ballot, may, nevertheless, have put the figures down wrong in his statement. What is meant by improper counting of ballot papers is counting ballot papers which are not properly marked within the meaning of the Act, and rejecting papers which are properly marked.

You do not include in that the case where he properly counts the ballot papers, but, nevertheless, in his statement puts down a wrong number to either candidate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If my hon. friend will look at section 83, he will find that on the close of the poll the deputy returning officer and his poll clerk take oath and make out a statement in triplicate. That statement is put in the box. On a recount that statement is not dealt with, but what is dealt with is the ballots. Therefore, on a recount the ballots are counted and the statement is not referred to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That does not meet my point. We are dealing with the grounds on which you can demand a recount. In the case I have put, you cannot make an affidavit under this section, because you do not come within any part of it, and you cannot get your recount. Take the case I have suggested, where the ballots were properly counted and rejected, but, nevertheless, the statement was wrong.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Therein consists the improper count.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, the language is 'improperly counting any ballot papers,' and not 'the' ballot papers.

Mr. POWELL. There was a case actually occurred in New Brunswick in which the numbers were thirty for one candidate and fifty for the other. By a sheer clerical error, they were reversed, and that is a case we want to be covered. That was not improper counting, but was a clerical error in crediting the one candidate with the number of votes given to the other.

Mr. ELLIS. I think that was only in the newspapers.

Mr. POWELL. It actually took place.

Mr. CLANCY. One is an incorrect counting and the other an improper counting.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Where is the difference?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me there is a clear distinction between improperly counting ballot papers—that is, counting as good those which are bad—and properly counting ballot papers, but making an incorrect statement of the result.

Amendment to strike out the word '3' and insert the word '2' agreed to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. On page 24, line 45, I move to strike out the following words: 'or in the North-west Territories to the Supreme Court.'

Mr. BERGERON. It seems to me the subsections are not put in regular order. What should be subsection No. 2 is subsection No. 3. The order of the judge to the returning officer is the first thing done after the judge has granted the demand of the candidate for a recount. Subsection 3 should be subsection 10.

Subsection 3 instead of being the one on the Bill, should be subsection 10 in the Act, which provides, 'return not to be made until judge's certificate is received.' Subsection 4 should be subsection 5; subsection 5 should be subsection 6, and so on, so that everything will be in order. Of course, it does not change the law, but it would be more regular, and, to an outsider, would read better than the Bill as it is now.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It may be that there is something in this that I cannot see; but if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) will look at subsection 2, he will find it provided that notice is to be given to the candidate. The candidate is entitled to notice at as early a period as the returning officer. I do not know that it makes much difference whether subsection 2 is before subsection 3 or vice versa.

Mr. BERGERON. There are two things that come before that, first the order of the judge to the returning officer, and that the return cannot be made until the judge's certificate is received, and then the service of notice to the candidate. The other things are matters of procedure and should come in afterwards.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under subsection 1 the judge appoints the time, after the recount is called for. Then comes the notice to the candidate, and then the order of the judge to the returning officer. It seems to be in order.

Mr. BERGERON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has not read the subsection. The first thing to be done is the order of the judge to the returning officer. To put it in any other way is like putting the plough before the horse. We are making a law which is to remain upon the statute-book, and it should be in proper form.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is an old law and has been on the statute-book a long time, and I never heard it criticised from this point of view before.

Mr. INGRAM. I agree with the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) that section 90 should be amended so as to specify which judge shall hold the recount.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That would lead to a great deal of trouble.

Mr. INGRAM. Before the absence of such a section caused a lot of trouble in North Ontario, and also in West Elgin in the local, each party trying to take advantage of the other by securing the services of the judge most favourable to them.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has only pointed out one case in which this has occurred since the law was first put in operation, many years ago. I do not think that is sufficient reason for an amendment. We must rely to some extent at least upon the sense of decency of the judges. For my part, I have never known a case of one judge trying to cut the ground from under the feet of another.

Mr. INGRAM. There was also the case in the local which I have mentioned. I think something should be put in the section after the opening words :

If, within four days after that within which the returning officer has made the addition of the votes for the purpose of declaring the candidate or candidates elected, it is made to appear, on the affidavit of a credible witness, to a judge of the county court——and so on, some such words as these :

After one application has been made, no second application may be made bearing on the same recount.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram). Before we leave this section, I would like to see if some form could not be agreed upon to cover the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden).

Mr. McNEILL. The difficulty seems to be that the word 'counted' is ambiguous. In one case it means 'allowed,' and in the second case, and in other cases, it means 'enumerated.' The words here are :

(1) Has improperly counted, or (2) has improperly rejected.

In this case 'counted' is evidently taken in the sense of 'allowed,' being balanced as against 'rejected.' As I understand my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), there ought to be words covering the idea of improper enumeration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These are statements that must be made in order to give the judge jurisdiction. The mere statement that the returning officer has improperly counted gives that jurisdiction, and when the judge orders the recount he has the case before him, and takes the ballots and counts them up. It does not matter whether the man has or has not made an improper statement—the judge does not look at that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would suggest that this clause 3 should be made 4, and that the words should be inserted :

—or (13) that the deputy returning officer has improperly added up the vote or incorrectly stated the result of such adding up—

And then go on with the present clause 3 as clause 4.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not object to the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax); but in practice, what is done is that the man who applies for the recount takes the words of the statute and swears to these words. So, it seems to me that a great deal of this discussion is unnecessary.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He simply makes the statement that is necessary to give the judge jurisdiction.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), and myself, are accustomed with dealing with men who think first whether they can truthfully swear to the language in the statute or not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But there might be a case in which the ballot had been improperly received instead of having been improperly rejected. Then how could you make the affidavit ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There must have been a false count.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That leads back to what we mean by improperly counting ballot papers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does not improper counting necessarily involve an improper statement of the counting ? Supposing there were twenty ballots for A, and through an improper count twenty-five were returned for A. I say in that case he has improperly counted those ballots.

Mr. MARTIN. I think some change requires to be made before this clause is applicable to Prince Edward Island. In this recount there are three grounds of application : First, improperly counted ballots ; second, improperly rejected ballots ; and third, if the returning officer has improperly added up the vote. By section 67 of the Act in Prince Edward Island where the qualification is decided at the polls, there being no voters' list, when there is any doubt about a vote being genuine it is marked objected and the ballot is initialled. I propose that at this recount the judge shall at the same time, that is if the candidate asks it, go into these objections concerning the initialled ballots, and I propose on page 23, after the figure 3, to insert the following words :

That in Prince Edward Island any person not qualified to vote in such electoral district shall state the name, designation and residence of such person, also the name and number of the polling division in which he has voted.

Otherwise, as regards a vote objected to, and the ballot to be initialled, you have no remedy unless you go to an expensive trial. But by adding this provision the county judge shall decide the validity of these initialled ballots. That change would necessitate another change in line 7. After the word 'dollars' insert the following words :

—or in Prince Edward Island $300 if the application is made on the third ground.

That is, if the application is made on the third ground it would necessitate a larger deposit. In a recount on the first, second and fourth grounds it is $100, and I propose to make $300 when made under the amendments I propose. I propose also, in the same section, in line 13, to strike out the word 'three' and insert the word 'two' in lieu thereof. And in line 14, after the word 'application,' insert the following :

—or decide whether any person in Prince Edward Island not qualified to vote has voted, if the said application is made on the third ground of application.

I think these provisions are necessary in regard to Prince Edward Island. On page 23, in lines 19 and 20, section 90, I propose to make some further amendments. I propose, in subsection 2, to strike out the following words, 'or to make such final addition as the case may be,' and to insert 'as aforesaid and when the recount is demanded on the third ground of application the said notice shall include a copy of the affidavit aforesaid.' I propose to make the application on the ground that the applicant furnishes the judge with a list of the votes he is going to contest, and at the end of subsection 4 of section 90, I propose to insert the following subsection :

At the time and place appointed and before proceeding to recount the votes, the judge may receive an affidavit from the candidate or his agent, against whose return the affidavit mentioned in subsection 1 of this section has been directed, declaring that any other person not qualified to vote has voted, giving the name, designation and residence of such person, and also the name and number of the polling division in which he has voted, but the affidavit authorized by this subsection shall not be received by the judge, except where the recount has been demanded on the third ground of application.

I furnished the hon. Solicitor General with a copy of these amendments, and I hope he has given them attention, because these amendments are imperative in order to carry out the provisions of the Bill in regard to Prince Edward Island. Following on, at line 49, on the same page, after the word 'counted,' I propose to insert the following : 'Included in Prince Edward Island those numbered and initialled under section 67 of this Act.' The clause would then read :

At the time and place appointed, and in the presence of the said person, the judge shall proceed to make such final addition, in the manner prescribed by section 85, or to recount all the votes or ballot papers returned by the several deputy returning officers, as the case may be, and shall, in the latter case, open the sealed packets containing (1) the used ballot papers which have been counted, included in Prince Edward Island those numbered and initialled under section 67 of this Act; (2) the rejected ballot papers; (3) the spoiled ballot papers—and no other ballot papers.

Mr. MARTIN.

Then, turning to the next page and to subsection 7, leave out from the word 'in,' in line 8, to the word 'shall,' in line 9, and insert the following words :

Subsections 1 and 2 of section 81 of this Act, and in Prince Edward Island the judge, when recounting the votes, shall decide the qualifications of all voters whose ballot papers were numbered and initialled under section 67 of this Act as having been objected to on the ground of want of qualification, and who have been described in the affidavits provided for in this section, and for the purposes of such decision he shall hear the candidates or their agents, and may examine on oath the person whose vote has been objected to, or any other person. Both candidates may be represented by counsel, and the judge shall ascertain the facts, and may take such other evidence as he thinks necessary and is able to obtain, and may require the attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and shall, for all purposes of such decision, have all the powers of a county court judge in Prince Edward Island, exercising his ordinary jurisdiction in civil cases.

Then, subsection a will be as follows :

(a) In determining the qualification of the voters aforesaid, the judge shall not identify nor allow to be identified, any ballot paper, until it has been decided that the person casting it was not legally entitled to vote, in which case he shall identify the said ballot paper, and deduct the vote or votes marked thereon from the total number of votes received by the candidate or candidates in whose favour it has been marked.

Then, going on to subsection b :

The judge—

And so forth, down to the end of the section. I propose that it shall read :

—shall verify or correct the ballot paper account and statement of the number of votes given for each candidate; and upon the completion of such recount, or as soon as he has so ascertained the result of the poll, he shall seal up all the said ballot papers in separate packets.

Unless we have these changes made in the Bill, the provision which the hon. Solicitor General has made in regard to the initialling of ballots, will be of no avail, and almost useless. These initialled ballots are all counted—though many of them will be bad. They are to be put into separate envelopes, and my amendment provides a simple way of deciding on their validity before a county judge, which otherwise would involve a very expensive trial before a superior court. I hope the hon. Solicitor General will see his way clear to adopt these amendments. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has had these amendments in his hands for some days, and I hope he will give his assistance in order to perfect this Bill.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman's amendments are all in one direction, and that is to add to the powers of the county court judge. I know his object very well and I sympathize with his motive. I have had an opportunity of going over these proposed amendments with the hon. Solicitor General. I do not know how it is possible to superadd to the power of the county judge of simply recounting the votes, the power to enter upon a scrutiny which the Superior Court has now under the Controverted Elections Act. The only possible mode of proceeding is under the Controverted Elections Act. I want to point out that if you proceed under the Controverted Elections Act, you will have thirty or forty days longer, and you will file a petition without having reference to fraud. You can confine your petition entirely to the qualification, and you can in that way simplify the proceeding by confining it to a scrutiny, and you can give ample notice to both sides as to what votes are going to be contested. I will tell you my doubts which justify me in opposing this amendment and how insuperable the difficulties appear to me. Here, you would have four days within which the recount must be applied for. In any ordinary rural county, such as I represent, and such as the hon. gentleman represents, it is utterly impossible for him, or for myself, to know at the end of four days how many votes have been challenged, whose votes have been challenged and whose have not. I cannot know within four days. If an election were to take place in November, or in the winter, when travelling is bad, I could not possibly know. I could not get any particulars of the different ballots which had been challenged, or the grounds upon which the voters had been challenged. Suppose I were the defeated candidate and I made an application to the county court judge to have a scrutiny as well as a recount, surely I would have to furnish particulars as to the names of the parties whose votes I intended to scrutinize. That would be an impossibility in the time left to me. On the other hand, suppose I were successful, and my hon. friend was attacking my seat, and he applied for a recount and a scrutiny, and I got notice on the fourth day, and wanted to make a counter petition, how am I going to get sixty or seventy names that voted for him and that I object to. I could not possibly formulate a counter-petition in the time.

Mr. McNEILL. How many days will it take?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In a large rural district, where there might be fifty or sixty polls, where you would have to go over the different votes objected to and carefully examine the evidence, it would take a couple of weeks, I suppose. You would have to have petition and counter-petition and particulars and counter-particulars delivered to each side, and allow a reasonable time for the parties to send out and get their witnesses. It would be a regular contest lasting for weeks, perhaps. Here we have a simple provision for remedying the evil which might arise from an improper counting by the deputy returning officers, and to superadd cumbrous machinery to that would simply spoil the entire effect of it. Everything my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) seeks to obtain can be obtained by a simple petition under the Controverted Elections Act, limiting the petitions to a scrutiny, and you can file another petition for bribery and corruption afterwards if you chose. I appreciate and sympathize with the object of my hon. friend (Mr. Martin), for his object would necessarily be my object, namely, to have the improper votes determined to be improper at the earliest possible moment, but I do not think it can be done in the way he suggests. I think it can be done the other way although it might take a longer time, but no longer time than is essential to enable the parties to martial their witnesses. In bribery and corruption charges there is immense delay, because candidates have to be examined and particulars and counter-particulars have to be furnished, but such delays are not necessarily incident to a simple petition for a scrutiny. I take it, that a simple petition for a scrutiny could be got through with, with very much less delay than a petition for an election trial on the ground of ordinary bribery and corruption. If my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) can satisfy the Solicitor General that he has a feasible scheme that can be worked out, I have no objection to seeing it done, but I have not been able so far to satisfy my own mind that it is feasible.

Mr. MARTIN. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, but I do not think his objections are insuperable. The amendment does not propose to go into bribery and corruption at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand that.

Mr. MARTIN. If there is anything in the objection that the time is too short, it would be a very simple matter to extend the time, if necessary. I do not think there would be much difficulty in making up these lists of objected votes to be submitted to the judge at the recount, because on declaration day the ballot boxes are open, and besides that, a week before on the eve of election day, the poll-books are in the hands of the agents of both candidates, and every one of these names in the different polling divisions would be closely scrutinized. If there had been improper voting by those who had no votes, and whose ballots had been initialled, then, as soon as the election was over they would closely look over the poll-books in every division and get the names of the persons who were objected, and which is to be scrutinized before the county judge. The hon. gentleman knows that it is only these initialled ballots of persons whose names have been marked 'objected to' on the poll-book which would come in question before the county judge. In place of four days, the time might be extended when the application is made under this amendment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But, the candidate would not know anything about it until after the application was served.

Mr. MARTIN. As soon as the election is over, on the eve of the election, the candidates or their friends know exactly how many votes had been objected to at each polling division. If the vote has been close they can easily go over the number of votes objected to in the riding, and come to a conclusion as to how many of these they could strike off. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows the great expense and delay of proceeding under the Controverted Elections Act, and he knows that my proposal is a very simple and expeditious way of doing it. My only object is to make the Bill as satisfactory to Prince Edward Island as possible.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hear, hear.

Mr. MARTIN. If the minister thinks that four days is too short a time, it can be made ten days if he likes. I think every one of the objections he has raised may be overcome. We find now that the Acts which we had in force some years ago, while suited to those times, do not suit the present time. There are new schemes now—the Ontario machine amongst them—which were not thought of years ago, and we must try to make this Bill as perfect as possible in order to meet these cases.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would like to point out to my hon. friend that we have had the Franchise Act, under which the voting for this House takes place, in operation for very many years in Prince Edward Island; but, nobody there has ever suggested that we should have in the local elections the machinery which we have here suggested. They have a Controverted Elections Act there as we have here, and if any votes are attacked on the ground of the qualifications being irregular or wanting, it must be done by an election petition. If you can see any way of simplifying the Controverted Elections Act, I will join hands with you. If the deputy returning officer counts votes wrongly, against me or against my hon. friend, we have a right to have the votes recounted before the judge at once; but to superadd to that an Act to provide for a scrutiny, appears to me to be impossible.

Mr. CASGRAIN. So far as I understand the election law of Prince Edward Island, the manner in which the list is made there on election day is so different from the practice in any other province of the Dominion, that it seems to me some machinery should be provided to rectify the judgment of the returning officer as to the qualifications of the voters. I understand that in Prince Edward Island there are no electoral lists at all; but a man comes up to vote, and it is then that the question of his qualification is decided; and by whom is it decided? It is decided by the deputy returning officer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. By the oath of the man himself.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If he is questioned, he is bound to give certain answers upon oath, and then the deputy returning officer decides whether or not the man has a right to vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then he votes. The returning officer cannot exclude his vote.

Mr. CASGRAIN. However, the deputy returning officer is vested with certain judicial power and a certain discretion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend is wrong there. He has no judicial discretion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then, my information is wrong.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Three or four of us here have been through elections in Prince Edward Island for the last thirty years. There is no discretion on the part of the deputy returning officer. If a man comes up claiming an electoral qualification upon a piece of land and takes the oath prescribed by the statute, his vote has to be recorded.

Mr. MARTIN. It may be marked 'objected to.'

Mr. CASGRAIN. In most other provinces, before the day on which the voting takes place, interested parties have a right to contest a man's vote, and appeal to a judge from the decision of the municipal authorities, or those who make the list, and you have a judicial decision.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not in the North-west.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is the case in all the other provinces, except the North-west. In Prince Edward Island you have no such remedy. Now, it seems to me that if you can remedy the decision of the returning officer as to ballots which have been improperly rejected, you should have some machinery by which you could also remedy the other abuse which exists in the fact that a man not qualified to vote has voted. Everybody knows that under the Controverted Elections Act the proceedings are very expensive and occupy a very long time. What I would suggest would be to substitute the scrutiny. My hon. friend says the practical difficulty would be the short time for the notice. Then, why not extend the time for Prince Edward Island? It would be simply an appeal from the deputy returning officer, as in all the other provinces.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend is in error in thinking that the deputy returning officer in Prince Edward Island has discretion. It is not so. If a man comes and takes the oath, giving a description of the land which entitles him to vote, his vote must be recorded. Whatever theoretical difficulty may be suggested, there has been no practical difficulty in the matter. We have no more difficulties in Prince Edward Island than they have elsewhere. If anything can be suggested to simplify the matter, I should be very glad. We all desire to get at a simple means of testing whether there has been a bona fide and square election, and the question is, whether that can be achieved in a hap-hazard way by a rush, or whether or not due notice should be given to your opponent, you should file your particulars, have him file his particulars, and then try the issue. There must be ample time given to both sides. I have no prejudices one way or the other, but I have come to the conclusion that the proposition is workable.

Mr. McNEILL. It seems to me that in Prince Edward Island any one who chooses may come and cast a vote, if he is prepared to take the oath. When my hon. friend speaks so lightly of an election petition, he hardly realizes what it means. It means a deposit of $1,000, and an infinitude of trouble and expenses.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not if you confine it to a scrutiny.

Mr. McNEILL. I have been advised that a scrutiny is a most expensive thing in the case of a controverted election. But this is a different thing. It is simply allowing the county judge of Prince Edward Island to do what the county judge does with us—say whether this man was entitled to vote or not. The only difference is that with us the county judge does it before the election, and in Prince Edward Island he will do it after the election. It need not be any more expensive than it is in our case, and is very different from a scrutiny under the Controverted Elections Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I found that to work this out, you would have to draw a new Controverted Elections Act; and under that Act, you can do it as quickly as with any new machinery you can devise.

Mr. McNEILL. It does seem strange that we cannot get at a decision of this matter by a county judge after an election in Prince Edward Island, as easily as in Ontario before the elections. It is very dangerous as it is.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has not been found so in fifty or sixty years.

Mr. McNEILL. But we are in a very discreditable position regarding elections at present—a condition that is almost appalling.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That does not exist with us at all.

Mr. McNEILL. Better adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend and prevent its coming in.

Mr. RUSSELL (Halifax). This is merely a Bill regarding the manner of voting at elections. I quite understand the difficulties in Prince Edward Island owing to the special circumstances, but the object sought to be attained by hon. gentlemen now is really a scrutiny of the vote, and not a mere recount of the ballots. Those two things are entirely different. This Bill merely provides for the conduct of the election, and not for the determining whether right or wrong things have been done with respect to voting. If something is required between this recount and the expense of controverted elections in Prince Edward Island, it would be far better to have a special Bill introduced to provide a cheap and summary way of testing the question as to the rights of voters who have taken the oath and been challenged, rather than intermix with these provisions regarding a recount such provisions as would be adequate to meet the case put by my hon. friend.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The other evening the Solicitor General said he would probably amend the Controverted Elections Act after we had got through with the Bill, and he will probably consider some amendments by which a simple procedure could be devised that would rectify this abuse.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not see that the difficulty can be so great. The votes in question would not be larger and could not go beyond a certain number—that is the number of initialled ballots. Those in every poll would be very small in number, and the candidates would only select those which he knew to be bad, and the investigation would be limited to those under the amendments I propose. The candidate complaining would have to furnish a list of those names when he makes his application, and could not go beyond that list. If the opposing candidate wishes to scrutinize the objected votes, he must also furnish a list, and cannot possibly go beyond that list. I do not think that the labour would be very great. The hon. Minister of Marine made a reference to the Controverted Elections Act. He said that under that Act, you might have a scrutiny without going into corrupt practices. But he knows that if you claim the seat in a trial under the Controverted Elections Act, your opponent has the right to go into corrupt practices. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) cannot pretend that there is a simple way provided at present. But he knows that if the candidates having the smaller number of votes proceeds, under the Controverted Elections Act, his opponent can enter into charges of bribery and corruption, which would necessitate a long and expensive trial. Of course, if the hon. gentleman does not accept the amendment I propose, he has a large enough majority to carry out his wishes, but if that is his position, I hope he will introduce a Bill amending the Controverted Elections Act to meet the case. He himself has said that a man can go to the poll, and if he takes the oath, his vote is accepted and counted, and there is no remedy. No remedy is provided in this Bill, and so I say it is incumbent on him, as representing that province in this House, to submit a Bill that will be applicable to Prince Edward Island. Under the Controverted Elections Act, a man must be prepared to bear the expense of a long trial, and also to put up $1,000. The hon. gentleman being a lawyer, that may suit him very well, but I think it will not suit the people of Prince Edward Island. The onus is thrown upon him, if he opposes these amendments, to propose a Bill that will be workable.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) need not wax warm on this subject. We have had manhood suffrage in Prince Edward Island for fifty or sixty years, and there has been no such trouble there as he conjures up. Every man there, prima facie, is entitled to a vote, though we may exclude a vote on some technicality occasionally. Between 1873 and 1885 we had this same system of voting, and nobody ever heard of any of these difficulties. You had general elections, and by-elections, and no difficulty arose. So little are these difficulties feared that the legislature has never made provisions for the special trial that he suggests. However, I shall be glad to sit down with him and the Solicitor General, or anybody else, and see if there is any better mode of testing these election votes, than the one which the Controverted Elections Act provides. I am as much interested as anybody in having proper machinery for testing the votes. I want to have an honest vote, and effective means of testing the vote after the election. But as I am at present advised, the Controverted Elections Act meets that case as well as any other law that can be provided. If I am wrong, I am willing to assist the hon. gentleman in making an amendment to the Controverted Elections Act. But I would call his attention to the fact that though we have had manhood suffrage for fifty or sixty years, and have had this system of voting from 1873 to 1885, nobody has claimed that there was any wrong to anybody, and fewer petitions have been filed in Prince Edward Island than in any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. MARTIN. If these are good reasons that the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) has given, we have wasted the whole night in trying to perfect this Bill. He says it worked well in Prince Edward Island in 1873 and 1874. What are we making changes for, then? It must be to meet altered circumstances.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MARTIN. But there are difficulties that arise in Prince Edward Island also. When he simply says that the Act was sufficient in years gone by, it seems to me that his argument can hardly be serious. However, I have done my duty. I have proposed these amendments, and I think I have met fairly every objection that he has raised. I have laid the case before the committee as clearly as I could. The hon. gentleman does not say that a remedy is not required, but he simply appears to think that we cannot find a remedy, and seems to think that what applies to other parts of the Dominion, will apply to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. INGRAM. With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), if he will look at section 92, subsection 5, I think he will find it meets the point. That section will provide for the return of the papers by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. BERGERON. No, that does not meet the case. That will be discussed when we get to that section.

Mr. INGRAM. I have an amendment that I desire to propose. I propose to move this amendment on the third reading:

That subsection 1 of section 90 is hereby amended by striking out after the word 'votes' in the second line on page 23 thereof the following words:

And if the applicant deposits within the said time with the clerk of the county or district court or with the prothonotary of the said Superior Court in the said judicial district, as the case may be, the sum of $100 in legal tender or in the bills of any chartered bank doing business in Canada, as security for the costs in connection with the recount or final addition of the candidate appearing by the addition to be elected.

While the member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin) wishes to have the deposit increased to $300, he has shown tonight by his explanation of the way in which they conduct a recount in Prince Edward Island, that their system is much on the same principle as that on which we conduct a recount in the province of Ontario. It is a very expensive operation. In Ontario no deposit is necessary in provincial elections. But in case of appeal from the recount, as conducted by the county judge there is a provision made in subsection 6 of section 12, of the Revised Statutes of Ontario :

That in case of appeal to the Court of Appeal the judge of the Court of Appeal may direct by whom the cost of appeal shall be paid.

And the judge makes the order accordingly. But so far as the recount is concerned, no deposit is required. The only restriction with respect to a recount in Ontario is that in case the candidate has a majority of 50 or less, he can secure a recount, but if his majority exceeds that number no recount can be granted. I see no reason why we in Ontario should be called upon to deposit anything for a recount. If I wish to have a recount I secure the assistance of a lawyer and pay him for his services, the judge receives a salary for his services, and the returning officer receives payment for his services. No witnesses are required, and there is no cost attached to the proceeding at all. I see no reason therefore why we should be called upon to make a deposit. I have had a recount on a local provincial contest, but I was not called upon to put up a deposit. I fancy if I had been called upon to put up a deposit, very little of it would have been returned to me after the lawyers got through with it.

Mr. BERGERON. I again call the attention of the committee to subsection 9 of this section :

The judge shall forthwith certify the result of the recount or final addition to the returning officer, who shall then declare to be elected the candidate having the highest number of votes; and in case of an equality of votes, the returning officer shall give the casting vote.

This provision is in conflict with section 86 which we passed this afternoon, and which says that if there is an equality of votes the returning officer shall give his casting vote. Well, he has already given his casting vote in the first place, and here you allow him to give another vote. But you are prevented from doing that by section 77, which says that no person shall vote more than once in the same electoral district at the same election. Now, under this subsection the returning officer can vote twice. Why not make the law in such a way that we will not give a man two votes when he can have but one? Whether he votes by ballot or not makes no difference.

Mr. RUSSELL. His vote has only been counted as one vote in the final result.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I am unable to see the matter in the same light as the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). It seems to me that when a recount is asked for, the vote which the returning officer gave to break the tie is practically void and done away with, because the final determination of the election is to be decided by another tribunal. Then he gives his casting vote if necessary, and the only vote which really counts. His first vote is absolutely void the moment a request is made for a recount.

Mr. BERGERON. But he has already voted.

Mr. HENDERSON. But when the recount is asked for, practically that vote is cancelled.

Mr. McNEILL. But suppose no recount was called for; in that case he had elected the candidate.

Mr. BERGERON. If there is no recount will that candidate remain elected, and if so by whose vote?

Mr. HENDERSON. I repeat that the moment the recount is asked for the first vote given by the returning officer is void by operation of the law, it ceases to have any force or effect whatever, because the final decision of that election is handed over to the judge. If the judge finds there is still an equality of votes without counting in the vote of the returning officer, he then refers it back to the returning officer to give his final vote. But certainly he does not vote twice.

Mr. INGRAM. Can any person point out why it is that the returning officer has not a vote during the election the same as any other elector. The object is, in the case of a tie, that he can give his casting vote.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) brought a point to the attention of the hon. Solicitor General which, although I do not agree with him in his contention, deserves some consideration on the part of the promoter of the Bill. It is in respect to judicial districts in which there may be more than one county court judge, or electoral districts which may be, in part, in different judicial districts. In view of that, I think it would be better that the word 'the' in the fourth line of the section should be changed to 'a.' And then, at the 13th section, it may be added, that in case an application be made to more than one judge, the judge to whom the application is first made shall be seized of jurisdiction to the exclusion of all the rest. The hon. Solicitor General evidently is of the opinion that the matter would work out on that principle. I think it is the common law of the country. A case was cited in Ontario in which one county court judge was first seized of jurisdiction, and another attempted to oust him and to take up a second application. The second judge, if he were aware that the first judge had had the application made to him was really violating, not the Criminal Code, but the criminal common law of the country. I shall call to the hon. Solicitor General's attention the case of Regina vs. Stainsbury 4 T. R. 456, and Regina vs. Great Marlow 2 East 244. These cases are summarized in the following language :

All the justices of each district are equal in authority; but, as it would be contrary to the public interest, as well as indecent, that there should be a contest between different justices, it is agreed that the jurisdiction in any particular case attaches in the first set of magistrates, duly authorized, who have possession and cognizance of the fact, to the exclusion of the separate jurisdiction of all others. So that the acts of any other, except in conjunction with the first, are not only void, but such a breach of the law as subjects them to indictment. It is rather not, however, necessary that the justice hearing the charge should be the same justice before whom the information was laid.

The Solicitor General may have been aware of the authorities when he took the ground, but, if not, this quotation from a very authoritative text-book he will be pleased to know is confirmatory of his opinion. It seems to me that it is desirable that subsection 13 should be added so as to state to whom application should be made.

Mr. BERGERON. On account of the complimentary remarks of the hon. member for Halton, I want to give notice that on the third reading of the Bill I will move that subsection 9 of clause 90 be struck out, because I contend that we would legally give the right to one man to vote twice.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before this clause is carried, I propose that it be amended by adding immediately before the word 'that,' on line 1 of page 23, the following words :

Has made an incorrect statement of the number of ballot papers cast for any candidate or (4)——

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think we had better agree to allow this section to be carried, and I will bear in mind the suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), and endeavour to incorporate it in the Bill so as to make it absolutely clear when we come to consider the amendment later on, and also the amendment of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). I would be obliged to the hon. member for Westmoreland if he would draft that 13th clause which he thinks should be added to the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That will be perfectly satisfactory.

On section 91,

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is not new ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Except that the words 'court or' are inserted in the thirty-fifth line so as to make it read 'court or judge.' It occurred to me, in dealing with this subsection, that it is rather a strange provision. I find it has been the law that a judge in our province shall have jurisdiction to summarily deal with judges of the Superior Court. I think that is rather curious, but it has been the law, and I do not like to make a change.

Mr. POWELL.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You can apply it in the province of Quebec, to the Court of Queen's Bench, where an order might be made that a judge of the Superior Court should comply with such a direction.

On section 94,

Mr. BERGERON. Before we proceed any further, I was writing a letter, and did not know that section 92 had been carried. At the end of the section I find subsection 5, which, I think, comes from the Bill of the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram):

In the event of the returning officer making a return and report to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery not complying with the provisions of this section or section 90, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall return the said report and return to the returning officer on presentation of an order signed by any judge who has jurisdiction under the latter section.

I believe this conflicts with section 98. I presume that the hon. gentleman wants to prevent what happened in the Leeds and Grenville case. The county court judge was called upon to make a recount, but the returning officer had sent the ballots to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. According to the interpretation of the Act it is only a judge of the High Court of Justice who could compel the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to send back the ballot boxes, and therefore, the county court judge could not get them back. I would suggest the following amendment :

Provided, however, that in the event of the returning officer having made his return to the writ and sent the same to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, contrary to the provisions contained in sections 90 and 92 of this Act, and the ballot papers are required for the purpose of a recount under these sections; the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall either produce in person or deliver or send back the said returns, together with all the other documents and election papers in his possession relative thereto, to the returning officer, on the presentation or production by the latter of an order to that effect signed by any judge who has jurisdiction in the matter under section 90 of this Act, and such order shall be deemed sufficient proof to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that the return to the writ in question was wrongfully made, and such order shall be obeyed by him.

As the law stood before it was only a High Court judge who could make such an order, and that is why I suggest this amendment.

Mr. INGRAM. The only difference between this Bill and the old Act is that the words 'a recount' are added here. In the Leeds and Grenville case it was because section 98 did not mention 'a recount' that the difficulty arose.

Mr. BERGERON. Under this clause whether there is a recount or not, the order could not issue from a county court judge. Suppose a recount is asked before a county court judge which happens in ninety cases out of a hundred in Ontario, the applicant goes before the court on the last day of the four days allowed. You commence proceedings before the county court judge and you find that the returning officer has already forwarded the ballots.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He could not do that.

Mr. BERGERON. But that is what he did do in the Leeds and Grenville case. They found that the ballot boxes had been forwarded, and they asked the county court judge to give an order, but the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery would pay no attention to that. Then in such a case if you go before a High Court judge he will tell you that the time is too late, and so you have no remedy. The amendment which I have suggested is, I humbly submit, the only way to obviate this, and I therefore, ask that subsection 5 of clause 92 do not form part of the Bill.

Mr. INGRAM. My understanding of the Leeds and Grenville case is this. At the conclusion of the polling day the returning officer immediately forwarded the ballots to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery without waiting for the four days. When they applied for a recount they discovered that the papers and documents were in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and there was no law by which they could compel him to return these ballots for the purposes of a recount. My object in moving this amendment was to try and get over that difficulty. It is quite clear that the returning officer violated the law in that case, but there was no power to remedy it under the Act as it stood.

Mr. BERGERON. Even so, the only judge who would have jurisdiction is a judge of the High Court of Justice, and a county court judge would not have the right to make the order even if the amendment is passed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Subsection 5 of section 92 is intended to meet the difficulty that has arisen, and enables the judge who has charge of the recount to exercise his control over the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, to oblige him to return all the documents connected with the election so as to enable a recount to be carried out. There may be some question as to whether subsection 5 goes far enough to include the ballot papers. I will have that section recast so as to give effect to our intention to include all the papers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The first part of subsection 5 does not seem to be drawn in the most artistic manner, though the object is perfectly good.

On section 95,

Mr. BERGERON. In this section, why not strike out the words, 'subsection 5 of section 92,' and insert instead 'subsection

2 of section 98'? I am speaking as if the clause which I suggested as subsection 2 of section 98 were adopted.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When my hon. friend reaches section 98, he can refer to that. I am always willing to have any clause reopened for discussion, whether it has been carried or not.

On section 96,

Mr. CASGRAIN. It sometimes happens that not only the officers, clerks and agents are in attendance at a polling place, but that the candidate is there also. I do not see why this section 96, which is intended to preserve the secrecy of voting, should not be extended so as to include the candidate in a polling place. I do not think a candidate should have any more right to go there than any one else. Then I would suggest that the following be added to subsection 4:

An elector who makes known the mark on his ballot loses his right to vote and to have his ballot deposited in the ballot box. Such ballot is placed among those to be rejected, and note thereof is taken in the poll book.

The reason of that is this, that sometimes an elector, for the purpose of showing how he votes, comes out of the polling place with his ballot paper held in such a way as designedly to show his mark on it to the agent of the candidate for whom he has voted. It seems to me that this is a means of doing away with the secrecy of the ballot. I also think that every person having anything to do with the polling booth, either as candidate or agent, should make an oath, and the one I suggest is taken from the Quebec Act, and reads as follows:

I, the undersigned, G. H., agent, by special authorization, for (or elector representing, as the case may be) J. K., one of the candidates at the election now pending for the electoral district of _____ solemnly swear (or, if one of the persons permitted by law to affirm in civil cases, solemnly affirm) that I will keep and assist in keeping and maintaining secret the names of the candidates for whom any of the voters at the poll in the voting subdivision of _____ marked his ballot in my presence, at this election, and that I shall impart no information, before the closing of the poll, respecting the names of any persons entered upon the list of electors who have or have not claimed their ballots at this poll, nor communicate at any time to any person any information obtained in the interior of this poll as to the name of the candidate for whom an elector intends to vote or has voted, &c.

It is well known that a practice has become prevalent, of people in the polling booth communicating news to those who are outside, which not only gives rise to disorder, but also, to a certain extent, interferes with the secrecy of the ballot, and permits the giving of spurious ballots for distribution to persons outside of the polling booth. If you guard as much as possible the secrecy of the polling booth, I think you will guard against these frauds. I make these suggestions for consideration.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I quite agree that the provision of section 96 should extend to the candidate. I also agree to the suggestion with reference to the elector who makes known how he voted. But I shall have to consider the proposal to put upon a candidate an obligation to take an oath every time he enters a polling booth.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish to make a remark which appears to me to be pertinent here. My hon. friend sees that in section 3 provision is made that no elector is to show his ballot paper to any person, so as to allow the name of the candidate for whom he votes to be known, and if he does so, he is liable to a penalty of $200. If he does show it, he is liable to a penalty of $200. There is not any great evil existing at present. I have not known in any elections I have run, of any complaint that people, after marking their ballots, came out and showed them, and ran the risk of the penalty. My hon. friend will be giving the right to a deputy returning officer to reject a man's vote on the charge that he had shown his ballot.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think there is a great deal in what the hon. Minister of Marine says. The electors are not all familiar with the law, and a man might innocently declare his ballot, not knowing the consequences. In my experience, I can only recall one instance where a man actually displayed his vote, and it was a peculiar case. He had voted for me and wished to show that he was independent enough to do so.

On section 97,

Mr. SPROULE. This clause provides that no person who has voted at an election, shall, in any legal proceeding, questioning the election or return, be required to state for whom he voted. Would that protect him if he refused to declare for whom he voted before a special committee of this House?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The committee of the House of Commons last year decided that he was obliged to tell. This section is the same as in the old Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I find that subsection 5 of section 96 provides that no officer, clerk or agent, or other person shall communicate the number on the back of the ballot paper given to any voter at the polling station, or attempt to ascertain, at the counting of the votes, the number on the back of any ballot paper. Surely it is not intended to have numbered ballots.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, but the objected ballots are numbered. This applies only after the ballots are cast, and an objection made at the time of the recount.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems to me that section 96 should come after clause 79 with the penal sections. It would be more in its place there than where it is. I would suggest that clause 98 should come after clause 95, because it runs on the same line.

Mr. QUINN. The Solicitor General says that this subsection 5 of section 96 applies to numbers on the ballots at the recount. But the subsection referred to any officer, clerk, agent or other person who was present at the polling. There is nothing in this Act which provides for putting numbers on the ballot papers while the polling is going on. There is only one number put on the ballot paper, and that is the number put on under section 81. There is a number on the counterfoil, but that does not go into the ballot box.

Mr. PUTTEE. If the deputy returning officer rejects any ballots, he must number those ballots. This is what this refers to.

Mr. QUINN. It is quite evident that it is not to that, that subsection 5 refers, because it says 'the number on the back of the ballot paper given to any voter.'

Mr. CLANCY. It cannot refer to a spoiled ballot, as that is returned—

Mr. PUTTEE. I said rejected ballots, not spoiled ballots.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This deals with a matter in which, evidently, it is thought secrecy is desirable. But, there does not seem to be any reason for that secrecy. So, I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) must be right in believing that it refers to the same subject as section 81.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no other section in which provisions are made respecting numbering.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It evidently is not well expressed. It might, as the hon. member for St. Ann's, Montreal (Mr. Quinn) says, refer to the counterfoil, using the word 'ballot,' though 'counterfoil' is intended.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would call attention to section 67, under which, in the province of Prince Edward Island, if the right of a person to vote is objected to, the ballot paper shall be numbered. This is for the purpose of enabling us to ascertain the way a man voted, and information must be given in court. So, I would ask the Solicitor General to consider if it would not be well that this should be recast.

Mr. BERGERON. In section 74, he will find the same thing.

Mr. QUINN. I think the object was to prevent any officer, clerk or agent giving information out to any of his friends outside the poll as to the number of votes polled, the persons who had voted, and so on. But, I think it is very badly expressed and ought to be recast.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The thing is first to find out what the object of it is.

Mr. BERGERON. I think I can help the hon. gentleman. I would suggest that it be made to read this way :

No officer, clerk, agent or other person shall communicate at any time to any person any information as to the number on the back of a ballot paper given to any voter at a polling station under the provisions of sections 67 and 74 of this Act, or attempt to ascertain at the counting of votes the number on the back of any such ballot papers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But, the law allows a number to be put on in the case of votes objected to in Prince Edward Island, with the very object that this information may be given at the proper time. It would hardly do by this section to prohibit those who have that information from giving it.

Mr. INGRAM. I think this is a half-brother to the Ontario section.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) will make that statement, I will drop the section at once.

Mr. INGRAM. I will read it, and you can judge for yourself :

No officer, clerk, agent or other person shall communicate at any time to any person any information obtained at a polling place as to the candidate for whom a voter at a polling place is about to vote or has voted, or as to the number on the back of the ballot paper given to a voter.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It looks like it. We had better consider this.

Mr. SPROULE. That is because the Ontario ballots are numbered on the back.

On section 98,

Mr. BERGERON. This section provides :

No person shall be allowed to inspect any ballot paper in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery except under the rule or order of a Superior Court judge thereof—

And so on. Now, this would prevent the carrying out of subsection 5 of section 92, and that is why I suggested, a few moments ago, that instead of adopting subsection 5 of section 92, we should add to this clause 98 :

Provided, however, that in the event of a returning officer having made his return of the writ and sent the same to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, contrary to the provisions contained in sections 90 and 92 of this Act, and the ballot papers are required for the purposes of a recount under these sections, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall either produce in person or deliver or send back the said return, together with all the other election papers in his possession relative thereto, to the returning officer on the presentation or production by the latter of an order to that effect signed by any judge who has jurisdiction in the matter under section 90 of this Act; and such order shall be deemed sufficient proof to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that the return to the writ in question was wrongfully made, and such order shall be obeyed by him.

This makes an exception to this section 98, so as to allow the other to have effect.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Would it not do to have in the third line 'or judge thereof, or judge of the county court.' There does not seem to be a contradiction here, and some words should be introduced providing for the carrying out of subsection 5 of section 92.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Section 98 deals with one set of conditions, that is, where it is necessary to get inspection of the ballot paper to institute or maintain a prosecution or defence in relation to the ballot papers. Subsection 5 of section 92 is a provision for the purpose of enabling the person who is charged with the duty of making the recount to restore to the custody of the returning officer those papers of which he has dispossessed himself.

Mr. INGRAM. All he would have to do would be to strike out the word 'recount.'

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I move to change the phraseology of section 98, so as to make it read :

Except as provided by subsection 5 of section 92, no person shall be allowed to inspect any ballot paper.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 107,

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire now to call the attention of the committee to the amendments that I propose to add after this section, and which are found on page 562 of the Votes and Proceedings :

Section 107a. On the day of the polling in cities, and on the day of the polling and the previous day everywhere else, it is prohibited within the limits of an electoral district where an election is held, under penalty of either to sell for a price in money or in exchange for any article whatever, or lend or deliver or gratuitously supply any quantity of spirituous or fermented liquor ; the only exception to this provision, the burden of proof whereof is upon the accused, is established in favour of the sick, in which case the liquor can only be sold, lent, delivered or supplied upon the certificate of a priest or minister of some religious denomination or of a physician; and whoever shall give or deliver a false certificate in respect thereof shall be liable to a fine of dollars, and in default of payment to an imprisonment of month.

Section 107b. During the days mentioned in the next preceding section, and under the same penalties, but subject to the same exception in case of sickness, it is forbidden to cause to be brought or carried, or to bring or carry, within the limits of the electoral district within which an election is held, or from one place to another within the said limits, any gratuity whatever or spirituous or fermented liquor.

This provision shall not affect the sale, carrying, delivery or purchase of spirituous or fermented liquor made in good faith and in the ordinary course of affairs by a merchant or trader; provided that the cases, casks, bottles or envelopes containing the said liquor be not opened, broken or unclosed during the days above mentioned.

Section 107c. During the days mentioned in the two next preceding sections and under the same limitation of time as to cities, whoever is found under the influence of liquor, and consequently disturbing public order in or on any street, lane, road, by-road or public square, or in any hotel, restaurant, tavern or place of public resort whatever, within the limits of an electoral district in which an election is held, is liable to a fine of _____ dollars, and in default of payment to an imprisonment of _____ days, or to both.

These clauses may appear to be rather severe; but I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that in a great many constituencies liquor plays a most important part, especially on the day of polling, and on the day preceding the polling. Now, I may say frankly, and it is something which many of my hon. friends who are now listening to me know to be the case, that on the day preceding polling, and after the speeches have been delivered and the public questions have been discussed for weeks, unscrupulous men bring liquor into the constituencies. They have meetings on the night preceding the election; they have parties, soirees, balls, at which liquor is distributed, and men are made to drink and become intoxicated, and the next day they are taken to the polls like so many sheep to vote. Men who do not understand what they are doing are made to vote in the morning when they are still under the influence of liquor. I know that this abuse exists, and other hon. gentlemen around me know that it exists, and it is to provide against this abuse that I suggest the adoption of these amendments. These sections are incorporated in the law of the province of Quebec, and I think that during the last election they deterred a great many people from a practice which has been prevalent in the past, and which has caused a great perversion of public morality in the province of Quebec, and I have no doubt the same thing has taken place in the other provinces. I also desire to add the following section:

Section 107d. It is prohibited to lease or let, as a place of assembly for an election committee or election meeting, any house or part of a house or place in which are retailed spirituous or fermented liquors, or in which food is ordinarily supplied for payment, or to make use of any such places for that purpose, under penalty of a fine of _____ dollars, and of an imprisonment of _____ months in default of payment.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

In certain districts people who run taverns insist upon a room being taken in the house in which the tavern is kept, for the purpose of holding committee meetings. Their object is simply to distribute liquor among those who attend the meeting of the committee, and it seems to me that this should be stopped too.

Mr. INGRAM. Does not the Act already provide that there shall be no treating by the candidates?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Of course.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no doubt that such a section would be a great hardship in some cases of country hotels. You are travelling around and meeting committees, and there is no place to meet committees except in hotels.

Mr. BERGERON. I think my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has the best of intentions in making these amendments. I think that most of these are in the Quebec Act passed by my hon. friend when he was Attorney General of Quebec. I have seen how they work out in practice. Of course, I may be told that the law is there; I do not know whether there is any arrangement amongst the parties themselves, but, in the local by-elections and in the local elections of 1897, which were held under this Act, bar-rooms were opened the day before the day of nomination and the day after, and a man could get whisky anywhere in the places that I have been in my own riding. Of course this does not mean that it would not be a good thing to put such a provision on the statute-book, but I can assure my hon. friend from East Elgin that there will be no danger of what he is speaking about happening, because the hotels are always open the day before, the day of nomination, and the day after. The question is whether it would be better to have such a law on the statute-book and allow it to remain a dead letter or to have it on the statute-book and enforce it. In practice it did not seem to make any difference in the last elections in our province.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is no reason to say that the law has been violated. I take issue with my hon. friend on this point. In the district of Quebec I know perfectly well that every tavern, every place of entertainment and every saloon was shut up on election day. I know that such is the case at places I visited myself.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They cannot sell anything within the limits on election day.

Mr. CASGRAIN. No, but I am making the law more stringent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You are making it so that one man cannot treat another on the day before or the day after.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The abuse is great, and I think the time has come to stop all this. The difficulty was that under the Controverted Elections Act it was not possible to adopt all the provisions of the English Act or to appoint a public prosecutor whose business it would be to attend trials and ex-officio prosecute anybody against whom proof had been made of having committed an offence against the Act. If you could introduce this into the Controverted Elections Act or make the Act so stringent that it would be impossible to saw off one offence against another offence committed by another party, then, we would attain the object I have in view.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Controverted Elections Act contains that provision now. You cannot do it legally.

Mr. CASGRAIN. People drive through the Controverted Elections Act very easily. I suggested the other evening certain amendments which I think should be made to the Controverted Elections Act by which it would be impossible to saw off these election protests. The only remedy is the remedy adopted in the English law, and that is to provide a public prosecutor who would attend the trials, and ex-officio, take the necessary proceedings. Everybody is interested in having pure elections. Aside from other considerations we are interested personally in that we should make elections as cheap as possible. Elections are becoming so expensive that it is almost ruinous to conduct an election, and if you succeed you have to spend four or five or six months in Ottawa, which is driving worthy men out of political life. We are all interested in having these elections as pure and cheap as possible, and we should take every means to accomplish that end.

Mr. INGRAM. Before the hon. gentleman takes his seat, I would like if he would explain the first line of section 107d :

It is prohibited to lease or let as a place of assembly for an election committee or an election meeting any house or part of a house, &c.

Does 'to let' mean to rent?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose I went into a hotel, met a few friends and proposed to hold a committee meeting, and we sat down, would the provision apply to that?

Mr. CASGRAIN. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Well, then I have no objection to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it to mean that, because this is a custom which prevails very largely, and a hotel is the only convenient place for the purpose. On election day all hotels are closed, and there is no liquor sold, so far as I know. But on other days hotels are largely used for committee rooms when you do not want to go to the expense of renting permanently and keeping up a committee room where you must provide light and heat and a man to take care of the room. I do not think the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Montmorency will be practicable in Ontario. That part in regard to liquor, I think, would be very difficult to work out; still, in some respects, I think it might be made suitable. In regard to pairing off at elections—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not in this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. In regard to that I have always held for a great many years past that it is one of the most baneful things under our system. It tends more to demoralize political life than anything I know of.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is a regular blackmailing system.

Mr. SPROULE. I have fought against it for ten or fifteen years, and I regret to say that I have not got much countenance from men that I had a right to expect it from—men in public life in Canada. For many years past it has been not only a blackmailing system, but it has been a means devised to prevent frauds coming out that otherwise would come out. Men who take part in it and who assist in carrying it out are particeps criminis after the Act, just as much as one who stood by and looked at a crime being committed and took no part to prevent it. In my judgment it is one of the absolute necessities of the time, that we should put some law on the statute-book to prevent this as much as possible. The law which we have contemplates that when an election petition is filed it is filed upon certain allegations that are sworn to. They are either true or false, so far as the party making the affidavit knows. If they are true they should at least go into court and try to prove the allegations. If they are false the party who makes that affidavit should be sent to penitentiary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know that all legislation of this character is found to be difficult in its operation, but that is not a reason why we should attempt to put such legislation on the statute-book and make an honest effort to enforce it. I sympathize with the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) in the views he has expressed and I trust that the hon. Solicitor General, while perhaps not adopting the amendments proposed in their entirety, will endeavour to accept them as far as possible if the law can be so amended as to meet the abuses which the hon. member has described. But, the conditions which the hon. gentleman has described are not confined to the province of Quebec, and there are no doubt abuses that we should deal with by legislation. Some hon. gentlemen may say: 'What is the use of legislating unless you can make sure that people will not override the law?' Notwithstanding that this will be done to some extent, if we put a law upon the statute-book it will have an effect on the best class of people in the country. There are loose ideas in regard to the manner of conducting elections. Men who are honourable in every other relation of life have loose ideas as to how men should be expected to conduct elections. Many a man who in every other respect is a model citizen, will violate the election law in the most flagrant manner. It is our duty to do something, if possible, to instil in the mind of the average citizen a more correct appreciation of his duty in that respect. We know that the use of liquor in connection with elections is but too common. If we can do anything that will prevent that, and which will introduce a better system, we shall be doing a good work. Now, Sir, while the Controverted Election law is not immediately an issue here, I personally have somewhat radical views on that subject. I believe that the Controverted Election Act is not a very good piece of machinery. It seems to be designed largely to prevent inquiry into elections. We find that it requires a man to put up a deposit before he can go into court with a complaint, and no doubt that operates well at times, but all the same its tendency is to prevent inquiry into elections. I know the view which I am going to express is radical, and I wish to say that I am only speaking for myself, when I express the hope, that the time is not far distant, when instead of requiring a man to put up a deposit before he can have an election trial, that one of the first duties of the courts of the country, after an election, will be to inquire into these election matters voluntarily, and to hear every man who has a complaint to make, without waiting for the intervention of a private citizen. I do not know that our judiciary could be better employed for three months after an election, than in holding courts of inquiry into the manner in which an election has been conducted. That is a radical view, I admit, but if we are in earnest about this matter, we have to get away from the old-fashioned methods. Instead of putting obstacles in the way of a man going into the election court, let the doors be open so that the poorest citizen of Canada, if he believes there is wrong-doing in an election, shall be enabled to bring his complaint before a judicial tribunal. That view may be considered as advanced and radical, but at all events it is my view. Then as to the 'pairing-off' system; we all know that hon. members on that side, and hon. members on this side, while they are shouting for pure elections and for honest ballot, and so forth, will walk out behind the Speaker's chair, and agree to 'saw-off' their election petitions. I agree with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that we should have different methods in that respect. The man who puts in an election petition should not do so unless he has some bona fide cause of complaint, and then he should not be allowed to withdraw that petition under this system of pairing off.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman allow a person outside of the constituency who knows nothing about the facts to enter a petition?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If he could make an affidavit that he was possessed of certain knowledge, he ought to be allowed to enter a petition. But, if I had my way, I would not wait for a petition at all. I am speaking for myself, when I say that I would make it the duty of a judge of the higher court, within one month after the holding of an election, to hold open court for every one who wished to come and make a complaint about the conduct of that election. That is a very advanced and radical view, I admit.

Mr. BERGERON. But you could not until the allegations are made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not wait for any allegations to be made. I would have the court held at a certain date, and I would allow any one to come forward to make his complaint—just as we are doing now in another case—without waiting for an allegation. If you want thorough investigation into the conduct of elections, you must encourage that investigation, and not put obstacles in the way of it, as the present law does.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding), appears to be very serious in this matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am very serious.

Mr. BERGERON. I agree with a good deal that the hon. gentleman has said. I agree that elections should be carried out fairly, honestly and honourably, but when he looks forward to the day when the judges of the land will, for three months after an election, voluntarily invite people to come before them and tell what was done during the election, I think the hon. gentleman has forgotten a good deal about what occurs at elections.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have been through some elections.

Mr. BERGERON. So have I, but with all due respect to the judges, and notwithstanding all the confidence I have in them, I shall do everything in my power to prevent the realization of such a scheme as the Minister of Finance indicates. We know how election petitions are engineered today. We know that in almost every case an election petition is not gotten up honestly, but that it is blackmailing, pure and simple. Who puts up the thousand dollars deposit? Is it the poor honest man in the county whose conscience is pricking him about the manner in which the election was conducted? Not at all. There is a committee to deposit the money, and they want to contest such and such an election. They get the thousand dollars, which is put in the hands of a lawyer—not in the hands of a country lawyer generally, because they are afraid he might keep it—but it is put in the hands of a lawyer from Montreal or some other city, who holds it closely in his pocket, delivers it to the prothonotary, takes a receipt and says to the prothonotary: Do not make a mistake, I want that thousand dollars to be given back to me, and not to Mr. So-and-so.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is hard on the Montreal lawyers.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is the way it is done.

Mr. BERGERON. I have been protested three or four times, and I know how it is done. What is the next step? Probably the last man in the county, a man that you would not trust with a dollar bill, a man without reputation or honour, he is secured to make the petition, and then you have three or four country lawyers who have been starving for four months, and who think there is something in it, and whether it is true or not, what the petitioner says, and even if the election was mostly honourably conducted; if there is a man in the county who has done anything wrong, or if one can be bribed to perjure himself for $25, he is brought forward. That is what members of parliament are subjected to now. Political life is not such a beauty after all. It is not such a grand thing to be a politician. We are subjected to blackmailing every day as it is, and why should we draw down more blackmailing upon our heads. I have not that blind confidence in the judges of the land that would induce me to allow them, without any reason whatever, to examine my political conduct. Are we not the highest court in the land in this parliament? Can we not, and should we not protect ourselves here? Whenever there is a question of a judge before parliament, show me the man who will rise in his seat and say what he thinks about it. They are afraid. There are a number of lawyers here, and those who are not lawyers may be sultors, and they all know that judges are human, and so they are afraid. They are not any different kind of men from what we are. They are generally old politicians. Would the Minister of Finance, for whose judgment I have much respect, manacle and chain the member of parliament in the hands of these men. I approve of the sentiment which guided my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain), in making his amendments to the election law, but I tell him that law is not enforced in the province of Quebec. It may be in force, in some cases, in the district of Quebec, but I have been in many counties at elections in 1897, and the law was not carried out. The law is too rigorous to be enforced. It provides that hotels shall be closed the day before an election, as well as the day of an election, but so far as I could see, the people did not seem to know there was such a law upon the statute-book. Not only were the hotels open the day before the election, but they were open on polling day as well, a thing which was strongly forbidden under the old statute. I was surprised that the legislature of Quebec should pass such a rigorous law, but whether they passed it or not, it has never been enforced. I repeat once more that we should legislate in this parliament, and do everything in our power to have elections conducted honestly and honourably, and cheaply. Good, but let us not make laws which would be so stringent that they could not be enforced. I ask my hon. friend to think of these observations, and not take such a radical step.

Mr. D. K. ERB (South Perth). I would like to ask the hon. member for Montmorency why he proposes by his amendment to make a distinction between cities and country districts in regard to the conduct of elections. As I understand, he proposes to prohibit the sale of liquor outside of cities on the day before polling, as well as on polling day, but to allow the sale of liquor in cities on the day before polling. My idea is that if it is an undesirable thing to have liquor sold in country places on the day preceding the election, it must be equally undesirable in cities. He contends that the sale of liquor on the day before the election in country districts is likely to cause electors to get into an intoxicated condition before the election, so that on election day they are led to the polls like sheep. Does not the same thing exist in cities, or are the people in cities more moral than the people in country districts?

Mr. CASGRAIN. The only reason I made this distinction was that in my experience the same abuses do not exist in cities as in country districts. At first I included cities, but on representations being made to me to that effect, I excluded cities. I have no objection to including cities as well as rural districts.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think the hon. gentleman's amendment goes far enough even then. The experience of almost every member of this House, if he has been any length of time in public life, must be that liquor is often a more potent influence in elections than money. For weeks before an election men have been debauched and kept in a state that was disgraceful. I think an effort should be made to stop the use of liquor during the whole time of an election contest, if that could be done. I do not think you could go too far in this direction. Cases have come under my own observation that were perfectly disgraceful. Kegs of beer and whisky have been taken to houses, where there have been dances, and efforts of every kind made to debauch the electors for weeks before an election. I hope my hon. friend will be supported in an effort to do away with practices of this kind, which usually obtain secretly, because in country places these things are usually not brought under your notice. I can easily see how the evil would be much greater in rural districts than in cities, where it would be under the watchful eye of the police. I think this an opportune time for both sides of the House to join in any reasonable effort to suppress so great an evil.

Mr. INGRAM. If you close the hotels on election day and the day preceding, I do not see that there is anything to prevent the electors getting barrels of flour. With respect to the hotel men, I do not wish to stand up here for the purpose of defending them; but there are always two sides to a question. The hotel keepers of the province of Ontario as a rule pay very high licenses and are subject to very stringent rules under the license commissioners. They are, as a whole, a very good class of people; they try to carry on respectable hotels; and I think we ought to be careful about adopting a provision which will close up the places of business of these men for two days consecutively. Many of them feel that they have now a grievance in being compelled to close their hotels on election day. I think that is proper, but before making the radical change involved in this amendment, I think notice should be given to these gentlemen.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I want to call attention to some words in the proposed amendment with respect to the leasing or letting of a room in a house or place in which are retailed spirituous or fermented liquors, or in which food is ordinarily supplied for payment, or to make use of any such places for that purpose. Therefore, the question of the hon. member for East Elgin should be answered in the opposite way; he cannot have the use of any part of a hotel for a committee meeting under that section as it stands.

Mr. WILSON. Do you think that is desirable?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not saying whether it is desirable or not.

Mr. WILSON. I think a member of the government, knowing the difficulty of getting places in which to hold meetings in the country, should see that this clause ought to be changed. It is going to put the candidates in a very awkward position.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is intended only for permanent committees. The clause may not be worded as it should be, but the intention is this, that nobody should be allowed to have a permanent committee which lasts probably during the time the election is being organized, in a hotel or a place where liquor is sold.

Mr. HOLMES. I think you run up against a difficulty there if that suggestion is acted upon, because in rural places it is very difficult to get committee rooms except in hotels. In my riding there are absolutely no committee rooms except in hotels. It does not follow that liquor is used in connection therewith.

Mr. ELLIS. My opinion is that the committee rooms may be very well dispensed with altogether. What is done at them?

On section 108,

Mr. CASGRAIN. Here is another amendment which I suggest:

Section 107e. Each candidate can have only one place paid for in each polling subdivision for his election committee, under penalty, &c.

The reason for that is that in certain cities and other places also, men will come to a candidate and insist on having rooms in their houses rented for committee rooms. I have seen as many as ten committee rooms on a short street. They are not needed at all; it is simply blackmail which certain persons in a constituency impose on a candidate. It is simply corruption. You rent these rooms, not for committee rooms at all. Probably three out of four are never used. It is simply a way of holding up a candidate and telling him, if you do not rent a room, you will not get my vote nor the votes of my friends. I want to do away with that.

On section 109,

Mr. HENDERSON. The last paragraph of this section reads as follows:

Provided always, that the actual personal expenses of any candidate, his expenses for actual professional services performed and bona fide payments for the fair cost of printing and advertising, shall be held to be expenses lawfully incurred, and the payment thereof shall not be a violation of this Act.

It might be presumed from that, that these were the only lawful expenses and that all others would be illegal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is not the intention. We had better assume that everything is done is legal except that which is prohibited.

Mr. HENDERSON. In that case strike out this proviso.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I propose to add another subsection, subsection i:

Every person who immediately previous to or during an election and by reason thereof, with a view of promoting and securing votes or of interfering with the freedom and sincerity of the electors or the electorate, causes temporary work to be performed by the electors whom he employs and pays;

Every elector who participates in such work becomes incapable ipso facto of voting at such election and incurs a penalty of _____ dollars and an imprisonment _____ months in default of payment.

In certain constituencies people are employed at temporary work to induce them to vote for one of the candidates. I remember an election in a constituency in which a railway ran, that was then leased by the government. A few days before the election a lot of men were employed on the road to shovel snow, at least 400, and the implied understanding was that only those favourable to the government candidate and who would vote for him would be so employed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under this every man who took employment some days before an election would be understood to have taken it out of corrupt motives.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If it is proved that fifty men were so employed, and that, under the circumstances, the presumption is clearly made out that the work was given them in order to secure their votes, fifty votes would be taken from the number cast for the candidate elected.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They may have voted for the other candidate.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is a provision which resembles a great many others. In the Act there are provisions declaring that if an offence is proved against a certain party, his vote is taken off.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under this a man who innocently went to work would be punished although not guilty of any crime. You do not provide, in his case, as in the case of his employers, that there should be a corruptive motive. All the unlawful intention necessary, in the case of an employer, to make him guilty, is left out in the case of a workman.

Mr. INGRAM. Take the case of an old man who has a vote in a certain place. The young fellow undertakes to drive him to the polling booth, but, instead he drives him in the opposite direction, for the purpose of doing him out of his vote. Nothing can be done to him. If there is temporary employment given to induce those employed to vote for one of the candidates, that should be punished. There is no doubt about it; and I think something of this kind should be inserted to prevent it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the disqualification for voting. I do not see how you could make it effective unless you had some means of challenging the voter at the polls. I do not see that it would do simply to cut off so many votes from a successful candidate, because these parties may not have voted for him. The corruption may have been on the losing side, and, with all their corruption, they may not have succeeded in electing their man. It seems to me you must devise some way of challenging the voter at the poll, thereby preventing him voting.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I see there are two clauses in the old law which are not inserted in this Bill. They relate to bribing a man to run or to prevent him from running. I would suggest that the clauses in the old law should be inserted in this Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How would that affect a man who helps his neighbour with his deposit?

Mr. CASGRAIN. It would not affect him, if it were not done with corrupt intent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We may have to borrow our deposits, and do not want to be punished for that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That clause is in the Bill already, and if the committee will go on with the other clauses, I will find it.

On section 110,

Mr. CASGRAIN. You punish the man who bribes, but not the man who is bribed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Your amendment provides for that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My amendment is as follows:

Section 110a. Every elector who with a corrupt motive, accepts or takes any such meat, drinks, refreshments or provisions, is also guilty of the offence of treating, and is liable to a fine not exceeding $50 and not less than $10, and to an imprisonment of three months in default of payment.

On section 112,

Mr. INGRAM. This clause relates to undue influence, and that is one of the worst things we have to contend with. There is a great deal of intimidation on the part of some people, and it is not confined to one party more than another. Take the large employers of labour who wish their men to vote for a certain candidate. He instructs his foreman how to talk to these men and tell them that if they know their own interest, they will vote for the candidate favoured by the employer, and if they do not vote in that way means will be taken to injure them. This is too grave an offence to be dealt with by a fine alone.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is made an indictable offence.

Mr. INGRAM. What does that amount to?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The offenders can be sent to jail.

Mr. INGRAM. Why not specify the length of time right here in the section—say, imprisonment for twelve months. A money penalty is not enough. I give notice that on the third reading, I will move something of that kind.

On section 113,

Mr. R. HOLMES (West Huron). This refers to hiring rigs. Some amendment should be made here. While this has been the law for a number of years past, in our elections it has been absolutely necessary to hire rigs, and, practically, the law has been violated. It seems to me there should be a provision for hiring necessary conveyances on the day of election. That would not allow much latitude for bribery or wrong-doing.

Mr. WILSON. This section is openly violated.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Like all excessively stringent provisions—they are never observed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I scarcely share that opinion. So far as I know, this section of the law is fairly well observed. It may be that the county in which my elections are fought is smaller than most of constituencies, and that there is not the same necessity for conveyances. But, candidly, I do not see the necessity for conveyances to convey voters to the polls in a rural section. Almost every man has his own conveyance, and rarely has one to go more than three or four miles to the polling place. Besides, there is no difficulty in getting a ride with a neighbour who is going to poll his vote. I think this is an excellent thing for the candidates. It is a very serious matter to legalize the hiring of conveyances.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I know a constituency in which the first thing the candidate has to do when he presents himself is to plank down $1,900 for carters, and I know other constituencies in which the same thing is done. It is done to evade the law. These people are hired a week or ten days before the election comes off, but with the understanding that they will drive on election day. I know that in the city of Montreal—and the members from the city of Montreal will confirm what I say—the first thing a candidate has to do is to hire half the carters in his constituency, or as many as he can find, and pay them an enormous sum of money. There should be a stop put to this. In these constituencies the elections cost $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000 a side. The hon. gentleman says that these stringent provisions are not observed. Why? Because there is an understanding between the parties to saw off contestations. In the amendments which I will propose later on as to the election expenses, I limit the expenditure in each constituency to a sum which is deemed to be sufficient for the organization of the election, and any money which is expended beyond that sum is an illegal payment. I go still further, and I say that we can only employ such persons, for instance, so many carters for so many polling divisions, so many secretaries, so many messengers, and these are the only men you can employ, and the employment of any man in any other capacity is a corrupt act. That is the way we are going to prevent all this. Now, there is another abuse regarding carters. In some constituencies every second farmer on election day becomes a carter to carry his neighbour to a meeting or to the poll, and gets paid for it.

Mr. U. WILSON (Lennox). I think the explanations just made are correct. I think it is better to make it legal to hire the necessary number of carriages on election day than to have the candidate bled for two or three weeks to pay two or three prices for every team they get. Besides, we ought not to make the law so stringent that men will have to do wrong to get over it. I am strongly in favour of allowing the hiring of certain number of cabs on election day.

Mr. A. SEMPLE (Centre Wellington). It seems to me the prohibition of the hiring of conveyances on election day is the best protection a candidate can have. If they were allowed to hire conveyances, people would be coming by the hundred to the candidate to be employed, and they would be willing to throw in their vote as well. That would furnish an excellent avenue for all kinds of bribery, and it would cost the candidates much more to carry on an election. So far as I know, very few men accept any consideration for driving their conveyances on election day. They are generally plucky. The Conservatives get all the voters out they can and the Liberals likewise, and they are agreed to take the law as it is, and it is found to work admirably. It is a good thing also that the candidates cannot treat, otherwise crowds of thirsty men would be following them from one place to another.

On section 121,

Mr. CASGRAIN. Under this clause you cannot sue upon a contract, but you can sue for the delivery or the value of the goods. I suggest that you should debar a person completely from having any action at all. I think that would be a good way to prevent many unlawful contracts for the supply of goods during an election. If a man, for instance, hires a rig for election day, or he hires a rig with a corrupt motive for a considerable sum of money and he does not pay, he cannot be sued upon this contract. The contract is nil. But he can sue for the value of services, at least before our courts, and judgment has been rendered against candidates. Why not take away the action completely, either upon a contract or for the value of the goods delivered, or for services rendered?

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Even for the payment of lawful expenses?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Why should you do that?

Mr. CASGRAIN. To protect the candidates.

On section 123,

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that not an extraordinary section?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has been there for years and years.

Mr. HENDERSON. Still, it is an extraordinary section, jeopardizing seats which may have been earned legally without the slightest corrupt act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It says a corrupt practice by your agent.

Mr. HENDERSON. Without your consent or knowledge. That agent may be a man who constitutes himself an agent of the candidate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. The authority for his agency is something utterly beyond the control of the candidate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the court must determine the agency.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly, but the candidate does not appoint the agent. A man who attends a committee meeting becomes an agent, and the candidate has no knowledge of it. It is entirely without his consent or knowledge, and yet such a man becomes an agent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. HOLMES. It is so held in Ontario.

Mr. HENDERSON. The candidate is unseated on that kind of agency. I think it is strange on our part, sitting here as representatives of the people, to enact any such legislation. It is going too far altogether. We ought to protect ourselves as well as protect the electors. It seems to me to be foolishness on our part to give any man in the country such absolute control over a candidate who may have honestly secured the seat.

Mr. WILSON. I would like the hon. Solicitor General to tell us what constitutes agency.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would have to read all the cases that have been decided in the last twenty years.

Mr. WILSON. But in a general way.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would say that the case submitted by the hon. member for Halton does not constitute agency.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must beg to differ entirely from the hon. Solicitor General, because the judges in Ontario certainly hold that it does.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am sorry to differ from the hon. gentleman, but I cannot accept it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The judges in Ontario interpret the law in that way.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I might go to your committee meeting for the purpose of making myself an agent and then disqualify you.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Unless you can connect the candidate with the organization of the committee, surely the courts will not call it agency.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not necessary to connect the candidate with the organization of the committee as long as it is a committee for the purpose of promoting the election. Time after time judges have unseated candidates on that ground. When a candidate was in no way responsible for a man's agency he was held liable. I think it is most extreme legislation, and I think the clause ought to be carefully looked into, and some limitation made to this agency. Holding the view which the hon. Solicitor General does in regard to agency, I am not at all surprised that he approves of the section, but, if he takes the extreme view of the judges in Ontario he will see that the section is not fair.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am afraid we make the judges of Ontario liable for a lot of holdings which they would not be willing to acknowledge.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have been unseated myself through the agency of a man over whom I had no control. He attended a committee meeting. I was in no way responsible for him whatever, and yet a simple act performed by him compelled me to give up my seat.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That was a bad judgment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not going to say whether it was a good or bad judgment. I know that such agency was also held in another case because I have been unseated more than once. If you file a petition in Ontario you can depend upon it, unless you get a saw-off there is no chance of escaping. You condemn that practice of sawing off protests, but it is the only possible means by which a man can hold his seat. If it goes to the court you can rest assured that he is going to be unseated. This is the rule unless there may be some underhand means taken of withholding the evidence, and pretending you are going to prosecute a case, whereas really you are not going to do it. But, if there is a fair trial there is no possibility of holding the seat under a clause like this. I think the hon. Solicitor General ought to modify this clause, and I hope he will inquire into the interpretation put upon it by the judges of Ontario. If he does I am sure he will modify it because I do not think he would desire that such a hardship should be imposed upon men who have personally conducted a fair election.

Mr. SPROULE. I can endorse what the hon. member for Halton says in regard to agency, because as soon as a trial takes place and a corrupt act is found out the first thing that is attempted is to connect the party who committed this act with some committee. If it can be proved to the satisfaction of the court that he has been an attendant at the committee the agency is established.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is an entirely different story.

Mr. SPROULE. But not that he has been appointed by the candidate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. But if he has been an attendant at a committee for the purpose of organization, he is regarded as an agent. Unless they can connect him with committee work the agency is not established.

Mr. INGRAM. As far as agency is concerned they stretch the word agency very much. In my case, after three or four days spent in taking evidence they held a man to be an agent. I met him on the street, and I asked him if he was going to take any part in the election. He said: 'No, the last time I took part in an election I got into difficulty.' Meeting a gentleman upon the street a few days after he bluffed him on the election, and he put up quite a sum of money on me and went in to save his own money. He came once or twice to a committee meeting, but had nothing to do with the committee. He went out and bought a good Liberal for $2 and a drink of whisky. In that case agency was established.

Mr. HOLMES. The local member for West Huron was unseated under similar circumstances. A young man went into a committee room; he was not known to have taken any part in the election, but he was seen in the committee room, and as a result the local member for West Huron is to-day unseated.

Mr. HENDERSON.

On section 125,

Mr. CASGRAIN. After this clause, I suggest that the following be inserted:

All placards, posters, publications and printed matter whatever, placarded, posted or distributed during an election, and having connection therewith or reference thereto, shall visibly bear upon the face thereof the name and address of the printer and publisher thereof; and whoever prints, publishes, posts or distributes them without such names and addresses as aforesaid, is, if a candidate or one of his agents, guilty of a corrupt practice, and if another person, incurs a penalty not exceeding _____ dollars and an imprisonment not exceeding _____ months in default of payment.

That is taken from the English law. It often happens that during an election placards are posted up or handbills are distributed in which there are libellous statements. They bear no name whatever. You cannot trace them to anybody. They are sometimes distributed during the night time, sometimes one or two days before the election takes place, and you have no recourse against the persons who distribute these posters or placards. If the name of the printer or publisher were printed on the face of these placards or posters, then, if any false or libellous statements were made, any statement which could injure a candidate personally, you could have the man arrested and brought before the court. This section is taken from the English law, and I think it should be adopted.

Mr. INGRAM. I think the hon. Solicitor General ought to be willing to adopt this section.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Which one is that; 125a?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. All right.

On section 132,

Mr. INGRAM. This is copied from the Ontario law, but the Ontario Act provides a penalty of $200 against the returning officer if he does not carry it out, and here you seem to omit the penalty.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under the general section 19 a penalty of $500 is provided.

On section 142,

Mr. CASGRAIN. I intend moving a number of amendments here replacing sections 143, 144, 145 and 146. These amendments have been published in the Votes and Proceedings, and without any further notice I shall move them on the third reading of the Bill.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They will be taken up on the reconsideration of the whole Bill.

On section 145,

Mr. HENDERSON. Do I understand that under this section a candidate will be at liberty to pay legal expenses which have been overlooked, or an account which has not been rendered in the time prescribed by law?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I think it is a very good provision. I have an account pending for four years which I was compelled not to pay, simply because I knew that a protest could be filed against me at any time if I did. I have been wondering how in the world the law would allow me to pay my honest debt, and I am glad the Solicitor General now has made a provision enabling me to do so.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I warn my hon. friend that this will only apply to the next election. The way to pay your last election account is to go to your solicitor and let him have the money.

Mr. HENDERSON. But I went to my solicitor and he advised me not to pay it.

On section 147,

Mr. INGRAM. Subsection 2 refers to the fees of returning officers.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are not paid half enough.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not object to what they are paid; it is to the way they are paid. It offers a premium to them to create a large number of subdivisions, many of which are not necessary at all, and thus increase the cost both to the candidates and to the public.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think it would be better to let that stand.

On schedule L,

Mr. INGRAM. I think in this should be included the form of the ballot and directions as to how the ballot should be marked.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Better let that stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. There ought to be another schedule giving the oath to be used in the case of an ordinary voter. I fail to find anything of that kind. The deputy returning officer will be unable to get it unless he hunts up the provincial statutes. It will be important to have the oath included in the Bill. Is it the intention of the Solicitor General to add a schedule giving the form of vote required in such a case?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are to receive a copy of the local elections Acts with the affidavits.

Mr. HENDERSON. There will have to be a change made from the oath used in the Ontario Act.

Schedule u allowed to stand.

Mr. INGRAM. I wish to give notice of a couple of amendments:

That section 34 is hereby amended by striking out all the words after the word 'paper' in the sixth line thereof, and also by repealing subsections 2 and 3 of the said section, and substituting the following therefor:

'2. Upon receiving a nomination paper, the returning officer shall give a receipt therefor, and such receipt shall in every case be sufficient evidence of the production or filing of such nomination paper and of the consent of the candidate.'

That section 38 of the said Act is hereby amended by inserting after the word 'time' in the first line thereof the words, 'within forty-eight hours,' and by striking out the words, 'and before the closing of the poll,' in line 2 thereof.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business is to be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Probably some government Bills will be taken up first, and then Supply, if we have time.

Mr. WILSON. What estimates will be gone on with?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I think, probably, militia; but I cannot say with certainty, because my hon. friend the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) is not present.

Mr. WILSON. Will you not take up immigration?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think immigration is through. If not, we will take that up in preference.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m. (Thursday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 14, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have received the following notice from the Governor General's Secretary, which I propose to read to the House:

Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
Ottawa, June 13, 1900.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Thursday, the 14th instant, at four o'clock p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to the Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present session.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

L. G. DRUMMOND, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the House of Commons.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EMERGENCY RATION.

Mr. FREDERICK D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I now present to the House the motion which, I believe, was deferred from yesterday, which is a motion that a select committee of this House be chosen to investigate the charge which I had the honour of reading in this House yesterday. I would like to say one word in regard to the character of privilege which I gave to the motion which I made yesterday. Let me, in the first place, state to the House in regard to this character of privilege—

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) will pardon me, I will just interrupt him for one moment. I observe that the printed notice given is for to-morrow, Friday.

Mr. MONK. There is an evident misprint. The House will remember that it was agreed yesterday that the motion should be taken into consideration to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER. All right.

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend will look at the French version he will find that the notice was properly printed. The error evidently occurred at the Printing Bureau. As two days' notice is necessary for a motion of this kind, they evidently assumed that I had made a mistake, but, as the hon. gentleman will remember, we agreed to proceed to-day. As I was saying, there is, in our own parliament, in respect to motions having the character of motions of this kind, a greater latitude than that which exists in regard to similar motions in England. I find in the 'Parliamentary Procedure and Practice' of Sir John Bourinot, the following:

The precedents go to show that the Canadian House of Commons, in its desire to deal promptly with all questions affecting its members, has generally waived the strict rules which govern matters of privilege properly speaking, and given every possible facility for inquiry thereon. When a member proposes to make a motion touching another member, it is frequently found convenient that he should state his intentions in his place, and then give notice that he will move it when motions are called in due order on a subsequent day.

If the House takes into consideration the fact, which, I assume, is beyond doubt, that this statement which I made yesterday affects the position of a member of this House, not only in his capacity as a minister of the Crown, but also in his capacity as a member of this House, and if it furthermore recalls the preceding debate in which I was invited by the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in this House to formulate a charge, it will become evident that it was in order for me yesterday to place my statement before the House in order to safeguard my own position irrespective of any other procedure which should apply in a case of this kind. In regard to the motion itself, I have followed pretty strictly the procedure which was adopted by our late lamented Speaker, Sir James Edgar, in 1892, when he made a charge of a character somewhat analogous to this. The only difference is, that, in 1892, by his motion, Sir James Edgar asked that the reference be made to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It appears, however, if hon. gentlemen will refer to the debate upon that motion of his, that there was a general consensus of opinion that a question of that kind would only suffer delay by being referred to so large a committee, and there was a general consensus of opinion that upon a charge of this kind the reference could far more profitably be made to a select committee. There is, in the motion, as the House will observe, a request that all witnesses should give their evidence under oath. I am aware that under the statute of 1894 that is not absolutely necessary, but that the statute provides that any committee of this House may swear witnesses brought before it. It says it may swear them, but the general rule, I find from precedents in England, where a similar statute to that of 1894 has existed for some considerable time, is that the direction of the House has always been imperative on committees to swear witnesses. I thought it was better to incorporate that instruction in the reference. I have also added the word 'articles' to the customary words 'papers,' &c., which usually appear in motions of this kind, because it is possible that, in the present inquiry, apart from papers, statements, accounts, letters, &c., it may be necessary to order the production of certain articles before the committee. So much for the procedure; now, as to the substance of the charge itself. It seems to me that a member of this House, making a statement upon which is founded a charge for which he demands an investigation, should not prejudge the case. The statement is made; it is articulated carefully, and he should refrain from making a commentary upon evidence which has not been adduced. However, I think it is necessary to point out to the House some few of the particular points raised by the statement; in the first place, to show what was the motive which caused me to originate this procedure, and in the next place, in order that the House should be fully instructed as to the basis of the statement which I made. In the first place, I will ask the House to observe that the gist of the whole charge is, that the food tested at Kingston was not the food which was forwarded to our troops in South Africa. That is the main point of the statement, and beyond that, strictly speaking, it was unnecessary to go. However, perhaps, from the fact of my long practice of my profession, and, perhaps, from the necessity which, I think, existed to articulate the grounds of my charge, I deemed it useful, if not absolutely essential, to give further details, and to give the circumstances which led me to make before this House the statement which I made. I articulated particularly the acquaintance of the hon. the Minister of Militia with Mr. Hatch, the sole manufacturer of the food which had been tested at Kingston. Upon that point I will pray the House to remember that the hon. the minister stated most formally in this House at the time of the first debate, and stated repeatedly, that he did not know Mr. Hatch. I confess that this statement so formally made by the Minister of Militia gave me considerable embarrassment because it seemed to me that we might with reason assume that if this gentleman had never met the Minister of Militia, it became difficult to tax him with not having communicated with him at the time that the necessity existed for provisioning our troops. But there was evidently a lapse of memory on the part of the hon. gentleman, because I took the trouble to make a most careful investigation, and no possible doubt can exist in the mind of anybody, that the minister on several occasions, long previously to the two circumstances which the statement refers to, had seen Mr. Hatch, had seen him on business, and on business connected with the very subject which is engaging the attention of the House. It is quite conceivable that in the hurry and bustle and occupation which became incumbent upon the Minister of Militia at the time of the sending out of the troops, this circumstances may have escaped his memory, but the fact is there, and I bring it to the attention of the House, because there is in my statement, a formal articulation of fact, that the minister had seen Mr. Hatch repeatedly, and had seen him on business in connection with this food, before the declaration of war. Besides I may state to the House, that very strong representations having been made to the hon. minister, that in this respect, at least, the statement he made to the House being absolutely incorrect, he must positively correct it; I believe the hon. minister in conformity to these strong representations acquitted himself of that task.

As the House will notice, I thought it necessary, partly for my own justification, partly for the guidance of the committee, to clearly point out that the stuff sent out to South Africa, whatever be its character, had never been manufactured in Canada at all; because upon that fact, which I will prove without any possibility of doubt or cavil, rested the suspicion, and the very natural suspicion the House will admit, that there was something wrong, for be it remembered, that protose is an article which I believe is nowhere manufactured on this continent, except at No. 10 Richmond Square, Montreal, by the patentee of that food. If, therefore, the food was brought in from the United States, there was a very strong presumption that it certainly was not the food which had been tested at Kingston. I thought it, therefore, necessary to articulate that fact, and I will add that I deemed it essential as showing strong grounds for suspicion on my part that that food had been brought into this country in Saratoga trunks, and under other circumstances which were surely—I appeal to every member of this House, if I am not correct in saying—which were surely calculated to excite suspicion and grave distrust.

There is also, as the House will notice, particularly articulated in my statement the question of the packing. I have been informed, by most competent men, that emergency rations; food of the nature which we are discussing to-day, whatever may be its inherent value, loses all its qualities when that food has been allowed to be exposed to the air for a certain time. I have obtained one of the tin cans—one of the shipment of tin cans, which were sent out to South Africa; that is according to the very best information. I hold that tin can in my hand at the present moment. It is a can which is not hermetically sealed. The can has never been sterilized as it should be, as I am informed. The can is not even closed hermetically. A strong man holding the can, can open it, by squeezing his hand. Any person leaning strongly against this can will cause the cover to go off. So little is it hermetically sealed, that although but a small quantity of the contents remain—probably for the cause I have just indicated—if you turn the can over and shake it, you will find that it amounts to little more than a pepper-box, and that with a little patience the remnants that remain in the can will soon be expelled from it. I thought it necessary to particularly articulate that point, because, according to me, without doubt, there is there an element of carelessness and unpardonable neglect.

This House will observe also, that I referred to the nature of the company, and why did I do so? Upon this can you will find the address, presumably of the company that manufactured this substance contained in the can. It is the Vitaline Company, and upon the label is given the address of that company. What is that address? It is 'corner of Craig and Bleury streets, Montreal.' I presume there is no doubt that all the cans that went out to South Africa bore the same label, and here is a point where suspicion very justifiably and very naturally arises. At the corner of Craig and Bleury streets, Montreal, you find at the south-east corner, the Clendenning Stove Company, and at the south-west corner, you have the office of the Montreal Daily Witness. On the north-east corner you find, I believe, a haberdashery or hatter's store.

An hon. MEMBER. Allan's store.

Mr. MONK. Yes, Allan's great haberdashery store, and on the north-west corner is a chemist's shop. Now, where would the House suppose that this Vitaline Company, giving its address as the 'corner of Craig and Bleury streets, Montreal,' would have its office? Would it be in the office of the Montreal Daily Witness, and is it conceivable that the food furnished to our troops in South Africa was fabricated in the office of that eminently respectable newspaper? I presume not. Would it be in the Clendenning Stove Company? That seems improbable. You possibly find many things in stove stores generally, but you do not usually find concentrated foods. Would it be in Allan's haberdashery store, where you see nothing but hats, shirts, cravats, &c.? Not probable. We are, therefore, when examining a case, as a lawyer or any sensible man would do, led to the very natural conclusion, that the remaining corner would be the place where you would find this Vitaline Company—the chemist's store. But here a great doubt is immediately created, because the owner of that store has taken the trouble to make a published statement. What does he say? From the letter which I am about to read to the House, if you take it in good faith—and we must assume omnia rite esse acta—it is evident that there is no office of the Vitaline Company there. This is what he says:

Sir,—In your issue of Thursday last my name is mentioned in the report of the parliamentary discussion of the 'emergency food' supplied to the government for the South African contingent as having been the manufacturer and having sold a certain food that was afterwards analysed and found to be almost worthless. If the statements made were allowed to go unchallenged by me, the public would be led to believe that I had been a party to or had committed a serious offence. Allow me to state, that as far as the allegations concern me, they are absolutely false. I have never manufactured any food for the government nor for Dr. Devlin. I am not nor never have been a partner of Dr. Devlin's, and any transactions he may have had with the government are entirely on his own account, and there is no reason why my name should have been mentioned in the matter, as it is one which does not concern me.

The address is given as being at that corner where we should naturally expect or presume that the Vitaline Company had its principal place of business; but from that corner we have an absolute denial. We have no denial from the other corners; but there is, as I said a moment ago, a strong presumption against them. Therefore, I think the House will admit that I had a right under the circumstances, as I did, to articulate that this company had no known address in the city of Montreal, unless you or I come to the conclusion that its office was in the air or under the street—an office which a man could reach only by a manhole or a trapdoor. I appeal to the members of this House whether there was not at any rate strong ground for suspicion.

The further information contained in the statement is to the effect that this stuff, imported from the United States, passed through the customs without paying duty. I cannot swear to it, but I received on that point information upon which I was bound to rely, and which also is articulated in the statement.

There remains another point which I desire to indicate to the House, because I wish to show—and presently the House will see why—that I did not proceed without consideration, imprudently or rashly. That is the question of payment. It is alleged in the statement which is about to be referred to a committee, that the payment was made before the goods were delivered. Upon that point I am not to that degree certain that I could take an oath; but a man making a charge in this House makes that charge upon reliable, respectable information conveyed to him—facts ascertained by him upon which he has reason to found a strong belief; and that belief which has existed in my mind and exists to-day, is to the effect that payment was made before the goods were delivered; in which case I think the House will admit that this, joined with the other circumstances, was calculated to arouse suspicion, because the parties who furnished this food are irresponsible parties, as alleged in the information which I have given to the House. Let the House notice that the last delivery of this food, according to the papers brought down by the Minister of Militia, was on the 25th of January last. If the payment was made after delivery, it was made after the 25th of January; and the House will bear in mind that there is a statement made, which can easily be proved, that on the 25th of January the Minister of Militia was informed by Mr. Hatch by letter that the food furnished to the contingent was not Hatch's Protose, as tested at Kingston previously. Therefore, if payment was not made before the goods were delivered, and the ultimate delivery was, on the 25th of January, it was made after that letter of warning was received; and in that case the government is equally guilty.

Now, Sir, having explained, in order to make it clear to the House, the nature of the charge, having explained those particular articulations which the charge contains, it remains for me to say to this House that, as is well known by all persons who have read, that transactions of this kind are unfortunately too frequent. We know that in the Spanish-American war a difficulty of this kind arose, a difficulty of a very grave nature, reflecting upon persons connected with the government of the United States and upon some of the military employees. In the Franco-Prussian war all who have read the history of that war know how much the poor French soldiers suffered from the acts of unscrupulous army contractors. If in that war a double proportion of misery fell on the defenders of France, it was due in large part to the acts of the army contractors; and I could give numberless instances. It would therefore not be surprising if, in our military expedition, something of this kind should have occurred; and, Sir, as a member of this House—and I repeat it, in spite of the taunts and jeers that some hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches launched against me—I believe I only acted in accordance with my duty in bringing this matter before the House. These men were simply volunteers, after all, among a vast number of applicants for military service, and they have been the admiration of the world. 2,500 men travelled over 7,000 miles to defend our flag; and the least those who were not able to follow them could do was to see that they secured adequate protection. Therefore, I think that these facts having come to my knowledge, I was perfectly justified—I would have been greatly, criminally, remiss in my duty if I had not brought these facts to the knowledge of the House. I have been attacked; I have been told that if I published a statement in the papers, I would be criminally prosecuted for libel. Vain attacks! Vain taunts! What I state to the House the newspapers of the country may publish, and I will take the consequences, although I never like a role of notoriety. It is not to the public press of this country that a man who has the honour of a seat in this House should go to discuss questions of this kind. He is sent here to perform a certain duty, and it is here, and not in the newspapers that he should perform that duty. Before I resume my seat, I should say that I was a little surprised at the manner in which the information which I thought it my duty to convey to the House was received. And why? Well, Mr. Speaker, a man rises in this House and he complains that a lighthouse is not in proper order. Immediately a member of the government gets up and says he did not know it and that he will see to it. My hon. friend to my left (Mr. Prior) has time and again called the attention of the government to evils resulting from Chinese immigration from the want of careful observation of the quarantine regulations. He is, generally met with a courteous answer; he is told that the matter has escaped the attention of the government, or something of that kind, and that it will receive attention. The provisions of the alien labour law are sometimes relax and complaint is made, and the government seeks to justify itself and states that the proper officers will see to the enforcement of our law. But a man who has never, I think, unfairly thrust himself upon the attention of this House, hears of an army scandal, of a matter of the gravest nature which concerns the Department of Militia—the department which we should most jealously guard from all political influence—and he calls the attention of that department to this matter in connection with the furnishing, not of clothes or arms, important as they might be, but of the very food of our troops—and all the gentlemen on the Treasury benches proceed to jump upon him. I had the Prime Minister telling me that I was accusing a respectable member of the medical profession—absolutely in anger he was. I had the Minister of Finance chiding me for my zeal in this matter—a very pardonable zeal; and I had the Minister of Militia going so far as to tell me that I spoke like the paid advocate of Mr. Hatch.

Mr. Speaker, I never met Mr. Hatch with regard to the first information I gave this House. I would have taken with much distrust naturally information of that kind given to me by the very man who might be interested in this contract. But I got it, although it was public property in Montreal, at that time, from a respectable physician who has tested Hatch's protose; and that I can prove before a committee. And it was upon that information, conveyed to me in no uncertain way by a most respectable physician, who knew the value of this food tested in Kingston, that I brought the matter to the knowledge of the House.

Then, even my hon. friend the Solicitor General attacked me most vigorously. He said that I would not dare to repeat elsewhere what I have said here. He taxed me with insincerity. This was a reproach I little expected from the Solicitor General, I must confess. Had I been attacked by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) I believe I would have succumbed completely; I believe I would not have been able to bear up against his powerful invectives. But last, and perhaps least, the minister without portfolio—so gentle, so suave, so polite—got up in a fire of anger and said that my statement amounted to a cock and bull story.

Whatever may be the result of this investigation, my own mind and my sense of duty are perfectly at ease, because I feel that I have done simply what I ought to have done. I have done what any other man in my position would have done, and more, what any member of this House, I think, on whatever side he may sit, would have actively busied himself about, at any rate, if he had obtained that information. I will do that justice to the men, without exception, with whom I have been sitting here for four years.

But the government made a great mistake, and that is admitted on all sides. Having given that information to the House, instead of these gentlemen jumping around me and attacking me—pardon the expression, Mr. Speaker—like a band of savages torturing a prisoner at the stake, they might have very well said that they were no party to such an infamous transaction as the one I brought to the notice of the House; that they would immediately have an investigation, and keep the House informed, and bring the guilty parties—if guilty parties there were—to the punishment which, in my estimation, they richly deserve. I beg to move:

That I am credibly informed and believe that I can establish by satisfactory evidence:

1. That in October, 1898, Surgeon Lieut.-Col. Neilson, director general medical staff of the Canadian militia, wrote to Henri Hatch, of Montreal, a manufacturer of concentrated foods, and the registered owner of 'Hatch's Protose,' a well-known food produced in Montreal by the Hatch Protose Company, and in use in hospitals throughout the country, informing the said Hatch that the Minister of Militia, the Hon. Frederick William Borden, was interested in Hatch's protein food, and impressed by the favourable results reported by the hospitals, and in consequence that the minister had instructed him (Neilson) to ask immediately for samples of the powder, and that, from the laboratory of the Hatch Protose Company, in Montreal, two samples of 80 per cent and 50 per cent proteid-strength were, without delay, sent by Hatch to the minister.

2. That in February, 1899, the Minister of Militia, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, then, as now, a member of this House, promising Hatch a first trial order for the mounted police in the Yukon, asked him if at any time a sufficient quantity could be had of the powder on short notice, in order to avoid delay in delivery in view of the difficulties in communication, so that depots might be established where 'Hatch's Protose' might be stocked for any emergency, to which the said Hatch answered that he had all the necessary machinery in his laboratory, and would keep ready for the department from half a ton to one ton of powder over 60 per cent proteid-strength, as per the average of the samples sent to Lieut.-Col. Neilson.

3. In March, 1899, the said Hatch employed and charged one Dr. Devlin, of Montreal, to solicit the permission from the department to make a military test of the said food, known as 'Hatch's Protose,' as an exclusive diet, in order to ascertain if soldiers on active service could live on it in perfect health, whereupon it was decided that the test would be applied to five soldiers of 'A' Battery, R.C.A., at Kingston, Ont., subject to stringent conditions imposed by the said Minister of Militia, namely:

(a) that the soldiers subjected to the test should answer satisfactorily a certain series of approved questions;

(b) that the test should last for one month;

(c) that the test should have to be stopped at once if any one of the five soldiers suffered uneasiness;

(d) that the test should be controlled by Lieut.-Colonels Neilson and Drury at Kingston, Ont.

4. That it resulted from the said test so made at Kingston upon five soldiers of 'A' Battery,

Mr. MONK.

R.C.A., that the food furnished for the experiment by the Hatch Protose Company, of Montreal, and controlled as above, was an eminently suitable food to serve as an emergency ration, and it was so reported by the Minister of Militia to Mr. Hatch himself.

5. When the first contingent of Canadian troops were preparing for departure for South Africa, Mr. Hatch, proprietor of the food tested in Kingston, as above, wrote to the Minister of Militia in reference to the supply of emergency rations to the said contingent, in the shape of food such as tested in Kingston, to which the minister replied, thanking Mr. Hatch, and expressing regret that under arrangements made with the home government, all supplies for the said contingent of Canadian troops were to be furnished by the War Office in England.

6. That the Minister of Militia had several interviews, principally in Montreal, but also elsewhere, with the said Henri Hatch, whom he knew to be the sole manufacturer of the food tested at Kingston

7. That nevertheless, by a tender made on the 4th day of January last, and accepted on the same day, an agreement was arrived at between the Minister of Militia and the said Dr. Devlin (hereinafter mentioned) at Ottawa, by which the latter undertook to supply the Department of Militia and Defence with 2,333 pounds of vegetable proteid powder, in 7,000 tins, for the sum of $4,660.

8. That upon information received by him that the said agreement was being executed under circumstances calculated to excite grave suspicions, the said Henri Hatch, on the 25th day of January, 1900, wrote the Minister of Militia a letter, which was by him duly registered, in the following terms:

Your Excellency,—I just happen to hear of a large purchase of 'Proteid food' from Messrs. Devlin & Lyons, of this city, for the Canadian contingent. If such is the case, I consider it to be my right and my duty to inform you that such a supply can only rest upon a poor and fraudulent adulteration of my 'Protose,' as it is done without my knowledge, and has nothing in common with the product tested in Kingston last spring. This will be easily detected by analysis of the food supplied, to which end I intend to take the necessary steps in order to protect my interests. A sample of mine could, of course, have easily been obtained from any druggist, but the articles, if already supplied, are not mine, and cannot be identical with those used at the military test.

This I thought it advisable to bring to Your Excellency's knowledge, for any emergency.

Your humble servant,

H. HATCH.

9. That the Minister of Militia and Defence failed to acknowledge receipt of this letter, and did not promptly communicate with the troops of the Canadian contingent, or take any steps to verify the truth of the information conveyed to him by the letter above referred to of January 25, 1900, received from the person whose food he had, as above stated, caused to be tested at Kingston.

10. That as a matter of fact, the food or emergency ration supplied to the Canadian troops was not identical with the food tested at Kingston, known as 'Hatch's Protose,' but was a totally different article, of very inferior quality, containing scarcely 17 per cent of nutriment, whereas the food tested contained over 60 per cent of nutritive substance.

11. The said food, so supplied under said agreement, was never made in Canada at all, but was brought on from New York or some place in the United States of America, by the parties interested, packed in a certain number of large Saratoga trunks, containing each two large rough bags filled with a substance closely resembling broken biscuits; it was then ground in Montreal by ordinary milling process to a fine powder, and placed hurriedly in small tins, neither sterilized nor hermetically sealed, and must have deteriorated even if it had been suitable food, which it was not.

12. That the said tins bore a label indicating that the emergency ration contained in them were the product of the Vitalline Company, corner Craig and Bleury streets, Montreal, said company having no legal existence, and being irresponsible, and having neither manufactory nor known office in the said city of Montreal.

13. That the value of the said food, so brought on from the United States, does not exceed $500.

14. That a sample of the said food, so packed in the tins aforesaid, was obtained from the drug store where it had been packed, and was subsequently tested by Milton L. Hersey, M.A., Sc. (McGill), of Montreal, and found to contain only 17 per cent of nutritive substance, and said analysis was confirmed elsewhere.

15. Said tins were shipped to Halifax in large wooden cases bearing a large label, stating that upon the food contained in them Canadian soldiers had lived thirty days in perfect health.

16. The usual precautions as to inspection were not adopted by the Militia Department in regard to this shipment of emergency rations.

17. The substance brought in from the United States, as above stated, in Saratoga trunks, was detained by the customs officers for duty thereon, but under direction of the government it was allowed to pass without payment of customs dues.

18. The amount due under the agreement of the 4th of January, 1900, that is, $4,660, was paid to the contractor before the goods were actually delivered.

19. That under all the circumstances above set forth, the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence: (a) in making, with undue haste, the agreement hereinabove referred to of the 4th of January, 1900, for the supply of emergency rations to the Canadian troops in South Africa with irresponsible parties; (b) in not having the preparation of said rations controlled by competent men, and the supply furnished to the troops carefully and rigidly inspected and tested; (c) in neglecting, after he had received said letter of January 25 last, to take the steps commanded by the ordinary rules of prudence to ensure the protection of the troops; and (d) in paying the amount of the said contract, $4,660, in a case where he must have known that any recovery of the same was impossible, and without any investigation.

That the above statements be referred to a select committee of this House to inquire fully into the said allegations, with power to send for persons, papers, records and such articles as may be necessary for such investigation, and to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation, and that the committee do report in full the evidence taken before them and all their proceedings on the reference and the result of their inquiries.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). After having listened to the hon. gentleman, I am more than ever of the opinion which I expressed yesterday that this is not a question which can be termed a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman does not charge anybody with any fault which might be wantonly committed against the privileges of this House, but whilst I state this, I have no intention whatever of pressing the point. After consultation with my colleague, the Minister of Militia, a moment ago, we have come to the conclusion that he would waive all question of privilege and meet the question fairly and squarely. But at the same time, I must remind the House that there has been a misunderstanding. Upon the Votes and Proceedings issued this morning, the motion is set down to be taken into consideration to-morrow, and therefore, my hon. colleague, the Minister of Militia, who has a right to be heard before the motion is considered, has not ready the statement he desires to make, and the government have not had the time to give the consideration to the matter which it should before the motion is decided.

I move, therefore, that the debate do now adjourn, and be made the first order of the day to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 180) concerning and restricting Chinese immigration. He said: The members of this House who have had the honour of occupying seats on the floor of parliament in the eighties remember very well that almost every session the question of restricting Chinese immigration—which at that time was as open as any other kind of immigration—came regularly before the House, and was annually brought to its attention by the gentlemen who then sat here from the province of British Columbia. It was represented that Chinese immigrants were of an undesirable character, that in fact they could hardly be styled immigrants at all, that they came here, not with the intention of settling in the country or making it their permanent abode, but simply to spend a few years earning their living at the expense of honest white labour, then returning to their country. It was represented, moreover, that if they had come here with the intention of becoming settlers and becoming permanent citizens, this would not be desirable, because they are of a character not suitable as immigrants for Canada. The complaints becoming more numerous, the government of that day thought it advisable to have the matter properly investigated. This subject, which so deeply affects our fellow-citizens residing in the province of British Columbia, is one that is not at all felt here. The other day I noticed that my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) stated that the time would come when the people of the east would suffer as much from Chinese immigration as the people of the west do to-day. But, that time has not come, and the people of the east do not take the same interest in the question, the same passionate interest, I may say, as is taken in it by the people of British Columbia. In 1884, if I remember aright, the government issued a commission, which was presided over by the late Mr. Chapleau, to investigate the question and make a report upon it. The report expressed the conclusion that, in fact, the Chinese were not a desirable class of immigrants, that not only was it not advisable to encourage that class of immigration, but, it was advisable, in some measure, to restrict it.

Acting on the report, the government introduced a measure under which a poll tax of fifty dollars was imposed upon all Chinese immigrants. That Act came into force in 1886, and has been in force ever since. During the first years when it was in force, I believe it gave substantial and reasonable satisfaction to the people of British Columbia. I may say that whether it was the result of the Act or the result of other causes, Chinese immigration into British Columbia in the years immediately following 1886 was of a very restricted character. The statistics we have in the department show that those who paid the poll tax seldom exceeded 200 in a year. Of late years, the immigration has become much more considerable, and it is growing from year to year. So, an agitation has been carried on for some years past, asking that further restrictions be imposed upon this class of immigrants. We have no statistics as to the number of Chinese who leave this country, but there is reason to believe that the number is not inconsiderable. There was a provision in the Act which allowed a Chinaman to emigrate on what was called a leave of absence, or something of that kind—that is, he could take a ticket-of-leave, and, on returning and presenting his ticket he could re-enter the country without paying a second poll tax. There are still about five thousand of these tickets-of-leave which have been given out, the owners of which have not returned to this country. It is probable that a considerable number of others have gone out without such tickets-of-leave. Therefore, it may be said that the character of the immigration may be said to be essentially transient. Every Chinaman who comes to Canada to work comes, not with the intention of settling, but, invariably with the intention of returning to his own country. Under such circumstances, I think we may safely conclude that the Chinese population of British Columbia, though it may be a little larger, does not very much exceed that of 1886.

But the problem has been complicated by another feature that did not exist in 1884. In 1884, and previous years, complaints were made only of Chinese immigration. But, since that time, and particularly in recent years, similar complaints have been made of Japanese immigration. I believe it is the fact that a certain number, perhaps a considerable number of men of Japanese origin, are coming to British Columbia. The question is, how are we to deal with this double problem? How are we to treat the Chinese immigrants and the Japanese immigrants? That something should be done we are all prepared to admit—at any rate, the government is prepared to admit it. To what extent we should go is the question. What are the steps to be taken is another question. It has been suggested that we ought to apply the Natal Act. The Natal Act applies to all Asiatics, and is absolutely prohibitive—not prohibitive in term, but prohibitive in fact. It would be a bar to all Asiatic immigration.

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, to all the uneducated classes.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is the only class to which objection would be made; we do not object to Chinese or Japanese merchants settling in the country. The gist of the Natal Act is, that no immigrant of Asiatic origin shall be permitted to settle in the country unless he can read and write one of the languages of Europe. This makes it, in effect, prohibitive. We have not thought it advisable to adopt the provisions of the Natal Act, because there are questions of Imperial policy connected with the question at this moment which the Canadian people are not prepared to ignore. Therefore, while we recognize that Japanese immigration is to be treated differently from Chinese immigration, at the same time, we want to have the matter properly investigated. The government has come to the conclusion that it would be wise at this moment to follow the course adopted by the government in 1884, and have the matter properly investigated—whether or not the Japanese should be treated as the Chinese were; whether or not the Japanese are of the same objectionable character as the Chinese; and whether or not, if they present the same objectionable character as the Chinese, they should be absolutely prohibited from coming into this country. We propose, therefore, to have a committee of investigation appointed, who will look into the question and report, so that the views of the people of British Columbia may be placed before the Imperial authorities. There is a question of Imperial policy involved; and I believe there is no man in this country at this moment who would be prepared to advise the Canadian government to put a restriction upon Japanese immigration. At all events, speaking on behalf of the Canadian government, I am prepared to say, that for reasons I have had occasion to explain more than once on the floor of parliament, we are not prepared to extend the same treatment to Japanese immigrants as to Chinese immigrants. We are not prepared to come in conflict with the Japanese government, when, perhaps, there may be complications in the Orient which may involve England in a war, and when, possibly, the best ally she would have in the Orient might be put in jeopardy. For this reason, we are not prepared to treat the Japanese as we do the Chinese. But, while we take that course for the present time, we think it due to our fellow-citizens in British Columbia that they should have an opportunity to put their views on record, that this subject should be investigated by a proper commission, so that their views upon the question can be placed before the Imperial authorities for their consideration. There is, in that respect, ample justification for the course which I now suggest, that we should have this matter properly investigated.

ROYAL ASSENT TO BILLS.

A Message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows :

His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attention of your Honourable House in the Chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With regard to the subject of Chinese immigration, I have observed that for some time past, as the number of Chinese immigrants has increased, there have been almost annual appeals to this parliament and government on the subject, from the people and legislature of British Columbia. In 1885, the legislature adopted the following resolution :

That an humble address be presented by this House to the Lieutenant Governor, praying him to again move the Dominion government to increase the per capita tax on Chinese coming into the Dominion to $100 each; and at the same time expressing strongly the opinion of this House that three-fourths of all moneys received at British Columbia ports from the proposed higher tax, or (if such higher tax be not imposed) from the present tax of $50, should be paid to this province, as the chief injury from the presence of these Chinamen is sustained by this province, and not by the Dominion.

Upon this resolution, the late Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives), made the following report :

The undersigned (Minister of Trade and Commerce) has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Privy Council Reference No. 724 J, being a copy of a report of a committee of the Executive Council of the province of British Columbia having reference to a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province, passed during the present session, praying that the Dominion government may be moved to increase the per capita tax on Chinese entering the Dominion to $100—such report having been transmitted through His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the province under date of the 1st instant—and in reporting thereon, the minister would call attention to the report of his predecessor of date May 12, 1894, on similar resolutions, as per Privy Council Reference No. 1829 H, and in doing so would add that he sees no reason for changing in any way the substance of the report of May 12, above referred to.

I may just observe upon this resolution and report, that the resolution at that time adopted by the province of British Columbia, demanded that the increase of the personal poll tax on Chinese be raised from $50 to $100. Similar resolutions have been passed almost yearly. But I would call special attention to the last one, in which there is to be found a very important departure. In the year 1889, the legislature of British Columbia adopted a resolution which is embodied in a minute of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to the Secretary of State. It is as follows :

Sir,—I have the honour to transmit herewith, for consideration of His Excellency the Governor General in Council, an approved minute of my Executive Council, dated the 2nd instant, embodying a resolution passed at the recent session of the Legislative Assembly of this province, expressive of the opinion and desire of that body that the federal government increase the per capita tax on Chinese immigrants to at least $500.

Now, there has been in the minds of the people of British Columbia, upon that subject, a very serious movement indeed. In 1895, just five years ago, the people of British Columbia, as represented in their Legislative Assembly, demanded that the present poll tax of $50, should be raised to $100. To double a tax of that kind would be already a very serious step ; but in 1899, the same body passed a resolution asking that the tax should be raised from $50 to $500. There is in this fact a very grave suggestion, and one which everybody will admit requires serious consideration before it is adopted. In 1885 the parliament of Canada thought it advisable to impose a poll tax of $50 ; and I may say that for several years this tax seemed to meet the object for which it was imposed. Of late years it also seems evident that this tax has become inadequate. Now, to what extent should it be increased ? I submit to the judgment of every man in this House, that to double it at once, would be to take a very considerable step ahead, but to increase it at one bound to $500, would seem to be a proceeding which should be very carefully considered before it is adopted. The government is not prepared to go that length, but the government thinks that at the present time, under the considerations I have stated to the House, we would be doing substantive justice to the people of that province, if we acted upon the suggestion they made a few years ago, and repeated several times and increased the tax from $50 to $100. The commission which I have spoken of, will have to investigate, not only the Chinese and Japanese questions, but also to consider whether it would be advisable further to increase the tax to $500, as was proposed to us last year. The wisdom therefore, of appointing such a commission seems to be indicated to the consideration of the House. So far as Chinese immigration is concerned, we are prepared to go a good ways to meet the views of our fellow-citizens in the province of British Columbia. At the same time there are other interests to be considered, and we would not be prepared to sanction such a very wide departure as is involved in the proposition to raise the tax from $50 to $500. We think the people of British Columbia will be satisfied with the advanced step we are taking under this legislation, and will be prepared to await the result of the experiment of raising the tax to $100, and see how it will work on the immigration of next year. The commission, therefore, will have to investigate that subject of Chinese immigration, and will have to determine whether the increase which we make this year is adequate or not to meet the views of our fellow-citizens in the province of British Columbia.

With regard to the Japanese question, I have to inform our friends from British Columbia, that in coming to the decision not to impose any tax whatever upon Japanese immigrants, it is possible that we may disappoint the people of that province ; but I feel almost certain, indeed I have an abiding faith, that when they realize the motives of the Imperial policy which guide us in denying them that wish, when we represent to them that at present England is not only engaged in war in South Africa, but that serious complications are arising in China, and it is not impossible that England, though we hope it will not come to pass, may find herself engaged in another war in the Orient, the people of British Columbia, I venture to think, will be prepared to put no obstacle in the way of an alliance between Japan and England ; and although it may call for a sacrifice on their part, they will be prepared to make that sacrifice for the sake of the mother country and for the sake of a united empire.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I have listened to the special pleading of the right hon. leader of the government, very attentively. There is only one feeling that will permeate the people throughout British Columbia, as soon as the telegraph has flashed this news to them, and that will be one of great disappointment. A few days ago, I brought to the notice of the House, a telegram that was sent to British Columbia in 1896 by the right hon. gentleman, in which he said: 'On this question, the views of the Liberals in the west will prevail with me.' Now, I would ask the right hon. gentleman, with which of the members from British Columbia, who support his government, do these views prevail? I think there is not a single gentleman representing a constituency of British Columbia who will say to-day that he is satisfied that this Chinese tax should be raised to only the small sum of $100 per head. The right hon. gentleman says that he believes there are no more Chinese in British Columbia to-day, than there were in 1886. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman is a better authority than I am on that question, because he has all the statistics at hand, and perhaps has looked them up; but, I venture to say, there are many more thousands of Chinese in British Columbia to-day than there were in 1886. They are not, perhaps, so easily seen, because in that year the Canadian Pacific Railway had just finished building their road, and the many thousands of Chinamen that they had employed had not then distributed themselves but were concentrated in certain portions of British Columbia. They are now distributed all over the mining districts of British Columbia. In Cariboo you see almost three Chinamen to every white man that is mining and taking gold out of the ground. In regard to the Japanese I must say that I feel as strongly as the First Minister or any of his supporters, that we should do our best to strengthen the bonds between Great Britain and the empire of Japan, but we must look at home first, and, as I said the other day, I firmly believe that it would not have done any harm to these friendly feelings if the Prime Minister had seen fit to bring in the Natal Act. It is in force in other portions of the British Empire, and nothing is said against it. Why should not Canada put it in force as well? The people of British Columbia believe that they have a right to demand that, and I feel perfectly certain that nothing will satisfy them until some stringent measure is put in force to at least lessen the influx of Japanese, as well as of Chinese. This is the first reading of the Bill, so that I do not intend to make any lengthy remarks, but, I must say that I believe there will be an intense feeling of disappointment in British Columbia when they know what the government has seen fit to bring down to-day.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Before the motion is put, I wish to say that I, too, am quite disappointed at the conclusion which the government have arrived at. In my opinion there is not much room for the Chinaman in Canada. He displaces a good Canadian, or, a good British subject.

As has been proved by the commission which was referred to by the right hon. First Minister in his speech, the Chinese come to Canada, live here for a few years, earn a lot of money, and save the largest portion of it. They say that they can live on a pound of rice a day, which costs them a good deal less than five cents a pound, and they leave the country, taking with them the money which they have obtained. The First Minister stated to the House, as I understood it, that there were 5,000 permits to leave the country issued to men who have gone out and who have not come back. That, I presume, is the class that has made some money and then returned to China. These Chinese have simply made use of this country, and have obtained employment which should have gone to good citizens of the country. I think that the increase of the tax from $50 to $100 will be totally inadequate. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) could easily tell us what are the figures as to the entrance of Chinamen in the country during the past fourteen years. I think it will be found to be very much larger than these 5,000, of whom we have a record as having gone back to China. If that be the case, one of two things must have occurred. Either the Chinese population of Canada has very much increased, or a number of Chinese have made use of Canada as a kind of underground railway to get into the United States. So far as that is concerned, I suppose we have no particular objection if the Chinese come here, pay the poll tax and go through to the United States. It is a matter of no particular concern to us, and we would have no objection to the Chinese leaving this country no matter whether it be by underground railway or any other means of exit. But, the population is increasing. It has been found now that not only are they monopolizing the laundry business and the growing of vegetables in British Columbia, but they are driving skilled miners out of employment in the coal mines. They are going into the mines as coal miners. There are many reasons for objecting to these men going into the coal mines. For instance, Canadian people have to work in these mines. It is the most perilous of all employments. They should be guarded and protected in every possible way that human ingenuity and civilized usage can devise for the protection of the lives of the people, but it has been found that the Chinese are not paying that attention to the protection of their lives that is necessary and desirable in the coal mines. Therefore, I contend, Mr. Speaker, that these men should be prohibited altogether from working in the coal mines of British Columbia, or anywhere else. It is not safe for the other miner who goes in there because he has to consort and associate with these men, making the risks which are inevitable in a coal mine, infinitely greater. For that reason, among many others. Chinamen should be prohibited from working in the coal mines. More than that, I would say that the Chinaman is generally an undesirable immigrant. He does not do any good to the country. They say that he helps to build the railways and so on. There are plenty of other people to get that employment. There are plenty of people who, if they are employed, will make their homes in the country, who will assist in developing the country, who will perform the duties of Canadian citizens, who will help to build up the empire and perform the duties of good citizens, such as we are ready to welcome to this country. Fourteen years ago, as an experiment, it was decided to put a poll tax of $50 per head on Chinese coming into the country. That tax was found then to be a success and to work satisfactorily. But experience has shown that it is not a sufficient restriction to impose to-day, that it does not keep out the Chinese, but that they are coming over in larger numbers than ever. The First Minister says he does not think the numbers are larger, but we would have been better satisfied if he had given us some more specific data which the Minister of Trade and Commerce would have furnished him with in order to fortify that opinion. He has just given a general opinion, but we would have been better satisfied if he had fortified that opinion with facts which must be in the hands of the government. So, I say, Mr. Speaker, that the statement made by the First Minister in regard to the Chinese will not be considered satisfactory throughout the country by those who have investigated this subject. In reference to the other portion of the proposal, in regard to the Japanese, I must say that it meets with my own cordial approval. I do not know how other hon. members of the House will view it, but I think I can cordially agree with the conclusion arrived at by the First Minister. I think it is not the time just now to disturb the relationships which exist between the Japanese Empire and any portion of the British Empire. I think that the First Minister, therefore, is quite justified in taking the position he does in regard to the Japanese, but, in regard to the Chinese it is a growing evil which calls for an immediate remedy. So, I say, that the proposal which is made by the government, in my opinion, will be entirely unsatisfactory.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

POSTMASTER OF CARNDUFF.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has Mr. J. P. Carnduff been dismissed from the postmastership of Carnduff?
2. How long has he held this position?
3. Has Mr. J. H. Taylor been appointed in his stead?
4. Why was Mr. J. P. Carnduff dismissed?

Mr. WALLACE.

5. Has the Postmaster General received petitions from the people of the district protesting against Mr. Carnduff's dismissal?

6. Will the Postmaster General lay on the Table the correspondence, reports and petitions connected with the dismissal of Mr. Carnduff?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Mr. J. P. Carnduff has been dismissed from the postmastership of Carnduff, Assa. 2. He had been postmaster of Carnduff since 1st September, 1884. 3. Mr. J. H. Taylor has been appointed to the office in his stead. 4. Because certain mail matter which was mailed at Carnduff, and was liable for postage was, contrary to law, allowed to be transmitted through the mails free of postage. 5. A petition has been received. 6. No objection, if desired.

BALLAST GROUND AT ST. ELOI.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked .

Has the Department of Railways a ballast ground at St. Eloi, Temiscouata? If so, under what tenure does it hold the said ground; is it as proprietor or as lessee? In what year did the department acquire the said land from the farmers, what was the price agreed upon, and to whom was the money paid? Is it the intention of the department to work the said ballast ground this year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Department of Railways and Canals does own a ballast pit of an area of about ten acres, one and a half miles east of St. Eloi, together with fifty feet right of way thereto about one and a half mile in length. The government is the proprietor of the land. It was acquired at the time of construction of railway in 1873, at which time a plan was filed in the registry office, Fraserville. There are no deeds of it at Moncton. It is not proposed to work this ballast pit this year.

ROBERVAL WHARF.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Whether the government have had any work done on the wharf at Roberval since March, 1900?

2. If so, how much money has been expended?
3. Why has not the sum of $10,000, which Mr. Savard, M.P., at a public meeting at Roberval, in the autumn of 1899, declared to have been voted for that work, not been expended?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Yes. 2. $400. 3. This question purports to contain a statement of facts, and therefore, seems irregular. The department has no information in regard to such alleged declaration.

WHARF AT ST. GÉDEON.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Whether the government is aware that Foreman Lavoie, in charge of the work on the wharf at St. Gédéon, county of Chicoutimi, having refused to pay to Mr. S. Desjardins the price of certain pieces of timber and iron used in the said work, has been twice sued for the payment thereof?

2. Has the department been notified of the said actions at law?

3. Why has payment been refused to Mr. Desjardins?

4. What is the daily pay of Foreman Lavoie?

5. Does he receive, or has he received any allowance for travelling and board?

6. Is it true that his wages are paid even for days when it rains and no work is done?

7. Who recommended his appointment as foreman of the said work?

8. Why was not Mr. Elzéar Levesque, a master builder, entrusted with the building of the said wharf?

9. Is it true that Foreman Lavoie was sent from elsewhere to St. Gédéon simply to reward him for having changed his party in 1896, in consideration of promises made to him?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. It is known in the department that certain timber prepared by Mr. Desjardins, on his own responsibility, was refused by Mr. Lavoie, as it was not suitable for the work. 2. Not to the knowledge of the department that Mr. Lavoie was sued. 3. Was paid for all suitable timber and stone supplied. 4. $2 a day. 5. No. 6. The foreman so far has only received one day's pay more than the workmen. 7. Mr. P. V. Savard, M.P. 8. Mr. Lavoie being appointed rendered it unnecessary to appoint an additional foreman. 9. The department has no information on this subject.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EMERGENCY RATION.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the Militia Department had any analysis made by the Department of Inland Revenue of the 'emergency food' bought by the Militia Department for use of the troops in South Africa?

2. If so, how many samples were submitted, and on what dates?

3. Were these samples that were analysed, if any, the same food that was shipped to South Africa?

4. What were the results as reported by the Inland Revenue Department?

5. On what date was the emergency food shipped from Canada to South Africa?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). In answer to the first question: The Department of Militia sent to the Department of Inland Revenue on the 3rd February, 1900, two parcels of food for analysis; one taken from the packages of emergency food shipped to South Africa, the other from the food used in Kingston in March or April of a year ago. In answer to the second question: One sample of each was submitted on the 3rd February, 1900. In answer to the third question: One of the samples was of food shipped to South Africa, the other, as I have said, was a sample of the food used in Kingston. In answer to the fourth question: I have already explained to the House that as thorough analyses are being made of these foods, I do not think it desirable now to make public the result of the analyses, except that I may say that they bear out literally the statement made to me in the letter which I read to this House from the Director General, that the foods are identical. In answer to the fifth question, I may say that I regret that I did not notice the reference to the date on which the food was to be delivered at Halifax, but it appears in the papers which I laid on the Table of the House. I think it is the 20th of January.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. MACDONALD (HURON).

Mr. PETER MACDONALD (East Huron). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to rise to a question of privilege. There is in the Ottawa Citizen of this morning an article in which there is a quotation purporting to have been taken from a speech of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) on Tuesday evening, in which he charged me with having a direct interest in a dredge which he called 'No. 9' and therefore, that I was sitting in the House in direct contravention of the Independence of Parliament Act. Now, Sir, I wish to say that I have no interest directly or indirectly, remotely or approximately in any dredge in the world to-day. I therefore, think it wise on my own behalf and on behalf of those interested in me to make this statement, and to characterize the assertion of the hon. member for East Grey as literally and absolutely untrue.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I only wish to say this: That in the Hansard report, I noticed in correcting it that there was a mistake. Speaking of the circumstance of the owners of the property, I said 'I believed' that the member for Huron profits by the investment of his money in this way.

Mr. MACDONALD. Would you be kind enough to withdraw it?

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly. If the hon. member says he is not, I am certainly bound to withdraw the statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E. I.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) for the reasons why work has been stopped on the contract for building a section of the railway in Prince Edward Island. The contract was entered into not very long ago, and the work was supposed to have been commenced, but I am now informed that the work has been completely stopped. A few days ago I gave the minister notice that I would ask this question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The hon. gentleman alludes to the contract that was recently made for the building of eleven and a half miles of railway on the island—the grading and levelling of the road-bed from Charlotte-town to Murray Harbour. That work has been stopped for a reason which I think will commend itself to the hon. gentleman as sufficient. The contract, as the House has been informed already, was let to a Mr. McManus. Mr. McManus became mentally disqualified for doing any business or carrying on any work, and it was the desire of his friends, as well as his own desire, as far as he seemed to be able to express any desire, that the contract might be rescinded as respects himself; and upon looking into the matter we came to the conclusion, that in the interest of the work it was our duty to rescind the contract, and it has been rescinded. We are now in negotiation with the next tenderer, the amount of whose tender was very close to that of Mr. McManus, and I hope that before very long we shall be able to make such an arrangement that the work will be resumed. We have lost no time, I can assure the hon. gentleman, and I have given immediate attention to the matter. I am now in communication, through the officers of the department, with the next tenderer, Mr. Willard Kitchen.

Mr. MARTIN. I asked the hon. gentleman some time ago about the completion of the survey of the road, and he told me that it was to be proceeded with during this summer. The summer is now pretty well advanced, and I believe that no progress has been made in the completion of that survey. It was began as far back as the year 1897, during the progress of an election, and there has been nothing done since until 1899, during the progress of another election; and now, instead of it being proceeded with during the summer season, as the hon. gentleman told me it would be, nothing is being done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have heard nothing, since furnishing the House with the information to which the hon. gentleman alludes, to make me doubt the correctness of the statement that the surveys are being prosecuted. That was the information given me at the time, and I still believe it to be correct.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to ask the hon. gentleman another question. Some time ago I asked him whether the cross line starting at a point on the proposed Belfast line connecting with New Perth or Cardigan passing near Montague Bridge, in connection with this road had been surveyed, and he told me it was under the consideration of the government. I would like to know if he has come to any conclusion with regard to that matter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I shall have to ask my hon. friend to give me formal notice of that. I am not at the moment prepared to enlighten him.

ANALYSIS OF EMERGENCY FOOD.

Mr. ALEX. McNEILL (North Bruce). I should like to call the attention of the government to a statement made a few minutes ago by the Minister of Militia and Defence, who, I am sorry to see, has left the House. In reply to a question asked by my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) he said that an analysis had been made by the Inland Revenue Department of a portion of the emergency rations which were sent to South Africa, and he said he was not going to produce the report of that analysis at the present time. I must say I think that is scarcely—

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon. friend is entering into an argument.

Mr. McNEILL. I will, if necessary, conclude with a motion, Mr. Speaker, because I regard this to be a matter of the very gravest importance.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is just this difficulty, that in the absence of the minister I think it is hardly fair.

Mr. McNEILL. I will not in the absence of the minister, if so requested. But, I wish before sitting down, to call the attention of my right hon. friend to the matter, and ask him to be good enough to speak to his colleague in reference to it, and point out to him that it is considered by some members of this House that if there be in the Inland Revenue Department a report of that analysis, it should be laid on the Table of the House at the earliest possible moment.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In reply to my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill), I beg to say that the Minister of Militia stated a moment ago that the analysis of the food sent to Africa proved to be identical with the analysis of the food that had been experimented on before at Kingston. At any rate, I would remind my hon. friend that this matter is to come up to-morrow, when the minister will probably be able to give my hon. friend every satisfaction.

Mr. McNEILL. What I wished my hon. friend to do was to take care that the report of the analysis should be laid on the Table to-morrow.

I. C. R.—TRAIN ACCOMMODATION.

Mr. M. J. F. QUINN (St. Ann's, Montreal). I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if it is the intention to put on another daily train between Montreal and the lower ports. The season when a very heavy traffic takes place on that line is approaching, and the demand is very great in Montreal on the part of those who occupy summer residences around Rivière du Loup and Metis for a daily train. The train which leaves Montreal in the morning reaches Metis and Rivière du Loup about midnight. This necessitates the loss of a day by men going to visit their families there, and brings them to their destination at a very inconvenient hour. In previous seasons a train has left Montreal about eleven o'clock at night—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). At 7.30 p.m.

Mr. QUINN. It left Bonaventure station, at all events, in the evening, and brought men from Montreal to their residences early in the morning in time for breakfast. This was a very great accommodation, and I know that the people of Montreal are very anxious that, at least, a tri-weekly service should be put on the Intercolonial Railway for their accommodation, and I would like to ask if it is the intention to give a service of that kind

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may say to my hon. friend that it is not the intention to increase the train service beyond that provided for. We think we have made ample arrangements for that traffic. It is, of course, in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway to furnish all the accommodation necessary to meet the demands of the public, and we believe we have done that. We are sending out an evening train every Friday, which will accommodate the business men, and it is the business men whom, I understand, my hon. friend has in his mind when he makes this request. To send a tri-weekly train in the evening would not be at all necessary, in my opinion, nor in the opinion of the traffic manager of the road.

PORT MULGRAVE AND ST. PETER'S MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). I desire to call the attention of the government to the fact, that the steamer plying between Port Mulgrave and St. Peter's and intermediate points, which is subsidized by this government, is not carrying the mails this year as formerly. The Postmaster General is absent from the House, but I would ask some member of the government to draw his attention to the fact that the steamer is not now carrying mails as formerly. This subjects the people to a very great inconvenience, inasmuch as the mails are sent overland, and are not delivered until the following morning. I am sure that I need only draw the attention of the government to this matter to have the remedy applied at once.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I shall call the attention of the Postmaster General to the matter.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). There is great complaint in the town of Sydney and that neighbourhood, owing to the fact that the mails from Newfoundland arriving by the steamer Bruce, in the early morning, are not forwarded to Sydney, until late at night, and the mails are not delivered for twenty-four hours, although the distance is only five miles by steamer. I would ask the Minister of Railways, whether the report is well founded that a new time table is to come into operation on Monday next on the Intercolonial Railway, and if so, what are the hours of departure from Montreal to Sydney.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). If the hon. gentleman will give me until to-morrow, I will tell him the hours exactly. We leave Montreal for Sydney, by the express at about eleven o'clock, but the hour that we leave Sydney for Montreal, I cannot state at this moment.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL (Kent). Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I want to correct a statement going the rounds of the Tory press. I did not think it worth while to correct it at the time, but I see that it is reported in the Daily Intelligencer, of Belleville, and other papers. The statement is that when, after the resolution, moved by the First Minister, congratulating Her Majesty on the termination of the war, was voted, God Save the Queen was sung, I remained in my seat and kept my hat on. That is a downright falsehood, from beginning to end.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) moved that the order for third reading of Bill (No. 110) to amend the Weights and Measures Act, be discharged, and the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, for further consideration.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The reason why I ask that the House go again into committee, is to add to the last subsection these words: 'and apply to all binder twine imported into Canada or manufactured in Canada after that date.' This is to prevent the Act having a retroactive effect, and applying to binder twine now in store.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported; read the third time and passed.

INTEREST ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved first reading of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 161) to amend the Act respecting interest. He said: This Bill reduces the general rate of interest from 6 per cent to 5 per cent. The Senate has added some words to put it beyond doubt that the change shall not affect liabilities existing at the time of the passing of the Act.

Amendments read the first and second time, and concurred in.

SUPPLY—BROCKVILLE AND WEST HURON ELECTIONS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to proceed with a motion of which I gave notice to the right hon. the leader of the House on Tuesday. As the matter has, to a very great extent, been debated and threshed out in the House, I will not find it necessary to deal with it at very great length. In the first place, I wish to say a word or two with respect to the memorandum from the Minister of Justice, which was read to the House on Monday, June 11, in answer to the suggestions which have been made to the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) by the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). Now, in the first place, the Minister of Justice is of opinion that the suggestion with reference to the indemnity of witnesses is covered by the statute 52 Vic., chap. 33, and he says that that statute was evidently overlooked by the leader of the opposition and myself in making the suggestions we did. It seems to me that it would rather appear that the Minister of Justice overlooked this statute, because he made not the slightest reference to it in the order in council upon which this commission is based. It is the usual course, where you rely upon a statute and an amending statute, to name not only the principal statute but the amending statute as well. This by the way. The statute of 52 Vic., chap. 33, does not meet the point brought forward by the leader of the opposition and myself. It merely contains a provision which is also found in the Canadian Evidence Act of 1891, to which I referred. The effect of this is that answers of witnesses which tend to incriminate them shall not be used in evidence against them. It does not contain the provision in the English Act,

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

15-16 Vic., chap. 57, referred to by the leader of the opposition, nor does it contain the similar provision to be found in the ninth section of chap. 10 of the Revised Statutes, of Canada. The distinction, which the Minister of Justice does not seem to have dealt with, is perfectly plain. In the one case, in the statute which amends chap. 114, the provision is that you shall not use the witness' answer against him. But, in the Act respecting corrupt practices at elections and the English Act respecting inquiries of this kind, you have a provision that the witness shall not be prosecuted in respect of matters concerning which he gives evidence. In one case, you cannot use his own answers against him, but may prosecute him; in the other, he shall not be prosecuted if he answers fairly and to the satisfaction of the judges, and obtains a certificate. If he answers fairly, promptly and truthfully, and conducts himself properly, the judges or commissioners give him a certificate which prevents any prosecution against him in respect of the matter. I should have thought that the language of Mr. Blake with respect to that would have commended itself to the Minister of Justice. I do not desire to say a word which would detract from the well-known position and high reputation for ability of the Minister of Justice; still, we know that Mr. Blake is not only a man of very great learning and of exceptional ability—not inferior, perhaps, to the Minister of Justice—but he is a man of very much wider experience than the Minister of Justice. For that reason, I should have thought that his view with respect to the necessity of such a provision in investigations of this kind would have commended itself to the Minister of Justice. The language of Mr. Blake has already been quoted, but I think I might quote again a few words to good purpose:

The object one has in view in an inquiry of this description, where corrupt practices appear to have extensively prevailed, is to get at the proof, to search to the bottom, and ascertain how far corruption has prevailed in the constituency; and I think it is wise, under the circumstances, that a very liberal indemnity clause should be placed in the Bill.

So, he places in that Bill, which is dealing with an investigation of exactly the same character as that now proposed, the provision to which I have referred, which prevents any prosecution whatever being brought against any witness to whom the judge has given a certificate.

The next point to which I desire to direct attention is with respect to the scope of the commission. The hon. Minister of Justice has not seen fit to give effect to the suggestions of the leader of the opposition which would tend to enlarge the scope of the commission. He has held very strongly that the words which are to be found in the order in council, and, I presume, in the commission, are amply sufficient to effect the purpose intended. It it impossible to know in advance how widely or how strictly these words will be construed. Taking them in their natural significance, it seems to me there might be a great deal of doubt whether they bear the wide construction the Minister of Justice puts on them. What do you aim at in an investigation of this kind? Do you desire merely to ascertain and report to the country the tool who has marked the ballot, or transferred the ballot, or altered the ballot, or stolen the ballot? I should not suppose that that was the intention of an investigation of this kind. I should suppose you would desire to inquire to any extent necessary in order to get at the real criminal, to go as far back as might be deemed necessary by the commissioners in the line of agency by which any such thing as that had been accomplished. For example, the agency may have been handed down through a dozen different hands, there may have been connivance or collusion, even where there was no positive direction. In regard to these matters, I should think it would be wise to grant to the commissioners power to be exercised by them in their discretion to enter into an inquiry of that kind, and not tie them down by any language found here.

—to inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of—

These last words are meaningless, and, I believe, they are to be left out.

—any fraudulent conduct in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes, or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents, of the ballot boxes.

These words do not, in their natural signification, enable the judges to go back and deal with a person who is indirectly implicated who has helped to bring about the evil complained of, who has connived at the bringing of this about or who has colluded with the persons who have brought it about. That is a matter with respect to which there should be no possible objection on the part of the government to make the scope of the commission as wide as possible. We do not wish to have the time of the commission taken up in discussing the question of its scope, we do not desire that the money of this country should be spent in having counsel to argue before the commission and in having the commission consider whether the scope is sufficiently wide to embrace matters of that kind. Would it not be far better to make the scope so wide that there could be no possible justification on the part of the commissioners to hold, or on the part of counsel to contend that matters of that kind were not within the inquiry.

In the next place, the Minister of Justice has thought it unnecessary to make any change with respect to the appointment of counsel. Well, so far as the appointment of counsel is concerned, I do not propose to say anything.

It may be wise, as he thinks, that counsel should be appointed by the commission. But, one matter that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition dealt with has not been touched upon by the Minister of Justice, I think; and on that point I think I can appeal with a great deal of force to my hon. friend the Solicitor General. When you come to deal with the practical carrying out of an inquiry and investigation of this kind, there must be a previous investigation of the facts and inquiry into the evidence. There must be work that is usually done by solicitors. If you are to have your investigation, conducted by counsel before the commission, an effective one, you cannot expect those counsel to conduct a proper inquiry unless there is work done in the first place which is usually done by solicitors in an investigation before a judicial tribunal. Now, you appoint counsel of high standing. Do you expect that these counsel are to go into a constituency and drive around the country, interview witnesses, interview persons who are said to have knowledge of these matters, and do all the work which is usually done by a local solicitor? I should think you would probably be disappointed, and the resolution which I will read in a moment suggests that in respect matters of that kind some provision should be made for doing the work which is usually done by solicitors. I will not dwell on that because I desire to make my statement extremely brief.

Another point that the minister has dealt with, is the question whether witnesses before that commission should be permitted to testify as to how they marked their ballots, and the Minister of Justice has devoted a considerable portion of his memorandum to that matter. Now, the Minister of Justice has referred to the introduction of the present Ballot Act into parliament by the late chief justice of the province of Quebec, and he has said that at that time it was intended by him, on grounds of public policy, to have parliament so to legislate that the ballot could not under any circumstances, for the purpose of ascertaining by whom it was marked, be inquired into in a court of justice. Well, I am assuming, I do not know whether I am correct, that the Ballot Act in its present form is in the form in which it was then introduced. At all events, that it is material for us to consider, not the form in which it was introduced, but the form in which it exists at present; and the form in which it exists at present does not seem to carry out the suggestion of the Minister of Justice. It is not in every case that you are not to investigate, but only in certain cases:

No person who has voted at an election shall in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return, be required to state for whom he voted.

But the Minister of Justice says that the the policy of the Act is that he 'could not be so required under any circumstances.' Well, I do not so understand the Act. This matter, as was mentioned by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the other evening, was to some extent argued out by lawyers on both sides before the Committee on Privileges and Elections last year; and the Manitoba cases and the Haldimand case, both dealing with this matter, were referred to, and the committee eventually decided to admit evidence of how the voter marked his ballot, because in that case there was not any legal proceeding questioning an election or return. Of course, it may be suggested to me if that is the law, why do you desire any provision made with respect to this matter? I say that I desire provision made because this is a very important matter, upon which doubts have been raised by eminent lawyers, and it is one upon which there should be no doubt.

It is quite true that the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, in a proceeding questioning an election and return, has dealt with this matter in the manner referred to by the Minister of Justice, but the opinion stated by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Canada in deciding the particular case before him was a mere dictum with respect to the matter we are now considering, would not be binding on any other court. He was dealing with the right of ascertaining how an elector voted in a proceeding questioning an election and return, and not with such a case as will arise before this commission.

Then, on the other hand, you have the Manitoba cases which were referred to also before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, you have the Manitoba case of Regina vs. Saunders. That was a case stated for the opinion of the court, a Crown case reserved, which is reported in 11 Manitoba Reports, page 559. It was held in that case that notwithstanding section 71 of the Election Act, to which I have just referred, voters may be required, upon the trial of an indictment for offences against the Election Act, to state for whom they have marked their ballots. I refer to the judgment of Hon. Mr. Justice Killam, pages 564 and 565, setting forth the reasons which led him to that conclusion:

It is true that in the Haldimand election case, 15 S.C.R., 495, Strong and Taschereau, J.J., expressed opinions upon the general policy of the Act which, at first sight, may seem opposed to this view, but they were dealing with an election petition, and the construction of the clause forbidding that, on such a proceeding, a person who has voted shall be required to state how he has voted. The circumstance that the prohibition is limited to proceedings questioning the election or return is some indication that parliament did not intend it to extend to other proceedings. It seems unnecessary to refer in detail to the English and Irish cases cited, which my learned brother has already reviewed.

I may say, in passing, that the Minister of Justice seems to think that there is some difficulty as to whether such evidence is the best evidence. Well, that seems to me a suggestion much more fanciful than practical. Here you have a hundred ballots, and none of them would be good if they bore any identifying mark, and how can you, by the production of those ballots, say that you are assisting in producing the best evidence? It is also a fanciful objection because there is no difficulty about producing the ballots. If the ballots are to be of any assistance in getting the best evidence, have been produced, but still let the witness give evidence. And Mr. Justice Killam uses that very argument. He says:

The general rule is that the best evidence obtainable must be given, and, naturally, the best evidence of the contents of a written instrument—and a ballot paper, with the marks upon it is certainly a written instrument—is the original instrument. But the rule requiring its production and identification yields to circumstances, as in the well-known cases of lost documents, documents which the opposite party will not produce, inscriptions or documents affixed to walls, documents held by a solicitor claiming a lien upon them, public documents in official custody, documents held by parties abroad who refuse to part with them, &c.

Then the Minister of Justice makes another suggestion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The court held there that the evidence could be given.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Quite so. I trust the Minister of Marine and Fisheries does not misunderstand me. What I desire to have made plain in this case is that the evidence may be given. There has been some supposed conflict of judicial authority. For myself, I do not think that there is any conflict of judicial authority. Gentlemen for whose opinion I entertain very much more respect than I do for my own, have held the contrary view. For that reason I suggest that this question should be made plain, for the reason that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries holds a very strong opinion of mine on this question.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So far from holding an opinion in opposition to that of the hon. gentleman, I hold an opinion in unison with him, and so declared, as did every other lawyer on the Election Committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I recollect the hon. gentleman did express that opinion before that committee; but if I am not mistaken he rather came around to the opposite opinion in dealing with this matter in the present session.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I never did.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. But I think my hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Russell) did entertain a very strong view in opposition to mine, and I think the mere fact that my hon. colleague from Halifax entertained a strong view on a question of that kind is sufficient justification—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He says that he accepted my views.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that even to the last, before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, my hon. friend adhered to his view, and said that although he had deferred to the views of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in respect to that, nevertheless he had a pretty strong idea that he was right on that subject, and it is for the reason that he held that opinion up to the last that I suggest that this matter be made clear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think it is fair to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that when the matter was brought up in the Committee on Privileges and Elections it was argued, and I think, at my own request, it stood over until next day, that we might look into the authorities, and next day several of us expressed the opinion very strongly, and that opinion was put before the committee and carried without a dissenting voice; the hon. member (Mr. Borden) voting for it. The expediency of it was another thing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is quite clear that upon that investigation my hon. friend and colleague (Mr. Russell), adhered to the opinion which had been expressed by two judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, that a voter not only should not be compelled, but should not be permitted, to testify as to how he marked his ballot in any proceeding questioning an election or a return. And, further, he thought that the policy of the Act created a similar state of things in any proceedings. As to the policy of this, it is another question. The reasons which have been given by the hon. Minister of Justice do not seem to be adequate reasons. What are these reasons? He says, in the first place, that the policy of the Act is, that you shall not disclose or permit to be disclosed, how any one voted. You cannot prevent it being disclosed how any one voted. Every one of the voters in any polling district can go out and state how he voted. Every one of these voters may make a solemn declaration stating how he voted. How then can you say that there is anything in the policy of the Act to prevent it being disclosed, except in one proceeding referred to, that any witness voted in any particular way? If the Act was intended to prevent anything of that kind, all I can say is that the Act is most inadequately framed, because it is perfectly within the competence of every voter to make a statement, or a solemn declaration, stating precisely for whom he has voted. A solemn declaration so made has all the sanction of an oath. The hon. Minister of Justice has made another suggestion. He says that it would be a great temptation to perjury because, he says, you have no check upon the witness. It seems to me that this objection is also a very fanciful one. Years ago when a witness was not allowed to testify if he had the slightest interest in the result, one hundred years before we permitted criminals to testify in their own behalf, some importance might have been attached to a suggestion of that kind. But, will you say that a person giving evidence as to how he marked his ballot is any more interested or biased or is more likely to commit perjury than a criminal who goes upon the stand and testifies in his own behalf, over whom there is no check? Take the case of a man who is accused of murder, a case where no one was present when the crime was committed, except the man murdered and the man charged with the murder. That man can go upon the stand and testify. There is no more check upon him than upon any one of these persons who is giving evidence respecting how he marked his ballot, and the interest to commit perjury is infinitely greater. When you permit evidence of that kind to be given, surely you will not say that there is anything in this fanciful suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Justice, that because you have no check upon the witness you will not permit him to testify. Dozens of cases will occur to every practising lawyer in this House where witnesses give evidence in court in respect to which there is no possible check except that of cross-examination.

Another matter which was dealt with by the hon. Minister of Justice, was the propriety of permitting the commission to use the evidence taken in the West Huron investigation. I would suggest that the principle which the right hon. leader of the government laid down respecting the employment of counsel would be a very good principle in respect to this. My right hon. friend said that it would be best to leave matters of that kind, as certain other matters in connection with this commission, to the judgment and discretion of the commission. I would suggest that the use of the evidence taken in the West Huron election investigation might very well be left to the judgment and discretion of the commissioners. The hon. Minister of Justice seems to attach importance to the fact that the commissioners will not have seen the witnesses. That is a matter for the judges themselves and not for the hon. Minister of Justice. But, as a matter of fact, it is an every-day practice for judges to pass upon evidence without ever having seen the witnesses. For hundreds of years in England, courts of equity determined all issues that came before these courts, without the judges seeing the witnesses at all. The evidence was taken in the master's office, or by affidavit. In my own province they did the same thing; evidence was taken before the master in equity cases. In Admiralty cases adjudication was pronounced upon evidence taken before the registrar and the judge did not see the witnesses at all. These are matters upon which the judges and not the hon. Minister of Justice should pronounce. Two of these very commissioners, when sitting in the courts of Ontario, have many times had occasion to pass upon evidence without having seen the witnesses.

Then, the hon. Minister of Justice also thinks that there is nothing in our suggestion about the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I think there may be a very grave question about that. In the first place, so far as the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is an officer of this House, I should doubt very much whether or not these commissioners would have jurisdiction over him and over the documents in his custody. In so far as the ballot papers and other documents are in the custody of this House, or of its officer, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, there seems to be very much doubt as to whether or not they should be produced by him. The hon. Minister of Justice has apparently overlooked the provisions of section 72 of the Elections Act. That section reads as follows:

No person shall be allowed to inspect any ballot paper in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, except under the rule or order of a Superior Court Judge or a judge thereof—which rule or order may be granted by such court or judge on being satisfied by evidence on oath that the inspection or production of such ballot papers is required for the purpose of instituting or maintaining a prosecution for an offence in relation to ballot papers, or for the purpose of a petition which has been filed questioning an election or return; and any such rule or order for the inspection or production of ballot papers may be made subject to conditions as to persons, time, place and mode of inspection or production, as the court or judge making the same thinks expedient, and shall be obeyed by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

That provision has a most important bearing on this particular case, and of course it is most important that the ballot papers should be produced. It is not only important that the ballot papers should be produced when you proceed to examine witnesses in this case, but it is also important that the ballot papers should be produced for the purpose of examination by counsel and experts before the proceedings in court begin, and you cannot accomplish that in view of the provisions of this section except by legislation in this House giving necessary powers to this commission.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was managed last year by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why, of course, because the House directed the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to attend at the Bar of the House and produce all these documents. They were laid on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Perhaps I misunderstand the hon. gentleman's argument. I rather thought he quoted the statute to show that except in two particular cases mentioned no such ballot papers were to be subject to examination at all. I understood my hon. friend to be relying upon that section as offering a bar to the production of these documents before the commission. If that argument is good now, it was equally good last year against their being produced before the Privileges and Elections Committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am afraid I have not made myself plain. I would not regard section 72 as having the slightest relation to the proceedings of this House, or to its control over the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery who holds the ballots and other documents, as an officer of this House, and is completely under the control of this House. We are not dealing with a case of that kind.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is not an officer of this House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My contention is, that he is an officer of the House in respect to the custody of these ballot papers. The matter seems to be very plain to me. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is subject to the direction of this House with respect to the production of any document relating to the election of any member of this House; and necessarily so, because the House, although it has abdicated to the courts its functions with respect to elections, in some measure, at least, has not abdicated its control over these documents and has not abdicated its control over its officers—as I established to this House, as the leader of this House admitted, and as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) admitted, in the debate which took place in reference to the West Huron and Brockville elections last year. As respects these matters, I see no conflict between section 72 and the powers which this House could undoubtedly have exercised, if section 72 had never been passed. At all events, all I am asking in respect to this matter is that it be made perfectly plain. If you refer to section 114 of the Elections Act, you see that the same matter is dealt with, and weight is lent to the argument which I am making. It is there provided :

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery may deliver certified copies of any writ, list of voters, poll books, returns, reports and other documents in his possession relating to any election, except ballot papers; and such copies so certified shall be received as prima facie evidence before any election judge or court, and before any court of justice in Canada.

You are entitled to use in evidence, and he is entitled to give a certificate respecting any document except ballot papers, but as to those, he is not permitted, nor is he permitted to deal with them at all, except, as I understand, by direction of a judge in virtue of section 72, or by virtue of a resolution of this House. Now, it is absolutely essential that the ballot papers should be produced. The evidence given before the Committee on Privileges and Elections last year may be referred to. Some at least of the members of that committee were of opinion that a very great fraud had been committed in respect to ballot papers at poll No. 4, Colborne. I leave it to the judgment of any member of that committee, who heard that investigation, as to whether or not it could have been possible to get at that fraud, unless we had the ballot papers. I say unhesitatingly, that it would have been absolutely impossible to discover what I think was a fraud committed by some one in respect to those ballot papers, unless we had the ballot papers and were able to trace the dissimilarity, in the paper, in the colour, in the size, and in other particulars, between some of these ballot papers which were found in the box and the stubs from which they were supposed to have been taken. It does not seem to me that the House should hesitate, for a moment, to make a matter of this kind perfectly plain.

I suggest also that it is important—I will not dwell upon the point—that the provisions of section 11, of chapter 10, of the Revised Statutes, with respect to the maintenance and expense of witnesses, should be made applicable to this commission. At present there is no such provision applicable to this commission. It is a provision which is necessary for the purpose of giving the commissioners power to remunerate witnesses for their attendance. Apart from that, it will be necessary for the witnesses to depend upon a vote to this House, and to be subject to all the delay and formality which will be incident to having these payments made through the Auditor General, or with the sanction of the Auditor General. There is no need of that, because matters of this kind could be very much better dealt with by the commissioners—who are accustomed every day to deal with questions of this kind—than by the Auditor General, or by any other officer of this House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where would the objection be, or the difficulty in the Auditor General approving, and the commissioners exercising power to pay the witnesses, if in the Appropriation Act there should be a sum granted to be placed at the disposal of the commissioners for the express purpose of paying the expenses consequent upon the commission, as stated by the Prime Minister the other day. What legal difficulty does my hon. friend contemplate may arise, if that course is pursued ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), means to enact legislation equivalent to section 11, by means of putting it in the Appropriation Act, I admit at once that it will cover the case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend surely has heard the assurance given by the Prime Minister, that parliament would be asked to vote a sum of money expressly for the purpose of paying the expenses of this commission. I stated the other day, with the authority of my colleagues, that that would be made to cover the expenses of the officers and the payment of counsel—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not stated that it would be under the control of the commission.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will read for the benefit of the hon. minister, the section to which I refer :

The commissioners may, if they deem fit, award any witness summoned to appear before them a reasonable sum for travelling expenses and maintenance according to the scale which shall be fixed by the Governor in Council; and they shall certify to the Minister of Justice the name of any such witness and the sum awarded.

If any provision the same, or substantially the same, as that is passed in any way, whether by means of the Appropriation Bill or otherwise, we will be perfectly satisfied.

Another matter which I would like to suggest is this: The Brockville and West Huron cases were cases which I brought to the attention of the House last year. I made certain statements, and produced certain evidence in support of my charges, and I produced certain further declarations and statements this year. The facts of the West Huron case are, at least in part, fairly well known. The circumstances of the Brockville case have been disclosed through the statements which I made to the House, and also through affidavits which have been read by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). Now, as these affidavits have been brought to the attention of the House and the public; as these cases have led to the appointment of this commission; I suggest to the government that it is proper that these cases should be promptly dealt with, that the commission should in the first instance, with all convenient speed, deal with these cases, and while these cases are being dealt with—the witnesses can be summoned at once—the witnesses in other cases could be ascertained by counsel or solicitors, employed by the commissioners, so that there need be no delay whatever on the part of the commission in proceeding with this investigation.

There is only one other matter which I would like to suggest, and that is this: I think it would be proper that persons who desire to make charges, or to bring to the attention of the commissioners, alleged fraudulent acts committed in any election, should have the right to come before these commissioners and be heard by their own counsel, and produce witnesses, and examine and cross-examine.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a matter entirely in the discretion of the commissioners.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not so understand it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They can regulate the whole procedure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not so understand it. It is well known that in the province of Ontario, a commission was issued and two counsel were appointed. It is well known that certain persons went before that commission and desired to produce witnesses, and to adduce evidence with respect to certain fraudulent acts which were alleged to have taken place in the election of a member to the provincial legislature for the riding of West Elgin. It is equally well known that the commissioners held—limited as they were by the scope of the commission which appointed them—that they could not hear these parties at all. The result was that that investigation conducted by that commission has not been of so searching or thorough character as it would have been, if the commissioners could have permitted this to be done. My hon. friend, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), says this can be done. The commissioners in the case to which I refer held that it could not be done. Does the hon. gentleman say that the scope of this commission is greater than that of the commission in the West Elgin case? I would not be so sure of that as my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals. This commission provides that the commissioners shall be assisted by two counsel. Where you have an express provision of that kind, it might very well be held by the commissioners that those were the only counsel by whom they could be assisted. Where a counsel appears before a court, although he acts for a particular party, he is there for the purpose of assisting the court. If the commissioners have their two counsel to assist them, may they not say, as was said in the case of the West Elgin commission, that they are not able, by reason of the limited scope of their commission, to have any other counsel to assist them? Is it not right, at all events, that that matter should be made plain? Should not any man who says that he knows that fraudulent practices have been committed at any election, have the right to choose his own counsel to bring out the facts? Is it not the duty of the government, if they desire to make this investigation searching and thorough, as they say they do, to see that there shall be no mistake and no quibbling about that? Persons who brought forward these allegations in the first instance should be allowed to occupy a position analagous to that which they occupied before the Committee on Privileges and Elections? There they brought forward their witnesses. It is true, they did not appear by counsel, but they had their representative present, and they had witnesses who were examined before the committee at the instance of the persons who produced them. That is a different case from the case in which you have two counsel appointed by the commissioners, to whom everything must be referred, and through whom everything must be brought forward. We cannot count upon the prejudices of these people beforehand. There might be people who desire to make a case before that commission, who might think, without the slightest foundation to support their thoughts, that if they tried to make their case through the particular counsel appointed by that commission, they would not have the evidence brought out in the way they would like. Can there be any possible objection to those people having their own counsel?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not the slightest.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If there is not the slightest objection, then I say let us carefully guard against this commission putting itself in the position in which the West Elgin commission has been put. Let this investigation be searching and thorough, no matter whether gentlemen on this side of the House or on the other side happen to be touched by the finding of the commission.

There is only one other matter to which I wish to refer. The question has been raised as to whether or not this commission is authorized under chapter 114. For this suggestion which I bring to the attention of the House I am indebted to my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). He will no doubt deal with the matter; but I state the point now simply that it may be brought to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite. Chapter 114 begins in this way:

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Whenever the Governor in Council deems it expedient to cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada, or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof, and such inquiry is not regulated by any special law, the Governor in Council may, by the commission in the case confer upon the commissioners—

It has been suggested, and it seems to me there is a great deal in the point, that inasmuch as parliament, at least with respect to returning officers and deputy returning officers, would, apart from any statute of this kind, have the sole right to investigate and inquire into charges arising out of a controverted election respecting any member of this House, you may well inquire whether or not the general provisions of chapter 114 were intended to apply to a case of that kind. For such a purpose you would require express provisions. The language of chapter 114 is broad: 'Concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada'; but is that language sufficiently definite to cover a case which, apart from the statute, could only be investigated by the House or by a committee of the House? Could you by language of that kind confer the right to investigate a controverted election if there was no Controverted Election Act in force in Canada? This is the question dealt with in the latter part of my resolution, and which I have thought it worth while, on the suggestion of my hon. friend from Westmoreland, to bring to the attention of the House. I therefore move:

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof:

'this House is of opinion that the powers and jurisdiction conferred upon the Hon. Sir John Alexander Boyd, Chancellor of the province of Ontario; the Hon. Mr. Justice Falconbridge, and His Honour Judge MacTavish, under the provisions of the order in council passed on the 4th day of June, 1900, and of the statutes therein referred to are not sufficiently wide and comprehensive to enable the commissioners to make a thorough, complete and searching investigation and inquiry into the frauds which are alleged to have taken place at or in connection with the election of members of the House of Commons of Canada.

That the scope of the commission should be so widened that the commissioners shall be expressly empowered to inquire into and investigate all fraudulent practices and devices by means of which any such frauds have been accomplished, as well as the conduct and proceedings of any persons who indirectly, or by means of others, or by any collusion or connivance, have aided, abetted or countenanced the commission of or the attempt to commit any such fraud.

That for the purpose of indemnifying witnesses who may be required to answer, and who may answer questions, the answers to which may criminate, or tend to criminate them, the provisions of section 9 of chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, entitled 'An Act respecting members as to corrupt practices at Elections of Members of the House of Commons,' should be made applicable to the proceedings of the said commissioners and to the witnesses examined by or before them.

That the provisions of section 11 of the last mentioned Act respecting the travelling fees and maintenance of witnesses should also be made applicable to the proceedings of the commissioners.

That provision should be made for such preliminary investigation of facts and inquiry into evidence as are usually incident to the conduct of proceedings before a judicial tribunal.

That such provision should be made as will place beyond doubt—

(a) That it is the power and duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to produce before the commissioners all poll books, voters' lists, ballot papers and other documents in connection with any election which may be called for by the commissioners.

(b) That any witness before such commissioners is competent to testify how he voted at any election concerning the proceedings at which the commissioners may make any inquiry or investigation.

(c) That notwithstanding the appointment of counsel by the commissioners, any person making charges that fraudulent acts within the scope of the inquiry have been committed at any election, may appear and may be represented by counsel, and may examine and cross-examine witnesses before the commissioners upon any inquiry respecting fraudulent practices at such election.

That power should be conferred upon the commissioners to receive in evidence, if they deem it expedient so to do, the whole or any portion of the testimony or proceedings taken or had before the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections during the session of 1899, respecting certain frauds alleged to have been committed at the last election of a member of the House of Commons for the electoral district of the west riding of the county of Huron.

That the commissioners should, in the first instance, proceed to inquire into and investigate with all convenient speed the alleged frauds at the last election for the electoral district of Brockville and at the last election for the electoral district of the west riding of the county of Huron, which have already been brought to the attention of this House, and which were referred to and in part investigated by the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, and which have led to the appointment of the said commission.

That this House is also of opinion that such legislation should be enacted as will place beyond doubt as well the power of the Governor General in Council to pass the said order in council of the 4th June, 1900, as the jurisdiction of the said commissioners by virtue of the commission issued thereunder to inquire into and investigate the alleged frauds.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I followed the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax), who made this motion this afternoon, and I think it is only fair to say that I think he presented his argument in support of the motion very fairly. But I did not discover that he advanced any stronger reasons than had been previously stated to the House in support of this proposition, or that what he urged upon the House tended at all to establish the statements in the resolution—that the House is of opinion that the powers, jurisdiction and so on, conferred upon the commissioners are not sufficiently wide and comprehensive to enable the commissioners to make a thorough, complete and searching investigation and inquiry into the frauds which are alleged to have taken place in connection with the elections of members to the House of Commons. I am quite willing to give my hon. friend and those who are acting with him the credit of desiring that this investigation shall be thorough and complete in every particular; and while I do that, I claim on behalf of the government and its supporters in the House an equal anxiety, and as keen a desire for a thorough and complete investigation. I take it that it is in the interest of both parties in this country that we should take means to ascertain, if possible, the extent to which these practices have occurred, and to ascertain, if possible, what means may be efficiently taken in order to prevent their repetition in the future. I think there can be nobody bold enough to affirm that these practices had their origin in any recent election: that, if they existed in relation to the election in West Huron, that was by any means the first time, nor was that the first year in which recourse was had to these means which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) wishes to see put down. And I say that this government not only has no desire to frustrate a thorough investigation, but it has no interest in preventing a thorough exposure of all parties in all elections in which it may be shown that acts of this kind have been committed. There can be no reason assigned by hon. gentlemen opposite why this government should be moved by any such disposition. I do not charge it against hon. gentlemen opposite that they would be unwilling to have the elections which took place when they were in power and when the officers were appointed by them included in the inquiry: I do not charge against them that they have any reason for so desiring. But, while I state that, I affirm, as strongly as my own knowledge and belief will enable me to do, that there is no reason under the sun why this government should not earnestly and ardently desire that the investigation should disclose anything and everything that may tend to show where these practices have existed with a view to preventing them in the future.

Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), I take it, has failed in convincing the members of this House that the inquiry cannot be thorough, complete and searching under the commission which is issued. The government has made every effort to so frame the commission, to use such terms, as will enable the commissioners to explore all the ground and to get to the bottom of these matters; and I think we have not failed in employing language which is adequate for that purpose. I think my hon. friend has some doubts himself, at all events he had not a very strong opinion, that the first portion of the resolution was well sustained—that the scope of the inquiry would be widened by his proposal, and that, in the absence of this amendment, the commission would fail of its object. He looked at, and I think he read, the terms of the commission in this regard; and he concluded his argument in this way—that, while he seemed to think the language was strong enough and clear enough, yet there might be a doubt, and to remove doubts, it would be well that this amendment should be made. Now, Sir, that is a matter of opinion. The opinion on this side of the House, supported and sustained by the law officers of the Crown, is that the language of the commission is amply broad enough to inquire not only into the conduct of the returning officers, deputy returning officers and other officers, if there are any, but into the conduct of all persons in relation to the alleged frauds in the elections. Therefore, there is no reason why we should amend our own commission, when we firmly believe and are convinced (and my hon. friend who moves this resolution has only some doubt on the subject), that it does not require amendment, that it is sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose they are wrong?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But we are assured they are not wrong; and I think we are entitled to entertain that opinion, and, entertaining it, to act upon it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will permit me, I endeavoured to state, so far as was consistent with becoming modesty on my part, that I thought the scope of the commission was not sufficiently wide for the purpose. Of course, I had every respect for the opinion of gentlemen who differed from me. Therefore, I did not see fit to make a positive statement, as I knew there were gentlemen, such as my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, who seemed inclined to hold a contrary opinion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not attribute my hon. friend's hesitancy to modesty; but, since he affirms that was the reason of it, I am bound to accept his statement. But I think I shall be justified in expressing some surprise that his modesty carried him as far as it did; and I do not acknowledge that the language of this clause was open to the doubt which he expressed in this resolution. Now, let me call attention to the actual language of the commission, and, in the first place, to the preamble. The preamble would necessarily throw a great deal of light on what was the purpose and intent of the commission, and it would help to remove the doubts of my hon. friend as to whether any other persons were referred to than returning officers and deputy returning officers. If he will look at that commission he will see that the object is thus set forth :

It is alleged that frauds were committed by returning officers, deputy returning officers or other parties, in several of the electoral districts.

You see that the commission at the very outset sets forth that frauds were alleged to have been committed, not merely by returning officers and deputy returning officers, but also by 'other parties, and that this commission should be empowered to institute an inquiry into the conduct :

Of all persons as respects any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents, of the ballot boxes.

Now, my hon. friend does not say that this inquiry should, in the terms, specify anything more than the poll books, ballot boxes and contents thereof, which would mean of course, the ballots. He does not say that it is defective as to the persons by whom these frauds may have been committed; it is not as to the particular frauds committed—that is sufficiently alleged—but as to the persons who may have been concerned in committing those frauds. Now he will fail to find any limitation as to persons whatever. The inquiry is into the conduct of A, B, and C. But you cannot inquire into the conduct itself, unless you inquire into the acts of persons whose conduct is complained of, or whose fraudulent acts are alleged—necessarily all persons. You observe the empowering portion of the commission was framed with the view of being as strong and as broad as possible, so clear and so broad, that no person could possibly take any exception to it. It is not limited in the empowering portion of it; in the instructions to the commissioners it is not limited to individuals or officers, but it is made broad enough to include all parties, and it does include all parties, and all fraudulent conduct of the character referred to here. Now having that strong conviction, having carefully framed the commission so that it would not be open to criticism upon this question, we do not feel justified in yielding to the hon. gentleman's request to amend this commission. There is no reason for amending it; it is made completely clear that the commission covers the whole ground.

My hon. friend then turns to another weakness which he alleges to exist in this commission. He does not state this proposition in the order in which I am mentioning it, but it is suggested to him, I think, by one of the members of the House, that there is, in the chapter under which this commission has been issued, inadequate language to justify the issue of the commission, and he calls attention to it with, I think, a great deal of hesitation himself, but still with the expression of opinion that there may be a great deal in it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No hesitation at all. I referred to my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), because he had first brought the matter to my attention.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend then did not express any hesitation, so I must have been in error. Doubt arises on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, or certain of them, in respect to this language. In the Act respecting Inquiries Concerning Public Matters, the first clause says :

Whenever the Governor in Council deems it expedient to cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada—

And so on, he may issue a commission. Now, what language would my hon. friend use of a general character, what words would he employ more plainly, meaning everything connected with the government of the Dominion, than the words that are employed here—'any matter connected with the good government of Canada'? Is there a doubt in my hon. friend's mind that this is a question connected with the good government of Canada? I think he will say no. Now, supposing that language was not adequate upon which to found an objection that the commissioners could not exercise these functions that have been conferred upon them by this commission, because the general Act, chapter 114, was not broad enough, and it was not a matter affecting the good government of Canada, what argument would my hon. friend make? I have a great deal of confidence in his legal knowledge, and in his acumen and astuteness, but I think with all his capability, he would absolutely fail in making any argument having the slightest weight with any tribunal, in support of the contention that this was not a question affecting the good government of Canada, and, therefore, did not come within the statute. I think if he does think there is anything in this, he is rather hypercritical. We, at all events, have no doubt whatever upon it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not fully apprehend my point. I desire to make it very clear. Suppose we have parliament in this position, that it has the right and sole right to deal with matters respecting controverted elections; and no doubt it has the sole right, apart from the statute. Let us say that you have conferred upon it jurisdiction to deal in the most general terms with all matters affecting civil rights, or some equally broad expression; my suggestion is that inasmuch as general language of that kind would not take away from parliament the right to deal with questions concerning controverted elections, so a general expression of this kind, 'the good government of Canada,' would not interfere with the sole right of parliament to investigate and inquire into the conduct of its returning and deputy returning officers. That was the point I intended to convey. So my hon. friend, perhaps, will see that there was something in it that he has not yet touched. So far as controverted elections are concerned, he will remember that we have a statute which deals with that subject in the most express terms, not by any general language. What I suggested might be the construction of chapter 114 was that general language of that kind would not deal with the matters so intimately connected with the rights and privileges of the House as this matter does, and that he would require an enactment quite as expressed as the provisions of the Controverted Elections Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not say that if we were dealing with a question which parliament had specifically delegated to another tribunal it would not be well for us to say that there had been a specific provision in the Act varying the jurisdiction, or creating another tribunal to make sure that parliament's intention was to confer a new jurisdiction upon it. I am referring to the case where it had already set up a special and distinct tribunal for hearing such a case, as, for instance, the case of a controverted election. I would not assume that under such circumstances parliament could be presumed to have given power under chapter 114 of dealing with the case of a controverted election, under a commission issued under the authority of that Act, but it is clear that the argument that the hon. gentleman makes would fail as parliament has set up no special tribunal outside of itself for the purpose of dealing with questions relating to the administration of the government of the country, or relating to the good government of the country. It has set up no special jurisdiction for hearing charges or complaints, or investigating matters of that kind. Therefore, the argument which might perhaps forcibly be made, if we were presuming to refer to a commission under chapter 114, a question relating to a controverted election would not apply in the present case at all. It is not a matter which arises out of, or is connected with, controverted elections in any way. It is not a matter which affects the seat of any member of this House, it is not a matter which would deal with the correctness of the return in any election.

Mr. BLAIR.

It is simply an inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining whether, having regard to the good government of Canada, the officers, and not the officers only, but the persons who had to do with these elections, were guilty of any fraudulent practices. That inquiry is made with the view, in the first place, I presume, of ascertaining if we could, how these acts and this conduct of these men could be prevented by further legislation, and in the second place, by taking steps for the punishment of the people who have been guilty of these acts. It seems to me, and it so seems to the Department of Justice, that the statute is abundantly broad to cover such a commission as we have here issued, that the commission does relate to an inquiry connected with the good government of Canada, and that it does not undertake to deal with a subject that parliament has delegated to another tribunal. It is equally true that parliament has the right, and parliament, under ordinary circumstances, alone, exercises the right to inquire into the conduct, if it desires to do so, of any department of the government, any act of administration by the government as a whole, or any minister of the government. Does any person say that a commission could not properly issue under chapter 114, for the purpose of investigating, inquiring into, and ascertaining the facts in regard to it, under this chapter, and could it be urged as a reason, as the hon. gentleman is urging, that no commission could exercise any such jurisdiction, that it would not have any such authority, because parliament could appoint a committee in the usual and constitutional course, for such a purpose? I think there would be no force in such an argument. I think it was manifestly the intention of parliament, when it passed chapter 114, to supplement the ordinary jurisdiction of parliament, by and through the government of the day, which it controls, that a commission outside and independent of parliament should be appointed for the purpose of holding such inquiries, of which this is one. Let me then proceed to the next clause. The hon. gentleman states in this resolution:

That for the purpose of indemnifying witnesses who may be required to answer, and who may have answered questions, the answers to which may criminate or tend to criminate them, the provisions of section 9, of chapter 10, of the Revised Statutes of Canada entitled 'An Act respecting inquiries as to corrupt practices at elections of members of the House of Commons,' should be made applicable to the proceedings of the said commissioners and to the witnesses examined by or before them.

I understand my hon. friend to contend that the powers contained in the Act which was introduced into this House and known, I think, as the Blake Act, should have been embodied in the present commission, or rather, that legislation should have been introduced for the purpose. I take it that it would be necessary that legislation should be had for such a purpose.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may say that in so far as commissions of that kind are concerned, I intended that there should be legislation. The Governor in Council could not do that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I quite understand my hon. friend to mean that. The hon. gentleman proposes that chapter 114 should be amended so as not only to afford protection to the witness from the testimony which he, himself, may give upon such an inquiry, but that every person by reason of the fact that he has come forward and given that evidence, should be entitled to a certificate, and that that should free him from any prosecution in respect of any act which he may be proved to have committed of this character as to which the evidence may refer.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not so much dealing with chapter 114, as I was dealing with the suggestion that this investigation, which is of the same character, or somewhat of the same character, as that provided for by chapter 10, should be accompanied with the same instance in that respect; in other words, that so far as this investigation is concerned we should make applicable the provisions of the ninth section and the eleventh section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand the hon. gentleman's contention in that regard. I take it that it is a mere matter of opinion. The hon. gentleman's opinion is that it would be desirable to do that. The opinion of the government upon it is that it would not be desirable. The hon. gentleman thinks that it would tend materially to more freedom in the giving of testimony, if such a course were adopted. That opinion is not shared by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, so far as I know. It is an opinion, at all events, that is not entertained by the government. It is entirely a matter of opinion. The opinion which I entertain is that such a departure from what is the usual and ordinary privilege which is conferred upon the individual who gives evidence which may, if it were used against him, tend to incriminate him, is going far enough. We do not see that any benefit would accrue at all from extending it beyond the phrase that we have embodied in our commission. We do not think any benefit would accrue from it. The hon. gentleman thinks there would; we think there would not. I may point out to my hon. friend that it does not carry the argument any further, as it strikes me, to say that one member of this House at one time contended that such an addition to the ordinary privilege would be an advantage. It bears no other weight than can be attached to it as the opinion of a prominent member of this House; which apparently is shared in by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden).

Mr. POWELL. And by the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The majority of the House at that time did agree in it. But what effect will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) attach to the equally cogent fact (which no doubt is present in his mind although he did not mention it), that when the Act of 1889 was being passed, it was introduced by no less a person than Sir John Thompson. Sir John Thompson had Mr. Blake's clause and the English Act, and this Act before him. He no doubt weighed and considered all these, but yet he came to the conclusion that in any inquiry which should take place by commissioners, covering the whole sphere of any matters involving the good government of Canada; he came to the conclusion that it was not desirable to extend that clause beyond what is embodied in this Act. He rejected Mr. Blake's clause as not being, in his opinion, wise or proper legislation. Of course, any hon. gentleman who thinks that Mr. Blake's opinion is very much more valuable than the opinion of Sir John Thompson will perhaps agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Borden), but those who entertain the view, that Sir John Thompson's opinion on a question of this kind was equally valuable with the opinion of Mr. Blake, will not follow the reasoning of the hon. member (Mr. Borden). You have Sir John Thompson upon the one side and Mr. Blake upon the other, the one neutralizing the other and leaving us just where we commenced.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I follow both.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend will pardon me for saying that he does not follow both.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I follow both, because I think that Sir John Thompson did not intend that section 114 would apply to any such proceeding as this at all. I follow both Mr. Blake and Sir John Thompson, if my theory is right as to what this Act means.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a mere matter of conjecture on the part of the hon. gentleman, and conjecture is not very valuable in support of such a proposition as he asks the House to adopt. The fact is that Sir John Thompson asked parliament to amend the law in so far-reaching a manner as to regulate all inquiries into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada; and, having present to his mind that the evidence which a person might be called upon to give might tend to criminate that person and that legal prosecutions might follow, and, not believing that it would stimulate the witness to give better testimony if there was incorporated Mr. Blake's clause, Sir John Thompson distinctly rejected that clause and amended the law as we find it in the Act of 1889. I say that the absence of that additional clause from the Act of 1889, which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) seeks to insert to-day, is the best evidence in the world that Sir John Thompson's opinion was against the insertion of that clause. I am not a little surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) should now attach such very great importance to the opinion of Mr. Blake as against the opinion of Sir John Thompson on this question. We are at all events of the opinion that it would not conduce to any more freedom on the part of witnesses in giving their evidence or in stating the facts. I can very well imagine—and it might possibly have been in the mind of Sir John Thompson when he rejected that clause. I can very well imagine that were such a clause inserted, and my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) were conducting that inquiry, and if he had an interest in saving any particular person, A, B, C, or D, who had been guilty of these alleged practices, and a number of witnesses had been put on the stand whose testimony pointed to the guilt of A, B, or C, my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) would be on the alert to have A, B, C, or D called as a witness, and he would advise him: Now, you are in a hole; the evidence clearly shows your guilt, go on the stand as quickly as possible and make a clean breast of it, and you will escape entirely a prosecution if you do that. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) would no doubt bend his energies in that direction, and if you had many such people so inculcated you would have them marching up in battalions to the court, hurrying to give their testimony so that they would be exempt from prosecution, although the evidence outside of their own confession was ample to establish their guilt and secure a conviction.

My hon. friend next spoke of the payment of the maintenance and travelling expenses of the witnesses before the commission, but I think the hon. gentleman was satisfied with the suggestion made to him across the floor, that there could be no object in amending this commission in that direction at this stage. The commission, I think, has actually issued—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
It is gazetted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it would be desirable to amend the commission for this reason alone, unless some stronger arguments can be given than have been given in favour of it. It was declared not only this afternoon, but it was declared at a very early period of this discussion, that it was the intention of the government to ask parliament for a vote and to make the vote in such terms that it should be at the disposal of the commissioners for the purpose of covering these expenses. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) must not think that it was in the mind of the government at any time to ask parliament for a vote which they did not intend should be used for that purpose, or to ask for it in such a way that it could not properly be used for that purpose. Nothing could possibly be gained by that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) might at least acknowledge that the government of this country are not entirely destitute of common sense. Even if we had no higher motive, we would not propose to start an inquiry which we did not intend should be equipped in every necessary way, in order if possible to get at the facts which we want to reach and to expose to the fullest extent. That is our interest, and hon. gentlemen opposite do not, I think, do themselves justice if they assume that the government could be moved by any want of earnestness or sincerity in this matter, or could feel that we had any credit to gain or could justify ourselves to the public at large by issuing a commission which is faulty and defective, and which must fail by reason of the form in which we had issued it.

Mr. BLAIR.

The next clause the hon. gentleman proposes is that:

Provision should be made for such preliminary investigation of facts and inquiry into evidence as are usually incident to the conduct of proceedings before a judicial tribunal.

In this connection my hon. friend pointed out that it would be unreasonable to expect the two counsel who would be named by the commission, to take up the preliminary or initiative stages of these matters, and that it ought to be possible for persons who might be interested in pursuing an investigation into any of these charges, to retain counsel who would be authorized to appear before the commission. I do not see any reason why my hon. friend should feel alarmed on that score. There is nothing in this commission which would prevent the commissioners from allowing any counsel who might appear in the interest of any complainant, to state his case, present his witnesses, and, if he would, examine them before the tribunal. On the contrary, the very terms of this commission show that the government, in framing it, have been alive to the importance of making every possible provision for the judges to make the inquiry thorough and effective. We confer upon them in terms the power to make such rules and regulations governing the practice and procedure as seem to them proper for the initiation,—the very point my hon. friend seems to be alarmed about—the conduct and the prosecution of such inquiries and investigations. What we have had in our minds in using the language which we have used here, and in framing the commission generally, is that the commissioners may be free to take up the subject in such a way as they deem best. What will probably take place will be this. As soon as the commissioners are ready to enter upon their duties, I apprehend that they will notify parties that they will open their court at a date named, and will hear suggestions from persons who are interested pro or con in respect to the subjects of inquiry; and, if necessary, they will frame rules and regulations in order that everything may be done, and well done, that is necessary to make the investigation thorough. If it fails to be thorough, if any difficulty arises of the kind my hon. friend anticipates, it will not be the fault of the commission. I cannot imagine that anything can be clearer than that they may make rules under which persons interested in the matters to be inquired into may appear by their solicitors or counsel and be heard. That is one of the rules that they would make, and I am sure they would not refuse to make it when it is suggested to them; and I doubt if it would be necessary to suggest to them anything so plain and clear as likely to be necessary for the proper conduct of the inquiry.

My hon. friend proposed that parliament should be asked to pass a law to the effect that every witness in this inquiry may be asked how he voted at any of these elections. Now, my hon. friend either is of opinion that a change in the law is necessary in order that such a question may properly be asked and the answer to it enforced, or he entertains a different view. If he entertains the opinion that the law as it stands to-day would not warrant such an inquiry, and that a witness who is summoned would not be compelled to answer, then my hon. friend wants to change the law of the land as it is at this moment and as it was when the votes were cast. I think that is a very serious proposition. He says he wants to make it clear. He is of opinion that in this inquiry a witness can be asked how he voted and can be compelled to answer. If he is right, there is no necessity of changing the law. If he is wrong, I cannot believe that this parliament would say that it would be a proper thing to change the law. We have done the best that could be done under the circumstances. We are not going to change the conditions under which men voted when they cast their ballots at any election which has taken place up to this date. We are not going to say that a man who may have voted in the belief that his ballot was secret and that he could not be compelled to declare how he voted, shall now be placed, in respect to the secrecy of the ballot, in any different position from that which he occupied under the law two, three, eight or ten years ago. I do not think there can be any purpose or any good public interest served by going to the length of changing the law of the land in this regard. My hon. friend says this is not a controverted election trial or an inquiry in which the seat of any member is involved or can be prejudiced. If he is so confident that he is right in that opinion, why seriously propose to this parliament what may be, if he is wrong, a change in the law? If my hon. friend is right, there is no need of changing the law; if he is wrong, it would be wrong, in my opinion, to change the law. I am sure that this parliament and the country are willing to take the law on this question as it stands to-day and act upon it, and take the consequences. The country will be willing to leave it to the men who have been chosen upon this commission to determine what the law of the land is in that regard.

My hon. friend says that it would be proper for us to take the evidence given before the Privileges and Elections Committee of this House, to hand it over to the commission, and ask the commission to make what use they please of it. Is not that a somewhat novel proposition? Does my hon. friend remember any inquiry involving serious consequence, it may be, to those whose acts and conduct are being investigated, being determined upon testimony given before another tribunal and given when the rights of those who appeared before that other tribunal were not considered at all. The controlling consideration before the Committee on Privileges and Elections was not what are the strict rules of evidence, nor what is the law regulating the admission and rejection of testimony, that was not at all the controlling consideration either on the one side or the other. My hon. friends opposite pressed for the admission of evidence that they knew would never for a moment have been considered admissible by any court of justice. And why? Because they thought that the great majority of the people, who do not know anything of legal rules, would assume that when such evidence was objected to, it was because those objecting to it were trying to exclude it for some improper purpose or because they were afraid of the consequence. Such a disposition was manifested on both sides, and always will be in those inquiries before parliamentary committees, involving political questions. Those who think that such evidence is not admissible are afraid to oppose its admission because they feel that such opposition would prejudice them in the eyes of the people, who, knowing nothing of the rules of evidence, would see only in it a desire to prevent discovery of the facts. That idea was no doubt what moved the committee to allow the admission of a great deal of the evidence received. I have sat upon those committees myself in other places and I know, and those gentlemen who have sat on similar committees will be frank enough to acknowledge—if they wish to acknowledge what they believe—that this is the moving influence on both sides. The party in opposition always feel that they have everything to gain by pressing the most unreasonable and improper questions, and the party in power, on the other hand, feel that they have everything to lose by objecting to such questions. Yet my hon. friend coolly asks that testimony of such a character and admitted under such circumstances should be handed over bodily to this commission, and this commission be asked to come to a conclusion upon it. To ask that the judicial commission should take cognizance of such testimony, taken by a completely distinct body, and a great deal of it hearsay and utterly inadmissible and valueless, is to my mind a request which requires only to be stated to be refused. What is the object which my hon. friend thinks can be served by such a departure from all rule and precedent? My hon. friend has not enlightened us. I have not heard any reason advanced, except the matter of expense, and that question of expense is not one which will weigh very much with hon. gentlemen opposite. They will not feel much concerned on that score, and it is not a consideration that will weigh with anybody. We have selected gentlemen in whom the people have confidence as commissioners, and we want these gentlemen to give their best mind and thought to the investigation. We want them to get at the facts, but we do not want them to be loaded up, at the very outset, with hearsay statements, because you can get hearsay statements which will incriminate any one. We want them to come to a conclusion upon legal and proper evidence, taken in a legal and proper way. In civil cases, in which the character, freedom and reputation of men are not affected, but which simply involve dollars and cents or some question of legal controversy—in such cases evidence is sometimes taken by the consent of the parties elsewhere than in the presence of the judge, who will read it and give what weight to it he chooses. But that class of cases is entirely different from the one before us. In this case the parties are all liable to suffer the consequences if they are shown guilty of the acts charged against them. While this commission is not a trial, it is leading up to a prosecution in those cases in which the charges may be established, and therefore, such charges ought to be investigated in a proper manner and only such evidence admitted as can properly and legally be admitted, without doing any injustice or unfairness to any person concerned.

As to the expense, I do not believe that a dollar would be saved by following the course advised by my hon. friend, because either one side or the other will be desirous of having every individual witness, who gave evidence before the committee, summoned and examined again.

The suggestion is one that does not commend itself to the government, and we cannot except it.

Next we had something with regard to the power or authority of this commission to compel the attendance of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery with the ballot papers and poll books and other documents in his possession. My hon. friend referred to the Election Act in this connection, and suggested that there was some argument to be drawn from it. I think he bases his contention very largely upon the proposition that the officer is an officer of this House. If I am correct in that, I think that the basis upon which he urged this contention of his is not well founded, because I think it must be clear that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is an officer of the Crown, and not an officer of the House of Commons. He is appointed by the Crown, not by this House; he is paid by the Crown and not paid in the ordinary way of officers of this House. He is assuredly an officer of the Crown.

Mr. POWELL. Might he not be both?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He might possibly be both. But, I take it that as a Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, he is an officer of the government. He is made custodian of certain documents relating to the return of member to this House—

Mr. POWELL. And to that extent, he is an officer of this House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I take it not. I do not think you will find in any statute which governs him or his duty that he is declared, quo ad the receipt of returns of elections and the filing of them, an officer of this House. It is not so stated in any statute so far as my memory serves me. As an officer of the Crown, he must be subject to the control of the Crown; and the Crown has stated in this connection that he shall attend upon the request of the commission, and produce these documents. Perhaps, if the House were to pass an order that these documents and papers should not be taken by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and exhibited before or handed over to the custody of this court, that might be sufficient to prevent them being taken. I am not going to argue that question, because that question is not likely to arise. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is required, in express terms by this commission, to attend and produce these documents. So my hon. friend will see that we were prepared against any possible contingency, against any possible contention that might be made that our commission was faulty in any particular. The hon. gentleman referred to a clause contained in the election law from which he gathered, as a matter of inference, that the statute forbids this officer to allow any person to inspect these ballots or poll-books, or whatever may be the prohibited documents, other than to the courts excepted under the Act. If there is doubt upon the subject at all there is a very simple and easy way by which you can remove that doubt. We have no desire to have this investigation baulked through any defect of that kind, I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite,—that is furthest from our thoughts and wishes. But, instead of passing through this House an Act to amend chapter 114, or instead of changing the commission in any regard—though I presume that would not be adequate if my hon. friend's reading the law is correct—we might meet the case by a very simple amendment to the Bill relating to elections which is now before the House. If any hon. gentleman thinks it a matter of sufficient doubt, and will suggest the words to be added to one of the clauses which will remove that doubt, there will be no objection on the part of the government to amending that clause. Section 98 of the Bill is one identical with the section in the existing law; and the addition of few words will make it clear that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall attend this commission, so that there will be no necessity for the introduction of a separate Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it will be decidedly necessary, because the Governor General in Council has no power to make an order with respect to returns which I think, are in the custody of this House through their officer the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. RUSSELL. How do you make it out that he is an officer of this House?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) doubt that the returns of members to this House are in the control of this House? My idea about it is that the return of members to this House are in the possession of this House and under the control of this House, although they are, by the terms of the statute, in the actual possession of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Holding possession of these returns, he holds them as an officer of this House and is subject to the control of this House in that respect. In other words, the House has complete control over these returns, and also over ballot papers and other documents relating to the return of members to this House. And, as is pointed out to me by my hon. friend the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), in Sir John Bourinot's book, page 225, on this point, he quotes Hatsell, a well known authority:

He is also an officer of the House of Commons, though appointed by the Crown and in attendance on the Lords on certain occasions.

That is exactly what I thought the law was, though I never had my attention attracted to that authority before. I should think it abundantly plain that the Governor General in Council, in the absence of a statute expressly giving authority for that purpose, would have no control over the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in respect of these documents. That is why I suggested that it was necessary, and why I still think it is necessary, to make the change. I think an amendment of the Election Act will effect the object desired.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not necessary to waste time discussing the question now, because it is a purely academic question. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) desires that an amendment of that kind be introduced in the Bill relating to elections, that Bill will be before the Committee of the Whole again, and there will be no objection on the part of the government to the adoption of the amendment. We wish to place no obstacle in the way of the inquiry; and it would be extremely inconvenient if any doubts arose in the minds of the commissioners as to whether the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery could be compelled to produce these documents before the commission. We desire to have them there; and while I do not think that any question would arise, while I do not think that there is any room for doubt under the terms of the commission, as to the obligation on the part of this officer to attend on the subpoena from these commissioners, yet, there can be no possible objection to a few words being added to the clause of the Election Act to which I have referred.

Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) makes further complaint with regard to the commission, and says that we ought, in express terms in that commission, to direct that the commissioners should inquire, first and foremost, into the West Huron and Brockville election cases. He has not favoured us with any particular reason why either of these cases should be first taken up, except that one of them was taken up and has already been practically exhausted, so far as the taking of evidence is concerned, before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of this House. If that were a good reason, a cogent reason, why the West Huron case should be taken up, it would not be any reason why the Brockville case should be taken up out of its order, because there has not been even the shadow of a prima facie case stated in this House for the Brockville inquiry. But, whether there is any particular urgency for the hearing of one case first rather than another, does the hon. gentleman imagine that public interest will be exhausted as soon as one case is heard, or does he think that the hearing of one case is going to exhaust the whole time at the disposal of the commissioners, and that they cannot go into other cases? If he imagines that, I trust it will turn out that he is entirely in error, as I would hope the inquiry might be concluded inside the vacation season in all the ridings in which cases for an inquiry may be suggested. But, the hon. gentleman ignores this fact, that if any reason can be urged why the West Huron case should be taken up first, the commissioners would be very happy to hear the argument of the hon. gentleman, I have no doubt. They are not going to stop their ears to any reasons alleged as to why an inquiry into one riding should take place first. I am well assured that he will find that the commissioners, who cannot be charged with any partisan interest or party prejudice, will be disposed to give all weight to any reason the hon. gentleman may assign as to why the West Huron case should be taken up in priority to the others. Let him go there and present his reasons. But, I think it would distinctly militate against the character of this commission if we were to give instructions to the commissioners first to take up the West Huron case. Is the government going to express its opinion that the West Huron case is the only case, or the chief case of consequence, in which it is necessary that the inquiry should take place, that it is the most important case in which practices of this character are alleged to have occurred? Nobody can subscribe to that. Why, Sir, there is not a man in this country who does not believe, there are many men who, from information which they have received from reliable sources, know that fraudulent practices of this kind have obtained in election after election in this country. And to suppose that the government, in issuing a commission, are going to give the West Huron case prominence, as if it were the worst of all cases, is a proposition which I think is rather unreasonable and has nothing to support it. What we propose to do by this commission is to leave everything of a controversial character, everything that is not plain and free from question, to be dealt with by the commissioners themselves. The order of procedure they are most competent to determine upon. The time, the place, when and how, are all questions which, I think, the people, if they have faith in their competency, in their fitness, and in their impartiality, can afford to leave to them. The commissioners themselves must be competent to determine what locality, concerning which charges are made, should first be investigated. Therefore, the government has declined, and will continue to decline, to give any instructions to the commission as to which case they shall take up first. Let them hear what may be alleged, let them hear what arguments may be advanced as to the procedure and order in which the inquiry should take place, and let them determine as in their judgment shall seem best; and their determination, I am sure, will be accepted by the country at large as a determination which is influenced by no improper motive, interest or consideration whatever. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the House will not think proper to subscribe to my hon. friend's proposition, that the commission is not sufficiently wide and not sufficiently comprehensive to enable the commissioners to make a thorough and searching investigation. I think the House is satisfied that the intentions of the government, as declared to this House, have been fully carried out. There is a bona fide and sincere desire upon the part of the government that this inquiry shall not fall from any want of scope in the commission, and, under such circumstances, I am sure the House will not accept the proposition of my hon. friend.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Few hon. gentlemen on this side of the House will dispute that superior knowledge which the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) seems to claim as to the prevalence of frauds in other elections and other electoral districts. The hon. gentleman apparently has knowledge which would have been useful to parliament in connection with inquiries of this kind. He says that the West Huron election was not the first in which fraudulent practices have occurred. I want to remind him and to remind his colleagues, that it was the first election in which a demand for investigation into fraud was made by a member of this House, at any rate, for many long years past; it was the first investigation that was begun under the auspices of this House by one of its regular committees, and it is the first that, having been begun, was stopped midway by the action of the government. It is unique, therefore, in that respect. The cases of West Huron and Brockville, which I should have coupled together, are not only unique in that respect, but, as I said on another occasion, these cases, and the acts brought to light by the work of the committee last session, undoubtedly brought the government to its present position, and undoubtedly forced the government to change their front as to whether an inquiry should go on, and compelled them finally to decide to issue a Royal Commission. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, if this commission is to be considered a parliamentary delegation, and not a delegation of a party, or simply of one side of the House, I think the suggestions that are made, without heat, that were made by men of the legal profession on this side of the House, should have been received in a different spirit by the gentlemen who happen to be for the moment in possession of the Treasury benches. I was glad to-night, in listening to the Minister of Railways and Canals, to find that he did not venture that extraordinary, that almost appalling reason that he gave the other day for not taking suggestions on this subject from this side of the House, when, as he will remember, he stated that these suggestions, while they did not amount to much, as they were practically covered by the order in council out of which the commission comes, still they might be accepted by the government were it not that the opposition and their press would say that we had forced the hands of the government on the subject.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman profess to be quoting what I said?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am not quoting verbatim, but I think I am doing the hon. gentleman justice, and I think he said even worse than that. Still, as I understood him, that was one of his strongest arguments on the last occasion when this subject was discussed for not accepting suggestions from this side of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume that the hon. gentleman will not object to me setting him right. I do not attach very much importance to the hon. gentleman's reference, but it might be assumed, that if I allowed him to make it without protest, he was correctly stating the effect of what I said. What I did say was this: I said distinctly, in answer to the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), who made a most vituperative attack on the government, attributing all sorts of motives, in answer to the motives which he attributed, that he would justify the inference that his whole object, in asking that these provisions be put in was that he might be in a position to say if we accept them, that we were forced to do it by the other side, and if we did not accept them to cry out to the country that we tried to suppress the inquiry.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Here it is verbatim et literatim:

It is quite patent that the object of the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has been to demand that some changes should be made in the language of the commission, so that in the event of these changes being accepted by the government, the hon. gentleman and his friends and his press could circulate broadcast throughout the country that the government commission was defective in most important particulars and that it would have failed to make a proper inquiry were it not that the opposition forced the government to introduce the amending words.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is just what I say.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Sir Charles Tupper then says:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Am I to understand that that is the ground on which they are refused?

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) does not give as direct an answer as one would suppose from what he states this evening. He says:

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is, undoubtedly, the object of the leader of the opposition in making these proposals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say that that was the reason for refusing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is my appreciation and recollection of his language, so that I do not think there is a very great difference. But, it is clear enough, it is beyond reasonable argument, that there is now a broad line between the policy of the opposition and the policy of the government in reference to this commission and the scope of this commission. I feel confident that any one, referring to the language used by the right hon. leader of the government at the close of the debate when the Prime Minister stated to this House and to the country that a commission would issue in response to the suggestions having come from this side of the House, must admit that the utterances of hon. members on this side of the House since that are more in keeping with the promises and statements of the Prime Minister as to the scope of the commission than the technical and narrow arguments used by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals this evening, because the hon. gentleman, eminent lawyer though he is, has to admit the strength of the arguments advanced by the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden). He could not brush them away as idle, he could not term them captious. The hon. gentleman several times referred to the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice. They have a responsibility, and it is not for the opposition to dictate to them in matters where there are legal questions involved, and they are perfectly within their rights if they stand on the opinion of the law officers of the Crown. But, in a matter where, as it seems to me, the case is for parliamentary action and not for government action merely, where something is being done under the auspices of parliament, in parliament assembled, and not under the auspices of the government, I think that the views of different gentlemen, at any rate, those learned in the law, should be entitled to more consideration than they have received to-night. The criticism was made in regard to the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice, made without offence, that it bore upon its face signs of haste, signs that it had not been considered. When it was read in the House the Prime Minister confessed to parliament that one point in connection with an important matter with which the hon. Minister of Justice had dealt had not occurred to the mind of the government, and that the comparison we had with chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes relating to corrupt practices, as copied from the Imperial Act, with 33 Victoria, chapter 52, had not been made. He went on to suggest the only possible answer, which I will consider in a moment, the one made by the Minister of Railways and Canals to-night, when he endeavoured to make out that the opinions of Sir John Thompson and Mr. Blake were at variance on a question of policy of that kind. We cannot attach to an opinion of that kind the importance we would ordinarily attach to it, and I mention it by way of brushing it aside so far as having any final authority with this House in the consideration of this matter is concerned. Here then we stand, proposing, on this side of the House, that every doubt be removed, that a thorough investigation be made, not merely into the practices, as the hon. gentleman said to-night, that prevailed, not merely into the acts that occurred, the actual tampering with the ballots, but, in the line of the pledge that the Prime Minister gave after formal debate at the time to which I refer, into everything connected with these practices, into all the surrounding circumstances, in order to draw aside the veil from the men who used the criminals, who made the criminals, who aided and abetted them. No one pretends that when you prove that one man or another actually tampered with the ballots, switched them, or committed any crime at the election, the investigation ought to end. The men that were behind the criminals prompting these crimes, these frauds, and the system under which the frauds were organized, are the men that the country wishes to know about. That is what we want to know in this House, so that when the inquiry is over we may, by legislation or otherwise, take steps to prevent a recurrence of these frauds, the existence of such corrupt organizations and of such a system in this country. With that object in view, is it reasonable that the government should maintain stubbornly their opposition, and while professing that the language of the commission covers all the points that we desire to be covered, is it a reasonable position for them to take to say that they will not change a word, that they will not change a sentence in regard to the scope of the inquiry? I submit that their action will not be considered in that light by the country, that they are taking upon themselves a huge and tremendous responsibility before the country. We upon this side of the House, venture no positive opinion as to the absolute accuracy of the views we have put forward. The commission may not entertain them, it may proceed upon the line that the Minister of Railways and Canals has laid down in his argument, as it might widen the commission, as we all desire it should be widened, so that everything should be taken in. But if the inquiry becomes a farce as other inquiries under commissions issued under this government have become a farce, the responsibility on the shoulders of the government will be great indeed. I have referred to this point of the scope of the commission, and I do not wish to deal more fully with that, because I do not think I will add much to that which has already been said by the hon. senior member for Halifax. The difference between the hon. senior member for Halifax and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, let me just say as to the question of the scope of the commission, is that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals constantly refers to the ample language and the proper language empowering this commission to investigate into the practices which prevailed, and the hon. member for Halifax asks that he should go much further than that and that there should be no doubt as to the power and duty of the commission to inquire into the circumstances surrounding these practices, and how these practices came to prevail.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The commissioners have power to investigate into any fraudulent conduct in respect to these acts. You could not get anything wider than that. Would it not be fraudulent conduct if there were outsiders conspiring together?

SIR CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It might be held from the language of the commission that it referred simply to corrupt and fraudulent practices in connection with the perpetration of the act. For instance, after it had been proven what took place in the booth, the evidence might inculpate people outside the constituency who had sent in a gang of men to perpetrate these acts in the booth, and it is just possible that the judges might rule that the acts of those parties outside was not within the scope of the commission.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would not the persons who sent them be just as liable as the persons who went, and would not their conduct be fraudulent?

SIR CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minister of Railways will understand how dangerous it is to pick out a few words in order to test a question of this kind, and therefore, I shall read the language of the commission. The empowering language of this commission says:

To inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alterations—

That is one thing.

—defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect to the poll books—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is it; go on.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is limited to poll-books:

—ballot boxes, or the lawful contents—

Having named these things in regard to which the fraudulent practices may be, it goes on:

—or what should have been the lawful contents of the ballot boxes, whether by way of fraudulent alteration, addition, withdrawal or otherwise.

That being the language it seems to me to be a direction to inquire into fraudulent practices, being the acts perpetrated, and not into conspiracies organized outside, and from which these fraudulent practices emanated. If there is room for any doubt, what objection can there be to amplifying it and making it clear as we are seeking to do. It is done every day in the case of an ordinary Bill. I have heard the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ask the advice of members and suggestions from them on important questions which he has submitted to this House. I have seen the Solicitor General yield his own opinion to the opinion of others, and when it was advocated that language should be inserted in a section, I have heard him state that although he did not think that was necessary yet as it carried out the object he had in view, he would accept it. If this language which we advocate should be inserted, simply makes the thing clear, why not insert it? Sir, the position of the Minister of Railways forces me to the conclusion that the government is not sincere in desiring that the scope of this commission should be as broad as the language of the ministers would lead one to believe they desire. Otherwise there is no reason why we should quibble over a matter like this, especially considering the very few words that are suggested from this side of the House. Let the House remember the language used by the Prime Minister when he was making his promise that this commission should issue. Let us see whether the actual language of this commission is as consistent with the words he used then, as is the language which we ask that the commission should be couched in. The Prime Minister said on that occasion:

Some investigation must take place—deep, searching, complete, penetrating everywhere, so as to ferret out the evil, to search out the criminals, and if legislation be necessary to punish them, and to punish them adequately . . .

We must have, at an early date, immediately, a tribunal composed of the best judges of the land, so as to have the fullest, the most complete, the most searching inquiry into all that we know, into all that has come to the attention of the House, of the press and of the courts, and into what also has not yet come to the attention of the public; to ferret out that system and expose it, and to eradicate it for ever from this land of ours.

There is the strong and emphatic language of the Prime Minister and here in the commission is the narrow and dangerous language of the half-hearted attempt at performance. I again call the attention of the House to the fact that the words 'any fraudulent conduct' seem to be qualified by the words following in the context, but I think, however, the hon. gentleman will understand that that was my argument. The argument of the Minister of Railways regarding these different statutes was to my mind an extraordinary one. I would not profess for a moment to reflect on the hon. gentleman's legal ability or on his ability to interpret the spirit of a statute, but I say that when he came to deal with the indemnity clause his argument was not the argument of a lawyer but was the argument of a politician—the argument of a man who was destitute of any argument that a lawyer or a statesman could use in reply to the contention of the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden). I am not referring to the chaff (for it must have been chaff) in regard to the alleged contrary opinions of Sir John Thompson and Mr. Blake. But, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) dealt with the suggestion of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) as to whether there is jurisdiction in His Excellency in Council to commission these judges to inquire into these frauds under that statute respecting inquiries into any matter relative to good government; surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) could have used other arguments than he did. However, we must deal with the arguments that he did use. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) follows his argument to its logical conclusion, then parliament wasted time in passing the Act relating to controverted elections, and the Act relating to corrupt practices, because if all these things relate to the good government of Canada, then all that would be necessary would be to issue inquiries into matters relating to controverted elections and corrupt practices at elections. The hon. gentleman will see that his argument would apply to the cases of controverted elections, and to corrupt practices, as well as to this case. I venture to think that the Minister of Railways never took time to consider, why it is that upon the statute-book side by side, we have one statute relating to corrupt practices, and another passed in order that under a certain state of affairs a commission of judges could do the very thing that you are attempting to empower these judges to do here, namely, to inquire into, to probe, and to ascertain to what extent corrupt practices prevail, and of what character they were. And for that purpose Mr. Blake introduced in 1876, that elaborate Act, chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, copied from the elaborate provisions made for the same purpose in England, and there never was a man, Sir John Thompson, or any other eminent man in this House, who was charged with these matters, who ventured the suggestions that have fallen from the lips of the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Railways in regard to this matter. There never was a suggestion in anything which Sir John Thompson said touching this amendment in 1889, of a totally different Act passed for a totally different purpose, that would warrant the observation made by the Minister of Railways, that he had considered that the Blake Act was unnecessary, and that with regard to the indemnity provisions it had gone so far. There was nothing said, and for a good reason; these two statutes deal with entirely different subjects. This is the first case which the hon. gentleman can call to mind in which it was ever attempted to clothe a commission with authority to inquire into the prevalence of corrupt practices and fraud and crime and rascality relating to elections or anything else. The other is the machinery devised for that purpose by the able men who prepared that legislation in England. The other is the result of the study of Mr. Blake, made in 1876, when he copied the legislation with certain improvements; and, as I say, it was never pretended by any one on either side of this House, before we had at hand that little Act relating to public inquiries into matters relating to good government, that would make that machinery and all those provisions in the other Act wholly unnecessary.

Touching, too, this question as to jurisdiction, I would like the hon. gentleman to remember the peculiar jurisdiction respecting this matter of elections and all relating to them. In May it is laid down:

Another important power peculiar to the Commons is that of determining all matters touching the election of their own members.

And he goes into the history of this interesting subject, showing how the courts had attempted to deal with these matters, but how in the contest the will and claim of parliament had prevailed, as of course it would prevail. So that when we find parliament delegating to the courts, and by Act of Parliament, of course, only a portion of its jurisdiction, and that relating simply to controverted elections, and then in regard to corrupt practices prevailing at elections, it does seem to me to afford more than a doubt as to whether this general legislation can be said to have taken the rest of the jurisdiction away, or to have been so expressed that it would have been interpreted, after argument, to mean that under that the Governor in Council could deal with the rest of a matter, otherwise within the exclusive jurisdiction of this House; and that is a question which may come up, if the hon. gentleman's position be right in regard to another matter, that counsel, other than the two named by the commissioners, shall have access to that tribunal. If the parties interested may attend by counsel, one of the very first questions that will come up will be that; and if the hon. gentlemen are anxious that this commission shall proceed speedily, and shall not be disturbed, why should not that doubt—though the hon. gentleman does not share it—be put aside by the use of apt language? What possible reason is there for resisting the suggestion that all doubts as to the jurisdiction of parliament should be removed? I would put it to any reasonable member of this House, who has studied the question at all, when you are dealing with a question like the Huron and Brockville cases, and other similar questions, which is the Act most suitable to copy? Which are the provisions most adequate on their face? Those in the Act relating to corrupt practices, or those found in the Act respecting inquiries into any matters relating to good government? So, in 1889, Sir John Thompson, recognizing the difference, not only in the language, but in the application of those two statutes—one expressly dealing with corrupt practices and crimes, the other dealing with inquiries into the improvement of the civil service, with regard to the conduct of officers in the service, with regard to matters suggesting legislation, matters in connection with the grain trade, and other matters of that character—might well say that the provision was unnecessary, which found its way into the Corrupt Practices Act, simply on the ground on which Mr. Blake put it, that you have to depend on criminals for some of the most important evidence, and you cannot hope to get that evidence, or get to the bottom of a crime, where the crime has extensively prevailed, unless you go further than the Act of 1889 does, and give complete indemnity, and allow the commission to grant absolute pardon to the criminal who makes a full confession, and properly conducts himself before the commission. So the reasons have not been met by the Minister of Railways, and the reasons, I think, were clear to the mind of Sir John Thompson, when he amended an Act intended to deal with a totally different matter.

As to the payment of witnesses, the hon. gentleman says that we do not do ourselves justice in assuming that the government do not intend to make ample provision for the witnesses. I do not know about other members on this side of this House, but I will tell the hon. gentleman why I have considerable doubt. I will admit that the statement of the Minister of Railways to-day, and the statement of the Prime Minister before him, on that head, are ample to satisfy me, that is, the express promise, as I understand it, to include in the Supply Bill such provision as will clothe the commission with the powers in this matter proposed by the senior member for Halifax. That is satisfactory. But touching the hon. gentleman's observation as to our not doing justice to ourselves in assuming that that provision would not be made, I refer to the Ogilvie Commission. That commission was issued under this statute. What happened to the witnesses? There was money at hand under the command of the government; did they pay the witnesses? If they did, when did they do it? The men who had the conduct of the charges came before the commissioner appointed under the same Act under which these commissioners are appointed, and told the commissioner that they depended on the evidence of men who were up the creeks on their claims, and who could not be got there, unless they were paid, and were maintained while attending the commission; and Mr. Ogilvie, as the report shows, admitted his inability to pay a farthing to any one of the witnesses who were required in court. And all he could do, was to promise that he would communicate with the government and endeavour to have some arrangement made. What happened? That commission became abortive, owing largely, to the inability to obtain witnesses and pay them their proper fees. The labours of the commission closed in May, 1899, and the witnesses who were paid by the government were paid in November, 1899. With a case of that kind before parliament, I do not think that the hon. Minister of Railways need be surprised that we should take care to see that no such accident shall happen with regard to this commission.

The hon. gentleman says, touching other counsel than the two named, that there is no difficulty about that, as the commission have authority to allow other counsel to appear. But he hardly made that point good. He did not meet the argument that, as the commission can appoint two counsel, it will be going very far to say that either by rules or orders, under the general language to which the hon. minister refers, there will be other counsel than the two named by the commission.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not paid by the commission.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, but the language of the commission is that they shall appoint two counsel, and certainly it is not a violent presumption to say that those were to be the only counsel. But the hon. gentleman did not meet the other point, namely, that we are unable to say what view the commission will take, and the case of the Ontario commission is before us, which refused to allow other counsel to appear and ruled them out. The same thing consequently might happen in this case; and the government do not take the responsibility of saying that they have so arranged that commission that they do not intend that other counsel shall appear except these two.

Then again as to asking how the witnesses voted, I think the Minister of Railways found himself skating on rather thin ice. I forget whether he was in the House this afternoon when a very interesting discussion took place across the floor. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) was dealing with the Haldimand case, when the hon. the Minister of Marine interrupted him to explain that there need not be any trouble about this matter at all, because he did not hold that the Haldimand case settled the question and that witnesses could not be asked how they voted, but he agreed with the hon. member for Halifax, that that question was not an open one, but one which had been decided. He agreed with the hon. member for Halifax that the Manitoba case had decided the point that witnesses could be examined as to how they had voted, when the limit for filing an election protest was over and the result of the election could not be affected. To-night, however, the hon. Minister of Railways leaned strongly the other way. His view was that such evidence will not be allowed. So that we have at least a case of doubt, a case in which there is difference of opinion in the cabinet. You have the Minister of Marine a lawyer, and the Minister of Railways, also a lawyer, both expressing different opinions on that head. The Minister of Railways gave this House to understand that the only reason why the Committee on Privileges and Elections last year permitted witnesses to be asked how they had voted was that public opinion would be prejudiced against those who objected to such evidence. So that I may not do the hon. gentleman an injustice, I will quote his language:

It contains testimony which was admitted by the committee under circumstances which were not proper, favourable to the proper elucidation of the facts, or to the holding of a proper inquiry; and I will tell the House why I think so. When the question came before that committee as to whether certain witnesses should be compelled to state for whom they had voted, the question of the admissibility of that evidence was very properly raised by counsel. The result was that the newspapers of the opposition cried out that the committee were stifling inquiry; and the reason that evidence was admitted afterwards—I was present when a portion of the discussion took place, and also when the evidence was finally admitted—was not because, in the opinion of the majority of the committee, it was proper or legal evidence, but because they felt that the whole object of the opposition press was to create the impression that the majority wished to suppress the evidence and stifle the inquiry, and, therefore, they felt that it would be better to allow this violation of the law rather than to put it in the power of hon. gentlemen opposite to represent to the country at large, who would not know the rights or the wrongs of the matter, that we had refused to permit everything to come out, or to allow the widest possible inquiry.

But the Minister of Marine took particular pains to explain that the reason which actuated the committee was wholly different; and the reason was that the committee took the view taken by the bench in Manitoba in the case of the Queen vs. Sanders.

These things make us somewhat suspicious. We find one minister telling us: the law is as you say; and then we have another minister, who happened to be out when his colleague spoke, coming in a few hours afterwards, and telling us that the law is exactly the opposite.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I was present when the Minister of Marine made the statement referred to. Therefore any statement I make subsequently was made with the full knowledge of what my colleague had said. In the next place, I did not express this evening any opinion on the question as to whether the evidence was admissible or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman did not listen to the quotation I gave from his own speech. He can go a great distance, but he is not going to tell this House that the language I have just quoted does not show that the hon. minister's opinion was that the admission of such evidence was improper and illegal, and that the Committee on Privileges and Elections admitted it simply because of the row created by the opposition press. What condition of things have we come to when, in face of his own language, the minister can say that he never entertained that opinion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not said anything of the kind. I have said that I did not express—whether it was important for me to express an opinion or not is beside the question—an opinion this evening. The hon. gentleman has been endeavouring to put in my mouth an opinion which he says I expressed this evening upon the question of the admissibility of this evidence. I say that I have expressed no opinion on the admissibility of the evidence.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman cannot get away in that manner. He either heard or did not hear, and if he did not, I will read to him again the language he used on June 11, in this House, when he distinctly said that the evidence was improperly admitted. He distinctly says that the evidence should not have been admitted, that it was evidence improperly admitted and that it was admitted because of the force of public opinion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) will allow me, I am not saying that the statement of mine on June 11 that he read was not a correct statement of what I said. But, the hon. gentleman is referring to what I said the other day and professing to say what I said tonight. He said that I came in, and, not hearing the opinion expressed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) this afternoon, had expressed an opinion directly contrary to him. I expressed no opinion on that subject this afternoon; and if I had expressed any, it must have been when the matter came up a few days ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That explanation I do not think very satisfactory. I take back at once and stand corrected in regard to the immaterial point as to whether the minister (Mr. Blair) was present or absent when his colleague expressed diametrically opposite opinions. But the question was as to the admissibility of this evidence; and it was on that that the opinion was expressed on June 11 by the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What was it?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What I have read.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was that an expression of my opinion on the question?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. So far as the English language could convey an opinion. The hon. gentleman puts it very strongly. He could not have followed me, but I would refer him to his opinion as expressed in the language I have already read. We had the very opposite view expressed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries this afternoon. Now, can there be a clearer reason for this House to set doubts at rest? There are two different views held by two eminent legal gentlemen in the cabinet; and we ask that the proceedings of that commission shall not be disturbed, but that we shall take the responsibility here and now of saying what the instructions shall be. If hon. gentlemen opposite wish to treat us fairly, let them as a party, let them as a government—because they are taking charge of this commission as a party and a government and not as a parliament—say that they do not wish the commission to have the right, clear and beyond doubt, to obtain from witnesses information as to how they voted, and let us decide on that. Let them be frank with us. If that is their view, let them express that view; but let us make clear the will of parliament on that important matter. There never was a case requiring to be decided more definitely than the case now under notice; and let us deal fairly with ourselves and with the commission, and remove what, at any rate, may be the cause of great embarrassment through the consumption of time or in frustrating the efforts of the commission to probe these frauds to the very bottom. Then, in regard to the use of the evidence, I have only to say in reference to the minister's observation, that he did not, it seems to me, seize the idea conveyed in this resolution. It is not to force the acceptance of legal evidence, that is, evidence to be inquired into in a court of law, but to provide that the commission shall be free to use such parts or the whole of such evidence if they think proper.

Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) discussed the action of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Has he forgotten—certainly the House has not forgotten, those who have read the evidence knew—that so far from that committee being controlled by the prejudices or caprices of the opposition, so far from the opposition being given full latitude, as he suggested, the whole control of the investigation was taken out of the hands of those who had any responsibility in connection with it. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) took the responsibility upon himself of making serious charges. So serious were they that reference to a committee was granted. Other hon. gentlemen undertook the responsibility of assisting him in producing the evidence to substantiate these charges. But, to the surprise of most reasonable people, it was found that the majority of that committee, the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, took the whole charge of the conduct of the proceedings, to such an extent as to compel the gentleman who had made the charges and those who had undertaken to prove them to put on the stand first the alleged criminal, disturbing the order of calling the witnesses, not only the way in which these gentlemen intended to call them, but the reasonable order in which they should have been called. I pass by the reflections that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has cast on the committees of this House—that they are incapable, practically, of acting as reasonable men, which is the inference from the observations made by the Minister of Railways and Canals. It is not a great compliment, I may say, to the party—his own party—who have control of every one of these committees at the present time. I think this is the first time such strong language in regard to them has fallen from the lips of a minister of the Crown.

Then, on the question of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, I think the quotation of Sir John Bourinot's book and the reference to Hatsell pretty well took the wind out of the minister's sails. At any rate, after that authority was read, we did not hear any longer the argument that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was not an officer of the House. Perhaps I am doing the Minister of Railways and Canals an injustice in arguing this point, because he conceded a doubt about the jurisdiction of the commission to force the attendance of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery before them with the documents that are in his custody. And, if I understand the hon. minister right, he has suggested that this question could be dealt with in the Election Bill, and all doubts on that subject put at rest. I have this to say—that it certainly cannot be said to be clear that any commission could compel the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to produce our documents before it, unless some statutory authority could be shown. It is in virtue of a statute that he appears with those documents now in the different courts of law, not under subpoena, but after obtaining an order. In 1886, in the case of North or South Leeds, I think it was held that unless the provision of the statute was exactly followed, and the case came within the provision made for compelling the production of those documents, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery need not obey the order in court, let alone the subpoena.

Then the hon. gentleman suggested, in regard to the order of hearing these different cases, that there was no particular urgency for taking up one case first more than another. Well, is that a fair view? I submit it is a most unfair view to take, although what would be unfair in one sense as we consider it, might appear to the court in a different sense altogether. They must utterly ignore, so far as they can, all that has happened in this House; they must separate themselves in so far as they can from the controversies that have been waged on these different questions; and therefore, with nothing to guide them, unable to resort to the arguments we used, it might possibly occur to them that they should begin at the beginning as these matters go. As we understand them, the beginning is not in 1896, the beginning as we understand it here, is where those cases did begin. Taking a fair view of it, one case has already been begun and the investigation stopped, and it was not intended it should go on. Pressure was brought to bear, and finally the government had to yield, and a promise was made that the inquiry should be resumed, and it was an after-thought that neither case should be inquired into. But the first matter for investigation was undoubtedly the case of the West Huron and Brockville elections; consequently I think in all reason, direction should be given to this commission to begin the investigation where it left off, and that was in the cases of the West Huron and Brockville elections, and then to proceed as they saw fit in regard to the others, which have not even been suggested by the government as proper cases to inquire into.

Then we had the hon. gentleman's assertion all through of the desire of the government to purify and to observe as far as they can the sanctity of the ballot in political elections. Now, all of these professions we may doubt, we may not give the hon. gentlemen credit for sincerity; but I believe the position of the government of this country would be far better and far stronger in the land if, in regard to these reasonable suggestions, their position was this: We do not entertain the same views as you do in regard to these amendments, we think them absolutely unnecessary; but being offered in good faith—as they are in this case—and they have not challenged the faith in which they have been offered—seeking to promote as they do the objects we have in view, we will accept those suggestions in the spirit in which they are offered, and then that commission will start under the best auspices, and with the confidence of both sides of the House that it was intended it should do its duty thoroughly, and that no possible difficulty should be put in its way. I think that would be a splendid position for this government to take. Unfortunately our appeals are made to empty benches. The government is not here to-night. It has been on nearly every important occasion this session remarkable for its empty benches, and if it continues to treat parliament in this way, and to treat the wishes of the country in the way suggested in this debate, I fancy they will leave those benches altogether.

Mr. B. RUSSELL (Halifax). I have been rather struck in listening to my hon. and learned friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and my hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Borden), with a sense of the great lack of enterprise on the part of our Liberal newspapers. I am quite sure that if the newspapers and journals on the other side of the House had had the same opportunities presented to them that have been presented by our hon. friends opposite to the journals supporting the government, they would have made a very much better use of those opportunities than our journals are doing. Supposing that our friends on the other side of the House being in control of the government had issued a commission for the purpose of inquiring into electoral corruption or into electoral irregularities, into frauds and evil practices, as ample and as generous, as large and as full, as the commission which has been issued by the Governor in Council in this case, and supposing that having issued that commission, their opponents, instead of acquiescing in it, instead of hastening it into operation, instead of allowing the commission to be organized and to go on with its work, had obstructed the organization of that commission with all sorts of trivial objections, with all sorts of technical quibbles, with all sorts of wire-drawn arguments, such as have been presented to the House by our hon. friends opposite, I am quite sure what would have been said by all the Conservative journals under those circumstances: I am quite sure they would have said that there was obstruction being placed in the way; that while the government were ready to go on with the inquiry into these evil practices, here they found a factious opposition, here they found an obstructive opposition, unwilling that this thing should go forward, and anxious to obstruct the good measures of the government. I say that our journals are not as enterprising as the journals which support the hon. gentlemen opposite, or they would have improved the opportunity offered to them in such a case, as I am sure their adversaries would have done if they had been placed in similar circumstances.

I do not intend to weary the House at this late hour, and after the protracted discussion that we have had upon this subject, not only to-day, but on previous occasions in this House, with any lengthened argument as to the legal questions that have been raised, the extremely ingenious, I must confess, and somewhat plausible legal arguments that have been presented to the House by way of criticising this commission which has been placed before us. My hon. friend attacked the commission on one ground, because of the competency of the Governor in Council to appoint the commission at all for this purpose, under the provision which is contained in chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals pointed out that the language of that statute is certainly sufficient to enable them to institute an inquiry like this. It enables them to conduct an inquiry into any matter connected with the good government of Canada. Surely nobody questions that,—it ought to be common ground between us that that language is large enough to include the issuing of the commission that has been issued in this case. But then, if I understand the argument that has been made use of by hon. gentlemen opposite, one branch of it, at all events, is that it has to be assumed that this particular inquiry does not come within the purview of that statute in respect to the constitution of commissions for general inquiries of that character in matters effecting the good government of Canada, because, if I understood the argument, there is a special statute which gives the right to appoint a special kind of commission to inquire into corrupt practices. I am not sure whether that is one branch of the argument or not, but I understood that to be argued. Well, if this is the contention, I am not quite sure that these particular practices that we are seeking to have an inquiry into by this commission are corrupt practices within the sense of the word as used in the Controverted Elections Act, and as such could be inquired into by a tribunal organized for the purposes of inquiring into corrupt practices. Whether they are corrupt practices or not, I think, without having had an opportunity of having read this statute as carefully as one would like to before giving an opinion upon the question, it will be found that there is no procedure by which, under these circumstances, a commission could be organized for the purpose of inquiring into these particular practices which are now in controversy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he has apprehended my argument correctly, or if he has apprehended the whole of it. The first branch of it that I would bring to his attention is that if you had not a Controverted Elections Act, for example, would it be competent to issue a commission, under chapter 114, for the purpose of investigating into a controverted election?

Mr. RUSSELL. We know that there is a very long history connected with that. We know that the House of Commons would imprison anybody who would pretend to start such an inquiry, and that is quite possible that the courts would arrest and put into prison a serjeant-at-arms who would obey the behest of the House of Commons in the same connection. We know there was a very great question of doubt as to the right of any tribunal other than the House of Commons to test the propriety of any person professing to be a member of the House holding his seat, and we know that the House has claimed exclusive jurisdiction in such matters. But we are not inquiring into that question at all. I think it is admitted that we are not inquiring into the question of the tenure upon which any member of this House holds his seat, but we are inquiring into a system of fraud and of evil practices which is alleged to have been going on and into matters of that kind. This is not particularly the kind of subject that the House of Commons has exclusive jurisdiction in, but whether it has or not that is not the question that I am now considering. I was referring to a different branch of the argument. I was going on to show the reasons why I thought this chapter in respect to the inquiry into corrupt practices in the election of members of the House of Commons could not be invoked in this case because in the case of a commission of this kind it requires that certain antecedent conditions should be complied with before there can be any such commission issued. The first condition is the report of a judge on an election trial that corrupt practices have extensively prevailed, or that there is reason to believe that they have extensively prevailed, or if that condition is not present in the case, then that a petition has been presented within sixty days after the receipt of the writ by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. These are the only two cases in which you have the conditions laid down for the constitution of a commission under chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes for the purpose of inquiring into the prevalence of corrupt practices at elections. There may be others, because, as I said before, I am not dogmatizing about the matter at all. If there is any general or unlimited power given by the statute it is there for the purpose of making inquiries into corrupt practices. All I say is that I doubt if these practices which we are inquiring into are corrupt practices. I would almost go further and say that I think you will find that these particular practices that we are now considering are not corrupt practices within the meaning or terms of the election law. But, whether they are or are not, there is no possibility of bringing chapter 10 into operation in this case, and we would be utterly helpless in respect to the constitution of a commission to make any inquiry into this matter unless we have the power under the statute to constitute a commission as it has been constituted by the order in council which has been laid on the Table of the House. Now, I do not think it is a pleasant conclusion to come to, that the state of our law is so entirely inefficient,—that it has been left, after thirty years of legislation, so absolutely imperfect that when glaring wrongs, such as are alleged to have been committed in 1899, and such as were proved to have been committed in 1896, are brought to the attention of the House and when it is shown by the vote and the experience of this House that the Privileges and Elections Committee is an absolutely unsatisfactory tribunal for trying such questions, we have actually to resort to legislation which may never be passed or which may only pass after considerable obstruction, to make an inquiry into these evils. It is not a pleasant conclusion to arrive at, but, it is the conclusion that has been embodied in the last paragraph of my hon. friend's resolution, that the matter is so doubtful that he is not certain if the Governor in Council has the power to constitute a commission for the purpose of inquiring into these particular matters. Now, then, suppose we carried that argument to its logical conclusion, it would seem to amount to this, that this general provision which is made in chapter 114 for the constitution of a commission to inquire into any matter affecting the good government of Canada must practically be almost inoperative, that there could hardly be any case in which you could bring it up into operation, because I am quite certain that so amply has the whole field of legislation been covered by this House that you will not find one single thing that you would desire to bring within the purview of that section which has not been covered by legislation, and for which tribunals for inquiring into such matters have not been provided. The whole field of legislation has been occupied by statutes of one sort and another, and if you are going to carry that argument to its logical conclusion you will have to cut down the broad and ample terms of the statute to almost nothing at all, because wherever you find that the subject of inquiry is already provided for before the courts a commission organized under that statute will not have jurisdiction, seeing that there is some other way by which the same result may be arrived at. The criticism is also made that the terms of the commission are not large enough—but that has been gone over so frequently and by so many speakers that I do not wish to occupy any of the time of the House in discussing it at all. It is really a question of grammar. It is a question of the grammatical analysis of the sentence in which the powers of the commissioners are stated. I do not profess to be an expert on that subject, but when you find in the commission that it refers to frauds that have been committed by returning officers, deputy returning officers and other parties. I think you have the basis laid for a very generous and liberal construction of the operative part of the commission. Then, when you read in the operative part of the commission itself that they are to inquire into any fraudulent conduct, that is to say, into the various things that have happened by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect to the ballot books, the ballot boxes, or their lawful contents, or what should have been their lawful contents, you get an exceedingly ample charge for this commission to inquire into, everything that by any possibility could be brought within the scope of the subject which they are to investigate. I do not intend to analyse these sentences any further, because I believe that anybody reading them fairly must see that they cover all that it is necessary this commission should inquire into.

Now, it is quite clear that any question that can be raised as to the indemnity of the witnesses cannot possibly have any relevancy to the question as to the fulness of the inquiry. The commission is to be as full and as ample one way as the other, as ample the way the commission stands as the way my hon. friends opposite propose that it should be read. All the witnesses are bound to answer any questions, whether the answers criminate them or do not criminate them. The question is not as to the obligation of the witness to answer every question, but it is as to what is going to happen the witness after he has answered the question. So far as I am concerned it strikes me that the policy of the commission as issued, is much more wise and sensible than it would be if the suggestions of hon. gentlemen opposite were accepted. The witnesses have all the protection that is requisite and just, given to them. The protection that is given to them is exactly equivalent to the privilege that is taken away from them. The privilege that is taken away from them is that contrary to their privilege under the common law, they can be called upon to answer any question which would have a tendency to criminate them. You deprive them of the privilege of refusing to answer questions which may criminate them, but you give them a corresponding advantage when you say that their answers shall not be used against them in any criminal trial. To go further than that would bring about the result, that you might have proved your case conclusively against a most notorious criminal who ought be tried and put in the penitentiary for some flagrant violation of the law, but the first thing any one would do who had an interest in him, would be to hustle him into court to get him examined as a witness and have him whitewashed. By that process you might whitewash all the scoundrels in Canada who have been connected with this business. I therefore think that the protection given to these witnesses is all that can be fairly asked for. I again point out, that the question at issue between the two sides of the House in this regard, is not as to the fulness of the inquiry, is not as to the nature of the questions that can be asked, is not as to the power of the commission to get all the knowledge that is in the breasts of the witnesses, but it is simply as to what shall be or what shall not be the extent of the immunity accorded to the witnesses.

In regard to the right to question the voter as to how he voted, I will have to confess that I had a rather strong feeling in favour of the protection of the secrecy of the ballot when we were discussing this matter in another place some twelve months ago. However, I was disposed to acquiesce in the view that was taken by the learned Chief Justice Killam, of Manitoba, that there might be a distinction drawn in the policy of the law, and therefore the propriety of asking or not asking the question, between a case where the seat of the member was in question; and a case where the seat of the member was not concerned. The only point was this: That if you are going to consult considerations of policy, it did not then and it does not now occur to my mind, why the policy of the law should be any different in the one case from that which it is in the other case. Be that as it may, however, the distinction has been made and it has been upheld by the chief justice of Manitoba, and I would be inclined to predict that the judges who constitute this commission would be governed by the decision in the Manitoba case, and which is not necessarily in conflict with the dictum that was adopted by Chief Justice Strong and Judge Taschereau, of the Supreme Court of Canada. But, whether they adopt that view or the opposite view is to my mind a thing which is entirely immaterial. I would think it highly improper to interfere with their judgment about that. I believe that whatever decision they come to in respect of that will be in accordance with the policy of the law up to this date, and I fail to see that any circumstances which have arisen should induce this parliament to change the policy of the law in respect to the secrecy of the ballot, and as to whether a witness may or may not be asked whether he voted for any particular person. Whatever the policy of the law is in connection with that, it should be considered as settled now for the cases that are coming as well for the cases that have gone by. Whatever may loom up in the eyes of my hon. friends opposite, I do not believe that any occasion has arisen why we should change whatever policy of law we did adopt as to the secrecy of a vote given by ballot. Whatever the court shall adjudicate as having been in the breast of this parliament as the policy of the law in respect to that subject, I for one am willing to be bound by it, and I feel confident that the conclusion of the court will be as sage a conclusion as any we can come to here. I shall not detain the House at much greater length, but I wish to observe that there do seem to be two subjects upon which hon. gentlemen opposite are particularly alarmed in respect to the issue of this commission. One of these is: The anxiety on the part of gentlemen opposite as to the witnesses who have been examined in the West Huron case. Holding the view I do, I can well understand why hon. gentlemen opposite should be very reluctant to have these same witnesses go again before a tribunal to be dragged through the same ordeal as they experienced twelve months ago. I can understand why it would be a much pleasanter prospect to them to have the printed book containing the evidence placed before the commission, than to have these thirty or forty witnesses, including the ten or twelve who in my theory were not stating the truth in respect to their votes; it would be much pleasanter I say to have the book of evidence submitted than to have these witnesses confronted with the statements in that book and cross-examined as I have no doubt they would be. It is not a prospect which any hon. member who sympathizes with these witnesses can contemplate with any feeling of great comfort. I can understand that with a witness who is telling the truth he need not have much alarm how often he is called upon to testify, or at how long an interval of time he may be called upon, but in the case of a witness who has fabricated his story, I can quite understand that he would not be specially anxious not to have to fabricate it again, after the lapse of twelve months when he may have forgotten some of the particulars of his story. The hon. gentlemen on the other side are no doubt extremely solicitous that the book of evidence which is dead print should be produced in court, and not the living witnesses. There is another matter in reference to which I notice considerable anxiety on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, and that is as to the order in which the investigations into these matters shall be conducted. The government so far as I understand have not made the slightest or remotest hint or suggestion to this commission as to the order in which they shall take up the various subjects of inquiry. They may take up the West Huron and Brockville cases first, or they may decide that the more proper way is to proceed in historical order. If they are permitted to go back to 1896, they may think that the more proper and suitable way is to begin with the origin of the matter, if the origin of it can be found, or to go as far back towards the origin of the matter as their commission permits them to go. I can see why our hon. friends opposite may be very apprehensive in regard to that. The whole horizon has been clouded to their minds in the last twelve months with the West Huron and Brockville matters; they have been able to see nothing else in the sky. Anything of the same kind that took place in previous years, as far back as 1896, is altogether shrouded from their view; and I can understand how tenderly the hon. member for Pictou relegated all those events to the domain of ancient history, as he calls it. That is quite natural; but the judges may not regard them as ancient history at all. They may regard them as modern history; they may consider that those things happened since the flood. They will, undoubtedly, go into those matters which occurred in 1896, and on other occasions when hon. gentlemen opposite were on the griddle, or should have been, and inquire into the election frauds which occurred then as well as into matters of more recent occurrence. As I have said, the government have not given the faintest hint or suggestion to the commissioners, and I am sure would not think of doing so, as to the way in which these investigations should be taken up. But, if the judges do see fit to proceed in the chronological order, and take the events of 1896 before they take those of 1900, which would not be unnatural, then, I can understand that our hon. friends opposite would lose a great deal of the interest in this thing which they had in the beginning. To gentlemen on this side of the House, it is a matter of indifference where the judges begin the inquiry. Whether they begin at the end or at the beginning or in the middle, is a matter of sublime indifference to gentlemen on this side of the House. All they ask is that there shall be a full, fair and exhaustive investigation into all this kind of fraud and rascality that has been perpetrated, whether by the friends of one party or the friends of the other party, unhampered by any conditions, and with the large and full charter which has been given to these judges by the commission which has been laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat indulged in some criticism, not of a very serious nature, respecting the utterances of the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), and the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). He characterized their arguments as hair-splitting, as small, as paltry, and by other terms which may be parliamentary, but certainly do not dignify discussion on the floors of parliament. I may say, however, that although he has applied these terms, which I might call vituperative, to these hon. gentlemen, he has also by necessary implication if not expressly applied somewhat similar terms to the Hon. Edward Blake and to the English parliament. Considering the fact that the two hon. gentlemen on this side of the House stand in such very good company, probably they can afford to ignore the criticisms made upon them by the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell). In discussing the matter before the House, he has referred to the question which forms one of the prominent features of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Halifax, that is, respecting the former witnesses and the testimony given by those witnesses before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In the first place, I may say that I have always felt a great deal of pride in the sincerity of the hon. gentleman, inasmuch as we were both educated at the same college and subjected to somewhat similar moral influences; and I am astonished that he should discuss this matter in the way he has. He says the hon. member for Halifax is trying to force upon the commission the evidence that was taken before the committee of inquiry of this House. The hon. gentleman knows, as every other hon. gentleman on the floor of this House knows, that the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Halifax is permissive and not imperative, as respects the use of that evidence. The commissioners may use it or may not use it; it is entirely a matter in their own discretion. I was also astonished when the hon. gentleman proceeded to give the reason why he thought the members on this side of the House might desire that testimony to be taken into account by the commission. His argument was based upon either one or two positions; in the first place, that hon. gentlemen opposite desired to get an advantage by shutting out this testimony inasmuch as the witnesses, if called before the commissioners, might forget part of their story, and the whole truth would not get out; or, in the second place, that the witnesses before the Committee on Privileges and Elections committed deliberate perjury. Now, I do not think it is a very nice insinuation to make, unless there is something on the face of the papers themselves that shows it conclusively, that a man has committed perjury. If he has placed himself in such a position that no other inference can possibly be drawn, then, of course, it is a legitimate subject of comment, and one cannot be accused of cowardice in standing behind his privilege as a member of the House of Commons and making that charge; otherwise, I think it is just as well for a gentleman of honour to avoid any such reflections and insinuations.

Mr. RUSSELL. Somebody must have committed perjury.

Mr. POWELL. I know one gentleman, who, out of his own mouth, is convicted of perjury, and who cannot, by any process of excuse, which even the astute mind of the hon. junior member for Halifax can form, be excused, and that is one of the gentleman who presided at one of the polls in West Huron.

Now, to proceed with the discussion of the main matter before the House. I may say that chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes is not definitive of jurisdiction at all. I think—I submit it with all deference to the House—that the view of this matter taken by both the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. junior member for Halifax is entirely wrong. That Act does not confer jurisdiction; it assumes that the Governor has power in certain matters to issue a commission, as every one knows that from time immemorial the Crown has been in the habit of issuing Royal Commissions, and it says, with respect to certain Royal Commissions which the Crown has the right to issue, certain powers not previously possessed shall be henceforth possessed. I read it:

Whenever the Governor in Council deems it expedient to cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada, or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof, and such inquiry is not regulated by any special law, the Governor in Council may by the commission in the case—

It does not define the jurisdiction. It refers to the jurisdiction the Governor in Council has, and within that jurisdiction he may insert in the commission, and thereby confer upon the commissioners or persons by whom such inquiry is to be conducted, the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence on oath, orally, or in writing, or on solemn affirmation, if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and to produce such documents and things as such commissioners deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.

Then, it goes on:

Such commissioner or commissioners shall have the power to enforce the attendance of such witnesses and to compel them to give evidence, as is invested in any Superior Court of record in civil cases; but no such witness shall be compelled to answer any question by his answer to which he might render himself liable to criminal prosecution.

The latter part of that clause is amended. That Act is simply an enabling Act, to enable the commissioners appointed by Royal Commission to do things which, without the Act, they could not do. A Royal Commissioner, appointed by the Crown, under commission, has no jurisdiction to summon witnesses, but this Act enables him to do it, in respect of those matters to which it applies. He otherwise would have no jurisdiction to compel the attendance of witnesses, but this enables him to do it in the same manner as if he were a court of record.

That being the case, it becomes necessary to consider the question whether or not at common law—including in that term, parliamentary law—there existed at the time of the passing of this statute and still exists, any right in the Crown to inquire into election matters by Royal Commission. I say to inquire into election matters, because all these matters, such as are complained of, are incidental to and grew out of an election, and a general jurisdiction to make inquiry into an election would include them, as they are inseparable from it, and are appurtenant and incidental to it. Does there exist any such right in the Crown? Originally and up to the reign of Richard II., the King did inquire into elections. There is no question about that. In the reign of Richard II. parliament began to object to the King exercising this power, and a conflict ensued. The House of Commons asserted its supposed right; the King asserted his. Finally the matter was recognized as being one within the exclusive jurisdiction of the House of Commons, and the Court of Exchequer, in the year 1374, so decided. In the year 1680 and in the year 1702, the House of Lords approved of the decision of the Exchequer Court.

An hon. MEMBER. B. C. ?

Mr. POWELL. I think that the hon. gentleman who interjected that interruption, not only lived B. C., but, from his intelligent remark, I think he must have lived before Ante Adam. By the Act of parliament, 7 William III., chapter 7, it was finally settled that the House of Commons alone had the exclusive jurisdiction to inquire into these election matters.

Even after that, the conflict waged over subsidiary matters. We had mentioned by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), the case of Ashby vs. White. This is a well known case. In it the House of Commons came directly into conflict with the civil courts of the country. The matter grew out of the right of an elector to deposit his vote. The returning officer had refused him the right to give his vote, and he sued the returning officer in a court of law. The House of Commons asserted that it was a matter of parliamentary law, entirely within its jurisdiction, that the civil courts had no right to entertain the suit. The matter never came to a decision in a final court of appeal, but so far as the authority went it was in favour of the contention that an action did lie. This distinction was drawn, that an action lay simply because the plaintiff in the case had been denied a right which he enjoyed by common law, namely, his right to vote. The court conceded all the claims put forward on behalf of parliament, namely, that so far as it was a matter of parliamentary procedure, it was in the exclusive jurisdiction of the House of Commons, but inasmuch as the act of the returning officer had deprived the party of a civil right, he had the right to sue for damages for violation of that right.

Then came the Hansard case, in which a dispute between the courts and the House grew out of the publication of defamatory matter by the reporter of the House. That case came before the courts and was finally disposed of by an Act of parliament. Then we had later the procedure in election trials. Election courts were constituted for the trial of election petitions, and it was urged that the House had denuded itself of jurisdiction to try them. Mark you, notwithstanding the fact that jurisdiction was conferred upon the tribunal for the trial of election petitions and notwithstanding it was almost expressed in exclusive terms, the opinion of the best parliamentarians in this country and England has been that that does not oust the jurisdiction of this House, that the courts are only the officers, so to speak, of the House, and only exercise jurisdiction of the House, and that the House has the right to exercise its jurisdiction and try an election petition if it sees fit. But, as a matter of policy, it is universally conceded, that such matters are relegated to the courts for all purposes. Neither political party has, under ordinary circumstances, ever expressed a desire to depart from the general course of procedure.

Another matter came up to show you how these matters are exclusively within the jurisdiction of parliament. In Ontario, a few years ago, in an election case, a judge was not doing his duty, and application was made to a higher court for a prohibition to restrain the judge below from doing certain acts complained of as illegal. If this were an ordinary matter and not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the House of Commons, what would ensue? As an exercise of jurisdiction inherent in the highest court of record, the prohibition should have gone. But what action did the court take? It refused the prohibition. In the 24th Ontario Appeals, 1897, McLeod vs. Noble, the case I speak of, is reported. The judgment of Osler, one of the judges of the court of appeal, is as follows:

Then, upon the main question argued, I wish to express my entire concurrence with the prin-eiple on which the case in re Centre Wellington, 44, U.C.R., 132, was decided, namely, that the recount by a county court judge of votes at a parliamentary election is a matter belonging to parliament alone, and the proceedings before him are not cognizable by the High Court except in so far as parliament has by legislation conferred jurisdiction. This case is quoted with approval in Ellis vs. The Queen, 22 S.C.R. 1, by Mr. Justice Fournier; and see R.S.C., chap. 8, sec. 64; 54-55 Vict., chap. 19, sec. 11 (d).

I agree with what is said by Merewith, J., in re North Perth, Hessin vs. Lloyd, 22 O.R., 538, 545, that by the Act just referred to, parliament has recognized the Centre Wellington case as a true exposition of the law. He speaks of it as legislation which seems, by expressly giving jurisdiction to this court, under the circumstances, and for the purposes under consideration in that case, to more plainly indicate that, where jurisdiction is not expressly conferred, it was not intended that this court should exercise any of the rights or powers of the high court of parliament in any proceedings under the Acts respecting the representation of the people in parliament.

So far, we see that matters of the nature of those to be inquired into by the commission are not cognizable by the courts of the country, except in the assertion of a civil right. Elections and matters incidental thereto are exclusively for the House of Commons to deal with, so far as the courts of the country are concerned, except matters of civil rights which may have been violated. It would follow as a necessary corollary to that, that they could not form the subject of a Royal Commission because the Crown would be interfering with the special and sacred privileges of the House of Commons which have been recognized for so long a time.

Furthermore, chapter 10, of the Revised Statutes, is based upon the supposition that chapter 114 does not apply to such cases as this. This view was put by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). This is a very important point, it is almost decisive of the question, these statutes, chapter 114 and chapter 10, must be read together, and in construing chapter 114, we must refer to what parliament did at the same session in chapter 10. I shall dwell upon these points for a few moments. Chapter 10 refers to corrupt practices at elections, and it authorizes the appointment of a Royal Commission under certain circumstances. Now, if chapter 114 could apply to these matters, there would be no necessity for chapter 10. The mere fact that chapter 10 is passed, however, pushes it, as a matter of construction, a step further, and shows that parliament did not intend these matters of election frauds and election errors to come within the general provisions of chapter 114. Having made special legislation with respect to these in chapter 10, that special legislation must prevail as against the general provision of chapter 114.

We will suppose now that chapter 114, instead of being merely procedure in a jurisdiction recognized by it, does actually confer jurisdiction—what then? It is a general Act. General legislation cannot control the privileges of the House. I lay that down as a general proposition. Some hon. gentlemen on the opposite side may be disposed to dispute that. I might cite many authorities, and adduce many instances of the recognition of the rule. Time and time again, in the province of New Brunswick, in the province of Nova Scotia, in the province of Ontario—in every British colony, almost, in the empire—legislatures have enacted laws governing the procedure of courts; and, in these colonies, the courts have held that, notwithstanding general words in the enactments relating to procedure, the special privileges of members of parliament were not touched, but remained intact. The language used was sufficiently general to cover the privileges, but the courts held it did not, showing that in constructing a general statute, the privileges of this House stand exactly on the same basis as if they were enacted in a special statute. The legislature does not override the House's privileges without express words. Further, let us suppose, for a moment, that the general words of this Act, chapter 114, are sufficient to include and actually do include, matters proposed in the commission. If that be the case, chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes and amending Acts thereto, do not apply. Let us look at chapter 10, to which I have referred. It is in these words:

Whenever the House of Commons, by address, represents to the Governor General that petition has been, within sixty days after the publication in the 'Canada Gazette' of the receipt of the return to a writ of election, by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery—

And so on——presented to the House of Commons, signed by any twenty-five or more electors of the district, stating that no petition charging the existence of corrupt practices has been presented—

—then, it says—

—the Governor General may appoint one or more of such judges or such person or persons, as the case may be, to be a commissioner or commissioners for the purpose of making inquiry into such corrupt practices.

Here is a special Act providing for inquiry into corrupt infractions of the election law. Let us now go back to chapter 114. I have already read it, but I will read part of it again:

Whenever the Governor in Council deems it expedient to cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada, or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof—

Now, mark these words—

—and such inquiry is not regulated by any special law—

—then, and then only, does this Act apply. Every matter of corrupt practices, is regulated, so far as inquiry by Royal Commission is concerned, by chapter 10. This subject of regulation in chapter 10 is excluded by the terms of the Act from chapter 114. In other words chapter 114 does not apply. Then, Sir, none of the powers pretended to be conferred upon the commission are conferred, and the commission is simply a body without power to summon witnesses or do any of the acts authorized by this chapter.

Furthermore, I call the attention of the House to this fact. In taking up election frauds, or corrupt acts at elections, chapter 10 provides a great many precautions. In the first place twenty-five electors have to apply, and, in addition, there must be this resolution passed by the House. All this preliminary procedure has to be taken, showing how carefully this right of inquiry into matters which are privileges of the House are guarded by the House. In this case before us the government propose under the words of chapter 114 to issue a commission, ignoring entirely these safeguards—really ignoring chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes.

Some one has made the suggestion that the limitation of time affects the case, and the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) made use of the further argument that chapter 10 is cumbrous. I make this reply: That if parliament has laid down a certain mode of procedure that procedure has to be followed, and any limitation of time is as much an enactment relating to procedure as anything else; and, if acts are beyond the scope of the Election Act through lapse of time or other non-observance of the law, neither that nor the fact that the procedure may be cumbrous interferes with the principle and the Act (chapter 10) must certainly prevail.

A good deal of talk has been indulged in by the Minister of Railways and Canals and by the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) respecting the right to examine people on oath as to how they voted at the election. Let us see how this matter stands. In the first place, we have the judgment of Chief Justice Killam of the Manitoba court, who says the Act does not apply. We have the obiter dictum of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada to the effect that it does apply. There is somewhat of a conflict of judicial authority. Let us look at the Act itself. The Election Act confines the disability simply to cases in which the election is being contested. On the face of it the Act would not apply. But the Chief Justice of Canada says that the Act applies because the compelling witnesses to tell how they voted would be contrary to public policy. Eminent a jurist as Chief of the Supreme Court of Canada is, I would suggest that public policy means what is recognized by the common law of this country as public policy, and with all deference to that eminent jurist, I think that he is entirely in error as to what the public policy of England has been. The public policy of England down to the enactment of our election laws has been open voting where every man could know how every other man voted. That has been the public policy of the British Empire. The proceeding we now have is an interference with the old public policy, and the substitution of a statutory provision for the general principle of public policy that heretofore prevailed. A construction based upon considerations of supposed public policy or policy of the statute itself, if that construction be not an exploded one, that is contrary to the public statute cannot prevail against an expressed provision, or a necessary implication from the words of the Act itself.

Such being the case, with the conflict of judicial authority before us, what does the member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) propose to do? He suggests to the government that they should pass an Act conferring upon this commission power to compel witnesses to tell how they voted at an election. Well, what objection is urged to this? The only objection that has been urged by any gentleman who has spoken on the other side of the House, is that such is the present law, and this provision is entirely unnecessary, inasmuch as such would be the law applicable to the commission as it is proposed to be issued. I think that contention comes with bad grace from hon. gentlemen opposite. Those of us who took part in the proceedings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections last year know that the hon. the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) argued most strenuously, and he was supported, if I mistake not, by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), he was supported by almost every legal gentleman in that committee who sits on the other side of the House, in his contention that no question could be put to a witness as to how he voted at an election. Then they abandoned that position. Do they say they abandoned it because they were in error? No. What do the records show? The Minister of Railways and Canals, on the floor of this House, has on two or three occasions said that they abandoned that position because the press of the country had been raising such a howl—and not because they had changed their opinion. If the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) has weakened in his opinion, he has weakened since last session, because at the very last sitting of that committee when we examined witnesses, he expressed the opinion that an entirely illegal and improper course had been pursued with respect to allowing witnesses to state how they had voted. Now then, if these gentlemen were honest in their opinion then, may not these judges, who are not infallible, take the same view of this matter that an astute intellect like that of the junior member for Halifax took of it, that almost every Liberal in the House then took of it? They must either confess that they were dishonest then, and were asserting before that committee an opinion that they did not entertain, or else they must concede that on this matter there may be a legitimate difference of opinion, and that intelligent men may take either side. All doubt ought, therefore, to be removed. This is simply the suggestion that my hon. friend from Halifax has incorporated in the resolution before us.

Again, the junior member for Halifax states that the immunity from prosecution of witnesses has already been provided for. On this the changes have been rung by quite a number of gentlemen opposite. They seem to fail to recognize the distinction that is drawn by my hon. friend with respect to what the law already provides in one case and what it provides in another, and what he proposes to guide the commission in their conduct. Under this Act a man is simply granted immunity from having the testimony he has given brought up in evidence against him, that is all. But, he is not granted immunity from prosecution, and the very evidence he gives, the very statements that he makes, may afford a clue for his conviction, may start a train of investigation outside of himself entirely, and the testimony of people that he has thus suggested may lead to his conviction in nine cases out of ten. What does my hon. friend from Halifax propose to do? He says: We will grant them a greater immunity. His reason for doing that is to protect culprits from those results that the law attaches to the acts that have been committed, not that he desires to protect evil-doers, but to elicit the truth. His view is simply this: Inasmuch as their liability to be convicted depends entirely upon the investigation, therefore, he asks to have them put in about the same position as they would be in were this inquiry not made at all. And for what purpose? If that is done a man will be free to give testimony without the slightest likelihood of his testimony convicting him. He will not give evidence, as it were, under fear, but will state the truth fully and completely; he will not endeavour to evade service. But on the other hand, if by giving testimony he is likely to put himself in jeopardy, he will evade service and escape giving testimony, or will, if called as a witness, disclose as little as possible.

For what reason does the government refuse to incorporate this provision, which is a wholesome provision, a provision that was urged by the Hon. Edward Blake, and was adopted by this House in the Corrupt Practices Act, a provision adopted by the English parliament, and incorporated in their Corrupt Practices Act? Why do these hon.

Mr. POWELL.

gentlemen opposite object to that being introduced here? They simply say it is unnecessary, and urge no other ground of opposition. Unnecessary—we think it is very necessary. We think it will lead to a more complete inquiry by affording a guarantee that witnesses will be on hand to give testimony instead of fleeing to the United States as they have been doing in case of the commission that has been sitting in the province of Ontario. But these hon. gentlemen evidently do not want a full inquiry; they are anxious that these witnesses should not come to court. No man can assert that the government have alleged any good reason so far why this provision should not be incorporated. My hon. friend has not raised this matter factiously. He is advocating the provision which was the calm, deliberate considerate policy of Edward Blake; the calm, deliberate policy of the British parliament. It is not something new and unheard of that he is proposing. He is simply asking that the precedent of the British parliament and the opinion of the Hon. Edward Blake, both of which should weigh with every man in this House, should prevail, and a provision be incorporated in a statute, and in pursuance thereof incorporated in the commission which is issued to these judges. For these reasons I do not see how any gentleman who desires a full and complete investigation into these election frauds, which have disgraced our country, can refuse to support the resolution of my hon. friend. Those hon. gentlemen who take a different course must risk at the hands of the electorate the condemnation which will undoubtedly be meted out to people who attempt by the subterfuge of a sham investigation to cover up the corruption and illegality which unfortunately prevail, and which public opinion demands should be exposed. If hon. gentlemen opposite oppose this motion they must bear, at the hands of the electorate, the condemnation which will undoubtedly be meted out to them if they attempt to burk this investigation, or have a sham investigation.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Borden (Halifax).

Amendment (Mr. Borden, Halifax) negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To provide for the relief of distressed persons in the North-west Territories ..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is to cover the expenses connected with the relief which was ordered to be sent forward to the suffering half-breeds on Birch River in Cumberland district, Saskatchewan, their property having been lost through the flood. Word was received at the department that the people were in a destitute condition, and instructions were forwarded to the Hudson's Bay Company asking them to have relief furnished to the persons who suffered loss by reason of this flood. They were to be assisted by the mounted police. Mr. Chipman, commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company, instructed the Hudson's Bay officer to send a person to the relief of these people at Birch River. The Hudson's Bay Company also reported that there were persons in distress farther down the river. In connection with this I may say that no accounts have been rendered, and after consultation with the officers of the department and with the men who know something of the people who were affected by the flood, I have come to the conclusion that it will only require half of this amount. I think it would be just as well to reduce the vote to $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is Birch River ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Three hundred miles north of Prince Albert.

Mr. DAVIS. It is three hundred miles down the Saskatchewan River from Prince Albert. There is a settlement of half-breeds. There was very high water in the Saskatchewan last summer and it covered the place where they had their houses, their property and their crops. It destroyed all their crops and they lost everything. Missionaries wrote to me stating that they were in a destitute condition. I wired to the department asking that relief should be sent to these people, and this is the outcome of it.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no satisfactory explanation given for this vote, either by the hon. minister, or the hon. gentleman who tried to make the explanation for him. There has been no statement as to the extent of the damage. There has been no statement as to whether the North-west council were approached. It is their duty to attend to cases of distress under their own government, and we cannot give an amount of money for a purpose of this kind unless we have some statement as to the actual damage and as to the amount of distress.

This is an unusual vote to give, and being an unusual vote, we ought to have a better explanation than that which has been given. So far as I can see it means that somebody applied to the sitting member; the sitting member can be able to strengthen his case if he can distribute a sum of money, and it has been granted. That seems to be all we have to it so far. Maybe there has been a good case for the interference of the government, but no such case has been made out here, and the fact that it is cut down from $10,000 to $5,000 shows that there must have been looseness in the department, and leaves it open to suspicion. When was this relief given?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On December 28 last.

Mr. DAVIS. The people were in a state of starvation as the result of the fall floods.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the evidence of that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It has been the custom to provide relief for sufferers who are in distant parts of the Territories.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not wrong at all. I am not in the habit of stating things that are wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is in the habit of stating things that are wrong. He got a vote through the other night for a civil servant, on the statement to me that the salary of the servant had not been recently increased, but on inquiry I found that the salary of that servant had been increased only the year before. My hon. friend is not infallible.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is perfectly true that I can make a mistake, as well as any one else, but whatever information I give to the House I give it honestly, and I obtain it from the best sources that I can. If I stated that that servant's salary had not been increased, I was so informed. I would like to know who that civil servant is. What I state with regard to this vote, is that I am informed by the department, that with regard to Indians, there has been a standing arrangement for many years, that where distress occurs, the Hudson's Bay Company should grant relief, and the same way with the North-west Mounted Police force. In this particular case representations were made to the department (Mr. Chipman refers to it in his correspondence), that owing to the high floods that had taken place in September these people were in want of something to eat. I appeal to the committee that if there were any settlers in any part of Canada who were suffering for the necessities of life, would it not be the duty of the government to help them? I do not think it is the policy of Canada to let people starve.

Mr. FOSTER

It was represented to the department on the best authority, that these people, 300 miles from Prince Albert, were in actual distress, and the government adopted the usual custom. The government sent the following message to the Hudson's Bay Company:

It has been represented they are in need of immediate relief owing to property being flooded by high water. Please arrange at once through your post at Cumberland to supply what is necessary. Police will assist.

I inquired carefully for details, and I find that no accounts have yet been rendered. There have been transactions of this kind in the past, and it seems that the officers of the department put in this estimate of $10,000 to meet the accounts. I was informed that from 150 to 200 people were suffering, and after consultation, it was my personal opinion that probably for the present $5,000 would be sufficient. There is no reason to suppose that it was done for any other object than to relieve those people who were in distress. The accounts will not be paid unless they are found to be all right. The well known character of the Hudson's Bay Company, with whom the government have been dealing in matters of this kind, for many years, is some guarantee that no impropriety will be committed. I do not think Mr. Chairman, that there is any reason for an attack upon the department. The department simply acted in a humane way. I do not believe that any member of this House would be unwilling to take the best action to furnish relief, if representations were made that a number of our fellow-countrymen were in destitute circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. That shows exactly the view the hon. gentleman has of ministerial responsibility, and the duties of the government. He says that it has been the custom to do it, and when asked for an example, he says that if the Indians were in destitute circumstances anywhere, the government would come to their relief. Why not? The Indians of the North-west are the wards of this government. The cases are not parallel at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What I did say, anyway what I intended to say was, that we proceeded in the proper way, because we went to the Hudson's Bay Company, which was our intermediary in these matters with the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister takes the broad ground that if any one in this country is in need, he does not think the House would object to a vote to relieve them.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is straining it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what the hon. gentleman stated, and that is what this vote is. If people in any section of New Brunswick or British Columbia or Quebec or Ontario, or anywhere else, are in want from failure of crops or the like of that, the hon.

gentleman thinks it is the duty of the Dominion government to immediately put a vote through the House, and if any one objects he is to be accused of being wanting in humane motives. The hon. gentleman knows that that is not the duty of this government. Fires take place and they sweep away a village, and the hon. gentleman knows that the government does not take the money of the Dominion to help these people. It is only when some great overshadowing calamity occurs that this House makes a special vote. The white people of the North-west Territories are under the government of the North-west Territories, who have their appropriations, and charities are looked after by them, or by the municipalities, but it requires a case different from a mere local misfortune of some kind, to justify the minister in putting in a vote for $10,000, and immediately ordering some one to go and dispense it. What were the representations made to the government? We do not know whether it was an overwhelming calamity, or the amount of loss, or anything of the kind. There is nothing to show that the North-west government was communicated with, but on the mere statement of a gentleman who wants to run an election in the constituency, this department, and this minister, who is not now present, where he should be goes to work, and in his generosity says to the Hudson's Bay Company: Go on and spend, and I will put $10,000 in the estimates; and the hon. gentleman thinks he has done his whole duty by saying that he does not think the Hudson's Bay Company would do anything dishonourable. It is not dishonourable for them to sell all the goods they can to this government; their business is to sell goods. Neither is it a good reason why the expenditure should be made, that they spent this money on the order of the minister. The hon. gentleman has shown the utmost laxity in the department. The $10,000 must have been put in on consultation with somebody; and yet when the minister comes to look into it, the reason for it is so poor that on the first prick of the pin the bubble collapses, and he comes to the conclusion that $5,000 is enough. What were the representations on which the telegram of instructions to the Hudson's Bay Company was sent?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman in his remarks insinuated that this was not a proper transaction.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not insinuate it; I stated it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Hudson's Bay Company was the only company in a position to do this service for the department, with the assistance of the mounted police. There was no other company or person to whom they could apply, and I referred to the standing of that company as a justification for applying to it. Then the hon. gentleman proceeds to put some arguments into my mouth which I did not use, to the effect that if somebody was hard-up in Ontario or Quebec, I would at once ask this House to vote relief. The circumstances are different, although I believe that when the hon. gentleman was in the government, and it was represented to parliament that there was distress among the fishermen, we voted a sum of money to relieve that distress. Though I cannot recall the instances now, I believe parliament on other occasions, when proper representations were made, has voted money to relieve distress. These people were not in Ontario or Quebec or New Brunswick, where their own government or the municipal authorities could attend to them; but it was a matter which the Dominion government had to deal with. I do not think any charge is to be made against the department or against myself for looking into the matter and endeavouring to keep the vote as low as possible. The estimate was at first put at $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. On what ground was it estimated at that figure?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. These estimates were put in before I came into the department. It does not necessarily follow that the officers of the department were dishonest.

Mr. FOSTER. Who said they were dishonest? Do not be looking for charges.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Probably they were governed by their experience in the department in the past.

Mr. FOSTER. What experience? What cases have they had before?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have already stated cases in which the government relieved distress. I do not think the hon. gentlemen has a right to attribute to me recklessness or a desire to help any person in this matter. The hon. gentleman seems to think that no act can be done without some ulterior object, such as helping an election. There was nothing of the kind in this matter. When I discussed with the officials the number of people or families affected, I thought that as the accounts had not come in, $5,000 ought to be sufficient to meet them. If they do not come to that amount, the money will not be paid; if they come to more, parliament will have to be asked to make it up. But I am satisfied that the necessity was there and that it was a proper expenditure and will be honestly accounted for.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the representations?

Mr. DAVIS. For the information of the hon. gentleman I might state that it has been customary for years in the North-west, not only under this government but under the late government, for the mounted police to go and give help to destitute half-breeds.

Mr. FOSTER. These are not half-breeds.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, all of them are half-breeds. They are situated on the Birch River and around Cedar Lake. They are not on reserves, but are living in settlements along the river. As to the representations, I might tell the hon. gentleman that I had a letter from the Rev. Mr. Hynes, who is in charge of the Church of England missions in that part of the country, and also from Rev. Mr. Settee, another Church of England clergyman, as well as from several school teachers, drawing my attention to the fact that these people were starving, that their crops had been destroyed and washed away by the flood, and that if relief was not furnished, numbers of them would die for want of something to eat. I communicated with the department, who communicated, I suppose, with the Hudson's Bay Company. I did not suggest the Hudson's Bay Company. If I remember rightly, I suggested the police; but as the police were not in that part of the country, the department communicated with the Hudson's Bay Company, the only people who could afford relief. It was impossible at that time of the year to send goods in from the outside, as navigation was closed, and there is no way of getting goods in except by the river. From my knowledge of the Hudson's Bay Company, I do not think that for the sake of selling a few dollars' worth of goods they would do what was not right or would give any more relief than was necessary.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the minister give to the House any part of the correspondence that has led to this grant? The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has spoken of having received letters from some clergymen of the district. I think these should be produced.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I stated that the member for the district had telegraphed the circumstances to the department. He has given the House the authority on which he made the representations to the department, and I have read the only correspondence that we have.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. member to say that this relief had been given for years. I have here the estimates of 1898-9, and do not see anything in them for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. The mounted police have been giving relief to the half-breeds for years.

Mr. FOSTER. To what extent?

Mr. DAVIS. Quite a large extent. The Indian Department have been giving relief to half-breeds to a very large extent in some cases.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. minister to say that this was an item running from year to year, but in the estimates of 1898-9, I can see no such item. Therefore, it must be an exceptional one. Who spends the money?

Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I believe the Hudson's Bay Company furnish the relief, under the direction or with the assistance of the mounted police.

Mr. CLANCY. There must be some principle observed in giving these grants, or you will open the door to a mere slipshod way of giving them without knowing how they are applied. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the damages took place in December.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The floods took place in September, and the assistance was asked and granted at the end of December.

Mr. CLANCY. In September the crops are harvested, and that is not the time that crops are destroyed. There is no information to warrant our giving $10,000. The hon. the minister cannot say how many families required relief.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I said that the estimate was for some 150 to 200. I read the letter of the department.

The PRIME MINISTER. I listened with some attention to the remarks which fell from the lips of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster), and taking them upon a broad basis they are unimpeachable. This government is not a charitable institution, and cannot be called on to look after the welfare of individuals. But if a flood or fire takes place in any one of the older provinces, private charity and the municipal authorities will come to the rescue of the sufferers; whereas in a settlement, hundreds of miles away from any neighbours, it is absolutely impossible for private charity to cope with the distress. For years we have had an appropriation granted by parliament for the relief of half-breeds in distress—$300 to $500 every year. It is a matter of notoriety that last year three floods of a most destructive character took place in the North-west Territories, and we have voted $92,000 to repair the damages caused by these floods. It appears that they destroyed, not only public works but the crops of some of the poorer settlers on the Birch River. My hon. friend from Bothwell says that the crops are over in the month of September, but he forgot that these people live very far north, and the crops were still on the ground when the flood took place. The clergy and missionaries made representations that the people were left destitute. Under the circumstances, these people could only apply to the Hudson's Bay Company, and that company is under no obligation to give anything to these men.

Mr. KAULBACH. What about the North-west council?

The PRIME MINISTER. The North-west council has very little means. It has only what is supplied by this government, and probably had not a cent available. The government of the North-west Territories have received this year from this government $90,000 to replace the public works destroyed by this flood. Under these circumstances the clergymen applied to the Minister of the Interior, and he thought it advisable to authorize the Hudson's Bay Company not to let these people starve. This condition of things ought to appeal to the manhood and to the justice of our people. We cannot allow any portion of our fellowmen to starve in this country. This country is too rich for that.

Mr. MONK. To whom will this money be paid?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To the Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. MONK. For my part, I have the greatest objection to this manner of doing things. I do not object to the principle of relief, but I think that in these cases we ought to proceed with great caution, and that the money should be paid to certain indicated persons. I do not mind saying that they ought to be indicated in the vote. Because, the committee will see that if we vote a certain amount to relieve distress in a district, large discretion is left to the minister. The degree of want should be ascertained exactly, and how the relief is organized, and to whom the money is to be paid. I would like to avail myself of this item to ask the Prime Minister if he has come to any decision in regard to the application made to him some time ago in connection with the disaster at Pointe Claire?

Mr. GIBSON. To whom should that be paid?

Mr. MONK. That is an instance in point. The moment the disaster occurred a regular relief committee was organized, which adopted a constitution and passed resolutions. No money could be paid, except upon the authorization of the president and the secretary-treasurer. Here you have somebody to look to, you can get vouchers for all moneys.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The inquiry of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is not, I must say, germane to this question. I have no objection, however, to tell him that the government has come to no conclusion upon the matter. But, before this discussion ends, I would ask my hon. friend to ponder upon the words of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). He had a case in point. If a fire sweeps away a village, the government is not called upon to contribute anything, except where the fire causes such great distress as to be beyond the powers of relief of the neighbours and the municipal institutions.

Mr. MONK. I admit—

The PRIME MINISTER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) admits that, he will probably have no difficulty in working out an answer to his own objection.

Mr. MONK. The right hon. gentleman is mistaken. I admit that principle; but, in the case of Pointe Claire, there were special circumstances. We alleged in our claim that the disaster had occurred so near, in point of time, to the calamity at Ottawa, that we have been deprived of a very large measure of relief on account of the very considerable contribution we had made to the sufferers in Ottawa. We did not invoke a new principle, but contended that the government should give us relief under the special circumstances.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This case is not exactly the same. No one would suppose that the government must come to the relief of the distressed under all circumstances. As to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Monk's) objection to the form, there would not be the slightest objection to have it enacted that this money is to be paid to the Hudson's Bay Company and to no one else. I confess, I was surprised at the criticism. We have already had quite a discussion on this matter. As a result of these floods, we had granted, I think $92,000 to repair the damages to public works. The hon. member for West Assinibioia (Mr. Davin) did not think that was enough.

Mr. DAVIN. I said the general vote was not enough, not that this $92,000 was not enough for the purpose. I never endorsed the statement of the purpose, because I never heard of any of the destruction that was predicated as having taken place in consequence of these floods, to bridges, and so on. I have travelled over the North-west Territories a good deal, and I have seen bridges decayed and injured, and therefore easily swept away by flood.

The PRIME MINISTER. Is it too much?

Mr. DAVIN. I think the general vote is not enough.

The PRIME MINISTER. But the special item?

Mr. DAVIN. I may tell the right hon. gentleman what I think of the form of that special item. I thought it was put in that form by the government so as not to commit the government to the amount annually, whereas that and more should be voted annually for public works. I thought it was factitious.

The PRIME MINISTER. You will have to discuss that with Mr. Haultain.

Mr. DAVIN. I will say here that I doubt very much if either Mr. Haultain or Mr. Ross is responsible for the form of that vote. I have read what their demand was, when they asked for over $500,000, and I do not think they put that item in that form.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I must apologize to my hon. friend (Mr. Davin), as it seems I misunderstood his remark. But, he is mistaken when he says that the special vote referred to was not made on representation. Mr. Haultain and Mr. Ross both signed an estimate giving in detail every work damaged and the amount which would probably be required to repair it; and I referred to that at the time. It was on their representation on behalf of the people of the North-west Territories that the vote was made. The House also granted this session $20,000 for the relief of the distress on the Liard and Peace Rivers. Some difficulty is made about these people, no doubt, because it is supposed that they have votes. As to what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) says, there would be no objection to amending the vote so as to provide that the money be paid over to the Hudson's Bay Company. If there is any person here who would suggest a better method that might be adopted when similar cases arise than the one adopted by the department, I shall be glad to learn of it. At that season of the year, with people at least 300 miles from telegraph or railroad, and represented by responsible people to be suffering and in distress—I do not think that the case calls for criticism. There is no other method that I can think of. I was personally concerned in looking into the case carefully and suggesting means to make the vote the lowest amount possible. And the money will not be paid out unless properly certified bills are presented.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has found fault with the method and not with the basis. This parliament is amenable to the calls of suffering and has a charitable heart. But we cannot do these things without reference to the precedents established and to the general principles that ought to govern the distribution of Dominion moneys. There is no parallel between such a sum as this and such amounts as have been used by the mounted police in relieving individual cases of distress. The police are scattered all over the North-west and there are cases of great distress that come before their view; and they have always been allowed a reasonable amount to administer relief to these cases. But, as my hon. friend said, they never went over a few hundred dollars a year. This is altogether a different vote. There was a vote given for relief of distress in the North-west Territories a few years ago, when I was a member of the late government. But we gave the vote and administered it through the North-west council, and after investigation made by the North-west council. The difficulty here is that you make the precedent, without any reference to the local government, of granting relief for local distress in large amounts; and my right hon. friend knows to what an extent that can be carried, and what an abuse can be made of it. As to the method of distribution, once the distribution is agreed upon, it could not be better. No one finds fault with giving this into the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company, there was no other way that it could be done as well or as quickly. But the whole matter seems to have been rushed into hastily.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It has to be, when there is distress.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a good deal of difference between September last year and this present time, and the minister has not got over the matter of haste yet, because knowing that this vote was to come on, he has not prepared himself with information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What information does the hon. gentleman want?

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Minister of the Interior could authorize his department to put in $10,000 for a vote for local distress on Birch River, he must have had some information upon which to go. When brother-in-law Burrows wanted to get a timber limit to which he had no right, he telegraphed or wrote to Mr. Smart that he wanted it, and it came. And when Mr. Sifton wanted an excuse for putting in a vote for $10,000 for distress the extent of which he does not seem to have known anything about, he had a representation from a member of parliament who represents that constituency. How much representation, and how much information was given?

Mr. DAVIS. How does he think I could give any more information than what I received?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not like to undertake the impossible task of pointing out how the hon. gentleman is going to get all the information he needs. What information has he given the acting minister? He said he had a letter from a school teacher or two, a letter from a reverend gentleman, and a letter from another reverend gentleman. To what extent did these letters carry the minister in authorizing the hon. gentleman to put a vote of $10,000 into the estimates? We do not know. Now, if there was any information upon which that vote was based that information should be in the department. If it was in the department the minister should have it for this House when he comes to ask the House to give him the vote. How much information has he given to the House? He has not a scrap of a letter, he has not an estimate of damage. We are not finding fault that the Hudson's Bay Company should distribute a charity when once a charity is determined on. I think the government should have communicated with the North-west Territories. The North-west Territories have in their assembly a representative from that district, I imagine. It is an organized district is it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, if in any part of the province of Quebec, a calamity falls and a local charity is necessary, they appeal to the local government, and the same in any other province or organized district. Now, the representative in the local House ought to have been just as much interested as the representative in the Dominion House, and the application should have gone to him. It seems to me that local help should have been asked from the local authorities, and that the local representative should have something to say about it as well. If the application was made there, does any one doubt that Mr. Haultain would not have lent an ear to the people under his own administration? But there was no consultation. The man who represents that constituency saw a splendid opportunity, presumably, of making himself solid, and he telegraphs or writes to the minister, and $10,000 is put in. Remark how the vote is worded. It is $10,000 put in for the relief of distressed persons in the North-west. It is not localized, you can use it in any constituency you choose. It is given to be used for any distress that may be, in the judgment of the administering authority, eligible for relief anywhere throughout the North-west Territories. I think we ought to wait until the accounts come in, and then we will see how they have been incurred. The Hudson's Bay Company, under that authority might go to any extent. They do not seem to be limited, they may spend it for other purposes than relief in food.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was limited to the purposes mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. I think when we see the accounts, the minister can have them completed, and then we can vote them.

The PRIME MINISTER. All the accounts may not have come in yet. That is a very distant section of country. The minister, after having looked over the matter, as the deputy informs me, thought the amount should be reduced to $5,000, and he has asked the amount to be reduced accordingly. There are from 150 to 200 families who were left destitute and had to be provided for, and having talked over the matter with the deputy we thought that $5,000 would cover all the legitimate advances that could have been made by the Hudson's Bay Company.

My hon. friend says that the vote is too general. Perhaps there is something in that. My hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior has said that he had no objection to limiting the vote, and particularising the items, saying that the money should be paid to recoup the Hudson's Bay Company, and that it should be for this particular district. There is no intention to have a blanket vote, covering all parts of the North-west Territories. The hon. gentleman confuses the matter when he says that we should have applied to the local authorities. My hon. friend forgets that the people of the North-west Territories have not yet the same degree of self-government that has been reached in other sections of the country. If a calamity of this nature should happen in any of the older sections of Canada, we would have to apply to the local government. But when it happens in the North-west Territories, the first thing that the people think of doing, is to apply to the Dominion government. There is no municipal organization, and the local government have too limited a power at the present moment. The Dominion government are everywhere in that country, having the mounted police in all parts of the country, so that it was natural that the people should apply to the Dominion authorities more than to the local authorities. Under the circumstances, I think that the hon. gentleman will agree that the minister acted properly in authorizing the Hudson's Bay Company to see that these people were not left to starve. The hon. gentleman says that the Hudson's Bay Company should have been notified that they could go to a certain extent and no more, but the Hudson's Bay Company are the most particular people. Their agents are a very superior class. They want to sell their goods, but the hon. gentleman knows that it is not their intention to take advantage either of the government, or of anybody. They are very fair dealers.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right; I admit that.

The PRIME MINISTER. When the minister said: See that these people do not starve, the instructions were well understood by the Hudson's Bay Company, and there is no necessity of going further than that.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the acting minister read the telegram or letter of instructions again?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (reading):

Settlement of half-breeds at Birch River, Cumberland district, are in need of immediate relief owing to property having been lost from high water. Will you please arrange at once with your post at Cumberland to supply what is necessary. Police will assist.

That was sent to Mr. Chipman, at Winnipeg.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that followed by a letter of instructions?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, the only letter is the one we had in reply, where Mr. Chipman refers to the report of the agent, that further down the river there were some others in distress, and that is why the of-officials explained to me they thought the distress was greater than it was.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is there any acknowledgment of that order?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, I have read the letter twice, and there is also the statement of Mr. Chipman in reference to the report of their officer in charge there.

Mr. CLANCY. How many are now being taken care of?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think there are any being taken care of.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, being assisted. I think when I ask a civil question, the hon. gentleman should give a civil answer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Did I not give a civil answer?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman gave it in a sneering tone.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, I apologize. I was not aware that I had done so.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Have any bills come in for the goods supplied?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, they will arrive in a short time. I think in regard to the statements and insinuations made, that I may say that there was no desire to use the money for any improper purpose, as has been shown, not only by my own action in asking to reduce the vote, but in stating that I understood that the accounts will not amount to the sum originally asked for. If they are more, we will have to ask for another vote, when the accounts will be produced. When these accounts arrive the committee must see that this money has been properly expended. There is no way in which this money could be improperly paid out, except by fraud.

Mr. CLANCY. Do the Hudson's Bay Company look into particular cases themselves there, or do they pay the money to reputable people there to distribute it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The officer of the company, if there are no police at that point, would assume the responsibility himself.

Mr. FOSTER. There are no police as a matter of fact.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Sometimes the police are in that district.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Would it not be better to have this item stand over until the hon. gentleman gets the information?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no further information; I have made every inquiry.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There ought to be further information. The North-west Territories are not so far away that we should not in a few weeks, or a few days, be able to get a report of what was done. It is six months since that order was given, and there is no information as to what was done up to this time. What necessity is there for this parliament undertaking to provide for work, when they have no knowledge whether it was done or not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I read the letter of the manager of the company, stating that he had given instructions to the agent there, to relieve the distress that had occurred. My hon. friend will see that if there are no accounts rendered, there will be none paid. The transaction is perfectly regular, and not a dollar will be paid unless it is shown that the money has been properly paid out.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I object to doing things in an improper way. The order was given last September, and all the information we have after the expiration of six months, is that this money is to provide for the relief of distressed persons in the North-west Territories. How are we to know from that, what parties the money has been paid to? There is no information that one single dollar's worth of goods has been given to these people.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Nothing will be paid then.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How are we to know? The department acted upon the sole representation of the hon. member (Mr. Davis) when they had their mounted police and their own officers and the North-west council to consult. This was neither right nor proper. I understand the Hudson's Bay Company are themselves in the habit of giving relief of this kind and that being the case the action of the government may be to relieve the Hudson's Bay Company from one of their customs.

Mr. GIBSON. If the company is charitable enough to give goods voluntarily, surely they will not charge the government for goods they do not give at all.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Here we are six months after the order was given by the department, and we have not a detail before us of this expenditure. We should not provide money until the accounts are in. I would move that this item stand until we get some information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed that the Hudson's Bay Company only send the accounts half-yearly, and the hon. gentleman will see that the honour and credit of the country are pledged to pay this amount.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the Hudson's Bay Company were a less powerful company they would have sent in their accounts long ago. We have to deal with the North-west Territories somewhat differently from the older territories. When the announcement came that there was distress what more could be done than to give the order to the Hudson's Bay Company, who are the best qualified to arrange a matter of this kind. The transaction is fair, regular and reasonable.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is very irregular. If this item were put in the proper way it would tell where the relief was distributed and how it was distributed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The acting Minister of the Interior has offered to designate the Hudson's Bay Company, and the Birch River in the item. The Hudson's Bay Company is an old and honoured institution, and you could not have a better organization to do the work.

Mr. FOSTER. The Finance Minister is responsible for having the estimates brought down properly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item is all right.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not in proper form, and the Prime Minister has acknowledged that it is not in proper form.

The PRIME MINISTER. I offered to amend it to suit the fastidiousness of my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. It is apparent that we cannot get any more information about this item. The acting minister has been good enough to improve 50 per cent on the real minister and to reduce it $5,000. I would suggest that the item should read in this way:

To provide for relief dispensed to distressed half-breeds in the Birch River district, Northwest Territories.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would rather have it in that way and we will change it to read in those words.

Mr. FOSTER. That means the payment to the Hudson's Bay Company as well. The Hudson's Bay Company got the order and they acted in good faith.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would ask my hon. friend could anything else be done?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, what I outlined would have been better.

Mr. GILLIES. I wish to enter my protest against the voting of money in any such way as this. The vote may be meritorious enough in itself and I am not objecting to the principle of giving relief, but I do object to this wholesale voting of money without a particle of information being furnished to the House. The acting minister says that the only information that he had of any relief being necessary was a telegram being sent to the department by the sitting member. That telegram has not been produced. We do not know what the distress was or how many people were suffering, if any at all, and yet the Minister of Finance makes the extraordinary statement here to-night that the vote is regular in every respect. I protest against this system of transacting the public business of the country.

Governor General's Secretary's office ..... $9,250

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). One officer has retired effecting a reduction of $1,800, and on the other side of the account there are two statutory increases of $50 each.

Mr. FOSTER. What officer has retired?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. W. Campbell, owing to ill health. Mr. Walker and Mr. Sladen each get the statutory increase of $50.

Department of the Secretary of State.... $36,300

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In this case there are thirteen eligible for the statutory increase, of whom seven receive it. A messenger has been dropped. So that the saving there more than balances the increases.

Office of the Auditor General ..... $23,100

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Twelve receive the statutory increase out of eighteen who are eligible.

Mr. FOSTER. Who do not get the increase?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hayes, Stevenson, Gross, Hudson, Reid and Kearns.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason these do not get it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is the rule not to give it to all.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Auditor General recommend more?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He did not, but he is quite ready to.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not, because of a little consultation beforehand, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so.

Mr. CLANCY. What classes of clerks are receiving the statutory increase?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Three chief clerks, and the others third-class clerks. The chief clerks who receive the increase now received no increase in the previous year.

'Canada Gazette' ..... $6,000

Mr. DAVIN. Does this pay? I suppose the advertising adds to the income?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is considered to be self-sustaining.

Plant for Printing Bureau ..... $5,000

Mr. PUTTEE. It strikes me that it is very poor policy to starve the Printing Bureau. No business concern would attempt to run an institution like that with $5,000 to replace plant. I have taken a great deal of interest in that Bureau for some years past, especially since I have been down here. It is an institution which is a credit to this parliament, to the people who founded it, and to the people who manage it. Last year there was a vote of $38,000, and the principal item to which that was devoted is a fine new press which is to be put in, and which will be the best press on this continent; but to put it in it will be necessary to upset the arrangements of a very fine press room, as everything else has to be shifted to make room for it. What the Bureau wants is a large increase of floor space, by the erection of a new wing on one side. The Queen's Printer has considered the matter very fully, and he considers that the bindery should be put downstairs. There have been complaints this session that the business of the country has been kept back owing to the Bureau being blocked with work, and it will continue to be blocked until more accommodation is provided and more material is furnished with which to do the work. As a business proposition, the Printing Bureau is probably the very best thing that is being operated by any public body. Anybody who goes through the various items and sees the savings being effected there will, I am sure, agree that it is very poor economy to starve the Bureau. The plant is ten years old, one of the oldest in the country, with less new material than can be got along with properly. It is my opinion that the Bureau should be liberally dealt with, so that it may have a fair chance to do its best work, that in future there may be no complaint that it is in any way hindering the business of this parliament or the country.

Office of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, including R. Boudreau, chief clerk, at $1,800, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..... $30,320

The PRIME MINISTER. I may explain that the expenditure of the Privy Council is increased by $480—$30 of an increase to the messenger, Henry Potter, and the other nine clerks at $50 each. The jump to my private secretary, Mr. Boudreau, is due to special qualifications. He has been with me several years and is a very valuable English and French stenographer and worthy of an increase. He is getting $1,100 now. I do not propose to give him the whole $600 available for that purpose. I have two private secretaries, and require the services of another.

Mr. FOSTER. What, three private secretaries!

The PRIME MINISTER. I have a great deal of French correspondence to attend to. I have two French secretaries, and require a third. I do not propose to expend a cent more than the $600. Mr. Boudreau and Mr. Lelièvre are my two secretaries.

Mr. PUTTEE.

Mr. Boudreau gets $1,100 and $600, and Mr. Lelièvre $1,600. The third one I have not appointed yet. I do not propose to increase the expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has now two private secretaries and intends taking a third. That does not mean that he is simply distributing the $600 among them, but he is taking the services of two very high class clerks—one at $1,600 and the other at $1,100—whom he proposes to increase. It has not been the rule to take the private secretaries of ministers from the high class clerks.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not propose that the private secretaries will cost one cent more than at present.

Mr. FOSTER. But you are taking away these men from their proper service in the department.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think so. I propose to give a rise to Mr. Boudreau, who is a very superior officer. There is a vacancy in the office. Mr. Lamothe, who was assistant secretary, has been promoted to the office of Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I propose to make Mr. Boudreau a superior class officer, so as to be able to draw despatches, state papers and things of that kind. I have no officer of that kind in my department. I propose to take a junior man to do the purely clerical work of a private secretary. But, I insist that it does not matter much how the work is divided, so long as it costs nothing more to the country; and that is what I intend to do.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you give Mr. Boudreau such a boost as that? Are not you afraid you will make the young man dizzy?

The PRIME MINISTER. No; I think his head is quite level.

Mr. FOSTER. You are going to give him $2,000 altogether?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not want to disparage anybody in my department, for they are all good men, but there are men who are exceptionally good. My hon. friend knows that, in the Privy Council, Mr. Pope was taken from the position of private secretary, and was made assistant clerk of the council, which was a proper thing to do. He knows that Mr. Burgess was raised from an inferior position and—quite properly—in a short time made deputy head of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. That took a long time.

The PRIME MINISTER. No; he was taken in in 1876 and was made a deputy head in 1882 or 1883, I think. When you find a man of superior ability, it is quite right to advance him.

Mr. FOSTER. When did Mr. Boudreau enter the service ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He came in with me in 1896. He has been my private secretary for ten years.

Mr. FOSTER. This is very rapid advance. In four years this young man advances so that he receives the $1,800 of a chief clerk and also an allowance as private secretary. What are the tremendous powers and capabilities of Mr. Boudreau that he should be passed over the heads of older officers and made a chief clerk, a grade in which he may advance to a salary of $2,400?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Boudreau has been my private secretary for ten years. When I came into office I brought him with me. He is not only a French stenographer, but an English stenographer.

Mr. FOSTER. But that is merely mechanical.

The PRIME MINISTER. These are important accomplishments and it is very seldom that you find them united in one man. I have found Mr. Boudreau reliable in every particular and always equal to any work that I have entrusted to him. I do not want to be unfair or unjust to any member of the establishment over which I preside, but I have not amongst my employees of my department one who has been so faithful a servant to myself personally or who has shown himself more assiduous in the performance of his duties as an official of the government. I do not see why I should not be privileged to give him the position which I think suitable to his abilities, when that position is vacant and the change does not cost the country a cent.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not that.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says that I put Mr. Boudreau over the heads of other men. I do not wish to do injustice, but I do not think there is any in the service equally well qualified for the position.

Mr. FOSTER. These are excellent reasons why Mr. Boudreau would make a splendid private secretary for the right hon. gentleman, particularly as he has been with him long enough to have that intimate acquaintance with him which is one of the qualifications for good secretarial work. His being an English and French stenographer is also an excellent qualification for a private secretary. But, these are not the qualifications for a chief clerk in a department, a man who would be left there next to the deputy head when the right hon. gentleman goes out of office, as he soon will, and will be left without much work for his stenographical abilities. Whilst the right hon. gentleman has a strong personal feeling in favour of Mr. Boudreau, there is another point to be considered, and that is, that the public service is for the public benefit, and must not be used simply to reward a political or private friend inordinately. Mr. Boudreau will be advanced over the heads of men who have been for years in the department and are perfectly well acquainted with the routine of the work—and the work in that department is peculiar. The right hon. gentleman may reward his private secretary, but I think he is straining the matter too far and going beyond justice in what he is doing.

The PRIME MINISTER. It may be true that Mr. Boudreau is placed over the heads of older employees.

Mr. DAVIN. What is his age ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Thirty-two or thirty-three. I say this to my hon. friend, he knows that this is not without precedent, and I do not say that because I want to shelter myself behind a precedent. But from the nature of things, there are circumstances in which a man in the position of Mr. Boudreau is frequently shoved up above others. Take the case of Mr. Pope, an admittedly valuable officer, and who was private secretary for a long time to Sir John A. Macdonald. He was placed in the position of assistant clerk of the Privy Council, and passed over the heads of several others. I will say more. My hon. friend knows that the duties of a Prime Minister are of a very multiple character. Does he not think that a Prime Minister is entitled to the services of a private secretary, capable of rendering assistance above that usually rendered by private secretaries, such as receiving letters from dictation, filing letters, and so on ? A Prime Minister needs the assistance of a man who is able to draw up papers, and to perform a superior class of work.

Mr. FOSTER. He has a right to the best man he can get.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is the kind of a man I want, a superior class of secretary. I do not think any Prime Minister so far, has had the assistance of a man such as I speak of. But I say that he is entitled to the services of a secretary above the rank of private secretaries generally.

Mr. FOSTER. I have made my objection, and I am not going to push it any further.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Minor items on the paper, and then the Postmaster General's Department, and Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.55 a.m. (Friday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 15, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

Bill (No. 181)—from the Senate—for the relief of William Henry Featherstonhaugh.—(Mr. Bennett.)

PARIS EXHIBITION—SPEECHES OF HON. MR. TARTE.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called. I think it would not be improper to bring to the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister a matter which has been going the rounds of the press, stated to be taken from the St. James Gazette, London, Eng., in which, under the heading 'Notes of the Empire,' the St. James Gazette says:

London, June 14.—The 'St. James's Gazette' to-day, under 'Notes of the Empire,' says that after ex-Premier Schreiner, of Cape Colony, the figure of the week in colonial circles has been Hon. J. I. Tarte, the Canadian Minister of Public Works, now sojourning at Paris in connection with the Dominion's contribution to the great exposition, and adds:

'It is really difficult to know what to make of this gentleman, but we are sure Sir Wilfrid Laurier would be well advised if he were to call his errant colleague to Ottawa, where his speeches would give less offence and give rise to fewer conceptions than they do in Paris.'

This following on a number of rumours in the papers with regard to the erratic conduct of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) as representative of the Dominion in Paris, calls for an explicit statement by the Prime Minister. Of course, we must not always attach too much importance to rumours, but this is repeated so often, and in the same sense by responsible newspapers, that in order to calm us in this country, it may be necessary that we should have a reassuring statement from the right hon. gentleman who leads the government.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I am able to inform my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) and the House as well, that Mr. Tarte himself has written to me upon the subject of his various speeches. He has complained to me that several of the speeches which he has made in Paris have not been faithfully translated and have not been faithfully represented to the public. I answered this communication from him, and I may say that the correspondence between Mr. Tarte and me is now going on. Under such circumstances, the House will agree, I am sure, that the matter ought not to be further dealt with at the present time. The gentleman whose conduct is incriminated, if incriminated it be, at all events, whose conduct is commented on, has himself drawn attention to the fact that the report of his speeches are not fair and correct and do not convey a proper interpretation of his thought, and, under such circumstances, before condemning him, or before passing judgment upon him, it is only fair that we should have the full text of his remarks before us.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I say, in connection with that, that it would be wise to have Mr. Tarte send exactly what he did say, as it appears in the French press, which, I understand, is very correct in its reports of statements of public men.

AMERICAN TUGS TOWING LOGS.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Some days ago the Premier stated that he would inform the House whether applications had been made by the owners of American tugs for the privilege of towing logs in Canadian waters. I wish to ask if such application has been made, and, if so, is it the intention of the government to concede the wishes of the parties making the application?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I referred this matter to the Minister of Customs, and I have not received his answer yet. The minister (Mr. Paterson) will be in the House in a few minutes, and I will try to get the information from him.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EMERGENCY RATION.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). I wish to refer to the matter which I brought to the attention of the House yesterday, and if it is necessary, Mr. Speaker, I would ask to have your ruling upon the point of order. I ask to have the analysis which has been made in the Department of Inland Revenue of the foodstuff sent to South Africa laid upon the Table of the House. I think it is very important that we should have this done before we proceed to a discussion of the question. I could not very well hear what the minister said from where I was sitting, but my right hon. friend said that the minister had stated what the result of that analysis proved. Under those circumstances, the document having been quoted from and the contents having been stated, we are entitled, under your ruling, Mr. Speaker, to have it laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is anticipating what is before the House in the form of a resolution, and it is the first order for to-day.

Mr. McNEILL. I understand—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman had better not ask my ruling on that matter to-day.

Mr. McNEILL. I defer to your suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

I. C. R. TIME TABLE.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) promised me yesterday that he would give certain information with regard to the new time table of the Intercolonial Railway which would go into effect this week.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I have sent for the time table, and I expect a copy of it by the first mail possible.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if the return moved for by Mr. Hale, of Carleton County, N.B., with regard to the hay contracts, is ready to be brought down?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). It is not ready, and if the whole correspondence is to be dealt with, it will take a very considerable time before it can be ready. If Mr. Hale, or my hon. friend, will indicate what particular letters are wanted, I will have those copied first, and bring them down. The order of the House simply mentions all the correspondence with regard to the hay contract. I have no idea of what the hon. gentleman wants, and it will take a month before all the correspondence can be copied.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no question of a month. The resources of this government are surely equal to copying the correspondence in that small matter. The hon. gentleman's estimates cannot go through until that correspondence is laid before the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only tell my hon. friend that the officers of my department say that it would take one clerk six months to do the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Put six clerks at it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Then it would take a month.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has had five weeks in which to get this return ready, and now he comes before the House, and cries for mercy, and says it will take another month.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not crying for mercy at all. If the hon. gentleman indicates what letters he wants, I will have them copied and brought down as soon as possible.

Mr. FOSTER. The order of the House, I think, fairly indicates what is required, and it is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture to obey the order of the House.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Some days ago I asked the right hon. leader of the government whether any correspondence had taken place between him and the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, with reference to the latter's resignation. The right hon. gentleman said that he did not remember any correspondence, but that he would look and see, and if there was any, he would lay it on the Table. Has he found any correspondence of that nature?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no correspondence on the subject.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton). I would like to ask the acting Minister of Public Works what progress has been made in preparing the papers which he promised, touching the telegraph work supervised by Mr. Charleson?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). After the request of the hon. gentleman on Wednesday, on arriving at the department on Thursday morning, I called the deputy, but he was not in the department. As soon as he came, he came to my room, and I asked him to get all the information he could. He told me that he had already had a similar request from the Premier, and that every means would be taken to furnish the hon. gentleman at the earliest moment, with every bit of information in the possession of the department.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EMERGENCY RATION.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Monk, for the appointment of a Select Committee to make inquiry on the subject of certain emergency rations supplied to the Canadian troops in South Africa.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I am exceedingly sorry to have to inform the House that the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), cannot be present to-day to make the statement which he would otherwise have been glad to make, being detained at his House by very serious sickness in his family. But though my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, cannot be present to-day to give to the House the information which he would be entitled to give for his own protection, still the government do not think it advisable to delay this matter, but prefer to dispose of it, reserving to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, the opportunity, as soon as the unfortunate circumstances which now prevent his presence in the House, will permit him again to be here, to make the statement which he expected to make to-day. As I stated on a previous occasion, if frauds are charged against any member of the government, the government will not resist any motion for an inquiry, but, on the contrary, will be prepared at once to give and to court investigation. The hon. gentleman who has brought this motion, has not charged fraud, but he has charged a certain number of things, which, in his opinion, constitute culpable negligence on the part of the minister. The information laid down by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is contained in eighteen paragraphs of the motion which he has laid before the House. The nineteenth paragraph contains no statement of facts, but merely deductions which the hon. gentleman draws from the facts which he has stated in the other eighteen paragraphs. I submit to the House—and I believe I can appeal to the sense of fairness of every man on either side of the House—that it is hardly fair for the House to draw in advance any conclusions as to the statement of facts which have been laid before it. Paragraph 19, reads as follows :

That under all the circumstances above set forth, the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence (a) in making, with undue haste, the agreement hereinabove referred to of January 4, 1900, for the supply of emergency rations to the Canadian troops in South Africa with irresponsible parties; (b) in not having the preparation of said rations controlled by competent men, and the supply furnished to the troops carefully and rigidly inspected and tested; (c) in neglecting, after he had received said letter of January 25 last, to take the steps commended by the ordinary rules of prudence to ensure the protection of the troops; and (d) in paying the amount of the said contract, $4,660, in a case where he must have known that any recovery of the same was impossible, and without any investigation.

As the House will see, in this paragraph there is no statement of fact whatever, but only the conclusions which my hon. friend, who has made this motion, has drawn from the facts as laid down in the previous eighteen paragraphs. Then the motion goes on, and concludes in this way :

That the above statements be referred to a select committee of this House to inquire fully into the said allegations, with power to send for persons, papers, records and such articles as may be necessary for such investigation, and to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation, and that the committee do report in full the evidence taken before them and all their proceedings on the reference, and the result of their inquiries.

I may say at once that the government are quite prepared to grant a committee of investigation, and have the statement of facts properly investigated; but I submit that it would not be fair or just to the hon. Minister of Militia to pronounce in advance, that he has been guilty of negligence. It shall be the duty of the committee to investigate all the facts in the eighteen statements which are found in this motion. Then the committee will report the facts, or pass judgment, or do as they please. The House, when it has before it the report of the committee and all the facts, will be in a position to pronounce on the subject, and declare whether the minister has been guilty or not guilty of negligence. Therefore, I propose to move :

That paragraph 19 in the said motion be struck off from the same.

When this is agreed to, the rest of the motion will be accepted by the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. GEORGE E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I certainly was not prepared for any move of this kind on the part of the government, and especially on the part of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who leads it. During the last few days I have had conversations with hon. members on this side of the House, and must confess to having taken occasion, in every one of these conversations, to rather chide the gentlemen who were speaking with me. I have to confess my fault before this House to-day. The gentleman who spoke with me, amongst whom was the mover of the motion, canvassed seriously with me the probability of the Prime Minister not allowing a full investigation into this charge which he had preferred, and stated to me once or twice that he was of opinion, that he suspected, that he strongly suspected, that the government would not dare and did not intend to allow a full and complete investigation. I dissented from my hon. friend's view, because I believed I had sufficient ground for dissenting from him, not only in the urgency and plainness of the case itself, but from what the right hon. gentleman himself had stated to this House, from what the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) had stated in this House, and from what, if I remember, one or two of the other members of the government had stated in this House with regard to their complete readiness and their complete willingness to have this matter investigated the moment my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) or any other member of the House should make the statement that he desired an investigation. Particularly strong was the statement made by the right hon. gentleman himself; and I think it would not be out of the way for me to recall to the House what he did say. On the 6th of June, after the first debate on this matter, at the conclusion, I took occasion—subsequent to the statement which had been made by himself and by the Minister of Militia and Defence—to ask him :

Whether he proposes to carry out what was promised, I think, by the Minister of Militia and by the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), or whether he will say to-night that he will take the matter into consideration, and let us know at an early day whether a suitable and adequate committee will be granted for the probing and investigation of this matter.

To that the right hon. gentleman replied :

If the hon. gentleman remembered the remark I made this afternoon, he would not take the useless trouble of putting to me the question he has done, because I answered this question in the closing remarks I addressed to the House. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier makes a statement upon his own responsibility that he has reason to believe that a fraud has been committed, he shall have his remedy.

Now, I do not think that any statement could be more full, more complete and more definite than that. And the Minister of Militia himself went to the extent of saying. in the course of his remarks on the question, that if the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would make a charge, he should have his committee inside of five minutes. So satisfied was the Minister of Militia, and so willing was he that the full light of day should be let in on this matter as ventilated by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, that he very positively stated that, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) would make his charge in reference to this matter, he should have a committee inside of five minutes. Well, Sir, what did the Prime Minister say? On the 12th of June, he stated in this House:

I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is going to make a charge within a few hours, and as soon as he makes the charge he shall have his committee, and the committee will have every information possible that may be in the hands of the government.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would draw my hon. friend's (Mr. Foster's) attention to the inadvisability of quoting from previous debates. Of course, I do not wish to restrict a member's privilege of discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you, Mr. Speaker, rule that this is not all one debate?

Mr. SPEAKER. I would simply ask my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) not to prolong the quotation.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not do that. So convinced was I that the right hon. gentleman intended to give a committee and make no cavil about it, that I stated in the House on the 13th of June, that, the evening before, I had some conversation with my right hon. friend, in which conversation, I told him that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would move his motion on the succeeding day; and I spoke to him as to whether the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier should name his committee or whether it would be the province of the government to name the committee. And, of course, the right hon. gentleman stated that the government should name the committee. We also spoke as to the number—five and seven were canvassed—and he said he thought the committee ought to be seven. In bringing that to his notice on the 13th of June, he said: 'I did discuss the wording with him'—meaning myself—'informally.'

I do not care to have a formal notice, but I anticipated all along that in this matter the terms of the motion would be submitted to me in advance of the motion. I insist upon that, I think it is only right. I do not want a formal notice, but I want the terms of the motion to be submitted to me.

That was in exactly the same line as the other. The right hon. gentleman took his stand upon his rights to have a formal notice of the motion brought before him.

Then, later in the same debate, the Prime Minister said:

I stated yesterday that if my hon. friend made a charge of fraud, we would waive all other considerations, and have the investigation. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has not chosen to act on my suggestion, but has taken his own course and brought it up as a matter of privilege. I make the point at present that the motion is not one of privilege, and I suggest that the matter shall stand until to-morrow as a notice of motion.

Now, these positive statements and the inference to be drawn from the other statements went to convince me, and, I think, went to convince this House—that portion of it that was not suspicious of all promises made by my right hon. friend—that the government had made up its mind to grant a full and complete inquiry into this matter; on the charge being made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier on his own responsibility as a member of this House. Well, Sir, yesterday, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) made his formal motion; after it had gone over for one day to give required notice he made charges such as have been laid before the House. No member of this House can say that these charges lack in particularity, no member can say that they do not go to the very extreme of indicating specific particulars of the charge which the hon. gentleman proposes to prove and to substantiate. Not a single line of that charge can be said to lack in particularity, or that it is too general and that it does not come to the point. The fact is that the hon. gentleman made his charge down to the minutest particulars, which he need not have made but which he did spread on the face of his charge in order that the House and the committee and the country might know the exact particulars which he proposed to prove and upon which he based his concluding motion. Now, Sir, not even yesterday did the Prime Minister take any objection to the terms of the motion. He had it laid over until to-day on the excuse that the hon. Minister of Militia was not ready to make his statement. That excuse did not seem to this side of the House to be a very valid one. The hon. Minister of Militia seemed fully prepared three or four or five days ago to make his statement of the case. He did make his statement of the case and he made it with such emphasis and such an apparent belief in its sufficiency that it laid the hon. gentleman open, in the view of hon. members on this side of the House, to the suspicion of being overbearing and defiant in the way in which he met the charge preferred by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. It was not until matters developed and until the members of the government began to have a little time to think it over and a little time possibly to question the hon. Minister of Militia that it began to dawn upon this House that the hon. gentleman had been entirely wrong in some of most important particulars of this case. He denied upon the first day that the charge was made that he knew Mr. Hatch, that he had ever met Mr. Hatch, but he has had to go into the public prints and state that he was mistaken in that respect. It was a very strong point that the hon. minister made when he was able to stand up before the House and declare that he did not know Mr. Hatch, that he had never seen Mr. Hatch, and that he had no dealings with him. That has fallen to the ground. Since then there has been a chance for the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to have a talk with the Prime Minister. There has been a chance for a comparison of notes between the hon. Minister of Militia and other members of the government, and the government have come to the conclusion that they will give another example to this country of the utter repudiation of solemn promises given to this House. The Prime Minister, last summer, on the hustings of this country, stated it with great power, with great force and with great pride, that: They charge us with wrong-doing, they charge us with corruption, they charge us with malpractice in office. Let the people understand that we have one answer and one answer alone, to that. What is the answer? If they make these charges we grant them an investigation. That is our answer. Well, Sir, the charge has been made particularly, and I do not go beyond the book when I state that no more grave charge could be made in this House than the subject-matter involved within the charge which has been made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. It is not necessary for me to go over that. The hon. gentleman himself has placed that motion admirably before the House. Every man in this House knows just what is involved in the commission of a fraud of that kind with reference to soldiers in the field, with reference to emergency food upon which life absolutely depends, in reference to their confidence in the efficacy of it when they trusted themselves to the food without other rations with the entire confidence that it was sufficient to sustain life for a number of days consecutively. No one can read the statement made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, without coming to the conclusion that there had been fraud somewhere in this transaction. Wherever it lies, if there is any truth in the charge at all, if the evidence that the hon. gentleman is going to bring forward substantiates this charge fairly well it is apparent that fraud has been attempted against the lives of the soldiers of the Queen on the field of battle, or on the march. I was the last one to harbour even the shadow of a suspicion that if a charge of that kind, even, though it might happen to have not been made with the particularity with which this charge has been made, came before the House from the lips of a member of this House, the government would have been only too glad to have placed all the sources of their information and all the resources of this House of Commons at the command of that member in order to investigate this charge and in order that the truth might be shown. Why not? Will the Prime Minister give any one sufficient reason why a Minister of Militia and a government of which he is a member, having nothing to fear, should not court the fullest light upon a charge made here by a member of the House that fraud has been committed in substituting a worthless food upon which the lives of the soldiers on the march and in the field absolutely depended for the time they were away from the base of the commissariat and of supplies? What reason is there? Is the minister guiltless? Has every precaution been taken that could have been taken? Is it not absolutely necessary for the good of the administration, is it not for the good of public life in this country and the feeling which ought to exist in the electorate of confidence in the executive, which for the time being manage the affairs of the country, that such a surmise, if it were only a surmise that such a charge made with particularity should at once be inquired into and inquired into with all the resources at the command of the government, and of this House? What reason is there that it should not be? The Prime Minister laughs. The Prime Minister was not a soldier in the field. The Prime Minister is an honorary colonel. He fights in his dreams; he does battle in his hours of slumber. He enjoys all the glitter and glamour of an honorary colonelcy, but these men, with sword in hand, on the march and in the field of South Africa with their emergency food upon which their lives depend—these are the men whose lives are at stake. Hon. gentlemen laugh. Their lives are not in danger. It is not a laughing matter; it is a most serious matter and laughing at this moment on the Treasury benches is the best proof that this government are what I called them the other day—a devil-may-care government. What care they what happens so long as they keep their offices? What care they what happens so long as they can shield themselves from an investigation? What care they what happens so long as a minister who to say the least, on the face of these charges, was grossly and culpably negligent in not taking the precautions that he ought to have taken in reference to this emergency food can escape investigation? What matters it to them so long as they can shield such a one from the consequences of his culpable negligence and carelessness. What does the Prime Minister propose to do? He proposes to cut out section 19. I have no hesitation in saying that the most important part of the charge is that which charges the substitution of a worthless for a good food, a fraud of some kind by which worthless was substituted for what was valuable, valuable on a sufficient test made by the department under its departmental officers themselves. That is one part of the charge, that is the basis of the whole charge.

But, Sir, in proportion as that charge is grave, so also and very little less serious than that is the charge which is brought against the responsible head of the department that he did not take the precautions which lay in his power, and which a man ought to have taken in order to ensure that the food which was placed on the vessel for the service of these soldiers was the food which was tested by the director general, or under his orders, at Kingston, in April, 1899. That is the only food which was tested thoroughly, and with reference to which we have the results from the government. The statement has not been substantiated in this House that any other food was tested by a test of that kind; the statement cannot be made in this House that the vitaline or any other food but Hatch's protose was tested by a test such as Hatch's protose was put through at Kingston in 1899. Well, there is the responsible minister who has before him the identical food which was tested in April, 1899, by a month's test upon five members of the militia force in Kingston, and which was pronounced analytically, and by observation of his own officers, and by the observation of the condition and feelings of the men, as being an absolutely sufficient and reliable food. That is what he had before him. What else had he before him on the 4th of January? He had the fact that Mr. Hatch himself, under his own letter, also in verbal interview, and on an inquiry made of him, had informed the minister that whenever he wanted food of that kind which he himself had tested, either for the North-west or for the troops, he could get it from Hatch's company, which kept in store from one-half to a ton of this food, and would so keep it in store. The minister, on the 4th of January, when urgency compelled him to give that contract, knew that the food had been tested nearly nine months before, knew that that food was in store. He had more than that, he had the recommendation of Col. Neilson, director general of medical stores, and that recommendation in plain English is this: I recommend the food which was tested at Kingston, and which test proved the food satisfactory as a sufficient and reliable ration for the troops in South Africa. He paid no respect at all to the test at Kingston, he brushed aside the statement of the only company that manufactured that food, that they had it in store, and that he could be provided with it at any moment. He brushed aside, again, the recommendation of Col. Neilson that this protose was tested in Kingston and was found to be an absolutely sufficient and reliable emergency ration. He brushed all this aside, and in his urgency, on the 4th of January, he closeted himself with Dr. Devlin. Dr. Devlin wrote him a letter and said to the minister: I tender to supply to the contingent so many rations according to the sample that I hold in my hand. From the beginning of his tender to the end of it there is no allusion in any shape or form to the protose food which was absolutely and thoroughly tested about a year beforehand at Kingston. The Minister of Militia and Defence, on the same 4th day of January, turns round and says to Mr. Devlin, who has his sample package in his hands: I will agree to give you an order for so many cases as per that sample. The order was given, and the food was sent away to Montreal, delivered at Halifax, and the minister and the government have failed to this day to show that they took representative samples of the mass of food that was shipped from Montreal according to that contract, that they took one single sample of that food and had it then analysed in order to show that it was Hatch's protose, or if not, that it was food equally as good.

Now, I take this ground, that the minister's plain duty was to take no other food, on that short notice, but Hatch's protose. That is the only food that Col. Neilson recommended him to give to the troops, that is the only food about which he had knowledge, analytical or practical. The food that was sent, if it was not Hatch's protose, was a food which the minister had no right, so far as the recommendation of any officer or any test warranted, to send to the soldiers in the field as an emergency ration. Now, is there the shadow of a doubt that the minister did not take the precautions which I have mentioned? Will the right hon. gentleman deny that he did not take the precautions? Will the right hon. gentleman, having studied the case, declare that the Minister of Militia and Defence did take these necessary precautions? He cannot. Neither in the papers nor in the minister's speech, and especially in anything which has been brought down of a reliable character, has it been shown that the minister took any precaution to see that it was Hatch's food that was sent and no other. Now, I press that point, and I do it at the expense of repeating myself. The only food that had been tested was Hatch's protose, the only food that was recommended by Col. Neilson was Hatch's protose, that was the only food that had been thoroughly tested. The food that was sent out by the minister, there is not a shadow of evidence to show had ever been tested, that there was any chemical analysis of it. It is not shown, and I here to-day deny, from all the proof that has been laid before the House, that the minister took the ordinary precaution that a man would have taken in buying wheat flour, or potatoes, or butter for himself or the troops, or in a commercial transaction, namely, to make certain that the food which was actually delivered was the food according to sample and equally good. That can only be done by taking portions of the goods actually transferred and having them submitted to a sufficient test. What is a sufficient test? That the two foods look alike? That is not a test at all; everybody will admit that. What other possible test was there, then? Two only, a chemical analysis to show the ingredients of the food; and the other and only sufficient one, the test of actual experience upon the soldiers who lived upon that food, and who were watched during the process when the test was made. There was no such test as that made of vitaline. Then, the charge against the Minister of Militia is a grave and serious charge. If that condition of things be exposed, as I believe it will be in the evidence, then no amount of whitewashing or attempt at whitewashing will keep the people of this country from believing that the Minister of Militia is guilty of gross and culpable negligence.

Mr. McMULLEN. Get the evidence first.

Mr. FOSTER. The evidence first! When a charge is made the person who puts forth his charge states what he proposes to prove. He states after that the evidence upon which he proposes to prove it, but is the criminal, so far as the charge is concerned, let loose until all the evidence is given, or is he kept where he can be tried just as the evidence goes on which is in fact his trial. You cannot separate culpable negligence on the part of the minister from the basis of this charge, and one is just about as grave as the other. Analyse the defence made by the Minister of Militia and its two essentially weak points are these: That he could not state that the food he sent was ever tested by a practical test, or, that it was tested at the time it was being delivered and by chemical analysis even, was shown to have nutritious qualities to a certain percentage, equal or nearly equal to Hatch's protose. As long as that is not done, the negligence is there, the culpable negligence. My right hon. friend has no right to ask that the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) shall eliminate that, which is inseparable from the other. If the other parts of the charge are substantiated that one cannot possibly fall to the ground. There is a sequence between the two under the circumstances as they appear to this House, and the minister has had plenty of time to put all these papers before this House which would place his conduct in its best light. From all that mass of evidence there is nothing to show this House or the country, that the Minister of Militia took this absolutely reasonable precaution which it was his duty to take. Now, Sir, I am not going to spend more time in discussing this question. I protest against this attempt to burk inquiry. It is of a piece with the conduct of this government from the time they have undertaken the administration of public affairs. It is of a piece with their arbitrary doings with reference to executive acts, usurping the power of parliament and placing this parliament in the secondary and inferior position of merely registering their will. It is on a par with their administration of the Yukon, out of which for the last three years there has been coming to this country and to every civilized country complaints of wrong-doing, and charges of corrupt dealings, and all that story of maladministration, without calling from the government a searching and thorough investigation. Not only did the government not investigate on their own account as they should have done, but when charges were made on the responsibility of a member of this House, a former minister, the government after having through one of its ministers declared that the moment a charge was made a commission will be granted, immediately revoked that, and said they would not give a commission. Then they started a sort of departmental inquiry by a paid officer of their own. This is exactly on a par with the other conduct of the government. What answer will the right hon. gentleman make to the people of this country. Does he wish to have a clean and pure administration in the departments of his government. There never was a graver charge brought against one of them than this. The moment the matter was intimated the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues said: Make your charge and within five minutes you shall have your committee; make your charge of fraud and the committee shall be granted without delay. The charges are made, and now the right hon. gentleman comes down and undertakes by virtue of his majority in this House—if his majority see fit to follow him as they have followed him before—the right hon. gentleman undertakes by virtue of the majority at his back to cut out from these charges one of the two salient points of the whole accusation. The right hon. gentleman will have to answer this House for that conduct and he will have to answer this country too, and he will find it far easier to answer his majority in this House, than to answer the electorate of Canada.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will not experience the slightest difficulty whatever either in convincing the majority of this House or the majority of the electors of this country, that he has done his simple and plain duty in refusing to condemn a colleague unheard. If there is one principle of law, equity or common sense, which commends itself to the general temper of the people more than another it is, that first of all charges shall be investigated, the accused party shall be heard in defence, and then and not till then shall the verdict be pronounced. What do these gentlemen opposite propose to ask? They propose to ask that we should declare:

That under all the circumstances above set forth, the Minister of Militia and Defence, the Hon. Frederick William Borden was guilty of gross and culpable negligence.

They ask us to condemn our colleague and our friend before one single solitary fact against him is established by these hon. gentlemen. I call attention to the remarkable contrast between the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and the hon. member (Mr. Foster) who has just addressed the House. The hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier comes to us and says: I am credibly informed and believe that I can establish certain facts if you will give me a committee before whom I can appear and produce these facts, but the other hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) takes it upon himself without hearing one witness, without having the opportunity of testing the truth of one single statement, to call on us to condemn our colleague for being guilty of gross and culpable negligence. Why does the hon. gentleman suppose that my right hon. friend asked for the motion. He asked for the motion in order that he might see that no such injustice as that might be perpetrated on his colleague. We are prepared to give the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) the fullest opportunity that any man can desire to prove each and every one of the allegations he has made, but we will not consent—I would be ashamed of my right hon. friend if he consented for one moment to declare beforehand that our colleague is guilty without his being heard. The speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) appears to have been prepared under a very different impression. It is a speech which might have been in point, I grant you, if the Prime Minister had refused to grant any investigation at all, but it is a speech which is utterly uncalled for under the circumstances, and I may remark that in view of existing conditions, it is as indecent and it was ungenerous when the party accused is prevented by circumstances which every man in this House must deplore from being present in his seat to answer in detail the accusation which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has not scrupled to hurl against him, when he knew that the Minister of Militia could not by any possibility be here to reply. The hon. gentleman says that the excuse we made yesterday was that the minister was not ready. That was not the excuse, or the reason, my hon. friend gave. The reason was, that we were informed, on looking at the Orders of the Day, that the motion was to be made to-day; and, under that circumstance, the hon. Minister of Militia very naturally had not prepared himself for a detailed statement. Now, Sir, I never heard before that in granting a committee of investigation, the House was asked to declare, as it is asked in this clause 19 to declare, that the party accused was guilty. What object, what purpose, what use, is there, under such circumstances, of granting a committee of investigation at all? The hon. gentleman opposite, without hearing one word of testimony, without examining a single witness, has condemned the Minister of Militia beforehand. It is quite evident that no evidence is required to convince that hon. gentleman. Now, Sir, on behalf of the House, on behalf of the government, on behalf of my hon. friend, I wholly deny that the First Minister has repudiated any promise whatever. The First Minister promised to grant an investigation. He is prepared, and the government are prepared, to grant an investigation, and to grant it at once. Every single point of importance has been fully and elaborately stated in the eighteen paragraphs preceding the nineteenth paragraph; and all those the hon. member for Jacques Cartier shall have the fullest opportunity of proving, if he can, before a committee of this House. What more has he or have the opposition a right to ask? Do they pretend to tell the people of this country that they have likewise the right to call upon us, in advance of hearing the testimony, to declare that the Minister of Militia was guilty of gross and culpable negligence? I do not think that, outside of the hon. gentleman and, perhaps, a very small number of his followers, there will be any men found to say either that the course of this investigation is going to be prejudiced in the slightest degree by striking out paragraph 19, or that any principle of justice calls upon us to condemn a man before he is heard in his own defence. And here let me remark, that when my hon. friend spoke of granting a committee in case of fraud being alleged, he most assuredly referred to fraud being alleged against the minister. That was evident from the context of my hon. friend's remarks. Now, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has taken exceedingly good care not to comply with the terms laid down by my hon. friend. He has not charged fraud against the Minister of Militia. He has, no doubt, charged that some parties, whose names he gives, may have imposed upon the minister, may have substituted an inferior food at a much higher cost for what the department supposed it was getting; and I can tell the hon. gentleman that if he can prove that, he need not be afraid that the government will, in the slightest degree, screen the guilty party. Sir, I take as much interest in the welfare of the forces in South Africa as any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House; and I may remind the House that my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, like myself, has the strongest possible ground for desiring, at any rate, that everything should be done to promote the health and comfort of the troops.

Now, Sir, I am sorry that so fair and reasonable a proposition as my right hon. friend has made should not have been at once accepted by the hon. gentlemen opposite. They ask for an investigation. They shall have an investigation; and if they can prove their statements, they need have no fear but that due punishment will be meted out to those who have in any shape or way attempted to impose upon the government or attempted to supply our forces in the field with improper food. But, I do protest, in the name of common sense and common fair-play, against the attempts that are being made to prejudice this cause; and such a speech as the hon. gentleman has made is obviously for the purpose of going to the country, and obviously for the purpose of prejudicing the Minister of Militia before he has an opportunity of delivering his defence, and under circumstances which might well have called for a little moderation and a little forbearance on the part of any man with a heart in his bosom.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). It must be evident, Mr. Speaker, to the members of this House, that, so far as I am concerned, I am not prepared to accept the amendment proposed by the right hon. leader of this House. Were I looking for purely personal gratification in this matter, I do not think I could have had more satisfaction than that afforded me by the step taken by the right hon. First Minister, because the amendment which he proposes, having for its object to carefully exclude from this investigation the only party whom we have to blame in this matter, amounts to an absolute backdown on the part of the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MONK. Of course it does. We are left with the right to make an investigation against the Vitaline Company, which has no office and no legal existence whatever. We are left with the right to make an investigation against the army contractor; but, when I rose in this House and told the Minister of Militia that he was to blame for this state of things, what did he say? 'Have the courage to get up on your feet and make a charge of any nature whatever against me, and it will be investigated.' I took the trouble, at the suggestion of the hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches, to lay a formal charge against the Minister of Militia, and we are told that we shall have a full opportunity to investigate and find out things which all of us on both sides of the House know already. But, when I ask an opportunity of tracing the real guilty party in the matter, I am not allowed to go any further. There is scarcely any more raison d'être for proceeding. The whole object which I had in view was to find out who the really guilty parties in this matter were, whereas, if we accept this amendment, we shall be left with the mere privilege of investigating the conduct of parties with whom this House has nothing to do whatever. I was surprised to hear the reasons given by the right hon. Prime Minister, and by such an old parliamentarian as the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. What have we from the right hon. Prime Minister? He tells us that he wishes completely to exclude from the subject-matter of our investigation the Minister of Militia, because the House will appreciate his conduct. But, how can the House appreciate his conduct, if the investigation committee has no right to investigate facts tending to show him guilty of the charge I make against him? What will the House have to go upon? And what does the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), tell us? So far as I can see, he has completely misunderstood the nature of the motion I made. In that motion, the House is not asked to declare that the Minister of Militia is guilty. On the contrary, the motion merely recites my charge, and the House is asked to order an investigation on that charge. Surely, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce cannot be serious, when he says that the purport of this motion is to declare that the Minister of Militia is guilty of the charge.

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is your intent.

Mr. MONK. If these are the reasons on which we are asked to exclude from our investigation the real party against whom I charged the act of gross neglect, they are very poor reasons indeed. They remind me of a circus proprietor of whom I once heard. Arriving in a town, and desirous of drawing as many people as possible to his show, he announced that he had an elephant that could play an air upon the piano. This had the effect of bringing an enormous crowd to the tent—for there are people other than children, who like to see a circus and hear an elephant play upon the piano. The elephant was brought into the arena, and put one foot upon the stool and the other upon the keys; but the moment the piano emitted a sound, the elephant fled from the tent with a snort of fear and horror. The people were, naturally, very much disappointed. But the circus manager was equal to the occasion. He said: Ladies and gentlemen. I am perfectly persuaded that when you hear the reason why this elephant has not performed on the piano, you will sympathize with him and with me, and will excuse him; the fact is, he recognized in the ivory keys of the piano the tusks of his mother-in-law who was killed in Africa some years ago. The people did not appreciate the reasons—and I question whether the people of Canada will appreciate the reasons put forward by the government to-day.

Now let me point out that this contract of January 4, 1900, was entered into upon the recommendation of Lieutenant-Colonel Surgeon Neilson. And what does he say :

I recommend that the troops of the second contingent be provided with five days' rations of protein vegetable food, as tendered for by Mr. F. E. Devlin. This substance has been the sample tested on five members of 'A' Battery during one month of last year in Kingston.

Therefore, the sample which he had in his hand, and which Mr. Devlin had in his hand, was a sample of that food which had been provided for the test in Kingston—there could be no doubt about that. And Mr. Devlin in his tender, refers to the same sample. And the order given on that same January 4, in the Department of Militia, also refers to the same sample. There can be no doubt whatever, therefore, in the mind of any man, that the food which it was intended to provide was the food tested in Kingston. And that food was Hatch's protose. Once you have that fact in your mind, there remains the question, where the food was procured, that was sent to South Africa—was it this kind of food or another? I say that the investigation loses a great deal of the character which we desire it to bear, if our research is going to be confined to that point. For, unless there is so much perjury at this investigating committee, that we shall be able to light our pipes in the atmosphere of the room, without matches, we shall find out from the very first witnesses, that the food sent to South Africa was a totally different food. But that is not the real point; that is not the real difficulty. The real difficulty, and that which we have the right to inquire into is: Who is to blame for this substitution? I say that the object these gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches have in view, knowing and feeling convinced, as we all feel convinced, is to exempt the Minister of Militia from this investigation; so that when the investigation shall have taken place, we shall be able to say to the country, each and all of us, that there was a gross fraud perpetrated upon the department, and that somebody was guilty of what amounts to a heinous crime—but the government had nothing to do with it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I feel quite satisfied that if a stranger had happened to enter this House of Commons this afternoon, and had listened to the two speeches we have heard from the opposition benches, he would have come to the conclusion that the government had refused to grant the investigation which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has asked into the charges he has preferred in his resolution. I never was so taken by surprise in my life, as when I heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), forgetting his usual tact, delivering a speech which he had prepared under the impression that the government was going to reject the motion, and persisting in making that speech, after the government had accepted the motion. After the fact dawned upon me, I ventured to laugh at the ridiculous position in which the hon. gentleman places himself; and he administered a lecture to me for this manifestation of amusement. Why, there never was a more ridiculous exhibition. Here was the hon. gentleman lashing himself into a fury, denouncing the government, condemning everybody in advance, assuming the truth of every statement of fact which was to be referred to the committee to be investigated; and pronouncing judgment and calling upon every faithful follower to join with him in that judgment. And this, after the government had formally declared that they wanted this matter formally inquired into, that they would not even take advantage of the serious illness which detains the Minister of Militia from this House, to postpone the reference to the committee for a single day, that they were willing to grant the committee this very day—and grant it, mark you, Mr. Speaker, not in the manner in which committees have been granted in previous parliaments, after the charge had been emasculated by the government of the day, after the sting had been taken out of them, but grant a committee upon the precise charges, in the very words in which they are preferred by the hon. gentleman himself. The hon. gentleman made his own indictment, he framed every paragraph. We did not seek to alter or change one letter, to undot one 'i' or uncross one 't.' We agreed to refer every charge as he made it to the committee to investigate, for the purpose of ascertaining whether any and which of these charges were true; and if any were true, who was to blame, and what measure of condemnation was to be meted out to him. And the hon. gentleman, instead of accepting the frank, honourable, manly course, which the government propose to take, asks his followers to assume guilt, to pronounce judgment before he knows whether any one of these facts can be proven.

Now, Sir, there is only one thing required to make this a perfect farce. Everybody who has been through matters of this kind before knows why the hon. gentleman creates this dust to-day, knows why he was backed up so vigorously by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, knows why this wild appeal was made to the country and to his followers to condemn the Minister of Militia and Defence in advance—it was done because he fears he cannot prove his charges. Does any human being suppose that if these gentlemen believed they could prove the charges they would ask to have judgment pronounced in advance? Why, Sir, we ought to have the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) and the hon. member from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) put on as two members of that committee, perfectly fair, disinterested and open-minded men, who would approach the consideration of the question as judges in an impartial manner. Didn't you hear them judicially pronounce judgment to-day in advance, before they had examined one of these packages of food to see whether it is the same or not, before they had the slightest knowledge whether there has been a fraud committed or not? These are men who would form an ideal committee.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Have you pronounced judgment in the other sense?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not pronounced any judgment as yet. I do not suppose, as a colleague of the hon. gentleman who is charged, that I would have the indecency to go on the committee, the hon. gentlemen opposite will do me the justice to say that. But I was remarking what a splendid spectacle it would be to have this committee composed of such men as the hon. member for York. I will not do him the injustice of assuming that after the indecent spectacle that he presented this afternoon, he would accept that position, I think he is too fair a man for that. I do not think he would descend to go on the committee now, his judgment has been pronounced beforehand, he does not want to hear any evidence. But what did he do? He turns round to those with whom he has influence and he says: Now, mark you, some of you must go on the committee. I want to tell you with all the authority which I possess as a leader that these charges are true, that the Minister of Militia and Defence is guilty, and if you go on the committee you must find it so. That is the advice the hon. gentleman gave, that is the spectacle he presented to-day, and it was an indecent spectacle, as the hon. gentleman to my left pronounced it a little while ago. The only object, says the member for Jacques Cartier, that I have, is to find out the guilty parties. Is that so? Can it be so? If that is the only object, why did the hon. gentleman state the deduction he has drawn in his 19th paragraph, that he has already found out the guilty parties? He charges guilt specifically. Why did he do that? If his only object was to find out the guilty parties by inquiring into the facts which he alleges in the eighteen preceding articles, why didn't he stop, after the allegation of the facts, and refer those facts to a committee? He must find out the guilty party and then pronounce judgment, but instead of doing that, the hon. gentleman hastens to tell the country, I pronounce judgment now, I have found the guilty party. I am willing to condemn him from my place in the House.

Now, I ask the hon. gentleman, what did he mean by saying that the omission of the 19th article would exclude the conduct of the Minister of Militia and Defence from investigation. What ground could he have for such a statement? He has charged in several of these articles, previous to the 19th, that the Minister of Militia and Defence was guilty of conduct which, if true, would render him liable to censure. Those facts are to be examined into, and if they are found true, I admit the conclusion may be drawn. But in the meantime is he going to draw it? Can he reconcile the position he has taken in his resolution with the state of mind he is in when he says that he only desires to investigate? Why, Sir, the thing will not bear examination for a moment.

The hon. gentleman said the other day, that he had spent a great deal of time examining the precedents in this case? Has he found a precedent for the form of his resolution here? Sir, the records of this House teem with charges which for years back have been brought from time to time by members on their responsibility against their opponents. Can the hon. gentleman cite one precedent where condemnation was attempted to be pronounced by the person making the charge before the reference? Go back to the famous one in 1891, when this country rang with charges of fraud made against the government of the day and the then Minister of Public Works in the McGreevy and Connolly scandals. Did the hon. gentleman turn up that precedent? No doubt, he did and went over that carefully. What did he find? He found that when the facts recited in paragraphs, as up to the end of the 18th paragraph he has recited them in his charge, that then, without drawing a conclusion, the person making the charges prayed that they might be referred for examination to a committee that the facts might be sifted and judgment pronounced after the facts were found. I have here the record of the precedent of 1891, here are the charges made by a member of this House, covering several columns of the Hansard of the day.

Mr. BERGERON. Not against the minister.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Against no one, but reciting certain facts which he alleges to be true, and when they are proved to be true he will ask certain deductions to be made, but not asking the House foolishly and wickedly to pronounce judgment before any one is proved guilty. Now then, we had other charges. We had the charges preferred in 1892 by the late Speaker of this House against a member of the then administration. Those charges were made by the late Sir James Edgar, and after he had made them he asked that they be referred for examination to a committee—without drawing the conclusions which he might have drawn from the alleged statement he made in the preceding paragraphs. He did not draw any conclusion condemning any particular individual. What did he say:

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

That the said sums of money hereinbefore mentioned in paragraphs 6 and 9, as paid and contributed for election purposes, were so used, together with other sums contributed by public contractors with the Dominion government, and were controlled and distributed by the direct authority and with the knowledge of the said Sir A. P. Caron, in lavish and illegal amounts.

That the above statements be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to inquire fully into the said allegations, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation, and that the committee do report in full the evidence taken before them, and all their proceedings on the reference, and the result of their inquiries.

Now, the hon. gentleman did not wind up in his resolution by saying that from the foregoing statement of facts he concludes that anybody is guilty. What are the statements here? The hon. member for Jacques Cartier reiterates in eighteen paragraphs certain facts which he says he is able to prove. Whether he is, I do not know, we will see after we get the evidence. Then he goes on to say that under the circumstances above cited the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence. There was never anything more plain or specific.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me one word?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, I will be more courteous than you were to me.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman was in my debt before. I take it from the argument of the hon. gentleman, that when reading section 19, he leaves out the preamble of these charges. I will read section 19, as I think it ought to be read:

That I am credibly informed and believe that I can establish by satisfactory evidence that, under all the circumstances above set forth, the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence—

And so forth. He winds up with a motion in the ipsissima verba of the resolution read by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), has too acute a mind not to see that a conclusion drawn from facts is an essentially different thing from the facts themselves. The hon. gentleman stated in the preamble that he was credibly informed and believed that he could prove certain facts.

Mr. FOSTER. And section 19 is one of them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not a question of fact at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He went on in eighteen paragraphs to set forth the facts which he said he was credibly informed and believed he could prove, and when he had finished in the eighteenth paragraph he set out to draw his own conclusion from these facts. How did he do it? He says:

That under all the circumstances above set forth, the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence.

There is no fact about that. It is the conclusion which the hon. gentleman himself draws, and he asks this House to assent to it. He asks the colleagues of the hon. gentleman who believe that Dr. Borden is an upright and honourable man—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He asks his colleagues and his friends who sit behind, at this peculiarly unfortunate time, when the hon. Dr. Borden is standing beside the sick bed of a loved one, when he dare not leave his own house—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not right.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are asked to say that that man was guilty of corrupt and dishonourable conduct.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not right.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. More than that, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has taken, for the first time in parliament, the course of asking this House to pronounce in this way. It is entirely without precedent. He cannot find a precedent anywhere to justify him in asking this House to commit itself to a conclusion before there has been the slightest investigation of the charge. I have reason, from the statements I have heard made on this side of the House, to believe that many of the hon. gentleman's statements made in these charges will be found to be untrue.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies), allow me? He is doing an injustice that I am sure he would not intentionally do to my hon. friend the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I am a witness to this, that this afternoon, before the right hon. Prime Minister rose to his feet at all, I asked the hon. member for Jacques Cartier if this matter was coming up, and he told me 'no,' because of illness in the family of the hon. Minister of Militia. Had not the Prime Minister introduced the matter, it would have passed over altogether, so that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not say that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier precipitated this debate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The reason that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made the statement he did, was because of a remark which I regretted deeply to hear from the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), wherein he said, that although the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had made these statements on his responsibility, the hon. Minister of Militia had had plenty of time to put in his answer.

Mr. FOSTER. I did say that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know that Dr. Borden has had no time to put in his answer. On the Orders of the Day there appeared public notice, that, not yesterday, but on Friday, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would move his motion. The hon. Minister of Militia did not make his statement then because he was officially notified that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would not introduce his motion until to-day, and to-day he was notified by the Prime Minister, that Dr. Borden was standing at the bedside of a dear friend, who is dangerously ill.

Mr. MILLS. Why did you not allow the matter to stand?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because we know that there are men small enough on the other side of the House, who, if it were to stand for one hour, would say that we were seeking to prevent this matter going before the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because we are bound to have this matter sifted to the bottom, because we will screen nobody, if anybody has been guilty of fraud, because we are determined and have been determined from the first that if responsible charges are made by responsible men, to have them referred at the first moment to a committee for investigation. I ask the House to mark the distinction there is between the conduct of this government and the preceding government in similar matters. What took place when charges were made? Were they accepted? No charges were accepted as we have accepted these. Have we tried to modify, or alter, or emasculate these charges? No Sir. But they altered ours, they modified ours, they emasculated ours, and when they had totally changed the charges, they referred them, not to a committee of the House, but referred them to a chosen Royal Commission, appointed by themselves. We have done nothing of the kind. We say: Make your charges, and when they are made, they will be referred promptly to a committee; we will give you every latitude, without conditions, but we decline to pronounce judgment upon one of our colleagues and to say that he is guilty, when we believe him to be thoroughly innocent.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a personal explanation. After what has fallen from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), I feel bound to say that before the House met this afternoon, a person came to me, I presume, from the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), and asked me if I would have any objection to this matter going over on account of illness in his family, to which I answered, that, unquestionably, I would offer no objection, and I went around and notified my friends of the fact.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. Under these circumstances, the language of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is altogether unjustifiable.

Mr. M. J. F. QUINN (Ste. Ann's, Montreal). Mr. Speaker, it is really difficult to understand how three such eminent gentlemen as the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), and that great legal luminary, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), could attempt to argue, before a number of lawyers in this House, and before the House of Commons of Canada, that section 19 is a conclusion instead of a statement of fact. I appeal even to the least learned man in the law in this House, to listen while I read the beginning of the statement of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and read section 19, as part of that statement:

That Frederick D. Monk, the member representing the electoral district of Jacques Cartier in this House, having stated from his place in this House that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence—

What? Nineteen different statements of fact. There is no difference between the first and the second as regards the fact. Each one of the nineteen statements which he makes, is a statement of fact, and the nineteenth is as much a statement of fact as the first one. Each stands separate and alone, and the nineteenth section must be read as if it were immediately preceded by the words:

That he can establish by satisfactory evidence—

Nineteen:

—that under all the circumstances above set forth the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence.

That is what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier stated. He stated that he could establish, by satisfactory evidence that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence was guilty of gross and culpable negligence. He stated that he would prove this, because the hon. minister had been guilty of allowing certain food to be substituted for food which had already been tried. He was guilty of this negligence because he had been properly warned that the food which was going to be supplied was not the food that had been tested in Kingston. Let me point out that section 19 is not the conclusion of the motion. Section 19 is a statement of facts and the conclusion of the motion is, that all the statements including section 19 be referred to a Select Committee to be inquired fully into. The conclusion of that motion calls every one of the nineteen charges, questions of fact, and then says:

To inquire fully into the said allegations—

That is into the said nineteen allegations.

—with power to send for persons, papers, records and such other articles as may be necessary for such investigation, and to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation, and that the committee do report in full the evidence taken before them, and all their proceedings on the reference, and the result of their inquiry.

Now, if this were not the interpretation of the Act given by the right hon. gentleman, why was it that he forced the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to be so formal as to make the statements in the motion before the House. When the charge was first made the right hon. gentleman said to my hon. friend (Mr. Monk): If you will assume the responsibility of making a charge against some member of this House, you shall have the committee at once. Believing that the hon. member (Mr. Monk) would not assume the responsibility of making the charge, the Prime Minister was courageous, but when he found that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) was sufficiently brave, and was backed up by facts sufficiently strong to make the charge, then the Prime Minister retreated from that position as much as he possibly could, and he said: We will only give you a committee if you charge fraud against a minister or a member of the House. Has this House only the right to inquire when fraud is charged directly against a member or against a minister? Is it possible that there cannot be negligence on the part of a minister which may be equal to fraud? In the most formal manner the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has said that the Minister of Militia is guilty of gross and culpable negligence, and could there be a more serious charge against a minister, unless it be indeed that fraud was included in that gross negligence. But, Sir, the committee may find from circumstances, that not only was it a case of gross and culpable negligence, but unfortunately that there was also fraud in the transaction. The government ask the House to be satisfied with investigating eighteen of the charges, and, what an illogical position it is for them to take. The other day they told us that it was absolutely necessary to charge some offence against a member before a committee would be appointed, but to-day the government tells us that it is perfectly within our powers to investigate eighteen charges which do not compromise a member or a minister at all, but which relate to the acts of ordinary citizens of this country. I say that the position of the government in this matter is most illogical, and I further say that a committee appointed under the circumstances suggested by the Prime Minister, must result in nothing that can be of benefit at all to this House and to the country, whatever may be the outcome of the investigation of these eighteen charges. After all, Sir, the great object of this investigation is not so much to find out whether an imperfect food had been sold to the Department of Militia, or whether some person was guilty of a very clever fraud on the department, but it is to find out if the department of the government is conducted in such an efficient manner as to safeguard the lives of our soldiers in South Africa.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You think that is a proper subject to refer to a committee of this House.

Mr. QUINN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then you do not know much about parliamentary usage.

Mr. QUINN. That remark of the minister (Mr. Blair) is on a par with the remark of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). It is in effect: You do not know anything about it, but we know all about it. Well, on this side of the House we may not know much about it, but I venture to say that we take the same view of it as the ordinary elector of Canada will take, and it will not do for the Minister of Railways to tell the ordinary elector that he does not know anything about parliamentary procedure, when that elector charges him with having been a party to supplying trash instead of nutritious food to the soldiers in South Africa. The government asks us to investigate eighteen charges against certain individuals outside this House, but when it comes to the one charge which we have the right to investigate, and from the investigation of which good results may flow to the country, the government step in and say that we shall not investigate that. The government do not say: The Minister of Militia and Defence was not guilty of gross and culpable negligence, but they say: You must not investigate the charge, because instead of making it a statement of fact, you have concluded from the evidence in your possession that he is guilty. There certainly is no logic in that position. The Prime Minister might have said to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier: Well, Mr. Monk, I think that your motion as regards section 19 ought to be amended for the honour of my government, for the honour of the Minister of Militia, for the good name which the government of this country wants to hold, and Mr. Monk in my judgment you clause 19 is a conclusion rather than a statement of fact, and if you want to have that investigated, amend it by withdrawing these words and make it a clear cut statement of fact. If that had been said by the Prime Minister my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier would, no doubt, have dropped from that section 19 any words that the Prime Minister would have suggested in order to make it, even to their minds, a perfect statement of fact, but had they done so, would their conduct be such as to lead the people of this country to believe that they wanted an investigation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. QUINN. Sir, the conduct of the government is such as to convince the people of Canada that it is not an investigation they wish, but that what they want is to cloak everybody in authority, and to find guilty some poor devil outside who has, perhaps, been made a victim of their own fraud and misconduct. There is one more phase of the discussion to which I wish to refer. That is the very regrettable circumstance of the illness in the family of the Minister of Militia. I think it a most unfair, and if I were not in the House of Commons, I would say a most unmanly thing to impute to any member of this House a desire to press a charge against a minister when he is afflicted in any way. The matter has been fully explained by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier; but I do not think it can be too much emphasized by any member on this side of the House who speaks on this question. I would hate to think there is a man on the Conservative benches in the House of Commons who would stoop so low as to attack or take an unfair advantage of any member of the government during a time of illness or trial; but I do not think such a thing has been done in this case; and even if the conditions exist, which I believe do exist at the moment, and are likely to continue for some time, I do not think an investigation of this kind should be stopped on that account. We must all deplore anything of the kind occurring in the family of any member of the government or any member of this House; but we must all be prepared for these things. They are visitations which may come to any one of us; and though they are unfortunate, I do not think the public affairs of this country should stop because a visitation of that kind happens to come to a member of the government or a member of this House. The explanation which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has given must, I think, be satisfactory to anybody, and must speak to the heart of anybody who looks at the matter fairly, and who knows the nature of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, which is one of perfect honour, and of a man who would be incapable of even the thought of attacking another in an unfair or unmanly manner.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker—

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order; I think this is as good a time as any other to raise it. I do not purpose speaking on this question in the absence of the Minister of Militia; but I want to have your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether we are to have laid on the Table of the House the analysis of the vitaline, which has been made by the Department of Inland Revenue, and the contents of which the Minister of Militia and the Prime Minister alluded to yesterday. I think it is very inconvenient to discuss this question without having that analysis on the Table of the House, and I take it that in your ruling the other day you held that when a minister dealt with the contents of a public document, he was bound to lay that public document on the Table of the House with all despatch. There can be no difficulty about his laying this document on the Table, because it can be had in the department at any moment.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know what my hon. friend refers to when he says I spoke of an analysis. The Minister of Militia and Defence spoke of an analysis; but I submit that there is no point of order in that fact.

Mr. McNEILL. I know that my right hon. friend has no desire in any way to misrepresent the fact or myself; but, in justification of what I said, I would remind my right hon. friend that in dealing with a suggestion which I made, he referred to what the Minister of Militia said was the result of that analysis. The point of order I raise is that this is a most important discussion in reference to a most important matter, and it is vital to this discussion to know what is the result of that analysis which we now know has been made. Under the circumstances we ought to have the document laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. With all due respect to my hon. friend, I cannot see a point of order in what he has just now said. Perhaps I am obtuse. The position, as I apprehend it, is this. The minister stated that there were certain processes in progress, and that there were certain papers not in his possession which he pledged himself to present to the House as soon as he could do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Will you allow me—

Mr. SPEAKER. No, I cannot allow you till I close. Under these circumstances, I really see no point of order in what my hon. friend has said, because we have the word of the minister that at the earliest moment at which those papers can be brought to the House, they will be brought.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, will the Speaker allow me to raise a point of order? I wish to say that I am afraid the Speaker did not catch the exact point of order raised by my hon. friend; so I will raise it again, as my hon. friend has taken his seat. The point of order is this, that an analysis was made of certain food on the 3rd of February by the Department of Inland Revenue, and that analysis was referred to by the Minister of Militia, who contended that it favoured his argument. He was asked to bring down the results of that analysis; but he stated that though the results of the analysis were favourable to his contention, he did not propose to lay the actual figures before the House. Now, the point is: if in the course of a discussion a minister gives the results of an actually performed analysis, and states that these favour his contention, whether he is not obliged to place those figures before every member of the House so that each can have the same source of information as himself?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, we are engaged in the discussion of a motion for a committee of inquiry, and we are all agreed that the inquiry is to be granted. The immediate question before the House is whether a certain paragraph in the charges of the hon. gentleman who has made the motion is to be included in the reference to be sent to the committee; that is all. The point cannot be elucidated by anything that has taken place previous to this debate.

Mr. McNEILL. It is vital to this debate.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, the vital question in this debate is whether paragraph 19 is to be submitted to the committee or not.

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has not, to my mind, raised any fresh point of order which has not already been decided in answer to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill).

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, then I rise to a point of order. On this very matter, the Prime Minister himself said yesterday:

I beg to say that the Minister of Militia stated a moment ago that the analysis of the food sent to South Africa proved to be identical with the analysis of the food which had been experimented on before at Kingston.

I ask whether, after the Prime Minister has made that reference, we should not have the analysis here.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have simply to say to my hon. friend that we are discussing at the present moment whether clause 19 shall form a portion of the resolution of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and the point of order raised by my hon. friend has no bearing on that question at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to say a word with respect to certain remarks—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has not the floor.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) desires to make an explanation, and I am willing he should make it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that reference was made by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, when I was not in the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; the reference I made was to the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), and in reply to a statement which I thought was highly improper.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier had been reflected upon in some way on account of his supposed desire to proceed with the matter when he knew that there was illness in the family of the Minister of Militia.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire merely to state to the House, with regard to that, that I understood about two o'clock to-day, from the Minister of Militia, that there was serious illness in his family; and I took it upon myself, believing it to be his desire that I should do so, to mention the matter to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. The moment I mentioned the fact the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) said in the most generous manner, and without the slightest hesitation, that this discussion should stand over until Monday; that it would suit his convenience very well, because he would be glad to get away this afternoon, to Montreal. I mention this in justice to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. Knowing the Minister of Militia as I do, I feel that under the circumstances he would be the last person to desire that reflection should be cast on my hon. friend in any manner. When my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) rose in the House and said that the motion would be proceeded with, I mentioned to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier that I trusted that he was not misled, that I understood it was the desire of the Minister of Militia to let the matter stand over, and I thought some slight misunderstanding or misapprehension had arisen concerning the matter. He said it made no difference; that he was not misled; that it was all right as far as he was concerned. I do not intend to speak on the motion; I merely make these remarks in justice to my hon. friend; because I know that the Minister of Militia himself, if he were present, would corroborate what I have said, and would desire that no reflection whatever should be made upon my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I am sure that this House was edified by the speech of my hon. friend from St. Ann's, Montreal (Mr. Quinn). It was an exhibition. It was dramatic, erratic and profane—three characteristics which you do not often find in one speech. He said that the least learned in the law could understand the matter. Why, a layman can understand it. I was surprised that the hon. gentleman from Montreal did not devote a little attention to what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said with reference to the precedents. Lawyers are bound by precedents. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) tried to show, and I think the attempt was made even by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to treat the nineteenth clause of the resolution as on the same basis as the other eighteen. Let us examine this, sticking to the resolution itself, for these frantic appeals, these decisions made as quick as lightning that everything is wrong, I submit, do not become a parliament like this. I draw attention to the fact that the precedents in such inquiries as this are against the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and that under these precedents, the resolution should end with section 18. The eighteen sections refer specifically to certain acts of wrong committed. Then, section 19 says:

That, under all the circumstances above set forth, the Minister of Militia and Defence, the Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence——not, you will observe, because he did these things set out in this section 19, but because he did the things set out in the eighteen sections preceding. Now, if this section 19 is a statement of facts, and not an inference, what is the meaning of that language?

Mr. MONK. I may tell my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough), that I am ready to do that.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Yes; finding himself in a hole, the hon. gentleman is ready for anything. But, he very ingeniously and with malice aforethought—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Well, I take it back. I meant it playfully.

Mr. MONK. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I had not reference to any malice in the heart of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk)—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. MONK. My point of order relates to another matter. I would like to know what the objection of the government is.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) surely does not pretend that that is a point of order. He is treating the matter in a playful way. No one could tell the story he told and try to make it applicable to this case without treating the whole matter with levity. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is laughing now, and so are his friends on that side of the House. They laugh to keep their courage up, knowing that they are not going to succeed. Returning to the legal argument, I say that very judiciously, and very cunningly the hon. gentleman seeks to commit the House to a conclusion before it has heard the evidence. If this resolution were carried, and the evidence proved the minister not guilty, the question would arise: How can you declare he is not guilty when the House has already come to the conclusion expressed in this 19th section. In the case of the ex-Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron), when charges were made against him, nobody ever thought of putting in a clause inferring, from the charges already made, that he had been guilty of gross and culpable negligence. Nobody ever thought of such a course in the case of Sir Hector Langevin. If section 19 is a statement of fact and not a deduction—and I wish to call special attention to this—every one of these eighteen statements, except the first, might begin as the nineteenth does, that under all the circumstances above set forth 2 is true, 3 is true, 4 is true, 5 is true. It would be just as proper to say that in all the preceding sections except the 1st as in section 19. But more than that. There is not a statement of fact in the whole of the indictment, and hence paragraph 19 was very cunningly drawn. One thing the hon. gentleman says in his prologue to this indictment is this: I am credibly informed. Is that a statement of fact? How can that be introduced into paragraph 19 as a statement of fact, I would like to know—that a member has been credibly informed of a thing and then he states it to be a fact. He might have said that under all the circumstances above set forth, supposing them to be true, the minister was guilty, then I could understand it.

Mr. DAVIN. But he says—I believe.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Because he is informed of certain things by others, therefore, he says they are facts, it is true. And that is logic. I understand that a man has the right to take the word of another man if he believes him to be a reputable man, he has a perfect right to say—I believe that. But that is his belief in the statement of another man, it is only a hearsay remark made to him. You will notice that paragraph 19 is made up altogether of evidence that would come in under the eighteen preceding paragraphs; therefore, 19, if it means anything, means that under the eighteen preceding paragraphs—and they are epitomized in 19—that the minister is guilty, that is the way it stands. Now, in reason, is that fair to the minister or to anybody else? Hon. gentlemen may think that it is easy to bandy words, they may think that it is a small matter. But I submit that no member of this House or of any government would for a moment consent to declare a colleague guilty before the case was sent to a committee—because there is nothing less than that in paragraph 19. It says that under all these circumstances he was guilty of gross and culpable negligence. Well, indictments are all right, they are in definite form. But there is a preliminary inquiry even in an indictment. There must be evidence before a grand jury before an indictment is found. The member for Jacques Cartier, without giving any evidence at all, wants an indictment, and he wants us to find that indictment. Nay, more, he wants us to bring in the Minister of Militia and Defence guilty before we hear any evidence. That is a new form of justice. The question before us is not the question of sending bad food to the soldiers, but it is a question of whether the Minister of Militia and Defence has done certain things. Let us not pass judgment upon the belief of the member for Jacques Cartier, as we are asked to do, before we go on with the investigation. We ought to approach the question in a different spirit from that. I am not going so far as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and say that the member for York or any other member would not approach this question without bias; but I am bound to say he has shown a very bad preparation for sitting on that committee when he gives judgment before hearing the evidence. I know he is broad enough, when the evidence is given, to do justice according to the evidence, but there would always be a suspicion that, having given judgment without evidence, he would not be as willing to give a different judgment on the evidence.

I was struck with what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said with respect to precedents. Is there an hon. gentleman on the other side who can find a precedent for this? Was there ever in this House such an indictment as that brought up, closing as paragraph 19 does? I say we may change the laws of this country, we may act in a different way from our predecessors; but I submit that if, in the wisdom of parliament, they have gone in a certain direction all these years, there must be a strong case made up before we change their form of procedure to the extent of finding a man guilty before we try him. Let us keep to the words, of the resolution, let us keep away altogether from talk about the food being bad. That has nothing to do with the matter before us; we have simply to decide whether that clause 19 ought to go in. Even if the soldiers were being poisoned, that would have nothing to do with the question before us. I agree with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in believing that this discussion on the other side has all been got up because they did not expect there would be such a ready reply given by the government. But I submit that only one answer can be made as to the disposition we should make of paragraph 19.

Mr. McNEILL. Having listened very attentively to the statements made by the government and by their supporters, I think the best thing the House could do is to endeavour to arrive at some arrangement which will be satisfactory to both parties. The government allege that they are most anxious to have a thorough investigation of this matter. It is unfortunate that the proposal of the government is one which amounts to this, that we can investigate everything except the conduct of the government or any member of the government. That is how it appears to this side of the House. There are certain words in the last paragraph of the indictment, if I may so call it, of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, which are thought by the government to be irregular. I do not at all agree with the arguments that have been put forward on the government side in support of that contention. It seems to me that what has been alleged is absolutely correct in form and that you must read the clause in this way: I am credibly informed and believe that I can establish so and so by satisfactory evidence. But, as it is not accepted by the government, I propose, under the circumstances, with the approval of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who wishes to do nothing unfair in regard to this matter, who wishes to ask the House to arrive at no conclusion which is not a fair conclusion, but who wishes to ask for the inquiry which he has specified here, and not to call for the condemnation by the House, in advance, of any man, I propose to move as an amendment to the amendment, that clause 19 shall stand with the exception of the words:

Under all the circumstances above set forth.

The clause will then read:

19. That the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence (a) in making, with undue haste, the agreement hereinabove referred to of January 4, 1900, for the supply of emergency rations to the Canadian troops in South Africa with irresponsible parties; (b) in not having the preparation of said rations controlled by competent men, and the supply furnished to the troops carefully and rigidly inspected and tested; (c) in neglecting, after he had received said letter of January 25 last, to take the steps commended by the ordinary rules of prudence to ensure the protection of the troops; and (d) in paying the amount of the said contract, $4,660, in a case where he must have known that any recovery of the same was impossible, and without any investigation.

The striking out of these words, I think, absolutely removes all the difficulties and all the objections which have been urged by my right hon. friend the leader of the government, and by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to this clause. It is now impossible, I think, for the most ingenious intellect to frame a suggestion that this clause is any more than a statement that my hon. friend believes that he can establish this charge. There is no inference in the clause now at all, and if my right hon. friend is prepared to do, as he says he is, to have a full and thorough investigation of this matter, I submit that there will be no objection to it as it will stand. I confess that I was very much surprised at the statement which was made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I did not expect that he would make the charge that he did make against the hon. member for Jacques Cartier in regard to this matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not make a charge; I replied to the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster).

Mr. McNEILL. We all understood, at this side of the House, that there was a charge of that kind made, and I think it was a very ungenerous thing to make such a charge, in view of the fact that this discussion has been brought up by the government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I merely replied to the statement of the hon. member for York, N.B.

Mr. McNEILL. The discussion has been brought forward by the government, and the House has been entirely taken by surprise. We understood that there was to be no discussion to-day, and when the discussion was brought up by the government themselves, in this House, to charge an hon. gentleman with some want of delicacy of feeling because we went on with the discussion under the painful circumstances of the illness of a member of the family of the hon. Minister of Militia is very unfair. I think it is a very inconvenient thing to have the discussion in the absence of the Minister of Militia.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) knows that, under the rules of the House, he cannot be present at the discussion.

Mr. McNEILL. I think he could very well be present during the discussion.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. McNEILL. Well, then, in that case I am mistaken. I have always understood, that, during the discussion, the person charged could be present, but he takes no part in the discussion, or in the division, and

Mr. McNEILL.

I am still inclined to hold to that view. Of course, in view of the fact that the government were desirous of striking out the only clause that preferred a charge against the hon. minister, it is questionable whether the minister could not have been here during the discussion. If they are prepared to do that, he might be present as well as any one else. I want to call attention to another matter in connection with this discussion, which, I think, is very germane to it. The charge brought against the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence is, that he has been guilty of culpable negligence in regard to this matter. We charge that he has not, in any degree, taken the precaution which his duty to the country and to the force which he has under his control called upon him to take in reference to this supply of emergency ration. We have had an analysis of this 'Vitaline' made here in Ottawa, according to the statement of the hon. minister. That analysis has been made by one of the departments of the government. We have had the statement made that it has proved a certain fact of vital importance to the discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) is getting outside of the amendment.

Mr. McNEILL. With the greatest possible submission, I am now discussing clause 19 and the allegations of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk). That clause asserts negligence on the part of the minister, and I say that it is most important that it shall remain a portion of the charge. The government propose to strike out that clause.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have already ruled that it was not within the purview of this debate. I ask the hon. gentleman to respect that ruling.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. McNEILL. I understand you to rule in regard to a point of order I raised some time ago, that it was not a point of order, but surely I am not to be precluded from dealing with this question? Am I to understand you to rule that I am not to deal with a question of fact, that I am to be precluded from dealing with this question?

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion before the House is, that clause 19 be dropped from the original motion. Your amendment simply modifies that. I have already ruled that the discussion is not germane to the motion before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg leave to say what I have to say. Do I understand Mr. Speaker to rule my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) out of order in this debate because he chooses to discuss a fact which he knows, and which has been used in this House, that there was an analysis made of this food by a department of government, and to press upon the attention of the House the fact that the analysis has not been brought down? If so, I propose to appeal to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is my impression. I may be wrong; I am open to an appeal to the House, but I do feel that, under the circumstances, it is not germane to the subject whether we shall retain or drop clause 19. My judgment, of course, is subject to an appeal to the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would not press the point. By consent of the House, so as to abridge time, I would have my hon. friend go on.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that we are on such ground that we should know where we stand. There are certain rights of discussion in this House that we have enjoyed since this was a parliament.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman appeal from the ruling?

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to appeal, but I think that a word or two might save the necessity for appealing. I am sorry to have to appeal in this case, and I do not want to appeal unless it is absolutely necessary. But there are certain rights of discussion this House has enjoyed ever since it was a House, and they must be preserved. I think a ruling of this kind, which would be fatal to the right of discussion, is of such importance, that we should know at once where the House is with reference to it. If my right hon. friend would give his views upon the matter perhaps it might obviate the difficulty.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not like to question the decision of the Chair, but I am quite willing for my part not to press the point, and to allow my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) to proceed with his remarks. I would be sorry any one should think that he had not the right of discussion.

Mr. McNEILL. I would be the last person, Mr. Speaker, to wish to call in question your ruling, but there is no doubt, I think, that in this case it would be more convenient—

Mr. SPEAKER. If the consent of the House is that the hon. gentleman should go on I shall raise no question. I am in the judgment of the House in any case.

Mr. McNEILL. Very well, Mr. Speaker. I was about saying that it was of essential importance in the discussion of this case, that we should have laid on the Table of the House the analysis which has been made of this vitaline. That analysis we were told has been made in a department of the government. We were told by the Minister of Militia yesterday, that it was made so long ago as the 3rd of February, and you yourself,

Sir, have ruled that the minister shall bring down all the papers in connection with this matter. The result of that analysis is one of the first papers that should have been brought down, and that document has not yet been laid on the Table of the House, although it is essential to this discussion that it should be so laid on the Table. On the face of it, that is a circumstance which should call for comment and disapproval on the part of members on both sides of the House. Surely to goodness we can sometimes deal with public questions without being tied down to mere party issues. For my part, I much dislike dealing with what are called scandals. I regard the ferreting out of scandals with regard to public men, as very much the scavenger work of politics. It is a thing that I personally dislike dealing with. But what I say is: That when we have certain facts affecting the public interest brought to our notice, it is the duty of the members of this House, however disagreeable it may be, to probe those matters to the bottom, even though the result should be to bring discredit on a public man, either in his administrative capacity, or, what is infinitely worse, in reference to personal honour. I may say in my own behalf, that I did not hesitate in the House when my own party were in power, and when I fancied the government of the day was endeavouring to avoid an investigation into the conduct of a colleague of my own; I did not hesitate to get up and oppose the government I was supporting under those painful circumstances in this House, and I certainly do not intend to be prevented from doing so now, by the taunts of the Minister of Railways, who accused me of unfairness, or by the Minister of Militia (whom we all regret is unable to be present), who accused me of want of courtesy. I shall endeavour to do my duty in regard to this matter, and I say it is absolutely essential in my judgment that we shall have such a charge as this 19th clause included in the investigation. I have suggested the modification of that clause in such a way as if my right hon. friend thinks it desirable to investigate the conduct of a colleague of his at all, he cannot have objection to it. The modification I have suggested removes the objection that has been made to the clause, and I would appeal to the right hon. gentleman under all the circumstances to accept it as an amendment to his amendment, and to allow this clause to go to the committee along with the others. Otherwise, most assuredly, this side of the House and the country will believe that this 19th clause is being excluded, simply because it is a clause that brings the investigation to bear immediately upon the conduct of a member of the ministry. I say that the circumstances connected with this case are such as to call for a most rigid examination, in reference to the very charges made in this particular clause. We have the fact established here, that the Minister of Militia has, in reference to this matter, over and over again risen in his place in this House and declared in the most absolute manner, and indeed with some degree of heat: that this vitaline, this stuff which he purchased from Dr. Devlin, was identically the same substance which had been tested at Kingston. I say that the Minister of Militia made that statement without any facts being in his possession to justify it. On what evidence did he make that statement? He made the statement on the evidence of three witnesses. One portion of that testimony is so trivial that it is not worth discussion at all. It is the evidence of a man who used some of this vitaline food for some time, and afterwards declared it was the same food he had used before. To bring such a statement as that before the House is very little short of an affront to the intelligence of hon. gentlemen. No human being could tell, by simply tasting the food, that it was the same food he used before, but curiously enough the soldier who used this food says it did not produce quite the same effect as the other food, because he had not a disagreeable taste in his mouth after using it as he had when he used the other.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is now sitting in judgment.

Mr. McNEILL. I am dealing with the matter that is before the House. I am dealing with what is contained in the papers that have been laid on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do you not think you had better leave it to the committee?

Mr. McNEILL. I think I have the right to discuss the statement made by the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) in the House, and I think I have the right to show—without being accused of prejudging the case—that the Minister of Militia did not have facts before him when he made that statement justifying the statement. Then, again, there is the evidence of the director general of medical stores. If you take the letter of that gentleman, you will find that he does not give any proof whatever that the two substances are identical. Then you have the evidence of Dr. Devlin, and as every one knows—however, he may be able to clear himself from the suspicion, when the matter is brought before the committee—Dr. Devlin in the meantime is under the suspicion of having been connected with a fraud, and it is absurd to suggest that his evidence should be taken as of any weight in connection with this matter. I want to know where the evidence exists, upon which the Minister of Militia got up time after time in his place in parliament, and declared that the two foods are identical. There is, so far as I can see, no evidence worthy of consideration for a moment which justified the minister in making any such solemn declaration to the House. From that point of view alone, if from no other, he has been blame-worthy.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 118) respecting the Timagami Railway Company.—(Mr. McHugh.)

Bill (No. 124) to incorporate the Lake Superior and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—(Mr. Dymont.)

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EMERGENCY RATION.

Mr. McNEILL. When you left the Chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the propriety of the clause contained in the charge of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) which alleges that the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) has been guilty of negligence in regard to this transaction. At that time I had just stated that the minister, again and again during the discussion, had asserted in the most positive manner—and if he were present I think I would perhaps use a little stronger language—that the food that he had sent to South Africa was identical with the food which had been tested at Kingston and had proved so eminently satisfactory. I pointed out that his allegation rested upon a very shaky foundation. I pointed out that there were three persons whose evidence he was able to call in support of the statements he had made. One of these persons was a soldier who had used the food, and who, from simply having used it a short time, ventured the assertion that it was exactly the same as the other food;—which seems to me very much as though one of us were to allege that the brown loaf he had for breakfast this morning was composed of exactly the same material as the brown loaf he had had for breakfast nine or ten months ago. The next evidence was that of the director of medical stores, who did not allege that he had tested the material, but merely said he had examined it. And the other evidence was that of Mr. Devlin, one of the parties who is under suspicion in connection with this transaction. I say that the assertion which the minister has so frequently made, so definitely made and so strongly made, that this was exactly the same substance as that which had been tested at Kingston, rests upon no solid foundation whatever, was a statement which he ought not to have made with such assurance. It is exceedingly difficult and exceedingly disagreeable to have to discuss this question in the absence of the hon. minister; but we cannot help ourselves.

Now, this that I have spoken of is the evidence adduced to show that the food was the same. The evidence that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) adduces was of a very different nature. In the first place, on the face of it, we have reason to assume that this is not the same food. The protose is a patented food, and no one can manufacture the same food in this country without violating that patent. Therefore, any one coming to the Minister of Militia stating that he was manufacturing this same food was subject to suspicion immediately, because he was admitting that he was violating the law. He had no right to manufacture any such food, and, on the face of it, the minister ought to have been warned that the food was not the same. In the next place we have a food of a different name. It is not called by the same name, and it is not manufactured by the same company. That again was a warning to the minister. But in addition to all that, we have the fact that on January 25, the manufacturer of that food, which the minister had approved, which he said had been recommended to him by medical men of the highest standing in Canada, writes to him a solemn letter, telling him that this food is not the same food as that which it was represented to be, telling him that it is a fraudulent and valueless imitation of that food, and calling his attention to the fact that this can all be proved by analysis. Now it was perfectly competent to the minister, and to any one who supports the minister, to say that that was merely a statement by a rival firm—there is no rival firm, because there is no Vitaline company at all—that it was a statement by a rival manufacturer, some one who wanted a contract; and that because it was a statement made by a person who was rival to the person supplying the food, it was subject to a certain amount of suspicion, and he had discounted it to a certain extent. That is a perfectly fair criticism of the letter, but that is no sufficient reason for the minister ignoring the letter, more especially as the writer of the letter showed his bona fides by offering to subject his statements to an infallible test. He tells the minister: I make this statement, you can test that easily by chemical analysis and decide whether my statement is right. Nothing could be stronger evidence of the bona fides of the writer than that offer. He himself suggested that this food be subjected to an analytical test. He says further: Not only can you do so, but I will do so for my own protection, I intend to do so. Then we have the fact alleged by my hon. friend who brings the accusation, the fact that he sent it to Mr. Moore, and that the analysis was made.

However, that is something the minister was not then aware of. But the minister was aware of all the facts to which I have called attention. He received the warning on January 26, it was written on the 25th, and was registered, and was no doubt received by the minister on January 26. Now, he had ample time from the receipt of that letter, to have this food tested before it was shipped to South Africa. I understand it is alleged that there was not time to make this test. There was some statement of that kind made in the House, I think, during the debate the other day. But the minister himself says that this food was not shipped until February, and in point of fact, the vessel which carried the food, did not sail until February 21. My information, which I obtained to-day, is that the second contingent left Canada on three ships: the first, on January 20, the Laurentian; second, the Pomeranian, on January 27; and the Milwaukee on February 21. Now, the minister, in the course of the discussion, stated that the food was shipped in February, so that if the food was shipped in February it was shipped by the Milwaukee, which did not leave until February 21. So the minister had nearly four weeks from the time that he received this letter of warning, before the food left the country, during which time he could have taken those precautions which my hon. friend refers to in his statement, and have had this food analysed, as was suggested in the letter written to him by Mr. Hatch himself, the manufacturer of the food.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear enough that my hon. friend is fully justified in having made the charge he has made, namely, that the minister has been guilty of culpable negligence in allowing this food to be shipped after the warnings he had received, and in taking no steps whatsoever to have determined the nature of the food. I call my right hon. friend's attention again to the fact, that while the minister has declined to say that he had the food analysed, while we have a right to assume that he has not had the food analysed himself, he has admitted that on February 3, there was an analysis of that food made here in Ottawa. Now, I say again that it is not treating this House fairly to withhold the report of that analysis. I say we have a right to have that analysis on the Table of the House, and to see what the result was. The minister says that he is going to have some other analysis. What has that got to do with it? We do not care what analysis he may have hereafter, we want to know what was the result of that analysis that was made in the Department of Inland Revenue. The minister has said that it bears out his contention, and my right hon. friend has repeated that statement. We want to have that document laid upon the Table so that we ourselves may have an opportunity of judging whether these hon. gentlemen have drawn a proper conclusion from the statements contained in that analysis. I confess that I am astonished at the government hesitating for one moment to lay that analysis on the Table. I think that the ruling that has been given by the Chair on a former occasion, ought to be sufficient to convince the government that all the documents that have been referred to in the course of this discussion, ought to be laid on the Table without a moment's unnecessary delay. But here we are face to face with the fact that this most important document is deliberately being withheld. I say that the government cannot blame us if we regard this as a most suspicious circumstance. When the government are acting in this manner, we are bound, as reasonable men, to suppose that there is some cause why this document is withheld from us. Why do they withhold it? It is a most suspicious circumstance on the face of it, that this document is not laid on the Table of the House. We naturally conclude that if it were laid on the Table of the House, it would show something which has not yet been developed, and we claim to have the right to have it laid on the Table of the House. Now, I do not wish to prolong the discussion further, and I will read to the House the amendment which I beg to move. I propose to move, in order to meet the objection of my right hon. friend :

That all the words after 'That' in the amendment be struck out, and the following words inserted instead thereof: 'the 19th paragraph of the main motion be amended by striking out after 19 the words 'That under the circumstances above set forth,' and inserting the words, 'and the said Frederick D. Monk also believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence that.'

The clause now reads in this way :

That under all the circumstances above set forth, the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence, &c.

The government object to that on the ground that if the House accepts it the House will have prejudged the case and decided that the minister has been guilty of negligence. For my part, I must confess that I am utterly unable to agree to that statement. I think that the clause is simply, as all the other clauses are, governed by the preamble in which the hon. gentleman for Jacques Cartier says that he :

—is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence—

So and so. But, in order to meet the views of the government, I make the suggestion that these objectionable words be struck out and the clause will then be the mere statement of the belief of my hon. friend, that he can establish the fact that the hon. Minister of Militia has been guilty of gross and culpable negligence. Clause 19 will then read in this way :

That the said Frederick D. Monk also believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence that the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence (a) in making, with undue haste, the agreement hereinabove referred to of January 4, 1900, for the supply of emergency rations to the Canadian troops in South Africa with irresponsible parties; (b) in not having the preparation of said rations controlled by competent men, and the supply furnished to the troops carefully and rigidly inspected and tested; (c) in neglecting, after he had received said letter of January 25 last, to take the steps commended by the ordinary rules of prudence to ensure the protection of the troops; and (d) in paying the amount of the said contract, $4,660, in a case where he must have known that any recovery of the same was impossible, and without any investigation.

That is the amendment that I propose, with the approval of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who has already stated on the floor of the House that had the government made a suggestion to him of this kind he would have been most happy to have complied with it, so as to remove all possibility of ambiguity, although I do not think there is any. The statement now is, that he says that he believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence the facts stated in clause 19, and I hope the government, under the circumstances, will agree to the amendment I propose and allow the nineteenth clause to be incorporated in the statement and to go to the committee.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I may be pardoned if I state to the House that I am deeply surprised indeed that the proceedings in this matter have not been understood better than they have been. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier made a statement the other day to the House upon which he has moved a motion. The statement was, that he believed he could establish certain facts, to the number of eighteen, which, in his opinion, if proved, would establish that the hon. Minister of Militia had been guilty of gross and culpable negligence.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not limit it to eighteen.

The PRIME MINISTER. He did. My hon. friend, in his statement, enumerated eighteen different charges which, if established, would prove, in his judgment, that the Minister of Militia had been guilty of culpable negligence. Now, I submit to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill), who has just moved his amendment, I submit to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and I submit to the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), who has spoken in this debate also, that, as has been stated already by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), there has never been yet a case, of the many cases where similar charges have been made against a member of the House, in which deductions were sought to be made from the charges laid down. In no other case has this been done, from the time that, in 1873, Mr. Huntingdon made his charges. You will find that in every one of these cases the statement simply contained the charges and the facts, as alleged, leaving it to the committee to investigate into them and report the result of their inquiry. If you take the precedent which was established in this House in 1891, when Mr. Tarte moved his celebrated committee of inquiry, you will find that Mr. Tarte then and there made a statement of the facts and did not presume to deduce any inferences from it, but, thereupon, asked that a committee should be empowered to investigate these facts and report its conclusion. So it was when a charge of a similar nature was made against the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron). In that case, Mr. Edgar laid down certain facts. He made certain charges against the then Postmaster General, and having made these charges he deducted no conclusion whatever, he did not venture to say that he would establish such and such a thing against Sir Adolphe Caron, but he simply asked that the matter be referred to a committee, then and there to be investigated and to be reported upon by the committee. In this case the hon. member for Jacques Cartier lays down eighteen facts stated in eighteen different paragraphs, whereby he deduces the conclusion that the Minister of Militia and Defence has been guilty of culpable negligence. Take, for instance, the charge which you find in paragraph No. 6. Before I go on to offer to the House the remarks which I have to offer upon this point, I would beg to call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), to this fact. They stated that if paragraph 19 were to be eliminated from the reference which is to be made to the committee, the conduct of the Minister of Militia could not be investigated. Well, if such were the case, indeed, if the elimination of paragraph 19 were to make it impossible for the committee which is to be appointed to investigate the conduct of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, the point would be well taken.

But if section No. 19 is eliminated, the committee will have to investigate the charges which are laid in the preceding paragraph against the Minister of Militia. Take paragraph 6 :

That the Minister of Militia had several interviews, principally in Montreal, but also elsewhere with the said Henry Hatch whom he knew to be the sole manufacturer of the food tested at Kingston.

That is one of the circumstances laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), from which he deducts the culpable negligence which he charges later on against the minister. The preceding paragraph charges that the Minister of Militia had been warned by Mr. Hatch that the food he bought was not proper food, and so we have paragraph 9 :

That the Minister of Militia and Defence failed to acknowledge receipt of this letter ; and did not promptly communicate with the troops of the Canadian contingent or take any steps to verify the truth of the information conveyed to him by the letter above referred to.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), charges that, first of all, the minister knew Mr. Hatch to be the manufacturer, that he received a letter from Mr. Hatch that the food purchased from Mr. Devlin was not proper food, and that having been so warned, he took no precaution to ascertain whether the food he bought was the true food or not. That is the culpable negligence which is charged by the hon. member (Mr. Monk) against the minister. But that is not all. Take paragraph 16 :

The usual precautions as to inspection were not adopted by the Militia Department in regard to the shipment of emergency rations.

That is another circumstance, which in the opinion of the hon. member (Mr. Monk) establishes, when proved, the culpable negligence which he charges against the minister. Well, Sir, these are to be referred to the committee for investigation. They are true or they are not true. If they are not true, of course the minister is absolutely exonerated. If they are true, then, it will be for the committee to determine whether or not they constitute that culpable negligence which is now charged by the hon. member (Mr. Monk) against the Minister of Militia. It is absurd to argue that if you eliminate paragraph 19, that the conduct of the minister will not be investigated. Take away No. 19, and amongst other things the committee will have to inquire, whether Dr. Borden received a letter of admonition, whether he acted upon it, or whether he should have acted upon it, whether it be true that the usual precautions as to inspection were not adopted by the Minister of Militia. These facts and others have to be investigated, and if they are found to be true, then, of course, the committee will have to report upon the case. The order of reference is this :

That the above statements be referred to a select committee of this House to inquire fully into the said allegations, with power to send for persons, papers and records and such articles as may be necessary for such investigation, and to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation, and that the committee do report in full the evidence taken before them and all their proceedings on the reference and the result of their inquiries.

That is to say, the committee will have to report to the House whether or not the charges in paragraph 7, in paragraph 8, paragraph 9, in paragraph 16, are true or not true, and if true, whether or not there are exculpating circumstances, and whether or not they constitute the culpable negligence which is charged in the last paragraph. Under such circumstances, what becomes of the argument of my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill), whose candour I always admire? Can he still contend that if paragraph 19 is eliminated from the reference, it will not be possible for the committee to investigate whether or not Dr. Borden has been guilty of culpable negligence. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) overlooked these things when he made the statement that paragraph 19 was essential to bring home guilt to Dr. Borden, if guilt there is. Let us look at the origin at paragraph 19. In the mind of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), paragraph 19 is simply the result of preceding paragraphs. The hon. gentleman thinks he can establish by successful evidence that Dr. Borden received a letter of warning from Mr. Hatch; that the food bought from Dr. Devlin was not the food that had been tested before; he thinks he can establish by successful evidence that the Minister of Militia took no notice of that letter; he thinks he can establish by successful evidence that the minister failed to take the ordinary precautions that should have been taken; and believing that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) comes to the conclusion that the Minister of Militia has been guilty of culpable negligence. If paragraph 19 is eliminated, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) will still be at liberty to prove these facts, which are alleged to be incriminating circumstances against the Minister of Militia, and the result of which, will, in the opinion of the hon. member, establish culpable negligence. The mind of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), is perfectly clear, simply from the reading of his motion, that:

19. That under all the circumstances above set forth, the Minister of Militia and Defence, the said Hon. Frederick William Borden, was guilty of gross and culpable negligence (a) in making, with undue haste, the agreement herein above referred to of the 4th of January, 1900, for the supply of emergency rations to the Canadian troops in South Africa with irresponsible parties; (b) in not having the preparation of said rations controlled by competent men, and the supply furnished to the troops carefully and rigidly inspected and tested; (c) in neglecting, after he had received said letter of the 25th January last, to take the steps commended by the ordinary rules of prudence to ensure the protection of the troops; and (d) in paying the amount of the said contract, $4,660, in a case where he must have known that any recovery of the same was impossible, and without any investigation.

It is plain to the House that the allegations in this paragraph are a resume of the charges made in the previous paragraphs. Again I appeal to the sense of justice of the House, is it fair-play, is it substantial justice that we should pronounce in advance upon these allegations; or that you should even draw a conclusion in advance? This point is so strong that my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill) tried to avoid it, and he avoids it by pointing to the words:

That under all the circumstances above set forth.

But, if you withdraw these words, the charge No. 19 remains just the same. It is not a statement of fact; it is simply an inference drawn by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, that he can establish that the Minister of Militia has been guilty of gross and culpable negligence. How can he establish that? He cannot establish that except by facts; and what are the facts which makes the Minister of Militia guilty of that charge? They are all these charges made in the previous eighteen paragraphs. It is impossible for the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to proceed to establish the charges made in the amended motion unless he first proceeds to prove the eighteen charges previously made, because they are the gist of the whole offence, and the rest is simply consequence. Again I say it is not fair to the Minister of Militia under such circumstances to attempt to prejudge the case by saying that this or that proves him guilty. These are the facts to be investigated by the committee and upon which the committee will report their finding to the House. Now, this motion is based on what? It is based on a solemn declaration made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. No motion of this kind is ever made in the House unless a member raises in his place and declares that he has reason to believe that he can establish such and such facts. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier made a statement in the House, which is to be found in Hansard, that he had reason to believe that he could establish by evidence this and that; and after he has based a motion upon that declaration, my hon. friend from Bruce, undertakes to amend that motion and substitute for it a new motion based upon a statement of fact which was not made by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier.

Mr. FOSTER. No, no.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, it is so. I do not believe under such circumstances that you can amend the motion; but I do not press that point very much, though it is a point of procedure which might be very seriously taken. All I want to do at this moment is to appeal to the fairness and justice of the House. Suppose paragraph 19 is eliminated, and suppose the committee make a report, as they must; and suppose they find, for instance, that Dr. Borden, the Minister of Militia received a letter from Mr. Hatch, that he took no notice of that letter, that he knew Mr. Hatch was the manufacturer of that food, that he paid Dr. Devlin after he had been warned; suppose especially that it be proved under paragraph 16, that the usual precautions as to inspection were not adopted by the Department of Militia; would not the committee have absolute liberty, under the reference made to them, to say under such circumstances that they find that the minister is guilty or is not guilty of culpable negligence? Would not that be the deduction in their judgment drawn from the facts proved before them? Would not the committee have the same power that they have to-day to say, we find that the Minister of Militia acted with negligence or did not take due precautions, and so on? Undoubtedly they would; and if the amendment does not take away one iota from the powers with which the committee are invested, I want to know, in the name of common sense once more, in the name of fairness and justice once more, in the name of everything that is sacred once more, why you should brand the Minister of Militia as having been guilty of gross and culpable negligence? The facts alleged may all be true without constituting guilt on the part of the Minister of Militia. But it is not for the House at this moment, I submit in all earnestness, it would be unfair to the Minister of Militia at this moment, when there has been no investigation, to declare in advance what verdict may be pronounced upon him by the committee.

Mr. McNEILL. Will my right hon. friend allow me to call his attention to the fact that when he says we are asking the House to prejudge the case, that the amendment which, with the approval of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, I have moved to the amendment of my right hon. friend states:

And the said Frederick D. Monk also believes he can establish by satisfactory evidence—

If the House votes that this shall stand a part of the indictment, does my right hon. friend really say that these words imply that we prejudge the case and decide that the Minister of Militia is guilty? Will my right hon. friend allow me to remind him that when my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier first brought this matter to the notice of the House, the hon. Minister of Militia rose in his place, and in the most impassioned manner called upon my hon. friend, if he dared, to prefer a charge against him personally; and this is the charge which my hon. friend has preferred against the minister personally, and he believes he can establish the charge.

The PRIME MINISTER. But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has made his charge against the Minister of Militia; in the statements to be found in paragraphs 6, 8, 9, 16. You will search in vain for any similar motion to the one proposed; but there has been a tendency on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite this afternoon to prejudge the case. The hon. member for North Bruce, the hon. member for York, and every other hon. member who spoke from that side of the House has discussed the merits of the case, saying that the Minister of Militia did this and did that, that he purchased the food, that he did not take the proper precautions, that he paid the money, and so on, when they should have refrained from making any such comments, because these are the very questions to be investigated by the committee.

Mr. McNEILL. Surely my right hon. friend will allow us to deal with the statements made in the House and the documents laid on the Table.

The PRIME MINISTER. I say this to my hon. friend: When the matter is referred to a committee to be investigated, it is most important to make no comment on the facts to be investigated. It is not fair to the Minister of Militia to say that he has done this or done that. All these things are to be investigated, and when the committee make their report, that will be the time to make comments and to be as severe as my hon. friend desires. But there has not been in this matter on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite a disposition to give the Minister of Militia that measure of fair-play to which he is entitled. Even this afternoon, my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) treated the Minister of Militia as a criminal, though he has not yet been tried. I have only to say that, under such circumstances, it is not possible to accept the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. QUINN. Will the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) allow me to ask him a question?

The PRIME MINISTER. What is the question?

Mr. QUINN. If section 19 were eliminated, would it be possible for the committee to declare that the Minister of Militia had been guilty of gross and culpable negligence or that he was innocent in that respect?

The PRIME MINISTER. Most undoubtedly.

Mr. QUINN. I understand the right hon. First Minister to say that the committee can declare that the Minister of Militia was guilty of negligence or innocent of it?

The PRIME MINISTER. If the committee find, as a result of their investigation, that the minister was guilty of negligence, they have the power to say so.

Mr. QUINN. Even if section 19 be eliminated?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I have been in parliament for quite a while, and I have never listened to special pleading such as that we have just heard from the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Why, Sir, it was hardly worthy of the name. I was surprised that the First Minister should resort to such subterfuges.

To my mind, it shows the straits the government are reduced to in refusing to meet the charges that are made so specifically by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). With regard to the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), for my part, I do not think it was necessary at all, but that the case as it stood was sufficiently strong. But, with that amendment, every objection that the First Minister could possibly make has been swept away. The First Minister tells us that the other charges are specific enough against the Minister of Militia, and he does not want any more. But these are charges of wrong-doing, charges of maladministration, charges of rascality, of robbery and of the basest of crimes—for, Sir, this is a case in which the money consideration is but secondary. A contractor may rob the government of $50,000 or $500,000; but, this robbery of $5,000 transcends them all in importance, for the effect of it is to put in jeopardy the lives of the soldiers. Such a crime is not to be measured by a money test. Take, for instance, the tenth charge:

That, as a matter of fact, the food or emergency ration supplied to the Canadian troops was not identical with the food tested at Kingston—and so on. That does not make a specific charge against the Minister of Militia. Or this:

That the value of the said food, so brought on from the United States, does not exceed $500.

But, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier comes down and takes the responsibility, as a member of parliament, knowing what that responsibility means, of saying specifically: I charge these things against an individual who sits on the other side of the House, the man in charge of the Militia Department, the man responsible to parliament and the people of Canada; that is my charge, and it is contained in section 19, which declares that the Minister of Militia has been guilty of gross and culpable negligence. He charges the whole series of wrong-doings to the Minister of Militia himself—and that is the thing that hon. gentlemen opposite object to. The First Minister told us this afternoon, and he virtually repeats it to-night, that he objects to charges being made against the Minister of Militia. Why, Mr. Speaker, do we not know that the history of the past four years has been a bluff game by these hon. gentlemen? When charges are made in this House, they say: Make your charges specific, or we will refuse to listen to them. The hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had to make his charges on the Yukon more specific. To-night the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) virtually tells us: You have no right to make such specific charges against the minister. But, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier takes that responsibility; he does not beat around the bush, he does not make charges against the minister's subordinates; but he makes his charges against the man who is responsible to us and to the people. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) told us that we asked the House to assume guilt and to pronounce judgment before investigation. But, then, on the other hand, he said the hon. member for Jacques Cartier could not prove his charges. Let the hon. gentleman wait, and he will see whether the charges will be proved or not. The House is not asked to assume the guilt of the minister. If the hon. gentleman will look at the charges he will see that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier begins by saying:

That he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence—all these nineteen charges. And then, after formulating his charges, his resolution goes on:

That the above statements be referred to a select committee of this House to inquire fully into the said allegations—and so on. That is the customary form to be followed by a member of this House when he makes a charge against another member of the House. But the government are refusing the opportunity to prove these charges; all they will consent to is that an investigation be held. From the experience of the past, we know what kind of an investigation will be held, if the government have their own way in the matter. But, Sir, we are not going to permit that. The government have been compelled to back down on many occasions this session, and we will make them back down again, and will make them permit an investigation into these charges, which are of too serious a nature for the government to successfully burk inquiry concerning them. There are other features of the case to which I refer. In clause 17 of these resolutions we find:

The substance brought in from the United States, as above stated, in Saratoga trunks was detained by the customs officers for duty thereon, but under direction of the government it was allowed to pass without payment of customs dues.

Where is the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to-day? We have been looking for him. Some one said that he flitted in and flitted out again, while some member on that side was speaking, taking good care not to be in when any one on this side was speaking. There is a charge against the Minister of Customs. He was asked in this House as to the truth of that charge, and he shirked an answer. This is an insult to this House. We are entitled to an answer; we must have an answer. It will not do for the Minister of Customs to tell us, as he did, he has not been able to find out anything. He has the evidence in his own department. The entry was made about the 4th, 5th or 6th of January. The contract was signed on January 4, and these goods came in with lightning speed. They were there on the 5th or 6th of January. He could have the investigation made in his own department.

Mr. BERGERON. He could do it in a week.

Mr. WALLACE. His officers could furnish him the facts in half an hour. He could telephone or telegraph to Montreal, to the customs there and have the customs entry and invoice sent here. The entry was sent up; he could have the invoice sent up as well. The charge is made that under the direction of the government it was allowed to pass without payment of customs dues. Who had authority to give that instruction? Who had authority to violate the law? The Minister of Customs had no more right than any member of this House to violate the law which governs him as well as every other citizen of this country. But where is the minister to-night? He is out. We want him here. It is the usual custom in this House that when ministers are wanted they are away. All the important investigations have been burked, to a certain extent, and hindered by the ministers who were implicated in wrong-doing absenting themselves. Then the First Minister gets up and makes an apology for the minister not being here. There are two ministers away in the old country who are shirking their duty in the House of Commons, who ought to be here to answer the charges which they are afraid to meet. So it is with the Minister of Customs. He is not here to-night. One of these charges is against him and his department; he should be here to meet it. The other minister, we are told, is ill, and that is the reason he is not here. At any rate the Minister of Customs cannot make that excuse. He should be here to make an answer to that charge, and I ask the right hon. the First Minister to send for him forthwith and have him produced here. 'Call in the ministers.'

Now, there is another matter. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries told us to-night that the Minister of Militia and Defence was an honourable man, as honourable as any man in this House. For my part, I object to be classified in any way with the Minister of Militia and Defence. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries may put himself alongside of him as regards respectability, but I will not. I have never been charged with things that are floating around the corridors and all over this country with regard to the Minister of Militia and Defence. There are scandals attached to his name which I think should demand an investigation at the hands of the First Minister who, if he knows of these things, is responsible for his retention in this cabinet, if not his retention in this House. For my part, I object to the challenge thrown out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the uncalled for and unnecessary challenge, under the circumstances, as to the eminent respectability and propriety of the Minister of Militia and Defence. The facts are known to the ministers, they have been called to the attention of the ministers, and particularly the right hon. the First Minister, who is the guardian at any rate of the honour of the members of his cabinet, and to a degree of the members of the House. For my part, I openly repudiate a comparison between any hon. member of this House and the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Now, there is another matter which also refers to the Minister of Customs. These goods were not made in Canada, they were made in the United States. The Minister of Militia and Defence knew that Hatch's protose was made in Canada, that it was not made anywhere else, that Mr. Hatch had a patent under which he was manufacturing it in this country. The correspondence previously shows that these goods were manufactured only in Canada. And yet the very fact, if it be a fact, that is stated here—and it is not contradicted, there is nobody to contradict it, no Minister of Militia and Defence and no Minister of Customs—that these goods were manufactured in the United States, is evident proof that they were not the goods that were supposed to be manufactured in Canada and only in Canada. Now, I would like to ask another question. There was great haste on the 4th of January, but these goods, according to the statement of the member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) were not shipped until the 21st of February, all that time after the 4th of January, when he made that hurried bargain with Dr. Devlin, or with whomsoever the bargain was made. I would like to know why, when these men were sent away, the government did not send some of that emergency food with them. The minister had made the preliminary arrangements in the matter; he had arranged with Mr. Hatch with regard to the Yukon to have a large quantity on hand so that at a day's notice they could supply emergency rations, presumably at that time for the Yukon. Knowing that this firm had it on hand and were ready to supply it, why did the government not send it out with the first contingent on the 21st of February, instead of making an inquiry sixty-six days later. I would like to have an answer to that question, but there is nobody here to answer it. The ministers are absent, and we have to wait for an answer until some time in the future. But we will have an investigation, we will have witnesses to prove all the charges that have been made, we will not permit all these things to be burked. I say that the minister was blamable, when he had investigated the qualities of this emergency ration a long time beforehand, when the Yukon expedition was looming up, when they supposed they would need food of that kind—I say there was palpable negligence in that the minister, knowing of these facts, did not send out some of that food, because he could have got it at a day's notice in Montreal.

Now, there is another feature. At the battle of Paardeberg, and for twelve or fifteen days afterwards, some of the Canadian troops were going on half rations, they were suffering all sorts of hardship. It would have been a blessing if they had had that protose, that emergency ration. It would have saved the lives of many a poor boy who is down with fever contracted through the hardships and starvation that they had to undergo. If this emergency ration had been supplied to these troops, it would have saved many a Canadian boy's life. That is another charge that the minister was guilty of culpable, and, in my opinion, of criminal negligence in not providing this food when he had full information that it was ready. For my part, I did not know anything about this emergency ration, I did not know the minister had been making investigations a year before he found out the excellent qualities of this food in saving life, and that a soldier could carry it so easily with him. All these things the minister himself, knew. He did not utilize his knowledge, he did not provide for the safety of the volunteers he sent out there as in many other cases in which he has been utterly negligent of their interests. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Militia has to answer these questions. The hon. Minister of Customs has to satisfy this House and the country in regard to the charges of illegal action by the Department of Customs, and the country will not be satisfied for the First Minister to get up and by quibbles, by what he calls arguments, although I would not dignify them by the name of arguments, pretend to lead the public away from the charges. They will not be led away. There never was, in the parliament of Canada, charges more specifically and definitely made of wrong-doing, in every instance detailing the facts and charging the minister with being a party directly and straightly responsible for this wrong-doing. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier says: I am prepared to bring the evidence right down and prove my case up to the hilt. Why do I not get an opportunity without taking up the time of the House, without quibbling and without proposing amendments? You cannot prevent the people saying that this is a proper clause to have there. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier assumes responsibility in making that statement, and when he makes it what right have the government to say: You shall not prefer charges, you shall not be definite in your charges, you must not charge a minister with wrong-doing. Hon. gentlemen went all over the country, bluffing the country and saying: Why do they not make specific charges and we will be ready to meet them in five minutes? When, here, a definite charge is made, when a positive statement is made, such as is contained in clause 19, they are afraid to meet the issue, but they will have to meet the issue, and the country will be the judge upon this occasion.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that there is not a man in this House who has listened to the speech which has just been delivered by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) on this very important subject that is at all surprised at the irritated manner in which he has undertaken to deal with this very grave question. For my part, I am exceedingly anxious that a thorough and exhaustive investigation of this whole matter should be held, and I am quite sure that when hon. gentlemen opposite enter upon the discharge of that duty, from their standpoint, the government will give them every facility to prove every one of the seventeen charges they have made. I have sat in this House many years with the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden). I am unwilling, and I positively decline to cast my vote to declare that he is guilty, before the evidence is heard, before any evidence is taken, before any of the charges that have been presented to the House by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier have been investigated.

Mr. MILLS. No one asks you to.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is the intention of the declaration. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace), challenges the right of the government to alter, or in any way to interfere with the charges that have been made. He thinks that the government should have just accepted the charges as they were laid on the Table of the House and not dare to lay a finger or a pen upon them. My hon. friend has a very short memory. If you go back to 1892, when hon. gentlemen were on this side of the House, and when Mr. Edgar made his charges against the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron), who now sits beside the hon. member for West York, the question presents itself to you: Were those charges accepted by the government of that day? Did they ever lay finger or pen upon them? What are the facts? There were some ten or eleven charges made. Did they strike out one, or two or three? They actually struck out six charges out of the ten or eleven. Who was a party to it? Who was the party who made the motion, and who was the party who seconded it. The motion was moved by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who is now a Senator. He made the motion, but who seconded it? The hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) was the seconder of the resolution, not to strike out one clause or amend one clause, but they actually amended every one but three of the entire number of charges. They took the whole of the charges out of Mr. Edgar's hands, they formed and moulded them to suit themselves, and then they said: Come on.

Mr. MILLS. You are not going to follow such a rascally example?

Mr. McMULLEN. They tied Mr. Edgar's hands behind his back, and challenged him to a duel.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But, you would not follow such a bad example.

Mr. McMULLEN. In regard to the charges that the hon. member for West York has made as to the absence of ministers from this House, we can also go back to a period when, this House met for two weeks and every day we had the report that the strikers were not present, that the government had not adjusted their differences. The House had the pleasure of meeting, looking at the Speaker in the Chair, and then adjourning from day to day until such time as the ministers of that day would make up their family quarrel and come back to the House. Yet, the hon. member for West York has the brass to get up in the House and charge the hon. members of this government with not being present every time that he would like to see them. Ministers of the Crown no doubt have a great deal of responsibility, and have a great deal to do. The hon. gentleman has made some discourteous remarks in regard to ministers of the Crown who are not here, but who are out of Ottawa. I do not think that my hon. friend would make these charges were these ministers here. One of the ministers is attending to his duty in Paris, which, I think, he is quite capable to discharge. Another minister is discharging a personal duty, which, I think, he has a perfect right to discharge, and while they are away from this House there are plenty here to take their places and plenty to justify the policy of the government. All I have to say to hon. gentlemen opposite is, in place of quibbling in regard to this question, let us have a committee, let the hon. member for Jacques Cartier prove every charge he has made or a percentage of them. He will find that if there has been any culpable negligence, if any member of the government has done what is wrong, no member on this side of the House will have any hesitation in pronouncing in that direction. But, I think the hon. Minister of Militia is entitled to the benefit of the doubt until such time as he has been found guilty. What are we in this House? We are the grand jury virtually sitting before the case is sent to the judge and the petit jury. Who are the petit jury? The committee. I would like to know if, in the presentment of a case by the grand jury it was ever declared: We find this gentleman guilty of malfeasance of office, or guilty of gross negligence in the discharge of his duty, or guilty of anything else? The word guilty is not in the presentment, and it should not be there. It should be removed from this motion, and it should not be placed there until the committee to which the charge is referred has so declared. We should hesitate to pronounce the Minister of Militia guilty until such time as these charges are proven. If he is guilty, he will have to be responsible for that guilt, but to declare him guilty now, before we know whether he is or not, would be unfair and unjust. I have no doubt that it would be a nice thing to gentlemen opposite if they could get up on the stump throughout the country and produce this charge No. 19, and say: Here is the expression of the House of Commons in regard to Dr. Borden; here is a declaration by the House that he was guilty of gross negligence in the discharge of his duty.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, these gentlemen opposite are ready to take any port in a storm, and they would be unfair enough to take advantage of this clause, to say that the Minister of Militia was condemned, but they will not get the chance. We will give a committee to hon. gentlemen opposite and we will give every opportunity to them to prove their charges, and if when the investigation is completed and the report made, Dr. Borden is found to be guilty, he must abide by it, but I for one will not be unfair enough to pronounce the minister guilty until I see what evidence there is to be brought forward.

Amendment agreed to.

Motion (Mr. Monk) as amended, agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER. I propose to my hon. friend on the other side of the House, that the committee to which this matter be referred be composed of seven members, and if my hon. friend is ready, I would like him to select the members from his own side, or if he is not ready to-night, I will make the motion on Monday.

Mr. FOSTER. I am ready at the present time to give the names—I suppose three?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. I propose that the matter be referred to a committee consisting of Messrs. Russell, Britton, Costigan, Belcourt—

Mr. FOSTER. And Messrs. Monk, Casgrain and Clarke.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That the charges brought this day by Mr. Monk, member for Jacques Cartier, be referred to a select committee, to be composed of Messrs. Russell, Britton, Costigan, Belcourt, Monk, Casgrain and Clarke.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—GASPE ELECTION—INTER-FERENCE OF AN OFFICIAL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, as I gave notice to the Minister of Customs, I desire to bring up a matter which has been lingering before the House for more than two years, and I propose the second time to make a statement and a few criticisms as to the course of the government in reference to the matter. In August, 1899—I think it was on August 11, just before the close of the session—I brought the matter to the attention of the government, and was answered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who at that time was leading the government, to the effect that the matter would be taken under advisement, and would be looked into. Since then the papers have been brought down, and I have now the complete papers, which have been laid upon the Table of the House. The matter consists of a charge which was brought against an official of the Customs Department, by the late Dr. Ennis, who ran in the Liberal-Conservative interest in the district of Gaspé. The charge was brought by Dr. Ennis, in a letter written to the Customs Department, which runs as follows :

Grand River, Gaspé Co., P.Q.,
February 16, 1898.

Hon. Wm. Paterson, M.P.,
Department of Customs,
Ottawa.

Hon. Sir,—As the government has made known during the last session of parliament their desire to give civil servants an occasion 'to gratify their ambitions' by relieving them of further duty when they would have manifested an inclination to hold any other than a neutral position between the political parties seeking the approval of the electors of this country, I beg to hereby call your attention to the following statement:

'I hereby solemnly charge Mr. H. A. Lemieux, formerly an employee of the Montreal customs office, and now assistant inspector of customs under Mr. O'Meara of Quebec, with having taken an active part in the electoral campaign of June, 1896.

I further declare specifically that the said Mr. H. A. Lemieux spent a part of the month of June, 1896, in Magdalen Islands, canvassing and working in the interests of his son, now member of the House of Commons for Gaspé County.

I further declare that the above-mentioned Mr. H. A. Lemieux represented Mr. Rodolphe Lemieux, M.P., at polling station No. 41, Basin, on Magdalen Islands, as the sworn representative or agent of his son, then a candidate for election to parliament, on June 23, 1896;

I further declare, again, that during his stay on the islands aforesaid, Mr. H. A. Lemieux made himself known and acted under the assumed name of H. A. Lamirande or de Lamirande, and that his oath as representative at the poll was taken under this false name, subscribed to by this false appellation;

I hereby further state Mr. H. A. Lemieux has, since committing this offence against the spirit of the civil service law, been promoted in the service, whilst other officials—guilty in a much lighter degree—have been punished and dismissed for "political partisanship."

On the strength of the above, I ask an inquiry into the conduct of Mr. Lemieux during the month of June, 1896, and beg that a copy of my accusation be sent him with the name of his accuser. I will produce sworn testimony to the above effect.

I have the honour to be, hon. sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) THOMAS ENNIS.

Without taking any time over the matter, I may say, that Dr. Ennis, who was the representative of the Liberal-Conservatives in Gaspé in 1896, from all I can learn, was an eminently respectable and straightforward gentleman. He makes these charges on his own responsibility. He prefers them in detail, and he states to the minister, that he would like the accused to have a copy of these charges, and to have an investigation ordered, and he would be prepared with sworn testimony, to prove his allegations.

Now, Sir, I think that a statement like that ought to have been sufficient to at least enlist the attention of the Minister of Customs; not only on account of the first charge, that of gross and active political partisanship and neglect of his duty in being absent from his place of duty and engaged in the active work of an election contest, but—what is much more serious—the allegation that Mr. Lemieux represented the opposing candidate at one of the polls and acted in other parts of the constituency under the assumed name of H. A. Lamirande, taking his responsibility as a representative in the poll under that name. Well, what is the action of the Minister of Customs, who ought to be jealous first for the vindication of the principle that people in the public service ought not to engage in active and open political party strife? The question was brought to the hon. gentleman's attention by this letter of February 16, 1898. The only result was a letter from the minister promising attention to it. On March 10, the letter was acknowledged for consideration. On March 21, the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) brought the matter again to the attention of the Minister of Customs, sending him, I believe a copy of the charges which had been made by Dr. Ennis, and asking him what action he proposed to take upon it. On May 13, having received no answer, the hon. senior member for Pictou again wrote to the Minister of Customs, sending him a copy of the charges. Still no answer. On July 24, the hon. senior member for Pictou again wrote to the Minister of Customs. It was only on August 9 of that year the Minister of Customs at last got so far as to reply. And one of the main sentences in his letter was that, in view of the lapse of time between 1896 and this date, he did not deem it advisable to investigate alleged partisan action. It will be seen that, while Dr. Ennis preferred the charge of political partisanship, he preferred also the charge of misrepresentation, the misrepresentation of giving the name of another person, and, under an assumed name, taking part in a public and political duty, in one of the polling places, which would come, I should think, very close to personation, and which, if the charge was true, was conduct which certainly ought not to be allowed in any employee in the service of this country.

Mr. MILLS. It is second cousin to the machine.

Mr. FOSTER. Whatever relation it be, it certainly looks as if there was blood between them. In his answer of August 9, the minister conveniently loses sight of the main charge. On August 17, the hon. senior member for Pictou again calls the attention of the minister to the fact that he has not yet taken action, and especially that he had overlooked the most serious of the charges, namely, the one to which I have just adverted. On August 23, a letter was sent by Dr. Ennis asking again for an opportunity to prove his charges. On August 28, there was an answer from the private secretary of the minister to the hon. senior member for Pictou, saying that the minister was away on his holidays. Nothing more was done, until August 11, 1899, when I brought the matter to the attention of the House and the government, and received the assurance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) that attention would be given the matter. But, Dr. Ennis did not rest simply with trying to get an investigation from the Minister of Customs. Finding that he was not successful in that, on September 29, 1898, or about that time, he wrote to the Minister of Justice and informed the minister that he had preferred these charges to the Minister of Customs, that he had not had an opportunity of proving them, and that no investigation had been ordered, and he asked the Minister of Justice to interfere, either by himself or through his colleague, to the end that an investigation might be had. The Minister of Justice took no action on this matter, except to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to it, and to inform Dr. Ennis that the matter did not lie in his department, but was a subject in which the Minister of Customs alone had authority to act.

Now, Sir, that charge was made in February, 1898; and there is one peculiar circumstance with regard to it—it has never been denied by the Minister of Customs himself. One would think that, a grave charge of that kind with reference to an officer in his department having been preferred, the minister would have gone so far as to make some investigation into it at least to convince himself that it was not well-founded; and, if it were not well-founded, in justice to his department and in justice to the officer, he would be ready to make a denial, and so clear his officer and himself. Up to the present time the Minister of Customs nor any one in his behalf, has denied this charge. An official of the government charged with an offence of that kind, and knowing that he was charged with it, if he were not guilty of it, it would seem, would be the first to make a statement clearing himself with reference to the charge. But up to the present moment, I have never seen or read or heard of the official implicated making any statement with regard to his innocence or rebutting the charge in any way. More than that, and, I think, even stronger is that after the matter was brought to the attention of the government and became public to the whole country—known to the Prime Minister—action promised in some way by the Minister of Trade and Commerce—by no member of the government has any attempt been made, to clear the official or to clear the department of the charge of keeping in their employ an official who had been guilty of such conduct.

There is another peculiar circumstance with reference to this. While the Minister of Customs was neither able to deny the charge, nor to investigate the charge, nor to give any information with reference to it, he was able to take that same employee and raise him in office, and raise him in salary, and to make him, as I understand, an assistant inspector, with a largely increased salary. So that it stands in this way, that one of the gravest charges that could be made was made against an official of the Customs Department, namely, that he had under an assumed name personated and represented himself in a polling booth to be a person whom he was not—and there has never been any attempt to clear up his record in this House by the government, or any official of the government, or by himself. But the Minister of Customs in this way has put his approval upon such conduct, and denoted his utter contempt and defiance of the charge that was made, and of the public opinion, which I was sure would ask that such a charge should be investigated; he has in open day and before the whole country publicly promoted this officer and made him a responsible officer of the higher grade in the Customs Department. This is, I think, a fair and temperate statement of facts. What does the government propose to do about it?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The hon. gentleman has made, as he says, a temperate statement in reference to the matter that has been brought under my notice, as he states. I did not follow all the dates he has mentioned, but I think they are correct; I have them under my hand here. The facts with reference to the matter are, as he states, that on the 16th of February, Dr. Ennis, who was the Conservative candidate in Gaspé at the last election, wrote a letter which was forwarded to me by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) on the 28th of February, 1898, and was received by me, as my memorandum shows, on the 2nd of March of that year. The member for Pictou wrote to me once or twice with reference to the matter, and when he pressed me for an answer, I told him at first it was for consideration, and when he asked me the second time, I replied in the letter which the hon. member for York has read, and which was addressed to the member for Pictou on the 9th of August, in which I said :

In reply to your letter of the 24th ulto. respecting the charges preferred by Dr. Ennis some time ago against Mr. H. A. Lemieux, assistant inspector of customs, I beg to state that I do not deem it advisable to issue a commission to investigate the charges in view of the great lapse of time between the time of the alleged partisan acts said to be committed, and the time at which the charges were preferred.

I can say to the hon. gentleman that that was not dealing in an exceptional manner with this case. Before this time the Department of Customs had decided that it was inadvisable to receive charges or to go to the expense of investigating charges of political partisanship that were preferred so long after the event occurred. I am told that there may have been, so far as my department is concerned, one or two cases that were entered upon subsequently to this one being considered. But the conclusion had been arrived at in our department that it was inadvisable to go to the expense of appointing commissions to inquire into charges of political partisanship preferred so long after the time. I am speaking now from a memorandum given to me with reference to the way other cases were treated. I say there may have been two or three cases that were dealt with after that time. But before that date it had been announced on more than one occasion, to more than one person, that we deemed it inadvisable to appoint commissions to go into cases that had transpired so long previously. Remember this was a year and eight months after the alleged partisanship was committed. When Dr. Ennis sent this statement he did not send it as a sworn declaration, but merely as a letter in which he preferred those charges. The Department of Customs took the view that if there had been anything seriously wrong it would have been brought to the notice of the department at an earlier date. Gaspé was a long way off, the commissions that had been sitting had entailed quite an expense, and it would have entailed a large expense to institute an investigation there. The answer that I gave in reference to this case was the same that I gave in other cases in which charges were made by friends of the government against officials who were opposed to the party now in power, as having been active political partisans during that contest. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) blames me, not alone for having failed to investigate the charges, but for having promoted Mr. Lemieux in defiance of these charges, as I understood him to say, to a higher position in the customs service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). The hon. gentleman has until now been referring to the charge of political partisanship only. Does he seriously express the view that this was the only charge made against him ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There was a charge that he had acted as scrutineer at the polls for his son, under this name, it was part of the political partisanship. He was not a deputy returning officer, he was an agent of his son, I suppose a scrutineer at the poll, but was not officially connected with the election.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That seems to be a point upon which we should have a definite statement. When an officer, or any person, assumes a false name, and acts under a false name as an agent, takes an oath under a false name, or, let us leave that out, when he enters a polling booth and assumes to be a person other than he is and takes part in that capacity, does the hon. Minister of Customs seriously say, that, in his opinion, it is simply an act of political partisanship on the part of the officer, and nothing more, supposing it to be proven ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not a legal agent, and I do not profess to go into that. All I can say is, it seemed to me that it was a very decided mark of acting on behalf of a candidate, and I mentioned the matter to gentlemen who are competent to judge. This matter was brought to the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and to the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Mills), as the hon. gentleman himself has said. If the hon. gentleman wants me to give him a legal opinion as to that question, I will leave the right hon. Prime Minister to speak in reference to that point.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has no opinion upon that himself.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The charge is that political partisanship was manifested by this gentleman, and it is alleged that this is proved by the part that he took in the contest. I was proceeding to say when the hon. gentleman interrupted me, that the hon. member for York, N.E., (Mr.

Foster) had stated that in defiance of this charge which was made, I had promoted him in the service, instead of dismissing him, as, I suppose, he would say he should have been dismissed. It is true that Mr. Lemieux was promoted. When I came into the service I found that it was desirable, in the interest of the revenue and in the interest of the service, that the inspector's branch should be strengthened. Two assistant inspectors were appointed for Ontario, and we had only one inspector in the province of Quebec. I appointed Mr. Lemieux as assistant inspector. He had previously been receiving $1,000 a year in the Montreal customs-house. He was one of the very best officers there, and he had an experience of twenty-three years. I considered him one of the most thoroughly qualified officers in the customs-house at Montreal, and seeking to strengthen the inspectors branch, and not going outside of the department at all, I took this gentleman, who, from his long experience and from his ability, I had formed the opinion, would be a gentleman who would strengthen that branch of the service. That being the case, I appointed him as assistant inspector. I may mention to the hon. gentleman that this change was not made in defiance of the charge preferred against this gentleman at all. When I did that I had no word, not the slightest hint, that he had been a political partisan, or had taken part in any election or in anything connected with elections. There was nothing before me in that respect. It was a year and eight months after this occurrence before Dr. Ennis wrote his letter at all. The first information reached me through Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper from Dr. Ennis, on March 2, 1898, so that was the first intimation I had from Dr. Ennis in reference to this matter. Mr. Lemieux was promoted from his position of clerk in the customs-house at Montreal to the position of assistant inspector of customs for the province of Quebec on July 12, 1897. Hon. gentlemen opposite will see that, so far as there is any charge of negligence upon my part in reference to this matter, months and months had elapsed after the change had taken place before any charge against Mr. Lemieux was brought to my attention at all. Of course, it bore upon the face of it the case of a father interested in the success of a son, in a son's election. He engaged in active election work, according to the charges that were made, a course which is to be condemned, which was condemned by the hon. gentleman who spoke, and which is condemned from this side as well. I regret the circumstances very much, but I felt, after all, when the charge had gone so long, that Dr. Ennis himself, at a subsequent date, did not view it as a very serious matter when he wrote to the hon. Minister of Justice, because he says in the letter that :

Had it not been that so many officers were unjustly, to my mind, dismissed in Gaspé County at Mr. Rodolphe Lemieux, M.P.'s, suggestion, I would not have felt bound to press this charge further.

So that, he did not, himself, consider the case as a very strong one against Mr. Lemieux. But, he felt bound to press this, that this gentleman should be dealt with as others had been dealt with.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister had better sit down as soon as possible.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have given the statement of the case as it occurred. I have given the facts of the case. They are not contradicted; they will not be contradicted by hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Lemieux is in the service; he was promoted, not as the hon. gentleman suggests, in defiance of the charge, but months before this charge was brought before the notice of the government or of the department at all. All I can say is, that this matter seemed to me serious enough to mention to the Prime Minister. I mentioned the matter to him, and had his view and opinion in reference to it. That being the case, he was more competent to judge as to the feature that the gentleman insists upon than I was myself, and, therefore, it was that no investigation was entered upon. The facts are as I have stated them. It was a case of the father promoting the election, or engaging in the election of the son, and he was not an officer under this government at that time; he was an officer under hon. gentlemen opposite, and all I can say is, that if there is any partisanship displayed by any officers under the present government it is without any desire or without any consent from the head of the department. This took place in the election of 1896, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and as I said, Mr. Lemieux was not an official in the election at all. He was an officer, of course, of Her Majesty's customs, and as such he should not have taken a political part, and yet there were many who took an active part on the side of hon. gentlemen opposite and who have not been dismissed from the service. That I can say as far as the Department of Customs is concerned, and I believe it is true also of other departments of the public service.

Mr. CLANCY. I can tell the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) that there were many men who never took part in the election at all, and the minister dismissed them without even a shadow of a trial.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I owe it to an old and faithful employee of the government to present what I believe is a very fair defence. I owe it to him all the more, and I believe the defence will be accepted all the more readily from the fact, that Mr. Lemieux, whose conduct is impugned, is the father of a much respected member of this House. To my knowledge Mr. Lemieux has been an employee of the government in the city of Montreal for nearly forty years. Mr. Lemieux has been residing in the city of Montreal discharging his duty as a customs officer, and I believe every citizen of Montreal will bear witness that in that city Mr. Lemieux never was charged with any political partisanship, never was an offensive partisan and never took any part in an election. If Mr. Lemieux had been charged with having taken an undue part in the election in the city of Montreal, he would certainly come within the definition which we understand by the term offensive partisan. Both sides of the House will agree that officers of the government should not take part in politics. There is something repugnant to fair-play when we see an officer of the government paid with public money, using his position amongst his friends and neighbours, where his connection may give him influence, for the purpose of favouring one political party. If Mr. Lemieux was charged with taking part in an election in the city of Montreal where he was discharging his duties and where his position might have given him influence, the charge would have been different from what it is. Mr. Lemieux is not charged with having taken any political action in Montreal, but in an election in the county of Gaspé, some 600 miles from that city, and where he was unknown. He is even charged with acting there under an assumed name. Mr. Lemieux, in the summer of 1896, took his holidays as he had a right to, and he went to the Magdalen Islands, and because his son was a candidate he would not take his own name. Mr. Lemieux is charged with having personated somebody, but Mr. Lemieux personated no one.

Mr. FOSTER. Why?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know why, but he did not personate anybody.

Mr. FOSTER. How?

The PRIME MINISTER. Because he did not take anybody's name.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not?

The PRIME MINISTER. He did not.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

The PRIME MINISTER. No. Personating is taking the name of another party with a view of exercising the rights of another party, but Mr. Lemieux did not personate anybody pretending to be a voter. He did not attempt to take the name of any one who was a voter in the county of Gaspé, or to personate anybody according to what we understand by personation. He was under an assumed name as though he was travelling incognito; just as we know the Prince of Wales travels sometimes incognito.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, and Mr. Lemieux in doing that was not committing any breach of law, nor committing any offence I venture to say. Judging from the persistency with which Dr. Ennis and some other gentlemen friends of Dr. Ennis's, pursued Mr. Lemieux in this matter, if Mr. Lemieux had committed any offence against the law, they would probably have brought him before the courts of the country. No one so far has undertaken to bring Mr. Lemieux before the courts, and if the statement made by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is true, and if the view he takes be correct, Mr. Lemieux would have committed an offence against the law. I venture to say that Mr. Lemieux has violated no law. He may have committed an indiscreet act; he may have committed an act which perhaps was far from wise, but no one will pretend that he has violated any law, and if he did, I dare say he would have been prosecuted before now. I admit frankly that Mr. Lemieux was indiscreet and that he did an unwise thing. What Dr. Ennis charges against Mr. Lemieux is that he went to the county of Gaspé under the assumed name of Lamirande and there took part in the election. If Mr. Lemieux went to the county of Gaspé and perhaps imprudently, perhaps exasperated, or perhaps simply from the very natural feeling to see a gentleman in whom he was much interested, win; if he forgot himself and went too far, and then took an active part in the election, I dare say there is not a man in this House who will not admit that if the action was indiscreet it is an action which at all events we can look upon with some feeling of leniency. Remembering the feeling which prompted him, remembering the cause in which he was engaged, I dare say that if Mr. Lemieux had been a wise man he would not have gone so near the fire; he would not have gone to the Magdalen Islands where he must have known a contest was going on. I do not presume he went there with any intention of taking part in the elections, but he was no doubt attracted by the contest, gradually taking one step after another, until finally he represented his son at the polls. Mr. Lemieux, when he did that committed a very indiscreet action to say the least of it, but he certainly committed no crime. I will go to the extent of admitting the charge against Mr. Lemieux, that he went into the county of Gaspé and represented his son at the poll, acting as scrutineer for him in the name of Lamirande. For my part, I accept the statement of Dr. Ennis as correct. Would it have been wise or proper to have had an investigation into the matter? Suppose an investigation had proved every statement made by Dr. Ennis, it would have proved that he had done a thing that was wrong, a thing which I cannot encourage and which I would not defend, but which after all was not a violation of the law.

Mr. DAVIN. Is the right hon. gentleman aware that Mr. Chapleau, Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, wrote a letter in which he stated that Mr. Lemieux as H. A. Lamirande, took an oath as the representative of one of the candidates on June 23, 1896? If he took an oath under an assumed name, it was a very serious offence.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Chapleau does not say anything of the kind. Mr. Chapleau simply says that one H. A. Lamirande appeared as scrutineer.

Mr. DAVIN. No, that is not what he says. I will read his letter.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order. I can read the letter just as well as the hon. gentleman, and this is what Mr. Chapleau says:

A. Beaudry, Esq., Percé, Que.

Sir,—In answer to your letter of the 9th instant, I must say that H. A. Lamirande appears to have taken his oath as the representative of one of the candidates at the election of June 23, 1896, at polling booth No. 41.

If the inference to be drawn from this interruption of my hon. friend is that Mr. Lemieux took a false oath, I have only to refer my hon. friend to the oath which is taken by a scrutineer. It simply is that he will act as scrutineer, and discharge the duties faithfully. What I said a moment ago, I have only to repeat, that if Mr. Lemieux in doing what he did, violated any law, he is amenable to the law. In my estimation he violated no law. But let us assume that all the charges made in the statement of Dr. Ennis are true; let us assume that Mr. Lemieux represented his son at the poll, as scrutineer, and that he took the oath, you have the fact, as I have said, that Mr. Lemieux acted in a very indiscreet manner, in a manner which I admit cannot be defended, but which, after all, is not to be looked upon except with some degree of leniency.

Mr. DAVIN. No.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman may say no, but I say yes. I say that when a charge of this kind is brought against a man, who has been all his life an honourable officer, who has discharged the duties of his office in a worthy manner, who has been an honourable and respectable citizen up to that time, for nearly forty years, but who has been carried away by the feeling of affection which every father has in his heart for his son—carried away to the extent of being imprudent—if under the circumstances he has committed an imprudent and indiscreet action, I say, for my part, it is something which ought to be viewed with some leniency. After all, we are all human; and there is not a man in this House, especially if he has children—I am not of those—who does not feel some sentiment of sympathy for a father who, at a moment when he thought the fate of his son, in whom he took a legitimate pride, depended upon his going to the poll, in order to see that justice should be done to him, acted as Mr. Lemieux did. Under the circumstances, I say that, for my part, I view an offence of that kind with some leniency. If Mr. Lemieux had been an offensive partisan, going about the country, exerting his authority, and trying to use his position to influence votes, that would have been a very different matter; but Mr. Lemieux was not of that character. He was not a man to make himself offensive to his fellow-men, or to abuse his position or his authority. But finding his son in a contest, fearing he might lose the election, and thinking that he could help him, he was carried beyond the limits of prudence, and did a thing which certainly cannot be defended in itself, but which, after all, was not a very great offence—a thing which, I, for my part, feel inclined to forgive, and which I hope the House also will forgive. That is all I have to say for Mr. Lemieux. I am not here to defend his action. He was indiscreet, he was unwise, but he was a father, and I think for that reason, that his offence can be overlooked.

Mr. WM. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), is also to be sympathized with to-day. All afternoon he has been excluded from the Chamber, for fear something might come out in regard to the importation of certain goods in the matter under discussion, as to which, if they had not been imported, he would have so stated. But this evening he is in the House under circumstances of not very great pleasure to himself. However, he was judicious in this, that he at once divested himself of all responsibility in the matter, and thrust it on the Premier.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). If the hon. gentleman said that I was kept out of the Chamber to-day because of something that transpired, he said what was absolutely incorrect.

Mr. BENNETT. I say that the company of the Minister of Customs this afternoon would have been most desirable, at least to this side of the House, because, I am sure he would have been plied with a great many questions in reference to the matter then under discussion. The minister has done very well this evening, because he has divested himself of all responsibility in this matter, and washed his hands of it. It is true, he tried to excuse himself on the ground that under the procedure in his department, he never took upon himself the responsibility of decapitating any customs officers, especially if any time elapsed between the making of the charge and the action. The minister's memory is very much at fault. Does he remember a case that happened at Parry Sound, when nearly a year and a half after the election of 1896, a charge was preferred against the collector at that port? Does he remember the case of Mr. Hogg, that occurred in Collingwood shortly after the election? And does he consider the circumstances under which these cases were conducted? He sent a legal gentleman, a supporter of his own, who held a star chamber investigation on the cases, and this fair-minded Minister of Customs, who poses as the embodiment of fairness, after he had decapitated these two officials, absolutely refused to show the report under which Mr. Galna had been dismissed from office; and to this day, Mr. Galna has been unable to get the report, although he was led to believe by the commissioner when he left that there was nothing in the case. The Minister of Customs went further than that. In that case, he not only used the evidence of persons in the riding, but the evidence of Mr. Pedley, one of the officers in the Immigration Department in Ottawa. That had to be brought in to bring about the dismissal of that official; and that gentleman, who was dismissed, has been refused by the Minister of Customs even the report on the finding of the commissioner. The Minister of Customs has sought to excuse himself for the course he has taken in this case on the plea that the offence was not complained of in good time. Does the hon. gentleman stand here to argue that if a crime is found out a considerable length of time after it was committed, it must go unpunished? That is a most startling proposition. But when he found he had floundered in that, he said he was only a layman. I hope for the sake of all honest laymen—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not say, and never did, that it was a crime for any person to be guilty of political partisanship.

Mr. BENNETT. It certainly is to be hoped that men shall be punished when their crime or wrong-doing is exposed. The Minister of Customs, then, as I said, turned the matter entirely over to the Prime Minister to make the best of what apparently is a bad case. But the people will not lose sight of the fact that the Minister of Customs has the two sets of political morality. He lays down the principle that in Ontario, after a prosecution—because it was a prosecution in the case of Mr. Galna, and not an investigation—he will dismiss the official; but, in the province of Quebec, where political interest has to be consulted, all other interests will be set aside and he will be guided by the advice of the Prime Minister, as he frankly said.

Now, coming to what the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said, he pleaded that it was natural for the father to take an interest in his son's election. Everybody, I think, would have been ready on that ground to excuse Mr. Lemieux, so far as one charge is concerned. But the most serious aspect of the case is the part he played in this contest. Now, as charged by Dr. Ennis, Mr. Lemieux was acting as scrutineer under the name of Lamirande, and his oath as the candidate's representative was taken under this false name. Of course, I do not know the particulars of this contest, but I understand that there was a man of that name who voted in that constituency.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, there was no one.

Mr. BENNETT. I have not before me a list of the electors of Gaspé; but, why should Mr. Lemieux have taken that name unless there was an elector of that name, because he would not be entitled to be an agent of the candidate unless he was an elector? Was Lamirande the name of a deceased man or of some man who lived in a distant part of the riding? The serious part of the case is that this gentlemen represented himself as Lamirande, and, according to the form of vote, he practically swore that that was his name. And yet it is laid down, practically, that the end justifies the means. The contention put forward by the government, if it were accepted, would be an evidence that political morality must be at a low ebb indeed. Now, what did the minister of Customs do? He knew, at the time of the promotion and increase of salary that was given to Mr. Lemieux, that this offence had been charged.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. BENNETT. No, I am wrong in that. But the Minister of Customs is in worse position than ever. This promotion was made on the 12th July, 1897, and the complaint does not come in until February, 1898. The minister knew that he had made the promotion and advancement of this officer against whom these charges were made. Was that not the time to investigate the case, and, if the charges were found to be true, to revoke what had been done in the way of advancing this official? Does the Minister of Customs lay it down as one of the working rules of the department, according to the Prime Minister's rule, that if he finds a collector of customs who for years has been a good, faithful servant, but afterwards finds him derelict, his failing is to be condoned, because, for years he was a good man? Men do not grow bad all at once. There must be a starting point in every case. But the Minister of Customs has been heard, and he washes his hands of the whole matter by saying that he would not have done what he did but for the Prime Minister.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I did not say that.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister (Mr. Paterson) will refer to-morrow to Hansard, and I think he will find that in the closing part of his remarks, he made the statement that the Prime Minister was consulted with, and, at his advice, the matter stood where it was.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I said that.

Mr. BENNETT. On that statement of facts, I think the Minister of Customs should have our sympathy, for by that he virtually admits that he is not strong enough to manage his department, that when a serious case like this arises he endeavours to divest himself of all authority and hand it over to the leader of the government. But, the offence is all the worse coming from the higher place. People will wonder now how we are to reconcile the Premier's words of to-night with the statement he made some three or four sessions ago, that when the government found any official who desired to participate in political contests they would let him indulge his wishes to his heart's content and would deprive him of his office. Here is an official who took part in an election and who, in doing so, committed an offence which, if it is held up to be commended, must argue a low state of morality in the whole country.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). I do not wish the House to assume from anything that I am about to say that I am one of those who are ready to condone the participation of public officials in elections. I hold strong views on that subject, all the stronger because I have had in my experience, an opportunity of seeing a good deal of that kind of thing. It seems to me that in this case Mr. Lemieux acted with considerable indiscretion; but I think it is a case upon which the House ought to look with leniency for the reasons given by the Prime Minister. The tie between father and son, I think, constitutes a reason for leniency in this case, but the long term of faithful public service of Mr. Lemieux entitles him especially to lenient consideration. I rose particularly in reply to my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). He stated that though a man has been in the service for a very long time, say thirty or forty years, the fact that he has been for so long a faithful servant constitutes no ground for leniency in case he should offend. I entirely disagree with him in that respect. I assert, and I think that the House will agree with me, that a civil servant who has faithfully performed his duty to the country for thirty or thirty-five years, and who, toward the end of his career commits what everybody must say, as in this case, was an indiscretion, he is entitled to some leniency. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that if a great number of civil servants in the city of Ottawa had been refused the leniency which hon. gentlemen are not willing to extend to Mr. Lemieux, many of those civil servants in this city would have been dismissed for partisanship. I have seen, in election after election, civil servants take the most prominent and offensive part in this very city. Yet they are in their places to-day, and so far as I am concerned, and so far as my colleague (Mr. Hutchinson) is concerned, they shall remain. I think I can say with positive assurance that I know of only one civil servant in Ottawa who has been dismissed for partisanship; yet I could name dozens, possibly hundreds of civil servants who would have been richly entitled to dismissal had they been treated with as much severity as hon. gentlemen opposite wish to extend to Mr. Lemieux. I agree that it was an indiscretion on the part of Mr. Lemieux to do as he has done, but I cannot see that he committed any criminal offence. The name he used does not appear to have been the name of anybody else, it is not so charged; and if Mr. Lemieux took any fancy name, or any name that did not belong to anybody else, that is certainly not personation, it is not perjury. The charge is not that he did anything else but represent his son at the polls. It seems to me that this is certainly a case calling for leniency, and that in view of the fact that Mr. Lemieux has served his country faithfully for thirty-five years, it would be a harsh thing to turn him out upon the streets for the indiscretion committed under these circumstances.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). This case seems to be very much graver than it has been presented, either from the ministerial benches or from this side. I think, to hear the speeches which we have heard here to-night from two ministers of the Crown, and one of them a Prime Minister, is one of the most painful things that could occur in the history of a great British colony. Let me say at once that I do not think it was fair, in either the Minister of Customs, or the Prime Minister, or the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Belcourt), to appeal to us as brother members of the member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux). I do not think it is fair, because it introduces an element into the discussion of this question that should not be introduced; and it was not fair because it does not lie with hon. gentlemen on these benches to make an appeal of that sort. For what have we seen in this House? We have seen hon. gentlemen—because we must call them hon. gentlemen—rise up in their places and without a shadow of foundation traduce the names of men against whose fair fame it was impossible to raise a blot; and the Prime Minister of Canada, who poses as such a perfect gentleman in these matters, sat there and gave it the sanction of his silence, or smiled the approval of semi-cowardice on the lie. Sir, it did not rest with those gentlemen to make that appeal.

Mr. BENNETT.

Now, let me state what occurred. A gentleman in the employ of this government goes down to Gaspé in 1896, he enters a polling booth, and he acts there as the agent of a candidate. Let me say en passant that he could not act as the agent of that candidate without having a power of attorney from him, and a power of attorney in the name under which he takes the oath and swears that that undersigned name is his name. We have then an hon. gentleman who stands high in all the churches, and who at one time expounded from a more elevated desk than that at which he now sits, who tells us that it was a small fault, it was a little thing; and he says that even if it was a serious thing and he condoned it, he was not his own master, the Prime Minister was the keeper of his conscience. The Prime Minister the keeper of his conscience! What a precious keeper of his conscience, and what a precious spiritual adviser that Prime Minister is; the right hon. gentleman, who is now known not merely in Canada but throughout the length and breadth from moral colour blindness, who does not see the distinction between right and wrong, in any case where politics are concerned. We saw the spectacle of the Prime Minister pleading like an advocate for a criminal in the dock, and telling us: I have no defence, but look at the relatives. We know what happens when an experienced advocate wants to plead for a criminal for whom there is no defence; he brings in the mother, or the wife, or the children, and he turns away the minds of the jury and the mind of the judge from the criminal and says: Look at these dear children, look at that dear wife, look at that happy household that will be left desolate if you convict this man. Fancy an appeal like that coming from the leader of a great party, a man who is at the head of this country at this moment, the keeper of its honour. I am not surprised, because we have had now for four years such recurring exhibitions of what I call moral colour blindness on the part of the right hon. gentleman that we need not be surprised at anything. But there is this consolation. Did any man ever see such a picture of a defeated and moribund government as was manifested by the Minister of Customs and subsequently by the Prime Minister? I said some years ago that the colour of death was in the face of that government. It is now in an acute moribund condition; and there is point in what an old Irish lady said a few days ago in the corridor of this building when we saw the portrait of the Prime Minister hung up on the wall with lights burning above. The daughter of the old lady said: 'Come and see Sir Wilfrid Laurier.' 'No, I won't go there' says the old lady, 'surely it is his political wake.' But, Sir, the colours on the face of the occupants of the Treasury benches here to-night are no less suggestive of a political wake than these lights above the portrait, which suggested the burning candles that are in certain parts incidental to a sad departure.

Now, Sir, we must not be governed by mere sentiments, we must not be too much impressed by the fact that a brilliant man who happens to be a member of this House, is related to this wrong-doer. What was the plea made for him by the Minister of Customs? He said: After such a length of time, our hearts are so delicate that we could not think of punishing him for anything that was done in 1896. About a year and eight months had elapsed and how could my sensitive heart punish him? Why, Sir, this government has done something equally atrocious. Let me give an illustration. A month or so ago I brought up here the case of a dismissal at the bidding of one of the colleagues of the hon. gentleman who has been galavanting on the banks of the Danube, and who is now coming home with the Minister of Public Works. It is a curious thing, Sir, to observe the special charge that providence takes of things connected with this government. Providence and physicians arrange that two gentleman shall get ill when it is most convenient that their places should be vacant in this House, and get well when they can return with safety, and the session is near its end, and there is no danger of parliamentary warrants. Now, they are spreading their wings across the Atlantic, and are about to reappear. At the bidding of one of these gentlemen, Mr. Gass, of Moosejaw, was dismissed a couple of months ago, four years after he was said to have been guilty of offensive partisanship. And the colleague of the Minister of Customs, the Postmaster General, with that kind of Ursa Major oleaginousness that characterizes him when he means to be peculiarly effective, declared that Mr. Gass was dismissed for offensive partisanship committed four years previously. But, a year and eight months after was too long time when the conduct of a man had to be taken in account who had been guilty of wrongdoing in their favour.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was Gass's offence?

Mr. DAVIN. Gass's offence was, or the allegation was, that he had attended a political meeting, and that he was supposed—it was about that—to sympathize with me. Mr. Speaker, I think when we have two ministers of the Crown, especially the right hon. Prime Minister, getting up here and declaring that this is a small thing, perjury and personation, we have a right to be astonished. The Prime Minister seems to think that if Lamirande was a fictitious name it would not be personation. Let me give the meaning of personation:

Personate: to assume the character of; to represent by a fictitious appearance.

Thus, it is personation, even if you assume a fictitious name. But, whether that gentleman assumed a fictitious name or whether he represented a defunct elector, or an absent elector named Lamirande, it is a trifle compared with the character of the act that he went there with authority from the candidate to commit when he took the oath under that name. It does not matter whether there was another man by the name of Lamirande or not. You have a criminal act, and we have the spectacle of the Prime Minister of Canada standing up and saying that this is only a venial thing that should be treated with leniency, and that we should not be too hard, that our feeling towards a colleague should make us look the thing over. How are we to know that in other matters he will have more moral backbone? In fact, we know that he has not got it. There is no moral backbone there. The right hon. gentleman, so quickly has this fatal weakness grown upon him, does not feel that reprobation when wicked things are done by his colleagues that he once professed, and now the misconduct of his colleagues has risen so high that it is overwhelming him and his government. The hon. Minister of Public Works had hardly got into office when he showed what he was, and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) was not warm in his place when he showed what he was. I have recently, from this desk, shown how he has behaved. If, at the beginning, the Prime Minister had adopted the maxim 'obsta principiis' we should not have had the spectacle that we see, of a government that four years ago were so unbrageous in their boundless confidence, believing that they would be in power for twenty years, and crowing violently in their confident anticipation of long-lasting power, like cockerels in the early dawn, and now they are like seventeen roosters in a shower, heads down and tails half-mast.

Mr. JOSEPH A. GILLIES (Richmond). Mr. Speaker, it must certainly have been refreshing to hon. members of this House to hear the tones of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), at such a late hour at night, more particularly, after having been in cold storage this afternoon, carefully keeping himself aloof from the debate that took place here, a debate in which he would have been called upon to give information to this House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I must deny that statement of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GILLIES. Then, I understand that the hon. gentleman was not in cold storage. I am very glad to hear it. The hon. minister, at all events, will not deny that when a matter was up this afternoon of very considerable importance, and that when the motion was pending before the House for several hours, preferred by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) against one of his colleagues, charging that colleague with grave negligence, and with having received goods of a certain spurious character, which were entered free of duty in this country by the order of his department, he was conveniently absent. The hon. minister will remember that in one particular paragraph in the charges framed by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier there was this one specifically set forth. Charge 17 is as follows:—

The substance brought in from the United States, as above stated, in Saratoga trunks, was detained by the customs officers for duty thereon, but under direction of the government it was allowed to pass without payment of customs dues.

The hon. minister knew that the debate was coming on this afternoon, and he religiously kept himself out of the House, knowing that questions would be put to him, and that information would be expected from him upon this point. But, we find him coming in at this late hour and showing a phase of political morality that I find difficult to reconcile with what I am told has been his past conduct as a local preacher in the district in which he lives. I do hope that the hon. gentleman, in the constituency that he represents, and in the particular territory in which he is supposed to be a powerful evangelist, will strictly avoid laying down as true doctrine the code upon political morality that he laid down here this evening. As far as I was able to gather his argument, it resolves itself into this: That the charge made by Dr. Ennis could not be entertained for two reasons: first, because Gaspé was far away and it would cost a good deal to have an investigation, and, secondly, because the charge was not made until after the expiry of eighteen months from the time that the deed was committed. I have yet to learn that there is any statute of limitation operating against the punishment of a crime. Mr. Lemieux was charged substantially by Dr. Ennis with having adopted the name of Mr. Lamirande while representing his son in the Magdalen Islands in the election held on June 23, 1896. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) must have known, and the hon. Minister of Customs must have known, that before Lemieux could be the agent or representative of the candidate in the poll, he had to have the written authority of the candidate appointing him, and he could not be sworn in as the agent or representative of that candidate until he had filed that authority with the deputy returning officer. If these charges are true—and we must assume they are, because there is nothing to contradict them in the slightest degree—then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) who represents Gaspé drew up the document appointing his father under an assumed name, or else the father took the name of his own accord and put in a false authority purporting to be signed by his son. There is no escape from one or either of these positions. That is a very serious offence in itself, and when we consider that the oath had to be taken by that man that his name was Lamirande, it becomes more serious, and then that man by that very fact was guilty of perjury. The very moment that was brought to the notice of the Minister of Customs it was his bounden duty to have investigated the charge. But the minister tells us that Gaspé was far away, and that it would be very expensive to hold an investigation. Well, Sir, I wish that distance had been a barrier to the rapacity of the Minister of Customs in that regard. I will call to his mind a case in my own county, the case of Mr. Rémi Benoit, collector of customs at the port of Arichat. A gentleman who for twenty years filled acceptably the position of collector of customs at the port of Arichat. A charge of partisanship was laid against that gentleman in 1897, not for any partisanship practised by him in the election of 1896, but for partisanship in the elections of 1891, and in the by-elections of 1892. And, Mr. Speaker, will it be believed, that upon charges preferred as having occurred in these two elections, Mr. Rémi Benoit's conduct was investigated by an officer sent by the Minister of Customs from here to Gaspé, some 600 miles further away than Arichat, and Mr. Benoit was dismissed from office, and himself and his helpless family thrown on the world, and poor Mr. Benoit had to leave the country.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GILLIES. No, I am not mistaken; I know all about it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am speaking with reference to the year. I think there must have been charges with reference to the election of 1896.

Mr. GILLIES. There were no charges in 1896, and none in reference to that year were investigated, and if you look at the report of your officer you will find that the charges were for alleged partisanship committed in 1891 and 1892. That case will show how unsubstantial are the reasons given by the minister for not having investigated the charges against Lemieux. Arichat is 600 miles further away than Gaspé, so distance in that case was not a barrier to my friend Mr. Benoit being dismissed from office. In the Lemieux case eighteen months elapsed before it came to the notice of the minister what Lemieux had done, and the minister tells us that the time which had elapsed was so long that it prevented an investigation, but in the case of Mr. Benoit, six years had elapsed and Mr. Benoit was dismissed.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. GILLIES. No, sir.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, I think so.

Mr. GILLIES. I am perfectly correct and the minister knows it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. My recollection of it is, and I speak subject to correction, that the gentleman himself admitted partisanship in 1896. I will not be positive, but I will look it up.

Mr. GILLIES. The minister's memory is at fault. I will modify the statement that I made that he knows it, and I will say that if he does not know it he ought to know it. The fact is that Mr. Benoit was dismissed for partisanship acknowledged by him to be committed in 1891 and 1892, six years before the investigation took place, but that remote time was no barrier to his dismissal, whereas in the Lemieux case eighteen months was a barrier to investigation. I was sorry to hear the statement and the manner of defence of the Prime Minister to-night. Since I came to this parliament I made it a point to look upon a Prime Minister as a gentleman who should guide this House in every way and more particularly in inculcating ideas of political morality. I cannot for the life of me understand his defence of the conduct of Lemieux. He stated in effect, that Lemieux had a son whom he loved very much running an election in Gaspé, and that Lemieux was justified in changing his name and swearing that his name was Lamirande. I regret to find that the Prime Minister should have adopted such a role. It is indefensible. Now, Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that this House cannot in any way condone the offence committed by that man Lemieux. To do so would be to countenance rascality of the worst kind. To do so would be to connive at the act of every rascal who would go to a poll and assume the name of any person and swear to it. To do so would be for us to go a step further than the machine which we are trying to suppress in the province of Ontario. We are all, I hope, anxious to put down corruption in its ugliest forms, and we have been this session endeavouring to pass a law that will suppress to some extent the frauds which have prevailed in elections in some parts of the Dominion, and would it not, therefore, be inconsistent for us to condone the offence of Lemieux and to endorse the action of the government in that regard? Now, Mr. Speaker, we would record our abhorrence of corruption in its most dangerous form, and trusting that I express the views of the House in that regard, I beg to submit the following motion, seconded by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper:

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof:—'on the 16th day of February, 1898, Dr. Ennis, of Grand River, Gaspé County, Quebec, by letter addressed to the Minister of Customs, made the following charges against Mr. H. A. Lemieux, then an employee and now an officer of Her Majesty's Customs, to wit :

I hereby solemnly charge Mr. H. A. Lemieux, formerly an employee of the Montreal customs office, and now assistant inspector of customs, under Mr. O'Meara, of Quebec, with having taken an active part in the electoral campaign of 1896 ;

I further declare specifically that the said Mr. H. A. Lemieux spent a part of the month of June, 1896, in Magdalen Islands, canvassing and working in the interests of his son, now member of the House of Commons for Gaspé County ;

I further declare that the above mentioned Mr. H. A. Lemieux, represented Mr. Rodolph Lemieux, M.P., at polling station No. 41, Basin, on Magdalen Islands, as the sworn representative or agent of his son, then a candidate for election to parliament, on the 23rd June, 1896 ;

I further declare again that during his stay on the islands aforesaid, Mr. H. A. Lemieux made himself known and acted under the assumed name of H. A. Lamirande or de Lamirande, and that his oath as representative at the poll was taken under this false name and subscribed to by this false appellation ;

I hereby further state that Mr. H. A. Lemieux has, since committing this offence against the spirit of the Civil Service Law, been promoted in the service, whilst other officials—guilty in a much lighter degree—have been punished and dismissed for 'political partisanship.'

Mr. Ennis in said letter declared that he was ready to produce sworn testimony to prove his charges, and then and thereafter repeatedly asked that an opportunity be granted him to substantiate the same.

That on various pretexts the Minister of Customs delayed decision until on August 9, 1898, he refused an investigation, alleging as his reason the great lapse of time between the alleged partisan's acts were said to have been committed and the time when the charges were preferred.

That so far from investigating the charges and punishing the wrong-doer, the Minister has continued the above mentioned H. A. Lemieux to be an Assistant Inspector of Customs, and has materially increased his salary.

That such action on the part of the Government tends to degrade the public service, and demoralize and corrupt the administration of public affairs.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker. I am not going to take up any length of time in further discussion of the matter. There is just one point that I want to emphasize. The position of the Minister of Customs, which was a painful one, and the position taken by the Prime Minister, which for Canada was a most humiliating one, have been most admirably set forth by my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). No language that I could use could more effectually, more truly, or more picturesquely portray the situation, and I will not attempt by any words of mine to add to the gravity of the situation as shown by him. But there is one point I want to emphasize—the lesson that this government has to-night taught to the public of Canada, the lesson that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Customs have taught to the civil service of this country. I am sorry that they have taught it. No more degrading, no more demoralizing position could have been taken by these two gentlemen considering the public service, and the honesty that it should form the basis of that service than these gentlemen have taken to-night. I am speaking earnestly ; I am speaking what I believe. And I cannot see how any honest man can stand up for that action. We are not simply doing our own private business here ; we are not simply employing a gardner, each one for his own private work. We are dealing with the public service of this country ; we are dealing with a service at the base of which perfect honesty must be required, whether perfect honesty can always be entirely and absolutely secured or not. And when a minister loses sight of the gravity of the question as concerning the public service of this country and makes his little childish plea that the father for his son, committed an indiscretion—I tell you again, Mr. Speaker, that it is not only wrong, but it is humiliating that it should be spoken by the Prime Minister of a country like this. I want to tell the Minister of Customs ; I tell it to him honestly ; I tell him because I believe it—that I have no confidence from this time forward in his administration of the Customs Department of this country. He has delivered himself, his conscience, his sense of right—all that should be the defence of the chief of a department for the honour of his service, into the hands of a subservient Prime Minister. Subservient to what ? A Prime Minister subservient to the call of sentiment, subservient to the feeling of party friendship, subservient to a sentiment (laudable enough in itself) which a man may have for his friends, but forgetful of the fact that he is the head of a government, and that his words teach a lesson to the public of this country, and to the civil servants of this country. Now, if the Minister of Customs can justify his retention of a man who is absolutely, in essence, a perjurer and a personator, in an office of responsibility, he can take that ground—he can go to the people with it—he can go to his conscience with it ; but I hold that no more harmful stroke could be administered to the integrity and health of the civil service of this country than that which the hon. gentleman has administered to-night. There may be other cases. If a man can do these things for his son, he can do them for another—he can do them for a friend. If a man will certify that his name is so and so when it is not, will go into a polling booth and make that declaration, and, at the end of it say 'So help me God.' and does it because he does not want it to be known who he really is—when a man will do that, he is not a man who ought to be a trusted officer of the Department of Customs. And the minister who can stand up in the face of to-day and can laugh and make light of that action in one of his officials ought not to be trusted at the head of a department like the Department of Customs of this country.

Sir, some will say this is harsh, and will say I am speaking as if I had no faults. I am not. Whether I have faults or not, whether the Minister of Customs has faults or not, we are dealing with the public service of this country, and we must act as judges, we must hew to the line. Now, what are the members who sit in this House on both sides of this House, going to do in the utterance of their opinion on this vote? Are they going to say to their electors and the people of this country: There is no such thing as honour required, no such thing as truth required in the public service; provided you have a twinge of sentiment, provided there is party advantage to be gained, you can play fast and loose with anything like honourable straightforwardness in official life in this country. If a man will do that to forward the interest of a friend, may he not do the same for his own more selfish interest, may he not do it in the execution of other duties which do not require him to use a false name, and make a false oath? Yet, this is the man who is kept in high position; this is the man who, the Minister of Customs says has committed only a venial indiscretion. And to every man in the employ of the government, from one end of Canada to the other, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Customs has read this lesson; go on, be corrupt; if only you can get on the warm side of the minister's heart, you will not be punished. Now, that is the simple fact. And what petty poor pleading was made by the Minister of Customs! He did not think it was right to punish a man because a year and three months had passed after the commission of the crime before it was brought to his attention. The hypocrisy of such a plea as that by a government that every day within the last year have been dismissing men from the service for partisan actions committed or partisans leanings shown in the election of 1896. The utter, disgusting hypocrisy! Aye, and worse the morality of it! Here is a question which has to be settled by each individual conscience for himself—are the members on either side of this House going to subscribe to that kind of civil service morality? If they are, let them vote one way; if they are not, let them vote the other. For my part, I think it is a crisis in the history of the public service of this country, and that this vote will have a far-reaching effect.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have just one word to say. It is most refreshing to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) preaching virtue and morality. The hon. gentleman, at last, has found his congenial role, that of the great apostle of morality—at least in words.

Mr. FOSTER. What does my hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) mean?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, what does my hon. friend mean? He has made an imputation against me, and I propose now to fight it out in this House with him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. His imputation is that I am immoral. Let him say it, if he dare. Let him be a man and not a coward. Let him make his statement and not a base insinuation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I am in earnest, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. So am I, and I ask the hon. member to respect the rules of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman tells us that he is in earnest, and we must accept his statement, as otherwise nobody would believe it. Well, I give him credit for being in earnest. He poses as an apostle of morality. Let us go back to no more than two or three years ago, when we took the position in this House that political partisanship should not be tolerated in civil servants, the hon. gentleman was the first to find fault with us. It was not to be tolerated, he said, that a man should be prosecuted for his political actions. But, the hon. gentleman poses as the apostle of morality to-day, he chides us at this time, and denounces us because, forsooth, we have not dismissed a political partisan. After having laid down the principle that we should not make dismissals for political partisanship, that we should grant absolute immunity to civil servants for their political acts, the hon. gentleman tells us that we should in every case dismiss a man for political partisanship, that there should be no exception, that the arm of the law should fall without any remission of the penalty. Now, the position which I take in this matter is this: Mr. Lemieux has been guilty of an indiscretion, let us say that he has been guilty of an offence. Let us say that he has been guilty of an act, which I am not here to defend, which on the contrary, I deplore as much as this apostle of virtue deplores it—perhaps not quite as much, because I cannot claim that superior virtue which the hon. gentleman claims; but I deplore it to the extent of my limited virtue. If Mr. Lemieux committed an offence, we thought that the circumstances were such that we could forgive him, because he had been an honest man all his life, because he is an honest man still, as I am not aware that a single reproach has ever been made against him, either in his private or official capacity. And if a man has committed an offence prompted by the feelings of a father, may we not condone it? Well, if we have ourselves been guilty of a crime in this instance, I for my part am willing to take the consequences. If, under the circumstances, instead of acting with the utmost rigour, instead of having bowels of compassion, we were to forget that, perhaps, a father may be tempted and prompted to do things which another man would not do, the hon. gentleman says that is an offence against morality, and he poses as a virtuous man. Well, Sir, I have nothing more to say. I am quite willing that this case should be laid before the people. I believe that the people have bowels of compassion. I believe that they will make some distinction between offences. The hon. gentleman says: Oh, you have no guarantee that this man who committed an offence on behalf of his son, would not commit it on behalf of a friend. What logic that is. A man does for a son something which may be reprehensible, and, therefore, he may do the same thing for another man. That is the logic of the virtuous man that we have before us. I say that this offence of Mr. Lemieux on behalf of his son is the only black mark there is against him, and for my part, at all events, I do not think that act should weigh against the whole conduct of a lifetime.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The resolution that is in your hands, recites that subsequently to this act of partisanship on the part of Mr. Lemieux, he had been promoted in the service. The hon. member heard the explanation, he has the documents before him, he knew the facts to be that that promotion was given to Mr. Lemieux months and months before the department had the first intimation that he was to be charged with anything of that kind. The hon. gentleman suppresses that fact. The hon. gentleman also sought to be offensive, he alluded to my religious views, to the positions that he said I took in church.

Mr. GILLIES. Will the hon. gentleman allow me one word. I ask the hon. gentleman, as a good and religious man, which I believe him to be, to reconcile his conduct in this case with the doctrine of political morality he has laid before the House today.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In the matter of religious views, I think the members of the House ought to recognize the right of any individual to hold such views as he conceives to be correct; and while I am cognizant of my own faults and shortcomings, and profess to be no better than any one else, I do not claim to be in the position of a local preacher as the hon. gentleman said. I do not claim to be impeccable. If I do speak in the religious body to which I belong, on occasions, to those who are connected with the same body, that is something, I think, which is not to be brought up in discussion in the halls of parliament. It is a small body to which I belong. We have our views, and they may differ in some respects from views held by others, but every one in that body holds that the utmost charity should be exercised towards every one. I recognize the rights of every man to follow his conscience in matters religious, without being dragged before the public or before parliament. If these hon. gentlemen think that in this matter I have done anything to bring discredit upon the profession I make, I am not cognizant of having done so.

When I answered that letter which was sent to me by the hon. member for Pictou, I stated that so far as the Customs Department was concerned, we had decided not to take cognizance of an offence alleged to have taken place a year and eight months previously. I did not speak for other departments; I believe my hon. colleague, the Minister of Inland Revenue, took the view that at the end of six months he would not entertain charges. The Customs Department took the view that charges that were not made up to that time should not be investigated. I said there might have been one or two that we proceeded with after that date, but they had been connected with others that had been going on already. That letter sent to the hon. member for Pictou was not singular, as other cases and other applications had been dealt with in the same way. Yet the hon. gentleman tries to make out that I was treating this case differently from others, and that the length of time that had elapsed, I was urging as an excuse for taking no action. With reference to the other charge which the hon. gentleman made, I have already stated that I consulted my colleagues about it, and they did not see any crime in it, taking the same position as myself. I was the more inclined to take that view, believing that if it were a crime, the court was open to the aggrieved party, and he could have prosecuted Mr. Lemieux, but he did not do it, and for one year and eight months, he did not even make a complaint. In his letter he says that were it not that others had been dismissed through the instrumentality of Mr. Rudolphe Lemieux, he would not have pressed this case further. I did not look upon the act as one of political partisanship, but rather as the act of a father on behalf of his son. If it were all as represented there it was partisanship; it was the partisanship of a father for a son more than political partisanship. It was not exercised in the city of Montreal, as has been pointed out, but there is the natural feeling of the father towards his son. And I can understand him, as the Prime Minister said, going down there on his holidays. His holidays were not given to him by me. I was not at the head of the department, I was not in the government, but I can understand him going down there under the circumstances and taking an interest in the election so that he was led into it taking a part in it. I do not think that it was inconsistent with the principles to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, in dealing with this question, while you could not approve of it, while I have not approved of it, and while you regret that it should have taken place to take the action which has been taken in regard to this case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, the views that have been expressed from this side of the House I share in their entirety, and deplorable as was the position of the government before the hon. member for York. N.B., (Mr. Foster) spoke, the anger and sneers of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), I think, are more deplorable still. Here, we have an admitted case of fraud, of dishonesty, of deception and of misconduct on the part of an officer wholly outside and apart from any question of offensive partisanship at all. Putting that aside altogether we have this man, holding a very responsible position in the public service, and when this question excited comment and indignation from this side of the House the result is nothing but excuses for the culprit, nothing but palliation for the wrongdoer, confessing, as his defenders do, the wrongs, and then abuse, sneers and insinuations thrown at those men who dare to stand up and say that the public will not tolerate such things. I think the condition of affairs is most critical. We have had charges in this House, and we believe that in some parts of the public service there is a fearful state of rottenness. But how are these wrongs to be righted when we find that the Prime Minister of this country has only abuse for those people who desire to reprehend men whom he confesses have done those things which can only be characterized as dishonest acts, and when they are retained in positions of trust? The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) felt the odium and weakness of his position. He never could hold his pen long enough to cover the charges which were made against this man. He stopped at the words political partisanship and endeavoured to overlook altogether the dishonesty that is admitted. But, when he was brought face to face with the public on this matter he threw the whole thing upon the Prime Minister. He put the whole load of responsibility on him. He knew that the man has no right to be a civil servant, has no right to hold a position of trust in the service of this country, that it is disgraceful to the service to retain him in that position, and knowing that, he concluded his observations, by saying that he had taken the record to the Prime Minister and left him to deal with all outside of the question of political partisanship. As to the other matter he was informed that no crime had been committed. A man has to be indicted and prosecuted, has to be put behind bars before an offence in the public service can be considered as committed! Therefore, a man will understand from the hon. Minister of Customs and from this incident, here, to-night, that so long as he does not come within the lines of the Criminal Code, so long as he is not arrested and shut behind the doors of the penitentiary, he may lie and cheat and defraud, he may do all that is dishonest and disgraceful and hold his position and expect to be promoted and advanced. The hon. Minister of Customs said once or twice that the promotion of this man took place anterior to his reception of this charge. What difference does that make? Did he interfere with this man's position after he got the charge? Did he reconsider the question whether this man should be promoted in the public service? It would not have made a particle of difference, from the defence which we heard here to-night, whether the charge was made before or after the promotion was made. So, we stand face to face with a government that countenances dishonesty in the public service, that has nothing but abuse for those men who endeavour to prevent it and root it out. Perhaps it is a waste of time to bring forward charges in connection with the administration of the Yukon. These men have encouragement to do everything that is dishonest, tricky and deceitful because they find that men doing these things holding high, responsible fiduciary positions are rewarded by the government and defended upon the plea that the culprit, in this case, was a father. It is a waste of time really to say more in commentary upon this flimsy, disgraceful defence which has been offered by the Treasury benches.

House divided on the amendment (Mr. Gillies).

FREIGHT RATES ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. H. F. McDougall (Cape Breton). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring a matter to the attention of the House that I consider of sufficient importance to justify me in presenting to the notice of hon. gentlemen, even at this very Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

late hour. I should like very much to see the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) in his seat; he was there a few minutes ago. I wish to refer to a matter connected with the management of the Intercolonial Railway. About last August, I approached the management of the Intercolonial Railway for rates on certain material which I was about tendering for supplying to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, at Sydney, who had advertised for a quantity of material for putting in the foundation of the great work they are now establishing at the town of Sydney. As I thought it was my right to do, like any other man, I went to the management of the railway and asked for rates on several thousand car-loads of this material, consisting of stone, sand and gravel. After some correspondence with the general manager and with the general freight agent, I was given a rate, and on that rate I tendered for the supply of a quantity of material, to be continued during the progress of the work. In order to enable me to place that material on the government railway, I was obliged to build sidings and spurs from the point where the material was, to the railway and connecting with the railway. It is usual for the Intercolonial Railway management to build sidings for the convenience of shippers by that road, as is the custom. I understand, on all railways, but, when I applied for the building of these sidings, and guaranteed that I was to furnish the road with the carrying of a large quantity of this material, I was given to understand that I would have to put these sidings in at my own expense, that is, the grading and the supplying of the ties necessary. I was informed that I would be given the rails by the Intercolonial Railway, provided I made a deposit equal to the value of those rails with the Receiver General. I consented to these conditions, and I proceeded with the building of these sidings at my own expense, and deposited the money equal to the value of the rails as was required. A great portion of this work of putting in sidings, and so on, was done during the winter, and just as I was called upon by the company to whom I was furnishing the material, the necessity arose, from time to time, for putting in additional sidings and so on, and the same rule was continued. I put in some six or seven sidings at a cost of about $2,500 for grading and ties, and at a cost of $1,540 for rails, previous to the 1st of May last. In the month of February, I made application for the privilege of putting a siding in at a particular point, where I wanted to load about a thousand car-loads of sand. I waited and pressed for a reply from the department or from the management week after week, the material, in the meantime, being urgently called for by the people with whom I was under contract to supply it. I was not getting an answer. I was told that one reason why I was not getting an answer was, that the management did not have rails at their disposal to enable me to put the siding in. I secured a car-load of new rails in another place, and I communicated to the general manager that I had them at my disposal, and asked him for authority to allow me to connect my siding with the government railway, stating that I would relieve them of the necessity of supplying the rails. I was refused that privilege, and it took me from February until May 1 to get a decided answer from the general manager, and that answer was to the effect that they would not allow me to put my own rails in, but that I would have to deposit $470 with the Receiver General before they would allow me to put a track down. I made a deposit, and while it would not take more than three or four days to do the work the government had to do in connecting the siding of the railway, it took a month before that work was done. But that was not all. The rates at which I undertook to carry out my contract last fall were changed, I understand, a few days ago. I had a telegram here the day before yesterday from one of the gentlemen to whom I was shipping my material, saying that without receiving any notice from the railway, in one case he was asked to pay a 50 per cent higher rate on the material, and in another case an 80 per cent higher rate than he was paying before. I telegraphed the general manager at Moncton and I received his reply. He called my attention to a telegram he had sent me when I was requested to make the deposit of $470 in payment of rails, stating that it was understood then that the rates were to be increased, and that the Department of Railways at Ottawa would not consent to put any more sidings in unless a certain rate was charged at least; but there was no limit the other way. The rate that is charged on the material I am shipping over the railway to-day is from 50 to 80 per cent higher than the rate agreed upon, when I undertook to do this business over the road. From the time I began shipping over the road up to the present, I shipped about 2,500 car-loads, and the railway earned something over $15,000 in freight at those rates. What I complain of is, that these rates should be unreasonably increased. They are out of proportion to the rates that are imposed on all other business, and more than that, the influence of the government and the friends of the government was exercised with the company to whom I was delivering the most of this material, to get them to discontinue buying material from me. Having leased one of the quarries, from which I was operating myself, having leased that quarry from me with the understanding that it was to be worked until the completion of the foundations that required material, the company went to a great deal of expense to enable them to work that quarry and to ship a large quantity of stone from the quarry, but the interference of the friends of the government, with the knowledge of some one connected with the management of the railway, was to the effect that the company were given to understand that if they concentrated their work of drawing material at some other points than those points from which I was operating, that they would give them a more satisfactory railway service. During the whole time from last September up to the present I have been unable to get half the car service I required, and instead of shipping 2,500 car-loads or thereabouts, and instead of the railway earning about $15,000, it should have carried twice the quantity and earned twice the amount. While I admit that there were cases in which the railway management could not have given me the service as promptly and fully as I required it, there were circumstances in which incidents of the weather and accidents interfered. There were cases in which I know that those who had to do with the management of the Intercolonial Railway tried to hamper the business in which I was engaged and prevent it being carried on. Day after day I was waiting at considerable expense for the service which they could have given and which it would not have put them out to give. It may be contended, possibly, on behalf of the government by the hon. Minister of Finance, who took a hand in this matter from the beginning, who had made protests against the Intercolonial Railway management giving me such facilities over the road which would enable me to do this business—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What does the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I say that the hand of the Minister of Finance was active in finding fault with the management of the Intercolonial Railway because certain alleged concessions were given to me to do this business.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not what the hon. gentleman said. He said I had interfered and protested against the railway authorities giving him any facilities for doing business. I want to say that there is absolutely no foundation for the statement.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am glad to get the hon. gentleman on record. One of the contentions made against me was that I was getting too low a rate. Is it not a fact that the minister complained of that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it not a fact that he and his friends approached the management of the railway and found fault with them because they had allowed me to do business over the railway under such favourable conditions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. I heard complaints made that other people could not get rates on the railway as favourable as those granted to the hon. gentleman ; but I made no complaint of the rates he got at all, and I do not know at the present moment whether they were fair and reasonable or not. I never heard anything about the matter except that the people complained that the railway authorities were giving the hon. gentleman favours.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that so far from giving me favours—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not say they gave them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. While they compelled me, in order to do my business, to expend from $3,000 to $5,000 in building sidings, they went in the last three months—and I can understand they did it on the recommendation of the hon. gentleman—and put in a siding at the request of James Macdonald, M.P.P. for Inverness, at a point known as River Dennis, without Macdonald paying anything for grading or ties or rails, while within a quarter of a mile I put in a siding at an expense of $5,000 at a point where I have a saw-mill, and was made to pay every dollar of the cost of the siding out of my own pocket.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a question for the minister.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Just a few days ago, when I was putting in a siding at a cost of nearly $1,000 at a place where I was assured by the management of the railway they would have put in that siding promptly the men who were doing the work were taken off the ground. I was obliged to put men on the work, although I was paying for the grading, the ties and the rails, but they delayed the work from time to time until they could put their own men on to join the siding to the government railway. They took those men away to build a siding for one of their political friends who was not paying a cent for rails or ties, but for whom the work was done at the expense of this country. While I required from ten to fifteen cars a day, I do not think two cars would be shipped from the other siding in a month. Does discrimination like that receive the support of the Minister of Finance? I want to show the hon gentlemen the rates I got when I began my work last fall. Although I call it my work, it was a work in which the community were interested. I employed from 100 to 200 men along the line of railway. It was a work in which every man in Canada was interested, because I was affording business for the railway. There is no man in Canada who has not a right to do business over that railway, and there is no man in Canada against whom the management should discriminate, even though he sits on this side of the House and votes against the minister. Any man, no matter if he is an Indian, has a right to get fair-play from the management of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, the rates ran from $4 a car up to $8. The distances were short—twenty miles in one instance, twenty-five in another, thirty in another, and forty-five miles was the longest distance over which a car of this material was hauled. Frequently I made calculations of the money earned by the road, and I could not come to any other conclusion than that the road was making a good business out of it, and I have the opinion of others to back me up in that. The lowest rates given to me—not the rates imposed now—was $4 a car, and up to $8 or $9, according to weight of car. If I were getting the same rate as the Intercolonial Railway is charging on coal from Spring Hill to Montreal, I would only have to pay $1.20. If I got the same rate as is charged from Sydney to Feronia in the county of Pictou, I would only have to pay $1.70 instead of $4. If I were getting the same rate that the railway is charging from Spring Hill to Montreal, I would only have to pay $1.53. If I got the same rate as is charged from Sydney to Pictou, I would have to pay $3.57.

Mr. FIELDING.

Everybody who knows about the classification of freight on a railway, knows that it is based largely upon the value of the material carried. When we deal with common field stone, broken stone, sand or gravel, we get a class of freight than which nothing can be much cheaper. Coal is an article of greater value. If, in transit, a car of coal is damaged or lost, the railway becomes liable for the damage of it—say $50 for the car. A large quantity of this stone was worth, loaded on the car, 17½ cents a ton, and for this the government was getting 30 cents a ton for a haul for a short distance—and, remember, the sidings and facilities for shipping were provided at the expense of the shipper, and the class of cars used is the common flat cars, not special cars such as are required for the transport of coal. Now, take the article of flour, which is a valuable class of freight. For the hauling of a car of flour from Montreal to Halifax, Sydney or North Sydney, the railway charges $52 to $55. But, if they applied the same rate to this coal as is applied to the stone to which I have referred, instead of charging $52 a car-load, they would charge $216 to $240 per car. And the value of the stone to be replaced by the railway if it lost, is $4 or $5, while the value of the flour is $500. I know that it will be said that reduced rates must be given for the long haul. But is not the discrepancy too great, particularly when you consider the difference in value? Now, I could occupy the time of the House for a much longer time detailing the discriminating treatment given me by the railway authorities, but I do not wish to do so at this late hour of the night. But I am charging the management of the railway now with having discriminated against the business I was giving to the road, first, in not giving the ordinary facilities for connecting with the road; then, in not giving me a proper service, then, in overcharging me in freight rates; and, lastly, in taking unfair advantage of me in the middle of my business—with the result of loss of business by the railway, loss of business by myself, and loss of employment by from 100 to 200 men—employment at a point convenient to their homes. And all this for political reasons and to meet political ends. That is my charge, and I am able to prove it out of the mouths of a number of people who are personally conversant with the game that was played. And I have no redress; the management do as they please, they charge as they like. I had a telegram day before yesterday from one of my customers to the effect that the man for whom the material was shipped could not take it because of the advanced rates. I had a telegram about the 6th of April, while I was here in Ottawa, from the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, the company that had rented the quarries to which I referred a moment ago, saying that owing to the inefficiency of the railway service they were obliged to discontinue operations at the quarry where they had gone to the expense of providing means of loading from 25 to 30 cars per day, which would have furnished excellent business for the railway carrying this material to Sydney. All this business is destroyed by the management. And when I speak of the management, I speak of the management from Ottawa. This is where the harm is done. This is where the instructions come from, to please the demands of party heelers—I cannot give them any better name—who are to-day running the Intercolonial Railway. The orders of these people, it seems, must be obeyed. In order to facilitate carrying on my work during the winter between different points, one eight miles distant and one two miles distant from a railway station, I decided to build a telephone line. I put up the posts and made arrangements with the telephone company for the wires and necessary instruments. This improvement would have been a convenience to the railway as well as to myself. But what was done? I went to the station master, who knew that I was putting up the telephone posts, and spoke to him about where the instrument should be put in the station. He said: I do not think I would care to allow you to put an instrument in the station without getting the permission of the general manager. I wrote to the general manager and got a reply to the effect that he could not give me permission without communicating with Ottawa. If he communicated with Ottawa, I am yet without the use of the telephone and without any reply from the Ottawa authorities, though I have already undergone practically all the expense of providing it. Imagine, Mr.

Speaker, this treatment of a man who was giving that business to the railway, and proposed to furnish an improvement which would be a convenience to the railway as well as to himself. Now, I would like my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to get up and give some reason for this conduct on the part of the government, because I bring it right home to the government. They have got their petty officials and their higher officials. I do not know who controls the management of the railway, but I know that it is at the wish of the party heelers not connected with the railways at all that this is being done.

But I must not forget to speak of my operations in September of last fall. When I had shipped about 300 car-loads I found that over 200 car-loads were overcharged. I made a claim to the general management for a refund of the money. I got part of it and the other part it still unpaid. But hon. gentlemen will be surprised to hear what I have to say, and which took place only a few days ago, before a final settlement of this claim could be brought about. The management of the branch of the service at Moncton which has charge of investigating claims of this kind, wrote me through the station agent on the Intercolonial Railway, asking me to strike off a certain car numbered so and so, alleged to have been shipped on such a day, because they had no record of it. Why, Sir, I have a record of it, and my consignees returned the car to me and paid for it. I made a claim against the railway management for the overcharge on that car, along with the 200 other cars, and I am without a settlement to this day. That is the way the business of the railway is conducted. I have still to adjust charges on 400 or 500 cars with the management of the railway at the present date, some of these charges running since last September. On some of my first shipments made last September, the freight charges to the town of Sydney were more than the value of the material delivered in Sydney. This was due to the indifference and carelessness of the staff doing business on behalf of the railway at Sydney. When I spoke to the station agent I was put off month after month, all on account of the mistakes of the agent and the managers generally. When I went for a settlement with my consignees and found the returns that they had for the material I was delivering, when I found that cars that contained thirty tons were returned by the railway at only twenty—and I can produce their own handwriting admitting that a mistake was made; and when I found fault that the station agent was careless in doing his business, his plea was: Well, anybody will make a mistake. In the presence of the superintendent I told that young man, whose wages the people were paying, that if he was in the employ of any business man who had any care for the reputation of his business, he would kick him out of his office as quickly as he would a bundle of straw, he would not allow him to have anything to do with his business—I made that statement in the presence of the superintendent and not a word of reprimand was uttered to this agent, nor apology to me. He has been allowed to go on with his misconduct to the present day. Some time afterwards a change took place and another man was put in charge, which brought about considerable improvement, but this young man of the mistakes is there yet, and the mistakes are still going on. I cannot get a return of the weights without asking several times for them. They charge me with the weights, and I have to fight with the management before I can get a return of the weights or charges. That is my complaint to the House, and I hope the House will pardon me for making it, because it is a matter that concerns myself. But it does not concern myself alone, it concerns this House and this country who have an interest in this railway that is used for this nefarious purpose by the party heelers throughout the country. I make this complaint in the interest of the people who were getting the employment that my business was giving to them; I make it in the interest of the work that was being delayed for want of the material I was under contract to supply. I complain of the treatment that is being accorded to me and that is destroying my business by an arbitrary, and unreasonable rate, a discriminating rate, a prohibitive rate. I say now that the charges made for carrying material is more than I was getting for the material delivered after paying freight last season.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). With about nine-tenths of what the hon. gentleman says I am not acquainted. I know absolutely nothing about it, I am not supposed to know anything about it, it does not relate to my department, and that being the case I do not propose to discuss it. But, I am bound to tell the hon. gentleman that I am hardly able to assume that there is much foundation for what he says, because in so far as I do know about what he has been talking of, I know that he has been guilty of a flagrant misstatement of facts as affecting myself; and I argue, not unreasonably, that if in a matter in which I do know something the hon. gentleman has made a gross misstatement, then I may reasonably assume that he has not been more particular in dealing with other things of which I know nothing.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that any statements I have made are not in accordance with the facts? I make my statements on the responsibility of my position as a member of this House, and I will swear to them, and I know hundreds that will swear to them.

Mr. McDOUGALL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend might be willing to swear to them. I prefer to hope that he would not, because that would be a reflection on his character which I would be unwilling to make. The hon. gentleman made a statement almost in the beginning of his speech in reference to myself to which I immediately took exception, a statement which will be found on the Hansard; he made the statement that he was able to show that I had interfered with the railway officials to prevent him obtaining ordinary facilities for carrying on his business. I interrupted him and said the statement was unfounded. I challenge him now to maintain that statement. I challenge him if he has a shadow of foundation for the statement, to make it known. I ask the hon. gentleman to give the authority upon which he made that statement, because he ought not to have made it in this House unless he had the authority. I have a right to ask him now to tell me the source of his information. I tell the hon. gentleman that I never heard of those transactions except in the way to which I have already alluded, namely, that I heard a complaint in a public place, among a lot of people, against the railway management, that they were showing the hon. gentleman undue favour and that other people could not get the same privileges that were given to him. I said at once I did not believe it. I said I believed the railway officials were doing what was fair and just by all. I told the parties who complained that I thought they were unjust to the railway officials; and while I knew nothing whatever of the transactions of the hon. gentleman with the railway, I took the ground, as I was bound to do, that the railway officials were managing their business in a businesslike way, and that whatever they gave the hon. gentleman they gave it in a fair businesslike way. Therefore, I declined to fall in with the general complaint against the railway officials.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did the hon. gentleman take any steps to ascertain whether those complaints were founded?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I never believed they had any foundation, therefore it was not necessary for me to go any further. I stated to the parties at once that I did not believe it, and I do not believe it now. I take it for granted that the railway authorities dealt with the hon. gentleman in a businesslike way, and I take it for granted that the other people who were complaining would also be dealt with in a businesslike way. Wherever there are two or three people dealing with the railway authorities there is always a disposition on the part of A to say that B is being granted favours. I cannot myself say what foundation there is for the hon. gentleman's statement in regard to one man getting a siding for nothing, and another man getting a siding for which he has to pay. I take it for granted that whatever rules are laid down by the Railway Department as to the terms upon which sidings are granted at one point and another are enforced in a business way and equally to all. I do not intend to go into this matter, but the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will be able to meet the arraignment of the hon. gentleman, and I have no doubt that if the hon. gentleman had given him notice that he was going to bring up this case the hon. minister would have remained and would have been able to deal with the question. I do not attempt to deal with it now, as I confess I have no knowledge of the facts of the case. I am perfectly satisfied that it will be found upon investigation that the statement of the hon. gentleman is not well-founded. We know that in railway rates there are mysteries, and that we get one rate for one section and another rate for another section simply to meet some special condition that may exist, but when you come to look into the matter there will be found good reasons for these rates. I have no doubt it will be found upon investigation that whatever has been done by the Department of Railways and Canals has been done in the interest of business, and in the absence of information to the contrary, I would be prepared to assume that the statement which the hon. gentleman makes is wrong. The hon. gentleman will have another opportunity to bring this matter up again, when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will be able to give the hon. gentleman an answer to his statement.

YUKON—10 PER CENT ROYALTY ON GOLD OUTPUT.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to bring a matter before the House, but, as it is now nearly half-past one, if the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) thinks it is time to adjourn, I will be very glad to take another opportunity. If, however, the right hon. gentleman wishes to go on, I will be glad to go on. About a week ago I sent notice to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that at the first opportunity on going into supply I wished to bring to his attention and the attention of the government a matter connected with the Yukon. I refer to the 10 per cent royalty which is now collected on gold mined in that country. There is a general feeling amongst business men in British Columbia and amongst mine owners and miners in the Yukon territory that the 10 per cent royalty which is now obtained by the government in order to get a revenue out of that country works most unsatisfactorily, and that another arrangement might be made which would be much fairer than the 10 per cent royalty which is now collected.

The matter was brought before the Vancouver Board of Trade some time ago by Mr. R. P. McLennan, a gentleman who has large business interests in Vancouver and in the Yukon territory, and who is au fait with all the conditions now prevailing in that country. Instead of explaining the matter, I think that I could not do better than read what he said in addressing the Vancouver Board of Trade on the 25th of April last. He said:

Mr. President,—In moving the resolution asking for the abolition of the royalty of 10 per cent as at present levied on the output of gold in the Yukon, and in lieu thereof establishing a government assay office in Dawson for the purchase of gold dust, and making liable to confiscation any gold being taken out of the country without the appointed fees being paid thereon, I wish to call your attention to a few points in connection therewith. At the beginning of the Klondike gold fever, the merchants of Seattle, with commendable shrewdness and foresight, petitioned their government at Washington to establish an assay office at Seattle for the purchase of gold as it came from the Yukon. Their government was prepared to give the merchants credit for knowing what would benefit their country, and not only granted their request, but made the assay office certificates payable either in Seattle or at other cities in the United States, as desired, without any charge for exchange. The results have exceeded their expectations, for Seattle, particularly, has been, and is now, being built up by the immense trade resulting from the millions of dollars' worth of gold which annually passes us by on its way to the United States assay office there, where it is exchanged for money, which in turn is exchanged for goods in that city, carried past us again in American steamers to Skagway en route to Dawson. As the Yukon produces nothing but gold, and is an immense consumer, and as over 90 per cent of the goods used there are brought to this coast from the east, the farmers, merchants and manufacturers of eastern Canada may have some idea of the millions of dollars which are lost to them at present. A year ago the provincial government endeavoured to aid in diverting this trade by guaranteeing the assay certificates of an office established in this city and one in Victoria. Owing to necessary charges for exportation of the gold and exchange, these certificates are at a disadvantage compared with Seattle assay values. But even were our assay offices on a par with Seattle, we then would not get the gold and consequent trade, because fully 75 per cent of those coming out with gold dust are Americans who hail from Seattle, and make it their headquarters. These men, when coming down from Dawson, will wait at Skagway two or three days longer for an American boat sailing direct to Seattle, in preference to taking a British boat for a British Columbia port.

Gold dust can be sold in Dawson, but at such a discount from its real value, that the expense of taking a trip out to the coast is paid for by the difference obtained by selling it to the Seattle assay office. The Seattle merchant owes the Canadian government a debt of gratitude in policing the Yukon River so thoroughly that the risk from loss in taking gold out is reduced to the vanishing point. Where the dust is exchanged there the money is spent for the Yukon miner or trader does not trouble looking around for low prices. Were an assay office established by our government in Dawson where gold dust could be exchanged for currency, there would be no inducement for the miner or trader to leave Dawson. Our commercial travellers would then find the merchant in Dawson, and easily wrest the trade from the Seattle jobbing-houses, as we have already done in the Kootenay country.

Now, to refer to the royalty of 10 per cent which the government has placed upon the gold output of the Klondike, there may have been some justification for so doing. According to early reports of persons from that district it appeared that all that was necessary was a shovel to dig the gold out with, and enough buckets to carry it away in, and no one would object to paying 10 per cent for the privilege of and protection in so doing. And as the government were going to an unknown expense in governing and protecting the people—nine-tenths of whom were foreigners—they would have laid themselves open to censure had they fallen short in their receipts and been compelled to tax the people of the Dominion for their mistake.

Notwithstanding the crude, unfair and unjust manner in which this tax is levied, and by which the whole amount of the royalty is obtained from a comparatively few miners, yet the Yukon has more than paid for itself, and has $200,000 to its credit at Ottawa. Such being the case, it is time a change was made, the tax reduced and levied equitably. The government announces that the output of gold for 1899 in the Yukon was $16,900,000. These returns were obtained, not from the official records, but from statistics furnished by the Seattle and San Francisco assay offices. We can easily account for another million in amounts that were taken to other countries for assay, manufactured into jewellery, and remaining in circulation in Dawson. That is $17,000,000. The exemption of $5,000 on claims producing over that amount would not amount to $2,000,000, so that the government should have collected 10 per cent of $15,000,000, which is $1,500,000. They collected $730,000, or less than 50 per cent. Now, who paid this $730,000? It was, first, the honest man from conscientious motives; secondly, the stock companies who make a point of complying with the laws of the land; thirdly, the mine-owner who may be in the hands of the bank, and is not allowed to take any chance of confiscation of property. The balance pay little or much, as they please—mostly little—for we see that over 50 per cent of the gold escapes paying royalty. No inspector in this world can go up the creeks and tell by the look of a man's mine or dump how much gold he has taken or will take out. How absurd, then, to follow such a practice and impose such a tax, which results in engendering hatred amongst the people of the Yukon for everything Canadian, and places a premium of 10 per cent upon rascality and perjury. I have myself seen $4,000 washed up from a few yards of dirt, and who could tell the difference? A mining man of repute told me he knew a man who washed up $250,000, and swore to $9,000. And unless the government placed an army of men equal to the Canadian South African contingent, they could not prevent it.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that it is not every one who is mining that can wash $4,000 out of a few yards of dirt. The Klondike gold-fields are the richest in the world. Marvelously rich though they are, they are similar to every other field yet discovered in that it costs from $5 to $10 for every dollar mined. The expense of finding the paystreak, the exorbitant cost of supplies of all kinds, transportation, labour, fuel, &c., and the trying circumstances under which the work has to be carried on, accounts for the estimate that where five men out of one hundred make either a competency or a fortune, the remaining 95 do not quit even, or lose their entire capital. Yet the wealth of the world is increased at their expense. Who then gets the gold that these miners dig out? It is the bankers, brokers, the lawyers, the merchants, traders, transportation companies, packers, saloon-keepers, gamblers and the Ottawa treasury. The miner leads a hard life, and is entitled to every cent he gets. Is it any wonder then that he becomes discouraged and disgruntled with a country and a people who not only make him liable for his pound of flesh, but insist upon payment of it unless he prefers to perjure himself and risk having his claim confiscated? Tax the miner sufficiently, and he will soon quit, and with him goes the royalty and revenue of every kind, leaving the country a howling wilderness. Encourage and make it pleasant for him and the country will develop and trade and revenue increase.

One thing that would do more than any other to bring this about—one that would establish a better feeling toward Canadians, promote trade and obtain the necessary revenue for the administration, would be to tax the gold as it leaves the country instead of the miner who digs for it.

I have shown you, I trust satisfactorily, that the gold leaves the Yukon by a beaten path to the United States assay offices at Seattle and San Francisco, and is spent there largely by the people so bringing it, depriving us of millions of dollars' worth of trade belonging to us. Also that the present royalty tax in the Yukon is unfair and distasteful to the miner and prejudicial to Canadian trade interests. It is the duty of the government to encourage the miner in developing the country, and assist the merchants, manufacturers and farmers of the Dominion in obtaining full control of the trade of a country which is our own. This can be done at the present time with satisfaction to all concerned and complete recompense to the government for their outlay. How? Simply by abolishing the present 10 per cent royalty, establishing an assay office at Dawson—the fountain-head—buying all the gold presented thereat, paying for the same with Canadian bank notes and deducting sufficient to pay royalty, maintenance, transportation and insurance on the gold.

If any one wished to take his gold out, he would have to get it sealed at the assay office, and pay the charges just the same. The result would be that every one with gold would sell it in Dawson, and on coming outside would have no inducements to pass the British Columbia cities, but having Canadian notes and drafts would be drawn to Canadian ports, where their money would be received at par. It would incidentally leave the Seattle and San Francisco mints with a freer hand to cope with the Cape Nome output. Such an act would have the effect of putting gold dust out of circulation as a medium of exchange in Dawson, for the loss in handling dust as such is estimated at all the way from 5 to 15 per cent. Such being the case, instead of a miner feeling the tax a burden, he would take his gold from the mine to the assay office, and receiving currency for the same would be saving a percentage in using it in purchasing goods in place of using gold dust for that purpose. Now that the government officials and others are established in Dawson, the cost of maintaining them must be very much less from now on than formerly. Perhaps a revenue of half a million from the gold would be sufficient. It is estimated that on account, chiefly, of improved methods of working, the output of gold this year will amount to $25,000,000. Two per cent of that would yield the half million required for revenue. I understand one-half of 1 per cent was paid last year on a large shipment of dust from Dawson to Seattle to cover transportation and insurance. Another half per cent would more than cover all charges for assay equipment and maintenance. Thus, 3 per cent, if collected equitably, would do as much as the 10 per cent now sought to be levied but evaded. The whole charge should certainly not exceed 5 per cent, and if that amount is charged, then in addition to exchanging the gold dust for currency at full value, it should be optional with the owner of the gold whether he receives the currency in Dawson or have it made payable, say in four or five of the principal cities in Canada, without any extra charge whatever. This latter might be arranged between the government and the banks now in Dawson without doing the latter any injustice. It would largely tend to bring the owners of these drafts or certificates to Canadian cities to get the same cashed. The merchants of the coast in British Columbia have overcome great obstacles in obtaining the trade we now have with the Yukon, and a great deal of it has been done at very little profit. We are prepared to make strenuous efforts to get the whole of it if placed on an equal footing with our competitors as indicated, but not only should the merchant be assisted, but the prospector and miner be relieved of his burdens, and be encouraged and aided at every point and in every respect.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the able report that was presented to the Vancouver Board of Trade by Mr. McLennan, and it so impressed the Board of Trade of Vancouver, that they passed the following resolution, which I believe has been forwarded to the government :

1. That the 10 per cent royalty at present levied by the government on the gold of the Yukon is distasteful to the miners and unsatisfactory in its operation, and does not produce the revenue to the government which is due on the output.

2. The present mode of collection induces deceit on the part of the miners and incidentally causes perjury to be committed in respect to the returns sworn to.

3. That in consequence a large amount of gold is taken out of the country, thus depriving Canada of business which would be done here if the gold were purchased in Dawson and paid for in Dominion currency.

4. That it is eminently desirable that as much as possible of the business to be derived from the mining industry shall be conserved to the people of Canada and a fair revenue be secured by the government in a manner alike agreeable to the miners and the government.

5. That in order to best attain these desirable results it is respectfully submitted that the present tax of 10 per cent be abolished, and in lieu thereof that an assay office be opened in Dawson, to which all gold produced there shall be taken for Dominion currency. A charge of not exceeding 5 per cent being made for assay and all taxes upon said gold.

6. That notice be given that all gold must be assayed in the government assay office and duty paid there, and that any person found attempting to take out gold without a proper certificate from the assay office stating the correct quantity and value of gold so being taken out, such gold shall be seized and forfeited by the party found in possession of the same or owners thereof, or such other penalty as shall be deemed desirable by the government.

The British Columbia Board of Trade of Victoria, after discussing the same subject, passed the following resolution :

That the recommendations of the Vancouver Board of Trade be approved, and that this board desires to urge most strongly upon the government the necessity in the interest of Canadian trade of establishing a government assay office in Dawson, at which full value in Canadian currency will be given for gold.

Now, Sir, I think what I have read fully explains what are the wishes of at least a large majority of the business men in British Columbia, and also of the miners of the Yukon Territory. You will see that instead of having the 10 per cent royalty, which now the officials of the government try to collect, but which they are very unsuccessful in doing, there would be not more than a 5 per cent royalty charge, or in other words, instead of collecting 10 per cent from a few of the miners, who are honest enough to tell the truth about what they get, every miner, whether getting out a large or small quantity of gold, will be called upon to pay 5 per cent. The government will, I think, get more revenue in that way, and they would get it in a legitimate manner, not discriminating against any one. In regard to the penalty to be attached to any miner taking the gold out without taking it to the assay office, I leave that to gentlemen more learned in the law than I am myself, but there is no question about it, that it would be no hardship. All of us have to pay customs duties, and we do not consider that a hardship. There is no reason why the miner who takes the gold out of the ground of the Yukon should not be called upon to pay his fair quota to the government for the benefit he derives and the protection he gets. If this scheme of the Board of Trade of British Columbia is carried out, I feel convinced that it would be of immense advantage to the whole country, and that it would enable the merchants of British Columbia, and the rest of Canada to supply the people of the Yukon Territory with thousands and thousands of dollars worth of goods which now are bought in the American States. The Yukon is our own country, and the merchants of Canada have a right to obtain all the benefits that can possibly be got out of it. I hope that the government will take the matter into their careful consideration, to see if they cannot manage to give the wishes of the British Columbia boards of trade that consideration, which I feel is their due. I feel convinced that if they do, that they will have less trouble to collect the revenue, and it will be a great benefit to the country, as a whole.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, having already spoken on the motion now before the House, would not feel justified in going at any length into the argument this evening ; but, at some other day he will answer the question.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

For cold storage on steamship, railways, at warehouses and creameries, and for expenses in connection with trial shipments of products, and for securing improvement and recognition of the quality of Canadian farm products ..... $70,000

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). The Minister of Customs promised to give the committee a statement of the number of ships in which we have cold storage arrangements, and the character of the cold storage in each case.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). For this season we expect to have : To Liverpool, five ships, from the Allans ; to London, six ships, from the Thomson Line ; to Glasgow, six ships, half from the Allans and half from the Donaldson Line ; to the West Indies, one ship, from Pickford & Black ; to Manchester, three ships, from the Manchester Line ; to London, three ships, from Furness, Withy & Co. These are all under contract for the present season. In addition to these, there are five ships of the Elder-Dempster Line, which have been under contract till this year. Some of these ships are now engaged in carrying troops and provisions to South Africa ; but I am informed by the manager of the line that they will be put on the Canadian route as soon as they get through the charters from the Imperial government. They expect about the end of this month to have the same service to Bristol that there has been in the three years past. These vessels are all fitted with mechanical cold storage, some of them with a capacity of 20,000 cubic feet each, and some with a capacity of 10,000 cubic feet. The five ships of the Elder-Dempster Line have each a capacity of 20,000 cubic feet ; the five ships to Liverpool, 20,000 ; the ships to London, three of 10,000 and three of 20,000 ; the ships to Glasgow, 20,000 ; the Manchester liners, 10,000 ; Furness, Withy & Co.'s ships, 10,000 ; and the one to the West Indies, 3,000 or 4,000.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) What rates is the hon. gentleman paying ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The department does not pay any rates at all. Under the new contract to Liverpool, London and Glasgow, the rate will be 15 shillings per ton of seventy cubic feet. Under the old contract, which has not expired, the rate to the West Indies, to Manchester and to London is 10 shillings.

Mr. FOSTER. How long does the old contract run ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The contract with the Manchester liners has

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

one year to run, and the contract with Furness, Withy & Co. has a year and a half.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) How many ships have you under contract ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. (Translation.) We have twenty-four ships under contract for the present season. In addition to these ships, there are five ships of the Elder Dempster line, which are not yet under contract this year.

Mr. FOSTER. The new contracts are at 15 shillings a ton ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, to Liverpool, London and Glasgow.

Mr. FOSTER. That is seventeen ships ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the government pay to these vessels ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On the Allan Line to Liverpool, there are two ships on which we pay nothing. Contracts for these ships are expired, but by the arrangement for the three new ships, the old ones are continued on the contract. We pay half the cost of installation in two annual instalments. On the line to London there are six ships, for three of which we pay nothing and for three we pay at the same rates as to Glasgow. On the Allan & Donaldson Line to Glasgow, there were three vessels, and now there are six. For three of them we pay nothing, and for the remainder we pay half the cost of installation.

Mr. FOSTER. There are seventeen new vessels, and the total cost will be $28,000 for this year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be multiplied by two annual payments ?

THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, about $57,000 altogether. There is one ship to the West Indies, which speaking from memory—I cannot lay my hand on the memorandum at the moment—is $800. There is a payment to three of the Manchester liners, which will be in the neighbourhood of $4,000 a piece—a total of $12,000 for this year. And for the Furness, Withy Company there is about the same payment on three ships.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that a payment of $12,000 to the Furness or $28,000 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Twelve thousand.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be $24,000 the minister is paying for these two services ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it is about $7,500 for the three Manchester liners, and about the same for the Furness—about $15,000 for these two services.

Mr. FOSTER. And the Elder-Dempster?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are not paying anything to them.

Mr. FOSTER. And the six Glasgow ones?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The six London, and the five Liverpool come to $28,000.

Mr. FOSTER. So that altogether the minister is paying—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. About $43,000 besides the $800 to the West Indies.

Mr. FOSTER. And the Manchester and Furness vessels have 20,000 or 10,000 cubic feet?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Ten thousand.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this an abnormally high price?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. If it seems higher than our former payments, it is because we have to pay our share of the cost of installation in two annual payments instead of in three.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the equipment in one of these vessels?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. An insulated chamber affording the space arranged for, ten thousand or twenty thousand cubic feet as the case may be, provided with partitions, so that a different temperature can be maintained in different portions of the chamber. There is, in addition, a mechanical refrigerating plant, which is generally operated by a small engine, though it can be operated by steam from the engines of the ship. The mechanism compresses ammonia to an extreme degree, making it liquid. When this ammonia is allowed to escape from the vessel in which it has been compressed into the pipes who go into the cold storage chamber, the sudden expansion of the ammonia absorbs so much heat from the air in which the pipes are that it cools the air, and the result is to cool the chamber. This is commonly called the ammonia process of mechanical cold storage. It is called mechanical, because it is a mechanism which compresses the ammonia. Sometimes, it is called chemical, but that name is better applied to an apparatus which cools by a chemical combination instead of by compression and subsequent expansion.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you get at the cost?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The shipowners do the work and submit their vouchers, and we pay half the actual cost.

Mr. FOSTER. What obligation is there on these ships for which you pay half the cost, to continue cold storage arrangements after the contracts run out?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no obligation. We could not get them to make any obligation for the future.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you propose to keep it up?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We do not propose to keep it up. I hoped that when the first three years of the original contracts had expired the system would be so well established that it would go on of itself. Last year the Dominion Line, the Elder Dempster Line and the Allans all had put cold storage into vessels, not under contract at all, but finding the trade demanded it. It was really only in consequence of the shortness of shipping this year that I was obliged to enter into these new contracts.

Mr. FOSTER. Would there not be a larger supply for fewer ships?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but the people have more favourable offers for their ships elsewhere, and they said they would not bring them here under a contract and be bound to stay here, unless we made a contract with them. While the contract exists these vessels are bound to go on our trade, but the owners said that unless we made a new contract they would not feel bound to remain any longer, they would be able to take them off whenever they liked. We have never paid a subsidy to any vessel which was once fitted up with cold storage. If we had sufficient vessels on the route fitted up to perform the service, there would be no object in any further payment. The usual thing is for vessels to stay on the trade, and we fully expected they would. The contracts of the Elder Dempster have expired. It is true their vessels have gone off now in consequence of being chartered for the South African service, but the manager of the line tells me that they will be on again, and that he intends to keep it up. Some of the vessels of the Dominion Line are running to-day, and these new vessels that are coming to our ports are some of them being fitted up for cold storage, but not under contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister give us statements of the quantities carried on each trip on these vessels last year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got a statement of the total number of packages carried on each trip. I have a statement about the fruit. The butter, which is the largest amount, is not given here. Practically all the butter that went from Montreal last year went in the cold storage. I may say that in the earlier part of the season, until about the 1st of July, very little butter is shipped as a rule. The space is not altogether occupied. After about the 1st of July the cold storage, I may say in a general way, has been full during the last season on all the ships. In the fall of the year when butter becomes more plentiful, cheese is not shipped in cold storage. In extremely hot weather in the summer ships do take some cheese in cold storage. Poultry, meat, etc., have been shipped, and eggs have been shipped to a certain extent. Some of the shippers consider that eggs go just as well without cold storage, and do not care to pay the extra price. The fruit shipped last season showed a marked improvement over what had been shipped before. Fruit shipped in cold storage went in very good order as a general rule. We have been shipping now for three seasons some fruit experimentally. The first season was rather disastrous. The people who shipped it did not understand packing it, we did not understand it perhaps, ourselves, and a great many shipments did not turn out well. The second season a good deal turned out well, but some did not; but this last season we had men specially qualified to attend to the packing of fruit at Grimsby and to its selection, and the result was that nearly all that went this last season succeeded very well.

Mr. FOSTER. What species of fruit are shipped?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. First there are the more delicate kinds of apples, of which a considerable quantity has been sent, early apples. A large quantity of pears were shipped this last season with the greatest success, fruit which had never been sent to any extent before.

Mr. FOSTER. What profit would this bring to the shipper?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have no returns on that point. But pears have been very profitable, they have realized fully double what the same fruit would have realized at the point of shipment in this country after paying all expenses. The net profits have been fully double what they would have realized at Grimsby. Of grapes we sent over a considerable quantity the first season, but our manager in England reported that the English public do not eat them, not liking the peculiar taste of our grapes. The hon. gentleman perhaps knows that a great many of our Canadian grapes are what are called pulpy fruit. The seed is embedded like a strong pulp, and when it comes out in one piece in the mouth if it is separated it is found to have a stringent taste. Our first shipments were nearly all of that character of fruit. But we have, however, since been sending some other varieties, not so strong in that characteristic, and this last season some shipments were made, fewer in number and smaller in quantities, but the success of these shipments was much greater.

Mr. FOSTER. Those, I suppose, were simply sample shipments?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were more than that. In one case we sent over one hundred cases, sufficient to make an appearance on the market. It was so successful that if a careful choice is made, our grapes may make a fair entry into the British market, and be sold at a profit. These sold this last year, which were of a better quality, at prices sufficient to make a profit.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the other fruits?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We sent shipments of peaches and tomatoes. The tomatoes were not successful on the whole, and this last season no tomatoes were sent. We had more success, in a partial way with peaches. I have here a statement of the shipment of the Alberta peach, which was praised very highly and which arrived there in very good condition. But, there seems to be a good deal of difficulty in getting the packers to pick them at the right stage of ripeness. If they are too ripe they hurt on the voyage, and though they may be all right when they get there, they go to pieces once they are taken out of cold storage. If they are not quite ripe when picked, they arrive in good order, and stand sufficiently long to sell at retail prices, and reap a good profit. I have here some statements of English critics, who have examined our peaches, and they say that if we can send them over in good condition, we would find a ready market for them, and they specially mentioned the Alberta peach.

Mr. FOSTER. That then, practically exhausts the fruits you sent over.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I do not think there were any others.

Mr. FOSTER. Is anything done in the way of sending poultry?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, last fall and the fall before, we sent over a considerable quantity of dressed poultry. We paid the cost, and the department arranged for the fattening of some poultry.

Mr. FOSTER. They were chickens, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, chickens.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that done by a patent process?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, they were crammed.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that a humane proceeding?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think perfectly so.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the chickens never protest?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I have seen it done myself frequently. I have watched the operation, and I can say that the chickens do not seem to object to it at all. They certainly gain in flesh and quality in a most remarkable manner. The flesh of the chicken treated in this way is quite different from that of ordinary chickens we buy on the market here.

Mr. FOSTER. Whiter flesh?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Whiter and more delicate.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you cram them with?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A mixture of ground oats, sometimes corn-meal, mixed up with milk and a little beef tallow. It has to be ground into a fine mixture, so that the bird can digest it, and it has to be put into the bird with a pipe or tube.

Mr. FOSTER. Through the throat?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, right down into the crop. The operator takes the chicken under his arm, the tube is put down into its throat, and the appliance is worked with a foot-treadle.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a machine?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it might be operated by electricity.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not tried that. The profits to be made are such as to make it worth while to feed poultry for shipment to Great Britain. The British market and the large cities in England are largely supplied by people who follow that system, and they get extraordinary prices for their poultry. I am glad to say that the chickens we sent over, have brought such prices that I may say in a general way, we have doubled our money.

Mr. FOSTER. Are people going into these cramming institutes?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are a few, but there are not many. There is a gentleman in the neighbourhood of Ottawa, who has been for two or three years supplying the market here. There were three private individuals fattening chickens last year and shipping under our direction, to the English market. There were six or seven who did it for the department as an experimental work. I think there were about ten altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you any process of circulating information about this or teaching the farmers how to do it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have advertised it, we have sent it out in our bulletins, and we have had it taken up at the institute meetings.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cost of a crammer?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think about $20.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it is out of the reach of anybody but a professional?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think the ordinary farmer would go into the fattening of chickens for the market. The practice of the old country is that somebody sets up a poultry fattening establishment, buys chickens from the farmers, and by reason of his profits, he is able to give them better prices than could otherwise be paid.

Mr. FOSTER. How long does it take a professional to cram a chicken?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The actual cramming process only goes on for ten days, but they are generally prepared by a feeding process of about ten days before. It takes about three weeks from the time the chicken is started to fatten, until it is killed.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose you would not go on too long, because it would kill the chicken.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it would probably hurt the chicken.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you use that process on turkeys too?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have done so.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the result?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The same.

Mr. FOSTER. Goslings and ducks?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. We did not do anything with these at all.

Mr. CLANCY. How many of these vessels that were fitted up with cold storage, have electrical fans?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman exactly how many vessels fitted with cold storage have electrical fans. Professor Robertson and I have been urging on the vessel owners to improve the arrangements in the common holds, for the carrying of cheese and apples which do not go into cold storage. The ordinary holds are often ill ventilated, and apples, heating as they do slightly in the barrels, make the place so hot that it injures the fruit. I have the assurance of the vessel owners that a large number of the vessels last season were fitted up with electrical fans and specially ventilating shafts. They are in no way under contract with us to do this, but I am still urging the ship owners to it. The same remark would apply to cheese as to apples put into the ordinary holds. I have asked Professor Robertson to ascertain what ships are fitted in this way so that we could inform the shippers.

Mr. BENNETT. Has there been any export of beef in cold storage ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think some small quantities of beef were shipped from Canada, but I have no knowledge of any export worth considering. Some of the vessels which are not under contract with us take Chicago beef at the present from Canada to England.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister give us an idea of what he is doing on the railways, and how much of this $70,000 will be expended on that branch of the service.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have arranged with the railway companies to run a refrigerator car once a week or fortnight, according to the demands of the traffic. We guarantee to them that two-thirds of the capacity of these cars will be paid for. If the goods put in them do not come up to two-thirds of the capacity of the car, we make up the deficiency. They are obliged to give what is called less than car-load rates. Some of the routes are self-sustaining, and we do not have to contribute. We get the way-bills from the railways as to the cost to us. We have this arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway. We regulate the number of months during which they run these cars on the different lines, because in some places the production of butter and cheese only lasts four months in the year, whereas in other places it lasts five or six months.

Mr. CLANCY. Are there certain points at which these cars are loaded ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are put on the way-freights and are available at all the stations.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose that for the first one hundred miles the two-thirds capacity is not filled, but for the remainder of the distance it is thoroughly filled, what do you do then ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We pay for what is not filled.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you must almost always pay at the beginning of the journey ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, we take the two-thirds of the whole run. If the car is full the extra one-third counts for another trip so far as mileage is concerned. The whole capacity of the car for the season is reckoned up.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FOSTER. How much money did you pay last year to each of these railways ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $6,000 is the amount Prof. Robertson has put in for this year for all the railways. I have no details to show how it is distributed. I think about the same amount was spent last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the trade not growing ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but the number of cars on which we have to pay is lessening. We get cars on which no payment has to be made as the trade grows, and the consequence is that we are able to take up other routes which we did not formerly have without any more charge on our payments. Last year, if I remember rightly, we paid about $2,000 each to the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. You treat the Intercolonial the same as you do a railway which is not connected with the government ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Just the same.

Mr. FOSTER. How about warehouses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The only warehouse which has taken up our offer is the one at Quebec. We offered a bonus of 5 per cent interest for three years on an investment of $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the total cost of the warehouse ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No ; the total cost is a good deal more than that.

Mr. FOSTER. On what rule do you make the payments ? On one-half or two-thirds of the cost ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. We estimated that a warehouse costing $40,000 would be sufficient for the trade at that point, and we agreed to give a guarantee of 5 per cent on that amount for three years. If the people who undertook to do the work chose to put in a larger warehouse, they did it at their own risk. Quebec is the only place that has taken advantage of our offer.

Mr. FOSTER. After the three years have expired, what obligation are the owners of the warehouse under to continue to carry on the business.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is then established, and if they do not continue to carry on the business, the investment is a loss. In Halifax and St. John great efforts have been made to establish warehouses, but nobody has succeeded in doing so, and I am still approached and asked to offer greater inducements at those two points.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose after the three years at Quebec were up and the people said: 'We cannot carry on the business unless you do the same for us.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not do it.

Mr. FOSTER. Why did you start it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because we believed the business was in the nature of an experiment. When this arrangement was made cold storage warehouses were comparatively unknown in the country, and people could not be assured of any returns for their investment; but, we believed they would be encouraged by that help for three years to put their money into the investment, and having done so, at the end of the three years they would find it advantageous enough to carry on the business afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been the experience?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At Quebec the warehouse has been built and the business has been going on this year.

Mr. FOSTER. To what extent was it used?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the figures. It was used considerably, but not to the extent that was expected. The position of Quebec is peculiar. For instance, the trade in butter is almost entirely in the hands of Montreal merchants and exporters, who, although they frequently buy butter in the neighbourhood of Quebec, bring it from Montreal to place it in warehouses there and hold it for export. The result is that butter which would naturally be expected to be placed in cold storage at Quebec has been brought up to Montreal and placed in cold storage there.

Mr. FOSTER. On what principle do you make the selection as to who shall have the bonus?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no question of selection. The Quebec warehouse is the only one in the country that has taken advantage of the bonus.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose that at the same point two or three would want it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot suppose that. We made the proposition in the first place knowing well that it would be difficult to get people to take it up. I should say that in Charlottetown a gentleman has a cold storage warehouse for his own business, and we made an arrangement with him by which he agreed to place a chamber in it at the public service in return for a small subvention of $600 a year for two years, being the interest on the cost of the chamber.

Mr. FOSTER. What are you doing in the creameries?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We wish to encourage the owners of creameries to put in a cold storage chamber, so that the butter manufactured there can be immediately placed in cold storage until sufficient accumulates to ship. For that reason we issued a circular to all the creamery owners in Canada stating that we would give a bonus of $50 in the first year after the chamber was built, $25 the next year and $25 the next, making a total of $100 for three years, the payments to cease at the end of that time. Here again it was hoped that after they would run for three years they would find it advantageous to continue. As a matter of fact, there are fifty-eight creameries on which which we now have to make the third payment, 114 on which we have to pay the second, and 104 on which we expect to pay the first time this year.

Mr. FOSTER. Being in all, how much?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In all, $9,450 for this year.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these creameries well distributed over the country?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The creamery business is carried on more largely in Quebec than any other province of the Dominion. Ontario has gone largely into cheese factories, while Quebec seems to have taken more to the butter industry.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion of this money is for the province of Quebec?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should say fully one-half, and the rest is distributed mainly in Ontario and Manitoba, with a few creameries in the maritime provinces.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is the hon. minister building creameries in Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are not building creameries anywhere. We give this bonus to people who build creameries, to induce them to have a cold storage room in connection with the creamery, so that they can put the butter in cold storage as soon as it is made.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is not a creamery being built in the county of Inverness?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. The government of Nova Scotia have made an arrangement by which they gave assistance to the establishment of a creamery in a county where there was no creamery; and on behalf of the Department of Agriculture here, in pursuance of the policy that was carried out in Prince Edward Island some years ago, we agree to maintain the creameries which were established in that way. There was one creamery established this spring, I think, in the county of Inverness, in Mabou. I understand that the building was put up by the people of the neighbourhood, and the local government of Nova Scotia gave them a subsidy to equip it. We undertake to run it for a year, to put it on its feet. That is done out of the dairying vote.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Does the hon. minister remember any objection to the building of that creamery on account of the vested interests of people engaged in a similar industry in the locality?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understood that there was a good deal of discussion as to the location of the creamery. That was a matter for the people of the locality and one into which we did not enter.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did not the hon. minister give assurance that the vested interests I had alluded to would not be interfered with by the expenditure of that grant?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. I had nothing to do with that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I have here some correspondence with reference to that point. I have here a letter written by Mr. Archibald, in the county of Inverness, who owns a number of creameries in the eastern part of Nova Scotia, and two cheese factories in the county of Inverness, at Mabou. I will read the correspondence to remind the Minister of Agriculture what took place, as it seems he has forgotten:

Antigonish, N.S., Jan. 22, 1898.

Prof. J. W. Robertson, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Robertson, of the Nappan Experimental Farm, and Mr. Hopkins have been here and held two very instructive meetings, but unfortunately a snowstorm prevented many getting in from the country districts. In the spring, when the weather and roads are more to be depended on, I feel satisfied a repetition of these meetings either in town or outlying districts would bear good results.

These gentlemen informed me that Mr. Macfarlane, a dairyman in the employ of the Dominion government, is expected to spend about ten days in Cape Breton holding meetings among the farmers, and will commence in about a week or ten days. I surmise one of these meetings will be held at or near Mabou, where I have two cheese factories established, one started in 1890, and the other last spring, the former near the town and the other on east side of harbour, about four miles distant. I beg to inclose a letter from Mr. McKeen which explains itself. Both Messrs. Robertson and Hopkins assure me there must be some mistake about Dr. McLellan's offer, as the best offer known to them made by the government is the one carried out in Prince Edward Island, and in no case is it being carried out in a district where it could possibly interfere with an established creamery and cheese factory. They strongly urged me to write you and the Minister of Agriculture re the matter before it is too late, and to make a proposition that might be to the mutual advantage of all concerned. I feel satisfied, if this scheme is carried out, many of my patrons will, even at great inconvenience to themselves, leave me and patronize a government establishment, principally because it is government, regardless of consequences. The locality referred to is only about three miles from my Mabou Bridge factory, and I fail to see where the milk is coming from to support it, unless from my districts.

As the government's object, of course, is to benefit the greatest number, I would suggest, if this scheme is to be carried out, my bridge factory, which is most central and the only locality at all, for years at least, suitable for carrying on winter dairying, be taken and fitted up as a creamery, then for a season or two, to satisfy farmers whether or not they would be warranted in investing their money, making it a permanent business.

If you can satisfy the farmers to continue the business, I know of no better locality in Nova Scotia for milk, as last season I got as high as 16,000 pounds of milk per day at the two factories; and one season, a few years ago, turned out over forty tons of cheese in four and one-half months from bridge factory, and output this season was about equal to each factory—twenty-five tons in a little over four months.

I might say just here re disappointment of patrons referred to by Mr. McKeen, that I only advanced 50 cents instead of 60 cents for June milk. The patrons asked, as a great favour, for their money before it was due, and not having possession of all the cheese to hypothecate it, bank was unable to advance any more. As an offset to this, however, I had more than an equivalent amount to collect from them for cans, and which is still outstanding. My agent was to advance 60 cents for the first three months and balance when cheese season was closed, and all cheese sold, and I regret to say I still have on hand about 1,300 boxes, and am advised by cable to-day to sell on this side, and not to ship. Cheese belong to this county and Mabou factories.

You can readily understand how we are situated re marketing our cheese; once our local market is lilled up (and it has been glutted for years) we have no alternative but ship to England, so what can we do when advised by our friends not to ship.

With the past few years' experience, no doubt the farmers in all my districts would hail with delight the advent of the government coming in to manufacture and market their cheese and butter, and care little whether I am compelled to close up or not.

The past season I only ran six of my ten factories, and am already advised by parties of two of these districts that I must move the factories three or four miles or close up next season. I trust you will think favourably of my proposition and carry it out. No doubt, we can easily come to terms of some kind for leasing or otherwise.

I might, in this connection, say there seems to be a growing demand for a creamery or two in this county, and now is the time to secure before the local government bonus is discontinued. This county is still entitled to the three. My Union Centre factory would be the most central for one, excepting where we expect to put in a butter plant with our condensing factory. Will you kindly bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, as I presume all these matters must come through you.

Waiting an early and favourable reply,

Yours very respectfully,

L. C. ARCHIBALD.

Here is a letter from Professor Robertson :

Ottawa, January 21, 1898.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 22nd inst. I inclose herewith the letter from Mr. McKeen. Mr. Robertson, of the Nappan farm, and Mr Peter McFarlane are to attend a number of meetings in Cape Breton, beginning this week. I did not obtain a list of the places at which the meetings were to be held, as these were to be arranged for by Mr. Chipman, Secretary of Agriculture, Halifax.

I have brought the matters which you refer to to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, and he directs me to say that it has been decided that our department will not take charge of any creameries and cheese factories in Cape Breton the coming season of 1898, and if our department should take charge of a few creameries to get this business well established in Cape Breton some time later on, you may be sure that these creameries, assisted in this way by the government, will not be placed where they will do any injury to existing cheese factories or creameries, or any injustice to those who had the enterprise to put their money into them. Our department was quite anxious to start a winter creamery or two in Antigonish County several years ago; but that being rendered impracticable, the Dominion turned that matter over to the local government in the various provinces.

Yours truly,

J. W. ROBERTSON,
Commissioner.

This gentleman who invested his money in the county of Inverness in two cheese factories was assured by the officers of the minister, after consultation with the minister that his enterprise would not be interfered with by the expenditure of any money at the disposal of the department. Instead of complying with that promise, the minister is now constructing a creamery at a point between these two factories of Mr. Archibald at a cost of $3,000. Mr. Archibald, having found these creameries would interfere with his cheese business, made a proposition to sell his buildings at a low price or to rent them at a reasonable price, but the minister has refused to do that. Mr. Archibald complains that a great injustice is done to his business and to his investment. I would like the minister to give some further information as to how he was led to take this step.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My explanation is very simple. I had no voice in the matter of the establishment of these creameries. The people of the locality decided to put up the building, the local government gave a bonus to equip the building. Before I knew where the building was going to be I had agreed to run the factory so built and equipped. When the one at Mabou had fulfilled these conditions I simply undertook to see to the running of it. The letters which the hon. gentleman has read were written some two or more years ago, and dealt with the condition of affairs at that time. I was then being asked to contribute to the establishment of creameries in Cape Breton, but I found I was not able to do that. But afterwards the people of the neighbourhood and the local government brought about a condition of affairs in which I was able to contribute to the running of the creamery.

Mr. McDUGALL. The site was selected by the officers of the hon. gentleman's department.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. The site was arranged for by the local regulations of the local government. The local government gave a bonus to any county in which there was no creamery established, provided the people in the neighbourhood would put up a building suitable for a creamery. They then gave a bonus, and I made an agreement with the government of Nova Scotia that if they did that I would run a creamery for a year or two, to put it on its feet.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is not the Department of Agriculture paying for the cost of the construction of the building?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not one cent. The people there are paying for it themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. $60,800 has been accounted for in this vote of $70,000. What is the other $9,000 for?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are office expenses, and the expenses of our agents and inspectors. We have a man, in Montreal, who looks after the cold storage there and the same man goes down to St. John in the winter. We have a man in England for six months. He looks after the arrivals of fruit and poultry shipments there and watches their passage through the English market. We have also a man at Grimsby who supervises the starting of the fruit shipments from there.

Mr. FOSTER. That makes up the $9,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not sure of the exact details. The old vote was not spent during this current year.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been spent?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say positively, but Prof. Robertson told me this morning that he thought we might have, up to the present time, about $10,000 left.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you expect to spend more next year than last year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the payments to some of these ships will be larger next year than they have been this year. In addition to that I hope to have a larger staff to receive the fruit shipments in England. I had a number of urgent representations this spring from the fruit growers and shippers asking that particular care should be taken in regard to the examination into the way in which their fruit was handled on its arrival in England, and while going through the British markets. I have promised that I would have a man in London, Liverpool, Glasgow and Bristol to specially watch all our fruit shipments.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will remember that he promised to give me a statement in regard to North-west creameries. The arrangement is in regard to the creameries in the North-west Territories for three years and it has now expired. The information I have is that most of the creameries are a good deal behind and do not appear able to meet the terms of their contract.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have a statement here which I will give to the hon. gentleman. He asked me for a statement of the gross amount of what we advanced to the creameries, and what they have paid back. It is as follows:

Creamery.

Calgary and two outlying stations.	$3,333	$3,239
Cardston.....	277	250
Church Bridge.....	2,236	613
Grenfell.....	2,513	1,926
Innisfail.....	6,000	2,000
Maple Creek.....	1,600	400
Mcsejaw.....	1,700	1,600
Moosomin.....	2,000	700
Prince Albert.....	3,100	187
Qu'Appelle.....	2,100	700
Red Deer.....	700	51
Regina.....	1,174	1,001
Saltcoats.....	600	150
Edmonton, with outlying creamery stations .....	5,600	600
Wetaskiwin.....	3,200	900
Whitewood.....	2,700	2,000
Wolsely.....	3,000	600
Yorkton.....	3,000	2,000
Tindastoll.....	150	50

Mr. CLANCY. Some of these places seem to be pretty far behind.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but lately at some places payments have been pretty fair. I am sorry to say, however, that that has not been the case all over. Some of these creameries have been patronized to such a small extent that the payments have been very small. During the last two years wheat has been so satisfactory a crop, in Assiniboia that creameries have been neglected. That is not the case in Alberta where the creameries have been doing a good business.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman able to give the whole sum that they are now in arrears.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. They are $25,000 in arrears.

Mr. FOSTER. With what prospects of getting it?

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am afraid that in regard to some of them they will not return it for some time. Others are making good progress. Since wheat has come to be such a good crop creameries are neglected.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman still extending the aid in that country?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. How many are there now altogether?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think sixteen creameries and seventeen skimming stations. The results otherwise have been most gratifying. The people who have taken their milk to these creameries are extremely satisfied, and the neighbourhoods where these creameries are established are attracting immigrants. The trade in butter also has been quite satisfactory. We have sold a large quantity in British Columbia, and a considerable quantity has been sent regularly to Japan and to the Klondike. We are establishing a trade in Japan which I am quite sure will increase.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that agriculture has made great progress since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) presides over that department. Every one of us is doing his best to promote the interests of the farming community, the more so as it is the branch of business which is the great wealth-producing industry of the country. I quite realize all the advantages accruing to us from the establishment of the cold storage system, for which some people give the credit to the hon. minister. but I think it is open to doubt whether the hon. gentleman can fairly claim that credit. But at this stage of the debate, I am not going to enter into the merits of that question.

I only wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that under the new contracts, we are paying higher rates than we did last year. That is due to the want of foresight of the hon. minister, in not renewing his contracts last year. Under the critical circumstances with which we were confronted last year, it would have been an easy thing for the minister to foresee that in the event of war breaking out in South Africa, a large number of ships would be diverted from the ordinary course of business, and engaged in carrying troops and provisions to South Africa; and if he had made those cold storage arrangements last year, it would have been far better both for the government and the shippers, and for the farmers as well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I must say that I cannot answer the hon. gentleman in French.

Mr. F. A. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman speaks very good

French, and as there are now in the House a great many French-speaking members, they would be delighted to hear the hon. gentleman explaining himself in that language.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. (Translation.) The friends of the hon. gentleman understand English just as well as I do.

Mr. FOSTER. (Translation.) No, but understand French just as well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Marcotte) has rehearsed the old story in regard to my lack of experience in not foreseeing the war in South Africa. I am in good company in that, because not even the Imperial government did foresee it, as is evidenced by the statements made by Lord Salisbury, Lord Lansdowne and others. The difficulties which have arisen in regard to our transportation are entirely due to the fact that such a large number of vessels have been diverted from the ordinary course of business. I would point out that the price of cold storage accommodation has not increased nearly so much from Canadian ports as from United States ports. It is 300 per cent more to-day from the United States than from Canada. What our people have to pay 15 shillings per ton for, the people of the United States are paying 40 to 50 shillings per ton for, so that our rivals in this trade are paying a great deal more than we are. I venture to say that the cold storage accommodation from Canada is probably to-day the best there is in the world. I say that, not from my own knowledge, although I have carefully compared it with that of other countries, but I say it as the deliberate statement and opinion of disinterested critics. I have in my hand a statement from a well-known journal called Ice and Cold Storage, published at Bridge Street, London, England, in which there is an article which contains the following:

When the history of Canada's agricultural interests comes to be written up, its progress, of a truth must date from the year 1896. . . . By these means a great improvement in the nature of Canadian butter was at once manifested, and it immediately began to advance in price and reputation. It has, we are glad to say, continued so ever since. From being 10s. to 12s. per hundred pounds below Australian butter, in 1895, at the end of 1899 it had risen to 8s. per hundred above that class of goods, and in the self-same market. We have it on the best authority that the price obtained by the Canadian farmer last year was one penny per pound more than realized, in 1895, and Great Britain as we have already pointed out in a previous article in 'Ice and Cold Storage' took 1,000,000 pounds worth of butter during last year. . . .

It will thus be clear to the meanest form of intelligence that the Dominion farmers have, during the past four years, thanks to cold storage, received some 1,227,400 pounds more for their butter, which, had it not been for cold storage they would never have had. There are very few people who will not agree that the Minister of Agriculture has done something at least to qualify his office and benefit the Canadian farmers. The farmers themselves certainly will.

Mr. CLANCY. That sounds like a production of the Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not my production. It is the production of an independent journal in England.

Mr. CLANCY. I venture to say it is an inspiration from the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all. I never knew even of the existence of that journal until it was sent to me. Here is a statement which comes from Mr. Samson Morgan, who is the agricultural critic of the London Times:

I duly received the sample cases of Canadian apples and pears, and a box of peaches, which you sent me, and as your representative for the distribution of the fruit in this country informed me that you would be pleased to have my opinion on same, I herewith send you a report which is disinterested, and can therefore be depended upon with the utmost confidence. I am in a position to speak authoritatively upon this subject, as an expert from a market point of view, being the only fruit trade journalist who has, for just upon a quarter of a century, made choice fruit production, packing and distribution a special study, that is, in the United Kingdom.

The apples were snows, and when opened, the fruits were found to be in prime condition. Not one was unsound. They were wrapped separately in paper, and had been packed in layers and in rows. A better style for good fruit could not possibly be conceived. The fruits were medium in size. Possibly we want a larger sample on our markets, though the quality was excellent, and I was very much struck with them altogether.

Then as to the pears. They had been put up in the same size of box as the apples and each fruit had been wrapped in a small square of paper. They were absolutely sound, and in grand condition. I kept some of these pears for two weeks, and when fully ripened the flavour was delicious. They were Beurre D'Anjou. From these samples, it is clear that Canadian exporters can easily put high quality pears upon the English markets, and at the right time, too. I am satisfied that for quality, size, clearness of skin and condition that they will readily compare with the best Californian and French fruits. A better pear than these d'Anjou never entered the English markets, and I am confident that a big future lies before the Canadian pear trade in the United Kingdom. I was immensely pleased with these fruits, and the prices realized justifies the commendation I give them. With care in grading they would prove a very serious competitor to the French fruits, as the sample cases under notice were put up in better style, and the fruits were certainly cleaner skinned and much more dainty as eaters, than the foreign ones referred to.

Here the specimens were in fairly good condition, but not what could be termed perfect, the flesh of some being a little discoloured. All in the box I had were, however, eatable, of excellent size, and like the apples and pears, had been well and evenly graded, an important feature in the fruit trade here. The colour was good, but the flesh was too fit, if I may expressively put it thus, that is, they needed to be sold in a day or two at least, not being in keeping condition. They were not so juicy as our forced peaches, but the flesh was firmer, and as an advocate of fruit eating, I claim that these Canadian Elberta peaches are magnificent, and I should like to be able to live on them without anything else for a month. They are very delicious, possess a nutritious flesh, and should prove a great boon to the consumers in all of our cities and towns.

My report will be found most encouraging to those on your side who have taken a great interest in the development of the Canadian fruit industry, though the praise given to the packages and their contents is due to merit, and well deserved. The Canadian fruit-growers are to be congratulated upon having the fruit export trade, including packing, shipment and distribution, dealt with in such an admirable manner by the officials of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

The hon. gentleman the other day informed this House that our Canadian goods were being sold in England as American goods; but we find this condition of affairs to-day, that a large firm in Liverpool advertises for 20,000 boxes of Canadian eggs for delivery during October, November and December of last year. Here is another thing which some years ago we never saw in England, but which is now quite common—an advertisement of Canadian grapes, with the statement that they are grown on British soil, and that the people of England have waked up to the fact that they can get these food products in Canada. They are proud of the fact, and are glad to state that they are grown on British soil and are an inducement to the people of England to come to a country which was the first to give a preference in its markets to British goods; and they are glad to come here and trade with us in a way that they never did before.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have been criticising a good deal this cold storage, they have been saying how very small and unimportant a thing it is, and how it is only a continuation of their own policy. I would like to read a word or two from the statements of Prof. Robertson of a few years ago when discussing this matter. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), I think, stated that they had paid nothing for cold storage accommodation before my coming into office. I find, however, that $6,600 was paid by him for the fitting up of cold storage ice compartments on steamships, and that there was a guaranteed payment on space of $3,400. This is a statement of Prof. Robertson made before the committee on Agriculture in 1897:

To show the very rapid gain in the export butter trade, with such imperfect cold storage on the steamships only as could be obtained.

That had reference to the cold storage in 1896, of which hon. gentlemen opposite boast, and which they say was so good; but since that time we have brought mechanical cold storage into existence, and have continued it until we have reaped the advantages which I have just been pointing out. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that with the cold storage of that day they had perfect success; but in Prof. Robertson's statement of 1896, speaking of the cold storage arrangements of 1895, he says, in regard to a trial shipment of perishable fruits—and I find in the Auditor General's Report that the minister of that day paid for that fruit:

The shipment was made on September 7, 1895, per steamship 'Mongolian.' The fruit, such as grapes and others of like perishable character, arrived in a damaged and almost worthless condition. It appears the fruit became heated in the refrigerator car during the journey from the initial point of shipment to Montreal. As there was no mechanical refrigerating plant on the steamship, the cases could not be cooled, and it is doubtful whether the fruit could have been preserved after the process of decay had actively begun, even if it had been chilled as soon as put on board the steamship.

The hon. gentleman stated that they had no losses with their ice cold storage, and that the losses had only occurred with the mechanical cold storage; but this statement of Prof. Robertson shows that the statement of the hon. gentleman was not accurate, to say the least of it, for they lost the whole shipment. But I have an authority here which I do not think the hon. gentleman will dispute for a moment. In the first place, it comes from the Montreal Gazette, the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, and in the second place it is the statement of a unanimous resolution of the Butter and Cheese Association:

That the thanks of this association are hereby tendered to the Department of Agriculture for arranging for excellent cold storage service on the steamships from Canadian ports, and also for regular refrigerator car service on railways, and for assistance to owners of creameries in providing cold storage at creameries.

The president of that association is Mr. Arthur Hodgson, who was in the chair, a well known Conservative of the city of Montreal, and a number of other gentlemen were present who are Conservatives. However, they do not carry their politics into their business; but when they understand that something is being done to help their business, they are willing to sink their party feelings, and give the credit where credit is due. I think it only right that these things should be put before the committee so as to show that the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to this cold storage are not founded on independent or unbiassed opinions, and that as a matter of fact those who know about the business are satisfied with what has been done. Under these circumstances, I feel that I can safely ask the House to grant me this vote, and, if necessary, more, to continue to provide the cold storage transportation which has worked such great benefit to the farmers.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not propose to let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) to go through the little farce he has gone through for the last half hour unchallenged. He has made the old statement that we have the best cold storage system in the world. He quotes extracts from one journal in the United Kingdom, to which he sent a batch of fruit, and the least the editor could do was to give the hon. gentleman a puff. The hon. gentleman declared that they were first class, and the best in the world. Yet the sound had scarcely left his lips, when, in answer to my hon. friend's (Mr. Foster's) question about pears, he said they were too small and were not in favour in England. Thus he made statements diametrically opposed to one another. The same about grapes they were not liked in England. And this gentleman whom he tells us is an authority says—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He did not mention grapes; and I told the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) that those of last year were very much better than those of the year before.

Mr. CLANCY. And what about the pears?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The pears were excellent, though some of them were small.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman said that the pears were not in favour, that they were too small. The fact is the hon. gentleman made two statements that were contrary in substance and in fact. And everyone knows who has read Prof. Robertson's reports and who have heard his statements before the Committee on Agriculture, that the cold storage is far from being a success. Resolutions may have been passed in the Montreal board of trade, probably engineered by some gentlemen who knew little about the matter. But in Prof. Robertson's own reports, up to this hour, you will find the statement that cold storage is on trial, and the impression will be gained from these reports that much is expected of it that will not be realized. With regard to the butter the hon. gentleman took last year, it will be found that it was received badly—apples in the same way—cheese in the same way. While I do not want to bore the House as long as the hon. gentleman did, I venture to say that the statement he made to-night was hardly worthy of his position. It seems to me he was talking for victory and not for facts.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Victory is coming too.

Mr. CLANCY. It is coming in the statement more than in the fact. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the statement he has made to-night is hardly worthy of the great department over which he temporarily presides.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this the last item the Minister of Finance intends to take up to-night?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, we have an item in the Customs.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this the last item in the Agriculture?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. We were to have an explanation in regard to the census?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I thought I gave that. We expect to carry out the census on the same lines as before.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the hon. minister catch what the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said just now?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I was listening too intently to the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. It is too good to lose. The hon. member for North Wellington said the Minister of Agriculture had shown very little sense to-night. What is the principle upon which the census is to be taken?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has always been taken on what is known as the de jure plan. I suppose that the next census will be taken on the same plan. For purposes of comparison, it is well that the same plan should be pursued.

Mr. FOSTER. The government has come to that conclusion, has it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Will about the same schedules be taken as last time?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not gone into the details of the schedules. A number of representations have been made to me on that subject. I thought I would wait until I got this vote, and, practically, till this session was over before I went into that matter.

Mr. FOSTER. When does the census begin?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1901. The time of the year is not fixed yet. It usually begins in April. That will depend upon the organization of the work, which I have not yet discussed with my officers or my colleagues.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any other item coming down for the Paris Exposition?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is an item in the supplementary estimates for next year. I do not know how much.

Mr. FOSTER. That item being passed, I think we have done all we should be asked to do to-night.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not propose to stay here and work at near four o'clock in the morning. We have been doing proper work, and I do not imagine we shall be called upon by the Finance Minister to stay after this. So far as I am concerned, I intend to protest against it, and to enforce that protest as far as I can. To ask us to stay here longer, is utterly unreasonable.

Mr. McMULLEN. You have sat here all night and done nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member (Mr. McMullen) has not charge of this committee, and he will find it is not the wisest thing to undertake to force matters. It was well understood that the criticism of the Department of Agriculture was to be taken up on the votes that have just been passed. I was not in favour of going on at the time we got in the estimates at half-past one. But we sat longer and did good work. It was forced on us; and we have been kept here, and kept with perfect good-humour.

Mr. McMULLEN. You have kept us here all night.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) seems to have come to a silly season. Does he mean to say that we have not a right to have the estimates explained to us?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would like now to take up item 265.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to know from the Minister of Finance whether we are supposed to go on any further with these estimates at this hour of the morning, if so, I propose to protest against it with all the force I have left. Flesh and blood cannot stand everything. We are treated as human beings ought not to be treated.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no motion before the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I move that the committee rise. I do not want to move that motion, I would rather the Minister of Finance moved it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think we had better try to get through this item. Really we have made very little progress to-day.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman has made a motion that the committee rise, without reporting progress, and asking leave to sit again, therefore, undoing all that we have done during the session. With reference to this item 265, it was left over at the request of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), who stated that the hon. member for York was not in his place at that time, and that he wanted to bring up a certain matter, that matter being the Lemieux matter, though the hon. gentleman did not mention it. To-morrow the hon. member for York has brought up that matter on motion to go into supply. He has spoken upon it twice, and said that he had nothing more to say upon it. That being the case, I see no reason why we should not go on and pass this item.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will remember that all these items went through practically without criticism, but one was allowed to stand with the understanding that when that one came up there could be a general discussion on all the others.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The items did not go through without discussion, I gave full explanations on them all. I was prepared to go on with the Yukon item to-night, and I would like to put it through. I do not think it is unreasonable to ask the committee to pass this item now. It cannot be supposed that every member of the House and every member of the government who has a good deal of work to do can be in the House at all times. I think it is rather an unreasonable request to ask that this item should stand.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think I witnessed anything more unreasonable in my parliamentary experience than the attitude of the hon. gentleman. The hon. Minister of Customs has items totalling up beyond $1,000,000, which money goes all over the country. There is not a department that has more varying interests than this. The hon. gentleman's estimates were not critically discussed and he got them through very easily. He gave his explanations, but the hon. gentleman knows that explanations are not all that is to be taken up in passing estimates. I had several matters that I wanted to discuss on these votes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) was here while these items were being considered.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be, but every man has rights in this House. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) could not have said, and I do not believe he did, that I wanted this to be left over, to discuss the Lemieux matter. That was not in my mind.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. minister will not say that I assigned any reason at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I intended to discuss the Lemieux matter upon going into supply when a motion could be moved and voted upon. The hon. gentleman has no right to confine me to the discussion of his estimates and in the discussion of the Lemieux matter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I only alluded to the fact that the hon. gentleman told me that he proposed to go on with that one night. He said: I do not propose to go into this now, because I intend to bring up the Lemieux matter when the Customs estimates are reached. That is the reason I made the statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) think it is right to ask me to go into the discussion of several matters in reference to these votes at this early hour in the morning?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If this were the last opportunity that the hon. gentleman would have for the discussion of the Customs vote I would be inclined to think that perhaps his position would be fair, but as we have items coming under which the whole question can be raised I do not think he should be such a stickler for the opportunity to discuss these things. These items were pretty fully discussed, and the matter was held over so that it could be dealt with generally. I do not think we have had a very busy day's work, but we have had a long discussion by a few hon. gentlemen, and I had hoped that we might have done some of the real work of the House to-night. If the hon. gentleman will allow these items to pass he will have every opportunity to discuss these questions and I think that is a fair proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is a fair proposition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We may remain here for two or three hours making no progress, and I propose taking the responsibility of moving that the motion be withdrawn, and that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to and committee rose and reported progress.

ADJOURNMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What estimates will be taken up on Monday?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are still some items in the Interior Department, and if the Customs items are not to be proceeded with, the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), with his own estimates, or with those of the Public Works Department, will continue.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is one item that the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) requested to stand that he may wish to go on with on Monday.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the Ryley question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 4 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 18, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

EMERGENCY RATIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa) presented the first report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the purchase of emergency rations for the use of the Canadian troops in South Africa.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I draw the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that it is necessary that the permission of the House should be obtained in order to enable the committee to report from time to time; and I would suggest that my hon. friend move that the committee be so authorized in order to put this report in order.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is what the report recommends—that the committee have leave to report from time to time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The difficulty is that you must have the authority of the House to make the first report.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If this report is adopted, surely the committee will have leave to report from time to time afterwards?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand that it is not competent for the committee to make this report until they have first obtained leave of the House to report from time to time; and I suggest, therefore, that my hon. friend should move that the committee have power to report from time to time, and then this report will be in order.

Mr. B. RUSSELL (Halifax). It seems to me that by adopting the report we shall have leave to report from time to time. That is the advice the chairman got from the clerk upstairs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The difficulty, I understand, is that the committee cannot make this report until the House gives it leave to do so.

The PRIME MINISTER. For my part, I cannot see the point. At all events, if it is there, I am quite willing to accept it. Therefore, if the Clerk of the House will write a motion, we shall be quite willing to adopt it.

Mr. BELCOURT moved:

That the committee appointed on Friday last do report from time to time.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BELCOURT moved:

That the first report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the purchase of emergency rations for the use of the Canadian troops in South Africa be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CHARLOTTETOWN AND MURRAY HARBOUR RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 182) respecting the construction of a branch railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour. He said: The Bill contains only one clause and a schedule, which is the agreement entered into between the government of the Dominion and the government of the Island of Prince Edward.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRIES FOR PAPERS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask again for a report of the work of Mr. J. E. Girouard, as registrar, from the time of his appointment up to the latest date at which it can be obtained. I wish also to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that he has not yet brought down the report upon which was based the action on the coasting arrangements on the lakes. The Minister of Finance said he would bring it down.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). What I did tell the hon. gentleman was that the order in council would be brought down. It is an echo of the report.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like also to call the attention of the members of the government to the fact that no further returns have been brought down as regards the dismissals for partisan purposes, of officials in the employ of the government from July, 1896.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). May I ask the hon. gentleman if the report he refers to with regard to Mr. Girouard is the information he asked for during the consideration of the estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I brought it down the next day.

Mr. FOSTER. By the way, has the minister heard anything yet from the autocrat of the Yukon?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Nothing.

REPRESENTATION OF THE YUKON.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), to a petition which was sent from a mass meeting of the inhabitants of Dawson in regard to the question of representation. As I understand it, my right hon. friend stated to the House that it was not the intention of the government to take up the question of representation in the Yukon, or to deal with it, until the general census had been taken. I wish, therefore, to give notice that, on going into supply on a future occasion, I propose to move the following resolution:

Mr. BELCOURT.

That this House is of opinion that the time has come when provision should be made for an advisory council, partly elective partly nominative by the Crown, as in the case of the Northwest Territories up to the year 1888, for the administration of affairs now dealt with by the executive of the Yukon district. That this House is further of opinion that immediate provision should be made for the representation of the said district in the parliament of Canada.

If the House will permit me, I would say that this motion is made in no spirit of hostility to the government or its policy; but I am really in hopes that I shall be able to make such a strong case for immediate action, that I shall convince my right hon. friend that the government can properly accept my motion, and act under it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) knows that I am always open to conviction, if good reasons are given to me. I await, with some anxiety, the reasons which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) will have to give us; but I may remind him that on a recent occasion, I informed the House that the government intended to have the Yukon represented in the territorial council. That is our policy—to issue a proclamation to put in force the provision of an Act passed last session, which authorized representation in the Yukon. And, as to representation of the Yukon territory upon the floor of parliament, previous to the census that is to be taken next year—that is a point, which for my part, I have not yet seen the opportunity of doing so; but I shall be glad, on a future occasion, to hear the views of my hon. friend.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps I may be permitted to ask whether it is the intention of the government—because, if so, it will cover that part of the question—to take steps immediately to have representation by elected members in the executive in council?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And the government have already power to deal with that question?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then I will eliminate that portion of my resolution. I was not present when the right hon. gentleman made that announcement. I shall confine my efforts to endeavouring to induce my right hon. friend to go a little farther, and grant immediate representation to the Yukon in the House of Commons.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EMERGENCY RATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I ask the indulgence of the House for a moment. On Friday last, my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan), informed me that he would be obliged to leave Ottawa to-morrow, and be away part of this week, and that, therefore, he preferred not to have his name upon this committee upon which he was appointed, because he could not be a regular attendant. In view of this fact, I beg to move :

That Mr. Costigan be excused from serving on the select committee appointed to inquire into the purchase of emergency ration, and that Mr. Campbell be substituted in his place on the said committee.

Motion agreed to.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I should like to call the attention of the government to a matter in which the Department of Agriculture is particularly interested. The House knows that we passed a vote for the Paris Exposition, with only a very short discussion. An enormous expenditure is taking place on this service, and, as yet, we have had no details. We are to have another vote in the supplementary estimates to carry on that work. I may say to the government, that statements are being made in the country, and they have been made to me by people who say they know, that these expenditures are far greater than they should be. For instance, take one item—that of the building. That building cost $115,000 or $120,000, but, I am told, it should not have cost $20,000. Before we are asked to vote any more money for the Paris Exposition, I think it is the duty of the minister, to bring all the details with regard to the expenditures which have been made in this connection, in order that the committee may understand them. Further, Professor Robertson has recently visited the exposition, at the instance, I have no doubt, of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). Professor Robertson has now returned, and, I think, we should have his report as to the condition in which he found things. But I think that neither the Minister of Agriculture nor the government can ask us to pass any more estimates until we have had a detailed statement of the expenditure that has already been made. I am perfectly positive, in my own mind, that that money will be shown to have been largely wasted. However, that will be for the committee to judge. But what I want to impress upon the minister is that, to avoid a very long discussion, he ought to have all these details before the committee when he asks for his vote.

YUKON TELEGRAPH LINE—MR. J. B. CHARLESON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picou). I would call the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock), to the serious state of the Charleson matter. I made statements on this matter, subject to official information, which I was very anxious to have brought down at an early date, that having been prevented from being ordered by the House, owing to objection taken to my motion by the Prime Minister. I would like to ask the acting Minister of Public Works, what progress has been made with the return on that subject? I have no desire, personally, to have the statements, which I made on information, which I stated to the House, standing in the shape they have been standing in, with no official answer or explanation. As far back as February, the whole subject was covered by a notice of motion; but the notice was not allowed to pass as an unopposed motion, and consequently the House was kept in the dark. And then I came forward and asked the consent of the government to have the official information ordered, and, to show the urgency, I mentioned very serious statements which reflected on the honour and character of Mr. Charleson. But the Prime Minister saw fit to prevent that by invoking the rules of the House. I bowed to those rules. But the statement was made that the government would, of its own motion, have certain papers prepared. Not merely in justice to myself, but in justice to all parties concerned, I would urge greater celerity in the preparation of the returns. The acting Minister of Public Works told me last week that he had given instructions to have these papers collected as quickly as possible. I desire to ask when we may expect those papers to be brought before the House?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I may say that on Friday, I think it was, I spoke to my deputy again, and he told me he had collected the papers and was getting them copied. My hon. friend may rely upon it that there will be no disposition whatever to delay the production of all the information that is in the department.

AMERICAN TUGS TOWING LOGS.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I would like to ask if it is correct that certain parties have asked for the privilege of towing logs on Georgian Bay between Canadian points, in other words, doing coasting; and if it is the intention of the government to comply with their request?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In reply to the hon. gentleman I would say, that I regret that I was not in my place when he asked this question on Friday. The hon. gentleman knows that ministers can hardly be in the House all the time, they have departmental work that crowds upon them. I noticed that the hon. gentleman had asked the question, and I made inquiry. There has been no such general application of tug owners so far as I can ascertain. There was an application made on behalf of the Hall Company, I think, that are erecting a large mill at Sarnia, and who said it was their intention to have one of their tugs brought over to Canada and rebuilt in order to obtain a Canadian register and to be used in doing their work in Canadian waters. In the meantime they said it was a matter of very great importance to them that they should be permitted to bring one raft from some port on the Georgian Bay to Sarnia, and representations were made that it was impossible for them to secure a Canadian tug to do it. Under the circumstances it was deemed by the department to be in the interest of the country that they should be granted permission to do so.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the intention of the government to permit others to follow in the same line?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Only on special application such as this, and after the department has taken the whole matter into consideration and assured themselves that no public or private interest will suffer. It is only under such special circumstances as these that permission has been granted, nor is it the intention of the department to grant others.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), if he has yet hunted up those canteen papers?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). No, I am sorry to say that I cannot find them.

Mr. FOSTER. Are those papers absolutely gone so that they cannot be had?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My private secretary has been looking among my private papers, after the hon. gentleman asked me the question the last time, and he told me he had not been able to find them. I told him to look again, and he has not found them yet.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems rather hard that papers, the substance of which has been asked in the House, should not be at the call of the House when they are required. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to lay on the Table of the House the actual results of the analyses of the emergency food taken on February 3, and the other affidavits that he was supposed to be able to get within a day or two?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The matter has been referred to a committee, and I presume these are to go to the committee now.

Mr. FOSTER. But, I understood from the hon. gentleman, and from the Prime

Mr. PATERSON.

Minister as well, before the committee was appointed, that these should form part of the papers that have already been placed upon the Table of the House, even though the committee has been appointed in the meantime.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What I said was that certain analyses were being made now and that certain analyses had already been made, and that when those which are being made now were completed all the papers would be laid on the Table of the House. I presume that the proper place for them to go now would be before the committee. But when those are completed, which are not yet complete, I see no objection to laying them on the Table of the House. But, I supposed that that matter had been transferred from this House to the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think the proper way would be to bring down as promised the full papers before the House, and then they can be referred to that committee if the committee wants them.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We do not want to wait until they are brought down here.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 175) respecting the Ottawa and Hull Fire Relief Fund.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

Bill (No. 94) respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 181), for the relief of William Henry Featherstonhaugh.—(Mr. Gibson).—(on division.)

YUKON TERRITORY—LEASE OF DAWSON WATER FRONT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

Having reference to the examination of the agent of Morrison & McDonald (Yukon evidence, 216, 217, 218) and return to this House as follows:

Mr. Grotschier, called and sworn (page 216).

By Dr. Bourke:

Q. Mr. Grotschier, I believe you have been the agent for Morrison & McDonald?—A. Yes.

Q. Collected rents?—A. Yes.

By the Commissioner (page 217):

Q. The question is, he wants to know to whom you paid the rents?—A. I paid Morrison until he left, and since then I have paid Finlayson, of the Bank of British North America. I think, E. O. Finlayson.

By Dr. Bourke:

Q. Did you pay over the sum of $2,500 several months to the government?—A. Until a certain time—until you fellows commenced to kick and wouldn't pay your rent.

Dr. Bourke.—Everybody knows that.

Mr. Grotschier.—I wasn't going to advance it out of my own pocket.

Dr. Bourke.—About this money you speak of, it appears that McDonald must have come to you, and you had known that McGregor had the $2,000.

Mr. Grottschier.—I believe every one in court understood it. I told you that I told Mr. McDonald I hadn't any more money on hand. I had paid $2,500 to Bliss, who is in charge of the office there at present, and I had no more money on hand. Hadn't collected any more money. When Morrison came in a few days after, I had deals with him.

By Dr. Bourke (page 218) :

Mr. Grottschier.—He asked me why I had two sets of solicitors. I thought Burritt & McKay very slow in getting these things in shape, and came to the conclusion to hurry the matter up; and so it was done.

By Mr. Tabor :

Q. Who were the other solicitors?—A. Clement, Pattullo & Ridley.

Q. You hadn't any other motive?—A. That's all; I had to hurry up and get done. If it stood until the 1st of May everything would be taken away, and we would be responsible to the government for the amount.

$5,555 25

1. On what dates, respectively, did Morrison & McDonald, the lessees of the water front, so-called, pay the monthly rental of $2,500?

2. For what months, if any, were the lessees in default?

3. Who instructed Messrs. Clement, Pattullo & Ridley to collect the above rent?

4. Whose tenants were the parties above named from whom rent was collected?

5. What explanation has the government respecting Mr. Grottschier's evidence and this return, if any?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. $2,500, June 27, 1898; $2,500, June 27, 1898; $2,500, July 4, 1898; $2,500, August 2, 1898; $2,500, September 2, 1898; $2,500, October 4, 1898; $2,500, November 3, 1898; $5,000, April 11, 1899; $2,500, May 10, 1899; $4,000, July 6, 1899; $1,000, July 7, 1899. 2. The full amount of the rental for the term of the lease has been paid, as shown in reply to question 1. 3. The records of the Department of the Interior do not show who instructed Messrs. Clement, Pattullo & Ridley to collect the above rent, but the report of the collections made by that firm was addressed to the comptroller at Dawson. 4. The tenants of the Crown. 5. Mr. Grottschier's evidence relates to collections made by him as agent for Morrison & McLeod, while the statement above quoted relates to the rental for the period from the expiry of the lease to Morrison & McDonald, 30th of April, 1899, to the date of the removal of the tenants, the date fixed as the limit for removal being the 15th of June, 1899.

IMPORTS FROM UNITED KINGDOM AND UNITED STATES.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. What is the total amount of imports into Canada from the United Kingdom for ten months ending May 1, 1900?

2. What is the total amount of imports from the United Kingdom entered for consumption for the last ten months ending May 1, 1900?

3. What is the amount of dutiable goods imported from the United Kingdom and entered for consumption for the ten months ending May 1, 1900?

4. What is the amount of free goods imported from the United Kingdom and entered for consumption for the ten months ending May 1, 1900?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Information is asked in the above questions as to the value of imports from the United Kingdom into Canada during the ten months ended 1st of May, but as the monthly returns of the department do not supply information by countries, the answers given below are in each case for the nine months ended 31st of March—the latest date to which the department has such information. 1. For the nine months, $34,436,439. 2. For the nine months, $34,106,556. 3. For the nine months, $25,059,260, imports; $24,766,636, consumption. 4. For the nine months, $9,377,179, imports; $9,339,920, consumption.

SEIZURE OF ILLICIT STILL.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Monk) asked :

1. Whether, on or about December 1, 1898, or at any other time, a still was seized on the premises of one G. A. Emard, of St. Roch de Quebec?

2. What instructions did the Department of Inland Revenue Issue in relation thereto, and to whom were they given?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). 1. The seizure of a still was made on that day on V. A. Emond, and not G. A. Emard. 2. The Department of Inland Revenue sent instructions to the Department of Justice to take proceedings, but stopped them afterwards in order to further investigate the case.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Monk) asked :

1. Whether the still owned by Mr. Lapointe, and in relation to which he was prosecuted, was seized on the premises of Mr. C. S. O. Langlois, on or about December 19, 1898?

2. Does the law allow the Crown to distinguish between the owner of a still and the person on whose premises it was seized, in prosecuting for the fines imposed?

3. Why was not Mr. C. S. O. Langlois prosecuted?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). 1. Yes. 2. I think that the minister has the right to decide of the expediency of instituting a prosecution under certain circumstances. 3. After consultation with the law agents of the Crown, I considered that the ends of justice might be more surely attained by prosecuting only Lapointe, the owner and operator of the still.

Mr. GILLIES.

FISH HATCHERY AT DUNK RIVER, P.E.I.

Mr. McLELLAN asked :

Is it the intention of the government to rebuild the fish hatchery burnt down some years ago at Dunk River, Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No decision has yet been reached. The subject is under the consideration of the government.

GOVERNMENT WHARF AT SALMON RIVER, HALIFAX COUNTY, N.S.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) asked :

1. What is the total cost to date of the government wharf at Salmon River, Halifax County, Nova Scotia?

2. What is the total cost to date of the shed constructed upon the said wharf?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. $1,646.89 for wharf. 2. The shed is being built, but the accounts have not yet been received.

YUKON TELEGRAPH LINE—MR. J. B. CHARLESON.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). In answer to the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), I may say that I have spoken to the deputy minister in reference to the matter that he called to my attention, and he tells me that a considerable portion of the Charleson papers have been copied and the balance will be ready for presentation to the House in two or three days.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 163) to amend the Bank Act be read a second time and agreed to.

He said : The Senate has passed the Bill to amend the Bank Act almost exactly as it left this House, but for a verbal change in section 21, by inserting the words 'so far as known.' It has relation to the returns of unpaid drafts.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 156) to amend the Civil Service Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Some clauses in this Bill were held over for further consideration. We had a discussion on section 7, which provided for the appointment of junior second-class clerks under certain conditions at a salary of $800, the special qualification being that the appointee should be a graduate of the Royal Military College, or of one of our universities. I propose to adopt that clause, with a proviso, which, I think, meets the views of gentlemen on both sides :

Provided that an appointment shall only be made under this section in one of the following cases :

(a) Where the junior second-class clerk to be appointed is to take the place of a clerk of the second class or of a higher class.

That is, if a vacancy should occur in a second-class clerkship where the minimum salary is $1,100, there is nothing in the present statute to prevent a gentleman being appointed directly to that office, but, in such case, we propose that we shall not be prohibited from appointing one at $800 instead of $1,100, thus saving $300.

(b) Where the deputy head of the department reports that, owing to the special character of the work to be performed, an appointment under this section is desirable.

I think this will meet the criticisms that were offered.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) The recommendation of the deputy head is satisfactory, but the Minister of Finance has not met the objection that he is superimposing a class between the third-class clerks and the second-class clerks.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will deal with that. I propose to insert the following amendment :

After the passing of this Act, all third-class clerks in the first or inside departmental division of the civil service shall be junior second-class clerks under this Act at their then salaries. Then, following clause 13, I propose a provision, that where an officer is transferred from one class to another, which is of some advantage to him, there are cases in which the salary he is now enjoying is larger than the salary he will obtain in the new position, though ultimately, of course, he will have a chance to advance. We have a section to provide that in that case he shall not suffer any decrease of salary. The point has been taken that this section may not cover the temporary clerks, and I propose to insert the word 'temporary' before 'employee' so as to make it read :

Clerk or temporary employee.

And in like manner, where the word salary is used, I would insert the word 'emolument,' making it 'salary or emolument.'

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. After the hurried way in which we have amended this Bill, do we really know exactly how it all chimes in ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no objection to have the Bill printed, as amended, before the third reading.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be well.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). Has the government made up its mind as to when a case will be presented for the decision of the courts in reference to the matter of statutory increases ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course this Bill does not touch on the question one way or the other, but the matter has not engaged our special attention since my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) referred to it.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—ROYALTIES IN THE YUKON.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I have a matter to bring to its attention in connection with the royalties in the Yukon district, and some matters arising out of the evidence that was produced before Mr. Ogilvie when he acted as commissioner to investigate certain irregularities which had been charged. I do not propose to animadvert upon the wholly irregular way in which that most unsatisfactory commission proceeded to deal with many of the subjects brought before it, except to say that after Mr. Ogilvie had reported—privately, in the sense of the Minister of the Interior—but, so far as the document produced in this House is concerned, most formally and fully: That at the very outset the commission broke down. In connection with that, he did receive information touching a most extraordinary, and up to this time, not satisfactorily explained incident in which, so far as we can see from the record, the owner of the largest and most valuable claims in the Yukon district, the man known as the Bonanza King, the King of the Klondike, was the only individual in all that territory who received an extraordinary and illegal indulgence; and that arrangement was made—and there is no contradiction of the statement I am now making, so far as the reports of Mr. Ogilvie or the records in possession of the government go—by private and confidential correspondence between the Commissioner, Mr. Walsh, and Mr. Alexander McDonald, of which there has only been obtained one side, that is to say, the confidential instructions of Mr. Walsh to Mr. Fawcett; but, so far as the papers disclose, there has been no effort made to obtain the confidential letter written by Mr. McDonald to Mr. Walsh, though its existence is undoubted, because Mr. Walsh refers to it as the moving reason. Outside of the confidential letter which, from the evidence given before Mr. Ogilvie, seems to have been obtained by accident, and produced before the commission by accident, there is no explanation of any kind or nature as to why the gentleman who was the least dependent on the government for concessions, the man who was reaping the most benefit and profit out of the mining operations, was the only individual to obtain an extraordinary indulgence at the hands of the government.

Now, to make this story clear, I should first refer to the position of the law, which was binding upon Major Walsh as it was upon the humblest individual who went into the Yukon. That is found in the regulations promulgated by an order in council of January 18, 1898; and the House will see when I read from these regulations, what little latitude there was for any such irregularity, to use a mild term, as happened in this connection, if the laws had been properly and honestly administered. Sections 30 and 31 are as follows:

30. A royalty of 10 per cent on the gold mined shall be levied and collected on the gross output of each claim. The royalty may be paid at banking offices to be established under the auspices of the government of Canada, or to the gold commissioner, or to any mining recorder authorized by him. The sum of $5,000 shall be deducted from the gross annual output of a claim when estimating the amount upon which royalty is to be calculated, but this exemption shall not be allowed unless the royalty is paid at a banking office or to the gold commissioner or mining recorder. When the royalty is paid monthly or at longer periods, the deduction shall be made ratable on the basis of $5,000 per annum for the claim. If not paid to the bank, the gold commissioner or the mining recorder, it shall be collected by the customs officials or police officers when the miner passes the posts established at the boundary of a district. Such royalty is to form part of the consolidated revenue, and to be accounted for by the officers who collect the same in due course. The time and manner in which such royalty shall be collected shall be provided for by regulations to be made by the gold commissioner.

31. Default in payment of such royalty, if continued for ten days after notice has been posted on the claim in respect of which it is demanded, or in the vicinity of such claim, by the gold commissioner or his agent, shall be followed by cancellation of the claim. Any attempt to defraud the Crown by withholding any part of the revenue thus provided for, by making false statements of the amount taken out, shall be punished by cancellation of the claim in respect of which fraud or false statements have been committed or made. In respect to the facts as to such fraud or false statements or non-payment of royalty, the decision of the gold commissioner shall be final.

Now, I would just stop to comment on one or two features of these regulations. In the first place, the gold commissioner is the only officer charged with anything like responsibility for the collection of the royalty; and the regulation very wisely requires a great responsibility to be assumed by the worker or owner of a claim. There are affidavits to be made, and his statements must be made honestly at his peril. Any dishonest statement made by the owner of a claim in regard to the amount mined by him, involves the risk of the loss of his whole claim. And yet, as we go on, we shall see, so far as the government are concerned—for all the papers in regard to this have been ordered to be produced before this House, and I have examined them carefully—that up to this time Mr. Alexander McDonald has not, in that regard even been compelled to comply with the law. There is no statement by Alexander McDonald of the amount of gold he has mined on his different claims, which would not only have assisted the government in auditing his account, but which is absolutely required by law, if the law is to be anything more than a mere matter of fancy. Now, if you turn to the report of Major Walsh, you will find how little he appreciated, in connection with this matter, the responsibilities of his office, or the binding effect of the laws of this country, when he reached the Yukon district; but, you will find that he recognized the powers that he might exercise if not held to his responsibility. He says:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

On arrival at Dawson I found a great many questions awaiting solution which could only be disposed of by the authority of the commissioner. For instance, the question of royalty, over which there had been considerable discussion, appeared to be somewhat mixed. I immediately announced that the royalty would be collected on all claims the leases of which were renewed subsequent to the date when the law came into force. Nearly all the leaseholders of the larger prospected claims showed a disposition to respect the collection of royalty. Others, however, were not so tractable, their principal objection being that their leases were granted for one year, and that once being granted subsequent restrictions could not be placed upon them.

I may say that in reading this report, and reading, as I propose to do, dispassionately from the records and papers produced, I am most anxious to have the attention of the Prime Minister. In the motion which I propose to put into your hands, I do not think the Prime Minister will find so direct an attack upon the government or such an attitude assumed by me in this connection, that it would be necessary for the government, out of self-respect, to resist the motion. I think the facts I am going to mention, in regard to the property and the laws and the rights of this country, are so serious, that the conclusion I would ask the House to come to is one which, even at this day, the Prime Minister might agree is wholly proper; and, although I do not ordinarily urge that the Prime Minister should give attention to what I say, I would be very much obliged to him if he would follow me, at any rate, while I am referring to the records. Major Walsh goes on to say in this report:

I pointed out to the leaseholders that collection of royalty was necessary for the maintenance of courts of justice, for police protection, mail communication, and for public services. While acknowledging the force of most of this reasoning, they submitted that a more thorough examination of the real cost of outputting the gold would convince the government that the royalty was a severe tax, and express a hope that next year would see it removed. Royalty was not collected from any claims which had not got into good working order or which could not show a profit after paying royalty, and this would represent a large sum. Again, more than half the leases were exempted from royalty on account of having been renewed previous to the date of the law requiring the payment of royalty coming into force. The collection of royalty will amount to about half a million dollars.

Let me call attention to this, that I do not think can be successfully contradicted. Major Walsh's report, at the end of his regime, on the royalty question, is all he says about claims for exemption, and those who will follow me will see exactly what he said with regard to such claims. He was instructed by the order in council appointing him and by his commission, to report monthly to the government of Canada, and it is significant that at no place did Major Walsh ever report to the government—to the Minister of the Interior or any one—outside of the mere instructions of a confidential character which he gave Mr. Fawcett, that he had undertaken to make an exception in the case of Alexander McDonald. Therefore, I think it is all the more extraordinary and significant that by accident, as it were, in Mr. Ogilvie's examination, during the time of his commission, there came out this confidential correspondence, extracted I believe—I am not now speaking exactly by the book, but from memory—by Dr. Bourke, through his having been allowed access to certain files in the gold commissioner's office, when he came across these confidential documents and a part of that correspondence. The letter missing is the letter of Mr. McDonald to Major Walsh, but although this transaction took place in July, 1898, and this report to the Minister of the Interior is made after Major Walsh came out of the territory, there is not any full official report yet on record in the Department of the Interior, and it was discovered in the way I have mentioned in the gold commissioner's office.

To give an idea of the value of these claims, the correspondence will show to some extent what a large territory Mr. McDonald is operating in these various creeks, and there is a paper the Dawson Weekly News, which, in its issue of the 25th of May, 1900, gives the various clean-ups of the different creeks. It gives the number of claims and the names of the owners and the number of men employed, the amount of tons on the dump, the value per ton, and the value of each clean-up. Looking over that, we find some interesting facts:

The clean-up of Dominion Creek is enormous. It looms up as one of the most prosperous of all the creeks.

Then we come to the Hunter Creek:

Claim No. 3, Alexander McDonald et al., twelve men employed; tons on the dump, 450,000; value of the clean-up, $30,000.

No. 4, Hunter Creek, value of clean-up, $30,000.

No. 3, value of the clean-up, $10,000.

On Dominion Creek, Alexander McDonald, claim No. 7, value of the clean-up, $24,000.

Dominion Creek below Discovery, the claim No. 6, McDonald, value of the clean-up, $9,000.

Then we come to Silver Creek, No. 7, value of the clean-up, $9,500; No. 8, value of the clean-up, $24,000; No. 10, $24,000; No. 11, $45,000; No. 13, $25,000; No. 14, $19,520; No. 32, $30,000; No. 33, $17,500.

And again on Bonanza Creek, claim No. 20, $8,400.

I do not know how many Mr. McDonald is interested in, but, at any rate, this confirms the general statement, which no one hitherto has denied, and the correspondence between Mr. Ogilvie and Major Walsh, in July, 1898, goes to show that Mr. McDonald was one of the largest proprietors in the district.

I have referred to chapter 6. Statutes of 1899, the constitutional arrangement for that district, and we will see, by the statement of the Auditor General to the Public Accounts Committee this year, that we have had this extraordinarily rich territory administered by officers appointed by this government, absolutely without any independent audit. The Auditor General has practically nothing to do with the accounts relating to the revenue or the expenditure in that country, and he was in no sense in a position to assist the Public Accounts Committee. This in itself is an extraordinary condition, and it is necessary to refer to it in connection with these matters that have occurred and with the investigation—if the thing can be called an investigation at all—that has taken place into the subject.

When this matter came up almost by accident before the commissioner, we find what was said, and Mr. Ogilvie's position in this connection is most unsatisfactory, to my mind, based on the information that I shall put before parliament. Whether my conclusion be reasonable or not, it is at any rate based on information that I shall put in the possession of the House. In the evidence that was given, we find, turning to the report of Mr. Ogilvie, some questions of this character. When Mr. Fawcett was being examined, he was asked—see page 210 of the evidence:

Q. You know this letter from Major Walsh to you, and you know that Alexander McDonald got time—I suppose there is no other case like this?—A. No, not that I know of.

Q. No other case of extension?—A. I do not know; this is the only case that came under my notice.

The House will remember what the law of the land was. It put Mr. Fawcett, the gold commissioner in charge, but you will find that Major Walsh stepped in and took charge of the gold commissioner absolutely by means of this confidential correspondence. When pressed, Mr. Fawcett said:

I think there is a letter some place that I have from Major Walsh asking me to give the mining inspectors full instructions with reference to the collection of royalty. These instructions were given in writing, and rules were posted up. They were subsequently changed by Major Walsh after he arrived from Bennett.

Major Walsh did not get into Dawson, I think, until February, 1898. He did not get into that city in 1897, when he went up. The regulations refer entirely to the gold commissioner and the rules the gold commissioner was to post. These were posted by the commissioner, and, as Mr. Fawcett explained under oath, they were changed by Major Walsh when he arrived. Then, at page 211, the commissioner said :

The matter has been reported long ago to Ottawa to find out how much royalty he owes, as we can't find out.

Now, here is the statement of Commissioner Ogilvie, who was speaking, no doubt, not only as commissioner presiding over the examination, but as commissioner for the Canadian government in the Yukon; and who, as we shall see, had reported to the Minister of the Interior before the investigation that there is a serious matter in default. And the commissioner, having given the matter investigation with all the officers at his disposal, yet he makes the statement as commissioner that he cannot find any statement of account between McDonald and the government. And though there is the report—which I will refer to later on—of Mr. Lithgow, who is an officer of the government, professing to be an audit in regard to this account, the slightest examination will show that it is not only not an audit of the account from the beginning, but it does not profess to be more than a settlement, and lacks the material that ought to be before the House or at least in possession of the government—that is, the original statement made by McDonald as mine owner under the regulation, as to what he claimed he had mined, and the reports of the various officers paid for by this country, such men as McGregor, Norwood, Bliss, and all these various officers of the government, who were paid for watching and inspecting and checking over all these reports. We shall find that in the so-called settlement that Mr. Lithgow reports, there is not a syllable to suggest that they have ever had from any of these officers any official statement, or even a statement from the man interested. And, at page 211 of this evidence Mr. Ogilvie makes mention of the fact that, at that day, in his position there in the Yukon with all these records before him, he could not find out how the matter stood. Then, Dr. Bourke goes on to say :

As far as you are concerned, I am sure that everything has been done properly, but in this case what the public are interested in is in knowing who allowed these things to be done in this way ?

Evidently the commissioner answers this :

A. You see Major Walsh had power to amend the mining regulations, and you heard Mr.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Fawcett's statement that Major Walsh took the power out of his hands and ordered these matters.

I only stop to say that I am sure no lawyer in the cabinet will agree that Major Walsh had such power; and the government could not give him the power. And, in the second place, there is not a particle of evidence to show that Major Walsh attempted to exercise such power, except by the confidential letter written at the request of McDonald, who wrote to him a confidential letter on the subject. The record then goes on :

Dr. Bourke.—I want this to go on record, and ask that this letter in which Major Walsh hurriedly referred to McDonald's difficulties to meet his engagements. I want the government to know McDonald's position as a practical speculator; a man who holds government royalty to speculate with while a poor man who cannot pay for his sluice-boxes is locked up.

The commissioner then makes this extraordinary observation :

The government knows that months ago.

Again, on the same page, referring to the difficulties surrounding this matter, the commissioner says :

We can collect it; it is a simple matter if you know the amount.

Remember, this is in regard to the amount of work done by McDonald long anterior to the time when the commissioner was speaking. He is speaking in February, 1899; the royalty is a matter of 1897-8. And, the commissioner states at that time, that he is absolutely powerless in regard to how the accounts stand. And then come these letters. Here is a letter marked 'confidential' and dated 20th July, 1898, a letter written to McDonald by Major Walsh as commissioner of the Yukon. He acknowledges in that letter a letter which has never been produced, a letter that no effort has been made to secure. So far as the returns are concerned, and so far as the answers across the floor of the House show—and I would call the attention of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to this fact—that there has not been even a request sent to Major Walsh to produce the letter that brought about this extraordinary and exceptional treatment of Alexander McDonald, namely the private letter from Major Walsh. In his letter to McDonald, Major Walsh said :

Dear Sir,—I have just received your letter of to-day with regard to the royalty and the manner in which it would affect your interests if collected at once.

He then goes on to say that he realizes all that this man has done for the country and the extraordinary work and enterprise that he, Alexander McDonald, has shown. None of that I dispute; I am not attacking McDonald in the slightest respect. My point is that this matter has been treated in the most extraordinary manner—we do not know under what inducements—and also that it should not be allowed to remain in this unsatisfactory position. Major Walsh says he would not like to do anything that would seriously interfere with McDonald, and then he goes on to say :

I do not see anything unreasonable in your proposition to pay one-half the royalty in September next, and the other half in May, 1899.

And, so far as the papers before this House are concerned, there is nothing to show that even that bargain was kept. I must say again—it can hardly be said too often—that there is nothing to show that at this time Major Walsh knew the value of the indulgence he was giving to Alexander McDonald; but everything goes to show that no statement had been had from McDonald as to how much gold he had mined under the regulations. Major Walsh concludes his letter by saying he will instruct the gold commissioner. Then he writes the gold commissioner a letter—and I call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that he writes him a confidential letter, not an open and official letter, under date of July 22, in which he says :

I inclose a copy of a letter I am forwarding to Mr. Alexander McDonald, in reply to a communication from him applying for an extension of time for the payment of royalties due by him this season.

And then he goes on to say :

You will please be guided in accordance therewith.

Which means: You will grant this concession. Then the gold commissioner writes that he has noted these instructions and will govern himself accordingly. This is the only open and official letter. The letters from McDonald to Walsh, and Walsh to Fawcett were confidential. Now then Llewellyn was sworn, and he is apparently called to show that this was exceptional treatment. He says here :

At any rate there were certain steps taken against you by the government regarding the payment of royalty, and as a result of those steps you had to appear here, in Dawson; and as a result of matters here you were discharged.

He swears, that it was on December 2, he paid the royalty. He was followed up in regard to this matter by Dr. Bourke, attempting to show that this was an exceptional indulgence, which was most material evidence it seems to me, and the commissioner seems to have shown a desire, as on many other occasions, to shield the officers of the government from full inquiry. He says :

You must give notice, Doctor, you must not spring things on us in this way.

Then at page 227, referring to evidence on this subject again, Mr. Fawcett asks :

Q. Do you know that Alex. McDonald's royalty was laid over for a time; the payments of it?—

A. I have no positive knowledge.

Q. Do you believe it was laid over?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any other persons royalty being laid over?—A. No, I have not. The only question of laying over this royalty was this letter.

Q. You have no knowledge of any other case?

—A. No, none whatever.

Mr. Fawcett.—That is all.

There is the gold commissioner examining Mr. Calder, apparently one of the officers in the office, and he makes that point. Now that evidence on its face is bad enough, but it is only a sample of many others showing that there is not any attempt on the part of Mr. Ogilvie—I defy any one who has examined the evidence to discover it—to probe this matter to the bottom. He does not make the slightest effort to obtain even Alex. McDonald's letter, though McDonald was examined on one other subject in regard to what happened between him and Major Walsh to bring about this extraordinary statement. He does not ask McDonald how much he owed, and how much this illegal indulgence was worth to him. The whole matter stops short where Dr. Bourke, who seems to have had access to the file and ferretted out those letters, at the remarks made by Fawcett, bringing out the very important fact that that was the only case of such an indulgence shown.

Then there is an extraordinary thing reflecting, I think—I say so openly—very seriously on Mr. Ogilvie, as commissioner. With all that before him, he writes a letter to the Minister of the Interior, dated February 20, in that very year, while that inquiry was before him. He says :

This matter is a very serious one. Under ordinary circumstances McDonald would lose all his claim in connection with this.

Undoubtedly that was the law of the land, but he goes on to point out that it would be a terrible thing to punish McDonald, and so it would be, for the acts of the commissioner reflecting on the government of the country. Now then the treatment of that letter seems to me suspicious. Am I unreasonably suspicious, Mr. Speaker? Let me give the government the grounds of my suspicion. There is a letter written containing that serious statement among others to the Minister of the Interior, on February 20, 1899. The Minister of the Interior got that letter on April 3, 1899, as is shown by an answer across this House, the formal answer from the acting Minister of the Interior. On April 4, the day after he got that letter, he informed me, in answer to a formal question, that he had no communication from Mr. Ogilvie on the subject of that commission other than a letter that was so involved with private and official matters that he would not lay it on the Table of the House. In answer to an order of the House this year for a return of all documents of this character, whether by accident or design, this document came down, the document the minister refused last year to lay on the Table of the House as being a private letter. But when it is inspected it is found to be of a most formal character.

It is addressed by Mr. Ogilvie to the Minister of the Interior, addressing him as 'Dear Sir,' signed in the nature of an official letter by 'your obedient and humble servant, Wm. Ogilvie.' There is not a line of it that partakes of a private character except it be this reference to the serious character of this matter he would have to investigate, and also containing clauses that, had they been before the House, neither the Minister of the Interior nor the Prime Minister would have made the statements that were made in debate last year when they said they had no word from Mr. Ogilvie in regard to this commission, but that if the information was not at all full, there would be a further commission. There was a letter withheld directly last session, so there followed an argument that could not be made if it were laid on the Table of the House. There is a letter brought down this year that shows that this man appreciated that the McDonald royalty question was a serious one, and that if the law of the land was carried out McDonald would have forfeited all his claims had he not been granted this indulgence, whether legally or otherwise, by Major Walsh. There is no explanation except that contained in the confidential correspondence, that as he had been a pioneer, as he had done great things for the development of the country, and incidentally no doubt for himself, as the subsequent returns show, he was to be granted an indulgence not contemplated by the regulations, and not proposed in regard to any other miner. The absence of that indulgence has been the ruin of many a poor miner, and has kept many a poor man from working in that country altogether. These are matters wholly apart from the complaints that arise in that country that do require probing, that do require the attention that they have not yet received. For instance, we must have some effort put forward to find the letter that McDonald wrote to Major Walsh. Surely that in any event ought to have been obtained, or some reason given for its not being brought down. The royalty would have embarrassed McDonald, is that a reason for not enforcing it? Cries have come up from all parts of that country that it is embarrassing in general, that it has driven the ordinary individual miner to the wall, and has put the whole, or a large part, of that rich country in the hands of rings and corporations, of men who are able to do what the ordinary developer of a mining country has never been able to do.

Now, in order that we may appreciate how worthless Mr. Ogilvie's report is, I think the House will be surprised to learn that these are observations that Mr. Ogilvie felt warranted in making. It is clear he did not know when he made his report that his letter, the letter that the minister for a time treated as private and confidential, would come down ultimately. This is what he says in his report :

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

You will also see that some inquiry was made into the laying over of Alexander McDonald's royalty and an explanation furnished for the same.

All the evidence submitted in this connection was that furnished in the letters between Major Walsh, Mr. McDonald and Mr. Fawcett. There appears to have been no wrong-doing in this—

The House will judge. There are simply these confidential letters that he is basing his report on, and there is the additional statement that no other man got this indulgence.

—at least none was made manifest, Major Walsh taking the view that it would be impolitic to exact Mr. McDonald's royalty, as it would put him to considerable hardship if he was compelled to pay it, and later on, his paying it would benefit the country as much as if he had paid it last spring.

Will it be believed that a commission that is supposed to be a satisfactory commission, that is supposed to have done away with the necessity of investigating the charges I took the responsibility of making, had not before it and did not attempt to obtain the information that I mention and that should have suggested itself to Mr. Ogilvie's mind as information that ought to have been obtained. They had not the information that the Department of the Interior had. They had not the ordinary official information, and when that information is examined which has been laid on the Table of this House, we will see that there is a great deal more in this matter to investigate than Mr. Ogilvie, at any rate, thought. Let us see how disturbing this question admittedly was in the minds of the officials of the department. Let us see whether this confidential information was ever sent to the Department of the Interior or whether it was obtained accidentally when Dr. Bourke and the other gentleman who appeared in this manner before Mr. Ogilvie. To show that I am not unreasonable in this matter, I will begin with the correspondence and continue it down, and we will see how this matter stands. I will show what the department itself thought about this, and it shows the carelessness of the department in regard to another matter where Wade figures. We will find that Major Walsh was advised in this matter by McDonald's solicitor, Wade. Major Walsh no doubt assumed that Wade was an officer of the government, and as a member of his informal council, he consulted him in this matter. Wade had the audacity and was unprincipled enough to interfere in regard to McDonald's case, when he was the paid solicitor of McDonald. We have had the water front matter under consideration, and the right hon. Prime Minister knows what loop-hole there was, if any, for Wade to escape from criticism in that matter. But, here, we find that Wade admits and that he swears that McDonald was his client, and at that time he was advising the Crown in regard to an indulgence as to his client's royalty. We also find that McGregor, Norwood and these men who have been employed by this government as inspectors showed how much information that would give to the Department of the Interior in regard to one of the largest operators in the Yukon gold fields. Here is the correspondence :

(Commissioner Walsh to the Hon. Clifford Sifton.)

Commissioner's Office, Yukon River,
Sixty miles S.E. Selkirk,
February 14, 1898.

(En route north.)

This is the latter part of it only which is brought down, but it is the part relating to the royalty. There are stars which show omissions in the first part :

Sir,—

Fawcett has reported that but little royalty could be collected this year owing to the best large paying claims being renewed under the old regulations, and that the mines that are being worked under the new regulations will be unable to pay royalty. This being the case, and Fawcett understanding mining matters better than I, I considered it safer to leave the matter entirely in his hands for this season. . . . .

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. M. WALSH,
Commissioner of the Yukon.

To the Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Now, then, we have Major Walsh starting out with the intention of leaving this matter in Fawcett's hands for this season. The regulations leave it in Fawcett's hands all the time. The gold commissioner is the man, and not the commissioner of the Yukon territory at all. Strangely enough, there is no explanation to show why he ever took it out of Mr. Fawcett's hands except it be that while he was ostensibly and officially leaving Fawcett to be the scapegoat, leaving Fawcett to stand between the public and the department, and the department and McDonald, he, behind the scenes, was peremptorily ordering Fawcett to exercise a certain discretion in letters marked 'confidential.' a course he was advised to take by Wade, ostensibly a member of his irregular council, but really the solicitor for McDonald. On December 10, 1898, we find from Mr. Ogilvie this letter. This is before the examination to which I have referred :

Dawson, Dec. 10, 1898.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to call your attention to the inclosed documents, which show that the royalty due the government by Alexander McDonald, of this city, was for a term remitted by instructions of the late commissioner, J. M. Walsh.

I do not wish to be understood as making a complaint regarding this action, but consider it irregular, and would like to know if there are any documents among Major Walsh's papers that would go to show how much royalty Mr. McDonald paid on account of this privilege, and how much is still due by him.

It appears the gold commissioner cannot say what the exact standing of the matter is.

It may transpire that some documents will turn up after exhaustive search which will throw light on the matter, but at present we are completely in the dark as to how much royalty Mr. McDonald paid in September last, and how much is due in May.

There is a statement of that private bargain between these two men showing the condition of affairs in a public office in this country bearing out what I say that this official had not only allowed this man to ignore the regulations which required that he should make a statement as to how much gold he had taken out of his claims, but that this officer had failed to make a report as to how much was due by McDonald to the Crown :

We should also like to know what means, if any, were taken to ascertain the output of Mr. McDonald's operations, as it is well known that he has a large number of claims here.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) WM. OGILVIE,
Commissioner.

There is a question I want answered, and there is a question the government have not answered. There is a question that parliament ought to have answered, and therein lies a mystery, and it will remain a mystery until the government probe, as they should have probed, this extraordinary state of things to the bottom. What followed after that letter? A telegram from the Department of the Interior, dated February 15, 1899, to J. D. McGregor, Esq., Brandon, Man., an officer under pay as an inspector of this very subject up in the Yukon district, an officer who was found generally, and certainly during the last elections in Manitoba some thousands of miles away from the Yukon, working there as a political heeler. McGregor is wired by the hon. Minister of the Interior for a little information, for a little value for the money paid to him as an inspector, as follows :

(Telegram.)

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, Feb. 15, 1899.

J. D. McGregor, Esq., Brandon, Man.

It appears Alex. McDonald's royalty was not collected last summer. Records not clear. What information can you give about it. Wire reply.

CLIFFORD SIFTON.

Let us see how extraordinary this matter becomes the minute it is stirred up, whether it be by Dr. Bourke before Mr. Ogilvie, or whether it be by the officers of the department at Ottawa, or elsewhere. Mr. McGregor had been at Brandon, but he goes to Winnipeg, and he wires the hon. Minister of the Interior from Winnipeg, Man., on the 15th of February, 1899, as follows :

Winnipeg, Man., Feb. 15, 1899.

To the Hon. C. Sifton, Ottawa.

McDonald represented in writing to Walsh that it would embarrass him if the whole was collected. It was decided to let part of it lay over till this year. He was partner in all his working properties; who paid their share. Walsh will have his letter.

(Sgd.) J. D. MCGREGOR.

Mr. McGregor knew nothing about it, except what we have already ascertained from this confidential communication. He was inspector, knew nothing whatever, except that a confidential letter was written by McDonald to Walsh, and Walsh granted the indulgence. But he sees the importance of McDonald's letter, and yet parliament is not in possession of that letter, and apparently from the return—I speak subject to correction—no effort has been made to obtain the letter from Major Walsh. On February 17, 1899, the assistant secretary of the Department of the Interior writes to Mr. Ogilvie, as follows :

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, Feb. 17, 1899.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 10 last in relation to the royalty due to the government by Mr. Alex. McDonald, of Dawson, and asking what means, if any, were taken to ascertain the output of Mr. McDonald's operations.

In reply, I am to say that in a return received here from Inspector Norwood it is shown that on August 26, 1898, he collected from Alex. McDonald the sum of $2,000, being royalty on the output of claim 35, above Discovery, on Bonanza Creek, but there is nothing on record here to show what action was taken to ascertain the output of Mr. McDonald's operations.

Here is the department telling Mr. Ogilvie away back in the Yukon that there was nothing on record to show what action was taken to ascertain the output of Mr. McDonald's operations.

Mr. J. D. McGregor, in reply to an inquiry from him as to what information he could give about the matter, stated that Mr. McDonald represented in writing to Major Walsh that it would embarrass him if the whole amount due for royalty were collected, that it was decided to let part of it lie over until this year, and that he has partners in all his working properties who paid their share.

It is thought that Inspector Norwood may be able to furnish you with some information as to Mr. McDonald's operations. Mr. McGregor leaves for Dawson in a few days, and you may also obtain further information from him.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) LYN. PEREIRA,
Assistant Secretary.

Wm. Ogilvie, Esq.,
Commissioner,
Dawson, Y.T.,

Mr. McGregor shows he knew nothing about it, except that it was arranged in that confidential manner. In the return there is a document which does not seem to be a copy of a whole letter, for it neither begins nor ends, and yet we ought to be thankful for small mercies, for the House will remember how many were the letters passing between the Department of the Interior and the Yukon territory, that I was refused last year, because the minister told me they were private, and could not be laid on the Table. However, this document is dated February 16, 1899, and has the following heading :

Copy of a letter received by the minister from Mr. J. M. Walsh, dated February 16, 1899, in relation to the royalty due by Mr. McDonald on gold mined by him in the Yukon territory.

I quote from the paper :

Fawcett, who received the returns of royalty collected from the mines by the inspectors, should be able to give Mr. Ogilvie a statement showing the sum due by McDonald at the close of the wash-up.

That is the first statement of this gentleman who granted the indulgence by a peremptory order to Fawcett, and Fawcett has sworn that Walsh took the matter out of his hands, and Fawcett explained that he could not give any explanation, and Major Walsh is referred to. He has never been called before the commissioner in any way, or his evidence taken under oath. Major Walsh goes on to say :

When McDonald appealed to me for time, saying that the sum he had during the spring and was still compelled to put into improvements to work his claims to advantage, made it impossible for him to pay the royalty then due and demanded; that he had already paid a large sum of royalty, and would continue to pay all he could as long as the wash-up lasted, the balance, if any was due, to be paid in the spring.

I discussed the matter with McGregor and Wade—

I ask the House to remember the name of 'Wade' in this connection. There is no doubt whatever from Wade's sworn testimony that at this period he was the paid solicitor of Mr. McDonald, that he had received a retainer, that would look large in the east, from Mr. McDonald, and now we find him in all these various matters, cropping up as the adviser of some one else—this man who was advising the Crown.

I discussed the matter with McGregor and Wade, and we decided that to close down on McDonald would not only interrupt our collection of royalty, but would seriously affect the whole mining interest of the Klondike.

McDonald's improvements were good security for the sum due, about $30,000 or $40,000.

I extended McDonald's time for full payment until the spring of 1899.

Before leaving Dawson (August 4), Norwood informed me that the sum then due by McDonald was about $16,000. Fawcett should know if this sum was correct, and if there was an accumulation after my departure, for he directed the inspectors in their work, and received their reports.

Fawcett, of course, in the examination, showed that he did not know and that no one under his control knew. That was on February 16, 1899, while this helpless inquiry was being made in the Yukon territory. Now then, on February 28, 1899, the commissioner, Mr. Ogilvie, writes with regard, undoubtedly, to all the records in that department, and to his conversation with the officer. This is a so-called 'private' letter that was 'private' last session, and not brought down to the House, but is brought down to the House this session, and which is, on the face of it, an official document from beginning to end. This is what Mr. Ogilvie reported to the Minister of the Interior :

The question of the withholding of McDonald's royalty has been brought up, and we will have to investigate it at the same time. This matter is a serious one. McDonald presumably owed the government some $70,000 for royalty dues, out of which only about $2,000 was paid.

You will note that Major Walsh said it was $30,000 or $40,000, instead of $70,000.

Under ordinary circumstances, the man would lose all his claims, but, as this was authorized by the late commissioner, of course McDonald could not be made to suffer for his act; but it will have a very bad effect on the minds of the public when it becomes known that such was done.

On March 1, 1899, the secretary of the Department of the Interior, writes to Mr. Ogilvie, the commissioner.

On April 18, 1899, Mr. Ogilvie says, writing to the secretary of the Department of the Interior :

Commissioner's Office,
Dawson, Y.T., April 18, 1899.

To the Secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—Yours of the 17th February re the question of Mr. McDonald's royalty arrived by last mail. In reply, I beg to submit that we knew that about $2,000 of McDonald's royalty had been paid, but to what extent the balance has been paid, we don't know.

We know the terms of Major Walsh's letter laying over the balance of his royalty, which provided that one-half of the balance should be paid on the 1st of September last and the other half on the 1st of May next; we do not know what the one-half in either case amounts to; inquiries have been made, but so far without avail.

Mr. Norwood arrived quite recently, and the Comptroller will learn from him all he knows in that direction.

Mr. McDonald and his partner, Mr. Morrison, are here, and it is possible that we may be able to arrive at some definite conclusion in the matter before long.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
WM. OGILVIE,
Commissioner.

Now, if there ever was a subject that required to be probed to the bottom by an independent commission, after all that occurred, it was that; and the very absence of an authoritative and satisfactory investigation is enough to give credence to any rumour that may be stated in regard to the irregularities that have occurred in connection with the Yukon administration. But what do we find? I asked on the 14th of May, 1900, a certain question in regard to this royalty, and I was told by the acting minister that the comptroller, Mr. Lithgow, not an independent officer in the same sense as the Auditor General of Canada, but an officer of this government, had made an investigation and report on the subject of Mr. McDonald's royalty. I asked on May 30 whether this report had been brought down to the House, and if not, whether it would be brought down. The acting Minister of the Interior was good enough to bring down that report; and this is the report, which is the conclusion of all that I have read :

Dawson, Y. T., June 23, 1899.

James A. Smart, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I have the honour to inclose a statement of royalty paid by Alex. McDonald on account of 1898, amounting to $34,028.13, together with receipts and draft No. 347, deposited to the credit of the Receiver General.

It will be remembered that Major Walsh allowed Mr. McDonald an extension of time on the payment of his royalty, and the inclosed statement represents a full settlement, having been gone into most carefully by the gold commissioner and myself. This will appear in the gold commissioner's statement for June.

I have the honour to remain, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) J. T. LITHGOW,

Comptroller.

The gold commissioner is Mr. Senkler, and the comptroller is Mr. Lithgow; and not a particle of my case is based on any insinuation against the honour or integrity of either of these men; but they do not pretend that they have audited the account of Mr. McDonald with the Crown. They honestly state just what I have read, that this represents a settlement; and the House and the country, with all that investigation and correspondence, which I have read, before them, are unable to suppose that there has been anything like an audit of the accounts. No one pretends to say what was due when Mr. Walsh, undoubtedly illegally, remitted the payments and made an exception of probably the richest man in the Klondike, in granting him indulgence as to the time for payment. No one pretends to say that Mr. McDonald was ever asked to make an affidavit of what was due, as required by the regulations. There is no statement that Mr. McDonald was put under oath, having first made the statement which, by the regulations, he was required to make; and there is no statement to show that this account was checked over. Then we have appended to that letter something more unsatisfactory still. Mr. Lithgow said this represented a settlement in 1898; but it was not for the year 1898 only. The indulgence ran up to the wash-up in May, 1899, and there was no settlement up to that time. Here is the report of the royalties collected by Mr. Lithgow up to some time in May, showing that the agreement had not been lived up to in regard to the payment of the royalty. This is dated the 20th of June, 1899, and shows the date, the number of receipt, which is given, the name, the number of the claim, and that appears; the total gold production, and that appears—$347,781.30; the royalty paid, opposite each claim, the total being $34,028.13, and the remarks. So that Mr. Lithgow is not bound to prove more, in order to show that he has not made a misleading statement, than that is a settlement, arrived at we know not how, between Mr. McDonald and the Crown. And the gold commissioner certifies this:

The above is a statement of the royalty paid by Alexander McDonald, being the balance due on gold mined by him during 1898.

E. C. SENKLER,
Gold Commissioner.

Examined.—J. T. Lithgow, Comptroller.

Neither of these gentleman had anything to do with this man, or anything to do with the subject-matter of those claims during the period in question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What was the reduction made?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No one knows. This is a settlement of the account. We do not know what the Crown or any of the officers claim, and we have no statement under affidavit by any of these people of what was owed. So that in no respect can that document be considered as supplying to us anything in the shape of an audit. There has been no audit, certainly no independent audit, of these accounts. Let us look at a return to the House of Commons, dated the 7th of February, 1900, containing memoranda and reports of Corporal Wilson and other officers respecting inspection of mines and collection of royalties. There are one or two references there which are not unimportant. Here, for instance, we have Mr. Lithgow, on October 3, 1899, reporting generally on royalty affidavits:

It is possible that some of last year's are missing, but we have sent copies of all that could be found.

Indicating that so lax was the administration of affairs in that district under Major Walsh that the officers, when examined in connection with this or any other business matter, showed a condition of helpless confusion. On July 18, 1899, we find this comptroller, Mr. J. T. Lithgow, writing to the secretary of the Department of the Interior, acknowledging the receipt of an official letter re an amount of $1,301, which was reported by Mr. Fawcett as having been received for a payment of royalty that was paid at the court:

I made inquiries at the court-house yesterday, and asked the clerk of the court to give me any information on the subject he could find, but he has been unable to find out anything about it, as there is no name, or number of the claim, to identify it. When I made out this statement for Mr. Fawcett in January last, we had agreed upon a balance of $2,321.26, and it was not until some time after that Mr. Fawcett discovered in the back of his memorandum book an item of $1,301.24, which he informed me was royalty paid into court. He had no other record of it, and was unable to give me any other information.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

If I am asked why I mention this correspondence, I do so to strengthen the statement that I have made, based on an examination of the papers before the House, that this period was one of confusion, for which Major Walsh was directly responsible. At the time when this illegal extension was granted, no precautions were taken to protect the interests of the Crown, and nothing which has occurred since has shown that there was anything like careful accounting, upon which to base a correct audit of the affairs between Mr. McDonald and the Crown. We find in another letter from Mr. Norwood, dated August 17, 1899, an idea of how little he could be relied on in these matters:

Regarding the money collected by me from the sale of free miners' certificates and the collection of royalties while stationed at Grand Forks, Yukon territory, during the summer of 1898, I will call attention to the fact that it was impossible for me to keep the money separate, as would have been done under ordinary circumstances, owing to the difficulties with which I had to contend, viz., no proper place to do business, nor books to keep accounts in, and having to send money to Dawson whenever I had a chance, as I had no safe place to keep gold dust where I was.

There is a reason given why the Minister of the Interior could not obtain, in the usual manner, from his officers any statement whatever, with regard to the affairs between Mr. McDonald and the government.

In this return again, there is a memorandum from Mr. Fawcett, dated Ottawa, June 13:

Those who paid royalty at the bank filled out and made affidavits to the return at the office, took it to the bank; these would be filed away at the bank. I do not know what the inspectors did with the affidavits taken by them.

Yet there is a set of regulations of the utmost importance, requiring an affidavit from every party interested.

Captain Bliss, who was accountant at that time—

He evidently preceded Mr. Lithgow.

—kept the account of the royalty, and did not prepare a return for the gold commissioner's office. The commissioner (Commissioner Walsh) himself superintended, to a great extent, the collection of royalties.

Why should not this gentleman, Captain Bliss, be called on to make a more explicit and exact statement than he has made with regard to this extraordinary transaction which was conducted secretly with Mr. McDonald, and with reference to which he gave such peremptory and secret instruction to the gold commissioner.

On January 30, 1899, there is a letter from Mr. Lithgow, the comptroller, in which he says:

He informs me that he had nothing to do with the royalty, as it was handled by Mr. H. A. Bliss, and the only amounts he received were $1,403.50 from J. B. McGregor, already referred to.

Does any one pretend to tell me that the public mind would be at all satisfied until we have had Major Bliss and Mr. Wade examined. Major Bliss was not even asked for a statement. Major Bliss, who was the financial man under Major Walsh, was not asked to put his pen to a syllable to explain what became of this money, and how the account stood. Nor was Mr. Wade, who was the solicitor of this interested party, and the officer of the government, asked to give a statement as to how these matters stand.

In the Auditor General's Report, there is further evidence to be found, under the heading of the Department of the Interior, of the unsatisfactory condition of this question. He makes this remark, for instance :

I have seen no evidence that royalty was paid in every case where it should have been paid, or that the amount that was paid was the amount that should have been paid.

This is from parliament's auditor, and the secretary of the department writing on June 23, says :

Mr. Thomas Fawcett, who was gold commissioner at the time the last collection of royalty was made, has lately furnished this department with a report showing the method adopted last year to collect the royalty, and a copy of the same is inclosed herewith for your information. The department is not aware what system is being adopted by the present gold commissioner, but he is being asked to report to the department in regard to this, and a copy of your communication will also be sent to him.

Then inclosed is the statement as to the collection of royalties, during the summer of 1898. At the bottom he says :

The collection of royalties this year is in the hands of the North-west Mounted Police, and I think they can be depended upon to see that none are missed.

That that is a reflection on the conditions that existed, no one can doubt. But there is further proof on page 120, in a note from Mr. Senkler, written in the gold commissioner's office :

The three counterfoils, Nos. 3, 17 and 2255, are beyond explanation.

That does not reveal a satisfactory condition of things, at any rate, up to the time the present commissioner took charge. I am not going into the broader question as to how it is there is no provision for giving the Auditor General more independent control and supervision over the expenditure and receipts in connection with this huge revenue-producing country. I have shown that the government are solely responsible, and it is no answer to say that Mr. Lithgow is an honest man. I do not dispute his honesty. Among all the various complaints I have heard, nothing has ever reached me to impeach his character, which I knew once to be good, or the character of the present gold commissioner, Mr. Senkler, of whom I have heard, has been to his credit as a barrister and a gentleman. But the point is, that the Department of the Interior has shown its helplessness in this matter, and that the commissioner, Mr. Ogilvie, has shown his helplessness, and that at the bottom of all the trouble and difficulty is a confidential correspondence, only part of which has come to light, and that with regards to this singular and extraordinary indulgence shown Mr. McDonald, Mr. Wade's name again is involved, who occupied the dual position of a paid government officer, depended on by Major Walsh for advice, and who at the time, was the paid counsel and solicitor for parties dealing with Major Walsh, the representative of the government. I, therefore, beg to move :

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof : 'on the 28th June, 1899, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper stated from his place in this House that he was credibly informed and believed that with the same co-operation through the supervision of the Department of Justice as was given by the government of Canada to the Hon. Clifford Sifton in the case of the Manitoba election frauds (so called) he could establish before a commission comprised of eminent judges clothed with suitable powers the following facts and charges amongst others :

That Major Walsh whilst acting as chief executive officer of the Canadian government in the Yukon was guilty of crime and misbehaviour in office.

That Major Walsh was guilty of doing acts directly contrary to the design of his office as chief executive officer of the Dominion government.

That Major Walsh did not send by each and every mail a full report in writing to the Minister of the Interior, as commanded by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, or as required by the order in council purporting to appoint him to his office as commissioner for the Yukon district.

That the regulations were not regularly enforced, but certain of them (as for instance those relating to royalties on mines and mining claims) were allowed by Major Walsh to be violated.

That Major Walsh illegally exempted individuals from the law and regulations respecting the payment of royalties.

That officials in the employment of the Canadian government in the Yukon territory have been guilty of directly and indirectly accepting or receiving gifts, compensation and considerations for assisting or favouring certain individuals in the transaction of business with the government, contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Code.

That officials in the employment of the Canadian government in the Yukon district have been guilty of frauds and breaches of trust affecting the public, contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Code.

That from the reports and papers now on the Table of the House it appears Major Walsh, commissioner for Yukon district, without ascertaining the amount due, illegally and by confidential instructions to the gold commissioner, in 1898, extended the time allowed by law for the payment of royalty on the gold mined by one Alexander McDonald.

That the present commissioner for Yukon district reported to the Minister of the Interior on 10th December, 1898, as follows :

Dawson, December 10, 1898.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior.
Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to call your attention to the inclosed documents which show that the royalty due the government by Alex. McDonald, of this city, was for a term remitted by instructions of the late Commissioner J. M. Walsh.

I do not wish to be understood as making a complaint regarding this action but consider it irregular and would like to know if there are any documents among Major Walsh's papers that would go to show how much royalty Mr. McDonald paid on account of this privilege, and how much is still due by him.

I have the honour to be, sir,

And again on the 28th February, 1898, as follows:

The question of the withholding of McDonald's royalty has been brought up, and we will have to investigate it at the same time. This matter is a serious one. That the following papers were brought down to parliament in 1899:

(Telegram.)

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 10th December last in relation to the royalty due to the government by Mr. Alex. McDonald, of Dawson, and asking what means, if any were taken to ascertain the output of Mr. McDonald's operations.

In reply I am to say that in a return received here from Inspector Norwood it is shown that on the 26th August, 1898, he collected from Alex. McDonald the sum of $2,100 being royalty on the output of claim 35 above Discovery on Bonanza Creek, but there is nothing on record here to show what action was taken to ascertain the output of Mr. McDonald's operations. It is thought that Inspector Norwood may be able to furnish you with some information as to McDonald's operations. Mr. McGregor leaves for Dawson in a few days and you may also obtain further information from him.

Sir,—Referring to the departmental letter to you of the 17th ultimo in relation to the royalty due to the government by Mr. Alex. McDonald, of Dawson, I am directed to inclose herewith a copy of a letter from Major Walsh upon the subject.

I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) L. PEREIRA,
Assistant Secretary.

William Ogilvie, Esq.,
Commissioner,
Dawson, Y.T.

Copy of a letter received by the minister from Mr. J. M. Walsh, dated 16th February, 1899, in relation to the royalty due by Mr. McDonald on gold mined by him in the Yukon territory.

Fawcett who received the returns of royalty collected from the mines by the inspectors, should be able to give Mr. Ogilvie a statement showing the sum due by McDonald at the close of the wash-up.

When McDonald appealed to me for time, saying that the sum he had during the spring and was still compelled to put into improvements to work his claim to advantage, made it impossible for him to pay the royalty then due and demanded, that he had already paid a large sum of royalty and would continue to pay all he could as long as the wash-up lasted, the balance, if any was due, to be paid in the spring.

I discussed the matter with McGregor and Wade, and we decided that to close down on McDonald would not only interrupt our collection of royalty, but would seriously affect the whole mining interest of the Klondike.

McDonald's improvements were good security for the sum due, about $30,000 or $40,000.

I extended McDonald's time for full payment until the spring of 1899.

Before leaving Dawson (4th August) Norwood informed me that the sum then due by McDonald was about $16,000. Fawcett should know if this is correct and if there was an accumulation after my departure for he directed the inspectors in their work and received their reports.

Commissioner's Office,

Sir,—Yours of the 17th February re the question of Mr. McDonald's royalty arrived by last mail. In reply I beg to submit that we knew that about $2,000 of McDonald's royalty had been paid, but to what extent the balance has been paid we don't know.

We know the terms of Major Walsh's letter laying over the balance of his royalty, which provided that one-half of the balance should be paid on the first of September last and the other half on the first of May; we do not know what the one-half in either case amounts to; inquiries have been made, but so far without avail.

(Sgd.) WM. OGILVIE.

Commissioner.

That it does not appear that Alex. McDonald in this connection was at any time required to make a statement of the amount of gold taken out as contemplated by the regulations under order in council.

That Mr. Wade, a government official, and one of the so-called council who advised Major Walsh, the commissioner, respecting the indulgence extended to Alexander McDonald, was the retained counsel and solicitor of Alexander McDonald.

That no audit of Alexander McDonald's account has been made by the Auditor General for Canada, or by any independent auditor.

That in the opinion of this House there should be an independent and complete audit of the account of Alexander McDonald touching royalties due by him to the government of Canada, and a prompt, thorough and searching inquiry under oath should be directed into all the facts and circumstances connected with the indulgence shown to him and the connection of Major Walsh and Mr. F. C. Wade or other officers of the government therewith.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). In my humble opinion the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made last session a very long and foolish speech, he made I may say, a wicked speech, when he made his attack upon the officials of the government in the Yukon. At that time he found that even his own friends did not approve of the course he had taken. He has now endeavoured to excuse that speech by supplementing it with instalments made up of fragments of letters and reports, paragraphs of hearsay evidence from newspapers, by involved statements in this House, and by long resolutions setting forth little scraps of this that and the other thing. At present he attacks Major Walsh for having, as he says, at least technically violated the law. That may or may not be true. I am of the opinion that the people of this country will hold that owing to the condition of affairs in the Yukon at that time, a country some four or five thousand miles distant from the capital, and fifteen or sixteen hundred miles from the nearest point of communication, it was necessary to give a great deal of discretion to the commissioner or whoever was appointed to have complete control there. We had to depend a great deal upon the discretion of the commissioner and the officers sent into that country to administer affairs. Now, Sir, this whole resolution is based upon the proposition that in granting an extension of time, or an indulgence as he calls it, to Mr. McDonald for the payment of a large amount of royalty, he violated the Act of Parliament under which he was appointed. I am not going to discuss now whether that is technically correct or not. As I say, Major Walsh was appointed commissioner under the peculiar circumstances with which the country and the House are well acquainted, and consequently we had to give him a great deal of discretion. Representations were made to him by Mr. McDonald, asking for time in which to pay the royalty, and Major Walsh thought it would be in the public interest to grant him the delay asked for. The payments were all made in September, 1898, and May, 1899. What the people are more interested in is the fact that McDonald did pay his royalty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
How do you know?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not the slightest doubt about it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Nobody knew anything about it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was speaking I did not interrupt him by interposing questions that I do not think are pertinent to this subject. In my humble opinion, there is the very best of evidence for saying that Major Walsh acted in the public interest, that he acted honestly, and that the other officers acted honestly. If they had not acted honestly would we be able to say that McDonald had paid about $41,000 in royalty? Twenty-one hundred dollars was paid on one claim, and afterwards his account was made out for the full amount; $34,028.13 was paid. The hon. gentleman says that there is no evidence that he paid his royalty. There is no evidence, I confess, that any man pays what he owes except as shown by the account. There is not the slightest evidence furnished by the hon. gentleman that McDonald did not pay his royalty in full to the cent. If there were any evidence put forward that McDonald had not paid his royalty, then the question would be one worthy of investigation. But, there is not a tittle of evidence to show that he did not pay in full his royalty. My hon. friend cannot understand the conditions that existed in the Yukon at that time. When he was administering the Department of Justice, he was unable to collect right here in Ottawa very nearly this amount of money for binder twine, and he allowed an extension of time to be made to his friends. This was when he was right here in Ottawa with a staff of officials under his direction, and still the hon. gentleman was unable to collect the money due to the country. He is finding a great deal of fault with the accounts and reports of Mr. Fawcett and Mr. Lithgow, because their reports are not tied up in red tape, are not folded just so, are not sealed just so, and all that sort of thing. He complains of the manner in which these statements are prepared, and says they are not audited, and so on. As a matter of fact, he knows as well as any person that these officials did not even have paper upon which to record these accounts, but that they had to keep these accounts on pieces of chips, wrapping paper boards and anything of that kind.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Chips ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. What colour ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They had them all colours. The hon. gentleman shows how unfair he can be when he attacks these officials because their books were not kept in the state in which they might be kept in the Auditor General's office, and because their reports and letters were not filed as they would be in a first-class office at headquarters. The hon. gentleman knows that right here in Ottawa where we have a large staff of clerks and every facility for doing things properly and methodically, it is sometimes difficult to find papers and reports and other documents, an experience which he himself has had, and it is not surprising that these difficulties should be experienced under the conditions prevailing in the Yukon. It should be remembered that the hon. gentleman himself prophesied that the government would not be able to collect a dollar of royalty there. He knew that there were great difficulties, almost insurmountable difficulties, with an inrush of from 15,000 to 20,000 into that country, and he felt sure that Major Walsh and the officials would not be able to collect the royalty. The returns show that during the very first season they collected nearly $300,000 of royalty, a statement which will satisfy almost every person that this amount would represent the full royalty on the gold taken out. My hon. friend says that McDonald did not pay his royalty. If we are to judge by what has taken place, I am inclined to think that McDonald paid royalty on his output during that season. He had an output of $347,781.30, and as there was an exemption of $7,500, under the law, he paid on $340,228.30, or, in other words, $34,028.13 of royalty at that time. That Major Walsh displayed good judgment and wise discretion in making that arrangement with McDonald I think, has been proven by the results. There was a great rush of foreigners into that country, it was probable that they could raise a disturbance and cause trouble, as the hon. gentleman knows, but, the extracts, some of which he has read to-day, have made known to the House the fact that the people there have been law-abiding, and that for this season they have paid their royalty to the officers without giving trouble.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him for one moment ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
The hon. gentleman does not apprehend my position exactly. Instead of making assertions of abuse and vilification, I am pressing this resolution for an inquiry, and consequently not prejudging the case. But, does the hon. acting minister believe that Alexander McDonald ever produced, what every other man has to produce under the law, an affidavit showing exactly the gross output from the different claims he held in 1898 ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not the slightest doubt but that he did.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
The hon. gentleman has no evidence to show that he did.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no evidence to show it, but I have not the slightest doubt about that, because Mr. Lithgow, after an examination of this account, made the statement that McDonald complied with the law. I have not the slightest doubt about it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
I ask you about the fact.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend asks me about the audit. He knows that the Auditor General sent an auditor up there, Mr. Reid, and that the Interior Department sent up Mr. Stephenson.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
He never examined his accounts and never pretended to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend wants these men to be condemned on the exaggerated statements that he makes in this House, on newspaper trash, and on statements made by unreliable people. I simply appeal to the common sense of the country to say whether or not, under all the circumstances and conditions, there is the slightest suspicion to be attached to the conduct of Major Walsh or other officers in this matter.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock, I had stated that I believed there was very little foundation for the statement of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), that affidavits had not been required in this case as well as in the others. To sustain me in that belief I shall read the letter forwarding the statement, which will go to show that my opinion is correct. The following is a letter from Mr. Lithgow, the comptroller, to Mr. Smart, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, dated June 23, 1899 :

I have the honour to inclose statement of royalty paid by Alex. McDonald on account of 1898, amounting to $34,028.13, together with the receipts and draft No. 347, deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. It will be remembered that Major Walsh allowed Mr. McDonald an extension of time in the payment of his royalty, and the inclosed statement represents a full settlement, having been gone into most carefully by the gold commissioner and myself. This will appear in the gold commissioner's statement for June.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

J. T. LITHGOW.

Now, the hon. member for Pictou, gives to Mr. Lithgow, the comptroller, a certificate of character, and also to Mr. Senkler the gold commissioner, as being men of superior knowledge and character, and when the comptroller states in a letter that they had gone into the statement fully there is not the slightest doubt in my mind that they required the affidavits and everything else provided for in the Act in reference to this matter. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that is a reasonable inference. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) then complained of the books and papers and reports and letters not being in every way as regular and concise as they might have been, and he said that Major Walsh should be censured because when he was appealed to—I think after he came out—to know what amount of royalty Mr. McDonald owed. Major Walsh did not know, when he ought to have known. I submit that it is a very unreasonable thing to ask that the commissioner should have knowledge of these accounts. He did not pretend to keep the accounts; he had no access to the accounts, except to the extent that the commissioner might have to the books of the gentleman who kept the accounts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is just as well to be exact as to what I stated, and I did not say more than this upon that point: That when in July, I think, Mr. McDonald wrote to Major Walsh, and Major Walsh replied stating that this indulgence would be granted and that part of the royalty should be paid at one time and part at another; it did not appear that Mr. McDonald had been required to make a statement formally or otherwise as to what was then due; or, that Major Walsh had taken any pains to ascertain what was then due. So far as the record goes it only states that it was simply said to McDonald: Whatever you owe may be paid in two instalments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am very glad to hear the explanation, because in my opinion there is nothing meaner than for one hon. gentleman to attribute to another language he did not use. As I understood the argument of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), it was, that he censured Major Walsh for not having been able to mention the amount that was due by McDonald, but of course the explanation puts it in a different light. It would probably be more reasonable to say that the amount should have been fixed at the time Major Walsh was giving this indulgence, and the only excuse or reason for not doing so was probably the peculiar condition of affairs in the country then. I have already stated that in my opinion, considerable allowance ought to be made, in view of the circumstances in which the officials were placed. They had no regular forms of affidavits, nor books in which to keep accounts. After listening very carefully to the hon. gentleman's remarks, I believe he has not given any reason why this vote of censure should be passed. On the contrary, under the conditions that existed in that country during the season of 1897-8, the officers whom the hon. gentleman charges with negligence and carelessness, if not with fraud, collected pro rata on the output fully as much as they have done in the last two years, with a greater staff of officials, with books and other facilities. To a common-sense man, all the evidence goes to prove that on the whole these men, notwithstanding the unfavourable conditions in which they were placed, did their duty well and honestly. Now, as I have asked for a memorandum of the department in regard to this matter, I think it is only fair, before I sit down, that I should give the explanations of the department on the subject.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who writes this memorandum?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The deputy minister. It is really a memorandum of the facts as the department look at them, and it differs very little from the position which I have taken, and which I think the majority of people will arrive at, who are willing to look at the matter fairly, and not from the technical standpoint, which my hon. friend takes. I think my hon. friend has been unfortunate in his persecution of the gentlemen who happen to hold official positions in the Yukon territory. A considerable length of time has passed since he made these charges; yet with all the opportunities he has had, and the desire of a great many people to find fault, and to furnish evidence, if there was any evidence to be found, he has not been able to show any good reason for the extreme manner in which he is pursuing Major Walsh and some others. This is the memorandum :

It appears that Major Walsh, the commissioner at that time of the Yukon, in July, 1898, received from Mr. McDonald a letter which explained that his interest would be very materially affected if the government insisted upon his paying immediately the large amount of royalty then due, and asking that an extension be granted to him for the payment of this money.

It would appear that the reasons for the commissioner so deciding to grant an extension were that Mr. McDonald was a very large operator in the development of claims, and that all the proceeds of the mines were being reinvested in the territory, and from the plans that he had made with regard to the expenditure of very large amounts in improvements, costing some $30,000 or $40,000, and that to close down on him would not only interrupt the collection of royalty, but would seriously affect the whole mining industry of the Klondike.

In view of this, Major Walsh decided to grant an extension of time for the payment of the royalty of 1898, one-half to be paid in September, 1898, and the other half in May, 1899. The commissioner held at the time that the improvements that McDonald was making would be perfect security for the royalty due.

The matter was reported to the department, and explanation asked, after which it was decided to instruct Mr. Ogilvie to take the necessary action to collect immediately the amount due to the Crown. This was in May, 1899. On June 3, Mr. Lithgow, the comptroller, wrote inclosing a statement of the royalty paid by Alexander McDonald for 1898, amounting to $34,028.13, and stating that the amount had been deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. The statement sent represented a full settlement.

Mr. Lithgow stated that both the gold commissioner and himself had gone most carefully into the matter, and they found that the total output of gold by Mr. McDonald in 1898 amounted to $347,781.30, less the exemption of $7,500, the balance being $340,281.30, on which the royalty, amounting to $34,028.13, was paid. The report bears the certificates of E. C. Senkler, gold commissioner, and J. T. Lithgow, comptroller.

It might be added that $2,100 had formerly been paid by Mr. McDonald on account of royalty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the date of the deputy's memorandum which the hon. gentleman is reading ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. June 12. As there has been so much discussion and so much insinuation in regard to the actions of the minister and the department and the officials, I think it is only fair when a matter of this kind is brought up, that a statement of how matters stand in the department should be given.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All the documents in the possession of the government were ordered by the House, so that no advantage could be taken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend will see that the papers were all brought down, and they will show that this is a fair and honest synopsis of the case. So far as the department is concerned, there was no favouritism, no neglect of duty, and no desire to cover up anything.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there was a letter that has not yet been brought down. What letter is that and the date of it ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. July 3, 1899.

Mr. CLANCY. Whose letter was it ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Ogilvie's.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why was not that letter brought down before ? The order of the House made on February 7, 1900, was for all the papers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought it was brought down. Now, the hon. gentleman bases his complaint against Major Walsh, on the ground that he exceeded his power. All I can say is, whether he did or did not, the country will feel that in exercising his discretion in this matter, he did what was perfectly right ; and the results have proven that having regard to the condition of affairs in that country at the time, he acted with good sense and in the public interest. Now, I do not think there is a tittle of evidence to show that Mr. McDonald has not paid the full amount of royalty due by him. Instead of any of the officials, against whom my hon. friend is always making general statements and insinuations, having acted improperly or been careless in their business dealings, everything points to the fact that they have been industriously and energetically discharging their duties and have managed matters admirably in the interests of the country. The only reason by which we can account for the hon. gentleman making the speech he did is that he felt he was not justified in moving the wild statements he did last session and has tried to buttress up the position he then took by some additional reasons. But the more we know about this matter, the more we have to conclude that Major Walsh fills his position faithfully and honestly, and that there is no ground at all for the bitter attacks made on him. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the more the people have an opportunity of finding out the true facts, the more disposed they will be to conclude that the hon. gentleman was not warranted in bringing the charges he did. Why, even in the unsettled and unsatisfactory condition of affairs that existed in 1897 and 1898, the officers, of whom the hon. gentleman speaks so disrespectfully, collected royalties equal pro rata to the amount they collected since then, with the aid of the North-west Mounted Police and with the advantage of all the better arrangements they have been able to make. Therefore, I do not see any reason why we should adopt this motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, started out with some extraordinary remarks respecting my hon. friend from Pictou. He pointed out that the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had made a very long and foolish speech last year and that during the present session he had taken up the time of the House with little scraps of this and the other thing which had no particular relevance to the subject in hand. It seems to me that if the hon. gentleman would refer to his own speech and observe to how slight an extent it was an answer to the argument of my hon. friend from Pictou, he might be somewhat inclined to apply those adjectives to himself. What is the position my hon. friend from Pictou has taken? In the first place, he says that Major Walsh had no authority in the law for remitting the payment of this royalty for any term whatever, and that undoubtedly is the case. My hon. friend, the acting Minister of the Interior, has not undertaken to controvert that statement, but he ventured to say that this was what he calls a technical violation of the law. He did not make it very clear just what he meant by that expression. I suppose that a man who breaks into a house and steals $1,000 might be said to have committed a technical violation of the law, and I suppose that Major Walsh, taking claims in his own name, when the law forbade his doing so, would be committing a technical violation of the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Did he do it?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not say that he did it. I said that would be the case, I suppose, if he did it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS. You implied it.

Mr. COWAN. You said it all right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will tell you what I do say, and my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan) will no doubt draw a very fine distinction between the two cases—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not admit that it was legal if Major Walsh did it, but I do not know what he did, and I said it was open for discussion; but, as I look at it, it might be a technical violation of the law.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What has been admitted with regard to this matter and proved by evidence, is that Major Walsh compelled employees under him, liable to dismissal at his will, to take claims and assign them to his brother; and I suppose my hon. friend from Essex will regard that as perfectly proper, and no doubt draw a very fine distinction between that and the case I put for illustration. He is welcome to any nice distinction of that kind. The acting Minister of the Interior thinks it is a magnificent answer to make that he does not know whether this was lawful or not. Does he not think that he or his deputy or some one should know whether or not it was lawful for Major Walsh to remit this penalty? The legality of this act has been challenged by my hon. friend from Pictou, who has quoted the regulations and challenged the acting Minister of the Interior to show any authority under the regulations, for the action of Major Walsh. But the answer of the acting minister is that he does not know. He may regard that as very satisfactory, but I should not suppose it will be so considered by this House.

If it was the duty of Major Walsh in the Yukon—as undoubtedly it was—to enforce the law, and this was a violation of the law, surely the acting Minister of the Interior ought to have some better answer to the motion for inquiry and investigation than the statement that he and his department do not know what the law is with regard to this matter.

My hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior, seems to regard this as a motion of want of confidence and he spoke of some vituperative attack by my hon. friend from Pictou. There was no attack of the kind that I heard, and I was here all the time my hon. friend was addressing the House. What my hon. friend did was to make a calm, moderate statement of fact, and he substantiated everything by reference to public documents.

He asked for an investigation on two grounds. One, that payment of the royalty had been extended by Major Walsh without authority; and the other, that no statement had been made by Mr. McDonald at all of the amount of the royalty; and I did not exactly catch from the acting Minister of the Interior just now what the explanation is in a memo. prepared by the Deputy Minister of the Interior with respect to the discrepancy between $34,000, the amount actually paid, and $41,000 the amount claimed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What I brought that out for was this. I do not know whether the letter my hon. friend referred to contains the same passage, but in his letter Mr. Lithgow referred to the amount of $41,000 as being the amount due by Mr. McDonald. The department at once asked for an explanation and ordered an investigation to ascertain why this difference existed in the statement submitted by Mr. Lithgow. My own idea, in looking at it, was that it is the amount of exemption between the amount paid and the amount that would be due, and I pointed out that the department had taken action at once to have the matter investigated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But my hon. friend will, of course, recognize that if the law had been carried out, then, under the regulations, which are before me, Mr. McDonald, as every person carrying on mining in the Yukon, would have been obliged to make a statement under oath from time to time of the amount of royalty actually due. That was one of the strongest points made by my hon. friend from Pictou—that, though he has moved for all public documents relating to these claims of the Crown against Alexander McDonald, not one single statement of that kind, which should be in the files of the department, has been produced. The law being so clear, is it not an extraordinary thing that the department has not been able to produce these statements? Does not the acting Minister of the Interior as an administrator think it calls for an inquiry of some kind? In the province of Nova Scotia, we have a law exactly of this kind, that persons operating claims are required to make out—at the end of each month, I think—a sworn return; and it is an unheard of thing in that province for a return of that kind to be neglected. The mines would otherwise be forfeited, as this man's mine would be under the law. If Mr. McDonald was not able to pay, if it would embarrass him to pay, and if that was sufficient ground for the violation of the law, surely it would not embarrass him, and will not embarrass him to make a return showing what he should pay. And yet, my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) has taken his seat without giving us the slightest information as to whether Major Walsh not only remitted for the time being payment of the royalty to this man, but absolutely remitted also the necessity of making the return according to the law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). That is only a presumption.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) says that is only a presumption. It seems to me it is presumption on his part to make that remark. We have asked for every public document relating to the amount due from Alexander McDonald for royalties, the House has ordered the return, and the papers have been brought down in answer to that order—and neither in the documents that have been brought down nor in the speech made by the acting Minister of the Interior is there any trace of Mr. McDonald having made these statements and affidavits which he should have made under the law. Under these circumstances, I do not see why the Minister of Railways and Canals should feel called upon to intervene with any remark of that kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These affidavits are not forwarded to the department here, as a usual thing, at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They should be forwarded to the department, if a return of this kind is to be brought down to the House as evidence of what the amount due actually is. The return was ordered by the House in February last. The government was then aware that a criticism was to be made with respect to the amount due from Mr. McDonald, and with respect to its non-payment. During the intervening time, it would have been competent for the acting minister, even if the documents are kept in the commissioner's office in the Yukon, to have called for those documents; but from that time to the present, the acting Minister of the Interior has not been able to get such information as will enable him to say whether such documents are in existence or not. He stands up here and says that, in his humble opinion, they exist; he says that he has no doubt they exist. But the public interests of this country are not to be dealt with on the humble opinion of my hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior, nor on his belief, when it is competent for him to produce the actual documents, if they actually exist. What reason has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) advanced against an inquiry into this matter? He says that my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Herbert Tupper) was abusive. He has also given the reason which he always gives in these cases which he might almost have set up in type to be printed in these speeches of his—that the Yukon is four or five thousand miles away, and communication is difficult, and that discretion must be given to these officers. It may be that discretion must be given to them; but that does not mean that discretion it to be taken by them. This was not a case of discretion given to Major Walsh; it was discretion taken by him in violation of the law. If the Yukon is four or five thousand miles away and you find it necessary to send a dictator, you must give him discretion to act while he is there—but give it to him by law. It is not for the acting Minister of the Interior to stand up and say that the commissioner must have discretion, when the law does not give it to him. If he is entitled to discretion, the law should give it to him; and if the law does not give it to him, he has no right to exercise it. Now, the documents which have been referred to by my hon. friend from Pictou indicate a very curious state of affairs with regard to this thing. We have Major Walsh, in one letter, written after he ceased to be commissioner, stating that the amount due by Mr. McDonald was about $30,000, or about $40,000. Then, we have the statement from Mr. Ogilvie, that Mr. McDonald owed the government about $70,000. Is it not a legitimate subject for this House to inquire into, whether Major Walsh remitted for the time to Mr. McDonald, $70,000 or about $30,000 or $40,000? How is it that these gentlemen are so far apart in their statements in regard to this matter? And here is another circumstance that impressed me very much. How is it that Major Walsh, dealing with the question of not less than $30,000, according to his own statement, or $70,000 according to Mr. Ogilvie, left not a single line of record in his department with regard to the agreement he made with Mr. McDonald? Are the public affairs of this country to be administered in such a way that the Minister of the Interior must be telegraphing to Winnipeg or New Brunswick and all over the country to find out what the state of affairs is with regard to the royalty due by Mr. McDonald, while Major Walsh, the commissioner who made the statement, has not sufficient interest in carrying out his duty of this country to leave one single line on record in his department with regard to an agreement by which he remitted this large amount of royalty? Does the acting Minister of the Interior, as an administrator, think that a commendable thing on the part of the gentleman whose praise he sounded so loudly? If Mr. McDonald's embarrassment was a proper reason for violating the law, one would think that the commissioner would, at least, have had Mr. McDonald make a statement under oath of what the royalty was, having the amount stated in black and white, and he would have taken some security from McDonald for payment. One would suppose that any businesslike man would have done that. But, as a matter of fact, he does not leave a single line in his department or write a single report or letter to the department with regard to the remission of that amount of from $30,000 to $70,000. My hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior is quite facetious; he thinks it remarkable that my hon. friend from Pictou should have said anything about this matter. He thinks it strange that we should expect Major Walsh to step aside from his work of instructing his employees to stake claims for his brother's and devote a few minutes of his valuable time in order to put this matter, involving at least $30,000 of the country's money, on a satisfactory basis. The acting Minister of the Interior almost waxes humorous about the extreme ideas of my hon. friend from Pictou with regard to this matter. Now, Sir, that may be one way of looking at it. The acting Minister of the Interior may think, so long as Mr. Wade, the protégé of the Minister of the Interior, gets very good retainers of $10,000 at a time, that really a trifling matter of this kind will not be much regarded by the country. He may consider possibly that so long as Mr. Philp holds good claims out there, small matters of this kind, $30,000, or $40,000, or $70,000 of the country's money, are of small importance; but if I may quote the hon. gentleman's own language, possibly the people of the country may take another view with regard to matters of this kind, and may not quite coincide with the hon. gentleman's view.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Now, it is an extraordinary circumstance that Mr. F. C. Wade should turn up again here. We have had Mr. F. C. Wade turning up in every one of these matters, and now at last, if not least, we have him turning up here. In what way? We find that Major Walsh, in dealing with this remission, consulted Mr. F. C. Wade, the gentleman who had got the large retainer from this very Mr. McDonald for services which he has not seen fit to specify either to the department or to the House. Mr. F. C. Wade, the gentleman retained by Mr. McDonald in 1898, this very same year, receiving a retainer which Mr. Wade says would be regarded as large in the east, and which one witness says Mr. Wade admitted to be $10,000—he advises Major Walsh that under the circumstances it would not be a proper thing to press Mr. McDonald for that. Well, I suppose my hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior thinks it is an extraordinary thing that any criticism should be made on a circumstance of that kind. But I would rather be inclined to think that if the Minister of the Interior, for instance, or the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), should take a $10,000 retainer from some person who was seeking a favour from his department, a favour that could only be granted in violation of law, possibly some legitimate criticism of the transaction might be made because of that circumstance. And is it different with regard to Mr. Wade? Not at all different, because Mr. Wade, the retained solicitor of this gentleman, is the man who is consulted as to the expediency of granting the remission to Mr. McDonald in violation of law. Yet my hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior is almost moved to mirth at the idea of any one making any criticism upon such a mode of administration as that.

Now, another extraordinary statement in these papers is that one of the officers says that the documents relating to this matter may turn up after an exhaustive search, but that up to the present time no documents whatever have turned up. Here are $30,000, or $40,000, or $70,000, as you please, of the country's money remitted for a time to Mr. McDonald, and the documents, we are told, may turn up after an exhaustive search. And that is good administration according to my hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior. When my hon. friend from Pictou mildly and moderately suggests there should be some inquiry into these things, the acting Minister of the Interior says it is a vote of censure when a motion is made for inquiry into administration of that kind.

Now, there is one other thing to which I may direct the attention of the House. It appears that the Department of the Interior has been playing rather a curious game upon this House. Last year we had an order of the House, and we had a reference to a certain letter from Mr. Ogilvie to the Minister of the Interior. That letter was required to be brought down and laid upon the Table of the House, and the Minister of the Interior told us that it was a private letter, or, at least, that private matters were so mixed up with it that it could not be brought down. It is brought down now and laid upon the Table of the House, and we find that there are no private matters, at least so far as we can discover, but that it is an official letter in the strictest sense of the term. Now, is that a proper way for the Department of the Interior to deal with this House? I do not think it is. It is true that possibly the Minister of the Interior has some precedent for that, because we remember that on one occasion his leader sent a certain telegram around the press of this country, and afterwards promised to bring down and lay upon the Table of the House the telegram to which it was an answer, relating to one Mr. Hamilton Smythe. But the next day, after making that promise to the House, he comes down and says that though the answer was public, the telegram to which it was a reply was private. But he did not go quite as far as the Minister of the Interior did in this case, because the minister here is dealing with the very document itself. Now, upon the facts that have been brought before the House by the member for Pictou I think the motion he has made is a very moderate and a very fair motion, and one which the government, not only in the interest of the country, but in the interest of their officials, and in their own interest, ought to accept and grant at once.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). This is the fourth canter we have had from the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) on the Yukon so far. It will be noticed that the motions of the hon. member for Pictou strike at men not at things. He brought up the case of the John C. Barr to strike at Mr. Davis and Mr. Wade; and it was only a question as to whether Mr. Davis was right in keeping $5,000 to pay the crew; and there was a motion of censure. It will be noticed also that each time he brings up a motion he calls upon the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) to get up and strengthen him. He looks as solemn as if he was in earnest, and speaks as learnedly as if he knew something about it, and wishes the House to believe that actually he has made of it a great study, and this is a matter of intense importance. The next was the case of the Foukoner, and that was the occasion of a blow again at both Mr. Wade and Mr. Davis, because Mr. Davis said the ship was not worth as much as she should be. Then he brought up the matter of the water front, and that was a blow at Wade and McDonald. Now he brings up the question of this royalty, and attempts to strike a blow at Major Walsh and Wade and McDonald. It will be noticed that Mr. Wade comes in every time. I would really like to suggest to the member for Pictou the position in which he finds himself today. The audience, or rather his own friends behind him, on the other occasions were a little stronger, but to-day they range from eleven to sixteen, and no more, and the spectacle was presented of three ex-Privy Councillors asleep at the time he was speaking, his honoured father, and the member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart), and the member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), and they slept soundly, I tell you. The music of his voice sent them to sleep in a way that would charm anybody. Not a mother holding her infant in her arms, the sweetest singer in the land, could have put them to sleep as easily as he did. It was charming to see them. Two of them almost fell out of their seats, they went to sleep so soundly. Now, does the hon. member not see that when there is no more interest than that taken in his speeches really he is running the thing to seed? Does he not see it was a waste of time to take four days in discussing the question whether Mr. Davis was right or wrong in keeping $5,000 to pay the crew of a ship; whether Mr. Davis should be dismissed from office and the government censured for not dismissing them because he valued the ship at $10,000 when she was worth $25,000; whether the government ought not to be censured for collecting $30,000 a year of rent from water fronts when others offered, some of them, as low as $2,500; and that now, because Major Walsh thought fit to say he would permit a man to pay a royalty of 1898 in 1899, therefore, we must have an investigation? I was surprised when the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) asked: Why are not the papers here? You might as well call for every affidavit made at every port in Nova Scotia about shipping. Let me explain how it is done. A man has a mine; he mines all winter. The wash-up is in the spring, and when the wash-up is made he brings his gold down. There are two things he can do with the gold. If he is dishonest enough he does not come into the city, but he strikes a trail, takes the boat somewhere else, takes his bag of gold out, and there is no remedy at all. You cannot guard against that; there are smugglers in the Yukon just as well as there are in other parts of Canada, but that is the exception. A man comes down to Dawson City with his gold and hands it over to the official. The officials know pretty well how much gold should come in, because the inspectors up in the creeks know fairly well how much gold comes out of each mine day by day in the winter, and when the clean-up comes, every day they go around and see how much gold is taken out. I can very well understand that a mistake might be made. One man might say that McDonald ought to pay about $40,000 this year, and another man might say that he ought to pay about $70,000. I can understand that letter of Mr. Ogilvie, because he did not see it, and knew nothing about it. Each individual comes to the official bringing his gold.

He is not required to swear how much gold he has, because the official attends to that, but he must swear that that is all and that he has accounted for every ounce that comes out of his mine. That affidavit is filed and it is in Dawson City now. Every affidavit that is made is there and can be found there. I remember wanting to know something about it and being in Mr. Lithgow's office, when a man came in I read over the affidavit. The affidavit is quite a long one, and I cannot undertake to reproduce it, but the affidavit is to the effect that he has a mine, that it is at such a place, that he has brought in all that he has mined, that no more has come out of that mine, and that that mine is the only mine he has worked. That affidavit is filed and it will meet him if he has made a mistake or he has perjured himself.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) allow me to correct a misstatement he has made, and a very important misstatement. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the affidavits in regard to the McDonald case are on file at Dawson. The hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) stated no such thing. There was an order of the House, dated 7th of February, calling for a return of copies of papers and reports, and the papers brought down afford strong evidence to show that no such affidavits were ever in existence. This is a document, dated the 3rd of October, 1899, in which Mr. Lithgow, in a letter to the secretary of the Department of the Interior, states:

I beg to inform you that certified copies of all royalty affidavits to August 31, 1899, have been forwarded to the department in a special mail bag addressed to you.

The royalty returns were made to me since September, 1898, as it was not convenient to have them handled at the gold commissioner's office.

It is possible that some of last year's are missing, but we have sent copies of all that could be found.

In future, either duplicates or certified copies will be sent with the monthly statement.

There is incontrovertible evidence that no such affidavits ever existed. In the first place, no one in the Department of the Interior could state what was the royalty that the McDonald claim should have paid. On the other hand, Mr. Ogilvie writes that there is nothing to show, and that they have nothing in Dawson of any kind except the confidential correspondence that I have read. McGregor is helpless when asked for information, and then a reference to Captain Bliss is made, saying that he had charge, and there is no report from Captain Bliss. If the hon. gentleman bears in mind that condition of facts as before parliament he will not question the statement that McDonald never made any affidavit as to the amount of royalty due.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I am sure he did.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Give the evidence.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Give the evidence—Mr. Lithgow.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Read it.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Read it?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). All I have to say is that Mr. Lithgow understands his business. He told me: I saw the man make it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He told the hon. gentleman?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I am not to take the evidence of an official as against the assertion of the hon. gentleman. That is to say, that the hon. gentleman assumes that the affidavit was not made when an officer like Mr. Lithgow says that in every case like that the affidavit is made. But, that is nothing, my assertion is worth more than that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No; Mr. Lithgow, according to the returns, never made any such statements, and if the hon. gentleman disagrees he will do me the courtesy to read the document upon which he is basing his statement.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Lithgow does not say that McDonald did not make it. I know that Mr. Lithgow does take an affidavit in every case; it is the law of the territory, and every man, except he takes his gold out of the country, has to make it. I did not see the affidavit, but Mr. Lithgow does not say, and he will not say, that in McDonald's case, he did not make the regular affidavit. Mr. Lithgow went into the thing carefully, and it must be remembered that in the office where Mr. Lithgow is, as I said, every one of these affidavits is kept on file—every one of them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). And when the payment was made the affidavit would be made. The whole charge is that McDonald got a year to pay the arrears of 1898. Does the law designate the particular day when the royalty shall be paid? Not at all. Where was there a violation of the law in saying to a man who has mined so much gold: You can pay it at a future date? Where is there anything wrong in that, if the return be made at the time the payment is made? I would like to know where there is anything wrong in that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did the hon. gentleman hear Mr. Ogilvie's report, that under the law, in consequence of the non-payment of the royalty by McDonald when it was due, he would forfeit his claims, but as Major Walsh had permitted this McDonald should not suffer.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). When it suits the hon. gentleman to bring Mr. Ogilvie as a judge to decide the law, he will do it, but when he wants to speak of it contemptuously, he will do it. I do not take Mr. Ogilvie's statement as deciding the matter by any means. What are the facts of this case? McDonald, with others, had gone to the Yukon early in the rush. The hon. gentleman undertakes to say, but he cannot find any evidence of it, that the country is in the hands of combines. There is no mining district in the world where there are so many individuals who own gold mines as the Yukon. There are less companies at work in the Yukon than in any other country in the world where the mining of gold is taken up. It is a remarkable thing. Of course, there are individuals who have made large fortunes, but they did not do it by the organization of combinations. There is a man on Eldorado Creek who has taken a million and a half out of his mine, but it was not done by a company. I know a young man named Calder, who went out there from Cape Breton three years ago, and who is now worth between $600,000 and $700,000. There are no large companies. McDonald went out there a poor man when it cost from $300 to $400 a ton to take everything into that country, and he went at once to mining. He got some good mining properties, but he wanted every dollar to pay his debts, and to get other properties, and he explained that to Major Walsh. Was it not reasonable that under such circumstances, Major Walsh would say to a man like Alex. McDonald: I will give you until next year to pay the amount that was due. How was the country going to lose anything by it? Forty thousand dollars was only 10 per cent of the amount he took out of the mine, and Mr. Ogilvie gives his opinion that if he did not pay the royalty, the property would come back to the government, and we know that the mine was showing better the next year than it had the previous year. Will any man, in his senses, say that there was any danger of the country losing a dollar by that? Major Walsh knew that Alex. McDonald was doing more for the Yukon than any man who ever went in there. There were a lot of Americans in the territory whose only idea was to get the gold and take it away; but here was Alex. McDonald, a good Canadian, a Canadian who came to stay there, to build up the district, and to grow in prosperity with the district. Was it not a wise thing for Major Walsh to do, to give a man like that a little assistance, when the country did not risk one dollar by his doing so? If Mr. McDonald had never been asked to pay, there might be ground for complaint. I want to say here that Alex. McDonald has done more for the Yukon than all the men in this parliament ever did or ever will do. I can tell the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), that all he can say will not affect Alex. McDonald's standing in that country amongst those who know him. He went in there as a pioneer, and made a lot of money, and now he is beautifying the streets of Dawson, building hotels and doing all in his power to make it a prosperous city. When Alex. McDonald went in there, every ton of food used by his men, cost $300 or $400 in freight alone from Vancouver, and $40,000 was quite an item to him, so that I cannot help commending the wisdom of Major Walsh in helping him over that year. There is not a first-class business man in Canada, but who, when he sees a man who is worthy and deserving of encouragement, will not assist him in his payments. I forget how much is due for binder twine, and it may have been a wise thing for the government to let it be due, because I can understand that it may be prudent for the government, as well as for an individual, to let a thing like that go, in order to reach a greater result. Alex. McDonald was there to stay in the country, and no man ever lost a dollar by him, and no man will ever lose a dollar by him. It may have been that the wash-up was not complete, but whether or not every one who knows Alex. McDonald well knows that he will state exactly the amount of gold he takes out of a claim. Major Walsh was in a new country where they are not tied up with red tape every day in the year, and in that country they have to give and take, and one man has to depend on another. Indeed the wonderful thing to me is that we have collected the amount of royalty we have collected in that country. We must remember that 90 per cent of the people were foreigners, determined that they should pay nothing to the hated Britisher, and it is a marvel that we collected the royalty. McDonald was a Canadian born in Nova Scotia, born of the best race in the world, an honest, good Highlander, and he went out there to make his fortune, and every one knew that he was an honest man. I have no doubt that Major Walsh knew him, and had confidence in him as had everybody else. When it is remembered that Mr. McGregor and other officials walked up into these creeks where there was 90 per cent Americans and foreigners, and collected the same royalty in 1898, in proportion to the amount mined, as they did in 1899, it is one of the most marvellous things that ever happened in Canada. These Yankees did not want to pay one dollar. They were almost in mutiny stating that the country was theirs, because they were there first, but nevertheless the royalty was collected. Is it not a surprising thing that the only complaint that is made about this royalty business should be made in the case of a Canadian who went up there as a hardy pioneer to develop the country, and then the only complaint that can be made is that Major Walsh gave this honest Canadian an extension of one year's time in which to pay this royalty.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Let me ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser), on what information he reiterates the statement that we collected all the royalty? The Auditor General says he has nothing before him to show that the royalty, which was due, was collected.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I have the statement of Mr. Lithgow.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He does not say that.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). He says it was settled for. If the hon. gentleman denies that there is no use arguing with him, and I will be content to let it go on record.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Lithgow does not say that he collected all the royalty due.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). He says he collected the royalty from Mr. McDonald.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My remark was not as to Mr. McDonald's royalty. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser), stated over and over again that it was a wonderful thing that with all these Americans and foreigners, the officers of the Canadian government had been able to collect all the royalty. In view of the statement of the Auditor General that he has no information to show that the royalty due had been collected, I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) on what information he makes that statement?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Well, I suppose that royalty due, would refer to royalty that we know is due. We all are aware that there are lots of people who did not pay their royalty. It is quite clear that on each Yukon motion, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is getting more and more involved, and more difficult to understand. I admit that there were numbers in that country who did not pay, and I believe there will be numbers who will not pay their royalty. There are numbers of people in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and everywhere else, who are wearing clothes that did not pay duty, and if goods are imported into well settled districts without paying duty, is it to be wondered at, that in a country like that, without roads or anything else, some gold will be taken out without paying a royalty? I believe there was gold taken out without paying a royalty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman says 'hear, hear,' but does the hon. gentleman wish it to be understood that when a man takes out three or four thousand dollars worth of gold dust in the year, and all he has to do is to strike a trail across the mountain and clear out; does he mean that it is possible to collect every dollar of royalty? We know that men pay a royalty at Dawson, and we know that if they have only a certain amount of dust that they carry it out. They make from one to three dollars an ounce on the gold they bring out to Seattle, and thus save the bank charges, and so quite a large amount of gold comes out in that way, and I have no doubt that quite a lot of it does not pay a cent of royalty. That is to be expected. In regard to the Auditor General, I have not seen that statement. I would like the hon. gentleman to tell me where I shall find that?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On page H-118.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). In the first place, there were no papers at all before the Auditor General. How would he have the papers? There is not a statement presented to him as to the number of men who mined or the amount they took out. He has simply a statement made to him of the amount of royalty collected.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the whole point.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). How does he know where it came from? How can he talk about anything due?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No one can.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Then, what is the point?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The point is simply this, that the hon. gentleman made a statement which I challenged and asked his reason for making; that was, that the royalty was collected, and that it was wonderful that it was collected.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). So well collected.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the statement is qualified, I have nothing to say.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Lots of it came out of the country, and was never collected at all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A vast amount.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). No, I would not say a vast amount. Even last year I saw men coming out with some gold, and, of course, it would be impossible to say whether that gold paid duty or not; but, you never saw a fond lover cling to a maiden as they did to that gold, from the time they left Dawson till they got to Seattle. They did not leave it for a moment, because at any moment the gold might be taken by somebody else. And here I might say for myself, that I do not know but it would be a very good thing, in order to get every cent of the royalty, that no gold should be permitted to be taken out of the Yukon at all. I do not know but we shall have to come to that, that the government must insist that every ounce of gold mined in the country must be taken to them. I know the difficulty; it is the difficulty of the corporations; but, it is really the very best way of seeing that every dollar that is mined pays the royalty. Of course, the banks make a large margin; that is their business, no doubt. What I said was that, in view of the insufficient mode the officials had of collecting the revenue, and the few men there was to look after the miners, it was to me a marvel that the royalty was so well collected. I am satisfied that with the number of men there, the work could not have been better performed. Mr. Lithgow himself is an officer of the highest and best standing. He attends to the business of the country there as well as any man I ever saw. The ease with which the work is done makes it a matter that it not, perhaps, plain to those who have not seen it. The men who dig the gold and pay the royalty do not have to pay it after the manner of customs. A man comes with a bag containing, say, $10,000 worth of gold, and lays it down. He makes an affidavit that that is the full amount he has mined that year. The officer takes the gold and weighs it, and finds it to be worth just $10,000. He then takes 10 per cent out of it, and keeps it; or he hands the bag to the bank and the bank takes the 10 per cent and credits the official with it. I know that during 1897 and 1898 there was not the means of getting at every man who was mining. I know it was almost impossible to find the location and the amount. You must remember that at that time the officials had scarcely any office. They were there without a map or anything to indicate where men were working, except the stakes which were put down and a piece of paper put in stating that this man had that claim and that man the other. Fancy a handful of men among thousands of people, getting the business done as regularly as if it was typewritten. I know there was wrongs committed; there were men who were passed over and men who got clear, and there were times when the full amount of revenue was not collected; yet, the marvel to me is that there were so few cases of that kind. All I have to say to the hon. member for Pictou is, that if he went there, while he would see much that was not done as it would be done in this country, he would marvel that the officials did their work so faithfully and so honestly. Sixty per cent of the foreigners there did not want to pay the royalty, and only for the mounted police they would never have paid a dollar. There was an armed mob of wild men there at one time who had no idea of law and order, and who were willing to strike against paying anything. With regard to this man Alexander McDonald, I say that Major Walsh did right in the interest of the Yukon and of the whole country in giving him that year to pay. If Alexander McDonald had been harassed at that time and had not got the use of that $40,000 for that year, and had been lost to the Yukon, there are not a hundred of the best men in the Yukon who would take his place or do so much good for the country. So that, the whole thing comes down to this, that Major Walsh, being on the ground and understanding the position of Alexander McDonald as well as anybody else, decided to grant him that extension, and the money was paid the next year. What was the effect? He not only paid the $34,000 in 1899 that was due, but you must remember that the other partners did pay. There were partners with Alexander McDonald, but they had not the large projects that he had on hand, and were able to pay. Mr. McDonald paid in 1899, the $34,000 for 1898, and within a small fraction of $80,000 besides. Not only did he pay in 1899 the debt of 1898, but he paid more than double that amount to the government for the year 1899. In that year he paid over $100,000 to the government on an output of $1,000,000. Was it not worth while to allow that man an extension of time from 1898 to 1899? Is it not a small thing to bring up in this House, that Major Walsh—who was on the ground and knew how things were—should have permitted a man like that—who was there not only to make wealth for himself, but to develop that country—to get an extension of credit from 1898 to 1899? I am sure that if the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), had reflected a moment, he would not have attempted to tarnish the fair fame of a man belonging to his province, and who had not done anything wrong, but simply went to the officer, and said: I owe a certain amount, will you give me time till next year, as I want to utilize the money for the development of the country? The hon. gentleman's attack will not hurt Mr. McDonald in that country, because he is too well known there, and too highly respected. The hon. member for Pictou might be engaged in better work. He might be engaged in trying to find out something that was really a grievous wrong, rather than attempt to censure the government for having allowed a year's delay to a man who had spent the best part of his life in building up that country. Besides the country did not lose a dollar by the transaction. If it had, the hon. gentleman might have had something to say. The country got from McDonald the amount he owed for 1898, and, no doubt, this extension of time was in the interests of that section of the country and of the government itself, as well as of Mr. McDonald.

I cannot see any ground whatever, for bringing forward this motion. As I have said, this is No. 4, and I would strongly advise my hon. friend not to bring up No. 5, or No. 6, and No. 7, because, judging by the ratio at which his auditors decrease on each successive motion, he will find after a while, that he will have no one to listen to him at all, and he will turn this House, for the time being, into a veritable chamber of death, save for the dreary, confused wail of a solitary murmur.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I fancy, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. gentleman would reflect a moment, he will hardly think it necessary for any one to make any reply to his remarks, he has replied so completely to himself. It might be worthy of a small boy, but not one quite so large as the hon. gentleman is, to make the argument he did. What was the pith of his argument? That Mr. McDonald was born of a very honest family, that he had honest parents, that he went out to the Yukon a poor man, that he could not spare the $40,000, and yet at the same moment, the hon. gentleman had in his possession what Mr. Ogilvie had said, over his own hand, that the extension given to McDonald by Major Walsh was absolutely demoralizing the whole condition of affairs in that country. The hon. gentleman says it is a wonder the royalties were collected. Every one who has listened to his speech will agree that it was a wonder, in the face of McDonald being permitted to pay his royalty when he chose, and pay such an amount as he chose. There is no record in the department of how much this man owed. The auditor does not know to-day whether he owed $40,000 or $70,000, and I challenge the hon. minister to produce one scrap of evidence to show how much Mr. McDonald owed.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Will you make the statement in this House that Alex. McDonald owes a dollar he did not pay?

Mr. CLANCY. So far as the records of the department are concerned, they all point to the conclusion that Mr. McDonald owed much more. If he did not, how does the hon. gentleman account for Mr. Ogilvie saying that he owed $70,000?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). That was a statement merely made as an estimate, just as you would say a man was worth $10,000, and another would say he was worth $20,000.

Mr. CLANCY. That is splendidly indefinite. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that Mr. Ogilvie did not know? Is he a better authority than Mr. Ogilvie? Mr. Ogilvie should have known. It was the business of the officials in the department to have a record and to have known in what amount Mr. McDonald was indebted. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that Mr. McDonald is a very honest man, but there was a confusion in the administration of the department that amounted to criminality. It is no excuse to say that the means for keeping the records are very poor. That may be a mistake; but if it was possible to keep the records with regard to other miners, it was possible to keep them in the case of Mr. McDonald.

Mr. McDonald was given an extension of time illegally. No one pretends to say that such was not the case, but the indications are that nobody knew how much Mr. McDonald owed. Nobody can tell whether he did not owe $100,000. The hon. gentleman says we cannot prove that Mr. McDonald did not pay all he owed. But I say, it rests with the government to show how much he owed. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot escape the responsibility of coming down to this House, and through their officials, saying how much Mr. McDonald owed. If they fail to do that, they lie under the serious charge of either having winked at the dereliction of duty and allowed their officials to share in the plunder. What would be the object of hiding the amount that Mr. McDonald owed? The object could only be that somebody might participate in the fraud. Oh, but hon. gentlemen say, you are speaking of the officials, you should not speak ill of these gentlemen. When these hon. gentlemen are charged with serious misconduct, when they are charged with having failed in their duty, they reply, you must not abuse our officials.

These hon. gentlemen may think that the people are forgetting these charges, but they are just as fresh in the peoples' minds as the day my hon. friend from Pictou first brought them up. What is the position of the government? They simply reply: These officials are really honest men, and although they have given no account, everything is all right. Now, Sir, that bears wrong-doing on the face of it; and it was the duty of the government to have granted an investigation to clear or convict these men whom they are now defending. If this were a matter that happened in the city of Ottawa, no man would dare to face the people who refused a full and free investigation, because public indignation would be so strong that no man could possibly resist it. But because this is in the Yukon a long distance away, they could not grant an investigation. But is this the first charge of wrong-doing in the Yukon? They have been repeated and repeated; and now you would have to bring something more shocking as all the others are before hon. gentlemen opposite would take notice if it. They say: These are the old charges. I have to tell the acting Minister of the Interior, to whom I listened with great interest, that I had expected that he would be able fairly to account for these things; but he hardly did himself credit when he said that these charges had been repeated from year to year. Was that an answer? He is not so bold as the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). An hon. friend behind me suggested that he has a little more common sense. The acting Minister of the Interior has lots of common sense; and I am going to ask him how he accounts for Mr. Ogilvie's two statements—that there are no records by which he can determine how much Mr. McDonald owes, and there are no means of knowing how much Mr. McDonald has paid. I am not willing to condemn the hon. gentleman and his department off-hand, but I would like to know from him how he accounts for these things?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I told my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) that, as soon as it was known that Mr. Ogilvie had heard that there was a different amount than that returned by Mr. Lithgow, he was at once asked for an explanation and told to investigate. That is all the department could do under the circumstances. And, when the answer comes, of course, we shall know what explanation is to be given.

Mr. CLANCY. Now, what does Mr. Lithgow say? He said it was all settled. Was the amount settled whether Mr. McDonald owed $30,000 of $70,000? There was no statement read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend will allow me—I read Mr. Lithgow's official letter in which he said he and Mr. Senkler had gone into the thing thoroughly, going over every account and getting a full settlement.

Mr. CLANCY. There is no such thing in the statement as that they went into all that was taken out, unless my memory very much deceives me—and I wish to be set right if I am wrong. He said they went carefully into the whole thing and settled it. What have they settled? Not the point that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has charged—namely, that no record was kept upon which to make a settlement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) will allow me, I will read it. This letter is dated June 23, 1899.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Was that after payment had been received from Mr. McDonald?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, and he informed the department that the amount was placed to the credit of the Receiver General. He says: 'The inclosed statement represents the full settlement.' That statement, as I understand it, showed every claim and the amount taken out. He adds: 'They have been gone into most carefully by the gold commissioner and myself.' That is Mr. Lithgow's statement.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) has left us in the dark as much as ever. There is no evidence to show that Mr. McDonald had ever made a statement. He was a sort of spoiled child up there: he did as he liked. But, so far the departmental records show—and I wish to press that point—he never made a statement under oath of what he did. He kept his own accounts and was allowed to pay when he chose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has asked me a question. Now, I would like to ask him one if he will permit me. Is it not reasonable to suppose that Mr. Lithgow, who is a professional accountant, in making a statement of that kind, if he had found anything irregular, would have said so?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) comes down with what he calls a reasonable supposition. He ought, let me tell him, to come down with absolute information. For him to put an interpretation which seems favourable to himself and the government, instead of giving us the information and leaving us to judge for ourselves, is rather too thin. I am not going to charge Mr. Lithgow with having made a false statement—no doubt it is true, so far as he knows. But the hon. gentleman does not give information which would warrant the House in concluding that Mr. McDonald had ever conformed to the regulation which require the mine owners to make out a statement under affidavit. Mr. Ogilvie was in a better position than Mr. Lithgow to know the state of the case. Yet, the matter stands without being cleared up in any way. The pith and kernel of the whole thing is that there seems to be a set of officials in the Yukon who, if we may judge from surface appearances, if we are to put their acts side by side, are there for no other purpose than to pillage and plunder the country. And, if hon. gentlemen think that statement too strong, they have the remedy in their own hands—to grant the investigation that has been asked for over and over again in this House. If hon. gentlemen opposite wish to shelter their officials, they are taking the proper way to do it by refusing this investigation. I would ask the acting Minister of the Interior if it would not have been a more reasonable thing, in the face of all these statements, and of the collateral evidence, for the government to have granted this investigation? Would it not be more reasonable to grant it now in the interest of that country which, metaphorically speaking, is damned by having officials who are said to plunder every great interest there. We have it openly stated that Mr. Wade, who has been there as an officer of the department there, has been receiving retainers, and he advised Walsh that he should not collect that sum from McDonald in the meantime. If there were only one case, it would justify an investigation. But such cases have been brought forward in every department that if the government felt that their officials were clear, and that they themselves were clear, they would not dare deny such an investigation.

Mr. GEORGE E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I had supposed that before the indictment made by my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was allowed to go to the House, some responsible member of the government would have thought it worth while to answer that indictment and to endeavour to clear up, for the officials, and for the government, the statements that have been made, and that so far, have been made without being successfully contradicted. I do not suppose that a serious and solid member of the government would for a single moment suppose that the acting Minister of the Interior put in a valid defence against a charge brought now on the 18th day of June, 1900, by replying that last session the member for Pictou had made a long and wicked speech. Now, that may be a satisfactory answer, thoroughly conclusive, to the statements which have been made to-day; but I can scarcely conceive that a solid and responsible member of the cabinet would so consider it. We have had a little improvement to-night on the lesson that was taught here last Friday night. Then we had the lesson solemnly put forth by the right hon. gentleman who leads the government that what would have been a crime if committed in the city of Montreal was only an indiscretion when it was committed six hundred miles away in the county of Gaspé. The acting Minister of the Interior is an apt pupil in that respect at least; and now what would have been a crime if committed in Montreal, but would have been an indiscretion if committed 600 miles away, when it is committed two or three thousand miles away, fades into the reminiscence even of an indiscretion, nay, better than that, becomes a positive virtue in the opinion, especially, of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). Well, Sir, that will hardly be considered, I think, a valid defence, ingenious though it is. The government appear to be laying it before the country as a valid defence. They surely must have thought that it was a defence which will bear them up in the trying times that are to come. Is it a valid defence? Let the people of this country ask themselves if that is the best the government can do against the charge which has been brought here to-day.

Another defence the acting minister put up is this: Oh, well, you often find debts unpaid, even here in Ontario, and close to the seat of government. Some times you lose what is due to the government. Granted. Is that a valid excuse, a valid defence? When it is charged here that an officer high in the government of the country, having in fact great powers in the Yukon, but yet having no single power which made him superior to the law, actually made himself superior to the law, violated or broke it; and the only defence that is put up is: Oh, well, things are often done here as bad as that; you have not lost any money by this, therefore, the country is not out. Or did they consider that the defence put up by the member for Guysborough was a valid one? Did the Minister of Finance think for a moment to what end the argument of the member for Guysborough was tending? Did the member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), when he applauded that speech made by the member for Guysborough, did he set his sign manual to the logical outcome of the argument of the member for Guysborough? For what was the argument of the member for Guysborough? Simply this, that the government must not be foolish. The government has laws and regulations, but if in any case it thinks it may be a benefit to an individual, and ultimately a benefit to the country, that these laws and regulations should be openly broken and defied, it is perfectly proper to do it. Here was a law; here was a gentleman who owed a debt under the law, and here was an administrator who said: Yes, he owes the debt, he is able to pay it, but it would embarrass him to pay it, therefore, I will break the law, I will not collect it, and I will give him a year in which to pay it.

Then the member for Guysborough said triumphantly: Has the country lost anything? No, and Mr. McDonald has become more rich and still more rich, and now he is in a position to give the country still greater revenues from the output of his rapidly growing mines. Let the Minister of Finance apply that argument in older Canada. Here is a wholesale importer who is bringing in a large supply of spring goods or of winter goods. He brings them to the port of debarkation here, he brings them up to the customs-house, and he says to the customs officer, or to the Minister of Customs, if he happens to be there: It will embarrass me to pay these duties now. You just allow me a year to pay them, in two equal instalments; you will not lose anything, and I will be put in such a position by having the use of this money by that time, that I will be able to do a bigger business next year, and consequently be able to pay you larger customs dues on my larger importations. Is that going to be the argument which will weigh with the Minister of Finance? I believe the member for Guysborough has had ministerial aspirations. Suppose that he had a seat in the government and his peculiar philosophy were to rule with the members of the government; what would become of the great collecting departments of this country, when everything would go by favour or by whim, and when the law and regulations would be set aside? Does not everybody see that in matters of revenue collection you have to have a law, and you have your regulations under the law, and you have to apply them impartially and rigidly, and that it will not do to give way to one or another? It would lead to inextricable confusion and to all sorts of corruption.

Now, what are the facts of the case? The first charge made by my hon. friend from Pictou was that Mr. Walsh, not having authority and discretion given him by law, absolutely broke the law; for under the law, and under the regulations it is the gold commissioner alone who has power to collect these royalties, and whose duty it is to collect them under the law and under the regulations. Well, there were well defined and well set out regulations under which the gold commissioner was to act at that very time. What happens? Mr. Walsh, who had no power in that respect, that power being vested in the gold commissioner by the law and under the regulations, overrode the law and the regulations. Now, if Mr. Walsh had power to override the law and the regulations, why did he go about it secretly? The acting Minister of the Interior has not answered that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, I said he had power under the regulations to amend and change the regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman point out where he has authority to do that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The order in council says:

He may vary, alter or amend any mining regulation issued under authority of the Governor General in Council governing the granting of mining claims where such may, in his opinion, be necessary in the public interest.

I think under that he had the power.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the acting minister point out any ordinance, or any official document appointing that gentleman, by which he had authority to amend the regulations secretly and individually, without regular and published proclamation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, I have stated from time to time that lawyers may differ as to these various fine points. But I do think that under that authority he had power to vary that regulation to the extent that he did vary it, and to say to this man: Although you do not pay on a certain day fixed by the regulations, I will extend the time, and your claim will not be forfeited. I think he had the right to do that, I think he did it for many others.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the hon. gentleman can get back to his position, that, granted

Mr. FOSTER.

the order in council gave to Major Walsh the power to alter or to amend, was that alteration, or amendment, to be done secretly and in individual cases? If there was that power of alteration and amendment, it should be published, it should be made known to everybody and applied impartially to everybody. That is the point. Well, Sir, if he had had the power to alter or amend would he have gone secretly about the business? If he had had the power to alter it, and to alter it in that one way, why did he not publish this alteration so that everybody would know of it and point out why he did it? The very fact that he went secretly about it, that he did it simply in the case of McDonald and said: I will destroy the regulations as far as you are concerned, but do not say anything to anybody about it, and then wrote a letter to the gold commissioner, not an open, above-board letter, but a letter marked 'private and confidential,' overriding the regulations and powers of the commissioner, the regulations under which the gold commissioner was acting, shows that he had not the right to do it. The very statement that the hon. acting minister has made just now lands him in a difficulty, whereas, if he had said nothing he would almost have been in a better position, because he buoyed himself up on the fact that he was not a lawyer and did not undertake to argue that question. The statement made by the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) is a statement which is pertinent. The Department of the Interior has no right to exist and administer unless it has somewhere about it legal opinion and advice to know what the law is and to see that information can be given in reference to its legal powers. The fact of the hon. acting minister coming down here and saying that he and the department did not know that it was the law and did not know that the law had been violated, that he was not in a position to express an opinion, is not only putting contempt upon the department, but it is a reflection upon the government. If there was no one in the Department of the Interior who knew what the law was, the Minister of Justice is there as an adviser for very department that needs his services. Now, what were the regulations? There was a fair, open way in which this was done. What was it? The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), and I want the ministry to notice that, because the hon. gentleman has given their defence, and I want to know whether the ministry believe in the defence or not—defended them on this ground: Granted that it was not paid when it was due, there is nothing in the regulations that says when it must be paid; consequently, if it went on for a year it was perfectly legal. By the same reasoning, if it went for two years, it was perfectly legal, and if it went on for three years, it would be perfectly legal. There is nothing in the single point of time, and if it can go over for one year it can go over for an indefinite period. But, the hon. gentleman was wrong in that. Here are the regulations. The regulations made it necessary that these payments should be made on the 1st and 15th of each month :

Notices were posted at intervals all along these creeks, through which claim-owners were informed that the royalty should be paid on the 1st and 15th of each month to the mining inspectors at the Forks of Eldorado, or at the Bank of Commerce in Dawson City.

This was in reference to a certain number of creeks.

On Hunker Creek the miners were notified to report at the commissioner's office, Dawson, on the 1st of each month. These reports were required whether royalty was paid or not. On Bonanza and Eldorado the mining inspectors examined the claims to ascertain if all who were working had reported.

And so on. Here is the modus operandi :

In each case the miner reporting made an affidavit or statutory declaration, which contained the number or description of the claim, the time covered in the return, viz., date of beginning and ending, the total output in ounces, and the amount of royalty; also a certificate as to the accuracy of the return.

That is what every miner had to do under the regulations that were made by the gold commissioner in pursuance of section 30.

Those who paid royalty at the bank filled out and made affidavit to the return at the office, and took it to the bank; these would be filed away at the bank. I do not know what the inspectors did with the affidavits taken by them—Capt. Bliss, who was accountant at that time, kept the account of the royalty and did not prepare a return for the gold commissioner's office.

That shows that the return to the gold commissioner's office was not prepared by Capt. Bliss.

The commissioner (Commissioner Walsh) himself superintended, to a great extent, the collection of royalty.

The affidavits above-mentioned would contain all the information asked for in the Auditor General's letter.

The Auditor General audits these revenue accounts; the Auditor General knows that to audit them properly you have to have the basis of them, and the basis is the affidavit of the miner, or the worker in the mine. It is the only check you have upon him. The Auditor General knew that, of course, and he demanded that in his letter. Now, what folly it is to say that Mr. Lithgow, who was brought up in the accountant's business and who knew well the mind of the Auditor General, did not know all this. If a definite statement had gone to Mr. Lithgow saying: We want to ferret this thing out, the first thing Mr. Lithgow would have done would have been to ferret out the affidavits. And when he returned his statement to the department he would have based it on the affidavits which he himself had seen, even whether he had returned them or not to the Auditor General. He does not do that, and the fact is presumptive evidence that he returned no affidavits, and he certainly would have done so if there had been any. That he does not do so is proof positive to me that what they did do, after the lapse of time, was to do the best they could to settle the matter, that they came to an agreement and reported this settlement down here to the department at Ottawa. That seems to me a fair conclusion, and Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Senkler embodied it in the statement which they sent down. Has there been time to get these affidavits? I have read the regulations. Every miner and every mine-owner has, in some cases, on the 1st and 15th of the month, at stated times, to give an affidavit of the time he has been at work, of the amount he has taken out, of the value, and number of ounces, and he has to swear to it. That is the basis of the whole collection of the revenue. Not only have these regulations been in force, not only were they in force, but what has elapsed since then? One year and more has elapsed from the time that the department here began to get anxious that the matter should be settled and settled satisfactorily. What was the humiliating position of the department? Mr. Ogilvie lit upon the statement during an examination before him in another matter, and he found that one McDonald had not yet paid his royalty, which possibly amounted to $70,000, according to Mr. Ogilvie. Mr. Ogilvie was the appointed man by the Minister of the Interior, he was that cool and level-headed man which they themselves declared, but Mr. Ogilvie got excited when he learned that, and he immediately wrote to the Minister of the Interior and said: This is a very serious matter; I find that in one case the royalty amounting to possibly $70,000 has been remitted by Mr. Walsh, and that ought to be investigated. Mr. Ogilvie discovered the fact, but could not get the data and he rushed that fact off to the Minister of the Interior. The minister begins to feel that something is wrong. Here was the law set at naught by the commissioner, Major Walsh set it at naught by a secret and confidential letter, and the letter upon which his action was based, we have not been able to have produced in this parliament. If a secret and confidential letter can alter the law and the regulations with reference to the royalty, why does not the department get the letter upon which that was based, namely, the letter from Mr. McDonald in which he made his plea to Mr. Walsh, the commissioner. That letter has been the cause of breaking the law and the regulations, and it has no claim to be kept secret. The government should have secured it from Major Walsh so that parliament could have seen both sides of that agreement. However, the Minister of the Interior immediately sets himself to find out about this thing. He telegraphed first to Mr. Mc-

Gregor, the mining inspector, who was at Brandon, and Mr. McGregor answers back that he has not any information about it, but he knows that he and Mr. Walsh consulted together and that Mr. Walsh wrote a letter to remit the payment of the duty in the case of Mr. McDonald, and so the minister does not get the information from his mining inspector. He writes to Mr. Ogilvie: McGregor is going in, see him, see Norwood, see Fawcett; and Mr. Ogilvie sees them, and Fawcett says he knows nothing about it, and Norwood knows nothing about it but that he got $2,100 at a certain time. There are no records, and in no place in the Yukon district can they find any affidavits or any records in reference to the matter. As I have said, Mr. Ogilvie lit upon this when he was conducting another investigation, and if it was so grave a matter, and with McDonald and the officers before him, why did he not probe it, as he had power to do? When it was discovered and when the government here knew that Captain Bliss had been taking in these royalties and did not return any of the affidavits, why was not Captain Bliss asked to make a return? He was not asked. The matter went back again to Mr. Ogilvie and it has been bandied backwards and forwards and a year has elapsed, and to-day the Department of the Interior comes before this House and cannot show a single affidavit made by McDonald as a basis upon which this claim should have been settled. That is not business. The fact that Dawson is 3,000 miles away, is no bar to these affidavits having been kept; the fact that communication with Dawson was difficult is no excuse for these officials not keeping their accounts in black and white, and not keeping the affidavits which the law requires to be made by the miners themselves. 'Oh,' says the acting Minister of the Interior, 'I know that McDonald paid everything because he paid so much.' Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) will not contend that because a debtor has paid a certain amount that therefore it is proof positive that the debtor has paid everything due by him. The minister would never settle an account in that way. He would want to know the amount due and the amount that was paid. No department of government would proceed on the plan that the acting Minister of the Interior announces in this respect. The Customs Department must have the invoices, the bill of the goods, the rate of the duties, and these are the bases upon which the demand is made for payment and the payment made. In no other way can business be transacted. Take this thing from top to bottom, and it means simply this: In the first place your commissioner broke the law; he over-rode the powers of the gold commissioner; he did it secretly; he did it in one case alone; he did it without any memorandum that the government or any officer of the government has as to the amount that was due when he made the remission into two payments of six months each, or as to the amount he remitted. You have here set out in the government blue-book regulations stating that affidavits are absolutely necessary, and that they should be filed, and yet in this McDonald case the government cannot show one single affidavit as to the amount of gold he took out upon which to base the amount of the royalty he should have paid. More than that, as I was informed by the deputy minister, and as the acting minister admitted here: This is the sole and only case in which a remission has been made. Why should it have been made in one case and not in another? It is because it was made secretly. That is the reason. Let the acting minister (Mr. Sutherland) not run away with so poor an idea of himself and of the country, as to think that he has answered the charge brought against the department, when he accused the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) of following up certain civil servants and insinuating things against employees of the government. You cannot follow up a charge of this kind without seeing what was done by the employees of the government, and consequently you have to bring into it the employees of the government that were engaged in the transaction. But here you have a plain case of the breaking of the law, of the breaking of the law secretly, of the breaking of the law for one man and one man alone. Here you have the case of the remission of royalty without knowing what royalty was due at the time, and without one single affidavit being in the hands of the government to present to this House more than a year after the transaction began to be vigorously inquired into, which was about the month of May, 1899. And still the government from its archives in the Yukon territory have not been able to bring one single affidavit made by Mr. McDonald, of all the claims on which he worked and on which his royalty was to have been paid. That is not businesslike. I certainly think the hon. member for Pictou has very reasonably made his indictment to-day. He has certainly made out a case that ought to be inquired into. Where shall we be in the administration of public affairs, if a man administering in the Yukon shall make himself superior to the law and to the regulations, and do it proving adequately at the same time that he felt he was doing wrong, because he undertook to do what he did under cover of a secret and confidential communication to the man whose authority he usurped and whose regulations he overruled.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, although the hon. member for Pictou delivered a somewhat lengthy address and moved a remarkably lengthy resolution, my own judgment is that all the facts of this case may be compressed within a very short space. Let me first call attention to the fact that in all the references which the hon. member has repeatedly made to Major Walsh, he has been attacking a person who has ceased to be in the employ of the government of Canada and is therefore beyond the ordinary reach of that punishment which a government is at liberty to mete out to an official who has been guilty of misconduct. I think this point is of importance, unless the hon. gentleman has in contemplation some remarkable proceeding, such as the hanging of Major Walsh or something of the sort. In the ordinary process of government all we can do in regard to an official whose conduct has displeased the authorities is to remove him. Assuming that Major Walsh was as inefficient and unfaithful an officer as the hon. gentleman has repeatedly charged, what, after all, could the government of Canada have done? Because at the time the hon. gentleman brought forward these charges Major Walsh had retired from the service of the government, and therefore it was not in the power of the government to administer punishment in the form of dismissal, if, in their judgment, such punishment was due; and I do not see what other proceeding the hon. gentleman could have contemplated in his attacks upon him. We have never assumed for one moment that the government are bound to defend the acts of every public official in the Yukon district. I have said elsewhere, and I repeat, that the marvel is not that there were here and there small irregularities, but that in the face of the many difficulties connected with the opening up and administration of that country the government's task was carried out so successfully and with such great freedom from any just cause of complaint. But it is not necessary for us to assume that perfection of government was reached out there. We do not even get perfection of government in the city of Ottawa or in any of the great cities of Canada. But I do say that so far as complaints have been made against the administration of the Yukon, in nineteen cases out of twenty when they have been investigated, they have practically been dispelled; or where there seemed to be any misconduct established, it was of such a trifling character as to be unworthy of the great attention which my hon. friend from Pictou has bestowed upon it. Let us see what his complaint is to-day. He has brought forward two charges, one of which is old, and the other is new, or, if not new, has been emphasized much more than before. The old charge is that Major Walsh granted an extension of time for the payment of the royalty to Mr. McDonald. That certainly is not new; we have had it before. The other charge is, that not only was an extension of time granted, but that in the end the money which Mr. McDonald owed was not fully and faithfully paid. I think I am correct in stating that if the hon. gentleman has not presented this for the first time to-day, he has presented it in a more emphatic form than before. Let us take the first question, that of the extension. The hon. gentleman in his resolution has been careful not to speak of the extension. He has used words in his resolution which, even according to his own statements, are not justified. He has charged that Major Walsh was guilty of crime and misbehaviour in office. If Major Walsh was guilty of any crime, there are many ways in which the hon. gentleman could see that he was punished, even if there was any disposition on the part of the present government to unfairly defend him, which there is not. The hon. gentleman says further that Major Walsh illegally exempted individuals from regulations with respect to the payment of royalties. The hon. gentleman has not to-day attempted to sustain that statement. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has taken the same view, and emphasized it again and again by the word remission. That is the charge. The hon. member for Pictou says that Major Walsh, as a favour, has exempted Mr. McDonald from the payment of royalty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I thought the hon. gentleman complained of the length of my speech; but I could have given him the evidence in support of that. I thought I gave the hon. gentleman enough.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman makes statements with regard to an extension of time. Does he mean to say that an extension of time and an exemption from payment of royalties are one and the same thing?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I read to the hon. gentleman the evidence in support of that, on page 7 of Major Walsh's report.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman will not now pretend to say that Major Walsh granted exemption from the payment of royalty to Mr. McDonald. All he claims is that he was allowed to carry over the account from one year to another.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I read to the House part of the evidence on which that charge is based. It is on page 7 of Major Walsh's report, where he said he did exempt individuals.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman used the word exempted in relation to the McDonald case, he used it unfairly, because he does not pretend through the whole tenor of his argument to-day, and in the face of the receipt in the public documents for the payment of the money, that exemption was granted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me explain that Major Walsh granted that exemption to poor miners who complained that their expenses were greater than the royalty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He had no power to do that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the exemption is an exemption of poor miners, and not Mr. McDonald, the hon. gentleman and I are talking of different things. The point of the hon. gentleman's argument was that Major Walsh would show no favour to the poor struggling miner, but would only favour this wealthy Bonanza king.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put the House in possession of my position, which he does not understand? The first part of that resolution is a recital of the charges which I preferred last year on my responsibility as a member of the House of Commons, and which related to the particular matter mentioned in this case, the McDonald royalty; but incidentally I referred to the charge of Major Walsh having illegally exempted claims—not the claim of McDonald; and in support of that I read to-day on page 7 of Major Walsh's report, where he states himself: 'I pointed out to the leaseholders that the collection of the royalty was necessary,' and so on.

Royalty was not collected from any claims which had not got into good working order or which could show a profit after paying royalty, and this reach a large sum.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let it be clearly understood that this reference to the exemption has no connection with the McDonald case and my hon. friend and I have a better understanding; but in taking that view, he destroys his own argument, that a great and exceptional favour was being extended to McDonald, and none of the other miners could get any concession whatever.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quoted Mr. Fawcett's sworn statement that he did not know, nor did his colleague know, of a case where such indulgence had been granted as was granted McDonald.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case of McDonald, the commissioner only granted an extension of time, but in the case of somebody else he granted a remission. Therefore, instead of any great favour being done the Bonanza king, he was granted less privileges than somebody else.

But the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) waxed eloquent about the secrecy of this arrangement, and then we were told that Major Walsh had no power to grant this extension. Well, the commission to Major Walsh provided that he should have full power and authority over every official in the district, and, therefore, if the gold commissioner had no desire—which is not apparent—to grant that extension to McDonald, the chief executive officer, by the terms of his commission, had undoubtedly power to grant that privilege.

Mr. FIELDING.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You will not get that opinion endorsed by Mr. Mills.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall not discuss that point, because it does not happen to be one of very much importance. Let us come now to the substantial rather than the technical point. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) waxed eloquent over the secrecy of this thing. Imagine, he said, a collector of customs or the Minister of Customs making an arrangement whereby he would grant extension to one man and not to another. But that is not a fair comparison. I will give my hon. friend a fair comparison, with the help of his hon. friend from Halifax, who gave us an illustration from the mining laws of Nova Scotia. He said we had a law which provides that returns shall be made at certain time and certain conditions observed, and that if these conditions are not complied with, the property may be forfeited. That is true, but my hon. friend from Halifax knows that the occasions on which property is forfeited for failures of that kind are very rare. I think I can safely say that such forfeitures hardly occur at all. I can show my hon. friend that what Major Walsh did in the Yukon district is frequently done in Nova Scotia, under the mining laws of that province, as he must be perfectly aware. Did he ever hear of the Block House mine? He was professionally engaged in a case connected with that mine and must know all about it. The mining laws of Nova Scotia, which are excellent laws, require royalty to be paid at a certain time under penalty of the forfeiture of the property, just as in the mining district of the Yukon. But, the hon. gentleman knows that again and again privileges are granted to mining companies in Nova Scotia; and when mining becomes embarrassed, when times are not very prosperous, and a mining company is not prepared to pay promptly its royalty, consideration is shown on that account. In the particular case I have just cited—and I mention it because my hon. friend was associated in it—I had an interview with my hon. friend, when he asked for a compromise on behalf of the people interested in that property who had owed their royalties for many years. I cite that case merely to show that under the royalty laws of Nova Scotia, it was not an uncommon thing to grant an extension of time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far from an extension of time having been given that company, the government went on the spot and sold all the personal property for the purpose of realizing the royalty and closed up the mine.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is comparatively young, and came into that case very late. He says that the government did not grant an extension, but sold the property. But the government did not do that until the company had had years of extension, and it was only in the last resort, after the lapse of years, that the government sold the property.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand by extension one thing and my hon. friend another. It is true that the government did not sell the mine as early as they might have done, but so far as telling the company that they need not pay on time, I venture to say that the hon. gentleman will not find any such extension on record.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What I understand by an extension of time is this. Where money is due and you allow the debtor to go on for months and years without enforcing the claim, you are granting an extension of time. I need not state that case only, but I mention it simply because my hon. friend was professionally associated with it. But, many cases have occurred in Nova Scotia where mining companies have come to the commissioner of mines and said: Business is bad and you should not be hard on us, and we ask you for an extension of time. I have agreed to such extensions repeatedly, in my capacity of Prime Minister of Nova Scotia, through the instrumentality of the commissioner of mines. I could mention the names of gentlemen known to every member from Nova Scotia to whom such an extension was given, and it will be generally admitted that it was a fair and reasonable arrangement. And it was equally fair and reasonable in the case of the Yukon district, where in the circumstances mentioned to-night, an extension of a few months was granted this man. Oh, but, said the hon. member for York, it was done secretly. Well, when we in Nova Scotia grant an extension of a few months to one of our debtors, do you suppose we go on the market place and advertise the fact to all the others and invite them not to pay?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would you mark the report 'confidential'?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but I would do my best to see that those who are able to pay did not know anything about it, and I would collect every dollar of the royalty from them before letting them know. And so I say, in the actual experience of the mining law my hon. friend has quoted, you will find ample precedent for granting an extension of time, provided the public interest is not in any way prejudiced.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the Minister of Customs is doing that same thing now?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think he is; but, if I were to give the names of the people to whom these concessions were granted in Nova Scotia, the leader of the opposition would say that it was fair and reasonable to grant these extensions under the circumstances.

We have disposed of the contention as regards the extension, and have shown that it was an exercise of discretion on the part of the officers in the Yukon district, either the gold commissioner, who is technically the officer who should have granted it, or the officer who had control over all the affairs of the district. I think it was a fair exercise of discretion. But that is a matter of opinion. It is not necessary that we should all agree, but it is a fair matter of opinion.

The other question is whether or not the government of Canada obtained all the money due. That is an important question. The hon. member for Pictou has not a shadow of evidence to show that this money was not honestly paid, but he has a number of inferences and presumptions. He does not happen to have found any affidavit made by Mr. McDonald, and, therefore, presumes that there was none; but, it is quite possible that the affidavit exists and could not be found at the moment in any of the documents referred to by the hon. member for Pictou. We have a memorandum dated Ottawa, June 13, from Mr. Fawcett, the former gold commissioner, dealing with this question of the affidavit. Among other things he said:

Those who paid the royalty at the bank filled out and made affidavit to the return of the office and took it to the bank, these would be led away at the bank. I do not know what the inspectors did with the affidavits taken by them. Captain Bliss, who was accountant at that time, kept the account of the royalty and did not prepare a return for the gold commissioner's office. The commissioner (Commissioner Walsh) himself superintended to a great extent, the collection of the royalty.

The affidavits above mentioned would contain all the information asked for in the Auditor General's letter, and, if required, they would probably be obtainable.

I believe my hon. friend opposite read this and stopped here. But I read on:

The bank might not be willing to give up those on file there, as they show the authority for the transactions which took place through the bank in re collection of royalty.

It is possible, though I do not profess knowledge of the subject, that these affidavits were of the class referred to in the memorandum—

Mr. FOSTER. Were they?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know. And that is where I differ from my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). In the things that he does not know he gives all the inferences and assumptions against the officials. I hardly think that fair.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) allow me to ask him a question? Suppose they were in the bank and the bank, for its own protection, did not care to give up those papers, would they have the least objection to giving copies of them, or to allowing Mr. Lithgow or Mr. Senkler to see them to get information for the department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a proper question, and one that may be looked into. But it would not justify such an inquiry as is contemplated by the resolution here. The Auditor General said in a letter:

I have seen no evidence that the royalty was paid in every case where it should have been paid, or that the amount paid was the amount that should have been paid.

That is in a letter from the Auditor General to the department on June 7. It is on that passage that Mr. Fawcett has made his memorandum. It is fair to state that the Auditor General does not claim to have evidence to show that the money was not paid. He simply says that the evidence was not adduced to him in detail as to the payment. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) takes the inference to be against the officials; the Auditor General does not. He states the information he has, but does not assume that the information he has not is not in existence. But, I will tell what the Auditor General did. It was suggested—I believe by the Auditor General himself—that he should send out an official to that country and make an investigation. Provision was made in the estimates for an additional sum to be placed at the service of the Auditor General to enable him to do that. He sent out an officer to audit the accounts. I think that if his assistant had found anything wrong in the Yukon accounts, I am satisfied, from what we all know of our friend the Auditor General, that he would not have been slow in bringing it before the public. But he has not pretended that he has found anything wrong. According to this memorandum he thought that the evidence of the payment was not entirely before him. But though after that statement was made, he sent out his officer, I am not aware that any statement has emanated from the Auditor General's office implying that, in his judgment, there is another wrong. If, however, there is any doubt, we can have before the Committee on Public Accounts the officer of the Auditor General's department who went to Dawson and inquired into affairs there. I imagine from what I have heard, that the officer gave his attention to a general review of the system of accounts rather than to an examination of particular items. However, that is a question on which we could have the officer before the Committee on Public Accounts; and if he has any additional information we can get it. But, my hon. friend says that these affidavits do not happen to be on file before us, therefore, he presumes they do not exist. I think that is a very unwarranted presumption, and I think we can establish that very fairly. In the memorandum of Mr. Fawcett, dated June 13, 1899, from which I have quoted, he says:

Mr. FOSTER.

In each case the miner reporting made an affidavit or statutory declaration which contained the number or description of the claim, the time covered in the return, viz., date of beginning and ending, the total output in ounces, and the amount of royalty; also a certificate as to the accuracy of the return.

This is a statement of the practice, and he said it was followed 'in each case.' Therefore, unless we have something to contradict that, we have a right to conclude that the practice was followed in this particular case of McDonald.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) allow me to ask him a question? What he gives is supposition, and, of course, we cannot deny that it is possible. But, will the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) instruct his officers to telegraph Mr. Lithgow and ask him the simple question, whether or not that settlement has been made on affidavits which exist and which he has seen? That would be a good thing for the satisfaction of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we are going to have anything from Mr. Lithgow, I think I would rather have a full statement from him. I would not like to put a mere catch question to him. I would like to have him here and examined. He was an officer of my own department, and has been personally known to me for many years as a gentleman of the highest character and standing. I think it only fair to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to say, that when he was organizing affairs in the Yukon district, he came to me and said he desired to have a gentleman out there who would be controller or manager of their financial affairs to a large extent, and he wanted one with whom I had acquaintance and one whom I could cordially recommend. After thinking the matter over I recommended Mr. Lithgow, and he was sent there. He was transferred to the Department of the Interior and reports to that department. I am glad to hear gentlemen on both sides of the House bear testimony to the character of Mr. Lithgow. It shows that the judgment I formed of his qualities was not a mistaken one. He was in the employ of the Finance Department long before I entered it; but I had not known him as a fellow-citizen of Halifax for many years, and felt sure that he would do his duty fairly and impartially. Here is his letter of June 23. It has been read by my hon. friend the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), but it will bear reading again. It is addressed to the Deputy Minister of the Interior and says:

I have the honour to inclose statement of royalty paid by Alexander McDonald on account of 1898, amounting to $34,028.13, together with the receipts and draft No. 347, deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. It will be remembered that Major Walsh allowed Mr. McDonald an extension of time on the payment of his royalty, and inclosed statement represents a full settlement, having been gone into most carefully by the gold commissioner and myself. This will appear in the gold commissioner's statement for June.

Your obedient servant,
J. T. LITHGOW,
 Comptroller.

He does not say he guesses at it; he does not say he had any trouble with it; but he says he has gone into the matter most carefully with the gold commissioner, and he puts his signature to the statement that the account is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. A single telegram to Mr. Lithgow would set that right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not want a telegram to set at rest that which is sufficiently explained in the letter. Now, Mr. Lithgow, having made the statement that this would appear in the gold commissioner's statement for June, I desire to refer to that statement. I have in my hand that report. It is made up to June, 1899, and it gives each of the claims and the total gold production, royalty paid and the exemptions. It closes with the following statement:

The above is a statement of the royalty paid by Alexander McDonald, being the balance due on gold mined by him during 1898.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I suggest that my hon. friend read the items here, as showing how it was made upon each mine.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (reading):

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That does not go any further than the letter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. gentlemen opposite argue that there were affidavits, but I say that the presumptions are the other way, not only are the presumptions the other way, but the testimony of this return is the other way. Here is the letter addressed by Mr. Senkler to the Department of the Interior in July last, after the attention of the department had been drawn to the matter by the Auditor General. Mr. Senkler addressed the letter on July 24 to the department explaining the methods in which these accounts were made up, explaining why it was difficult to send the affidavits to Ottawa. He pointed out that it might be important to keep these affidavits in Dawson, and this letter of Mr. Senkler makes this statement—it is one of great importance, and I ask the hon. gentleman to read Mr. Lithgow's letter first and the certificate of Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Senkler—read them both in the light of this statement which I take now from the letter of Mr. Senkler to the department in answer to the criticism of the Auditor General. It is dated May 24, 1899:

Affidavits are all examined very carefully by the comptroller, who compares them with the report of the inspector, and with the counterfoil in each case before he certifies to the correctness of the report.

Now here is the statement of Mr. Senkler that before the controller certifies to the correctness of the report he examines the affidavits carefully and compares them with the inspector's report. Therefore, the presumptions which the hon. gentleman has turned against the existence of the affidavits are entirely the other way. Whether every form and phase of the regulation has been carried out is not the question. The great question the people of Canada will be interested in having solved is: Did this man pay his royalty fairly and honestly? I say every bit of evidence that we have before us goes to show that he did. But there are one or two statements which may need inquiry. The hon. member has called attention to the fact that Mr. Ogilvie has referred to the sum of $70,000 due, and in another part of his letter has referred to $41,000 being due; and then there follows the fact that only $34,000 was paid. Well, I admit that is a discrepancy which needs explanation from Mr. Ogilvie and his officials; and the acting Minister of the Interior read from his memorandum a statement that Mr. Ogilvie had been called upon to explain that discrepancy, and his reply is not yet received. I have no doubt he will do so. If there is any difficulty, if there is any failure, I am sure the department can be trusted to look into the matter and to see that Mr. Ogilvie affords satisfactory explanation, and with the assistance of Mr. Lithgow, I am quite sure that if there is a shadow of doubt as to Alexander McDonald having been obliged to pay every cent that was due, that doubt can be removed by the ordinary machinery of the department without the necessity of the procedure referred to by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DUGAS. I understood the hon. member for L'Islet to be paired with the hon. member for Champlain. I have the list here.

Amendment (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) negatived.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Department of the Interior, including
$2,400 to T. G. Rothwell and P. G. Keyes, $2,200 to G. U. Ryley, and $1,800 to J. White, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..... $102,524

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. (Pictou). That item stood, I think, until Mr. Ryley had time to prepare a statement. The hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) has been good enough to allow me to have a copy of the statement which Mr. Ryley prepared, and it is only fair, before anything further is said by me that the committee should have before it Mr. Ryley's statement, as I have already made mine.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). In regard to this matter the only thing that is necessary is to read the statement made by Mr. Ryley in reply to the charges made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) on a previous occasion. Referring to the statements made by the hon. gentleman, he says :

Two charges are made against me; first, that I had prepared a memorandum to the minister upon which he made a statement that Mr. A. E. Philp had not obtained a lease at all; that I suppressed the fact that he had received an option, which he considered was tantamount to a lease; and that from the return sent thereon to the House it can be shown that I not only deceived parliament, but deceived my minister, who, on the strength of my memorandum, made a positive statement to the House, which was proved to be wholly inaccurate by the returns of the department.

With reference to this, I may say that Sir Charles, in his speech, delivered in June, 1899, stated that it appeared by the return 83 that certain persons, including A. E. Philp, of Brandon, had obtained leases to dredge portions of certain streams. The minister instructed me to report whether this statement was correct. Upon referring to the return, I found it showed that no lease had been issued and reported accordingly. I stated that A. E. Philp applied for a lease on Bonanza Creek, but it was not granted, as would be seen by referring to page 4 of the said return.

At the time I made the report it was entirely in connection with the information given in the return, and I can truthfully state that I had no intention of concealing any action taken by the department with reference to these applications. Moreover, at that date the minister and parliament were aware that the so-called options were given, as a copy of the departmental letter of January 22, 1898, informing Mr. Philp that a lease would be issued in his favour upon receipt here on or before the 15th of the following month of the fee for a free miner's certificate, and the payment of the first year's rental, was on the Table of the House. This letter was included in return Ref. 466,594, which was sent to the House of Commons on April 19, 1899.

I may add that the so-called options were never recognized by me as tantamount to a lease as the tract applied for was not shown on the plan open to the public as having been granted until a lease had been actually issued.

Sir Charles stated that the granting of options came into force for the first time under my supervision of the timber and mines department.

I may say that this system has been in operation ever since I have been in the department.

Sir Charles said that the options given to persons who applied for dredging leases were referred to time and again in the department as leases; that they were negotiated as leases; that they were as much leases, for instance, as in the case of the water front, where no formal document was drawn up, still the party had all the rights and interests and negotiated them.

I am unable to find where the department referred to these options as leases until the first year's rent was paid. The difference between the water front referred to and the option for a dredging lease, is that in the former the rent was paid, but in the case of the options the rental was not paid.

The persons who received options, no doubt, did negotiate with persons to become interested with them in the undertaking, and I remember the department did state to several persons who made a request to that effect that upon payment of the rent and the issue of the lease to the applicant, an assignment thereof would be accepted and registered in the department.

The second charge made by Sir Charles is that in my memorandum to the minister I stated in effect that I had full control of matters appertaining to my branch; and that the minister also stated he had practically delegated to me the authority and discretion to administer the affairs of the branch. Sir Charles stated he had found from personal experience that this was not the case. He cited an instance where he applied to me for the name of prior applicants for a timber berth in the Yukon territory, for which he had filed an application on behalf of a client, and stated that I referred him to the minister for authority to furnish the information.

With reference to this, I may say that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, in the course of his speech, made in June, 1899, stated that the minister had been guilty of favouritism and partiality in the administration of the laws and regulations applicable to the district of the Yukon in the North-west Territories. The day after this speech was made the minister instructed me to prepare a memorandum setting forth the method of procedure adopted by the department in dealing with these applications, and also what instructions I had received from him in relation thereto. In reply I informed the minister that so soon as the regulations for the disposal of leases to dredge for minerals in the beds of rivers were promulgated, I personally asked the Minister of the Interior whether he desired each application should be submitted to him for his instructions; that in reply he instructed me that all the applications should be dealt with strictly in accordance with the provisions of the regulations in that behalf, and according to their priority of date of filing in the department; that none of the applications need be submitted to him; that these instructions were fully carried out; and that the first applicant, irrespective of who he was, obtained a lease, provided he paid the rental within a given period.

It will be noticed that the instructions given to me by the minister only empowered me to deal with the applications made for leases to dredge for minerals in the beds of the rivers and gave me no authority whatever to furnish information beyond what the department usually supplied. The minister, in his speech upon this point, stated as follows:

When an application comes in for a mining concession of any kind, it goes to Mr. Ryley, the chief clerk of the branch, and it never comes to me unless it is a case in which Mr. Ryley has to ask for instructions, as he cannot deal with it under the regulations, or in which there is some confusion, or some doubt concerning which he thinks he ought to have the direction of the minister. If it is a matter for which there is no regulation, then I may consider whether special action shall be taken in regard to it or not; that the applications for mining and dredging concessions in the Yukon, which were referred to by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, he absolutely knew nothing of, or any one of them, and absolutely had nothing whatever to do with them; that he framed regulations after consultation with Mr. Ryley, and then said to him: 'I don't want to know the name of a single man making application for a lease; I want you to take these papers and deal with them according to the regulations, each on its merit and according to their priority, as each man is entitled to them under the regulations.'

This appears to me to be conclusive evidence that I had received no authority from the minister to deal with any applications beyond those filed for leases of portions of rivers for dredging purposes. I may here say that when I was first placed in charge of the branch I was informed by the deputy minister, Mr. Russell, not to furnish the names of applicants unless I was authorized to do so by the deputy head or the minister, and as far as I am concerned this rule has been carried out.

Respectfully submitted,

G. U. RYLEY.

I gave the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) a copy of that. Since that Mr. Ryley has filed a further statement with regard to the use of the word 'option,' and perhaps it is just as well it should go on record:

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, June 6, 1900.

(Memorandum.)

In reply to your inquiry, I beg to say that the word 'option' in connection with a reservation for a certain period was never used by the department until it appeared in certain questions asked this session by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

The following is a copy of the departmental letter which was sent to Mr. A. E. Philp, reserving for a short period the tract on Bonanza Creek he applied for:

'Referring to your application for permission to dredge for minerals in a portion of the sub-Mr. SUTHERLAND.

merged bed of the Bonanza Creek, I am now directed to inclose herewith a copy of the dredging regulations for the provisional district of Yukon, from which you will see that it will be necessary for you, before a lease can be issued, to obtain a free miner's certificate, and to pay the rental for one year at the rate of $100 per mile, for the stretch of river applied for, which, however, must not exceed thirty miles.

'A lease in your favour for a term of twenty years from the date thereof, to dredge in the portion of the stream applied for, will be issued upon receipt here on or before the 15th day of February next of the fee for a free miner's certificate, amounting to $10 in the case of an individual and $50 or $100 in the case of a joint stock company, and the rental for the first year at the rate of $100 per mile.

'If the amount of the fee and rental is not received here within the prescribed period, your applications will be cancelled without further notice, and the stretch of river applied for by you will be leased to any person who may make application therefor and comply with the provisions of the regulations.'

You asked me to explain what Sir Charles meant when he made the following statement:

'In the case of Philp, as the returns brought down this session show, he had the exclusive right of obtaining a formal lease covering various periods, extended from time to time, from January 12, 1898, down until he offered to drop the thing altogether for a fee of a considerable amount.'

I find by referring to the records, that Mr. A. E. Philp applied, on January 12, 1898, for a lease to dredge a portion of Bonanza Creek; that on the 22nd of the same month he was informed that a lease would be issued in his favour upon receipt of the rental on or before the 15th of the following month. The letter was cancelled on January 31, nine days after it was written, as it was found necessary to obtain a report from the gold commissioner.

I do not understand what Sir Charles refers to when he made use of the following words, 'until he offered to drop the thing altogether for a fee of a considerable amount.' There is nothing in the records, so far as I can ascertain, to show that Mr. Philp made such an offer. None of the persons, on whose behalf Mr. Philp filed applications, and referred to by Sir Charles in his speech of June, 1899, were given more than fifty days to pay the rent, and only one of those who received leases, assigned it, namely, W. L. Parrish. The assignment was made after the date of the lease. In none of the cases referred to did the department consent to a lease being accepted and assigned before the rental was paid. In all of the cases the leases referred to were issued in favour of the original applicants.

The annexed memorandum from the two recording clerks in my branch corroborates what I said in my memorandum to you, that the portions of rivers reserved for applicants for a certain period, were not shown on any of our plans as tracts leased, or referred to as leaseholds.

Respectfully submitted,

G. U. RYLEY.

Hon. James Sutherland,
Acting Minister of the Interior.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, June 7, 1900.

Mr. Ryley,—In reply to your inquiries, we beg to state that in the recording of applications for leases to dredge the beds of rivers in the Yukon territory for minerals, we kept a plan on which the applications were plotted, and the reference number placed thereon, but not the names of the applicants. We also kept another plan on which the portions leased were plotted, with the number of the lease placed on each, but no plan was kept showing the portions of rivers reserved for applicants for a certain period. These plans were open to the public.

JAS. H. REIFFENSTEIN.
SAMUEL M. GENEST.

I do not know if my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) lays any importance on the Dominion Creek matter, but I asked Mr. Ryley for a memorandum with regard to that, and if necessary, I will read it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
I propose to challenge his statement on that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I had better read what he says on that also :

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, June 11, 1900.

(Memorandum re closing of Dominion Creek.)

The Solicitor General, on page 6570 of 'Hansard,' in reply to a question asked by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, stated that I informed him that on November 15, 1897, Dominion Creek was closed by the gold commissioner, Thomas Fawcett. With respect to this, I may say that on the morning of the 31st ultimo, the Solicitor General's private secretary asked me verbally who closed Dominion Creek and at what date, and in reply I informed him that it had been closed on November 15, 1897, by Thomas Fawcett, the late gold commissioner. The same afternoon, in order to make sure whether I was right in what I had stated, I looked up the question and answers in connection with the case which was before the department with reference to a claim applied for on Dominion Creek, as I had examined Mr. Fawcett particularly as to the closing of this creek. I understood from Mr. Fawcett that in closing the creek no entries were to be granted for creek, bench or hill claims. I submitted to you the statement made by Mr. Fawcett, which showed that he had closed the creek on November 15, 1897. I did not know at the time I made the statement to the Solicitor General, and also showed you the statement made by Mr. Fawcett, that the discussion particularly referred to the bench and hill claims, but was under the impression that the whole question hinged on the question as to the date the creek was closed. I find, however, on perusing 'Hansard' for the first time to-day that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, on page 6574, acknowledged that Mr. Fawcett did, as a matter of fact, undoubtedly close the creek claims of Dominion Creek, but he contended that the bench and hill claims were not closed until instructions to that effect were issued by Major Walsh, and he referred to the evidence which had been taken before Commissioner Ogilvie upon this question. I have referred to the evidence, and after carefully reading it I am now of the opinion that the impression I had from what Mr. Fawcett informed me and from the statement he made, that I was under a misapprehension as to the hillside claims. I must confess that this is the first time I have read over the evidence carefully upon this question.

I notice on page 87 of the printed report of the evidence taken before the commissioner, that the answer given by Mr. Fawcett to a certain question makes it appear that the hill sides on Dominion Creek were not closed. The question is, when they began operations people began to apply to hill side claims? Mr. Fawcett's answer was, 'I think some had been prospecting, and inquired of me if the hillsides were closed before that—in the spring—and of course they were answered in the negative.' In the previous answer of Mr. Fawcett, he stated that the surveyors commenced to survey the creek about the middle of April. It would, therefore, appear from this answer that the hillsides were not reserved prior to the middle of April. I notice, also, on page 88 of the report, that Mr. Fawcett stated that the privilege stopped on the hillsides on May 30, 1898.

In again reading over Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's speech of June 1, in which he makes certain charges against me, I think the memorandum he referred to on page 6693 of the 'Hansard' as having been prepared for you, is the one I have above referred to which was handed to you the evening of the date that the Solicitor General stated that I had furnished him with information that the creek was closed on November 15, 1897, and which statement you made use of in your remarks during the evening. I may add that if I had known at the time I showed you Mr. Fawcett's statement about the closing of the creek, that Sir Charles had stated that he was satisfied Mr. Fawcett closed the creek on November 15, 1897, as far as the creek claims were concerned, I would have looked further into the matter before submitting the said statement to you.

Respectfully submitted,

G. U. RYLEY.

Hon. James Sutherland.

Acting Minister of the Interior.

I think these explanations given by Mr. Ryley ought to be very satisfactory to my hon. friend and the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am very sorry indeed that I cannot accept those explanations from Mr. Ryley as satisfactory at all, and I move that instead of passing this proposed item, which involves an increase in the salary of Mr. Ryley, the item be struck out altogether, and that no provision be made for Mr. Ryley. I do it on these grounds: It is seldom in this parliament that a minister of the Crown endeavours to bolster up his case or defend the policy of his department or his action by dragging before the House the names of his officers. According to the practice of our own parliament as well as that of the mother country such a course is most reprehensible. Lord Beaconsfield, when Mr. Disraeli, and Mr. Gladstone, as leaders of the Conservative and Liberal parties, both deprecated in the severest terms such a practice, the evils of which are present in this very case. These gentlemen went so far as to say that it ought not to be permitted to bring forward officers' names in a debate—that the ministers have ample remedies for all official acts. If they have not sufficient, they get sufficient; if officers do not do their duty properly, they are dismissed. If, on the other hand, the ministers do not dismiss them, they are responsible for all acts done by their officers, and they must stand between the House and their officers on all occasions. In this case the Minister of the Interior was unable to defend himself from an attack made by me, and he made use of an officer for that purpose. I have read Mr. Ryley's statement most carefully, that is, the first and longest one. The minister did not show me the other two.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I received those afterwards, and I really intended to show them to the hon. gentleman, but I forgot.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know it was an oversight, and no great harm was done, for I easily grasped the point that was made. Mr. Ryley lent himself to the minister for the minister's purpose, and the minister used him to such an extent that he gave me the lie across the floor of the House. The Prime Minister adopted the same view of the transaction. The Postmaster General also adopted a very extreme view in regard to himself, and the statement I made based on a memorandum of Mr. Ryley, which, while not absolutely false, was so inaccurate and misleading that it is the only defence these gentlemen have for using the language they used in regard to me in this House. Mr. Ryley put into the hands of his minister a document which I will refer to later on; and on that document a very important part of the defence of the minister rested. Let me remind the House what was up, and they will see how important this statement was, and how necessary it was for the minister to use Mr. Ryley, and how willingly and improperly Mr. Ryley lent himself to the minister for that purpose. I made a charge. I was careful not to make a direct charge against the minister, which seemed to give the minister some comfort, and enabled him to spend a considerable time on the matter. I think I have rather stronger and better evidence than he had in regard to the so-called frauds in Manitoba when he undertook to obtain and did obtain the co-operation of the Prime Minister and the expenditure of a large amount of public money for the purpose of assuming the responsibility of the charge and employing detectives in order to fasten on the people he suspected the responsibility for the crime which he thought had been committed. I have no doubt that if I had been given a similar opportunity of employing detectives, the minister's position would have been very different from what it was. But here was the point. It did not matter whether Mr. Philp had obtained a lease in a particular river, or a lot of the leases mentioned in the return to which I referred later on—a misleading return used in an incorrect manner by the aid of this misleading memorandum. It did not matter a particle how many of these he obtained; having obtained these leases, one of which would be enough, the charge was that he wrote a letter to a gentleman in Vancouver stating that he wanted this gentleman to join with him in this dredging venture, that he had obtained a lease with Mr. Sifton and Major Walsh who were interested with him in that lease, but that their names could not appear for obvious reasons. Now, consider the parties who knew of this correspondence; consider the relation of Mr. Philp to the minister; the fact that from that day to the time I was speaking he enjoyed that man's confidence; that he was his former partner; that he was allowed to exploit the department in an extraordinary manner in regard to the so-called options and the applications for leases; that in the name of all sorts of individuals, relatives and friends he had been able to obtain these quasi rights over these various properties, though the policy of the law and the regulations of the department forbade one person becoming interested in these different properties. With evidence of that character. I made a serious charge. It was not direct, for the reason I have given; but if there had been nothing beneath it, if there had been no suspicious circumstance against it, there is not a minister on the Treasury benches whom I see now in front of me who, if I had dared to make that charge concerning them, would have failed to insist on having it referred promptly to a commission of any choosing, so long as it was of a judicial character, giving me that advantage, if it be an advantage, and the opportunity of making good the statements I had made, or giving them the opportunity to remove the very serious ground for suspicion that existed. But what alarms me is that, as in the case of Mr. Ryley, who was the main support of the minister in all his contradictions of my statements, in order to enable him to use that elegant language that he would choke my statements down my throat, he causes all these men on whose statements he relied to appear in the estimates or in the Auditor General's Report this session. For instance, we find that Mr. Ogilvie was paid $5,000 as commissioner of the Yukon territory, and after the commission of inquiry ended he was granted $8,000 salary, with house rent at $250 per month, and housekeeper at $60 per month, amounting in all to $11,720 a year. We find that Mr. Clement, who assisted him on that commission, was receiving $2,500; and he is receiving now, with living expenses and salary, no less a sum than $6,200. And Mr. Treadgold, the one independent man on whom he relied appears according to the statement of the acting Minister of the Interior, as receiving $332.50 to pay for the pamphlet that the hon. minister quoted in his report. That was paid November 16, 1899. In the case of Mr. Ryley, we find that he is to be rewarded by the sum of $400 to be added to his salary from year to year.

Touching this stickler for accuracy in statement, it is interesting to note the numerous inaccurate and contradictory statements made by members of government with the assistance of their officers. Take the statement made by the Minister of the Interior that the instructions to Major Walsh when he went in were verbal. On another occasion he stated that no instructions were given him except those in his commission. One of those must be inaccurate. The Prime Minister stated that Major Walsh's appointment was for a specific time, and the Secretary of State said that he was distinctly appointed until order was restored, whereas Major Walsh, in his official report to the Minister of the Interior, says he was appointed for a year. Those are official statements across the floor, and now that I see how these things are done, I fancy that they are made to satisfy any particular emergency that may be pressing.

Then we have these erroneous statements, and it would be interesting to find whether Mr. Ryley had any connection with them. The Minister of the Interior last session referred to a preliminary note from Mr. Ogilvie, produced in sessional papers 63a, as a private note, and we have this statement in the House:

That is the course which the government took in connection with the investigation. I have no report as yet of the result.

That was on the 4th April, 1899. This session, in answer to my question on the floor, the acting minister was obliged to state that the letter of February 20, to which reference is made in that return, and to which the minister referred in the extract I have made of his speech, was received at Ottawa April 3, and this session when that letter was produced we find that it would have had a very material effect on the debate. In that letter, Mr. Ogilvie said:

I regret to inform you that the Royal Commission for the investigation of the charges against officials has to an extent fallen through.

Then he goes on to state that he was of opinion that the commission should be extended, and referred to the difficulty with regard to the limitation in such a manner that he could not possibly have known the extent of the law. Otherwise he would never make the statement with regard to the government giving fullest scope to Mr. Ogilvie, and undertaking that if the investigation was not satisfactory the government would adopt means to have a more thorough investigation.

The acting Minister of the Interior, when confronted with this letter, and asked: To whom is the document set out, whom addressed? Was it marked private or personal? replied: No. No argument can be suggested that that letter was unofficial in its character. It deals with a matter in which Mr. Ogilvie was acting in an official capacity and no other. It is a formal report addressed to the head of the department, and signed in a most formal manner. In connection with these important points there have been contradictory statements, in answer to the formal questions put in this House, emanating from the Department of the Interior. Therefore, I am the more suspicious of the work this officer is doing when I find these statements which are incorrect and unfair.

Take, for instance, the language of the Minister of the Interior when talking of the Philp leases:

Sir, I have choked down his throat several of them to-day. One of the statements which the hon. gentleman has risked his political reputation and his chance of political preferment, if he does not prove, was the statement that these Philps got the mining permits and mining leases which he recites in that resolution. Is he going to prove that?

There is no use quibbling about the word leases or options or permits. The Minister of the Interior, advised by Mr. Ryley, went so far as to say that the Philps had not received a lease or a permit, and of course, his position was very plausible. If that statement had been borne out by the facts, as it has not been, my statement would have been flatly contradicted. What rubbish it was to take up time investigating into the writing of a letter from Mr. Philp, in which he said he had obtained a lease, and that the minister and Major Walsh were interested. The minister was able to take that position. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) thought that he made his position good. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) supposed that he had established it. Now, I put it to the Postmaster General. I put it to the colleagues of the Minister of the Interior: Would they have felt that my charge had completely broken down, that I had shown to have made a serious and material error if, that evening, it had been admitted by Mr. Ryley, who had been appealed to, in the memorandum, or by the Minister of the Interior, that while there had been no lease signed, sealed and delivered, to Mr. Philp, he had been permitted to hawk options, so-called, for leases under various names, including his own, over this continent, as far west as Vancouver, and had financed some of them, putting in the name of some party for whom he was acting in this transaction and, in others, obtaining extensions and obtaining at the hands of the Department of the Interior, the most extraordinary favouritism, as shown by the returns we have? We have documents that were withheld from parliament last session, that were not laid on the Table, in the face of which such statements would not have been made as were made last session. It is not for me to say where the blame was, where the inaccuracy was—that is between the Minister of the Interior and Mr. Ryley. The Minister of the Interior was basing all his statements on these documents prepared by Mr. Ryley, and meeting a serious charge, and meeting it in a manner in which he could not possibly meet it now, because
