we find not only that Mr. Philp wrote a letter about leases, but that he had obtained leases, and that he had obtained them in his own name and in the name of others as well. There was the Parrish lease in which he figured all through. I have furnished the committee some of the evidence on which I prepared that charge, and there is also an interesting reference to the courts of law—and some of the gentlemen on the Treasury benches could assist me in showing how they got the suit settled. Taking all the references to the word 'lease,' were hon. gentlemen always as particular as Mr. Ryley was last session in his memorandum, in using the word according to its technical meaning? We have had discussion on the subject of the water front of Dawson. A lease was referred to as having been made on certain terms. But when we asked for the lease and requested that it should be laid on the Table, we found there is no lease whatever. There was correspondence. And so in connection with the Anderson lease. The order in council was passed authorizing the lease to be granted to Mr. Anderson on certain terms. The Department of the Interior, in which Mr. Ryley is found, considered that Mr. Anderson had a lease. There was authority for that. He had the right to it, and they were not so exacting, and so particular as to the technicality. He had the authority for a lease; he had a document for signing the transfer, of which he got, according to the returns before us, five thousand pounds sterling, the formal lease being taken out afterwards. But the departments referred to that as a lease long before the formal lease was in existence.

Mr. COWAN. You do not call an option for a lease, a lease, do you?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) will follow me, he will find that it was equivalent to a lease.

Mr. COWAN. Not at all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) says, 'not at all,' but he is not going to settle this question. I may not be able to get him to agree with me; but he cannot judge my position until I am through. But I may say for his information, that he may judge whether I am right or wrong, when I say that the option was so much a lease that he could negotiate, and did negotiate for cash, for the transfer. It was exclusive—not merely he did a certain thing in a certain time, but he had the exclusive right to the lease. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan), as he belongs to the same profession as I do, knows that there is great distinction technically, but he knows that this was tantamount to a lease, and in the case of Anderson, it was called a lease.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. COWAN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), to blame Mr. Ryley for not calling an option a lease?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan), will understand me when I get through. Mr. Philp also telegraphed to Mr. Ryley or sent telegrams, which were under Mr. Ryley's notice. If you look at pages 24, 25 and 71, of the printed return, you will find that Mr. Philp telegraphed in regard to these options as leases. He treated them as leases. That was the understanding between Mr. Philp and the department. They knew, when he asked for extension of time for the payment of his leases, that he referred to these options, and I have been pointing out that they were as good as leases, they were better, because they cost him nothing. He had the exclusive right to the lease, and did not put up one brass farthing. He wires to Mr. Ryley or to the department, about leases, though he had nothing but this exclusive option. And he gets the extension he asks. Some of them ran out in February, and some later on. I have a schedule of them here. He gets all the extensions he wishes, and if he runs over it does not matter. He wires to the department from Brandon not to cancel his leases and he will remit the money next day. But he did not do it. He went to Chicago and he wires from there, that he is remitting $4,000 for the leases. You will find a letter from Mr. Parrish dated November 12, 1898, in which he speaks of these options as leases, and the department and Mr. Ryley understood perfectly what they were driving at. In the same way with regard to the permits. When I referred to a permit, the Minister of the Interior professed, backed by this statement of Mr. Ryley, that there was no permit. He spoke of it as a letter. But we find that it was a permit, as shown by the telegram of Mr. Philp:

June 12, 1898.

Re permit issued to me 30th May, wire as follows: Permit issued May 13 to A. E. Philp, includes liquors. Despatch will oblige.

(Sgd.) A. E. PHILP.

There was no misunderstanding in regard to that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You are not finding fault with Mr. Ryley with reference to a liquor permit?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am dealing with far more than Mr. Ryley; I am endeavouring to make my position clear as to how important this interference of Mr. Ryley became. Mr. Sifton insisted that no permit had been issued to Mr. Philp, and technically he may have been right, but the thing was worked just the same.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What was Mr. Sifton's answer?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows it was that he declined to give any such instructions, that it included liquor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Showing that he did not recognize it to be a permit.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not in that sense at all, but the permit issued was undoubtedly a permission for Mr. Philp to take in such liquors to the Yukon as he wished.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The minister said that he did not understand that to include liquor.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Although the minister wired that he could not do anything of the kind, that he must make his application in the regular way, we find this gentleman writing a letter dated March, 1898:

My dear Sifton,—I hear reports have been circulated doubtless with the desire to injure me to the effect that I have been interested in the whiskey business in the Klondike or had taken or been interested in a shipment of liquor to the Klondike and I wish you to know that I am not in that business and never have been interested in it directly or indirectly. I never had a permit to take liquor to the Klondike or was interested in one in any way and never took any liquor there or was interested in any that was taken there.

I remain,

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) A. E. PHILP.

My point in making these general references to leases, permits, letters and options, is to show that nothing appeared in connection with the charge I was making turning on any technical permission. It was a question whether a man had some right that he could sell, and whether, in regard to that right that he gets by virtue of the position of the Minister of the Interior, he offered to sell it again to some one else with the statement that the Minister of the Interior and Major Walsh were interested with him in that thing, no matter whether it was a lease, a permit, or an option. Now, Mr. Ryley certainly understood, and could not have misunderstood, that that was the purport of that charge, and to give the minister a little temporary comfort, there was a memorandum put into the minister's hands that was so misleading that he concealed from the House that, though the lease had not actually issued, options had been granted, and that options were being dealt with as property by Mr. Philp, and that Mr. Philp had been let into that department long before the proper time, that he being here in Ottawa, as this return discloses, this former partner of Mr. Sifton being here in Ottawa in December, before those regulations were framed, was rooting about in that department, had access to the books, according to the statement of the acting Minister of the Interior across the floor of the House.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No more than anybody else.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We are not dealing with anybody else. Very few people got such favours as he got, as this return shows. Then when the regulations are framed the department is in a great hurry to inform him that up to a certain time he is to have the exclusive option. These regulations were not law, when this gentleman was selling rights under letters from the Minister of the Interior. The haste shown in the whole thing by Mr. Ryley for the minister acting under his authority, the haste in connection with that man Philp, was such that he was actually selling these rights under certain regulations that did not exist under the law, because while they were passed on the 18th of January they did not become law until some time in March. The law required that those regulations should be published so many consecutive weeks in the Royal Gazette before becoming law. So that Philp, instead of knowing anything about that country before going out there and taking his chances, rushed down here and was in Ottawa with his old partner, and with Mr. Ryley, while these regulations were being prepared; and so impatient was he to get to work to get all the favours, that he could not wait until the regulations became law, but went about trading on these options. Now, what was that return No. 83? I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding that memorandum, how it was he made the misleading statement in this House in the debate of last year. Whether it was I or whether it was the Minister of the Interior, misled possibly by Mr. Ryley, that is the only excuse I can show for him.

Mr. COWAN. What evidence have you that Mr. Ryley misled?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am now referring to return 83 that is prepared, no doubt, by Mr. Ryley, who is the gentleman that has to do with this subject. He prepared, too, I have no doubt, that timber limit statement the other night that the acting Minister of the Interior would not use himself but passed over to the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) to use in attempting to mislead a lot of hon gentlemen in this House. But at any rate, whoever prepared this return, this is the document which I followed. You will remember that the Minister of the Interior said that any one looking at the return would see that the leases all charged as having been granted were stated by return No. 83 as not having been granted. There is the return 83 in print, just as it was in print last session, and the Minister of the Interior, after reading Mr. Ryley's memorandum, who makes the same statement, says that that return shows on its face that the statements I made as to Mr. Philp's having these leases was wholly inaccurate. If you look at that return you will see, under the different headings, Mr. Philp's name, and above it the number of miles leased. 'None.' That was the word used time and again. Now let us look at that return. It was a return to an address of the House of Commons to His Excellency the Governor General and so forth, containing :

A list of all permits, licenses or leases granted, containing names of the grantees and extent of the territory given and conditions attached to each ; amount paid and to be paid therefor in respect of gold and placer mining or gold dredging areas in the North-west Territories and the Yukon district.

This is the description of the document : It was to show leases, permits and licenses granted. Then it says :

The leases for dredging portions of rivers in the Yukon district were issued under the authority of an order in council dated January 18, 1898, and the leases for portions of rivers in the North-west Territories under authority of an order in council dated July 29, 1897, and under this order as granted. Copies of said orders are annexed, also forms of leases.

This is on the front sheet. There was a statement that the return showed that where no miles are stated in the claim, no leases have been granted. There is no statement in any claim as read by the Minister of the Interior, in this language :

A. E. Philp, number of miles leased, none.
Lindsay, number of miles leased, none.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). As a matter for information, I want to know does the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) pretend to state to this House, that although, that return showed there was no lease granted for the area mentioned in the return, at that time there was an option for that identical piece.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, in every case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are shown on the return, are they not ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, they are not ; that is my point. They were concealed from the House. The right hon. Prime Minister was out a moment ago. I say that neither the Prime Minister, nor the hon. Postmaster General would have undertaken to have backed up the hon. Minister of the Interior in the language he used to me, that he would choke my statements down my throat, if they had known in connection with the Philp charges that though there was no lease granted there was an exclusive option, and that he was selling it for cash. Whether they would have done it or not is one thing, but I do not think any impartial man would have deduced or that it would have been deduced that very reckless statements had been made by me. I was coming to the other part of the case. I was dealing with the return made by Mr. Ryley. If you take the return you find there the different names and opposite you find the number of miles leased, blank. And if you turn up Hansard you will see that instead of a blank the word 'none' is used, as though it were printed. That is the way in which the return was entered. It begins by purporting to be a list of the leases granted, it gives the blank form of the lease, and it purports to show the leases granted. And there the hon. Minister of the Interior attempted to make the House believe that there was the statement 'none' in the column for the number of miles leased, but you will find 30, 25, 15, 5, 2½ and 1. They come down numerically as low as to one in different leases. Opposite these various names that I referred to, Philp, Cameron, Burnett, Lindsay and Parrish you will find, for instance, A. E. Philp, B. Salmon, that is Big Salmon, then blank under the number of miles leased. The hon. minister said that the return showed that no miles had been granted, but when under one mile, where there was a blank. I suppose, that would be less than one mile, which would be a very valuable lease. But setting that aside, and endeavouring to point out, as the minister did, that the returns did not support the statements which I had made. I accepted the statement in good faith that there had been an inaccuracy in that regard, and that the return had been prepared to show that by these blank spaces no leases had been granted to Mr. Philp, but, I knew of letters, and I knew of correspondence that showed that this man had something to sell in regard to these dredging properties, and I then came to the conclusion that the one I had accidentally omitted in my formal resolution, the case of Philp on the Klondike River, and the number of miles that he got in his lease is shown, was the lease which had justified me and not these others, and I shall read a letter later on containing a statement relating to it. This is return No. 83 that I have referred to, and I have referred to the regulations that became law on March 5, 1898. There is not a single syllable in these regulations that authorizes this practice that the department has resorted to in the case of Philp. There is not a line there to authorize Mr. Ryley to give Mr. Philp, in his own name, or in the name of his wife, or in the name of his partners, or in any of these various names, an option for a single foot of territory, and yet, the return which is now laid on the Table shows that this man went there, and to the exclusion of other people secured these options, and that he made money out of them by dealing with them as his property. The regulations under the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 54, paragraph 99, became law on March 5, 1898. Bear these dates in mind, because this gentleman got these options under regulations that did not become law until March 5, 1898. I asked the hon. acting Minister of the Interior across the floor of the House as to when these applications had begun, and he replied that they were in existence on the 22nd of January, 1898. That is the time that Philp's applications came in by the score. That is the time he got options by the score, and to show what delicate ground it was, when I asked for the papers in connection with the first option that was given, some other name was mentioned and some other lease was brought down, but the return shows the number of applications that Mr. Philp made. Now, Mr. Ryley comes down with this memorandum that this practice prevailed in 1883 in regard to timber. I have no doubt whatever that he made that other statement I have referred to on the authority of Mr. Ryley. He was the officer that the matter would be referred to, and that stood good for two or three weeks. For some reason there is a reference to 1883, and the practice regarding timber limits that is unexplained. I have the regulations touching the applications for dredging leases, and I know that a man has to have a free miners' license, to pay down hard cash, and that no man has the right, Philp, or any one else, to go to the Department of the Interior, or to Mr. Ryley, and get an exclusive option. He got this without qualifying as a free miner and following out his reckless course in every respect, ignoring the regulations absolutely, he put his hand down, or whatever he did put down, and he covered area after area, in his own names and in other names until he went around to see what they were worth, and then he got some one to put money up and the lease was obtained without difficulty. Then, we have Mr. Ryley's memorandum that the hon. minister used, to which I have been referring, and which comes in at this stage so as to make what I have said more easily understood. This is Mr. Ryley's memorandum and we will see what the hon. Minister of the Interior made of it:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, in the course of his speech, stated that the Hon. Clifford Sifton had been guilty of favouritism and partiality in the administration of the laws and regulations applicable to the district of the Yukon in the North-west Territories.

With reference to this assertion, I may say that favouritism and partiality in connection with the leasing for dredging purposes of portions of rivers and creeks in the Yukon territory could not have been shown without my knowledge, as all applications passed through my hands and were dealt with personally by me.

So soon as regulations for the disposal of leases to dredge for minerals in the beds of the rivers were promulgated, I personally asked the Minister of the Interior whether he desired that each application should be submitted him for his instructions. In reply, he instructed me that all the applications should be dealt with strictly in accordance with the provisions of the regulations in that behalf.

That direction was clearly a farce. He did not deal with due respect to the regulations, or pretend to do it.

And according to the priority of date of filing in the department, and that none of the applications need be submitted to him, these instructions were fully carried out, and the first applicant, irrespective of who he was, obtained a lease of the stretch of river applied for, provided he paid the rental within a given period.

Why the correspondence that was in the hands of Mr. Ryley and which was brought down this session, shows that Mr. Sifton was concerned, and was appealed to in connection with the granting of these various applications. The memorandum then after referring to this statement 83, that I have mentioned, goes on to say:

A. E. Philp, said to be of Brandon, for a lease of Bonanza Creek—

That is quoting from my charge, and Mr. Ryley said:

Mr. Philp applied for a lease of a portion of this creek, but it was not granted, as will be seen by referring to page 4 of the said return.

That is untrue. It does not appear that it was not granted by that return, and in the second place there was concealed from the House, that though the lease had not been granted, there had been granted that which was tantamount to a lease, and what was commercially valuable.

Second, A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease of South Fork of Stewart River. Mr. Philp was in Ottawa at the time of the application. No lease was issued in favour of Mr. Philp, as will be seen by referring to page 10 of the said return.

You turn to page 10, and nothing of the kind appears. There is a blank simply as to the number of miles leased, but it is a form endorsed by the department, as a return purporting to show these leases that have been granted with the blank form at the end of them. Whether that be a fair criticism or not, there is concealed what these papers show us this session, namely: That Mr. Philp obtained what was at the time far more valuable than a lease. He paid nothing for it on earth, but he was hawking it about trying to sell it and some of it he did sell.

Third, A. E. Philp, said to be of London, for lease of Big Salmon. No lease was issued in favour of Mr. G. Philp, as will be seen by referring to page 16 of the said return.

I have the same criticism to make about that, and so about Lindsay and Mitchell and these others. He says that Mr. W. L. Parrish received a lease of ten miles of the Hootalinqua, and that is amply sufficient as the basis of my charge, if all the rest should disappear. Now, what use was made of this memorandum, and the consultation and reference to Mr. Ryley, by the Minister of the Interior? In that same speech the Minister of the Interior says:

The hon. gentleman says that I was guilty of favouritism and partiality in the administration of my department, and he cites as a reason that certain gentlemen, who were formerly partners of mine, have procured dredging leases, as shown by this return. The regulations, which are published regarding the mining affairs of Canada, give to every citizen of Canada the same right, and I have no power on earth, justly or properly, in administering my department, nor have the officers in that department any right or power, to refuse Mr. Philp, or Mr. Cameron, or anybody else, his just rights under these regulations.

Again I call the attention of the committee to the very important fact, that contrary to the law, men not complying with the regulations—not being free miners, and not putting down one red cent—were being granted these favours in this department by Mr. Ryley, who did not state honestly and candidly to the House what occurred, as he should have done. Again the Minister of the Interior says:

It would be rather a peculiar doctrine that because a man had been my partner he would not be entitled to the same rights as any other citizen in connection with the affairs of the government of Canada.

Everything here goes to show that no concessions had been given to Mr. Philp, that no favouritism of any kind had been shown. None of these statements could have been made, had the return been before parliament, that we have here now. The Minister of the Interior proceeded to say:

Would you believe it that the hon. gentleman cannot read a return when it is brought down to the House of Commons. What does the return show? The return shows that Mr. Philp and all these gentlemen who are named, never got any leases of any kind whatever.

There is the broad statement, and it had its effect, coming from the head of the department, who ought to know. But that is absolutely incorrect. That return shows on its face in the first place, that one of the leases was granted to Mr. Parrish, and that it was applied for by Mr. Philp. The return shows another one to Mr. Philp direct, on the Klondike River. That I did not by some accident put in the list I set out, but when he makes the statement that Mr. Philp got no lease whatever, as between man and man in the rules of fair-play, that covers a contradiction in the case of these options that I have been referring to, which were merchantable or saleable concessions. But the minister uses stronger language. I am not charging him with bad faith; he is absent. But on this wholly inaccurate statement which he has made, I am asking that this officer shall not be rewarded for having misled the House. That is a much more serious offence than that this officer allowed himself to be used to enable his minister to choke statements down my throat, to use the language of the minister. Pretending to quote, and I suppose he is quoting correctly from a memorandum, he says:

Here we have the name of applicant A. E. Philp; address, Brandon; river or creek, Bonanza; number of miles leased, none.

All this appears in the minister's speech, as he said it. You look at the return and you do not find that. You find:

Number of miles leased , and after the word leased you find a blank.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You do not find there were any miles leased?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, and if the minister said, 'number of miles leased, "blank," it would be following out the return, but I can remember with what force and emphasis he called out 'number of miles leased, none,' emphasizing the word 'none,' and I must say that supposing we were being candidly dealt with, it came to my mind that the information which I had, and which I had no doubt whatever was genuine, was based, not on these applications, but simply on that Klondike River matter, because it was not included in my recitals, but it was in No. 83. The minister further says:

It has been my invariable rule since I took charge of that department to exercise no discretion whatever in connection with mining applications of an individual character. . . .

If it is a matter for which there is no regulation, then it is brought before me in order that I may consider, &c.

The minister's point is to bring everything down to Mr. Ryley. I am not going, in the absence of the minister, to criticise the spirit that will induce a man to do that, or to say whether or not he was abusing his position, but all of these references are for the purpose of showing that this man Ryley was really the minister in regard to these leases. Then the minister bolsters himself up by the memorandum, which had great force, because it concealed most material facts. He said:

I said to Mr. Ryley: 'Now, I do not want to know of a single man making application for a lease. I want you to take these papers and deal with them according to the regulations, each on its merits and according to their priority, as each man is entitled to them under the regulations.'

I have shown that a very extraordinary thing occurred, that he violated the regulations at the start, for he had no more authority to grant these options than the office boy. The Minister of the Interior further referred to this:

I took the statements which the hon. gentleman made, sent them to Mr. Ryley, and asked him what he had to say in regard to them.

Now, Mr. Ryley attempts to contradict his minister. If hon. gentlemen followed the statement of Mr. Ryley read by the acting minister to-night, they will see that according to him the minister did not say anything of the kind. I am bound, however, to take the ministers explanation, and I say that if that officer had regarded his position in the proper spirit, and not considered himself the mere tool of the minister, desiring to be upheld by him and promoted by him, and given this year an increase of $400 in his salary, he would have prepared a return as fair to me as to the minister. He knew the minister was coming to parliament to answer my statement, and he prepared for the minister this absolutely misleading and unfair, if not dishonest, statement, which merits the severest censure. Here is what the minister says :

I want to know whether any one under him has been guilty of favouritism, and I demanded that he shall make a report to me for presentation to parliament in connection with that matter; and this is his report.

That was the main defence the minister used to contradict me, and he afterwards boasted that he had choked down my throat several of my statements by virtue of that document. The Prime Minister used strong language to back up this garbled statement. In the debate that followed, this is what he said, and I venture to say that he will not repeat it after I have given him some of the explanations in Mr. Ryley's possession that were brought down this session :

It was not worthy of him——

That refers to me.

—to make charges against my hon. friend in a solemn document, which even at this moment, before an investigation is granted, are proved to be baseless and false.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman ought to say that just before that he himself had risen in the House and acknowledged that he had made a mistake.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has not listened to me. I said that the Postmaster General was the only man on the Treasury benches who, though he criticised me in the severest terms, having before him Mr. Ryley's memorandum, gave me the right to speak or open my lips. I was bombarded after I had spoken, and it was just before the vote that the hon. Postmaster General gave me the opportunity to say a word. Here is what the Postmaster General said on that occasion :

I will give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to answer it. Does he now say, in view of the light that has been thrown on the matter since this discussion began, does he now adhere to the statement contained in this resolution?

Then, I made my explanation which I have stated substantially this evening, and the postmaster General said :

We have it now from the hon. gentleman that he must fail to prove that important charge contained in the resolution.

Then, I say : 'I can prove the substance of that charge.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Did not the hon. gentleman then and there admit from his place in the House, that he had been mistaken, after reading the return, and that he found it did not bear out the statement he had made ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, I said substantially, when the memorandum of Mr. Ryley was read, that I must have been misled ; but I said I could prove that he did get a lease, even though I did not know of those options, and that is the substance of my charge. There is nothing in the ten or fifteen or twenty leases. The charge is that having got a lease from this government through the Minister of the Interior's department, he invited others to come into the venture, representing to them that the Minister of the Interior and Major Walsh were interested with him, but that their names could not appear for obvious reasons. I held that the substance of my charge was supported, but I admitted frankly that No. 83 showed no miles opposite to these names. We had that important point made by the Minister of the Interior, though it did not shake my real point, one lease being sufficient to prove my charge. I had not any doubt in my mind then, and have not now, that Mr. Philp wrote the truth ; but I do not know him sufficiently to stake on his standing a charge that Mr. Sifton was interested with him. That is a charge resting on the veracity of Mr. Philp, so far as I am concerned. But my point was that if I could prove that this man wrote that letter, and was granted favours by the Department of the Interior, it was a matter that the government and the Minister of the Interior ought to have investigated. But instead of that, after this matter got into court, and a statement of defence was filed, and the record referring to political irregularities and misconduct, a settlement is reached, the pleadings are withdrawn, and, as I am informed, through the intervention of two ministers of the Crown, colleagues of Mr. Sifton. But I think there is more to show that there was a reason for this extraordinary defence that was put forward by this gentleman. Now, this return would show how much discretion Mr. Ryley exercised. I do not wish to give my interpretation of that statement ; but here you have a document which goes to show that the Minister of the Interior, who is paid to discharge those duties, turned them over to this gentleman, except where some matter came up for reference. You have that statement made for the purpose of shielding the minister. In my own case, I went, as a professional man, to this very officer in 1898, and I applied on behalf of a client for a timber limit. I put the money up, after finding from Mr. Ryley what the fees were, and made application for a limit. To my amazement I could not get a definite answer. Although he had all the discretionary powers, he could not tell me whether my client could get that timber limit or not. He told me there were others ahead. There was a system of options, under which one man would have an exclusive right for a number of weeks and another man would come after him, and that officer said he was not at liberty to give me the names of those men. My intention was that if these men stood in the way, my client would have to buy them up, as he wanted a limit at once, although they had not paid a dollar and had never been in the country. But although these men stood in the way, I could not obtain their names from that officer who, it is pretended, was clothed with all these discretionary powers. He said that he was only a subordinate and had to obey instructions, and of course there was no use discussing the matter with him. I then went to the Minister of the Interior and said I had put in an application and paid in the money, but could neither get the limits nor be told who were the men in ahead of me; and he off-hand wrote a letter, which I think, I did not deliver, but kept in my possession, directing Mr. Ryley to give me the information I desired. If my memory serves me right, when I put in that application, the rights of these prior parties had expired—these rights for which they never had paid. Ultimately I got the lease. The main object of my referring to that is this, that I could not find out from the public officer in the minister's department who these men were, without getting written authority from the minister, although we are told that this public officer was clothed with every discretionary power.

The other day, this same officer was asked by Sir Charles Tupper's secretary for certain information in regard to some claims that I wanted to get. He went to Mr. Ryley and asked him for a copy of an advertisement published in the Gazette long ago, so as to save him the trouble of going to the library and hunting that advertisement on the file. Will it be believed that this man, to whom was handed the administration of that branch of the department, and who was clothed with full discretionary powers, except in the case of something peculiarly exceptional, wrote this letter in reply to the application made to him:

Ottawa, May 31, 1900.

Dear Sir,—I received your letter of the 29th inst., asking me to send Sir Charles Tupper a copy of the advertisement issued by this department giving the conditions under which a license may be issued for exclusive right to dredge for gold in a part of the bed of the Stewart River. Will you kindly request Sir Charles to ask Mr. Sutherland, the acting Minister of the Interior, to give me instructions to furnish the information asked for.

Yours truly,

G. U. RYLEY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

There is a thing which any person has a right to get, and yet when the secretary of the leader of the opposition wrote a polite note to this officer, he was told that so absolutely subordinate was this official that he required instructions from the head of the department before he could supply the information needed. I do not think that the committee will consider that that supports Mr. Ryley in the statement which he made, for the benefit of the minister in debate, and on which the minister founded the statement he made.

But I have another reference which gives more information on this matter of discretion. In the answers given in all the cases—for instance, the case of the option given Mr. Philp and all these cases of transfers and so on—you will find that under the regulations the minister had to be directly appealed to, so that it was impossible for an officer to act on his own motion.

1. Referring to applications for dredging leases made by A. E. Philp for himself and others, and mentioned in the return now on the Table of this House, was Mr. Philp, in December, 1897, January, 1898, or at any time, permitted to examine the public records, books, &c., or any of them, in the Department of the Interior, to obtain descriptions for applications, information as to prior or other applicants for dredging leases?

2. Did Mr. Philp examine the books or records, as above, in connection with these applications or otherwise?

3. If yes, in reply to above 1 and 2, by whose authority did he do it?

4. Was this information open to the public as a matter of course?

5. Do the same rules in this connection prevail as obtain in respect to applications for timber leases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. The public, including Mr. Philp, were informed, upon making application, of the portions of the rivers applied for and granted. The names of the lessees were furnished, but not the names of the applicants. 2. Yes. 3. The chief clerk of the timber and mines branch. 4. Yes. 5. Yes.

Then, later on, I asked the further question on this subject:

Referring to question and answer, May 10, 1900 (page 5175 'Hansard'); Bonanza Creek lease, Mr. A. E. Philp:

1. When was the commissioner asked for a report?

2. How long will Mr. Philp be allowed in which to comply with the provisions of the regulations referred to?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. The commissioner was not asked by the department for a report. The applicant is required to furnish the report. 2. Mr. Philp was given six months from February 1, 1889, to file in the Department of the Interior a report from the commissioner. The department was advised in August, 1889, that letters to Dawson to obtain a report from the commissioner had gone astray; and a further extension of three months was given. Mr. Philp was advised by two letters on May 12 and 14, 1900, that the report from the commissioner had not been received. No application has been received for further extension, and the matter has not been considered.

From the statement made by a minister of the Crown using that memorandum, we stand in this position, that Mr. Philp had not obtained a lease of any kind whatever up to this session. But what do we find when this session opens? Let us look at the departmental record first. Let us look at the departmental report first. On page 46 we find that leases 28, 29, 30 and 31, are granted to A. E. Philp, Klondike River, five miles in each case. On page 47, P. C. Mitchell, whose name Philp used, gets leases 60, 61, 62 and 63—four leases on the Stewart River, five miles each. On page 49, Frank Burnett gets two leases of five miles each on the Indian River, and on page 50, W. L. Parrish gets two leases 269 and 270, five miles each on the Hootalinqua River. Now, let us take a look at the exploiting by Mr. Philp. The gentleman who we are told did not get a lease of any kind whatever. I have here a schedule made up from the return. I have not checked it over with any one, but I have taken pains to make it correct, and, though I do not know that it is absolutely free from error, I believe that it will be found quite correct, and I feel sure that it is substantially so:

namely, to the 31st March, 1898. Now, touching the statement I made, this correspondence shows that the leases under the names of Lindsay, Mitchell & Philp, all of which run out on February 15th, as stated, Philp wires on the 15th to the department not to cancel leases—and it is quite evident that Mr. Ryley knew what was meant by 'leases.' Mr. Philp wires on the 16th of February, after the time is run out, that he is leaving for Ottawa with the cash. On February 28, he is not in Ottawa, as can be shown, and he is in Chicago, and he wires that cash will be sent for all leases. That cash seems to have been received, for Mr. Ryley signs this receipt:

Received from Mr. A. E. Philp, of Colborne, Ont., the sum of $4,000 in payment of one year's rent of four leases of five miles each on the Klondike River, $2,000 applied for by him and one year's rent of four leases on Stewart River, applied for by P. C. Mitchell, $2,000. See file 54,297.

All that information was before Mr. Ryley, but it was all kept from the memorandum supplied to the Minister, to enable the minister to make statements, none of which

As to the lease of F. Burnett, per A. E. Philp on Indian River, a curious thing in regard to that is that under date the 3rd of March he refers to an application he made for this on the 18th January, which he says has been lost, though there is no explanation of where it was lost. Now, Mr. Chairman, you have, no doubt, followed with a great deal of interest this schedule. You will notice the options that Mr. Philp gets, and the correspondence will show that in no case was an application of his for extension refused. But Mr. Claxton of Montreal, who, I believe, is a Conservative, asked for an option. And the correspondence shows that his application was made on the 12th March, 1898, and the option was granted to 28th March; and when he asked for an extension he could only obtain three days, he would have made if there had been a memorandum containing the information which was then in the hands of Mr. Ryley. Now, in regard to the Parrish lease, I think the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) will know something of it. Parrish and Lindsay is the name of a firm in Brandon which accounts for the connection of these two names with that of Mr. Philp. The others, no doubt, are his relatives, except possibly Mitchell, whom I do not know, and Burnett, of whom we shall hear later on. The power of attorney from Parrish to Philp is dated 4th February, 1898. On March 1, he sends $1,000 from Chicago. There are two leases to Parrish and assignment to Ramsdal on March 24. On March 31, 1898, application for option for ten miles, to April 12, with a five days' extension on April 13. New lease will be granted on April 9, for Ildo Ramsdal. A further change was asked on May 12, and on May 14, granted. The Adsit trouble and the Forbes trouble arose in this connection. I asked the government some questions in connection with these leases. These came before the courts and almost came before the public. Now, there was a suit of Forbes and Philp, and in which Philp was sued for a large amount of money in this connection. I have statements taken from the files of the court both for the prosecution and the defence, and I am informed this was at the intervention of two ministers of the Crown, not the Minister of the Interior, which is very significant, if true.

These leases are sent to Adsit, of Chicago, July 21, and by Adsit to Parrish, on August 1. That schedule is interesting to any one who wishes to study the return. We have the return printed for the use of the House, and I want to run over a few of these. The papers are mixed up in such a manner that it is almost impossible to get a consecutive story out of them, there is no chronological order attempted. On page 23 there is some information on the points I was mentioning. Here is an application of A. E. Philp, to lease and dredge on the Klondike River. This is the stereotyped form of his application, and the option granted. I will read this one :

January 12, 1898.

To the Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I desire to apply for dredging licenses for that part of the Klondike River beginning at the upper boundary of application reference No. 49547; thence extending up stream a distance of twenty miles.

Yours truly,

A. E. PHILP,
Brandon, Man.

There were no regulations then, as is explained before. When the regulations were first adopted, they did not become law until March. I wish to call attention, as we go on with two or three letters that follow, to the important fact, that under these regulations this gentleman was not entitled to have his name recorded at all, much less to obtain exclusive options.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, Jan. 15, 1898.

A. E. Philp, Esq., Colborne, Ont.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 12th inst. applying for a lease for dredging purposes. . . . In reply I am to say that regulations are now being framed for the issue of leases, for dredging purposes, of rivers in the Yukon district, and that so soon as they are printed a copy thereof will be sent to you, and you will then be given a certain period within which to pay rental on the tract applied for.

This is the form of the letter. I think the Minister of the Interior stated that every one got this. Well, I do not think that statement is correct. We will see how some were treated :

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Ottawa, Jan. 22, 1898.

A. E. Philp, Esq., Colborne, Ont.

Sir,—Referring to your application for permission to dredge for minerals in a portion of the submerged bed of the Klondike, I am now directed to inclose herewith a copy of dredging resolutions for the provisional district of Yukon, from which you will see that it will be necessary for you, before a lease can be issued, to obtain a free miner's certificate, and to pay the rental for one year at the rate of $100 per mile, for the stretch of river applied for, which, however, must not exceed thirty miles.

If you turn to the regulations you will see that they do not recognize any application at all. Not only is Mr. Philp's application recognized, but he is given this letter :

A lease in your favour for a term of twenty years from the date thereof, to dredge in the portion of the stream applied for, will be issued upon receipt here on or before the 15th day of February next of the fee for a free miner's certificate, amounting to $10 in the case of an individual, and $50 or $100 in the case of a joint stock company, and the rental for the first year at the rate of $100 per mile.

If the amount of the fee and rental is not received here within the prescribed period, your application will be cancelled without further notice, and the stretch of river applied for by you will be leased to any person who may make application therefor and comply with the provisions of the regulations.

Now, I make the statement without fear of contradiction from any one, and corroborated by the acting Minister of the Interior, that that is intended to be, and was treated as, an exclusive option for the territory acquired, that was dealt with and recognized by the department in that way, and that those documents were used by Mr. Philp in that way. Now we find how he treated this. There is his option on February 16, 1898; he sends a telegram :

Am leaving for Ottawa with money for leases.
A. E. PHILP.

He had not a lease, what he had were exclusive options, and he calls them leases, the real fact being that the actual formal lease came when he got the money from different quarters and put it up. In case he did not get the money, his options expired until the date of the last extension, and he got those extensions whenever he asked for them.

On February 15, 1898, he wires from Brandon :

See that my application dredging not cancelled; am remitting.

From Chicago, the Bank of Montreal wires one thousand dollars, on February 28. On March 1, 1898, there is a receipt from Mr. Philp for the sum of $4,000, in payment of one year's rent for four leases of five miles each on the Klondike River, $2,000, applied for by him, and one year's rent for four leases on Stewart River, applied for by P. C. Mitchell, $2,000. See file 54297.

P. C. Mitchell was the name used by A. E. Philp, who used a great many of those names, without the slightest knowledge of the parties, as I can prove, whose names he was using. We find in connection with another return in which the Minister of the Interior took great pains to advise Mr. Belcourt, a member of this House in regard to another application, that he himself produced the same authority to the department. Mr. Philp had to produce no authority. Here is a letter to the department, of July 2, 1898, written from Brandon :

I am in receipt on behalf of A. E. Philp of two notices from your department, one stating that he has been awarded five miles each upon Little and Big Salmon rivers.

That is the way they talk of them—'He has been awarded.' This gentleman that had not a lease of any kind whatever, was awarded five miles each upon Little and Big Salmon rivers.

Another for thirty miles on the Teslin River for dredging purposes, with a rental of $100 per mile. The former is to be paid on July 7, and the latter fifteen days from June 24.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How many leases were actually granted ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Parrish would be four or five miles each, and his own on the Klondike would be four or five miles each, and one of the Burnett applications. I think those are all. Now, there is this application from Mr. Lindsay, of Brandon. He was using the names of both Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Parrish. He applies in this way :

Ottawa, January 12, 1898.

The Honourable
The Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I desire to apply for a dredging license for that part of the Stewart River lying between application reference No. 54117 and 53850 ; about twenty miles.

Yours truly,

A. E. PHILP,
W. J. LINDSAY,
Brandon, Man.

On March 23, 1898, there is a letter from Mr. Philp to Mr. Smart, of the Department of the Interior :

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, March 23, 1898.

James A Smart, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Prior to the eighteenth day of January last, I made an application on behalf of Frank Burnett, of Vancouver, for the right to dredge on the Indian River and Stewart Rivers, and such application appears to have been mislaid or lost in the department, and I now submit that the department give me any parts of these rivers now remaining unleased in place in the rights applied for previously.

Yours truly,
A. E. PHILP.

On March 24, the Department of the Interior wrote to Mr. Parrish as follows :

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, March 24, 1898.

Frank Burnett, Esq.,
Care of A. E. Philp, Esq.,
Barrister, &c., Brandon, Man.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd inst., and to say that your application has been recorded for the portion of the Indian River lying between leases 136 and 137, being ten miles. A lease for dredging purposes of this portion will be issued in your favour on receipt here within 10 days from this date of the annual rental at the rate of $100 per mile.

If a lease is issued in your favour it will be necessary for you to obtain a free miner's certificate, the fee for which is $10.

I am, sir
Your obedient servant,
LYNDWODE PEREIRA,
Asst. Secretary.

Then, we have the application of Mr. W. L. Parrish, in this form :

Colborne, Ont., January 13, 1898.

The Honourable
The Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I desire to apply for a dredging license for that part of the Teslin river (Hootalinqua) commencing at the upper boundary of application reference No. 54299 thence up stream a distance of thirty miles.

Yours truly,

WM. L. PARRISH, per his Attorney,
A. E. PHILP.

Then, in reference to Mr. Dunlop, he is told in the first place, in regard to his application of March 12 :

I am to add that before a lease can be issued in your favour it will be necessary for you to obtain a free miner's certificate, for which a fee of $10 is charged.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
LYNDWODE PEREIRA,
Asst. Secretary.

In the other case they simply told Mr. Philp to send the money and they would attend to all these things. Then, there is the telegram to Mr. Claxton :

Canadian Pacific Railway Company's Telegraph.
From Montreal, Que., March 28, 1898.

To Secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa,

Will you extend John Dunlop's option on Hootalinqua River ten days longer ? See file T. M. 56141. Answer.

JAMES CLAXTON.

And the answer comes back sharp and quick :

(Telegraph.)

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, March 29, 1898.

James Claxton,
Montreal, Que.

Time for payment John Dunlop's option extended until thirty-first this month. Cannot extend beyond that date.

JAS. A. SMART, per G. U. R.

Then, we have a reference to the case of Mr. Ramsdell, of Chicago, and a receipt for $1,000 on March 9 from Mr. Philp. There is a power of attorney dated February 4, 1898, from Mr. Parrish to Mr. Philp, and that is important in this connection that when Mr. Philp was here he had authority from not one of these persons. He started nearly every one of these applications in January. He was here in December, and he remained around Ontario. Later on, he got authority from some of these persons, and he got into some trouble with Burnett when he tried to get authority from him. Then, there is an assignment of the dredging lease by W. L. Parrish, by his attorney, A. E. Philp, to Ildo Ramsdell, of Chicago. The document is drawn up, sworn to and the proof of it is made before Mr. Rothwell in the Department of the Interior. In this return there is a letter dated April 9, 1898, in which Mr. Philp, acting in the department for Ildo Ramsdell, points out that a mistake has been made and asks to have it corrected, and they meet the views of these parties. There are some further letters in regard to representations made by Mr. Philp which did not prove correct. As to how these other people are dealt with, here is a letter from Mr. Adsit in connection with the Parrish lease applied for by Mr. Philp. The letter is dated May 14, 1898 :

James A. Smart, Esq.,
Deputy Minister Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—In February last we purchased of Mr. A. E. Philp, of Brandon, Man., two five-mile dredging leases.

There were no leases in the sense in which the expression is used by Mr. Ryley in existence, but they purchased these options, and the correspondence will show that these leases were granted and that they were used for the purpose they were intended to serve. Then, there is a letter from Mr. Forbes in the return, which I am going to read :

British American Prospecting and Developing Co.
Head Office, Toronto, Canada.

Chicago, May 19, 1898.

Mr. Ryley,
Department of Interior,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—No doubt you will remember that Mr. A. E. Philp and I called on you in reference to location of dredging claim on the Teslin River, which we sold to Mr. Ildo Ramsdell, of Chicago. He claimed that the lease he received was not what his company bought. The trouble was, as you explained, due to one of the junior clerks measuring the Lewis River as the Teslin ; thereby bringing the location on the map in a very much different position to what was expected. Mr. Philp wrote to the department and Mr. Adsit, of the Argonaut Company, received a reply stating that they could get ten miles sixty miles from the mouth of the Teslin River instead of what they have, which will be satisfactory. I am inclosing the map Mr. Philp left us stating that his application, reference No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

54400, commenced ten miles above application reference No. 54299, which is marked on the map. Trusting that this explanation will be satisfactory.

I remain, yours truly,
J. W. FORBES.

Then, there is a reference to him again :

Chicago, May 19, 1898.

To the Secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Replying to yours of the 17th inst-ant, (file T. and M.), I herewith inclose the leases in question and also a letter from Dr. J. M. Forbes, in reference to the plan referred to in your letter of above date. Dr. Forbes visited your department with Mr. Philp when Mr. Philp was last in Ottawa. Trusting this will be satisfactory.

I am, very truly, yours,
B. B. ADSIT.

Your proposition will be satisfactory. Send new leases to me.

And the new leases are sent to him accordingly. The power of attorney in the case of the Anderson lease was regarded as a matter of some importance, but the importance is entirely overlooked in connection with all of these leases of Philp's. That will be seen from an examination of one of the cases in the return touching the Anderson lease. We find that on January 15, at Ottawa, in the Timber and Lands Branch, at Ottawa, $500 is receipted in this way :

Department of the Interior,
Timber and Lands Branch,
Ottawa, Jan 15, 1898.

Amount, $500, cheque.

Received from Messrs. Belcourt & Ritchie, of Ottawa, Ont., the sum of five hundred dollars being payment made on behalf of Robert Anderson, Esq., for rent to dredge for hydraulic purposes in the Yukon district.

G. U. RYLEY,
Clerk in charge of Timber, Mineral and Grazing Lands Branch.
Per (Sgd.) F. L.

Mr. Belcourt writes to the department :

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 17, 1898.

Dear Mr. Smart,

I am sorry to trouble you so often about this Anderson business, but Mr. A. wants to sail for England to-morrow, and he must be away this p.m. at 3.

Could you very much oblige me by giving bearer the two copies of order in council which I had hoped to get by this morning's mail.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) N. A. BELCOURT.

He simply asks for two orders in council. It is interesting to compare the treatment accorded to Mr. Belcourt, a member of this House, with the run that Mr. Philp was given of all these departments in the name of these various people whose power of attorney he did not pretend to have when making the application, and on the 17th January, if you please, Mr. Belcourt receives the following :

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, January 17, 1898.

Dear Mr. Belcourt,—In reply to your note of this morning, I beg to say that I have now the papers in the Anderson case ready, but I saw the minister on Saturday about the matter, and he informed me that what would be necessary under the circumstances would either be a letter from Mr. Anderson himself authorizing you to receive the copies, or an official communication from you to the effect that you are acting as his solicitor. Upon receipt of either of these, the papers can immediately be handed over.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) JAS. A. SMART,
Deputy Minister.

N. A. Belcourt, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

It is a very significant thing to compare the treatment accorded Mr. Anderson and the treatment accorded this gentleman, Mr. Philp. In connection with the Burnett matter we find in this return the application of Frank Burnett, per A. E. Philp, in the same language as the others, dated Ottawa, and signed A. E. Philp for Frank Burnett, Vancouver, B.C. Then there comes on the 22nd a letter to Frank Burnett, in care of A. E. Philp, Colborne, a letter which the correspondence shows never reached Burnett, but was an option in the name of Burnett which Philp got without Burnett's knowledge for his own purpose. There are frequent letters here addressed to Frank Burnett, per his attorney, A. E. Philp. Then on May 30, there is a letter from Senator Kirchhoffer to Hon. Clifford Sifton, and the following correspondence takes place:

The Senate, Canada,
Ottawa, May 30, 1898.

Hon. C. Sifton, Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Mr. H. H. Beck, of Winnipeg, has requested me to ascertain the present position of a dredging license, referred to in the Department of the Interior as Ref. No. 54299, an interest in which he has purchased from Frank Burnett, who stated that he was the licensee. Mr. Beck says he understood that the time for the license had matured, but that it had been extended and could be further renewed. He says that he now has an opportunity of disposing of the property to an English company, if the title is correct, and he would like to know if the rent has been paid, as if not, he would like to do so.

An answer by return would oblige,
Yours truly,
J. N. KIRCHHOFFER.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, June 11, 1898.

Honourable J. N. Kirchhoffer,,
The Senate,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 20th ultimo, addressed to the minister, with relation of the application of Mr. Frank Burnett for a lease for dredging purposes of 20 miles on the Teslin River. In reply I am to say that on April 9 last, Mr. Burnett was given twelve days from that date to pay the rental at the rate of $100 per mile and to obtain a Free Miner's Certificate, the fee for which was $10, and on the 16th of the same month the time was extended to May 1, and that no payment having been made on that date, 10 miles of the portion of the river applied for by Mr. Burnett was leased to another applicant. An applicant has lately been given a certain period within which to pay the rental for the remainder of the portion of the river applied for by Mr. Burnett, and in the event of his not making the payment there are several other applicants who will then be given the opportunity to acquire the lease thereof.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
LYNDWODE PEREIRA,
Assistant Secretary.

Brandon, Man., June 14, 1898.

Hon. C. Sifton,
Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I would ask for a reply to my letter written to you in Ottawa, when I asked for information regarding the position of dredging license on the property referred to in the Department of the Interior at Ottawa in application as reference No. 54299. Mr. Beck, who holds an assignment from F. Burnett of one-third interest tells me that he is prepared to pay the rent, and can dispose of the property. Please let me hear what is the position of the affair, and what has to be done to complete title.

Yours,
J. N. KIRCHHOFFER.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, June 17, 1898.

Honourable J. N. Kirchhoffer,
Brandon, Man.

Sir,—Replying to your letter of the 14th instant, to the Minister of the Interior, I am directed to inclose herewith a copy of the departmental letter of the 14th of this month to you in relation to the application of Mr. Frank Burnett, of Vancouver, B.C.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
LYNDWODE PEREIRA,
Assistant Secretary.

Brandon, Man., July 5, 1898.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Dredging license 54299.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter on this subject, Mr. Beck wrote to Mr. Burnett and received a reply which he forwarded to me. It states, amongst other things:

'I never got a notice, good, bad or indifferent, in regard to the dredging license, nor do I believe one was ever sent as, if so, I would have received it.'

It seems strange that a period of three weeks and over should have elapsed between the date of my letter asking what the position of the matter was, and stating that Mr. Beck was prepared to pay the rental, and your reply, to the effect that a part of the property had been disposed of and the remainder was being negotiated for. I again now state that Mr. Beck is prepared to pay the rental for the original license, and as no notification was received by Mr. Burnett, his assignor, as to the property, it seems to me that his rights, and those of Mr. Beck, claiming under him, cannot be abrogated without some definite step being taken. I would ask you, therefore, to be kind enough to let me know what Mr. Beck has to do to carry out the agreement.

Yours,
J. N. KIRCHHOFFER.

He goes on to show that undoubtedly Mr. Philp was using his name, as the evidence proves, as well as the names of all those other parties for a long time without the knowledge or consent of any of them.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, July 12, 1898.

Hon. J. N. Kirchhoffer,
Brandon, Man.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 5th ultimo, addressed to the minister in relation to the application of Mr. Frank Burnett, of Vancouver, B.C., I am directed to say that all the correspondence in connection with the application was addressed to Mr. Burnett in care of Mr. A. E. Philp, who filed the application in this department.

With respect to your assertion that the letter from yourself to the minister was delayed in the department for three weeks without a reply being sent thereto, I am to point that your communication was dated May 30, and that an official reply thereto was sent to you on June 11, so that only eleven days expired, and not three weeks, as stated in your letter.

I am to add that the prior applicants for a portion of the Teslin River, covered by Mr. Burnett's application, did not pay the rental therefor, and that the department is now in a position to offer Mr. Burnett a lease of ten miles of the river, commencing at a point 70 miles from its mouth, thence up the river 10 miles. If Mr. Burnett desires a lease of this portion of the river it will be necessary for him to pay to this department the rental thereof within twenty days from this date, and also the sum of $10 for a Free Miner's Certificate.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
LYNDWODE PEREIRA,
Assistant Secretary.

Brandon, July 21, 1898.

To the Secretary,
Dept. of the Interior.

Dear Sir,—In reply to yours of the 12th inst., stating that 'only eleven days, not three weeks expired' before I received an answer, I would refer you to your letter of June 11, in which you say, 'I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 20th ulto,' and I am still of opinion that three weeks is too long a time to leave unanswered, a letter on such an important subject and then to inform me that in the interim the property had been disposed of.

You now offer Mr. Burnett, through me, a lease of ten miles of the river, but I cannot tell whether this is part of the original license property or not, nor is it possible for me to communicate with Mr. Burnett and get the matter investigated within the time named, twenty days.

Have you sent a notification of this to Mr. Burnett, through the usual channel Mr. A. E. Philp? If so, there would be considerable delay, as it would have to go via Dawson City, where, as you probably know, Mr. Philp now is. It would, however, very likely reach Mr. Burnett, as soon as any other communication sent him through the same channel, as Mr. B. informs me, he has not so far 'received one word, good, bad or indifferent' on the subject.

Awaiting your reply,

Yours,
J. N. KIRCHHOFFER.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, July 27, 1898.

Hon. J. N. Kirchhoffer,
Brandon, Man.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 21st instant I am directed to say that it is found upon referring to the departmental letter to you of June 11 last in relation to the application of Mr.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Burnett, that it is therein stated that your letter addressed to the minister was dated May 20. It should have read May 30, that being the date of your communication. As your letter was acknowledged on June 11, only eleven days elapsed between the date it was written and the reply thereto.

You stated that between the date of your letter and its acknowledgment the property applied for by Mr. Burnett had been disposed of. This is not in accordance with the facts, as owing to Mr. Burnett not having paid the rental within the period given to him for that purpose subsequent applicants had before the date of your letter been given the right to acquire a lease, and one of them had acquired a lease of ten miles.

As it appears from your communication that you desire an offer should be made direct to Mr. Burnett from this department, I am to inclose herewith a copy of the departmental letter of this date to him.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
LYNDWODE PEREIRA,
Assistant Secretary.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, July 27, 1898.

Frank Burnett, Esq.,
Vancouver, B.C.

Sir, I am directed to say that on April 9 last, a letter was addressed to you, care of A. E. Philp, barrister of Brandon, advising you that a lease of twenty miles of the Teslin River, commencing at a point sixty miles from its mouth, thence extending up the river twenty miles, would be issued in your favour upon receipt here within twelve days from that date of the annual rental at the rate of $100 per mile and the sum of $10 for a Free Miner's Certificate. The rental not having been paid within the period allowed, an extension of time until April 1 was given in compliance with a request made to that effect by Mr. Philp. The rental not having been paid, ten miles of the portion of the river applied for by you was leased to another applicant.

I am now to say that the remaining ten miles of the portion of the river applied for by you, commencing at a point seventy miles from its mouth, thence up the river ten miles, will be issued in your favour upon receipt here within twenty days from this date of the annual rental at the rate of $100 per mile and the sum of $10 for a Free Miner's Certificate.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
LYNDWODE PEREIRA,
Assistant Secretary.

That letter shows that the department having being told that Philp without authority from Burnett got hold of this property, and that property went away from Burnett to somebody else. This option expired before Mr. Burnett had an opportunity of closing. As the correspondence from Burnett indicates, this property had gone to some of Mr. Philp's or Mr. Sifton's friends, and then the department pursues this extraordinary course of offering Mr. Burnett something else. Why they should do anything of the kind or approach him in that way is only explained by the reason that they feared this gentleman's anger and indignation in connection with the matter in which Mr. Philp had been without authority using his name and obtaining options. There is a reference to the report to the Bonanza Creek lease, and this gentleman had got no lease of any kind whatever. This session I was informed in regard to the fact that the Bonanza Creek, I speak subject to correction—

Mr. McMULLEN. Give us a rest.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What did the hon. gentleman say? His interruptions do not amount to much.

Mr. McMULLEN. Neither do you?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose the Chairman is asleep or he would try to keep order.

Mr. McMULLEN. Almost everybody is asleep.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am only beginning, Mr. Chairman. There is in reference to Bonanza Creek something which shows that the indulgence given to Mr. Philp is that he holds the right to take a lease to do certain things and how long this indulgence is going to be granted is not exactly explained. The acting minister again this session has shown that the conditions of this lease has not been complied with. I stated that the pleadings in the case of Forbes and Philps would be interesting reading.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope you are not going to read it to us to-night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The government, I dare say, could tell me something about these pleadings, because I am sure the settlement of that suit under the auspices of two members of the government, Mr. Sifton not being one of them, ought to put the government in possession of those pleadings. So far that statement stands in this way. Mr. Forbes was mixed up with Mr. Philp, and in the press was this statement:

Special to the 'Free Press.'

Toronto, Ont., July 18.—A. E. Philp, of Brandon, the gentleman mentioned in Sir Hibbert Tupper's Yukon charges, is the defendant in an action brought by Dr. J. N. Forbes, of Caledonia, for the recovery of $4,000 advanced by Forbes to Philp, when the latter went to the Yukon. Dr. Forbes claims that the sum was advanced by way of loan to enable Philp to secure certain dredging lease. Philp says that the advance was not a loan, but a gift or consideration for services to be rendered, and that have been rendered. He also denies the jurisdiction of Ontario judges to try the case as he is a resident of Manitoba. Then there are some statements in regard to how the matter stands by appointments in chambers, and so on. I attempted to obtain the pleadings in that case. I thought that with the other information I had they would be instructive, and I found from a correspondent in Brantford where the papers were:

I have caused a search to be made for information in the suit of Forbes vs. Philps.

Strange to say the defence was taken from the files evidently by consent of parties.

Inclosed I hand you letter from Messrs. Wilson & Watts who looked up matter for me.

Here is the letter of Wilson & Watts:

As requested by you I searched the records of this action in the office of the local registrar. The action was brouhgt on by Forbes to recover $4,000 loaned to the defendant under the following circumstances, as set forth in the Statement of Claim:

On the 1st of March, 1898, the Defendant met Plaintiff at Chicago, and an agreement was entered into by which the Plaintiff was to immediately proceed to Hamilton and raise $4,000 and pay it over to the Deputy Minister of Interior, at Ottawa, the money to be repaid by the Defendant to the Plaintiff within a few days. The Plaintiff proceeded to Hamilton, obtained the money, and forwarded it as requested on the 2nd of March, 1898. The Plaintiff alleges the Defendant failed to repay the money as agreed. From this you will see that the claim as set forth in the Statement of Claim was simply a claim for money loaned. The Statement of Defence was filed, but was afterwards removed from the files on the consent of the solicitors for both parties and there is nothing on record showing what was contained in the Statement of Defence. I have interviewed Mr. Brewster, the solicitor for the Plaintiff, and he intimates that the Statement of Defence set forth the whole transaction, but he refuses to let me see a copy on the ground that it would be a breach of good faith on his part as a professional man to his client.

Now, some hon. gentlemen will know Mr. Frank Burnett better than I do. He was the organizer of the Liberal party in Manitoba for several years.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. No, no.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At any rate, he is a leading Liberal on the coast to-day. Mr. Frank Burnett is a gentleman whose character is unimpeachable, and I do not suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will attempt to impeach it in any way. He is referred to in the correspondence of the Department of the Interior as having been offered a lease. After they found that Mr. Philp had used his name, and after allowing others to come in and get leases, they offered him a lease of ten miles on Indian River.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How could Mr. Burnett prevent anybody putting in an application in his name?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He could not, but I think the hon. gentleman would be rather indignant if he found that others were applying for a permit in his name, and afterwards found it granted in another's name. He writes to Mr. Kirchhoffer as follows, referring to an interview prepared for Mr. Richardson, a member of this House:

I have no doubt the interview in question would prove a veritable bomb shell in his camp and would dismiss him completely, because you would scarcely credit some of the things said by me and which are absolutely gospel truth, but the trouble is this—1st. I have no proof except that I am prepared to swear to the truth of my statements. 2nd. At the time I gave the information I was willing that it should be published in a Liberal paper, but was not, and am not now, agreeable to furnish openly ammunition to the enemy. You will understand my position—I am a Liberal to the core, not known, however, of the S— stamp, and I think that it is the duty of the Liberal party in its own interests to purge the party of men like him; but hey should do it themselves, not ask the Tories to do it for them. Consequently under these circumstances I do not feel prepared to give you a copy of such interview—but if I am compelled, am quite willing to testify under oath all I know in the matter.

Now, I have this letter from Senator Kirchoffer, corroborated by Mr. H. H. Beck :

Brandon, March 1, 1900.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir Charles Hibbert,—In reply to your request, I beg to say that in the latter part of March, 1898, I was in Vancouver and in company of Mr. H. H. Beck, of Winnipeg, called upon Mr. Frank Burnett, formerly of Belmont, Manitoba, and one of the most active of the Grit-organizers in this province.

In the course of conversation he complained bitterly of the treatment he had received at the hands of Mr. Sifton and said :—

'I assure you that neither I nor any one else out here, no matter what their claims may be, can get any concession from his department unless Sifton himself has a share in it and his partner, Philp has the making out of the papers.'

'Now,' he continued, 'you know all I have done for him and the party and what I am entitled to at his hands, well, quite recently, after a good deal of trouble and considerable expense, I had discovered what I considered would be a valuable concession to me, and I wrote to Sifton applying for it. He replied that under the existing state of the law this could not be granted to me but he would see that at the next session of parliament an amendment should be made to the Act which would allow it. Imagine my astonishment when I subsequently discovered that a few days after the receipt of my letter he had granted the concession to another party, and I know that in doing so it was granted really to himself.'

Mr. Beck and I both sympathized with him, and he continued :

'Now there are these dredging licenses, they have put my name down for a number of them, though I never asked them to do so.

'There is one on the Teslinto River that Philp wrote me about last February and sent a power of attorney for me to sign for him to deal with it, saying he had sold the property and wanted to complete the deal, and he is in a great stew about it, for two days ago I received another power of attorney and a most peremptory letter to sign and return it,' 'which, of course, you have done.' I said, 'not a bit of it,' he replied, 'and I don't intend to either; they put my name down without consulting me and now I'm not going to help them out of the hole.'

On this Mr. Beck suggested that he and I would take it up for him, I assented and said we would give $50 ($25 each) if it was a genuine transaction and see if there was anything in it.

'Oh, but,' he explained, 'I can only give you an interest in one-fourth share, that's all they allow me for the use of my name; here is what Philp says about it,' and he handed me a letter from Mr. Philp to him, stating that although the allotment had been made to him, he was only to be entitled to one-fourth share, the other partners being Mr. Sifton, Major Walsh and himself (Philp) who 'for obvious reasons' did not wish their names to appear.

Burnett showed us the document allotting 30 miles on the Teslinto River to him and we each paid him $25 and agreed to take equal interest with him in his one-fourth share, and as I was leaving for the east next day, he promised to have the assignments ready in the morning. 'Now,' I said, 'I want those letters of Philp's, and I intend to use them politically;' he replied that he would not give me the originals, but he would have copies made for me, which I said would be satisfactory. When I called next morning on my way to the train I got my assignment of the concession, but Burnett said the copies of the letters had not been made yet, but he would send them to Ottawa after me. I said, 'Frank, I don't want you to deceive me in this matter, as I am only going into it from political motives, and I know they'll make a great effort to buy you off.'

He replied, 'They can't do it; I'm a hellandman and a hellandman never forgives and he never forgets; Sifton has turned me down once too often, and I'll stay with it till I get even with him.'

As this is the part of the transaction which was personally taken part in by Mr. Beck, I have asked him to confirm the above and will later on detail what occurred subsequently.

Yours faithfully,

J. N. KIRCHHOFFER.

I beg to say that I have read the foregoing and I corroborate all the statements therein contained.

H. H. BECK.

Dear Sir Charles,—In further communication of this subject I may say that after reaching Ottawa I waited some days in expectation of receiving the copies of the Philp letters which Burnett had promised to forward to me. When they did not arrive, I telegraphed Burnett, who replied that he had mailed me 'the originals' on a certain date. They have never since reached me, but as he had previously refused to send me the originals and only promised copies, I assumed, and have no reason to doubt, that he had been 'got at' in the meantime and that it was convenient for the originals to disappear, so that copies could not be obtained. Of course when I wrote him about their non-arrival, he sent me a copy of the letter he wrote when forwarding them, but no explanation as to why he had changed his mind as to sending the originals.

When I saw that I was not going to get the letters, I applied to the Department of the Interior for a statement as to how the lease of 30 miles of the Teslinto River, in which I had taken an interest, stood. I did not receive any reply until after I had written a second time, two weeks later, from Brandon, when the secretary replied that 20 miles of it had been cancelled, notice having been given to Mr. Burnett for him to make good the rental within twenty days, which he had disregarded. I forwarded this to Mr. Burnett who indignantly denied having ever received any such notice.

I forwarded his letter to the department, who then replied to us that the notice had been addressed to him, care of A. E. Philp, Brandon, and they sent me a copy and, as 20 miles had evidently been disposed of, they sent him a notice direct, as to the other 10 miles.

In the meantime Burnett had made a trip to Winnipeg. While there I learned he had given an interview to Richardson, M.P., of the 'Tribune,' in which the incidents of the dredging deal were given in detail, and a number of others, of which Burnett speaks later in a letter to me as follows:—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

'You would scarcely credit some of the things I said (in the interview), and which are absolutely gospel truth.'

I had applied to Richardson for a copy of this interview, which he declined to give without Burnett's authority. This I obtained, but Richardson still refused. He said that he had sent two copies of this interview to two individual members of the government and expected it would lead to Sifton's immediate retirement. One of these ministers had replied, saying he did not think it would be wise for the government to take any notice of the matter. The other had never acknowledged it. As, however, if it were quoted they would know from whence it came, Richardson did not wish to give me the copy thus furnishing us with ammunition against his own party.

Burnett has again and again assured me that though the letters had been lost he would come before any tribunal and give the evidence as to their contents.

Yours faithfully,
J. N. KIRCHHOFFER.

Now, take the returns that I have referred to. On their face they furnish ground for an inquiry with regard to the extraordinary concessions granted Mr. Philp and the use he was making of these various names. If these statements I have just read be correct, if Burnett's interview was in the possession of the government, then, when I made that charge last session that that letter had been written by Mr. Philp, it is incredible, if Mr. Philp made that story out of the whole cloth, that the Minister of the Interior could have had the relations he has since that time with that man, his old partner, and continued them all during the summer, after the decision, as the return shows. It was in the public interest that that matter should have been probed to the bottom. It was a far stronger case on suspicion than Mr. Sifton had in his possession against the men he prosecuted in Manitoba, and shows the serious ground that I had for the charges that I had made last session; and coupled with the other facts, all this indicates the extremely unfair use made of Mr. Ryley by his minister, and the disingenuous manner in which Mr. Ryley prepared that memorandum for his minister to use on that occasion.

The next phase of the subject is with regard to Dominion Creek, but as I had to speak this afternoon and have spoken at considerable length to-night, though I have not endeavoured to drag the material out at all, I would consider it great indulgence if I were permitted to postpone my observations on this item until to-morrow.

The committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.55 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 19, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SALARIES TO JUDGES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the following resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole to-morrow:

That it is expedient to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts and to provide as follows:

That the salary of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories shall be $5,000, and of the five puisné judges of the said court each $4,000 per annum.

That the salary of an additional judge of the Territorial Court in the Yukon territory shall be $4,000 per annum.

That the salaries of seventeen puisné judges of the Superior Court of Quebec, whose residences are fixed at Montreal or Quebec (including the judge to whom the district of Terrebonne is assigned), each $5,000 per annum

Motion agreed to.

THE INDIA FAMINE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask my right hon. friend if he has yet given consideration to the question that I ventured to bring to the notice of the government a few days ago, that is, as to the propriety of this parliament making a contribution to the India famine fund. My right hon. friend knows that on a former occasion that question was taken up by the people of Canada with great spirit, and a very admirable contribution was made to the Indian famine fund; and I believe that the necessities are very much greater now than they were on that occasion. The deaths from starvation and disease—because the plague has been added to the famine—are, perhaps, unexampled even in the history of India. I also drew the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the fact, of which he is also well aware, that owing to the very patriotic spirit that now exists throughout the country, and which has been nobly responded to by all classes of citizens, a very large amount has been contributed to the patriotic fund in connection with the war in South Africa; and in addition, a demand has recently been made upon the citizens of Canada to which they have generally responded, in consequence of the fire that took place in Ottawa. In consequence of all these demands having drawn so heavily on private resources, I think that, in view of the very flourishing condition of the financial affairs of the country, an appropriation in aid of the sufferers by famine and disease in India would be not only well received by the House, but, I believe, would be thoroughly appreciated by the country.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not prepared at this moment to make any announcement to the House, either affirmatively or negatively. But at an early day the government will announce its policy upon this question.

PRIVATE COURTNEY'S TEMPERANCE PRINCIPLES.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the government to a matter which I have had before me for several days. I regret the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) is not in his place, because it properly comes under the cognizance of his department, but, perhaps, the Prime Minister can give me an answer at present. I will read a letter which I have received, setting forth the case I refer to :

George Taylor, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

(Re Corporal Courtney.)

Dear Sir,—Could you inform me if it is true that Corporal Courtney, of 'A' Battery, Kingston, was ordered to march a squad of men (Battery men) to the canteen there to drink the Queen's health in beer on the 24th of May; that for refusing to obey that order (he being a temperance man) he was placed under arrest for insubordination, and that Major Fages ordered Courtney to be reduced to the ranks, &c. Could you get the particulars of the matter? If you will be good enough to attend to the matter, and ascertain if our teetotal brother was so harshly dealt with for his loyalty to the temperance cause, which this government so sadly lacks, you will greatly oblige.

Yours truly,

GEORGE SHEPPARD,
Gananoque, Ont.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I understand that this matter has been discussed in the newspapers for several days; if so, the hon. gentleman has had ample time to give notice to the minister that he intended to bring it up. However, I will convey the matter to the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence.

APPROACHES TO HALIFAX HARBOUR.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to bring a matter to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), which is dealt with by a resolution or memorial of the Board of Trade of Halifax. I refer to the approaches to the Halifax harbour, and if it is necessary to put myself in order, I will conclude with a motion.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The House will be moved into Committee of Supply in a short time, and I suggest to the hon. gentlemen that he bring it up then.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire, of course, to follow the suggestions of the right hon. gentleman, but I understand there are some other matters coming up when the

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

House is moved into supply. I do not desire to make a motion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). As the matter is a very important one, I may require to read some documents, and, perhaps, the hon. gentleman will prefer to discuss it in supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems so uncertain when we will reach supply, that I do not like to lose the opportunity. Of course, I will give way if the government desire.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Might I ask the leader of the government if he has come to a conclusion as to when he is going to take morning sittings?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I intend to put a notice on the paper to-morrow on that subject.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. POWELL.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day, I wish to call the attention of the House to a personal matter. It appears in the Charlottetown Daily Patriot of May 31, but it has only lately been brought to my notice. I will read it :

The report of Commissioner Bill, who investigated the conduct of Warden Foster, has been issued, and is interesting reading.

In it evidence is given that even Mr. Powell, of Westmoreland, who made so indignant a speech about the enormities practised in West Huron election, had considerable trafficking in illegal ballots in the elections for Westmoreland in 1891, one of the witnesses proving that he got ballots from Powell to give to the electors.

I may say that in the province of New Brunswick this matter, which is in connection with a local election, would be too ridiculous to mention. The statements in the commissioner's report could, probably, be truthfully said of every man who, during the last fifty years, sat in the legislature of New Brunswick. I did not have the honour to sit there as long as the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), or as the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Lewis), and some other hon. gentlemen in this House, but they know how absurd the insinuation is. So far as issuing ballots is concerned, probably in the ten years preceding his advent to this House, the Minister of Railways and Canals did, and, I think, he will bear me out in the statement, directly or indirectly cause to be issued probably no less than 75,000 ballots for distribution among the electors in his constituency.

I certainly have been a party directly or indirectly, to the issue of probably forty or fifty thousand. At every election in the province of New Brunswick, the candidates are responsible, probably, for the issue of not less than four or five hundred thousand ballot papers. The secret of that is, that in the province of New Brunswick there are no official ballots whatever, as there are in the Dominion. Upon the candidates themselves devolves the task of supplying their own ballot papers. Every hon. gentleman from New Brunswick knows that this is so, and I would ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to endorse what I am saying to the very letter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There is no doubt about that.

Mr. POWELL. The method pursued is this—each candidate, or, if there are a number of candidates on a ticket, those candidates together, have the ballot papers printed, and these—

Mr. MONTAGUE. At the candidates' own expense.

Mr. POWELL. Yes—and they are distributed among the workers and by them to the electors. The electors take these ballots into the polling booth and deposit them in the box. The duty of the returning officer is to see that only single ballots are deposited. The Minister of Railways and Canals is familiar with the law. That, Mr. Speaker, is all that there is in the matter, and I need not detain the House longer.

SUPPLY—REPRESENTATION OF THE YUKON.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move the motion of which I gave notice yesterday. I shall claim the attention of the House but a very short time. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the leader of the House is aware that a petition in regard to this subject was sent by the inhabitants of the Yukon territory, and subsequently a public meeting was held and the following resolution was moved, seconded and carried unanimously:

Whereas, by petition dated the 10th day of March, 1900, the citizens of the Yukon territory, through their properly authorized committee, duly petitioned the government of Canada, to wit: the Governor General, the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, for the right to elect two or more members to the House of Commons at Ottawa;

And whereas, a public mass meeting of the citizens of the Yukon territory ratified and seconded the said petition, and insisted upon the immediate granting to the said Yukon territory of the right to have representation in the Dominion House of Commons, which mass meeting was held on the 23rd day of March, 1900;

And whereas, no answer has yet been received from the government, or any of the governing bodies of Canada, relating to the said petition and resolution, nor has any account reached the Yukon territory as to what action, if any, is being taken by the House of Commons or Senate in regard to the same:

Now, therefore, this mass meeting of the citizens of the Yukon territory, do most respectfully draw the attention of the government of Canada to the necessity of immediate action upon our petition for representation in the Dominion House of Commons, and beg to point out that the granting of the said petition during the present session of parliament is absolutely necessary in order that the important and pressing questions relating to the Yukon territory may be properly brought before the House of Commons by members thereof, properly acquainted with the conditions of the Yukon territory;

And further, to draw the attention of parliament to the fact that the failure to grant this petition during the present session on account of it being of the most vital importance to the citizens of this territory, who pay over one-twenty-fifth of the gross federal revenue of the Dominion of Canada, cannot but have a most harmful effect upon the opinions and judgment of the citizens of this territory with regard to the relation between the citizens of this territory and the government of Canada, and we therefore request that parliament take special and urgent cognizance of the importance of this petition, on account of the uniqueness of our conditions and the pressing nature of the reforms which we consider necessary in the laws governing this territory, but which reforms are not properly understood or advocated by citizens or members outside of this territory, and that parliament grant the said petition during the present session and allow us to elect at least two members of parliament for the next session of parliament;

And that a copy of this resolution be telegraphed to the Speaker of the House of Commons at once, and copies be mailed to the Governor General, Speakers of the House of Commons and Senate, and to the Premier and leader of the opposition.

That petition sets forth so clearly not only the claim of the inhabitants of the Yukon territory, but the ground on which they make their claim, to representation in this House as to make it unnecessary that I should add much to what has already been stated. In fact, the only reason why I have ventured to bring this matter at the present moment to the attention of the House is the fact that my right hon. friend stated a short time ago, apparently in answer to the petition, that the government had come to the conclusion not to take any action in regard to the representation of the Yukon territory in the House of Commons until the general census of 1901 had been taken. Now, as I do not see any necessity for postponing, and as my right hon. friend has virtually admitted that when that census is taken, it will become necessary to provide representation for the Yukon territory—because I take that to be the view that my right hon. friend holds—I wish to press upon the attention of the government and the House the importance of not waiting for that decennial census to be taken, but of acting upon the official census that has already been taken under the direction, I presume, of the government, or, if not of the government, of the Yukon council, by the mounted police—which census furnishes all the information that is necessary in regard to a question of this kind. I find, in that organ of public opinion which so strongly supports the government, the Globe newspaper, remarks upon this subject, so concise and conclusive—an argument, as it seems to me, so thoroughly unanswerable—that I propose to detain the House only while I read that article. It has put the case in so clear and strong a light that it is unnecessary that I should add a single word. This is from June 16 :

A copy of the Dawson 'News' to hand reports a public meeting that has clearly expressed a strong local desire for a wider share in the government of the territory. This is a feeling that cannot be ignored, and that should be respected and used to the building up of stable institutions and the strengthening of a proper national sentiment. There is naturally a strong feeling in Dawson in favour of electoral representation in the Yukon council and also in the Dominion parliament.

I may say, with regard to the Yukon council, that my right hon. friend has already stated that the government propose, by proclamation to bring into effect the provisions of the Act of last session which provides for two elective members, I think in addition to the six nominative members. I will not go into the question that might arise as to whether this is giving the elective portion sufficient representation, but, that having received the sanction of parliament I am only surprised that the Prime Minister has not had the proclamation issued long ago so as to give the citizens an opportunity of exercising the rights and privileges which they will enjoy under that legislation. I struck that portion out of my resolution because it is covered by the statement already made by the right hon. Prime Minister :

There is naturally a strong feeling in Dawson in favour of electoral representation in the Yukon council and also in the Dominion parliament. Complaints about taxation without representation have a disagreeable sound, and should not continue unheeded in any British colony.

And especially, I may add, in relation to a section of the territory of Canada which claims to have contributed one-twenty-fifth of the entire revenue of the country :

According to the census just taken by the mounted police, the population of Dawson is 5,404 persons. This includes the suburbs of the city not included in the census of 1898, which gave a population of 16,600 for the smaller area. The rush has come and gone. And the present population is evidently substantial and based on the commercial and mining possibilities of the district. The census returns show a gain of 959 over the enumeration last September, notwithstanding the stampede of more than a thousand people over the ice to Cape Nome. The influx from Bennett and Skagway more than made up for this exodus.

Returns in details show a population of 4,514 men, 648 women and 242 children. Of the total, 3,364 are American citizens, and 1,712 British subjects, 1,120 of the latter being qualified voters. On the strength of this return and of the estimated population out on the creeks, a reasonable demand can be made for representation in the Dominion parliament and also in the Yukon council.

Again, they say :

The demand for Dominion representation is well founded. The petition to parliament sets forth that the people of the territory pay one-twenty-fifth part of the gross revenue of the Dominion. It also dwells on the reforms needed in the territory, and the failure of parliament and of people outside of the territory to properly understand its position. It may not be convenient to make any increase or change in federal representation till after the next Dominion census, but this seems a case in which the needs and sentiments of the territory should be the first consideration. Dawson is represented in the Imperial forces in South Africa. It made a contribution to the Ottawa sufferers. The people are fellow-citizens, and have clearly a right to Dominion representation. All the details connected with this extension of jurisdiction cannot be arranged satisfactorily at once, but where an obvious grievance exists every possible effort should be made to remedy it. Representation in the territorial council would also tend to inspire confidence and lessen the antipathy naturally aroused by taxation without representation.

I do not intend to detain the House further than to say that if there has ever been any portion of this Dominion of Canada in regard to which it has been proved by the discussions in this House to be absolutely necessary that we should have the means of knowing the concentrated views of the citizens themselves, I think it has been established in regard to the Yukon territory, and as a simple act enabling them to elect a member to represent them in the House of Commons before the next session of parliament would be very easily passed, I sincerely hope that the Prime Minister will accept the motion in the spirit in which it is made and give effect to it. The motion that I propose, seconded by Mr. Foster, is as follows :

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out, and the following added instead thereof : 'this House is of the opinion that immediate provision should be made for representation in the Yukon Territory in the parliament of Canada.'

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The principles with which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has supported his motion are of such a character that they will not engage us in any controversy. It is in the spirit of the British constitution that the people should be represented in all legislative assemblies. It is also in the spirit of British institutions especially that all changes should be made slowly and gradually, and that no legislative action of any kind that would disturb the existing condition of things should be precipitate. The matter to which the hon. gentleman has alluded has already engaged the attention of parliament no later than last session. The Yukon territory has been in existence now, for only four years—it is now in its fourth year. The tentative legislation about it had to be more or less proved, and as time develops we are able to understand the condition of things better there and able to provide for it accordingly. The question of representation from the first has engaged the attention of parliament, and last year it came up prominently in our deliberations. As a result of the best judgment that parliament could then give to the question it was resolved that a provision should be introduced into the statutes providing for representation, not in the parliament of Canada, but in the legislative council of the Yukon territory. Last year parliament passed the following statute:

The Governor in Council, by warrant under his privy seal, may constitute and appoint such and so many persons, from time to time, not exceeding six persons, as may be deemed desirable, to be a council to aid the commissioner in the administration of the territory, and such persons so appointed to the council shall, before entering upon the duties of their office, take and subscribe before the commissioner such oaths of allegiance and office as the Governor in Council may prescribe.

A majority of the council, including the commissioner, shall form a quorum.

The natural-born and naturalized male British subjects in the territory, who have attained the full age of twenty-one years and continuously resided there for a period of not less than twelve months, shall elect two representatives to the territorial council, and such representatives shall have the same power and be charged with the same duties as those members of the council who are appointed by the Governor in Council; and any person qualified to vote shall be eligible for election.

Subsections 3, 4 and 5 of this section shall come into force at such time as the Governor in Council shall think proper and shall fix for that purpose by order in council.

I have already stated that it is the intention of the government to have the proclamation issued for this purpose immediately; I would say that it is intended that the proclamation shall issue about the 1st of July, so that immediately the elections shall take place to give representation to the people of the Yukon upon the executive council. As to that point we are all agreed. The question is raised by my hon. friend as to our giving representation also to the people of the Yukon upon the floor of parliament. My hon. friend bases his remarks upon a mass meeting which took place some time ago in the city of Dawson, and which adopted certain resolutions which my hon. friend has just read, and which were forwarded to the Governor General and to some other persons for the advice, not only of the Governor General, but of the people of Canada generally. Of course, every one must admit that representations made by a mass meeting of citizens anywhere under our system of government are always entitled to respect and consideration, but whether or not they should carry such respect and consideration as to be absolutely binding is a thing that I am not prepared, nor is my hon. friend, I am sure, to admit. The policy of the government upon this subject, as I have already stated, is to deal with it next session, after the census has been taken, and we propose, if possible, to have an early census.

Mr. WALLACE. When will that be?

The PRIME MINISTER. That will be early next year.

Mr. WALLACE. How early?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is sufficient for the purpose of my hon. friend that I should say that it will be early next year; perhaps in the month of January, not later, certainly, than the month of April. When we have this information from the census, we will be in a better position to frame a law to give representation to the Yukon. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper), will notice that the resolution adopted by the mass meeting, asks that the Yukon should be represented in the federal House of Commons by two members. I think my hon. friend will not dispute that such representation would not be in accordance with the acknowledged unit of representation in all the portions of the Dominion. That unit of representation is one member for about 22,000 electors. If we were to give two members to the Yukon territory, then judging of the population, from the imperfect knowledge we now have, two members would be largely in excess of the proportionate representation for the rest of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We did not adhere to the numerical representation in the case of the smaller provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island.

The PRIME MINISTER. There may have been existing conditions which affected that, when we took British Columbia and Prince Edward Island into confederation. These were established provinces, and it would have been difficult to disturb the representation which the people expected, judging from the number they had in their own legislative bodies. Whether or not it may be advisable to depart from this principle of representation in the case of the Yukon, is a question which I am not prepared to discuss just now. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that we have hardly the information to-day which would enable us to form a practical conclusion upon the conditions which exist in the Yukon. First of all, I expect that when the people have elected two members within the next few weeks to the council of the Yukon territory, we probably shall have representations made by the executive council, reinforced as it shall be by the voice of popular opinion, as to what shall be the representation of the Yukon territory in this parliament. I expect we shall have a much more valuable suggestion from such a body as the executive council as then constituted, and one which will be entitled to more consideration than the simple resolution of a mass meeting. Then the census will give us information which we have not to-day. The census lately taken by the North-west Mounted Police is undoubtedly a valuable source of information, but it is admittedly not absolutely correct. The mounted police did the best they could, and they did very good work, but they had no training for it, and it gives us only an approximate estimate of the population.

Mr. FOSTER. As how much ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The city of Dawson is in the vicinity of 5,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A little over.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps so. Out of that population, nearly three-fourths are American citizens, and about one-fourth British subjects. We want to be informed by the census as to the total number (alien as well as British), the conditions of the people, how many residents there are, how many families there are. We have provided at present that the franchise which is to prevail for the representation in the executive council, is to be universal manhood suffrage. So far that is satisfactory. We would like to have the view of the council as to whether or not that franchise should be adopted for representation in the House of Commons. For my part, I am quite agreeable to it, but it would be preferable, everything considered, to proceed not hastily in this matter. After all, it cannot be very long now, and I do not think the people of the Yukon will have any cause of complaint, if in the fifth year of their existence, they are admitted to representation upon the floor of the national parliament. If you compare that with the conditions which exist in the American territories, the people of the Yukon will have no reason to complain at all. For those reasons, I would ask that the House do not adopt the motion of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper), but rely upon the statement which we make, that as soon as the census has been taken, we will deem it our duty to introduce a Bill to admit the population of the Yukon to representation in this parliament.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I have some remarks which I intended to make at a later stage, but this motion makes them quite apropos now. I can hardly see the force of the arguments which have been advanced by the First Minister, either against giving the population of the Yukon comparatively large representation in this House, or, against giving them that representation at once. It is quite well known, and the last census makes it undeniable, that in Dawson City, there is a little over 5,000 people, and in the creeks and tributaries around it, 10,700, or nearly so. The number of British voters in Dawson and the Yukon is given by the last census as in the neighbourhood of from 4,200 to 4,500, and that is certainly a large number of people in a portion of Canada not to be represented. The Dawson Weekly News of May 11, gives the exact figures of the total number outside Dawson, at 10,703; the voters being 2,462, and the foreign population amounting to about 6,500. In Dawson itself the population is a little over 5,000, with some 1,700 British voters. That makes a very respectable body of voters of British citizenship, and if they had had representation here at any time during the last three years, we should have had far more useful and reliable information in this House than we have had, and I think the course of legislation would have been quite different from what it has been. With regard to the number of representatives, that is a question to be arranged; but I do not think that the Prime Minister will know anything more as to the principle or expediency, after two gentlemen have been elected to the Yukon council, because they will there be overshadowed by what you may call the official vote, they being only two out of seven members. I think the representations made by that council will scarcely be so authoritative as the representations made by the people in mass meeting assembled, on the general principles which rule in these matters, namely, the representation of population, the importance of the interests involved, and the expediency of having in parliament men who are directly representative of the people themselves. But what I wanted to call the attention of parliament to was the peculiar methods of government which we have had in the Yukon for the last year, to go back no further. You have there a council made up of a possible six or seven members, every one of whom is a paid official either of the Department of the Interior directly or of some one of the other departments or of the government as a whole. The powers that are had by that council are very extensive. If you take the Auditor General's Report of last year, you will find that in actuality they imposed upon and gathered from the people of Dawson about $130,000, that they expended about $130,000, and that they imposed that and expended that almost entirely without supervision of or responsibility to any department of the government here in Ottawa. That, I think, is a very anomalous condition of things. That is made more striking last year, the report of which I have here, in the lately published report of the commissioner of the Yukon, and I find that that revenue, and which is called local revenue, has gone up from $130,000 in the year before to $210,000 odd in the year ending September, 1899. During the current year there is little doubt that that revenue will far surpass $250,000. The broad statement to be made with reference to that is that you have a number of paid officials of the Department of the Interior or of this government collecting over a quarter of a million dollars and spending every dollar of it without one iota of supervision or responsibility by or to any department or minister here in Ottawa. I think that is an anomalous condition of things; and I do not think any man sitting around these boards, if he were a citizen of Dawson, an owner of property and a ratepayer there, would have lived in that city one month without making his protest as strong and persistent as it possibly could be made against that anomalous condition of things. This fact has been brought out in another place, and has been admitted by the acting minister himself. Not only is that revenue absolutely within the power of the council, but the expenditures are all made by that council on the council's own initiative. There is no audit of that expenditure by any department of this government or by the government itself. If the council have an audit, it is an audit made by one of their own appointees, and the only thing that is known by this government is that after the expenditures have been made, after the bills have been paid, after the audit has been made by the council's own auditor, the accounts are sent down and filed away here in the Department of the Interior or the Department of the Secretary of State, I have not yet been able to find out which. But I would like to know if a similar condition of affairs has anywhere else existed in a freely governed country. Now, Sir, during the whole of last year the people of the Yukon have been holding mass meetings and making representations to the Yukon council to endorse petitions which they have passed at those mass meetings, pointing out that the law which was passed here last year making provision for two members of that council to be elected by the ratepayers of Dawson, thus representing the population to a certain extent, and which was to be brought into force by proclamation, has not to this day been proclaimed; and the consequence is that the people have to sit by and see the results of the expenditures, but not to see them at close hand, for that council has been so autocratic that it has not only not allowed the public, but the public through the press, to have any access to its meetings or give any report as to what has been done there. Now, I think that these people, reputable citizens of a free country, with their interests at stake, have a grievance and a very strong grievance against the government of this country. What is the reason that Act was not proclaimed immediately after its passage by this parliament? Not by lack of protestation by the people themselves, for the people have been protesting and protesting, and I have before me the papers which have been brought down, and I find that after all their protests they have been unable to stir the department or the government. But at last they sent their petition to the Governor General, and the Governor General sends the papers to the government with this remark:

The above correspondence appears to His Excellency of such importance, as affecting the government of the Yukon territory, that he ventures to draw the consideration of council towards it.

That is dated the 25th of April, 1900; and I venture to say that if the people of Dawson had not directed their petition directly to the Governor General, they would have been without reply and without action upon it up to the present time. They are without action upon it yet, because even at this late date the Prime Minister only says that the government propose to bring this section of their law into force by proclamation, and give to the people of the Yukon that small representation in their local affairs which they ought to have had, and which I think they ought to have in a larger degree. For, what is the government they have had up to the present time with regard to the disbursement of this $200,000 or $250,000 of revenue? It is simply government by officials—an autocracy; because everybody knows that the Minister of the Interior it is who will have his will carried out, though he takes no responsibility, has no apparent supervision, and assumes no responsibility. What are the duties of the commissioner, as set out by order in council on the 7th of July, 1898? The Commissioner has tremendous powers:

He shall have power to suspend any official for neglect of duty or misconduct, in his discretion and to replace such officer temporarily, pending decision by the minister of the department to which such officer is attached. It shall be the duty of the commissioner also to receive monthly or more frequently reports from the officers of the government in the district, and to receive from such officers all revenues, the property of the government of Canada, which may come into their possession, to be transmitted by the commissioner to the Department of Finance in due course.

All matters not provided for in the instructions of the officers of the government and rules of the department, acting in the Yukon district, and which require immediate action to be taken, shall be referred to the commissioner for his instructions. He shall be particularly charged with the duty of deciding questions not provided for by law, order in council or departmental instructions with regard to the disposal of land and timber in the district.

These are amongst some of the duties of the commissioner himself, but when I come to the duties and powers of the council itself—an irresponsible council mind you, made up of paid officials, not supervised by any department at Ottawa, their accounts not audited here—what do I find? They have powers to make ordinances and to impose penalties, provided that the penalties shall not exceed $500 for a sentence. That is a very wide, large power. They have the power to grant shop and saloon and other licenses, and to place fees upon them. That is, the whole administration of the sale of intoxicating liquors is given to over half a dozen paid officials in the city of Dawson, without the least supervision or control by any governmental authority here in Ottawa.

They have the power to make regulations for the preservation of health and for local improvements, and to impose taxes in order to provide for those matters, should they decide that taxes are necessary. That is a wide power given half a dozen paid officials, without any initiative supervision or control by anybody under the sun. They have the power of bestowing powers of taxation on municipal corporations which may wish to be incorporated for municipal purposes.

These are the powers of the council itself; they are the powers of an ordinary government. They are larger than the powers that a municipal council possesses. No municipal council that I know of in the Dominion possesses as wide powers as are possessed by those half dozen paid officials in the city of Dawson. Yet that is their power; and under it they have collected a taxation which, in this current year, will run over one quarter of a million dollars. It is instructive to just look over the statement I have here of the sources of their revenue. I asked for this and have received it, although it does not appear in the Auditor General's Report. For that year in which they got $130,000, and paid out or expended $130,000. What are some of the representative items? Without going into particulars, I simply state that the most of that revenue comes from liquor and vice. Of the amount of $130,000, which is accounted for in that year before the last of which I have spoken, for permits and for liquor licenses, these sums respectively have come into the hands of that council. Liquor permits, $27,758.14; liquor licenses, $72,899.93. That makes up altogether over $100,000 of revenue. From what you may call vice, there is an additional item running up pretty closely to $30,000, and no one can take these items and look them over without coming to the absolute conviction that those two vices are legalized and regulated by this irresponsible council of half a dozen paid officials, merely and solely with reference to their revenue-producing powers. That is the astounding thing, that half a dozen paid officials of the Minister of the Interior or other members of the government should be put into a position, where they not only can legislate on those vital matters but collect and impose fees. Here, comes a significant illustration. What happened in 1898? In the year 1898 the Yukon commissioner, Mr. Ogilvie, had relegated to him the sole right of granting permits. The department here washed its hands of it; the minister here gave it over to Mr. Ogilvie. Much has been said with regard to Mr. Ogilvie, his wisdom, how fit he is to govern and everything of that kind, but here is a lurid light, thrown upon his position in this respect. No sooner did he get that great power to himself than he did what? Simply gave the impression as broad as it should be, that anybody might bring liquor into the Yukon if he would simply pay the $2 per gallon when brought across the border. What did that mean? It meant unrestricted permits. Not many weeks had passed before he issued permits up to 100,000 gallons of whisky to come into Dawson district and city. The moment that leaked out, the government here became alarmed, and in April, 1898, finding out what had been done by Mr. Ogilvie, the government passed an order in council prohibiting him from granting any more permits and prohibiting the entrance of any liquors on permits which had been given by Mr. Ogilvie, provided these liquors were not already in transit. There came a very odd state of things; men had made application to the Minister of the Interior here; they had been referred by him to Mr. Ogilvie as having the power to grant permits; Mr. Ogilvie had granted the permits and taken their money, and these men had made their purchases, and were preparing to take in their liquor under that authority. All at once, and before that liquor had started, or when some of it was under way, they were met by an order in council declaring these permits cancelled, and that all liquor not actually in transit should be prohibited coming in. Then followed an interesting chapter—how the minister backed and tided. First he declared he would stand by the prohibition of the council, and then gave way to attorneys who were selected for the purpose, and compromised gradually with one after another, until he had allowed some 50,000 gallons to come in, although he had declared by his order in council that none of it should come in. That is a sample of what has taken place under what you may call one man government. That is why the people of Dawson City and district have been for the last year agitating, in a perfectly orderly way with great persistence, in order that at least they might have some share in the local government at Dawson and in the disposal of the moneys which they themselves contribute. No one dare for a moment say that had the Yukon country and Dawson City had an able representative in this House, direct from the people, any of those things could have been allowed to go on a single year. Under the pressure of the people, through the mouth of their representative, this state of thing would have been so shown up that it would have been impossible to allow it to continue. But none of us here could speak for the people, we had not the representative authority, we were away from the scene of government, and consequently this kind of government had gone on. There does not seem any reason at all why the Act giving the powers parliament was willing to give, and which went into force last year, should not have been proclaimed, and the people of Dawson have had their representation, small though it was, in the Yukon council, where such large revenues were collected, such important ordinances enacted, and such large expenditures made presumably in the people's interests. Now, there is another instructive thing, and that is as to the kind of expenditure. But, I do not propose to go into that to-day; I shall leave that until we get into the consideration of the Yukon items—although, I must say, I shall be at the mercy of the House if I discuss it there, because we do not make the appropriations; it is not our revenue under the law, but entirely a local revenue. Nevertheless, I may be allowed to make a few explanations with reference to the manner of their expenditure. Under these circumstances, I think we should not delay one single moment in giving to the people of the Yukon an authoritative and representative status and place in this parliament by one of their own people, one from that country who knows that country, one elected by the people there, one who will be ready and able to point out to us—to every man on both sides, every one of whom I believe, wants to do what is best for the Yukon, but for lack of knowledge and extreme conflict of opinion does not know—what is best for that country. But one thing I am sure of, and that is, that an autocratic government of the kind I have described as existing in Dawson is not the best kind for an intelligent people, so active, with such large money and property interests—a people have made their homes in the Yukon, and who ought not to be kept out of their proper share of representation in this House. From seventeen to twenty-five thousand people in that district, ought, apart from all other considerations, to have ample representation at home and in this House if for no other reason, than because of the great material interests that are involved. Therefore, I am sorry that the First Minister has not acceded to the request to give representation in this House to the city of Dawson and the Yukon territory, just as soon as proper legislation can be put upon the statute-book.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). There can be no possible objection to the principle involved in the motion before the House. Certainly, when a people who are being taxed make representation that they ought to be able to send representatives to parliament, there is only one answer that can be given, and that is to grant the request. But, of course, it takes a special case, and a special case has been made out. But, I affirm there are other cases that can be made out, and any proposition that sets out to deal with the matter should cover all cases. There are other cases that the rapid development of the North-west has made it just as important should have consideration in the matter of representation as the Yukon at the present time. The constituency that I represent, for instance, at the time the last census was taken, was just about up to the unit of representation—one member of this House to about 22,000 or 23,000 population, that being about the population of the city of Winnipeg at that time. But, since then, the population has doubled, and we are at great disadvantage and have not proper representation in this House. But, there is this further difficulty. It seems almost certain, in fact, with the steps we are going to take, it is certain, that in the next parliament the Yukon will be represented here. But, are some of the western constituencies going to be properly represented in this House for the next five years if some provision is not made? I cannot see that Winnipeg is going to have adequate representation with other communities in this parliament. It is almost impossible that the next election can be held on the basis of the census to be taken next year. And, that being the case, the next election will settle representation in this House for the next five years. So, in 1904, we shall have one representative here for a population, probably, of from 70,000 to 75,000. That is quite as important a consideration and quite as important a grievance as the Yukon can have. At the same time, I imagine the feeling of the House is to concede this case; and the only question is the proper way and the legal way to do it. I submit, even to the mover of this motion, that the whole North-west should be taken into consideration on this question.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I would ask the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether he will state to the House, after what he has told us, if it is his intention to introduce legislation this session making provision for an early census next year?

The PRIME MINISTER. I shall have to take that into consideration.

APPROACHES TO HALIFAX HARBOUR.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, I desire to bring to the attention of the House the matter which I mentioned a short time ago, that is the question of the approaches to Halifax harbour. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) will, I think, agree with me that no public expenditure is productive of greater benefit than an expenditure which renders the harbours of this country safe for the commerce which enters them. They are the highways which connect our country with foreign countries, and it is absolutely necessary, if the commerce of this country is to be developed, that our harbours should be made absolutely safe, or at least as nearly safe as it is possible to render them. Now, representations have been made to the government now in power, as well as to the governments which have existed in the past, with reference to the necessity of a lightship in the harbour of Halifax. I believe that reports have been made on that subject, and that the matter has been to some extent investigated by the Department of Marine and Fisheries; but I do not know to what extent it has been dealt with by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It is perfectly obvious that it is a matter which should receive immediate attention, if it has not already received that attention. The harbour of Halifax has probably as great natural security as any harbour in the world. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows well that a steamer leaving the harbour of Halifax can be out in the middle of the Atlantic two hours after she has left the wharf. The natural position of the harbour is all that could be desired, the approach to the harbour is perfect, and the only thing that is necessary is for the hon. gentleman to give such attention to the matter of lighting the approaches to that harbour as will put it in that respect upon an equality with the best harbours in the world. As the hon. gentleman has no doubt had his attention directed to the subject, I will not occupy much time with it, but I will read, as placing in a concise form before the House the reasons in support of what I am now urging upon the minister, the report made by a sub-committee of the Halifax Board of Trade to that body in the latter part of the month of March. The report is as follows :

The President of the Board of Trade.

Sir.—At a meeting of ship-owners, ship agents, ship masters and others interested in the port of Halifax, held on Monday, 12th instant, a committee was appointed to report to your council the opinions of that meeting as to the necessity for improving the approaches to the harbour.

The meeting had before it the correspondence between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and your board on the same subject.

The committee would report to your council the information gained at that meeting, and since then in conference with ship masters and others sailing in and out of this port.

The consensus of opinion is that the guides to the approaches to the harbour of Halifax are not in keeping with the importance of the place as a great commercial port, and the great number of vessels of all sizes which frequent it. That a properly equipped lightship, with a powerful siren, is a necessity off Sambro as a safeguard to the harbour in foggy weather, or during snow-storms, that being the most dangerous part of the entrance in such weather.

Your committee are of the opinion that if the lightship placed there in 1874 was deemed necessary at that time, that it is much more so now that the trade of the port has increased. Some who had doubts about the possibility of keeping a lightship at Sambro, have changed their opinion since seeing so many lightships on the American coasts, and which they have no difficulty in keeping in just as much exposed conditions as Sambro. It has been urged that the experiment was tried and failed. Your committee would point out that the vessel placed there was not at all adapted for the purpose, and had to ride from her heavy chains and was not of sufficient buoyancy. Modern lightships are built and fitted for the service. Many ship masters at the meeting stated, that they rarely hear the bomb now used at Sambro; that since the introduction of the ten-minute service they seem to be less powerful than before. They also are of the opinion that while the automatic buoy off Pennant is of some use, it does not meet the wants, and must only be considered as there temporarily; that these automatic buoys are hard to locate and are apt to lose their sound through ice or debris collecting in them, and under any circumstances cannot be heard any distance from them;

This committee agrees with them for the reason that they who navigate those waters are better judges of what is required than are those who are only theoretical navigators, and would earnestly recommend your board to again make an insistent application for a properly equipped lightship at Sambro. As to the cost, your committee would point out that one vessel lost in that vicinity for want of some such warning might cost more than a lightship many times over, to say nothing of the lives that might be lost.

That clause emphasizes in a very forcible manner what I pointed out to the minister a moment ago, namely, that you cannot expend public money to better purpose than in making the approaches to the harbours on our coast as nearly absolutely safe as it is possible for us to make them; because the loss of one steamer in any of our harbours would mean many times over the expense of a lightship of this kind. The report continues as follows:

Your committee have had placed before them a letter from Capt. Pye, ss. 'Halifax' (which they inclose). He complains that the fog-horn at Meagher's Beach cannot be heard at any distance, complaints are numerous as to that signal; ship-masters and pilots declare that they very seldom hear it in thick weather, and have sometimes come in the harbour without hearing it. Either it is not powerful enough or it is not properly attended to. Attention should be directed to it.

The buoy on the Middle Ground has been complained of by masters of steamers coming in at night as liable to break their propellers; being in the fairway, it is hard to locate at night. Your board first asked for an electric gong buoy, failing that, for a gas buoy. Application has been made to the department on the same subject from other sources and would bear renewal by your board.

Now, there is a letter referred to in this report from Captain Pye of the steamship Halifax, who is a navigator of great experience in many parts of the world, and who has had many years of very special experience in entering and departing from the harbour of Halifax. The steamship Halifax has plied between Halifax and Boston for many years, and Captain Pye has taken his vessel in and out of the harbour under all possible conditions of wind and weather. In a letter dated the 13th of March last, directed to the board of trade, he says this:

Dear Sir,—I desire to call your attention to the bomb signal now fired from Sambro Island in thick weather, and to report that since the change in the time of exploding them, neither myself nor my officers have been able to hear them, although we have passed, as you know, frequently during thick weather and as close as safety would warrant my going.

I do not consider them of any service, nor could they be depended upon to navigate into Halifax harbour. I would also call your attention to the fog signal at Meagher's Beach light. It is impossible to hear this at any distance. It is now useless, as a ship would be on shore before hearing same in a southerly wind.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I know that he has this matter at heart, that if nothing has been done to remedy this condition of affairs in Halifax harbour since this report has been forwarded to him, it is high time more active measures were taken. This experienced navigator says that he passed in thick weather, close to Sambro Island, that he could not hear, that he never heard the bomb signal at all, and that he does not consider this bomb signal of any service at all, that it cannot be depended upon for safe navigation into Halifax harbour. If Captain Pye is correct in regard to that, and I cannot assume that he would wilfully make any misstatement, it seems to me that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if he has not done so, should take action in regard to it at once.

This matter is more urgent, and there is more necessity that the minister should deal promptly and energetically with the question, not only in Halifax harbour, but in every other important harbour upon our coasts, because of the unjust discrimination in insurance rates which is being made against us in the old country. In respect to that we do not want anything more than fair-play, but we think, after what has taken place in the past, we are entitled to fair-play in respect to this as well as to other matters. Is it right or just that Canadian ports should be discriminated against in the way in which they are being discriminated against at present by the underwriters? We know that the harbour of Halifax and all the other important harbours in this country, are perfectly safe for navigation, and that many of them are a great deal safer than American ports, which receive lower rates of insurance. I can safely challenge any hon. gentleman in this House, or any person anywhere else, to name an American port which is as safe, other things being equal, as the harbour of Halifax. Provided with proper lights, lightships and signals, I can most confidently assert that there is not a harbour in North America that has as safe an entrance as the harbour of Halifax.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Except Sydney.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, would like me to except Sydney. I would not like to except Sydney, but Sydney comes second to Halifax.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is St. John?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will not make any remarks in regard to St. John. I am not prepared to enter into any controversy in regard to these harbours. We must look upon all of our harbours as Canadian harbours, and not regard them from the local standpoint. I think they are all pretty good harbours; I have only dealt with Halifax particularly, and, I repeat, that other things being equal, it is the safest harbour on the North American continent. Is it right, when we are trying to develop our commerce and improve our steamship facilities, and when our steamship trade and commerce are developing in this country in such a marked manner, that we should be subjected to this unjust discrimination? I have brought this matter to the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries before: I urged upon him the importance of taking some action in regard to this matter. I know that boards of trade throughout the country have attempted to take action, and the hon. minister has asserted that the government is taking action. I would like the hon. minister to tell me what action the government has taken, as to remedying this intolerable state of affairs in regard to insurance rates. Is it taking any action on its own motion? Is it asking the boards of trade in this country to take any united action? Is there anything which the hon. minister might convey to the House in the way of information in respect to it, and if he has not seen his way clear to taking any effective action in regard to it, or, if any action which he has taken has not been effective, will the hon. minister inform the House what the government intends to do in order to remedy this state of affairs which cannot be allowed to exist in this country? We have the harbours, we have the facilities, we have the commerce, which we desire to expand and develop, and we cannot expand and develop our commerce anywhere in a way that we otherwise would be able to do, if we are to be subjected to this unjust and scandalous discrimination in insurance rates. I say the circumstances that this state of affairs has prevailed should impress upon the attention of this government the absolute importance of leaving nothing undone to render the important harbours of this country absolutely safe, and to remedy the state of affairs that exists, so far as it is possible, for the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with the resources of this country behind him, to remedy it. I, therefore, trust that the hon. gentleman will, in the first place, take into consideration what I have endeavoured to impress upon him in regard to the harbour of Halifax, and that, secondly, he will not fail to take effective action in respect to these insurance rates so far as it is in his power to do so.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). Mr. Speaker, I fully endorse the views so well expressed by the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), in respect to the necessity of a lightship at the mouth of Halifax harbour, off Sambro Island. There is no person in this House who is more familiar with that harbour, the hon. senior member for Halifax not excepted, than myself, having occasion to enter and depart from that harbour very many times during the year. I have frequently been off that harbour for hours in a snowstorm, or in stormy weather, during which time the master tried to ascertain his whereabouts, and was compelled to remain, in one case, all night, in order to feel that he was affording perfect safety to his ship and to his passengers, before entering the harbour, whereas, if a lightship had been there, he would have had no difficulty in proceeding up the harbour without delay. There is need of a lightship at the entrance of the port of Halifax, for the benefit of the merchant shipping, and it would be of advantage to foreign shipping as well as our own, entering the port, in the way of a reduction of insurance rates. Insurance rates at present are enormous, and are becoming greater every year for the want of better harbour guides, or approaches, to the harbour of Halifax. Halifax harbour is the principal port in Nova Scotia, and next to it, I think, I can place the harbour of Lunenburg, in the county which I represent. I feel satisfied that I am not exaggerating, when I say that next to the port of Halifax, there is no other port that has a larger amount of shipping owned by it, than the port of Lunenburg, and the entries and departures of vessels to and from the port of Lunenburg, are greater than there are to and from any other port in Nova Scotia, save that of Halifax.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And Sydney.

Mr. KAULBACH. The hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), says 'Sydney.' I think I may agree with him that it may be equal to Lunenburg, but I do not think it will surpass it—certainly not in ownership.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I admit that.

Mr. KAULBACH. In regard to Lunenburg I made application for a bell buoy at 'Eastern Point,' on the eastern side of the harbour of Lunenburg, which has proven a great necessity from the fact that last year, within a few weeks, a vessel and a steamer were wrecked at that point, and became total losses, besides several other vessels in that neighbourhood. I was a passenger on the Dominion City three years ago when that vessel was wrecked and completely destroyed. We were in a perilous position all night, having had to put to sea in the smaller boats, the lifeboats being carried away, and the only way in which we were able to keep afloat was by means of separate life-belts lashed beneath the thwarts of the longboat, in which eighteen of us were, the sea playing over us all the time. Had there been a bell buoy on the eastern side of the harbour we would have known our position accurately, and we would have been able to escape the dangerous island beyond that, known as Duck Island. I wrote to the Minister of Marine and strongly urged the placing of a bell buoy there. We have an automatic on the west side of the harbour, but we want a bell buoy on the east side. It is a small matter, but I have had nothing more than a mere acknowledgment of the receipt of that letter, and the request has not been complied with so far. I trust that in the interest of the shipowners and of the insurance companies, the minister will meet that request at the earliest possible moment, not forgetting the lightship off Halifax harbour, which is a very great necessity for the shipping of Lunenburg, as Halifax harbour is a port they frequent repeatedly on their way east. I, therefore, in the most earnest manner, urge upon the minister the request that has been made by the hon. the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden.)

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I acknowledged the receipt of the letter received from my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach), and I have had his request submitted to the engineer of the department, who, a short time ago, made a report not favouring it very strongly, at all events for the present. The report of the engineer has only come within the last week, and I will have great pleasure in informing the hon. gentleman of the contents of it. The matter has not been finally disposed of. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) was courteous enough to let me know that he intended to bring this matter up to-day. I did not expect, however, that he was going to ally the increase in the insurance rates so much, with his demand for a lightship in Halifax harbour. This subject of insurance rates which, as the hon. gentleman properly observed, is applied unfairly towards Canada and British North America, is a larger one than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) seems to think. It is a conclusion reached by Lloyds under the assumption that our River St. Lawrence route has not been provided with as many aids to navigation as it should have, and in addition to that, it partly arises because of the alleged improper manner in which we place deck loads on deal-carrying ships. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has asked what we have done to bring the facts to the attention of those who are responsible for these increased rates. Well, my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Dobell), a member of the government, was in England a year ago, and he brought the matter specially to the attention of Lloyds, and had a consultation with the leading men of that great insurance body.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do I understand that the navigation of the River St. Lawrence, and the question of deck loads, has induced Lloyds to make the change with respect to Halifax and other ports of Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I fear very much so. Illogical as it may appear, they class all British North America together, and the people of St. John and Halifax, to some extent, suffer from the want of knowledge which this insurance body possesses of the improvements we have made in the St. Lawrence route. They will insist upon classing them all together. My hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) went to England and he submitted to Lloyds and to the English Board of Trade what the true facts are. I had a very carefully prepared memorandum, which was presented by the hon. gentleman to Lloyds and to the English Board of Trade, stating what we had done during the past few years towards improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence. I pointed out to them that everything was being done that could be done in the way of buoying and lighting the St. Lawrence. It was stated that we had completed a most costly fog-alarm, provided with all the latest improvements, at Belle Isle light station. It was shown that this was a most desirable improvement, and that it was much appreciated by those interested in shipping and insurance. I pointed out that we had a very large new and improved lighthouse at Flower Ledge, opposite Pointe d'Amour in Belle Isle Straits, and that I knew of no other aids to navigation which were recommended by those who understood the route thoroughly. Then, coming up the river, we had constructed, at a large cost, a permanent lighthouse at the Traverse instead of the old lightship, and I also showed that we were increasing the power of the lights as opportunity offered. All these matters were submitted by my hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) to the Lloyds, but they contended that the manner in which we loaded our deals was one of the reasons why they increased the rates against us. That matter has been under consideration for some time. I had a consultation this very session with shipping men from the different parts of the Dominion, but we could not get them to agree in the suggested changes which my hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) submitted to me with regard to the loading of these deck cargoes. The contention of Lloyds is, that no ship should be allowed to sail from Canada unless the deck load was inspected and approved by a proper officer appointed for that purpose. The merchants in some parts of the Dominion insist that they should not be subjected to this, because they said that they were satisfied with the rates of insurance—one of the largest firms in the city of St. John stated that the insurance rates they obtained were satisfactory to them, and while they had no objection to inspection at St. John, yet if all deck loads were inspected it would apply to Granite Island and Parrsboro, and other outlying ports and their vessels would be subjected to great delays. The matter is under consideration. I know the great importance that Lloyds attach to that particular feature, and I know how persistently and consistently, in season and out of season, my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Dobell) has urged this matter upon me. However, in face of the strong differences of opinion which exist among shipping-owners, I did not feel myself in a position to introduce that compulsory law. But we have submitted to the English Lloyds and the board of trade all that we have done in relation to these aids to navigation, and all we propose doing. In face of the fact that some merchants are not subjected to these increased insurance rates, the matter is one not so very easy of determination. I have been obliged to give a great deal of study to this matter, and I think that the shipping interests of the maritime provinces, and also those of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, are most unjustly and irrationally discriminated against by the English Lloyds; but they say that the losses have been so great that we shall have to give them time, and prove by the results of the present year, that the navigation of our rivers and harbours is as safe as we claim it is. They say that the losses of previous years justified them in increasing the rates; but that if we show that by the improvements we have made, navigation is safer than it was, they will be prepared to reduce the rates later on. With respect to the immediate subject which my hon. friend has brought to my attention, I had an opportunity, when in Halifax last year, of seeing the board of trade and listening to their representations on this subject; and, after I had seen them and heard their representations, I had the good fortune to have the officers of the department there—Capt. Smith, chairman of the board of examiners of Masters and Mates, who has had a large experience of ocean navigation when commander of one of the Allan boats; Capt. Bloomfield Douglas, Commander Spain, Mr. Hutchins, and Capt. Campbell of the steamer Newfield. I had the opportunity of going over with them all the representations made by the board of trade, with the aid of charts and maps, showing all the aids to navigation in and around the Halifax harbour, and the conclusion reached was that there was no necessity for a lightship. Halifax harbour is one of the best and safest harbours on the Atlantic coast, and the evidence was that even in the greatest fogs, with the existing aids, it was possible to navigate any ship safely into the harbour. I am very far from throwing any cold water on the proposition. I recognize the force of what the hon. gentleman says that in a matter of this kind the expenditure of a few thousand dollars should not stand in the way. If the lightship is a necessity, it should be granted; but my hon. friend will agree with me that if those to whom I have to look for advice, advise me that it is not a necessity, although it may be to some extent desirable, I am justified in going a little slowly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my hon. friend will permit me, I might suggest that if the opinions of his officers do not coincide with the opinions of persons who have navigated the harbour and have had practical experience of it, such as Capt. Pye, he might make a departmental investigation under chapter 115 of the statutes, and take evidence on the subject.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Precisely. The board of trade of the city of Halifax last winter, I think about the middle of March, forwarded through the colleague of my hon. friend another representation to me on the subject, and they forwarded a second one to me through the Minister of Finance. I sat down with my hon. friend's colleague, Mr. Russell, and showed him the inquiries I had made, and the facts I had gathered when I was in Halifax in the previous autumn, and the advice then given to me by the officers to whom I have referred. Some of those officers were sailing in and out of that harbour every few weeks. For instance, Capt. Campbell, the commander of the Newfield, one of the most experienced men of Halifax harbour, was one whose advice I had the opportunity of getting. I also had the advice of Capt. Smith and Commander Spain, who are in and out of that harbour pretty often. I thought it better to have a formal report made by these officers; and almost as soon as I received the request of the Halifax Board of Trade, I sent it down to Halifax, and desired that the agent there should call all the officers together and have them make a thorough examination of the statement made in the memorial of the board of trade, and a full report to me on the subject. On the 25th of May I received that report, which says :

At a conference held at the Nova Scotia agency of the Department of Marine and Fisheries on Wednesday, the 23rd day of May, to discuss and report on a letter addressed by the Halifax Board of Trade to the department relative to improvements in aids to navigation in the approaches to Halifax harbour, and also within the harbour limits, there being present the following officers of the department, viz.:

Mr. C. A. Hutchins, superintendent of lights and acting agent.

Capt. W. H. Smith, R.N.R., chairman of board of examiners of masters and mates.

Capt. Bloomfield Douglas, R.N.R., naval assistant.

Commander Spain, fisheries protection service.

The following conclusions were arrived at: 1. We are of opinion that it would be advantageous, in order to follow out the salutary principle of 'lighting outside the danger,' to establish a lightship off the approach to Halifax harbour, but we are by no means agreed as to the absolute necessity for it, considering the little difficulty, under existing aids, experienced by vessels entering the harbour, especially by coastwise vessels, or others having made and located a 'landfall' east or west of Halifax.

The general conclusion embodied in that sentence I have from almost every nautical man, that Halifax harbour is such a magnificent harbour that there is not so very much difficulty even in fogs, with the existing aids, of entering it in perfect safety.

We beg to point out that, since the unsuccessful attempt to establish a lightship off the harbour in 1874, various additions and improvements have been made by the department to assist vessels in finding their way back into the port, especially in foggy or thick weather. In 1877 the inner automatic buoy was placed, followed by the outer automatic in 1878, and the Sambro automatic in 1890. In 1891 the steam fog whistle was removed from Sambro to Chebucto Head, and explosive rocket signals established at Sambro.

In 1899 a fog trumpet was established at Meagher's Beach, and the fog bell removed to George's Island. Therefore, the argument used by the board of trade 'that if a lightship was considered necessary in 1874, it is much more necessary now,' loses much of its force.

Because, although there has been an increase in the shipping of Halifax harbour, there has also been a great increase in the aids to navigation in that harbour.

Besides the foregoing, the 'Neverfail' and 'Middle Ground' shoals have been buoyed, a bell buoy substituted at Thrum Cap for a can buoy, and the S. W. breaker off Sambro marked by a can buoy instead of a spar. The automatic buoy established last year off Pennant, although not much use to ocean-going ships, is nevertheless useful to coasters and fishermen.

Now, I am not going to permit my mind to come to an adverse conclusion on this matter simply because an attempt was made to have a lightship in 1874, and was unsuccessful; far from it. We have made great advances in the construction of lightships since 1874. A good lightship, with the latest improvements, will cost about $80,- 000; but the matter of cost in my mind is not going to stand in the way. Halifax harbour is of sufficient importance that if a lightship is a necessity, the matter of $80,000 or $90,000 is not going to stand in the way; but the officers do not share the opinion of the board of trade that it is a necessity.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask whether that report has been submitted to the board of trade?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. They report upon other matters. In case the lightship should be constructed, where should it be placed? On that point they seem to share the opinion of Capt. Pye, that if built it should be placed near Sambro Island. I may say the chief engineer of the department dissents from that in toto. He thinks the lightship should not be placed near the existing danger, but away out in the fair haven, some miles away from the Island of Sambro.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was not the old lightship run into?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If drifted away altogether. The vessels that seek to gain Halifax harbour from the south and west are too apt to creep in around Sambro Island instead of giving that island a wide berth, and the difficulties and accidents which have occurred have been almost always due to the fact that these vessels will hug too near these dangerous shoals and places. There is plenty of room at the entrance of the harbour, and there is no justification for vessels creeping in around Sambro Island at all. The Portia I think it was, which came up the other day, got into trouble there simply because, instead of keeping well clear of Sambro Island, she came along at full speed in foggy weather and as near as she could to the fog signal. The object of fog signals is not to induce vessels to come near these dangerous spots. They should keep away from them. The chief engineer reports that if parliament determines to build a lightship, that ship, instead of being placed near the island, should be placed midway in the harbour, far from the island, thus inducing vessels to keep out in the open water where there is no danger whatever. I referred that part of the petition to the chief engineer for his report, and the chief engineer, who has given the matter a great deal of consideration, thus commented on this report from the officers in Halifax:

I have given serious consideration to the report submitted by Mr. Hutchins on the subject of improving aid to navigation in the approaches to Halifax harbour. With reference to improved signal buoys, I am not sure that the new buoy is yet a practical success, but I am now writing to the inventor asking him to send me particulars, cost, and so forth.

That paragraph would hardly be intelligible unless I referred to the letter which Mr.

Hutchins wrote, inclosing the report I have just been reading. In that letter he calls special attention to the fact that there had been lately discovered new automatic signal buoys, whereby the rise and fall of the waves is utilized to furnish the necessary power to generate electricity, and suggests the desirability of purchasing some of those new automatic signal buoys. The advantage over the ordinary Courtney whistling buoy we now possess is that these other automatic buoys signal not only one sound but several distinctive and recognizable blasts of different kinds as a warning to ships. The chief engineer is in correspondence with the inventor, and is endeavouring to form a conclusion whether that automatic buoy has reached that stage of advancement when it would be safe for us to purchase any of them. The chief engineer says :

There is no doubt that the local sentiment is very strongly in favour of establishing a first-class modern lightship in the fairway outside Halifax harbour, and such a lightship would doubtless be regarded by sailors as the best aid to navigation that we could possibly put. Personally, I have never been able to convince myself that so expensive an aid is absolutely necessary.

That is the state of mind the chief engineer is in now, and as he doubts the absolute necessity for a new lightship recommended by these gentlemen whose report I have read, I have not yet been able to reach the conclusion that I would be justified in recommending to council that such an aid to navigation was imperatively necessary and that immediate provision should be made for it.

There are one or two other points to which my hon. friend referred and concerning which I would like to draw attention to the report made upon them. For instance, with reference to bombs :

In regard to Captain Pye's statement that since changing the time of firing the bombs from twenty minutes' to ten minutes' interval neither he nor his officers have been able to hear them, it would infer that a change has also been made in the explosive power of the cartridges since supplied. We have no information in regard to this, but presume that no such change has been made; and we have evidence that they have been distinctly heard by others.

With regard to Meagher's Beach fog-alarm, these gentlemen say :

The sound is produced by a trumpet operated by compressed air. It is not advisable to make this alarm too powerful for fear of conflicting with the steam fog-whistle at Chebucto Head. It should be distinctly heard as far as the Litchfield buoy, and some overhauling by Inspector Stevens would doubtless result in increasing its efficiency to this end.

The chief engineer upon that recommends that a better light be put in the lantern at Meagher's Beach and an occulting light be put in at George's island. That improvement will be carried out. The improvement recommended in the report I have read is that at George's island the two vertical lights be changed to the following : Upper to be a revolving or flash white light and lower light to be a fixed white light. That also has been approved and will be carried out.

There was another point. The middle ground shoals was complained of as being somewhat dangerous to navigation, and the board of trade reported to me that the naval authorities were willing to remove that middle ground if we would undertake the expense of supplying the necessary bomb material. I advised that we would bear that expense, but was informed afterwards that the board of trade had received a letter from the officer in command stating that after making an examination of the middle ground, the work was found very expensive and recommended that it should be removed by dredging. I have, therefore, referred the papers to the Minister of Public Works, in the hope that he will remove that middle ground by dredging. It may be a little expensive but ought to be done, as far as I can judge from the reports made to me.

I do not know that I can add anything more to what has been said. If my hon. friend desires, I will give him a copy of these reports, or, better still, furnish them to the Halifax Board of Trade. And if any reasonable doubt is left in my mind, after thinking the matter over further, as to the propriety of recommending the building of this lightship, I will adopt the course recommended by my hon. friend, and take the opinions of others than the officers of the department, and have a report made, not only by the mercantile marine officers, but by the admirals and captains at the naval stations.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think it is very unfair for the hon. minister to give as a reason why that public work should not be erected, because of the opinion of one of his officers. His officer, it is well known, is confined to his office the major portion of his time and knows nothing comparatively of the necessity for the work.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Kaulbach) has already spoken.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have only a word to say—I wish to ask a question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It can only be by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. KAULBACH. I do not intend to make a speech. But I will not allow that any person can advance an opinion on this subject better than my own. I am familiar with the port ; and I think that my opinion should be accepted by the minister himself and not referred to an official with little knowledge of the requirements. I am sure the people of my own county will accept it, and will say I am right and that he is wrong in coming to the opinion he has expressed as to the report of this official, Colonel Anderson. I would also ask the minister if he is not in error with regard to the expense of the lightship. He says that it would cost $80,000 or $90,000. That seems to me an immense amount.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I spoke with knowledge when I mentioned that amount. The officer went to New York for the purpose of examining lightships and ascertaining the cost, and we learned exactly what it would cost.

Mr. R. R. DOBELL (Quebec West). I do not know that I can add very much to what has fallen from the lips of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). I entirely agree with what he has said; but I think I may, perhaps, explain a little more closely, the change that I believe is wanted in the deck-load law. I may also say that I sympathize, to a very great extent, with what has been said by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach). I once had an experience off Halifax somewhat similar to that described by the hon. member for Lunenburg. I arrived off Halifax on a January night about seven o'clock. A heavy snow storm was raging. We made Chebucto Head light, but lost it again. We went out to sea and came back, and repeated that two or three times; and it was not until morning that we got into Halifax harbour. I could easily understand that it would be of very great benefit if a powerful lightship could be anchored in such a way, that, in entering the harbour, the mariner could keep the lightship on the one hand and Chebucto Head light on the other. At the time, I made inquiry as to the practicability of placing a lightship there, but I was told that no lightship could hold in the bad weather. That, I think, is a point that requires grave consideration. The bottom there is very rocky, and I am told that in the heavy gales you get off that coast the lightship would very likely be driven on shore, and, instead of being a protection to the steamers seeking entrance to the harbour, it would actually be misleading and dangerous. But I am not sufficiently acquainted with the coast to give a definite opinion. If it is possible to put a lightship there, it should be done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) state how long it was since he received information that a lightship would not hold there?

Mr. DOBELL. Just four years ago. I made the inquiry for the purpose of suggesting to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—the present minister (Sir Louis Davies)—that it was wanted. I believe that that or some other light is wanted off Halifax.

Now, as regards deck-loads, I may express personally my disappointment that we have not had a measure introduced changing the present deck-load law, because I believe that the present law is, very largely, the cause of the discriminating in insurance against us, which has tended so much to place us at a disadvantage as compared with other North American ports. I had had two meetings with Lloyds last summer, and have had several letters from them since. They claim that it is not the total losses that caused the insurance to be so high, but the great number of small losses from deck-loads. They go as far as to state that, at one time, there was scarcely a single steamer that arrived on the other side without more or less loss. I looked into the reason for these losses, and found that the deck-loads were very carelessly put on the steamer, and very often the steamers left very cranky; so that, the moment they got to sea, over went a portion of the deck-load.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You are speaking of summer deck-loads?

Mr. DOBELL. Heavy summer deck-loads.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) allow me to ask him a question. I wish to understand this matter. In view of what he says, why do not the insurance companies forbid deck-loads, instead of placing a ban on all the ports in Canada?

Mr. DOBELL. I do not think it is necessary to forbid deck-loads. But it is necessary to take other steps to meet the case. There are certain steamers, so built,—I will give you one, as an instance. She is on her way across the Atlantic now. She carries 600 St. Petersburg Standard deals on deck—that is, Mr. Speaker, 2,000 tons on deck—and she comes across the Atlantic with perfect safety—and I should have no objection at any time, to taking passage in her. But, with some steamers, if you put half that quantity on deck, they are not safe. Before they got to the European market, a portion of that deck-load would be thrown off. And that is what Lloyds have complained of over and over again, and what I would wish to have provided for. I would like to see a law providing that no deck-loads should be sent across the Atlantic without an examination and certificate given that the vessel has been properly loaded, and also that she is not overloaded. We received very strong opposition to that proposal, as stated by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, from the city of St. John. But that is the only place in British North America that has raised any objection, and the opposition there is largely owing to the objection raised by one firm. It is quite true that the Board of Trade of St. John has sent out a petition against the change; but I claim that we should get a compensation in the carrying of winter deck-loads that would far more than counterbalance any little charge that might be made for inspecting deck-loads during summer months.

Mr. KAULBACH. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) object to saying what firm in St. John he refers to?

Mr. DOBELL. I may give the name. It is public property. I refer to Messrs. William Thompson & Company. Other firms have approved the inspection, but this firm seemed very strong against it; and, at one time, they advanced arguments that did appear unanswerable. It is not worth while for me to enter into details as to how we met their objections, but I do not think there was any ground whatever for it. But, inasmuch as that change is necessary to the removal of discriminating rates against the ports of British North America. I feel very strongly that it ought to be made. Another reason why it should be done is this—that the Board of Trade of Great Britain at present will not allow more than three feet for a winter deck-load. Now, any one acquainted with the modern steamer knows perfectly well that with three feet of a load on the deck of a steamer crossing the Atlantic, if she takes a heavy sea on board, the sea will wash up the deck-load, causing it to float to and fro along the deck of the steamer, making it very dangerous for the men. The British Board of Trade said: If you will have satisfactory inspection of your summer deck-loads, we will amend the law by bringing in a Bill to allow you to load your deck-loads up to six feet in winter. This would be quite up to the bulwarks. By that means you can make your deck-load perfectly safe, and if a sea came over the side of your ship, instead of falling into the hold, it just floats off this deck-load, and makes the ship safer for life and for property, and meets the views of Lloyds. I cannot understand why it has been stopped. I had hoped that my hon. friend and colleague would think it wise to bring in a measure to add to the safety of ships, and to the lowering of the insurance, and I believe also very much to the advantage of navigation. The time has passed, I think, for getting legislation in England for this year to establish the six feet of deck-load in winter, therefore, we can wait till next year without any loss.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I am sorry the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House (Mr. Dobell), has resumed his seat, without referring to the very important subject raised by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), a subject on which he is especially qualified to speak, that is the question of discrimination by insurance companies, the increased rates of insurance against the ports in Canada. This is a matter of the gravest importance, and one of the strong reasons upon which, I understand, the member for Halifax bases his argument as to the necessity of establishing this lightship, and of adopting every possible means to improve the harbour of Halifax, is that at this moment a harbour that is known to be one of the safest in the world, is under a ban by no less an authority than the insurance at Lloyds. There is an erroneous opinion that this is done by a committee of Lloyds. That is not the case. The insurance is fixed by the members who have desks in Lloyds, they are not under the control of what is called Lloyds' committee, who have no control over the rates of insurance. That is a matter I had occasion to learn, because I was specially requested by the Board of Trade of Sydney to investigate this question when I was last in London. I was most kindly received by Lloyds, and the fullest information was given me upon the subject, and they expressed their great regret that any such discrimination had been adopted. They said it was beyond the power of their committee to make a change, because the rate was established by the members who have desks in Lloyds, and who effect the insurance directly. I say it is urgent that the government should adopt measures to get rid of the increased rate of insurance that is now placed upon all vessels frequenting the harbours of British North America, that is practically what it amounts to. Every seafaring man knows that the port of Sydney is probably the safest on the continent of America, as there are dangers even at Halifax and on the St. Lawrence, that are not encountered at all at Sydney. Still the port of Sydney was discriminated against, with its enormous tonnage coming inwards and going outwards. The hundreds of vessels that visit that section of country are unable to go in and take the coal they require, in consequence of the increased rate of insurance that they are exposed to. My hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), knows perfectly well that there is not the slightest comparison in respect to the safety of vessels going to Sydney and those going to New York. Sydney is infinitely safer, yet a vessel goes to New York with immunity, where she is free from this additional charge imposed in Halifax and Sydney, and on the St. Lawrence generally. Looking at it from that point of view, I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not sufficiently appreciated the importance of establishing a lightship at the harbour of Halifax. The fact that there was one there before, and that it has not been maintained, does not alter the case, because since that occurred, a great improvement has been made in lightships, and it is now known that so far as the holding ground is concerned, lightships are to be found along the coasts of the United States in places where the holding ground is not anything like as good as it is in the harbour of Halifax. There is a general consensus of opinion that a lightship would greatly add to the safety of the entrance of that port. I hope that the government will give this question of discrimination immediate attention, and deal with it in the most energetic manner possible. It is a ban against the whole of Canada, and is having the most serious effect upon the trade and business of the country. I do not see why what is called Lloyds, should persist in maintaining a discrimination against Canadian ports, that is not justified by the facts, and if we cannot get relief in any other way, I would be in favour of considering the question of establishing a Canadian Lloyds of our own, in order to effectually protect our great and important shipping interests from discrimination.

Mr. DOBELL. I do not think the leader of the opposition heard what I said in my opening remarks. I said it was not so much the total losses that affected our standing at Lloyds, as the small and vexatious losses of the deck-loads.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You did not go into the general question of the discrimination against all shipping.

Mr. DOBELL. I said that if it was practical to keep a lightship on at Halifax, it was very desirable to do so. But the losses from Halifax have been very small. I do not know of any serious loss.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Still the discrimination exists.

Mr. DOBELL. Perfectly true, because Lloyds say it is the number of petty and vexatious claims they have arising from so many deck-loads being practically lost on way to Great Britain, and which we should provide against. I am happy to say that Lloyds are so well satisfied with the efforts that have been made to make our coasts safer and better lighted that even now they are not charging that 1 per cent extra insurance to September 1. After September 1, we hope they will not charge the additional 2 per cent which they charged last year, and which was a very serious burden. It is so serious, that one of the large corporations of this country, the Canada Atlantic Railway, say that after September they will not be able to bring any grain to Montreal, they will have to take it all to Boston, if this additional insurance is charged. So, I consider it is of the first importance that every effort that can be made to add to the safety from Belle Isle up the St. Lawrence and also to the Bay of Fundy, or Nova Scotian ports, should be made. There is nothing that will prove of greater advantage to the commerce of Canada than that we should be able to bring our cargoes and take our cargoes to and from Canada at the very lowest rate of insurance. It should be remembered that it is not 1 per cent on the cargo, but 1 per cent on the steamer that is charged. A steamer is worth from £75,000 to £80,000. Even some of these freight carriers cost from £150,000 to £200,000, and if they are to discriminate after September 1 to the extent of from 2 per cent to 3 per cent, it is prohibitive. Lloyds say that if you only can get through this year without any losses, this discrimination may be removed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to distinctly understand if it is a fact that, because the underwriters have lost on deck-loads, they have placed this ban upon all the harbours in Canada in respect to risks which do not relate to deck-loads at all. That seems to be a most extraordinary and illogical course.

Mr. DOBELL. I do not think any one would lay claim to that, because they take the average of their losses and see the result at the end of the year. If they have lost money in British North America, there is one or other of the underwriters who will say: What rate can you give on that risk? I will take nothing further north than Portland. Naturally, they have to go to outsiders to underwrite these risks, and they must pay a higher rate. When you have losses like that of the Scotsman and the Castilian upon our shores, although we are really not responsible for these, they operate against us. But, Lloyd's clearly say that they do not intend to go on in that way, because, they say: If you escape this year without any such losses we will remove that discrimination next year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They even charged the Labrador against us.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I think it is almost a pity that, with the best of intentions, we have permitted the question of insurance rates to be associated with the question of a lightship in Halifax harbour, because the question of the discrimination in insurance rates has nothing to do with losses that have occurred to vessels going into the port of Halifax. I am inclined to believe that the question of the discrimination of insurance rates is not based upon anything that has happened in connection with the harbour of Halifax, and that whether we should put a lightship off that harbour or not, although I would like to see one placed there, it would not have any serious effect on the question of insurance rates. But, I desire it to be understood that, while the question of insurance rates has arisen, it has not arisen because of any difficulty in connection with the harbour of Halifax, which, as has been pointed out, is one of the finest harbours in the world.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will not understand me to suggest that that was the case.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) did not understand it in that way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was suggesting that since the board of trade has raised the question of the deficiency in the approaches to the harbour, it was the duty of the government, particularly at this period, to give attention to that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite understand that my hon. friend is only doing his duty in bringing the matter up here. At the same time, I think it is well that we should record the fact that the questions are in no way associated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, I agree with that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) will be able, at no distant day, to comply with the request that has been made, but I would not like the impression to go abroad that even if a lightship should not be placed in Halifax harbour, the harbour would cease to be what it has always been, one of the best harbours in the world. When you get away from Halifax, I believe that, next to Halifax, the best harbour in Canada is the harbour of Shelburne, but it is too near six o'clock to dwell upon that.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

It being six o'clock, the committee took recess.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). When last I spoke on this matter I had concluded a review of the facts and the returns relative to the question of Mr. Ryley's conduct, touching important matters on the charges which I made relative to Mr. Philp having obtained concessions, or leases as they were termed, and of the connection that he said existed between Major Walsh, Mr. Sifton and himself in that regard. Now, the other improper interference of which I complain on the part of Mr. Ryley, is in connection with Dominion Creek. In the resolution that I took the responsibility of moving on the 31st of May it was important to show, touching the interest Major Walsh exhibited with reference to claims located by his servants and his ordering of the transfer of these claims to his brother, that he was the chief actor in regard to the closing of these properties against outside competition. The statement in my resolution was:

The Dominion Creek hills and benches in the Yukon district were closed from the location of claims by order of Major Walsh, contrary to the protest of the gold commissioner, on November 15, 1897.

I gave in that paragraph two references; one to page 79 of the evidence before the commission and the other to page 80; the former fully supporting the statement that the gold commissioner protested, and the later showing that the closing of the creek begun on the 15th of November, 1897. That was not (as often these resolutions may be in the introductory statement), a full and complete statement, but it was substantially correct because it was introducing as a relevant point the fact that Major Walsh was the party responsible for the closing of the creek. The evidence shows that while Major Walsh had the supreme authority he did not actually reach Dawson, though he had his commission. He was in the territory, however, on the 15th of November, 1897, and Mr. Fawcett had closed the creek proper, but not the hills and benches at that date. Major Walsh was shown to have come to Dawson and approved of Mr. Fawcett's action in closing the creek claims, and thus taking complete charge, and contrary to the written protest of Mr. Fawcett closing the hills and benches. It was considered important by the government in resisting this motion, and to establish that the foundation of this charge was entirely aside from the facts, to show that in truth Major Walsh had not been instrumental in closing the creek, but that it was the sole act of Mr. Fawcett, and the House must have appreciated the force of that argument if it were founded on the evidence because then a portion of the irregularity that was charged against Major Walsh would fall to the ground, and it would be seen that he had not paved the way for his servants and employees to go in advance of other prospectors and locate and record claims to advantage, which were afterwards to be transferred by Major Walsh to his brother. Therefore, as heretofore, in order to strengthen the position of the government on that point, Mr. Ryley was brought forth. Before coming to that point it is necessary for me to refer to the complete authority and responsibility of Major Walsh and his ratification of the action of Mr. Fawcett, which only partially served the plan upon which he subsequently acted. On February 7, of this session, this House ordered a return:

Of all reports, papers, telegrams and correspondence not already brought down relating to the closing (so-called) and opening (so-called) of Dominion Creek, referred to on page 79 of the Yukon evidence blue-book.

And it is significant that that order was not complied with until long after the debate, which was on the 31st of May. The order was complied with on the 13th of June; but the acting Minister of the Interior made use of a part of that return which had not been brought down, and which shows the ingenuity of Mr. Ryley, and that is the document we will find relied upon by the Solicitor General and by the acting minister in combatting that substantial point as to the responsibility for the closing of the Dominion Creek hills and benches—because Dominion Creek could not be closed by simply closing the creek proper. Dominion Creek was fully closed, of course, when the hills and benches were removed from the enterprise of prospectors. On page 10 of this return, there is a memorandum entitled 'Memo. re closing of Dominion Creek;' and the statement there is from Mr. Fawcett:

No applications were accepted for claims on Dominion Creek from the 15th November, 1897, until after the 20th of December, 1897. Then, afterwards, at the solicitation of a number of applicants, the limit of the closed portion was set by me at 120 below. This I placed far enough down, so that the closed part would include all claims recorded prior to the closing. Again:

From the latter part of December until the 1st of February, there were more than 150 claims staked and recorded on the lower part of Dominion Creek.

Showing that by the action of Mr. Fawcett there had not been any complete closing of the hills and benches of the creek.

The closing of Dominion Creek was reported to Major Walsh, and approved by him.

Now, that information was before Mr. Ryley; but the information he gave to the acting minister and the Solicitor General is found on page 9 of this return; and we will see the part which Mr. Ryley played in this connection. He conducted an ex parte examination of Mr. Fawcett with an obvious purpose, so far as this paper goes; that is, in the language of lawyers, he led him and induced him to say by his questions as follows:

Q. At what date did you discontinue granting entries for claims on Dominion Creek?—A. November 15, 1897.

Q. What was your reason for closing the creek?

And so he goes on—no reference whatever in that document—and that is my object in referring to it—to the action of Major Walsh; and anybody looking at that return and reading that part of it prepared by Mr. Ryley, and his examination by Mr. Fawcett, would come to the conclusion that the acting minister came to and the Solicitor General came to, that is, that instead of Major Walsh having anything to do with the closing of that creek, it was Mr. Fawcett. I think that is clear. Neither of these gentlemen had pointed out to them by Mr. Ryley the manner of the classification of claims on Dominion Creek—the creek claims, the hills, and the benches. But when we come to the use that is made of this information, I would refer the committee to the Solicitor General's statement in debate. He was arguing—and his point was well taken if the facts warranted it—that I was entirely on the wrong track, that Major

Walsh did not interfere, that it was Mr. Fawcett, and therefore, there would have been no design at any rate on the part of Major Walsh to give his servants any advantage. And so he says:

The information I have is that it was done on the 17th of November, 1897, before Major Walsh went into that country, and that it was done, not by Major Walsh, but by Mr. Fawcett. That is the information I get from the officials of the department. Now, Mr. Walsh proceeds to the Yukon and arrives in Dawson—

I interrupt him on this point, and he says:

What I said a moment ago is information that I got from Mr. Ryley. I do not know who the gentleman is at all. It is to the effect that on November 15, 1897, Dominion Creek was closed by the gold commissioner, Thomas Fawcett. I give the information that was given to me.

Then he says:

Mr. Walsh reached Dawson somewhere towards the end of the month of May. It was then determined that as this creek had been surveyed, it would be advisable to open it up for settlement.

So that we have it, according to this, that Mr. Fawcett closed the creek, and Major Walsh interfered simply to open it. Again the Solicitor General says:

My hon. friend will realize that in the autumn of 1897, Mr. Walsh could not have given these instructions, because he was then on the road to the Yukon; he did not give them, and he never was consulted about them, and Mr. Fawcett never acted under his instructions at all.

Again, he says—and he appreciated the strong point he was making if his facts were right:

First, what about Dominion Creek? Was Dominion Creek closed by Major Walsh or not? My information is that Dominion Creek was closed on November 15, 1897, previous to the coming of Major Walsh into the country, and further that Dominion Creek was closed at that time without the intervention of Major Walsh.

This statement simply indicates that he had not been fully advised. He was not far wrong, but the statement before that was. Then, the acting Minister of the Interior came on, fortified by this document prepared by Mr. Ryley, and at page 6602 he says:

I find that among the statements of the hon. gentleman is this one, that Dominion Creek hills and benches in the Yukon district were closed for the location of claims by order of Major Walsh, and contrary to the protest of the gold commissioner, on the 15th of November, 1897.

Then, again:

I do not think that he has done that— That is, bring such evidence as would lead one to believe that the statement was reasonably true—

—but on the contrary, I think I can show clearly and beyond doubt that this statement on which he asks us to vote censure on the government is not true.

Then, the acting minister reads the document which I have read, which was the result of Mr. Ryley's ex parte examination; and undoubtedly that was the document on which both he and the Solicitor General took such strong ground. I now turn to the evidence or oath of Mr. Fawcett taken before Mr. Ogilvie. I shall not weary the committee by reading page 79, because that has been read already, and some difference of opinion has been expressed as to what it means, but the following references in the evidence will remove all doubt :

Mr. Fawcett, examined by Commissioner Ogilvie :

Q. I would like to ask you a few questions about the history of Dominion Creek. When was the creek closed, not for hills and benches?

—A. The 15th November was the last date on which any applications were taken.

Q. The date of the closure you have given, did you immediately report that to Ottawa?

A. Yes, and also to Major Walsh.

Q. Was it endorsed by Major Walsh?—A. It was.

Q. Did you permit prospecting to go on on the hillsides?—A. There was no recording or prospecting on the hillsides until the spring, when the men were over there surveying.

Q. When?—A. In April.

Q. Then they began to prospect?—A. Yes; the first prospecting was in April.

Q. You received these applications, didn't you, in the office?—A. Yes, we noted them.

Q. Didn't put them on record?—A. No, because we were not in a position to designate them properly until the ground was surveyed.

Q. Was that privilege of prospecting and making application for record abrogated?—A. No, sir, that was open to every one.

Q. Was it afterwards abrogated?—A. It was, under the resolution that declared the hills and benches closed.

On page 80, that resolution is set out which Mr. Fawcett says he protested against. After setting out the resolution of the 30th of May, passed by Mr. Walsh and his informal council, he says :

I may say that this was moved by Mr. McGregor in council, and he gave as his reason for bringing up this resolution that he had told people on the creeks that the hills were not open, and said he was not going to be made a fool of; and so he presented this resolution.

Q. Did you object?—A. I did.

Q. On what ground?—A. On the ground that men had gone out there under my permission and had prospected, staked their claims, made applications at the office, and their applications had been accepted, and I thought that this would simply throw them out, undoing the work I had done. It was no longer the rule of the gold commissioner; I was overridden by the council. That occurred on the 28th May, and the creek was considered closed then.

Later on he says :

Frank Buteau asked: Why was Dominion Creek closed? Do you recollect what you answered?—A. I think I answered I do not know; that was regarding the hills and benches. That is the proper answer.

Those members of the committee who have followed this at all will appreciate my point, namely, that the statement in the resolution is strictly accurate, although at first blush it would not seem to be so, for this reason, that any one reading that resolution of the 30th of May will see that on that date, contrary to the intention of Mr. Fawcett and against his protest, Mr. Walsh and his council passed a declaratory resolution that the hills and benches—that is, the whole of that creek—were closed, and by virtue of this order of Mr. Fawcett. Mr. Fawcett complained in his evidence that he only closed the creek claims and allowed prospecting on hills and benches, but Major Walsh came in and applied a total closure by this declaratory resolution, confirming the construction that Mr. McGregor had put on the order of Mr. Fawcett of November, that everything was closed by that order. But that result could not obviously have happened had Mr. Fawcett had his way, and it happened simply because the man in supreme control, Mr. Walsh, insisted on having his way and had it.

On page 88, of the evidence, Mr. Fawcett thus gives evidence :

Q. When was the privilege stopped on the hillsides?—A. On the 30th May.

Q. What led to it?—A. A resolution by Major Walsh and his council.

Q. How was that council constituted?—A. The commissioner was the council himself, but there were other members of the administration whom he invited in for consultation; he sometimes sent written requests that we should call upon him. On this occasion there were present Messrs. Wade, Bliss, McGregor, myself and Mr. Pattullo, who acted as secretary for whatever was done.

Q. Do you recognize that as his report?—A. I recognize Mr. Pattullo's signature.

Q. Would you read the part of it relating to the closing of the creek ?

Then he read what I have already cited. This provision applies to hill and bench claims as well as creek claims, and besides, if the creek was closed since the middle of November, at the time Mr. Fawcett says, he only acted on the supposition that he had closed the creek claims. This resolution, however, declares the whole thing closed.

These council meetings were held after the office was closed; during the office hours all the officials were busy, and Major Walsh himself was open to the public. These meetings, therefore, took place in the evening.

Q. Did you object to that being done?—A. I did.

Q. Why?—A. Because a great many miners had gone to the hills with my permission, and staked their claims, made applications and had the applications accepted as far as protecting of claims, so far as we could, pending the return of the survey. I considered I had granted them a right, and this motion was taking the right away from them, that is why I objected; I would not have had any objection had that not been the case; I did not object on that ground.

Q. Your objection was overruled?—A. I was in the minority.

Then, at pages 110 and 112 of the evidence, there are further references in the evidence by Mr. Craig and Mr. Bolton, two clerks in the office, and they confirmed Mr. Fawcett's statement in full.

Then, we have a formal answer given in this House to a formal question. I have referred to this before, but I think it ought to be mentioned in this connection to make the statement complete. On page 14, the minister was asked a question as to this and he answered, and no doubt that answer was prepared by Mr. Ryley, just as he has prepared nearly all the briefs the ministers have held on this subject.

The department have approved of the action of the commissioner of the Yukon territory closing Dominion Creek. This is the only case of the closing of a creek that is on record in the department.

I think I have made good my position, and that was that the House was misled by the statement prepared by Mr. Ryley. I understand, though I have not a copy in my hands, that the acting minister read an explanation from Mr. Ryley to the effect that he had not appreciated this distinction between the creek claims and the hillsides and the benches when he was consulted by his minister. I am not going to dispute that, I am not going to say that Mr. Ryley told an untruth, but coupled with the experience that I have had in regard to this Philp matter and the very important use that was made of Mr. Ryley's information touching this question of debate, I think that there is more than cause for complaint. I do not believe that an officer who has figured in the debates, as that officer has, is entitled to remain in the responsible position he holds. My position is that no minister ought to drag into debate the names of subordinate officers. He has supplied to him officers to do all the necessary departmental work, and if he has not sufficient assistance he is entitled to ask for more. But when he retains these officers and acts on their information and does not dismiss them, he assumes responsibility for all that they do, and under our system he is bound to assume in every sense all responsibility. And here we have this officer in this position, and the minister asking in this appropriation not merely that the usual salary shall be voted to him, but that he shall have an increment to his salary to the extent of $400. I would propose that the salary be not voted. I move:

That all words relating to Mr. Ryley be struck out, and that the item be reduced by $2,000.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), in discussing this item, has discussed a great many other questions in connection with the Yukon. I do not intend to take up the time of the committee making any particular references to his remarks in that connection, except on one or two particular points. The hon. gentleman tries to make it appear, or to make himself believe, that Mr. Philp, who was at one time, I understand, one of the partners in the law firm of which the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) was the head, received some special favours at the hands of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) as Minister of the Interior. Like other members of the committee, I have followed the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) on previous occasions, and also through the long speech we heard last night and to-night, and I fail yet to see where, in one instance, Mr. Philp was treated by the minister in any different way from any other individual making an application for a mining claim or dredging lease. The insinuation is made that because, at one time, Mr. Philp happened to be a law partner of the present Minister of the Interior, there must be something wrong. On the contrary, I think it will be seen that Mr. Philp received from the minister and the department exactly the same treatment as dozens, if not hundreds, of other applicants did. Now, there was some very unfair evidence given in this matter by the hon. gentleman. He said that it was reported by some one that Mr. Philp or some person had stated that the Minister of the Interior had some interest in these leases, or would grant some special favour. I think the hon. gentleman read some documents, anonymous letters, or reported statements—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
No anonymous letters.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not anonymous letters—well, letters by some dissatisfied people, that this was told them by Mr. Philp. No reasonable person would think for a moment that because another stated that he had some special privilege, or would get some special privilege, or that the minister was in any way interested in any of the claims in which these gentlemen were interested, there was any real evidence against the minister. On the contrary, I am free to say that I believe, and it will be found, that the Minister of the Interior had at no time any connection or association with Mr. Philp or any person else in any claim, dredging or otherwise, in connection with the department.

But, during this debate, my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has proven one thing. We know that during last session, hours of the time of this House were taken trying to prove that the present Minister of the Interior had given a liquor permit to Mr. Philp. The newspapers throughout the country have been full of this charge, a serious charge against the minister, that he had granted a liquor permit to this partner of his, while others could not get such permits from the department. The leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), I understand, while he was out west, repeated this very serious charge against the Minister of the Interior, and stated that he knew it to be a fact that Mr. Philp had received a permit, that he had taken liquor into the Yukon, and that the Minister of the Interior was associated with him in the profits. But, to-night, what do we see? We have the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) standing up in this House and exploding that untruthful statement, that slander, and showing that while Mr. Philp telegraphed the minister asking the permission of the department to take in liquor into the country, the minister at once telegraphed him that he would not grant him the permit. Mr. Chairman, I think, after all the country has heard about this very charge against the minister—and it is one of the most serious, one of the most aggravatedly untrue statements made against that hon. gentleman—the people will note with satisfaction that we have the evidence from the mouth of the hon. member for Pictou himself that there is not one iota of truth in that charge—that not only was there nothing in it, but that the application of Mr. Philp was at once and promptly refused. In view of the kind of evidence that has been given here, and outside this House in the newspapers, against the Minister of the Interior, in view of the way he has been attacked and slandered, now that it has been proved beyond any doubt that there was not a syllable of truth in that charge, hon. members will be able to judge of the value of other statements that are made against the minister. It will be found the same way with regard to all the charges made concerning dredging claims. There is not a single iota of truth in the statement that the hon. minister (Mr. Sifton) has ever granted any special favour or has had, directly or indirectly, an interest to the extent of a single dollar in any of these transactions. We had the statement of the minister, of course, on a previous occasion; and we all believed and felt that there was no truth in the accusation made against him. But now we have the evidence from the hon. gentleman himself; and we want the people to know that they may compare this with all the other malicious and untruthful statements made without evidence against the Minister of the Interior. And I may say that I have no doubt that, as time goes on, whatever evidence—if evidence it may be called—has been furnished from time to time to try and blacken the character of the Minister of the Interior, to try to make the people believe that there was something wrong, it will be found as unreliable and as completely without foundation as this particular charge has been. The members of this House and the people of this country will find that since the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) took charge of the department, he has administered its affairs promptly and in a businesslike way, to the satisfaction of the great number of people who have business to transact with the department. And it is because of the satisfaction he has given to the people of the west in dealing with the affairs of the department in a prompt and businesslike way, that the charges are made against him, in order, if possible, to injure him in this way in the country. But, he has administered the department ably and honestly, and no person, I am sure, can be found, either in the House or out of it, that dares, in any substantial way, to say anything to the contrary.

Now, with regard to the charges that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made concerning Mr. Ryley, one of the officials of the department: I do not think that the members of this committee will think that he has maintained that charge. I was inclined to think that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) simply moved this motion that he might have an opportunity, which he has enjoyed, of dealing, for a few hours, with these old matters that we have heard re-hashed so often. Now, what are the charges the member for Pictou makes against Mr. Ryley? The first charge is:

That he prepared a memorandum for the minister, upon which the minister made a statement that A. E. Philp had not obtained a lease at all, that he suppressed the fact that he had received an option, which he considered was tantamount to a lease.

Now, I say the hon. gentleman has not proved that statement. When an official of a department is asked for information in the branch to which he belongs, his only duty is to furnish that information. The hon. gentleman has argued that because he kept back some information that would put a different phase on this question, for that reason he was guilty. He does not say that Mr. Ryley did not give a correct and truthful statement to the question asked of him, but that he did not furnish some further evidence that was in the department, and that was not asked for. Now, what is Mr. Ryley's answer, and what is the evidence we have? My answer to the argument of the hon. gentleman that it was desirable to have a full explanation of this matter, and that Mr. Ryley should have given further evidence on that memorandum, is this, that the House, that the hon. gentleman himself, that the minister, who the hon. gentleman says was deceived by this memorandum, were all in full possession of that information from a return that was brought down and laid on the Table of the House some time before, giving the fullest information with regard to the applications that had been made for the leases to which the hon. gentleman refers. The hon. gentleman was in full possession of that knowledge, the minister was in full possession of that knowledge, the members of this House were in full possession of it. How then could the memorandum that Mr. Ryley gave to the minister, either deceive the minister, or deceive the member for Pictou, or deceive the members of this House? I submit, Mr. Chairman, that so far as this particular charge is concerned, there is not the slightest suspicion attached to Mr. Ryley of an intention to do anything wrong at all.

Now, the second charge is that in his memorandum to the minister he had stated that he had full control of matters pertaining to the branch, and that the minister also stated that he had practically delegated to him authority and discretion to administer the affairs of the branch. Now, that, so far as it was stated by the minister, was strictly true. The applications are received by Mr. Ryley, or the clerk under him, without any knowledge of the minister, who does not trouble with them. I do not know that it is necessary for me to refer to that in defence of Mr. Ryley, but the hon. gentleman has laid some stress on the fact that an option was a lease, and so on, and that the applications should have been included in this second return, although the information was already in possession of the House. Now, the facts are these: In the department an application is received from any person, either on behalf of himself or on behalf of another; and the rule in the department is that the application cannot either be withdrawn, nor will the lease be granted to the person, or to any assignee he may have, without either a power of attorney, if the application is made on behalf of another, or the evidence that the party that applied for it is entitled to it. So that nothing could have occurred that was irregular. Why, at that very time, by the returns brought down, we find there were some seventy-eight applications from different parties all over the country for these dredging leases, and every one of them was treated exactly as Mr. Philp was. That is why I say that there has not been the slightest evidence submitted by the hon. gentleman to show that Mr. Ryley, in furnishing the information that he did, has done anything wrong, or acted inconsistently with his position as an honest and straightforward officer of the department.

The hon. gentleman laid a good deal of stress upon the point that in giving information with regard to applications, and so on, before the department, he had, under the direction of the minister, acted in some way differently from that which had been previously the practice of the department. Now, Sir, I am assured that that practice has prevailed for a great many years in the department, there was no change whatever in that respect.

Now, the reason that we have asked for an increase of salary to Mr. Ryley on the present occasion, is that he has been a long time in the service, and I find that Mr. Daly recognized that he should be made a chief clerk. He has been a very efficient officer, and the duties he has to perform in the timber and mines branch have increased. In fact his work has nearly doubled within the last two years. I think it is only fair that when a gentleman proves himself efficient in his position, and is performing more than double the work he had previously to do, some recognition should be given of his services that he has performed to the satisfaction of the minister and to the satisfaction of the public. I may say this on behalf of Mr. Ryley, that from my own personal knowledge, since I have been in the department, and from information I have received, for some time he has been accustomed to work steadily from nine o'clock in the morning until six o'clock every day, and has often come back nights in order to overtake the increased work in the branch of which he is the head. Under these circumstances I think I can appeal confidently to the committee to vote down the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman against granting this increase of salary to Mr. Ryley.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to correct a statement made by the acting minister, which, to my mind, seems extraordinary. He said I had withdrawn the charge that was made last year touching the nature of the permit that had been given to Mr. Philp. I did nothing of the kind. What I read was Mr. Philp's own statement in which he mentioned that he had never been interested, directly or indirectly, in any liquor permits. I read that with only a passing comment on the fact that he obtained a permit from Mr. Sifton to the officers of the Yukon district, which reads thus:

This letter introduces Mr. Philp, who will be permitted to enter the Yukon district with such provisions as he may choose to take with him, without regard to the regulations.

He telegraphed to the minister asking him to wire if that permit included liquors, and I, of course, stated that the minister wired back that it did not. And yet that same gentleman, after having obtained that permit, as was shown last year by a letter read to this House, trafficked in it, or endeavoured to sell it for a large sum of money, to be used for the purpose of taking liquors into the Yukon, and he wired again to Mr. Sifton later on that he never had been interested, directly or indirectly, in the subject of liquors going into the Yukon. I do not comment upon it. The two telegrams speak for themselves, but whatever interpretation was afterwards put upon that document by the hon. Minister of the Interior, or Mr. Philp, I never withdrew the argument, and it was only argument, I admit, that was based on the document itself, about which there is no dispute, that it covered liquors, that it was sufficient, coming from the minister, to have enabled liquor to have been taken in. I am not going into the argument of the other side, that it was not sufficient. I did not conceal any of the facts that the minister produced, that is, subsequent correspondence between Mr. Philp and himself to show that when Mr. Philp asked that this permit should be declared to include liquors the minister said that if he wished to obtain a permit to take liquors in he would have to apply in the regular way. So, there is no explosion of the statement that I made, and the matter stands where it was. While hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have their views, I do not agree with them. Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) puts Mr. Philp in a very extraordinary position. He uses strong language in regard to the statement made by Mr. Philp, that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) was interested with him in these leases or options, or exclusive rights which he, notoriously, from the evidence, was hawking about the country, and upon some of which he was obtaining cash. In regard to that subject Mr. Philp made the statement in a letter to Mr. Burnett, of the city of Vancouver, that the hon. Minister of the Interior was interested. The hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) says that there is not a word of truth in that. He brands the statement of Mr. Philp in the strong language that the sentence conveys.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not know enough about Mr. Philp—I never met the gentleman—to say that I will stake my reputation on his letter, or his statement, and I told the committee that I had no evidence that Mr. Philp's statement is true, but, my point was that the subject was one that the hon. Minister of the Interior ought to have been willing to have had an inquiry into for the reason that this gentleman was closely allied with him when he entered the government and that from that time on he was closely identified with him as one of his personal and political friends, and since that letter was written by Mr. Philp, and the hon. gentleman made the statement on the floor of the House, Mr. Philp has obtained extraordinary treatment at the hands of the Department of the Interior. The hon. gentleman met me fairly if he could have supported what was said. He met me by saying that this gentleman received no exceptional treatment at the hands of the Department of the Interior. I showed that the regulations were broken on his behalf, I showed, as distinctly as a person could show, that the laws of the country were violated on behalf of Mr. Philp and in his interest by the Department of the Interior. I showed that that gentleman had got extensions of his options whenever he desired them, running, in one case, from January clean up to August, when Mr. Claxton could only get an extension from the 28th of March to the 31st of March, and no longer. That is exceptional treatment. I am told that Mr. Claxton, who lives in Montreal, is a Conservative. I do not know whether he is or not. I presented a schedule based on the return to indicate the extraordinary concessions given to Mr. Philp

in regard to these regulations, even before these regulations had become the law of the land. So, I do not think the hon. gentleman has made good the very strong statements he has given to the committee by way of an attempted answer to me. Then, touching the statement of Mr. Ryley, if the hon. acting minister is content to leave that matter where he put it, I am content. He says: We have all the information before us touching what remained unsaid by Mr. Ryley in that memorandum, and he referred to the document brought down among a pack of documents about a yard deep last session. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman never saw that document last session. I venture to say that not a single member of this House ever saw that document last session or ever referred to it. I say, further, that the hon. gentleman has not met, in any fair or reasonable sense, the statement I made, that if the facts that we know now by the return this session had been before us, neither the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), nor the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), nor, I hope, the hon. Minister of the Interior himself, would have used the language that was used by him on the strength of Mr. Ryley's statement, that he would choke my statements down my throat. That was the language of the hon. Minister of the Interior. The right hon. Prime Minister having said that I had been guilty of falsehood, I venture to say, with the facts before us, would not repeat that statement. I would be very much surprised if any hon. member of the House would repeat it in face of the evidence, and this evidence was in the possession of Mr. Ryley. When the hon. Minister of the Interior asked him, not as Mr. Ryley says, because we must take the word of the minister, for information, he asked Mr. Ryley to give him, not the specific statement that Mr. Ryley says he asked, whether leases had been granted, but he asked for a full and complete statement on that subject from Mr. Ryley, and my quarrel to-night, on that point, and my grievance is that there was no full statement, and in the absence of a full statement that debate took a turn that it could not have possibly taken if a full, fair and accurate statement had been made to the hon. Minister of the Interior by Mr. Ryley.

Amendment (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) negatived.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). I would like to ask the hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) for the names of the five second-class clerks who are left at $1,100.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are James Dunnett, James Ferguson, Peter Robertson and Pierre Marchand. There is one vacancy. Mr. Rowatt was promoted, and his place has not been filled.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is that estimated for ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no person named for it. I suppose it will be filled by the promotion of some of these other clerks. The change has not been made.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. minister able to say whom it is proposed to put in that vacancy ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No ; the deputy says that there is no decision as to who is to be promoted.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask again as to the peculiar qualifications of Mr. Marchand. The minister knows that there has been for a very long time in that department, a revenue branch, and in that branch there are clerks who are thoroughly up in all the work of the department, and it seems very hard that where there are competent clerks, who have passed through the different grades of the service, that they should be denied their chance of promotion, and that an entire stranger should be taken into the service and placed over their heads as an accountant. I wish to have the reasons of the heads of the department for doing so unusual a thing. So far as I can learn, Mr. Marchand has no special qualifications in any way.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I have already stated, the minister and the deputy took the responsibility of making this appointment, as they did not think they had a clerk in the lower class who was fit to assume the responsibility. I can give no other explanation. I suppose there might be a difference of opinion as to that, but they ought to know. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) and myself are not capable of telling the qualifications of the clerks in the office as well as those who are at the head of the department. I was informed by the deputy the other evening, when these estimates were under consideration, that they wanted a more proficient man as an accountant than they had in the lower grade.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the minister will take the responsibility of informing the House, that in the revenue branch they have no man who was capable of doing this work, and that, consequently, they had to go outside for a man who was entirely new to the civil service. That is the estimate which is now publicly stated of the young men in the service, who, from ten to fifteen years, have been doing, and doing, as I am informed, thoroughly well, the work of that department. That is a very grave charge to make, and if that be so, will the minister inform us what was the special excellence of Mr. Marchand, who he was, and where he had performed the apprenticeship which proved him to be so extraordinary an accountant that he had to be pitchforked into the Department of the Interior over and above all the old and tried servants ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If you want a clerk for a special position, I do not know that there can be any reflection on the men in the service that they are not properly doing the work assigned to them. They wanted in that branch a clerk of special qualifications, and this man was recommended, and I suppose they took the trouble—or they ought to have taken the trouble—to find out whether he had these qualifications. He would not likely be retained in the branch if he had not. I was also informed that he was a resident of this city, that he had occupied a position in a mercantile establishment, and those with whom he was employed, and others, recommended him as having the qualifications. I am told that Mr. Marchand has so far fulfilled the expectations formed of him.

Mr. FOSTER. Where did he get his experience ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I cannot now give the hon. gentleman the name of the establishment he was connected with.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the acting minister think that the committee is entitled to that information ? Surely, when you say you have to go out of the department in order to get a man of sufficiently high qualifications, the House ought to be made acquainted with the information that the department had. The minister does not seem to see anything hard in passing over all the men below $1,100 a year in the department who have spent years there, and refusing them their proper promotion, to which they had a right to look. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) were among the undergrade clerks and had done his duty well, he would not like to see a 'novus homo' put above him simply for political reasons. What information has the department as to Mr. Marchand's qualifications ?

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). I may, perhaps, be able to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) the information which he so much desires. Mr. Marchand was recommended to the office he now holds by my colleague and myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Now we have it.

Mr. BELCOURT. I have known Mr. Marchand for fifteen years, and I know that he was considered to have special qualifications for this office.

Mr. FOSTER. What were these ?

Mr. BELCOURT. If the hon. gentleman will have patience I will tell him. Mr. Marchand is a gentleman who is thoroughly well educated in French and in English, and he is a first-class accountant.

Mr. FOSTER. He understands French figures.

Mr. BELCOURT. He understands French correspondence and French accounts. Mr.

Marchand has had charge for many years of the very large mercantile interests of a gentleman in Ottawa. He is a man who is worthy of trust, and had special qualifications to fill this office. There was another reason which, perhaps, will not appeal so strongly to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), and which, though not the principal reason, or the strongest reason, was, at all events, one of the reasons that weighed with the minister in making the appointment. The former accountant of that department was Mr. Pinard. It has been felt in Ottawa that, so far as possible, the different elements should be represented in the civil service, and that the proportion of the different nationalities should be preserved as much as possible. When the late Mr. Pinard died I pressed strongly for the position, not of assistant accountant, but of accountant, and the Minister of the Interior considered he should promote some one in the office, and he promoted Mr. Beddoe. The minister consented, owing to my strong pressure, to appoint an assistant accountant, provided I recommended a first-class man. Mr. Marchand, to my personal knowledge, was a first-class accountant, having the additional qualifications I have mentioned of being thoroughly well educated in English and in French, and, under these circumstances, I think the appointment was a good one.

Mr. SPROULE. Did he pass the civil service examination?

Mr. BELCOURT. He passed both civil service examinations.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Perhaps it is well that when vacancies of this kind occur they should be filled by promotion if possible, but I draw to the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) the fact, that he did not follow that rule himself. Let me remind him that he took Mr. Jenkins into the Department of Finance. He promoted Mr. Jenkins to a position over the heads of others who had been in the department a considerable number of years, and gave him a first-class salary, besides making him his private secretary with $600 in addition to the $1,100 that he started with. In less than four years Mr. Jenkins was receiving $1,800 a year. I think the hon. gentleman divided the sum he was allowed for private secretary between Mr. Jenkins and a young lady who stayed at his house, giving Mr. Jenkins $400 and the young lady $200. So that when my hon. friend points out that men have been taken into the department and put over the heads of others, he should remember that he himself found it necessary to go outside of his department for assistance. I am not finding any fault with Mr. Jenkins; I have no doubt he was a clever man and well fitted for the position; but I am pointing out that my hon. friend did not follow that rule in his own case.

Mr. BELCOURT.

Mr. FOSTER. All we succeeded in getting from the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) was this travelling around in a circle to show that Mr. Marchand was a very fine man and fitted for the service; but we look in vain either to the acting minister or to the member for Ottawa for any information as to the special qualifications which rendered it absolutely necessary that the department should have recourse to an outside man. I know whereof I speak when I say that the acting minister will find, if he makes diligent inquiry, that he has just as good men in that department as Mr. Marchand can be. My hon. friend from Ottawa, in order that he may have a French representative in the Interior Department in the place of a French Canadian who has died, will not surely make it an absolute condition that the man who comes in must take exactly the position of the man who died.

Mr. BELCOURT. He did not.

Mr. FOSTER. But it was not through any lack of pressure on the part of my hon. friend that he did not. That is the principle he held for, and tried to have adopted, but fortunately or unfortunately he was not able to get to that point.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am sorry I did not.

Mr. FOSTER. This is just one of the political appointments that are being made in the Department of the Interior. I make the statement that the promotions and appointments in that department have been notoriously partisan from the very start. What are the facts of the case? In the first place, the old men have almost entirely gone out of that department. Mr. Burgess was set aside in order that a friend and political supporter of the minister might take his place. Mr. Hall has been set aside in order that Mr. Keyes may take his place. Mr. Commissioner Smith has been set aside in order that Mr. Turiff may take his place. Mr. Pedley has been made superintendent of immigration—Mr. Pedley, who knew about as much about immigration as any other clerk in a lawyer's office—simply as a reward for his canvassing services. Then, Mr. Preston, who was the originator of the machine, and had given great service to the party, had a position made for him at $3,000 a year, and is now hugging the machine. I suppose in the different countries of Europe. Then, there were Mr. White, the press agent, Mr. Jury, Mr. Devlin, Mr. Duncan, Mr. Grieve. I cannot take up the time of this committee naming them all; their name is legion. We may have a short digest of this when we come to the Immigration Department. Will the House attend to this, and say if the Minister of the Interior is not rushing political appointments and promotions against all rule or reason to the detriment of the great mass of the clerks, numbers of whom are refused promotion, while new clerks are put over their heads, and others are refused their statutory increase. When these hon. gentlemen came into power, Mr. Keyes was getting the moderate salary of $1,400; to-day he is getting $2,400. Mr. Campbell, a nephew, I think, of Premier Ross, was receiving $850.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Kindly tell me when Mr. Keyes entered the service?

Mr. FOSTER. I am telling the hon. gentleman and the House what has been done in making inordinate political promotions in his department. Mr. Campbell now receives $1,400. Mr. Rowatt had $950; he is now receiving $1,400. Mr. Dunnet had $650; he is now receiving $1,100. Mr. Ferguson has been put in at the second class minimum of $1,100. Mr. Robertson was receiving $950; he is now receiving $1,100. Mr. Marchand was not in the service, and he is receiving $1,100. Mr. McKenna was receiving $1,400 when these gentlemen came into power; he is now receiving $2,050. These are samples of the kind of inordinate promotions for political purposes and grounds solely, which are going on in the Department of the Interior, until every well-meaning, honest clerk in that department feels that there is no chance for fair progress from one grade to another on merit alone, as against the favourites of the minister. Now, I do not think there is any necessity for me to reply to the hon. member for North Wellington. He answered himself, as he always does in these later times. There is no greater example of inconsistency to be picked out from the Atlantic to the Pacific than that hon. member in these degenerate times of the new liberalism. Well, I have done my duty as far as I can in showing this state of things, which I am sure will be appreciated by the country, whether it is by the committee on that side or not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All I have to say is that while I have very little knowledge of the politics of the gentlemen in the department, or whether they have any party feeling. In looking over the list I find that the hon. gentleman is not correct in trying to make it appear that the clerks have been unfairly dealt with for partisan purposes. I find that the promotions and the higher salaries paid by the Minister of the Interior have gone to well-known Conservatives, at least to gentlemen who took an active part on the Conservative side before they were appointed, and who were appointed by a Conservative government. Nobody will dispute that. If the hon. gentleman pretends that this efficient officer, whom he names, who had been in the department for twenty years and was found to be one of the most faithful and efficient officers in it, had been kept back simply because he was appointed by a Liberal government, then the sin is on his shoulders and not on Mr. Sifton's. The others were all, I understand, appointed by Conservatives and some of them were well-known Conservative workers before appointment.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). There is one thing that does not seem to accord very closely with the principles laid down by the Reform party before they came into power, and that is this increasing of salaries at rates far above the statutory increase. This is hardly in accord with that plank in their platform of stringent economy in public affairs. We would have no reason to complain of this increase of $500 if equal justice were done the others who are serving at lower salaries, but what we complain of is that many faithful and deserving officers have been kept out of their statutory increase of $50 per year, to which they were entitled, while special favourites of the government are given advances of eight times that amount. The hon. member for Ottawa said that, in the special case under consideration, the officer was deserving of this large increase because he understood French and English. I do not know whether accounts are sent in indiscriminately in French and English or not, but I am confident that there are many men in the department who are just as capable of making up the accounts in both languages as this gentleman is. I was somewhat amused at the other argument of the hon. member for Ottawa, that because a Frenchman occupied this position before, no one of any other nationality should replace him; and not only that, but whatever other Frenchman was put in his place should be given at the outset as high a salary as his predecessor had acquired after years of labour and experience. No business man would pretend that a man is equally good who is new to the business as one who has been working at it for years. I was further amused at the pretense made by the hon. member for North Wellington, who, as we all know, is a slavish supporter of the government. His argument is the time-honoured one of, 'You're another.' But I would remind that hon. gentleman that when he was in opposition there was no man who condemned that style of argument more vigorously. If the hon. gentleman has no better argument than that to offer in support of the government, it would be more in keeping with his dignity if he would remain silent in his seat.

Department of the Interior—To increase the salary of Mr. James White, geographer of the Department of the Interior, from $1,600 to $1,800, from July 1, 1899, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $200
Contingencies—Printing and stationery ...$1,000

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. White was transferred from the Geological Survey on the 1st of July, 1899 and appointed geographer for the Department of the Interior at a salary of $1,800. But in the estimates of that year he was only voted $1,600, and the matter was overlooked in the supplementaries. The sum voted for the fiscal year for printing and stationery was $8,500, the same amount as has been voted for that service for some years past. Last year, it was found necessary to increase the vote by $1,000. The same additional sum will be required this year. The money is needed in connection with books, forms, &c., used in connection with the various departments. Owing to the growth of the general business, the cost of supplies has greatly increased, especially the amount spent for typewriting machines.

Dominion lands chargeable to capital—to pay L. E. Fontaine difference between $400 per annum and $3 per day for sixty days' services, from January 17, 1899, to March 18, 1899, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $112 67

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Fontaine was employed at $3 a day in the Surveyor General's branch, in connection with the examination of survey returns. The Auditor General ruled that it was not legal to pay him more than $400 per annum.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Fontaine a temporary clerk ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, and the desire was to pay him at the rate at which he had been employed, $3 a day ; and this is to make up the balance.

Mr. FOSTER. The question arises, if they want a temporary clerk for a number of days, why they should pay him at the rate of $900 a year, instead of complying with what the statute allows for a temporary clerk.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You cannot get a man at $400 a year with the technical knowledge required for this work.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the kind of work ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know that I can quite explain it. He was in the Surveyor General's branch, and was doing, as I understand it, technical work, work that required a specially qualified man. Mr. Fontaine was engaged by the Surveyor General who thought he had authority to pay him $3 a day.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Fontaine now engaged in the service ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not certain.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will make a note of it, and will get the information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Department of the Interior—To supply seed grain to settlers whose crops were destroyed in 1899 ..... $6,000

Mr. FOSTER. Please explain this.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On the 15th of August, 1899, a cyclone passed over Flett Springs and Stoney Creek settlement in the neighbourhood of Prince Albert, totally destroying the crop. Petitions were sent in stating that unless the settlers got advances of seed grain, they could not seed the land they had ready. The homestead inspector, Mr. McArthur, was instructed to investigate, and he confirmed the statements of the petition. At Rosthern and Hague south of Prince Albert, there was a very severe loss by frost ; and it was decided to supply those whose applications were in on the 23rd of February last. There is a full report made by Mr. McArthur, giving the names and the amounts.

Mr. FOSTER. Was this a gift or a loan ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The borrowers give security on their property for the amount. Where they have no patent, it is entered against their land, and where they have a patent a mortgage was given.

Mr. FOSTER. What rate of interest do these loans carry ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no memorandum as to that. I am informed by an hon. gentleman near me that the rule in these cases is to charge 6 per cent. If that is the rule, it will be followed in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we ought to have a pretty strong case made out before the department interferes in the loss of crops, through frost, wind or other accidents of that kind. Where are we drifting to ? For instance, I am sorry to say that the reports have come down, that, owing to high winds and drouth, the crops in portions of Manitoba seem to be utterly destroyed. Does the department propose, in all cases of that kind, even at this late day, to come to the relief of settlers in any part of the Northwest and loan them money in order to buy seed grain ? We used to have to do that in the early days, because the settlers then had not much means, nor had they many neighbours to help them, and were almost absolutely dependent on the government. But surely there must come a time when the government will not be obliged to interfere in these cases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). I do not think that seed grain is furnished in any of the provinces. But, in the Territories where, though they have self government to some extent, the land is all owned by the Dominion, and the revenues come principally to the Dominion, the case is different. This is just such a case as the hon. member referred to. These people are living a long way from the railroad and from neighbours, and they met with very heavy loss. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) would agree that, on the report of the homestead inspector that such was the case, and that the settlers would be unable to procure seed grain unless somebody came to their assistance, it was quite right for the government to act.

Mr. FOSTER. Were these old settlers?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I infer that some of them probably were, because I find they have received their patents—though, of course, they might have purchased their land. But a great majority of them must be recent settlers, or, at least, they have not prospered very much, because patents have not been granted for their lands.

Mr. FOSTER. In what part of the country are they?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On the South Saskatchewan.

Mr. FOSTER. Near Prince Albert?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that in the constituency of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) who received a large amount for the settlers on Birch River?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Without distinct knowledge, I should be inclined to think that it must be in Saskatchewan.

Mr. FOSTER. Whether it is Providence or the Minister of the Interior, who is helping the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), he certainly seems to have come in for a great deal of help. An amount of $10,000 was put in the estimates for some of his constituents at Birch River; but that was so gross a case, that, when the acting minister came to look into it, he reduced it at once to $5,000, and did not seem to think that even that would be required. And now we find that in another section of this gentleman's constituency there is to be $6,000 of public money distributed on easy terms.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It has already been distributed. I find that the accounts are nearly all in, amounting to $4,600. I think therefore, that $5,000 will cover the whole amount, and I move that the item be reduced to $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a remarkable similarity between the two cases. With the right hon. gentleman, nothing is too good for Tarte; with the Minister of the Interior, nothing seems to be too good for Davis.

Mr. CLANCY. On what terms are the repayments made?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The grain was purchased and forwarded to these people. Mr.

McArthur, the inspector, purchased the grain.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the accounts been paid?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think the accounts are paid yet. I have not the full statement here which I thought I had.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What security do they give?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In cases where the settler has not received a patent for the land, it is registered here against his land. In cases where they have received a patent, a mortgage of the value of the land has been taken from the settler. Security has been taken for the amount in each case. The quantities vary from twenty bushels to thirty or forty bushels.

Mr. CLANCY. How is that loan to be paid?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know on what terms. It is to be paid the following season after the harvest.

Mr. FOSTER. In grain or in money?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In money, at the cost price of the grain to the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister say whether that grain has been paid for or not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was bought last February. It had to be purchased early so that it could be delivered to these people in time for seeding, and they are ninety miles from a railroad. I thought I had a memorandum, which I have not, but from inquiry I have made I find that the accounts were met as they came in. I will obtain the information and produce it as to how they are paid, and whether there are any accounts still due.

Mr. FOSTER. I think you had better let that stand until we have that information. If the department has actually paid that money, they must have stolen it from some other vote, unless they got a Governor General's warrant.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have given full information as to the whole matter, and I do not think the item should be required to stand merely for want of information as to whether the accounts have been paid. I do not know of any way by which the department could steal money to pay them.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes; Mr. Tarte did it last year actually, and the Prime Minister had to acknowledge it before the House, that it was diverted from a vote from which there was no legal possibility of taking it, but they got a credit, and they used it surreptitiously. We want to know whether that is the custom of this government or not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think it is hardly fair to block the item. This was a case of the utmost necessity, as every person will recognize.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will recognize that if he is going to get along with his estimates, he had better let this one stand and take up the next.

Mr. CLANCY. What instructions were given the inspector? He evidently made a report to the hon. gentleman that he would require $6,000. Was the inspector given discretionary power to expend any sum he might think necessary?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; when the petitions were sent in they were referred to Mr. McArthur, homestead inspector, and he made a report, which I have referred to, giving the condition of the settler, the number of acres of land he owned, whether it was patented or not, what stock he had, and the necessity for assistance. On that report, instructions were given to procure this seed grain.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister will just bring down that report and give the information with reference to the other points.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman any other reports than the one he now speaks of with regard to that matter?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No official reports. If there are any I will be glad to bring them down.

Mr. SPROULE. From whom was this grain purchased, and at what price?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of wheat, there were 4,425 bushels, averaging 67 cents a bushel; oats, 3,160 bushels, at 40½ cents a bushel; of barley, 700 bushels, from 44 cents to 54 cents. The inspector recommended the purchase of grain in Manitoba, as he could not get good seed grain in that particular locality.

Repairs to bridge between Banff and An-taracite in the Rocky Mountain Park.... $2,400

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is a bridge erected by the government of the Territories which was recently handed over to the Dominion. Owing to a change in the course of the Cascade River it became apparent that the bridge would be carried away by the freshet of the following spring and summer unless further protection was at once provided above the bridge.

Mr. FOSTER. How were the repairs made?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On the report of Mr. J. R. Roy, who was at that time resident engineer of the Department of Public Works in British Columbia, and Mr. Douglas, the superintendent of the park.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this bridge within the bounds of the park?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Expenses of commission re inspection of staples ..... $9,000

Mr. FOSTER. What department is this in?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This was paid out by the Department of the Interior. I think a vote of $5,000 was taken last year by the Inland Revenue Department and handed over to the Department of the Interior to administer.

Mr. FOSTER. Inspection of staples; what in the world is that handed over to the Department of the Interior for?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was the Elevator Commission.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you not say so?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is what is commonly known as the Elevator Commission.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total cost of the commission?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The total of the accounts, and I think they have nearly all been paid, is $13,793. They were paid to the following parties: Joseph Parkins, typewriter, $115.50; William Lothian, commissioner, $1,478.15.

Mr. FOSTER. At what rate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Ten dollars a day.

Mr. FOSTER. And expenses?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. Mr. W. F. Sirett, $1,608.40; Mr. C. C. Castle, $1,773.30; Judge Senkler, $2,598.90; Judge Richards, $575. On the death of judge Senkler, Judge Richards was appointed to take his place on the commission. Mr. George Simpson, $1,443.65; Mr. A. C. Campbell, estimated, $700; William Perkins, $200; Charles N. Bell, including all general accounts, $3,300, making a total of $13,793. This amount has already been paid out.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the report been printed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The report has been printed and a Bill based upon that report has passed this House.

Mr. CLANCY. How much more is there to pay out?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very little more; that is practically the whole amount.

Government of Yukon Territory—

Living expenses of officials and transport and maintenance of lunatics.... $10,000
General expenses ..... 15,000

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have a full explanation of this.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The living allowance for officers of the Yukon staff was fixed at $75 per month, or $900 per annum, but the cost of living, instead of being reduced, as anticipated, has been increased. The price of board in Dawson was raised, during the past winter, to $100 per month, and it was found necessary to increase the living allowance to $1,200 per year from the 1st of November last. As there are about 50 clerks in receipt of this allowance the increased expenditure from the 1st of November, 1899, to the 30th of June, of this year, will be in the neighbourhood of $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Are all the clerks entitled to $1,200 a year for living expenses?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All the clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. No matter what their grade is?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No matter what their grade is.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it extend to the housekeeper?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The housekeeper and janitor are the only ones in the employ of the government who do not have an allowance for living expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought now that transport was more easy the expenses of getting food into that district would be less. How is it that the cost of living has increased instead of diminished?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The representation is made to the government that under the allowance of $75 per month the officials were unable to pay their board. They had to pay their board out of their salaries. I think that in future we would expect to find a reduction in the cost of living there, but these are the actual facts as reported to us by our officers.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the salaries of these men besides their living expenses?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I read all the salaries when the vote for them was put through. They average from $720 to, excepting the higher officials, $1,200.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that not seem pretty steep if you give them a salary of $1,200 and $1,200 for living expenses, making $2,400? It is said that living is a little higher in that country, but it cannot be so much higher. It is coming down all over the country generally, but there it seems to be coming up instead of coming down. It does seem extraordinary that it costs $1,200 to keep a man up there. I should think he could live tolerably well on half that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The reports from Mr. Ogilvie and others, are that the board there costs $100 a month.

Mr. SPROULE. With wheat 50 cents a bushel and other necessaries of life in the same proportion, $3 a day seems an enormous amount for board.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is all for Dawson City, and wheat is more than 50 cents a bushel there.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The reports of people who go into that territory are to the effect that the cost of living and expenses are much below what they were a few years ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. At first, the officials received certain pay and their expenses, but that was a source of difficulty and dissatisfaction, and it was thought that they should be paid $75 a month; but after a few months' trial, it was found that they could not live less than $100 a month.

Mr. SPROULE. How many lunatics have to be maintained up there?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are five. We have made arrangements with the British Columbia government to maintain these lunatics in British Columbia, and the most of this money is for their travelling expenses to the asylum.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that $15,000 item inserted without any detail?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There was an assistant gold commissioner, Mr. J. L. Bell, appointed at $3,000, and Mr. McLeod was sent out as a commissioner to adjust land disputes, accompanied by a surveyor and stenographer.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the general item of $5,000 for expenses, intended to cover salaries of permanent clerks?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Part of it. There is also the travelling expenses of Mr. Stephenson who went out there, and there is the expenses of witnesses and clerks and of jurors, and the increase in the salary of the commissioner and other officials.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the attention of the Finance Minister to the fact that it is not regular to include in a general item, the salaries of officials, and the increases of salaries.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But this is a different matter altogether. There was a general vote taken for $212,000, and that was found not large enough, and so this $15,000 is required.

Mr. FOSTER. But there should be some definite system. I will not press my objection in this case, as a general vote seems to have been taken in the past, but now that there is some definiteness about things up in that territory, these votes should be defined in detail. I hope that will be done in the future.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman in that.

Mr. SPROULE. When you adopt a system like this, it is a kind of an invitation to evade the law and spend the money beforehand, as appears to have been done in connection with one of these items to-night.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the acting minister can give some explanation about this Mr. J. A. Grose, who was sent up there as a special officer from November 8, 1897, to July 3, 1898.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought I handed the hon. gentleman a memorandum in regard to that. I will make a note of it again.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman can give the information on the seed grain item.

Domain Quarantine Stations—Repairs to Grosse Isle Quarantine Steamer 'Challenger' ..... $4,050

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). This is a vote for extraordinary repairs required to the steamer Challenger. The repairs were executed by the departmental staff employed in the shipyard at Sorel. These repairs were called for by the Department of Agriculture.

Rideau Hall—Furniture and fittings for new wing of Government House..... $5,454 50

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Last year a new wing was built to Rideau Hall, running to the south-west of the building; and this is to cover the cost of furnishing that wing.

Mr. FOSTER. How is it proposed to buy these fittings and furniture?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The architect made an estimate of the various articles, and a schedule of them was furnished.

Mr. FOSTER. Are tenders advertised for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. These things are not bought directly by the officers of the department.

Rideau Hall—Remetalling drive ..... $3,000

Mr. SPROULE. What drive is that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The drive from Sussex street to Rideau Hall. There has been no metal put on it for many years, and it requires remetalling.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that let by contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We made an arrangement with the Ottawa Improvement Commissioners. Near the entrance to the grounds, there has been a widening of the road, and during the winter the commissioners had a large quantity of stone broken for the general purposes of their trust; and the department arranged with them to put some of this metal on the drive, we paying them for it at the regular fixed prices. The stone being so close at hand, it was more economical to get it there than to take it from a further distance. This money will be paid at the regular rate fixed by the department.

Winter Harbour, N.S.—Sheerdam, training dykes and deepening River Avon—to make good damage done to works..... $2,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is this done by contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These repairs were done under the superintendence of the engineer by day's labour.

Judique—New wharf at McKay's Point—to complete payment for work done..... $1,113

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This work was done by contract. The contract price was $14,142. This is required to complete payment for the work.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the $2,000 complete the work at Windsor harbour?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not quite. This amount is to cover payments made for damage done last fall and paid for by Governor General's warrant.

Cape Cove Breakwater—To provide for urgent works and repairs ..... $30,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In Digby County. This is to repair damages done by storm.

Comeauville Breakwater—To make good damage done by gales ..... $1,200

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). This reminds me of an appeal made year after year by myself for the repairs of a breakwater at Petite Rivière in my county. The breakwater was commenced and half completed, but the repeated gales have made great inroads on the work and the repairs should not be longer delayed. I have brought this matter repeatedly to the notice of the government, but have received no favourable answer. I would ask the acting Minister of Public Works why no recognition has been given to this matter? It is a great shame that a work of this kind should be so badly neglected.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to answer for the past, but have made a note of the hon. gentleman's request and will look into the matter.

Mr. KAULBACH. Will an amount appear in the supplementaries for this year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could not anticipate His Excellency's action.

Church Point Pier—To rebuild and repair cribwork broken and displaced by heavy seas ..... $800

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This makes good the damage, but a grant will be required for rebuilding a portion of the face of the shore end of the pier, which has also suffered. Whether or not that grant will be asked this session, I am not in a position to say.

Harbours and Rivers, P.E.I.—China Point Pier—Revote of part of lapsed amount to pay for work done ..... $700

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E.I.) There is a boat that formerly called at China Point pier once or twice a week, communicating with Charlottetown. It has been represented to me that since the building of the present wharf, that boat is unable to call, because the wharf is too low. If that is the case, it will be a great inconvenience to many people. I would ask the acting minister to ascertain the facts.

Slides and Booms, St. Maurice District—Works of reconstruction and improvement in connection with booms between Grandes Piles station and the city of Three Rivers, in the River St. Maurice.. $25,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Does that complete the work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand that this amount is to cover a Governor General's warrant that was issued on the 16th January last, to make immediate repairs on account of the breaking of the boom. My hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) is better acquainted with the district than I am. I understand that this was a matter of urgency, to prepare for the logs coming down this season. The work was carried on by the resident engineer by day's labour.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I know the nature of the case, and I am quite prepared to say that I think it is absolutely necessary that this work should be done, because the lumber business on that river, which is very great, depends absolutely on these booms being repaired. But I understand when I was down in the constituency, that there were other works which were required; and what I wish to ask the acting minister is whether this $25,000 is solely for the purpose of repairing the booms, or if it included the other works, which I am told are absolutely necessary to make the booms available for the lumber drive.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) is quite right. This does not cover the whole cost of the works. There is another item in the main estimates to cover other works in this connection.

Roads and Bridges—Bridge over the Saskatchewan River at Edmonton, N.W.T.—To complete payments ..... $5,500

Mr. CLANCY. Please give some explanation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to close up the account.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). What is the total cost of this bridge?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The total up to the 1st of May last was $82,659.57.

Mr. CLANCY. When was the work commenced?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Two years ago. This is to make the final payments.

Telegraph Lines—Land and cable telegraph lines, Gulf of St. Lawrence, &c.—Land line between Margaree and Mabou..... $1,600

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a new line?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it is to re-pole the line.

Telegraph Lines, B.C.—Alternative line connecting Cape Beale and Carmanah with Victoria via extension of French Creek-Alberni line, built southward to the south-west coast of Vancouver Island ..... $1,273 50

Mr. PRIOR. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) say what work is to be done?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to complete payments on the telegraph line in question. It is to supplement a vote of $1,000 which was granted by parliament in 1899. The line originally estimated for was estimated at thirty-eight miles long, but, when actual construction was proceeded with, it was found much easier and less expensive to carry it around the coast by a less direct line. The total cost of the alternative line was $6,422. The work was carried on by contract, the contract price being $95 a mile. The contract was entered on the 15th of March, 1899.

Mr. PRIOR. Before leaving the coast I had some conversation with the local member for Alberni with reference to this line. I must say I do not know the district myself, never having traversed it. But he tried to impress upon me the necessity of a much better route being found than the present one. The line as now built is very often down. It is a very rough coast, and wrecks, I am sorry to say, often take place. On such occasions, many lives are endangered if the telegraph line is down when most required to be used to telegraph for assistance. According to the notes I have, in his opinion the line about seventy miles long should be built from Alberni Town via Sproat Lake, Kennedy Lake, Ucluelet, and up the coast to Clayoquot. There is a large mining and fishing business carried on at Clayoquot, and there would be quite a little business for the line from those engaged in trade. To take a cable across from Cape Beale to Ucluelet is very dangerous, owing to the currents. The minister will find in his department a petition which was sent last year asking that the line be built according to the scheme I have just brought before the committee. I can only ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) to look into the matter and give it his careful consideration, as it is a matter of importance not only to the people who live in the district, but to the people of Victoria as well.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told by the deputy that all these lines are on the south-west coast of the island.

Rent, fuel and light for public buildings,
Yukon territory ..... $14,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is in addition to the $27,000 voted last year to provide for the payment of rent of buildings and for fuel and light in connection with buildings in the North-west Territories. At Dawson City, rent of commissioner's office and post office, $14,400 ; Crown timber lands office, $9,000 ; commissioner's office, $3,000 ; gold commissioner's house and officials, $3,000 ; office for legal adviser, $780 ; fuel for buildings, $400, 400 cords of wood at $25 a cord. These with other small items total up $41,000 ; less appropriation, $27,000, leaves a balance of $14,000 now required.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a tremendous item. What was paid for the post office as rent ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The post office and the commissioner's office are put together as $14,400. We have not got the details in the Department of Public Works. The figures are sent to the department by the Department of the Interior. If the hon. gentleman wants any details the item will have to stand.

Yukon and Lewes Rivers—Improvements including allowance of $1,000 per annum to superintending engineer, P. C. Taché, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ... $39,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This vote of $25,000 is to supplement the appropriation of $40,000 made by parliament in 1899 for carrying on during the fiscal year 1899-1900 the works undertaken in connection with the then projected improvements on the Yukon and Lewes Rivers, viz. : Head of Lake Labarge, construction of 5,000 feet in length of pile, brush and stone-work, $30,000 ; Rink Rapids, improvement of rapids by removal of boulders and construction of two beacon piers on each side of channel, $10,000 ; Hell Gate, Lewes River, construction of 3,570 feet of pile, brush and stone-work, $18,000 ; White Horse Rapids, construction of pile wharf, 400 feet long, $18,500 ; Tagish Lake, construction of buoys and piers at mouth of Six-Mile River, repairs to wharf built by the mounted police, $3,500 ; Five Finger Rapids, improvements by the removal of boulders, $40,000 ; surveys and inspections, $8,000 ; superintendence and contingencies, $4,000 ; total, $138,000.

During the present fiscal year improvements were carried out at the following places.

Mr. PRIOR.

Cariboo Crossing.—A dam 400 feet long, 12 feet wide, and 10 feet high, was built to close a channel through which a great quantity of water escaped especially during the spring. Two permanent beacons on piers were also built, and seven floating buoys were placed in position. The above mentioned works have greatly improved the navigation of the river at this point, and have given an increased depth of water of over eight inches.

Tagish.—Six floating buoys were placed in the channel of the river at dangerous points, and repairs were effected to the wharf built by the mounted police.

Six-Mile River—A number of boulders were blasted and removed from the bed of the river, and floating buoys have been placed in position. The channel is now in very good order. Two lifting barges were constructed to remove the rocks from the bed of the river after they had been blasted.

White Horse Rapids.—Is the head of navigation to Dawson City and the terminus of the White Pass and Yukon Railway. It is situated on the west bank of Fifty-Mile River. A number of piles have been purchased together with a 1,600-pound hammer and necessary cable, with a view to the construction of a pile wharf, 400 feet long, at this point. A dangerous boulder situated eight miles below the rapids was blasted and removed.

Thirty-Mile River.—This river was the most dangerous to navigate on this route, it being very swift and crooked, besides being obstructed with any amount of boulders and rocks. During the present fiscal year the bed of the river was cleared of all obstructions and four stationary beacons were placed at the head of the river.

Five Finger Rapids.—These rapids are very dangerous although fit for navigation. They are difficult to ascend, it being necessary to ascend by warping up the channel through the rapids. The removal of boulders was commenced during the present fiscal year, and according to the latest report from the engineer in charge the work is more than half completed.

Rink Rapids.—Three miles below Five Finger Rapids.—The channel through the rapids was obstructed by a number of boulders which have all been removed. The channel is now in good condition.

That is the return of the work during the fiscal year. The appropriation of last year was $40,000. This $25,000 will cover the expenditure to date of $65,000 in all. It is not more than half what will be required to make these various improvements—about half.

Mr. FOSTER. On what plan are these being made ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have a local resident engineer there, Mr. Taché. The work is not done by contract, but by day's labour.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is responsible for it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Taché, the engineer of the department resident there.

Mr. FOSTER. On what plan are these improvements being carried out—on a plan that has been approved by the department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Coste personally made the surveys with a party, prepared plans, and submitted them to the minister, and the improvements are being carried out on Mr. Coste's plans. Mr. Coste is not now in the service, but his recommendations have been adopted, and they are working on his plans.

Mr. FOSTER. In what way are the money payments made there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A credit is sent to Mr. Taché on a bank at Bennett, and he draws the money, disburses it and receives vouchers.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he sign the cheques simply or solely himself, or is there a countersigning?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are paid to his own order; there is no countersigning.

Mr. FOSTER. With Mr. Taché is there any man of accounts sent up there to keep track of all these very large expenditures?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is furnished with a clerk. Mr. Taché and his assistant keep the accounts. Mr. Taché is now on his way back; the department wish to consult with him in reference to the whole of the work, and he is expected in a short time.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the assistant an engineer or an accountant?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, he is not an engineer; he is a clerk who keeps the accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. He does not countersign the cheques?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, Mr. Taché alone draws the money.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole thing sounds like a fairy tale the way the money goes out. I suppose we know about as much about it as the hon. acting minister does. It is not a really satisfactory way of doing things. The House ought to know more about the whole transaction than it does. Here is an expenditure of $130,000 going on out there, and there seem to be no means of supervision of the money paid out by one man. I am not saying that it is not well done, but the House has very fragmentary information about it. We have heard that to take out one boulder cost $8,000, and to build a dam costs $5,000, and the like of that. It does not seem, with such very large amounts, that proper care is taken on the accountant's side of it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that I can take exception to that view. It seems difficult to carry on works involving a large expenditure so far away from the place of government. I dare say it would be very proper to appoint an accountant to act generally in connection with the expenditure in the Yukon. I think it would be a proper thing to consider and I will bring that before council to see whether they will recommend a policy of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. These expenditures began more than a year ago. To what extent have these accounts and vouchers come to the department and been sent to the audit office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am informed that all the vouchers, with the exception of bills for $15,000, are here, and these latter Mr. Taché will bring with him.

Mr. FOSTER. Those vouchers have gone to the Auditor General, I suppose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They have gone to the accountant to the department in the usual way, but the officers do not know whether they have passed over to the Auditor General or not. I presume, in the ordinary course, he would transfer them to the Auditor General.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think, in a case of that kind, so long as you have taken no precaution to put a first-class accountant up there, no delay should take place in getting these vouchers into the hands of the Auditor General in the regular order, because he is an auditor, and as an auditor would be able to point out any irregularities immediately to the department, and greater care could be taken in the matter.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think the system may be improved, but I am quite certain that in so far as Mr. Taché is concerned, the government could not have a more reliable man. He has been a number of years in the Department of Public Works, and I am quite sure that he is absolutely reliable. Of course, the system of leaving all these important matters, even to one man, I think, is increasing his responsibility beyond what it should be.

Mr. FOSTER. A good engineer is not necessarily a good accountant.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, but I think his work has been carried out in different parts of Quebec, where he had to take the same responsibility in such a way that his reputation stands high in the department, as it stands high outside amongst those who know him. As to the system, I think, if it is possible, to give him the assistance of an accountant it would be an improvement. But, as to his qualifications, I think no man could have been sent there who could do his duty more faithfully than Mr. Taché.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). This system seems very much like that which prevailed under the old head of the department; it looks very suspicious from the start, and the present acting head of the department seems to be doing things in the same way. Mr. Taché's reputation may be all right in Quebec, where there is a close supervision over him, but it may be altogether different in the Yukon. But, whether it is good or bad, we have had experience of sending men out and giving them a free hand; it means that we do not get full value for the money. I think the department should devise some better check than there appears to be over the expenditure of this very large amount.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no system of check at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have no doubt that in the beginning of the Yukon business many things had to be done in ways which were not in accordance with strict rules, but now, when we have reached a stage in the Yukon business at which we can bring work there under the usual restrictions of government, I think these should be applied to work done in that country. It may be said that an engineer in another province, or in any other section of the Dominion, has not the payment of accounts in his own hands, but in reality he has the payment in his own hands, because he has to certify to the accounts. Though he does not actually sign the cheque, his certificate leads to the payment and the responsibility is about the same. It is certainly undesirable that any one officer should have unchecked control over the funds, and for the coming year we ought to introduce some restrictions which will meet the views of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Working expenses—Bennett, Dawson and Atlin telegraph lines ..... $45,000

Mr. FOSTER. How long have these two lines been running?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Both these lines were opened in September, 1899.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been the total cost of these lines?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About one hundred and forty-nine thousand dollars for the two.

Mr. FOSTER. How many miles?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Five hundred and sixty-five miles to Dawson, and eighty miles to Atlin, total 645 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. In the ten months, what has been the income?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have here the income to January, June, 1899, $45.40; July, $465.45; August, $1,060.69; September, $3,787.87; October, $7,552.90; November, $3,990.18; December, $3,181.27; January, $5,438.52. Of course the months of June and July cannot be taken as representative, because the line was not finished, but the gross revenue for the nine months, would be $25,522.26. I gave the figures for the balance the other day, and they are printed in Hansard.

Mr. FOSTER. How is this $45,000 to be expended?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will give the hon. gentleman the names of the operators and linemen and their salaries. When these stations were established last fall at these more or less inaccessible points the men were given provisions to carry them through the winter. I do not know that any arrangements have been made for the permanent operation of the line, but that has to be considered. These salaries may or may not be reasonable, but I do not consider that they represent a normal state of affairs. The following is the list:

Charles Couture, stationed at Dawson, is in charge of the repairing of the line, and of all the linemen from Dawson to Big Salmon, inclusive. Napoleon Bellefeuille, is in charge of all the linemen from Big Salmon to Bennett, as well as Tagish-Atlin line. His salary is not stated. In addition to the foregoing, Mr. W. N. Crean is the superintendent of the whole telegraph system in the Yukon. His salary is $2,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of this amount is expended for salaries?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are two or three employees whose salaries I have not given, but allowing them to be about the same as the others, I suppose the total amount for salaries would be about $30,000. Then, there will be the cost of maintenance and repairs, involving the hiring of horses, and I suppose dog-trains in winter. That would leave $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How are the supplies got?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The superintendent of telegraphs in the inside service, Mr. Keeley, was instructed in the early part of April to consider a scheme for a businesslike and economical management of the line, and he wrote to Mr. Crean, the superintendent, asking him for a general report and recommendation, with a view to devising a scheme. The report has not yet come to hand, but it is intended in the near future, to put the management of the line upon a proper, permanent basis. The arrangements in the past have been of a temporary character. I do not know whether these salaries are reasonable or unreasonable, or whether the allowances for provisions or otherwise are necessary, or whether a better plan can be adopted. It may be that at leading points, like Bennett and Dawson, where there are opportunities for men to maintain themselves and get board, a cash allowance should be made. That is always desirable, if possible; but at unimportant points, where some of the operators may have to live, it may be necessary to provide them with shelter and accommodation.

Mr. FOSTER. Who provided them with food last year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told that the construction staff opened a store at Bennett for the purposes of construction, and had quantities of food in that store for the use of the construction staff, and the maintenance of the operators throughout the winter, and that about nine months' supply was given to them when they entered upon their duties. I suppose that supply is now about gone, and it will be necessary to adopt some different plan.

Mr. CLANCY. Were the supplies purchased under the control of Mr. Charleson?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were purchased from Kelly, Douglas & Co.,

of Vancouver. I am told tenders were invited by the secretary of the department from fifteen or sixteen people, and that firm got the contract.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If tenders were called for by the secretary of the department, it seems to me that the department might be able to furnish more information than we have received to-night. We have not heard yet how the tenders were called for, whether by public advertisement, or by distribution among fourteen or fifteen of Mr. Charleson's friends. The matter possibly requires more looking into, from the fact that this parliament granted a charter to a company for the purpose of building that line; and on the good faith of that legislation, English capitalists in London invested their money and got up a company. When the company was organized, immediately after the first meeting the government took into their own hands the building of that line. Representations were sent to the Governor in Council from London; and before this item passes, I would ask that every information which the government has in regard to the tenders for supplies, and so forth, be brought down. I do not know whether my information is correct or not, but the only way in which it is possible to show that it is not correct would be for the government to bring down all the information required. It is difficult to explain why these men should have been paid these high wages and have been allowed to draw upon the supplies furnished by the government. If tenders were called for, the government must be in possession of the notices given and the tenders received. I did not know that the item was to be taken up to-night, or I would have brought with me letters I have received from London, which I would be happy to lay before the House. The item should stand until full information is brought down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are most anxious to bring down all the information. I am not able to say where the wire was bought. The invitations to tender were not published, but the secretary of the department sent notices to leading persons in the trade, not merely in Vancouver but also in Canada.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think that the hon. gentleman will find that these notices were not sent except to a certain number of people—not all over Canada—but in Vancouver, Victoria and Chicago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were sent to a certain number, not resident merely in Vancouver, but in other leading points, and I will produce the list.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The papers regarding the wire were brought down last session.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The item should stand until we get all the information. We should have the list of all these tenders and know exactly who the parties are that were invited to tender. This line has attracted a good deal of attention outside of Canada owing to the fact that the charter was financed in London. The credit of Canada has been injured to a great extent through the fact that parliament gave a charter and immediately after a company was organized in London, the government ignored that charter and built the line itself.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not going to press the item. There is quite a feeling in favour of the government acquiring telegraph lines, but it is more difficult to acquire existing lines than to build new ones. The cost of this line was $235 a mile, which covers the cost of all the material and labour involved in its construction. I think that if properly managed this line will be a very good investment. There is a prospect of it being used as a connecting link between Alaska and this country and other parts of the world, and we will probably do the whole of the Alaska business with the outside world. That will double the revenue.

Mr. SPROULE. What rate do you charge ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Fifty cents per hundred words. If my hon. friend will consent to let the item pass, we can have the discussion on another item.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have no objection to allowing the item to pass providing the discussion may come up on another one.

Civil Government—Department of Public Works ..... $46,300

Mr. FOSTER. There is an extra first-class clerk here. Who has been promoted ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The promotion has not yet been made, but it is contemplated to promote Mr. Vincent, the senior of the first-class clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. His name is mentioned in the detailed item. Why is it mentioned ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Technically, it ought not to be mentioned, and there is no objection to its being struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. He is a second-class clerk, and at the head of his class ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes : I am told by the deputy that he is the senior.

Public works chargeable to capital—Public buildings, Ontario—Ottawa military buildings, new store ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is this to be built ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This work has just begun. The building is to be in Cartier Square, just behind the drill shed.

Mr. FIELDING.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Who has the contract ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Bourque.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount of the contract ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is $50,745.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the lowest tender accepted ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Does the building face the Model school ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The sketch given me by the deputy shows the drill shed facing the north, towards Maria Street, and this building at the back of it, on the south side.

Harbours and rivers, Quebec—River St. Lawrence ship channel ..... $433,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is a tremendous vote—nearly half a million. What is to be done with this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is required to cover expenses of management, working expenses, and the maintenance of dredging plant, operating the ship channel between Montreal and Quebec, as well as two new steel elevator dredges now under construction ; to complete the tug St. James, and one stone elevator, and three new hopper scows, and electric plant for the dredges. I will give the details of this estimate :

Including maintenance of hulls, machinery, &c., of six elevators, dredges, tugs and scows, daily wages of crews, &c....	$125,000

	$160,000
New Plant—
To complete one new elevator dredge, now under construction .....	$ 70,000
Material and labour on one new steel elevator dredge, to be completed in 1902 (estimated cost, $110,000) .....	40,000
One twin screw tug .....	20,000

Hydrographic Survey—

Salaries of engineers, gauge keepers and other labour, including supplies.....	25,000
Contingencies .....	5,000

Total grant required for 1900-1901.. $433,100

N.B.—Beside the wooden elevator dredge under construction, to be completed in the early spring of 1901 there is an item of $40,000 for material and labour on one new steel elevator dredge, to be ready for work in spring of 1902. At the opening of navigation there will be six new steel elevator dredges available for work on the St. Lawrence, but two of these are of the old stock and have been already condemned, and at best can only last one more season.

Total expenditure on the River St. Lawrence Canal up to the 31st of December, 1899, was $4,392,602.97. Deduct ship channel debt assumed by the Department of Public Works 1st of July, 1888, $2,725,504.10, and we have $1,667,098.87 as the total expenditure by the Department of Public Works from 1st of July, 1888, to January, 1900. In addition to the $2,725,504.10 a further sum of $185,605.10 was expended through the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, pending the completion of arrangements by the Public Works Department for taking over the works, which arrangements could only be completed on the 1st of January, 1889.

Mr. FOSTER. This does not seem to be a satisfactory statement. Here we have the River St. Lawrence ship channel debited with between $400,000 and $500,000, and when the acting minister has read over these items, our mind is filled up with a bewildering amount of construction work which is being done, from board fences up to steel elevators. So far as I could take it in, there does not seem to be of that $422,000, which is ostensibly for making the navigation better in the River St. Lawrence, one dollar of it spent in making the navigation better. It is all for piling up a thundering quantity of machinery, keeping up an immense ship yard at Sorel, and all seems to be expended in machinery and in salaries. What has been done, and what is to be done, in real actual work in the River St. Lawrence? It looks as if the whole thing is run to seed in appurtenances, and that the money does not go to the River St. Lawrence channel for improvements.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The first item of $160,000 of this vote is all for the purpose of dredging, improvements of the channel. There are six dredges at work between Montreal and Sorel. The item of $160,000 comprises $35,000 for doing day work and $25,000 for night work. The whole of that is for the purpose of improving the channel. The balance is for new plant or for renovating practically the old plant so as to make it more efficient. The demand for dredging, I suppose, will never cease. I have but a limited experience in the department, but so far as I can form a conclusion I should judge that dredging in this country is hardly begun. I venture to think that the government waste a good deal of money by having inefficient plant, There are better devices for removing some classes of deposit than those the government now possess.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is $260,000 for plant for the River St. Lawrence alone. This does not go to dredging anywhere else.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will be the property of the country, it will be available if needed anywhere else. I am told the new dredging costs $110,000, so that the $231,000 which is composed of the items of new plant, which I have read, does not supply a great deal of new dredging material. The dimensions of the ship-yard are 2.100 x 700 feet.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was spent last year in real work on the channel?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $80,000.

Mr. FOSTER. If the acting minister will add $80,000 and $160,000 this year, there is $240,000. Now, that has gone into the real actual work of dredging out the channel. If he will add the two votes together he will find in the two years that he has taken close on to $900,000. Subtract $240,000, and it makes over $600,000 that has gone in plant and labour at Sorel. This is actually stupendous. In my time we used to get $90,000 to $115,000, and then you used to think that vote was tremendous for the channel. Now, we take, in two years, $865,000, and out of it less than $240,000 have gone into the actual improvement of the channel. That leaves over $600,000 that has been and is tucked away somewhere in plant. What have we got for it? We have two new elevators. What, under God's heaven, has been done with the rest of it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are six elevators.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but we have not built these six elevators in two years. It is only a portion of this money that has gone into the elevators.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer informs me that we have rebuilt four elevator dredges, that we have built two new ones, and that we have two others that have been rebuilt.

Mr. TAYLOR. Last year the hon. Minister of Public Works asked for $432,000, and he gave an explanation similar to that which the hon. Postmaster General is giving here to-night as to what he was going to do with that money. I put a question on the paper this session to know if the government had purchased the steamer Eureka, and if so, at what price. It was answered that this steamer had been purchased from the Connolly Brothers, naming the price. Then, I put another question on the paper, in which I wanted to know out of what money the boat had been paid for, and the reply was that she had been paid for out of money voted for the ship channel last year. The hon. Minister of Public Works did not tell the House last year that he was going to purchase a private yacht for himself out of the money which was voted. What is the use of coming down and asking for money and then misappropriating it, as has been done in this case. I want to know what became of that $432,000. What amount has been paid for the Eureka, which was purchased from the Connolly Brothers for the private use of the hon. Minister of Public Works? I want to know what the Eureka is doing now, what necessity there was for her purchase, and what benefit she is to the dredging of the ship channel between Montreal and Quebec? Last year the hon. Minister of Public Works gave us every detail as to how he was going to spend this money, and the acting minister is doing the same thing now. I want to know why $35,000, or $40,000, has been paid out to purchase a private yacht for the minister?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer informs me that the Eureka is not a pleasure yacht. Of course, she could be used to convey people, but the purpose of her purchase was that she might be used for the general purpose of towing on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is she being used for that now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. In reference to the inquiry as to the vote of last year, I am told that $150,000 has not been expended. It was $432,000, of which $150,000 is yet unexpended, leaving $270,000 expended, and when you take that $80,000 expended in dredging and improving the channel and the building of two new steel elevator dredges, you have accounted for a good deal of that vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. The government came down and asked for a certain sum of money, and they told us what they were going to expend it for. There was no proposition last year that they were going to purchase a pleasure yacht for the hon. Minister of Public Works. There was a charge for his trip down the river of $2,236, which is charged as follows:

Harbours and rivers, P.E.I., repairs to piers .....	$ 200 00
Harbours and rivers, maritime provinces generally .....	1,618 50
Harbours and rivers, Quebec generally..	366 82
Harbours and rivers generally .....	51 50
	<hr/>
	$2,236 82

Mr. TAYLOR.

Here, I have a list of the purchases made to make the Eureka a pleasure yacht, and I intend to read it when we come to the vote of harbours and rivers generally, just to show the people of the country the way this government have squandered their money in purchasing and fitting out the steam yacht that the government purchased and fitted out, and for which they took the money out of the vote for the Quebec ship channel. Now, the acting Minister of Public Works comes down and asks us to vote $433,000, and he tells us what the money is to be spent for. Have the government any right to misappropriate $30,000, or $40,000, of the money voted by parliament for the purchase of a steam yacht? Before this item is passed, we want all the details of that $433,000. It is simply intolerable that this government should come down and ask parliament to vote money for a specific purpose, and then go and spend it for something else.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). I think it is about time that this ridiculous story of a pleasure yacht should be exploded. I do not think that anything more absurd could be given as a comparison as between statements of the press and hon. gentlemen opposite and the facts of the case about this so-called private pleasure yacht. I have seen references to it in the press, and I thought I would like to see the boat myself. I had the pleasure of being on board of her. I think we went two or three miles upon her.

Mr. TAYLOR. When?

Mr. FLINT. Last summer or the summer when the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) made his trip to the maritime provinces. She is not a pleasure yacht in any sense of the term. She is a very ordinary type of boat, which was fitted up cheaply and inexpensively, but not decently nor comfortably. She is not a boat that any gentleman, or anybody going for pleasure, would use for such a purpose, and when she is referred to as a pleasure yacht, the thing is utterly ridiculous. Speaking as one who saw the boat, who knows about her, and who had an opportunity of investigation, I may say that the charge is utterly ridiculous. In regard to the trip which the hon. Minister of Public Works took around the provinces at that time, I may say that I met him at a remote portion of my county, and accompanied him, not on a pleasure yacht, except it was a short distance, but by teams, to the public works in the county of Yarmouth, and to several public works in the neighbouring county, and I think, as a matter of fact, that probably the most useful visit that was ever made by any Minister of Public Works, or any other official in control of a department of the government, was the visit made by the hon. Minister of Public Works to the public works in the maritime provinces. I may say, that although it involved a great amount of labour, these public works were inspected in storm and fine weather as well, and I think the mere physical labour performed by the hon. Minister of Public Works was something highly to his credit, and something which very few men, even strong men, could have stood. I think the amount of money saved by the personal inspection of the Minister of Public Works is something which is highly to be commended instead of being condemned as it has been done very frequently in this House. It was in no sense of the term a pleasure trip, but a most laborious, painstaking and useful expedition by the head of the Public Works Department, and I would recommend that other cabinet ministers, so far as they can find it possible, should follow the example of the hon. Minister of Public Works. As one who had a partial opportunity of seeing the nature of the laborious work he did that summer, I say that the Minister of Public Works should receive credit for what he did, rather than the censure of gentlemen opposite, who know absolutely nothing about the matter. To start from Quebec and call at every port and pier and personally to go over it with his accompanying engineer, and the resident engineer of the district, taking notes of the complaints of those who lived there, was not at all easy work. In my own county of Yarmouth, the Minister of Public Works did not give ten minutes of his time to anything except work of this kind. He was accompanied by the representative of the county, and by the engineers and he sent for the foremen and others, and examined them with painstaking care. In one or two instances, under the immediate direction of the minister, there was a small amount of money expended, and that saved a great deal to the country, because we all know that the expenditure of $50 or $60 to make absolutely necessary repairs in time, may save perhaps hundreds of dollars at a future date. There was a flagrant case in my own county, where the neglect of the previous government to expend a few hundred dollars subsequently led to the necessity of spending $8,000. Probably in the whole annals of the Public Works Department of this Dominion, there has nothing more beneficial been done for the country, than the trip made by the Hon. Mr. Tarte. As to the absurd talk about a yacht, it is about time hon. gentlemen dropped that, because she is not a yacht at all, but simply a tug boat fitted up so as to be decently comfortable.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). I regret that I cannot endorse the views of the hon. gentleman from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), because I have practical knowledge of the uselessness of the visit of the Minister of Public Works to my county. He visited some of the public works, and gave a very warm expression with regard to their needs, but I believe in a man who will show his works, and not his words. For the short time he was in the harbour of Lunenburg, his boat was detained in consequence of grounding near the pier, and so he had ocular demonstration of the absolute necessity of dredging that harbour. Not alone at the pier, but along the portion of the harbour required for the general shipping, it is so shallow that it is almost impossible for a vessel of any draught to get up. The Hon. Mr. Tarte assured me that the dredging would be done. In order that I might satisfy myself and the friends who were standing on the pier, I said to him, as his boat was about to leave: 'Well now, Mr. Tarte, I hope you will see that this dredging is attended to at once,' and he replied: 'Oh, yes, oh, yes, that will be attended to, that will be done sure the coming year.' I have since appealed repeatedly to him, but he has turned a deaf ear to my recommendation for that work. There is not a public work in the country that is more greatly needed than the dredging of that harbour, and it is a disgrace to the minister and to the department that it is not attended to. I hope the acting Minister of Public Works will note my remarks and will take action this year. I trust that he will see that the dredges that are now being built, will perform a certain amount of work in that harbour, so as to meet the necessities which I have detailed. Words can scarcely describe the urgent need for that dredging at Lunenburg. A dredge is repeatedly being sent to the harbour of Yarmouth, in fact the dredge is so often there, that they might as well keep her altogether, but still the harbour is filling up. In Lunenburg harbour, when it is once dredged, that will be sufficient for a great number of years, simply because there is not much of tortuous water there. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) can, I think, endorse what I have said, for he was present when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), made that pledge to myself, and to the people who were on the pier at the time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry I cannot exactly endorse the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach), although, no doubt, he makes it in good faith. I think he is unnecessarily severe on the Minister of Public Works, who certainly was much impressed with all he saw on the coast of Nova Scotia, Lunenburg included. The difficulty has been that we have not dredges enough to do the work. Prior to the application from Lunenburg, there was an application from Bridgewater, also in the hon. gentleman's county, and assurances were given, so far as it was possible to give assurances, that the first dredging in that neighbourhood would be done at Bridgewater. Unfortunately we have not so far been able to secure the services of a dredge. I tell my hon. friend frankly, that until we fulfil our obligations to Bridgewater, I hardly feel at liberty to advocate the claims of Lunenburg, although I know that what the hon. gentleman has said as to the needs of dredging there is well founded. I do not go so far as to say that the Minister of Public Works made the promise, but I know that he believes in good faith that the work should be done there if it is possible to get a dredge. I may state that the dredging equipment for the maritime provinces is exceedingly defective. We have had no new dredges built for that service for some time. The dredges, generally speaking, are small and inefficient and we will have to spend more money for building large and powerful dredges, if we are to meet demands such as have been made from Lunenburg. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach), will have to be patient and hopeful. When the first order from Bridgewater is filled, if after that we can send a dredge to Lunenburg, I will give it my cordial support.

Mr. KAULBACH. There is a county of Lunenburg, and a port of Lunenburg, and a town of Lunenburg, and I am now referring to the county of Lunenburg. I made appeals for dredging at Bridgewater, and also at Mahone Bay, but no attention has been paid to these appeals. I feel satisfied that the promise made by the Minister of Public Works, was made in the hearing of the Minister of Finance. Anyway, every man on the pier referred to heard the expression, or promise made by the Minister of Public Works, and I am a little doubtful whether our friend did not also hear it at the time. He may have forgotten it, because it did not interest him as much as it did me. However, if he says that no amount is to be put in the estimates this year for dredging in the county of Lunenburg, I must be content; but I think the people of that county will view the situation in a way in which they will be justified in viewing, and will not fail to resent it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the people of Lunenburg want to recall the neglect which they have received in the matter of dredging, they will have to begin with my hon. friend, who spent a good many years in this House when he had the power of securing dredging for that port and neglected to do so; and now he desires that we should do what he neglected to do for a long period. I hope my hon. friend will be very patient. If he speaks of the county of Lunenburg generally, I have been making every possible effort to secure a dredge to be sent to that county this season, as my hon. colleague knows. There are three ports in the hon. gentleman's county which he wants to have dredged all at once. I do not know that that is possible; but if we can get a dredge, we will send one into that county at a very early day, and that has been the instructions of the Public Works Department for several months past.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. KAULBACH. I wish to be charitable to my hon. friend, but I beg to correct him when he states that during the time the Conservatives were in power I neglected the interests of the county of Lunenburg. I had a dredge at work in Lunenburg harbour, at La Have and at Mahone Bay, and I am free to state that I at no time neglected the interests of the county, and I would ask him to take that back. Hon. gentlemen know that no person who has ever represented that county has been more earnest in the discharge of his duties towards it than I have been.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has been doing all the attacking, and he must not be so sensitive when he gets a shot in return. The hon. gentleman said that the dredging done at Lunenburg would stand for many years. If he secured a dredge there some years ago, then I fail to see the necessity of our sending one now. However, the county of Lunenburg will receive, as it has been receiving, all consideration in the matter of dredging at the hands of the present government.

Mr. KAULBACH. The dredge that was sent there broke down and had to go away for repairs. After she left she never came back, and the result was that we only had a couple of months of work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We must try and send one that will not break down.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). The hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) raised the question whether the Eureka was or was not a private yacht. She was purchased as such, and was used as such. The point I raise is that the Minister of Public Works last year asked a sum of money for a certain purpose and diverted it to the purchase of this boat. If the government want to purchase a yacht for tugging or for any other purpose, they must come to parliament and ask for a vote for that particular purpose. The purchase of this yacht was a misappropriation of funds. It was a job to buy from the Connollys this boat for $26,000 and to spend $27,000 on her for repairs. The government did in the purchase of that boat what they had no right to do, whether it was a tug or a pleasure yacht to take the minister on a pleasure trip.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that a pleasure trip?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have heard people say that when he took that boat down, flying the American flag and the tricolour, and not the Union Jack, he said he was taking a pleasure trip. But the point I make is that the government have misappropriated the money in the purchase of that yacht. Whether there was a job in it or not I do not know. The minister seems to think that when we vote money for public works, we vote it to him to do as he pleases with it. I say he should be censured by this House, and he will be when we come to concurrence on this vote, for having misappropriated $26,000 in purchasing a steamer which the department has no use for. That is the point I raise, notwithstanding the eulogy of the hon. member for Yarmouth on the Minister of Public Works for the great benefit he did by spending $2,236 on that trip, inspecting the harbours and piers, which he did in a month's time. He liked the yacht so well for a pleasure yacht that when he came back he purchased her out of the money voted for dredging the ship channel between Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to call the attention of the minister to a detailed statement of the expenses as shown in the Auditor General's Report for 1898-9. He will see that the first ten pages from Q-17 are taken up entirely with the payment of labourers, carpenters, &c., at the shops at Sorel, showing an expenditure of about $115,000 there. Then he comes to the expenses of the different tugs and dredges, which I suppose represents the actual work put into the ship channel, and he will see how very small a proportion that bears to the total. For instance, the dredge Laurier cost for her summer's work, $1,300; another, $2,200; the dredge Laval, $4,000; the tug Cartier, $2,200; dredge No. 11, $3,700; the tug Parsons, $1,700; dredge No. 12, $2,600; the tug Brydges, $1,147; the tug John Pratt, $3,362; the tug St. James, $2,585; dredge No. 8, $608; tug Emelia, $387; tug St. Francis $204. That altogether makes about $30,000, and that represents the work that was put by the dredges and the attendant tugs into the ship channel.

Mr. GIBSON. Does that include wages?

Mr. FOSTER. That includes everything, because all the rest I have read over is the labourers in the shops. This is for the operation of each one of these dredges and tugs. Then, there is an item for the new semaphore at St. Jean de Challons, about $7,500. Then, we come down to a long list of expenditures, which is entirely the expenditures in the office at Sorel, and for machinery for Sorel, and the purchase of supplies of all kinds, of iron and ropes, &c., evidently in the construction work, and that makes up an immense sum. So that, charged to the ship channel altogether you have about $285,400, and of that a little more than $30,000 has actually gone into the dredging of the channel. That seems a tremendous disproportion. It does seem as if nearly everything was put on machinery and labour in the machine shops, office expenses, &c., and an infinitesimal proportion went into the actual work in the channel.

There is the payment for the tug Eureka of $26,000. You will find that on page Q-34 Steam tug Eureka, bill of sale, $26,000; the hire of it until bought, $792. $7,000 spent in repairs and a lot of supplies. What did the tug Eureka cost? We have here her cost of running for the season, $2,091, but, evidently, even that cost did not go into the work of the channel, because the Eureka was being used by the minister on his trip.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. She was only used for a month and a half.

Mr. FOSTER. She was bought July 21, and a month and a half would bring you pretty well through the working season in the St. Lawrence. My hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) was perfectly correct in saying the buying of the Eureka was an improper use of money. By what rule is it that she was taken down on the minister's visit all along the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic coast, and while she was on that trip her maintenance and crew were charged against the ship channel. That should have been charged somewhere else. What is the need of a tug costing $26,000, and $7,000 for repairs, in the ship channel? What does she do?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. She is used in towing dredges from place to place, and in towing the coal barges. About 6,000 tons of coal a year is used by the vessel. She is to-day placing the scows. My hon. friend has given his estimate of the expenditure last year on the ship channel as $30,000 or $40,000. Does that represent the wages?

Mr. FOSTER. It is the working account of the dredges and tugs. I do not know.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This amount does not include the coal, which amounts to some $20,000: the cost of maintenance and various kinds of stores, all must be added: and then you would get the expenditure of last year in the actual work done in the channel, amounting to about $80,000. I would point out that the equipment in the way of dredging was found to be antiquated and inefficient, and the work was not conducted to advantage. This year, I am told by the chief engineer, that in consequence of building two elevators, the better equipment of these, and strengthening of the dredges, making them more powerful, and the regulating of the tugs, they are now doing service in the way of dredging 100 per cent more than last year.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the capacity of these dredges per day?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. According to the material, from 1,200 to 4,000 cubic yards in a day of ten hours. I would quite agree with any criticism if the aim of the department was merely to develop plant; because, of course, it is the result of the plant that we want. But if a better service is being done this year by 100 per cent than was being done last year, we can look forward to an expenditure of capital in order that good may come from it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The acting minister made the statement that the tug Eureka was required to tow her dredges and to tow coal to the dredges. Now, if the minister will turn to the Auditor General's Report, pages Q—25 to 29, he will find that each dredge has her own tug. The dredge Laurier has her own tug, the Jean d'Iberville, on which there was an expenditure of $2,236. Next is the dredge Laval, which has the tug Cartier. Next is No. 11, which has the tug F. M. Parsons; then dredge No. 12, which has the tug C. J. Brydges.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) will understand that every dredge has to have a tug with her to take the scows to her, and tow them away, and that is a service different from the service performed by the Eureka.

Mr. TAYLOR. But will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) wait until I get through. Then we have the tug John Pratt, for which there is no dredge, and she is at work on the ship channel. There is also the tug St. James, for which there is no dredge. Then we have dredge No. 8, which has the tug Emelia. There is also the tug St. Francis. There are three tugs besides the Eureka. Where is the work for these other dredges and for the Eureka too?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer informs me that the tug John Pratt is used for what is called testing the channel, ascertaining the depth, taking the soundings, in order to see what has to be removed. The St. James is used for the hydrographic survey.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a special vote for the hydrographical survey. Why should any tugs connected with this hydrographic survey be referred to under this service. What does the St. Francis do?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. She assists a dredge, but is not strong enough for the work under all circumstances. She can move her dredge in a harbour, but if the dredge has to be moved against a current another tug is required.

Mr. TAYLOR. But each dredge has its own tug, and there are these four besides, including the Eureka. Where is the work for the Eureka?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To tow the dredges themselves from place to place with scows and equipment.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, certainly, the minister knew, before he purchased that boat, that he wanted one to do that work, and why did he not ask for a vote?

Mr. MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is proper that all the information of that kind should be given in advance. I have not read Hansard to see what information was given at that time. But I see as the vote is given this year, and as it appears to be extended from last year, it reads in the estimates, so much for the St. Lawrence ship channel, not giving particulars. Now, I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) does not want to be unfair. But, is it a fair representation to describe the Eureka as a mere pleasure yacht, when it was bought in July, 1898—two years ago—and from that time to the present has been engaged in legitimate work of the St. Lawrence channel, with the brief exception of one and a half months at the commencement of the fiscal year, 1898, when she carried the minister on his official mission to the maritime provinces. You can hardly call that a pleasure yacht, when she was used for this special purpose for so short a time, and has ever since been used for the regular tug purposes for which she was acquired.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister is mistaken. The journey of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) was begun on the 13th of July, and ended the 9th of September. He chartered this yacht from the Connollys and paid for her at so much a day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) still calls her a yacht.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly; but call her a tug, or anything you like. She was chartered specially for that business, and when the minister came back, the bargain was concluded some time in September, 1898. She was chartered at so much a day in the first place, and it was only after he came back that the job was put up by the Connollys to unload this vessel on to the government for $26,000, and charge her to the ship channel. She was bought from the North American Transportation Company, which means M. K. Connolly & Co.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) can tell what tug did the work of towing for which the Eureka was afterwards purchased?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The John Pratt was the tug for that purpose before the Eureka was bought. But the channel had not been surveyed or swept for a long time, and it became necessary to have that done. That work is going on; it is a continuous one, and proceeds pari passu with the work of dredging. The John Pratt is used for that purpose. The chief engineer informs me that the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal made a request that an extra tug should be acquired in order that that deepening of the channel might go on.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the cost of the tugs generally? Is the Eureka a more costly tug than others in the service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer informs me that before the Eureka was bought, they made an estimate and found they could not build a tug as useful as the Eureka, at the price for which she was bought. The superintendent of dredging certified to the Eureka being suitable and the price reasonable. But the chief engineer tells me they could not have built so good a tug at that price.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask how this tug classes with the John Pratt, and others, as to value and capacity?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Eureka is a much larger vessel, of greater tonnage, and much greater value. The Eureka is a steel tug, and the John Pratt is a wooden tug. The engineer says the Eureka is a much more powerful tug.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will say whether the Eureka was built as a tug boat in the first instance, and for that purpose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told she was built for the express purpose of towing barges. In the waters where she runs there are very strong currents and a powerful tug is very desirable.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the $7,000 for repairs that were spent on her?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That expenditure was for the purpose of building a new cabin for the chief engineer, and providing the necessary accommodation on the boat, also a draughting room for the staff and general repairs.

Mr. CLANCY. A tug boat does not require any draughting.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the dredges are at work the superintendent of dredging, with any assistants he may have with him, has the plans on board, and it is necessary to have a proper working room for the proper understanding of the work that is to be done.

Harbours and rivers, Ontario—Rainy River, lock and dam ..... $25,000

Mr. CLANCY. Would the acting Minister of Public Works tell me why the items that appeared in the two former years for some work on the River Sydenham in one case, and the other case in Little Bear Creek, have been dropped, and why the work has really been dropped? Last year I called the attention of the Finance Minister to that, and pointed out to him that if there were no dredges belonging to the department, good dredges could be obtained in the locality to do the work. I think I had a partial promise from the hon. gentleman that he would turn his face that way, and take hold of this work again, but nothing has come of it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to recall the circumstance to which my hon. friend alludes. I am told by the engineer that the true explanation was that no dredges were available.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not true, so far as other dredges outside the department are concerned. I can get the hon. gentleman a dredge in twenty-four hours, a good one, that will do that work cheaper than the departmental dredge will do it. There are a number of dredge men who are contractors with good dredges, and ready to do the work; so the hon. gentleman need urge that excuse no longer. But the item has been dropped, the appropriation has disappeared. I am told the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), is not going back to that riding, and perhaps he thinks it is just as well to drop Little Bear Creek. But still the work is an important one, and ought to be done. Then the work on the Sydenham River was commenced, but it was left unfinished.

Mr. GIBSON. What can you hire a dredge for?

Mr. CLANCY. A good dredge for $60 or $80 a day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no recollection at all of the circumstance, the matter has not been brought to my mind at all as to why the work was not performed.

Mr. CLANCY. The engineer can tell him now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He tells me that the reason the former vote was not utilized, was because there was no dredge available. But as to why the estimates do not contain other figures, that is information no minister could give.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say with regard to dredging, that it seems to me that it is done in a very loose way. I am credibly informed that the dredging going on at Owen Sound for two or three years, is done by a dredge owned, as I said a short time ago, by certain parties who are very closely related to one of the members of this House. There is Dr. Horsey, son-in-law of the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald), Dr. Horsey's wife, daughter of the hon. member for East Huron; Miss Maggie Macdonald, spinster, unmarried daughter of the hon. member for East Huron, and Mr. A. J. McKay, Crown attorney. There are two ladies and two gentlemen who own a dredge, and they have gone in and got contracts from the government. Can any one imagine that with all the recklessness of human nature, you could find another example in the country of two ladies and two gentlemen going in and buying a dredge, without knowing anything about the plant they were purchasing, and spending a large amount of money on it, unless they knew that they had a friend at court who would get them dredging to do for the government?

Mr. CLANCY. Two ladies, a lawyer and a physician.

Mr. SPROULE. Two ladies, a lawyer and a physician, who know nothing about dredging. These are the parties who were engaged at $80 a day, and they are putting in full time, I presume. Somebody is profiting by it. An inspector is put on to see that the work is perfectly done. That inspector ought to be on the dredge all the time, from the moment it goes out in the morning, until it comes in at night, to see whether these scows are properly filled, to keep the time, and to see that the dredge is working, so as to know that there is full value given for this money. Instead of this, the inspector is on shore a good share of his time up around the hotels, smoking 10 cents and 25 cents cigars. I drew attention to this matter last year, and the government stated that they would look into it, but, I am told it is going on right through the season in the same way. I am also told that this inspector is employed by the dredge company to do work for them as well. Imagine the inspector that the government employ to look after their interest being employed by the dredge company. That is a matter that may not be correct, but the gentleman who informed me believes it to be correct. No inspector who is doing his duty properly can lead the life that this inspector leads and do justice to the country. Now, I say as well that if it were not for the fact that this dredge is owned by friends of a member of this House it never would be found engaged in that work up there. Other parties who owned a dredge of their own could not get an hour's work. They could not get employment for it, and they were obliged to sell out. As soon as the dredge was bought by these parties who were friends of the government, it got steady employment at $80 a day. I am told that the dredge is not doing $5 worth of work an hour instead of $8, but that if the owners were paid fair remuneration for the work that they have done $4 or $5 an hour would be ample. There is no kind of proper supervision over it, and the money is being squandered.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that the ownership of the dredge has anything to do with the question, providing that the government is getting fair value for its money.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was not aware that this dredge was at work at Owen Sound or that there was any question of ownership. But on general principles, preferring in my own way to have public work let by tender, when I took charge of the department I gave general instructions that tenders should be called for, and tenders will be called for in a short time for Owen Sound dredging. In compliance with these general instructions, not only general, but in reference to some particular points, a contract is being prepared the specifications are nearly ready and the work is about to be advertised. The work is going to be advertised in a few days. I may say that the chief engineer has called my attention to the fact that the dredging done at Owen Sound by this wicked dredge, which is paid for at the rate of 13½ cents per cubic yard, is being done at the lowest price that any dredging of that kind has been done on behalf of the government. What I ought to say is that taking a lot of tenders that have been invited there has been no tender procured at so low a rate as 13½ cents.

Mr. FOSTER. It depends a good deal on the quality of the work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course it does. I am speaking of the same class of work done under the same conditions. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has told us that he is credibly informed that $4 and $5 an hour is fair remuneration. I am going to give him advance information so that he may get ready. He has the information for his friends there, who can tender, and if they are the lowest tenderers this work will go to the dredge that he alludes to.

Mr. SPROULE. I am alluding to the dredge they are working now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend says that he is credibly informed that this price we are paying, 13½ cents per cubic yard, or $80 a day for a minimum days' work of 600 cubic yards, ought to be cut down to $4 or $5 an hour, or $40 or $50 a day.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister evidently misunderstands me. My information is that for the amount of work she is doing the dredge is not earning more than $4 or $5 an hour. The scow ought to contain so many yards, but I am told that the scows are not nearly filled, that they are often taken away when they are nothing like full, and yet they are charged for at the full rate, and on the basis of a full scow.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has no evidence to support such a statement. I do not think there is any such evidence at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I have the evidence of a man who is just as truthful and as honest as the hon. minister himself, and who is a respectable citizen of Owen Sound.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman has any information at all he should have every opportunity to bring it forward. I would not tolerate for a moment what would be a manifest fraud on the country such as that. But the mere general statement of somebody looking on proves nothing. We have the reports of the engineer, and we believe that the inspector is a reliable, honest man. It is quite immaterial how full or how empty the scow is if the contents are fairly measured. It is very easy to get up and say that you are credibly informed by a very reliable man. That does not prove anything at all, and I question very much whether it is a fair way of trying to make a point. I think that is a course of argument which is hardly creditable. It is no evidence. It is merely throwing about insinuations and nothing more. There is nothing tangible. If the hon. gentleman can bring me the name of the reliable citizen in Owen Sound who makes these statements, I will send an officer there to examine into it, and I will pledge him not to protect any man who is blameable. But when the hon. gentleman will not give the name of his informant he should not make these statements. I will investigate his statement if he will take the responsibility of giving me the evidence, and of giving me the name of the witness. Let him give me an opportunity, and his statement will be investigated without any hedging at all. Unless the hon. gentleman does that I will consider that he has withdrawn his statement.

Mr. SPROULE. I made my statement in my place last year that the inspector was going around town, and that he could not possibly keep track of what was going on at the dredge, spending his time around the hotels, instead of on the dredge. I made that statement, and the reply was that it could not possibly be the case, but two or three men have told me so, and it is known to every citizen of Owen Sound.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON. (Kingston). It is quite common that persons who want to do any work of this kind generally form themselves into an incorporated company, and rightly or wrongly, the law requires at least five stockholders before a company can be formed under the Joint Stock Companies' Act. As persons want to limit their personal liability and prefer to do business in the name of a company they generally bring in members of their family holding one or two shares in order to comply with the law. That has been done time and time again in reference to ordinary business establishments. That being so, it matters nothing that the principal owner of the dredge in order to comply with the law, should include the members of his family. This has nothing to do, of course, with the question as to whether the dredge is doing proper work, but it seems to me it is an explanation which it is only fair to offer to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. This dredge was owned by a company previously who happened to be Conservatives, and though they understood the business thoroughly they could not get an hour's work. As soon as it was sold to friends of the government it was immediately employed and has been employed since. That is why I object to the whole thing. Like that other case in Toronto, as soon as friends of the government got hold of the dredge, it was employed at remunerative rates.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to say that this loose system of inspection took place last year in Owen Sound, and that he brought it to the attention of the committee, and that this year there has been no improvement.

Mr. SPROULE. I made no inquiries this year and I am not speaking of this year. I was told later on in the season last year that there was no improvement, and my remarks applied to the balance of the season last year.

Mr. WM. GIBSON (Lincoln and Niagara). It is quite evident that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) knows very little about dredging operations.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) knows all about it, as he does about everything else.

Mr. GIBSON. I know a good deal about it, and I will leave it to the House to judge whether I do or not. I do not offer my opinions about everything, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does, and the less he knows about a thing the more he talks about it. It is well known to people who understand this kind of business that when dredging operations are to be carried on, surveys are made and soundings taken and cross-sections of the work are laid out by the engineers of the department. That is especially the case where the work is to be done by contract. Under these circumstances the inspector could even absent himself from his duties and still do his work—suppose the statement that he does absent himself is correct—for the reason that all the work done by the dredge, whether the scows are filled or only half-filled is measured from the cross-sections upon the completion of the dredging. Whether it is measured in scow lots or by measurement in place, is an arrangement between the engineers and the contractors. Now, the price of 13½ cents per yard is, in my judgment, very cheap. If this dredge is worth anything at all, it would require $8 an hour to operate it and to pay operating expenses at 13½ cents a yard, it would be necessary to take out five or six hundred yards per day. I am quite satisfied that no man, I do not care who he is (even the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule), with all the knowledge he possesses, and I will give him credit for a great deal of industry;) could judge as to the quantity on any scow unless it is measured carefully, because a great deal of water is always taken up with the silt, and it can only be properly measured by displacement. If it is measured in the scow there is a certain allowance made for the water, and if it is measured in place, it is on account of the cross sections that are made previous to the dredging being commenced and after the dredging is completed. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) should not be unfair in his criticism because it happens to be a son-in-law of a member of this House who owns the dredge. What we want to know is, whether this dredge is doing good work and is the price fair? If the inspector is remiss in his duty it is quite an easy matter for the government to attend to that part of the business. No reflection should be put upon the owners of the dredge simply because there happens to be the names of a couple of ladies in connection with it. We know that the late Senator Sanford, who did a large amount of work for this government and for the late government, carried on his business in the name of himself and every member of his family. This is done to get over the Joint Stock Companies' Act, by people who have money enough of their own to carry on business, and in order to conform with the law they bring in the names of members of their own family in preference to outsiders. I do not believe that the House or the country care whether Dr. Macdonald's son-in-law owns one dredge or fifty dredges. What we want to know is: Is the work being done by that dredge in conformity with the contract. Judging by the prices quoted by the minister, he can well afford to offer any one else to do the work for less money.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) as usual, brings a great deal of experience to bear on the subject, although he was good enough to say that the hon. member for Grey knows nothing about it. I want to tell him that I know something about it. I know that it is the opinion in the county that the country is not getting value for the money. He says, that it makes no difference whether the inspector is there or not, but who is to tell that these scows contain a certain number of yards. Is it the dredge owner who is interested that is to do that? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) says that there may be cross-sections, but I am told that it is not measured by cross-sections. The dredge is supposed to put out at least 600 yards a day, and that is one of the troubles arising from the loose system in which the work is being done. The dredge company, it is said, whenever they get to easy dredging naturally go deeper than is actually required to give the eighteen feet of water, but I am told that when they come to hard places they skip over them so that the bottom of the river is not level. There is no person to see whether they do that or not, and the inspector ought to be there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that if a dredgeman did that, he would not gain anything by it, because a survey is made to see how the work is left, and if a man were to leave holes and hills, he would be charged accordingly. The inspection is not made blind-fold or by the eye, but by a careful examination.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told that is just the way it is done, and it can easily be seen. It is in the interest of the dredge owner to work in the soft places as much as possible, and to skip over the hard places.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineers say that is not a fact. If the hon. gentleman will give me the name of a harbour where that has taken place, I will have it investigated.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told that it has taken place in Owen Sound.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman's reputation is involved in this matter. Will he name some person, and I will send him with the chief engineer to see whether that is correct or not?

Mr. SPROULE. I will try and get the town to appoint a man for that purpose. This has been brought to my attention, and I believe it to be a fact, and am so stating it to the House. When I mentioned it last year, I was told that it would be remedied, but my opinion is that it has not been remedied. I am giving the information which I have, for the purpose of enabling the government to look into the matter, and see if it is not so.

Mr. GIBSON. I was quite sure when I spoke of the hon. gentleman's knowledge of dredging, that he did not know anything about it, as is evident when he speaks about letting a plumb-line down into the water. I spoke of a cross-section, which means that a mark is put on the side of the river to be dredged, from which every foot of the area about to be dredged is carefully noted and measured, and after the work is done, it is gone over carefully and the quantity dredged ascertained to a cubic foot. With regard to what the hon. gentleman says about the dredge working only in the soft places, surely he knows that the arm of a dredge is of a certain length, and would not go beyond its own length. Dredge men would not seek out the soft places to suit their conveniences; it would not pay them; they would have to let the water out of the harbour or river to dredge below the length of the arm of the dredge derrick.

Mr. CLANCY. How can the hon. gentleman tell how much is done each day?

Mr. GIBSON. I quite appreciate what the hon. member for Bothwell says. If the dredging were done at so much an hour, it would be the imperative duty of the inspector to be continually on the dredge, to see that it worked to its fullest capacity, during every hour for which it was paid, and to note the break-downs and stoppages that took place. But where dredging is being done by the cubic yard, soundings are taken carefully and plans made, with cross-sections, originally, and after the work is completed. The number of scows a day taken out is simply approximate, so that at the end of a month the amount of work done may be approximately estimated.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. member shows how little he knows about what I said. I say the dredge is working by the day, and in order to see that it does a reasonable day's work, the inspector ought to be there all the time. How can he take account of the work done, if he is running around the town of Owen Sound? The measurement is not made after the dredging is done; but they give as an evidence that a day's work has been done, that they have taken out so many scows containing so many cubic feet.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland). I want to ask the acting Minister of Public Works if this work at Owen Sound is being done by the hour or by the yard?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The rule is $80 per day of ten hours; but there must be a minimum day's work of 600 cubic yards. That would amount to 13½ cents per cubic yard.

Mr. COCHRANE. This dredge is working by the hour.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And by service too.

Mr. COCHRANE. She is working by the hour, and you require an inspector there to keep account of the scows that go out, and a scow is supposed to contain a certain number of yards. How do you know what she is doing per hour unless she is filled and contains a certain quantity of material? Why do you keep an inspector there if not to keep an account of the scows and know what they are doing. But, if that gentleman is walking around town, smoking cigars, how do you know the amount that dredge is costing you? The hon. member for Lincoln reminds me of the scriptural adage: 'When a man is wise in his own conceit, there is more hope of a fool than of him.' If your inspector does not attend to his duty, how do you know what the scow is doing? If it all depends on a survey made after the season is over, when the influence of the river is felt, taking in silt all the while, the dredge is paid twice over for what she has done. I do not care who does the dredging, I do not care whether it is Dr. Macdonald or his daughter or his son-in-law who do it, but it appears to me, from the information before the committee, that the inspector has not attended to his work.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be done at the Rainy River?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The trouble about that work is that the place where the dam and lock will be erected is on the international boundary, and we have not yet been able to secure the consent of the American government. Last year, when this item was before the committee, it was stated that what was contemplated was to construct a wing dam, in the hope of raising the level of the water, but it is doubtful if that will meet the requirements of the case, and a dam and lock will likely be required. There is an island in the middle of the river, and the locks would be on the Canadian side. The engineer advises that the dam be constructed on the south side of the island, to the south side of the river, and that is in American territory. The lock would be between the island and the main shore on the north side. Until we get that consent, we cannot proceed. The United States government has been written to, but have not yet signified their consent to the work.

Digby post office, customs-house, &c..... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. Has this been begun?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, plans are now in the course of preparation. The total cost is estimated at $20,000, including the site. The site cost $3,000, and was paid out of last year's vote. Fittings, furniture and boxes, $3,000; estimated construction, $12,000; heating, $1,200; fencing, $600; clerk of the works and incidental expenditure, $1,200; total, $21,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the postal revenue there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A little over $3,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the post office kept now?

Mr. A. J. S. COPP (Digby). In a miserable little place, 20 x 25, fitted up temporarily for the purpose until we can get a new building. The rental is about $50 a year.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the population?

Mr. COPP. About 3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Owen Sound, which is a county town of over 9,000, has not a post office yet, notwithstanding the fact that the Postmaster General was there in 1896, at the time of the elections, and gave the people to understand that if they returned a supporter of the government, they would be likely to get a post office. But, although he will not give a post office to that important town, a town of nearly 10,000 inhabitants, he builds one in a place whose population is but 3,000. When the Minister of Customs was elected the people of Owen Sound thought that they were sure of a post office, but they have since learnt not to place such faith in the promises of the government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman's imagination seems to be very vivid to-night. There is not the slightest foundation for any statement that I ever promised or suggested or hinted in Owen Sound that we would build a post office there. And I will challenge the hon. gentleman to find that I ever made a promise to any locality about anything of that kind. I prefer to give no promise, or hint, or suggestion; but rather to preserve my views until the government, of which I am a member, has decided, and then, and not until then, to speak. The lease of the premises occupied in Owen Sound was about to expire, and I was importuned by numbers of people to buy buildings or to rent buildings, and so on. I gave one answer to all, and that was I thought it was in the interest of Owen Sound, at this time, not to have a post office building erected. Owen Sound is a promising and progressive town, and it would be much wiser to wait until her future is much more settled and so that the matter of the post office building can be more correctly decided in the future. For this reason, I refused to assent to the erection of a public building in Owen Sound, either when I was there or since. It is better to spend any money that we can spend in Owen Sound, rather with a view to improving the trade facilities, and not upon buildings that can be dispensed with in the meantime. If I have said anything to contradict this, and raised hopes among people in Owen Sound that I would favour the construction of such a building there at this time, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will have an opportunity of sending up a report of the remarks I am making to counteract any misleading effect. But the hon. gentleman will find nobody in Owen Sound to support the statement, that I ever hinted, either during an election or at any time, that I favoured such a proposal just now.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that Mr. Hopkins is my authority for what I have said. Mr. Hopkins was taken into the minister's room in my presence, and when he came out he took me down to look at a site that he said the Postmaster General had looked over. He said that it was between him and another party, and if he had a little more influence, he could get him to purchase it, but that he had practically promised to build the post office in Owen Sound and must select one site or the other. And several parties in Owen Sound have expressed themselves as though they believed that the Postmaster General had promised to have a new post office in Owen Sound in the near future. I shall act upon his suggestion and send a copy of Hansard with the remarks he has made. I am sure that some of his friends there will be very much surprised when they read it.

Mr. FOSTER. Why could not the acting Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General—because I do not suppose that the Public Works Department would put in an item of this kind without the recommendation of the Postmaster General to carry out the excellent business plan with reference to Digby that he thinks is so eminently well suited to Owen Sound. Owen Sound is a larger place. But, as a business man the Postmaster General says it has a better claim for a suitable building. The Postmaster General says that Owen Sound had better rent a suitable building. That will involve a less expenditure year by year, and it will suit the people for the present at least; and it is better to expend the public money on more important things, for instance, in improving the harbour. Does not he think that would be an eminently wise thing to do with reference to Digby? That is a town of 3,000—a nice little town—a beautiful summer resort, but its population is not large. I do not think it would be impossible for the Postmaster General to find a suitable place for a post office—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I could not?

Mr. FOSTER. Could not? I venture to say that statement could be successfully challenged.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was informed so.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, because it is the laudable ambition of the member who represents Digby to be able to go down and say that he has got $20,000 to build them a new post office, and therefore, he ought to have their support. We do not blame him for doing that, if he can get the Postmaster General to go outside of what is fair and businesslike to make this appropriation. See how it would be—you need not tell me that it is impossible to get a fair place to rent. Let it be known that you want it, and you will find some person who will give it, and that at a fair rental. The country is going to spend $20,000 on this new building. At a low estimate the cost of maintenance will be 10 per cent a year, so, year by year, it will cost $2,000 upon the capital expenditure made. Once you get a building of that kind, you have to have a caretaker, and you cannot get a man to take care of that building without spending money.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You do not count 10 per cent outside of the salary of the caretaker?

Mr. FOSTER. I say that taking the cost of money and the repairs, the maintenance outside of the caretaker one year with another, will amount to about 10 per cent. Because the time will come when we will have to make very large repairs.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You would not count 10 per cent on the site?

Mr. FOSTER. No. Well, we will count 10 per cent on $17,000, the cost of the building. Then, you have to get a postmaster; and for a postmaster in that building you cannot engage one as economically as under the present arrangement. You have to have larger salaries. Well, what is the principle on which we are going? Are we going to build a twenty thousand dollar post office in every town or village of two or three thousand inhabitants. I remember that some years ago, Hon. David Mills, the present Minister of Justice, when he sat on this side of the House, brought in a resolution which laid down a principle in these matters that was acceded to by the whole House. We were supposed to have that matter settled; and especially, we thought that when the gentlemen who were so vehemently in favour of it were in power, it would be carried out. But gradually they have commenced putting post offices in little places, led by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who wanted one for his town of Shelburne.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry that Shelburne has not got one yet. But I will keep it in mind.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) will keep it in mind. But is there any principle upon which we are proceeding, as illustrated by the fact that Owen Sound is refused while Digby was not refused?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are two reasons why I think it not wise to build a post office in Owen Sound at the present time. It is a very growing town, and it is quite possible that what would suit the population now, might not suit it in five years from now. And, just as we rather economize in the purchase of clothing for children when they are growing very fast, in like manner it is not advisable to erect a relatively expensive building when, in a very short time it is not going to be large enough for the needs of the place.

Moreover when a locality is getting a considerable portion of public money for one purpose, it may well forego the privilege of getting public money for another building, even though it is very desirable. For these reasons I did not favour the erection of a public building at Owen Sound. As to Digby, I have not the same knowledge, therefore, I could only form an opinion from evidence, but the evidence I had was of a reliable character. I was told that Digby had been swept by a fire, and almost wiped out.

It was represented to me that it had special claims. In addition to that, it is a favourite summer resort, and the people take pride in having their post office in a presentable place. At all events, the representative for Digby pressed this matter upon me strongly, and I felt he had advanced a good claim. Perhaps it is not growing as rapidly as Owen Sound, but its growth is of a more stable character. For these reasons, considering it was the shire town of the county, it seemed to me it had as good claims as other towns in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know at what stage in the growth of Owen Sound they might expect a post office? Suppose it reached the population of 50,000 and was still going on, would the minister use the same argument, that because it might continue to grow larger, a post office that would suit now, might not suit five years hence?

Mr. CLANCY. The member for York (Mr. Foster), has raised a very important question. I can find in Ontario probably fifty towns having as great a claim as Digby, and that have no post office erected at the expense of the Dominion government. Take the town of Wallaceburg, with a population of something over 3,000, and yielding a revenue of $3,414. I think only $140 a year is paid in that town for rent of a suitable place. Now, there is just as good reason for building a $20,000 post office in Wallaceburg as there is in the town of Digby. Take another town in the same county, Ridgetown, it has even a larger revenue, and the population is somewhat larger. I would like to know what principle the government follow in granting public buildings to the various towns of this country. If you are only erecting a public building where the member supports the government, is able to bring pressure on the government, I think you are leading to one of the worst abuses we can have. I have no hesitation in saying that if ever there was an unblushing bribe offered to a county, this is such a case. Digby is not so poverty stricken as that a building cannot be rented there suitable for a post office, for $150 a year.

Mr. COPP. We discussed this question pretty fully last year when the matter was before the House. On this occasion I have to assure the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), that I do not have to bribe the people of Digby, in order to secure election in that county. I am not asking for this post office with any idea in my mind of bribing the people of Digby. Possibly he is not aware that Digby has a majority of voters supporting the hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not expect to gain a single vote by the erection of this post office, I did not ask the Postmaster General to erect this post office in that town with the idea of securing votes. It is absolutely necessary that we should have better postal accommodation in the town of Digby. If you search the records of the Post Office Department, you will find that for the last eighteen years the people of that town have been trying to get better postal accommodation. As every one knows, it is a popular summer resort. Hundreds of American visitors come there every year, from 500 to 1,500, spend three or four months there. This building is not merely for the purpose of a post office, but it can be used as a custom-house, and for an inland revenue office as well. The town is growing. Last year and the year before, we spent over $75,000 in putting in waterworks, and now we contemplate putting in a system of sewage which will cost $50,000 to $75,000 more. A large number of buildings are being erected by Americans. Last year a Buffalo gentleman erected a building costing over $50,000. We are hoping that the erection of this post office will assist in securing a larger number of summer tourists from the United States. I consider that $20,000 for a post office is a small sum of money to invest as an advertisement to outsiders. When this matter was up last session, I mentioned several towns in Nova Scotia having a smaller population than Digby, where hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in power, had built post office costing over $30,000. In the town of Annapolis, with a population less than Digby, and with a revenue less than Digby, hon. gentlemen opposite built a post office that cost $30,000. Yet, they are finding fault because this government is building a post office in Digby. If there is any one place more than another in Nova Scotia that needs a post office, it is Digby.

Mr. SPROULE. You have a population there for half a year.

Mr. COPP. During half of the year I suppose the population is somewhere near 5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the hon. Postmaster General, or the hon. Minister of Public Works would have any difficulty at all, if he would offer a rental of $150 a year in getting a commodious building put up in Digby in which the work of the post office and of the customs could be carried on. But, suppose he cannot do that, and that he has to build, the hon. minister knows quite as well as I do that he can get a building for $5,000 that would be suitable for the work of the post office.

Mr. COPP. Why did you not do that in St. Mary's?

Mr. FOSTER. We are not talking about St. Mary's. If we were to go back only a little distance we would find the Liberal party solidly grouped together on a policy which they solemnly undertook to have carried through the House, that in reference to these public buildings population and revenue should be taken into account and they declared themselves against erecting large and expensive buildings in small places.

Mr. COPP.

What is the principle that the hon. minister is going on to-day? When we ask him for a principle, he gives us an ingenious defence as to his discrimination between Owen Sound and Digby, but he did not lay down a principle. When you go into a town that has about made its growth and that has about 3,000 of a population, are you going to put up a $20,000 post office? That would seem to be the principle that the minister took up, that if the growth was not completed he would wait and see what the future needs would be. But, let us come down to what is sensible and economical. No person would conduct his private business in that way. The hon. Postmaster General would not do it. He would put up a building which was necessary for the work he was carrying on and do nothing more. In this case he is going to put up a $20,000 structure, he is going to use up all the post office revenue that there is, whilst, under a business, common sense, economical plan he could get everything he wants for $100 or $200 a year and save the largest share of the post office revenue for the country. Digby is a nice little town, and I wish it all prosperity, and hope that enterprising men from abroad may go there and build houses for $20,000 and more, but I do not think this charge should be put upon the revenue of the country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there is a good deal in what the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) says, but the trouble is that other governments have set such bad examples that modest buildings do not appear to be at all popular just now. The hon. member for Bothwell asks me how I am going to justify giving Digby a public building and not giving one to Wallaceburg. To be perfectly frank, the claims of Wallaceburg were never presented to us. The hon. member for Bothwell did not bring the claims of Wallaceburg to our notice. He never asked for a building at Wallaceburg.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that the only reason why the hon. gentleman withholds it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not say that is the only reason, but I say that we have not had our attention brought to Wallaceburg. It would have been only fair for the hon. member for Bothwell to have presented the claims of Wallaceburg to have a public building, and the hon. gentleman has no ground for complaint when he has quite failed to speak for Wallaceburg. As to the principle upon which localities are selected for public buildings, it is difficult, I confess, to find a general principle. We claim, and I think, correctly, that regard is had to the public interest, but, I will confess that the character of some of the post offices that have been built in the past has been quite in excess of the requirements, that there has been too much money spent, and yet, knowing that, it is difficult to adopt a more modest style because of the bad example that has been set. I recall a case where the plans of a certain public building were exhibited in the town interested, and the people were very indignant at the modesty of the proposed building because a neighbouring town had a more extravagant, or a more expensive and showy building.

Mr. CLANCY. It is perfectly astounding that an hon. gentleman of the experience of the hon. Postmaster General, presiding over a great department, setting out as he has done in this wild goose manner, giving grants here and there, should state the defence which he has just now. I never said that Wallaceburg deserved a post office. I tell the hon. gentleman that it would be an outrage, as it would be a folly, to build a $20,000 post office in Wallaceburg. I do not propose following the line of saying that while I have been sitting on one side of the House I would be prepared to reverse entirely that which I said when I was on the other side. I would not erect a $20,000 post office in Wallaceburg, because there, a man invests his money in erecting a good building which rents for $140 a year. The reason I say there should not be a building costing $20,000 in Wallaceburg, or Digby, or any other town of that size in Canada, is that I know that there is enough public enterprise in those towns for men to invest their money in buildings to supply the public wants. To erect a building costing $17,000 or $20,000 in Digby, I care not what its prospects may be, is a public outrage, and nothing else. It is no excuse to say that a former government did this. It is no excuse for the hon. gentleman to say that he has his hands tied. He declared that if the people put him in power he would take a position the very reverse of what he has taken to-night. He has practically declared from his place in parliament to-night that his word is not worth a bad dollar bill, so far as his public pledges are concerned. He has declared from the statement made here to-night that he is not to be belived no matter what he says. I have mentioned three towns in the judicial county of Kent, each of which is well supplied, and the gentlemen who own the buildings, all of them political friends of his own and very respectable citizens, would be much offended if these rentals would be taken away from them. That, I dare say, is the case throughout the whole Dominion of Canada. It is not a very creditable defence to say that I have never brought the interests of Wallaceburg to his attention. He knows perfectly well that is not the reason. The hon. gentleman has no defence, he has no principle, and his word is worth nothing in this country, so far as his pledges are concerned.

Springhill public building ..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The estimated cost of the building is $12,000; fittings and furnishings, $3,000; heating, $1,200; fencing, $600; incidentals, $1,200. Last year there was an appropriation of $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the site been bought ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief architect has not yet made his report, although the particular lot has been practically decided upon, and the deputy thinks the price is $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the revenue and population ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postal revenue is $2,500, and customs revenue, $1,690.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The population was 4,800 in 1891, and it is much larger to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it has grown. This is on the same principle as the Digby post office.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.20 a.m. (Wednesday).

Mr. FOSTER. Everything they get in every way.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I would have to get this information from the different departments, for instance, the salary of the judge from the Justice Department. I will get the information and bring it down.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we might let that stand.

Motion agreed to.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to ask the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), having regard to the unsettled condition of local political affairs in British Columbia, if any steps are being taken by the government looking to the re-establishment of some stable form of government in that province, and if there is any announcement to be made in respect to the rumours we hear regarding the governor of the province.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to inform my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) that the matter is at present engaging the attention of the government. I was under the impression that I could make an announcement to-day, but I am sorry that I cannot do it at this moment.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PRIVATE BAMFORD.

Mr. FREDERICK D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I would like to call the attention of the government to the case of Private Bamford, who has been, as I understand, wounded in South Africa. Private Bamford is a son of a constituent of mine who writes me as follows :

Montreal, June 18, 1900.

F. D. Monk, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

My dear Mr. Monk,—You have no doubt observed by the press despatches from London, England, that my son Willie, a member of the first contingent for service in Africa, is invalided to Shorncliffe hospital.

I cabled the following to Shorncliffe camp Saturday at 1.30 p.m., and prepaid reply, namely:

Montreal, June 16, 1900, 1.30 p.m.

Hospital, Shorncliffe Camp, England.

Advise exact condition Bamford.

(Sgd.) BAMFORD.

Answer prepaid.

I also wired to Hon. F. W. Borden, Minister of Militia, Ottawa, the following:

'Notice "Herald" states my son, Private Bamford, invalided to Shorncliffe hospital; ascertain his exact condition and advise me fully.

(Sgd.) J. P. BAMFORD.'

Not having received a reply to my message to the Hon. Mr. Borden, I again wired him at eleven this a.m. as follows:

Montreal, June 18, 1900.

Hon. F. W. Borden,
Minister of Militia, Ottawa, Ont.

Please reply to my message regarding Private Bamford; anxious.

I received the following reply to my last telegram, namely:

Ottawa, June 18, 1900, 11.22 a.m.

J. P. Bamford, Montreal, Que.

Department will give you all the information received here as it comes. If fuller details is required, would suggest your cabling direct.

I reply to Mr. Borden's telegram I sent the following message, namely :

Montreal, June 18, 1900, 2.55 this p.m.

Hon. F. W. Borden, Ottawa, Ont.

Cabled direct Shorncliffe camp, prepaid message Saturday, but no reply. Can you not cable High Commissioner ; anxious.

(Sgd.) J. P. BAMFORD.

1. I would feel extremely obliged if you would kindly bring this matter up in the House and enable me to procure some definite information regarding the present condition of my son.

Yours very truly,

J. P. BAMFORD.

I received later the following telegram from Mr. Bamford :

Montreal, Que., June 19.

F. D. Monk, M.P., Ottawa.

Wrote you last evening re my son. Am advised he is wounded. Have you any particulars?

(Sgd.) J. P. BAMFORD.

I will send these communications over to the government and I suggest that it is a case where the government might go to the expense of cabling to satisfy this gentleman.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I remember receiving one of the telegrams, and only one which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has read. I suggested to my private secretary that the answer which was read by the hon. gentleman should be sent. I think it is in accordance with my instructions to him. When the next telegram was received all the telegrams in connection with the matter were handed over to the department with instructions to obtain all the information possible and to forward it direct to Mr. Bamford. That is all I am able to say at the present moment. I will make further inquiry, and either let the hon. gentleman know by letter or by making a statement in the House at a later period to-day.

EMERGENCY FOOD RATION.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N. B.) Mr. Speaker, some days ago the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) promised the House that he would look into the matter and bring down an answer in reference to the passing through the customs of the emergency food. The hon. minister has not brought that information down to the House, but I notice that in the newspapers that information seems to be going the rounds, and it seems to me that we have a right as members of the House to the information in accordance with the promise of the hon. minister.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The question was asked me if any order had been given by the government for the free admission of this food, and if so, whether it would be brought down. There was no order given by the government. The despatch that I saw in the papers was read before the committee yesterday, was a telegram that the commissioner sent to the collector of customs at Montreal in reference to the matter, and also the latter's reply thereto.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. minister contend that he is not bound to bring down whatever information there is in reference to the matter in accordance with his promise? He surely does not bind himself to an order or any single particular. What the House asked for was the information as to how this food got through the customs. The commissioner is in print now with the information about it, and yet the hon. minister does not think he is under any obligation to the members of the House as to the exact nature of the transaction that took place as regards the passing of this food. Surely the minister is treating the House with scant courtesy.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. By no means. The statement was made that the government had given an order for the free admission of this food and I was asked to see if such an order had been given by the government, and if so if I would bring it down. I said that I would make inquiries. I did make inquiries and at a subsequent date I replied to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) that I had been unable to find that any order had been given in reference to the matter. That was all that was brought before the House and all that was asked for in reference to the matter.

IMPERIAL FEDERATION—PAMPHLET BY THE RIGHT HON. W. E. FORSTER, M.P.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorancy). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I would like to call the attention of the government to a pamphlet which is being distributed just now, entitled 'Imperial Federation: by the Right Hon. W. E. Forster, M.P., reprinted from the Nineteenth Century, February and March, 1885. Ottawa, Government Printing Bureau, 1900.' It contains a note signed by Richard R. Dobell. I suppose this is the same gentleman who sits for Quebec West. It is dated Ottawa, Ont., June 6, 1900. Among other things I find in this note the following :

It would be difficult to imagine the formation of any council that would exercise a greater weight upon the policy of the empire than an Imperial Council, which, Mr. Forster indicates, might be formed to sit in London, receiving advice from the various component parts of the empire, and deliberating on questions raised, not only by members of the self-governing colonies, but also in conjunction with the representatives of Great Britain herself.

I would like to ask, in the first place, whether this statement contained in this note is an indication of the policy of the government, and secondly, how it is, that, when the House is calling for most important documents, which are not printed, and which this House requires, it is possible that the Government Printing Bureau should be employed in printing this pamphlet, which, no doubt, is of very great value, but which is not of very pressing urgency at the present moment. The House and the committees are anxiously waiting for printing that is necessary for the transaction of business, and it seems to me that this pamphlet could have been delayed. I would like to know who gave the authority for the printing of this document at the Government Printing Bureau?

Mr. R. R. DOBELL (Quebec West). I have no difficulty whatever in answering my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain). At the last meeting of the Imperial Federation League in the Railway Committee room of the House, I promised, as some gentlemen present will remember, that I would have reprinted that essay, because I thought it pointed to the most practical way of adopting Imperial federation. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) is evidently anxious about the cost of printing the pamphlet. My private secretary, I understand, had it done entirely at my cost. I think it has taken about six weeks to have it printed; but I was not in any hurry for it, and I received it yesterday.

PRIVATE COURTNEY OF 'A' BATTERY.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Perhaps, now that the Minister of Militia is in his place, he can answer the question that I submitted yesterday, and which the Prime Minister said he would communicate to him. If the minister has not been informed I have the letter here which I can read again.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden.) If the hon. gentleman will wait until to-morrow I will have an opportunity of reading the statement, and can give him an answer.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—THE EMERGENCY RATIONS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I ask the Minister of Militia if he is yet prepared to lay on the Table the promised analyses, and the affidavits of the tests made at Kingston?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden.) I handed the affidavits to the deputy minister yesterday to be presented to the committee, and I asked him to have copies made so that I could lay the copies on the Table. I have not yet received them. The tests are now completed. I am told by the deputy that they were received a few minutes ago, so that to-morrow I will lay on the Table copies of the affidavits, and copies of all the tests that have been made.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister of Customs lay on the Table of the House to-morrow what information he has as to the manner in which this so-called food was passed by the customs-house at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I understand that this is a new request. The matter is before the committee now, and as to whether it should not be left there to be dealt with by the committee appointed for the purpose, is a question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I can hardly think that the minister (Mr. Paterson) is serious in telling the House, that when this subject, as to how a product from a foreign country passed through the customs, has become a matter of discussion in this House, the information should not be laid on the Table. It is treating the House with scant courtesy. In my experience of parliamentary life I have never heard of anything so at variance with responsible departmental government. I hope, for the respect the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) owes to the government and to himself, he will not hesitate to do that which has never been refused to be done before.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I take some exception to the statement just made by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper). I am not prepared to say that this information should not be laid on the Table of the House, and neither am I prepared to say that it should. Charge seventeen laid by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), says:

17. The substance brought in from the United States, as above stated, in Saratoga trunks was detained by the customs officers for duty thereon, but under direction of the government it was allowed to pass without payment of customs dues.

That being so, and the matter having been referred by the House to a special committee for investigation, I question the propriety of the House dealing with it until it is reported upon by that committee. It seems to me that it would be prejudging the case if the papers were placed on the Table of the House, when the House itself has ordered an investigation upon this subject. There is certainly much to be said in support of the position taken by the Minister of Customs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Prime Minister is inverting the order of procedure in public business. The order of procedure is this: That these papers are first laid on the Table of the House, and then they are sent to the committee appointed. This House is not dependent on any committee to get information, and this information as to how the product of a foreign country came to be admitted free of duty into this Dominion, has never before been refused. It is no answer to say that a committee has been appointed, and that information will be given to that committee. This House is higher than the committee which it has appointed, and this House is the channel through which the committee should receive the information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The House has determined the method whereby it will receive this information, by giving the committee power to call for persons and papers, and this particular accusation having been included in the charges, and the committee having been appointed to inquire into it, the committee is the channel through which the House should receive a report on the matter.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). In reply to the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no question before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. The Speaker informs me that there is nothing before the House. There was a moment ago apparently when the Minister of Finance was permitted to speak.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When the leader of the opposition was permitted to speak.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must call the hon. gentleman to order.

Mr. WALLACE. I have another matter to bring before the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker. When the question was raised by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) as to a wounded soldier in South Africa, I attempted to make some reference to that matter, but I was precluded for the time being, and I shall revert to that for a moment.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman has any matter personal to himself to bring before the House he can do so.

Mr. WALLACE. I have not a matter personal to myself—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. WALLACE. The polite intimations from the other side that I am to sit down will not be obeyed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). When the Speaker rises the hon. gentleman ought to sit down if he has any respect for the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. If the Minister of Railways knew the rules of the House he would know that he is violating those rules now by yelling out while sitting in his seat. I endeavour to obey the rules. I have not broken any rule yet, and I do not intend to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not intend to allow any hon. member on that side or anywhere else to browbeat or bully me. I said I had some matters to bring to the attention of the House that were germane to those brought by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. I am going to bring them to the attention of the House. I am quite in order.

Mr. BERGERON. No surrender.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. John Hewitt, of Toronto, whose son is in the first contingent, has written to me asking me if I could procure any information with regard to his son, who is ill. He has apparently exhausted every means known to himself, and I therefore beg to call the attention of the minister, to whose department I have written to-day, asking if any information can be obtained as to the whereabouts of Mr. Hewitt's son, the seriousness of his complaint, and so on, so that the information may be given to his family. I have also a letter from Dr. Freeborn, of Magnetawan, asking for information with regard to William McCullough, who became a member of the second contingent of mounted forces, who enlisted, I think, at Edmonton, who is ill and whose parents live in Algoma and wish to get some information about him. I took occasion to call the attention of the House, and before the House met, the attention of the government, to the fact that the government had not in my opinion done their duty in giving means of information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the point of order?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The point of order is that the hon. gentleman cannot make a speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would ask my hon. friend to confine himself to a statement of the facts which he wishes to bring to the attention of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. That is what I have done so far. As to the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that I cannot make a speech—

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). You are sorry.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, I am sorry, but the Minister of Marine ought to be glad. I called the attention of the Minister of Militia long time ago, before parliament met, to the importance of furnishing information as to any casualties or illness among the soldiers who were sent to South Africa, as I did not think the government had done their duty in that matter, so that friends might get information without undergoing great expense. It appeared to me all along, and it appears to me to-day, that they have been very lax and derelict in doing what was a plain duty. Now, Sir, I wish to call attention to this further fact in direct connection with this. Lord Lansdowne, the Minister of War for Great Britain, had arranged that the British soldier could communicate with his friends at home in Great Britain, and that they could communicate with him at a reduced rate—that cablegrams, instead of costing eight or nine shillings a word, could be sent to and from England at two shillings a word. Lord Lansdowne, after a good deal of correspondence with the Post Office Department in England, also made arrangements that the Canadians could send their cablegrams as official government messages, having precedence over all other messages, for two shillings a word, plus sixpence a word for the cablegram from Canada to Great Britain. Lord Lansdowne communicated the facts to the Minister of Militia here, and requested that all the cablegrams be sent through the general officer commanding the Canadian militia, so that they might go through official channels, and have precedence over all other messages. Although that was arranged many weeks ago, the government never communicated a line of that arrangement, so far as I know, to the people of Canada, or to the thousands of friends of soldiers who are desirous of communicating with them. I ascertained it and I endeavoured to send a cablegram under these conditions. I sent my money to the department and the message; but that message never was sent under those conditions. The government, though they retained the money, never complied with the conditions.

Mr. FOSTER. You ought to know better than trust them with your money.

Mr. WALLACE. It seems that I was a little innocent in the matter. It is true, afterwards the deputy minister undertook to send a cablegram through Lord Strathcona; but as it would be ten or eleven days before I received an answer, I cabled through the Red Cross League, and got an answer in two or three days. This shows that the government are utterly reckless and helpless in a very important matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. I shall have to ask my hon. friend to stop his argument. He is not asking a question.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not asking a question; I am making a statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has no right to make an argument.

Mr. WALLACE. If the Speaker says I have no right to make a statement to this House, I will sit down; but I will protest against any such ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The position is just this. My hon. friend is aware that when the Orders of the Day are called, it is open to members to ask questions or to make personal explanations; but it is not open to a member to address the House and discuss a question.

Mr. WALLACE. If it is necessary, I shall move the adjournment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. WALLACE. I think, Mr. Speaker, your attention might very well be called to the boorish noises heard across the House. I have made my statement; I have nothing more to say, only this, that I think the government should have carried out the regulations provided by Lord Lansdowne.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member had better make his motion to put himself in order.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall move that the House do now adjourn.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman, the gentleman's tone and manner. If I were to attempt to do so, I hope I would utterly fail, but I must say, with reference to the hon. gentleman's money, that I shall make immediate inquiry, and see that it is returned to him forthwith. I want the House to distinctly understand that I have not any of it in my pocket. With regard to the inquiry the hon. gentleman has made of a man named Hewitt and a man named McCullough, he says he has written me to-day. Well, I have not received his letter, but so soon as I receive it, I shall send him a reply, giving all the information we have in the department. So far as the special rates are concerned, I understand that Lord Strathcona arranged for a half rate by cable between London and South Africa. I think that that has been made public, and has been generally understood.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not catch what the hon. gentleman said. Who, did he say, made the arrangement?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did not say who made it, I said it was made through Lord Strathcona, and that cablegrams to South Africa through Lord Strathcona, go at a reduced rate—I think a half rate.

Mr. WALLACE. Did the hon. minister announce that to the country?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it was announced in the papers.

Mr. WALLACE. Where ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I shall find out where, and let the hon. gentleman know. At any rate the hon. gentleman seems to have known it. With regard to communications between the people of this country, and the soldiers in South Africa, I can only say that they are precisely the same as between the people in England and their friends in South Africa. All the news received at the War Office in London, has been promptly forwarded here, and we have not only had the news coming from the War Office, but also have had direct communications from Colonel Otter, and the other commanding officers from Canada in South Africa, and communications through the Governor of Cape Colony, direct through His Excellency here. We have done the best we could in the Militia Department to give all the news possible to the people interested in this country. I may be pardoned for referring to a personal matter, Sir, but if I do so, it is only to show that there has been no partiality in this matter. I myself, although my son is in South Africa, have not had one word from him direct, since April 14 last—not a single word; and I doubt if there is any one of the parents and friends of the soldiers in South Africa, who have had to wait as long a time as that. We have done our very best to answer all inquiries. We could not undertake to enter into an avalanche of cabling, because we would not know where it would end, but we have, in every way in our power, done what we thought was our duty to the friends of the men out there, in obtaining best information we could. I understand that there is some information in the department which has come in within the last half hour. I have sent over for it, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will break into the proceedings to read any cablegrams there may be which will be of interest to the House or the country.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I am somewhat surprised at the statement of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, that the government are not prepared to go into an avalanche of cabling to satisfy those who have relatives doing service in South Africa. It is not an avalanche of cabling that is in question, but the news has been so very scarce, and it has been so difficult to get any information from the Minister of Militia or his department, that the people justly complain. Although there is an official over there whose duty is to give all the information possible to the people in this country about their friends and relatives in South Africa, that information is so very scarce that the people think the government are perfectly indifferent in the matter. The flippant remark of the minister that he would return the money to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), may be very well passed over in silence. If he would show the same honesty in every department of life, that would be very commendable on his part. The hon. gentleman said that Lord Strathcona had made some arrangement.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I said that an arrangement had been made through Lord Strathcona.

Mr. SPROULE. I took down the hon. gentleman's words, and I am quite sure that Hansard will bear me out in what I say. The hon. minister subsequently altered that statement and said that an arrangement had been made through Lord Strathcona. Well, my information is that it was not Lord Strathcona who made the arrangement at all, but Lord Lansdowne, representing the War Department, and he made it for the special purpose of enabling those Canadians who had friends and relatives in South Africa to get information about them as rapidly and cheaply as possible. Such messages were given precedence as official messages, by being transmitted through the channel of the War Office. But the Department of Militia here has not given this information to the Canadian people, so that they might avail themselves of the facilities provided for the people of Canada to get the information they are justly entitled to. Besides there has not been a single word of information given to the public, up to the present, of the arrangement to which the hon. minister referred. The department did not deign to tell the Canadian people that there is a way by which they can get information from their relatives very cheaply and rapidly, namely, by means of this arrangement made by Lord Lansdowne for enabling our people to get information through the War Department. The Minister of Militia never gave publicity to that arrangement. Will any one then say that he has done his duty faithfully? Is it to be wondered at that the Canadian people who have relatives in South Africa, who may be languishing on beds of sickness, should feel anxious about their fate, and should be willing to go to any expense to get even the most fractional information about them, and they cannot understand the callous indifference of the Minister of Militia and his department. Now it comes out at the eleventh hour, that the department knew of an arrangement made for the benefit of our people, but never made that arrangement known to the people, who consequently could not take advantage of it. The hon. minister has endeavoured to excuse himself, by saying that he cannot send an avalanche of cables, but he was not asked to do that. He also adds that he has not received any word from his own son, who is out there, since April 14. That does not show any great anxiety on his part as to what his son is doing, but I am told that his son is not in any place where he is likely to be injured, except by sickness.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What does the hon. gentleman mean? It is only fair to my son to say that in yesterday's Globe, there is the announcement in the correspondence of that paper, that he was one of the six men who swam the River Vet on the forward march from Bloemfontein, and one of the men who defeated a party of Boers on the north side of that river, and were successful in turning the flank of the Boers. I want to know what the hon. gentleman means when he has the hardihood to make a statement here to the injury of that young man and myself, namely, that my son is not anywhere where he is taking any risk. I have a right to explanation, and so has this House. A meaner or more contemptible insinuation was never before made on the floor of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, King's) that no such insolent bluff as he has made to-day shall deter me from saying what I have to say. Nor will his graveyard reminiscences deter me. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I saw the statement in the press that his son was in no danger, and I said we had never heard that he had been in an engagement.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He left as second lieutenant in the—

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor and I intend to keep it. I accept everything that the hon. gentleman says, and I am glad to withdraw anything that I may have said that he thought reflected upon his son. I gave the information at my disposal. I did not say a word, directly or indirectly, reflecting on his son. I said that the information in the press was that he was in no danger, and that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, King's) would not have the anxiety suffered by parents whose son was wounded or lay in a hospital ill with enteric fever and not expected to live twenty-four hours. The hon. gentleman could afford to say that I had no information more than others, but that is no reason why others should not be more anxious than he when they knew that their children might be in a dying condition and could get no information concerning them. Wise provision was made by Lord Lansdowne by which they could have gained information, if the minister had done as he should have done and made the fact known.

Motion (Mr. Wallace) to adjourn, negatived.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The information I referred to is as follows:

SUPPLY—DUTIES ON TOBACCO.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay in your hands a resolution which I may fairly anticipate will commend itself to the government and will be accepted by them—namely, a motion in favour of a reduction in the duties on tobacco. I hope the government will not receive it as a motion of want of confidence, but will be prepared to accept the terms of my resolution. In the first place, I desire to remind the government that we are living now under exceptional circumstances with regard to our revenue—that we are collecting a very much larger amount than the public service requires. We are collecting, in round numbers, 40 per cent more taxes from the people than we did when hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. Whether hon. gentlemen opposite are or are not prepared to say that, owing to change of circumstances, that that was warranted, I shall not discuss at this moment. My motion is made in view of the fact that a very large sum is being collected from the people—according to a significant phrase made to us by the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), we are collecting a sum in excess of the public needs that should be in the people's pocket. We are collecting a sum of about fourteen millions that, according to the profession—leaving aside the practices—of hon. gentlemen opposite should be left in the pockets of the people. That being the case, it seems proper that we should look around and see whether we can make any reasonable reduction in the taxes. And if we can accomplish two things—if we can encourage certain industries and, at the same time, reduce the taxes of the people, we shall accomplish two things greatly to be desired. My intention is to propose that we should remove the excise duty of five cents a pound on Canadian leaf tobacco. I do not propose to go further than to ask that it be removed. Now, what is the object in removing it? The first point is that the Canadian-grown tobacco to-day stands in a very difficult position. There is an unfounded prejudice from one end of Canada to the other, leading the people to believe that we cannot produce a good class of leaf. There are a number of persons engaged in the trade who are naturally prejudiced in consequence of their business being affected by it; and for them to keep up that prejudice is a very natural thing. I am glad to say that, with the increase in the duties—first, the customs duties, and later, in the excise duties—considerable additional protection has been given to the Canadian grower. But, it has had the effect of advancing to a very considerable extent the price upon tobaccos of foreign growth.

I wish it to be clearly understood at the outset that we must always recognize this fact, that tobacco is one of the articles that has been in the past and must in the future be selected as an object of taxation. I am not in any sense contending that tobacco is an article that should go untaxed; whether it is taxed too highly or not, may be a question open to discussion. But for my purpose it is not necessary to discuss that point further than to say that I think we can with profit and with great benefit to the people of this country reduce or remove entirely the excise duty from Canadian leaf. Now, what will be the effect of that? First, it will encourage the growth of Canadian tobacco. It may be said that it is encouraged now, but in spite of that encouragement we are not making as much headway as we should. I am convinced that as prejudice is gradually removed, and once the Canadian leaf has been placed upon its feet in Canada, it never will recede, because I have not the slightest doubt that we can grow a quality of tobacco in Canada that will suit a large share of our market. It is true that tobacco will have to be imported of certain kinds and for certain purposes at all times; but we can produce in Canada probably 60 per cent of all the tobacco that can be consumed in Canada, I have not the slightest doubt of that. But we can only do that by giving it encouragement in the meantime so as to place it upon its feet, and it will be able to take care of itself after that.

Therefore, hon. gentlemen will see that in the meantime I have two objects in view, one is to accomplish the purpose of encouraging Canadian tobacco, and the next is to reduce what seems to me the enormous rate of taxation now existing. Now, if we remove the duty of five cents a pound on Canadian grown leaf, what is the effect? The effect is that the manufacturer has an additional protection if he manufactures Canadian leaf; the effect is that the grower has an additional protection of five cents per pound; and another effect is that we will lower the taxation to the consumers of this country correspondingly upon Canadian grown leaf, and upon the foreign leaf to the extent that the foreign leaf comes into competition with the Canadian grown leaf. That object seems to me to be so commendable and so fair that the government should without hesitation accept this resolution, and remove in the meantime the excise duty from the Canadian leaf. I say in the meantime, for this reason: We are collecting now a very large revenue. It is possible, should a contraction of our trade set in such as usually takes place after a great expansion, there will be a diminution in our revenue; suppose it diminishes very much at the end of five years, we will have during all that period given protection to the grower and the manufacturer, we will have reduced the taxation to the consumer, and we will then have placed Canadian-grown tobacco upon a proper footing. Once it stands upon a sound footing it never can recede, because the public taste will have become suited to it, people will become accustomed to using it.

But some hon. gentlemen may say: If you take the duty off now, do you mean to take it off for all time? No, I do not mean that, I mean that it might be in the discretion of any government, five years from now or two years from now to put it back, if they found there was a great shrinkage in the revenue. If they found that in the meantime Canadian-grown tobacco had received that encouragement, and it had taken a higher place, it seems to me we would have accomplished everything we desired and that then the duty might be restored on Canadian leaf. Now, hon. gentlemen may say that five cents a pound is not a great deal. I wish to say to hon. gentlemen that it is a great deal, if we consider that the probable average price the grower is getting to-day in Canada does not exceed six cents a pound. True, there are some qualities for which a higher price is paid, but when we take the grades that are classified by growers, we find that the average price does not exceed six cents a pound. If that be the case, hon. gentlemen will say that five cents a pound is not a very large encouragement. They may say: You have a very large encouragement now, you have practically, upon stemmed tobacco, 14 cents given by the legislation of 1897 in addition to what you formerly had. Well, that is only partly so. Hon. gentlemen who have taken the trouble, as I have no doubt hon. gentlemen all have, to inform themselves upon that point, will see that stemmed tobacco has not been imported to any extent, only a bare fraction. Therefore, the tobacco that has come in, the foreign leaf, has all paid a lower rate, namely, an advance of ten cents a pound on unstemmed tobacco. I believe there was some arrangement made in the Inland Revenue Department by which the importer or the manufacturer of imported foreign leaf, had some reduction by reason of an allowance on the stems, and it is now being reduced so much to the manufacturers of that class of tobacco that they are manufacturing almost entirely the unstemmed leaf, and that is the kind that is being imported.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to detain the House with doing more than saying this: that it is one of those matters that seems to me so perfectly plain and reasonable, so perfectly consonant with the present state of affairs, that it should commend itself at once to the consideration of the government. Remember that we are collecting $14,000,000 more now than we did in 1896. We have added to the taxation upon the people in two ways. First, hon. gentlemen have upon the whole increased the taxes upon the people considerably over the rates of 1896. Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries nods, I hope, assent to that proposition, but I will not argue that point now. But every hon. gentleman on that side of the House knows perfectly well that there are just two ways by which people may be taxed. One way may be owing entirely to the expansion of trade in the country and the broadening of the basis of taxation upon which the same rate of duty is collected. Those are periods when it is the duty of the government to reduce the taxation, but if they stand idly by and make no change, I say that in that way alone it means a broadening of the basis of taxation when you collect from the people $2 where you formerly collected $1. I have no hesitation in saying that any government is remiss in their duty who do not reduce the taxation while there is an expansion in trade. They should take advantage of the expansion to reduce the taxation. But the exceptional circumstance in this case is that we are collecting $14,000,000 a year, according to the statements of hon. gentlemen, that should to-day be in the pockets of the people. Now, the object of my resolution is to reduce that taxation upon the numerous consumers of tobacco in this country. To a great many people in this country tobacco is a luxury, to the workingman who gets his dollar a day tobacco is almost his only luxury. He earns a scanty living for his family, he is placed in such a position that he has nothing else to look forward to. You may say that it is only a habit; that is hardly the proper way to put it, it is the only solace he has. It seems to me that if there is any means by which we can give him temporary relief it ought to be done. Probably 90 per cent of the people of this country use tobacco, and if we reduce the taxation upon that article we relieve to that extent that large proportion of our whole population. The next is that we increase to the grower of Canadian tobacco the protection of five cents a pound without increasing the taxation upon the people of the country; but we lessen the taxation. The next is that we give encouragement to the manufacturer of Canadian leaf whose interests are conjointly always with the growers of Canadian tobacco. The man who is manufacturing foreign leaf does not want this change made, because, he says: You will bring Canadian-grown tobacco into the market and drive mine out. Therefore, I am not favourable to it. I hope the government will not treat this as a motion of want of confidence, although it might be so regarded in the form in which it has been introduced to-day, but it is so manifestly fair to the consumer while giving additional encouragement to the grower and manufacturer of home-grown tobacco that I hope the government will see their way to adopting it. I therefore have much pleasure in moving:

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof: 'the additional taxation imposed on many articles by the tariff of 1897 and the great expansion in trade have increased the revenue from $36,618,590 in 1896 to $46,741,249 in 1899. That the Minister of Finance has stated in his budget speech that the revenue for the fiscal year 1900 would reach the enormous sum of $50,000,000, or $14,000,000 greater than in 1896.

That in the opinion of this House a reduction in the present taxation could be made with great advantage to the people of Canada, and it is therefore expedient, in order to give greater encouragement to the growth and manufacture of Canadian tobacco, to remove for the present the excise duty on tobacco grown in Canada.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). That there have occasionally been complaints in regard to the tobacco duties I have been well aware, but I am bound to say that I have never up to this moment heard a complaint in the terms expressed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) and in his resolution. He has proceeded on a line in regard to the matter at variance with every complaint that has hitherto been received against the duties on tobacco and the adoption of his amendment would not, in the slightest degree, meet whatever demand there is, if there has been a demand, for a reduction of the duties on tobacco. When we reduced the tariff in 1897, we made a large number of changes, changes which, in the main, were in the direction of lower taxation. We reduced the duties on many articles, we added a number of articles to the free list, we made large changes in the way of reduced taxation. It was of the utmost importance that we should maintain a strong financial position and in view of the uncertainties as to the amount of revenue that might be produced by this lower rate of taxation it became necessary that we should take some steps to make good any possible loss that might result. It was thought that it might fairly be met by providing for the raising of some additional taxation in order to balance, or make good, the loss occasioned by the reduction of duties. We made some increase in the tobacco duties, and I am glad to be able to say that these increased duties, in the main, have operated well. I think we were informed at the time that we would not get the increased revenue from these duties which we anticipated. Experience has shown that although there may be some smuggling, as there always will be where there are tobacco duties, yet we have collected a very substantial increased revenue from these increased duties, probably as much as we anticipated. Then, there has been another result of the tariff change. The change was made on the principle of revenue production. It was necessary to have an increased revenue in certain directions when we were to lose revenue in other directions. But, while the object of these changes was in the direction of revenue, the duties operated, as revenue duties frequently operate to a certain extent, as protective duties, and there has been under that policy a very large development of the native tobacco industry. The figures showing that great increase, have, on several occasions, been presented to the House and need not be dwelt upon to-day. It is admitted that there has been an enormous development of the native tobacco industry as compared with what there was before. The hon. member for Bothwell proposes a step which is calculated to give a further benefit to the native tobacco industry, but anybody who looks into the matter will see that the native industry under the operation of our tobacco tariff, whether it be called a revenue or a protective tariff, has an enormous amount of protection such as would not justify anybody in asking that it should receive more. Indeed, if there is any room for criticism of the tobacco duties it is that the discrimination between the native and foreign tobacco is so large. The hon. member for Bothwell by the course he is pursuing, if the House should carry his resolution, would simply abolish the excise duty on native tobacco, but he would not change the duty in any way whatever upon foreign tobacco or on blended tobacco which is so largely used. The complaint here has been that native tobacco did not meet the taste of the people. The hon. member for Essex (Mr. Cowan) showed very conclusively that native tobacco was being produced of good quality, that it was now being sold at moderate prices, so much so that you can buy a plug of tobacco to-day of a larger size at a smaller price than the same could be bought for before the change in the tariff took place. He met to some extent the statement that the people do not want native tobacco. I am glad to know that native tobacco is becoming so popular with tobacco users that its production has increased everywhere and that many persons, who, a few years ago, would not have it at all, are now using it. As a result of the improvement in the methods of cultivation and methods of treatment we may expect a still further increase. But, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the motion which the hon. member for Bothwell makes does not deal with the complaint that has hitherto been made about the tobacco duties. It proposes further discrimination in favour of the native industry which is already protected to the full. I am perfectly satisfied that the change which the hon. member for Bothwell proposes is not necessary, in the interest of the native tobacco industry, and that it would not operate in bringing about any substantial reduction which would, to any extent, meet the complaint that has hitherto been made. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies) who raised this question on a former occasion did not ask for a reduction in the duty on native tobacco. He told us that the people had not become accustomed to the native tobacco and he demanded a reduction of the duty on foreign tobacco to meet the wishes of the people whom he represented.

Mr. CLANCY. He wants to remedy that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I want to show what was the nature of the outcry against the high duties on tobacco, and that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is making a motion which would only make the matter worse, because he would increase the discrimination between the duties on native and foreign tobacco, which would not meet the complaint which has been raised in regard to the high duties on tobacco.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) prepared to say that in regard to the lower grades of foreign leaf imported into Canada for blending purposes, the reduction of the duties on Canadian leaf would not have the effect of reducing the price of foreign leaf which comes into competition with it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, nothing that you can do with the native leaf will affect the price of the foreign article, because the price of foreign tobacco is governed by the markets of the world, by the inexorable law of supply and demand, so much so that when the Spanish war broke out the price of Havana tobacco went up to large figures.

Mr. GILLIES. Is not the price of foreign tobacco governed very largely by the duty on the article coming into the country?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, but the hon. member for Bothwell is not touching that at all. I agree that my hon. friend is right. The price of foreign tobacco to the consumers in Canada is influenced to a large extent by the duty we impose upon it. But the price of foreign tobacco as it is imported into Canada, except as respects the duty, is governed by the price in the markets of the world. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) simply proposes to increase the discrimination which now exists, and which exists to the fullest extent possible for the benefit of the native tobacco. The wildest protectionist could not ask a greater protection than exists to-day upon the native tobacco of Canada. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) proposes to still further increase the discrimination he is asking that which is not reasonable, and which will not meet in any degree the demands of the people. He is asking that which is utterly at variance with the demand voiced by my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Gillies), and by others who have been dealing, not with the question of the duty on native tobacco which it is said the people do not use, but with the duty on the foreign tobacco which it is said the people prefer. If we had to adopt a method of reducing taxation, I am not prepared to say that we should begin on tobacco. I do not say that tobacco is in the broadest sense a luxury, though in a sense it is, but most people use it not as a necessary. At all events perhaps it may be considered the poor man's luxury. However, if we were looking over the tariff for some item on which we could reduce the taxation on the masses of the people, there are very few who would say that tobacco was the one article above all others which we should select. I have no doubt further that with the development of trade, the opportunity will come to us for making tariff changes in the direction of reduction some day, and then tobacco will have to be considered. But I do say that at the present time, to single out tobacco and to say that it is the particular article upon which there must be a reduction of taxation does not indicate, in my judgment a keen perception of the wants and views of the people.

I have been discussing the tobacco question on its merits, but I want to present the question more broadly, though briefly. We have to take the tariff, not as a matter affecting one particular section of our industry, but we must make the tariff as a whole. Each one of us, I have no doubt, would be able to suggest some particular thing in reference to which he would be pleased to have the tariff changed. I do not imagine that under the present government, and still less under any other government, that you are going to have a tariff which is so absolutely perfect that every one is going to be satisfied with it. I have repeatedly made the statement, and though criticised for it in some quarters, I repeat it again: That the tariff must always be to some extent a matter of compromise, an effort to give and take throughout our wide Dominion. Upon that principle the tariff has been established. We have already announced in an earlier stage of the session that it was not our purpose to make any tariff changes this present session, except as respects the reduction of the duty under the preferential tariff. I think I can fairly ask the House on general principles to adhere to that position. In asking hon. gentlemen to take that attitude, I do not expect them to vote that they are satisfied with every detail of the tariff, but I say that in the main the tariff has proved a successful tariff for Canada, and if we were looking around for some particular item in which a change was necessary, about the last item I should have imagined any one would have selected is a reduction in the duty on the native tobacco, I repeat that the change which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) proposes would not in the slightest degree meet the demand, so far as there is such a demand, for lower duties on tobacco, because he does not touch the question of the tobacco which the majority of the people still use. I point out at the same time that so far as the encouragement to the native tobacco industry is concerned, it had a liberal encouragement under the tariff of the former government and it has obtained a still larger encouragement under the tariff of the present day, and to add to that encouragement, by simply taking off the excise duty of 5 cents, would be giving something more to the native tobacco industry which it does not require. I am sure that every hon. member who represents a tobacco-growing county, if he looks at the development of the industry which has taken place in Canada during the last three years under the present tariff, will feel that he cannot ask for anything more in that direction, and will feel that he should sustain the tariff under which that industry has prospered so largely, and under which, I am sure, it will continue to prosper in the years to come.

Mr. ALVIN H. MOORE (Stanstead). In rising, Mr. Speaker, to second the motion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), I may say that I was much pleased with the concise, lucid, and convincing manner in which that hon. gentleman treated this very important matter. The hon. gentleman has covered the ground so completely that I do not propose to occupy the attention of the House but for a very short time. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has been severely criticised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who has stated that he has placed this matter before the House in a different light from that in which other gentlemen dealt with the same question. I would remind the Minister of Finance that the hon. member for Bothwell has in view the benefit to be derived by the people of this country, and his concern is not for giving that benefit to the people of foreign countries. The object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is to reduce the duty upon the home-grown leaf for the purpose of encouraging this home industry, instead of depending upon foreign producers for our tobacco supply. The motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is in the direct line of carrying out the national policy, and of giving to the producers of Canada the control of the Canadian market; while the policy of the Minister of Finance is to take away the control of the Canadian market from Canadian tobacco producers, and to hand it over to foreigners. The hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) in his budget speech, informed us that he contemplated a surplus of over $7,000,000 for the ensuing year, and he further said: That with an overflowing treasury the people of Canada had a right to expect a reduction in taxation. To-day he told us, that notwithstanding this great surplus, and notwithstanding the overflowing treasury, the only change he proposes to make is the increase of the preferential tariff on goods coming from Great Britain, and that preferential tariff has no effect whatever on tobacco, because no tobacco is imported from Great Britain and is especially exempt. Now, Sir, if the people have a right to expect a reduction in taxation in consequence of the financial position of this country, how can we give credit to the Finance Minister for consistency when he says that he does not propose to make any tariff changes whatever. One plank of the platform of the Ottawa Liberal convention of 1893, was:

To so adjust the tariff as to bear as light as possible upon the necessaries of life.

It may be considered by some, although the Finance Minister would not go so far as to make the statement, that tobacco is a luxury, and not a necessity, but however that may be, if you ask a man who has been using tobacco for a number of years what he thinks about it, he will tell you that he would prefer being deprived of bread, or any other article of food, than of tobacco. The duty on tobacco affects a vast majority of our people financially, and so we may assume that it is a necessary of life, and consequently comes under the provision of this plank in the platform of the Liberal party. There is another idea which I shall not, however, dilate upon at any length, and that is, that were we to call tobacco a necessity of life, we might say that we are taxing it out of existence. It has been stated that every nation, tribe and tongue in the world is in the habit of using some kind of narcotic; and the hon. gentleman who sits at my left, the learned Dr. Roddick, of St. Anne's division, Montreal, says that tobacco is the least injurious narcotic used by any people in the world.

Mr. MOORE.

Consequently, there cannot be so much objection to the use of tobacco as one might infer from the statement of the Finance Minister. Considering that tobacco is in one sense a necessary of life, that the cultivation and manufacture of Canadian tobacco should be encouraged as a native industry, and that the people should be encouraged to consume a larger quantity of Canadian tobacco in place of the foreign article, I think that, with an overflowing treasury and a great surplus in view, the government should commence to reduce the taxation of the people by removing this duty on Canadian tobacco. Coal oil and other articles have been mentioned as subjects for the reduction of taxation; but, the Minister of Finance declares plainly that he is not going to reduce taxation on anything. Therefore, he is not carrying out the policy adopted in the Liberal platform in 1893, or the policy he outlined in the budget speech he made this session. I have much pleasure in seconding the motion of my hon. friend from Bothwell.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say but very few words on this subject. The hon. Minister of Finance said that the cheaper kind of tobacco was the poor man's tobacco. I agree with him in that. Then, it is the native tobacco which is the poor man's tobacco, and any reduction in the cost of that would be a benefit to the great consuming class to whom tobacco is a luxury and even a necessary of life, almost as much as tea or bread or butter, the habit is so general. But the hon. Minister of Finance says he does not think it would do the poor man any good to make this reduction. If you reduce the excise duty five cents a pound, that enables the manufacturer to sell at five cents a pound less; and five cents a pound is a very large consideration for the poor man who buys tobacco from week to week and month to month out of his small earnings. Therefore, I think it is desirable to make the reduction if it can be done without injury to any other line of industry. If it could be shown that the revenue could not bear this reduction, I would say not to make it; but, as the Minister of Finance says that the revenue is so buoyant that he expects to have a surplus of between five and six million dollars, he is in a good position to meet the wants of the poor man by making the reduction. The Minister of Finance says this is a species of protection. I do not care what you call it; if it lowers the price of the article to the consumer and does not injure any other industry in the country, I would be willing to adopt it every day in the year. Such an argument is not worthy of consideration. It is not proposed to reduce the customs revenue on imported tobacco, costing from fifty cents to a dollar a pound, nor upon Havana cigars sold at twenty-five cents each. The rich man is able to pay the duty on these, and no person complains of it. But, in the case of Canadian tobacco, we have it in our power to give to the poorer classes a substantial reduction in the cost of living, and, at the same time, to encourage those engaged in the production of the raw leaf in the country. For these reasons, I heartily support this reduction.

Mr. L. A. CHAUVIN (Terrebonne). Mr. Speaker, I heard a lecturer of the government state in my county that our country can produce every kind of tobacco that is imported—that we only have to learn the proper methods of cultivating and preparing the tobacco; and he was appointed by the government especially to instruct his hearers in regard to these methods. Therefore, I think the government will be inconsistent with itself if it does not reduce the duty on native tobacco. In my province native tobacco is as highly esteemed as foreign tobacco, both by manufacturers and consumers. I have been informed in the Department of Inland Revenue that just as fine cigars can be made from Canadian tobacco as from foreign tobacco. In view of these facts, I think that this government, who profess to be in favour of reducing the taxation of the people and to be a national government, should reduce the taxation on native tobacco and encourage its cultivation, as advocated by their own lecturers, who assert that the native tobacco is just as good as foreign tobacco.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is just because the government are fully convinced that the native tobacco is just as good as foreign tobacco, that in 1897 they introduced the present policy, under which the customs and excise duty on the foreign leaf is 35 cents a pound, whilst the excise duty, the only duty on Canadian leaf, is only 5 cents a pound. My hon. friend from Terrebonne (Mr. Chauvin) will see the great advantage which this tariff has given to the growing of Canadian tobacco. The present policy has produced, especially in the province of Quebec, which my hon. friend and I represent on the floor of this parliament, enormously beneficial results. In fact, it has introduced a new industry in that province. Now, I ask my hon. friend if he thinks it desirable to change that policy at all?

Mr. CLANCY. Change it for the better.

The PRIME MINISTER. You do not change it for the better if you reduce the duty on Canadian leaf, because if we do that to-day, we shall be told to-morrow that the disproportion is too great between the duty on Canadian leaf and the duty on foreign leaf, and that we must reduce the duty on the foreign leaf also. Therefore, under the pretense of encouraging Canadian tobacco, the hon. gentleman is moving a resolution which is a stab at the policy we introduced in 1897. What are the figures? Does my hon. friend expect that under any policy he could introduce, he could do better for the growth of the Canadian weed than has been done already? What are the figures? In 1896-7, the total production of Canadian tobacco that went through the manufactories was 690,000 pounds. In 1897-8, under the experience of twelve months of the policy adopted in 1897—this had increased to the enormous figure of 1,949,000 pounds. From less than 700,000 pounds in 1896-7, the policy which we introduced increased in twelve months the production of Canadian tobacco to nearly 2,000,000 pounds. That was brought about simply by putting 5 cents per pound duty on Canadian leaf and at the same time charging 35 cents on the foreign leaf, which was an encouragement of 30 cents on the Canadian product. The following year, the production of Canadian tobacco increased to 2,500,000 pounds, and the first six months of the current year shows a production of 1,900,000 pounds; and, supposing the same proportion continues—and it will be larger—we will have a total production this year of 3,800,000 pounds. Is it to be expected that you can do better for the province of Quebec and the county of Essex and perhaps also the county of Bothwell? I do not think that the electors of the county of Bothwell will thank my hon. friend, because if his policy were to be adopted, we would be repeating the old performance of killing the hen which lays the golden egg. We had better stick to the present policy and continue to encourage the growing of the native plant as we have done already.

Mr. CLANCY. The right hon. gentleman says that the great increase is due to the additional protection, and he has pointed out what that increase has been. By what process of reasoning is he going to escape the fact that this increase was caused by increased protection.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend had his answer a moment ago from the hon. member for Grey who wants to reduce the price of tobacco. If the price be reduced, who will benefit? The consumers or the growers? The consumers no doubt, and therefore my hon. friend, instead of helping the farmers would do the very reverse. If you want to have the duty reduced on tobacco, well and good, but this is not the way of doing it. If the hon. gentleman wants a reduction on the duty all along the line, I am prepared to see how far we can go to meet his views; but when he proposes a one-sided policy, he is simply introducing the thin end of the wedge to destroy the very industry we want to protect. The hon. member for Richmond will tell you that the price of tobacco is too heavy for the consumers.

Mr. GILLIES. Hear, hear, and that is because of the increased duty.

The PRIME MINISTER. He says the price of tobacco is too heavy to the cou-sumer. Very good, but I have not heard that it is too much for the growers. We must take the tariff as it is. It is not perfect, but just about as good as it can be made: although it has made the price of tobacco somewhat higher than it should be, still we expect every man to do the best he can to encourage our native industry, and if that policy be continued, the time is not far distant when we shall be able to grow in Canada every pound of tobacco we consume. It is perhaps not many years distant when we will be able to grow every pound of tobacco we use. I do not smoke myself, and I do not know if my hon. friend is a smoker, but if he is, he will have to pay his quota, and he will bless the day when it can be said that Canadian tobacco is as good as the foreign leaf and we can produce every pound consumed in the country. The policy we adopted has been proved eminently successful. It has more than quadrupled the growth of Canadian tobacco. Why then should we interfere with it? Why not let well enough alone? Why attempt to do better when it is not sure that we can do better by simply reducing the duty on foreign leaf? To-morrow, if this motion were to carry, the hon. member for Richmond or some one else would rise and say that the disproportion was too great between the price of the foreign leaf and the price of the Canadian leaf, that we had reduced the price of the Canadian and therefore should reduce the price of the foreign leaf. The only thing I ask my hon. friends, if they have at heart the development of a Canadian industry, is to adhere to the policy which has worked so successfully for the development of that industry.

Mr. G. E. CASEY (West Elgin). This question, as the right hon. the First Minister has pointed out, has clearly two sides to it—the questions of price to the consumer and of price to the grower. The object of the present tariff arrangements is to encourage the growth of Canadian tobacco by increasing very materially the difference between the price of the imported article and the price at which the home-grown article can be put on the market. That policy has certainly achieved a marked success, as the figures read to the House show. It is always a serious matter to attempt to disturb or derange a policy which has produced already good effects, and I think that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has not shown reasons why the policy he proposes would of itself improve the existing tariff arrangements and materially benefit either the producer or the smoker of tobacco. As the Premier has pointed out, that policy would immediately derange the existing balance between the import duties and excise and lead to a strong agitation for a reduction of the import duties. It is open to very serious consideration, and I would urge the question upon the government for their consideration, whether, in the near future, some such double arrangement as has been referred to might not advantageously be carried out. If the government were to remove the 5 cents excise on Canadian tobacco and at the same time make a proportionate reduction on the import duty and the excise on imported tobacco, the percentage of protection to the home producer would be left as it is, while at the same time the actual price of the imported article would be reduced. It is for the government to consider maturely whether they could not with advantage adopt such a policy.

Most of the constituents of my hon. friend from Bothwell as well as my own, and most of the constituents of members from western Ontario generally are in the habit of smoking imported tobacco. They have not yet been induced, and will not soon be induced by any difference in the price, to smoke the home-grown article. It is a question of taste; a man will pay an extra price to get just what he likes to smoke. So, our constituents are deeply interested in getting a reduced price for imported tobacco; and, at the same time, they are deeply interested in getting an increased price for the home-grown leaf. I think it is extremely worthy of consideration whether the two things could not be attained at the same time. The reduction of the excise on the home-grown leaf would certainly be an encouragement to the growing of tobacco, and the reduction by a proportionate amount, of the import duty would reduce the price of the foreign tobacco;—those who produce would get a little higher price, those who consume would get a little lower price.

It must be remembered that you cannot speak of tobacco as being one uniform, individual thing all over Canada. When you say that the price of tobacco has increased to the consumer, you do not meet that by the statement that Canadian tobacco is put on the market at a very much lower price; because the greater part of people in Ontario and the west will not and do not smoke Canadian-grown tobacco. That tobacco is grown largely for export, for consumption by people abroad to whom it is agreeable. But it will take a long time before our native smokers accustom themselves to use it. So, the problem is a double one. It is quite possible to increase the price of imported tobacco as high as you like without increasing the price of home-grown tobacco. If you were to put two dollars a pound upon foreign tobacco you would not induce more than a certain number to use the native article, nor would you materially increase the price of the native article, because the price of the native article is fixed by what it is worth in some foreign market. The amendment of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) certainly does not meet the case. It is only a part of what, it appears to me might be advantageously obtained; and it is part which cannot be obtained by itself without endangering the whole structure of our tariff system in that respect.

But it seems to me that the eventuality that the right hon. the Premier (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) seems to fear—that, possibly, the reduction of the excise might lead to a reduction to the custom duty,—is not, perhaps, quite as dreadful an alternative as it might appear to him to be. I think the combination of these two plans sometime in the future, after mature consideration of the subject, is possible and would be advantageous. There is no doubt that it would be a popular thing all over Canada to reduce the price of imported tobacco, so far as the needs of the revenue and the rights of the Canadian grower will permit. At the same time, it would be popular over a large part of Canada to increase the value of the home-grown leaf. My point is simply that the mere protection against foreign importation, does not necessarily increase the value to the home-grower. The two kinds of tobacco do not necessarily come into competition, and the raising of the price of one does not necessarily increase the price of the other. The price of Canadian tobacco is decided by what you can get for it in the foreign market. It is in the export trade that the future of the Canadian tobacco is to be looked for. In the part of Ontario in which the hon. member for Bothwell and I reside, the climate does not differ materially from that of Kentucky and Virginia, and the quality of tobacco we grow does not differ materially from theirs. The curing of the tobacco we grow can be improved, I think, until the brand is made equal to the best Kentucky, and, perhaps, to ordinary good Virginia tobacco. When this is done, we shall doubtless have a large export trade in tobacco. This export trade would not be affected if the resolution of the hon. member for Bothwell were carried into effect, because, the excise levied on the home-grown leaf does not apply to tobacco that would be exported, for that tobacco would be manufactured in bond and taken out of bond only to be exported, without paying the excise, just as whisky or any other excisable article is manufactured and exported without paying the excise. So, the export trade, which is the real future of the tobacco industry so far as the grower is concerned, would not be affected by the reduction or the total abolition of the excise duty on the home-grown leaf.

The future of that industry with us rests more upon the business aptitude and energy of those who are concerned in it than upon any change in the present legislation of the country. I do not think that a further increase of the duties on foreign tobacco would raise the price of Canadian tobacco half a cent a pound. I do not believe that a moderate reduction of the duty would lower the price of Canadian tobacco half a cent a pound. The value of Canadian home-grown tobacco depends on this—if the grower and curer of the tobacco are progressive in their methods and take every opportunity to learn from men in the same business in Kentucky and Virginia, the nearest approximate climate to us in the United States, if they are prepared to put that tobacco on the market in the very best condition, I think they can have a very large share of the world's trade in the leaf. But I do not think the measure proposed by the hon. member for Bothwell, taken by itself, would afford any particular assistance or relief, for the reason that it does not affect the principal market of the future for that tobacco. For the time being, a large amount of this tobacco is manufactured and sold in Canada, but, at the same time, to my knowledge, a considerable amount is exported, and the price is based on the value at which it can be exported. No Canadian manufacturer will pay more than the producer can get abroad—the 5 cents excise, in other words, does not come off the market price of the exported tobacco. At the same time, I must urge upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to consider whether he could not, in the near future, grant a relief to the Canadian smoker of foreign leaf, while removing the appearance of imposing on the home-grown leaf by combining the two ideas of reducing the import duties and taking off the excise duty at the same time. Of course, I cannot support the resolution of my hon. friend from Bothwell. We have to take that resolution as it is, and it is not the scheme I would propose or the scheme I think best in the interest of the Canadian growers. I cannot support it even inferentially, but the proposing of it gives me an opportunity to urge what I think would be a better plan upon the attention of the financial authorities of the government.

Mr. JOSEPH A. GILLIES (Richmond, N. S.) On March 7 last, I moved a resolution in this House declaring that the duties on tobaccos should be reduced. On that occasion, I went fully into the question. I spoke in no spirit of recrimination or fault-finding, much as the action in this regard deserved condemnation, concerning the action of the government in increasing the duties on that article of very general consumption among the people, but in the way of assistance, as I thought, by showing how entirely oppressive the duty is as it exists now in consequence of the increase imposed upon that article by the tariff brought down by the present government in 1897. I showed, I think, to the satisfaction of this House, at all events, to my own, that the climatic obstacles that exist in this country would for ever prevent us from becoming a great tobacco-growing country. I had very excellent authority for stating that there was no tobacco equal to that of Cuba as a cigar tobacco, no tobacco equal to that of North Carolina as a smoking tobacco, and no tobacco equal to that of Kentucky as a chewing tobacco. These are the three great qualities of tobacco—cigar, smoking and chewing. I stated then that if it was impossible for adjoining states in the great republic to rival each other in the growth of tobacco, when they possessed the same climate, how much more difficult it would be for Canada, having a much colder climate, to produce tobacco that would compete with that grown in any one of the states that I have mentioned. I felt, therefore, convinced that it would be for ever impossible for us to become a great tobacco-growing country. However, as a protectionist, I was quite willing to go a certain length in imposing a fairly heavy duty upon foreign tobacco, in order to enable our own home growers to produce that article with profit. I thought that the old duty of 25 cents a pound upon foreign tobacco was surely a sufficient protection to the growers of domestic tobacco, and was a sufficient tax upon the people who smoke tobacco. But the Minister of Finance and his colleagues were stronger protectionists than I was, they did not think that 25 cents per pound was enough, and their first act upon coming into power, in the way of relieving the people of taxation, was to go a long step further than the old protectionist government had gone. The old protectionist government had put 25 cents a pound upon tobacco, which, I think, in all conscience, was a sufficient protection to the domestic article, but as soon as our friends opposite came into power, in face of all their declaration to the contrary, while in opposition, in face of the attacks upon the then existing duty made by the present Minister of Finance in his own province, they increased the duty by 14 cents a pound upon stemmed tobacco, and 10 cents a pound upon unstemmed tobacco. That made tobacco that much dearer to the consumer. I put the question to the Minister of Customs this year, as will be found in Hansard, how much taxation was paid by the people of this country in consequence of the increased duty upon tobacco, imposed by the tariff of 1897, and if my memory serves me, the minister answered that the additional amount saddled upon the people in consequence of that increase was about $1,200,000

Now, I am amazed at the inconsistency of our friends opposite. While they were in opposition they constantly berated the Conservative government on the awful taxation the people were subjected to in respect to that very article, and the moment they came into power, they outheroed Herod, and they increased the duty exactly 14 cents per pound. I must say that I am amazed at the red-hot protectionist speech made in this House by the Prime Minister to-day. If he would only go a little further and adopt our policy in its entirety, which he has tried to do in a mutilated form,

Mr. GILLIES.

I would be inclined to say that we should all join him, or, rather, he join us, and all be protectionists together. But I would respectfully ask the right hon. gentleman how he can reconcile his statement now, when we have an overflowing exchequer, with his pre-election statement that the public expenditure and the amount of taxes raised in this country could be very materially reduced. I have shown that upon this one article alone, instead of reducing the taxation they have raised it to the extent of $1,200,000. The consumers of tobacco in Canada pay this extra on account of the additional duty imposed by the government in 1897. The Minister of Finance agreed with this pre-election statement of the Prime Minister and yet he states to-day, that in consequence of the diminution of the receipts made by a displacement in the revenues under the new tariff, it was necessary to make up the loss by increasing the duty in some other direction; and so he goes to work and selects this article of almost universal consumption by the poorer people of this country, and puts upon it an additional duty, yielding $1,200,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I intend at a later stage to move a resolution on this subject myself, I will not say any more upon the resolution moved by my hon. friend for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). I shall support his resolution, inasmuch as it has a tendency to bring about a reduction in the price of tobacco, even if it is only to a small extent. Anything that brings about a reduction in that regard will have my active and sincere support. I now give notice to the Minister of Finance, that I will later on move a resolution upon the lines of my motion of March 7, last, asking for a further reduction in the present duty upon tobacco. As I said before, I think the old duty of 25 cents a pound was amply sufficient to protect the domestic industry. There was no complaint about it; and inasmuch as that meant a fairly heavy taxation upon every pound of tobacco smoked in this country, I think that was not only sufficient to protect the domestic article, but was a sufficient sum to levy upon the smoker for every pound of tobacco consumed.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). There is no doubt the increase of the tobacco duties imposed in 1897 has been the subject of considerable comment in this country. The very fact that one-fifth of our population is called upon to pay an increased tax of $1,151,345 over what was imposed previous to 1897, is in itself quite sufficient ground for considerable complaint. As I have stated before in this House, when you leave out all the women and children, and the non-smokers amongst the men, certainly not more than one-fifth of the population is called upon to pay this increased tax. It is, therefore, class legislation, and is unfair to the small number who use tobacco, and who have just as much right to use it, if they see fit to do so, as any other citizen has to use tea or coffee. Now this is the question before us: Will the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell in any way help to remove the difficulty? I think myself it will. It will not remove the whole difficulty, nor entirely remove the unfairness of the extra taxation upon the people of this country who use tobacco, imposed by the legislation of the Minister of Finance in 1897. I say it will not remove the whole difficulty, but to a certain extent it will mitigate it, and for that reason I shall support the resolution of the hon. member for Bothwell. Now, will it help the grower? If I understand the right hon. Prime Minister aright he contends that it will not benefit the grower. If we take off a tax of $150,000 a year, because that is the amount that 3,000,000 pounds of tobacco, at 5 cents a pound, would increase the duty, to my mind some person must get the benefit of it, either the grower or the consumer. It may be said that if the excise duty is removed the manufacturers of tobacco will not pay the grower any more for it, but that they will simply reduce the price to the consumer by 5 cents a pound, give the consumer cheaper tobacco, and that therefore, the farmer who grows the tobacco will not be benefited in any way. To my mind the removal of this duty of $150,000 a year will be divided between the two. I believe that the grower of the tobacco will get the benefit of a portion of it, and that the consumer will get the benefit of the remainder. Probably, it will be divided somewhat equally between the two, and therefore, it will benefit a very large class of the community in this country. If we make home-grown leaf cheaper, I believe that our manufacturers who use very largely, or almost entirely, imported tobacco will adopt a system of mixing, and by that means will produce a class of tobacco, although not quite as good as imported, but certainly less inferior than our Canadian tobacco, a class of tobacco which will be acceptable to a great many of the tobacco users of this country, a class of tobacco much more acceptable than the tobacco which is manufactured from our Canadian leaf. In that way I believe the consumption of Canadian leaf will be very much increased indeed. A larger demand will be created, farmers will grow a larger amount of it, and if the demand for raw leaf is greater for the purpose I have stated, I have no doubt that just like any other article where the demand has been increased, the price will be increased. So that, I think it is very fair to assume that the grower of tobacco will be benefited to the extent of at least half of this excise duty, and that the consumer will get the benefit of the remaining portion of it. I do not know that it is necessary for me to say more. I have expressed myself freely on this question before. Perhaps I would go a little farther even than the resolution which the hon. member for Bothwell presents. It may be a personal matter with me, but at any rate we are not dealing with the question of whether the present tax on imported tobacco is too high or not; we are dealing with the simple question of home-grown tobacco, and for the reasons that have been advanced this afternoon, which I do not think have been met. Mr. Speaker, by hon. gentlemen on your right, I feel it my duty to support the resolution moved by the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to say one word.

YUKON—MR. OGILVIE'S REPORT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Has the acting Minister of the Interior been able to obtain any reply from Mr. Ogilvie respecting his report? The hon. gentleman inquired on May 3 last from Mr. Ogilvie, and he has frequently informed the House that he has endeavoured to obtain an answer. Judging by the condition of the telegraph service, it seems to me that on June 20 we should have some reply to the telegram of May 3, and a statement from Mr. Ogilvie as to why the report has been delayed.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). A telegram has been received in the department from Mr. Ogilvie. It appears there was some delay in the communication to him during the last two months, and he says he sent a telegram on May 19, which does not seem to have reached the department. We will have to wait for the mail for a full explanation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What does he say as to the cause of the delay in forwarding the report?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am under the impression from his telegram that Mr. Ogilvie did not receive the request from the department to complete the report up to the end of the year. He refers to some interruption in the communication, but he says he telegraphed on May 19 that he was ill at that time, or that he either has or is sending all the report. I have not the message here.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the minister lay on the Table of the House a copy of the telegrams he sent and of the telegrams he received?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There were several telegrams sent which, I think, I brought down from time to time. However, there is no objection to bringing them down again.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

It being six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in committee.)

Brockville drill hall..... $10,000

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) What is to be the full cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). $42,000. The contract was let within the last few days.

Mr. FOSTER. Who has got it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Booth, of Brockville, the lowest tenderer.

Kingston drill hall ..... $31,500

Mr. FOSTER. Is that to complete?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $80,000.

London drill hall and armoury, site, &c. $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the contemplated expenditure?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Nothing has yet been done in that matter, and it is somewhat complicated. There is a site that is owned by the government, and there is some proposition by the people of London to have the site exchanged for a more commodious one, they supplying the site. A portion of the site has been acquired, but not the balance.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total expenditure proposed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $80,000; about the same as Kingston.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It does seem to me that when the government are making such a large expenditure in these towns the town should provide the site. When a town like Kingston gets a public building costing $80,000, I think it ought to contribute something, and that something might be in the shape of providing the site.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot recall the details of this particular case, but I think the city is in a way giving something. My recollection is, that the city complained that the government interfered with the drainage of certain works, and that the city had a cause of action for which they claim $20,000, although I do not know that they could establish that in law. Dominion property is not taxable, as we know, for drainage, and although it has been drained and otherwise improved, it is exempt from municipal taxation. I understand the city is to forego any claim it may have upon the government; and I think there is some other consideration, but I cannot recall it now.

Sarnia public building ..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this contract let?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is advertised, but not yet let.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the contemplated cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $40,000.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I wish to ask the acting Minister of Public Works if the site for the Sarnia post office has been decided on?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it has been acquired.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to repeat what I said last year, that I very much approve of the site selected for the post office in Sarnia. It is an admirable site, most suitable in every way, and I am not going to take exception to the large expenditure of $40,000 for the post office. The site is beautifully situated on the banks of the river opposite Port Huron, a city of about 50,000 population. It is very desirable that the Canadian government should erect there a building which will command the respect of every one passing up or down that river and which will be in keeping with the location and a good advertisement for Canada. A great many vessels pass up and down the river day and night, there are many visitors there, and I know of no place where it is more desirable that there should be a creditable public building. As the government may control the land between the post office and the river, it is not likely that it will ever be built upon, so that the buildings will always command a view from the river. For these reasons, I am not going to find any fault with the government if they spend even a little more than $40,000 for the erection of this building. While on this subject, I desire to speak on another somewhat related to it. I have raised the same question before. It seems to be the policy of the government, as a rule, to erect post offices or other public buildings only in the larger towns of the country. By a resolution that was adopted by this House in 1891, it was declared that, in the selection of a place where a public building should be erected, regard should be had to the revenue derived from it, and that preference should be given to the larger places. Now, there are counties in the province of Ontario which have no large town, and which, in all probability, in the next twenty-five years at any rate, will not have a town as large as Sarnia or Ingersoll, and will therefore not have the right on that ground to a public building. Surely a county which has four or five smaller incorporated villages or towns is just as much entitled to one or more public buildings as a county which has a large town. In such a county, I think that instead of erecting one large building, it would be only fair to divide the money up and erect smaller buildings in the different towns or villages, which would provide all the accommodation required. I will take as an illustration the county of Halton, which I represent. In that county we have five incorporated towns and villages, ranging in population from 1,200 to a little over 1,800, and the revenue in these places is considerable. I will give the revenue and population of each place according to the census of 1891:

	Revenue.	Popula- tion.
Acton .....	$1,999	1,209
Burlington .....	1,348	1,325
Georgetown .....	2,857	1,509
Milton .....	2,364	1,450
Oakville .....	2,553	1,823
Totals .....	$11,121	7,316

Now, the town of Sarnia, where the government propose to expend $40,000 for a post office, has a revenue of only $10,028, or $1,000 less than the combined revenues of these five incorporated towns and villages of Halton, and a population of 6,693 as against their population of 7,316. Yet, because in Halton there is not a town of similar size to Sarnia, we are to be debarred, for the next quarter of a century at any rate, from having any public money expended for the erection of a public building. The county of Halton is as old as the county of Lambton, and as fairly entitled to an expenditure of public money for that purpose. In each of these towns and villages there is a small building used as a post office; but not one of them is sufficient for the purpose. They are all so cramped that in the morning and evening when the mails are distributed, it is almost impossible to get in and out, and it is a matter of complaint that suitable buildings of sufficient extent are not obtainable in the business centres. My plan is that instead of the government spending $30,000 in one town of the county, they divide that sum into five shares of $6,000 each, and erect in each of these places a building that would cost say $5,000, leaving $1,000 in each case to purchase the site. In that way you could have a building that would afford ample accommodation for the post office, with a dwelling in connection for the postmaster or his assistant. On that plan no expense would be incurred by the government for taking care of the building as a paid caretaker would not be required. The interest on $30,000 at 3 per cent—and the government can borrow the money readily at that or even less—would amount to $900 annually. In the five towns and villages to which I refer, the government allows $540 for rent and fuel. If you deduct $140 as the allowance for fuel, you will have $400 for rental. Each of the dwellings connected with the post office would be worth $100 a year. They would be cheap at that, because they would not be liable to taxation, and the postmaster or his assistant would be quite willing to allow that in each case. So that you would have $500 of rental from these buildings, to which add the $400 allowance for rent, and you get the sum of $900 exactly the amount necessary to pay the interest on the cost of these buildings. In this way the government would not lose anything by adopting that system. They would simply borrow the money and erect the buildings, and there would be sufficient savings to pay the interest, and ample accommodation would be provided for the post office in each place. There could be an entrance and an exit in each office, so as to avoid crowding in the morning and the evening when the mails are received and delivered. Then, there would be the greater security from having the post office in a substantial brick building instead of in an unsuitable frame building. A fire-proof vault could be built in each, and additional protection thus afforded to the property of the public. I think this a most feasible scheme, and one which the government would be justified in trying in some county such as I have referred to. I would, of course, prefer that they would make the test in the county of Halton, which is most suitable for the purpose. I may say to the Postmaster General, who is the acting Minister of Public Works, and who, therefore, feels a double interest in having everything connected with his department move along smoothly, that this question of post office accommodation in the county of Halton is not in a satisfactory condition at the present time. He may have heard of it from petitions or otherwise, but if he has not, I can at any rate assure him such is the case. If this matter receives favourable consideration from the Postmaster General, I believe that he will find a scheme that will prove very materially to the advantage of the public, and not at all a burden on the country. I hope that the hon. minister will give this his earliest attention.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am glad that my hon. friend approves of the location of the proposed building for Sarnia.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do, I know it very well.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may also remind him that the location is a very suitable one on which to construct lights for the guidance of mariners on the river, and no doubt it will be utilized for that purpose. My hon. friend is in error in assuming that the government own the land on the river side. I think it is owned by the railways, but it is very low and will be entirely overlooked by the structure on the other side. I looked at various sites, and although I had no right to exercise any authority in the selection, when asked an opinion, I gave it in favour of that particular site. There is a great deal in the scheme the hon. gentleman suggests, and the only question is its practicability. It comes as a new proposition, and the hon. gentleman cannot expect an opinion now, but the government will consider it, and I hope that in time it will reach the period of fruition.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I would like to say a word in support of what my hon. friend from Halton has just said. In addition to what he has urged, the government would save the rentals they now have to pay for the public offices, as this proposed building could be utilized for all the government offices, and the government would make money out of the saving of rent. I do not think that the rule of population should always decide these matters, and for this reason. Suppose the government are paying $400 rent for a post office and customs, they would save money by erecting a building in a county town which would contain all these offices, and give better accommodation to the people, provided the interest on the expenditure would not amount to the rental they are now paying. If the interest would only amount to $300 per year, and the rental they are now paying amounts to $400 per year, will any one say that it is not an excellent investment to put up a new building by which they would save $100 per year and own the building? It would be much better that the postmaster should live over the post office. In my county, in stormy weather when the mails are late, it would be a great advantage to the postmaster to live in the building, and would be a much greater convenience to the public. We should revise our past methods, and the sole question ought to be: Will the government get a better service and save money by putting up a new building?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to say that I approve of the statements made with reference to this subject. I think there is a great deal of force in them. It is very desirable that in those rising towns, in those ridings and counties where very little money has been expended, that the government should consider the claims of those places, although there may be larger towns in other places, especially when the interest on the money expended will not amount to the rent now being paid on the buildings used. In the riding I represent there has never been any public money expended, and the people have borne their share of the burden of governing the country. I think it is about time that the government should consider the propriety of looking into those cases, and see if suitable buildings could not be erected for the purpose of carrying on the postal and other public services. It is about time that this matter was forcibly impressed on the government. The policy of the government has changed since the resolution passed in the House some years ago, and I am glad to notice that we have converted the opposition in favour of doing justice to those constituencies entitled to the consideration of the government. I hope that the acting Minister of Public Works will look into this question very carefully and do justice to those constituencies entitled to consideration, which have not benefited by the expenditure of any public money in their midst, and have in consequence a strong claim on the government, which I would urge with all the force I can.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond, N.S.) While on this item of public service, I would like to draw attention to the fact that in the shire town of the county I represent the government some time ago bought a site for a public building which would include the custom-house, post office, inland revenue, and the other public offices. That site cost $1,000, and is now at the disposal of the government, and I would draw my hon. friend's attention to the necessity of having a public building constructed there. One of very moderate dimensions would be quite sufficient. The present building, in which the post office is held, was repaired some years ago, but is again in a very sad state of disrepair, and further expenditure is required to put it in proper condition. If the hon. the Postmaster General will be good enough to remember the suggestions from this side of the House, he would receive perhaps considerable assistance from us, because it is really with that object I am addressing him now. At this moment the customs authorities are paying $60 a year rent for a small room in the town of Arichat. That office would be in the new public building to be erected. The department, at considerable expense, is supporting a dilapidated building at Arichat now as a post office, a building on which we must put considerable repairs in the near future—in fact, should do this immediately as it is at this moment most uncomfortable. Then there is the tide-waiter, and there is also the post office savings bank. He receives, or should receive, for the room he places at the disposal of the public not less than $60 a year. For these offices the government are paying, or should be paying $180 a year or thereabouts. This represents the interest on $6,000 at 3 per cent. This amount would give us a good public building sufficient for all purposes. The convenience that would result to the public of having all these officers under one roof is obvious. There is a good site that has been at the disposal of the government for some time past and is now awaiting the erection of a public building. I think it would be worth while to see if a public building cannot be constructed at something like $5,000 or $6,000, thus making a considerable saving to the government, besides providing a great convenience for the public. I urge this important matter upon the government with all the earnestness that I can command.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to call the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock) to the matter of the public building at Halifax. Last year there was an item in the estimates to provide additional accommodation in Halifax for this purpose. The Postmaster General, no doubt, knows that better post office accommodation in Halifax is very necessary. The Customs Department, the Inland Revenue Department, the Post Office and the Marine and Fisheries Department are all located in one building, and the accommodation for every one of them is extremely limited. A representation has been made by the Halifax Board of Trade with respect to the matter, and, last year, I understood that immediate action was to be taken. Very likely the government has something now in contemplation with respect to this, and I would like to be informed by the acting Minister of Public Works what is the intention of the government. The present state of affairs certainly should not be allowed to continue very much longer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax), I would say that last session a sum of money was voted for the purchase of a site for a suitable public building in Halifax. When I was in Halifax this year, the hon. junior member for the city (Mr. Russell) brought the subject to my attention, and, in order to emphasize the needs of Halifax, took me to the city post office to show me its inadequacy. I was quite convinced of the shortcomings of the post office there. We have recently acquired a site in Halifax, the old city market site, and the intention of the government is to proceed with the construction of a building in Halifax in the near future. I cannot anticipate what is to appear in the estimates yet to be laid on the Table, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) may rely upon it that the matter is receiving every attention.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may not have an opportunity of referring to this matter again, and therefore I desire to impress on the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), not only in his capacity as Postmaster General, but also in his capacity of acting Minister of Public Works, the extreme necessity there is that some immediate action should be taken in this matter. The old market site is, I think, a very suitable one. It is in immediate proximity to the present Dominion government building, and I think it is large enough to erect an adequate building upon it for the various departments of the government service. But I really think that the matter should not be left over the present year but that an immediate appropriation should be made and the work begun without delay. I am sure my hon. friend the Postmaster General, in looking over the accommodation of his own department in Halifax must have been thoroughly convinced of this—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmaster had an office there six by six—what more does a man want?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He must have been convinced of the necessity of some improvement in the accommodations.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the government own the land?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We bought it this spring.

Mr. SPROULE. At what cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For $24,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I would remind the Postmaster General that Sarnia has a revenue of about $10,000, and the government is paying there a rent of $360. They have bought a site there for, how much?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Between $6,000 and $7,000.

Mr. SPROULE. And they purpose putting up a post office at the expense of how much?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At about $40,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That will be a total of $47,000 spent in Sarnia. In Owen Sound, there is a revenue of $11,000, which is $1,000 more than that of Sarnia. They pay in Owen Sound a rent of $650, nearly double of what they pay in Sarnia. But Owen Sound, according to the Postmaster General's contention, is not entitled to get a post office, while Sarnia is.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). I desire to draw the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock) to the need that exists for a post office building in Bridgewater, in the county I represent. I have brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) each session since 1896, setting forth the claim of that town to a building suitable for a post office, custom-house, savings bank, &c. I have no hesitation in saying that the claims of the people of Bridgewater are exceptionally good. It will be remembered that they had a very large fire there some few years ago, which wiped out the entire business portion of the town. The devastating effects of which were very great, far greater in proportion to the population than the fire that took place here in Ottawa. They were left houseless and homeless in many cases, with scarcely a building left as a landmark. The post office, a comfortable building, having been burned with the rest. Representation was made by me the first session after the fire in favour of having a post office, custom-house, savings bank, &c., built there, but the claim was not recognized, for what reason I cannot understand. I contend that there is no town of its size that has greater claims for such a building than the town of Bridgewater. This deserving town, at the head of the navigable waters of the beautiful La Have River, is in the very centre of the great lumber trade of E. D. Davidson and others, has a number of important industries, is a large agricultural centre, and is entitled in every way under the claims that I here put forth for such a public building. I cannot see why the appeal has not been acceded to. There are other places smaller than Bridgewater where post offices have been erected, and in some cases two in a county, and I make the same appeal now that I did previously, and hope the government will not overlook this exceptionally urgent claim. I think it is worthy of favourable recognition by the government, particularly in view of the terrible losses that they sustained, as I named, by the fire that took place a few years ago. Then was the time immediately after that terrible conflagration for the government to have extended their sympathy and to have come to their rescue, but still it will be acceptable now, and I hope to see a sum in the estimates this year for the purpose.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With all that the hon. gentleman says with regard to Bridgewater, I should like to concur. The view of the government, however, was that Bridgewater at that time was more interested in having its harbour and river dredged, if we could bring that about, than in the construction of a post office.

Mr. KAULBACH. Give them both.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The trouble is that when we do try to do any of these things in a generous spirit, some one on the other side tells us we are spending too much money. Now, you are having an economical Minister of Finance to deal with, and he has to be considered. There is another consideration, which is not fatal, but which always comes to the front on an occasion like this, and that is that there is a public building already in another town in the same county. I do not lay it down as a rule that there should be only one building in a county, for we know that there are several counties in which there are more than one; but when there is a building in the shire town within a short distance of another town, it is not always so easy to obtain a second building, particularly if there are other interests seeking recognition. However, I do not wish to discourage the hon. gentleman. I know Bridgewater well. It is a most thriving, progressive and enterprising town, and I hope before long we will be able to carry out that which is his wish, and which is mine also.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I am much pleased to find that there seems to be consensus of opinion in this committee in favour of more numerous and less expensive public buildings, and I think there is very little doubt that such a proposition will meet with the approbation of the members generally. While I do not object to seeing a good and permanent building put up in county towns, I think it would be much better if some of the smaller places could be accommodated in that way with buildings that would not be very expensive. For my part I consider an expenditure of from $4,000 to $6,000 sufficient for almost any ordinary town, and it would give sufficient accommodation for the post office, the custom-house and inland revenue office, if such were required, as well as a house for the postmaster to live in. There are a couple of such places in my own riding that I would like very well to see accommodated, that is the shire town of Georgetown and the town of Souris. They are both thriving and populous places, and both contribute, I am sure, a very fair revenue to the government. Buildings in these towns that would not cost over $5,000 would no doubt be an ornament to the towns; and by saving the rents that are now paid would not be any extra charge upon the government.

Mr. SPROULE. Although there may be a general consensus of opinion in favour of putting up more post offices in small places, I want to say that I dissent from that view. I hold that where, in a town or village, a suitable building can be had for a moderate rent, there is no justifiable reason why the government should put up a public building. It is not the first cost of putting up a building that has to be considered. We have to take into account the interest upon the money, a caretaker is nearly always required, and there are repairs which in the aggregate amount to a good deal at the end of every year. When you take all these things into account they will overbalance a good deal the rent of a suitable building. My opinion has always been that wherever you can get a suitable building at a moderate rent, the government is not justified in putting up a post office, but there may be a justification for it in large towns or cities. In a small town you can nearly always get a suitable building for $150 or $200 a year.

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche). When the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) was down in Campbellton two years ago and observed the lack of accommodation there for the post office and custom-house, he said that the town required better public buildings, and he promised at that time that an item would be put in the estimates the next year for a post office and custom-house. I regret to see that that has not been done. Bridgewater is a thriving town, no doubt, but I see the revenue from the post office in Bridgewater last year was only $2,551.40, and the total of money orders paid was $14,969.63. Now, the town of Campbellton, in the county I have the honour to represent, yielded a postal revenue last year of $3,708.80, and the total amount of money orders paid was $32,508.60. Campbellton is a growing town, and I think in justice to it the government should make an appropriation for a post office and custom-house there. It seems to be the policy of the government to go on building post offices and public buildings in places of less importance than Campbellton, and it is only fair that Campbellton should be provided with a public building. The post office and custom-house are established in private buildings giving very poor accommodation, for which the government has to pay in one case $100, and in the other case $120 for rent. The accommodation is entirely inadequate for the want of the place. I hope the government will take into consideration the promise of the Minister of Public Works and fulfil it by making an appropriation.

Woodstock post office ..... $21,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total of that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The total cost of the building is $43,600. There has been paid up to the 1st of May, $10,860.

Public Buildings—Regina land titles office, Lieutenant - Governor's residence—improvements, greenhouse, sidewalks, &c. $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for? Does one Governor take out everything?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to make provision for wood work and repairs, $2,500 ; house furnishings, $300 ; green house, $5,500 ; stable, foundation, $238 ; and wood structure, $1,485.

Mr. FOSTER. What about that green house, $5,000 ? Is there a greenhouse now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A greenhouse had been erected, but fell down, and this is rather for the restoration of the old structure.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it worth while putting $5,000 into a greenhouse out there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is claimed that it is necessary to have some way of protecting plants which would otherwise, I suppose, be destroyed.

Mr. FOSTER. A good root cellar, I believe, could be built for less than that to keep things in the winter.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You could hardly put these exotics in a root cellar.

Mr. FOSTER. What kind of plants have they there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose the kind that are found in ordinary ornamental grounds.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, instead of growing flowers, it would be better if they had turnips and potatoes, and things like that.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the work will be done by contract ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Kamloops post office ..... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the total cost of that building ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Eight thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. That completes it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Nelson public building ..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. What has been done on that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The site has just been acquired.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cost of the building you propose to erect there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The estimated cost is about $30,000. The site has been acquired.

Mr. SPROULE. What did the site cost ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $11,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a large amount for a site.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have some explanation about it. These towns have been very anxious, and they have had a proper anxiety for public buildings. The town of Nelson is one of the best in the whole of the main line of British Columbia, and it is quite a proper thing to have a proper public building in that town. It is a solid town, and it is going to stay. But when you come to pay $11,000 for a site, it seems that it is too much. That is more than half the total cost of the building.

Mr. MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About one-third.

Mr. FOSTER. You are going to pay $30,000 for the whole thing ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Eleven thousand dollars for the land, and about $30,000 for the building.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is it that you have had to pay $11,000 for a post office site in Nelson ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The site in question is the site that public opinion seemed to point out as one that ought to be acquired. I am not familiar with the geography of the city, but if the hon. gentleman is, I can give him the position of the site.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is on the corner of Ward and Vernon streets, in Nelson. Here is the note that I have about it:

This site is opposite the new hotel and close to the provincial buildings.

The lots were purchased from William Gallagher and F. A. Howie ; lot 1 and west half of lot 2, in block 1, at the corner of these two streets.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the area ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not the area.

Mr. FOSTER. We ought to have the area.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get that in concurrence.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know if any efforts were made to get a suitable site there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, the deputy tells me that great efforts were made in connection with it, and it was only after considerable correspondence that finally the department consented to the purchase of the site at that price. The hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock), was consulted about it ; he was anxious to acquire this site on business principles, and he took an active interest in it. He is a careful man himself, and I think would not have approved of any extravagance in the matter. This selection has been made with his approval, and it was only assented to, after a great deal of consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. Who valued the land ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. William Henderson, inspector of public buildings in British Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems a tremendous amount to pay for a site.

New Westminster public building—Reconstruction of building destroyed by fire, September 11, 1898 ..... $25,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the cost of that building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The estimated cost of the reconstruction of this building is $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it on the site of the old building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the old building insured?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The government does not insure its buildings.

Rossland public building ..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the site of that building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In this case the public contributed $4,500.

Mr. FOSTER. What is our share?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The site cost $12,000. The situation of the site is the corner of Columbia and Maple streets. The land has been purchased from H. N. R. H. Bullen. The first amount demanded was $18,000, and the actual selling price was $16,500. The people contributed $4,500 on account of this purchase, leaving the share of the government $12,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is to be the cost of the building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About the same as the Nelson building.

Mr. SPROULE. About $30,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Something like that.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it take in all the offices?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is intended to do so.

Public buildings generally ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. minister intend to pay with that $5,000. I would venture to say that there is not a nail or clapboard which is paid for out of that $5,000, and yet it is put there as if to pay for public buildings?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is right. The note that I have states that this $5,000 covers a number of items, which have to be met in connection with public buildings in the Dominion generally, and are not chargeable to any particular place.

Mr. FOSTER. I have for several years called attention to the fact that this is an altogether insufficient nomenclature for this vote. Any one looking at the public accounts would imagine that this money is actually spent on public buildings, when it is not. The travelling expenses and the like of that should be taken out of contingencies, and if there is a larger amount required for running the elevators, it ought to be put down to that special purpose. I again plead with the government to remedy this evil next year at least.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think you are quite right.

Mr. BENNETT ROSAMOND (North Lanark). I would ask the acting minister if anything has been done towards supplying the public buildings in Almonte with electric light. Last year I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to it, and he promised to look into the matter, but nothing has been done yet. The post office at Almonte is lighted by the antiquated system of oil lamps and there may be a conflagration there at any time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am obliged to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rosamond) for bringing the matter to my attention. I was not aware that that antiquated system of lighting was in vogue in the Almonte post office, and I will endeavour to have it remedied.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Thank you.

Experimental Farms—New buildings and implements, renewals, repairs, &c., in connection with existing buildings, fences, &c..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister give a full explanation of what is to be done with this $10,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is on the recommendation of the Department of Agriculture. Central Experimental Farm, cost of furniture for laboratory, shelving, &c., $1,500; sheep building, $500; horticultural building, $2,000; Nappan, new stable, $2,000; Agassiz, dwelling for the farm foreman, $1,500; improvements, renewals and repairs, &c., to buildings on the experimental farm, $2,500. Last year the following expenditure took place: Ottawa farm, $8,710.95; Three Rivers, expenditure on dairy equipment, $869; Brandon, $32.32; Indian Head, $30.15; Nappan, $359.59. During the previous year the expenditure was very much the same.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not catch that any particular part of that vote was for painting the buildings on the experimental farm here. The condition of the exterior of the buildings on that farm is a disgrace. They need painting for their preservation, to say nothing of the look of the thing. We have strangers going there from every part of the world and they must be struck with the shabby appearance of the buildings at the present time. Whilst this government is making expenditures with a generous hand in every other respect it ought not to allow these buildings to be so neglected.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The architect tells me that he intends doing part of that painting work out of the $2,500 for the experimental farm here.

Mr. FOSTER. They need painting very badly.

Mr. SPROULE. How many cattle are there in the stables on that farm to-day?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One hundred and twenty.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it is not very creditable to the government that the old-fashioned system should be followed of carrying the water to these cattle in pails. It is nonsense to be hiring men to go around carrying water to 120 head of cattle on a farm that ought to be regarded as a model farm. A modern system of watering the cattle should be introduced at once. I agree with the member for York that the buildings require painting very badly. The vote for the shelvings and the laboratory, and the improvement in the dairy branch is also a good appropriation. We have never grumbled on this side of the House to make that farm what it ought to be, but in many respects it is not up to date.

Mr. KAULBACH. Every time I have visited the experimental farm at Ottawa it has occurred to me that the barn is most objectionable. If you wish to find a thrifty farmer look as to how he keeps his house and particularly his barn, and it will give an idea of the kind of man he is. The barn on the experimental farm here is not a model barn as it should be. It should have all modern improvements so that it would be an object lesson to persons going there. I would not have that barn on my farm if it were given to me as a gift. If the Minister of Agriculture were to go to the Annapolis valley, Nova Scotia, he will find barns there that will strike his fancy and give him an idea of what a modern barn should be.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are a number of improvements going to be made to that barn this year, and for one thing a better system of ventilation is to be put in. The water system will also be improved and the buildings painted. The vote last year had to be applied to the re-erection of the roothouse, which had completely rotted down, and to provide a shelter for the implements and wagons, which have been left out of doors ever since the farm existed. We also had to finish the laboratory which was burned some time ago, and the old offices where the laboratory was had to be refitted so as to give better shelving accommodation for papers, and especially for the entomological collection under Mr. Fletcher.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I have taken occasion to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a general expression outside with regard to the experimental farm and some of the buildings there. The hon. gentleman knows that in many respects it is very disappointing to persons coming to Ottawa to see what is called the Central Experimental Farm. A good many people think it is only that in name, while, in fact, it falls very far short of it. He knows that very many of the buildings are unsuitable. He may say that he could not throw them away; but I know of no service that would be more beneficial as an example to the people of this country, than to throw away some of the buildings there and build new ones. Any person who has visited that farm, knows that it is very much hampered for the want of suitable accommodation for the different kinds of stock; and I am sure the hon. gentleman would be supported by both sides of the House in making a great improvement there in the way of buildings.

Public buildings, Ottawa, including ventilation and lighting, repairs, materials, furniture, &c. .... $100,000

Mr. FOSTER. Does this vote take in that hive of industry down on the street where I do not know how many scores of people are employed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the acting minister ever made the interesting experiment of standing around there about the time the dinner-bells rings—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not any time now for standing about.

Mr. FOSTER—and seeing the immense hordes of worthy Grits who come out of that place, has he really satisfied himself as a conscientious acting minister, that we are getting the worth of our money out of it? I have seen myself, although I have not much time to spare, from half a dozen to ten men putting a barrel in there. Two were directing them how to do it, two others were warning them to take care they did not get their fingers splintered, and the rest were waiting to see the result of the experiment. That is an illustration on a slightly exaggerated scale, I admit, of the leisurely and multitudinous way in which work is done in that establishment. How many men are employed there and paid?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The architect tells me that there has been no material increase in the staff since days gone by. The number employed is 134.

Mr. FOSTER. Whereabouts are they hived now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On the south side of Wellington street, between Bank and O'Connor.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister give us an idea of how that immense number of men are marshalled and kept track of, and what they are doing?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are in chief command of a man named Breton, and there is a foreman for each trade—carpenters, masons, painters, steamfitters, and so on—as in any well organized mechanics' shop. There is nothing new in the vote, except that it is much smaller than it has been in years gone by. As far back as 1879, this vote was $220,000, and the table I have, prepared by the deputy, does not show it to have been less than $100,000 in any year since, except in 1888-9. For example, in 1891-2, it was $149,000; in 1892-3, $165,000; in 1893-4, $119,000; in 1894-5, $114,000; in 1895-6, $100,000; in 1896-7, $107,000; in 1897-8, $102,000; in 1898-9, $106,000; and in 1899-1900, $100,000. This vote has to do with the maintenance and repairs of the buildings we are in, the eastern and western blocks, the Langevin block, the Geological Survey, the Museum, the Art Gallery, the Printing Bureau, and all the other public buildings here. There are many millions of dollars' worth of property to be maintained and repaired throughout the year. Every one knows that the annual maintenance of the property is absolutely necessary, and I think this property has been fairly maintained, although I can take exception to some of the features of maintenance I have seen.

Mr. FOSTER. In what way are all these materials for repairs procured?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are purchased on the requisition of the chief architect in Ottawa and Montreal. Paints, oils, and things of that kind kept in stock are purchased by tender, and the lowest tender is always accepted, but there are other articles which cannot be bought by tender.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this item for ventilation and lighting some new system of light and ventilation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it is for the lighting and ventilation of this building, and the system is the same as last year. But of course it has to be maintained each year. This is not for the acquiring of new plant but for keeping up the old.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Has anything been done towards the erection of a proper building for the Geological Survey? This is a matter which has been discussed almost every session since parliament began. Every one admits that there is no proper accommodation for the collection in the Geological Survey building. I am also informed that there is a great mass of public documents in different public buildings which should be put together in a proper place so as to guard them against fire. Has anything been done in that connection this year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief architect has prepared plans of a public building intended to provide accommodation for the Geological Survey, the Fisheries and the Art Gallery. Those plans were submitted to me a couple of months ago, and I certainly think them extremely beautiful, but the estimated cost was so large that I felt it was quite impossible to ask parliament to vote the necessary money. The estimated cost would have gone up in the vicinity of a million dollars. With the other demands on the treasury, it is impossible just now to entertain a proposition involving that expenditure. The Geological Survey is in a very unsatisfactory condition. Collections of rare value, which could never be replaced if destroyed, are in a very unsatisfactory building, but so far we have been favoured by Providence and have not suffered from any conflagration. But if a fire should overtake that building, this government and its predecessors will be largely blamable for having taken that risk so many years. It is a matter of urgency and ought to be dealt with.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). I would also urge the necessity of providing a proper building for the storage of patent samples. This is a matter to which, in the neighbouring republic, a great deal of attention is paid. The Patent Office in Washington is one of the finest buildings in the country. In this city I have had something to do with patents for clients and others, and I think that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will admit that the arrangements for the housing of the patents and the transaction of business in connection with that important branch are very inadequate, and I would ask the acting Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Agriculture to provide for better arrangements for our patent office branch in any future vote for a new public building. The apartments now rented by the government on Sparks Street are not even an apology for a patent office. The patents are simply stored in the dark where they cannot be inspected with any satisfaction.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an item for steamer chairs in the Public Works Department, what use is made of those?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are special chairs used by typewriters.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they not the ones that went down on the tug Eureka?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am informed that they are not.

Mr. FOSTER. On that same page there is a very remarkable item, especially taken in connection with the celebrated speech made by the irrepressible Minister of Public Works lately in 'gay Paree.' I find there the immense charges made of $5.50 each for two tri-coloured flags. Where are those flags? Is the public money of this country spent to pay for tri-colour flags for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte)? Surely the acting minister will look into that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will communicate with my colleague about it. The chief engineer says he thinks these flags are in store.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the use of buying them if they are only going to be stored? Or, are they to be kept for some future dreadful occasion, which may happen, we do not know when, after the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) gets more power than he has to-day?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The cost of these flags was $5.50 each—a modest price.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they been unfurled?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know personally; but I have read in wicked newspapers that they have been.

Mr. FOSTER. We must know before concurrence where they have been used.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will learn.

Mr. FOSTER. One more matter—is George Bailey an employee of the department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is not an employee of the department, but he occasionally does locksmithing and general iron work for the department.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice his name appearing very often. I know that he is a good workman, but it occurred to me that if you are going to have a great workshop, you might have a man who is able to do locksmith work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy informs me that Mr. Bailey is in business for himself, that he is an expert locksmith, and that for twenty-five years he has been engaged in doing this class of work for the government.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not in the establishment an expert in this line?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What rent is being paid for the present hive on O'Connor Street?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Seven hundred dollars.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. FOSTER. Who owns the building?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Slater estate.

Mr. FOSTER. I would be glad if the acting Minister of Public Works would have one of his officers make out a tabulated statement of the places we are now occupying under rental for the public service in Ottawa, and the amount paid in each case. I am afraid we shall find that an immense expenditure is taking place for rent outside of these vast buildings that we have; and it might be a question worthy of consideration whether the proper generalship is shown in utilizing the space we have under roof in our own buildings.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will have that prepared.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the acting minister made any progress in getting a room in this building for the French translators?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not see how we can do it. I have been through the building with Mr. Speaker and the members of the committee. We have been from the basement to the attic, and there seems to be a good deal of difficulty in finding spare room.

Mr. FOSTER. There may be difficulty, but the acting minister is a man built by Providence to overcome difficulties.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could easily find room, if I chose to disregard the feelings and wishes of people. I think that if a committee of the House would consider the question and arrange how much space should be taken up by those who have rooms, something might be done. Members of the House themselves should get together and decide.

Mr. SPROULE. That is very much needed. I have noticed for years that it is utterly impossible for certain members of the House to get any space here where they can do work except at their own desk, while other members, many of whom have come in much more recently, have very commodious rooms at their disposal. I am inclined to think that if a conference of members on both sides of the House could be held to determine this, it would be most desirable. It would be very advantageous also if there could be a few more rooms. Many members have a great deal of work to do which they cannot very well do at their desks here in the House. The only alternative with many of them is to take their work to their hotel or boarding house, which is very inconvenient. I do not think that members should be subjected to that inconvenience when they desire to economize time and do as much work as possible.

Public works chargeable to income—Public buildings—Rideau Hall, including grounds, renewals, improvements, repairs, furniture and maintenance ..... $17,000

Mr. WILSON. How is this money spent ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the usual maintenance vote for Rideau Hall. Last year the expenditure was :

Wages—

Clerk of works .....	$ 655 20
Staff of carpenters and labourers .....	5,833 85
Ironworkers on heating apparatus .....	688 72
Gardeners, &c. ....	1,739 33
		$8,917 10

Supplies—

Carpets, linoleum, curtains, &c. ....	$1,157 60
Furniture .....	342 73
China and glassware.....	213 35
Hardware, including material for heating apparatus.....	996 29
Lumber .....	169 73
Paints .....	514 65
Wall paper .....	427 35
Seeds and plants .....	535 48
Miscellaneous .....	247 77
		4,609 94

Total expenditure.....	$13,527 04
Balance unexpended .....	3,472 96

Appropriation .....	$17,000 00
---------------------	-------------

Mr. COCHRANE. What kind of seeds are these that were bought ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The item includes seeds and plants—ornamental plants and that sort of thing.

Mr. WILSON. There was a grant last year of $14,000 for a new building or a new wing at Rideau Hall. Has that been built, and if so, at what cost ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The wing was built last year at a cost of $14,000.

Mr. WILSON. Is that for the building alone or the building and furniture ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For the building alone. The furniture cost $4,454.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it necessary to expect this item of $14,000 to $17,000 every year ? Do we never reach a time when it will be completely furnished ? I should imagine the furniture was carried away every year, because we seem to be constantly renewing it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are the ordinary repairs, maintenance and keeping up the grounds.

Heating public buildings, Ottawa, including salaries of engineers, firemen, elevator attendants and caretakers ..... $65,000

Mr. FOSTER. In what condition are the wood and coal contracts now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are no wood contracts now, we have discontinued using wood. In procuring the coal, notices were sent to a number of leading coal merchants in the city of Ottawa for tenders, and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer, John Heney & Son.

Mr. SPROULE. What did the coal cost per ton ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $4.75 for anthracite. This year it is more.

Gas and electric light, public buildings, Ottawa, including roads and bridges.... $18,500

Mr. SPROULE. It will be remembered that when the fire took place we were left in darkness in this building, and had to adjourn the House for a short time. When the old gas lights were taken out it was said by some members that such an accident might happen, and we would find ourselves in a very awkward situation, as we did. Has it been decided to take the gas lights out of all the buildings ? I understood the Minister of Public Works to say that it was an experiment here, but in future the department intended to take the gas lights out of all the buildings and substitute electric lights.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The gas fixtures are not removed from the public buildings as a rule, though they have been removed from this chamber. In many of the buildings the gas fixtures are utilized for the purpose of electric lights. The pipes are still available if desired, and gas can be turned on. The electricity is generated by the Ottawa Electric Light Company.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there only one powerhouse available in case of accident ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are several power-houses near the Chaudière, each one of which could be available in case of interruption.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the lights were put in by the Minister of Public Works in this building. Do the government own their own plant, the dynamo and generator ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We pay so much per light to the company. The Minister of Public Works gave the figures last session. There has been no change in the rates as announced by him last year.

Rents—Dominion public buildings ..... $18,000

Mr. SPROULE. Where do we pay this money for rent ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For all the public buildings over the whole Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. More particularly, what rent are we paying down on Sparks Street where we have the models ?

Water—Dominion public buildings ..... $16,000

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Was not that included in the $60,000 grant we gave to the city of Ottawa? I understood this was to be covered by the $60,000 given to the city of Ottawa, and that we were not to give a special grant for water.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy thinks that the hon. gentleman is right, but he is not quite sure, and he has gone to speak to the hon. Minister of Finance on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson), is right too.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Let it stand, and we will come back to it.

Department of Agriculture—Steel shelving.. $700

Mr. SPROULE. We had an item for shelving; what is that for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are gradually adopting steel shelving.

Mr. FOSTER. How is that bought?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are only two or three places in Canada where it is made, and there is a certain amount per file fixed upon as a fair value by the chief architect. There is no use of asking for tenders, because there are only two manufacturers in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. It is manufactured here in Ottawa.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a company in Toronto and one in Ottawa, and the chief architect fixes the price for each file, which is required to be of a certain quality. In regard to the item of $16,000 for water for public buildings, that refers to public buildings other than those in Ottawa. There was an item in the estimates before, and the item for water for public buildings in Ottawa has been dropped.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the $16,000 for then, unless it is the self-same vote of last year, which takes in the Ottawa supply? That is the only water vote I see, certainly the only one in the Auditor General's book.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief architect has furnished me with a list of various public buildings throughout Canada, and this $16,000 is for the water supply of these buildings, not including buildings in Ottawa. I have the Supply Bill of 1896-7, which probably my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will say meets the case. It provides for the very same vote, and I will send it over to the hon. gentleman, that he may see. In this vote for 1896-7, there are two items:

Mr. SPROULE.

Water, public buildings, Ottawa, including Rideau Hall ..... $16,500

And then also:

Water for Dominion public buildings generally ..... $16,000

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

Ingonish, North Bay—Breakwater ..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is going on there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is work under contract at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. What will be the total expenditure?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Twenty-eight thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is Englishtown?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is in Victoria County.

Mr. FOSTER. What is being done?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The breakwater there is 484 feet long, running parallel to the sea. The work is under contract, and the contract price is $27,250. The land and the superintendence costs about $1,250, total $28,500. The contractors are Heney and Smith, and the contract is dated December, 1899.

New Harbour breakwater ..... $8,000

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is New Harbour?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is at the mouth of the St. Catharines River. This is to assist in the construction of two piers, and to do some dredging. The total amount of the contract is $17,070, and the estimated cost is $19,000. The contractor is J. B. McManus, and the contract was entered into on the 26th May, 1900.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the object of the expenditure?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to provide a harbour for the fishing boats at the mouth of the St. Catharines River. It is in fact a harbour of refuge for the fishermen.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Along the southern coast of Nova Scotia there are a great many very good natural harbours, and one would not suppose it would be necessary to go to such a large expenditure for the particular purpose the minister has in view. Of course, if the vote is necessary, I have no objection, but I would suppose that there is some natural harbour in the immediate vicinity of this place which might answer the purpose.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is on the north-east coast.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I hardly think so. The county of Guysborough is on the southern coast of Nova Scotia, and is immediately adjoining my own county.

Mr. GILLIES. I presume that before the department consented to this expenditure they would have statistics showing the number of boats this will shelter? How many boats will it accommodate?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That information was given last session when the work was inaugurated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There was some information given about it last year, and I may mention to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) that one of his own friends in my county, who has a great deal of business in the county of Guysborough in connection with fishing, very strongly stated to me that he thought the expenditure of such a large sum of money at this particular place was entirely unnecessary. I mention that particularly in view of the fact that the contract seems to have been entered into at so very recent a date.

River John wharf ..... $700

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Has an application been made to the department for a small harbour in the vicinity of Toney River.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer does not remember any application.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Well, that is a work that has been repeatedly applied for in past years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know of my own knowledge that this matter has been mentioned in the department. When unfortunately we were not so rich in funds this work could not be done, but it is a most important and necessary work, because along that coast at that place there is really no protection in the way of a harbour. A great many fishermen have been from year to year seeking protection for the landing of boats, and I am surprised to hear the acting minister say that his officers have no knowledge of the matter. It has been pressed time and again upon the department. I have sent communications myself to the department, and since we have been in opposition I have continued to press the subject on the attention of parliament. I was in hopes that when we were in funds, as the government now say we are, the wants of the fishermen in that locality would be attended to. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the matter is really a very serious one. There is a very large population along that shore, where extensive lobster fishing and salmon fishing is carried on, and where there are hundreds of boats which have to run great risks and suffer great inconvenience because they have to land simply on the natural shore where there is no protection at all. In years gone by I presented petitions to the Department of Public Works, not through parliament, pointing out this necessity, and the answer has been that they have not been able to overtake this work. I would like to know if the acting minister can hold out any hope to these people of an early expenditure there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer informs me that he has only been in office two years last March, and that during that time the matter has not been brought to his attention; so that those petitions must have been presented before that period. I have not had the matter brought to my attention before, and therefore, I can only say that a note will be taken of the hon. gentleman's representations. I am afraid it will be rather late to give any effect to them in the present session.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the acting minister looks up the records of the department, I think he will find that the engineers reported—and that was the difficulty in the way—that to make a permanent breakwater there would require a very large expenditure; and in the time of the late government we were not able to undertake it. But hope was held out, I think by the authority of the department, that the work might be favourably considered when the finances were in a better condition. Hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches profess that the finances are now most buoyant, and I think it is about time this work was undertaken. If the acting minister would be good enough to look into the matter before the supplementary estimates are brought down, he might come to the conclusion that some money might be usefully expended there.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond, N.S.) I wish to point out to the acting minister that on the southern coast of Cape Breton, from the harbour of Louisburg to the harbour of St. Peters, a distance of some sixty or seventy miles, there is not a single shelter for a boat along that wild and iron-bound coast, except the breakwater which the late government constructed at Lower Lardoise, and which would have been extended westerly before now some 150 feet, and also towards the shore at the eastern end if the late government had not been deprived of power. I cannot too strongly impress upon the minister the dire necessity of having a shelter constructed at a place called Chapel Cove, some miles distant or west of the breakwater at Lower Lardoise. In the year 1895 the Department of Public Works sent an engineer there to examine the place and make a survey of it and report. The hon. gentleman will find in his department a plan of the proposed breakwater made by an engineer of the department, a Mr. Bemasoni. He went to the place, examined it, and reported that a breakwater could be constructed there for $5,000 that would afford the necessary shelter at that place. This would afford shelter to forty or fifty large boats which are now exposed to the storms that prevail on that coast during the fishing season. This matter was looked into by the late government, and they proposed to take it up and had the survey and estimated cost made, but before anything further could be done they went out of office. Since then I have been hammering at the present Minister of Public Works, seeking to induce him to take up the work. He promised that he would do so, but so far I find no provision for it. I would ask the minister to make a note of this, and consider it before the supplementary estimates come down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer has made a note of the hon. gentleman's request

Harbours and rivers, P.E.I.—China Point—
Reconstruction of head pier ..... $500

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E.I.) I would like to ask the minister if this work is completed yet?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not begun yet. The work will be undertaken probably as soon as the money is voted.

Mr. MARTIN. There was $1,500 voted last year, and if the minister looks at the supplementary estimates, he will find this item: 'China Point pier—revote of part of lapsed amount to pay for work done, $700.' There is an item here, amount to pay for work done, and yet the minister says there is no work done.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The item in the supplementary estimates was to provide for work already completed. This is to provide for more of the same kind of work that has not yet been undertaken—sheet piling and so forth. It has not been let at all yet. The engineer says this work cannot be let by contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is the vote less? I submit to the acting minister that it is quite improper, at this important juncture, to make that vote less than last year, if for nothing else than for the sake of the name and tender associations between this name and the Minister of Inland Revenue, who wears the Order of the Dragon, and I believe is already taking his gripsack and starting for this same place.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister what he proposes to do at Pinette harbour.

Mr. GILLIES.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could hardly tell what will be in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MARTIN. Has the department received a petition from that section?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The matter of Pinette harbour has been under consideration, but I cannot say whether there was a petition or not.

Mr. MARTIN. I asked last session whether a petition had been received by the government, and he said not, but strange to say last fall, during the progress of a by-election, a letter came from the department saying that there was a petition in the department, naturally leading the people to understand that the prayer of petitioners was about to be granted. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries then told me that he would make inquiries at the Department of Public Works whether or not there was a petition, but they could not find out until a by-election was on six months later. I hope that some attention will be paid this harbour. I was told last year that no moneys could be voted for harbours in the southern part of Prince Edward Island because a vote had been given for the construction of a railway, but only a very small sum has yet been expended on that railway.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). I would like to ask my right hon. friend whether these repairs to breakwaters have anything to do with the rumour that a knight sitting on the Treasury benches lately and wearing the Imperial Order of the Dragon is to be Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend has gone very far to come very near. His question is very simple, but I am sorry I cannot gratify his curiosity this evening. I hope in a few days, if he will renew his question, that I will be able to give him every satisfaction.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will be very glad to hear it if true.

Mr. WILSON. I see that the hon. Minister of Public Works is able to make speeches in Paris, and since his health is apparently restored I would ask when he is coming back to his duties. From all we can hear he is not in as bad a state of health in which he was reported to be when he left.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He can fight in Paris anyway.

Mr. WILSON. He is able to take ladies to the theatre at a very large expense, and it is time that we ought to know something about when he is coming back, or whether he is to continue to be a member of the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am glad to say, from the last communication I have had from Mr. Tarte, that his health is improving. No wonder, having taken some rest, that his health is better than it was a few weeks ago, and if it continues to improve he will be back at an early day.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the government put any extra insurance on Perreault lately?

Campobello, N.B. (Wilson's Beach)—Breakwater repairs, &c. .... $9,000

Mr. G. W. GANONG (Charlotte). What are they doing there now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At present there are certain repairs being made to the old wharf, but this is for the purpose of extending the new wharf.

Mr. GANONG. I notice a reduction of $1,000 in this estimate. I have before me the report of the chief engineer, which says it will cost $19,500 to complete the work the minister refers to. What is the intention with regard to that—to proceed with it or to keep re-voting this each year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will not be possible to complete the work in one year. After parliament prorogues a good deal of time will be taken up in preparing plans and specifications and calling for tenders. So, we are not able to accomplish much the first year. This is all we require for this fiscal year.

Mr. GANONG. I have some correspondence before me in connection with this breakwater business which has a suspicious flavour about it. It would appear that some of the people in this district think that it was manipulated to help the last local election in New Brunswick. Of course, I would not suggest that. But, the correspondence goes to show further that if this administration had attended to its duties, it would have saved $750. The estimate made before was $1,250. But, through their negligence, things have got worse, and now the report is that it will take $2,000 to do this work.

Mr. MARTIN. I notice that in connection with the appropriations for Prince Edward Island there is an entry in the estimates, 'appropriations not required for 1900, $48,800.' Can the hon. minister give me the sums that go to make that up?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would be necessary for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) to refer to the Supply Bill of last year, where, no doubt, these items appear.

Mr. GANONG. Before this item for Wilson's Beach is passed, I would ask the acting minister if it is the intention of the government to continue the larger work in addition to the repairs?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is the intention of the government to extend the breakwater. It will be 225 feet in length. The plans and specifications will be prepared and tenders invited, and the work will be put under contract in the ordinary way. I know nothing of any manipulation such as that referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ganong). There was nothing of that kind, so far as I know.

Mr. GANONG. Will the hon. minister say why this work, so far as it is gone, was not put under contract instead of being done by day's work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not always practicable to do repairs by contract, you cannot specify what is to be done.

Cape Tormentine—Repairs to breakwater. $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will that completely repair the breakwater?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be done with this $15,000?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am informed that the wood used in building the breakwater was not treated with any preservative, and, consequently, the teredo worm has injured it, and thus it is necessary to rebuild. The probable cost of the protection work is $65,000, of which some $27,000 has already been spent.

Shippegan Harbour—Extension and repairs to protection works ..... $7,000

Mr. McALISTER. What is the nature of these improvements? I see that $2,400 was appropriated last year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to be applied to the repairs of the eastern and western beaches of Shippegan harbour and to protect the cribwork pier. The estimated cost of the work is $7,770.

Mr. McALISTER. Is it a shipping port?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very large shipping operations are carried on there, and there have been serious accidents in that neighbourhood, attended with considerable loss of life, from the want of protection to these fishing vessels.

Mr. McALISTER. Is it the intention of the acting Minister of Public Works to make an appropriation this year for harbour repairs in Campbellton?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to answer that question now.

Mr. McALISTER. Last year I asked the Minister of Finance who had charge of public works, if it was the intention of the government to send a dredge up to Campbellton, and I was informed that as soon as the dredge left Pictou it would go direct to Campbellton. I may say the dredge has not come yet. Is it the intention of the government to send a dredge there, and if so, when?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I remember having said something of that kind. The plans were marked out, but the dredge being delayed in any one place, sometimes upsets the whole programme for the season. At that time it was expected that the dredge would go to Campbellton.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). I was not in when the item for the Cape Tormentine pier was under discussion. Would the minister tell me what it is contemplated to do with it this year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I mentioned before the hon. gentleman came in that on account of native timber having been used, the pier had fallen into bad condition, and it is contemplated to rebuild it. It will cost about $62,000, and a part of the work has already been done.

Mr. POWELL. Is it creosoted timber that you intend to use ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Part of the facing is to be stone-work, and on the wood-work it is proposed to use a material called carbolineum, which is raised to a temperature of 150 degrees, and then applied where it is wanted. We propose to try a few dollars' worth of it, which we are getting through an agent. I think Mr. McGuire, of Quebec.

Mr. POWELL. I do not know what advice has been given by the engineers of the department, but I know that the expenditure of this money will be largely wasted, as it will not suffice to put the pier in a satisfactory condition. Tinkering away with $5,000 or $10,000 is going to accomplish very little. Engineers may know a great deal, but they knew very little when they were constructing this pier. Time and time again these gentlemen who had this matter in charge, were warned of the fact that this worm would destroy the work ; and indeed during the two or three years it was in process of construction, the wood was actually destroyed to the extent that a portion of it floated up. It baffles all idea the way the worms destroy wood at certain points along our coast, and this is probably one of the worst places along the whole St. Lawrence shore. The result is that the wood has been eaten away, and the whole work is undermined. I may say that the worm will not work in the dark, but wherever the sunlight strikes it will operate, below the water of course, and the whole under portion of that pier is destroyed. Expending a few thousand dollars on it as the government are doing, will not remedy the evil. The most drastic measures require to be taken in order to make that work permanent. The money that already has been spent there, is largely wasted, I do not mean to say through extravagance or corruption, but as a result of a false economy. A large expenditure requires to be made at once to put that pier in proper shape. It will go on getting worse and worse, until ultimately a very heavy expenditure will have to be made, if the harbour is going to be preserved. The use of creosote wood would make the work permanent. I brought this matter myself to the attention of the engineers in charge of the construction during the regime of the late government. It was brought time and time again to the notice of the engineers ; but as the hon. gentleman is aware, an engineer sometimes knows it all, and any observations a layman may make falls on deaf ears.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Engineers often want more money than they can get.

Mr. POWELL. Very likely. But wherever the fault was, there was extreme shortsightedness manifested in the construction of that work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineers, I am told, desired to put in concrete walls at the time. You must not blame them unduly, because it often happens that we do not vote all the money they want, and we cannot proceed with all these works at once. I can very easily understand that it is advisable to proceed to meet all these plans at once, but we cannot. There is $27,000 already spent, and then there is this $15,000, which makes over $40,000.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman will go on to spend $40,000 and probably $100,000, and then do nothing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What we are doing is permanent.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman may think that it is permanent, but if you saw the pier there, which is undulating, like the waves of the ocean during a storm, you would come to the conclusion that it is not in a very excellent state of repair.

Mr. SPROULE. Some years ago a discussion took place in this House in which it was stated as the intention of the government that in these localities where the destruction of wood occurs the wood was to be treated with creosote or plated with copper. It was said that the Public Works Department had it in contemplation to find out those localities where the destruction of wood occurs, and that when piles were to be put down they were to be prepared in this way. It is a waste of money if you go on putting them down when they will be destroyed.

Mr. POWELL. It may be advisable for the department to take into consideration the propriety of having an establishment for creosoting.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are considering that.

Mr. POWELL. There is no difficulty at all about finding out where woodwork will stand and where it will not. Wherever you have fresh water freshets such as in the Miramichi River, in the St. Lawrence and at the head of the tide in the Restigouche the worm cannot live. It can only live in salt water.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It will live in muddy water.

Mr. POWELL. There is the borer and there is the nipper. There is one that nips around the wood like a beaver, and then there is the borer that bores into the wood. The borer will not live where there is fresh water. No matter how bad the bottom of a vessel is if they run into fresh water the worms are all killed. The cheapest way for the government, as far as the future is concerned, is to have one of those establishments and creosote their own wood.

Lower St. Lawrence—Removal of rocks.. $1,500

Mr. FOSTER. This cannot be the whole of the lower St. Lawrence.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer explains that this item is for the removal of rocks from small streams that small boats enter.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the localities ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As cases arise they are brought to the attention of the government. Applications of this kind are made.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this to take rocks out in the vicinity of where that winter ferry service plies ? Whatever became of that service ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am very glad to see that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) takes an interest in it. So far we have not been able to get it started as the subsidy is too small. I will have to rely upon my hon. friend's generosity to increase it.

Magdalen Island breakwater ..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. You had $10,000 last year. What is the total estimated cost of the work ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Thirty-seven thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. How much have you expended already ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The work has been under contract and it is expected that the vote of last year will be exhausted by the 30th of June.

Newport breakwater ..... $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In Gaspé County.

Mr. FOSTER. In Gaspé itself ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On the Baie des Chaleurs.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it proposed to do there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To construct a breakwater for the protection of the fishing fleet.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the population of Newport ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not any information as to the population, but it is a fishing district and the population depend almost entirely on fishing for a livelihood.

Mr. FOSTER. What are you doing there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is proposed to build a breakwater on the west side of Newport harbour, 370 feet long and 20 feet wide, standing in 26 feet of water.

Percé (North Cove) wharf ..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is a large expenditure. We should know what we are going to do there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a wharf at Percé, North Cove, to consist of six contiguous timber cribs, with a timber superstructure 670 feet long. There will be expended up to the 30th of June about $2,000, and the total expenditure will be about $25,000. The work is under contract at $25,792. The chief engineer reports that a new wharf is absolutely necessary and that North Cove is the best place for it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a trading wharf ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it is on the regular route of steamers.

Mr. FOSTER. Between Dalhousie and Gaspé ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, between Dalhousie and Gaspé.

St. Jerome wharf, Lake St. John..... $2,500

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The estimated total cost of this is $16,000. There was an appropriation last year of $5,000, and this vote will bring the expenditure up to $7,500.

Bruce Mines wharf ..... $5,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the wharf that was bought by the government there. What is the cost of it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for the construction of a new wharf 1,200 feet long. We did not buy the other wharf.

Mr. SPROULE. What will it cost ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $12,500. $800 has been already spent.

Ontario—Burlington Channel—Repairs to piers ..... $20,000

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). I must express my disappointment at this appropriation. Two years ago I was promised $80,000 for the rebuilding of this channel, but in the absence of the minister it was cut down to $40,000, and again it was cut down to $20,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the way they keep their promises.

Mr. WOOD. I must say that my constituents have been pressing me to know the reason why this has been done. I very seldom say anything against what the government do, because, as a rule, they generally do right, and I am perfectly satisfied with them.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are you talking about, then?

Mr. WOOD. Unlike the hon. gentleman opposite, when I feel that my leaders are doing something wrong, I am not afraid to tell them so. I say that this channel, as it is called here, never cost the government anything. They advanced the money to build it in the first place, but every dollar was paid back several times by the tolls collected. When I told my constituents two years ago that the whole channel would be rebuilt within the next two or three years, they were perfectly satisfied. I feel that I will be called to account by my constituents—

Mr. SPROULE. That is right.

Mr. WOOD. I feel that I will be called to account by my constituents if the promise made to me by the minister two or three years ago, is not carried out. If the government state they will soon commence and finish the work in a reasonable time, I will be perfectly satisfied.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who promised the $80,000?

Mr. WOOD. It was promised to me.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman state by who?

Mr. WOOD. I do not think it is necessary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was a private bargain.

Mr. WOOD. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why are you afraid to tell it then?

Mr. WOOD. It is my business, and not yours.

Mr. FOSTER. It is public business.

Mr. WOOD. You can take my statement for what it is worth.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That would be small.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. WOOD. Possibly in the estimation of the hon. gentleman, but where I am known it is quite as valuable as his statement would be.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Just whisper who promised you the $80,000.

Mr. WOOD. I would impress on the government the necessity of prosecuting this work at the earliest possible date. There are two or three large steamers on the way out from England which will be employed in carrying ore from the west to Hamilton, and this work will be necessary. I urge on the government that the work should be done at once.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was the promise of the $80,000 in writing or under seal?

Mr. WOOD. There was no seal about it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then it was not worth much.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood) does not want the government to keep its pledges, and thus go back on their whole record.

Collingwood harbour improvements ..... $40,000

Mr. SPROULE. In what stage is this work now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a channel being constructed 110 feet wide, and they are engaged in dredging that channel 20 feet deep at low water mark.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you decided to make it a 20-foot channel?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have. The original contract in 1895 called for a channel, I think, 400 feet wide and sixteen or seventeen feet deep, which was thought to be twenty feet deep from what they call zero, but zero turned out to be a point away up in the air, and so it was necessary to revise these specifications. They were revised, and instead of adhering to the old specifications for a channel 400 feet wide, it was made narrower and deeper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What will the whole thing cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the original estimate, when the matter was before the House in 1895, was about $210,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any blasting to be done?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, from the south shore to a certain point half way down is rock, and from there out towards the bay there is a good deal of hardpan. Still, very good progress is now being made, and it will be a very good work. Collingwood is likely to become a very important town. There are enterprising people there, they have established lines of steamers, and they are now about to establish a ship-building industry for the construction of steel ships for the upper lakes. They have also established a dry dock, and there is a large pork packing industry in the town.

Mr. SPROULE. With regard to the channel, my information from men who are handling boats on the upper lakes is that the entrance to the channel is a very narrow one. They said that a channel of less than 150 feet would be scarcely suitable, because where so much blasting is done, there are jagged edges of rock left, which in a narrow channel are dangerous.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The channel can be made bell-mouthed, that is, wider at the entrance and narrowed down to 110 feet, where you are in still water. Of course, one would not look to 110 feet as a finality. As the trade increases future governments may consider it advisable to widen the channel; but it will now meet present wants.

Mr. SPROULE. If it meets present wants, I think it is wise economy to narrow the channel and deepen it, so that large vessels can get the use of it without delay. I have nothing but commendation to express with regard to the government's action if they go on and improve the channel at as early a date as possible, because Collingwood is a live town, and is destined in the future to be very much larger than it is now. I was told that it is contemplated to build a harbour above the meat works, where the smelter is being built, as deep water could be reached there much more quickly than at the lower harbour. Has the department any knowledge of that, or has any investigation been made to ascertain whether that is a fact or not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have no information on that point.

Mr. HENDERSON. With regard to the Burlington channel, on examining the estimates I am very much surprised to find that the only appropriation asked for this year is $20,000. Last year $40,000 was voted to improve this channel, and I think that was only to commence a work which was to cost $200,000. It looks as if the government were going to abandon this work entirely, because I believe that not a dollar of that $40,000 has been expended, and at the end of the present fiscal year it will lapse. The contract has only recently been let for this work; in fact, I do not think it has yet been signed; so that in a few days the only money that will be available for this work will be $20,000, which to my mind is utterly useless for the purpose. There is no question of the very great importance of the improvement in this channel, which at present is not at all suitable for the large vessels that go to the city of Hamilton and are necessary to the trade of that very enterprising city, which has recently started some very important industries. Surely there has been some oversight in this matter, and I would draw the minister's attention to it very closely in the hope that when the supplementary estimates come down, there will be an additional grant for the prosecution of this work in a manner which the rich agricultural country and the enterprising city of Hamilton at the head of the lake have a right to expect. I hope that this vote of $20,000 is real, and that we shall have $60,000 when the supplementary estimates come down.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this vote for Collingwood harbour to complete the work?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, that will not complete it.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the $40,000 voted last year spent, or will much of it lapse?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not much will lapse. We terminated the old contract because the contractor was not very progressive. His time for completion expired, I think, on the 1st of July last.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is doing the work now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The same man, under different terms, is doing a part of it. His contract ran out, and he had not finished it owing to lack of experience. But he had the plant there, and has been given work up to a certain point. He will do a full season's work there with his dredge, blasting the rock and removing it. We are calling for tenders for the dredging from that middle point northerly. The old contractor's name was Boone, of the firm of Boone and Armstrong, and he is now making very good progress, and the people are well satisfied. We hope to have this channel completed by the end of this season. This 110 feet is expected to be completed this season. We are paying $2.25 per cubic yard for the rock.

Mr. SPROULE. How much for the other one?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not let yet. The dredging from the middle point northerly is hardpan, and we are inviting tenders.

Mr. SPROULE. At Meaford harbour the people have gone to considerable expense to provide for a railway going down to the dock, and also to build an elevator. Two by-laws have been passed, one to build an elevator and the other to take the railway down to the harbour, and I would like to know what the government propose doing?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As that is a matter of great urgency, we have called for tenders, and the attention of the committee may be called to the matter at a later date of the session.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. With regard to harbours and rivers in Manitoba, what is the policy of the government regarding St. Andrew's Rapids?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To call for tenders and proceed promptly. Advertisements are now issued calling for tenders. There was an appropriation last year of $225,000. That will lapse in July, but it will be necessary to go on with the work.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose it will be revoted in the supplementaries?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that it would be proper to allude to the supplementaries.

Columbia River, B.C.—Improvements above Golden .....

Golden ..... $500

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Has the government done all the necessary improvements there? I see that only $500 is asked for this year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to continue the improvements. There is one dredge there.

Columbia River, B. C.—Improvement in Narrows between Upper and Lower Arrow Lake .....

Arrow Lake ..... $6,000

Mr. PRIOR. There is a great difference between the vote this year and that of last year. Twenty-five thousand dollars was voted last year, and you only ask $6,000 now. What work was done during the year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The expenditure last year amounted to about $5,000.

Mr. PRIOR. Out of the $25,000?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Fraser River—Improvement of ship channel .....

channel ..... $15,000

Mr. PRIOR. With regard to the work done at a place called Sumas Bar, on the Fraser River, the hon. minister told me some time ago that the work done was most satisfactory. Is that the case? There was some $7,000 expended on that bar, and I am informed that there is nothing to show for that expenditure, that the whole work that was done last season has been swept away. I am informed also that the work was not needed, and the money was uselessly expended. Whether that is true, I am not able to tell; but I would like to have information from the acting minister on the subject.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) is more familiar than I am with the Fraser River and the difficulty of protecting its banks. It might well be that work would be done and give satisfaction one year and the next year not a trace of it remain. I am told the Fraser River is so eccentric in its movements that it goes around the country without regard to dykes. Even canning factories that are built at great expense and apparently safe places sometimes find themselves swept away. The Fraser River problem is a very serious one. It is a question also whether the protection of that river is a matter that belongs to the Dominion or to the province. I do not know whether that has ever been the subject of negotiation between the Dominion and the province. I have no opinion on these matters—have not been studying them long enough to have formed an opinion.

Mr. PRIOR. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has not given an answer to my question. I asked whether the work was satisfactory and whether it was standing now.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). I may be able, in a measure, to answer that question. The hon. acting minister has stated that he is not familiar with the locus in quo that he has not been there. I have been there quite recently, and I know that all trace of that work is not obliterated.

Mr. PRIOR. Not all, but the greater part, I suppose?

Mr. MORRISON. No. There is a large bar shot across the channel, and the river wound around the end of it. It was supposed that if this dredge ran through the bar, it would train the current through and thus make the channel direct instead of circuitous. It was merely an experiment and an experiment urged by the people there. I think I am right in saying that it was not according to the best judgment of the local engineer that the work should be done; but he yielded to the wishes of the people. He brought the dredge Mudlark there. The people of British Columbia know that the Mudlark is utterly insufficient—not suitable for the work required in the Fraser River or in British Columbia generally. But she was the only available dredge. She was brought there and the work was done.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why 'profitable'?

Mr. MORRISON. It demonstrated that if we had a dredge sufficiently large for the work, the channel could be diverted. The test having been made with this small dredge, I at once urged strongly on the minister to give us a proper dredge for British Columbia. I am very glad to see the amount of $75,000 is in the estimates to provide a dredge. I am glad the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) has brought this up, because it gives us a cogent argument in favour of the vote of $75,000 to provide a sufficiently large dredge for British Columbia. It may be said that we have no sufficient dredge in British Columbia, and that state of affairs has existed for many years, while the maritime provinces and Quebec and Ontario waters are absolutely studded with dredges. British Columbia, having a coast line, I suppose, equal to that of the maritime provinces and Quebec, has not even one dredge worthy of the name. Speaking for myself, and I am more concerned in the matter than other hon. members, I am very glad that we have expended this amount on this work on the Sumas bar, and I think the people there are thoroughly satisfied.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have been at Sumas bar since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) was there. There was no trace that any intelligent person could point out of the work done.

Mr. MORRISON. The water was muddy when you were there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was with a pretty good captain and with people who were interested in the district. I had Hansard in my pocket in which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) had told the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) that $7,000 had been spent on Sumas bar, and that the result was very satisfactory for the amount expended. I was inquisitive enough to ask where the work was. It excited some derision. At any rate, no individual whom I met either on the boat or afterwards at Chilliwack could point out to me a trace of the work. The member for New Westminster said that the value of the work was to show the uselessness of the Mudlark. I would ask the acting Minister of Public Works, as he had his officers there, if he could tell us in what respect the expenditure of $7,000 was satisfactory so far as it went. What was the ground for making that statement?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to answer that question at the moment. The chief engineer is not able to give me the information. But, at a future sitting I will be able to answer the question.

Mr. PRIOR. Then I suppose this vote can stand.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You will have a vote for a dredging plant later on and you can discuss it on that.

Mr. PRIOR. I am glad to learn that at last the government have recognized that British Columbia is entitled to a better dredging plant, and that more money will be expended. I wish to say in this connection that I was glad to hear the way the member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) spoke in regard to this, because, although I am on this side, and the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is also on this side, and is now living in British Columbia, we are heartily in accord with the hon. member for New Westminster, and with the government in regard to the expenditure for a new dredge in British Columbia. We know that Fraser River is a very hard river to tackle. The engineer, Mr. Gamble, who was previously the engineer there, is a first-class man, you could not have had a better man. But he had his work cut out for him with the Fraser River. Mr. Roy, who is now secretary of the department, was also very satisfactory; I do not believe any better gentleman could have held the position. I wish to congratulate the government on behalf of the people of British Columbia in the appointment of Mr. Keefer as the resident engineer. He is one of the best appointments that the government could possibly make. He is a gentleman who stands very high in the estimation to everybody who knows him, and his name is an honourable one. The Keefer family is a family of engineers. I hope the hon. gentleman will tell us why the answer was given to me some time ago that the work on Sumas Bar was satisfactory. My information was that the whole thing had been swept away. I do not lay any blame on Mr. Roy or anybody else.

Williams head quarantine wharf ..... $2,000

Mr. PRIOR. What is that work for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Repairs to the wharf and quarantine station.

Mr. PRIOR. Is that sufficient to put the whole wharf in a first-class condition? I may say that it is a most important station at the present time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been a good deal of it expended last year, over $5,000. This is all that will be required.

Harbours and rivers generally ..... $5,000

Mr. PRIOR. I notice that in these votes for British Columbia there is nothing put down for the harbour of Victoria. I wish to call the attention of the government to the fact that the harbour of Victoria needs some money expended upon it. In conjunction with my colleague, I have for years brought to the attention of the government the needs of that harbour. Since this government came into power not one cent, so far as I know, has been expended upon that harbour until within the last couple of months. More than that, in 1896, when a sum of money was voted by the former government, the present government did not see fit to expend that money. Now, a letter was written to the Minister of Public Works by the British Columbia Board of Trade, of Victoria, as letters were also written by myself and by my colleague several times, insisting upon a proper amount of money being expended on such an important harbour. In reply to the communication of the board of trade the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) saw fit to send the following letter, and with the permission of the House I will read it, as I think it is something unique in the history of politics :

Ottawa, February 9, 1900.

F. Elworthy, Secretary British Columbia Board of Trade, Victoria, B.C.

My dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your communication of January 31, forwarding the information that your board of trade was unanimously disappointed at what they call the 'absence of any indication that the board's recommendation will be acted upon.'

Perhaps you will permit me to say that the present government has been in office only four years, and that we have not been able to do in that short period of time everything that has been asked from us in all parts of Canada. British Columbia has had a large share of public money. The Conservative party, so faithfully supported by Messrs. Prior and Earle, had been in office for twenty-five years, practically, and I am very much surprised that your board and their predecessors have not been able, during those long years, to impress upon the late government the improvements that you so strenuously press upon this government at the present time.

Your board, I am sure, cannot forget that the Conservative party, in the House and outside of it, are constantly reproaching my department and myself in particular, with the tendency to spend too much money. Well, I cannot possibly dredge and build harbours, improve navigation and rivers, and not spend any money.

Yours truly,

J. ISRAEL TARTE.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that any hon. gentleman who has been in this House, I care not for how long, has ever heard of such a letter being written by a member of a government, as the letter I have just read. I say it is a contemptible letter, but I am not astonished that it came from the hon. gentleman in question. It is incredible that any minister of the Crown should write such a letter to a representative body such as the British Columbia Board of Trade. All they asked for was that a reasonable amount should be spent in the harbour of Victoria, and this is the answer they got. They might have expected that he would have given any way a courteous reply, instead of that they get an answer that I think every member of that board looked upon as an insult. The hon. gentleman saw fit to make the statement that British Columbia receives a great deal of money from the government. Well, I deny that. In the first place, British Columbia pays more money into the Dominion treasury, according to her population, four or five times as much, as any other province in Canada. I would also ask whether any minister has the right to cavil about a reasonable expenditure. That money is not the property of Mr. Tarte or of any other minister: it is money that is paid into the treasury by the people of British Columbia, and they have a right to expect that they should get some reasonable return from it.

Mr. PRIOR.

This does not affect people in the east, so I suppose we cannot expect much sympathy from them; but we can expect that when British Columbia pays into the treasury the tremendous amount of money in taxation that she does, she shall get a reasonable return on her public works. Now, I asked a question in the House to this effect :

What amounts have been voted by this House for the harbour of Victoria in the years 1897, 1898, 1899 and 1900? What amounts of said votes, if any, have been expended up to December 31, 1900? How much has been expended on the said harbour from the votes for dredging?

There again the Minister of Public Works gave what he seemed to think a smart reply; but I do not think it was a reply that should have come from an hon. gentleman holding the position he does. His reply to that was :

Parliament having thought that public money could be spent to better advantage elsewhere in the British Empire, I have not spent any money in Victoria.

As the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) says, it was a contemptible reply. The hon. gentleman there undoubtedly had a fling at the money that the government are expending for the British Empire in sending a contingent to South Africa. That is the only translation I can put upon this answer. He asks here: When the Conservative party were in power, why did not you get it from them? From the year 1871 to 1897, I may tell the hon. gentleman who is now at the head of the department, that a total of $302,908 was spent on the improvement of Victoria harbour, and the last expenditure of $3,462 in 1896-7, when the present government were in power, was made out of an item of $10,000 which the Conservative government voted, and the remainder of which the Liberals, in their wisdom, saw fit not to expend. I believe it is the opinion, not only of the hon. gentleman who is now on his way from Paris, but the opinion has been expressed to me by other members of the government, that because Victoria saw fit to elect two Conservatives at the last general elections she should have no money expended on her harbour or public buildings. I was asked this year, more than once, by members of the government: Well, what right have you to expect any money to be expended? What have you done for us? It is not the government's money, it is the money of the people that they are expected to expend, and because the people of British Columbia saw fit to elect gentlemen to oppose them there is no reason why they should not give them a proper amount of money in return for what they pay. I do not want to go into a lot of figures at this hour of the night or at this period of the session. Year after year I have brought the question up in the House as to the amount of money that British Columbia pays into the treasury of the Dominion.

ion, but I will just show hon. gentlemen opposite the amount that British Columbia does pay into the treasury. British Columbia paid in customs revenue alone last year $2,113,927.24. It is a tremendous amount for a population of not more than 150,000 people. I have made a little calculation in regard to this sum, and I find that the customs revenue of the province of Quebec was $10,000,000 odd. The amount paid by the city of Montreal was $8,668,000, which leaves to the province of Quebec, outside of Montreal, $1,342,000. In other words, British Columbia, with 150,000 people, contributes $771,000 odd more to the customs than 1,200,000 people in Quebec province do; that is, allowing the province of Quebec 1,500,000 people and deducting the 300,000 population of the city of Montreal. I am well aware that, perhaps, hon. gentlemen will say that the whole of the province of Quebec pays duty in the city of Montreal, but the fact remains that 150,000 people in the province of British Columbia pay more than 1,500,000 people in the province of Quebec. While I am on this subject, I would like to call attention to the public buildings. I am sorry that I was not in the House when the vote for public buildings in British Columbia came up. There is a case in regard to these public buildings that I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. acting Minister of Public Works. I believe that he is an honourable and fair-minded man, and that he will regret with me that a great injustice has been done to a most deserving man in connection with these public buildings. When the new post office in Victoria was built the old post office was shut up. The new building comprises the post office, the customs, inland revenue and other public departments. At the time that the old post office was shut up a man named W. H. Bailey was caretaker of the building. Instead of this man being continued by the government as caretaker of the new building, the government saw fit to appoint another man who was, if nothing else, a first-class Liberal, and a strong supporter of hon. gentlemen who are now in power. I do not know whether Mr. Bailey was or was not; I do not think he had any politics whatever. But, the services that Mr. Bailey has rendered to the British Empire, I think, entitled him to far better treatment than he has received at the hands of the government. I am going to read an extract from the Victoria Colonist of October 18, 1899, in regard to the service that this man has given to this country:

In the local list of names of those who have volunteered for service in South Africa appears that of Sergt. W. H. Bailey, of No. 1 company, who already is decorated with the Egyptian medal and three clasps—El Teb, Tofrek and Suakin—and appears to be entitled, according to all rules of the service, if not to the Victoria Cross itself, the most prized of all worldly decorations, at least to the medal for distinguished gallantry. Sergt. Bailey was formerly a private in the Royal Marine Light Infantry, a battalion of which, under Lieut.-Col. Ozzard, formed part of the brigade commanded by Sir Gerald Graham, which was landed at Suakin on the Red Sea in 1885 to protect the construction of a line of railway proposed to be built from that place across the desert to Berber on the Nile. This was undertaken with the object of facilitating the operations of the expedition which had worked its way up the Nile past Berber and headed for Khartoum for the relief of Gen. Gordon, then besieged by the Mahdi.

The particular action for which the decoration is claimed for Sergt. Bailey was that popularly known as McNeill's Zeriba, or according to the War Office description, the battle of Tofrek, which took place on the afternoon of the 22nd of March, 1885. It was during the fiercest attack of the Arabs that Lieut.-Col. Bridge, adjutant of the marines battalion, called for volunteers to capture a standard of the enemy, and his call was answered by Sergt. Bailey, who, along with his officer, dashed into the midst of the dusky horde, and captured the trophy. Sergt. Bailey some years ago wrote Col. Bridge to see if the medal given for conspicuous bravery on the battlefield could not be secured, and has from that officer a letter, an extract from which runs thus:

'I recollect you and your gallant and plucky conduct on that memorable and trying afternoon, and I hoped that if we two could not both obtain the Victoria Cross, that my strong recommendation of you at that time might have obtained for you the medal for distinguished gallantry. At the time, as the whole affair was nearly a catastrophe, it was only half understood afterwards, when the full result of the day was known, a clasp was given. The death of Col. Ozzard, our C. O., doubtless put a stop to anything being done for us two.'

Col. Ozzard died, Sergt. Bailey says, on board the transport carrying the marines home to England after the close of the campaign, and he himself was invalidated out of the service shortly after.

In addition to the above recommendation, Sergt. Bailey's name was twice mentioned in despatches from Gen. Graham to General (now Field Marshal) Wolseley, then commander-in-chief in Egypt, and in addition his former adjutant, Lieut.-Col. Bridge, says Sergt. Bailey 'will find full mention of his name in "The Battle of Topek," a book published in 1887 by W. H. Allen.'

This was the man that hon. gentlemen saw fit to turn out upon the world. He was the caretaker of the post office, and he was a man who enjoyed the confidence and respect of every man, woman and child in Victoria. That man was turned out to make a place for a party heeler and nothing else. It may be said that he was left in charge of the old post office, but that was only for one or two months. What reason was there that this man could not have been put in charge of the new post office? Very different was the conduct of the government in regard to one of their proteges, whom they appointed as an appraiser in Victoria, a man, who instead of being loyal, was the most disloyal man we have ever had in British Columbia. Mr. W. Marchant had been a strong supporter of the government, and had spoken on various platforms in their favour, and in 1897 he was made customs appraiser. When the war broke out between South Africa and the British Empire, we found this gentleman writing such a pro-Boer and disloyal letter to the press that it at once set the whole of British Columbia in a blaze. I have not his letter here, for the simple reason that I found on applying in the reading room and library of the House, that the numbers of the paper in which it appeared were torn out. I cannot say who did that, or for what reason it was done, but at all events, I took care at the time, to send that letter to the Minister of Customs, and to draw his attention to the fact that he had a man so disloyal in his employment. A few days after the letter was published, the mayor of Victoria, at the request of a large number of prominent citizens, called a public meeting and of all the meetings ever held in Victoria, that was the most crowded; the people surged around the buildings by hundreds, not being able to obtain admission. The following resolution was carried unanimously at that meeting, and I shall read it, in order to show the sort of man that this government thinks is worthy of being appointed to a position in the public service, while a man who has served his Queen and country like Mr. Bailey, was turned out on the street, without notice. The resolution is as follows:

Be it resolved, that in the opinion of this meeting the conduct of William Marchant, customs appraiser, and one of the school trustees of the city of Victoria, in writing the letters addressed to Bishop Cridge, Dr. Campbell, Bishop Perrin, Revs. J. C. Speer and Robert Hughes, published in the issue of the Victoria 'Daily Times' on the 28th day of October instant, is offensive and unpatriotic in the extreme, unworthy of one occupying the position of school trustee, and an office in the service of the Dominion of Canada, and meets with the unqualified disapproval of this meeting, which hereby demands of him that he resign forthwith his position of school trustee.

Be it further resolved that a copy of the said letter, so published, be forwarded by the chairman and secretary of this meeting, accompanied by a suitable covering letter, to the Premier of the Dominion of Canada, and also to the senators and members of the House of Commons for the province of British Columbia.

This resolution was carried unanimously by the immense audience gathered together that night. I do not know Mr. Marchant very intimately, and he may or may not be a good appointment, but he got his position simply because he was a staunch supporter of the party in power, and the government has given a raise of salary of $100 lately; but Mr. Bailey, who had fought for his Queen and his country so gallantly, was turned out of office. Now, as to Victoria harbour, I saw the minister personally the other day, and I explained the whole matter to him and to his deputy. What the board of trade and the people of Victoria want is, that a good, round sum should be placed in the estimates so as to give a depth of at least sixteen feet to the harbour. The secretary of the Public Works Department, who had been the resident engineer in British Columbia, knows whether that is feasible or not. I call the attention of the minister to it, and I ask him to give the matter his most careful attention, and to see that after four years of side-tracking, justice is at last done to the city of Victoria. It may surprise hon. gentlemen to hear that the sea-going tonnage of the port of Victoria is larger than the sea-going tonnage entering and clearing the port of Montreal. Although the population of Victoria is not much over 25,000, still the amount of shipping at that port is enormous. Considering the amount of money that the province of British Columbia and the port of Victoria pays into the treasury, I consider that we have a right to expect, that not $10,000 or $15,000 be voted for that harbour, but that a regular system of improvement shall be inaugurated by the government, that their engineers shall make a proper plan, and that the government shall see that a substantial sum is placed in the supplementary estimates to give us the improvements in the harbour which we are justly entitled to.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). Coming back from war to rivers and harbours once more, I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that an item of $2,000 for a wharf at Margaree Island was in the estimates last year, and that this item has been dropped from the estimates this year. I understand that the work was in progress, and missing the item from the estimates leads me to ask the minister for an explanation as to how that came about. I am glad to see the deputy minister here. I think this is a matter that comes within his duty, to see that items of this kind, particularly unexpended items are carried from one year to another. I may say that I only hope that he will give the committee a better explanation than I found him inclined to give me, when I approached his office. I always understood the Deputy Minister of Public Works was the servant of the people of Canada. Again I will ask that some explanation be given as to why this item was dropped. I observe that all the items for public works in the province of Nova Scotia are taken down in their proper columns, and repeated from the year 1899 to the year 1900, except this particular one. I only hope the acting minister will give a proper explanation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Explain how that was overlooked, now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to the observations of my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior)—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. From Inverness.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. I cannot in courtesy, allow the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Prior), to pass without reply. I have no knowledge of the case of Sergeant Bailey and, therefore, am not able to offer any explanation. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior), has reason to feel that I recognize the importance of Victoria harbour. I presume that it is not so much a round sum in the estimates that the hon. gentleman desires, as to have some work done.

Mr. PRIOR. It cannot be done without a good appropriation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That may be, but I do not think that the size of the sum is so material as is having the work done. There is nothing gained by putting fictitious sums in the estimates that are not likely to be expended. I have studied the harbour question there, and I think it requires improvements in the way of deepening, and the removal of dredger rock. We may very well devote our attention to the interior harbour of Victoria, and I believe the dredging is going on there now, and hope it may continue during the present season. With reference to the question of my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan), as to why this vote of $2,000 for a wharf at Margaree Island was dropped. I cannot give him that information, because I had not the preparation of these main estimates, which were settled prior to my going into the Department of Public Works. But I will endeavour to ascertain for the hon. gentleman the explanation, and I hope it will be satisfactory.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). I feel it my duty to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a matter to which I have called his attention several times before. In the River St. Lawrence, between Kingston and Brockville, and opposite Gananoque, there are three distinct channels—the north, the middle, and the south or American channel. At the foot of Wolfe Island, eighteen miles below Kingston, where steamers going down either the north or the middle channel desire to turn into the American channel, which is considered the better, especially for steamers with a tow of barges, there is a small rocky bar, on which there is only about twelve feet of water, and as I believe fourteen feet of water is now obtained all the way down the St. Lawrence route, it is very desirable that this obstruction should be removed. The best information I have is that it will not cost very much to do it. I have had no promise in writing that it would be done, but I have understood each year that some dredging would be done there. I quite realize the amount of dredging that has been done, and the comparatively small number of dredges at the disposal of the government; but I am very anxious that all these channels in connection with the St. Lawrence route should be available, and I now call the attention of the acting minister to this matter so that during this year, if possible, the obstruction there may be removed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would just say to the hon. gentleman that a hydrographic survey is about to be made of the river from Kingston to Prescott, with the intention of giving fourteen feet of water.

Dredging—Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.... $87,000

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to know what work was done in Prince Edward Island last year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At Summerside, in the county of Prince, 10,305 cubic yards removed; at Hurd's Point, 18,235 yards; at Charlottetown railway wharf, 19,630 yards; at Charlottetown, 2,280 yards.

Mr. MARTIN. That is a very small amount of dredging for that province. I am very sorry the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) is not in his place when these estimates are before the House. For the last fifteen years he has been complaining that very little dredging was done in Prince Edward Island, and I may say that for the last four years there has been much less done than for the same number of years previously. I want to call the minister's attention to some promises that were made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries not long ago in the province. We had an election in the riding which I have the honour to represent, and he went down to Wood Islands and told the people there that the dredge would certainly come to Wood Island, and that the breakwater there would be repaired, and advised them to send a petition to Ottawa. I do not see anything in these estimates for the repairs to the Wood Island breakwater, and I wish the minister to promise me that the dredge is going there. I would also like to know where the dredge is going to be at work next summer, and what work is proposed to be done in the province. In my riding there are the harbours of Murray River, the proposed terminus of the railway which is to be built, Wood Island, Pinette Harbour, and Vernon River. I suppose the Minister of Marine and Fisheries covered pages of Hansard years ago calling attention to these.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How many years ago?

Mr. MARTIN. Say from five to ten years ago. There has been some little work done, but none at all on these harbours since 1896. With very little dredging and extension of breakwater, the harbour of Wood Island could be put into good order. The late government spent some money there in 1893 or 1894, but more must be spent if it is to accommodate vessels of any capacity. As the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was so generous in his promises there last fall, I would like to see his promises implemented. I asked last year if there was a petition in the department on behalf of the harbour of Pinette. I was told there was none, but when the elections came on, a letter was produced from the Public Works Department stating that they had the petition. Where was the petition all the time? It was trotted out at the right time during the by-elections in October. That petition had been forwarded by somebody when the House was in session last year, but it was pigeon-holed until the elections were in progress. When the elections were in progress, there came a letter from the Public Works Department saying that a petition had been received. Is the hon. gentleman going to carry out the promises made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. During those last four years there has been little or no expenditure in that section of the province. In Nova Scotia last year large amounts were voted for over 80 piers and wharfs. I do not know whether the money was all expended or not, but I know that the half of what was put in the estimates for Prince Edward Island has not been expended. I hope for a favourable reply from the hon. minister, and would ask him to let me know where the dredging is to be done, and if the harbours I mentioned are to be improved.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So far as this summer is concerned, the difficulty is the scarcity of dredges. There are very few in the maritime provinces. There is only one dredge for Prince Edward Island, and we have sent another there from Nova Scotia. I do not know how long it will be kept there. The hon. gentleman will have to support a vote to increase our dredges, as there are not enough at present.

Mr. MARTIN. Where is the dredging to be done? Where is the dredge Prince Edward to be at work this summer, and where is it at work now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get the programme of dredging, and give the particulars to the hon. gentleman when we are next in committee.

Mr. PRIOR. I hope the hon. gentleman will see fit to furnish a better dredge than we have now in Victoria harbour. The amount of money voted in past years was almost all expended in paying for wages.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was pleased to hear the hon. gentleman speak so highly of Mr. Roy's qualifications. I have had several conversations with him, and he is of the opinion that the present dredging system in British Columbia waters is very unsatisfactory. What is required is a hydraulic dredge, but part of the machinery for such a dredge is not manufactured in Canada at all, and Mr. Roy has been the last week on a mission with the view of providing hydraulic dredges for British Columbia.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is there any special work for to-morrow? What is the programme?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the election Bill is ready, we may go on with that. Failing that, we shall continue in estimates. There will be still a few items of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock), and after that the estimates of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). We did not expect to get so far to-night and had not arranged for it.

Mr. PRIOR. When are we going to finish with the Minister of Agriculture?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I have only one item in the main estimates; I am ready to take that up to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. (Thursday).

THURSDAY, June 21, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

YUKON TERRITORY—SALARIES OF OFFICIALS.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

Who are the members of the Yukon council? What salaries, allowances, rents, &c., do they receive?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In reply to the question, I would say that the members of the Yukon council do not receive any salaries in their capacity as such, but in the positions which they occupy in that district, their salaries are as follows: Wm. Ogilvie, commissioner, salary, $6,000 per annum; living allowance, $2,000, and a free house. J. E. Girouard, registrar, salary, $4,000 per annum; living allowance, $100 per month. Hon. C. A. Dugas, judge, salary, $4,000 per annum; living allowance, $2,000. W. H. P. Clement, legal adviser, salary, $5,000 per annum; living allowance, $100 per month. E. C. Senkler, gold commissioner, salary, $5,000 per annum; living allowance, $100 per month. A. B. Perry, superintendent, Dominion Mounted Police, salary, $1,400 per annum; when in command at Dawson he is allowed $2 per day extra. He also receives $1.25 per day living allowance, in addition to rations supplied to the police. These gentlemen do not receive any salary or allowance as members of the Yukon council.

SUPPLY OF MEAT TO MILITARY CAMP, KINGSTON.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

To whom was the contract let for the supply of meat for the military camp at Kingston for the present year? Were tenders called for by public advertisement? Was the lowest tender accepted? At what price per 100 pounds was the contract let? Was any change made in the contract entered into, by transfer or otherwise? If so, why? What was the rate per 100 pounds for the changed contract, and to whom was it awarded?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Con. Millan, Kingston. 2. Yes. 3. Yes. 4. At 634-100 cents per pound for beef and 7½ cents for mutton. 5. Yes. 6. After calling for tenders the date of the camp was changed from June 26 to the 19th, and the lowest tenderer refused to deliver the meat from the 19th without extra charges. New arrangements were made. 7. Eight and one-quarter cents per pound for beef and mutton; Con. Millan. The other tenderers were 943-100 cents, 960-100 cents, 975-100 cents and 983-100 cents per pound for beef and mutton.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—SUNDAY WORK.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Has the hon. the Minister of Railways received a copy of the following resolution adopted at a public meeting in New Glasgow, Pictou County, N.S. : 'While we fully recognize the increased traffic on the Intercolonial Railway and the consequent increased difficulties in forwarding such traffic, we would nevertheless give strong expression in favour of the cessation of work on the railway and in the roundhouse at Stellarton and elsewhere during the full twenty-four hours of the Lord's Day, and would urge upon the government the necessity of putting the road in such condition and furnishing such locomotives as necessary to that end?'

2. If so, what instructions, if any, have been given since the receipt of this resolution?

3. If no instructions have been given, why not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). In answer to the hon. member's question, I would say that I did receive a copy of the resolution contained in the question, and I immediately called for an explanation from the officers of the department in respect to what occurred, although, perhaps, I ought to say that the inquiries had been made before the receipt of the resolution. The resolution, I think, did not come to hand until about ten days or a fortnight after the trouble complained of had occurred. There was only one Sunday upon which it was necessary to continue work, and that was because of a condition of business which was entirely exceptional. That will not occur again, it should not have occurred, and it has not occurred since the time referred to. I gave instructions not to allow work on Sunday, in fact, that is a standing order, and I do not think the officers of the department would disregard such an order except it might be in a case which is very exceptional, under which circumstances they could not avoid doing it.

TREATY BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND JAPAN.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. Has Canada taken advantage of the provisions of Article XIX. of the treaty of commerce and navigation between Great Britain and Japan which was signed in London July 16, 1894, the ratifications whereof were exchanged at Tokio August 25, 1894? Or, has Canada become a party to the said treaty?

2. If not, upon what ground has Canada refrained from becoming a party to the treaty in question?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). After the treaty between Great Britain and Japan had been negotiated Canada was invited by Great Britain to declare whether or not she would become a party to it. The government, having considered the question, came to the conclusion that Canada would not be a party to the treaty. The reason was that we did not want to alienate our liberty, and thereby preclude the possibility of making an arrangement in future which might be found beneficial to Canada.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PURCHASE OF MEAT FOR CANADIAN CONTINGENTS.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

1. Were the supplies of meat required for the men of the Canadian contingent, which left Halifax for South Africa, purchased by public tender; if so, from whom, and at what prices?

2. How many pounds of meat, both fresh and preserved, were put on board each of the four transports that left Halifax for South Africa with the Canadian contingents?

3. How much per pound was paid for fresh meat, and how much for preserved meat?

4. What was the total amount paid for the meat purchased, and what quantity of fresh meat and preserved meat respectively was purchased?

5. What are the 'reasonable terms' referred to by the Minister of Militia and Defence on May 10, 1900 ('Hansard,' page 5021), upon which the government reimburses the steamship companies and remunerates them for their time and labour in connection with the provisioning of the men of the second Canadian contingent during the voyage to South Africa?

6. What provision and supplies did each such steamship line so provide for such purposes, and at what price?

7. From what persons or firms were the respective provisions and supplies in each instance purchased by each steamship line, and in what quantities and at what prices in each instance?

8. What persons or firms were suggested or named to the steamship companies in connection with the purchasing of supplies or provisions by the steamship companies conveying the Canadian contingents to South Africa?

9. Were the supplies or provisions which were purchased by the steamship companies respectively as agents for or on behalf of the government, and which were or are to be paid for by the government, supplied by tender, or purchased by private contract?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Everything was supplied by the owners of the transports. 2, 3 and 4. The accounts are not yet received from the transports. 5. The terms are not fixed, but compensation will be offered either in the form of a small commission, or payment for the actual time occupied in securing the supplies. 6 and 7. These are answered by the answer to 2, 3 and 4; the accounts have not yet been received. 8. The names are: J. and M. Murphy, Kelly & Glassy, John Tobin & Co., Charles Ackhurst, Bauld. Gibson & Co., Mr. Fenton, Black & Finn, Maling & Co., John F. Ryan, Mr. Hames, Dillon Bros., J. W. Hamilton, John F. Out-hit, H. H. Fuller, N. Russell & Co., Irwin & Sons, W. L. Kane & Co., John Murphy, John Wallace, J. McInnis & Son, Brander & Morris, Gordon & Keith, J. F. Kelly, Mr. Chittick, J. A. Gass, Gregory & Mitchell, Mr. Myers, Globe Laundry, John Fry, John Lawlor, Geo. A. Pyke, M. E. Keefe, Billman, Chisholm & Co., R. J. Sweet & Co., John Rawley, John Ead, and Lane & Co. 9. I am not aware whether they were purchased by tender or not.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not quite catch what the hon. gentleman said in reference to No. 9, whether they were acting for the government or not.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The answer given me here is: 'Not yet known.' I suppose the accounts have not been received and the department is not aware whether tenders were asked for in any of the cases or not.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—APPOINTMENT OF CHAPLAINS.

Mr. WALLACE asked:

1. At what date did the first contingent sail from Quebec?

Mr. CLANCY.

2. At what date was the Church of England chaplain for such contingent appointed?

3. What were the dates of the appointments of the other chaplains for the first contingent?

4. What was the cause of delay in appointing the Church of England chaplain?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. October 30, 1899. 2. Rev. John Almond, Church of England chaplain, embarked on the steamship Sardinian on October 30, under verbal instructions from the minister. His appointment was recommended by the major-general on November 1 and approved by the minister. 3. The other chaplains were appointed on October 28, vide Militia Order No. 222. 4. Answered by No. 2.

POST OFFICE AT ATHENS, ONT.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

Has the Postmaster General given the postmaster at Athens, Ont., instructions or permission to close the post office at six p.m., on three days of the week? If so, is the Postmaster General aware that it is a great inconvenience to the farmers of that section of the country who drive in for their mail after six o'clock p.m.?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor), I have to state that no application for such permission has been made to the department, nor has the department granted any such permission, and the department has no knowledge of the postmaster's doing what it is suggested he is doing.

I. C. R.—TRAIN SERVICE ON CAPE BRETON DIVISION.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to a matter of some importance. I have received the following telegram from the Board of Trade of Sydney:

At a large meeting of the Sydney Board of Trade held this afternoon, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

Resolved, that this meeting of the Sydney Board of Trade has witnessed with exceeding regret the departure made by the management of the Intercolonial Railway from their published time-table, in running the fast express into and out from North Sydney twice a day. That this diversion from the main line to a branch delays the arrival of the train by schedule time thirty minutes, and from past experience, it can be concluded that the delay will largely exceed that limit; that this delay is particularly annoying, as it prevents the possibility of delivering any mails that come by that train on the night of its arrival; that it is contrary to the spirit and object of the system of fast travel, and is a source of annoyance to each and every traveller whose destination is Sydney; that the large volume of passenger traffic at present is to Sydney, and the slight inconvenience of changing cars at North Sydney is trivial in comparison with the unnecessary and annoying delay caused by running the whole train down to the North Sydney station, and very frequently down to the North Sydney wharf; that the time-table, as arranged, settled and published by the Department of Railways, was acceptable to this board as a compromise, in view of the fact that the early express was still allowed to continue the old system of running on the North Sydney branch of the up and down trips, but the unexplained change compelling both trains to run into North Sydney is an act of injustice and injury to the town of Sydney which this board regards as utterly unjustifiable; further resolved, that the representatives of this county in the Dominion parliament and local legislature be asked at once to demand of the Department of Railways its adherence to the printed time-table, and that copies of this resolution be sent to the representatives of the county, to the Minister of Railways and to the Minister of Finance.

(Sgd.) D. A. HEARN,

Secretary Sydney Board of Trade.

After this very full statement of the case made by the Sydney Board of Trade, I need not point out to the minister (Mr. Blair), the extreme inconvenience of changing this running arrangement, which was arrived at by a compromise acceptable to the town of Sydney. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is desirous of meeting the necessities of the case as far as possible, and I would suggest to him that there be an equal service from both towns, joining at the junction, both engines going west if necessary, and on returning, dividing again at the junction. I may say that the traffic warrants two parlour cars and two first-class cars. That is a suggestion that would meet the difficulty and avoid this annoyance to the board of trade and to the people of Sydney. I presume the arrangement was come to after some difficulty, but it was acceptable, and as the hon. minister knows, the vast influx of the travelling public to the town of Sydney, is no doubt much greater than it is to North Sydney. It would seem to me very unjust that there should be such delay as absolutely prevented replies being sent to letters. The minister will see that every facility should be given by the government to such an important town as Sydney is rapidly becoming. It is a serious matter to change an arrangement which was deliberately come to, and to change it in such a way as to adversely affect the interests of the community there. If the minister would give attention to the suggestion made, it would remove the difficulty without doing an injustice to any one, and it would meet the wishes of the Sydney Board of Trade.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I received a similar telegram to that read by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), and no doubt the conditions as described actually do exist at the present time. The facts in connection with the matter are these: There has hitherto been only one express train a day running to these towns, and that express train has been running into Sydney as its eventual terminus; first calling at North Sydney. That system has obtained for a long period of years, until the people of North Sydney have come rather to regard it as their right, that they should be the terminus of the road, and that Sydney and not North Sydney, should be compelled to make any connections that are required. When we were adding another express train to the Cape Breton service, we felt that it would be a very proper arrangement that we should continue the running of one train to North Sydney, backing down to Sydney as heretofore, but that the new train should run direct to Sydney, providing a train connection for North Sydney at the junction. The time-table was arranged upon that basis. The feeling, however, as I am informed now, was so extremely intense in North Sydney, and the indignation was so great that the general manager was prevailed upon to look into the situation again, to see whether he could make a readjustment of the time-table which would be satisfactory to both towns. From the assurances which he tells me he received from people who are interested in the business at Sydney, he was led to conclude that it would not be so very much opposed to the wishes of the people of Sydney, that the second express should run into North Sydney as the other express had done, and then back down, according to the usual plan. He communicated to me by wire that he was satisfied from what he had gathered, that both towns would be content with that arrangement, and he asked my consent to his making the change. I did feel a great deal of doubt as to whether it would be possible to satisfy both towns. I felt convinced that it was practically impossible to make an arrangement which would be acceptable to both localities. I did not think that any service that would be justified in the public interest, and that the railway could afford, would be absolutely agreeable to both towns, under the conditions of apparent conflict between them. Nevertheless, having an assurance from the general manager, that in his opinion a satisfactory arrangement could be made, I left it to his discretion, and I believe that he has varied the time-table somewhat, so that the trains could run as formerly. From the information I gather now, it appears that my original fear was well grounded, and I am in communication with the department at the present time, and am in hopes that we will be able to arrive at the solution moderately agreeable to both parties. If not, we will have to determine the question according to what we conceive to be the interests of the different localities, the interests of the railway, and the interests of the public service, and make our decision accordingly, even though neither of the parties might be content with it.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). Mr. Speaker, I endorse in all possible earnestness the suggestion that has been thrown out in the telegram that has been read by the hon. leader of the opposition by way of a compromise in the existing arrangements as to the running of trains at the eastern end of the Intercolonial Railway into Sydney. Early in the present session I called the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways to the great dissatisfaction that existed in the town of Sydney at the existing arrangements. The hon. gentleman will remember that I called for a return of the business done at Sydney, which is the terminus of the Intercolonial system, and the return showed that an enormous amount of business was done at that station.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall have to call the Speaker's attention to the argument which the hon. gentleman is proceeding to make. I think it is exceedingly irregular and inconvenient, because he will be making statements which I ought to comment upon, and which I cannot according to the rules.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the real object of my hon. friend (Mr. Gillies) is to throw out a suggestion to the Minister of Railways and Canals by which this matter may be arranged.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). More than the people of Sydney and North Sydney are interested in the management of the Intercolonial Railway, and if there is going to be a discussion on it, the representatives of other parts of the Island of Cape Breton should have an opportunity of speaking.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he had better put himself in order by making a motion.

Mr. GILLIES. It is only by way of assistance to the Minister of Railways that I intend to make a few suggestions, which I hope will be taken in the spirit in which they are made. I quite agree that the existing system by which the trains run into the town of North Sydney and then go back five or six miles to the junction, and then run around to the town of Sydney, has obtained for a considerable time past. There was not much complaint of that system while the business over the road was comparatively light; but the great development that has taken place in the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway certainly necessitates a reform in that regard. I do not for a moment wish to interfere with any conveniences which the town of North Sydney at present enjoys.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman proposes to conclude with a motion? because if he does not, I think that is hardly regular.

Mr. GILLIES. Well, I will conclude with a motion, Mr. Speaker. The town of North Sydney is a progressive and enterprising town, and I very much admire its people; but the House will at once recognize the great hardship which not only the people are subjected to by the whole train running into North Sydney, and then backing out to the junction again, and running around to Sydney. What I suggest is the adoption of a compromise suggested in the telegram signed by Mr. MacKeen and Mr. Chisholm which the leader of the opposition has read, and which is as follows:

Regarding board of trade resolution re train going into North Sydney advocate equal service from both towns joining at junction, both engines going west if necessary, and on return dividing again at junction. Traffic warrants two parlour cars and two first-class cars.

If that suggestion is acted upon, the convenience now enjoyed by the town of North Sydney and the travelling public going in that direction will not be interfered with, while the convenience of the travelling public going to the town of Sydney and to the great southern districts of Cape Breton, such as Louisbourg, Gabarus, Main à Dieu, Mira, Catalone and the large and important towns and mining districts of Glace Bay, Port Morien, Bridgeport and other adjoining localities, will also be served. Every person travelling in that direction now is bound to go to North Sydney at the risk of losing his connections at Sydney to these points. I really wish to assist the Minister of Railways in every possible way in bringing about the reform now clamoured for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him one question? Do I understand that the proposal is that the junction shall be the terminus of two distinct and separate trains connecting with the main train—one for North Sydney and one for Sydney?

Mr. GILLIES. That will do very well if you cannot do better.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that the proposal? If it is, it is not practically different from one train running from one place and making connection at the junction with another train running to the other place. We could not locate at the junction, because we have not the necessary facilities there.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman is playing with the question, or else he does not understand it at all. I am not Minister of Railways, and it is not my duty to formulate a plan. I bring his notice to the difficulty, and he should find the proper relief and remedy. I do not wish in the slightest degree to interfere with the convenience now enjoyed by the town of North Sydney or to encourage any spirit of rivalry between the two towns; but what must be patent to every person is that the travelling public are subjected to unnecessary inconvenience by the present arrangement, and that it can be got over by the method suggested in this telegram. It is not my purpose to contrast the business done at one town with that done at the other. The terminus of the road is palpably at Sydney. The terminus of the Newfoundland steamers is at North Sydney. Both are important points. The conveniences now enjoyed by North Sydney must not be interfered with, and they cannot be if this suggestion is acted upon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the risk of the hon. gentleman suggesting that I do not know what I am talking about, I would like to ask a further question. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the main train shall run into Sydney, and that a branch connection shall be made at North Sydney; or that the main train shall run into North Sydney and a branch connection be made at Sydney? It has to do one or the other; which does he suggest?

Mr. GILLIES. I do not care how the hon. gentleman may manage it. What I complain of is that the train going to Sydney should not be compelled to run into North Sydney and then back again five miles to the junction before going to Sydney. I say that the travelling public and the mails going to Sydney should not be detained in consequence of the present arrangement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Which of these proposals does the hon. gentleman understand that the telegram points to?

Mr. GILLIES. I am not going to travel outside of the suggestion made here. I ask the Minister of Railways this question: Does he approve of the present arrangement? If he does not, some reform or change is necessary, and the change suggested in this telegram will very fairly, I think, meet the difficulty if it can be worked out. Of course, if it is unworkable, there it ends, and some other system must be devised. But the hon. gentleman must see that the present arrangement is absolutely intolerable, and I think it is incumbent upon the government at once to bring about some change in the way indicated by the Board of Trade of Sydney. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear what the hon. the leader of the opposition—the representative of the county of Cape Breton, in which the town of North Sydney is situated, has to say in regard to this matter.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan, Inverness) will remember that I am a citizen of the town of Sydney. I live there. And I am speaking not only in the interest of the town of Sydney, but in the interest of the great travelling public going to that town.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). And I am going to say a few words in behalf of the great travelling public going to that town. I submit that the travelling public, above all the country people living in the villages and on the farms in eastern Nova Scotia and on the Island of Cape Breton and Prince Edward Island are infinitely more interested in the management of the Intercolonial Railway than the Board of Trade of Sydney and the hon. member for Richmond. It seems to me that since a certain enterprising institution has established itself in the town of Sydney, the board of trade of that town seem to imagine that the whole Island of Cape Breton should revolve around that institution. But I submit that the travelling public are really the parties to be considered by the Intercolonial Railway management in this regard. The hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), having the responsibility on his shoulders of being, in a very great measure, the spokesman for the interest of these two towns and of the whole county of Cape Breton, his views should have greater weight with the House and with the country than the views of the hon. member for Richmond; but he preserves discreet silence. The reason I claim to offer any observation with regard to this matter is that the people of the very large and important county I have the honour to represent have great interest in the management of this road, and I say without hesitation, that the travelling public generally have every interest in having the trains make their calls regularly and continuously upon these two towns. Very few indeed have business in one town that have not something to do with the other. When people leave the various stations of the Intercolonial Railway with some mission to fulfil in the town of North Sydney, in nine cases out of ten their business brings them to Sydney as well, and, of course, the people's railway should carry them and should carry their goods also. It would indeed be a great injustice to these people to deprive them of the accommodation that the Intercolonial Railway thus affords them. Therefore, I hope the railway management will continue to serve these two towns alike. With regard to the lead that the town of Sydney happens now to have of the town of North Sydney, this lead has hitherto always been the other way. The commercial importance of North Sydney for thirty years past has been infinitely superior to that of Sydney. Now that a boom has come to Sydney, it would be unfair to the people of the sister town that they should be deprived of the railway facilities that they are entitled to and that they have always enjoyed.

Mr. GILLIES. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman—

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I say it would be a great injustice to deprive them of the facilities they now enjoy merely because the town of Sydney and its Board of Trade have attained an importance—

Mr. GILLIES. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness)—which was brought to them, Mr. Speaker, not through any merit of their own at all, not through any increase in their enterprise or any change in their public spirit, not through anything done on their behalf by the hon. member for Richmond, though he resides in the town of Sydney. I may say that that town has been for the past fifty years what the Americans call a 'finished town. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) has long resided there; but he never started any of these enterprises, never had any hand in bringing them there, though I am glad to say that he has derived a very comfortable income from the establishment of these enterprises as did also his fellow-townsmen. But that is no reason why the town of Sydney should endeavour to deprive the country people of railway facilities on their own road. I may also say in this connection that, important as the people of Sydney feel just at this moment, equally important may the town of North Sydney feel before twelve months are over; because the prospects are—it is understood all over the country—that a similar enterprise to that in Sydney is going to be established in North Sydney in a short time. The Intercolonial Railway management would then naturally feel they had made a great mistake if they had sidetracked a town of the enterprise and with the prospects of North Sydney. Nor is this merely a question of local trade. Passengers coming across the Atlantic travel largely by the Newfoundland Railway to North Sydney and the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal and all parts of the country. To deprive the town of North Sydney of uninterrupted communication would be a great injustice to these people. As every traveller will understand, these people generally have heavy baggage with them travelling as they do from the various parts of Europe. This is the class of passengers that generally patronize the Intercolonial Railway at North Sydney, and to deprive them of any reasonable railway accommodation would drive them from this route altogether to the great injury of the road and therefore to the people of Canada. So, while the Minister of Railways and Canals and his department might not be doing exactly what would be satisfactory to the Board of Trade of Sydney, that very important institution, or the hon. member for Richmond, I can assure the hon. minister that he will be giving great satisfaction to nine out of ten of the country people, who are most interested in this road after all, if he goes on serving the two towns alike; and not, as the hon. member for Richmond suggests, establish a terminus of the Intercolonial Railway in the woods at the junction, North Sydney, something like that which they had before in a field in the town of Lévis. The present management of the Intercolonial Railway, I hope, are not inclined to go back to that sort of terminus, but will establish the eastern terminus in the now very important town of Sydney, while the western terminus is in the prosperous commercial centre, Montreal. I only hope that the minister will in this respect stand by his guns and give the country people a fair show.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies), expressed the desire to be of some assistance to me in coming to a conclusion on this question, and I have no doubt, he desires to aid me. But he seemed to be unwilling to give me the benefit of his opinion with regard to what the hon. gentleman who sent this telegram proposed:

The board of trade advocates equal service in both towns joining at the junction, both engines going west if necessary, and on return dividing again at the junction.

I asked the hon. gentleman whether he thought it would be possible to make the junction the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway at that point?

Mr. GILLIES. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And he told me that I simply did not know what I was talking about.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me in that regard. I would not be so abrupt.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was not much concerned about the opinion the hon. gentleman expressed, because I know it was not expressed through any personal feeling, but because for the moment he thought I really was not aware of what I was talking about. But the difficulty is this: You have either to make the junction the terminus and break your trains there and have separate engines, one running with a portion of the cars into Sydney, and the other running with the balance into North Sydney, or you have to run the engine and the cars containing the passengers into Sydney, with a branch connection to North Sydney, or run into North Sydney with a branch connection to Sydney. It is utterly impossible to make the junction the terminus. We have not the requisite facilities there, and it would be useless to incur the expense of establishing them, so that we have to make one of the other of these towns as practically the terminus of the line. I wanted my hon. friend to say which of these towns should be made the terminus, and which of them should have the branch connection, but failed to elicit any suggestion from him on the subject.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman knows that the town of Sydney is the terminus of the system. The round-house and the general despatching office are there and it is the end really of the government road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is not my hon. friend rather begging the question because he knows that while it has been named the terminus, yet the trains have always run up to North Sydney and backed down?

Mr. GILLIES. Not always.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only express train which has been running on that line for years—long before I had anything to do with the road—has always run into North Sydney, and then back to the junction and to Sydney, so that while Sydney was in name the terminus, it was placed somewhat at a disadvantage as compared with North Sydney. What was nominally the terminus was really not the terminus in the ordinary sense. My hon. friend has not suggested whether he thinks North Sydney should be the terminus with a branch train to Sydney, or Sydney the terminus, with a branch train to North Sydney. That is the question to solve, and the desire of the department is to solve it, if possible, to the satisfaction of both localities. But if it is impossible to do that, we will have to take the consequences, and solve it as we believe in the best interests of the public and the service.

Mr. GILLIES. My hon. friend from Inverness seeks to put me in a false position, and I do not propose to allow him to do that, without some remonstrance on my part. I stated at the inception of my remarks that I did not for a moment advocate, nor would I advocate, any system or change that would deprive North Sydney of one iota of the railway conveniences which that very enterprising town now enjoys, and has been enjoying for some time past. The hon. gentleman talks as if I were seeking to side-track that town. I distinctly stated all through my remarks that I would not for one moment advocate any system or change in the present system which would deprive North Sydney of one jot of the conveniences it now enjoys. How then does the hon. gentleman dare to get up, here or anywhere else, and seek to create the impression that I was endeavouring to side-track North Sydney when the thought never occurred to me? His motive is too plain, and I would remind him of this fact, that early in this session, I drew his attention to the present unsatisfactory condition of running the whole train into North Sydney, five or six miles away from the junction, and then backing into the junction, and running to Sydney, and he then agreed that the present system was unsatisfactory, and when I said that I was going to bring it to the attention of the House, he promised to join me. But to my great astonishment, I find him going the other way, and seeking to perpetuate that which is admittedly unfair to the great travelling public going to the south of North Sydney. The hon. gentleman thinks that I am interfering with the farmers of Inverness. Why, I am trying to benefit them by the very suggestion I am throwing out. How can the change that we propose and that the Board of Trade of Sydney is advocating, of having the trains running to the town of North Sydney and the town of Sydney direct, be construed as in any possible way militating against the interests of the farmers of Inverness, or any other place in Cape Breton? That idea could only occur to some one like the hon. member for Inverness, who seeks to create an impression that he should be the last man in this House to try and create, and thereby place another hon. gentleman in a false position. I state again that I will not, here or elsewhere, seek in the least degree, to promote a change in the present railway system that would in any way interfere with the town of North Sydney, and my friends there. In that town I have business relations of a professional character. Very many of my political friends are there. I admire the town in many ways, and would do anything in my power to further its interests. I am ready now to join the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Finance in promoting an arrangement that will be satisfactory to both towns, and not in the slightest degree interfere with the conveniences now enjoyed by the town of North Sydney. Let me not be misunderstood. I would not stand here or anywhere else, and for one moment seek to have a scheme brought about that would in any way whatever militate against the interests of the town of North Sydney, or interfere with its present position.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The town of North Sydney is quite satisfied with the present arrangements, and when the hon. member for Richmond, N.S., (Mr. Gillies), wishes to disturb that arrangement, I do not think the town of North Sydney will construe his action as being in line with its own views. If he does not want to interfere with North Sydney, he should let matters alone, because as they now stand—whether the present arrangement be right or wrong is a matter of opinion—North Sydney is quite well satisfied.

Mr. GILLIES. I ask the hon. Minister of Finance if he is satisfied with the present arrangement of running a train into North Sydney from the junction, and then backing from the junction, and running around to Sydney, and if that is fair to the travelling public?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Although I may be radical in some things, there is a wholesome amount of conservatism in my nature; and when I know that the arrangement referred to is exactly the same as has prevailed for many years under the late government and under the present government, then I am bound to believe there must be some reasonable ground for it. It is not exactly conclusive because it has existed for years, but I am conservative enough to believe that when it has existed for years there is probably some fair amount of reason for it. The leader of the opposition, who understands this matter well, has avoided undertaking to speak as an oracle, he realizes the difficulties of the matter as I do. Here are two towns, both thriving, energetic and progressive towns, which happen to be placed, as it were, on the forks. If one was only a little distant from the other on a straight line, it would be a simple matter, but how to reach both of these towns and satisfy them both, I can assure the hon. member for Richmond is a much more difficult problem than he imagines. I think the discussion that has taken place will show the House the wisdom of reserving its opinion, and of leaving the matter to the Minister of Railways and Canals, who I know has been giving it a great deal of attention. There are three things that may be done. You may adopt the junction as the terminus, as has been suggested by the member for Richmond, and from there you may start two branch trains each running five or six miles away into the respective towns. Although that was suggested, I do not think it is a very feasible arrangement. Or you may run your main train into the town of Sydney, then back out and run it into North Sydney; or you may reverse the order and run the train into the town of North Sydney and then back out and run it into the town of Sydney, which is the arrangement which has subsisted for many years, and the arrangement which the minister for the present has adopted. Sydney has been making exceptional progress of late, a great deal of business is going on there, I suppose the bulk of the travellers go to that town. Though the arrangement has been in existence for many years, it may be necessary to revise it. In view of the difficulties which have been made apparent by this discussion, I think we shall do well not to imagine that they can be settled in any off-hand way, but to leave the matter to the Minister of Railways and Canals with the fullest assurance that he has no other object in view than to try to meet the wishes of the travelling public.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). One word in answer to the hon. member for Richmond. He said that I joined him in the justice of side-tracking North Sydney. I leave it to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House whether I did not take issue with him promptly and right on the spot. With regard to the junction, I want to say that the distance between the junction and North Sydney is not six miles, it is only three miles and a half.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). With respect to what has been suggested by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), I do not think the methods he has proposed are sufficiently comprehensive or exhaustive. I do not see why the town of Sydney should not be regarded as the terminus, I think its importance entitles it to be so regarded; and why at the same time North Sydney should not receive substantially the same service as at present. Any one who has travelled over that line, as I have done many times, must see that the present service is by no means satisfactory. The passenger traffic to the town of Sydney in the summer time is very large, an enormous number of American tourists go over that line and make their headquarters at the new hotel at Sydney. All these people have to be conveyed from the terminus to North Sydney, then from North Sydney back to the terminus and into Sydney. It makes their arrival at Sydney half an hour or three-quarters of an hour later than it otherwise would be. There should not be a tremendous difficulty in the Minister of Railways and Canals devising some means by which the town of North Sydney may have the same service that it has at present, or an equally good service, by having an engine and a train to run into North Sydney, and let the main train run to the terminus.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will the hon. gentleman guarantee that that will be acceptable to North Sydney?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not guarantee anything about it; but I think the people of North Sydney will find the service reasonable and satisfactory, if the ordinary main traffic proceeds over the road to its terminus. The Minister of Finance says that he is so conservative that he does not want to change the present arrangement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I did not say that, I said that I was always willing to consider reasons.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He said he had a large element of conservatism in his character, and did not think it was worth while to make any change, it had existed so many years, and because it had existed under the late government. Very likely the fact that it had existed under the late government would commend itself to him as a good service. But, I may remind him of the fact that a long continued state of affairs has not in the past always commended itself to him as one that could not be changed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is not quoting me fairly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not desire to quote the hon. gentleman unfairly, I think I have stated fairly the substance of his remarks. Now with regard to what the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) said, I take it for granted that the Board of Trade at Sydney will at once disband after his sarcastic references to them. He has seen fit to sneer at the Board of Trade of Sydney as a body that is entirely beneath the notice of any reasonable man. Now, I happen to know some of those gentlemen who compose the Board of Trade at Sydney, and all I have to say about them is that they are gentlemen of the very highest standing in their respective professions and business in the county of Cape Breton.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). How much traffic do they supply the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not talking about the traffic they supply; I imagine any one of them supplies a good deal more traffic than the hon. member for Inverness does.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I am speaking for the people of Inverness, not for the board of trade.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is not the point. The point in question is whether these are representative men in the community, and whether their opinion is worth something, whether they are men who may have reasonable ideas about matters of this kind. I know some of these gentlemen in Sydney, and I do not think that they are deserving of the sneers of the hon. member for Inverness or of any other gentleman in this House. They are men, every one of them, so far as I am acquainted with them, who are well known in the community, men of good judgment, representative men. I venture to think that a memorial coming from these gentlemen is as deserving of respect at the hands of the government as a memorial from any board of trade of any other town of similar size in Canada. Therefore, I think the hon. member for Inverness is not doing himself justice when, repeatedly through his speech, he undertook to sneer at these men as if their voice should have no weight in regard to this matter.

I admit that the problem that lies before the Minister of Railways and Canals may not be very easy of solution, but I think that he might very easily, on the lines I have suggested, find some method of dealing with this matter so as to put the service of the town of Sydney on a satisfactory basis, and still render the service to North Sydney not less satisfactory than it is at present. I, for one, would be the last person to suggest that North Sydney should not have every consideration at the hands of the government. As has been said by the member for Inverness, it is a very progressive town, and is likely in the future to develop more rapidly than in the past. But still we must have some recognized terminus on this line; if we have a recognized terminus it is right that the train should run to that terminus, without neglecting this branch in any way.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I have been considerably perplexed this afternoon. In the first place I look across the floor and I see on the troubled countenance of the Minister of Railways and Canals some great depression. He moves from seat to seat, he is unable to answer the questions that are brought up. He simply turns round and asks the member for Richmond, What would you do? What have you to recommend? Well, surely, that is not the way the Minister of Railways and Canals usually does. He does not generally come to the member for Richmond and ask for his opinion and guidance as to the conduct of the Department of Railways and Canals. He runs it himself. The hon. member says that it would be better run if he would do that, but he will not do it, and therefore, the road is badly run. Then, along comes the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan), and if ever a man slid around a question without coming to a conclusion it was the hon. member for Inverness. Why, Sir, he had nothing but nasty words to say of the board of trade of the town of Sydney, and those were the only things he did say. He asks what business they do, what traffic they give to the road. I presume the board of trade is representative of the mercantile, manufacturing and industrial branch of the community that furnishes business to the railway, and that the town of Sydney Board of Trade is no exception to all the boards of trade throughout the Dominion. I would therefore, say, off-hand, that if the board of trade is representative of the commerce and trade of the community its views should be heard. What is the difficulty? The next one who comes along is the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who, in order to smooth things over tells us that although in some things he is quite radical, in other matters he is exceedingly conservative, and that in this particular matter, which has existed for a number of years, he is very conservative, and he proposes that the condition of affairs shall exist for a number of years longer, that is, that North Sydney shall be the terminus, while the town of Sydney is the place that is to be accommodated. He says there are great difficulties. Well, as has been asked by the hon. senior member for Halifax: What is the difficulty, anyway? The difficulty, to my mind, seems to be that there is too much business. We are growing too much in that part of the Dominion. There is too much traffic, too much freight, too many passengers, and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals does not know what to do about it. I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that he should meet the emergency by supplying the wants of the community. That is a general proposition. If there are twice as many or four times as many passengers, or ten times as many passengers as there formerly were going into this place, if there are four times, or ten times as much freight as formerly the duty of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is to meet the emergency and supply the wants of the community instead of having boards of trade and individuals complaining that this great Intercolonial Railway which has cost so much money, which we are told, has the finest appliances, the finest road-bed, and all the necessary terminal facilities that railways should have, that, in short, is in a state of perfection, is unable to supply the wants of the community. There are not as many people who have grievances as there were two, three or four years ago, but there are five times as many people who have grievances at the present time. I think if we were to make some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House and see many who, I think, could accomplish the work, Minister of Railways for a short time, these difficulties would disappear and the grievances would be remedied.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Take it yourself.

Mr. WALLACE. No, I would not take it myself. I am not looking for any position, but I see a score of men who would not allow themselves to be troubled by this question for one day, but who would be able to solve the problem and give accommodation to the people of Sydney and of North Sydney—

Mr. GIBSON. You would go on strike.

Mr. WALLACE. They would remedy the difficulties and complaints which seem to be such a stumbling block in the way of the government who do not know what to do. I see the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson); I know he would like the chance of tackling that job and straightening it out.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. GIBSON. I would not go out on strike.

Mr. WALLACE. I am afraid we could not let him have it though.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) is not before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. That is where you make a mistake, Mr. Speaker, because he was throwing across some remarks to me which I have to notice, and he was thereby putting himself before the House. I imagine that he would want to put himself in the position of Minister of Railways and Canals, but we cannot put him there just now. Here is a question of more business, of more travel, and here is a railway that is running at a loss. Here is a chance of doing a good business. These people pay their way, they pay their freight and passenger rates, they want better facilities; what is the difficulty in the way of the government supplying the wants of the community? Every railway in the country, when business grows, meets the public demand whether it be in regard to freight or passenger traffic, and why should not our Intercolonial Railway do the same?

Motion (Sir Charles Tupper) to adjourn, negatived.

EMERGENCY RATION.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Before you proceed with the Orders of the Day, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) if he has caused to be put on the Table of the House the analysis made by Dr. Ruttan, of McGill University, which, I think, was promised the other day.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The report of the analysis was sent to the department yesterday and the original papers were sent to the committee. I spoke to the deputy before I came in here and asked him to have the copies made which I promised to lay on the Table of the House. He told me that the originals had been sent over to the committee. They are there now. If it is possible to get these papers, we will be able to copy them. The same thing happened in the portunity of making copies before they were subjected to the test at Kingston. The original papers are there. They were required there, and we did not have an opportunity of making copies before they were sent to the committee. I am very anxious to lay the papers on the Table of the House, but it seems to me we could get them quite as expeditiously from the committee as to lay them on the Table here. If I can get the originals and have them copied, I shall be very glad to do so.

NORTH-WEST GRAIN COMMISSION.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) if the report of the grain commission has been brought down, and if so, if it is being printed?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It seems to me that it has been brought down. I could not say for certain, but it seems to me that it has. I will inquire.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he is in a position to make a statement to the House as to the position of affairs in British Columbia. I understood that he intimated that he would be in a position at an early day to state what the government propose to do in regard to the condition of affairs in British Columbia?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry to say that I am not to-day in a position to make a statement to the House. I hope to be in a position to do it to-morrow, although I cannot say for certain.

PRIVATE COURTNEY, 'A' BATTERY.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) can give me the promised answer to the question I put the day before yesterday.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The hon. gentleman the day before yesterday made an inquiry which was repeated yesterday, as to the case of Corporal Courtney, from whom the stripes were taken for some alleged act of insubordination. On June 18—the day before the hon. gentleman mentioned the matter in the House—it was brought to my notice, and I sent a memorandum to the deputy minister to ask the military branch to have a report made upon this case and all the papers sent forward. They have not yet come, but there is the report, dated June 15, in the department, from Lt.-Col. F. G. Stone, Inspector General of Artillery, an Imperial officer:

There are no grounds for considering that Corporal Courtney was detailed for duty which he was justified in objecting to perform for conscientious motives.

When I get the further information and papers, I will be happy to bring them down.

MAIL DELIVERY AT DARTMOUTH AND HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I bring to the attention of the Postmaster General the question of establishing a letter carrier delivery in the town of Dartmouth. That town is connected with Halifax by a ten-minute ferry service, it has a population between 7,000 and 8,000, and it is, to all intents and purposes, a part of the city of Halifax. I do not know whether or not any representations on the subject have been made to the Postmaster General, but, if not, I will take this opportunity of doing so. I may further mention, that so far as the postal delivery in the city of Halifax is concerned, the attention of the Postmaster General might be directed to whether or not the number of letter carriers should be increased. Looking at the civil service list of 1898—and I do not think there has been any change—I observe that the city of Halifax has seventeen letter carriers, and the city of St. John has twenty-one. I do not suggest at all that St. John has too many, but I do suggest that Halifax has too few, and I understand that a good deal of delay has taken place in Halifax on account of the insufficient number of letter carriers. From the standpoint of revenue, the Postmaster General will see that the total post office revenue at Halifax from all sources is $80,084.94, whereas, in St. John, which has a larger number of letter carriers, the total postal revenue is $66,985.46. As I said, I am not objecting to the number which are employed in the city of St. John, because I have no doubt there are no more there than are actually necessary, but I do think the Postmaster General should seriously take into consideration the question of increasing the number of letter carriers in the city of Halifax. This, as well as the matter of mail delivery in Dartmouth, will, I hope, have the attention of the minister at his very earliest convenience.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I am not able to do more than to tell my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that the suggestions he has made will receive careful consideration. I am not in a position to admit whether or not either of these places is sufficiently or otherwise supplied with letter carriers, but I might say that since the comparison is made with the city of St. John, I can recall a circumstance which would, perhaps, in some way be negatively satisfactory if it is thought that St. John is receiving any undue favours.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not suggest that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not implying that my hon. friend suggests that, but I have the impression in my mind that the inspector some time ago stated that the staff in connection with St. John had been at one time more than the legitimate needs required. Perhaps I am not correctly remembering what was in that report. However, I will give the matter careful consideration.

DUTY ON GRANITE.

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the attention of the Minister of Finance, of the government, and of the House, to a matter which seriously concerns a very large and important industry in the Dominion of Canada. It is a well known fact that large deposits of granite are found in various portions of Canada, and especially in the eastern townships of the province of Quebec. A large number of quarries have been in operation there, and until the preferential tariff—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Moore) cannot enter into a discussion at this stage. The House will be moved into Committee of Supply shortly, and then it will be competent for him to proceed with his remarks.

SUPPLY—TAXATION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LAND GRANTS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). The matter I have to bring before the House this afternoon is one of the very greatest interest to the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I apprehend that before I conclude there will be the most complete unanimity with regard to the motion I have to offer. I entertain little doubt but that both sides of this House will heartily endorse the motion which I shall propose. While it is a motion going into supply, nevertheless, it is one that ought certainly to be accepted by the government, and for that I have a precedent set by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), who moved, on going into supply, with reference to the preferential tariff, and whose motion was accepted by the government. I believe I shall be able to satisfy the House that my motion is one that should commend itself to the good sense of the hon. gentlemen, and to the good sense of the country. I shall read the motion, because it is well that each member should be seized of the principles contained in it, so that they may be able to follow in detail the argument which, I will be obliged to offer in order to establish my case. I ask hon. gentlemen to bear with me as patiently as possible while I make my argument. I am not a lawyer; I have had no legal training, and as the arguments which are necessary may to some extent partake of a legal nature, I trust that the members will deal with me in that matter as kindly as possible. The motion which I propose, seconded by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is as follows:

That clause 16 of the contract between Her Majesty and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, ratified by the parliament of Canada on the fifteenth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, and set out in the schedule to chapter 1 of the statutes of one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, provides as follows: 'The Canadian Pacific Railway, and all stations and station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion, or by any province hereinafter established, or by any municipal corporation therein; and the lands of the company, in the North-west Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall also be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.'

That in answer to an interpellation in parliament on the 12th day of February, 1900, as to the date of termination of the said period of exemption from taxation, it was stated on behalf of the government that: 'This is a matter of legal opinion, which, if disputed, can only be settled by a judicial decision.'

That progress in the North-west is enormously handicapped by the exemption from taxation of so vast a quantity of land as has been set apart for the company, and would be seriously paralysed should the tax exemption be indefinitely continued.

That it appears from the debates which occurred when the said contract was before parliament, and from the wording of the Act itself, that the exemption was intended to cover a period of not more than twenty years from the date of the passing of the said Act, and that it was so understood by the railway company, which, on the conclusion of the bargain, raised $25,000,000 on the security of the said land grant.

That for the foregoing reasons, in the opinion of this House, the period of exemption from taxation of the said land grant expires on the 16th of February, 1901, and that all such lands should be patented to the said railway company by that date, inasmuch as it is impossible to collect taxes from such lands until they are patented.

If hon. members refer to the notice of motion I gave on June 13, they will observe that its conclusion is a little different. The conclusion of the motion of which I gave notice is as follows:

That for the foregoing reasons, in the opinion of this House, the lands covered by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will become subject to taxation on the 15th of February, 1901, and that all such lands should be patented to the said railway company of that date, so that they may become subject to taxation as soon as the exemption contemplated by parliament at the passing of the Act has expired.

I have said on February 16, because the date of the contract was the 15th of February, 1881. Now, it has been suggested that inasmuch as I state that the lands should be patented by that date, this might imply a doubt in my mind as to whether the exemption expires at the end of the twenty years. The reason I state that they should be patented by that date is this: Lands that are not patented cannot be taxed; they belong to the Crown, and you cannot tax the Crown. A patent for land must be issued and the land must belong to somebody before it can be taxed. The idea I had in view was that the patents should issue so that these lands could be taxable, and I make that clear when I say:

Inasmuch as it is impossible to collect taxes from such lands until they are patented.

I may say that when I came to Ottawa at the opening of the session I introduced a Bill for the purpose of interpreting the clause which I have read referring to the exemption period. It was among the public Bills and Orders, but inasmuch as the order of public Bills and Orders was only reached one evening during the entire session, and then I think after nine o'clock, and my seconder was absent from the House, I did not feel that it was desirable to go on with my Bill. So that I am forced in this way to bring before the House this matter which is one of supreme importance to the people of the North-west.

This clause in the contract provides that the exemption period shall extend for 'twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown;' and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company interpret 'the grant thereof from the Crown' to mean the issue of the patent. Up to the present time, so far as my knowledge goes, the company have never applied for a patent for a single acre of that immense land grant of 25,000,000 acres. The House will see that this means exemption from taxation in perpetuity, but the moment they sell any lands to intending settlers they apply for the patent, and the patent issues to the intending settler, who is thenceforward responsible for paying taxes on the land. Suppose you gave the company the patent even to-day—and it is now about nineteen years since the ratification of the contract—they contend that the exemption period extends for twenty years from the issue of the patent, so that according to that contention the exemption period would extend for twenty years from the present time. Now, parliament made a clear and distinct bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I do not think there was a man—including even the distinguished leader of the opposition, who was Minister of Railways in the government of the late Sir John Macdonald and who put this contract through parliament—who for a moment thought that the twenty years period would extend beyond twenty years from the date of the ratification of the contract; and I think I shall be able to prove to a demonstration, from the debates which occurred when that contract was before parliament, that I am absolutely correct in saying so. Inasmuch as this twenty-year period will expire on the morning of February 16, 1901, it is extremely desirable that this parliament should make a declaration on this point, which would make it perfectly clear to the people of the North-west, the people of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, that the tax exemption shall expire twenty years from the date on which the company obtained the land grant. That is particularly desirable because of this consideration. All who have visited the North-west know how sparsely it is settled. In many places you can almost fire a bullet from a rifle without reaching your next neighbour. These people are going on improving their lands and by doing so they are increasing the value of the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is not fair that they should bear the entire burden of taxation to maintain schools, erect bridges and all other municipal improvements. It is only fair that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should bear its share of this burden after the twenty-year period has expired.

I do not wish to say anything offensive to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; but I want to point out that the parliament of Canada gave to that company $25,000,000 in cash, $35,000,000 of completed railroad and 25,000,000 acres of land, and I shall be able to prove from the company's own reports that these lands are very valuable. Assuming them to be worth two dollars an acre, we gave to that company a value of $100,000,000, whereas the estimated cost of the road, according to the company itself was $81,500,000 plus $10,000,000 for equipment. So that the Dominion of Canada gave to the company in cash, in completed road, and in land, far more than the entire value of the road itself; and is it to be said in this year of grace 1900, that this parliament of Canada shall grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company exemption from taxation in perpetuity on this vast land grant? I say that the time has come when parliament must declare itself on this question, and say when this exemption period shall lapse. If there is an election in the fall, another parliament will be here, which may not be prepared to take up this question, and I think it is desirable that it should be settled right here and now. If this motion is adopted, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will understand that this parliament intends to stand by the bargain which was made nearly twenty years ago, and to see that those lands become taxable.

Canada has contributed to railroad corporations in the way of subsidies about $198,000,000 in cash and about 40,000,000 acres of land, exclusive of what has been given in British Columbia.

And surely these railway companies, which have got these vast subsidies, should bear their share of the burden of taxation. There are the other railway companies which have obtained lands in the North-west Territories, and they have been able to evade the taxation by not taking out the patents for their land, although there is no exemption granted by parliament. They decline to take out their patents for their land, but the land is set aside for them by the government, and until they chose to take out patents the entire burden of taxation falls upon the settlers in that rather sparsely settled country.

The point is that the Canadian Pacific Railway get their land set apart for them. They apply to the government, and the government sets apart a large section of land for the benefit of the company, but the company does not take out the patents. There were some questions asked with regard to this matter some years ago, and in order to show the position the government has taken, I will ask the House to bear with me while I read the very brief answers given in one or two cases.

The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), on the 31st of August, 1896, asked :

What amount of land in the North-west Territories earned by the Canadian Pacific Railway on account of grant, has not yet been transferred to that company? If any land so earned has not been transferred, why has it not been, and when will it be?

To this the right hon. the Prime Minister replied :

The Canadian Pacific Railway is still engaged in the selection of the lands earned by the construction of its road. The original land grant was 25,000,000 acres, reduced by 6,793,000 acres under the operation of the Act 49 Vic., chap 9. Of the 80,206,986 acres of which the company were still entitled after the settlement under this Act, 13,844,871 acres have already been selected—

Thus, on the 31st of August, 1896, the Prime Minister informed the House that 13,844,871 acres had been selected, and he went on to say :

—and the company and the government are together prosecuting the work of completing the company's land grant as rapidly as circumstances will permit. No specific portion of the company's land grant is, under the statute, to be found in the North-west Territories, but 11,388,187 acres of the selections already made by the company are situated in the Territories. Only a small percentage of the land in the Territories has been patented to the company or their nominees.

Only a very small portion has been patented to the company or its nominees, and of the portion patented it has all been patented to the company's nominees with the exception of a very small amount patented to the company itself.

In 1898, 13,824,871 acres had been selected by the company, and these lands now belong to the company and should be taxable.

Mr. RICHARDSON.

On the 14th of September, the hon. member for Alberta asked this question :

What amount of land has been granted from the Crown to the Canadian Pacific Railway? When was the grant made?

To this the acting minister (Mr. Dobell) replied :

The original area of land granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway, under the provisions of the Act 44 Vic., chap. 1, was 25,000,000 acres, which was reduced by 6,793,014 acres under the provisions of the Act 49 Vic., chap. 9. 2. The date of the original grant was February 15—

The hon. minister used the word 'grant,' and I want the House to remember that that word is very important and may become a historic one, if this matter is not settled by parliament now.

—February 15, 1881, being the day upon which the Act was assented to by the Governor General, and the statute under which the reduction was made was assented to on June 2, 1896. The area for which letters patent have issued to the company, or the company's assignees, up to the end of the month of August of this year, is 1,359,727 acres.

You see, Mr. Speaker, that although in 1881, I think it was, we gave this immense land grant to the company, in September, 1896, patents were only issued for 1,359,727 acres.

These patents are issued usually from the Crown direct to the people to whom the company dispose of the land, and before patent can issue, the mortgage created by the Act 51 Vic., chap. 32, has to be paid for in so far as it affects the land.

When parliament gave the Canadian Pacific Railway this immense land grant of 25,000,000 acres, the Canadian Pacific Railway immediately raised on that grant $25,000,000 in land grant bonds, but the government held a mortgage on all of it for the purpose of seeing that the company fulfilled the conditions of its bargain, so that you see this mortgage covering the entire land grant has to be arranged for when a patent is issued to any single individual for any portion of the grant. Let me read next a reply to a series of questions which I myself asked on the 12th of February, 1900 :

1. How much land has been voted by the Dominion parliament to the Canadian Pacific Railway as a subsidy in connection with the construction of the company's main line and branch lines (the Manitoba South-western and Glenboro' roads being included in the branches)?

2. What proportion of the land subsidies so voted has been allotted by the government?

3. At what dates were the several allotments made?

4. Were the allotments made by the government and the lands set apart for the uses of the company immediately or shortly after the lands were selected by the company? If not, what periods were allowed to elapse between the selection and the allotment of the various land subsidies or portions thereof?

5. For what proportion of the land subsidies earned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have patents been issued by the Crown?

6. Under the terms of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's charter from the government, when will the first allotment of land made to the company by the government become amenable to taxation for school and municipal purposes?

I want the House to mark the answer given by the Minister of the Interior :

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. The original land subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on account of its main line was 25,000,000 acres, but it was subsequently reduced to 18,206,986 acres. The land subsidy on account of branches, including the branches named in the question, amounted to 2,983,680 acres, making a total of 21,190,666 acres of land for the main line and branches.

Then he said in reply to questions 2, 3, and 4:

It is not possible—

I cannot understand why it was not possible because the questions are very plain.

2, 3 and 4. It is not possible to give categorical answers to the 2nd, 3rd and 4th questions, on account of the way in which the questions are framed, but the following information appears to cover the points sought to be brought out by the questions.

The Prime Minister told us in 1896 in answer to my hon. friend from Alberta, that the company had selected some 14,644,871 acres, but now we are told that the railway company only indicated the tract or belt in which it cared to select its land.

The railway company indicated between 1881 and 1891 the tracts or belts within which it agreed to select 14,644,871 acres on account of the land subsidy in connection with the main line.

You see that the company at first may not have seen how it was able to evade the law in this matter and may have actually made the selection of some 14,000,000 acres, but now we find that between 1881 and 1891 they only 'indicated where it would select its land.' This land is set apart for the company, nobody else can touch an acre of it without the company's permission, and the company can take out patents for it just when it likes. That is how the Canadian Pacific Railway seek to evade the terms of the contract so that it may be able to have exemption from taxation in perpetuity. I read further from the answer :

In February, 1891, the company agreed to select from the lands reserved for the purpose along the international boundary 1,000,000 acres of the land subsidy in connection with the branch known as the Manitoba and South-western Colonization Railway.

In February, 1891, the company agreed to select. That means clearly that they had not actually selected. Here were 1,000,000 acres of land in South-western Manitoba which, according to its own reports, the company valued between $4 and $5 per acre, as I will show later on, on which it pays no taxes and which it only agreed to select and did not select.

The company has selected the lands to which it is entitled on account of what is known as the Pipestone branch. Nothing has been done in the direction of selecting the lands to which the company is entitled on account of the Glenboro', or as it is known in the department, the Souris branch. The government, from time to time as the land grant was earned, set apart tracts of land out of which the selection was to be made. A question was raised as to whether or not the land comprised in the tracts so set apart was 'fairly fit for settlement,' and this question of the selection of the balance of the land subsidy is still the subject of correspondence between the department and the company. 5. Up to the end of January last patents had issued covering an area of 1,649,880 acres. 6. this is a matter of legal opinion, which, if disputed, can only be settled by a judicial decision.

That makes it clear that the railway company disputes that point, and we are told by a member of the government that it can only be settled by a judicial decision. I claim, and I think I can make it abundantly clear from the extracts I propose to read from the speeches of members of the government that made this contract and members of the House of that day, that the period of exemption will expire on February 16, 1901. I contend that this parliament ought to interpret the Act, this parliament ought to say that the twenty years period expires at that time, and not leave it to a judicial decision. I hold in my hand Hansard of the session of 1880-1, volume 1, in which is contained the debate on the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, as well as the contract itself. In order to impress my argument in connection with the word 'grant,' I will read a few brief extracts from the contract itself. Subsection b of section 9, says :

Upon the construction of any portion of the railway hereby contracted for, not less than twenty miles in length, and the completion thereof, so as to admit of the running of regular trains thereon, together with such equipment thereof as shall be required for the traffic thereon, the government shall pay and grant to the company the money, and land subsidies applicable thereto.

'The government shall pay and grant' these subsidies. Surely that is distinct. And section 16 of the contract provides :

And the lands of the company in the Northwest Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall also be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

And it will be observed that the other section says that the lands shall be granted as they are earned. As I have said, the grant was made available to the company at once, because the company issued $25,000,000 in land grant bonds as security, and, for all practical purposes, that land grant has been as much available to the company and for the uses of the company, as it would have been if they had held a patent for it themselves. Clause 10 of the contract reads :

In further consideration of the premises, the government shall also grant to the company the lands required for the road-bed of the railway, and for its stations, station grounds, workshops, dock ground and water frontage at the termini on navigable waters, buildings, yards, and other appurtenances required for the convenient and effectual construction and working of the railway, in so far as such land shall be vested in the government.

Clause 14 reads :

The company shall have the right, from time to time, to lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main line of railway, to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion. Provided always, that before commencing any branch they shall first deposit a map and plan of such branch in the Department of Railways. And the government shall grant to the company the lands—

The same word 'grant' that is used within the contract.

—required for the road-bed of such branches, and for the stations, station grounds, buildings, workshops, yards, and other appurtenances requisite for the efficient construction and working of such branches, in so far as such lands are vested in the government.

Then there is clause 16, which is the one I have already read, and which it is unnecessary for me to read now, as it appears in my motion. Clause 17 reads :

The company shall be authorized by their Act of incorporation to issue bonds, secured upon the land granted and to be granted to the company.

This issue is to be for $25,000,000, and it is provided :

And should the company make such issue of land grant bonds, then they shall deposit them in the hands of the government; and the government shall retain and hold one-fifth of such bonds as security—

That is the mortgage I referred to—

—for the due performance of the present contract, in respect of the maintenance and continuous working of the railway by the company as herein agreed for ten years after the completion thereof, and the remaining $20,000,000 of such bonds shall be dealt with as hereinafter provided.

Clause 18 reads :

The company shall be entitled to receive from the government out of the proceeds of the said land grant bonds, the same number of dollars as the number of acres of the land subsidy which shall then have been earned by them, less one-fifth thereof, that is to say, if the bonds are sold at par, but if they are sold at less than par, then a deduction shall be made therefrom corresponding to discount at which such bonds are sold.

Clause 20 :

If the company should not issue such land grant bonds, then the government shall retain from out of each grant to be made, from time to time, every fifth section of the lands hereby agreed to be granted, such lands to be so retained as security for the purposes and for the length of time mentioned in section 18 hereof. And such lands may be sold in such manner and at such prices as shall be agreed upon between the government and the company, and in that case the price thereof shall be paid to and held by the government for the same period, and for the same purposes as the land itself, the government paying 4 per cent per annum interest thereon. And other securities satisfactory to the government may be substituted for such lands or money by agreement with the government.

So, the House will see that the government had an arrangement with the company by which they could deal with the entire land grant in the way of borrowing money and so on. The entire land grant was made available to the company the moment the contract was ratified; because, as I have stated, they proceeded to borrow $25,000,000 upon it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson), said he was going to make an argument on the use of the word 'grant' in the other sections.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The word 'grant' meant that as the land was earned, it should be granted to the company. The words used in clause 16 are :

Shall be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

I take the word 'grant' to mean not the issue of the patent, but making available to the company these lands for the use of the company. The word 'grant' is used all through the contract, and it clearly says that as the land is earned, the government shall grant it to the company—it does not say the government shall issue the patent. The point I want to establish is that the word 'grant' does not mean the issue of the patent. When you hand over any asset to a person or make it available to him for any purpose which he chooses, you then grant it to him. Now, I propose next to give some extracts from the remarks of hon. gentlemen who were then members of the government or private members of the House. The first extract I shall give is from the speech of the distinguished leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), who introduced the Bill and pushed it through parliament with his accustomed vigour. I read from page 71, as follows :—

The United States government has given great land grants to railways under what is called the head grant system, and in one case a company was authorized to select any part of the public lands of Texas, that magnificent country that has excited the admiration of hon. gentlemen opposite, the most beautiful and fertile areas, without any hindrance or any responsibility whatever. The company received twenty sections of 640 acres each of the unappropriated lands of the state for each mile of railroad which has been, or may hereafter be constructed, pursuant to the Act of 1870. The said company, its successors and assigns, to have the right to locate the said lands as head rights certificates, without the necessity of alternating the sections; the said lands and certificates to be released from all county, state, municipal and other taxes for a period of twenty-five years. The hon. gentleman was arguing that in the United States they not only gave exemption from taxation for twenty years, but for twenty-five years. Therefore, the idea he had in his mind, no doubt, was to show by comparison that the bargain which parliament was making with the Canadian Pacific Railway was a much better one than the American government was accustomed to make with railroads there. Remark these words :

The moment our lands, however, are sold they become liable to taxation.

I may say that when that contract went through parliament it was never anticipated that the land granted to the company would remain in the hands of the company for any lengthened period ; it was anticipated there would be such a boom in that country that the entire land grant would be sold before the expiration of twenty years, and that is why the clause was put in, 'until either sold or occupied.' That was supposed to be a remarkable saving clause. If it had read, 'shall be exempt for twenty years from the date of the contract,' why, parliament, according to the debate, would have held up its hands in horror, and would not have permitted such a clause at all. But the hon. gentleman evidently took it for granted that in ten years or so most of these lands would be sold and occupied, and would be paying taxes for the maintenance of government and for municipal improvements. I continue reading from Sir Charles Tupper's speech :

The moment our lands, however, are sold they become liable to taxation. Under the United States law they remain free for twenty-five years after coming into the hands of private purchasers. There is nothing of the kind here. The moment our lands are utilized or sold, and the company cannot afford to keep them from settlement, which will add more to the value of the remainder than is possible in any other way, they fall under taxation.

These words show clearly what interpretation the present leader of the opposition placed upon that clause when he made the speech from which I quote.

The next quotation I wish to make is from the speech of the Hon. Edward Blake, that distinguished leader of the Liberal party at that time ; and I may say to the House that it is worth the while of every member to read the debates that occurred upon this question, and to read what that great tribune of the people, Edward Blake, had to say, and to see the fight he made against this clause, and against the other clauses in the contract which the editor of the Globe recently pronounced to be 'the most insane contract ever perpetrated by a free people.' Here is what Mr. Blake said :

They have freedom to reject land they deem not fairly fit for settlement and to choose the best land elsewhere. They have perpetual exemption from taxation of their enormous property, a most monstrous provision, in my opinion. Why, this monstrosity is not to last merely 20 years, which is to be the period of bondage in other respects, but it is to last for ever.

Remark these words, 'perpetual exemption from taxation of their enormous property, a most monstrous provision.' 'Why, this monstrosity is not to last merely twenty years.' So you see that Mr. Blake had in his mind that this state of bondage was already monstrous if it lasted only twenty years. So we have in his own words his view of that contract. Let me read for the benefit of the House another extract from Mr. Blake's speech, one that does not relate altogether to the question of taxation, but it shows that Mr. Blake had a prophetic vision of what would happen in the North-west Territories. I quote his language because he could speak with so much greater effect than probably any living Canadian. He took the side of the people so strongly that I want the people of the North-west and everybody else to see what his opinion was with regard to that contract:

The hon. gentleman says, perhaps, it does look awkward at first sight ; but if the government, who own the lands, were to build the railway the lands would not have been subject to taxation, and why should they be when they are placed in the hands of the syndicate. It does seem to me that because the government, in the interests of the country, and for the public good, could construct the railway, the syndicate, who are getting the bargain to which I have referred, should have this privilege. Why, it is turning the syndicate into the government—putting them in their places to a considerable extent. But, Sir, I say there is a difference between a private interest and the public interests. With the government in possession of those lands, do you suppose they would delay a day in selling them because they are exempt from taxation ? Do you suppose that the possession of these lands, free from taxation would render them less earnest or less eager to sell ? Not so. Their interest would be only to sell, and to sell rapidly. But the interest of the syndicate is to make as much money as they can, and more money is to be made by delaying than by selling, their interest will be to delay, and to have as little expense as possible meantime. All their lands are exempted from taxation in the North-west Territories for a generation to come. What a discouragement this is to the settlers along the line of railway, to those who are settled on the homesteads, and pre-emptions alternating with those blocks of land which are to be the property of the syndicate. We know the result of exemption from taxation. We saw it on a small scale in the city of Toronto not long ago. Our lawns there were exempted from taxation because it was supposed that it was a good thing, for the public, that there should be these open spaces in the city. Happily the exemption has now been removed ; the proprietors of these lawns have to pay taxes upon them. The result is that they are putting them in the market. They said to themselves before : 'We have nice lawns ; we enjoy them very much ; they are gradually increasing in value as other property in Toronto becomes more valuable, and we are paying no taxes. Other persons who are operating in lands are paying heavy taxes ; we turn our land into lawns, we need pay no taxes, and we can afford to wait a long time, and make our profits free from taxes.' That is the effect on a small scale, upon a man's mind, of exemption from taxation. That on a gigantic scale will be the effect of exemption on the syndicate who can hold their lands from year to year for twenty years, without any drawback in the way of taxes. And for that the progress of this country is to be interfered with. There can be no greater obstacle to the progress of that country by the encouragement of other settlers than that large spaces of unoccupied lands should alternate with settlers' farms. We, who are familiar with the early settlement of this country, all know the effect upon farmers holding even smaller areas—farms of 100 or 200 acres—by the intervention of unoccupied spaces between such farms; we know that the farmer's disadvantages are trebled because there is not continuous settlement; he lacks the joint fencing, the road work and the neighbour's assistance, and all those other things which increase his capacity for making his land valuable and productive. Now, add to the difficulty which exists in that respect, which the largeness of that area will enhance, at any rate, in a large degree, the fact that there is no power to impose municipal taxation on 25,000,000 acres of the choicest lands, those nearest to the railway, and you place a bar to progress and render it impossible to get over the difficulty; you say that the cost of roads and bridges, school and other municipal taxes will have to be imposed on the settlers, to enable the worthy syndicate to hold their lands until the reduced labours of those settlers shall have sufficiently increased the unoccupied areas in value to induce the millionaires, the holders of the lawns of the North-west to turn them into money. Why, Sir, it was only last year in the discussion of this subject when we objected to the speculator holding land, when we said to the hon. First Minister that settlement would be impeded by areas of land being held by persons who were not bound by conditions of settlement, that he answered us by this very argument. He said: 'They will be compelled to sell and settle because they will be taxed into it. Municipal taxes will compel them to do it, and therefore, your fears are void.' That was his answer to our argument; but where is that answer in the face of this contract? As to the 25,000,000 of the choicest land next to the railway, the only thing the hon. gentleman could bring forward to prove that great injury would not be done by not assigning conditions of settlement, is removed in favour of this unfortunate syndicate. I say, Sir, that if they are going to establish an immigration agency, it would probably be to their interest to see the free grants settled, and they could afford to hold over a very large area of their territory until the labour and industry of the free grant settlers had made the roads and bridges and improved their farms, and thus made their untaxed domain valuable.

The next quotation I will read is from the speech delivered by Sir Hector Langevin, then Minister of Public Works in Sir John A. Macdonald's cabinet. I would call particular attention to at least one sentence in his speech. Mr. Langevin, as he was at that time, said:

The next point the hon. gentleman alluded to was this: He says we have exempted the lands of the company from taxation for twenty years. Well, in the same way as he finds fault with our scheme by saying we are giving too much money away, I reply to him, if the lands are to be taxed, you must consider at once what would be the result. The company, which has stated to the government that the amount of money and lands required by them is only a quid pro quo for the work they undertake, and the working of the railway, will say, if we tax their lands: 'You must come to our relief; we have not money enough. It will take ten years to build the road, and, till completed, we can have only a certain number of immigrants yearly; and until it is in operation, after ten years, we cannot derive the benefits necessary as compensation for its construction. So, if you tax our lands, you will have to give us more money.' If we were to revert to the scheme of last year, and to that of hon. gentlemen opposite, what would be the result? We should have to tax the people to the extent of $78,000,000 or $88,000,000 on the estimates of last year. The lands would be in our hands, and only those sold would be taxed by the municipalities. Therefore, there will be no more taxation under the present scheme than if the government were to build the road. Why should we compel the company to sacrifice every acre of their lands in order to avoid taxation? You must see that their interest is to settle these lands. They would not be so blind as to retain them long for future enhancement. The value or price of an acre is not the point so much looked to as the benefit the railway must derive from the settlement of the lands, and the carriage of produce to market.

Down a little further Mr. Langevin spoke as follows, and I want the House to listen to these words, because they were most significant as coming from an important member of the government in connection with that contract:

Therefore, in a very short time the parish or municipality—

That is the parish or municipality through which the road would run:

—will be settled and the exemption of taxation on these lands will not be felt, because really the lands remaining to be sold will remain there only until the settlement can be extended in that direction, so that after those twenty years—

Now, listen:

—what will remain exempt from taxation will be just the 100 feet in width on the length of the municipality.

So that, after the expiration of twenty years from the date of this contract, according to a distinguished member of the government, all that will remain exempt from taxation will be the road-bed, 100 feet in width, which runs through the municipality.

Mr. WALLACE. Whose statement is that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the statement Sir Hector Langevin, who was Minister of Public Works in the government of that day. It would almost seem to me to make it unnecessary that I should go further. We have the distinct declaration from the Minister of Public Works in the government of Sir John Macdonald which put that contract through, that after the expiration of twenty years only 100 feet, or the road-bed, would remain exempt.

Mr. WALLACE. Would that make it law, though?

Mr. RICHARDSON. He says further:

I think the roads in the North-west are about 100 feet wide. Is it worth considering in the settlement of that country that 100 feet in width on the length of the municipality should be exempt from taxation? I think that is a very small contribution on the part of the settlers towards the building of the railway. I am sure if we were to ask the people of any portion of old Canada that is deprived of railway communication: 'Will you consent to have a railway on condition that you will neither tax the track of that railway nor the stations?' they would be only too glad to have the railway; but because the government brings the scheme forward, hon. gentlemen opposite object to it. I have not made the calculation out which, perhaps, some of my hon. friends who will follow me will make, as to how many acres 100 feet in width on the length of a municipality will make. It will be a very small amount, and that will be the only exemption in the whole township.

He says it will be a very small amount, and that it will be the only exemption in the whole township. So, you see, he repeats that very important statement to which I have already called your attention:

Besides that, if some of these lands remain unoccupied and unsold, the neighbours will take care to make of these lands pasture grounds. But the hon. leader of the opposition will say: 'Oh, the company will take precious good care to make those settlers who use the lands as pasture grounds, pay a certain amount every year.' In that case, these lands will at once be subject to taxation, and therefore there is no fear of these lands remaining, even two or three years, without being taxed.

So that you see Sir Hector Langevin expected that the land grant would remain but a very short period exempt from taxation.

The next extract that I would read is a very brief one, and is from the speech of a Liberal member, Mr. Rinfret, who is not now a member of this House. He said:

The exemption of the syndicate's lands from all taxation, whether municipal, school, federal or local, can be estimated at half a million a year, making for twenty years some $10,000,000.

He made an estimate that the taxation on this land grant would amount to half a million of dollars a year, and he says that in twenty years the amount would be $10,000,000, so that it is perfectly clear what he had in his mind.

I will read an extract from a speech made by the Hon. Mr. Ross, who was then member for Middlesex, and who is now the Premier of the province of Ontario. He said:

The fact that taxes could be imposed would ultimately compel the speculator to dispose of those lands; otherwise, the taxation from year to year would absorb the profits that would, perhaps, accrue in the increased price of the land. But in what position will this syndicate be placed? They will have their 25,000,000 acres exempt from taxation, and, as I have shown from the order in council of 1866, they will derive the profits of the energy and industry of the settlers. Every man that settles on a section of government land in the North-west will be a hewer of wood and drawer of water to this great corporation. Every road he makes, every bridge he builds to span a little stream or rivulet will be clear gain to this syndicate. Every dollar he invests in the improvement of communication between the back parts of the government lands and the front will benefit the syndicate. Moreover, if the settlers wish to levy rates to secure the construction of roads or erection of schoolhouses, instead of levying a single rate, which they would do under other circumstances, they will have to levy two rates on their own properties, because the syndicate property is free. I believe this will be a practical bar to the settlement of the lands in the North-west. It is tantamount to telling every man we invite from the other side of the Atlantic that the moment he settles on our lands in the North-west, instead of contributing of his means for his own advantage and comfort of his family, every dollar he invests for the benefit of himself and neighbours will be so much to the advantage of the company that contributes not one dollar itself. This exemption is more monstrous and more burdensome, and will be so found by the settler than, perhaps, any other. How was it in old Canada with the Canadian Company's lands? Those of you who are older than myself and more familiar with the early settlement of the country, know at what disadvantage the settler was placed in having to build his road past the Canadian Company's lot, that they did pay a certain amount of taxes; and such disadvantages will accrue in a much more painful and serious degree to the settler in the North-west. This provision is worthy of consideration, and should be struck out of the contract. But we are sometimes told by hon. gentlemen that railway lands in the United States do not pay taxes. I have shown that the Union Pacific Railway lands were exempt in the territories only so long as they so remain. When they were erected into states, each state was permitted to exercise its sovereign right of imposing taxes upon railway lands, and I notice a quotation from the Chicago 'Railway Age,' under date of December 30, as follows:

'The Illinois Central Railway is an institution in which this state ought to take great satisfaction. During the six months ended October 31 this company earned on its Illinois lines $2,893,728, of which $202,561 was paid over to the state, being the 7 per cent tax on its receipts.'

Thus we have the Illinois Central Railway paying in about one year $400,000 into the state treasury in lieu of taxation; and I have a statement which shows that the road, since 1870, has contributed $2,934,654 to that state, and to the state treasury of Iowa, $371,340.

If there was a provision in that charter, that the lands of the syndicate be exempt from taxation, and that, in lieu of it, this railway should pay into the treasury of the Dominion, or into that of the provinces to be erected in the North-west, a certain proportion of their cash earnings, then there would be some reason in asking the House to consider this proposition. But instead of there being any return to the Dominion, or the future provinces for this exemption, we have, on the contrary, a proposal of this government to bind the provinces hereafter to be erected so that they may not exercise their sovereign rights in taxing those lands. If the North-west happens to be settled, as I trust it will be, by people of the spirit and independence of the inhabitants of Ontario, I venture to say there may spring up in the North-west a series of troubles and annoyances to the syndicate, in regard to which the government may be called to interfere. By this exemption, I fear, we are sowing the seeds of future trouble in regard to the social and political quietude of that vast territory.

Another very brief quotation from the speech of Mr. Ross :

But, Sir, without insisting on the valuation to which I have referred, we find that the Act of 1874 was exceedingly different from the one we are considering. The Act of 1874 did not exempt the lands from taxes for twenty years. How much is that worth? Let the hon. member for Niagara put a cash valuation on that. The hon. member has been reading the Railway Acts of the United States. He will find that some of the railway lands of the United States were taxed 14 cents an acre, and some 11 cents an acre, and the hon. gentleman knows that lands in Manitoba, held by non-residents, are taxed from 5 cents to 6 cents an acre. Put that same rate on 25,000,000 acres for twenty years and it will amount to $10,000,000, an enormous sum which shows the immense gain which this tax is to the company. It not only relieves them from a regular payment of, say $50,000 a year, but enables them to hold their lands in order that they may increase in value.

You see the clear understanding that the present Premier of Ontario had with regard to that contract was, that the lands were exempt only for twenty years from the date of the contract. I will read from the speech of Mr. Paterson, the present Minister of Customs :

The hon. minister has stated that this is no more than is conceded to American roads; but it is well known that the American railways do pay large amounts of municipal taxation. There have been given to the syndicate rights, powers, and privileges not given to American companies, and if that was not enough iniquity to put in the clause, he also provides that the lands of the company given by this Dominion are to be free from taxation for twenty years. Last year, when the First Minister was speaking on the land grants, he alluded to the question of exemption, his remarks being found at page 1058 of the 'Hansard' for 1880. He knew the dangers that accrued from exempting large tracts of lands from taxation. He was cognizant of the evils of exemption in the case of the Canada Company in days gone by, and he told the House that he had given power to the resident settlers to tax the lands of the non-resident, and therefore, those non-residents must either pay the taxes or sell out. He thus qualified that clause himself, and yet the same gentleman has since become a party to a contract wiping out that exemption clause and giving the company freedom from taxation for twenty years, so that the settler will have an unsettled mile on the east, west, north and south, exempt from taxation. He will have to bear the whole burden, build churches and make road improvements, and the hon. Minister of Railways asks parliament to adopt that clause.

It is abundantly clear what the view of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) was with regard to this period of exemption. I will read a brief statement from the speech of the late Mr. Anglin, your predecessor in the Chair, Mr. Speaker :

When the contractors hold the land, instead of being compelled to proceed to settle the land, as the leader of the government boasted last year would be the case by the operation of local taxation, they are to be absolutely exempt for twenty years to come, so that if they choose they may hold their lands idle while the government proceed to settle up the alternate blocks, and thereby add largely to the market value of the lands held by the company.

That is exactly what occurred. Let me next read one or two brief sentences from the speech of Mr. Blake, who addressed the House a second time on January 18, on this question :

Hon. gentlemen will observe that here is an important departure from the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, a departure of great consequence, upon which it will be my duty, and the duty of others, further to enlarge at a later stage. While under the Act the land grant of the company would remain subject to taxation, under the contract that grant is exempt from taxation of all kinds until used or occupied for twenty years from the date of the grant.

It is abundantly clear what Mr. Blake understood.

That also is an exemption of great value to the company, of enormous value to the company; an exemption which, added to the right of selection, makes the land grant a wholly different thing from a land grant subject to taxation. A land grant subject to taxation, in a country like that, is as different from a land grant not subject to taxation as a fertile field is different from a rugged hill. There is an annual burden increasing as the country grows and prospers, of the most serious character upon all the lands which are subject to the common burden, and this makes the contract altogether different, and makes the value of the company's possessions enormously greater, besides which we have to consider its injurious effects upon the development of the country and upon the prosperity of the adjoining settlers.

The next extract which I shall read is also from a speech of Mr. Blake :

Then the contract provides that the land grant shall be exempt from taxation for twenty years, unless sold or occupied from the date of the grant. The money gain to the company is enormous, there can be no doubt about that. There can be no doubt that the burdens which this company are freed from are most serious. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said so. They have said they could not use this land grant otherwise, that nobody would buy if they supposed the syndicate was to be subjected to the same taxes as the rest of the world. They got the choice of land and they are not to pay the same taxes as the rest of the community. Why should they not? Is it because they get a large profit? Because they are getting altogether four prices for building the prairie section, that therefore, they are to be untaxed and free? Then the indirect loss is still greater by this mode of settlement, by the burdens it imposes on the adjoining settlers for the benefit of the railway company itself, by the imposition of double taxes on those who go in for the benefit of this great corporation. I do not know of anything that will more interfere with the development of the North-west than this clause of exemption from taxation.

The next extract which I shall read is from a speech of Mr. Rykert, who was one of the leading supporters of the then government, and apparently its leading statistician.

I do not suppose the speeches of hon. gentlemen are much read throughout the country, but their organ is, and I am quoting from that, and I want to show the public what a political humbug they have to direct the opinion of the hon. gentlemen opposite:

'This land grant is infinitely more valuable than that of the Union Pacific. Therefore, the least value that can be put upon the exemption from taxation of the Canadian Pacific land grant is twenty times $835,023, or $16,700,460. The exemption from taxes of the railway itself is worth at least as much to the company as the liability to taxes costs the Union Pacific, namely, $279,158 per annum. Capitalizing that sum at 4 per cent, we arrive at the value of the exemption from taxes of the railways—it is $6,978,950. Add value of twenty years' exemption from taxes on land grant, $16,700,460. Total value of exemption from taxes, $23,679,410.'

Now, Sir, the company has had this land for seventeen years—I call it twelve years, making an average of $69,585 a year—if we take the $20,000,000 acres which we gave to the company having retained 5,000,000 acres for security, and estimate the taxes at the same rate as the Union Pacific, it would make an annual payment of $139,170. Multiply that by 20, assuming that not an acre of land is sold for twenty years, and we find that the total of taxes paid by the syndicate would be $2,783,400, or a difference between the 'Globe's' calculation and mine upon the land alone, of $13,917,060.

It will be noticed from the context that the extract I have read was taken from the Globe, and it is quite clear therefore that the view which that great journal held at that time was that the land grant was only exempt from taxation for a period of twenty years, dating from the contract. Mr. Rykert continues:

Now, I go still further. I will give them the benefit of last year's taxation. Mr. Poor says that the taxes last year were $108,437. I will double that, which will make $216,874 a year, multiply that by 20, allowing one-third off for sales only, and I find the total amount would be $2,891,654, or a difference of $13,898,806. It does seem to me that the hon. gentlemen ought certainly to withdraw that statement upon the floor of this House or admit that the organ was incorrect or misinformed. It is an unfortunate thing that these statements should go about the country in order to mislead the public mind with a view of getting a snap verdict against the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

I gather from a perusal of Mr. Rykert's speech that he entered very carefully into calculations with regard to the value of exemption from taxation.

I have only read his conclusions, although I think it is desirable that the House should understand that they are based on elaborate calculations. The last extract which I propose to read from the debate is a brief statement by Mr. Anglin:

Mr. Anglin said it was very extraordinary. There was a very remarkable fact in reference to the lands. Eleven million acres would furnish 10,000 acres per mile for 900 miles, making a total of 9,000,000, and furnish about 2,000,000 acres more for the three-tenths of the road of the eastern section, which the company were required to build within the first three years. So that within three years, the company should have acquired and obtained possession of the two twenty-four mile belts in the prairie section.

I do not recall that I have read the contention of Mr. Blake, in reply to a statement made by Sir John A. Macdonald—the contention that within ten years at least more than half the entire land grant would be sold or occupied, and would be subject to taxation thereby minimizing the onerous nature of the twenty-year exemption period.

Now, having dealt somewhat exhaustively with the debate on this subject, I want the House to bear with me while I refer briefly to the opinion entertained by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself with regard to this land grant, as contained in its own reports. I may say that I have secured copies of its reports from the inception of the company. The first report is dated Montreal, December 12, 1882, and here is what it says:

The proceeds of the $20,000,000 of land grant bonds, as sold, are deposited with the government, which pays interest on such deposits at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

So that you will see that my statement is correct, that they proceeded to raise $25,000,000 on land grant bonds. I suppose the difference between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000 is the $5,000,000 which was retained by the government as security for performance of contract.

These proceeds are paid to the company in agreed mileage proportions (in the same manner as the government cash subsidy), as construction progresses; and the balance of these proceeds and of cash subsidy coming to the company amounts to about $31,500,000. It is believed that this sum, with the proceeds of the capital stock now remaining unissued (exclusive of $10,000,000 of the stock which is to be reserved), will be amply sufficient for the complete construction and efficient equipment of the railway, and that 1,800,000 acres of land will be more than sufficient to extinguish the outstanding $2,700,000 of land grant bonds.

The position of the company may, therefore, be thus stated:

After providing fully for the construction and equipment of the railway and telegraph lines, the company will hold in their treasury $10,000,000 of unissued stock.

They will also hold about 17,000,000 acres of land, unincumbered except by the $5,000,000 of bonds held by the government as security for the operation of the railway for ten years.

The whole property of the company, when completed, will be represented by $90,000,000 of capital stock, and will be unincumbered except for about $5,500,000 on the purchased lines.

The company are authorized, and will continue to pay interest semi-annually upon paid-up shares during construction, at the rate of not less than 5 per cent per annum.

It is important for the House to remember that this great company did not wait until its road was built before paying a dividend. It was going to pay dividends during construction.

And the proceeds of the unsold lands (about 17,000,000 acres) will be available and specially reserved, if necessary, to supplement the net earnings in the accomplishment of that purpose.

This report is signed by George Stephen, now Lord Mount Stephen, as president. The next report I shall read from is dated December 31, 1883, and this is what it says with reference to the land department :

A statement of land sales from the commencement of the company's operations, is also submitted.

It will be observed that a considerable reduction is shown in the acreage sold, as compared with the statement published in the official memorandum, dated December 12, 1882.

This has been caused, mainly, by a reduction of the acreage originally sold to the Canada North-west Land Company, from 5,000,000 acres to 2,200,000 acres.

Let the House mark that out of this immense land grant the company had sold as early as 1883 to the Canada North-west Land Company 5,000,000 acres; and yet how much do you suppose patents have been issued for? A trifle over a million acres, showing that although the land was sold to the North-west Land Company by the Canadian Pacific Railway it did not become taxable and when it reverted to the Canadian Pacific Railway, as it did, was still exempt from taxation the patents not having issued. Then this report goes on :

The Canada North-west Land Company having found themselves unable to deal with so large a quantity of land, it was considered desirable, both in the interest of the railway company as well as of North-west settlement, that relief should be afforded them; and a new agreement, reducing the quantity of land, but maintaining the same terms and conditions as to price, &c., was entered into.

It may be added that full payment has been made for the reduced acreage, and that the land company are actively engaged, both in this country and abroad, in securing purchasers and settlers for their lands.

Notwithstanding the fact that these 5,000,000 acres were transferred by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the Canada North-west Land Company, the latter company also evaded taxation, no doubt in the same way as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, because it did not take out any patents for those lands. A patent was only issued when a parcel might be sold to a poor settler, who might not have enough money to pay taxes, while the land company and the parent company both escaped taxation altogether. I read further :

The following is the position of the 5 per cent land grant mortgage bonds:

Total issue .....	$25,000,000
Deposited with the government as security for completion of the contract, no interest being payable thereon .....	$ 5,000,000
Deposited with the government in trust until earned by the company .....	10,000,000
Redeemed by land sales and cancelled .....	6,667,000
	21,667,000
Balance outstanding .....	$ 3,333,000

I presume that this report was also signed by George Stephen as president. I do not see any report for 1884. The next report from which I quote is for the year 1885 :

Should this measure become law—

This refers to some Act submitted to the House embodying some financial arrangement between the government and the company—

—the position the company will occupy on the opening of the through line next spring may be summed up as follows:

It will have a cash deposit in the hands of the Dominion government sufficient to pay semi-annual dividends at the rate of 3 per cent per annum on its $65,000,000 capital stock for seven and a-half years, or until the end of the year 1893. It will own 3,299 miles, and will hold under lease 695 miles, of fully completed and thoroughly equipped railway, forming a total mileage of 3,994 miles. It will own more than 21,000,000 acres of agricultural lands.

Does anybody suppose that the president of this company would put that statement before the public unless these lands really belonged to the company? Of course, I have proved to a demonstration that they were available for the purposes of the company; but the president says, in 1885, that it will 'own' more than 21,000,000 acres of land. He goes on :

It will own three fine steel steamships on the great lakes, and an extensive and well-appointed telegraph system, with power to extend its telegraph lines to all parts of the country.

All this property, together with certain outside assets, in all valued at $230,960,585, will be represented by a total indebtedness of $53,892,545, bearing an unusually low rate of interest; and by $65,000,000 capital stock, for which dividends for seven and one-half years will be in hand.

With regard to this $65,000,000 of capital stock the statement was made very generally—I see it printed in the newspapers and it has never been denied, either officially or otherwise—that of that $65,000,000 capital stock not more than $8,000,000 ever went into the construction of the road at all. I have made the statement on the floor of this House, and have been able to prove it by the official records, that the members of the syndicate distributed among themselves a very large portion of this $65,000,000 of stock at 25 cents on the dollar, and in five years they received 20 per cent more back in dividends than they paid originally for their stock, for they paid themselves 6 per cent on the par value per year or 24 per cent annual dividends on the value at which they obtained their stocks. No wonder the president of the company is able to boast that they will have a cash deposit in the hands of the company, able to pay semi-annual dividends at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, on its capital stock until the end of 1893.

Sixty-five million dollars capital stock, for which dividends for seven and one-half years will be in hand.

I quote from the balance sheet attached to that same report :

That as security for the payment of the balance of the said loan, amounting to the sum of $9,880,912, and the interest thereon, the government shall have a first lien and mortgage, subject to the outstanding land grant bonds, on the whole of the unsold lands forming the remaining part of the company's land grant earned and to be hereafter earned.

Just think of this proposition, that the government shall have a lien on the land grant earned and to be thereafter earned. Here we find the company giving a mortgage to the government on its land grant. But how could the company give a lien or raise a mortgage on a land grant that it did not own? It must be clear to every one that it did not own the land grant and that the land grant was available to the company for all purposes.

Such principal and interest to be paid out of the net proceeds of the sale of such lands; and the government shall continue to hold and retain the entire amount of land grant bonds now in its custody and possession as provided by the said Act. And if the net proceeds of such sales, to be made from time to time in due course, shall be insufficient to pay the interest on the said last mentioned amount as the same shall fall due, or the principal thereof, when the same shall become due, the Governor in Council may order the sale by trustees of such lands or any part thereof in such manner as shall be fixed by such order, in satisfaction of the interest or principal in respect of which default has occurred. And after the sale of the whole of such lands any deficiency in the proceeds thereof to pay the amount charged thereon shall be a charge upon the company's entire revenue after providing for its fixed charges and by preference over the shareholders.

The next report which I shall quote from is the report for the year 1885. On page 8, of that report, I find :

This agreement, in effect, provides that the company shall—

Another agreement, evidently, that the company made with the government——by the 1st July next, repay to the government in full, in cash, the amount of that portion of the debt secured by the pledge of the $20,000,000 first mortgage bonds, and that the government shall then accept in full satisfaction of its claim for the balance of the debt, amounting to $9,880,912, with interest, lands sufficient to cover the amount at the rate of $1.50 per acre.

I would ask this pertinent question, how could this company return to the government this vast amount of land if the company did not own the land? On page 17, I read this clause :

The new agreement with the government provides for the immediate cancellation of the $8,996,000 of these bonds now held by the government; and for the ultimate cancellation of the remaining $5,000,000. When these bonds have all been cancelled, the $3,612,500 bonds outstanding in the hands of the public will be the only charge on the company's land grant of 14,734,667 acres.

	Acres.	Acres.
Total land grant .....	25,000,000
Sales to Dec. 31, 1885.....	3,757,662
Less cancelled .....	285,644
		3,472,018
		21,527,982
To be retained by government under new agreement, approximately .....	6,793,315
		14,734,667

The next report from which I shall quote is the report for 1886, on page 9 :

To represent this capital liability, the company has a well-equipped railway system of 4,651 miles, a thoroughly efficient commercial telegraph system, and nearly 15,000,000 acres of selected agricultural lands—

In 1884, we have the president of the company telling us that they then had 15,000,000 acres 'of selected agricultural lands,' and you will see by this statement that they were able, under the late government, to obtain power to select their land and that in 1886 the company had 15,000,000 acres of selected lands.

—the latter subject only to land grant bonds of $8,527,000, of which $4,000,000 are in the hands of the company and $1,000,000 are deposited with the government, these $5,000,000 not bearing interest. The company has also a cash deposit in the hands of the Dominion government sufficient to pay the guaranteed dividend of 3 per cent per annum on its entire capital stock until August, 1893. These lands, together with other valuable assets of the company, held outside of capital account, will be available when required, for providing for the further improvement of the line, and for such additions to the equipment and appurtenances as the increasing traffic may demand, so that, after the completion of the works now in progress, the surplus net earnings may be free, to be used for their proper purpose of paying dividends to the shareholders.

From the same report on the land grant I read :

	Acres.
Original grant.....	25,000,000
Surrendered to the government under agreement of March 30, 1886.....	6,793,014
	18,206,986
Sales to Dec. 31, 1886.....	3,527,954
Less cancelled in 1886.....	280,686
Quantity of land on hand.....	14,959,718

The cancellations of the past year include the contract of the French Colonization Company for 200,000 acres. This was one of the colonization companies formed in the early years of the organization of the railway company at a time when the speculative fever in lands in the North-west was at its height. The colonization company failed to carry out the conditions of their contract as to cultivation and settlement, and the agreement was cancelled. These lands are situated within the province of Manitoba, and will ultimately realize a much better price than that provided for in the contract with the colonization company.

So that notwithstanding the fact that these lands were sold to a colonization company, when the company failed to carry out the conditions of its bargain, they reverted to the Canadian Pacific Railway with the result that they became exempt from taxation.

The next report is that of 1889 :

The interest on the land grant bonds, while an obligation of the company, is not included in the fixed charges, because the interest paid is chargeable against the land grant, and will ultimately be returned to the shareholders. The proceeds of land sales, less the expenses of the land department, going for the present towards the extinguishment of the debt upon the lands, the arrangement works practically as a sinking fund. It is expected that the annual receipts from Vancouver and other town-sites, together with the surplus proceeds of the Manitoba South-western lands (the property of your company) will cover the interest on the land grant bonds, leaving the ordinary revenues of the company intact.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock, I was reading from the annual reports of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to show what view the company itself took of the land grant—to demonstrate that the company, according to its own language, according to its own understanding, owned this land grant for all practical purposes. I will read a brief extract from the annual report of the company presented on Wednesday, the 5th of May, 1889 :

In addition to the lands embraced in the foregoing statement, the company holds 1,389,424 acres of land in southern Manitoba, which came to it from the purchase of the Manitoba South

Mr. RICHARDSON.

Western Railway. These lands are among the best and most available in the North-west. At the average of the sales last year, $4.64 per acre, their value is $5,944,785. They are subject only to a lien of $884,773 in favour of the province of Manitoba. Your directors believe that they will yield at least $5 over and above the amount due to the province, and, as they are not liable to any other mortgage or lien, the surplus will be available for the general purposes of the company.

Here is a statement that the land grant of the company in southern Manitoba was worth, in 1889, $4.54 per acre. The company received 6,400 acres a mile as a subsidy for the building of their road. If you multiply 6,400 acres by $4.54, you find that the company received the enormous amount of $29,056 per mile for the building of the railway. What does that mean? It means that the company has received in land, according to its own statement, $29,056 per mile, or about three times the cost of constructing the railway. As you know, Mr. Speaker, railways can be constructed very cheaply in a prairie country. The cost is estimated at from $7,000 to $9,000 a mile. If you take it at $8,000 per mile, you find that the company have received considerably more than three times the value of the road in land subsidy. And yet, notwithstanding that, we are actually face to face with the proposition that the company expects us to exempt these lands from taxation in perpetuity. It seems to me, in view of a statement of this kind, taken from their own reports, that this is the most monstrous proposition ever made in this parliament. Let me read—this is the last extract I shall give from the company's report—from the report presented on Wednesday, the 4th of April, 1894 :

The company's lands are seldom sold to new immigrants, but generally to those who have already established themselves on free homesteads, and who, from their improved condition, are able to increase their holdings by the purchase of adjoining railway lands. Therefore, an unfavourable season in agriculture is to be unfavourable in regard to land sales. The established farmers have had little money to spare during the past year, the land sales, consequently, have been low, and the receipts from town sites have likewise suffered.

It will be quite clear to hon. members who have listened to the remarks I have made that the company has received an enormous amount of money on account of their land grant, and that the land grant is an exceedingly valuable asset. I could go on and multiply the reasons why this parliament should act, and say that these lands are liable to taxation when the twenty-year period expires. But surely I have made the case sufficiently strong to convince any hon. member of this House that this parliament should act. I think that parliament should have acted long ago in this matter, and should have insisted on the company taking out its patent for the land grant, because, as I pointed out in the beginning of my remarks, that would facilitate the taxation of the land, for, as the House will understand, unpatented lands cannot be taxed. To the settlers of the North-west this is an exceedingly important question, as hon. members will understand, because it is desirable that taxation, which is heavy in that country, and which, by virtue of the necessity for bridges and other improvements, municipal and otherwise, must always be heavy, should be distributed over as large an area as possible. In the speeches from which I quoted, the possibility of considerable discontent arising in the North-west over this matter was alluded to. I think I am safe in saying that the people of the North-west are as loyal and peaceable a people as will be found in the Dominion; but if you are going to impose an odious condition on them with reference to this exemption from taxation by extending the taxation exemption period indefinitely, or in perpetuity, it will certainly give them cause for very serious agitation and discontent.

I have already spoken of the fight which Hon. Edward Blake, when he was leader of the Liberal party in this House, made against this Canadian Pacific Railway contract, which, as I said, has been pronounced by the present editor of the Globe to be the most insane contract ever made by any free people—I think those were his words. Mr. Blake, as any one can find who will read the debates, made a long, ardent and persistent fight against the consummation of this bargain; and in that fight he was assisted by every Liberal who was behind him during that period. The debates show that an enormous number of amendments to this contract were moved, and that also a most exhaustive case was made by practically every speaker who participated in that debate against the contract, and especially against the clause therein granting exemption from taxation. The Liberal party has changed sides in this House since then, and now sits on your right, Mr. Speaker, but I think it would be safe to assume that Liberals have in no way changed their opinion in regard to this contract, and the iniquitous provisions contained therein. Therefore, we may surely hope that on this question no uncertain sound will be given by the Liberal party represented in this House. As I said at the outset there should be no reason why the opinion should not be unanimous in this House, declaring that the tax exemption period will expire on the 16th February, 1901.

Now, I expect to be met by the argument of 'vested rights,' and I should not be surprised if I were characterized as a socialist, as I was in connection with the elevator discussion which took place in this House. I would like to inquire from you, Sir, where the vested rights of the company come in, and I would also like to ask if the settlers of the North-west who took up their homesteads on the understanding that this vast land grant would share the tax burden in 20 years have no vested rights. Should not the first duty of the House be to protect their vested rights? We have given the Canadian Pacific Railway, as you know, $25,000,000 in cash, and $35,000,000 worth of completed railroad; we gave them perpetual exemption from taxation for their road-bed, rolling stock, stations and appurtenances; we allowed their material to come into the country free of taxation; we gave them a monopoly of the carrying trade of that country for a long period; we put a clause in the charter that until they earned 10 per cent on the capital actually expended, we could not control the rates, and gave them many other important concessions, such as stocking and bonding privileges, &c. It seems to me we have given up practically everything that could be given, and now the company expects this parliament to grant them tax exemption on this land grant in perpetuity. If parliament declines to say that that tax exemption period shall expire when the twenty years after the contract was made, have elapsed, then I fear there will be considerable reason for the feeling that exists in the country, and which I think prevails to a large extent, that parliament is dominated by these railroad corporations. But I have a strong hope that this House will arrive at such a conclusion as will remove to some extent that impression.

I may say that this is probably the last session of this parliament. The probabilities are that before another session is held, there will be a general election, and no man knows whether he will be slain in the fight or whether he will be elected. But I would like to say that should this be the last word I shall ever utter in parliament, I shall at least be able to look back with pardonable pride to the fact that my last parliamentary utterance was a protest against the domination of either the government or parliament by railways or other monopolistic corporations, and in behalf of the rights of the settlers. That stand I have always maintained in the newspaper which I control in the west, and in taking the view I do at present, I am merely following a consistent course. I beg, therefore, Sir, to move, seconded by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), that all the words after 'That' be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

Clause 16 of the contract between Her Majesty and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, ratified by the parliament of Canada on the 15th day of February, 1881, and set out in the schedule to chapter 1 of the Statutes of 1881, provides as follows: 'The Canadian Pacific Railway, and all stations and station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling-stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion, or by any province hereinafter established, or by any municipai corporation therein; and the lands of the company, in the North-west Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall also be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.'

That in answer to an interpellation in parliament on the 12th day of February, 1900 as to the date of termination of the said period of exemption from taxation, it was stated on behalf of the government that: 'This is a matter of legal opinion, which, if disputed, can only be settled by a judicial decision.'

That progress in the North-west is enormously handicapped by the exemption from taxation of so vast a quantity of land as has been set apart for the company, and would be seriously paralyzed should the tax exemption be indefinitely continued.

That it appears from the debates which occurred when the said contract was before parliament, and from the wording of the Act itself, that the exemption was intended to cover a period of not more than twenty years from the date of the passing of the said Act, and that it was so understood by the railway company, which, on the conclusion of the bargain, raised $25,000,000 on the security of the said land grant.

That for the foregoing reasons, in the opinion of this House, the period of exemption from taxation of the said land grant expires on the 16th of February, 1901, and that all such lands should be patented to the said railway company by that date, inasmuch as it is impossible to collect taxes from such lands until they are patented.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend who has brought this question before the House, stated in opening his remarks, that he hoped that after the House had heard his arguments, it would unanimously agree to the motion which he has placed in your hands. I listened to my hon. friend very carefully, and my deliberate opinion is that if the House is to come to a unanimous conclusion, it will be, not in favour of the motion which he has brought before the House, but against it. I think that my hon. friend himself, when I have placed before him a few considerations which have escaped his attention, must come to the same conclusion. Before I proceed any further I may say that I admire the energy and industry with which he has constituted himself the champion of the rights of the people of the North-west Territories; and whilst I give him due credit therefor, I must say that I cannot admire the spirit which seems to have influenced him in this matter. For my part, I cannot admit that the hon. gentleman has duly reflected as he should have done—if he will pardon me for so saying—before stating that if parliament did not come to the conclusion to which he has come, it would be an evidence that parliament was dominated by railroad corporations. For my part I resent any such imputation, I believe is not true. My hon. friend has no right to argue that, although the people in the contract which was made in 1881 did not receive the consideration to which they were entitled, and because at the present time we find a condition of things which is legal, and because we respect the law which we find on the statute-book, therefore, the conclusion must be drawn that we are in the power of a great corporation. My hon. friend must remember that the parliament of Canada, in the session of 1880-1—whether wisely or unwisely does not affect the point under discussion—voluntarily adopted a law which we now find upon the statute-book. I have to call my hon. friend's attention to this, that, although from the facts which he has stated, he must be convinced, and every man who sympathizes with his views must be convinced, that the people of the North-west Territories were not properly dealt with, that their rights were jeopardized by the contract of 1881, still it does not follow that any man who holds these views must come to the conclusion at which he has arrived. He bases his whole argument upon these two propositions: That parliament, when it sanctioned the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway on February 15, 1881, granted to that company a cash bonus of $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land to aid in the construction of the railway, and that upon that grant the company were allowed exemption of taxation for twenty years. So far we are all agreed, but, he concludes, and this is the mistake he makes, that the grant of land took effect when the contract received the sanction of the Governor General of that day, on April 15, 1881. My hon. friend surely has not read the statute. The statute cannot be read as stating, not even as implying, that the grant of land of 25,000,000 acres which was made by the Act of that date, took effect from the date of the sanctioning of the Bill which was introduced in that session of parliament. If the grant of land could be held by any process of reasoning, or argument, to have taken effect on the day of the sanctioning of the Bill, the argument of my hon. friend would be beyond answer. It would simply end the case. But, my hon. friend has not read the statute properly when he states that the grant of land took effect upon the sanctioning of the Bill. He quoted the section 9, but he did not quote it entirely, and the ending of section 9 has an important bearing upon the proper interpretation which the section must have. Section reads:

In consideration of the premises, the government agree to grant to the company a subsidy in money of $25,000,000, and in land of 25,000,000 acres, for which subsidies the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be completed and the same shall be equipped, maintained and operated.

These words are very clear that, for a subsidy of $25,000,000 in money, and for a further subsidy of 25,000,000 acres of land, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company undertake to construct, maintain and operate a railway from Callander to the shores of the Pacific Ocean. That was the undertaking. When did the grant of money and of land take effect? Was the grant of money to take effect immediately upon the sanctioning of the Bill? My hon. friend will not pretend that. He knows that the grant of money was to take effect only as the road was constructed, and that the grant of land was to take effect exactly in the same way, as the road was constructed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They borrowed $25,000,000 on the land grant.

The PRIME MINISTER (reading):

The said subsidies respectively to be paid and granted as the work of construction shall proceed.

Could anything be clearer than that? The company were not entitled, upon the sanctioning of the Bill, to receive from the treasury of Canada $25,000,000; neither were the company entitled to receive 25,000,000 acres of land. The company were actually to receive a sum of money as the road proceeded and a subsidy in land as the road proceeded as well, and it is quite clear that the land grant cannot be held to have taken effect from the date of the sanctioning of the Bill, but it must be held to date from the time the road was constructed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the company got the grant of land as it was earned, did the government see that it was not granted to the company until they earned it in twenty-mile sections?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is another argument; I will come to that presently. But, the conclusion of my hon. friend was that the Bill was sanctioned on April 15, 1881, and that, therefore, in twenty years the exemption ceases. My hon. friend cannot justify that argument. I will come to the only part of my hon. friend's position that is arguable, but, it is not arguable to declare that the grant took place on February 16, because there was not a penny of money, or an acre of land earned. The grant was earned only so far as the railway proceeded, and, therefore, my hon. friend must see the error of the proposition which he has placed before the House. There is nothing upon which it can stand.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How could they borrow $25,000,000 then?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend must wait a little; I will answer that presently. The ground upon which he bases his argument is that the statute gave to the company 25,000,000 acres of land. I have shown the hon. gentleman by the terms of the statute itself, that when the Bill was sanctioned in 1881, the company was not entitled to receive one acre of land, but that it was only entitled to receive the grant of land to the extent of 25,000,000 acres as the road proceeded and, therefore, it cannot be shown that there is any ground upon which the exemption from taxation could take place until the time that the railway was proceeded with, and the subsidy was earned. The exemption from taxation could take place only from the time the subsidy was earned and it was earned long subsequent to the time it was granted, and, therefore, it is not possible for any one to reason that the exemption from taxation could be held to come to an end on February 16, 1901. It is not susceptible of argument and it cannot be debated any longer. I think I could very well stop here and ask the House to vote down the motion of my hon. friend, having shown that the motion which he has placed before the House is not even susceptible of argument. But, if I were to do that, I concede I would not discharge my full duty to the House. It would not be right for me to rely upon a mere technical objection, but, I must look upon the question in all its bearings, because I know that under the contract that my hon. friend condemns, a condition of things was imposed in 1881 upon the people of the North-west Territories, west of Lake Superior, which is a grievous one, and one which constitutes a condition for which they feel there should be a remedy, whether they have that remedy before parliament or whether they have not. My hon. friend has recalled the opinion of Mr. Blake; he has recalled the opinion of the Liberal party of that day, and for my part, I have no quarrel with the views held at that time by the Liberal party. We thought at that time that the contract was an altogether one-sided one, but our views did not prevail. My hon. friend is aware that we moved amendment after amendment against the Bill, and that we moved against this very clause to which he objects to-day. My hon. friend is aware that our motion was defeated, and that the contract was passed in spite of all our efforts. Well, then, he asks us: Are you going, in view of the position you adopted in 1881, to go back upon that position, and are you to become the slave of the great corporation which was then formed? That is not a fair way of putting it; that is not a fair argument. Our views at that time did not prevail, the parliament of Canada passed that contract, it became law, and whatever be the law, whether it be disadvantageous or advantageous to the people of Canada, it is the duty of the people of Canada, even those who struggled against it, to accept the responsibility of it. We cannot do otherwise. I say, speaking in the name of the people of Canada, that I resent the doctrines of my hon. friend. My hon. friend said that he was a socialist; he may pardon me if I repeat again, that the proposition which he has placed to-day before parliament is a proposition strongly smelling of socialism, if not of absolute socialism itself. In the very strong and elaborate argument which he made this afternoon, he made use of these very words: Parliament must interpret that law. That law embodies a contract, and will my hon. friend, or the parliament of Canada, say that when a contract has been made between two parties—I do not care whether it be between the parliament of Canada, on the one side, and any of Her Majesty's subjects on the other—parliament must undertake to interpret that contract? No proposition of that kind was ever heard of in parliament. In the British parliament, when contracts are made, they are left to the judicial authority to interpret, and I am glad to say that in the whole history of England, so far as my memory goes, there is not a single instance where parliament undertook to interpret one of its own laws or contracts. It is left to the courts to determine. Having made these preliminary observations, I come to the grievance set up by my hon. friend. My hon. friend has based his argument upon section 16 of the Act, which reads as follows:

The Canadian Pacific Railway, and all stations and station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion, or by any province hereafter to be established, or by any municipal corporation therein.

That is not, however, the point in issue. Here is the portion on which my hon. friend relies:

And the lands of the company, in the Northwest Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall also be free from taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

That is very plain. Now, what is the grant from the Crown? That is the whole question. The grant was not made by the Act itself, as I think I have shown conclusively. The Act simply empowered the Crown to grant 25,000,000 acres of land; and by the terms of the Act the grant could only be made gradually, step by step, as the construction of the road proceeded. Now, the question, and the only question is, what is the grant from the Crown? There are two constructions put upon that phrase. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company hold that the grant from the Crown dates from the issue of the patent. My hon. friend contends that this is not a fair way of looking at the contract. He contends that as the construction of the railway proceeded, blocks of land were chosen by the company and set aside by the Crown for the purpose of fulfilling the grant of 25,000,000 acres authorized by the statute, and that, when a block of land of 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 acres was set aside for the company, from that date those lands belonged to the company, and that would constitute a grant from the Crown. I am not prepared to say that the argument of my hon. friend is right or that it is wrong. It may be right; I do not think it is. I think it is only from the date of the issue of the patent from the Crown that the grant is to be construed.

But whether my hon. friend is right or wrong, or whether I am right or wrong, it surely is not a question for this parliament to settle. It is only for the courts to determine who is right and who is wrong in that particular—whether the grant should be held to date from the day when a block of land is set aside for the company, or from the day the patent for the land is issued by the Crown.

I have followed the argument of my hon. friend on this subject. It is not a legal argument; it is not even a political argument; it is simply an argument of convenience. My hon. friend says, and says very truly: If you admit any other interpretation than the interpretation which I put on this statute, that the grant of land must be held to reckon from the day the land was set aside for the purpose of fulfilling the conditions laid down in the statute, what is the result? The result is that the settlers who are toiling every day, who are making this country smile, who are developing it, who have a hard life of it, who have to toil in the wet and in the sun in order to make this country better than it is, have to bear alone the burden of taxation, whereas the lands of this wealthy company are exempt from that burden. My hon. friend is right; I have nothing to say to that; but if parliament decided otherwise in 1881, what has he to say? Why, all the arguments which my hon. friend adduced this afternoon, Mr. Blake presented with great force to parliament in 1881. Mr. Blake represented that if parliament gave these lands to the company for ever free of taxation, it would impose a heavy burden of taxation upon the settlers. But parliament did not accept the views of Mr. Blake. Parliament went on and decreed that these lands should be exempt from taxation for twenty years.

But, my hon. friend says, if parliament decided that in 1881, let us set aside that legislation; let us say that parliament was wrong in 1881, and that the superior wisdom of parliament in 1900 shall do away with that legislation. Sir, if we were free, if this were not a contract, I would agree with my hon. friend; I would say, we shall correct the error of 1881. But parliament is not free in this matter. As I said a moment ago, here was a contract agreed upon in 1881—between whom? Between Her Majesty the Queen, representing the people of Canada, and certain subjects of Her Majesty who were constituted a corporation. The contract was sanctioned and approved by parliament; and though it may be injurious to the whole people of Canada, and especially injurious to certain sections of the people, still in a British parliament it will not be pretended that parliament should step in and violate vested rights and interfere with rights which were given for good or for ill to certain people in 1881.

What has my hon. friend to say to this? He has to say: Oh, but that cannot be the true meaning of the contract, because the company issued land grant bonds secured upon these 25,000,000 acres of land. There is nothing at all in that argument; for, let my hon. friend look at the bonds which were issued. I do not know that he ever saw one, for my part. I never saw one either; but I am quite sure of one thing, that the bonds which were issued in 1881 or 1882 never purported to be secured upon an actual block of land, but were secured on the undivided 25,000,000 acres of land, which, under the authority of the statute, were to be selected out of the millions of acres in the North-west Territories for the railway company and the proceeds from the sale thereof. Therefore, the argument of my hon. friend amounts to nothing at all.

If my hon. friend wants to be convinced in favour of the argument I present, he has only to look at section 11 of the contract. My hon. friend contends at this late day that the bonds were a mortgage on the lands of the company, like a mortgage given by a homesteader on his homestead or pre-emption. Although the land grant bonds of the company were issued in 1882, if I remember rightly, at that time it would have been impossible for the company to mortgage any of its lands. Look at section 11:

The grant of land hereby agreed to be made to the company shall be so made in alternate sections of 640 acres each, extending back 24 miles deep, on each side of the railway, from Winnipeg to Jasper House.

This is very plain; it provides that the blocks of land shall be taken on either side of the railway. But in 1882, when the bonds were issued, the lands were not even located, and therefore it was impossible to say that the lands were here or there. It depended altogether upon the location of the railway. If the location of the railway were at a certain latitude, the lands would be on either side of that location. If the location were made 50 miles further north, the lands would be 50 miles further north. If the location were not on the prairies, but on the banks of the Saskatchewan River, as first contemplated, the lands which would be subject to the bonds would not be as they are to-day, on the prairie, but on the banks of the Saskatchewan River. My hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) can, therefore, see that there is nothing in that argument of his. I have only to mention it to show the fallacy of the basis of the argument presented by the hon. gentleman. As I said a moment ago, the question is dependent altogether upon the interpretation of section 16 of the statute, as to what is meant by a grant. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) has argued that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, after having chosen a certain block of land, neglected to take its patent, that the land is therefore, in the occupation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that being so, no one can settle on the land except by the permission of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He complains that the letters patent have not been issued, and therefore, that it cannot be taxed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why were not the letters patent issued long ago?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is a thing which I do not know. But, suppose that the government of that day were lax in their duty in that respect, suppose that they insisted upon issuing patents to the Canadian Pacific Railway as soon as the lands were chosen, that would not alter the legal aspect of the case at all, although it might be a point against the government for being remiss in their duty. It does not in any way alter the legal construction of the Act. I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson), as I told him on a former occasion when he asked the government what we were going to do in the matter, the answer then was: That we have nothing at all to do, that it was a question altogether for the courts to determine whether or not his contention was right, or wrong. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) holds strongly to the view that the exemption from taxation must come to an end by the very terms of the law upon the 16th February, 1901. If my hon. friend is convinced of his opinion, and if he believes he is right that the exemption from taxation will terminate on the 16th February, 1901, it is open to any municipality to then levy taxation upon these lands. Whether the hon. gentleman's interpretation is correct or not, I do not argue at the present moment, but if he believes in his heart that he is right, let any municipality impose taxation upon these lands after the 16th February, 1901, and from that moment the position will be before the courts. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which is at present the owner of these lands, or rather, for whose benefit these lands have been set aside: the Canadian Pacific Railway then, will have to do either one of two things. They will have to pay the taxation that is imposed, or contest it in the courts. Then you will have a solution of the whole difficulty, and that is the only possible solution I can see. There is, moreover, another consideration which must appeal strongly to the sense of fairness of every member in this House. My hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) has referred to the fact that bonds to the extent of $25,000,000 have been issued upon that grant. These bonds are in the hands of disinterested owners, probably distributed all over the civilized world. The faith of the Crown and the faith of the people have been pledged upon these bonds that the terms of the contract would be respected. Would it not be monstrous that under such circumstances, parliament should undertake to say that the rights of the bondholders who have invested their money in these bonds should be abridged and determined by an Act of this parliament. If we were to decide on anything of the kind, the bondholders would have a right to complain to the Queen of England, that the parliament of Canada was not respecting the vested rights which they had in Canada. This circumstance is sufficient to show that the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) cannot be entertained for one single moment. I sympathize very strongly with the people of the North-west on this question. I sympathize with the settlers west of Lake Superior, but I have simply to tell them—and I would not hesitate to say it before any audience west of Lake Superior, because I know that they are law-abiding citizens, and that they will be the first to respect the law of the land—I would not hesitate to tell them that for good or for evil they must take the consequences of the law which has been placed on the statute-books. If after the judicial interpretation of this statute, there is still found a grievance, then it will be time enough to apply to parliament to find a remedy for it, if a remedy is to be found. But so long as the question remains in the position it is to-day, it is for the courts and not for this parliament to determine it. Let the people of the North-west go to the courts of the land, and there they will find the justice to which they are entitled, and the justice in which, I believe, they have ample and abundant faith. If after they have gone to the courts, and if the courts sustain the view that the grant is such as to make their position a perilous one, then they may perhaps, apply to parliament; but certainly before this has been done, and at the present time, I must say that I believe there is not a man in this House who will have the slightest hesitation in voting down the proposition of my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). It is unnecessary for me to add anything to the argument which has been addressed to the House by the First Minister, in order to convince even the mover of the resolution (Mr. Richardson) that he has asked this parliament to do an entirely impracticable thing. He has in terms, asked the House to do what, on the face of his own resolution, is shown to be utterly impossible, if we have any regard to the faith of parliament, or any regard to the law of the land. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) stated that he was not a lawyer, and even an ordinary layman would have suspected that, from the argument he made to the House. In the course of my experience, I have never heard a more lame or impotent conclusion than that which the hon. gentleman has come to. What is it? Why his very resolution recites the fact which has already been referred to by the First Minister:

That the lands of the company in the North-west Territories, until they are either sold or occupied shall also be free from such taxation, for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

Could anything be clearer than that? The hon. gentleman in the last clause of his resolution invites this House to violate the solemn contract made on the part of Canada with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That proposition is revolting to every sense of justice, and strikes at the very foundation of all faith in contracts. It invites this parliament to set at defiance all law and constitutional principles, and to vote on a principle which is entirely contrary to law. I cannot understand how my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) could have ventured to put such a proposition as that before the House. As to the terms of the grant from the Crown, that has already been dealt with by the First Minister, and I need not repeat it. It is perfectly obvious that no man living could for a single moment contend that that grant became a grant when the contract was made, and when not an acre of land had been earned. Not only that, but the hon. gentleman declares that in answer to an interpellation in parliament on the 12th February, 1900, as to the date of termination of the period of exemption from taxation, it was stated on behalf of the government:

That this is a matter of legal opinion which if disputed could only be settled by a judicial tribunal.

That is the opinion of the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General and the law officers of the Crown. He took the trouble in fact to obtain an absolute legal decision, so far as a legal opinion in this House can go, and the House must be governed by the legal opinion of the officers of the Crown in such matters, and that opinion was that this is a question beyond the powers of this House, which can only be settled by a judicial decision. Yet the hon. gentleman asks us to vote that that question, which can only be settled by a judicial decision, shall be settled by this House in defiance of the contract and the law.

I need not take up more time with reference to that. The proposition is so self-evident as not to require a single word of comment other than the argument which has just been addressed to the House by the right hon. the First Minister and which covers the entire case. But I must take some little exception, not only to the statements of my hon. friend in moving the resolution, but of my right hon. friend in rejecting this resolution. The hon. gentleman started with the premise that far more was given than was necessary in order to secure the construction of this road, and therefore that parliament has a claim against the Canadian Pacific Railway because the Canadian Pacific Railway received too much. I am sorry to say that that position my right hon. friend has slightly countenanced in the statement he has made as to the fierce and determined manner in which that contract was resisted by the Liberal party, of which the Hon. Edward Blake was then the leader and of whom my right hon. friend was one of the able followers. I want to deal with that subject for a few minutes, because, although it is not pleasant, twenty years after the battle was over, to have to shoulder one's crutch and fight it over again, I cannot allow these statements, so utterly at variance with the history of this transaction, to go forth to the country without challenging their accuracy. I say that one of the greatest things ever achieved for Canada, one of the greatest acts that any government was able to achieve in the interests of our people, was that Canadian Pacific Railway contract, and I not only say that, but will prove it, I think, to the satisfaction of even my right hon. friend before I sit down. What are the facts? The hon. gentleman talks about this land being worth $4.54 an acre, and he goes on to make, as a man with a lively imagination can, almost gigantic computations, showing the enormous cost of this work, but he forgets that so able and distinguished a public man as the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie declared on the floor of this House that this land was worthless. He forgets that when I was asking this parliament to give a large grant of this land to secure the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie said on the floor of this House that you not only could not sell the land, but would have to give it away and then hire people to live on it. What more? That same hon. gentleman, a man of great ability, one of the greatest ornaments of the parliament of Canada, and one of the greatest men that has ever adorned these benches, but who was not infallible in his opinion on all occasions, declared on the floor of this House that the whole resources of the British Empire could not build the Canadian Pacific Railway in ten years. Well, Sir, it is all very fine after this road has been built and the country opened up, after the impossible has been achieved, to talk as the hon. member who introduced this motion has done. But what did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) say on this subject? With reference to this very contract he declared that Canada was going to be ruined by it, that the result would be to so impoverish Canada as to leave no alternative but annexation. I am not blaming him for that expression of opinion, if he held it, as Mr. Blake undoubtedly held the opinion that it was an impossible undertaking, and as Mr. Mackenzie held the opinion that the whole resources of the British Empire could not accomplish it. I have no doubt that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries honestly held that opinion, and therefore I am not accusing him or any of these other gentlemen of any wrong-doing in having stated their views to the House; but when my hon. friend speaks of the enormous grants of land and money that were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway to secure the construction of the work, am I not justified in going back to the period when the contract was made and asking whether, as matters then stood, that great work, which every man of every political complexion in this country now admits to be an absolute necessity, was not constructed on the very lowest possible terms? What is the fact? I hold in my hand the evidence, and I draw the attention of my right hon. friend to this fact, that when he himself was a member of Mr. Mackenzie's government, Mr. Mackenzie stated to this House that he acted on the authority given him by the Railway Act of 1874, passed by the Liberal party and government in this House. My hon. friend subsequently became a member of that government and was a member of it in 1877, when Mr. Mackenzie made the statement I am going to read:

The whole effort of the administration from that day to this, has been directed to the accomplishment of this subject, the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to which he held his predecessors had improperly bound and committed the country. The whole effort of the administration from that day to this has been directed to the accomplishment of this work in the way that would seem to be most practicable and most available, considering the difficulties to be encountered and the cost to be incurred.

Well, the Mackenzie Railway Act of 1874 provides that 20,000 acres of land and $10,000 in cash per mile, actual cash, the land to be subject to certain regulations provided by the Act, should be granted and that tenders should be invited to state the additional sum, if any, upon which a guarantee of 4 per cent should be given by the Dominion for 25 years. What does that mean? It means that Mr. Mackenzie took from this parliament authority by law to offer to anybody who would do the work 20,000 acres of land per mile and $10,000 in cash per mile, and then invited the tenderers to state on what sum over and above that they would be willing to take 4 per cent for 25 years in order to induce them to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway. That means that on the 2,529 miles from Lake Nipissing, the terminus in Ontario, to the Pacific Ocean at Fort Moody, 20,000 acres would be granted per mile, which would amount to, not 25,000,000 acres of land but 50,580,000 acres. That was the land grant which Mr. Mackenzie and my right hon. friend offered for the purpose of securing the construction of this work, and in addition $10,000 in cash per mile or $25,295,000 in cash and fifty and one-half millions acres of land. What further? Mr. Mackenzie informs us—and at the time I am speaking of my right hon. friend was a member of the government:

Hon. gentlemen opposite and the whole country are aware that we solicited tenders in vain for some months upon this grant of fifty and a half millions acres of land and over $25,000,000 in cash, besides an invitation to state how much over and above that they would be willing to take interest on at 4 per cent for twenty-five years.

Also that Mr. Sandford Fleming, the chief engineer, was instructed, while in London to place himself in communication with contractors and financial men and also to obtain the assistance of Sir John Rose, who, in many things, had been the active, energetic and patriotic agent of the Dominion, with a view to the carrying out of this scheme.

Now, Sir, what further? Mr. Mackenzie informs the House:

But I am informed that, notwithstanding all our efforts, we signally failed in obtaining one single offer (there was one imperfect offer made) for the construction of the railroad on those terms, which were the grant of 20,000 and $10,000 cash per mile, with a guarantee of 4 per cent upon such balance as might be represented as necessary. No terms could be more explicit; it would be difficult to mention terms more favourable. . . . I have made up my mind long ago that it will be exceedingly difficult for a population of 4,000,000 so to conduct financial transactions connected with the building of that railroad of 2,600 miles across an unknown and an almost untrodden continent, in many places extremely difficult. I frankly say now, after my experience in endeavouring to accomplish something in that direction that I fear we shall be incapable of accomplishing anything in that direction at present.

That is historical; that is on the records of the country; showing the position in which we stood when the contract was made. No person has a greater responsibility than I have in that regard, and I may say that what occurred was this: The Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, who was Minister of the Interior, had made up his mind to go to England and see if he could not obtain the construction of certain sections of the road in the North-west Territories, which he found to be absolutely necessary for the settlement of the country. He invited the council to meet him that day week and offer suggestions to him for carrying out his object in that regard. I said: Sir John, would you have any objection to my, as Minister of Railways and Canals, submitting a proposition, when we meet this day week, for the complete and prompt construction of the whole line of the Canadian Pacific Railway? His answer was: Well, Tupper, that is a very large order; but of course, we will be very glad to see anything you may submit. I have under my hand the very report—in the handwriting of Mr. Tilley, then a clerk in the Railway Department, now dead—which I made to the council, proposing that we should endeavour to secure the prompt construction of the road from Nipissing in Ontario to Port Moody on the Pacific, and offering to give those parts of the road already completed, 25,000,000 acres of land and $25,000,000 in cash. We went to London, and we were able to secure the signing of the contract on those terms. And will any one be surprised at the terms we offered, when he considers what had been said by men in such a position as Mr. Mackenzie when Prime Minister of Canada, Hon. Edward Blake, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and other gentlemen, declaring the utter impracticability of the scheme for a country such as Canada? Under these circumstances, it is too late in the day for me to be told in this House that that contract was obtained under improvident terms. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who has just taken his seat used language that he ought to recall when he said that it was a 'grievous act.' I am glad to know that Mr. Blake—who, undoubtedly, had underrated the great resources of Canada, and especially of British Columbia—when he had the opportunity of travelling over that road to the coast, he fully recognized the mistaken view that he had held as to the ability of Canada to accomplish that work and the terms upon which it was accomplished. The present Premier of Ontario, Hon. Mr. Ross, who has been quoted here as an opponent of the contract, has recently felt called upon, in justice to his own reputation, to declare that he was entirely wrong and that one of the greatest and most beneficial acts that ever was accomplished by the parliament of Canada was the carrying through of that contract and the construction of that great line of railway. If the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) thinks that no change has taken place in the opinions of the Liberal party since 1880-1, when we were struggling for this contract, he is a veritable Rip Van Winkle—he has been asleep and is asleep now, or he would know that the greatest men in the Liberal party, with one voice, admit not only that the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was an absolute necessity for Canada, but that it has proved one of the most fortunate acts of this parliament from the beginning of its history down to the present time. I am not surprised that there was opposition; I am only surprised that there were any public men who had, I might almost say, the audacity to grapple with such a giant undertaking. There is no parallel in the history of the world for four millions of people as we were then grappling with so arduous a work and carrying it to a successful completion.

My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) speaks sympathetically of the people of the North-west. No person has deeper sympathy with the people of the North-west than I have. But, my right hon. friend should not forget that there are not merely scores, not merely hundreds but thousands of men who have gone into that North-west, opened up as it has been by this great inter-oceanic line of railway, and, with nothing but their honest industry, have made themselves and their families independent. Look at what has been achieved for Canada; see these Rocky Mountains pierced by this railway and shown to be—instead of a sea of inhospitable mountains as Mr. Blake believed them—charged with gold, silver, copper, lead and other metals. That country in which he had no faith—and especially if we include the Yukon, which, by communication with the Pacific coast has been given communication with all Canada—will rival any mineral country in the world. I was told in another place that I was making myself the exponent of the great railway corporations of this country. I have not done so. I stand here as a thoroughly independent member of this parliament, prepared to do battle where I think honesty and justice and fair-play require it, in favour of any corporation however large and of any man however humble. I may just say in passing that I was subjected to insult by—I will not say a gentleman, because he is no gentleman—a representative in the legislature of Prince Edward Island. I refer to Mr. Arthur Peters, whom I charge here and now on the floor of this House with having uttered a monstrous, lying and thoroughly unfounded libel against myself on the floor of the legislature of Prince Edward Island. What does he say?

Sir Charles had the effrontery to make a charge of this kind in face of the fact that he himself was at one time a poor medical practitioner, in Halifax, a man who made no money in his profession, and yet to-day we find him one of the richest men in Canada. From politics, and from no other source under heaven did Sir Charles derive his wealth. Much of it, we know, was gained from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Now, Sir, it would be impossible to crowd more base, unfounded, and malicious falsehoods into a few lines than Mr. Arthur Peters succeeded in crowding into this statement made on the floor of the legislature of Prince Edward Island; and as this matter has come up here, I think it not improper to refer to it. I fought the battle of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract in this House, and subsequently it was proved to a demonstration that we did not give enough to accomplish the work with all the monopolies and privileges which that contract gave to the company; they were utterly broken down in 1884, and all the directors with one single exception, were ready to throw up their hands and abandon everything they had put into it, and give it up as a hopeless task. The credit was assailed in New York by the Northern Pacific Company, it was assailed in London by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, they were paralysed, they were unable to pay their men, and the whole enterprise was in the utmost peril, simply because, with all the concessions granted them, they could not carry their work through. What did I do? At the request of Sir John A. Macdonald, I came out from England, I came to this parliament, and I asked parliament to lend them $30,000,000 more in order to prevent that work from becoming a wreck, and to secure its prompt completion, and parliament granted the money. Mr. Blake said: Do not call it a loan, you know it is a gift, you know we will never see a dollar of the money. The money was all repaid before it was due, and one of the most successful enterprises that has ever redounded to the honour and progress of Canada was that Canadian Pacific Railway enterprise, I say that unhesitatingly.

But I say that if there is a man in this country who is in a position to vindicate himself from ever having forfeited his independence as a member of this parliament in reference to that great work that man is myself. Why, Sir, the time came when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, no doubt under the impression that they were entitled to it, made a claim on the government of Canada for $5,000,000 in connection with that work, basing that claim upon statements made by myself to them, as they recollected the statements, at the time the contract was signed. Arbitration was resorted to, a body of high-minded and able arbitrators was appointed. The Hon. Edward Blake was the advocate of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and Mr. Christopher Robinson, a very eminent lawyer, defended the government against that claim. I was sent for to come out from England, because I was the party who had made the contract, and with whom these conversations were alleged to have taken place upon which they based their claim. I admitted frankly that about half a million dollars was practically due, because it would require something like that sum to complete the work with the degree of efficiency that was contemplated under the contract. But something over four millions of money rested upon the claim that I had lowered the character of the work after the contract was made, and contrary to the understanding with these gentlemen; and therefore, it would take $4,000,000 to bring the work up to the standard that was demanded. I came out here and went to see Sir John A. Macdonald. I said: 'Sir John, you surely remember when the contract was signed that there was no conversation of this kind.'

'Well,' he said, 'Tupper, I really do not remember anything about it. I had such entire confidence in your management of railway matters that I confess I did not give the subject attention at all; I depended upon you.' I therefore, went single-handed into the witness box in the presence of these arbitrators, and under the cross-examination of Mr. Blake, I entirely destroyed the claim these gentlemen had put forward for about four millions of money. Now, I ask whether I did not there and then give clear and incontrovertible evidence of my thorough independence as a public man. I may say here that never, with respect to anything that I did for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in this House, or as a member of the government of Canada, did any person connected with that great organization ever insult me by the offer of the slightest compensation or return whatever—because I should have treated it as nothing else than the grossest insult.

This gentleman who appears to have studied my career with great care, says that I was a poor medical practitioner in Halifax. Well, I may have been a poor practitioner, because a man who is not skilful may be called a poor practitioner. But if he means to say that I was a poor man, his statements are false. I went to the city of Halifax after fourteen years of laborious practice in my profession, where I had a great and most profitable practice; I went to the city of Halifax as a public man, and when I took office in 1867 I was an independent man. Therefore, the statement that I went there impoverished is a falsehood of the most glaring character, as can be established in the most incontrovertible manner. When we were defeated at the end of three years, I went into practice in the city of Halifax, and at the end of a little over three years, when we carried the province from end to end, when there were only fifteen Liberal members elected in the whole province of Nova Scotia in a House of fifty-five members, I had at that time acquired so valuable and important a medical practice, that I could not afford to give it up. It was worth three or four times what my salary as provincial secretary would be worth, and I was compelled to take a medical partner and to remain in the profession, because I could not abandon my lucrative practice. I spent twenty-nine years of my life in the arduous practice of the medical profession, and it is not for me to say with what success. But I certainly never had reason to complain of a lack of lucrative practice wherever I was engaged. So much for that falsehood.

Then, there is another greater and still more monstrous falsehood in this statement of Mr. Peters, and that is that I am one of the richest men in Canada. I have no hesitation in saying frankly to this House that I profess to have some ability, some financial and commercial ability, the same ability to manage business that every person requires in his own interest, and I have had opportunities of a very admirable character to give me a field for the development of that talent, whatever it was. I do not hesitate to say that I should be greatly ashamed of myself, if under those circumstances, I was a pauper; I should feel it would be a great reflection upon my character as a business man, which I always profess to be, and not only a business man, but a great economist, I may say that when I was asked to take the position of Prime Minister of Canada, I resigned positions of high character and standing in the city of London, that gave me £90,000 sterling a year over and above the income I was receiving from the country. That was as director of the Bank of British Columbia, chairman of a cable company connected with Brazil, and director of the General Mining Association, positions which, instead of impairing my usefulness to the country, I think, greatly increased it, because they brought me into contact with men of standing and of character in business life, and enabled me to serve Canada more fully than otherwise I could have done. But when I took the position of Prime Minister I felt bound to relieve myself of all these obligations and connections, and I did so. When I was invited to become the leader of the Liberal-Conservative party, and when I accepted that leadership, my financial position was such, and such obligations rested upon me, that I felt the necessity of doing something to increase my annual income. I was, therefore, compelled to accept positions in connection with the development of our gold mining industry in this country, in order to increase my annual income so as to enable me to discharge my duty to the great Liberal-Conservative party that had done me the honour to invest me with its leadership. I feel bound to meet this slander of my being a rich man, which I am sorry to say, brings constant claims upon me, that I am unable to respond to. In self-defence I am obliged to protect myself against such slanders, because this is a base falsehood uttered by a man who is no gentleman, and it is without any ground whatever. Do not mistake me, Mr. Speaker, I do not deny Mr. Peters' right, or the right of any man in this House, or even any man taking an interest in public affairs, if he knows that a man has dishonoured and degraded himself by attempting, as a member of the parliament of this country, to enrich himself, to make the charge public. There is no higher crime, in my judgment, which can be brought against a man, and any man has a right, and he would be fully justified if he has such knowledge, to make that charge against me, if he could. I have shown the House how utterly unfounded it is, and I regard Mr. Peters as having disgraced himself by this attempt to injure a man whom,

I am happy to say, is out of his power to reach or injure. I shall join the right hon. First Minister with great pleasure in voting down the resolution which is the most illogical and the most unreasonable that I have ever seen offered in this House.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being included in the same strong language that we have heard applied to gentlemen who think along the lines laid down in the resolution my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). I take the liberty of seconding that resolution in this House. In doing so let me say that when I agreed to second it I hardly expected that the resolution would be met by the opposition of the leaders on both sides of the House or I might have been somewhat more delicate about accepting the responsibility. It is not, however, a matter of choice in my case. The question of the taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands is, I may say, the question in the part of the country that I represent. For reasons good or bad the greater part of the land grant of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been selected in northern Alberta and western Saskatchewan. To-day that country is settling up rapidly and the question of the possibility of taxing land owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is the most important question facing the people there, which, they certainly expect, will be dealt with by this House. As to the importance of that question to the people there I may explain that there are sixteen sections of Canadian Pacific Railway land in each township and wherever there is a settlement in a township, that township is set apart as a statute labour district, and every settler has to pay $2.50 on a quarter section of his land. The exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway in every statute labour township in the North-west Territories is $160 a year—$160 a year that the people in that township have practically to pay, or, they have to do without the work that the money will pay for. Wherever there is a township settled there is also a school district which has to be supported by the taxes of the people, and it means that wherever there is a settlement the exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway land in that country amounts to $5 per quarter section, which has to be paid practically by the people settled there. It is a live question in that country, and the people, believing that this exemption from taxation would expire at the beginning of next year, and expecting to be able to tax that land in January, or February, of next year, certainly will read with very great pain, with very great surprise, with very great disappointment the declarations that have been made in this House to-night, not so much that the law will not compel the payment of taxes on this land, as that the leaders on both sides of this House have declared themselves against aiding in any way to compel the company to pay taxes on that land.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think in the absence of the right hon. First Minister, I must justify both him and myself by saying that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is entirely mistaken. No statement has fallen from the lips of either the First Minister or myself that has indicated any indisposition whatever to do anything that can legally be done to aid the people of the North-west, but what we object to is the attempt to invite this House to override the law instead of settling the law in the only way in which it can be settled, by a judicial tribunal.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose I am at liberty to interpret the words uttered in this House according to my own judgment. If I believe that the argument used by the hon. leader of the opposition is in favour of the company and against the people, I am entitled to say so. I certainly do understand so, and I say that the company is very fortunate in having such an able advocate in this House; and the people would be very fortunate if they had as able advocacy in their effort to secure bare justice in this House, which is all we are asking for. The argument which has been carried on in this House to-night will be disappointing to the people of the west because of its absolute, utter and entire unfairness; for the hon. gentlemen who have spoken have not spoken on the point at issue. They have, either deliberately and intentionally, or through a failure to understand the matter, misrepresented the question that is before the House. The question that is before the House is not whether the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be brought under taxation in February, 1901. That is not the question embodied in the resolution. The direction contained in the resolution, upon which the House is asked to vote, is that lands owned, or earned by the company shall be patented to them. That is all that the House is asked to declare. The opinion is expressed that after a certain date in February of next year the land will be taxable, but no action is asked to be taken on that point. The action is asked to be taken on the patenting of the lands, so that if perchance they are taxable then the taxation may be levied. If the lands remain as they are to-day, and if it should be that the law would permit of them being taxed in February, 1901, the taxes cannot be levied, if the lands have not been patented, because you cannot collect a tax unless the people own the land, and they do not own the land until they have got their patents.

Mr. POWELL. How many acres are yet unpatented?

Mr. OLIVER. More than 15,000,000 acres, I think. What we want is, that this parliament shall declare, and that this government shall act, to put the land in such a position that when and so soon as the law declares it shall be taxable, that it may be taxable. We say, in our ignorance if you like, as laymen, as men who do not understand the quips and quibbles of the law; we say, that if that land was in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, solid enough for them to mortgage it on a certain date, it is in their hands solid enough for the exemption from taxation to begin from that date. If we are mistaken on that point, then Sir Hector Langevin, and the leader of the opposition (as shown by the pages of Hansard) were mistaken too. They are on record as saying that that exemption would expire in twenty years. They asked their followers to vote the contract through the House on that plea. If we are mistaken they were mistaken. They ought to have known at least as well as the members of this House. Surely the men who made the bargain ought to be good evidence as to what the terms of that bargain meant. Now, supposing the land does not become taxable in twenty years from the date of the charter being granted; suppose the intention is that it shall become taxable after twenty years from the date it is earned in sections; still it must be patented before it can be taxed, and several such sections of that land under that arrangement would be taxable within two years from the present time. Supposing, again, that the land is only taxable twenty years after it is patented by the Crown, then all the more reason that this resolution should be passed, so that in twenty years from now it may be taxed. Under the interpretation which the leader of the government favours, it is not taxable until twenty years after it has been patented. Then, I say, it is all the more reason that this resolution should be adopted and that the lands should be patented forthwith, so that if it only becomes taxable at twenty years from this date, it shall not be more than twenty years. Then, if it is not taxable in 1901, or if it is not taxable until twenty years from its being earned, or if it is not taxable for twenty years from the granting of the patent, you may ask: Why pass this resolution? I will tell you why it should be passed at once and why it should be acted upon at once. It is the system of the Canadian Pacific Railway not to sell their land outright, but to give an agreement of sale. As a matter of fact, the lands which are stated to have been sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway are not yet out of their hands, to a large extent. The land, by an arrangement with the government, is listed to the Canadian Pacific, and when a buyer wants a quarter section he makes a selection, the price is agreed upon, and he gets an agreement of sale. The payments extend over ten years, and the patent is not issued until the last dollar is paid at the end of the tenth year. And, inasmuch as that land has not been transferred from the Crown, taxes are not collectable upon it by process of law until that time. If the Canadian Pacific Railway have sold 1,000,000 acres of land, the chances are that the greater part of that million acres is still not paying taxes, although it has passed properly out of their hands. It is necessary that the land should be patented to them in order that the land they sell would become taxable at once for school and municipal purposes. The reasons that these lands are not actually sold is to avoid the possibility of back taxes being collected from the railway company. Suppose Mr. A. buys a quarter section, if the company sold that land outright to him, and he had taxes assessed against him, and the land reverted to the company, then the taxes would revert as well if the patent had been issued. But under this scheme of the patents not being issued, Mr. A. does not need to pay any taxes as long as he is on the land, and so if the land reverts to the Canadian Pacific Railway, there are no back taxes against them. I say that in all fairness to the people of the North-west, we want you to pass this resolution so that the government will know that the voice of the people is in favour of the granting of these patents, and so that this rank injustice which prevails in all the settlements of the North-west where land is being sold, shall at any rate be stopped now. That much should be done at least. As to the urgency of this matter, we hold, on the authority of the men who made this bargain, that the exemption expires in February next. We may be wrong, but at any rate there is a reasonable probability that it expires then, and if there is such a reasonable probability it is the business of this parliament and of this government to put the land in such a position that if it should turn out that our contention is correct, taxes may be collected upon that land at that time. We do not ask you to declare that it is taxable at any time; we ask you to give an opinion, but we do not ask you to take any action on that opinion. There is no necessity for the leaders of both sides of this House to weep on each other's shoulders at the danger of some injustice being done to the Canadian Pacific Railway in this matter of taxes, because it is not an arguable question until next year. When next year comes, then it will be an arguable question and it will have to be fought out in this House from year to year. But, in the meanwhile, the Canadian Pacific Railway is perfectly safe, and they are in no danger if we resolved until the cows come home. What we want is to provide at the present time for a certain contingency which in the resolution we say may arise. That is reasonable and fair, and we are asking nothing but plain justice in asking that that action be taken. I want to say just a few words on another feature of this case. It seems to be a habit in this House, that when any question comes up which concerns the interests of the people the cry of confiscation or socialism is at once raised. If we demand the rights of the public, we are regarded as doing wrong to somebody else. We are here for the purpose of doing the best we can in the general interest, and we have heard time and again, year in and year out, that the general interest of the country is to have the North-west developed. I can tell this House that nothing has stood more against the development of the North-west in the last fifteen or twenty years than this bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the restrictions and disadvantages put upon the settlers by virtue of it. They have looked forward to relief from this burden at the end of twenty years; they have looked forward to it with confidence, because they never supposed, and the country never supposed, that such a course would be taken as to extend that exemption indefinitely, as appears to be the intention now. They fully expected that that relief would come some time next year; and because of that there has been a feeling of confidence and hope in the North-west and the country generally in the matter of settlement. But when you turn round and say to them, this burden from which you have been suffering during these years is not only not to be lifted from you, but those who should be your champions are champions in the other cause, I say you are taking the heart out of the people; you are doing more to keep back the settlement and development of the North-west by intelligent and progressive people than you could do by any other means. It is a matter of fact, a matter of figures, that our Canadian-born citizens have been going to the United States for the last twenty or thirty years three to one as compared with those who have gone to our own North-west. Why is this? Do the United States offer better natural inducements for settlement than the North-west? They do not. But there has been fostered in the minds of the people of this country a feeling that injustice is done to the settler of the west, that his interest is a secondary interest, that it is the Canadian Pacific Railway first, last and all the time, and the settler comes in nowhere. It is that feeling that has caused our people to go to the United States instead of to the North-west; and I am sorry to think that means are not taken at the earliest possible moment to remove that impression—to say that these difficulties which, for good reason or bad reason, have existed there so long, shall cease at the earliest possible moment—shall cease exactly when their time is up. Give that idea throughout the west, and throughout this country generally, and then you may expect to see development. Then you may expect to see our sons, our brothers, our people settling on those plains, and giving you a civilization such as or better than you have here. You will not then need to go to Russia or to Galicia to bring people who certainly degrade our civilization and are a detriment to the settlement of our country. If we need to bring those people—and we do not need to bring them—it is because we have not made the conditions of that country such as the country requires. It is because we have not done the best we could for the people of the country; and when the time has come for which the people have waited to be relieved of this incubus, they are told not only that the time is not up, but that it is extended not merely for twenty years more, but for twenty times twenty years, so far as any practical sympathy in this House is concerned. In this you are doing the greatest injury you can to the progress and development of the North-west, as well as to this eastern country, whose success and development depends so much on the success and development of that.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Before the hon. gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask him a question, simply for information. When does he claim that the exemption begins?

Mr. RICHARDSON. On February 15, 1881.

Mr. POWELL. When was the road completed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In 1886.

Mr. POWELL. Would not the term of exemption be from the completion of the road? I am simply asking for information?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The statute says for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown—these are the words.

Mr. POWELL. That would be construed to mean, would it not, after the Crown should make the grant?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is one clause that says after the completion of twenty miles, the land and money pertaining to that twenty miles, shall be granted.

Mr. J. G. RUTHERFORD (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from the province of Manitoba, I have a great deal of sympathy with the resolution laid before the House this afternoon by the hon. member for Lisgar. There is no question that the immunity from taxation which the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have so long enjoyed in the west and are now enjoying, has been a great grievance to the settlers in that country. As this question has been fully discussed this afternoon, I do not think it necessary for me to take up the time of the House in again going over the ground. There is no question, however, that every effort should be made by the government to put those lands in such a position that they can be taxed at as early a date as possible. Had the resolution not contained a clause distinctly specifying the 16th of February, 1901, as being the date on which the immunity from taxation would cease, I would have had a very great deal of pleasure in supporting it. But I feel, especially after the lucid explanation of the leader of the government, that any one supporting the resolution as it now stands would be guilty of self-stultification to some extent. I would suggest to the hon. member for Lisgar, if he can obtain the assent of the House to do so, that he should eliminate that portion of his resolution. If that were done, the rest, I am sure, would meet with the approval of the majority of the members of this House. Being, like the hon. member for Lisgar, not much of a lawyer, I do not intend to weary the House with legal arguments, which, coming from one of my standing, would have no great value; but I would simply say that whether or not the date of the land becoming liable to taxation is in February, 1901, whether or not the grant from the Crown is at the date of the issue of the patent, there is no reason why the patents should not issue at as early a date as possible. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are entitled to these lands, I cannot see why they should not be compelled to take their patents now, or as soon as possible, and I think there can be no excuse for delay in issuing them. For these reasons, I regret to say that with the clause in the resolution to which I have referred, I feel unable to support it, although I have full sympathy with the object at which it aims.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). The motion before the House, Mr. Speaker, has certainly had a very harsh reception, and it does not appear to me to have been fairly or frankly treated. I have not been in any way convinced by the arguments made by the leaders on both sides that theirs is a right view of the case which we ought to accept. Of course, I concur heartily in the proposition that this parliament would not think on any consideration of placing an interpretation on its own acts. We have no intention of going back on the British principle of leaving the interpretation of all Acts to the courts; but, if this is a matter for reference to the courts, it should be referred to them without further delay. The exemption clause as regards the land read as follows:

The lands of the company in the North-west Territories, until they are either sold or occupied shall also be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof by the Crown.

There are three possible interpretations. Does that twenty years mean twenty years from the passing of the Act, or twenty years after the completion of certain sections of the road or the whole work, or twenty years after the patents for the land are issued? If the last is right, then the Canadian Pacific Railway has an exemption in perpetuity, because that company does not take out patents and need not do so until it sells the land; and when it does sell the land and the land passes to the purchaser, the purchaser becomes liable for the taxes. In my opinion, there is no doubt that such an exemption was not in the minds of those who made the contract and is not in the Act. Then, does the twenty years mean from the completion of the work? There is less to support this ground than any other. The Act seems to me to state that the twenty years should count from the date of its passage, and that on the passage of the Act these lands became immediately available for the use of the company, and to all intents and purposes, the grant was then made to the company. At all events, it is a matter of contract, and there are two parties to the contract—the people of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway—and this parliament should look after the rights of the people.

The right hon. the leader of the House took the position that the party in opposition in 1881 did not succeed in having their views prevail, and that the Act now in force was passed and became the law of the land. That is the case, but I cannot find—and I have read through the debates of that period, as well as the Act itself—that either the opposition or the government were of the opinion that this Act gave the Canadian Pacific Railway exemption from taxation in perpetuity on those lands. I do not think that any question was raised on that point at all, and I do not find that the Hon. Edward Blake claims that this monstrosity was perpetual. He said:

They have perpetual exemption from taxation of their enormous property, a most monstrous provision, in my opinion. Why! this monstrosity is not to last merely twenty years, which is to be the period of bondage in other respects, but it is to last for ever.

That is exemption in perpetuity as regards the right of way, and in other respects it was for twenty years.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman will read that closely, he will see that Mr. Blake was referring to the road-bed, which is for ever exempt from taxation.

Mr. PUTTEE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I used the expression 'right of way' when I should have said 'road-bed.' But, the onus of proving this matter, if it goes to law, should not be placed on the municipalities of the North-west. Of course, the North-west is most concerned, but this is a contract made before the people went into that country, between parliament and the Canadian Pacific Railway; and the North-west has the right to look to the Dominion parliament to have this matter settled and have the people relieved of this burden. I do not see in any case, that the people of the North-west have an opportunity to bring this matter to the courts, because the lands are not taxable until patented, and if they are not patented, how can the municipalities tax them?

I see no difficulty in supporting the motion before the House, but it should be pointed out that the motion is not in the exact words of the notice in the Votes and Proceedings. In the Votes and Proceedings it reads:

That in the opinion of this House the lands covered by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will become subject to taxation on the 15th of February, 1891.

It would not be right to pass the motion in that shape, but I understand that, as read by the mover, it provides that the lands shall now be patented, so that whatever the ruling of the courts may be, we shall put the municipalities in the position of being able to tax these lands when the exemption period expires.

DUTY ON GRANITE.

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). Before we go into Committee of Supply, I desire, for a few moments, to direct the attention of hon. members of this House to a matter affecting an important industry in this country. It is well known that there are large deposits of granite in various parts of Canada. In one county in the province of Quebec there is a deposit of granite sufficient, perhaps, to supply this whole country for a hundred years to come. For years the prospects seemed to be favourable for those operating the quarries, there being every reason to believe that they could carry on their business at a fair profit. But, since the preferential tariff of 25 per cent was put in force the companies operating quarries in this country have been simply striving for existence instead of making the profit which they were able to make when they commenced their industry. And, since the Minister of Finance has announced that it is the intention of this government to increase the present tariff from 25 to 33½ per cent, some of these parties who have been doing a fairly profitable business, say that it will be impossible to continue the same class of work to compete with granite that is imported into this country from Great Britain. One gentleman connected with this industry, said:

If this further preferential tariff of 33½ per cent is to be enforced, we may bid good-bye to a large proportion of our business.

And the manager of a large industry in this line makes this statement:

Now, we submit it is not just. And we have a large amount of capital invested in this business, and a number of our men own their homes and the only means whereby they can earn their living is in the stone business, or, at least that is the business by which they can best earn a livelihood for themselves and their families. We ask only for justice for ourselves and for those who work for us.

They claim that it is an unjust thing, that after spending large sums of money in acquiring quarries in different parts of the country and, further large sums in providing sufficient plant not only to quarry the granite but to dress it and prepare it for market, the government should take off the protection which they had counted upon, leaving them in a position in which their vested interests in this great industry are injured.

The great difficulty seems to be that, since the preferential tariff has come into effect and the duties have been reduced—and that difficulty will be increased when the preference is still further increased—they cannot compete with the cheap material and cheap labour of Great Britain. One of the parties interested in that industry says that if this 33½ per cent comes into force they may bid good-bye to a large proportion of their business. It will have the effect, it seems, of shutting them out of a large proportion of the business; and there is no other employment into which a great number of the people now engaged in that business can go. They will feel it all the more, because many of them own their houses and will be obliged to go to some other country to find employment. The difficulty is that in England they can employ men at 14 cents an hour to dress granite, while in this country, the price paid is regulated by what is paid to American artisans—35 cents an hour, the price that is paid along our borders. I have a statement which will show to the members of the government something of the position in which the industry of this country finds itself. Take, as an example, 25 cubic feet of granite in England and in this country. The relative cost is shown by the following figures:

Great Britain —
Stone costing, laid down in yard, say 25 feet at average price of 60 cents per foot .....	$15 00
Say 100 hours labour finishing same, at 14 cents per hour.....	14 00
Boxing.....	1 25
Duty on $29, at 35 per cent.....	10 15
<hr/>
Total cost.....	$40 40
Less 25 per cent on $10.15.....	2.54
<hr/>
Net cost.....	$37 86
Canada—
Say 25 feet at average price, 75 cents per foot .....	$18 75
Say 100 hundred hours finishing, at 35 cents per hour .....	35 00
<hr/>
Total showing cost in our yard here, of stone when finished and ready for shipment.....	$55 25
<hr/>
Great Britain.....	$37 86
Excess of Canadian price over English price .....	17 39
Mr. MOORE.

This is a difference of about 48 per cent. It will be seen at once that the increase in the preferential tariff from 25 per cent to 33½ per cent will destroy this important industry, and throw a great many people out of employment, while compelling the people of this country to import their granite from outside instead of supplying it for themselves. I do not propose to embarrass the government by making a motion in regard to this matter. I merely wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to it. We heard that hon. gentleman say that he was not going to reduce the duties on any article. We had hoped that he would reduce the duties on coal oil, tobacco and other necessaries of life. But the announcement has been made that it is the policy of the government not to reduce the duties on the necessaries of life, notwithstanding that a large surplus is anticipated for the present year and that they have an overflowing treasury. Instead of making a motion, I merely suggest the idea to the government. The hon. minister said he would not reduce the duty on any article—it is said that a bad promise is better broken than kept—but he has not said he would not increase the duty. I propose that they should increase the duty on granite by from 10 to 20 per cent. That would not mean the breaking of the hon. gentleman's promise, and it would preserve that industry to this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I suppose that, following the same rule, if we increased the duty on coal oil, my hon. friend (Mr. Moore) would not be so much pleased. But, after all there is as much reason for increasing it in one case, nearly as in the other. I appreciate the importance of the industry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Moore) has referred to, and it is hardly necessary to say that the government would not take any step which they believed would bear unfairly upon that industry. We know that whenever a change is made in the tariff there is always a strong disposition on the part of people interested in particular branches of trade to fear that they are going to suffer from it. I suppose a tariff change, especially a reduction in the tariff, was never made without exciting in some quarters a certain degree of anxiety and alarm, and in many cases it has been found that the anxiety was needless and the alarm was mistaken, and I trust it will be proved so in this case. The duty on the manufactured granite is 35 per cent. If you take off the preferential duty, even at the increased rate as proposed on the 1st of July, you still have a duty of upwards of 23 per cent on the manufactured granite, and I really think that is still a fair revenue duty, indeed some persons might almost be justified in calling it a protective duty. However, the hon. gentleman is correct in stating that the determination has been announced by the government not to make changes in detail during the present session. If the time comes when such changes generally will have to be considered, we shall keep in mind what the hon. gentleman has said respecting the granite industry. But I have a strong hope that experience will show that with the reduced duty of 23 and a fraction per cent, there will still be a sufficient basis to enable the industry to be carried on as successfully in the future as in the past.

Mr. MOORE. The hon. gentleman referred to coal oil, and asked if I was in favour of increasing the duties on coal oil. I would not be in favour of increasing the duty on coal oil. It has already been increased during the last two years by 200 per cent. I think that is high enough, and instead of increasing it I would be in favour of taking it all off.

PRIVATE MAIL BAGS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). As it is possible I may not be present when the estimates of the Postmaster General are under discussion, I would like to bring to his attention a matter connected with the administration of the Post Office Department in my county. Last year I called his attention to a matter relating to the delivery of mails by private bags to one W. C. Henley, a municipal councillor and well-known man in my constituency; and the hon. gentleman was good enough to say that under the circumstances as they then presented themselves to him, there was not the slightest objection to Mr. Henley's request being granted. I forwarded a Hansard containing the hon. gentleman's remarks, to Mr. Henley, and he induced the postmistress to carry out the arrangement which had been in effect before. What the hon. gentleman stated at that time was merely this: He said there was not the slightest objection to the postmaster delivering mail to a carrier as the agent of the person to whom it was addressed and at the request of that person, the postmaster under such circumstances assuming no responsibility whatever, because the person to whom it was addressed received delivery of it when it was handed to the carrier. Well, the difficulty which subsequently arose seems to be this: Mr. Henley resides at Spry Bay in the county of Halifax, and the bag which he had made up was made up at Tangier, while his mail matter is addressed to Spry Bay. It seems that some regulation of the department has been invoked on account of which it is forbidden to deliver mail at Tangier addressed to Spry Bay, and it is with regard to that that Mr. Henley makes his complaint. Now, the arrangement that I asked for last year was carried out for some months, after the debate which took place, and no difficulty whatever arose about it. I may also mention to the Postmaster General that the same arrangement accorded to Mr. Henley had been carried out for about twenty-five years before the interference of the post office inspector. During all that time not the slightest difficulty had been found with regard to it. But the peculiar position of this matter is that although the post office inspector placed his reason for refusing this concession to Mr. Henley upon this ground, there are no less than three instances in my own county where, under exactly the same circumstances, private bags of this kind are allowed. One of those is referred to by Lieut.-Col. Macdonald, post office inspector. I will read to the hon. gentleman his letter addressed to myself, and I will inquire of him what he thinks of the views of the post office inspector with regard to this subject. His letter is dated the 20th of October, last:

My dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, and in reply to say that it is a fact that, on my recent visit to Tangier, I instructed the postmistress to discontinue the making up of a private mail bag containing the correspondence of Mr. W. C. Henley. My reason for doing so was, that Mr. Henley's mail matter is addressed 'Spry Bay,' and as the regulations of the department expressly prohibit the delivery of matter directed to a particular post office from another office en route.

I have no doubt whatever that, had the hon. the Postmaster General been made acquainted with all the circumstances of the case when the matter was brought up in parliament last session, he would have given quite a different answer to your question. I have the best of reasons for believing that he was under the impression that Mr. Henley's correspondence was addressed 'Tangier,' in which case there would certainly be an objection to its being delivered from that office to the mail courier or any one else designated by Mr. Henley.

As regards Mr. Kirker's bag, I may say that I found him in enjoyment of the privilege when I was appointed inspector, and understood that he had enjoyed it since before confederation. I did not therefore interfere with him.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. G. MACDONALD.

Post Office Inspector.

Now, that seems to be a very remarkable statement from an officer administering affairs under any government. He says to Mr. Henley: I cannot permit you to enjoy this privilege; but because Mr. Kirker has been allowed to break the law for twenty-five or thirty years, I propose to continue allowing him to break the law and the regulations of the department. I really cannot understand a post office inspector advancing such a reason as that. If this is an infraction and violation of the law, if Mr. Kirker is to be allowed to do exactly what Mr. Henley is asking to do, will any man in his senses say that the post office inspector should advance as a reason for that the fact that Mr. Kirker had been breaking the law for thirty-three years? I am astonished that although I brought that answer of the post office inspector to the attention of the hon. gentleman's department on the 20th of October last, and although on the 14th of November last the Deputy Postmaster General told me that that matter would be inquired into, I never heard a single word about it from that day to this. When the post office inspector informed me that there was to be a period of prescription in this country which would enable a man to violate the law with impunity, I brought that to the attention of the hon. gentleman's department at once, and I have never heard a word from him since except the statement that the matter would be inquired into immediately. In the case of Mr. Kirker, mail matter is carried past five separate post offices, yet the inspector tells me that the regulations of the department forbid mail matter addressed to a particular place being delivered at a post office in advance of that, that is to say, you cannot have mail matter addressed to Spry Bay delivered to the carrier at Tangier. But in Mr. Kirker's case mail matter is delivered to the carrier at another post office altogether, and is carried past five post offices before it reaches Mr. Kirker. In the case of P. G. Archibald, of Upper Musquodoboit, exactly the same thing is done as was done in Mr. Henley's case until the post office inspector interfered. In Mr. P. G. Archibald's case the mail matter is delivered to the postmaster at Middle Musquodoboit, where the mail carrier receives it and leaves it at Mr. Archibald's place on his road to Upper Musquodoboit. The same thing is true in the case of Mr. Alexander McKenzie. He resides at Mooseland in my county. His mail matter is addressed to him at Mooseland, it is delivered by the postmaster at Tangier, and a carrier goes on with it to Alexander McKenzie's place. These statements have been verified to me by Mr. Henley himself, and by Mr. Thos. G. Stewart, one of the municipal councillors of Halifax, and a well-known and highly respected man. Under the circumstances, I regard the action of the post office inspector as very extraordinary and I think it requires careful inquiry on the part of the hon. Postmaster General. I know from the way in which he has met me in regard to this matter that I will receive from him a fair answer to my inquiry. Just one more suggestion and I have done. It is said to Mr. Henley, that if he will have his mail matter addressed to him at Tangier, there will be no difficulty about it. As I understood in a conversation with the Postmaster General, when he was good enough to discuss the matter briefly with me to-night, the reason of this regulation of the department is, that the postmaster at the point of delivery is supposed to know the person to whom mail matter should be delivered, and for that reason there should be no delivery at any other office. I will point out to the hon. Postmaster General that if Mr. Henley's mail matter were addressed to him at Tangier he would not have any further safeguard than at present. The postmaster of Tangier would have no further knowledge as to whether mail matter should be addressed to Mr. Henley or not. The difficulty about complying with the suggestion is that Mr. Henley is such a well-known man in the county of Halifax, and in the province of Nova Scotia, that it would be useless for him to attempt to have his mail matter addressed to Tangier, because he lives at Spry Bay and they address his mail matter to Spry Bay. It is impossible to have his mail matter addressed to Tangier owing to that difficulty. It is because he is such a well known man that he cannot change his post office address. Whatever the regulation of the department may be, I do not want it overridden, but so far as this case is concerned there is no practical difficulty. I do not wish to be understood as desiring for Mr. Henley any privilege that any other person does not enjoy; but others enjoy this privilege without causing any difficulty whatever in respect to the distribution of mail matter. As a matter of fact, this practice has not led to any difficulty in the past, and I submit to the hon. Postmaster General that if this is done in regard to the three or four cases that I have mentioned, it is not fair to Mr. Henley, to whom it causes great inconvenience. It is a convenience of which he is deprived and which others enjoy. If there is no regulation of the department against this, let Mr. Henley enjoy it, if there is any regulation of the department which is unreasonable in that respect, it ought to be amended, and if there is a regulation of the department which is reasonable it ought to be applied to all alike.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there is a general regulation in the department, that mail matter cannot be delivered by postmasters to the addressee except by the postmasters to which the matter is finally addressed. It is not a regulation of recent date; it has been in force for many years. It is probable it is that general regulation which has been so interpreted in this case. Personally, I have no knowledge of the matter. It has not been brought to my attention. I would say, in reference to the various instances cited by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), that there is only one law for the public in the post office, and that there could be no such thing as interpreting a law one way for one man and another way for another man. Mr. Macdonald is, I think, a very zealous and faithful officer.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have always found him so except in this instance.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Quite so; I dare say he may have some explanation that would satisfy me and whatever he has done, even if he has made some mistake of judgment it has been done for a good purpose. I should think so, and I hope so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend would hardly agree with Mr. Macdonald's view as to the statute of limitations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. But I am only saying that perhaps his judgment has erred. I have always found him a faithful officer, but even faithful officers make mistakes of judgment at times. This matter, my hon. friend says, was brought to the attention of the department. It has never been brought to my attention. I think on one occasion only had I to deal with a similar question. I remember of a similar point arising at the post office known as Oliver's Ferry. I do not remember the name of the office at the ferry itself, but the ferry is called Oliver's Ferry. There is a post office about a mile away from Oliver's Ferry, and in that case a question similar to this arose. The addressee wished to get his mail at the other post office inasmuch as there was not equal frequency at the actual office of address. His request was denied by the intermediate postmaster. The matter came before me, and I made an inquiry of the secretary of the department. The secretary of the department cited to me the rule which had been referred to, and he gave me the reasons for the rule, namely, that if mail were delivered by postmasters to addressees en route it might lead to some difficulty as the postmasters might not then have the same knowledge of the identity of the addressees as if they delivered mail matter only directed to the postmaster where the addressee lived. When I found that to be the only reason I felt that a mile's difference ought not to destroy the identity of the addressee and directed that if the addressee left a written order that his mail matter should be delivered at the other office, such a delivery should take place. That was the interpretation in that case. I shall see that the regulation is so interpreted in this case. These regulations are not intended to be enforced wherever their disregard can lead to no confusion or mistakes. I will have the matter looked into, and I think there will be no difficulty in arranging the matter as my hon. friend desires.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am very much obliged to my hon. friend for his statement. He will understand that in criticising Mr. Macdonald it is only in regard to this particular instance, because I entirely agree with what the hon. gentleman has said in respect to the faithfulness, diligence and the efficiency that have characterized Mr. Macdonald's administration of his office since it was assumed by him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When I find an officer who is zealous and doing his duty, and when I have a good opinion of him, I like to support him even though he may make these errors of judgment. I do not say that even in this case he has done so. Once the matter is brought to the attention it is dealt with by the department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Speaker, the regulation is exactly as the hon. the Postmaster General has interpreted it. I think it is a regulation that cannot be overlooked. Now, if a postmaster could distribute the letters irrespective of the address, it might lead to a very great inconvenience and the Postmaster General is quite right in saying that these regulations, though most of the time indispensable, ought to be set aside for valid reasons. The local postmaster is not to blame. The regulation can only be waived by an order from the Postmaster General.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Public Works—Collection of Revenue—
Collection of slide and boom dues..... $5,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). The other night the minister mentioned that a sum of $25,000 had been expended upon the St. Maurice River for repairing the damages caused to the booms. I commended that vote at the time. The minister knows that extensive lumbering operations are carried on there by some of the wealthiest lumbermen in Canada, amongst others, Mr. Baptist and the Canadian Lumber Company. Now, that vote of $25,000 was merely for repairs. But, what about the vote which is necessary for carrying out works in order to accommodate the lumber trade on that river.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The hon. gentleman is right in assuming that the $25,000 in the supplementary estimates would not meet the requirements of the case. Last night we voted $45,000 in the main estimates, and this is added to it.

Telegraph line between Prince Edward Island and the mainland..... $2,000

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). May I ask what this $2,000 means?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to carry out a contract entered into at confederation and continued ever since for the maintenance of the telegraph system in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not see any of the Prince Edward Island members here, but I have to say that this is the very worst possible telegraph service in the country and something should be done to improve it. If there is a contract binding on the government to give this subsidy, then there ought to be some power in the government to make the company give the public a fair and reasonable service. At this time particularly, when the whole country is anxious over news and when those connected with its transmission should be on the alert particularly in connection with the South African war, these people who have charge of the telegraph cable between the mainland and Prince Edward Island pay no attention whatever to the public demands. They close their offices sometimes about dark, and you cannot get any communication with them after that. They carry on their service without the slightest regard to the public needs. I do not wish to take up time in talking about it, but every person who has in any way to do with the telegraph system of Prince Edward Island, knows that the service is so far behind the age, that it is a disgrace to the country. It seems to me that it is the clear duty of the government under the circumstances to insist that this company shall render some service commensurate with the money that is paid them. Whatever may have been the facts of the case when the grant was originally made, the conditions in this country have so entirely changed that the telegraph company should be compelled to meet them. I would not hesitate a moment to vote in this House to confiscate that company. I would consider that in doing so I would be only doing my duty to my country. I think I have some regard for honesty, and I can say that a company that does not discharge its duty; a company that fails utterly to discharge its duty as this company does, ought to be compelled in some way to do it. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), I regret, is not here, but I understood there was some correspondence going on between the government and the authorities connected with this cable company, to get if possible a better telegraph service. Might I ask what has been the result of that correspondence?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). What company is it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Anglo-American Company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I think the arrangement was made before confederation with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, which is today practically associated with the Western Union. They have a monopoly of cable landing on Prince Edward Island for a number of years, four or five of which have yet to run, and until that time expires we are not in a position to do anything except by friendly arrangement. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) has been endeavouring for some years to induce them, from ordinary business considerations, to give a better service. I do not think it is in the power of the government to dictate any terms to them until their monopoly has expired.

Mr. ELLIS. When the Minister of Marine is present, and on the supplementary estimates, I will bring this whole question up, because it is a matter of great importance to the people of New Brunswick and of Prince Edward Island as well.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should like to draw the attention of the government to the necessity of having telegraphic communication with Belle Isle. Commercial people in Canada, as well as in England, feel that telegraphic communication between the island and the north shore is much needed in the interest of trade. I am not a believer in the dangers of the navigation of the St. Lawrence or the Gulf; but it is well known that that is the extreme point from which news could come; it is the boundary between the Gulf and the Atlantic Ocean; and communication with it is very difficult at present. The navigation of the St. Lawrence is continually being improved; but the trade of the country will not be satisfied until we have communication between the rock on which stands the lighthouse on Belle Isle and the north shore. Representations have been made on this subject on more than one occasion by ship-owners. If it were known abroad that the island was in telegraphic communication with the north shore, the apprehensions of a good many people with regard to the dangers of navigation there, would be very much diminished. I am sorry the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), is not present. I know he has taken a great deal of interest in this matter, for I have had occasion more than once to discuss it with him, and I altogether agree with the views he entertains with regard to it. If the hon. gentleman now in charge of the Public Works Department would ask the hon. member for Quebec West his views on this subject, I think he would be satisfied by that hon. gentleman, that it would be an expenditure altogether in the interest of the country.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). I fully endorse the views expressed by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, in regard to the desirability of a line of telegraph across the Straits of Belle Isle and to connect with a line along the Quebec shore. It would be advantageous, not only to shipping coming from the old world and entering the Straits of Belle Isle, but to all shipping that may visit that point from different parts of Canada. Fleets of fishing vessels belonging to my county and other counties west of it—Queen's, Shelburne and Yarmouth—are accustomed to visit the fishing grounds on the coasts of Labrador, and very little is known of their whereabouts, or what they are doing from the time they leave their homes in the month of May, till the end of the fishing season. They may meet with casualties, or may be deprived of the comforts of life, or the chances of aid in saving their vessels, in case of accident, but if there was a line of telegraph to some near point, communication could be had with them at any time. I fully endorse the position taken by the hon. member for Three Rivers, and I hope the acting Minister of Public Works will look carefully into the matter, and furnish the much needed requirement.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to say just one word more. The hon. gentleman will remember that a very valuable ship, the Scotsman, was lost on Belle Isle. I happened to be in London at the time, and some shipowner there represented to me that if there had been telegraphic communication she might have been saved.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to the point raised by my hon. friend from Three Rivers, as to the need of communication between Belle Isle and the north shore, I think there can be but one opinion on that point. More than a month ago the matter was brought to my attention by the department, and I caused tenders to be invited for a cable from Point aux Esquimaux on the north shore of Belle Isle, to be completed this fall. The time for receiving the tenders has just expired, and the deputy informs me that certain tenders have been received and opened, and the disposition of them is to be submitted to me to-morrow. The tenders are for the supply of cable. The laying of the cable will be done by the department's steamer Newfield.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I congratulate the hon. gentleman.

Rent, fuel and light for public buildings,
Yukon territory ..... $14,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The following are the buildings that are rented. The commissioner's office, in the post office, is rented from T. C. Long, including the post office at $1,200 per month. The old post office, owned by Bedford & Long, was rented for $850 per month. The Crown lands, timber and registry office, is rented for $750 per month. The commissioner's house is leased from the Rev. Father Gendron by the government for $250 per month. The information furnished by the Department of the Interior is to the effect that there are very few available buildings at Dawson City for government offices, and that the nature of the settlement there, causes the people to require much higher rentals than are paid in more settled countries, where there is less chance of depreciation of property. Part of this item covers fuel. The Department of the Interior paid in December, 1899, from $22.50 to $25 for wood to Messrs. John Evans and J. L. White. The department paid for wood from $22 to $26 per cord. The price paid for fuel in Dawson is at $15 to $18 a cord, exclusive of sawing, splitting and piling, which costs $8 to $8.50 per cord.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are these on the water front?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are any of them on patented land.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no information on that point.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman promised to give information as to whether this wood is taken from government land or furnished under contract after calling for tenders.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I remember the question being asked, and will furnish the information on an item in the supplementaries.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Would it not be better, instead of paying such enormous rents, for the government to erect buildings themselves?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is quite right. Some weeks ago plans were prepared for certain buildings in Dawson City and tenders were asked for up to the 13th June. Mr. Fuller, the government architect out there, was instructed by telegraph to advise the department so as tenders could be dealt with. I hope it will be possible to escape these enormous rentals at the earliest moment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In his report, Mr. Ogilvie speaks of renting the post office from Morrison & McDonald. Who are the landlords?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The landlord is Mr. D. Long. The former building was destroyed by fire not long ago, and a new one had to be rented.

Lewes and Yukon River improvements.. $40,000

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman promised some information the other night on this item.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the Hansard the hon. gentleman will find the explanation I made of the different works about to be undertaken with the view of improving navigation. The improvements are at Hell's Gate, and Horse Rapids, and Five Finger Rapids, and other places, and will not all be gone on with this year, but be proceeded with gradually. Mr. Taché is the officer in charge.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. And a very good man.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He has done the best he could. Mr. Taché is on his way down now—the deputy expects him in three or four days—for the purpose of reporting as to the work accomplished, and to make arrangements and receive instructions for the work yet to be done.

Mr. CLANCY. It would seem that Mr. Taché has had the whole matter in his own hands, that practically the department were giving no directions and they are unable to say really what the extent of the work would be in the end.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has misunderstood me. I stated the other evening that the former chief engineer of the department, Mr. Coste—I do not know whether I stated in what year, but it was, I understand, in 1898—surveyed those waters and made plans and recommendations as to the improvements. His report has been passed upon since, and certain of the proposed improvements authorized and undertaken. My hon. friend, perhaps, has in his mind one point that was brought up by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster)—a very good point indeed—the necessity of having a good accountant there to keep the accounts. Hon. gentlemen will be glad to know that I reported the matter to council and council authorized me to make the necessary arrangements. When Mr. Taché arrives here, the operations of the year will be decided upon and instructions will be given him; and when he returns, I trust that with him will go an accountant to superintend the accounts. Mr. Taché superintending the work of the improvements.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the total cost of the work, according to the plans of Mr. Coste?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The estimated cost of the work is $138,000. Of course, it is not intended to do the whole of it this year. There is a general plan, and the policy will be to work out that plan as rapidly as circumstances will justify, doing the more urgent parts first.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Taché has a clerk with him now. Who is that clerk? There was some mention made of that the other evening, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) was not able to give the information.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer's clerk is Mr. Bray. In order to give Mr. Taché instructions, it is necessary that he should be here, but in the meantime, the work does not go on. When the money is voted, he will be given his instructions what to do for the remainder of the year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this work carried on by contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is carried on under the direction and supervision of Mr. Taché by day's labour. It is impossible to make the contract for work at so great a distance.

Mr. MULOCK.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In the case of such improvements as this, how are the supplies procured? For instance, if lumber is required, how is it bought? The other evening we were speaking of the work on the St. Maurice. A great deal of timber was required to repair the slides and for the other work. I may mention now, as it will save me asking questions on other items, that I would like to know the system followed by the department in these matters. I should also like to know the names of those who contracted in the case of the St. Maurice works.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As to the supply of lumber on the Lewes River—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was the St. Maurice I wanted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That work, as my hon. friend knows, was of a somewhat urgent character and the material had to be acquired at the earliest moment. The chief engineer informs me that the plan adopted was to send communications to all dealers in the vicinity to tender, and the lowest tender was accepted.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should like, if it is quite convenient—and if not some other occasion would do—to have the names of the people to whom notices were sent to tender and also the name of the lowest tenderer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not that information, but it will be given on some supplementary item. Whatever item of Public Works may be up, the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) will be free to ask for the information and to discuss the point.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am seeking information rather than an opportunity for discussion. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) anticipated the questions I was going to ask about Louiseville, to which he referred—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me—I spoke of the Lewes River.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I speak of Louiseville on Rivière du Loup. The hon. gentleman will remember that some important works were carried on there and some people have applied to me to know what amount of money was expended last summer on these works. I would also like to know if it is the intention of the government to prosecute the works already undertaken, and also the name of the person who is overlooking the work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will have all the information furnished at a later date. The deputy informs me that the work was carried on under Mr. Howden, the superintendent of dredging.

Mr. F. A. MARCOTTE (Champlain.) (Translation). As regards the works on the St. Maurice River, I understand the hon. gentleman has declared that the timber to be used in the building up of the booms had been bought without tenders being asked for.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We asked for tenders.

Mr. MARCOTTE (Translation). The hon. gentleman did not ask for tenders so that he might choose the lowest.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief engineer informs me that the actual work was performed under the direct supervision of the officers, but that the timber required was purchased, after quotations being asked from all the local dealers in the vicinity. The people who had timber available were asked to give quotations. It was not a case where we could wait till timber could be manufactured, the work had to be performed at once, in time to take care of the logs that come down in the opening of navigation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Can the hon. gentleman furnish the names of the people who tendered, and the lowest tenderer?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will give the quotations, that is practically the same.

Ocean and river service—Outfit and stores of ss. 'Minto' in Scotland, including wages of crew to Canada and extra nickel steel propeller blades..... $12,869

Mr. CLANCY. This is evidently a new item.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is the cost of bringing the ss. Minto out from Scotland, of which the items are as follows: Passage of crew from Charlottetown to Glasgow (sixteen in all), $816.88; David S. Bryson, Dundee, stores (engine room and deck supplies), $1,000.54; Capt. Finlayson, expenses and wages for August and September, while in Dundee, and wages of crew coming to Canada, $1,466.22; wages of eight seamen shipped at Dundee, including firemen returning to Dundee, $457.69; Gourlay Bros. & Co., Dundee, for bunker coal, furnishings for staterooms, magazine, labour, bagging coal and loading, $2,939.52; J. B. Cognlin, for cutlery, silverware, crockery, &c., $1,265.32; painting after arrival from Dundee, $182.87; fittings of mail rooms for winter service, $185.19; extra nickel steel propeller blades in case of accident, $1,318.25; Bruce Stewart & Co., Charlottetown, repairing damages owing to heavy gale experienced on passage, the forward deckhouse was damaged and had to be repaired; for supplying an ash ejector, and extra heating apparatus required for winter, $3,236.52, making up the total of $12,869.

Mr. MARTIN. Can the hon. minister tell us the total cost of the steamer Minto?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I gave that the other day to the hon. gentleman, he will find it in the Hansard, the whole cost including extras and everything. I cannot recollect the figures at the moment. The details were brought down in a return to the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN. I think we are entitled to have this information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not got it under my hand. I stated when we went through the main estimates what the whole cost of the vessel was. The hon. gentleman will find the details in a return brought down in the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to know the cost of this steamer, the amount of the extras given to the contractor, where the steamer was built, and the extras that were put on to the steamer since she came over here. I think we are entitled to have that information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not dispute the hon. gentleman's right to it. I tell him it has already been brought down to the Senate in a return.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would suggest, since the hon. gentleman has brought down a return to the Senate of the full cost of that vessel, that this item should stand until that information can be given here.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has nothing to do with this. I gave my hon. friend every detail in connection with this year. The matter to which he refers belongs to the previous year altogether, and it has nothing to do with the present financial year. I will give it again. The cost of bringing the vessel out from Glasgow and furnishing it, was $12,869. The hon. gentleman is asking me for something about a matter that occurred in a previous year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. minister will admit that my hon. friend, sitting behind me, will not have any other item upon which he can bring this up.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, I have items in the supplementary estimates on which he can bring it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. On the Minto?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and I will have all the information.

Alteration to the steamship 'Aberdeen'.. $7,000

Mr. CLANCY. What alterations are these?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The steamer Aberdeen was found to swim when loaded too much by the head and did not carry sufficient cargo. There was too much cabin accommodation, and we found that by removing the cabin in the afterpart of the ship and making it into a freight room, we would have a great deal more room for the carriage of supplies down to the coast, and make the vessel trim better, which we did.

To complete the construction of Traverse light pier by giving it additional protection by rip-rap ..... $5,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We built that pier last year under the vote, and we carried it out very successfully, but the engineer thought that it should have some extra protection on account of the prevalence of high winds, and it is thought expedient to extend the rip-rap around the pier to a greater width in order to secure the foundation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was that work done by contract?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, it was done under the supervision of the engineer.

Mr. McALISTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if the Oak Point lights below Campbellton on the Quebec side of the river have been lit?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will make a note of it, and tell my hon. friend.

Mr. McALISTER. If they have not been, I would like to know what is the difficulty, and when the light will be lit?

J. W. G. Roberts, draughtsman in the office of the chief engineer, from October 24, 1899, to June 30, 1900, 8 8-31 months at $50 a month, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.... $448 87

Mr. CLANCY. What is this extra service there, performed by this draughtsman?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Auditor General will not allow me to hire any extra clerk in the department at a higher salary than $400. It became necessary to hire a draughtsman, and I thought I would be entitled to pay him out of the general vote for departmental contingencies. But the Auditor General would not allow me to do so, so that I must take a special vote for it. I could not expect to get a draughtsman for $400; I had to pay him for eight months at the rate of $50 per month, and I had to take a special vote for it.

C. W. Gauthier, amount allowed him in full settlement of his claim of $2,100 for supplying fish ova to the Sandwich hatchery from 1886 to 1890 ..... $1,300

Mr. CLANCY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is this?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is an old disputed claim that I found when I came into the department. It was a claim for $2,100 for fish ova supplied to the Sandwich hatchery. A letter was written to Mr. Gauthier by the department, asking him to supply a quantity of fish ova, which it was necessary to obtain if it had not been supplied by Gauthier. It was not stipulated what he should be paid. The whole question arose owing to a misunderstanding as to the instructions given to Mr. Gauthier. In 1895 the claim was referred to the fishery officers for a report, and Mr. Webster reported in favour of paying Mr. Gauthier $1,300 for 65,000,000 ova which he had supplied, reducing his claim by $800. That report was submitted to Mr. Venning, and approved by him, and after the report had been considered by Mr. Venning, the matter came before me the year before last. I hesitated about paying it at first, but I did not see very well how I could get over the report of these officers in favour of paying this amount.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the ground of refusal of the department to pay?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was not a refusal so much as a misunderstanding, as the instructions were not definite enough.

Mr. CLANCY. What indefinite instructions were given him?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He was asked to supply ova to the Sandwich hatchery without fixing any price. After supplying it, and after taking the average cost of supplying it in previous years, Mr. Webster reported in 1895, that Mr. Gauthier should be paid $1,300, if he would accept that in full. He would not accept it in full at the time. The claim came up in 1898, and last year they came in force with Mr. Gauthier, and discussed the question. I said that I would not pay any more than Mr. Webster and Mr. Venning recommended, and he finally agreed to accept that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think in my time that claim was absolutely rejected.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have nothing before me to show that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am only speaking from memory.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have only Mr. Webster's report.

Mr. WILSON. I might ask the hon. minister if there is no record in the office of this claim having been brought to the notice of the department before this time. It seems strange that it should have remained there from 1889 to 1895 without being settled, or without an effort being made to settle it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The only thing definite that I had to go upon, was the report of Mr. Webster. It came to a head in 1895, when it was submitted to Mr. Webster, who recommended the payment of $1,300, and Mr. Venning endorsed that recommendation.

Mr. SPROULE. How did you ascertain the number of ova delivered?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was ascertained from the fishery officer.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Might I ask the hon. minister if he has ever settled an old claim that I brought to his attention once or twice. I refer to the claim of Mr. McCammon of Gananoque.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I had forgotten all about that. I will make a note of it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I asked the hon. gentleman last year to look into it. This is a settlement made by the late minister (Mr. Costigan), and it was agreed upon between Mr. McCammon and the department. It was left there in the department, when the change of government took place, and it was not settled.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What was the name of the man?

Mr. TAYLOR. Samuel McCammon, of Gananoque, and the claim is $100. I want the amount put in the supplementary estimates or I want permission to bring suit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That seems reasonable.

Mr. MARTIN. If the minister (Sir Louis Davies) is settling up old claims I would like to bring to his attention the claim of Louis P. Tanton.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has nothing to do with the fisheries.

Mr. MARTIN. It has something to do with the department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is a claim of $24 for freight carried over on the Stanley, and correspondence is going on between our department and the Railway Department.

Mr. MARTIN. This gentleman cannot get a line from either of these departments. Will the minister promise me that he will look into the matter?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I certainly will look into it.

Mr. MARTIN. Before the session closes?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is a little matter about $24 about freight and I will look into it when I get time.

H. H. A. Bruce, settlement in full, including interest up to June 30, 1900, of claim for damages arising out of the lease of fishery on the Richelieu River..... $3,504

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My predecessor in office (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in assuming that we had the right to the eel fisheries on the Richelieu leased these fisheries to Mr. Bruce and put him in possession, but he was ousted by the lessee of the provincial government. Mr. Bruce lost what money he had invested. I found a memo. in the Marine Department from my predecessor stating that he was willing to pay the actual disbursements. Mr. Christie represented Mr. Bruce, and I discussed the matter with him and consented to pay the actual disbursements and nothing more. Mr. Christie would not consent at first and he asked for a fiat to sue which I could not refuse, but later on he thought better of it and the matter was referred to the accountant and the actual disbursements computed as represented in this vote.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is quite fair.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been done in the case of the Noble Bros. on the Georgian Bay?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nothing has been done. There is a mass of papers which it would take an industrious man a month to understand and they asked me to hear counsel presenting their case, which I did. He prepared an elaborate brief which I listened to, but I have not had time to do more since.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It suits them very well to have delay because they got their tugs back.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was before my time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but when any attempt is made to exact the fine, they having their property back, whenever the department moved they wanted a hearing, and they have been having hearings for six years now.

Salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and to purchase steam launch for the Fraser River fisheries ..... $15,000

Mr. CLANCY. This is a new vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When the Privy Council decision came we expected that all the officers in the Quebec district would be dismissed as they were in Ontario. Then the question came as to whether the Dominion or the province had jurisdiction in the Gulf district. We retained the officers on the Gulf shore and as the estimates were originally made we did not provide for them. We are exercising jurisdiction over the Gulf division of the province of Quebec and receiving the profits. In British Columbia we had the steamer Wanetta, an extra steamer for the protection of the salmon fisheries at the mouth of the Fraser River which cost $2,500. In Nova Scotia we had to hire two or three tugs at a cost of $2,800 for enforcing the lobster regulations. In Prince Edward Island for the same purpose we hired tugs which cost $1,295, and in New Brunswick, $575. In British Columbia we had to purchase a new steam launch for the Fraser River, which makes up the whole amount.

Mr. MARTIN. What tug was engaged in Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think it was Batts.

New hatchery at Flatheads, County of Restigouche..... $3,590

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This hatchery was destroyed by fire at Restigouche; no doubt by an incendiary. I placed the matter in the hands of the Minister of Justice to prosecute the criminals, but with what result, I do not know.

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche). Is this the total cost?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. McALISTER. The hatchery is absolutely necessary there. This should be 'Flatlands' instead of 'Flatheads.'

Mr. WILSON. Are we still to keep up these hatcheries even if the provinces have the right to the fisheries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia pending the decision, we are administering the fisheries and receiving the revenues.

Mr. WILSON. And even if the decision should be against you, will you keep up the hatcheries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will have to carefully consider that matter and take the House into my confidence. In view of the importance of the matter, it would be unwise to come to a hasty decision to abolish these hatcheries.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. McALISTER. It would be a very great mistake to discontinue these hatcheries. I know they have done a great deal of good in the Restigouche and Metapedia Rivers, and they undoubtedly should be continued.

Cost of defence of Indians at St. Régis,
Que. .... $1,305 14

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We all know that there has been a great deal of unrest among the Indians of St. Régis. According to the information which I have received personally as well as through the press, there seems to have been a great deal of trouble lately over the construction of a lock-up on the reserve. I would like to know if any means have been taken to come to an understanding, or if the trouble still continues.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I may say that this matter was pretty fully discussed the other evening. It came under my notice as acting minister for the first time. The whole difficulty seemed to arise from the fact that ten or twelve years ago the Indians refused to obey the law and elect their chiefs. Many efforts were made to enforce the Act, and for a while they submitted and elected chiefs. Without this election, there is no person whom the department can consult. They wanted to turn to some old tribal custom which neither they themselves nor any one else understood. They do not seem to be at all unanimous for one system or the other. In the meantime, I have given instructions to stop this work, and to have the whole matter looked into and reconsidered before anything further is done.

Relief and medical attendance in the province of Ontario ..... $700

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the acting minister if he has had any intimation from the Indians of Walpole Island with regard to the change of the physician in attendance upon them. Indians do not take very kindly to changes of any sort. My information is from a Methodist minister, who is in charge of a large section of the Indians there, and who stated to me some months ago that since the former medical attendant was dismissed and a new one appointed in his stead, many of the Indians refused to have anything to do with the new appointee. They even preferred dying, and the result was a large number of deaths. I said to the gentleman that the best thing he could do would be to communicate that to the department. Has the department been in possession of any information of that kind during the last year, and if so, has any action been taken in the matter? It is a very serious matter to make a change of this kind on mere political or party grounds, because of some tittle-tattle which the minister may have heard. There can be no greater outrage on the part of any government than to step in and take the money belonging to the Indians and use it to change the medical attendant because of some petty political spite or spleen.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not very familiar with this matter, but my impression is that I had a letter not many days ago calling attention to it, and I referred it to the chief officer. I will look into it and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman any objection to say whom the letter was from?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it was referred to me by Mr. Mills, and was from the same person the hon. gentleman mentions, along the same line.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this vote for any special case or for whatever may occur?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The present vote for the province of Ontario is $1,100. At the end of February $295 remained unexpended. The district is so large that the amount voted is quite inadequate. The Indian bands on the north shore of Lake Superior have no funds of their own to provide medical attendance or relief for themselves. During the current year the demands on the department have been larger than usual. This vote includes an item of $150 for the purchase of garden tools and seed grain for the Indians of Gull River.

Mr. SPROULE. How is the medical attendance supplied? Is one physician employed or is any one employed as he may be required?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Only as the Indians are inclined or express a wish.

Relief of distress and the purchase of seed grain in the province of Quebec ..... $2,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Where is the relief distributed, and to what bands?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will give my hon. friend the report of the inspector. There was $3,000 voted for the province of Quebec, which proved inadequate to supply the demands for the current winter. The failure of the hunt and the present game regulations in the province have rendered it necessary to issue larger supplies than usual. For the same reason it will be necessary to supply somewhat larger supplies of seed grain this spring to cultivate gardens and small plots of ground. The department also desires to assist the Maniwaki Indians in the purchase of some wagons and agricultural implements to assist them in cultivating the land for themselves. This distribution is made just where it is reported to be necessary.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That information is really not satisfactory. It is impossible to say whether the expenditure is proper or not unless we know exactly how it is distributed. For instance, on the north of the St. Lawrence down to Mistassini the Indians go as far north as James Bay hunting and working for the Hudson's Bay Company. These Indians would never take to agricultural pursuits. It would be quite useless to give them seed or anything of that kind with the idea of inducing them to follow an agricultural life, though there are a few bands who have taken to agricultural pursuits, but unless we know how this money is distributed, how the seed is distributed, I consider that it will be impossible to know what this vote means. I would suggest the hon. gentleman allow the vote to stand and bring down the information. We all know the method adopted by the department to make that distribution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection, but there is a small item in the supplementaries for next year, and I will bring down a detailed statement if that will satisfy him.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. And the hon. gentleman will allow the discussion on that item?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Indians, Nova Scotia—Medical attendance and medicine ..... $700

Mr. CLANCY. Have they medical attendance as in other cases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For a number of years the expenditure has averaged about $3,000, but the habit of the department has been to get a vote of $2,300 and a supplementary vote of $700.

Indians, Prince Edward Island—Medical attendance and medicine ..... $300

Mr. MARTIN. Is this the usual vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, I think it is a little larger. The vote proved inadequate.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Every band, no matter what its size, seems to get about the same vote, except in the case of Prince Edward Island—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They always cut down Prince Edward Island.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The thing looks anomalous to me. Perhaps if they got less medicine they would be better.

Mr. CLANCY. We passed over the item for New Brunswick, though I tried to catch the attention of the acting minister. Is that in the same position as the vote for Nova Scotia ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Exactly in the same position. I understand from the accountant that they have got into the habit of getting the supplementary vote. It would be better to have the whole thing in one amount, as will be done next year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think we have done enough, and had better adjourn now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are only a few items in the Indian Department. They are not controversial, and if my hon. friend will allow a few moments, those items can be dealt with.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to know if this money is paid to the same persons in Prince Edward Island year after year ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will bring down a detailed list. I cannot give the information at the moment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think they are the same persons—there is no change that I know of.

Indians, Manitoba and the North-west Territories—Payment to Indians of Treaty No. 8, $19,550; supplies for working and destitute Indians, $10,000; mower and horse rake and set of double harness for Lesser Slave Lake, Treaty No. 8, $150; general expenses, $13,000; total ..... $42,700

Mr. CLANCY. How are these supplies purchased ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I must really ask that these items be not gone on with. There are hon. gentlemen on this side not present just now who wish to discuss such items as these. Besides, I doubt that we have a quorum.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would appeal to my hon. friend to deal with these items before we rise. We have had most of these items discussed in the main estimates, and in next year's supplementaries there will be items on which a full discussion can be had.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am always ready to accommodate my hon. friends on the other side. My hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) is new in the department and he has been doing very well indeed; but, I do not think he should ask us to pass these large items when he knows there are gentlemen on this side who wish to discuss them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But we have to sit here all day waiting until a late hour, and then there is no person here to discuss the items.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it would be better to adjourn. Of course, it ought not to be a precedent. We ought to work harder and get to the end of the session.

Mr. CLANCY.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What will the business be to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We may take up some Bills.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And if we get into supply, we shall probably finish the estimates of my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) and proceed with the railway estimates.

Mr. CLANCY. When the idea is proposed of finishing the estimates of the Department of the Interior, are the estimates of the immigration branch included ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like very much to take that up. But, we are kept waiting until eleven or twelve o'clock, and then every one objects to going on and wants to go home. I have waited here for almost three weeks, from three in the afternoon to twelve at night, and have not been able to get on with the work.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have got on very well to-night.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not finding fault; but, my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is asking an explanation.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be well if we could take up the immigration estimates after we have had the report on immigration and colonization, as there is a great deal of valuable information that we require to refer to from time to time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. At the request of members on both sides, the immigration items have stood from time to time.

Mr. CLANCY. The reason I asked is, because I endeavoured at an earlier stage to have an interim report made in order that we might proceed with the estimates, and I asked the hon. gentleman to let them stand for the reason pointed out by the hon. member for East Grey. Does the hon. gentleman propose to proceed without having that report made by the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am most anxious to oblige my hon. friends on both sides, and will not press the matter.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.35 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 22, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—PROROGATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to move, seconded by Sir Richard Cartwright:

That on Monday next and for the remainder of the session this House shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning of each sitting day; that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m., there shall also be an intermission on each day from one to three o'clock p.m., and that government orders shall have precedence at all such sittings after questions on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I am glad to see this evidence on the part of my right hon. friend of a desire to bring this very protracted session to a close, but I think we must ask the Minister of Finance, at this late period of the session, and with this intimation, that within a few days we shall be relieved from our duties, we must ask him, when we may look for the rest of the supplementary estimates, and also any subsidies with reference to railways. I would ask the right hon. gentleman what measures we may expect or what the position of the business of the House will be in. Perhaps this is the most convenient mode of asking these questions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). As to the estimates, I hope that on Monday next the supplementary estimates will be brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER. As to railway subsidies, I cannot say exactly when they will be brought down, but I have hopes of bringing them down next week. As to measures, there is no important measure to be brought down except the Conciliation Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, there is nothing to prevent the business of the session being brought to a close at the end of next week?

The PRIME MINISTER. I see nothing to prevent prorogation during the week that commences after next, or, perhaps, the coming week.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) If the House commences at eleven in the morning and sits all day, I think we ought to have an agreement, not absolute, of course, but an agreement between both sides of the House that we should not be kept here at unreasonable hours at night. I should think we ought to make a point to adjourn about twelve o'clock. It is very exhausting to sit here all day and all through the night.

The PRIME MINISTER. Twelve o'clock is, perhaps, a little early. I do not think it would be advisable to come to any absolute binding agreement, but if we can manage to get along as we have for the past day or two, we will have no difficulty in agreeing to the adjournment each day.

VACANCIES.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House, that I have received notification of a vacancy having occurred in the representation of the electoral district of St. Hyacinthe by the acceptance of an office of emolument under the Crown by Michel E. Bernier, Esq., member of the said electoral district. I accordingly issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—REMOVAL OF HON. T. R. McINNES FROM THE OFFICE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). The right hon. the Prime Minister promised that we would probably have information to-day as to matters in British Columbia.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I was about to rise to make an announcement when the hon. gentleman put the question.

I have the honour to inform the House that, for reasons which are well known to the public, but which will be officially communicated to the House under section 59 of the British North America Act, it has pleased His Excellency the Governor General to remove the Honourable Thomas R. McInnes from the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the province of British Columbia. It has also pleased His Excellency the Governor General to appoint the Honourable Sir Henri Gustave Joly de Lotbinière as Lieutenant-Governor of the province of British Columbia. It has further pleased His Excellency the Governor General to appoint the Honourable Michel Esdras Bernier, the member for the electoral division of St. Hyacinthe, a member of the Queen's Privy Council and Minister of Inland Revenue.

YUKON MINING LEASES—CHARGES AGAINST THE MINISTER OF INTERIOR.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I desire to make another announcement to the House of a different character, and with reference to a statement that was made a few days ago by my hon. friend the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). In the course of his speech in this House the hon. gentleman read two letters addressed to himself by Senator Kirchhoffer. In these letters there was a statement made on the authority of Mr. Frank Burnett, that an interview had been sent to two members of the government in which grave charges were made against the Minister of the Interior in connection principally with mining claims in the Yukon. I have to state to the House that I have never received any communication from Mr. Frank Burnett on that subject, nor am I aware that any member of the government received any such communication. But, in the month of October, 1898. I received a private letter from a friend inclosing the text of a proposed interview which I was informed was to be published by Mr. Burnett in a western paper, and in which charges or insinuations of the character to which I have just referred were included. Upon receiving this communication, though I had no reason to doubt in any way whatever the perfect 'honorabilité' and honesty of my colleague the Minister of the Interior, I thought it due to him to give him communication of the letter—not the letter, because it was private—but communication of the interview which had been sent to me. I called on him at his office, and I gave him communication of the text of the interview. He satisfied me then that he was absolutely innocent of any charge made against him, and in corroboration of the statement he then made to me he placed in my hands at once, two letters, one addressed by Mr. Burnett to Mr. Philp and transferred by Mr. Philp to the Minister of the Interior, and the other the minister's own answer to this communication. The letter of Mr. Burnett to Mr. Philp, and which was transferred by Mr. Philp to Mr. Sifton, was as follows :

(Copy.)

Vancouver, B.C., February 1, 1898.

Mr. A. E. Philp,
Care Philp & Cameron,
Brandon, Man.

My dear Philp,—I duly received your two letters, 15th and 25th instant, and while thanking you for what you have done regarding mining concessions in the Yukon district, I might say that such concession has come too late, as it appears any one can now obtain the same on payment of $100 per mile. If our mutual friend had had the decency to grant this at the time we first made application, it might have been of some use to us. As it is, he is granting us now no more than any one else can get. I might also say that I am not in the mood to accept anything from Mr. Sifton on account of the way he is treating my other requests, which treatment, I understand, is about on a par with that meted out to others of his old friends.

Thanking you for the trouble you have taken in the matter, and with kind regards I am,

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) FRANK BURNETT.

The letter of Mr. Sifton to Mr. Philp in answer to this was as follows :

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

(Personal.)

Ottawa, February 9, 1898.

My dear Philp,—I have your letter inclosing one from Mr. Burnett. I may just as well say, without any circumlocution or hesitation, that my friends cannot get any better treatment in regard to mining claims than any one else. I did not grant the application when Mr. Burnett first wrote me because we had at that time no regulations adopted. When they were adopted your application came in on the same basis as the others. I do not want to get your friendship or Mr. Burnett's on any false representation. Therefore, I feel it is my duty to say that I do not think my friendship will be of any advantage to you in mining matters.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) CLIFFORD SIFTON.

E. Philp, Esq.,
Barrister, &c.,
Brandon, Man.

After having had this conversation with my colleague, and that explanation from him, I informed my correspondent that I attached no importance to the interview, and I am not aware that it has been published in any newspaper since.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS, &c.

Mr. GEORGE TURCOT (Megantic). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if any investigation was held on a report sent to the department concerning a letter which was deposited and registered at the post office of Kinnear's Mills, said to have contained $200, and addressed to Dr. Warden, of Toronto. As the matter has caused a great deal of excitement in the locality, I beg to ask the Postmaster General to lay on the Table of this House the evidence, correspondence, reports and all other papers in connection with it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). An investigation was held into the matter to which the hon. gentleman alludes. At first it was held by one inspector alone; and one of the parties interested, taking some exception to his report, a second investigation was held, another inspector being associated with the first. The report of the second investigation has been received, I think, in the department, and there will be no objection whatever to laying both reports and all other papers in connection with the inquiries, on the Table of the House. I will endeavour to have them produced by Monday.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) yesterday wanted to know if the report of the Royal Commission on the shipment and transportation of grain had been brought down. I am happy to inform him that part of the report was brought down on March 19, and the balance on April 25.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the report being printed?

The PRIME MINISTER. I could not say as to that.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), to a return ordered on February 19, for copies of all telegrams, letters, reports and documents of every description, between the Department of Militia and Defence, or any member of the government, and J. H. Wilson, M.D., ex-M.P., or any person or persons on his behalf, regarding the military parade ground at St. Thomas, Ont. I notice that there are some letters missing from the return that should appear in it. I would ask the hon. gentleman to bring those down. While on my feet, I may say that at a later period of the session I intend to deal with this subject.

I. C. R.—TRAIN SERVICE ON CAPE BRETON DIVISION.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I drew the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), yesterday to the correspondence which I had in reference to the very strong feeling of the Board of Trade of Sydney, in regard to the present railway arrangements there. I think it right, therefore, to put into the hands of my hon. friend a telegram which I have since received from Mr. Geo. H. Dobson, a prominent gentleman of North Sydney. He says:

Present train arrangements satisfactory, and necessary for large Newfoundland and St. Pierre travel.

This completes the information, and it shows my hon. friend the Minister of Railways that the present arrangements is entirely satisfactory to the people of North Sydney, and that all he has to do is to devise some means by which, without interfering with their interests, he can meet the wishes of the board of trade and people of the town of Sydney.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). My hon. friend puts the case very mildly when he says that all I have to do is to make an arrangement satisfactory to Sydney, allowing matters to remain as they are as respects North Sydney. When he states that, he states a much more difficult proposition to solve than would appear from the language he employed. No doubt the people of North Sydney have a very keen appreciation of the importance of the business they do there, and a very strong conviction as to their rights. They regard the making of North Sydney the terminus as essentially their right, and anything that would be done to meet the demands of the Board of Trade of Sydney would necessarily conflict with the demands of the people of North Sydney. The matter, therefore, is not in a nutshell, or so simple of solution as would appear from the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I might be permitted to say one word more on this subject, as it is one of pressing importance on which there is a great deal of feeling. I was at once confronted with this question when I went to the county of Cape Breton in the winter of 1896, to offer as a representative, and I immediately took the matter up and placed it in the hands of the Railway Department, to see if they could not devise a means by which, without any additional burden upon the country, but in a way that would be both useful and profitable, the very anomalous condition of things which now exist, could be changed. Every person knows that it is a very serious matter for the Railway Department to do what they were doing then, and are still doing, that is, back a train down several miles. I have very grave doubts as to the legality of that, and as to any resulting destruction of life or property, not involving very serious consequences to the government. That is a matter on which the hon. gentleman is as well qualified to judge as I am. At all events, the results of my investigation was that the Railway Department suggested a plan which I brought under their notice, by which greater convenience could be afforded, and a branch connection provided with the General Mining Association's operations and with an important section of the county of Cape Breton, in a way which I think would be a complete solution. I referred that report to the very able manager of the Intercolonial Railway, Mr. Pottinger. Mr. Pottinger reported that instead of involving any additional expense to the country, that arrangement could be carried out in such a way as to be actually profitable. I was so soon deposed that I had not the power to carry out this arrangement, but otherwise I was prepared to carry it out. I would like to ask my hon. friend, as the reports are in the department, to give his attention to that matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). That question has already been considered by the department, and I think I am right in saying that the town of North Sydney would not be satisfied with the arrangement to which my hon. friend refers. I do not think that any suggestion offered by my hon. friends opposite would meet the case. The difficulty is one arising out of the rivalry between the two towns and their geographical position, and the situation is an embarrassing one. Every suggestion from hon. gentlemen opposite has been employed in the matter, but unfortunately none of them seems to meet the difficulty.

MAJOR MAXWELL.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to the state of case of Major Maxwell, concerning which there was some discussion last year on the militia estimates. Last year I urged that some reasonable sum should be granted in the estimates to that gentleman, and the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Finance made some remarks on the subject, and eventually the matter was left for further consideration. I mention the matter now in order that the Minister of Militia may carry out the desire which both he and the Minister of Finance expressed, that some sum should be put in the estimates, if at all possible.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). I pressed the same matter on the Minister of Militia last year, and I trust that this year he will give it his favourable consideration and give something to this officer, who was one of the most enthusiastic militiamen in the province of Nova Scotia. If any exception can be made, it should be made in his favour because the financial position of his family is not at all what is ought to be.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA (Mr. Borden). I remember what occurred last year and have not at all lost sight of the matter and hope to be able to give an answer on Monday.

THE EMERGENCY RATIONS.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the report of the Dominion analyst which has been laid on the Table with reference to these emergency rations. This report shows that the material which has been obtained, and which has been described as concentrated food, is not a concentrated food at all. It appears from the analysis that this material is not so valuable a food at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The whole matter is under consideration now by a special committee.

Mr. McNEILL. I would request that I may be allowed to make my statement, whether approved by the House or not. I say that this material now turns out to be not so valuable for food, that it is practically but little more valuable than ordinary oatcake.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon. friend is clearly out of order.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. McNEILL. I shall move the adjournment if necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER. That will not put the hon. gentleman in order. He is seeking to discuss a matter which is now being investigated by a special committee.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not discussing the matter before the committee, but simply the analyst's report, and the suggestion I want to make to the government is this, that in view of the fact that it is believed that this is a concentrated food and that our troops in South Africa may use it, it would be well for the government to cable across and let it be understood by those who are distributing this food what really it turns out to be.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to an order of the House passed last year directing that a copy of the report of Mr. Frank Shanly respecting the claim of Starr and Wood against the Queen be brought down. Shortly after the order had passed, I received a letter from the hon. gentleman's secretary stating that it could not be brought down because it was of a confidential nature. I would like to suggest to my hon. friend that when an order of the House is passed, it is not competent for his secretary to state that it cannot be complied with. Any objection of that kind should have been stated by the hon. gentleman when I made my motion, and I would suggest that the order of the House either be complied with or rescinded.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I do not know that my hon. friend has stated correctly the position with regard to orders of the House. Had I been present, I would have felt it my duty to make the gentleman who moved for the order of the House aware of the impossibility of producing the paper in question. It often happens, however, that these orders pass perfunctorily; attention is not particularly directed at the time to the documents desired; and the order for papers often covers a large area, requiring a great many papers which need to be looked into a little before it can be judged whether they can all be properly produced or not. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, will hardly expect that, if attention was not particularly called to the character of the document, the order would be intended to require the production of papers of a confidential character which ought not to be laid on the Table of the House—the House would not so interpret its order. Therefore, my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) must see that discretion must necessarily require to be vested in somebody, particularly where attention was not directly called to the documents asked for. I do not remember the contents of the paper at the moment, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that if it had been possible to have brought the paper down it would have been brought down.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, in this particular case, the paper required was directly stated in the order of the House.

An hon. MEMBER. What was it?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It was the report of Mr. Shanly, in the case of Starr & Wood vs. the Queen. I think that the circumstances was that there being no certificate, and no engineer to give the certificate, Mr. Shanly was instructed by the government to investigate the claims and ascertain whether or not he could give a certificate. The matter between my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) and myself perhaps is more than a matter of procedure, than anything else. Possibly, it would not be proper for me to press for a paper which is, in the judgment of the government, confidential. But what I thought would be due to the House, and possibly, to myself as I moved for the order, was, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) happened to be out at the time, the matter should have been mentioned in the House, and the records of the House kept right in that respect. Further than that, I would hardly suppose, as the claim has ceased to be an existing claim against the government, that there would be any objection to bringing the paper down.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say that some time ago, I asked the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he would bring down copies of reports, papers and correspondence with the government or any member thereof, all orders in council and statements of all moneys paid in respect of the bridge over the Richelieu River and the $35,000 voted therefor by parliament. The date at which this was put on the paper precluded my reaching it, since the government have taken all days for their business. I think the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) promised that he would have these papers brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not think I went so far as that.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I hope my right hon. friend will promise it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I told my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that I thought the correspondence was going on. I will inquire whether the papers can be brought down and give an answer to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I have had no response to the orders of the House passed in 1898-9, and 1900 respectively, for papers relating to the dismissals of employees on alleged grounds of partisanship, so far as concerns three or four departments of the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I thought I had brought down a very complete return. The hon. gentleman says that there were some departments not mentioned. Will he say which they are?

Mr. FOSTER. The whole of the return brought down by my right hon. friend had relation solely to half the order, which was for the expenses of the commission. The other half of the order has not been fulfilled. I wish to draw the right hon. gentleman's attention also to the fact that the return to the order of the House for the correspondence relating to the purchase of hay for the British government has not come down. I would like to have that before the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture pass in review.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. member (Mr. Foster) asked some days ago for the correspondence between the Department of Finance and the Canadian Bank of Commerce respecting the government banking business in the Yukon district. There has been no motion to bring the papers down. I move for leave to lay the papers on the Table.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 183) to amend the Companies' Clauses Act.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). In moving the third reading of this Bill, I desire to say that when the Bill was—

Mr. FOSTER. Unfortunately, I have not had an opportunity of looking over that. Does it matter whether it goes on now or on Monday?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. I will let it stand until Monday.

THE CITY AND DISTRICT SAVINGS BANKS, AND LA CAISSE D'ECONOMIE DE QUEBEC.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 177) to amend chapter 32 of the Statutes of 1890, intitled: 'An Act respecting savings banks in the province of Quebec.'—(Mr. Fielding.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. What amendments were made?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This Bill, I may say, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It was very well considered and some slight amendments were made, but nothing very material.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 160), to amend the Expropriation Act, were read the first time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that said amendments be read the second time and concurred in. He said: In this case the House passed the Bill adopting 5 per cent as the rate of interest instead of 6 per cent in the Expropriation Act, and likewise in the corresponding Bill respecting the rate of interest in general. The Senate has recast the Bill, but without changing its purpose. It is merely a change in the drafting.

Motion agreed to.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved that Bill (No. 174), to amend the Penitentiary Act, be read the second time. He said; These amendments merely apply to the schedule to which I wish to make certain additions respecting penitentiary employees who were omitted last year.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). Will the minister read over that schedule and note the changes from the present Act?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the Bill you will find the changes in brackets. The first is assistant storekeeper, who is not provided in the schedule of 1899.

Mr. FOSTER. What did he get?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. His salary is $600, there is no change in the salary. It simply adds his name to the list, and under this law the limit mentioned in the schedule is the limit within which the Governor General in Council must keep in fixing the salary. In this case the maximum is $600.

Mr. FIELDING.

No. 2 is assistant hospital overseer and schoolmaster, not provided for in schedule of 1899. It is proposed to increase the salary by $100, in view of the length of service and special qualification of the officer, Mr. Thompson. No. 3 is the electrician, not provided for in schedule of 1899. The salary is that now paid. No. 4 is the assistant electrician, not provided for in schedule of 1899. It is proposed to increase the salary by $100, in view of the efficiency of the officer and the increasing responsibility of the work. Nos. 5 and 6 are the superintendent of the cordage industry and the assistant superintendent, not provided for in schedule of 1899. The salaries are those now paid. No. 7 is the firemen. This merely changes the word 'stokers' to that of 'firemen' in order to retain uniformity of expression. No. 8 is the assistant storekeeper at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. This office has been created during the past year, and is filled by one of the guards who has special qualifications as to education and fitness otherwise. The salary is fixed at the same rate as that paid to the assistant storekeeper at Kingston. No. 9 is the firemen, not provided for in schedule of 1899. The salary is that now paid. No. 10 is the steward of Dorchester penitentiary, not provided for in schedule of 1899. It is found undesirable to amalgamate the offices of storekeeper and steward, as it destroys the check which is afforded by having the purchase and distribution of supplies under the control of separate officers. The salary is fixed at the same rate as that paid the storekeeper, which is the rule existing at other penitentiaries. No. 11 is the firemen at Dorchester, not provided for in schedule of 1899. The salary is that now paid. Nos. 12 and 13 are the storekeeper and steward of the Manitoba penitentiary. The schedule of 1899 provided for united office of steward and storekeeper. The remarks under No. 10 apply. The salaries are fixed at the same rate as those of Dorchester and British Columbia. Nos. 14 and 15 are the firemen at the Manitoba penitentiary and the British Columbia penitentiary, not provided for in schedule of 1899. The salary is fixed at the same rate as that paid to guards, which is the rule applied at other penitentiaries.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). I would like to draw the attention of the Solicitor General to the salaries of the wardens. In two penitentiaries they receive $2,600 and in the others only $2,000. I would like to know why this apparent discrimination is made. Of course it may be answered that there is a difference in the number of inmates in those institutions respectively, but I should rather think that that is not a sufficient reason for making a difference in the salaries. There may be a difference of 100 inmates between the British Columbia and the Kingston penitentiary, but I should think it would take just as much ability, and time and care to administer the affairs of the one institution as the other. I do not think that the number of inmates should decide the amount of the salaries of the wardens at these various institutions. I am not satisfied that there is a justification for such a difference, for instance, between the salary of the wardens at Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul on the one hand and the salary of the wardens of Manitoba and British Columbia in the other case. I would strongly urge that some different arrangement should be made in respect to salary. It may be that $2,600 is too much for the wardens of Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul, and I am certain that $2,000 is very much too small for the wardens in Manitoba and British Columbia. If $2,600 is a fair remuneration for the wardens of the two first named institutions, I would suggest that the salaries of the wardens in British Columbia and Manitoba be increased to at least $2,500. In the penitentiary in British Columbia, the warden and other officers are under greater expense than they are in the eastern institutions, enough greater to make up for the difference in the number of inmates. I believe that within the last year or two the wardens in the western institutions have had eliminated certain privileges which had been accorded them hitherto, notwithstanding that their living expenses are higher. I would mention the fact that since his visit to British Columbia the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has seen fit to increase the rate of salaries in that province owing to the greater cost of living. I think that what applies in the customs would apply with equal force to the penitentiary officials, and I would strongly urge the government to consider the advisability of increasing the salaries of the wardens of the Manitoba and British Columbia penitentiaries. If the hon. Solicitor General does not see his way clear at present, I would strongly urge that the items stand until this matter is looked into further by the government, because I am sure the question has not been considered with that care that is usually given to these matters by the Department of Justice.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Some consideration must be had for the responsibility which attaches to the persons who are at the head of the penitentiaries in determining the salary to which they should be entitled. In reference to Kingston penitentiary the limit fixed by the schedule for the warden is $2,600, St. Vincent de Paul $2,400, Dorchester, Manitoba and British Columbia, $2,000. If we look at the penitentiary returns we find that the number of inmates at Kingston on June 30 last year was 570, St. Vincent de Paul 447, Dorchester 226, Manitoba 112, British Columbia 90.

Mr. MORRISON. May I tell the hon. gentleman that a great many of the British Columbia convicts are transferred to Kingston and Stony Mountain? There is not accommodation enough in the building at New Westminster to hold all the inmates, and the consequence is that the figure 90 does not represent the number that ought to be credited to the penitentiary in British Columbia. I think you would find that if the institution there could hold all that unfortunately are eligible to be sent there the number would be very nearly 200, so that the objection of the hon. gentleman does not hold good.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid the hon. Solicitor General has not taken into account one thing which might have an effect in carrying out the wishes of my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison). That is, the admitted general cussedness of convicts in British Columbia. Aside from that, I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General if he has yet found out the age of the newly-appointed warden at Dorchester?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have asked the age of this gentleman, and I have made a memorandum of it, which is with some other memoranda containing other information that the hon. gentleman asks me. I have to answer two or three questions asked by the hon. gentleman. I will answer them altogether when the estimates come up as I have not the information by me.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not wish this clause to pass without having something more definite in regard to the remarks which I have made. I think these reasons which I have given are sufficiently cogent to receive some little entertainment at the hands of the government. I have not made these remarks in an idle way at all or for the purpose of saying so many words and taking up so much time. I think the situation there has not been considered as seriously as it should have been. Although there may be 570 convicts in Kingston penitentiary, there are in reality very many more than ninety in British Columbia penitentiary. But, as I said before, I do not think the number of inmates is a fair criterion. That does not increase the responsibility of the warden at all in my opinion. I think that should not be the standard or the criterion to adopt in gauging the salaries that should be paid in these respective penitentiaries. I think the salaries should be as nearly uniform as possible, having, of course, regard to the difference in the expense of living in the different provinces, and I also think that the wardens should be interchanged between these institutions. I think, in regard to the administration in these institutions, that if the wardens were changed about more than they are a great many of these investigations, which are taking place so frequently, would be obviated. I think there should be some readjustment of the salaries of the wardens. I do not see where there is any justification for such a difference between the salaries paid at Kingston and in British Columbia and Manitoba as $2,000 and $2,600. As the hon. Solicitor General has stated the number of inmates seems to have been the reason for it, but this criterion is altogether fallacious as far as the British Columbia penitentiary is concerned. The government have not furnished sufficient accommodation for the requirements. The penitentiary is a small one, and met the requirements of the province when it was a small and obscure province. But, to-day, the population has increased very much, and I am afraid that the government has not that regard for the institution there that it should have. I might say further that we must anticipate an influx from the Yukon to the provincial institution, and I think, with that in view, and the additional responsibility that it would entail, there should be some change made. I again press very strongly upon the Solicitor General that before this Bill passes an amendment should be made now increasing the salaries of the wardens of British Columbia and Manitoba to $2,500, or some assurance should be given that the matter will be seriously considered. I would like something to be done.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think my hon. friend ought to claim that the warden of British Columbia penitentiary is entitled to additional remuneration merely because a certain number of convicts which otherwise would be confined in this institution have been removed to Stony Mountain and Kingston. It might be a reason for increasing the remuneration of those who have the responsibility for their custody, but, perhaps, when the penitentiary is enlarged, as we intend to enlarge it, it may be possible to increase the salary of the warden, but I cannot see under what circumstances the government would be justified at present in making any change.

On section 2,

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a new clause? What is the purpose of it?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I ought to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), that under the statute that existed, previous to 1895, the salaries then payable to officers were larger than the salaries that have been paid since 1895, and this section is intended to protect those who were appointed at that time when these larger salaries were payable, so that nothing done under the provisions of this schedule can affect the salary paid to a person previous to that time. I think it is fair that a man who has entered the public service on the consideration that he should receive a certain amount should not be affected in connection with the payment of this salary.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House do resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

He said: In the budget speech the announcement was made of some change in the tariff. The matter has yet to be finally ratified by the House in the shape of a Bill. The object of the present motion is, that we may go into committee with a view of passing the necessary legislation to give effect to what was communicated to the House in the budget speech. The proposed increase of the preferential tariff takes effect on July 1, and it is, therefore, desirable that it shall be now consummated.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). The Minister of Finance has now an opportunity of saving the granite industry which it was stated yesterday, would likely be destroyed by the increase of the preference to 33½ per cent. My hon. friend will remember that when the 25 per cent was announced, previous to giving that preference some very material additions were made to the tariff on certain articles. My hon. friend can now, by a stroke of the pen, and with the assent of the House, which I am sure he will receive, he can except the granite industry in Canada from the imminent destruction which my hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Moore) so fully portrayed to the House yesterday.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already given my opinion on this subject. I feel very hopeful that my hon. friend from Stanstead was mistaken, and that the case is not so serious as he imagines. Whenever a change is made in the tariff, gentlemen interested in a particular industry often expect danger, but, in very many cases, the danger does not turn out to be so serious as they expected. I am in hope that that will occur in this case. I do not think it would be wise for us to exempt from our general policy a particular item in this way.

Mr. GILBERT W. GANONG (Charlotte). This is a very much more serious matter than the Minister of Finance recognizes. Once or twice I had occasion to bring this question to the attention of the House, and it certainly is a most serious thing for the workmen of the county whom I have the honour to represent. The granite manufacturers have had great difficulty in the past in securing the Canadian trade, and in anticipation of this additional reduction in the duty they are much alarmed. The question brought before the House by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore) has apparently not received that attention from the government which it deserves. The conditions of trade in Canada and the United States are so nearly identical that our people have to pay very much higher wages in the manufacture of granite than are paid in Scotland, which is our principal competitor. We found difficulty in the past, in the village of St. George, N.B., where there is an extensive granite industry, in retaining men in our workshops, as they gravitate to the United States, where higher wages are paid and where the manufacturers have a greater protection for their industry. The government should look into this matter immediately and not defer it to some future time, when it may be found that the granite industry in my county, as well as in the rest of Canada, has been seriously damaged.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and concurred in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 184) to amend the Customs tariff, 1897.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, considered in committee and reported.

LAND TITLES ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford) moved that the House do concur in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 139) to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been done in the Senate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As to the sale of land for non-payment of taxes, the point was raised that we were interfering with the jurisdiction that was given to the North-west Territories, and there was considerable doubt as to whether the Act we passed did not do so, although the amendment had been made at the suggestion of Judge McGuire and some of the barristers in the Territories. That has been dropped out, and it has been left in the hands of the North-west council to make provision. As to the other clause, we passed the Bill here, I think, at the instance of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin); and the clause in the Bill we passed and the one the hon. member for Western Assiniboia moved which was accepted were put together in the Senate and made clause 5.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it carry out the idea of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, to the fullest extent.

Motion agreed to, and amendments concurred in.

ELECTION ACT CONSOLIDATION AND AMENDMENT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 133) to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members of the House of Commons.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I would draw the attention of my hon. friend the Solicitor General to the inconvenience of taking up this Bill while some hon. gentlemen who take a very active interest in it are engaged on another committee. I refer particularly to the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). If it would be equally convenient, I would suggest that the hon. gentleman take this up at another time.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). We ourselves have every interest in having the hon. member for Montmorency present, as he has made a special study of this subject. As I understand that the government desire to have the Bill disposed of, so as to get it before the Senate, perhaps as a compromise it might be agreed that we should now take the clauses not dealt with by the hon. member for Montmorency's amendments, and take the others after eight o'clock.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). There are some gentlemen from Ontario who have considered the Bill carefully, and if we took it up in their absence, the discussion would probably occupy more time than it would if they were present. I would suggest that the Bill be taken up on Tuesday.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). There was a large amount of discussion on this Bill, and a great many of the sections are in such a shape now that with very little further discussion the Bill can be got into such a shape that it can be passed. It will have to be reprinted. I do not think there is anything in the general clauses of the Bill about which there is much dispute, and there are some amendments relating to Prince Edward Island in which the hon. member for Montmorency has no interest, and I think we had better dispose of these this afternoon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We all have a common object, that is, to promote the business of the House as rapidly as possible, and I am satisfied that my hon. friend the Solicitor General will do that by not taking up this Bill under circumstances under which it will be impossible to deal with it in a satisfactory manner.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I suggest that we deal with the Prince Edward Island amendments this afternoon, and leave the others.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Very well.

On section 21,

Mr. MARTIN moved to insert after the word 'Act' in line 43, of section 21, the following words:

And in Prince Edward Island only, a copy of the Franchise Act of 1898.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There seems to be no reason for that particular amendment, but the next amendment commends itself to the committee. There is no more reason why a copy of the Franchise Act should be sent to Prince Edward Island, any more than to any other part of the Dominion.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that in section 31, line 45, after the word 'Act,' the following words be inserted:

Such instructions to Prince Edward Island shall contain such sections of the provincial law as relate to the qualifications of voters, and shall also contain the oath required by sections 65 and 66.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I beg to propose a further amendment, that in line 50, after the word 'election,' the following words be inserted:

Including in Prince Edward Island such notices or advertisements regarding the qualifications of voters as are required to be placed under the provincial law.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Those amendments suit the purposes of Prince Edward Island, but supposing this matter is discussed again by those who reside in other provinces?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The sections could be passed if my hon. friend the Solicitor General would permit them to be taken up again if any gentlemen would desire them to be taken up.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have no objection to that.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. To carry out the same view, I move that section 41, subsection a, after the word 'mentioned' in the 39th line, the following words be added:

And in Prince Edward Island such notice or advertisement regarding the qualification of voters as is required to be posted under the provincial law.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that in the same section, subsection c, line 48, after the word 'Act,' the following words be added:

And in Prince Edward Island a copy of the Franchise Act of 1898.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have objected to this on the same ground as that on which I objected to the previous amendment. It is possible that we may have to consider the question of sending the Franchise Act as part of the instructions to the returning officers all through the Dominion; but I see no reason why we should make an exception in the case of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MARTIN. Does not the hon. Solicitor General see that it would be necessary for the returning officer to have a copy of the local Act?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But this is not the local Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The local Act is provided for under the amendment moved by my hon. friend with reference to section 21.

Mr. MARTIN. The Franchise Act should be ordered for all over the Dominion. Otherwise, there is liable to be a good deal of confusion. There is the Franchise Act of the Dominion, and the officers will be at a loss which to follow.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that in section 41 the following words be added at the end of subsection c:

And one copy of instructions approved by the Governor in Council as provided by section 21 of this Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is already provided for.

Mr. MARTIN. It is provided that it shall go to the returning officer, but not that it shall be sent to the deputy returning officer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is one of many forms which he sends to his deputy, and it is not necessary to make a statutory provision that it shall be sent.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the Solicitor General, in the meantime, if it is the intention that the Election Act and the Franchise Act shall be bound together, and be for distribution, in the limited sense required to carry on the election—that the candidates should have them as well as the officers.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is invariably provided that way.

Mr. INGRAM. In one volume the Franchise Act is printed in full. A portion of that is taken out and placed in the election law; but I do not find the Franchise Act in full with the Election Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) will find the sections of the Franchise Act not printed with the other are in the Election Act, because they properly refer to the Election Act.

Mr. MARTIN. I would press my amendment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. May I call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) to section 21, and if that does not cover the point, then let the words that he has proposed be inserted. Section 21 says:

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of copies of voters' lists, if there are any, one copy of this Act, and of such instructions approved by the Governor in Council as are required to carry out the election according to the provisions of this Act (with a copious alphabetical index prefixed), for the returning officer himself, one copy for the election clerk, and one for each of the deputy returning officers, and also for each deputy returning officer, a sufficient number of blank poll books—

And so on. Is not that plain enough?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) is not out of place. It is true you send enough for the deputy returning officers, but why not give the same directions that they are to be sent to the deputy returning officers? There would be no harm, and I think I would rather see it in than out.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 64,

Mr. MARTIN. I move that subsection 2 be amended as follows:

After the column headed 'place of residence,' another column be provided headed 'qualification of voters.'

Mr. INGRAM. This is one of the sections there is going to be considerable discussion upon, if the Solicitor General advocates the same as he did the other evening. We, in whose province the law provides for manhood suffrage, are not satisfied with this section, because it is in direct conflict with the provincial Franchise Act, which you have adopted.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. A part of this section reads this way:

If in any polling division where, under the provincial law, no list of voters is provided or required, he is found qualified—

I do not see any necessity for saying 'is to be found qualified.' That would imply that the deputy returning officer had some judicial functions to find out whether the voter was qualified.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is something in what the hon. gentleman says, but I think it is better to leave it as it is, because in Prince Edward Island the returning officer has to determine something in spite of anything we may desire.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In many cases the deputy returning officer has to exercise practically judicial functions. Take for instance, a case that may arise when a man who would be otherwise qualified to vote is disqualified because of some local enactments, notwithstanding his name is not on the list, he may be entitled to vote by taking the oath. Under these circumstances it would be necessary for the deputy returning officer to find that that man is not entitled to vote.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not see any use of the word 'found' there. It might be misleading, because some deputy returning officers might think it was their duty to decide whether the voter is qualified or not. In the province of Prince Edward Island there is no such thing as a deputy returning officer being clothed with judicial functions, he has only to administer the law as it is. If a man takes the oath he is qualified, and the returning officer has nothing to do in determining any other qualification. I know that the deputy returning officers in different parts of the province are sometimes inclined to go beyond their duty, and to say that a man is qualified when he is not qualified. If they are left with the impression that they have a judicial function to find out whether a man is qualified, I think they may fall into mistakes. The qualification is determined by the statutes, not by the deputy returning officer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman sees that the section applies to the whole Dominion, not to Prince Edward Island alone. It is not necessary to retain the words for other parts of the Dominion. In Prince Edward Island there are certain judicial functions, if we may call them such, that the deputy returning officer must exercise. If the voter votes on what is called the statute labour qualification, he must produce to the presiding officer a receipted certificate in writing, subscribed with the name of the road overseer. The returning officer must determine whether he has really produced that or not. As the word is unnecessary in other parts of the Dominion and cannot do any harm with us, I think it had better be left alone.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I think in subsection 3, there is a clause that overturns the spirit of the Act in the province of Ontario, namely this:

If the elector's name is found on the list of voters for the polling district of the polling station, he shall be entitled to vote.

Now in the province of Ontario the essence of the qualification is residence; but any person, although he is not a resident, might come in and take the oath, unless there is a special form required in the province of Ontario to conform with the franchise in that province. The hon. gentleman has made no provision for that. He has a general oath under which every voter in the country who is on the list can come and vote. I want to ask the hon. gentleman if he proposes to meet that difficulty by having a very explicit oath in conformity with the franchise in Ontario, so that a person will only have one vote as under the Franchise Act of that province?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say exactly now as to the nature of the oath that I intend to provide, but I see immediately that some provision must be made to meet the difficulties suggested by my hon. friend. But I do not want to deal with any of these clauses at present except as regards Prince Edward Island, because there are several gentlemen here who want to consider these clauses independently of Prince Edward Island altogether. That point is one that interests largely gentlemen from the west, particularly the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. CLANCY. It may involve doing the work over again. Take, for instance, subsection 3, it does not specifically mention Prince Edward Island, therefore, whatever effect it might have, will be upon all the provinces. It seems to me it would be well that section 64 should stand in the meantime.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We want, in the meantime, to dispose of the Prince Edward Island amendments. In other respects I want to keep this clause over, because I think I made a statement when the matter was up the other night, which is misleading. I think I stated that if a man's name is on the list, the question of residence would not affect him. I think I was wrong when I made that statement; therefore, I want to take that clause up again when all those who are interested in that particular section are present, and we can do that on Tuesday.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. INGRAM. If it is the intention of the government that they are not going to adopt the provincial franchise of Ontario as they find it, and as I understood that they were going to do—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We are going to.

Mr. INGRAM. If you purpose doing that, then, certainly, this subsection 3 must come out of this Bill and some such amendment as I propose must be placed in it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think it must be amended. I think we might perhaps be able to hold over that section as I think there will have to be some amendment, and perhaps if we went on with these other sections and came back to this one again we would avoid having two discussions over it.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, I understand that the government are not going to frame any legislation that will be the means of bringing in the outside or non-resident vote under the section as it will be amended.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. INGRAM. That is all right.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This section has to be amended.

Mr. GEORGE GUILLET (West Northumberland). I would like to direct the hon. Solicitor General's attention to a case of hardship that would arise under this clause. That is the case of a business man who has had his name placed on the list, but whose business requirements take him away from the electoral division for perhaps the whole period of the year, and who is not, therefore, a continuous resident. There is a young man, a civil engineer, whose home is in one of the rural sections of my county, and whose business takes him to different parts of the province for two or three months at a time. He is not a continuous resident anywhere to an extent sufficient to enable him to qualify in any other division, but his name is on the list in the constituency that I represent.

Mr. SPROULE. That is his domicile.

Mr. GUILLET. No, not necessarily. His home has been there, and he is on the list as an owner of property there, but he will have no vote anywhere else, and if he is disqualified for want of continuous residence he will have no vote at all.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If I understand the hon. gentleman this gentleman, whom he represents, has his name on the list for local elections?

Mr. GUILLET. He is on the Dominion list now.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. And on the local list ?

Mr. GUILLET. Yes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Then he will come in under our Act.

Mr. GUILLET. If he is not a continuous resident ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The clause will stand.

On section 65,

Mr. MARTIN moved :

That section 65 be amended by striking out the following words in the 6th, 7th and 8th lines: 'Such changes being made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think whoever drafted that amendment could not have given it any consideration. This relates to the oaths which are provided for by provincial Acts to be taken in provincial elections, and when these oaths are administered at a Dominion election there must necessarily be some changes made in their form. You would have a slightly different oath at a provincial election. You do not change them excepting in so far as it is necessary, because one is a Dominion election and the other a provincial election.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this confined to Prince Edward Island alone ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, it is not. It would be just as much essential in Ontario to have these words in as in Prince Edward Island, because there are oaths under all the provincial Acts which would have to be taken. I think a mistake has been made by whoever gave the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) that memorandum.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not quite certain that this section does not complicate the difficulty, although I quite see the importance of the section, as pointed out by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The section reads :

An elector, if required by the deputy returning officer, the poll clerk, one of the candidates, or an agent of a candidate, or by any elector present shall, before receiving his ballot paper, take such oath of (or sign such statement as to) qualification—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The words :

—or sign such statement as to—

—were struck out when we discussed the Bill the other day.

Mr. CLANCY. There is no qualification in the province of Ontario.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It does not apply to Ontario if there is no qualification.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not think it will do to strike out these words.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This amendment was introduced because the intention originally was to make this Bill applicable to the North-west Territories where an elector might have been called upon to sign a statement, but in no other province of the Dominion would it be applicable.

Mr. HENDERSON. My difficulty all along has been to find what form of oath will be used in the province of Ontario in the case of the ordinary voter whose name is on the list, and, of course, votes under the manhood franchise provision. Where are we to find the form of oath that a voter may be required to take ? There is no oath provided for in the schedule of this Bill, and I fail to find it anywhere other than in the statutes of the province. That would seem to me to be very troublesome. Besides, if it is the intention of the hon. Solicitor General that the elector who has gone out of the riding should be permitted to come back and vote, notwithstanding that he has ceased to be a resident, as indicated by section 64, then, the form of oath would have to be verified. I submit that it would be necessary to prescribe the form of oath and put it in the schedule of this Bill, so that it would not be left to the deputy returning officer to say what form of oath shall be administered to the elector. If it is the intention of the hon. Solicitor General to adhere closely to the principle that is adopted in Ontario that a man, to entitle him to vote, must be a resident of the riding at the time of voting, there will not be a variation of the oath that is used in elections for the Ontario legislature, and if it is the Ontario oath that is to be used I would suggest that it should be incorporated in this law so that the deputy returning officer could put his hand upon it. Until we can get a full answer from the hon. Solicitor General as to the meaning of that section we cannot decide upon the oath.

Mr. MARTIN. That is the trouble that I referred to in making this amendment. If the hon. Solicitor General will turn to section 21 he will see that it refers to the same oaths, and the same in regard to section 66. If you leave these sections as they are then the deputy returning officer has the changing of the oath.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. There must be a few words changed in the oath as taken in a provincial election to make it applicable to a Dominion election, and that change is sent in the instructions.

Mr. MARTIN. If it is left altogether with the deputy returning officer to make the change, one deputy returning officer will make the change at one poll and another deputy returning officer may vary it at another poll. I want it specifically laid down what this oath shall be. The deputy returning officers all through the Dominion are sometimes not very well educated men, and they should not have control over the changing the form of oath.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, the change in the form of the oath is made by the amendment which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has already suggested, and which has been accepted by the Solicitor General in section 21, under which instructions are sent to the returning officer as to the form of oath. This particular section applies to the whole Dominion and not to Prince Edward Island alone. I approve of the suggestion, and I merely point out that it has been incorporated in the previous amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. The deputy returning officer has still charge of changing the oath, and so long as I have a voice here I will not allow this clause to go so far as my province is concerned.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin). The experience is that you find deputy returning officers who cannot select the oath or word it properly, and there often arises a dispute between the agent and the deputy returning officer. I have known this to occur several times, and if some provision could be put in whereby the form of oath is given in the instructions, it would be desirable.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is what is done with regard to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. SPROULE. It should be done with regard to the other provinces.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think that suggestion is one we ought to adopt and the best way to adopt it is by making the amendment suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) in section 21, applicable to the whole Dominion.

On section 65,

Mr. MARTIN. In my opinion, after the amendment that has just been made, it will be necessary to amend this section because this leaves it for the deputy returning officer to make the changes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend must see that he is wrong, because I hold in my hand the oath that must be taken under the provincial law, and if he strikes out those words, the provincial oath would have to be followed literally, and if so, a man would have to swear: 'I have not voted before in this election for an assemblyman;' which would be absurd. These words must be changed to 'the House of Commons of Canada,' to make the oath apply to a Dominion election.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Does not section 21 provide that the oath shall be changed and that the form of oath as changed shall be taken?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who is to make the changes in the oath?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under the original amendment they would be made when the instructions were sent by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to the returning officer, and the oath as changed would be put in the instructions.

Mr. MARTIN. If that is the case, it is all right.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That being the case, if the hon. gentleman's amendment were accepted, and these words relating to the changes were struck out, the voter would be obliged to take the provincial oath.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would make a suggestion, because I confess I see a difficulty. You have in the schedule the actual oath that is to be taken, and therefore why refer to the provincial oath at all?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend must remember that this is a general section applicable to the whole Dominion, whereas the amendment relates only to Prince Edward Island.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand that the Solicitor General proposes to amend section 21 so as to make it apply generally, and not merely to Prince Edward Island. If so, there is no necessity of referring to any change in the provincial oath.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This Act provides necessarily that before a man gets his ballot paper he must take the oath of the particular qualification in the province on which he proposes to vote. He cannot take that oath in the form in which it is made for the province. It is essential that a few informal changes be made to make it applicable to a Dominion election. So that this section was drafted improperly by the draughtsman.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who is to modify the oath ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So far as the law goes now, it is modified by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery under the instructions of the Minister of Justice, I suppose.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will there be a modification in the oath in the instructions for all the other provinces ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Solicitor General has stated that he will consider the application of that amendment to the other provinces when we come to take up the question again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Under this section it would be the duty of the deputy returning officer at each polling booth to deal with the matter, and you would have an enormous variety of votes. It would be advisable to make this a little more definite. The difficulty is we do not want to encumber this statute with a long schedule of votes in the different provinces, but on the other hand you do not want to leave the matter indefinite.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If this section stood alone, I could understand the difficulty, but if you read it in conjunction with section 21, as amended, making that section applicable to the whole Dominion, then the authority would be contained in the instructions to the returning officer.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By what authority is the form of the oath to be forwarded by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to be settled ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I presume in the same way as the instructions, by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would be quite satisfactory.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) I would suggest that the wording be changed slightly so as to read 'and such changes being made in the form,' instead of 'as changed in form under authority of section 21.'

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would propose that the wording be changed to 'such changes having been made in the form of oath.' That would meet the difficulty.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. INGRAM. I would draw attention to the necessity of having two forms of oath in the province of Ontario, one to suit the rural sections, where they have manhood franchise straight and the lists prepared in the ordinary way, to which form 16 is applicable; but, where you have manhood registration in the cities and county towns, it is necessary to have form 17.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Quite right.

On section 67.

Mr. MARTIN. I would propose in amendment to add to the end of this section the following words :

Such person having taken the proper oath described by this Act and the laws of the province shall be entitled to receive his ballot and to vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That would seem to imply that when a man took the oath, without producing his certificate, he would be entitled to vote, but that is not the law. The object my hon. friend has in view is correct, but a man is not entitled to vote simply because he takes the oath; he must produce his certificate. Can my hon. friend show that any evil has ever existed that he is wishing to overcome ?

Mr. MARTIN. The evil is that in our province where the qualification is decided at the poll, the returning officer may say: You have not answered these questions. Perhaps he may raise a great many objections to the answer that may be given. The returning officer may say to him: You shall answer a number of other questions, otherwise you shall not get your ballot paper; and upon his refusing to answer the questions he gets no ballot paper. Of course, section 66 provides about the statute labour receipt, but the door is open to the returning officer, under this section, to say that a man has not answered questions properly, although he is ready to take the oath and has produced his statute labour receipt. I think we had better leave it open, because I have known, in by-elections that were held in Prince Edward Island last December, where a deputy returning officer took it on himself to say when a man was qualified and when he was not; and when a man had taken the oath the deputy said he had no right to vote; and another man refused to vote although the deputy said he could vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will you adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax: 'And has otherwise complied with the requirements of the law.' When you say, in so many words, that when he takes the oath he shall be entitled to his ballot, I think that is all that is necessary.

Amendment negatived.

On section 67.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to ask the Solicitor General, at this stage, in order to save time, if it is his intention that the oaths for the respective provinces are to form a schedule to the Act so that we may see what they are ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think, since we are going to make an amendment to section 21, it will be necessary to have the provincial oaths put in the instructions that are sent to the returning officer.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it intended to have a schedule to that ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, he will see that we are going on with our eyes shut. I am sure the hon. gentleman has given a great deal of attention to the form of the oath, but he will pardon the suggestion that other members of the House should see the form of the provincial oath before we go any further.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would state my reason why I think it necessary that these separate oaths should form part of this Act. Now, we are commencing to revise the list in the province of Ontario for 1900, and if an election should not be held until after January 1, the lists that we are now making will be the lists on which the election will be held. Now, it is absolutely necessary that we should know, whilst these lists are being revised by our county court judges what the qualification is. The oath is really the qualification, that is the final test, and it will never do for us to be groping in the dark and revising the lists without knowing what test is going to be submitted to the voter when the election comes on. I think we ought to know the oath now, before the lists are revised. Certainly it will be a great advantage, and it will be a terrible disadvantage if we do not know.

Mr. MARTIN. There is another objection in this section. This has also reference to ballots which are to be initialled, and the question may arise with the returning officer whether, when a man's vote is objected to, he is to receive any ballot at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do you not see that he has to put his name and initials on his ballot ? That is all right.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 172) respecting the Canada Mining and Metallurgical Company.—(Mr. Casey.)

Bill (No. 181)—from the Senate—for the relief of William Henry Featherstonhaugh (on division).—(Mr. Gibson.)

Mr. CLANCY.

ELECTION ACT—CONSOLIDATION AND AMENDMENT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 133) to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members to the House of Commons.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 67,

Mr. MARTIN. We were discussing this clause. Mr. Chairman, and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) took exception to the amendment that I proposed. The exception he has taken to the amendment has reference to the case of a franchise voter who is known in Prince Edward Island as a person voting on the performance of statute labour, or the payment of commutation money, or poll tax.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I expressed myself as willing to accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden).

Mr. MARTIN. I have prepared since an amendment, which, I think, will cover the ground still more fully. I propose to add to the clause the following words :

—and such person having taken, if required, the oaths prescribed by this Act and the laws of the province, shall be entitled to receive such ballot paper and to vote, provided always that any person qualified to vote on the ground of the performance of statute labour, the payment of commutation money, or the payment of poll tax, shall be required before taking such oath to produce the certificate that is required by the provincial law.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not as comprehensive as the words suggested by the hon. member for Halifax: 'Otherwise complying with the requirements of the law.' I think you had better adopt his suggestion. The suggestion did not seem to be amiss, and I think, it meets the situation pretty well. You limit it entirely to the statute labour vote there.

Mr. MARTIN. No, statute labour, poll tax in cities, and commutation money. There are no others.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If there are any others you put them out altogether.

Mr. J. H. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) The suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) is an innovation ; it is asking us to amend our provincial system of conducting elections. The proposition is to make a material change in this respect ; the deputy returning officer has of necessity to perform certain quasi judicial functions, and we cannot divest him of these, unless we put these functions into the hands of the voter. You can easily see that would be getting out of the frying pan into the fire. The statute labour certificate, for instance, is produced and the deputy returning officer has to look over it and see whether that certificate is for the proper year. That is one difficulty that most frequently occurs. A proposed voter produces his certificate, it turns out that it is not a proper one, that it is not for labour performed within the time prescribed by law. The deputy returning officer has to act in a judicial capacity to decide that point. Very often he sends the man away to get a proper certificate.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it the returning officer, or have not the agents as much anxiety about that certificate as the deputy returning officer?

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) Well, the deputy returning officer has to decide, among the different contentions. I am only speaking of this one point; there are others that frequently arise. Of course, in a general way, the matter largely rests with the voter. If he swears that he is twenty-one years of age that ends it, if he swears that he is a British subject that ends it, or if he swears that he has resided twelve months in the subdivision, that ends it. In most cases, therefore, the whole matter depends upon the oath of the voter. All the voter has to do is to make out a prima facie case. But there are matters which are in the judgment and discretion of the deputy returning officer, and our system prevents us from taking them out of his hands. The voter may be willing to take the oaths, but that does not determine the whole of his qualification. You must, therefore, leave the matter where it stands. We have grown up under that system, we have become satisfied with it, and I say we have no right now to attempt to substitute another. Our policy is, and should be, to adopt the system as it is in force in the several provinces. Under these circumstances, I think the better way is to leave matters as they stand. My hon. friend proposes to meet this difficulty, and says: Let us provide that when the voter takes the necessary oaths and produces the necessary qualifications, then let him vote. That puts the thing exactly as it was before; it makes it no better and no worse. It is a work of supererogation; there is no necessity for it. Supposing a voter who is qualified comes up to vote and the returning officer refuses his vote. What then? The voter has his action in the Supreme Court against the deputy returning officer. The deputy returning officer dare not refuse to allow him to vote.

Mr. INGRAM. That would do him a lot of good after the election was over.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) That is the penalty under our system. I do not say whether it is a good system or a bad system, but you do not make it any better by adopting the suggestion of the hon. member for East Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Martin.)

Mr. MARTIN. Does not the hon. gentleman who is making that statement know that the practice in Prince Edward Island is that when the voter takes the necessary oath the deputy returning officer cannot reject his vote? Is not the hon. gentleman aware that when that is the case the only remedy is to mark the vote 'objected to' in the poll-book? It counts all the same until a recount is demanded.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) That is what I say; the matter is largely with the voter, but not altogether.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman said that it was with the deputy returning officer, that the deputy returning officer could refuse the vote.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I am saying that in a general way it is with the voter if he is willing to take the oaths. But the deputy returning officer has, nevertheless, under some circumstances, to exercise judicial functions, and I instanced the point in regard to the statute labour certificate. Here is your certificate produced, but whether it is for the proper year as prescribed by law, or whether it is signed by the proper overseer, these questions must be determined by the deputy returning officer.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) If he has not the certificate in proper form it is of no value?

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) That is not to be decided by the voter, but by the presiding officer. There, you have got to leave a certain degree of discretion with the deputy returning officer in whatever way you put the matter, and if my hon. friend's amended suggestion is adopted, even still the deputy returning officer has to determine.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think we both agree on the substance, and as it is only a matter of form, there is no use delaying the House about it. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) made a suggestion to meet the difficulty, and I am prepared to accept that suggestion. I do not think that the proposal of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) will meet the difficulty. The hon. gentleman will see that by section 78, it does not do for a man to come up and take the oath holus bolus. He must answer certain questions if he is asked, and describe the property on which he is going to vote, so that if he swears falsely he may be indicted for perjury. I myself have taken part in these prosecutions for perjury, and have seen men convicted. The voter is bound, if asked, to give the boundaries of the property on which he votes.

Mr. MARTIN. And suppose he makes a statement that is incorrect with regard to the boundary, that does not prevent him from voting.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In that case he could be indicted for perjury. I am quite willing to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden). The amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) would take away from the returning officer the duty which the law imposes upon him, of questioning every man and of compelling him to give a description of his property. If a man says he is qualified to vote on fifty acres of land, the returning officer asks him to describe it, and by the 78th section he has to properly describe the property, where it is situated, whether it is held under lease or agreement for lease, the annual rent, and all that. That is a condition precedent before he has the right to get a ballot. Suppose the voter says, that he is willing to take the oath, but that he will not answer questions, then the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) would compel the returning officer to give him the ballot if he refused. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) would do well to accept the suggestion of his own friend the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), which is: That after the word 'Province' you should insert the words 'and otherwise comply with the requirements of the law.'

Mr. MARTIN. The objection to that is that it is very indefinite.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know it is, but it is the best you can do.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 68,

Mr. MARTIN. I propose in that section, after the word 'affirmation,' to strike out the words in lines 35 and 36, 'or to sign the statement, or to answer questions or produce evidence as to qualifications.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Solicitor General has moved to strike out the words 'or to sign the statement.'

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it intended that section 68 should have general application to all the provinces?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of course.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret very much, indeed, that we on this side of the House cannot agree to that clause. I thought it only applied to Prince Edward Island, and, therefore, did not give much attention to it. The clause reads:

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

No voter who has refused to take the oath or affirmation (or to sign the statement), or to answer questions or produce evidence as to qualification as aforesaid (or to take the oath in the form U), when required to do so, shall receive a ballot paper or be admitted to vote.

Surely the Solicitor General does not intend that that clause shall have application in provinces other than Prince Edward Island?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Why not?

Mr. HENDERSON. Because, to my mind, it would make it utterly impossible to run an election. If the voter is to be subjected to all kinds of questions and to be asked to produce all kinds of evidence as to his qualifications, it will probably not be possible to poll fifty votes in any polling division.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman point out some law in the province of Ontario—for which, I presume, he speaks—which would enable you to put a question to the voter?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am very much mistaken with regard to the law as we have had it in the past, if it permits the agent or scrutineer of any candidate to submit any question to the voter, other than to ask him to take the oath.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No one said anything to the contrary.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does this not say something to the contrary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not at all. If the law of the provinces provides for putting questions, this applies; otherwise it does not. If the law is not applicable to Ontario, there is no use talking about it.

Mr. HENDERSON. But it will be applicable to Ontario if this clause goes through as it is now, because it is general in its terms. If the hon. gentleman's intention is to confine it to the province of Prince Edward Island, I do not object to it; but there is no limitation to it, and in my opinion it is unworkable.

Mr. INGRAM. This section 68 deals with the preceding sections which refer to the province of Prince Edward Island. In the old Act this same section referred to the province of Prince Edward Island. It is intended in the new Act to refer to that province, and I cannot see that it has anything to do with the province of Ontario at all.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That section has nothing at all to do with the province of Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. Let us read the section as it is presented to the ordinary mind; because it must be remembered that deputy returning officers are not usually lawyers. It seems to me that an Act of this kind should be made as simple as possible. It is declared here that the voter must answer such questions and produce such evidence of qualification as is asked of him. The deputy returning officers and scrutineers are not going to read all the sections leading up to this to find out its meaning. As the section reads now, without any limitation upon it, it applies to any of the provinces. My hon. friend, I think, could simplify it by declaring in the section that it applies to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. INGRAM. We know perfectly well that in the province of Ontario no agent, candidate or elector is allowed to ask questions of any voter going to the poll to vote. This section applies only to cases where the law of the province allows questions to be asked. Therefore, it does not apply to Ontario at all.

Mr. McALISTER. The section speaks of the 'qualification as aforesaid,' which is the qualification for Prince Edward Island, mentioned in sections 66 and 67. Therefore, this can only refer to that province.

Mr. MARTIN. The reason I want this amendment adopted is that on election day, by a series of cross-questions put to the voter the polling might be indefinitely prolonged. As a matter of fact, in that province the crucial test with regard to voting is the oath. The questioning of the voter is for the purpose of showing the voter himself whether he has a right to vote or not. A man coming up to vote, may be in doubt whether he has that right, and after some questions are put to him he may be convinced that he has a vote, and then, when he offers to take the oath, his vote cannot be refused; but if the deputy returning officer is to be made the judge whether he has answered the questions properly or not and be given the decision as to whether he shall be allowed to vote or not, then you are putting an extraordinary power into the hands of the deputy returning officer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This law has been in operation in Prince Edward Island for fifty years and has never given rise to any trouble. We are simply applying to the Dominion elections the provincial laws. Under the provincial law of Prince Edward Island, if a man claims to vote on land, he has to describe it and the description is entered in the poll-book, and if he then takes the oath and votes he is liable to be prosecuted for perjury, should he have made a false statement. If he claims the right to vote on the ground that he has performed statute labour, he must produce the certificate, or if he has lost the certificate, make an affidavit to that effect.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have passed section 66 within the last hour and this section 68 is a necessary sequel.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CLANCY. I intend moving an amendment to that section to make it clear. I hope the Solicitor General will accept it; it does not disturb the principle he holds to be involved in the two preceding sections. I move that, after the words 'evidence as to' to put in the word 'the' and after 'qualification,' to strike out the words 'as aforesaid' and substitute the words 'referred to in the two preceding sections.' Perhaps, the hon. gentleman will be able to put this amendment in better language.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) will agree to allow the clause to pass as it is, on the understanding that it with others is to come up for further discussion. What we want is to settle the Prince Edward Island amendments. Meantime, I will consider the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Clancy's) proposition.

On section 69,

Mr. MARTIN. I move that this clause be struck out, and the following be substituted :

In Prince Edward Island if the deputy returning officer refuses a ballot and the right to vote to any person who is willing to take the oaths prescribed by this Act or the provincial law, or gives a ballot to and allows to vote, any person who refuses to take such oaths, he shall for each such offence be liable to any person who may sue for the same to a penalty of $200.

Under this Bill, the deputy returning officers are given judicial powers which they should not have, and then they seek to protect these officers by making them immune—they shall not be subject to penalty. I have already proposed amendments limiting the judicial powers of the deputy returning officers; but these have been voted down, and now I propose that these officers shall be held responsible at least for their acts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am instructed by the Solicitor General that this is not a new provision inserted merely to apply to Prince Edward Island, but it is the existing law, and has been for a number of years, in the province of Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. A very bad one it is too.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not discussing that. But my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) in framing his amendment, no doubt, overlooks section 19 in which it is provided that every officer or clerk who is guilty of any wilful misfeasance or any wilful act or omission in violation of this Act shall forfeit to any person aggrieved a sum of not exceeding $500 in addition to actual damages.

Mr. CLANCY. This section was put in the Ontario law as a whitewashing section. I had some experience when that Act came up. A deputy returning officer had been guilty of wrong-doing, and this was to protect him from suffering any penalty. Under this section the burden of proof is cast upon those who take objection, who have been excluded from voting, it may be on the mere whim of a deputy returning officer. All the officer has to plead is : I did it in good faith. It is utterly impossible to show that a man did an act otherwise than in good faith. I shall not go into the history of what gave rise to this section, but no lawyer, not to say no layman, will say that it is sound in principle.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am sorry to say, as a lawyer, I am obliged to take the position that it is perfectly good law ; but it is the law, whether it is stated in this paragraph or not. Any officer who, in good faith and with reasonable and probable cause refuses to do a thing is certainly free from penalty.

Mr. CLANCY. In good faith and with reasonable and probable cause as it appears to him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, as it appears to the court.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is a mere statement here of what the common law is.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, hon. gentlemen may say that this is perfectly good law, but it is very bad morals. It places a most extraordinary power in the hands of the deputy returning officer. The deputy returning officer may reject a vote on a mere whim. Who then is to take the trouble to go into the courts to secure his rights ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) permit me a word in order to facilitate matters ? The Solicitor General says that if the members from Prince Edward Island are willing to eliminate the clause he does not care about it for the rest of the Dominion. I quite agree that it only states what the law is. If there is any objection to stating it, I am willing that the clause should be struck out. But I object to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Flint). Shall clause 69 be struck out—carried.

Mr. MARTIN. The circumstances in that province are different from those in any other province of Canada, and the difficulty of grafting a Dominion election law on the provincial franchise is apparent in every clause of this Bill. If you are going to clothe deputy returning officers in that province with the judicial power which has been given them in these clauses, an election is not safe in Prince Edward Island. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says there has been no difficulty for the last fifty years. That is not the point, we have to consider what has been taking place within the last two or three years in other parts of Canada. In Ontario we have to provide now for circumstances as we find them. We want to prevent the machine from being introduced into Prince Edward Island. I think these clauses are the thin edge of the machine. In an election held in that province not long ago a deputy returning officer make this declaration on election day: he said he was the law ; and he was a friend of the hon. gentleman who is trying to keep this amendment from being inserted in the Bill. The local Act was put in his hands, and he said : 'Oh, I do not want that, the Attorney General told me that I was the law on election day. He said to me : You can do on election day whatever you like.' I say this is the thin end of the machine that the hon. minister is trying to introduce into Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I want to point out to the hon. gentleman that I think it is he himself who is trying to introduce this machine there. The Solicitor General introduced a Bill here to provide that for all breaches of duty of this kind there should not be merely a penalty of $200, but a penalty of $500.

Mr. MARTIN. You want to strike that out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I do not, that clause is already passed. But the hon. gentleman wants to cut down the penalty from $500 to $200. I object to that, I want a returning officer who acts so flagrantly in violation of the law to be punished up to the hilt. There is another point where I think he is introducing the machine. He wants to declare that a drunken rowdy can come forward and refuse to answer any question, or produce any certificate at all, but simply to offer to take the oath, and if he does not get a ballot the returning officer is to be liable to a $200 penalty. He need not answer any questions, he need not say where his land is. Now, section 19 provides for that : 'Every officer and clerk who is guilty of any wilful malfeasance—'

Mr. MARTIN. Who is to prove whether it is wilful or not ? That means nothing at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does he want to fine a returning officer who acts bona fide ? I want to point out the three main objections that I have to his amendment. First, he minimizes the fine to a degree that I will not consent to ; secondly, he renders liable a returning officer who does not allow a man to vote though he agrees to take the oath, and whether that man will answer the proper questions or not; thirdly, he renders the returning officer liable to a fine if he refuses a ballot to a man who comes up claiming to vote on a statute labour certificate and refuses to produce the certificate.

Mr. MARTIN. Was there ever a case where that section 19 was applied?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, in McLeod's case, at Murray Harbour, where the returning officer was fined the full amount that the statute permits.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The amendment proposed is:

In Prince Edward Island if the deputy returning officer refuses a ballot and the right to vote to any person who is willing to take the oaths prescribed by this Act or the provincial law, or gives a ballot to and allows to vote, any person who refuses to take such oaths, he shall for such offence be liable to any person who may sue for the same, to a penalty of $200.

Mr. MARTIN. Make it $500.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Section 20 of the Bill says:

Every returning officer, deputy returning officer, election clerk or poll clerk, who refuses or neglects to perform any of the obligations or formalities required of him by this Act shall, for each such refusal or neglect, forfeit the sum of $200 to any person who sues therefor.

My hon. friend proposes to put in what is contained in section 20.

Mr. MARTIN. In this case it is wilful malfeasance.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, not in section 20.

Amendment negatived.

On section 78,

Mr. MARTIN moved:

That at the end of subsection 1. line 39, the following words be inserted: 'and in Prince Edward Island the words "objected to" opposite the names of such persons voting, whose right has been objected to under section 67 of this Act.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I think that is already in the Bill, but it will do no harm to put it in again.

Amendment agreed to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved:

That the words 'or signed statement' in the 30th line, the words 'or refused to sign statement' in the 34th and 35th lines, and the words, 'or to sign a statement which he has been legally required to sign,' in the 38th and 39th lines, be stricken out.

Amendment agreed to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved:

That the word 'works' in the 40th line be changed to 'words.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 82,

Mr. MARTIN moved:

That the following words be struck out of subsection 2, line 19: 'in counting the ballots,' and that these words be inserted after the word 'Act' at the end of the subsection: 'such ballot papers being counted for the candidate for whom, respectively, they have been cast.'

He said: The section will then read:

The other ballot papers being counted and a list kept of the number of votes given to each candidate, and of the number of rejected ballot papers, all the ballot papers indicating the votes given for each candidate respectively shall be put into separate envelopes or parcels, and those rejected, those spoiled and those unused, shall be put respectively into separate envelopes or parcels, and all such envelopes or parcels shall be endorsed so as to indicate their contents, and shall be sealed by the deputy returning officer, and shall be marked with the signatures of any agents present in the polling station who are willing to do so by writing their signatures across the flap thereof.

2. In the province of Prince Edward Island, the deputy returning officer shall also place in a separate envelope or parcel all ballot papers numbered and initialled under section 67 of this Act, such ballot papers being counted for the candidate for whom respectively they have been cast.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Why do you strike out 'in counting the ballots'?

Mr. INGRAM. It makes better language.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think these words are necessary.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It would not do at all to strike out the words 'in counting the ballots.' The only object of the section is a direction to the officer that in the process of counting the ballots he shall place in an envelope those that have been marked and numbered objected to. It would not do to give a special direction to him for a particular part of the Dominion. The words 'in counting the ballots' mean that it shall be done at the time he is counting them.

Mr. INGRAM. It would appear to me from reading the sections of the Act that all this is already provided for.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is.

On section 90,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend (Mr. Martin) discussed the matter of his proposed amendment thoroughly the other night, and it was shown that a scrutiny could only take place at the time of the election petition.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) We always had the privilege of a scrutiny under the local Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not under the existing local Act. You have never had a scrutiny since the Controverted Elections Act was passed in the Island.

Mr. MARTIN. If you do not adopt this amendment, what is the use of having initialled ballots?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not want to abridge for one moment the right of my hon. friend to discuss this matter over and over again. But we discussed it the other night, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) pressed it to a division, and lost it.

Mr. MARTIN. And the Solicitor General promised an amendment by which in cases similar to this, recourse should be had on the part of the defeated candidate in a less expensive way than at present.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I intend to make an amendment to the Election Act to facilitate the general contestation of elections, but not with reference to Prince Edward Island exclusively.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has placed the province of Prince Edward Island in a very inimical position in regard to these initialled ballots and rejected votes. It is incumbent upon him to meet the objection I have raised. It will not do to say that you cannot try this in a recount before a judge. The machinery that is necessary to carry out my suggestion is very simple indeed, and it would be a very easy matter to investiate the character of the votes. If the amendments I propose do not meet the case, I think it devolves on the Solicitor General to provide a remedy; otherwise, I would go the length of omitting anything about initialled ballots altogether, because there is no use of having such a provision unless you have a simple way of having a recount and deciding on a close vote whether any of the ballots are good or bad. If you have to use the machinery of the Controverted Elections Act, you might as well leave the clause out altogether.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not yet understood from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whether or not when the voter comes forward you have the right in addition to putting the oath to him, to cross-examine him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When a man comes forward to vote, if he votes upon real estate, whether freehold or leasehold, you have a right to ask him on what property he votes and where it is situated. If it is freehold he must describe it by meets and bounds; and if it is leasehold, he must state the annual rent to be paid. All these particulars must be entered in the poll-book, so that his statements may be tested afterwards, and if necessary he may be prosecuted for perjury. If he votes on statute labour qualification, he must produce the book and state that he is the man mentioned in it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is satisfactory as far as it goes. Suppose the man is questioned, is he sworn to his answer?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Any one of the scrutineers, if not satisfied with his answer, may require him to be sworn to it, and he is there and then sworn.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But if you know he is stating an absolute falsehood, he must be allowed to vote?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It appears to me that you have this difficulty in Prince Edward Island; you are doing two things on election day; you are making the list and running the election at the same time. That gives rise to a rather curious state of affairs, as has been suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Martin). Apparently the only remedy you have, if the list of voters is improperly made up at the time, is by an election petition, which is rather an expensive remedy. If you happen to know that fifteen or twenty or a hundred men have given incorrect answers and are not really entitled to vote, you are driven to a scrutiny by means of an election petition; but you do not have any relief under section 90. All that my hon. friend is asking is that inasmuch as there is a simple, inexpensive and summary method provided for all the other provinces of Canada, you should, in the exceptional circumstances that exist in Prince Edward Island, provide, if possible, a similar summary and inexpensive method of dealing with the case there. It really does not seem to me that that is at all unreasonable. It may require a peculiar provision with respect to Prince Edward Island, but where you are dealing with half a dozen different provincial franchises your Act must embrace peculiar provisions of that kind. I would submit to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that this is a matter that might very well be taken into consideration by him, as he is more familiar with and has had greater experience of the law of Prince Edward Island than anybody else, to see whether some measure of relief looking to that end could not be provided in this Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no question that I have thought of it, but I have thought of it in the light of these facts. Twelve years ago the Controverted Elections Act was first passed in Prince Edward Island. Previous to that we had a scrutiny similar to what my hon. friend proposes to-day, under which a protest was entered on election day and a scrutiny was held by triers. But I can only recall three cases of that kind. Since the Controverted Elections Act was passed, so smoothly has our local law worked, and the qualified voters are so well known, that I cannot recall that a single scrutiny has been asked for in the last twelve years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is exactly the answer that I have received on both sides of the House with regard to the working of this law. For my part, I cannot see why there is not difficulty. It must be owing to the local knowledge of the voters; because if the same system were applied to any other province, I am sure there would be great difficulty in working it out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is one suggestion of my hon. friend which I intend to consider—whether any amendment can be made or proposed to the Controverted Elections Act which would simplify and cheapen the holding of a scrutiny; but it is quite impossible to superadd to the power of the county court judge to recount the votes, the power to hold a scrutiny.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There seems to be this difficulty about Prince Edward Island compared with my own province. In my province men are put on the list, but you have an appeal to another tribunal for the purpose of finding out whether or not they were properly put on the lists. But in Prince Edward Island you settle the matter at the election itself, and the only way by which you can obtain an appeal is to deposit $1,000 and go to the enormous expense of a petition under the Controverted Elections Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You cannot decide a case more summarily before a county judge than before the Supreme Court; but if you attempt to add to the powers of a county court judge the power of holding a recount, and having a scrutiny, the time given under the existing law will not permit of that being done. Before you can hold a scrutiny, you must comply with the ordinary rules which belong to all courts. You must give notice to the party opposite of the votes you are going to attack, and the ground of your attack, and the party opposite has to give you notice of the votes he intends having set aside, and the grounds of his challenge. Suppose there are 100 votes challenged on the one side and 70 on the other, witnesses will have to be summoned and notices served and all that cannot be done in four days. The only hardship I can see in an appeal to the Superior Court, under the Controverted Elections Act, is the deposit of $1,000, and we might reduce that one-half.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You could get a much simpler and more expeditious procedure than under the Controverted Elections Act. You could abolish all that difficulty about service and preliminary exceptions, and the other delays of election petitions, and have a much more summary trial than you could have under the Controverted Elections Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am devoting my attention to that now.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) There is another difficulty besides that pointed out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a few minutes ago. It is proposed to submit the matter of the validity of the doubtful votes to a county judge, but although I have every confidence in the county judge, I have more confidence in the two judges of the Supreme Court who compose the tribunal for trying election petitions. Suppose you bring this matter before a county judge, he will try one half of the questions in dispute, and then the other half will be tried by the two judges of the Supreme Court. But the more important half, so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, is that which will go before the county court judge, because he will have to determine the qualifications of the voters. For instance, a statute labour voter claims a right to vote on the ground that he has been a continual resident within a particular polling subdivision for twelve months. The question comes up: What is continuous residence? That question the county court judge would have to determine, and not the two judges of the Supreme Court. And there are questions of title, of value of property, of length of possession, of construction, of local statutes and the like, which are very intricate, and ought to come before the Supreme Court judges. Therefore, in order to have uniformity in your proceedings, you ought to have your whole case proceeded with before the two judges for the purpose of determining, first, whether the parties objected to are qualified to vote, and then whether there has been any fraud or illegality in connection with the election. Under our peculiar conditions, the difficulties with us arise mainly in respect of qualification of votes, and the question of qualification ought to be decided by the two judges along with any other question that may arise, and not be referred separately to a county court judge. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) says that with us the deputy returning officer is also a sort of a revising barrister, and has to determine right on the spot, at the election, whether a voter is entitled to vote or not. That is quite true, but in this regard we are better off, and in another sense worse off than the other provinces. In the other provinces where you have voters' lists, there are always men whose names are not on the list and who should be on, there are, for instance young men who have come of age since the lists were compiled, and who consequently cannot be put on them, and cannot vote at the election. These difficulties do not obtain in Prince Edward Island, because at the very moment the election is being held, we determine who are and who are not entitled to vote. But we are under the disadvantage, that the deputy returning officer has to act in a judicial capacity. He has to determine in a rough and ready way, whether a man is entitled to vote or not, and there is no appeal. With us a man who is twenty-one years of age on election day, can come up and poll his vote. That is perfectly right—but he cannot do it anywhere outside of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be inclined to think that the simplest way would be for Prince Edward Island to amend its law. There does not seem to be much force in what my hon. friend suggests about having the voters' lists settled by two judges of the Supreme Court. In the other provinces they are settled by assessors with an appeal to the revisers—men without the technical qualifications, who are not lawyers at all, and yet the results are fairly satisfactory. So I do not see why, in this particular province, my hon. friend thinks it necessary that two judges of the Supreme Court should be called upon to settle the question as to a man's right to vote, when that right is settled in the other provinces by two or three business men having a knowledge of the circumstances.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is what is done in our province in the elections, the matter is settled by the returning officers and the scrutineers, a few business men, neighbours, among themselves. Practically, it comes out all right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But with this difference: In the other provinces you have the right to have an appeal and to summon witnesses on each side and have a finding by the court. But in Prince Edward Island you cannot have that settled on election day, and you must resort to the cumbersome procedure under the Controverted Elections Act. But if, as I understand, the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) has this under consideration and may propose some relief, I think the matter could be allowed to stand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend (Mr. Martin) intimated that on the third reading he intended to move his clause. I do not wish to interpose, but if he leaves the matter in that form, I have another amendment to propose. Clause 60 of the Bill provides that in Prince Edward Island every resident voter shall vote in the polling division in which he resides, and not elsewhere. I propose to add to section 60, subsection 2:

And every elector qualified to vote in any electoral district in which he does not reside shall vote in the polling division thereof in which the property on which he claims to vote is situated, and not elsewhere.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.)

If I reside in polling division No. 20, I must vote in that polling division and not elsewhere. That is right, and the object of it is plain—to provide that a man shall vote where he is known so as to prevent personation. But if I have a piece of property in polling division No. 20, can I vote in polling division No. 19? The law does not say explicitly whether I can or cannot. The object of the amendment is to make this clear. This is the local law now, and it is supposed to confine it to Prince Edward Island.

Amendment agreed to.

The committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY—I.C.R. FREIGHT RATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I venture to mention a matter which I intended to speak on during the consideration of the railway estimates, if they had come on. Some time ago there was a representation of the Board of Trade of Halifax to the Minister of Railways and Canals complaining of discriminating rates as against Halifax, as compared with Montreal and some other places. The rates complained of were from Montreal to Sydney, which were very much lower, as I understand, than the rates from Halifax to Sydney. I believe there was a delegation from the Halifax Board of Trade, or, at least, there was a written representation from them, a copy of which was handed to me at the time. I did not bring the matter up before, because I understood that negotiations were going on between the Minister of Railways and Canals and the representatives of the board of trade, which would possibly result in a solution satisfactory to the board of trade. Some solution may have been reached, as I have heard nothing of the matter very recently. It seemed to me that the rates did discriminate against Halifax in several respects and that they could not well be justified. I shall be glad to hear that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) whether any solution has been reached.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Board of Trade of Halifax and some of the gentlemen who are interested in the matter brought to my attention several instances which they complained of. They thought there was some discrimination against Halifax as compared with Montreal, in the rates that had been proposed. I called the attention of the department to the question; and while I think all the points have not been adjusted, I think that some of the difficulties have been removed. I am not sure whether it will be possible to remove them all, but they are the subject of consideration. They will be dealt with just as soon as possible, and a decision arrived at one way or the other.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As I understand, so far as the duties have not been removed, they are now engaging the consideration of the hon. gentleman's department with a view to their removal if possible.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Charges of management—Printing Dominion notes ..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I explained this in connection with the main estimates for the coming year. The usual expenditure for that service is about $50,000, but owing to the increase in the volume of the circulation and the general expansion of business, a larger sum has become necessary, and we are asking this $5,000 to close up the present year. As I have already explained, we have to ask for an increase also for the coming year.

Civil Government—Governor General's Secretary's Office—Contingencies:

Clerical assistance .....	$ 300
Printing and stationery (to recoup the vote for unforeseen expenses) .....	500
Sundries .....	1,300

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Owing to the retirement of one clerk as explained in a previous discussion, it became necessary to employ additional assistance, which accounts for the item of clerical assistance. The item for printing and stationery, $500, is not an increase, because a corresponding vote was made last year. As respects the other item, sundries, it is chiefly due to the large amount of telegraphing in the Governor General's office arising out of the war in South Africa.

To supply seed grain to settlers whose crops were destroyed in 1899..... $6,000

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). The hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) asked me the other night one or two questions that I was not able to answer. I think the chief one was whether the grain had been paid for. The grain was not paid for, it was ordered to be purchased by the agent, and it was bought with the understanding that it would not be paid for for two or three months. I will read the petition asking for assistance:

We, the undersigned settlers of Flett's Springs, in the electoral district of Saskatchewan, do humbly petition: 1. That owing to the total destruction of our crops on August 15, 1899, that seed grain be distributed here: 2. That said seed grain be supplied us at as reasonable a price as possible.

This was signed by seventeen settlers in that district. That was referred to J. McArthur, homestead inspector, to report upon. He says:

I have visited the localities mentioned, and saw each settler re information required. Information required I now inclose. In all about five of the settlers who had grain destroyed this year were away, but their neighbours informed me they would be back in the spring if they got seed grain. It was the urgent request of all the settlers that should the government decide to supply them with seed grain, they should know at the earliest possible time, and that the grain should be on hand early in February—reason being sixty to ninety miles from railway, having no grain, their horses are poor and will require time on the road. The South Saskatchewan River cannot be depended on later than March 20, owing to light snow they fear the roads will give way early. About 4,500 bushels will be required, half oats. At this writing the wheat and barley could be got in Carrot River, saving a haul of forty-five miles. There are no oats there or elsewhere in Saskatchewan good enough for seed.

He submits with this report the names of the settlers, the number of their lot, the number of horses and cattle, as to whether the land is patented, and as to whether they have received their patents, and the number of bushels that he recommends to be granted to each one. Then the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked a question as to the prices. The prices seem to be, for wheat, 60 cents in every case except one, where it was 70 cents. This latter case, I am told, included the freight. The total amount due is $4,725.03.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). I understand seed grain is furnished almost every year when any accident happens. On what general principle is it done? Is it simply on a petition signed by the people of that locality, or what general principle governs the granting of seed grain to certain settlers?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am inclined to think that the department, when an application is made, no matter from what quarter, refers it to the inspector in the district, and on his report and recommendation action is taken. In this particular case I may say that we have a mortgage for the repayment in every case where they have a patent for their land; in every case where the patent is not granted, the amount is registered against the land. So I have no doubt that in this case the full amount will be repaid.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). What has been the experience in the past in regard to repayments? I understand it is not a new departure, but it has been done in past years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In some special cases there has been no difficulty about repayment. But my hon. friend will remember that in past years when the country was young we had to forgive a good many settlers their payments, or rather we had to release their bondsmen from payment where the settlers had abandoned their lands. Outside of that, payments are pretty well made.

Department of Indian Affairs—

Clerical assistance ..... $ 575
 Printing and stationery ..... 1,000

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For clerical assistance the amount provided did not prove sufficient to pay the staff the total amount for the year. On examination I find there is a small decrease in the total amount for expenses in connection with civil government and contingencies. There have been some additions for statutory increases, but on the whole there is a slight decrease in this connection.

Medical attendance and medicines..... $1,500
 Relief of distress in British Columbia.... 1,000
 Grant for fifty pupils, at $60 each, at the Squamish boarding school ..... 3,000

$5,500

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) What is this distress in British Columbia?

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). The main appropriation for this service is $3,500. Up to the middle of March the expenditure has been $2,829.63, and the balance, $670.37 is not more than will be required to cover the accounts for the month of April. The $1,000 now asked for is to meet the accounts for May and June. The reason for the expenditure this year is owing to the salmon fisheries not being as successful as usual, and the vote is to cover demands for the relief of aged and destitute Indians in various districts in British Columbia where this industry is the main resource of the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the whole sum that has been expended in relief?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Three thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. In what district?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All over the province.

Mr. PRIOR. Are these sums asked for by the Indian agents?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, all these grants are made by the agents and upon their recommendation.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). Is the Squamish boarding school under the supervision of any missionary society or church?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, it is a school under the supervision of the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the only one?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. At Squamish, opposite Vancouver. The population is 3,165, made up as follows: Anglicans, 91; Methodists, 153; Roman Catholics, 2,740; and Pagans, 181. It appears from a report made by Mr. Vowell that when Mr. Hayter Reed visited the coast as Deputy Supt.-General of Indian Affairs, he led the Indians who petitioned for a school at Squamish to understand that the desired provision would be made. Moreover, in 1895, the chiefs forwarded a petition in which was set forth that although the school had been promised forty years ago they were still waiting for it, and it was asked that a convent or college should be provided where the children could be taught, fed and clothed. Mr. Reed approved the petition and said that an item would be inserted in the estimates to provide for the school. On the chiefs expressing their pleasure at the reply, Mr. Reed wrote to Mr. Vowell to dispossess the Indians of their impression as to the character of the proposed school, as he understood that it was a day school that was asked for. Whatever may have been Mr. Reed's impression the Indians made a very clear request for a school in which their children could live, and his reply was such as to lead them to expect that their request would be entertained.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to call the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to the fact that only one item of No. 71 was carried.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, we are going back to No. 71.

Supplies for working and destitute Indians $10,000

Mr. CLANCY. What is the nature of that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The amount is intended to make provision for supplies which have been purchased for Indians outside of the treaty limits issued for the most part by the Hudson's Bay Company to Indians to prevent actual starvation. The past two winters have been very severe, and the scarcity of rabbits caused a great deal of suffering and some loss of life in the unorganized districts. The Hudson's Bay Company, under instructions from the department, has so far as possible, prevented suffering and as no special provision was made in the destitute vote for the somewhat unusual demands, it is necessary to provide for the amount here. The department was unable, at the close of the last fiscal year, to pay the voucher for all the beef issued in Treaty No. 7, on account of some misunderstanding over the accounts. The vote lapsed, and it was therefore necessary to pay them from the current year's vote. The amount of the vouchers so paid was $6,102.71. That leaves an extra $4,000, which is required for the assistance of the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest that the item should be changed. You are including under charity what is not charity.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed that this is the usual way of making the estimate. It reads:

To provide an additional amount for the purchase of supplies for working and destitute Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. Six thousand dollars is under the treaty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not for the purchase of supplies for destitute Indians nor supplies for working Indians. It is just the same as a payment in beef or a payment in cattle.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Scott says that it is the ordinary estimate for beef under the treaty. They are not entitled to it under the law, and it is only issued if it is thought necessary to keep them from starving.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to judge of that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Scott says that it is the ordinary ration. It is provided on the report of the Indian agent.

General expenses ..... $13,000

Mr. FOSTER. We want a full explanation of this vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This amount is intended to cover the unprovided balance of the expenses of the commission, which in the spring and summer of 1899 made a new treaty with the Indians north of the Saskatchewan, now known as Treaty No. 8. Exclusive of the amount which was charged to the account of 1898-9, the appropriation for the current year has borne an expenditure of $20,911.86, divided as follows: salaries, $6,166.41; expenses, $14,745.45.

Mr. FOSTER. Who were these commissioners?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Macrae, Inspector of Indian Agencies, is up this year alone. The commission who made the treaty with the Indians in 1898-9 was composed of the Hon. David Laird, the Hon. J. Ross and Mr. McKenna of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this $20,000 include the annuity to the Indians?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, this is for the expenses connected with the commission and Mr. Macrae's expenses this year.

Mr. FOSTER. What is Mr. Macrae paid?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. His expenses are paid, and he is allowed $6 a day while he is out.

Mr. FOSTER. You have adopted the method of sending out officials whose whole time is due to the department, and giving them a large daily pay as well as their salary.

Mr. SPROULE. What is Mr. Macrae's salary?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is $1,800 at present including his $200 increase. The committee will understand that some allowance is reasonable to a person taking this trip which is a long way out of civilization. The only question arising would be as to how much that allowance should be.

Mr. FOSTER. Whilst I would not expect to force a man in the department to go out there, and undergo hardships without giving him a certain allowance, still there ought to be a good deal of care taken in that respect. This after all is a very enjoyable outing. Every good healthy fellow in the service who has a taste for outdoor life would snap at the chance of getting away during the summer months. Besides Mr. Macrae is in the service of the country and that kind of work tends towards his claims for promotion hereafter. Mr. Macrae is paid for his time by his salary, and it does seem to me, when you pay every dollar of expense he incurs, that $6 a day extra is, I think, too large an allowance. Here is Mr. McKenna, whose case we discussed a little while ago, who has been very speedily and highly promoted. What extra pay does he get?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Five dollars a day.

Mr. FOSTER. In nine cases out of ten a man is glad to get away on one of those expeditions, and whilst he should have something for extra wear and tear, I do not think his salary ought to be doubled in this manner.

Mr. CLANCY. When permanent officials have their salary doubled in this way there is naturally a very great inducement to them to prolong the work. Will Mr. McKenna and Mr. Macrae get this extra daily pay from the time they leave Ottawa until they return?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. McKenna got paid from the time he left Winnipeg, but Mr. Macrae's matter has not been settled. This work is altogether outside of what Mr. Macrae was expected to do, and although some of these commissions may be an outing, as the ex-Minister of Finance says, yet there is very considerable hardship if not danger in connection with this. A man who has experience in dealing with Indians is much better fitted for this than a person who has no experience.

Mr. FOSTER. You have him here because of his experience?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. His duties are as inspector of Indians for the province of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. And he has to travel over the wilds of Ontario where he will experience just as much hardship as in this case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The only question is as to whether the allowance is too large. No one would begrudge him some little allowance.

Mr. FOSTER. No one would begrudge him a fair allowance.

Mr. CLANCY. The ex-Minister of Finance stated with great clearness that some additional allowance might be made. But Mr. Macrae should be selected on account of his position. He is there to go beyond Ontario if the service requires him to do so. Then it becomes a question of whether he should not receive something in addition to his salary. I do not think the hon. gentleman will say that the allowance that has been made is not too much; because it is more than doubling his salary, if he is paid for Sundays. Will the hon. gentleman tell me how many there are in the service getting paid under similar conditions?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. At present only three. I do not know whether there will be any more commissions to go out or not. There may be for the Indians; but we are pretty certain that there will be no more commissions in connection with half-breed scrip.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). His salary is $1,600 a year, and next year it will be $1,800. I should think if he were paid $3 a day in addition to his salary, when all his expenses and all necessary equipment are provided, he would be very well paid. I think there are plenty of good men in the department who would be glad to do the work with that advance on their usual salary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You would want a pretty good man to pay out, as Mr. Macrae will do during this trip, about $40,000 to the Indians; and I doubt if you could get a good man to do the work less.

Mr. SPROULE. There was a very good man out there for years—a man from Toronto, a Mr. Wadsworth—and the highest salary he got was $1,800 and expenses; and at that time travelling was very much more difficult than it is now. He commenced the work at $1,200 a year, and was glad to take it at that; and he was very well pleased when his salary went to $1,800.

Mr. WILSON. What was the number of days these men were out?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Macrae will probably be out four months. The other commission are through. They were out about 120 days.

Department of Justice—P. Mungovan, for copying, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... 347 62

Mr. SPROULE. Who is this?

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He was employed by the minister to copy a return for the House of Commons. The Auditor General refused to pass the account on the ground that Mr. Mungovan had not passed the qualifying examination, and was not qualified to act as a clerk. Therefore, a vote is necessary to pay the amount.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a thing the Department of Justice ought not to do, and Mr. Mills ought not to be guilty of doing it. We pass a law, and the Justice Department above all others ought to be careful to follow the law, as an example to all the other departments. There are hundreds of people who have qualified themselves under our law, have paid the fees and passed the examination, and are able to do the work, and Mr. Mills goes outside of them and breaks the law in order to get this man to do the work. I should think he would feel mean in being brought to book, as he is by the Auditor General, year after year, for this nasty little business.

Mr. SPROULE. I object to this item; for while it may nominally be for services rendered, I question very much whether there has been any substantial service for the money. I know Mr. Mungovan. I met him in the Brockville election. I have no doubt he was valuable there. I have seen him at every election at which I have been present for some years. When the Conservatives are in power he is a Conservative, and when the Reformers are in power, he is a Reformer. He is an electioneering agent, and he is found in every riding in which an election is being held. After the Brockville election, I saw him in the library and around this House. I was told he was doing a little work to earn a little money, but it was not because the work could not be done without the employment of extra clerks, but simply because it was desired to give him a little money—I was going to say for doing nothing; it is the next thing to it.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the item be struck out.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know anything of the details further than I have communicated to the House, but I am quite certain that this item would not be reported to the House if the work had not been done.

Mr. SPROULE. No doubt others have been paid salaries for doing that work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend is surely not serious in pressing that to a division?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I am.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not object to my hon. friend's protest, but it would be grossly unjust not to pay the man for the work he has done. It may have been wrong for the minister to have given him the work, but he certainly ought not to refuse to pay him. I have myself got into a similar difficulty a couple of times by employing agents or workmen on the bounty check system. I did not think that they were officers within the meaning of the Act, and I employed a number of young ladies in Ottawa who had not passed the civil service examination. I took the ground that they were not under the Civil Service Act at all, and the Auditor General said: That is true, and if you had employed them in Montreal or Halifax there could have been no objection, but as you have employed them in Ottawa they must be treated as clerks within the meaning of the Civil Service Act, and only those who have passed the examinations could be employed. The Department of Justice took the same view, and since then I have only employed those qualified, but I think it would have been cruel to refuse to pay these people who had done their work because they had been improperly employed.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble is this, that this same thing has been done every year since you have been in power.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it has been done by the Minister of Justice himself, and a strong protest made against it. He knows perfectly well that in this he is doing a thing not contemplated by the law, and against which parliament had protested.

Mr. SPROULE. Besides, we have no information what work was done. There may not have been two pages copied.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The account is certified to, and the Auditor General has passed it.

Mr. SPROULE. The Auditor General is not paying it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He objects to its being paid solely on the legal ground.

Mr. SPROULE. This is intended to pay for political services. I met Mr. Mungovan within a few rods after I passed Gorman, one of the machine men, and shortly before that Tom Lewis. I have met him election after election, and have found him constantly doing that kind of work, and then he is brought down here and some excuse made to vote him public money.

Mr. WILSON. It seems to me that the Solicitor General should give us the details and should not ask us to vote even this small amount without the necessary information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The idea that because a certain amount is paid, we are to assume that nothing was done for the money is rather a novel one. It would be more reasonable as well as charitable to assume that when an officer certifies to an account, the work has been done, unless somebody knows to the contrary. I take it for granted that an officer of the department is not going to certify to an account for political services.

Mr. CLANCY. Our objection to this vote is reasonable under the circumstances. The work was done in violation of the Civil Service Act, with the knowledge of the minister, and after his attention was brought to it. This is not the first time that this has happened in connection with that same gentleman, who has not hesitated, on the streets of Ottawa, and in the corridors of this House, to tell members themselves, within my hearing, that he would go to their constituencies and overturn them. The question of my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) is a very fair one. The Solicitor General should make it perfectly clear what has been the character and the extent of the work done. It is not the beggarly sum of $47 that is in question, but a practice that cannot be justified on any ground whatever. It is no excuse to say that the work is done and ought to be paid for. Let the minister pay it out of his own pocket. If it were done innocently, if the man were not known and I am not going to say anything against him personally—the case would be different, but this is not the first occasion the hon. minister has had his attention called to that kind of thing, and there is no excuse whatever for his action.

Mr. WILSON. Will not the Solicitor General undertake to give us the information?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am quite willing to give all the information I have. The work consisted in the copying of a report, but as to the nature of the report and the case in which the report was made, I cannot say anything. As to what the work was worth, that is for the officials of the department to determine, and the Auditor General would not pass the account if he were not satisfied that the work was really performed. The objection taken by him is one of a purely legal character, namely, that a man who has not passed the qualifying examination under the civil service cannot be employed to do that work.

Mr. SPROULE. We know from past experience the loose way in which these accounts are passed and certified to, especially when any information is given the accountant that it is desirable they should be certified to. It is easy to make excuses when the government desire to pay a certain amount of money. In a case like this it might be naturally expected—especially in view of the fact that such items have previously been objected to—that the government would be prepared to show that value had been given, but we are without any information beyond the fact that the work consisted in copying the report, whether a report of one page or fifty pages, we cannot say, but in all probability, it was but a few pages. I would not like to say what I did not believe to be correct, but, in my judgment, it is simply an excuse to take money belonging to the country to pay for a political agent who is at the command of the government whenever there is an election to be held.

Amendment negatived.

Administration of Justice—Additional amount required for circuit allowances in Manitoba ..... $500

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This additional amount brings the total estimate to $3,000. The increase is necessary because of the additional county courts that have been held in Manitoba as a result of the increase of business following an increased population.

Exchequer Court of Canada—Further amount required for contingencies—judge's and registrar's travelling expenses, salaries of sheriffs, &c., printing, stationery, &c. .... $1,000

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There have been heavy expenses on account of contingencies generally, necessitated by a number of heavy cases brought before the court during the present year which caused heavier expenses in the way of remuneration for sheriffs, constables and stenographers. Travelling expenses also have been higher. Of the $4,000 already voted, I have expended $3,500, and I estimate that at least $1,500 will be required to complete the present fiscal year.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the stenographers paid out of this vote?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes—the stenographer for the Exchequer Court.

Mr. WILSON. What is the total amount paid to the stenographer?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am afraid to say what the stenographer of the Exchequer Court earns; it is a very large amount. He is paid according to the work he does—so much a folio. But, in order to have a thoroughly competent man, it was settled, when the court was established, that he should receive in addition a travelling allowance to enable him to attend upon the judge in any part of Canada. The stenographer is Mr. Butcher, of Toronto. He is an exceedingly competent man and gives very great satisfaction.

Dominion Police—

Retiring allowance to Constable Mathew Heron.....	$ 250 95
Further amount required .....	1,000 00
Special police service .....	1,800 00

$3,050 95

Mr. SPROULE.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This first item is the usual allowance for a man who becomes incapacitated after being a member of the force for at least five years. The second item is rendered necessary because of extra men having been placed on duty about the buildings as a precautionary measure.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they employed still?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, they are about the buildings all the time. Recently there have been special reasons for this. The third item is to pay the special police on duty on the Welland Canal from May 20 to June 30. There are twenty-one men, and they are paid $1.50 a day. The superintendent of the force is Mr. Hugh McKinnon, ex-chief of police of Belleville, who is paid $3.50 a day and expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the provincial police were co-operating with the Dominion?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand from the report of the superintendent that it is all done by the Dominion police. That will be quite right, as this is a public work of the Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that to be continued?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think it is well for the present to continue it. This is to pay up to the end of the current year.

Penitentiaries—Kingston—Further amount required for material for binder twine..$30,000

Mr. SPROULE. When is that material for binder twine purchased?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have here the report on the item given me by the inspector. He says that owing to the rise in price of fibre and the consequent shortage of the vote for the previous year, a consignment of fibre, which was received in June of last fiscal year, and which otherwise would have been paid for this year from last year's appropriation, was carried over and paid for this year. This amount is about $14,000. When the estimates were prepared, in December, 1898, it was not expected that the price of fibre would remain at the abnormally high figure which then prevailed, nor was the South African war anticipated, which has caused a general increase in the price of all articles required outside of contract. The amount represents the value of fibre which will require to be paid for between this date and the end of the present twine season.

Mr. CLANCOY. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) the quantity there? Is it 260,000 pounds?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give that.

Mr. WILSON. Nor the price?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I had the price when we discussed the question some time ago. My impression is that I stated it then at 9 cents. I speak subject to correction.

Mr. FOSTER. This takes you up to the end of the fiscal year?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has it already been purchased?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. I was asked to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to this—that the words 'for material for binder twine' should be struck out. These were put in after the vote left the office. The $30,000 is required to recoup the general vote for the year, money from the general vote having been used to purchase material for binder twine.

Mr. SPROULE. This expression 'material for binder twine' is very general. What does it include?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It includes all three kinds—manila, sisal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps, as the explanation has been given to the committee of the state of affairs, it would be better to leave out these words. I put them in because I thought that it was necessary for explanation. There is a memorandum from the warden to the inspector asking him to explain to the minister that the supplementary vote must be for general expenditure or it would be of no use to them; that they have bought material out of the general grant, and are brought to the extremity of asking for this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. It is to recoup the vote for general expenses.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the practice has been to include the purchase of material in the general vote. I inserted these words because I thought they helped to explain the matter to the House, but now that the House thoroughly understands what it was for, we will omit these words, 'for material for twine.'

Mr. CLANCY. It is just as well that the statement made by the Solicitor General should be corrected. I will not say that there is a determination on the part of hon. gentlemen to do so, but they take no pains at least to prevent the statement being made that raw material immensely advanced in the twine that is being used for the present year. The hon. gentleman stated, probably off-hand, that he thought it was 9 cents.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The statement I made with reference to the purchase and the increased value, was made on the authority of the gentleman who made the purchase, Mr. Stewart, the inspector of penitentiaries, a gentleman in whom the department has absolute confidence. I gave the statement as to the figures in the House, three or four weeks ago, I stated it then at 9 cents, I think.

Mr. SPROULE. You merely make the statement now that you gave it then as 9 cents, but you may not be more accurate with regard to that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am certain as to the fact of the great increase in price.

Mr. SPROULE. No doubt there is an increased price. But in looking up the trade returns in New York, it does not give any such increase as 9 cents, and I have looked over the returns carefully for three years.

Mr. CLANCY. The sum mentioned by the hon. gentleman was $14,000, or to be exact, $14,458.68. Now the quantity of twine purchased was 362,850 pounds, and that cost 5½ cents a pound. Now it is unfair that the statement should go at 9 cents when the fact is that it only cost 5½ cents. If the hon. gentleman has a report from the inspector that it cost 9 cents, it conflicts with the statement made by the Auditor General.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not say that I have at the present time, any such report. I do not want anything I said to be attributed to the inspector, beyond what he is responsible for. I have no information coming from the inspector as to the price of twine, except so far as I recollect the information given to me to be used in the debate I referred to. The only statement definitely given by the inspector relates to the general increase, that is all.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman did make the broad statement some time ago, and gave the impression that it cost 9 cents.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You are giving the average cost. Some might cost more and some less.

Mr. CLANCY. There could be no average price so high as that, because that constitutes more than one-third of the whole output for the year.

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary—Further amount required ..... $5,000

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. During the year the population of this penitentiary has increased by about forty convicts, necessitating not merely an additional expenditure for maintenance, but the appointment of additional guards and keepers. During the year a stonecutter instructor has been appointed. In addition, the abnormal rise in the price of hardware, machinery and other articles, outside of the contract, has necessitated the provision asked for.

Manitoba Penitentiary—Further amount required ..... $5,000

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The laundry building was destroyed, and had to be rebuilt at a cost of $1,600. In addition, insane convicts and incorrigibles are transferred to Kingston, which necessitated an additional expenditure for travelling, $2,000. The material for the prison and other improvements not estimated for, make up the balance.

To pay H. Gilbert Smith the difference between $430 and $500, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..... $70

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the estimates for the current year, the amount of $500 was included for Mr. Smith's salary. After the session, an order in council was passed in reference to that provision, and the Auditor General took the ground that because the amount was not especially set apart in the Supply Bill it was not available.

Mr. WILSON. 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act'—I find these words occurring often in the estimates. It seems to me that persons properly qualified might be easily had to do this work.

Investigation—

To pay Albert Horton the balance of his account re Devlin ..... $ 83 70
To pay E. J. Duggan the balance of his account re St. Vincent de Paul..... 107 50

Mr. FOSTER. What Devlin is that ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the engineer at Kingston. I will explain the reason of this vote. Some years ago an order in council was passed, under which it was provided that for investigations to be held under the control of the government, the Hansard men were to be employed; and it was also provided that they should be allowed a living allowance of $3.50 per diem. The Auditor General took the ground that he would not pay anything except the amount for which vouchers was produced. This was introduced for the purpose of making up the $3.50 which is provided for by order in council.

Mr. CLANCY. Have not other stenographers been employed as well ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not when the Hansard men are free for these investigations.

Mr. CLANCY. Are there any in addition to these ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of course, there have been stenographers employed in addition, but at all times the preference has been given, as the order in council provides, to members of the Hansard staff.

Sessional indemnity of Senator Sullivan... $1,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). When this item was placed in the estimates, I was informed that Senator Sullivan was so ill that he would not be here at all. I have been informed that he is in attendance upon his duties in the Senate, and we will therefore have to strike this out. I beg to move that this item be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be quite lately.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, within the last three or four days.

Motion agreed to.

Sessional indemnity of S. Hughes and J. H. Leduc, $1,000 each, and of the late G. H. Bertram, $1,000, and the balance of the sessional indemnity of the late A. Haley, $573; these sums to be paid as the Treasury Board may direct ..... $3,573

Mr. FOSTER. Has Mr. Leduc not been here during the session ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he still ill ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Very ill. He will not recover.

To complete payment of expenses of taking the vote under the Plebiscite Act..... $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total payment now on account of the plebiscite ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total, as shown by the Auditor General's Report, is $197,932.79. This is the balance of unpaid accounts.

Portraits of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie and Sir J. S. D. Thompson..... $800

Mr. FOSTER. Who painted these ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Forster, of Toronto. They were placed in the library several years ago with perhaps a very loose understanding. The matter has been brought to our notice recently and particularly to the notice of Mr. Speaker, who advises that we should purchase these pictures at the price named. They are the only portraits of these two distinguished gentlemen that we have.

Mr. CLANCY. I notice that the portrait of the late Sir John Macdonald has been removed from the library. Is that one that is being paid for ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, these portraits are only of the late Sir John Thompson and Mr. Mackenzie.

Henry A. Quinn, for services in connection with the rebellion of 1885..... $292 40

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is a claim made by Henry A. Quinn, of St. Paul, Minn., who was present at Frog Lake when some white people were massacred by Indians in 1885. The claim amounted to $520.44, made up of witness fees at $2 a day from the 22nd of June to the 1st of October, 1885, 100 days, $200; travelling expenses and mileage, $56.40, with additions for interest, making a total of $520.44.

Mr. FOSTER. What trial was this?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The amount allowed was $292.40. The claim is for attendance and mileage as a witness for the Crown in connection with the trials of Indians accused of murder and other crimes incident to the Riel rebellion in the North-west Territories, in the year 1885, and also for a shotgun appropriated by an Indian, and interest. Included in the amount charged as a witness are his charges for services travelling through the country for the purpose of identifying the accused and collecting evidence against the hostiles. Quinn, after the trials in the North-west and before the witnesses were paid, was hurriedly called away from the North-west to St. Paul, Minn., and therefore was not paid his witness fees when the other witnesses were paid. He, on several occasions, sought to get these fees paid, but those to whom he applied had no recollection of his being a witness and thought he must have been paid when the expenses connected with the trial were disbursed. In December, 1898, he again submitted his claim to the Department of Justice and verified it by oath, giving full particulars of his connection with the cases. His affidavit was sent for report to all the parties concerned with the prosecutions who would likely have some knowledge or remembrance of the witnesses. Reports were received from these parties, including Judge Rouleau, who was one of the trial judges. Some of these parties could not recall the circumstances set forth by Quinn in his affidavit and could not state whether or not he was paid. But Judge Rouleau remembered the witness quite distinctly and states in his report that if he had not been paid he should have been. There is no record whatever in the department as to any payment having been made to him.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there records in the cases of other witnesses in the Department of Justice?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, there are some.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they all there?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think they are all in the department. I do not think there has been a strict accounting to the department for the expenses connected with the trials. Trials took place all over the North-west Territories, and Mr. Leslie, of the Department of Justice, was sent up for the purpose of auditing and taking care of the disbursements. He has a record, which he has examined for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is any record in the case of Quinn. He finds that there is no evidence that Quinn ever received anything. The Deputy Minister of Justice reports that when Quinn first submitted his account it was not entertained, but when he gave a history of his connection with the matter and verified his statement by oath the claim was thoroughly investigated with the result that the department decided that he was entitled to $292.40, for witness fees and other services, 100 days at $2 a day, $200, and mileage, 1,540 miles at 6 cents a mile, $92.40. Quinn was present at the massacre, and was used for the purpose of going through the country to identify the Indians who had taken part in it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that substantiated by other evidence?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, by the evidence that I have in my hand. Having witnessed the massacre Quinn went around to identify the Indians and was afterwards in attendance at the court.

Mr. FOSTER. Really, the only additional testimony you have is Quinn's affidavit.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. And Judge Rouleau's report.

Mr. FOSTER. Judge Rouleau's recollection of it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I take it as a matter of fact that Quinn was called as a witness.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but he does not know whether he was paid or not.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, that is a point upon which we had to rely upon the affidavit of Quinn and upon the further fact that the records of the department did not show that Quinn had received any remuneration for his services.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Quinn a British subject?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He was, but he is not now. He says in his affidavit that he is a naturalized citizen of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. Was he a British subject then?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, he lived in the North-west Territories, with his father. I have said that he lived in the North-west Territories with his father, but I find that he left the North-west Territories for the purpose of going down to his father who lived in St. Paul. I gather from the affidavit that he was a British subject.

Amount required in the case of Wentworth vs. Mathieu ..... $7,569

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is for expenses connected with an appeal to the Privy Council which was taken under the following circumstances. A number of suits were taken in the district of St.

Francis, P.Q., for penalties incurred under the Dunkin Act, and the cases were decided by the magistrate against the defendants. A writ of certiorari was taken to a judge of the Superior Court who quashed the convictions on a point which would make inapplicable the Dunkin Act if it were maintained. Under our system there is no appeal from a judge of the Superior Court in a case of certiorari, and thereupon application was made for means to appeal to set aside the judgment. The costs of the appellant were assumed by the Crown.

Mr. FOSTER. These have been taxed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They have been taxed in the regular way.

Mr. FOSTER. What territory is under the Dunkin Act at present in Quebec?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I can only speak in a general way as to that.

Mr. PARMALIEE. Only the county of Richmond.

Mr. FOSTER. The facts are that a large amount of money was spent to determine in favour of an Act which is existent only in one single county in the province of Quebec; and which practically has been superseded by the Scott Act, and by the general march of progress in temperance work. I suppose this was a little sop to the disappointed temperance people who did not have the promises included in the plebiscite carried out. I suppose the minister who was so very severely wigged for that has helped himself a little by this.

Mr. WM. GIBSON (Lincoln and Niagara). The Dunkin Act is still in force in the townships of Gainsborough and Ressler in Ontario. They have never been able to repeal the Dunkin Act in these two townships.

Mr. CLANCY. My impression is that it falls to the lot of the province to enforce a law of this kind, and if that be so why should the Dominion interfere.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It falls to the lot of the individual.

Mr. FOSTER. The Ontario government had to enforce the Scott Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The individual could not very well go to the Privy Council, and this was a matter of very great public importance.

Mr. CLANCY. It does seem strange it should be brought here.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish you had seen the representations.

Mr. CLANCY. I have no doubt representations were made, but it is the justice of the case I am speaking of. It is a matter for the province to administer these laws.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is not a provincial law.

Mr. CLANCY. But the province is nevertheless bound to enforce the Dominion laws.

Mr. FOSTER. The question involved was not as to the constitutionality of the Dunkin Act, for if that were the case the Dominion parliament could intervene. But this was merely a process of law, the solution of which was for the provincial government in carrying out the general law.

Contribution for Canadian Law Library,
London, England ..... $250

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is the usual fixed sum which we contribute to the library of Canadian books of reference, which is in the High Commissioner's office. It is supported not only by the Dominion, but by the provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. Who makes the purchases?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I really do not know, but I have used it very often.

Mr. BRITTON. A son of the Hon. Edward Blake interested himself in the formation of this library, and he made application to the Ontario government and also to Osgoode Hall. I think, perhaps, he buys the books.

Expenses connected with suit of the Queen vs. British American Bank Note Com pany ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The British American Bank Note Company at different times made several contracts with the government; the first on the 8th of February, 1868; the second on the 22nd of October, 1873; the third on the 22nd of October, 1878; the fourth on the 22nd of October, 1886; and finally, the fifth on the 23rd of April, 1892. Under these contracts the company was to supply stamps as required, printed from steel engraved plates, at prices in the case of the first four contracts to be fixed from time to time by the minister, and in the case of the fifth contract fixed by a schedule annexed thereto. The first four contracts provided that the stamps should be charged at rates per thousand stamps to be agreed to by the minister, and that engraved steel plates were to be charged extra. In the fifth contract the prices fixed per thousand stamps include the cost of engraving the necessary plates. As a matter of fact, under these contracts, large quantities of stamps were delivered to the order of the government of Canada that were printed from stone by a lithographic process, instead of being printed directly from engraved steel plates. Action was taken by the government for the difference in value of the lithographed stamps and the steel engraved stamps contracted for. Under the first contract, there were 5,455,933 stamps delivered, of which 3,807,713 were lithographed, and the difference in value was $4,553.33. Under the second contract there were 5,873,000 stamps delivered, of which 3,261,500 were lithographed, and the difference in value was $10,611.38. Under the third contract, there were 55,276,046 stamps delivered, of which 42,082,448 were lithographed, and the difference in value was $71,616.34. Under the fourth contract, there were 76,037,335 stamps delivered, of which 31,174,058 were lithographed, the difference in value being $50,968.17. Under the fifth contract, there were 82,144,382 stamps delivered, of which 6,157,945 were lithographed, the difference in value being $11,778.61. Under the fifth contract there were also supplied 25,639,908 stamps, of which 290,242 were lithographed, and the difference in value was $601.32. The claim we make, therefore, amounts to $150,129.15. This is the amount ascertained to be due on the reference made by the court.

Mr. FOSTER. How was that ascertained? Has it been decided by the court?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The point that came before the judge to be determined was whether the defendant was responsible for the difference in cost as between the lithographed stamps supplied and the steel engraved stamps contracted for. The trial took place in November last, and at the close of the case, the judge referred the question of the amount to Mr. Audette, the registrar of the Exchequer Court. I asked for damages arising under all contracts. There is no question under the judgment as to the right of the government to recover damages; and it is in connection with that suit that this sum is asked to cover counsel fees and the auditor's report.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is acting for the Crown?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. Chrysler and myself.

Mr. FOSTER. The case is of course before the court, and what the Solicitor General has read is simply the claim of the Post Office Department.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The claim is made by the Inland Revenue Department chiefly. The stamps were supplied to the Inland Revenue Department for the tobacco industry.

Mr. FOSTER. The Solicitor General made in this House the other day a statement something like this:

That is the point, that is to say, whether we are now face to face with a contract similar to the one that we are now dealing with in the Exchequer Court, in which a contract was made by which it was agreed that steel engraved stamps should be supplied to a department of the government, and lithograph stamps were supplied instead—whether we are face to face with another fraud of that description.

This statement was made in regard to a case that was pending for judgment before the court, and I do not think it was such a statement as ought to have been made. It is a clear statement that the case was one of fraud. Mr. Burland, since that statement was made, has sent me this telegram which he authorizes me to read:

Please contradict malicious and false statement of Fitzpatrick. Government never paid steel plate prices for lithographic printing.

And it is not yet established that they did. The case is still before the court. The government may make their claim and may think it is a proper claim; but it is hardly right, while the case is pending, for one of the government to state that it is actually so, because that remains to be established.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. On that point the finding of the court is absolute and conclusive, notwithstanding Mr. Burland's declaration on oath that he had not furnished lithographic stamps instead of steel engraved stamps contracted for.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not the point whether he gave to the government what the government ordered?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There can be no dispute about the contract. The only point he has endeavoured to make out is that some of the officials of the Inland Revenue Department authorized him to furnish lithographed stamps instead of steel engraved stamps, but he has never been able to prove it.

Mr. FOSTER. And on that order he supplied lithographed stamps and charged the price of lithographed stamps?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In one of the contracts there is a schedule fixing the prices.

Mr. FOSTER. The contract may have been varied.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was not shown that the contract was varied. The rule laid down by the hon. gentleman that while a case is under investigation the word 'fraud' should not be applied to it is a very excellent rule. I regret that the hon. gentleman and others on this side of the House did not act on this rule in another case a few days ago, when the word 'fraud' was freely used before the case was tried, and in a matter which was insignificant from a money point of view, when compared with this.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the cases are not similar at all. Here is a case before a court of law.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The other case was before a higher court.

Mr. FOSTER. A higher court ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the highest court in the land, the High Court of Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a case in which one of the officers of the law, when he was conducting a claim before the court and where a decision was not given, actually came down to the House and made the decision himself.

Expenses in connection with the arrest and trial of counterfeiters and to recoup the vote for unforeseen expenses, amounts paid from that vote..... $4,300

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. members may be aware that for some time past it has been necessary to take special precautions against the counterfeiting of some of our Dominion notes, and the Finance Department has for a long time had detectives employed looking into the matter. The upshot was that we have made very important arrests, and broken up the gang of counterfeiters who were counterfeiting our one dollar and two dollar notes chiefly. I have here a memorandum giving the particulars of the expenses :

1. In connection with the arrest and conviction of Anthony Decker, Paul Decker, Hanz Kuntz and Robert Nurnburger, for counterfeiting Dominion of Canada one dollar note of the issue of June 1, 1878. Anthony Decker was arrested in Baltimore, Mrs. Decker in Hamilton, Paul Decker and Hanz Kuntz in Woodstock, and Robert Nurnburger in Montreal. All were brought for trial at Woodstock, where the plant was found. Anthony Decker and Paul Decker received five years each; Kuntz fifteen months; and Nurnburger was allowed out on suspended sentence. The amount expended in this case, covering a year's investigation, was $2,220.81.

2. The arrest, prosecution and conviction of Angus Chisholm, John Doyle, James Barkley, Wilson Meyers, Arthur Stewart, Neil Barkley, Thomas Little, T. S. Moore, W. W. Black of Amherst, N.S., Herbert Smith, George Smith and R. L. Marshall of Turo, N.S., L. W. Davis and George E. Litchfield of Boston, Mass., U.S., all of whom were concerned in counterfeiting the Dominion of Canada two dollar notes of the issue of July 2, 1897—$517.52.

3. Arthur Patenaude of St. Scholastique, and Paul Berthiaume of St. Hyacinthe, P.Q., for counterfeiting and uttering Canadian silver—$112.11.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the counterfeiting of Canadian silver proved ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The parties pleaded guilty. In the case of the Nova Scotia gang, they were in communication with some parties in the United States, so that the investigation covered a very wide area. The whole work was done very satisfactorily by the various officers concerned—the legal gentlemen, the officers of the Department of Justice and Col. Sherwood—and we have reason to believe that the money was very well and usefully expended.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. SPROULE. When were the arrests made ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A few months ago. They were tried at Woodstock and Amherst, N.S.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the view of the department as to the amount of counterfeiting going on ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Our impression now is that there is none. A few cases of counterfeiting were brought to our notice, and as they occurred in different sections of the Dominion, that gave rise to the impression that there was widespread counterfeiting, but after careful inquiry we find that the two particular gangs we arrested embraced all those who were engaged in that business.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As I had something to do in connection with Col. Sherwood's visit to St. Regis, I think that in justice to Col. Sherwood I should explain to the House what I know about the matter. I was obliged to go down to St. Regis at the time, and I think it only right to say that Col. Sherwood exposed his life two or three times, and when the Indian was shot it was quite evident that Col. Sherwood had to take the course he did, not only for the protection of his own life, but the lives as well of the other three constables. The matter was investigated by a coroner's jury at the place, and that jury declared that the circumstances justified Col. Sherwood's conduct.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody blamed Col. Sherwood.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have had a great deal to do with Col. Sherwood in connection with the counterfeiting and other matters, and can testify that he is a most faithful and efficient officer. If anything said with regard to the St. Regis business reflected on Col. Sherwood, whoever said it did so as the result of a complete misunderstanding.

Mr. FOSTER. What was said was not in criticism of Col. Sherwood, but rather calling into account by my hon. friend on my left the wisdom of the measures taken by the government in their treatment of the Indians which led up to the difficulty. It will be in the memory of the House, that when some such interpretation as that was given of the remarks made, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) rose and made it clear that that impression was an incorrect one. I am sure everybody sympathized with Col. Sherwood in the circumstances of the case in which he was engaged, and I do not think that any one blamed him for his action but rather quite the contrary.

Expenses in connection with the arrest and trial of the officials of La Banque Ville Marie, and to recoup the vote for unforeseen expenses for amount paid from that appropriation for this service. $9,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be hardly necessary for me to remind the House of the disastrous failure of La Banque Ville Marie. The inquiry disclosed that there had been a falsification of the reports made by the bank, under the Banking Act, which amounted to a serious offence. We deemed it necessary to take proceedings against the officers of the bank, and placed the matter in the hands of Mr. Hutchison, of Montreal. Ultimately, other legal gentlemen had to be associated with him, and the Solicitor General also had charge of the case. The trial attracted a great deal of attention, and resulted in the conviction and punishment of several officers of the bank. The expenses incurred are set forth in a memorandum as follows :

Expenses connected with police and detectives .....	$2,745 90
Hutchinson's bill .....	2,451 69
Duffy's bill.....	750 00
Kent (liquidator), services .....	1,000 00
Various payments .....	1,810 00
	$8,757 59

A further bill has come from John Hyde, accountant, for services and expenses, amounting to $546.50, which will make the amount a little over the $9,000. The legal expenses, of course, will be taxed by the Justice Department.

Mr. FOSTER. Did I not see a report that Herbert had been let out ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. He was accountant in the bank, and after we got him it was by his aid that we obtained the information necessary to enable us to take proceedings against the other directors, and also against Baxter and the other brokers. It would have been absolutely impossible for us to have made any evidence, except in the case of false returns to the government, without the assistance of Herbert. Without going into details, I may say that he gave us all the information we required in order to make a complete case against the cashier of the bank, and also against some of the customers—against Mr. Baxter, who is now in penitentiary, and two other brokers, who are under indictment and are to be tried. Mr. Herbert was allowed to go under suspended sentence until October—practically on bail—when he must appear. This was done after consultation between the Crown prosecutor, Judge Wurtele and myself.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the bail fixed at ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems very small.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Well, I can only say that, from my knowledge of the assistance rendered to Colonel Sherwood by Herbert, I would be prepared to take even a more lenient view of his case than that.

Civil Government—Queen's Privy Council for Canada—Contingencies ..... $1,500

The PRIME MINISTER. The efforts which were made by the Eastern Extension Company to establish their rival scheme to the Pacific cable, made it necessary that we should communicate by cable repeatedly with the different Australian colonies, and this is simply to cover the bill.

Miscellaneous—Expenses connected with inquiry into labour troubles in British Columbia mines, and to recoup vote for unforeseen expenses ..... $7,000

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), knows a good deal about this matter. This is the case in which the report of Mr. Clute was made. Early in January, we received complaints from some miners in British Columbia to the effect that the alien labour law was being violated and asking the interference of the government in the matter. We asked for some explanation, and the explanation given convinced us that the troubles were far deeper than simply a violation of the Alien Labour Act. In fact, there had been a strike in some of the mining camps, and there was a possibility of that strike extending all over the Kootenay mining section. The state of things was alarming. It would have been a terrible calamity if the strike had become general and the mines closed. We thought it advisable, under the circumstances, to send an experienced commissioner, one in whom we had reason to have confidence, to investigate the matter and to see if it was possible to establish an understanding between employers and employed. We selected Mr. Clute, and he went to the Kootenay and visited the different mining camps and made a most valuable report—which is before the House—and succeeded generally in restoring harmony. And this is to pay the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Seven thousand dollars is a large sum. What are the items ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps my hon. friend, the Solicitor General can give them, as the bills were taxed by the Department of Justice, I do not think the expenditure is quite $7,000; but that amount was taken out of the vote for unforeseen expenses, and this is to recoup that vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we should have some details.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the hon. gentleman will let them pass, I will give the details later on.

Mr. FOSTER. Better let it stand.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well.

Mr. PRIOR. What experience did Mr. Clute have ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We employed him the year before to investigate the trouble that arose on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway.

Mr. PRIOR. Is he a lawyer?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What effect had Mr. Clute and his mission on the final settlement of the strike? Does the Prime Minister think that it was due in any large way to Mr. Clute's investigation, that the men and the mine owners came together?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do believe that it was due to the efforts of Mr. Clute that the miners and mine owners were brought together, and I think the report will show that conclusively.

Mr. FOSTER. In both Slocan and Rossland?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. PRIOR. The difficulty is about as acute now as it was then.

The PRIME MINISTER. It has broken out again, I am afraid.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it proposed to print the report?

The PRIME MINISTER. It has been ordered to be printed by the House.

Mr. PUTTEE. Does this item cover both visits of Mr. Clute to the west?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item stands.

Civil Government—Contingencies—Department of Privy Council for Canada—

Clerical and other assistants, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act .....	$2,000
Printing and stationery .....	2,000
Sundries .....	4,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason of this increase in clerical assistance?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry to say I can give but little information. I took the estimate as it was prepared in the department. It is reported to me that this is what is required for this year.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister is taking a good deal for granted.

The PRIME MINISTER. No; because this vote has been standing for years at the same figure, and as there is a reduction in it of $800 as compared with last year, I thought I could accept the estimate without much question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I laid on the Table some papers in relation to the Bank of Commerce. I would be glad to take up that item if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), has read the papers.

Mr. PRIOR.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not seen the papers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then we will let that stand. We have made very good progress and I think that we might now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. Would hon. gentlemen opposite say that they have run out of business—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but hon. gentlemen opposite are so anxious to have business to stand over. The whole election Bill has stood over, except a small fragment in relation to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble is, the ministers will not indicate what they propose to go on with, but take us unawares. We were ready to go on with the immigration vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Speaker is present, and we can go on with the estimates under the head of legislation.

Legislation—Senate—Salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate..... $68,388

Mr. FOSTER. There is a large increase there, how is it caused?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid we cannot give any further explanation, except that the officers of the Senate sent us this memorandum; and I suppose we must vote it. If we do not, I do not know what they may do.

Mr. FOSTER. In consideration of the good work the Senate has done, we will let it go.

Expenses of committees, sessional and extra clerks, &c. .... $21,900

Mr. FOSTER. Are these increases of $100 and $150 statutory increases merely?

Mr. SPEAKER. Those are the increases that were ordered under the direction of the Committee of Internal Economy a year ago. I think they are only the statutory increases. They were done, of course, by my predecessor.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the miscellaneous branch take in? Does that take in the records branch?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, this is confined to the pages and sessional messengers.

Mr. FOSTER. What extra sessional clerks have been put on this year?

Mr. SPEAKER. We have not made a single appointment this session. It is the same staff as last session.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is sustaining the new faces that we see around.

Mr. SPEAKER. They are not under the pay of the government, so far as I know.

Mr. FOSTER. Have there been any changes in the sessional clerks, in the personnel ?

Mr. SPEAKER. There was just one, I forget his name now. The Speaker of the Senate, perhaps a month ago, said that upon condition of being allowed to appoint another man in his place, there was a young man in whom he was interested that he wished to put in a better position, and with the concurrence of the clerk who said he was satisfied with the new man, we allowed the change to be made, to enable the one going to get what he considered a better position.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Speaker thoroughly satisfied with the work of the sessional clerks ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Well, as a matter of fact they do not come under my personal supervision, being more directly under Sir John Bourinot, but he expresses himself as satisfied.

Mr. SPROULE. I am surprised to hear that there have been no new men put on lately, because we see a number of new faces around.

Mr. SPEAKER. They are not sessional clerks.

Publishing debates ..... $40,000

Mr. FOSTER. What will the debates cost this year ?

Mr. SPEAKER. We have been in the habit of leaving that to the committee appointed by the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Speaker know what they are to cost for the current year ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that, perhaps, there is an item of $16,000 for increased expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. So the debates cost well up towards $60,000 ?

Mr. SPEAKER. They are costing more than formerly.

The PRIME MINISTER. The opposition contributes a share to that expenditure.

Estimates of serjeant-at-arms as approved ..... $34,267 50

Mr. FOSTER. Have there been any changes in the sessional messengers during the present session ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The staff is pretty much the same as it has been. I think there was a similar case, in which a messenger was substituted for one who was unable to attend. With that exception we have not appointed any new messengers since I took my present office.

Library of Parliament—Contingencies.... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. There is one thing I would like to mention about that Library Committee. There is the Library Committee of the House, and it has the most unfortunate habit of calling its members together on some day when all the other committees are called. A little forethought and consultation might avoid that. It is really an important committee. I am a member of that committee myself, and I should like to attend it, but I do not think I have attended it more than twice in two years, simply for the reason that the call comes when other important committees are on. If some one who has direction of things would just bear that in mind, I think we could get a meeting of the Library Committee at times when the members would be there.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am in the position of the hon. gentleman, I do not think I have attended a meeting of that committee since I have been Prime Minister, for the same reason, because meetings are called when we are otherwise engaged. It is for the reason that we are busy otherwise. We are so busy that when it reaches a certain stage of the session I do not know what day the committee might take except it might be Monday forenoon, and then we might not have a very large attendance of the members of the committee. Upon every day of the week committees are meeting. The only way I could suggest would be to get the librarian to consult with some of the leading members of the committee and fix a day that would be satisfactory. I will speak to the librarian.

Printing, binding and distributing the laws ..... $ 6,000
Printing, printing paper and binding.... 85,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is under whose charge ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot answer the question as to who has charge of that, but it would be the Secretary of State, I fancy.

Department of Railways and Canals, including $1,400 to J. L. Payne, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ..... $40,550

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have some explanation of this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been five statutory increases allowed to members of the staff in the department, and five others have been allowed increases in excess of that.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are they ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. John H. J. Gleason, third-class clerk, increased from $700 to $800 ; Graham

A. Bell, third-class clerk, increased from $650 to $800; J. P. Wright, third-class clerk, increased from $550 to $800; A. W. Cameron, promoted from a third-class to a second-class clerk, increase $100; W. C. Little, promoted from a third-class to a second-class clerk, increase $100.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation in these cases?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total amount of the increases in this branch of the department is $950. The explanation in regard to those who are receiving exceptional increases is that they are exceptionally efficient clerks. The work which has devolved upon them has been very heavy this year. The amounts which they were receiving, having regard to their qualifications, were, in my opinion, very low indeed, and I felt that as we were not exceeding our usual vote for the purpose of giving these deserving clerks an increase, having regard to their merit and qualifications, I should ask parliament for authority to make their salaries uniform at $800.

Mr. FOSTER. In one case you have given $250 of an increase, in another case $150, and in another case $100.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the reason is that they are all put on the same level.

Mr. FOSTER. These are large increases. Take one of these clerks whose salary was $550 a year, and you are giving him an increase equal to five statutory increases.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It appears to be a very considerable sum, but his services, his qualifications and merits generally entitle him to be put upon an equal footing with the others.

Mr. FOSTER. He cannot have been in the service as long as the others.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He has not been in the service as long as the others. He was in the department before I came in; in fact, all these gentlemen were in the department before I came in.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act? They do not refer to any of these officers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They refer to Mr. Gleason. In the vote on page 11 the names of Messrs. Gleason, Bell and Wright have been left out, whereas in the details submitted on page 17 their names have been inserted. I would move to add, after the word 'Payne' in the second line of the vote on page 11 the words, 'J. H. J. Gleason, J. A. Bell, and J. P. Wright.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are being promoted from second to first-class clerkships?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Richard Devlin, Mr. H. LeBreton Ross and Mr. Payne.

Mr. FOSTER. What are these gentlemen getting now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Devlin gets $1,400, Mr. Ross $1,350, and Mr. Payne $1,350.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Payne still your private secretary?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One of them.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you two?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. You are almost as rich as the Prime Minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One secretary could not do my work by any possibility.

Mr. SPROULE. Does Mr. Payne get $600 as private secretary in addition to the $1,350?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, he gets a portion of the $600.

Mr. SPROULE. What he gets as private secretary and his salary make up the $1,350?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, his salary as a second-class clerk is $1,350. He gets a portion of the allowance for private secretary in addition to that, last year, amounting in all to $1,700.

Mr. SPROULE. What will Mr. Payne get now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not yet settled for the year altogether how the secretarial allowance will be distributed.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the other private secretary?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Currier. He was Mr. Haggart's secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. What clerks have not received the statutory increase?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Shannon.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary did he get?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $2,050.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Dickson, getting $1,800; Mr. Stewart, $1,800; Mr. Currier, $1,800; Mr. Pugsley, $1,800; Mr. Chubbuck, $1,450; Mr. Almon, $1,450; Mr. C. W. Ross, $1,400; Mr. Fortier, $1,200; Mr. Dionne, $1,100. These are the clerks who have not received any addition during the present current year.

Mr. FOSTER. All your third-class clerks received statutory increases, or a special increase.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I thought their salaries were low.

Soulanges Canal, construction ..... $350,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the state of the work when this is expended, and what proportion remains to be done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total amount expended upon this canal up to March 1 last, according to my memorandum, was $5,586,788.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the estimated cost of the whole canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We estimated that it would cost close on to $6,500,000. I think, perhaps, we may have to revise that estimate a little, because there has been a considerable demand upon us to make some improvements, which we did not contemplate when this estimate was made. There is some additional work at both entrances.

Mr. FOSTER. Then this vote will very nearly finish the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I expect that it will.

Mr. CLANCY. What will the additional work cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot give a precise statement as to that now. I will have it when the canal items come up.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal, construction..... $40,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for levelling the canal grounds, widening the upper entrances, and work at other points. There is only about 18 feet of water at the entrance to this canal, whereas there is 20½ feet on the mitre sill of the lock.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that $40,000 do the work on that pier entrance or is it only partial?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is estimated to be sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. When that is done will the Sault Ste. Marie Canal be practically finished?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the comparison of business through that canal this year and last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not quite up to last year,

I am sorry to say. There has been quite a falling off.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that attributed to?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is not the shipment of grain being made from the west this year. The falling off is also noticeable on the American side.

Lachine Canal, construction of lock.... $500,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This lock is in a very bad condition and requires to be renewed. Its size is not satisfactory, and it must be enlarged. It is proposed to build a lock suitable for vessels drawing twenty feet of water.

Mr. FOSTER. What present depth does it accommodate?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not presumed to be capable of carrying more than sixteen feet. The estimate is that it will take half a million of money to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is navigation hindered while you are working there, or how are you going to work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We cannot, of course, do the work at a time when it would obstruct the use of the canal.

Mr. FOSTER. That means that it cannot be done during the season of navigation. Have any contracts been called for that work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Which lock is it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the main lock at the terminus of the canal, next to Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it proposed in the construction of that lock to make it a sort of harbour as well?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. We have two or three basins there which answer for the purpose.

Lachine Canal—Dredging between locks 2 and 3 and basin ..... $21,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this done by contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this complete the dredging that is necessary there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the estimate.

Lachine Canal—Building slope walls..... $11,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This work is under contract now.

Mr. FOSTER. Will this $11,000 finish the work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. This is all we shall spend this year. The total estimated cost of this work is $70,000.

Mr. CLANCY. How much has been spent on it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my memory serves me, we spent the whole $21,000 appropriated last year.

Lachine Canal—To build a quadrant pontoon gate..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. What does that mean?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a new description of gate, which is described by the engineer as the Dutton quadrant pontoon gate. I understand from him that is an experiment that we are trying. It is a gate highly commended. We have none at present on any of our locks.

Mr. FOSTER. Where have they been used and been proved to be good?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not say, but I am informed by my deputy that they have been used and are spoken of very highly. Chauncey M. Dutton is the name of the original inventor.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it an American patent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is an American product; I do not know whether it is a patent or not.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it not usual for persons who are asking the government to adopt some untried device, to bear the expense of the experiment themselves, or at least the greater part of it? This seems to be a new departure on the part of the hon. gentleman to pay $20,000 to try somebody's invention. I think we should have some explanation of this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know nothing personally about the merits of this gate, but the engineers speak very highly of it. One guarantee which we have that makes the experiment practically safe is that the man who puts it up is to satisfy us that it is workable and will do as he represents, before he is paid for it. I do not know the man; I never saw him.

Mr. FOSTER. Before you allow even that, there must have been a pretty good examination by your engineers. What is their report? What new features in it do they recommend?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the new features are.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman a report of the engineers on the subject?

Mr. FOSTER

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume there is one in the department. I have not seen any such report. I have not passed on the sufficiency of this gate.

Mr. FOSTER. But you are asking us to pass on a vote of $20,000 for an experiment. Before you do that you ought to give us some information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Probably if you got all the information the department has, you would not be any the wiser. I do not think you could have any better guarantee that the thing is bona fide than that Mr. Dutton has agreed to satisfy the department that the gate will be what it is represented to be before he is paid.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you get at the estimate of $20,000 for this experiment?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not get at it.

Mr. FOSTER. Who does?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The officer of my department.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, let us have his report.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In that case we had better let the item stand.

Item allowed to stand.

Lachine Canal—Installation of electric light ..... $40,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for the purpose of installing the electric light throughout the whole canal.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you propose to make this installation?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I judge that we shall contract for the work of putting it in and the erection of the building. We shall buy what electric machinery we require in the usual way.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you going to have the motive power yourself, or take the light from the company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am taking it on the Lachine Canal, where we will have all the power we require without hiring it from any one. We have in this proposed grant a sum to provide hydraulic machinery which will enable us to generate a current, and the whole cost is estimated at $40,000, including the building, hydraulic machinery, the electric plant and installation.

Lake St. Louis—Forming channel..... $14,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This vote is asked for the purpose of obtaining a new and correct chart. In order to make that chart, new soundings will have to be made over the whole width of the channel, and it is estimated that that will cost $4,000. In addition, we require the sum of $10,000 to pay the balances of the drawback and the salaries of the staff of engineers in preparing the final estimate. Hon. gentlemen know that after the work of the contractors has been completed, it takes a good deal of time and a considerable staff to complete the final estimate. The work is very nearly finished, and the contractors have been paid up to March 1, $235,000. Then, in addition to that, there is miscellaneous expenditure, including engineers, amounting to $24,000, which has been paid, so that $259,000 will represent the expenditure made up to March 1.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the forming of your channel is really to test the sufficiency of the work done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Soundings are being taken for the purpose of making a new chart.

Grenville Canal enlargement ..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is required to complete the work under contract. Amount paid to the contractors up to March 1, $73,859; miscellaneous expenditure, including engineers, $12,765. That gives a depth of nine feet clear on the mitre sill, probably in the neighbourhood of ten feet. This work will widen the canal. There has been quite an addition of business on it in the last year.

Lake St. Francis—Removing shoal..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What remains there to be done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to get over the shoals and straighten the channel.

Cornwall Canal enlargement ..... $60,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to complete the opening and widen the upper entrance. It is under contract with the Welland Dredging Company. I judge that this will be sufficient to complete the canal entirely.

Farran's Point Canal ..... $69,500

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This will complete that work. It is being done by the Canadian Construction Company.

North Channel—Forming ..... $200,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to complete the work.

Galops Rapids—Forming channel..... $100,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will this finish it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we will require to have something in the supplementary for the next year.

St. Lawrence River and reaches—Surveying, buoying, &c. .... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. What does that amount cover?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have decided that it will be in the interest of the channel that we should put down buoys; and we have to do some surveying in connection with it, take soundings and so on.

Canals, Chargeable to Capital—Trent Canal, construction ..... $320,000

Mr. FOSTER. What works are going on there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to complete the Onderdonk contract on the Balsam section. Then there is the contract of Brown, Love & Aylmer on the Wakefield section; while Corry & Laverdure are working on the Peterborough section, and their work, according to the estimate, will absorb $140,000. The Dominion Bridge Company are building the new hydraulic lift, which we have selected as the mode of getting up and down, the cost of which will be $134,000. Then, sundry small items, such as operators' workshops, land damages, small works not under construction, and so on, will absorb the balance.

Mr. FOSTER. And with this done, what part of the Trent system will be finished?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This does not take you all the way to Balsam—to the upper lake. You still have a stretch to be completed, in order to get you up to between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe.

Mr. FOSTER. And is this interval difficult work, or is it river work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is cutting through—no river work.

Mr. FOSTER. How much will it cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not wish to be held as stating the figure with absolute certainty, but I think it is going to take $900,000 or $1,000,000 to complete the section from Balsam Lake to Lake Simcoe.

Mr. FOSTER. And will, say, a million dollars finish the system?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, you do not touch the down river section below Peterborough.

Mr. FOSTER. You finish from Peterborough through?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I think so—with what we have already under contract. The section that I speak of between these two lakes is perhaps thirteen or fourteen miles. That has not been touched at all. We have contracted for a portion of the distance, but not for the balance.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. minister an estimate of the whole canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have figures; but I do not think I can state them with any advantage at present, because we are making a careful survey of the lower stretches to determine whether we shall continue according to the original plan, or go through Rice Lake and make the connection from the head of Rice Lake through to Port Hope.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that supposed to be cheaper?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have reason to think that it will be much less expensive. But that is a point that is asserted on one side and denied on the other, and it is to determine that, that the present investigation is directed.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been spent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total expenditure up to March, 1900, is $2,393,000.

Mr. CLANCY. If you followed the original plans, what would it cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it was estimated that it would take something like $3,000,000 and more to complete by the original plan—that is, the lower section. The Trent Canal altogether, has been estimated to cost somewhere between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, we have gone over these items; but I suppose it is with the understanding that when we take up the three items that are left, questions may be asked about any of these items?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objections.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What estimates will you go on with Monday?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We expect to go on with the Chinese Bill. When we resume on the estimates, we will probably go on with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. FOSTER. And what after that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not thought beyond that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may say I was intending to make a general statement on the subject, which may, perhaps, occupy an hour or two.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.10 a.m. (Saturday.)

Mr. BLAIR.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 25, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SITTINGS OF COMMITTEES.

On motion of Mr. D. C. Fraser (Guysboro'), the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, and the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, were given leave to sit during the time the House is in session.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 184) to amend the Tariff of Customs, 1897.—(Mr. Fielding). On division.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved:

That the order for the third reading of Bill (No. 156) to amend the Civil Service Act be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of being amended as follows:—

In section 7, 1st line, strike out the words 'for special cause shown.'

In section 12, 7th line, after the word 'salary' insert the words 'or emolument.'

In section 13, add the following words: 'Provided, however, that this section shall not prejudice or affect any of the rights or privileges which such third-class clerks would otherwise have.'

He said: The first amendment is intended to strike out the words which are rendered unnecessary by a proviso which was inserted in the Bill after it was introduced. It makes no material change. The second amendment is intended to apply to temporary clerks, who perhaps are technically not in receipt of 'salaries.' While the Bill was going through the House, we agreed that it was well to designate all the third-class clerks who remained in the service as junior second-class clerks, so as not to multiply the different classes. I have been advised by the Department of Justice that it might be necessary for one of these third-class clerks, on being designated a junior second-class clerk, to serve a period as such, before he could be eligible for an increase. That was not intended, and therefore I propose this change.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Suppose you have messengers who have qualified themselves for clerkships, and are now being paid the maximum salary as messengers and are paying superannuation upon that. If any of them are appointed as junior second-class clerks, would they pay the superannuation deduction upon the salary they received at the time of being appointed second-class clerks, or upon the whole salary they receive?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I fancy that the rule of the three years' average would apply.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I wish to ask the minister—if he is certain about it. If so, there are consequences which run into the Superannuation Act. I do not suppose there would be very many cases of that kind, so that it would not amount to a very large sum, and it would be rather awkward, I should think, to have to discriminate between what such a man was getting before and what he received afterwards. His appointment is really in the nature of a promotion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My attention had not been drawn to that point; but I should think the cases would be so rare that special legislation would not be required to meet them.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I move the amendments I have read.

Mr. FOSTER. Subsection 2 of section 7 provides that an appointment shall only be made under this section in two cases, one of which is where a junior second-class clerk shall be appointed to take the place of a clerk of the second or of a higher class. I suppose that means that if a second class vacancy occurs, you take the power to appoint a junior second-class clerk to fill that vacancy, whose salary cannot go over the maximum of $1,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How are you going to tabulate your clerks? Is that person to be a second-class or a first-class clerk or a chief clerk?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He will be a junior second-class clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. In the books he will rank in your departmental allocation as second or first-class clerk?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, if a vacancy should occur in a second-class clerkship, where the incumbent was receiving say $1,400, of course if you had an equally good man that you wished to put in, you could put him directly into the second class. Beginning at $1,000, and rising up to $1,400. But if you thought you had another man who could do the work, who was not in the second class, you could put him in as junior second-class clerk, beginning at $800 and rising to $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. He would be doing the same work as the second-class clerk did at $1,400.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so.

Bill reported as amended, read the third time and passed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Bill (No. 180) respecting and restricting Chinese immigration (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) read the second time; and the House resolved itself into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to provide with respect to the Bill intitled: 'An Act respecting and restricting Chinese immigration,' now before the House:

1. That a tax of one hundred dollars shall be imposed on every person of Chinese origin entering Canada;

2. That the person in command of, or in charge of, any vessel or vehicle bringing Chinese immigrants into Canada shall be personally liable to Her Majesty for the payment of the said tax with respect to any such immigrant carried by such vessel or vehicle.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the adoption of the resolution I would like to know whether the right hon. the First Minister has carried out in this resolution and the legislation which he proposes to base upon it, the wishes of his supporters from the province of British Columbia. I think it is on the public records that during the last election campaign a very strong telegram came from British Columbia asking what would be the position of the Prime Minister and his party on the vexed question of Chinese immigration; and viewing the condition of the party and the waiting electorate at that time, and anxious no doubt to get for his party as large a vote as possible on the Pacific coast, I think the Prime Minister sent a telegram to the coast saying that he and his party would be prepared to carry out whatever was the wish of the Liberal members on the Pacific coast. It would be interesting now to know whether or not, in the legislation before the House, the Prime Minister and his party are acting in accord with the Liberal representatives of British Columbia. It is a matter of grave importance, I think, that a pledge given like that should be carried out, and the Prime Minister could be said to have carried it out if he is acting in strict accord with the wishes of his Liberal supporters in British Columbia. Otherwise an explanation is due.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think I can satisfy the curiosity of my hon. friend—

Mr. FOSTER. It is more than curiosity.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is very hard, as my hon. friend knows, to satisfy the expectations of everybody in this world. I have not yet seen a man who could do it, except perhaps my hon. friend himself, with absolute certainty and to the fullest extent. I do not pretend that in this legislation we will perhaps satisfy all the aspirations of the Liberal members who represent British Columbia in this House.

But we are proceeding in the same direction as they are in this respect. Perhaps they would like to see us go further than we do at the present time; but as we are going in the same direction as they are, they have jumped into our wagon, and, so far as we go, they are ready to go with us. I do not pretend to say, nor did I say, in introducing the Bill, that we pretend that this should be a finality. But, under the present condition of things, we thought it was as far as we could go; and I believe that the Liberal members from British Columbia are satisfied with the position we have taken. This is not a finality, but it is a legitimate concession to the aspirations of the people of British Columbia, who, upon this question, entertain views peculiarly their own, views which are not shared by the people of the east, who are represented by a majority in this House, and who are not prepared to go as far as the people of British Columbia would go in this matter. But, no doubt, a process of education will harmonize the views of all the people on this question. We propose, as I have said, to have a commission, following the precedent of 1885, to advise us further on this question. But, so far I believe I can say that not only the support of the British Columbia members is with us, but that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) himself.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), then, is much more conservative in his actions than in his promises. Did it never strike him that it would be well for him to exercise a little more of that conservatism about the time he is making promises, especially on the eve of a general election, when the only object of a promise of that kind can be to secure votes. If he is not fully persuaded that he can go as far as he promises, it is very like getting power under false pretenses—getting votes under promises which the hon. gentleman is not sure he can fulfil. However, he says that the Liberal members from British Columbia have jumped into his wagon. Several people seem to have jumped into his wagon. I think that when he was in Ontario, last year, speaking in a certain county in reference to his friend Mr. Tolmie, he said that Mr. Tolmie was a Radical and far in advance of him in his opinions, but willing to jump into his wagon and go as far as the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself went. Is that the case with the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) and the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell)? Have they jumped into his little cart, and, under promise of fifty dollars addition to the Chinese tax, are they going in the wagon as far as the right hon. gentleman goes? And do they intend to go any further? And, if they go further, will they change the team, or what will they do about it? It would be interesting, at this stage, to know where we stand with regard to this matter. One thing we do know—that the Prime Minister made an unqualified promise, which to-day he unqualifiedly refuses to carry out.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). I have no hesitation in saying that I am in the same wagon as the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and I prefer it to the very old, ramshackle affair in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) finds himself. And not alone is the vehicle better, but the horses that are drawing this wagon are sound in wind and limb; they are not spavined, nor asthmatic, nor wind-blown and liable to break down. I would strongly advise the hon. gentleman to come in with us. He would find it very smooth riding.

An hon. MEMBER. We do not want him.

Mr. MORRISON. No; I would like to have him alongside of us, in our highly-varnished, well-greased, well-equipped and staunch vehicle.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you call it well-greased?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, like all wagons that go well. The grease has apparently given out with hon. gentlemen opposite—they have run out of that, as of everything else. However, as to the Bill which is about to be brought in, I may say, speaking for myself, I am not satisfied. I say that frankly—and no one knows that I am not satisfied better than the right hon. gentleman who leads the House. I may go further and say that, so far as I am concerned, and so far as my constituency is concerned, I do not think there was one vote affected one way or the other by the telegram it was stated was sent before the elections of 1896. I do not think that was the object with which it was sent; and if it was the object, I do not think it had the effect which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) insinuates. I am certain this fifty dollars increase is an earnest of what we very soon shall have, and I think when the matter is fully investigated and looked into, the Prime Minister will feel justified in giving that measure of protection in this respect to the people of British Columbia that they have been asking for, particularly for the last three or four years.

It is rather a matter of comment that my hon. friend the member from Victoria (Mr. Prior) should be so solicitous and perturbed, at this late stage of his parliamentary career, on this question of Chinese restriction. I look in vain for any indication of any efforts on his part before 1896, or on the part of other gentlemen who represented British Columbia, to bring about reform in this matter. I find that in 1885 there was a commission appointed, which commission investigated this question of Chinese immigration into British Columbia. That report, so far as it was the work of the commissioners—that is, the report exclusive of the evidence—is directly against the increase of the tax on Chinaman; it is strongly against the restriction of Chinese immigration. And that is one of the greatest difficulties the Liberal members from British Columbia have had to contend with in this matter—the report of hon. gentlemen opposite, which was not justified, I believe, by the evidence before the commission. And doubtless the hon. senior member for Victoria was quite satisfied with this until 1896, when he found a government in power against which he desired to make political capital. He was perfectly satisfied with the report of that commission.

Mr. PRIOR. To what report does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) refer?

Mr. MORRISON. The report of the Chinese commission in 1885, the only report on the subject, so far as I know. I have yet to hear that the hon. member for Victoria or any of the members from British Columbia ever attacked that report or did anything to offset the erroneous impression which that report must have made throughout eastern Canada. Now, as I say, instead of being satisfied with the legislation brought down here, I am not at all satisfied. But as this government has done infinitely more than hon. gentlemen opposite, I am surprised that in any way they should seek to raise any invidious comparison between the way this administration has handled the matter and the way they handled it themselves. When they had an opportunity, why did not they bring in legislation of this kind and give the people of this House an opportunity to express their opinion? It would be a step at least toward the education of the people of eastern Canada as to the necessity for stringent restriction of Chinese immigration.

Mr. PRIOR. Which party was it that took the initial step in this matter?

Mr. MORRISON. That is exactly what I am pointing out, and it is where I say hon. gentlemen are to blame. If they had taken no step, they might have been defended. But, to acknowledge that the restriction was necessary and then to come down with a paltry restriction like this tax of fifty dollars, which, for eighteen years, we did not have the opportunity of increasing, was worse than no action. When they had the opportunity of effectually stopping the immigration, and did not stop it entirely, they are culpable, and that is my argument against them. I say when the first legislation against the Chinese coming into Canada was enacted, if the tax had been made $500 or even $250—still better, if we had had legislation on the lines of the Natal Act—we should not have to-day such a question as the Chinese question; we should not have had a yellow blot on the map of Canada, as we have to-day. If we go back and consider the initiatory steps that were taken in this matter, and consider who neglected their opportunity to introduce stringent and effective legislation, we shall find that they are the same men who are to-day responsible for the state of affairs which exists in regard to this Oriental immigration.

Mr. W. C. EDWARDS (Russell). I do not suppose that in opposing this proposition I shall be able to accomplish much, but as a free trader I cannot allow this Bill to pass without at least offering my protest. I am strongly opposed to this measure, and notwithstanding the remarks of my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) I consider it retrograde and inhuman legislation. Now, what is the purpose of this legislation? Is it for the purpose of excluding Chinese from entering Canada, or is it for the purpose, in an indirect way, of collecting taxes from them?

Mr. WILSON. It is to keep them out.

Mr. EDWARDS. To keep them out. Mr. Chairman, if this principle is correct, then the Chinese who are to-day trying to exclude foreigners from entering China are right, for they are in exactly the same position that we are. There is no difference in principle. Why, Sir, if this principle is right, then the Boers of South Africa were right in the stand they took, and the Chinese are right in the stand they are taking. I suppose this legislation will pass. I have no doubt the other side of the House will support it, and I suppose the majority of this side will support it; but all the same I say we are placing ourselves exactly in the same position that was taken by the Boers in South Africa.

Mr. MORRISON. Speak for yourself.

Mr. EDWARDS. I have a right to my opinion, and I will always give expression to them whenever I feel disposed to do so. When any attack is made on the principle of free trade, on the principle of freedom, as is made in this case, I am certainly bound to speak. Why, Sir, if Chinamen were made by another Creator than the one who made us, then this principle is right; but if they are the offspring of the same Creator, then the underlying principle of this legislation is entirely wrong; it is barbarism and nothing else. To-day the Chinese are opposing, not only certain persons whom they call Christians, but they are opposing a certain party among themselves who claim the right to rule China, and I submit that we have no more right to interfere with them than they have to interfere with us. I offer my sincere protest against this kind of legislation, and if I were able to muster up members enough to vote it down I would certainly do so, because I consider it abhorrent to the principles of free trade and to the commonest rights of all men who occupy this earth. Now, then, is it on behalf of the rights of labour that this measure is introduced? Why, Sir, nothing is more diametrically opposed to the rights and best interests of labour than this kind of legislation. Especially is that true in a new country like Canada, with such boundless and unlimited resources that are waiting to be developed. If we had a hundred million more labourers to develop Canada, so much the better for Canada.

Mr. MORRISON. Nonsense.

Mr. EDWARDS. That sentiment can only come from narrow minds, from men who have never studied this subject. It is a mistake to say that keeping out labour will benefit our native labourers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. EDWARDS. Hon. members may laugh. Perhaps they have not studied this question as I have studied it. Every idle man in the world keeps another man idle; whereas every man who labours gives labour to another man. That is a sound principle of economics. Nothing is more hurtful to labour than unemployed labour. Let labour come in from all parts of the world, and the only effect will be that our commerce will be enlarged. We shall have more commodities to exchange with other parts of the world. Whether a Chinaman is labouring in China or labouring in Canada he is just the same a producer, and the transference of his labour to Canada enables us to increase the produce and commodities that we shall have to exchange with those of the rest of the world. Nothing can be more short-sighted and mistaken in the best interests of Canada than the principle underlying this legislation. But beside altogether from an economic point of view, just think of Canada, the right arm of an empire who proclaims freedom the world over, who is trying to maintain everywhere an open door, introducing restrictive legislation of this kind.

Mr. MORRISON. Go to Australia.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am not talking for Australia; I am taking as a Canadian and as a Britisher, and I say that this legislation is wrong from an economic point of view and I am utterly opposed to it.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I think the spectacle we have this forenoon is a very edifying one. We have one of the most loyal supporters of the Prime Minister, one of his most devoted supporters, declaring want of confidence in him and in his methods. Then we have the Prime Minister's action in regard to British Columbia, and we have a kind of understudy of it on the part of the hon. member for New Westminster, reminding us of the Comedy of Errors in which there are two leading characters very like each other, and then there are two servants, the brothers Dromio. Nothing could furnish a closer parallel to the dual plot than the conduct of the hon. member for Westminster and the conduct of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister sent a telegram on the eve of the election saying that the government would be guided by the opinions of the Liberal members as to the immigration of Chinese. He comes forward to-day, after four years have elapsed, and he adds $50 to the duty on Chinamen. It is notoriously at variance with the opinions of the Liberal members of British Columbia, and it is notoriously at variance with the opinions of the people of British Columbia, and it is therefore at variance with the position taken up by the Prime Minister when he sent that telegram. Then we have the member for New Westminster, with glowing countenance and with evident self satisfaction, saying that he is in the same wagon with the right hon. gentleman, and that he is glad to be there, that we should envy him, that the wagon is well set up, that it has been newly painted and varnished. Why, Sir, I thought there were two spokes out of the wheels of that wagon, two great spokes, the Tarte spoke and the Sifton spoke. We knew there was a lot of varnish about the wagon, there always has been a lot of varnish about the policy of the right hon. gentleman ever since he came into power. In fact, Sir, the policy of our hon. friends opposite is all varnish, and when you get below the varnish in those ministers and in their policy, you find a very common kind of basswood, nothing like the hickory of the true Grit principles which they used to profess.

But now look at the position of the hon. gentleman. He says: I am delighted to be in this wagon, but then he says: It is not [the kind of a wagon for me to be in. I want something better. Fifty dollars is not enough. Then, what does he do? He falls back on, I will not say an insincere excuse on his part, because it would be unparliamentary, but, if not insincere, an ignorant excuse. In regard to the legislation that took place in 1886 on this question, he says that the report of the Chinese commission was against legislating on the line of limiting the importation of Chinese. That is quite untrue. I have here, in my hand, the report, signed by the late Mr. Chapleau, who was chairman of that commission. It is the main report, and I am largely responsible for that report.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, I am largely responsible for it. The 20th clause of the resume reads as follows:

That assuming Chinese immigrants of the labouring class will persist in retaining their present characteristics of Asiatic life, where these are strikingly peculiar and distinct from western, and that the influx will continue to increase, this immigration should be dealt with by parliament; but no legislation should be such as would give a shock to great interests and enterprises established before any probability that parliament would interfere with that immigration arose. Questions of vested rights might come up, and these ought to be carefully considered before action is taken.

That, therefore, if restrictive legislation were considered opportune, it should aim at gradually achieved results, and the history of the question, as well as the evidence, shows that by legislation regulating, not excluding Chinese labourers, every purpose can be effected with those who apprehend evils from Chinese immigration could, and actually do desire.

Immediately following that was the legislation placing a tax of $50 on the Chinese. If, after a period such as has elapsed since 1886, hon. gentlemen opposite think that $50 added to the $50 originally placed on the Chinese would be in the spirit of the recommendation, would be as advanced as the spirit of that recommendation, then, I do not know what language is. But, look at the position taken by the hon. gentleman further. He says that the telegram of the right hon. Prime Minister was not intended to influence votes. What was it intended for? The men who asked for that telegram were about to vote. What was it intended for if it was not intended to influence their votes? Then, he says that he does not think it influenced a vote. It was sent all over British Columbia and into every constituency.

Mr. PRIOR. It influenced thousands.

Mr. DAVIN. If it did not influence votes it was because the voters of British Columbia had that astute insight into the character of the right hon. Prime Minister to know that, like all the other promises of the hon. gentleman, that telegram was of no more value than the paper it was written on. The position taken by the hon. gentleman in crawling into that wagon and then apologizing for being there, and justifying himself by looking at the varnish and the paint on the wheels, is certainly a very edifying one. His position finds a parallel in that of my hon. friend from Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), and the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) and other hon. gentlemen in this House, who also got votes in consequence of promises made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture to the people of the North-west Territories that agricultural implements and certain other things would be placed upon the free list. We find that they had to crawl into this wagon, this accommodating wagon, which jogs along in the old rut and which does not attempt to take that high road of liberalism promised by the right hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman may have only read the minority report, which was prepared by Mr. Justice Gray. Even that minority report does not report against legislating in the direction which was subsequently adopted in regard to Chinese, but it does show a sympathy with Chinese immigration that is not shown in the principal report.

In reference to the speech made by the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards), there is a reason which does not seem to have been present to his mind that justified the legislation in the direction which was taken in 1886, and in the direction which is being taken now by the present government, and it is that the Chinese do not come into this country as immigrants, meaning to identify themselves with the country, The Chinese do not come here with their families, take up homesteads and settle down. If they came here and settled, if they were going to be part and parcel of Canada, take part in our life and be loyal to our institutions, I would not vote in favour of placing any tax upon them. But, this is a special and peculiar kind of immigration, a male immigration of labourers, who come into the country, compete with our own labour, under conditions unwholesome to our social, civil and national life, who, having made money, go back to China and take a lot of money out of the country. But this last is a feature of the question upon which I would not lay any particular stress. It is the peculiarity of the immigration that I lay stress upon, that they come in here without their wives, and that it is an unwholesome immigration. It is proved by the evidence of this commission that while evincing wonderful virtues of toil, patience and perseverance, there are characteristics attached to that immigration which are inimical to our national, to our social, to our political life, and if it were to become very large it would be alarming. Therefore, I believe that as the first law of the individual is self-preservation, so it is of a people, and this law justifies such legislation as took place in 1886, and such legislation as we are now enacting. It is trifling with this question if such legislation is not made effective. The right hon. gentleman, in adding $50 to the tax after this long period, unless he is convinced that it is going to give the relief that is desired, is doing something which is worse than useless, which is a mockery. I am not going to say now whether $100 is enough or not, but the right hon. Prime Minister holds out to the people of British Columbia the hope that it will accomplish a certain result, and if it does not accomplish that result it is a mockery, and he will be false to the telegram he sent just as the Liberal members from British Columbia are false to the interests of British Columbia to-day.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, I will follow the example of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) and state frankly that this proposition is not satisfactory to me, and I do not think it would be right to support it. I am sure that it will not be satisfactory in any way to the people of the province of British Columbia, as to the representatives from that province, they can speak for themselves. It has been said during the debate that it would be better for all of us if we had free trade, and if 100,000,000 of such immigrants were to come into the country. The province of British Columbia is becoming overrun with Chinamen now, and, if they are allowed to come in, we are going to have a condition under which the white workmen will be driven from the province, or those who stay will be foremen and bosses of Chinese gangs—we shall have a condition of labour that we do not want and that we should not encourage.

But not only as a worker, but as a Canadian, I object to this immigration. For the sake of all that is best in our Canadian life, we should be protected from it. We should be free to achieve something far higher than we can possibly achieve if this Chinese immigration is allowed to come in as in the past, and as it will come still more quickly in the future, if it is not checked. Other British colonies and the United States have provided against this immigration, and we are practically the only new country that is open to Chinese immigration to-day. As the government have admitted the strength of the claim of the people of British Columbia to be protected, it is not a fair and reasonable acceptance of that condition, I submit, merely to raise the Chinese tax from $50 to $100. It has been stated—and I believe it is accepted in the east, because it is told us by the people who know—that the Chinese immigrant does not pay the present tax of $50 himself—for he has not the money—but he is brought in by some labour contractor, who advances the money, and then the immigrant is kept in virtual slavery to that contractor until he has earned enough—until he has earned enough several times over—to pay that advance. And to increase that tax to $100 will only keep the immigrant in slavery a longer time, but it will not stop this immigration. For my part, I think we should exclude the Chinese. I do not take any stock in the plea that is raised that we should in any way offend China or Japan by putting restrictions on the immigration of their people. The governments of those countries are not interested; they do not care whether their people emigrate or not. I believe that we here are doing more to hatch this trouble with regard to Chinese and Japanese feeling or retaliation than is done in China or Japan. I believe that the Natal Act is the proper one, so as to make the exclusion apply to all undesirable immigrants. The province of British Columbia and the labour bodies of this country have petitioned for years to have the tax increased to $500; and after all the promises that have been made, it is simply absurd to propose to raise the tax from $50 to $100.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.). I felt very sorry indeed for the hon. member for Mr. PUTTEE.

New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), when he tried to bolster up the Bill which is now before the House. The hon. gentleman knows that his heart is not in it; he knows that what he has said will not give satisfaction to the people he has been sent here to represent. He knows that the question is one that affects his constituency almost more than any other portion of the people of British Columbia, and that it is a burning question among them. The hon. gentleman thought fit to say that he was going to stick to the wagon of the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). He seemed to think the Conservative party wagon was a ramshackle affair. The Conservative wagon has been doing service for a great number of years, and it has done good service. I will admit that the wagon he is in is a little newer, it has not been tried, and it probably has a little fresher horses. But I fear the horses are so fresh that in a little time they will run away with him and throw him out of parliamentary life. The hon. gentleman says that the Conservative members from British Columbia have never seemed to take any interest in this question until within the last three or four years. If he will look at Hansard, he will see that for the last ten, fifteen, yes even twenty years, the Conservative members from British Columbia have brought this question constantly and consistently forward on the floor of this House. If the hon. gentleman denies it, I ask him how about Mr. Bunster? How about Mr. Shakespeare? How about Mr. Baker? How about Mr. Gordon? Time and again these hon. gentlemen have brought the question up. He said I had taken no interest in the question before. I admit that I had not spoken on the floor of this House, I think, before 1895 or 1896, on that question. But on every platform from which I addressed the electors, that has always been one of the questions I have discussed; and I have always given my opinion, and that opinion was sufficient to satisfy them that I was the proper man to represent them. The hon. member for New Westminster stated that this was a serious question and that it had become more serious within the last four years than it had been before. I myself have taken the same view. I admitted frankly to my constituents that up to six or seven years ago I did not think it was such a burning question as it is, because I had not seen sufficient of the Chinese immigrants to realize the evil that their coming here meant to Canada. But since then I have seen the great detriment that they are to the country. Can any one blame me for having a different opinion on a subject after experience than I had before? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) also said that the Conservative party never took steps to stop this immigration. But, as I asked him when he was speaking: Who brought in the first Bill to tax the Chinese? It was the Conservative party. They fixed the tax at $50, and everybody thought, in those days, that it would be nearly enough, if not quite enough, to stem the tide. But time and experience have proven that it was not. It was stated, I think, by Mr. Chapleau, in that report, that he was afraid that $50 would be found in time only a milk-and-water measure—he could not tell. We find by experience that it is not enough to keep out the Chinese.

Mr. CHARLTON. How many Chinamen are there in British Columbia? To what extent has that tax proven effectual?

Mr. PRIOR. That question was brought up in the House the other day, and I stated that I believed there were many more thousands of Chinamen in British Columbia than when the present tax was imposed and the Canadian Pacific Railway was finished building.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) any definite idea how many Chinamen there are in British Columbia?

Mr. PRIOR. I should think that there must be 20,000 to 25,000; that is my opinion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Out of a total population of how many?

Mr. PRIOR. About 160,000. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) said that $50 was a paltry restriction. I say it is. But is there any reason why the present government, who have been in power for four years, and who have had this question brought before them by every member from British Columbia, besides having presented to them resolutions passed by boards of trade and trades and labour unions, urging this question upon them in the strongest manner, should not have taken the opportunity of raising that paltry restriction, as the hon. gentleman calls it, before this date? The hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) wanted to know what difference there was in the stand taken by the great powers to insist upon Europeans being allowed into China, and Chinamen insisting on coming into Canada. Well, the great difference, to my mind, is this: The Chinaman can come into this country and make a first-class living and compete in such a manner that white labour cannot enter into competition with them; whereas, Europeans going to China find that they cannot do the Chinamen any harm, because they cannot live on the same scale as Chinamen do. When the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) gave notice of this Bill, I said it would be a great disappointment to British Columbia. I find, by the telegrams and the newspapers that have come in since then, that I was right, that from one end of British Columbia to the other there is a feeling of intense disappointment that the increase of this tax should be only fifty dollars. It has been contended that, to do any good, that tax should be raised to $500 per head.

The other day just after an election of the local legislature, the government members, fresh from the polls, in caucus assembled in Vancouver, passed a resolution to this effect, that the federal government would not be doing their duty to British Columbia unless they increased the tax to $500 a head, and brought in the Natal Act, which would materially assist in keeping the Japanese out of the country.

Everybody knows the detriment these men are. The hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) gave us a long speech last year, as I did myself, setting forth the reasons why these men should be kept out; so that I do not think it is necessary for me to say much on that head. But I would say this, that although it may be a slight inconvenience to a few manufacturers, a few fishing industries, a few canning industries, and some householders who want Chinese servants, yet a very large majority of the people of British Columbia are in favour of a higher restrictive tariff, and would be willing to put up with the inconvenience at first. Get rid of the Chinese and Japanese, and the people from eastern Canada will come to our province and take up the employment now done by those people.

The people of British Columbia expect that the Dominion government will use their utmost influence with the Imperial government to try to stem the tide of Japanese now coming in. I am aware that for state reasons the government cannot itself use too strong a hand in the effort to keep these people out, but they can use their influence with Great Britain. We know that England looks to Japan in the event of any eastern trouble, such as that now rearing its head in China, and that any government has to be careful in dealing with a question of that kind. Still, I think the present government might use the very great influence they undoubtedly have with the Imperial government at the present time, to see if some means cannot be devised by which this influx could be stopped. There has never been a time when the Imperial ear has been so open to suggestions from Canada as it is at the present time, owing to the magnificent sacrifices made by Canada's sons on the field of South Africa. Now is the time, of all times, when we might ask a quid pro quo for the services rendered.

The right hon. leader of the government has informed us that he is going to appoint a commission to inquire into this question of Chinese and Japanese immigration. I contend that such a commission is perfectly useless. Everybody knows all that can be known about those races in British Columbia. Everybody who has lived in British Columbia has had an object lesson for years before his eyes. The government must know, from resolutions which have been sent to them, and from public speeches, exactly how matters stand; and statistics will show, or should show, exactly how many there are in that country. The government to my mind are going to appoint this commission for two reasons, and two reasons only. The first is that it affords the chance of giving one or two or three or four of their good supporters a good position for a few months, in which they will get a trip out to British Columbia, will live on the fat of the land, and will have a little reward for performing political services. That is one reason. The other is that if a commission is appointed it will take at least nine months or a year for that commission's report to be laid before the House. In the meantime, the government will go to the country, and although I myself believe they have not the slightest chance of being returned to power—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PRIOR. That is my firm conviction, if it does hon. gentlemen opposite any good to know it. But if by any chance they are returned to power again, they will simply ignore this question for another four years, as they have done in the past. I say again deliberately that the government have shown a great want of pluck in not dealing with this question at once. The hon. member for Burrard, speaking on this question in the House last year, said :

This question, Sir, let me remind hon. members of both sides of the House, is of greater consequence to-day than it was then, and is of greater importance to eastern provinces to-day than it has ever been, and to the members of the present government to whom we look with considerable confidence that they will not disappoint us, I would say, that our demand cannot be overestimated, it cannot be slurred over, but must be breasted, and the sooner the better.

That is correct. Instead of showing the white feather and putting off the question from day to day, I think the government should have been brave enough to have tackled it at once and to have put on a tax of very near, if not quite $500.

Mention has been made of a celebrated telegram that was sent by the right hon. leader of this government to Mr. McLagan of the Vancouver World immediately previous to the election of 1896. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) says that he does not think that affected one vote. I deny that in toto. I will show what effect it had in Vancouver; I know myself what effect it had in Victoria. Let me read again a few words from the speech of the hon. member for Burrard. On the subject of this very telegram, he said :

Now, I want to say in conclusion that when the telegram which came from the Premier was read at one of the largest meetings, I believe, ever held in the city of Vancouver, saying that our wishes would be his wishes, a cheer went up, one of the most enthusiastic I ever heard, because then the people seemed to realize that our political Moses had been found at last. I hope that the government will be true to that position. In the good old Book we read of a woman who came again and again to a judge appealing for justice. Again and again, she was denied, but by persisting she succeeded. Now, we, the people of British Columbia, have this grievance, there is no doubt about that. They have done everything they possibly could in order to have their grievance ventilated, and to obtain the sympathy of the government. We have been refused again and again. Now we are making this one more effort, and I do hope that the government, at this late stage of the agitation, will feel it to be their duty to respond to our wishes, and that they will at least give us some more restrictive power than we have at the present time.

Now, Sir, that telegram, if it had that effect on a meeting in Vancouver, must have been the means of raising the hopes of hundreds of men who were looking for protection from this curse; I do not think the hon. member for Burrard will stand up in this House and repeat the language used by the hon. member for New Westminster, that it had no effect on the voting in that election. The promise then made by the right hon. leader of the government, was that the wishes of the Liberal members would prevail. Like almost all the other promises that have been made by the right hon. gentleman, it has been lightly broken. Like many other promises of his, it was made to serve the purposes of the moment only. The right hon. gentleman was in that instance, as in many others, an opportunist, and I do not think he stands any higher in the estimation of the people of British Columbia to-day than he did then.

Nobody can know; but it seems to me that now that trouble has arisen in China, we can look for a greater horde of these people coming over than ever, especially if the great powers are successful in stemming the revolution that is now on there. If things are quieted down and more Europeans than ever go into China, you will find more Chinamen than ever wanting to come to British Columbia. That is a natural consequence. Therefore, I think, the government ought to put forth its most strenuous efforts and take the only means possible to keep these men out.

The other day I was reading in the English Hansard—the Hansard of extra parliamentary debates for 1890—and I came across a speech delivered by the Right Hon. Mr. Gladstone, whose authority I do not think the right hon. leader of this government will call into question. Speaking on May 12, 1890, at the Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, with the Earl of Granville in the chair, on free trade and protection, he said :

I must own it is a great and heavy disappointment to see how much ground has been lost by the doctrine of free trade within the last twenty-five years. I have no doubt that the dreadful militarism which lies like an incubus, like a vampire, on Europe is responsible for much of the mischief, but not for all, because free trade has receded in countries where militarism does not prevail. It has receded, and protection has gained ground in the United States of America, and I yet more regret, and much more regret, to see the same thing in the colonies of Great Britain, because we had no title to expect that America should respect, in any degree, our example when we adopted free trade. I do not say that we had a title to expect that, but it would not have been unreasonable to hope that the colonies might have attached more weight to our experience.

He then went on to say :

Protection used in old times to be confined to goods, and I remember I used sometimes to ask, 'Why do you confine protection to goods? Why don't you apply it to persons?' Why was it that the wealthy and powerful class of this country, when they controlled its legislation, did not lay prohibitive duties on the importation of Italian singers? Why was not the labour of the honest, hard-working, though perhaps not equally melodious, British singer entitled to protection just as much as bad production or inferior production in other departments? Well, nobody thought of placing the Italian opera singer under the ban of protection. Gentlemen knew too well to sacrifice their own pleasures and their own comforts to the protective doctrines when they came so near home as that. But though it really may seem almost like the incredible, yet you all know that, as has been well said: 'truth is stronger than fiction,' and protection is now freely applied against persons and not simply against goods. I am not sure what the state of the law in the United States is and whether in the incursion, as it is, I believe, called, of the Chinamen is simply resented or whether it is barred by any kind of a legislative restriction or pecuniary tax; but undoubtedly in the Australian colonies among our own kith and kin, the Chinaman is either prohibited or heavily taxed upon his importation. That is protection pure and simple. It is quite right to exhibit it as such in the face of the world; and why is the Chinaman thus taxed? Not because a superior race resents the contact, you may say the contamination, of an inferior one, and not because civilization recoiled from companionship with a people that are considered uncivilized. The Chinaman comes to compete with the hand labour, and his entry is, in some, if not all of these colonies prohibited or restrained by heavy taxation, amounting in some cases, I believe, to virtual prohibition—and why? Because he does more work for the money, because he is less exacting, because he consumes a great deal less of alcoholic liquors. On those accounts the Chinaman is a formidable rival. It is not for his vices, but for his virtues that he is dreaded. On account of those virtues protection has developed itself in a manner and degree happily far beyond our experiences, and is applied—as I admit in consistency it ought to be applied—to the importation of human beings as well as to the importation of things made by the labour of human beings.

The right hon. leader of the government is a free trader. He has stated that he has been so for many years past, and he—the democrat up to the hilt—is the proud possessor of a medal given him by the Cobden Club. Is this why he dare not protect the labouring men of British Columbia? Well, Mr. Gladstone here states that, to be consistent, a protectionist must not only protect the goods, but the human hands who manufacture those goods. The right hon. gentleman, although he is a free trader and wears the Cobden medal, has swallowed our protective tariff, body and bones and all. If he wants to be consistent, he should throw that Cobden medal away; and to be consistent as a protectionist, he must protect persons as well as goods. That is the point I wished to make in quoting that speech of Mr. Gladstone.

I have very little more to say on this question. It is one that has been well threshed out for years, and it is one on which both parties are united in the province from which I come. There is a crying need felt there, not for a commission, not for any further delay, but for this resolution now before the House to be so amended that instead of $100, the sum be fixed at $450, so as to make the tax $500.

Mr. G. R. MAXWELL (Burrard). I did not intend to speak at this stage at all, but several of the points noticed by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), demand a few explanations. With a great deal of what has been said, I am in sincere sympathy. Dealing with the question generally, I think that the hon. member's statements are perfectly sound and reasonable; but when he falls into other matters, I think he puts a wrong construction on a great many of the questions he has introduced. With regard to the famous telegram which bothered the hon. gentleman so much—

Mr. PRIOR. It bothered you last year.

Mr. MAXWELL. Not at all. I may say that that telegram was sent by an individual entirely unknown to any of the members who were running in the interests of the Liberal party. Mr. McLagan, as we all know—that is all of us who reside in British Columbia—is a most enthusiastic Liberal; and without consulting me or any one else, sent that telegram to the leader of the government, and received the reply which has been printed. A great cheer went up on the night, it is true, when that telegram was read, but my hon. friend forgot to state that the then leader of the government, now the leader of the opposition, sent also a telegram to counteract the one sent by the present leader of the government. In that telegram, the same offer was made by the Conservative leader as was made by the Liberal leader. A Conservative in the city of Vancouver got up at one of the campaign meetings and read what purported to be a telegram from the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), stating all he intended to do, if returned to power, on that question.

Mr. PRIOR. When?

Mr. MAXWELL. During the campaign. So that I think that the point made by my hon. friend from Westminster (Mr. Morrison) was well taken, namely, that in view of those two telegrams from the two leaders, the matter was simply left where it stood. Seeing that the Conservative leader had sent a telegram similar to that sent by the Liberal leader, both parties fell into the regular line and voted according to their party allegiance.

Mr. PRIOR. I never saw one in Victoria.

Mr. MAXWELL. I heard it read, and it made every Conservative in the city of Vancouver fall into line. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), ought to be responsible. I would like to ask him who brought the Chinese first into British Columbia. What party is responsible for having Chinamen there at all? My hon. friend (Mr. Prior), and those gentlemen who sit opposite, desire to ignore the fact that to the Conservative party we owe the introduction of the Chinese into British Columbia. Not only did they bring these men into our province, but I understand they gave a distinct promise that after the Chinese had performed the work of railway construction, they would all be sent back again to China. That promise was never kept. I do not know what influences were at work at that particular time, but instead of sending the Chinese back, as the Conservative government promised they would, they scattered them all over the province of British Columbia, and that was the beginning of our trouble. We must fix on the Conservative party the whole responsibility for the trouble which we have with the Chinese to-day in British Columbia.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And for all our troubles.

Mr. MAXWELL. Yes, and for all our troubles, as the hon. member (Mr. Landerkin) says. I do not think the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Prior) is exactly sincere in the position he takes to-day. I would ask him: Who employs these Chinese in British Columbia? We are told they are employed by the canners and manufacturers, and who are these canners and manufacturers, to a great extent? Are they not almost all leading members of the great Conservative party?

Mr. PRIOR. Not all.

Mr. MAXWELL. A great many.

Mr. PRIOR. They are just about equally divided, I think.

Mr. MAXWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They are all on our side now.

Mr. PRIOR. How about Mr. Munn and Mr. Ewing?

Mr. MAXWELL. We have only six or eight out of forty-six or forty-eight.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We will get them all next election.

Mr. MAXWELL. Almost all who employ these Chinese in the city of Victoria are members of the great Conservative party. No matter how willing my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) may be to do anything against the Chinese, I doubt if his supporters would allow him to do it when it comes to the point. It may be all right for him to take this stand here for political purposes—and he is quite cute politically—but the experience is, that when it comes to the point of doing anything in this matter, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) never has been in it, and I do not think he ever will, even if his party were in power. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) said this question will run us out of parliamentary life. Well, I do not know that this sort of life is so very desirable after all, and it would be better, perhaps, even if that did take place; but, I am perfectly certain that whatever may be the issues of the next conflict, or whatever may be our fate after the battle is over, I am perfectly certain the people of British Columbia will realize that of the men who have been sent to this House, and who have stood by their interests, and who have tried to get beneficial legislation for them, they have no kick against the present Liberal members from the province of British Columbia. While we may not have got all we desired, and while we may not have got all that the province of British Columbia deserves to get, yet, at the same time, I think we shall get credit from the electors of that great province that we have tried to do our duty, and not unsuccessfully. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) has stated that the Conservative members have brought up this question again and again. In that speech which my hon. friend referred to this morning, I distinctly paid my compliment to the members who had brought up the question in the past. I admit that they did good missionary work, and I am free to confess that we are largely profiting by their labours. We owe a great deal to them for the statements they made in this House, and the speeches they delivered in order to endeavour to get the people of the east to understand this question. But, the point is, that for the whole of sixteen years the Conservative party tinkered with the subject. It took them sixteen years to give us a $50 tax, and when Hon. Mr. Chapleau brought in that measure, he apologized for doing so, and he was not in sympathy with it. He knew perfectly well that most of the members who sat behind him were not in sympathy with the measure, but they were compelled to support it in order to satisfy the clamour of the people of British Columbia, and out of their munificence of sixteen years they gave us a miserable $50 tax. What possible credit can the Conservative party take for dealing with this question? We, in four years, have, at least, accomplished just as much as it took the Conservatives sixteen years to do, and over and above that we are getting a commission to deal with the whole question. I believe, Sir, that we may rely on the promise of the Prime Minister, that this is not the final effort on the part of the government. It is the first step, and I am perfectly certain that we have nothing to fear so far as the result of the commission is concerned. When the whole facts have been found out as to the present condition of affairs, I am certain the government will feel impelled to gratify the wishes of the people of British Columbia in this respect. My hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) gave us a magnificent oration on this question to-day. I am free to concede that so far as the bases of his facts are concerned, my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) is perfectly right. We all recognize that God made the Chinaman as well as any other man. I do not advocate laws against the Chinese on that ground, but I was in a committee of the House the other day where my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) was present. The hon. gentleman is a great breeder of cattle, and he takes a great interest in getting good stock for the country, and I heard him make the statement that all the cattle that were not tainted he put to one side. He would not allow any animal that was tainted to come into contact with his good cattle. Now, in the name of common sense, if he will be so particular about his cattle, how is it that he will not be so particular about humanity? The position which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Edwards) takes seems to me absurd. And when you come down to the main point, I think the old law of the Jews that was given by the Creator was perfectly right; the law which distinctly forbade communication on the part of the Israelites with those who were tainted, and who were not up to the standard which the Jew was expected to attain. We make no quarrel with the poor Chinese as a man. We have complete sympathy with him in his present condition, but as the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) has stated, we object to encouraging a class of men who are making money out of the bone and out of the blood, so to speak, of these poor Chinamen. We want that traffic in slavery abolished. We do not want the door of our province to be opened to herds of these poor dumb-driven cattle to be rushed in as it may please these men, who want to get rich out of the fruits of Chinese labour in British Columbia. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) has referred to the action of the newly-elected members of the British Columbia legislature. I am glad that the Conservative members in British Columbia are coming up to our standard. My hon. friend (Mr. Prior) knows perfectly well that the Conservative party was not a unit on this question until a short time ago. He knows that the great bulk of the leading men of the Conservative party were utterly opposed to any action being taken in this matter. A convention of the Conservative party was held in New Westminster, and they could not decide on any policy so far as the Chinese were concerned, but they instead brought in a resolution recommending that girls be brought from the east to take the place of the Chinamen who were employed as cooks.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MAXWELL. I know my hon. friend from Victoria would like that very well, and I may say that we all would like it. Now, I am not for making this a political question at all. I know, as has been stated, that the people of British Columbia, with the exception of a few manufacturers, are almost a unit on this point, and I would have wished with all my heart that the government had been able to go a good deal further to satisfy what I believe is the legitimate demands of the people of that province, based on the actual condition of affairs. I do not think that my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) was right in casting a reflection upon the commission which the government is about to issue. Who asked for this commission? Possibly the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) does not know, but I received a request from the Trades and Labour Council of the city of Vancouver, asking the government to appoint a commission to inquire into all the facts. I wired to them asking if they wished that legislation should be deferred until this commission had reported; but they said: No, we will take all the government will give us in the way of legislation, but, in the meantime, we ask that a commission be appointed to inquire into the whole business, so far as the Japanese and Chinese are concerned.

Now, I have to commend the government for what they have done, and while I am not satisfied, as the member for New Westminster has said, my position is that a bit of a loaf is better than nothing at all. I am decidedly pleased that the government is going to issue this commission, because I believe that when all the facts are ascertained we shall have nothing to lose, and our demand will become more and more loud until the government will hardly refuse to go the whole length that the people of British Columbia want them to go.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and concurred in.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that said resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 180) respecting Chinese immigration.

Motion agreed to.

House resolved itself into committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

The PRIME MINISTER. I may here give the committee some information with regard to the new provisions which are to be found in this section. First of all, there is a new provision for the establishment of a chief controller. Practically this officer is not new, but the legislation is new. There has always been a chief controller appointed by order in council, the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce being that officer; but here we provide for a chief controller by statute. Mr. Parmalee, the deputy minister of that department, will continue to act as chief controller.

Mr. G. R. MAXWELL (Burrard). Am I right in understanding from the right hon. gentleman that it is the intention to keep the present controller?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. MAXWELL. Well, I do not think that is fair. Everybody knows that Mr. Parmalee is entirely hostile to this legislation, and a good deal of the trouble we have had there is due to his efforts in opposition to it.

Mr. FOSTER. He has to carry out the law.

Mr. MAXWELL. Yes, but there are different ways of carrying it out.

Mr. FOSTER. Only one right way.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry this provision does not meet with the approval of my hon. friend. I must say that Mr. Parmalee is one of the best officials that we have in the civil service, as everybody knows. He has acted loyally, as I will show presently, because some of these new provisions, which I am sure will meet with the approval of my hon. friend, have been suggested by Mr. Parmalee. The object of my hon. friend is to exclude the Chinamen. I have had several conferences with Mr. Parmalee upon the subject, and whether he holds the views of the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell), that the Chinaman is a nuisance and ought to be excluded, or whether he holds the views of my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards). I only know that in this matter, as in every other respect, Mr. Parmalee's sole desire is to administer the law as he finds it. Subsection g is a new provision:

The expression 'vehicle' means any ferry boat, boat, railway car, wagon, carriage, sleigh, or other conveyance whatsoever, however propelled or drawn.

This expression 'vehicle' does not occur in the old Act, and Mr. Parmalee has suggested this expression in order more completely to carry out the spirit of the Act, which is to exclude Chinamen. The old Act applied only to Chinamen coming in by water, but we know that many come in by land, and this provision is to cover every other method of ingress. At present Chinamen come into the country in three different manners: They come by sea directly; they come from the other side by railway or otherwise; and they come in on foot. We have later on a provision covering these three methods, and this is one of them, and it shows a thorough loyalty to the spirit of the Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia). I have an objection to that portion of subsection d, included in brackets:

(d) The expression 'Chinese immigrant' means any person of Chinese origin (including any person either of whose parents was of Chinese origin) entering Canada and not entitled to the privilege of exemption provided for by section 6 of this Act.

I wish to point out the fact that this excludes the children of a family whose father is European. It excludes, for example, the children of a very distinguished missionary, the Rev. Dr. McKay, perhaps one of the most successful men of the 19th century. He could not be allowed to bring his family here for education without paying a poll tax on each member of it.

I have in my eye not simply his case alone, but also the case of the Rev. J. E. Gardner, of the Methodist Church of Canada, who, for many years, lived in Victoria, and as is known to many hon. members of the House, he has Chinese blood in his veins. He is married to an English lady, but still his children would come under this section. He has rendered good service to the Methodist Church, he has rendered good service to this government as an interpreter at the coast, and he, at present, occupies the distinguished position of being interpreter for the United States government in San Francisco. Mr. Gardner is a well known gentleman of high culture and scholarly attainments; yet, Mr. Gardner's family would be excluded or would be brought under this clause, and he would be called upon to pay $100 for each member of his family. Dr. McKay is a Canadian, and certainly a large body of the Christian people of Canada would resent this principle if it were adopted by the government. I think that this clause might be altered to meet the cases which I have mentioned. As we go farther on and bearing on the same subject I propose to change subsection 4 of section 6, which really involves the same principle:

Any woman of Chinese origin who is the wife of a person who is not of Chinese origin shall, for the purpose of this Act, be deemed to be of the same nationality as her husband.

I would like, to change this subsection to read thus:

Any woman or the children of any woman of Chinese origin who is the wife of a person who is not of Chinese origin, shall, for the purpose of this Act, be deemed to be of the same nationality as the husband and father.

I think the House will sympathize with the view I have in bringing this matter to its notice. Personally, I am not here to encourage Chinese immigration. I have spent two winters at the coast, one in Vancouver and one in Victoria, and I know the complications which the presence of Chinese labour have given rise to there. I believe that Chinese can be better Christianized in their own land. Personally, I have no desire to encourage the immigration of Chinese into Canada, but when they are here we must do the best we can with them. While with the general spirit of the Bill I have a great deal of sympathy, I wish to bring these two subsections of section 6, b and 4, to the attention of the House. There is also another important point which I shall call attention to as we proceed.

The PRIME MINISTER. I need not tell my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas) that the whole House will sympathize with him in the views which he has expressed, and I need not tell him further that the Act has no intention of reaching the class of persons to which he has alluded. I think, however, it is not necessary at all to amend this section in the direction in which the hon. gentleman suggests, and which, I think, is intended to serve a good purpose. The exceptions to which my hon. friend alludes can be better made in another section of the Bill, and if my hon. friend looks at subsection c of section 6, he will find there that the exceptions are provided for which he has in mind. If that subsection is not sufficiently clear to meet the view which he has in his mind at present we can amend it. The exceptions which are provided for are :

Merchants, their wives and children, tourists, men of science and students.

I believe that under that clause the particular class of persons to which my hon. friend alluded, missionaries, will come, and that they will be exempt from the tax. If the Rev. Dr. McKay were to come to Victoria I am sure the moment he disclosed his identity our officers there would at once decide that subsection c of section 6 would apply to his family.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that would follow.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the section is not broad enough to meet the exception that my hon. friend has in his mind we can provide that missionaries shall be included among these exceptions, because it is not intended that the Bill shall apply to them.

Mr. PRIOR. A case occurred some years ago when Mr. Moore, a highly educated English gentleman, who had lived in China many years and married a Manchoo woman, came to the province of British Columbia, and his wife and family had to pay the poll tax.

Mr. FOSTER. Our officers cannot vary the law.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Bill is not intended to apply to men of science. It is intended to apply to labourers who come into competition with our own workmen, but it is not intended to cover men of science. There are Chinamen who are very able men in their own way. If possibly Confucius were to come here and settle in Canada there would be no objection to his doing so.

Mr. FOSTER. Was Confucius a scientist?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think in his day he was supposed to have been a scientist, but at all events if men of that class were to come into the country the Bill would not apply to them. The intention of the Bill is not to reach people of that class, but the intention is simply that it shall apply to a class of men who come here to compete with our workmen. I think, under the circumstances, the Bill as it is framed, is broad enough to meet the exception which the hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia has in his mind.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It does not take in the other case.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think it does. However, we can make all these exceptions later on.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would call the attention of the House and of the right hon. leader of the government to the fact that the Act, as it now stands, in respect to this section to which he has directed our attention, has not been satisfactory, and that the party administering the law at Victoria distinctly assured us that he could not interpret it as covering the cases of ministers. In one case I was called out at two o'clock in the morning, and we had to go to work, raise and put up the money before a very distinguished missionary was allowed to land at Victoria. That was in the year 1896. So that the clause, as it now reads, is not interpreted in such a sense as has been suggested, and men of this class have been obliged to pay the poll tax. I believe the scope of the Bill is not to interfere with men of that class, but it is necessary to have such legislation perfectly clear so that those administering the Act may not violate its spirit.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John City). I am afraid that the proposition to amend section 6, paragraph c, would not reach the objection raised by the hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) as section 6 refers to persons of Chinese origin, and to those persons alone. The hon. gentleman's statement refers to British subjects, so that the amendment of subsection c would not cover it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). But, if you amend subsection c to read as follows :

Merchants, their wives and children, the wives and children of clergymen—Etc.

Mr. ELLIS. That would only refer to persons of Chinese origin.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think that even under the old Act this amendment would be necessary, because I am informed by Mr. Parmalee that the old Act would not apply to missionaries. The Rev. Mr. Moore, who married a Manchu woman had to pay the tax for his wife, but the tax was afterwards remitted when it was brought to the notice of the department. I am also informed that the Rev. Dr. McKay, when he was here a few years ago with his wife and children, was not obliged to pay the tax for his wife and family. The old Act was so interpreted, and it seems only common sense that it should be so interpreted, if we keep in mind the broad principles on which it was based. There is a well-known class of Chinese immigrants to which the law applies, and the officer, if he understands the Act, would not apply it under such circumstances as those indicated. If the officer should do so, the department in the past has remitted the duty, and it will do the same again. However, when we come to the clause, I will have no objection to consider the amendment of my hon. friend.

It being one o'clock, the Committee took recess.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

DEATH OF MR. TYRWHITT, M.P.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before we resume the business of the House, I wish to refer to the common affliction through which we are called to pass, not unfortunately for the first or second time during this parliament. I refer to the death of another of our colleagues, our friend and co-worker Col. Tyrwhitt, member for the electoral district of South Simcoe. Col. Tyrwhitt was well known to members on both sides of this House, and no words of mine are needed to voice the sorrow we feel, and the loss we have to deplore at his last sudden departure from among us. Col. Tyrwhitt came into this House in 1882, and he was a consistent and most honourable member from that up to the date of his death. He was not a man who forced himself to the front in discussions in this parliament, but he was a man whose sterling common sense made itself felt both in this House and in the country. He was not what you might call a noisy partisan in any sense of the word, but he was a good consistent party man, feeling that he could be so consistent with his best duty to his country and to the body politic. Col. Tyrwhitt was a friend who was staunch and honourable in every respect. He was a liberal-minded man and patriotic. He was a gallant soldier as well, and served his country with honour in 1866, and in the troubles of 1885. We on this side of the House, who were associated with him as political and party colleagues, will of course, feel his loss more deeply than other members of the House; but I am sure that all of us will realize that a thorough man and a gentleman has been called from our midst. I do not need to say more, except to voice my own, and I am sure the feelings of every member of this House, in the heartfelt sympathy that we tender to the family and friends of the deceased.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I can certainly re-echo everything that has been said by my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) in reference to our late departed colleague. Col. Tyrwhitt was for eighteen years a member of this House. He always associated himself with the Conservative party, and he gave it a most honourable support; a support which his political opponents could find no fault with. He had no enemies in this House; he had none but friends, and every one, political friends or political opponents, appreciated his gentle humour, his genial nature and his sound sense whenever he chose to give us his views upon any question before the House. Col. Tyrwhitt was a type of man which is to be admired in this country. He held strong views, very strong views undoubtedly, but he always placed them before the House in a manner not to offend any one, but on the contrary in a manner which secured the respect of all who listened to him. We, who were his political opponents, mourn his loss. It is quite natural that we should not have the same degree of feeling which must be experienced by those who were more closely associated with him, but I may freely say, speaking for my friends about me on this side of the House, that we shall miss from the benches of the opposition his honest, manly countenance.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). An intimate acquaintance with Col. Tyrwhitt, extending over a period of thirty years justifies me in saying, that by his early death this parliament has not only lost one of its most honoured and useful members, but the country and the empire has lost one of its best and truest citizens. I but feebly express the gratitude of his relatives and constituents when I express their thanks for the kindly words that have been spoken of the deceased by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Foster), and by the right hon. the leader of the government. Col. Tyrwhitt was a man who was ever regarded, not only as a useful member of the party to which he belonged, but as a staunch and consistent and industrious representative of his constituency. Wherever his name was known it was a synonym for honour, and integrity, and uprightness and manhood. An ardent enthusiast in military life, he gave liberally of his time and of his means towards the promotion of the best interests of the militia of Canada. Whenever duty called he was always found unflinchingly to the fore, to discharge that duty to the best of his ability.

By his untimely death the country has lost one of its best citizens, and his constituents have lost a worthy representative. But it is not in these directions that his loss will be most felt; it is in that loving circle of home of which he was the head. Knowing him intimately as I did, I can with a feeling of sympathy express the grief that will be shared in his family at his untimely death. A kind and loving husband, an affectionate father, a true friend, he was everything that a man at the head of a home should be. A social and genial companion in the locality where he resided, his presence was ever welcomed in every class of society; and the record he has left behind him is one which the youth of this country might well emulate and take pattern from in shaping their future lives. I am sure this grateful tribute to his memory from his comrades, this beautiful wreath, will be honoured by his loving wife and bereaved children; and those of the rising generation who take pattern by his life will be following an example of all that is good and kind in humanity.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 180) respecting Chinese immigration.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

(In the Committee.)

On section 4.

Mr. THOMAS CHRISTIE (Argenteuil). Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to occupy the time of the House at any great length. I simply desire in a very few words to record my protest against the Bill now before the House. I may say that I have no sympathy with any legislation which discriminates unjustly against any creed, race or nationality; I think they should all be treated fairly and alike. I am convinced, however, that we have treated the Chinese people very unfairly and very unjustly. If I am not mistaken, they have not only national rights, but treaty rights from Great Britain; but, notwithstanding that, we have imposed a tax of $50 per capita on every Chinese immigrant coming into this country, quite irrespective of his character, capacity or worth. I am convinced that we would not like to be treated in that way at the hand of the Chinese government; I have no doubt that such treatment would be looked upon as an act of barbarism and inhumanity. It is true, we are told the Chinese are heathens, that they are addicted to the use of opium, that they are moral lepers, that their presence is a menace to our civilization. I am convinced that this charge of immorality has been greatly exaggerated. I think many of the Chinese are not as black as they are painted. No doubt a great deal of this hostility was originally due to the fact that their labour entered into competition with white labour. It is true that some of them are addicted to the use of opium. It is equally true that most of them are heathens. But surely our churches and Sabbath schools are able to deal with that aspect of the question, and to do something to provide a remedy. We all know that even now many of these people walk to our churches and Sabbath schools every Lord's Day, and are being instructed in the English language and also in the principles of Christianity. In that way they are being uplifted into a higher and Christian civilization. Some time ago I saw the statement in a Montreal paper that 400 Chinese are in Sabbath schools in that city. The same thing is going on more or less all over the Dominion. In the town where I live we have a few Chinese, not very many, and I am glad to say that they have conducted themselves with great propriety. In business they have given satisfaction to their employers; they have been very regular in their attendance at church and Sabbath school, and have been orderly and law-abiding. In every particular they have been as quiet and inoffensive as any other residents of the town. Now, I think it is a monstrous injustice that such men as these should be fleeced or robbed of $50 or $100 or $500 under the operation of these anti-Chinese laws. But we are told that by right they should be excluded, as they are not desirable immigrants. We are told that they come here to make money, and that as soon as they have secured enough to retire, they gather it all up and carry it off to China and spend it there, where they desire to be buried. Now, I do not see that there is anything wrong in that. They have given full value for the money they have received, and if their labour has been really a benefit to the country, and if by diligence, frugality, perseverance and thrift they have succeeded in making a little money, surely they have an undoubted right to take that money and spend it wherever they please; and if they desire to be buried in China, I do not see why we should object. But that is not all. If hundreds of them or many of them become Christianized, they will be likely when they return to China to give a good report of our country and be able still to contribute largely to its welfare. We know that it looks now as if most of the ports of China will be thrown open at no very distant day. If so, it is perhaps impossible to overestimate the amount of traffic that we may secure with China, and considering the matter from the usual business standpoint, I think it would be unwise to do anything to prevent our securing the freest commercial relations both with China and Japan.

It appears to me that instead of amending or changing this law so as to make it more oppressive and more tyrannical, we ought to amend it exactly in the opposite direction. We should wipe it out altogether, root and branch. We should let these poor oppressed and persecuted Chinamen come in free, we should treat them like men, and make Canada a free country. But be that as it may, I hold that this measure is not in accordance with our free, liberal institutions in Canada. It is not at all in accord with the principles of free trade; nay more, it is not in harmony with our Christian civilization, with the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man and the golden rule. It is both unjust and un-British, and, therefore, cannot fail to be detrimental and injurious to the best interests of Canada and be a reproach to the good name of our country.

These people only ask to be permitted to labour in our midst, and I am fully convinced that their labour has been a great boon to Canada during the past. I may be all wrong, but so far as I can see, their labour in the garden, in domestic service and in other walks of life, is calculated to be productive of the best results at home, and to promote the best interests of our nation in China and Japan. I cannot see why we should adopt a policy which would be so detrimental to ourselves and injurious to our country, and, holding these views, I must say that I cannot record my vote in favour of the present measure.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). The views advanced, Mr. Speaker, by my hon. and esteemed friend, the member for Argenteuil (Mr. Christie), do at least credit to his heart and aspirations in favour of humanity and his love for freedom; and speaking in the abstract, his arguments may perhaps be considered unanswerable. It was long ago declared by a very high authority, that God made of one blood, all nations of men, to dwell upon the face of the earth, and I suppose that warrants us in the belief that there should be such a thing as the brotherhood of man. Consequently speaking in the abstract, my hon. friend's arguments are well-founded, and I can sympathize most fully with the views he expresses as to the natural right of man to seek the best places and positions for bettering his condition. There are, however, the interests of the two classes to be taken into consideration, when dealing with the question of immigration. There is first and primarily, the interests of the immigrant who proposes to change his home and cast in his lot with another race and in another land. There is in the second place, the interests of the occupants of that place, where he proposes to make his home, and who have a preemptive right as residents, as citizens of the country, and as having built up its institutions with the desire of founding a free country and free institutions, to hand down to posterity. They too have rights and are warranted, when determining what their action may be with reference to permitting others to share with them the blessings they have created and the country they have opened up, in taking into consideration what the influences are likely to be of those who propose to seek an asylum and a home with them. The position of the government in this connection is one of great difficulty. Abstractly, I repeat, the government are wrong, perhaps, in placing restrictions upon immigration to this country. But while a thing may be right or wrong in the abstract, it may be exactly the reverse in the concrete. We have confronting the government to-day, on the one hand, the demand of the members from the Pacific coast, and on the other hand, we have the expression of sentiments given by such gentlemen as my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards), and the hon. member who has just spoken, which are correct in the abstract—sentiments which these gentlemen thoroughly believe, which are perhaps calculated to commend themselves to the better judgment of the country, unless all the circumstances of the case are carefully weighed and considered. Now, it is a remarkable and very significant fact, that sympathy with Mongolian immigration is not found in any section of the country that these immigrants go to. You will find that sympathy in the United States, in the Mississippi valley states, in the eastern states, in any of the states, where there are very few Chinese immigrants. But you will not find it in California, Oregon, Washington, or the states that are brought directly into contact with this class of immigrants. We have that same sentiment in eastern Canada, which we find exhibited in the eastern parts of the United States—a sentiment in favour of the equality of man, of his right to better his condition, the right of a down-trodden people to come to a free country, and better their condition. But against that we have the sentiment of the people who have been brought into contact with this Mongolian immigration, who know its character, and who for some reason, sufficient or insufficient, are bitterly opposed to permitting these Mongolians entering the country. When I look over the field, when I see in British Columbia, Oregon, Washington, California, South Africa, Australia—in all countries where the Anglo-Saxon live—when I see in every one of these places, where the people are brought into contact with Mongolian immigration, a bitter hostility to that immigration, I am forced to believe that there is something about this matter that requires careful consideration. My hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) said that the motive that prompted the government of Canada to exclude this immigration was the same as prompted the government at Peking to prohibit the immigration of Christian people into China. The motive is the same abstractly—it proceeds in each case from a desire to prevent the subversion of the institutions of these respective countries by immigration. The Chinese government prohibits or discourages the immigration of Christian people because it does not wish to see China Christianized; it does not desire to see western civilization take the place of the civilization of Confucius, it does not desire to see the civilization which is characteristic of China and has been for thirty or forty centuries; submerged or removed, and western ideas and western thoughts and western religion take its place. To-day the same motive exists in British Columbia. There, the people do not desire to see the civilization they possess, the institutions they possess, in any way endangered by the influx of a great swarm of people who will not believe as they do, will not act as they do, but will subvert their civilization and will not subscribe to their religion and belief. That is the case in a nutshell. And so the government to-day confronts this problem of Chinese immigration, and confronts it with a demand on the part of the people who are directly interested in this question that some action shall be taken, some action adverse to the unrestricted admission of Chinese immigrants. That is one view of the case. Another view of the case is that of our friends in British Columbia. I am inclined to think their fears are perhaps overdrawn or not justified. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) in answer to a question this morning, informed us that there were perhaps 20,000 Chinamen in British Columbia. I imagine that, perhaps, that estimate is high.

Mr. PRIOR. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) that on second thoughts I have come to the conclusion that that estimate was high. I would say there are from 10,000 to 15,000 Chinese in British Columbia.

Mr. CHARLTON. I imagine that 10,000 would be quite a liberal estimate of the number of Celestials in British Columbia. If there are 10,000 Chinamen in British Columbia, I do not see that there is a very crying necessity for making the laws very stringent to restrict or prevent Chinese immigration. If there are 10,000 Chinamen in British Columbia, I think it is quite evident that the tax of fifty dollars per head has proved efficient as a means of impeding that immigration, and I am doubtful whether it is necessary to impose a heavier tax; and, certainly, I think it would be entirely unnecessary to accede to the demand for a tax of $500. I believe that the government, in taking the step it has taken—I suppose it was obliged to do something to meet this demand—instead of showing as my hon. friend from Victoria charged, want of pluck, on the contrary, showed great discretion. And I believe the government have gone as far as it is necessary or desirable to go, at least until the effect of the increased tax of $100 per head is shown by actual results. I am not sure that it is necessary to take even the step here proposed to restrict this immigration. I do believe that bringing the Chinese into contact with our western civilization not only will have a very great effect in changing their views, but will exert a great influence upon the sentiment in China by the communication of this element that has been brought into contact with the Anglo-Saxons with the element at home. I believe we can reach these people with our elevating Christianizing agencies better here than in China. There coming here is not an unmixed evil. I do not regret that there are 10,000 Chinamen in British Columbia. I would not object to see that number increase, so long as it increased at a rate consistent with safety. I would dread the pouring in of a horde of Celestials from the practically illimitable fountain of four hundred million in China. I admit that it is necessary to be cautious, but I doubt that it was necessary for the government to take any action at all, to impose a single dollar of tax in addition to that already imposed of fifty dollars a head. Certainly, I would be the last to join in condemnation of the government for not having gone further. In my opinion, the government have done all that could be asked of them in the way of restricting Chinese immigration. There is a great deal to be said in favour of the views of the hon. member for Argen-teuil (Mr. Christie) of the brotherhood of man, of the value and the advantage of the unrestricted intercommunication of these peoples, and of the influence that may be exerted upon a barbarous or unenlightened or semi-civilized people by the enlightened of our own race. If we rest where we are, we shall have gone, in my opinion, as far as we need go. The government has proposed the issue of a commission that will sift this question to the bottom, that will ascertain exactly, as far as may be, what the influence of Mongolian immigration is upon society in British Columbia, what the character of this immigration is and the effect of their presence upon social and commercial relations and will give us information of a reliable character, not based on prejudice or on preconceived notions. Let us have the commission; let us sift this case to the bottom; let us inquire and decide what is to be the effect of this immigration upon us and its reflex action upon the Chinese at home, and the step will be a wise one. In the meantime, I can have no sympathy with the views advanced in this House condemning the government for not going further than they have, and I express my doubts whether they have not already gone further than it was necessary to do.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I do not share the views of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I have always held that every country has a perfect right to exclude from its borders any undesirable element of humanity whether it be a criminal class, a pauper class, or a class that will be found to be to the disadvantage of the people of that country. Every civilized country does that to-day. Only a few days ago, the United States sent back two criminals to England and would not allow them shelter upon their shores—and this, notwithstanding that the United States people claim that theirs is, perhaps, the freest country in the world. Why did the United States exclude them? Because they were an undesirable element, they were of a class whose presence would not tend to the elevation of humanity or the bettering of society. And on that ground also they exclude paupers, and so do we. Why? Because they become a burden upon our charity and upon our finances from the day they reach our shores. The Mongolian is a different class of man. While he may not become a burden upon our charge; while he may not be especially vicious as a criminal, still he is destroying the living of a much more desirable element in our country, an element who are bone of our bone, and humanity of our humanity—part and parcel of ourselves. The Mongolian is a supplanting and destroying element. There is no fusion of races with them, and his presence is an injury to our own citizens who are only in a lower scale financially, and, perhaps, socially than other people in the community to-day, but who are kept down by the very presence of this undesirable element,—this element that does not unite with our people, that does not help our country financially—because whatever they make they take away—that does not help our country socially, that does not help our country in any way, except, it may be, to do some of the menial work of life. The hon. member (Mr. Charlton) said we should have a commission. We have had one commission already, a commission that did its work very intelligently, so that we have all the information, in my judgment, that it is necessary for this House to have to enable us to judge whether or not we are doing right to let these people come in. It is a fact that in every country in the civilized world where Chinamen go, people have a bad opinion of them. They are not liked in British Columbia, they are not liked in California, they are not liked anywhere else. That to my mind is another argument why we should take hold of this problem early while we have yet control of it, instead of allowing them to come in in large numbers and having to take up the problem and deal with it when it will be much more difficult to do so. The hon. member said: I think the amount of tax that is put on will be quite insufficient. The question is: Will it keep them out? What is aimed at by the government? Is it not their exclusion? If it is not to exclude them, then the government cannot be sincere in proposing this legislation; if it is to exclude them, then in my judgment the tax is too small. There is no doubt that they will continue to come in, even after paying this tax, in order to earn money here to send home to enrich their own country. In the earlier part of my life I entertained the idea that perhaps the dictates of humanity should lead us to allow them to come in; but the longer I live and the more I know of their history, the more I know of the Chinese character, the more I am inclined to the opinion that we are justified in excluding them from this country. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Christie) says that they come here by virtue of treaty rights. I do not think that there are any treaty rights that allow them to come here; we have no treaty rights with China which enable them to take advantage of our country as they do. They are not allowed to come into the United States except they pay for the privilege. Now, as I said before, if the object of this tax is to keep them out, and I assume it is, it requires to be higher than it is at present, because they will pay that tax, and they will come in. This additional tax will only afford a little more temptation to smuggle them in. I say that we have knowledge already that they are a most undesirable class, that there is no fusion of their race with the white race, there is no elevation of humanity, there is no benefit to our country financially, there is no substantial advantage that I can see accruing to our country by allowing them to come in except that they perform for us some of the more menial occupations of life. On the other hand, by allowing them to come into our country in numbers they only displace the honest labourer of this country, the man who is one of ourselves, and whose industry tends to the betterment of his own condition as well as the elevation of the social life of the country. Therefore, I say we are not doing all that we should do in raising this tax by $50, and I do not think we would do wrong at all if we passed a law to exclude them entirely.

Mr. MORRISON. At this stage of the Bill I rise to propose an amendment. I have a great deal of sympathy with the position in which the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Christie) finds himself; but I am confident that if that hon. gentleman knew the circumstances which exist to-day in the province of British Columbia, he would entertain a directly opposite opinion of these people to that which he now entertains. I must say, without desiring at all to be offensive, that the opinions which the hon. gentleman entertains to-day in regard to Chinese immigration are based upon a lack of knowledge of the facts and the circumstances that exist in our province. I am quite sure that if the circumstances existed in his own county that exist in my county, and in other counties of British Columbia, he would be one of the first to rise and demand a remedy. I regret to say that there seems to be the same lack of knowledge of the circumstances in the minds of many members of this House coming from the eastern provinces. I cannot admit that the members from British Columbia, who are but a mere handful, are to blame for this paucity of information which exists in the east, for we have been doing all we could to disseminate a knowledge of the facts, and there is an abundance of material at hand from which any hon. member, who is so disposed, can gather a full knowledge of the state of affairs. I fear, Mr. Chairman, that not many members on either side of the House have taken the trouble to read the published report of the Royal Commission on Chinese Immigration, published in 1885. I am sure that if they would take the time to glance, if only cursorily, at that report, they could not maintain such opinions as we have heard expressed to-day by the hon. member for Argenteuil, and the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards). I care not what arguments may be used in favour of allowing Orientals to come in here, there is sufficient incontrovertible evidence against them to justify us in excluding them. I am sure that the hon. member for Argenteuil, who is a medical man, would change his opinions were he to read the evidence of other medical men given in this report; and I would ask him and other hon. members to read the evidence that has been adduced in San Francisco, in Victoria, and other places that were visited by that commission. Perhaps it has been so long since that evidence was published that hon. gentlemen may have forgotten the salient features of it, if they ever read it. Now, I state that our objection to these people does not spring from the fact that they come from China, it is not that they are Chinamen. Our people would have just as strong objection to people coming from any other country if they were as obnoxious as these Chinamen are. Our great objection to the Chinese and to the Japanese, whom I will include in the same category, is that they tend to degrade labour, and I say that anything that degrades labour strikes at the foundation of the institutions of any country. No government is justified in permitting into the realm of labour the intrusion of Chinese and Japanese in the way they are admitting them into British Columbia to-day. What are the conditions in British Columbia? There is no part of the Dominion of Canada that displays greater evidences of wealth, greater elements of prosperity than that province. It is a province richly endowed with metalliferous mountain districts, vast fertile valleys, unparalleled water-courses, a sea-coast teeming with fish, vast areas of uninhabited lands of fertile character; and the first care of this government should be to see that such a province is populated with manly, independent, God-fearing men of intelligence and moral habits.

What are you doing to-day by not restricting the immigration of this pernicious element into the province of British Columbia? I do not wish to speak in a sentimental way; I do not think that the strongest ground that can be taken against these people coming into this country is the sentimental ground. It is largely an economic question, and I think we should discuss it from the economic standpoint. These people come in, they are virtually slaves, they are entirely and humbly submissive, they do not live like rational beings. That is incontrovertible, and nobody will deny it. For a great number of years they have been in the province of British Columbia, mingling with the people of that province, having the advantage, as some people would term it, of receiving instruction from the missionaries and yet, can anybody in this assemblage, who knows anything about the question, point out the beneficial results of the sojourn of these people in British Columbia? By saying that there is no evidence of improvement in these people I do not cast any reflection on the people of British Columbia, but rather, it is an evidence that these people consider themselves, as they are the older civilization, and the stronger characters. They ignore the people of this country, and, in my opinion, they will never be converted in the sense in which we are attempting to convert them. If they pretend to be christianized they are not sincere, and that is evidenced by people who have lived amongst them as missionaries. They are not sincere, but their profession of Christianity is entirely a matter of expediency on their part. The evidence produced before the Royal Commission shows what degree of effective progress has been made amongst them by missionaries in their efforts to christianize them. From any standpoint which you choose to take there is an objection to Chinamen coming into this country. I did not intend to dwell upon that phase of the matter, but I have been led to refer to it particularly owing to the fact that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in his excellent speech spoiled the whole effect of that speech in his closing remarks. I think the sentences uttered by the hon. gentleman in his opening remarks were more cogent and were such as would be of material assistance to hon. gentlemen here in coming to some satisfactory conclusion upon this matter. But, when the hon. gentleman came down to the stereotyped sentimentality of the brotherhood of man, getting away from the practical side of the question, he entirely detracted from the effect of any remarks which he had previously made. The sentimental aspect of the question is too large a field to enter upon on an occasion of this kind. But, I rose simply for the purpose of asking the attention of the committee to the amendment which I propose to submit. It does not only affect the Chinese, but it also affects the Japanese. Reference has been made to treaty obligations existing between the Chinamen and the people of Canada and Great Britain. I do not know of any strong treaty obligations that exist between these two nations. There are treaties between Japan and Great Britain, and in referring to the Japanese I may say that the objection, economically, to their existence in British Columbia and in Canada is even greater than the objection to the Chinamen. They are, as far as opposition with white labour is concerned, infinitely more objectionable than the Chinamen. They meet the white man at a greater number of points of competition. They live just as objectionably as the Chinese. To give an idea of the manner in which these people live in British Columbia, and there is no necessity for them to do so, but to show their inherent nature, which certainly is most objectionable and un-British, I will read a short extract from a sanitary report of the health inspector of the city of Vancouver, published a few days ago. Attention was directed to the existence of these Chinese and Japanese who, it was said, were living in a very unsanitary way, by the report of the existence of bubonic plague across the border in some of the American towns and by the report that the disease had been brought to the continent of America by immigrants from China and Japan. The inspector made his report, and he reported very strongly in regard to the way these people were hived together. I take the extract from one of the Vancouver papers :

The fact that eternal vigilance is necessary in watching the Chinese and Japanese in their crowded quarters was well shown last night by a trip made by Health Inspector Marrion among the Oriental denizens of Chinatown. It may also be mentioned in this connection that the recent quarantine vigilance against southern cities has not been without its reason, for during May there were fourteen cases of small-pox in Seattle. This is according to the health reports recently issued for the month, and which also includes the statement of quite a large number of cases of scarlet fever and measles.

Health Inspector Marrion made the trip last night for the purpose of seeing how the Orientals were complying with the regulations of the lodging-house by-law. This provides that each person shall be treated to the full benefits of 400 feet of fresh Vancouver air in his sleeping quarters. The inspector visited particularly the new, large lodging-houses facing on Carroll Street, near the Royal City mill, in company with Police Officer Park and the two assistant inspectors. There are about 100 rooms altogether in these two buildings, and in more than half there were too many men sleeping. The Orientals were lying sandwiched in their bunks, so close to one another that it was a wonder how they managed to breathe at all. The curious fact was also developed that rooms occupied by Japanese were much more crowded than those in which were Chinamen. In small rooms, say twelve or fourteen feet long, nine wide and seven high, there would be as many as seven or eight men. So hot were the unventilated rooms in many cases that the Japanese were lying in rows, stark naked. They were, too, much harder to arouse than the Chinamen, and very seriously objected to opening their doors even when they saw the police officer's uniform through the window. The most flagrant case of overcrowding was where nine Japs were in one room of about the dimensions given above. One Chinaman was found in an outhouse, scarcely long enough to contain his body.

This is only one of very many reports which we have as to the way in which these people live and the way in which they want to live. It takes a great deal of trouble and expense to get them out of that way of living. Take the report of the provincial board of health on the plague. A visitation of that disease was thought to be imminent a few months ago, and it was feared that it might spread into British territory. The suggestion is made in the report that precautionary steps should be taken against the introduction of the plague through the medium of the Chinese and Japanese. It is a real danger on the Pacific coast, the people of the United States realize it, and they take the most stringent and strict steps to prevent any possibility of such a contingency occurring. We find that hordes of these Japanese, and I use the word advisedly, who came to British Columbia this summer, were prevented from going into the United States. A great many of them attempted to go in, and when the American authorities found this out, they undertook to return them, and they have been returned in large numbers. The consequence is that the labour market in British Columbia is glutted by these Japanese, and even such skilled tradesmen as ship carpenters have to compete with them for as low a wage as $1 per day. We find that one of the railways is discharging its section men; men of families, men who have been in the province for a number of years, men who are educating their children and contributing to the institutions of the country; such citizens of Canada are being discharged and these Japanese are taking their places at very low wages. We do not know where that will end. I would ask hon. gentlemen who seem to place great reliance upon the principle of the brotherhood of man; I would ask them whether the people of British Columbia should be sacrificed in that way? Let these gentlemen consider for a moment what the conditions would be in Ontario and Quebec if the employees of the large mills were to be discharged to make room for the Japanese, or else compelled to work for three-quarters of the wage they are now getting. Where would our institutions in these older provinces be if such were the case? Some of our newspapers are creating quite an uproar against the government and against members who are supporting the government in bringing in restrictive legislation, but I would like to know where these papers would be if this part of the country were overrun by Japanese and Chinese. It is quite certain that if such were the case there would not be many subscribers to some of our flourishing newspapers. That is only one instance. These people contribute nothing to the maintenance of the institutions of the country, and they are, therefore, valueless to aid in the progress and prosperity of Canada. As an evidence of the number of Japanese who are coming to Canada, I will quote a despatch from the newspapers, and in this connection I may say that the department in charge of this branch have not, in my opinion, the fullest information available upon this point :

Japanese are still pouring in here. The steamer 'Riojun Maru' brought 800, and the big liner 'Goodwin' 1,100. The steamer 'Milos' brought eighty more, and the 'Braemer' at the end of this week will bring more than 700.

This is the record for only part of the month of April of this year. Before that time they were coming into Canada in even greater numbers, and since then the other despatches show that the Japanese are still pouring into British Columbia. In view of these facts, the government should take the matter up more seriously than it has done, and some more stringent steps should be taken to prevent this very undesirable immigration. In Natal and Australia the people are just as solicitous about their welfare as we are, or ought to be, and they have passed practically prohibitive laws against such immigrants. Australia, I think, has a tax of $500, and Natal has a tax of $500 and what is known as the Natal Act. The main point of the Natal Act is that it provides an educational test for immigrants going into that country, and it would not be a bad thing if Canada should have a test of the same kind. The amendment which I intend to propose is along the lines of that Natal Act. I do not think that it can be seriously objected that by introducing legislation on the lines of the Natal Act we are violating any treaty obligation. The only treaty that exists between Great Britain and Japan relating to immigration is the treaty passed in 1894 and ratified in 1895. In that treaty Canada and the other colonies are specifically exempted, and so objection cannot be raised that we would be brought into conflict with Great Britain if we introduce legislation of this kind. There may be sufficient and cogent grounds other than that existing, but certainly the treaty is no bar. I refer to article 19 of the treaty, which reads as follows :

The stipulations of the present treaty shall be applicable, so far as the laws permit, to all the colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, excepting to those hereinafter named, that is to say, except to :

India, the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Cape, Natal, New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, South Australia, Western Australia, New Zealand.

Provided always, that the stipulations of the present treaty shall be made applicable to any of the above-named colonies or foreign possessions on whose behalf notice to that effect shall have been given to the Japanese government by Her Britannic Majesty's representative at Tokio, within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty.

That is an article which expressly excepts Canada from the operation of the Treaty of 1895 between Canada and Great Britain. In addition to that we have the despatch from Mr. Chamberlain, dated July 20, 1898, and addressed to the Governor General, referring to the disallowance of a certain British Columbia statute. In the last clause of that despatch, Mr. Chamberlain, in deprecating the passing of the legislation on that occasion by the province of British Columbia as against the Japanese, says :

In the meantime, I have to request that you will impress upon your ministers that restrictive legislation of the type of which the legislation in question appears to be, is extremely repugnant to the sentiment of the people and government of Japan, and you should not fail to impress upon them the importance, if there is any real prospect of a large influx of Japanese labourers into Canada, of dealing with it by legislation of the Dominion parliament on the lines of the accompanying Natal Act, which is likely to be generally adopted in Australia.

Now, I take it that if legislation on the lines of the Natal Act were passed by this parliament it would not be looked upon with displeasure by the Imperial government, and it certainly would meet with the approval of those who have such serious objections to this immigration. I, therefore, beg to move that a substantive clause be added after clause 5 and before clause 6, to read as follows :

The immigration into Canada by land or sea via British Columbia of any person of the classes defined in the following subsections, is prohibited, namely:

(a) Any person who, when asked to do so by an officer appointed under this Act, shall fail to himself write out and sign in the characters of any language of Europe, an application to the Secretary of State in the form set out in schedule _____ to this Act.

(b) Any person being a pauper or likely to become a public charge.

(c) Any idiot or insane person.

(d) Any person suffering from a loathsome or contagious disease.

(e) Any prostitute and any person living on the prostitution of others.

I trust that this amendment, particularly the first clause, will be incorporated in the Bill. If there are objections to the insertion of that clause and to the bringing of it into force at once, I trust that, at any rate, the government will consider the idea of having it inserted, even if it were not brought into force except by proclamation specifically made. The existence of these Japanese in our midst is a real menace to the people of Canada, as well as to the people of British Columbia, and I would strongly urge that this amendment be adopted.

Mr. ELLIS. I have raised the point of order and I wish for your ruling, Mr. Chairman: That this Bill, having originated in the Committee of the Whole, it is not competent for the hon. gentleman to offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Flint). I am afraid I shall have to rule against my hon. friend.

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (West Elgin). The amendment of my hon. friend, who has just sat down, mixes several very different propositions. Some portions of it we might perhaps all agree to; but there is no doubt that the main object of the amendment is to exclude Japanese and Chinese immigrants. The government have considered this question no doubt, very fully, and have decided upon a certain course. As the debate has taken a wide range already, it is perhaps no harm to indicate more fully the great diversity of individual opinion on this question. Some of us, on one side of the House or the other, object to the immigration of any of these men; some object to the immigration of Chinese, and do not object to that of the Japanese; and so forth. For my part, I have pretty strong individual opinions on this question, which I intend to mention; but I must say, speaking as a member of the House, that I do not feel inclined to oppose anything which the government have felt themselves bound, after the fullest consideration of the question, to put into this Bill. Circumstances may change in the next year or two, so that the opinion of the government on the question may change. But they have had to consider great Imperial questions, as well as local questions, and for the time being, I do not see my way to vote against any of their proposals.

My individual opinion may be stated briefly thus: We have a right, as every other people inhabiting a country have, to object to the introduction among our population of any race whom we may consider hopelessly barbarian, or not capable of assimilating with our population. I do not think there is anything in this statement to make us comparable with the Boers, or any other too exclusive people in the world. We have the right, then, to say that Chinese or Japanese, or any other people shall not come into this country and take possession of lands here, and compete with our own people. The question is, what races should we exclude? I have no doubt personally, that it would be much better for this country if no Chinese ever came here. They may be a convenience as domestic servants, or as labourers in the construction of certain public works; but on the whole I consider them an element that can never be assimilated with the rest of our population. They are so totally different, not only from us, but from other civilized races—I will not say from European races only, but all races possessing any kind of modern civilization—that I do not believe they can ever really become citizens of this country. If the diplomatic relations of the empire and the general interests of the country would permit of it, I should be glad to see Chinese entirely excluded. If the government consider that not practicable, I am glad to see that they have, at all events, made it more difficult for Chinese to enter this country, by doubling the capitation tax upon them.

The case of the Japanese I look upon as totally different. I have given a good deal of attention to Japanese history during the few years in which it has been known to the world, and I am satisfied that the Japanese are people who can be assimilated in Canada, and can become civilized in the proper sense of the word. They are not only a nation of clever mechanics and hard working people, but in their habits they are not so dissimilar from Europeans as the Chinese. When they come to Canada or to any European country, they live in a cleanly, descent, respectable manner, like other citizens. They are not, like the Chinese, merely labourers; but they apply themselves closely to business, and may come into sharp competition with many of our own people. They will probably go into manufacturing; they might even become naturalized and go into politics. I am not prepared to say that it would be any detriment to this country if they did all of these things. Competition with people who are capable of citizenship in the proper sense of the word, is not a thing that we should be afraid of, so long as that competition is not unduly emphasized, and does not bear unduly upon certain classes of the community, on account of the peculiar habits or ideas of profit that the foreign competitor may possess. The Chinaman who is able, as a former member from British Columbia aptly described it, 'to live on rats and mice, and work for nothing, and take home all he earns to China,' may be an unfair competitor with our fellow-citizens. I have never met a Japanese yet who was not anxious to get as much for his work, physical and intellectual, as any other member of the community. I do not think the influx of Japanese will permanently lower the rate of wages for Canadians. I think the Japanese on the whole are as fitted for citizenship in this country, as any European people. They have shown themselves capable, not merely of imitation, as the Chinese are, but of taking hold of everything that Europeans do, in business, in politics, and in war. They have taken a front rank among modern powers in the last few years. More than that, Japan is the only probable, I might say the only possible, ally of Great Britain in the far east. Japan is a country situated very much like Great Britain, inhabited by a people naturally maritime and naturally warlike, and she will be the natural and useful ally of Great Britain in all dangers that may threaten the empire in that part of the world. What is passing at present in those regions, may emphasize this view of the question very strongly indeed, and I think the present moment is emphatically not the one when we should try to throw any slurs on the Japanese people, by declaring them not fit for citizenship in this country, or by trying to exclude them as immigrants. On the other hand, what is passing in China, may bring the empire, and especially that important part of it which we form, to the conclusion that further intercourse with that country on the same terms on which we admit other civilized nations, is impossible. That is my own view of what is likely to happen, and I expect that this question will come before the House in future sessions, with a very different complexion. On all these grounds, I cannot accept the amendment of my hon. friend. I do not discuss any clause of his amendment, except the first, which I believe is the only one in issue before the committee at the present time.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I would like to express my support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison). I understand it to be a very radical amendment, inasmuch as it would practically exclude all Chinese and all Japanese from the country. If we are right in passing an exclusion Act, we are right in accepting the evidence of the people of the province who are chiefly interested in the working of that Act, as expressed here by their representatives as to how far the Act should go. While we do not escape responsibility, as the representatives of other sections of the country, by adopting their views, we are certainly not doing justice to them or to those they represent if we do not accept their opinions and expressions as very strong evidence of the condition of affairs prevailing in that province and of the opinions of the people of that province. I cannot recall just at the moment the slurs which it seems to me were cast on the representatives of that province by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) when he spoke of the necessity of a commission to find out what was the feeling of the province and the condition of the province with regard to Chinese and Japanese immigration. It seems to me we have a commission here and now from that province, sent by it to give an opinion with regard to these matters, having full knowledge both personally and gathered from other parties of the conditions, and if we are not prepared to accept their evidence, I do not see how much better off we will be after we have got the evidence of a commission on the subject.

I want to present another side of the question which does not seem to me to have been shown very strongly. It is apparently the general impression that this is a question which merely concerns British Columbia. I contend that it is one which concerns the whole of Canada and very greatly eastern Canada—quite as much eastern as western Canada. I look upon the matter in this way, that the presence of a Chinese or Japanese labourer in British Columbia displaces a citizen from eastern Canada or some other part of the British Empire in that province. I look upon the presence of Japanese and Chinese labourers in that province as objectionable because they monopolize a field of labour to which our young men, who are compelled to look outside for fields of labour, would properly and naturally go. In that field these Mongolians have established a condition of labour that we would not want our young men to go and compete against, and causes us to rather desire that they should go to the United States and look for opportunities there, than give their mental vigour, education and physical strength—which is second to none in the world—to developing our own province of British Columbia and building up our own country for our benefit as well as theirs. It is said you cannot get white labour in British Columbia, but how can you expect to get it when you put it in competition with labour under conditions that it cannot compete with, that you would not want it to compete with, and that it would not be white labour if it did compete with. You do not want your sons to go to British Columbia and compete with men who live, as the hon. member for New Westminster has shown, like pigs. If they would compete with these men, they would have to sleep and eat and live as pigs. You do not want them to compete with such men, and therefore you do not want to have such men there. You cannot have that field for the work and the advantage of your sons and daughters if you allow it to be occupied by Chinamen and Japanese.

I do not know what particular objection there is to an exclusion Act with regard to the Chinese. It seems to me that in view of what is going on at present in China, where the Chinese have no difficulty about passing very drastic exclusion Acts affecting British subjects, there should be no difficulty on our part or hesitation in passing any exclusion Act we may see fit with regard to them. As to the Japanese being a different or better people, I do not care whether they are or not a great deal better people than we are. I will admit, if you like, for the sake of argument, that they are, but they are not our people, they do not belong to our civilization, they do not strengthen our country, and we are here for ourselves and not for them. Let them be as good or as bad as you like, inasmuch as they displace our people, we do not want them. We want our people in British Columbia to build up in that province such a country as we have here, and we cannot have that if the labour field is to be monopolized by Chinese and Japanese who live under conditions that our people cannot compete with.

that we have educated them not to compete with, and that we do not want them to compete with, and would not have them compete with even if they could.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think the House will agree with me that this amendment cannot be accepted. If the mover will look at section 12 of the Bill, he will find that a great many of the exclusions he has introduced in his amendment are to be found there. That is to say, paupers, idiots, persons suffering from loathsome or contagious diseases, prostitutes, and so on, are to be excluded under the provisions of the Bill and when we come to that subject. I have no objection to add other similar exceptions which may be needed to carry out the spirit of the Act. The amendment is to be extended to the Japanese by submitting them to an educational test. On a former occasion I gave the reason why the government could not agree to adopt this policy, especially at the present juncture. It is not because if we adopted that policy we would go against any treaty obligation of Britain at present. That is not the view I took or would like the House to take; but if we were to adopt this policy, everybody must admit that it might seriously jeopardize the good relations which to-day exist between Great Britain and Japan, and which it is almost impossible to preserve at this juncture. That is a reason which, I am sure, ought to convince even my hon. friend who has just addressed the House that we should proceed very slowly before doing anything which might in any way affect the good relations that now exist between Great Britain and Japan. On a former occasion, I stated that this was a question as to which we should proceed very slowly. I made a great difference between China and Japan in that respect. In so far as Japan is concerned, I have to call the attention of the House, and the members from British Columbia especially, to the fact that Japan and its government have themselves taken the initiative in this respect and actually restricted immigration from Japan to Canada. The Evening Post of New York contained an article on this subject, which has been reproduced in the weekly edition of that paper, the New York Nation, and which I might read to the House as an evidence of what I am now saying:

The government of Japan has been obliging enough to relieve some of the authorities in this country and in the Dominion of Canada from an embarrassing problem. The influx of Japanese in British Columbia and in the state of Washington has recently become so large as to disturb the labour market on the Pacific coast, and to arouse very emphatic demands from the labour unions for the prohibition of immigration. Neither Great Britain nor the United States could comply with these demands, and the government of the former power has been obliged to nullify some of the measures proposed by the legislature of British Columbia. The Japanese government has now relieved the situation here by issuing an order which will reduce the number of its subjects emigrating to this country to insignificant proportions; for which relief the demagogues of this continent should express much thanks. Henceforth not more than five persons in a month may emigrate to the United States from any of the forty-seven prefectures in Japan, and not more than ten will be permitted to go to Canada. The immigration to the Pacific coast has been so large as to make it probable that it has been artificially stimulated, and the action of the Japanese government, although arbitrary, may be for the interest of those of its subjects who are now in this country.

This is the actual order issued by the Japanese government restricting the number of emigrants to Canada to ten per month, or one hundred and twenty per year. In the face of this condition of things, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) will find that it is not necessary to adopt an amendment which, if adopted, might lead to serious international difficulties, and which, if not adopted will not affect the case as the point is covered already by the action taken by the Japanese government. When we come to section 12. I may be prepared to suggest an amendment which will meet the views of my hon. friend. But I think the House ought not to accept the amendment.

Mr. MAXWELL. I would like to mention just one point. And, by the way, I was sorry to see the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Foster) dumb on such an important matter as is now before the House. I think the very people of British Columbia will look to the hon. gentleman for an expression of his views. He has had a good deal to say in an indirect way in regard to the action of the government, but I have failed to hear him make any statement of his own views on this question. I am afraid he is not ready to express his real sentiments. But I rose to say one word which will give an idea of the number of Japanese in British Columbia. I wrote to the inspector of fisheries asking how many licenses had been given to Japanese last season, and he said the number was about 900. That means that 1,800 Japanese were employed on the Fraser River last year, which, according to the argument of my hon. friend from Alberta, which I think was a proper argument, that 1,800 white people were deprived of a living on the river last year. I do not think that it is at all fair or desirable that such a state of things should exist. Besides, I received a letter not long ago—it was not written to me, but it was sent to me—of a Japanese in Vancouver who wrote to all the employers of labour there that if they wanted skilled or unskilled labour he would be happy to supply them with any number of workmen they required, at any wages. That also is unfair to our workingmen; for it is not hard to see that if these men are employed, white men must be set aside to make way for the Japanese labourers. I appreciate what the Japanese government are doing, and I suppose they are in earnest as to the restriction put on these gentlemen at the present time. But the point is that the door is open, and, if labour troubles arise in British Columbia, the employer of labour can go to the Japanese consul in Vancouver and make arrangements by which, perhaps in one month, a thousand or two thousand can be brought into British Columbia, with no possibility under the law of preventing them.

The PRIME MINISTER. When we come to section 12, I am prepared to deal with that feature of the case.

Amendment (Mr. Morrison) negatived.

On section 5,

Mr. FOSTER. What is proposed as the machinery for carrying this out?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have the same machinery at the present time. That is to say the chief control will be with the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, and there will be the customs officers as there are at the present time.

Mr. MAXWELL. Would it not be possible to put in charge to look after this business, some man on the coast?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not prepared to say yes or no at present. My attention had not been called to the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has said no, as he proposes to keep as controller, the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, and to use, as he says, the officers who have already been used. I think that these officers are in a better position to fairly enforce the law even than officers who might receive the high distinction of the recommendation of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell), who has just taken his seat. A man who is free from the exciting passions of the coast would probably do better than one who is too near the source of heat there.

Mr. MAXWELL. That is where the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is wrong, because there is no man more liable to superior influence than the collector of customs. He is brought into contact directly with the men who are most interested in having these immigrants brought in. We want a man distinctly free, a man who can deal with these things fairly as between man and man.

On section 6,

Mr. PRIOR. Before that passes, I would like, if possible, to move an amendment. I know that it is not quite in order unless the government sanctions it; but if they would allow it, I would move, after the word 'tax' in the 11th line, to strike out the words

'one hundred dollars,' and insert the words 'five hundred dollars' instead.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is out of order.

Mr. PRIOR. If it is out of order, and the government will not allow me to move it, I can only give notice that on the third reading of the Bill I will move that the Bill be referred back to the committee to make this amendment.

The PRIME MINISTER. It would be out of order then too.

Mr. ELLIS. What do the words, 'irrespective of allegiance' in this section mean?

The PRIME MINISTER. These words are new; they are intended to meet a difficulty that has always been found in the carrying out of the Act. Unless these words are inserted, Chinamen coming always claim that they are British subjects. There are a few Chinamen who are British subjects, but at all events, we do not want to have the claim raised under any circumstances. If he is of Chinese origin that disqualifies him.

Mr. ELLIS. Even if he is a British subject?

The PRIME MINISTER. We do not want to entertain the claim.

Mr. PRIOR. The right hon. gentleman has informed me that the amendment I proposed is out of order, but could I not beg of him to allow me to put it to the House? This is a very serious matter. He has heard what has been said by the British Columbia members, and I think he might allow it to be submitted.

The PRIME MINISTER. I find it is always safer to adhere to the rules of the House. To meet the views of the hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), I move to amend section 6 by inserting after the words 'merchants, their wives and children,' the words 'the wives and children of clergymen.'

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. gentleman for Eastern Assiniboia mentioned two cases, one the case of a Chinese woman who married a clergyman, and the other a Chinese woman who married some one else not a clergyman.

The PRIME MINISTER. Suppose a clergyman is married to a white wife there is no exclusion; but if he happens to be married to a Chinese wife, then this amendment is proposed to meet that case. A Chinese woman could not be admitted, but if she is found to be the wife of a white clergyman, then she can be admitted.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you do with a Chinese man who marries a white woman?

The PRIME MINISTER. There are none, I understand, in British Columbia.

Mr. PRIOR. No, we have not got to that yet.

On section 7,

Mr. MORRISON. I move, in amendment, that in the first line after the word 'Chinese' the words 'or Japanese' be added. Whether Japanese or Chinese, they should be prevented from huddling together as these people do. I think the ships should be restrained from bringing excessive numbers of passengers aboard. These vessels can only carry Chinese or Japanese as immigrants, and from a sanitary standpoint the Japanese should be included. The extract I read a little while ago shows the great numbers that come in on a single ship.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press the amendment at the present time. We will reserve it for consideration a little later.

Mr. PUTTEE. There is a necessity for this, because the steamship companies are trying in every way to avoid the clause restricting the number of passengers. I noticed a vessel arrive lately with Chinese, and they were shipped as freight so as to avoid the laws.

The PRIME MINISTER. I propose to add to subsection 7 the following amendment:

(2) No Chinese immigrants shall be allowed to land or enter Canada coastwise or overland arriving in transitu from any port or place in America ex any vessel entering at such port or place, in excess of the number which would have been allowed to land from such vessel had it come direct to Canada.

I may say that this amendment has been suggested by Mr. Parmalee, the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has made to me a communication on the subject.

Amendment agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER. I move that in line 5 of section 7, $200 be substituted for $100.

Motion agreed to.

On section 10,

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a new provision, which is intended to apply to Chinamen coming into the country on a railway train. In line 33 I propose to strike out the word 'duty.' It is merely a verbal correction.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 11,

The PRIME MINISTER. This section is intended to apply to Chinamen entering the country on foot, jumping the boundary line, as many of them do. As I stated at an earlier stage of the debate, Chinamen have three modes of coming into the country. They come in by sea direct, by railway or vehicle, or they walk in. We have a provision for every one of these modes, and this section is to apply to Chinamen who walk in over the boundary line. I propose to amend it in this way: Strike out the words 'railway train or car,' and put in the word 'vehicle.' The word 'vehicle' is defined in section 1.

Mr. FOSTER.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 12,

The PRIME MINISTER. I propose some alteration in this section. First of all, the section which is included as to the restriction of Chinese immigration might very well apply as an amendment to the Immigration Act. It is quite proper that we should exclude paupers, idiots, sick persons and prostitutes. There is already a provision to that effect in the Immigration Act, section 17, subsection 2, which is as follows:

If, on examination, there is found among such passengers any lunatic, idiotic, deaf and dumb, blind or infirm person, not belonging to any immigrant family, and such person is, in the opinion of the medical superintendent, likely to become permanently a public charge, the medical superintendent shall forthwith report the same officially to the collector of customs at the port at which the vessel is to be first entered, who shall (except in the cases in which it is hereinafter provided that such bond may be dispensed with), require the master of the vessel, in addition to the duty payable for the passengers generally, to execute jointly and severally, with two sufficient sureties, a bond to Her Majesty, in the sum of $300 for every such passenger so specially reported, conditioned to indemnify and save harmless the government of Canada, and of any province in Canada, every municipality, municipal corporation, village, city, town, county and charitable institution within the same, from any expense or charge incurred within three years from the execution of the bond, for the maintenance and support of any such passenger.

This provision is already very stringent, still, I would have no objection, at a future session, to make it as stringent as it is in this Bill, but, as this Bill simply deals with the Chinese, I propose this amendment: In the 11th line after the word 'person' insert 'of Chinese origin.' I propose to fill in the blank left for the amount of the penalty with the words 'two hundred dollars,' and the blank for the imprisonment with the word 'six,' so that there shall be a penalty not exceeding $200 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months. I promised my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) that I would deal with the question which he had in his mind as to the number of Japanese immigrants who may come in at any time or at any time of stringency in the labour market in defiance of the order of the Japanese government. At the present time, under the order recently issued by the Japanese government, only 120 can come in during the year, that is twelve a month. But it may be possible that at a time when there may be, perhaps, a restriction in the labour market some designing person might send over and bring in a lot of Japanese immigrants. I propose to add this section :

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make such regulations as are necessary to prohibit the entry into Canada of any greater number of persons from any foreign country than the laws of any such country permit to emigrate to Canada.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 15,

Every master or conductor of any vessel or vehicle bringing Chinese immigrants to any port or place in Canada shall be personally liable to Her Majesty for the payment of the tax imposed by this Act in respect of any immigrant carried by such vessel or vehicle, and shall deliver, together with the total amount of such tax, to the controller, immediately on his arrival in port and before any of his crew or passengers disembark, a complete and accurate list of his crew and passengers, showing their names in full, the country and place of their birth, and the occupation and last place of domicile of each such immigrant passenger.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are some amendments to this section which the committee will understand at once. I propose in the first line to erase the words 'or conductor,' and the words 'or vehicle.' This section will then read.

Every master of any vessel, &c.

The reason why I do this is that we have provided already in section 10 for the liability of the conductor of a vehicle. This is simply for the sake of clearness. In line 4. I propose to add the word 'such' to make it clearer, so that it will read :

For the payment of the tax imposed by this Act in respect of any such immigrant, &c.

The words 'any immigrant' may be liable to misconstruction. In the fifth last line of this section I wish to insert after the word 'or' and before the word 'passengers,' the word 'Chinese,' so as to make it read 'and before any of his crew or Chinese passengers disembark.'

Mr. PRIOR. Why not put in the word 'Chinese' before the word 'crew,' so as to make it read 'and before any of his Chinese crew or passengers disembark' ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Very good ; we will insert that. In line 50, I wish to insert after the word 'and' the word 'such,' so as to make it read 'and before any of his crew or such passengers disembark.'

On section 17,

Persons of Chinese origin may pass through Canada by railway, in transit, from one port or place out of Canada to another port or place out of Canada without payment of the tax provided for by section 6 of this Act, provided that such passage is made in accordance with, and under such regulations as are made for the purpose ; and any railway company which undertakes to transport such persons through Canada, and fails to comply with such regulations, or to take such persons out of Canada at the designated port of exit within            days from the date of their entry into Canada, shall be subjected to a penalty equal to double the total amount of the tax payable under the provisions of section 6 of this Act.

Mr. ELLIS. I would ask the Prime Minister if this section is sufficiently broad to permit vessels coming from the West Indies with Chinese, to enable these Chinese to take the Canadian Pacific Railway across the continent ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think the clause is all right. The deputy minister informs me that so far no occasion has arisen to meet the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis). In the last four lines of this section, I would strike out the words 'days from the date of their entry into Canada,' and substitute the words 'within a period to be fixed by the chief controller.' This section is in effect the same as section 2 of the Act of 1887, the wording having been changed somewhat so as to more effectually meet the requirements as shown by thirteen years experience, and it is suggested that the blank space be filled by inserting the words 'within a period to be fixed by the chief controller.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 18,

1. Every person of Chinese origin who wishes to leave Canada, with the declared intention of returning thereto, shall give written notice of such intention to the controller of the port or place whence he purposes to sail or depart, in which notice shall be stated the foreign port or place which such person wishes to visit, and the route he intends taking both going and returning, and such notice shall be accompanied by a fee of one dollar; and the controller shall thereupon enter in a register to be kept for the purpose the name, residence, occupation and description of the said person, and such other information regarding him as is deemed necessary, under such regulations as are made for the purpose.

2. The person so registered shall be entitled on his return, if within six months of such registration, and on proof of his identity to the satisfaction of the controller (as to which the decision of the controller shall be final) to free entry as an exempt or to receive from the controller the amount of the tax, if any, paid by him on his return; but if he does not return to Canada within six months from the date of such registration, he shall, if returning after that date, be subject to the tax payable under the provisions of section 6 of this Act in the same manner as in the case of a first arrival.

Mr. CHARLTON. It has been represented that this period of six months is, under the circumstances, too short. When Chinamen, returning home, reach China, they have not the facilities for travelling in that country that we have here, and they are consequently delayed. The representation has been made to me by an intelligent Chinaman in this city, that this period of six months does not afford sufficient time for a Chinaman to return home, visit his friends and do whatever work he has to do. I would suggest to the Prime Minister that the period should be made twelve months.

Mr. MORRISON. One of the greatest difficulties in California was with regard to Chinamen going home and returning. It was proved conclusively that a great percentage of these people who got the certificates sold them to others in China and did not return themselves. The longer they stayed in China the greater the difficulty in detecting this fraud. I would point out that the furthest point from Vancouver to which these Chinamen return would be Hong Kong, and that can be reached by steamer. If there is some cogent reason given in a particular case, it might be left to the discretion of the controller to extend the time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. How long does it take from Vancouver?

Mr. MORRISON. Twenty-one days to Hong Kong, but Shanghai and other points are nearer. It is a notorious fact that a great many of these Chinamen sell their certificates in China and do not return here.

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me that so far as this fraud may be committed, it makes very little difference whether the period is six months or twelve months. The authorities must exercise due caution to prevent fraud of this kind. But on the face of it, this law provides certain regulations for the Chinaman who desires to go home to China, and return to British Columbia or Canada; and we start out with the supposition that he acts in good faith, not that he intends to commit fraud by sending another man in his place. It takes twenty-five days to reach Hong Kong; but his home may be in the interior, and when he reaches Hong Kong or Shanghai—for China is a vast empire, and it has not the means of communication that we have in this country—he may have to go to his home in a junk, or on foot, and, after his visit, return the same way; and it may take him the whole six months to go and return. I do not suppose the government wishes to inflict any hardship on these people beyond what the Bill is intended to impose, and I think it will make no difference if we substitute twelve months for six months. Give the poor fellow time enough to go home and return, and do not make the conditions any harder, for they are hard enough.

Mr. MAXWELL. I may say I have no particular objection to an extension of time. I am sure we are all perfectly willing to help them in any way we possibly can. They must be pretty well off individuals, if they are able to take such a trip, and spend so much time on their way.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If it takes twenty-one days to go out and twenty-one days to return, it seems to me that with all the restrictions contained in this Bill, the time should be extended. Six months would be almost useless. As the hon. member for North Norfolk has stated, the means of communication in that country are very different from what they are in our country, or in any European country, and travelling is very slow. It seems to me that with the restrictions which you have placed upon their leaving the country and returning, you had better make the time twelve months.

The PRIME MINISTER. Carried—twelve months.

Mr. PRIOR. As the object of the Bill is to keep Chinamen out of the country, it seems to me that extending the time to twelve months is going in the wrong direction. As the hon. member for New Westminster stated, it is almost impossible to distinguish these Chinamen from each other. The consequence is that when a man goes back to China, he is nearly always personated by a new man who comes in his place, and gets in without paying the tax. Instead of making the time twelve months in place of six months, I think it would be better to strike out the whole clause altogether, so that if they go out of the country, they will have to pay the tax to come in again.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, to the fact that I have not yet received the return with reference to the purchase of hay for the British government. I would also like to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the fact that I have not received those canteen papers yet.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, if he could not give me some indication of what letters he wants, as there is a great mass of correspondence from all parts of the country. If he wants the letters from New Brunswick, or from any other part of the country, I shall be glad to get them copied. I have several clerks at work on the return, but if he wants all the correspondence, it will take some time; but I shall be glad to meet his views in any way I can, if he will indicate to me what particular letters he wants.

Mr. FOSTER. What I want is the correspondence relating to the appointment of persons to purchase hay, the prices paid, what hay they purchased, and generally the information which was ordered by the House. I do not see how I can pick out from unknown correspondence what I want. The minister himself will know exactly what I do want. I want everything that will throw light on the purchase of this hay. If the hon. minister will do the New Brunswick portion up and bring it down, he will facilitate the work that much, but it is not simply that I want.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will bring some papers down just as soon as they are ready, and the hon. gentleman will then see what more he wants.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will bring the papers asked for down to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Department of Militia and Defence, including E. F. Jarvis at $1,600, H. D. J. Lane and J. B. Donaldson at $1,450 each, and G. W. Young at $700, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..... $44,670

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think, perhaps, in view of the prominence which has been given to military matters during the past few months, not only in this country, but in the empire at large, it is advisable that I should make a statement with reference to the condition of our militia force and give a somewhat detailed historical account of the events, not only of the past few months, but of the past four years during which I have held the position of Minister of Militia. Perhaps it may be desirable that I should go back a short time and review very briefly the militia of Canada from a historical point of view. In the first place, the raison d'être of the militia of this country is twofold. First, and chiefly, for purposes of defence against a possible enemy from the outside. Secondly, for the maintenance of public order within the country itself. That is, for the purpose of assisting the civil power when such assistance may be required. Every self-respecting country must provide means of defence, and in each country, as it grows and develops, the responsibilities of defence increase. In Canada to-day, the responsibilities of the government with reference to the question of defence are greater than they ever were in the past. Any one who will take the trouble—not going further back than the date of confederation, 1867—of looking at the history of the militia, will admit at once that the objects I have just mentioned, for which the militia was organized, have been fully met and fully served. I need only mention the fact of the Fenian raids which were made upon this country just about the time of confederation, 1866-7, and 1870-1, and the two North-west rebellions, to show that the Canadian militia is quite equal to the task of defending this country both against foreign invasion, threatened from the outside, and the rebellions which unfortunately took place within our own country. What has happened too within the past seven or eight months, I think, has justified in the highest degree the expectations of the men who established the militia of Canada, and has given the people of Canada great cause for congratulation. To have fitted out, within the short space of fourteen or fifteen days, a force of over 1,000 men, and despatched them fully equipped on a long journey six or seven thousand miles to assist in the Imperial war in South Africa was a deed of which, I think, the Department of Militia, and the country at large, have a right to be proud.

The first contingent was decided upon, and the general orders for its assembling issued on the 14th day of October. On the 30th of October that contingent sailed from the historical city of Quebec. The second contingent was decided upon in the month of December, and had it not been for the unfortunate mishap that the transport ship which had been engaged, was found to be unfit owing to an outbreak of fever on board, the second contingent would have set sail during the month of January.

Mr. McALISTER. When did it sail?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. A portion in the month of January, but the balance some time in February. Three transports had been chartered, and the largest one of the three was prevented from sailing in January, but did sail, I think, about the middle of February. One of the transports sailed on the 19th or 20th January, and the other on the 25th or 26th. Then again, there was Strathcona's Horse—although the idea was conceived by the generosity of Lord Strathcona, and the expenses paid by him, nevertheless the work of organizing that force devolved upon the Department of Militia, a duty which its employees were glad to undertake, and which they cheerfully performed.

I have here some statements as to the dates on which the orders were given for the recruiting of these contingents and the dates on which they set sail, and perhaps it may be desirable to put these on record. But I wish, before proceeding to that, to say this—that, in making the preparations for the sending out of the contingents at the very outset it was considered to be desirable that they should be entirely representative of the militia of the country and of every district in the country. And so, before the general orders were issued in October, the whole question was very carefully looked into from this point of view, and opportunities were given to every district to send its fair quota in proportion to the number of the militia in that district. I am happy to say that, in every district of the Dominion, the difficulty we had was not to get recruits, not to get officers, but was to select from among those who were so willing to go forward. In this way we have a representation in South Africa of every portion of the Dominion. And I felt that this was important for a reason beyond the sentimental idea of having every part of the Dominion represented. I felt there was a practical idea connected with it; and that was that the men who were allowed to go there and who would return to their respective homes, would, on coming back and rejoining their old corps have a beneficial effect on the militia from one end of the country to the other. And as with the men, so with the officers. Representatives were permitted to go from every part of the Dominion. And so, when this war is happily over, and our friends return to Canada, men from every part of the Dominion and connected with almost every corps in Canada of the acting militia, men who have seen service, will return to their duties with renewed energy and renewed interest, and the militia of Canada will profit by their experience. The first contingent was recruited by companies as follows:

- 'A.' British Columbia and Manitoba.
- 'B.' London.
- 'C.' Toronto.
- 'D.' Ottawa and Kingston.
- 'E.' Montreal.
- 'F.' Quebec.
- 'G.' New Brunswick.
- 'H.' Nova Scotia.

The regiment was concentrated at Quebec by the 29th of October, and it embarked on the ss. Sardinian on the 30th of October. The strength was 41 officers, 978 non-commissioned officers and men, 7 horses. Now, with reference to the second contingent, some criticism was made from the extreme east, and, I think, from the extreme west, of the Dominion because men were not accepted from certain districts. The reason is plain. We were sending mounted men, cavalry and artillery, exclusively, and it was felt that, as in the case of the first contingent, we were limiting ourselves to the infantry in drawing men and officers for that contingent, it was only fair to the cavalry and mounted troops and artillery that we should follow the same course with regard to them in the case of the second contingent and draw the men only from those corps that were already in existence. So it came about that some hardship was felt in some portions of the Dominion. But that is the reason I then gave and that I give now; and it is a reason which, I think, under the circumstances, will be considered a sound one. So far as British Columbia is concerned, any loss of opportunity which may have been felt there was amply made up in the organization of Lord Strathcona's

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Horse, which was recruited from Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia. I think that to-day our friends in British Columbia are as well represented on the battlefields of South Africa as any portion of the Dominion—in fact, I am not sure that they have not a larger representation than any other province according to the population. The orders for the organization of the second contingent (the Canadian Mounted Rifles and Brigade Division of Field Artillery) were given on the 20th of December, 1899. The squadrons and batteries were enrolled as follows:

First Battalion Mounted Rifles.

'A' Squadron.—First troop, Toronto; second troop, Toronto, St. Catharines; third troop, Peterborough, Ottawa, Montreal; fourth troop, London, Kingston.

'B' Squadron.—First troop, Winnipeg; second troop, Portage la Prairie, Virden, Brandon, Yorkton, Winnipeg; third troop, Montreal, Quebec, Cookshire; fourth troop, Sussex, N.B., St. John, N.B., Canning, N.S.

'C' and 'D' squadrons, 2nd battalion Mounted Rifles, were enrolled and concentrated under arrangements made by the commissioner, North-west Mounted Police, North-west Territories and British Columbia.

Brigade Division, Field Artillery.

Batteries were enrolled and concentrated as follows:

'C'.—Kingston, Gananoque, Winnipeg, Hamilton, St. Catharines, Toronto, concentrated at Kingston.

'D'.—Guelph, Ottawa, London, Port Hope, concentrated at Ottawa.

'E'.—Quebec, Montreal, Granby, Woodstock, Newcastle, Sydney, concentrated at Quebec.

This force embarked as follows: 'D' and 'E' batteries and the brigade staff on ss. Laurentian, 21st of January, 1900; the 2nd battalion, Canadian Mounted Rifles, on ss. Pomeranian, 27th January, 1900. The ss. Montezuma, which was chartered to convey 'C' battery and the 1st battalion, Canadian Mounted Rifles, and was expected to sail the 20th of January, was, owing to being placed in quarantine, not used. The ss. Milwaukee was chartered in her place. She arrived at Halifax on the 6th of February and sailed 21st of February. The strength of the contingent was as follows:

Canadian Mounted Rifles.—Officers, 38; N.-C. officers and men, 704; horses, 750.

Brigade Division of Artillery.—Officers, 19; N.-C. officers and men, 520; horses, 427.

The orders for the organization of Lord Strathcona's Horse were issued on the 1st of February, 1900. The force was recruited in British Columbia, the North-west Territories and Manitoba. It was concentrated at Ottawa, where it came under military control on the 24th of February, and embarked from Halifax on the ss. Monterey on the 17th of March. The strength was : Officers, 28 ; other ranks, 512 ; with 599 horses. We sent a further number of about 100 men to make up for losses which had by that time occurred in the first contingent. The orders for the organization of this force were issued on the 8th of March, 1900. And the recruiting was apportioned as follows : Toronto 20, Kingston 10, Montreal 10, Ottawa 10, St. John, N.B., 10, Halifax, 15, Charlottetown 15, Quebec 10. They concentrated at Halifax on the 13th of March—orders issued, as I have said, on the 8th of March. They embarked on the steamship Monterey on the 17th of March. The strength was : Officers 3, other ranks 101.

In order to fully cover the ground as to what has been done, either directly or growing out of the South African trouble, I must refer to the organization of a battalion to replace a portion of the Imperial Garrison in the city of Halifax. Owing to the unexpected requirements in South Africa, it was found necessary to send off a portion of the Imperial garrison from the city of Halifax. The Canadian government, with the approval of this House, at once offered to the Imperial government to replace the infantry regiment at Halifax with Canadian volunteers, and to that end a general order was issued on the 5th of March for the organization of a temporary battalion to replace the Imperial garrison there. The companies were recruited as follows :

- (a) Orders for organization were issued March 5, 1900.
- (b) The companies were recruited as follows:
  - 'A.' Right half, British Columbia ; left half, Manitoba.
  - 'B.' London, military district No. 1.
  - 'C.' Toronto, military district No. 2.
  - 'D.' Right half, Kingston military district Nos. 3 and 4; left half, Ottawa brigade.
  - 'E.' Montreal, military district No. 5.
  - 'F.' Right half, military district No. 6; left half, military district No. 7.
  - 'G.' Three sections St. John military district No. 8; one section, Charlottetown military district No. 12.
  - 'H.' Halifax, military district No. 9.

(c) The battalion, with the exception of the right half of 'A' company, which was detailed to assist in garrisoning Esquimalt, B.C., was taken over by the lieutenant-general commanding at Halifax on April 2.

(d) Strength : Officers, 29 ; N.-C. officers and men, 975; horses, 4.

Now, I would point out that during the North-west rebellion the total number of officers, men and horses sent to the North-west, was 251 officers, 3,042 non-commissioned officers and men, and 141 horses. It will be seen, therefore, that the forces equipped after the 14th day of October, and who were either on the way to South Africa or stationed at Halifax or Esquimalt, were very much in excess of the total number of officers and men sent forward to the North-west during the rebellion—800 more men, and 1,650 more horses. I mention this, not with any desire of making an invidious comparison, but merely to show that the work which was done exhibits the fact that the militia force of this country is a live and effective institution, that it has developed since 1885, and has done work which I am sure meets with the full approbation of every one in this country who takes an interest in military affairs.

Now, it is scarcely necessary for me to make any remarks as to the manner in which our troops have acquitted themselves in South Africa. That matter has been discussed here over and over again. The fact is that what they have done there is beyond and above what any weak words of mine could express. They have done all that could be expected of them, and that is saying a great deal. They have done all that could be expected from men of brains, men of strong muscle and strong endurance, men fitted by our mode of life in this country and by our climate to distinguish themselves in military service. We all desired that the Imperial authorities should show their confidence in our troops by giving them opportunities. There were critics here in the newspapers who said, when our first contingent was despatched, that they would be kept somewhere in the background doing garrison duty ; but we find that at the very earliest moment our men were given the opportunity that they were longing for, and so we have had a long list of actions in which our men have taken a distinguished part. The first great opportunity they had was at Paardeberg, where they were complimented by Lord Roberts himself. At Kroonstadt, later on, in the advance from Bloemfontein, our Mounted Rifles distinguished themselves, and they have been distinguishing themselves continuously from the date of the commencement of the march from Bloemfontein towards Pretoria. Again at Pretoria they were on hand, and, with the Australians and other colonial troops, contributed their important share to the capture of the Transvaal capital. So it was at Mafeking. We have the story of one of the most important and most extraordinary marches that ever occurred in the march of the Artillery under Major, now Lieut.-Col. Hudon, from Beira, to assist at the relief of Mafeking, and it is a matter of record that the part taken there by Canadians was of the utmost importance. So, I say, I think we have every right to feel entirely satisfied with the work which our troops have done in South Africa. Strathcona's Horse, coming upon the scene later in the day, have not had the same opportunity, but now we find that they have been given a prominent place, and to-day we hear that they are at the front with Gen. Buller at the moment when he is making an important junction with Lord Roberts. I have no doubt that under the able leadership of Col. Steele we shall very soon, if opportunity offers, if the war continues, hear of brave deeds by the force supplied so generously by that great friend of Canada and that great friend of the empire, Lord Strathcona. In this connection, perhaps, I may be permitted to say a word or two as to the work which has been done by the Militia Department, here at headquarters, and the Militia Department generally in the different districts throughout the Dominion. I do not know that I can do better, Mr. Chairman, than to quote very briefly from the report of the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence :

Of the work done in the department during the year, that connected with the organization, equipping and despatch of the first contingent, and the organization and equipping of the second contingent was, in a way, the most important, and possessed a more absorbing interest than any feature relating to military operations carried on in connection with the permanent force, or with the drill or manoeuvres of the active militia.

I take this opportunity of assuring you that the loyalty and patriotic devotion to Britain evinced by Canadians of every creed and nationality, and wherever living, also existed to the fullest extent among the officials of the department.

The work of organizing and enrolling the contingents was carried out with zeal by the officers of the military branch of the department, efficiently aided by the district officers commanding and staff officers in the various military districts.

As intimated elsewhere herein, practically the whole of the clothing, the necessaries, the equipment, &c., had to be purchased for the contingents and delivered to them within about two weeks.

To accomplish this the officials in the purchasing branch, in charge of Captain A. Benoit, worked early and late in a systematic and businesslike way that could not be excelled.

The distribution of the supplies, involving as it did a great amount of labour and exceptional care, was carried out very successfully by the stores branch, under the control of Lieut.-Col. Macdonald, chief superintendent of stores, who states that the officers of his branch spared neither time nor effort to thoroughly and rapidly do the work connected with the equipment of these forces.

The experience gained in connection with the sending out of the contingents, from the inception of the work until its completion, is regarded by the officers of all the branches of the department as having been of great advantage and service to them.

I cannot close this report without expressing my appreciation of the earnest co-operation I have received, throughout my first year as your deputy minister, from all the officials in the department. They have invariably discharged their duties in a most satisfactory and earnest manner. But I desire to especially refer to their willingness—I might say eagerness—to work with unremitting application in getting the contingents ready to go to South Africa. Night after night for weeks, some of the clerks in our department worked in their offices till a very late hour, and when necessity arose, they did not hesitate to come on Sundays and holidays; a number of them, in fact, cheerfully gave up both Christmas and New Year's Day to help to get their own particular work done and prevent delay. The work was done in a marvellously short time. That there was no hitch in the preparations nor any avoidable delay in the despatch of these troops, is due in a very great measure to the intelligent way in which this service was performed.

I take this opportunity of showing that I recognize and highly appreciate the zeal and efficiency displayed by the departmental staff in the discharge of their different duties.

I desire to add one word to this, and it is, that I endorse it absolutely. I was on the ground, and I had an opportunity of observing the unremitting zeal, as the deputy says, and the eagerness with which these men engaged in their duties. I never, in my life, saw or had to do with a more loyal and painstaking set of men than the men in the civil and military branches of my department. It was only necessary to suggest to them that something had to be done and they were ready to give to it their effort, their time and their attention without any thought of holidays or of the ordinary rest which they required. So, I most cheerfully endorse every word the deputy minister has said in reference to the efficient manner in which the officials of the Militia Department, both at headquarters and in the districts outside, have discharged their duties in connection with the despatch of these contingents.

It being six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in committee.)

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). At six o'clock I was referring to the duties discharged by the officials of the Militia Department in connection with sending off the contingents to South Africa, and I expressed my entire approval of the terms in which the deputy minister's report has spoken of that work. I may add that no one who was not engaged in the midst of that work could have the slightest idea of the enormous increase of labour involved in it. From the moment the orders were first issued in October up to the present time, the work of the department has been abnormally increased, and that will continue until the last of our men have returned to their homes.

Now, Sir, I want, for a few minutes, to call attention—I think, perhaps, this is a most appropriate time to do it—to the charge which has been made in some quarters; in the press, in this House and elsewhere, to the effect that the present administration of the Militia Department is influenced largely by political considerations. I wish to give that insinuation—that statement boldly made in some instances—a flat contradiction, and to challenge any one in this House or out of it to prove the truth of any such assertion. I say that in the administration of the department, both here at Ottawa and in the outside service, politics has not exercised an undue or improper influence. Let me point to the personnel of the officers of the contingents. I assert that the officers in every single instance were chosen with reference specially and chiefly to their fitness, and so far as politics are concerned, it so happens, I believe, that a very considerable majority of the officers happen to belong to the Conservative party. The question may be asked: How does that occur? It has been sometimes the habit of our friends on the other side of the House to claim special ownership of all the patriotism and all the loyalty in this country, although, I think that to-day that claim will not be reasserted. Nevertheless, I have seen the statement made: That the reason there are a majority of Conservative officers on the contingent is because the Liberals did not volunteer. Well, Sir, that is not true. I believe that five men volunteered for every one we were able to accept, and I have no doubt that if the minister had been actuated by a desire simply to reward political friends it would have been quite possible for him to have found among the gentlemen who volunteered a sufficient number of Liberals to officer these contingents. But, as I say, we were not actuated by any such motives. I asked the officers at the head of the militia here to advise me as to the best men to fill these positions, and I think that in every single case their advice was followed. But, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that in the militia of Canada there is a larger number of officers belonging to the Conservative party than to the Liberal party, and the reason of that is as follows: Going back to the time of the reorganization of the militia after confederation, in 1868 and 1869, there was a Conservative government in power, and that Conservative government—I do not say wrongly; I do not say whether rightly or wrongly—the Conservative government then in power chose the officers to take charge of the different districts in Canada, and the officers to command the various regiments in Canada, largely out of their own party. And so, these officers, having the right under the regulations to select the captains and lieutenants under them, they chose a preponderance of Conservatives. That is a simple, plain statement of the truth. If there ever was any politics in the militia it was at the time that the reorganization of the militia took place in 1869. Now, I am here not only to say that there has been no politics, so far as the active militia is concerned, under the present administration, but I will say that there has been no undue interference on the part of past ministers of the governments which have preceded the present government. I venture to say that there has scarcely been an instance since 1869 down to the present date; I doubt if there has been a single instance in which a Minister of Militia has interfered with the regular course of promotions in the militia. I insist that that is the truth under the existing regime, and I am quite prepared to concede, knowing nothing to the contrary at the present time, that it was the custom under the rule of my predecessors.

Now, Sir, let me briefly analyse the appointments, or some of them, made in the militia since I took office. First, let me refer to the chief appointment, that of Adjutant General of Militia. When I came into office that position was vacant. The Assistant Adjutant General of Militia, Colonel Aylmer, was thoroughly familiar with the duties of the office of adjutant general, and I presume that if the late government had remained in power, they would have appointed him to the vacant position. By general consent, it was felt that he deserved the position, and he was appointed to it. Not on account of any political leaning. His family may be connected with the Liberal party; I believe they are; but that fact had nothing whatever to do in influencing the government to appoint him. Another important appointment which had to be made, was that of Assistant Adjutant General of Artillery. Instead of looking around for a political friend to fill that position, I asked General Gascoigne, then the General Officer Commanding, and another Imperial officer, to advise me as to the best man for the position. They agreed in recommending Lieutenant-Colonel Cotton, then district officer commanding at Kingston, and he was appointed.

Mr. PRIOR. You could not have got a better man.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I believe Colonel Cotton belongs to a Conservative family, and is himself a moderate Conservative. I do not care to inquire into that. He has been a very efficient officer, and I have never had any reason to regret his appointment. Then we had to appoint an Assistant Adjutant General. I again asked General Gascoigne to assist me. He took the list of officers of the permanent force, and from that list selected Lieutenant-Colonel Cartwright, who now fills that position. I believe that was an equally good appointment. In the outside service, we had to fill positions at Montreal, at Quebec, and at St. Johns, Que. We selected Colonel Gordon, who had been in charge of the school at Fredericton, to fill the important position of district officer commanding in the district of Montreal. Colonel Gordon was a life-long Conservative, belonging to a Kingston Conservative family, but he was selected on account of his fitness for the position, and I have had no occasion to regret his selection.

Mr. PRIOR. Was he not a junior?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, he was one of the seniors. Then we had to appoint a district officer commanding for the district of Quebec, and the selection we made, was the subject of some criticism. A gentleman was selected, who was, no doubt, quite a junior; I refer to Lieutenant-Colonel Pelletier, then, I think Captain Pelletier. This gentleman was selected by General Gascoigne, and the other officers of the staff here approved of that selection, and he was appointed. Lt.-Colonel Pelletier had distinguished himself in the North-west rebellion; and it was necessary to appoint a French Canadian. Although I have been criticised for having appointed so young a man, I have never heard any one yet say whom I should have appointed in place of Lieutenant-Colonel Pelletier. He is now in South Africa, distinguishing himself there as he distinguished himself in the North-west. I may say that the generals and staff at Ottawa have told me repeatedly that Lieut.-Colonel Pelletier is one of the brightest and most brilliant officers in the Canadian militia. Lieutenant-Colonel Roy, I believe, is a Conservative. He was selected on account of his fitness, for the position of district officer commanding at St. Johns, on the south side of the St. Lawrence River. He had had special opportunities of fitting himself by a course in England. It was necessary to have a French Canadian for that position also, and he was chosen by the staff, and recommended to me as a man eminently qualified for the place. I believe that the result has justified his selection. So I might go on; but suffice it to repeat, that in making my appointments, I have not been actuated by political motives. I have not refused my political friends their chance; and, as I have said before in this House, where the qualifications and claims from a military standpoint are equal in any two cases, I should feel it my duty, under our system of government in this country, to give the place to a political friend; but I would consider that I was far from doing my duty, if I passed over a better qualified man, because he happened to be a Conservative, to give the place to a man who was not well qualified, because he happened to be a Liberal. In the department at Ottawa, we have advanced some clerks more rapidly than others. It so happens that the clerk of the Militia Department, who has been the most rapidly advanced, is the man who was private secretary to my predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Patterson; I refer to Mr. Jarvis. I found him a second-class clerk; he is today a first-class clerk; and we have asked this House, session after session, to vote him special sums of money other than the statutory increase, because he is qualified, and because he is doing work for which, even with what we are giving him, I do not consider him fully or adequately paid. I will not detain the House longer on this point; but I thought it was only fair to myself to state that I have not been actuated by political considerations to the detriment of the service, and to challenge any one who has that opinion, to make it good. I may say, with reference to the permanent force, that when I came into office, I was told that every officer of that force, with two exceptions, was a Conservative. The two exceptions were Lieutenant-Colonel Pelletier and Lieutenant-Colonel Cartwright; and I believe that to my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron), is due the honour—the fairness, at any rate—of having appointed those two officers. It is very undesirable that the militia, either the active or the permanent force, should be political in any special sense of the word. I think it is in the interests of the people and the militia of this country, that the force should be representative of every class of the people, and of both political parties. Since I came into office, I have appointed a great many men to the permanent force, and among these appointments, I think, at least half have been Conservatives—men belonging to well-known Conservative families.

After I had been in office a couple of years, I took the precaution to have certain regulations made controlling the appointments of officers to the permanent force, taking the appointments very largely out of the sphere of politics, so that today a man cannot be appointed to the permanent force unless he is under the age of 25, and unless he is a graduate of the Royal Military College or possesses a certificate of having matriculated at one of the chartered universities of Canada, and has passed certain examinations in military work; so that in the future, if the regulations which became law on July 1, 1898, are followed out, we shall have, as a chief requisite to appointments to the permanent force, the military knowledge and skill and the experience which would justify such appointments.

I wish to call attention for a short time to the work which has been done in the department in addition to what I have already mentioned. The most prominent feature perhaps of the administration of the Militia Department during the last four years has been the adoption of the principle of annual drill for the whole of the militia. So far as it is possible to do that, we have had the whole force drilled every year since 1896. I felt, as an old militiaman, that it was of the first importance, in view of the short time—only twelve days—during which our militia are drilled, that we should have that drill annually, and that every corps should be turned out once a year for its regular drill, because under the old system of having the drill every other year, or every three years, it was found that the men lost all the benefit which they derived from their first twelve days drill. It is true that you cannot get the same men into camp every year, but you will get a larger percentage, when you have the annual drill, than you would under the old system. When you have the twelve days drill every year, you get far more for your money than if you leave an interval of one or two years between drills as was the case under the old system. In that connection the permanent force has been largely utilized in the camps to assist in the training of the active militia. This has also been very useful to the permanent force itself as well as an immense advantage to the officers and men of the active militia.

Another reform which has been carried out, but which was to some extent introduced by my predecessor, is the limiting of the term of commanding officers. Prior to the advent of the present administration to power, a regulation was passed limiting, in the case of all future appointments, the term of the command of a lieutenant-colonel to five years or at most to eight years. After looking carefully over the field and finding a large number of lieutenant-colonels who have been in command for terms running from ten to thirty years, I made up my mind—and I know that all the military men will not approve of this—upon the advice of the staff in Ottawa, that it would be wise to make the law retroactive, and that we should at once, as rapidly as possible, get rid of the lieutenant-colonels who had served over five years and give opportunities for promotion to those beneath them. Undoubtedly the most important thing in connection with the military force is to have thoroughly qualified officers, but under the old system this was absolutely impossible. Where you had men retaining command for twenty or thirty years, the majors and captains and lieutenants acting under them, perhaps fifty or sixty years of age, what chance was there of promotion, and what inducement was there either for young men to join the militia or for men to remain in it? Every man who accepts a commission from Her Majesty, if he is the right kind of man, looks forward to some day occupying a position of command. That is all there is in it for him, and that is the reward to which he should look forward. But under the old system, with a lieutenant-colonel remaining in command for life, and his major and captains and lieutenants under him, there was no chance, except when death occurred, for any promotion whatever. Now, by the present rule, the lieutenant-colonel goes out automatically at the end of five years, or at the most he may have eight years command. Then his major, if qualified succeeds him, and the junior major, and so on. Each one takes a step in advance until he reaches the top, so that every man who enters the militia now, no matter how young he may be, or how far down on the list, may fairly hope that the day will come when he will be rewarded for the time he has spent in the militia, by receiving either the command of the battalion itself or some higher position in the corps than the one he holds. I look upon this as one of the most important changes which have been made in the militia corps.

Then we have been endeavouring to carry out the enforcement of the age limit. The age limit of a lieutenant-colonel was sixty-three, and this has been reduced to sixty. I need not give the different limits of the different officers; but suffice it to say that at present, automatically, when the limit of age is reached, each officer goes on the reserve list; and let me say here that we have established what we call a reserve list, upon which the officers who have retired are placed, so that if an emergency should arise, they can be called upon, and that list is being increased every day. That list is composed of men who have had experience in command. If an emergency should arise we have to-day a very large number of competent officers at the disposal of the country. In addition to that, an unattached list has been established with largely the same object in view. So, as a result of what I have been speaking about, we have to-day in Canada a very much larger number of efficient and effective officers than we ever had before.

Another reform which has been carried out by the department in the last two years is the establishment of a cadet corps in connection with the high schools and the collegiate institutes in the province of Ontario. I do not say that we have originated this, but we have introduced new regulations and have afforded very much greater facility than ever existed before. New regulations have been issued respecting cadet corps in collegiate institutes and high schools, and lately these have been extended to include public schools. This has led to the formation of a large number of cadet corps, which are feeders to the militia and are a great benefit in that they give lads a taste for soldiering. In June of last year regulations were promulgated for the formation of cadet battalions and cadet corps to be attached to existing battalions of militia. In special cases they may be formed independently of any existing corps. These corps are to consist of youths from fourteen to eighteen years. A few such corps have been already organized under this regulation; and in time a number of them will be formed. In the city of Montreal, I believe, there are two, and there are also some in Toronto. Steps have also been taken to organize engineer companies. We have today only two engineer companies in the whole Dominion, one in the province of New Brunswick, and one in Prince Edward Island. It is proposed to extend these to the universities. The University of McGill and the University of Toronto have indicated their willingness to co-operate and to facilitate in every way in their power the organization of engineer companies within these universities, and steps have been taken to that end. Instructions in Maxim gun drill have commenced. In 1898 the first instructions in Maxim gun drill were given in Canada, and it is now carried on in the various schools of instruction. A veterinary department has been authorized and, beginning with 1899, a course of instructions for veterinary officers was provided. Another important and novel change in the administration of the militia within the last four years has been the interchange of units of the permanent corps in Canada with units of the Imperial forces. In 1897 a company of the Royal Canadian Regiment of Infantry was exchanged with the Royal Berkshire Regiment stationed at Halifax, and, early in the next year, a company of the Royal Canadian Garrison Artillery was similarly exchanged with a company of the Royal Artillery. These interchanges have had happy results, particularly the first named, tending as they do to bring the militia into touch with the army.

Then we had, in 1898, a defence commission sitting here in Ottawa, composed of the following officers: Major-General Leach, president, Capt. White, R.N., Col. Dalton, Royal Artillery, and Major Lake, then Quartermaster General of Canada, East Lancashire Regiment. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and myself represented the Canadian government as part of that commission. I cannot, of course, make public any of the recommendations which were made, but suffice it to say, that these gentleman were eminently qualified for the work they were set to do, and they took the greatest pains to inform themselves as to the condition of affairs; and, to-day, the work which they did forms part of the Imperial defence system. And, so far as we have the means at our disposal, the Militia Department is endeavouring to carry out the recommendations made by that commission. Then, perhaps, I may be pardoned for mentioning as one of the things which has been accomplished under the present regime, the giving of a general service medal for Canada. In the early summer of 1898, Her Majesty the Queen was graciously pleased to approve a general service medal for Canada, to be bestowed upon those who have served in the defence of their country, and which has so far been given to those who served in repelling the Fenian raids of 1866 and 1870, and in quelling the rebellion of 1870. This medal, it is to be understood, is not simply, as it has been called, the 'Fenian raid medal,' but is a general service medal for Canada. In the future, whenever anything occurs that renders it proper to reward any meritorious act by the giving of a medal, this will be the medal to be bestowed. Of course, the particular operation for which it is given will be indicated by the clasp and the name. My hon. friends opposite, from time to time, were petitioned by the veterans of 1866 and 1870 and their friends to procure some recognition of the great services rendered in those two years. But, up to the time of the coming into power of the present government, no progress whatever had been made. There is nothing that has occurred during my administration which I feel prouder to have had some connection with than the fact that this medal, coming late though it does, has at last been granted and the services rendered by these men who fought for the very existence, we may say, of this country in 1866 and 1870, has been recognized. There is another matter in this connection to which I wish particularly to refer. Some years ago, the Imperial government gave to the volunteers of Great Britain a long-service medal. Attempts were made, from time to time, to procure for the militia of the colonies, and of Canada especially, a similar recognition. We claimed to have a force in Canada which, though called a militia, was essentially a volunteer force, and one more closely resembling the volunteer force of Great Britain than the militia of Great Britain. After a great deal of correspondence, and after a special board, appointed by the War Office, had looked into this matter, it was at last decided to grant the long service medal and decoration. And, during the past year, Her Majesty has been pleased to give long service decorations to officers of the colonial auxiliary forces, and a long-service medal for the men.

Regulations governing the issue of this decoration and medal to the Canadian militia have been framed and forwarded to England for the approval of the right hon. the Secretary of State for War. As soon as these regulations have been finally approved, the necessary steps will be taken for the issue of the decoration and medal to officers and men entitled to them. I have already referred to the appointments to the permanent force. New regulations respecting appointments to the permanent force, requiring candidates to be within a certain age limit, twenty-five, and to be a graduate of the Royal Military College, and to be in possession of a long course certificate of qualification, and to have passed a literary examination, have been in force since July 1, 1898. These regulations are very strict, but they were necessary to ensure that appointments to the permanent corps are made from the best material available. Another important reform which has been recently brought into effect, is insisting that every field officer should take a course in equitation. We had in the past some extraordinary examples of the necessity for a course of this kind, and with the recommendation of the staff officers here, a little more than two years ago, that matter was taken up, and a regulation was passed, requiring all field officers and adjutants of battalions, infantry and rifles, to qualify in equitation, and requiring officers to hold equitation certificates to make them eligible for promotion in field rank, or for appointment as adjutant. This rule has been strictly adhered to from the time that regulation was made. Then another important reform which has been inaugurated is supplying professional schools of instruction. It was found to be a great hardship to compel officers who were busily engaged in the various walks of life to earn their living, to go away and spend a long time at the different depots. I do not say that this was not done before in any instance, but I say it has been done much more frequently during the past two or three years, than it ever was done before. Schools of that kind were established at Quebec, at Montreal, at Halifax, and I think St. John, N.B., and in addition, in the annual camps of instruction.

Early in 1897, regulations were promulgated, providing for the formation of provisional schools for infantry officers in centres, as might be required from time to time. A number of these schools have been held and in consequence a large number of officers have been enabled to obtain certificates, who would not have been able to do so otherwise.

Then the course of instruction has been somewhat modified at the different depots. In February, 1899, the duration of the short course of infantry instruction was reduced from three months to two. Officers reporting to undergo this course are now examined by a board, and if it is found they have no military training, they are required to undergo what is known as a cadet course. At the end of the cadet course, if they are able to pass a prescribed examination, they are qualified for the appointment of lieutenant. They are also then eligible to undergo the short course. This change, in many cases, necessitates officers going twice to a school, where once sufficed before, but on the other hand, it provides that officers who have considerable knowledge of their duties will not be kept back by officers who know nothing.

Then another thing which I think worth mentioning in this connection, is the establishment of a band. An efficient band in connection with the garrison division of the Royal Canadian Artillery at Quebec, has been organized. We have now a really first-class band in connection with the permanent force, and the question of establishing courses of instruction in music for bandmasters and sergeants of bands, is under consideration. This will probably be undertaken at an early date. Bands, which are so essential in connection with our militia, will become more efficient, which will materially benefit the militia generally. I think my hon. friends opposite, who are interested in this matter will highly approve of this new departure. There is one other matter to which I would like to allude in some detail. I found, as my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) will know, that the medical branch of the militia service was very defective, as I think he will agree with me it always has been, through no fault of his own, I am sure. But it has so happened in this country that it has rather been the fashion to neglect that which is perhaps one of the most important branches of the service. I have been myself over thirty years connected with the medical branch of the service. I have been principal medical officer several times when my hon. friend was Minister of Militia and Defence, I think; and the reports of those days will show that medical men were calling attention to the fact that the outfit with which they were supplied in camp was altogether inadequate. I think, however, that during my hon. friend's tenure of office, the first real step toward improvement was made. I think when General Herbert was here, that some decided steps were taken, and I think my hon. friend was Minister of Militia at that time. At any rate it was begun at that time, long after it ought to have begun, and it has been carried on, I will not say to perfection, but very great strides have been made in the right direction during the last year.

In July, 1896, the medical service consisted of regimental medical officers only. The service was carried out in an unsatisfactory manner, without method or system. Few militia medical officers had any conception of their military duties, besides those strictly pertaining to their civil profession. I may say it was not their fault, they had not had an opportunity up to that time. To be entirely fair, I may say that under my hon. friend's regime, a system of lectures was undertaken, either in 1888 or 1889. I remember that some of the principal medical officers from the depots were sent out from the camp, and delivered courses of lectures to the medical men there. I had the pleasure myself of attending one course of such lectures at Aldershot, and the equipment of panniers, &c., shown there was of a very satisfactory character. But it was nothing like a general system. In some military districts, however, some of the more zealous senior medical officers endeavoured to convey to their subordinates some insight of what a militia medical organization should be. The medical equipment was barely sufficient for the regiments of the annual camps of instruction. The necessity for a head for the militia medical service, to create an organization suited to our militia system, yet modern and closely in line with the Imperial medical service, which has proved itself so effective, was apparent. This officer would organize, direct, unify and administer it. He would be the headquarters, advising the military and civil branches on questions directly pertaining to the discipline, equipment, requirements and administration of the militia. Lieut.-Col. Neilson, an officer who I had reason to believe had large experience—who, I may say, was the gentleman who gave the course of lectures to which I refer in Nova Scotia camp in 1888, or 1889, and who was then, I think, the principal medical officer at Kingston or at Quebec—and had displayed already zeal and administrative ability, being also senior medical officer in the militia, was selected for this duty, and took up his duties at headquarters permanently on the 1st of February, 1899. The outcome has been that, at the present moment our militia army medical staff consists of: One director general at headquarters, seven lieut.-colonels, seventeen majors, twenty-two captains, and twenty-five lieutenants, unified into one corps, having promotion within the corps, wearing a departmental uniform with special distinctive badge, &c. This makes a total of seventy-two officers gazetted to the army medical staff, twenty-seven of whom are detailed in command of, or as subalterns of five bearer companies, and four field hospital companies of the army medical corps. That is an entirely new departure which my hon. friend, I think, will admit. We had no such things as bearer companies or field hospital companies of the army medical corps. It is proposed during this session and henceforth annually, to increase the army medical corps by eight units (four bearer companies, and four field hospitals) until a complement sufficient for a complete army corps of 36,000 men is reached, viz.: thirty-one medical units. The $18,000 appropriation of last session for this special service has been expended in procuring technical equipment for this corps, surgical and medical panniers, &c., as detailed in the army medical manual for field service, 1898, consisting also of stretchers, ambulance, wagons, water carts, cacolets, &c. An equipment embodying the most recent improvements for field hospital service is being devised, including ambulances, Munson's ventilated hospital tents, &c.; also requisites for carrying out the drills and training of officers and members of the army medical corps, as detailed in Militia Order 21, 1900; and General Order 19, 1900. Courses of special training under qualified instructors and assistants will shortly be opened. They will give medical officers opportunities of qualifying for their commissions, as provided for in General Order 62, 1899. We have been in the habit of sending officers over to England for special instruction at Netley. We are still doing that, but now we are undertaking to give instruction in Canada, and at present we have a number of men who have taken a course in the old country, who are quite competent to give this instruction. Several medical officers, and four non-commissioned officers have been sent to and obtained qualifying certificates at the Royal Army Medical Corps Training School at Aldershot. Eight militia medical officers are now serving with our troops in South Africa. Some of them have already been given special praise for bravery, zeal and devotion to duty. I may mention Dr. Fiset especially. These officers were selected not only on account of their proved professional ability, but on account of their youth, bodily strength, and love of the service, so that on their return to Canada we may count for many years on the valuable experience they will have acquired. Each combatant unit sent to South Africa was provided with the medical equipment ordered by Imperial regulations, also with specially ample ship medical supplies.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. DAVIN. He is reading it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) object to my reading? I am sure that he is as tired of it as I am, but this is the quickest way to get through.

Mr. FOSTER. Take a reef or two in it, and shorten it up.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will do the best I can, but this is a very important part of the work.

Mr. DAVIN. I apologize to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden). It was a whisper, and I did not intend it to reach his ear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was audible here. It is proposed that the bearer companies will perform their annual training at the unit's headquarters, except two days, which will be devoted to field manoeuvres with troops, at the close of brigade or divisional camps; while the field hospital companies will act and train as such in the camps, replacing the old station hospital system, of little practical training value. It is proposed to supply the field hospital with the newly invented Munson's field hospital tent, which has been found excellent in the United States army medical service. While we have established this army medical corps very largely on the lines of the Imperial service, we have retained, what has not been done in the Imperial service, the regimental medical service in a modified form so that now instead of two medical men in each regiment there is one. Many of the second medical officers have been drafted into the army medical staff. The system of promoting these officers has been changed. Their first appointment are now in the lower rank. They are obliged to qualify for further promotion, and their period of regimental service has been limited. Per contra their rate of pay has been raised to the level of the pay of officers of corresponding combatant rank. In addition to the field hospital accommodation and equipment available in camps of instruction, it is proposed now to supply the regimental medical officers with emergency cases. This is a new feature, which will be appreciated, no doubt. Regimental medical officers are now obliged to organize, instruct and drill during fixed periods, their battalion stretcher bearer sections. For that purpose a syllabus of a course has been drawn up by the director general. A loan equipment box containing books, diagram, technical necessaries, is now at the disposal of corps, together with light field stretchers. A reserve of medical officers has been created where officers desirous of retiring from the active lists either of the army medical staff or regimental service, can be placed, and yet remain available for service should they be needed. So that those hon. gentlemen who are following me, and who take an interest in the subject, will see that a great number of improvements have been made in the medical branch of the service. In my opening statement I omitted to refer to two matters which I will simply refer to as part of the important work which has been carried out by the Militia Department since 1896. I refer to the preparation for sending forward of a contingent to represent Canada at the Queen's Jubilee in 1897, and also to the sending forward to Selkirk and Dawson of the Yukon force of 200 men. In both of these instances great honour was reflected upon Canada, and in the march which was made through a very difficult country to Selkirk by the force that we sent to the Yukon, additional proof, if proof were necessary, was given of the hardihood and capacity of the Canadian volunteers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say two or three words as to the future of the militia. That is the aspect of the case, which, I suppose, is occupying more of the attention of those who are especially interested in military matters, not only here, but I may say throughout the world, and especially, we know, it is the case in the mother country. It is too soon yet to propose to undertake to lay down any change of policy. I am bound to say that I believe, as I said in the opening, that the militia of Canada has fairly well fulfilled the expectations of those by whom it was established, and I think, that what has happened has shown that, whatever may be in store in future there is no force of men anywhere in the world more capable, perhaps as capable, of adapting themselves to new circumstances as are the militiamen of Canada. It is obvious that there are two or three lessons to be learned from the South African war which we must pay heed to. The military force of the future must be one capable of great mobility; a force which can be rapidly moved from place to place. In that connection the question of changing largely the infantry to mounted infantry is one which will claim very careful consideration. So far as my view of the subject goes, I think that we in Canada should at any rate make the experiment, and I propose during the next financial year to make the experiment in Manitoba and the Northwest. It is proposed there to change the cavalry into mounted infantry, and to change the only corps of infantry there into mounted infantry also. In certain other centres the nuclei will be established to make at least one regiment of mounted infantry.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The same experiment will probably be tried to a more limited extent in the east. Another lesson and probably the most important one to be learned from the war in South Africa, is the importance of teaching, not only the volunteers but everybody who is willing to learn the use of the rifle.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have already done a great deal in Canada in that regard. We have appropriated money in this parliament for the encouragement of rifle shooting, and we have constructed almost under the shadow of this building perhaps one of the best rifle ranges in the world. We are now constructing rifle ranges in British Columbia, in Montreal, in Lévis, in St. John, N.B., and we are perfecting and improving the rifle ranges near Halifax. Last year we constructed a magnificent range near the city of Hamilton, and so on throughout the Dominion as fast as the parliamentary grants will permit us. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the idea of affording every facility to the people to learn the use of the rifle. Any one who follows the current literature and reads the reviews will be struck with the large amount of space devoted to this subject. The Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary Review, all the leading magazines contain the expressions of the desire of able men—not confined to soldiers alone—expressions of men who are honestly trying to work out the means by which the people at the lowest cost to a country shall be taught that important accomplishment of the use of the rifle. I read an article quite recently which describes the method in vogue in Switzerland, and so far as my study of the different military systems of the world has gone, I am convinced that for Canada the most useful method for us to imitate is the Swiss system which is the most inexpensive system in the world to-day. Every man in Switzerland is a soldier; every man takes his rifle home with him and is completely equipped, and at an hour's notice almost, is ready to take the field. The matter is so carefully studied in Switzerland with a view to taking the men as little as possible away from their ordinary avocations, that they are adapted under the military system to the callings which they follow in civil life. The blacksmith is a farrier, the carpenter is utilized for artificer's work, and so on, and when they are called upon for military service, they are simply acting as far as possible in the line of their everyday work. But this is a digression. The Swiss Rifle Club system is one which the military men of Canada might well give some attention to. I have read the article to which I have referred with a great deal of profit, and I am sending for the books quoted there so that I may pursue the study further. I gather from that article that many of the clubs are directly connected with the military system of Switzerland, but there are as well independent clubs including not only men enlisted in the active military service but men altogether outside of it. If some system of that kind could be devised in Canada it would be very desirable. We have it to some extent now. We have rifle leagues which have done very good service, and are doing good service. I do not know whether they were inaugurated under the rule of my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) or before, but at all events I look upon them as one of the best features of our system, and one deserving of encouragement in every way. We have distributed last year between 150,000 and 200,000 rounds of ammunition free. We have been in the habit during the last three or four years of giving free ammunition to the Dominion Rifle Association. We are giving to a number of rifle associations free ammunition and also to the rifle league, to some extent. At any rate we shall not curtail that.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. To what extent are you giving that free ammunition?

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think for their rifle matches only, but perhaps to some extent for their practice. I think we could at least go so far as to sell to the rifle clubs their ammunition at cost price.

Mr. DAVIN. And you will supply them with rifles too?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly. We have been in the habit of loaning rifles and taking bonds for their safe return and care.

Mr. DAVIN. May I ask the minister what progress he has made with the promise he gave in the earlier part of the session to provide for rifle associations in the North-west?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have already sent forward several instalments of rifles. I think Moose-jaw and Regina—at least three points in the North-west, and I think more than that.

Mr. DAVIN. Have any been sent to Swift Current?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I could not tell the hon. gentleman now; I will give him the information later.

Mr. DAVIN. Before leaving this part of the question, I hope my hon. friend will explain what system he has inaugurated; because he will remember that in the early part of the session he told me that until some legislation took place he would not be able to meet the views of the associations in the North-west Territories, and I would like to know how these associations now get their rifles.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There has been no departure. I do not think I said that legislation would be necessary. That remark referred to the establishment of mounted rifles; but my recollection of my answer to the hon. gentleman's question is that I said I was considering the subject. We have for years had rifle clubs, particularly in the North-west, where there is no militia organization. We have felt that we ought to encourage these clubs as much as possible on the lines which have existed in the department for a considerable time; that is, an organization is formed, the minutes are forwarded to Ottawa, we find that the people are the proper kind of people, they are recommended by the district officer commanding; and the rifles are issued, bonds being accepted by the department for their safe-keeping.

Mr. DAVIN. My object is just to elicit the information. Early in the session, after receiving the reply of the minister, I saw Mr. Pinault, the deputy, and he showed me a Bill on the table before him, and said: We cannot do anything for these associations yet; but when this Bill is passed, we shall be able to meet the wishes of your friends at Moosejaw and elsewhere.' I pointed out to the minister in this House that the Moosejaw association had already been supplied with rifles. So that now I understand any rifle association that can show that it is composed of responsible persons can get rifles by applying to the Department of Militia.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. I omitted to refer to the improvements which have taken place in the Royal Military College. I think the success which has attended the administration of that college during the last four years must gratify everybody in Canada, and I think the Department of Militia has some right to feel proud of what has taken place. I am sure that everybody in Canada who had any doubt as to whether that college should be continued or not, has no longer any doubt on that question. When we consider that in South Africa to-day there are some eighty or ninety officers representing Canada who are graduates of that college, among them some of the most distinguished officers in the British army, I think we may feel that all the expenditure which has been incurred for that college has been amply justified by the result. Nothing has done more to bring Canada to the front, so far as the empire is concerned, than the Royal Military College. Men have gone forth from it who have distinguished themselves in their sphere as greatly as any men in the whole British Empire. I do not intend to animadvert or reflect in any way upon the condition of things which we found when we came into office. Our predecessors had been anxious to make a change in that college. For some reason or other, the change had not been made. I felt it to be my first duty as Minister of Militia to see that that change was made, and we were exceedingly fortunate in the selection made for us by the Imperial authorities of an officer to take command of the college. Everybody, I think, will agree that Col. Kitson is the right man in the right place. The college has never done better work than it is doing at the present moment. It is true, the term has been reduced from four years to three years. Many friends of the college felt that that was a dangerous experiment. I am bound to say that I felt some doubt on that score myself. But I am glad to find that the college has not in any respect deteriorated. The age for entrance has been raised and the requirements of matriculation have been increased.

Mr. PRIOR. What is the age of entrance—seventeen years?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes; one year older than before. The commandant has assured me that with the increased age and the increased requirements, in the three years term we shall send out young men as fully equipped for their life work, be it in the army or elsewhere, as any who have ever been sent from the college. We have to-day something like ninety students. Over fifty young men went up for their matriculation examination in May, and to-day it is a question of competition to get into the college—a condition of things which I believe has not existed more than once before in the history of the college; and I think thirty-eight have entered. So highly is the college thought of that the authorities of the Imperial War Office no longer wait for young men to graduate; but we are constantly being asked to allow the cadets to accept commissions in the British army. Only the other day thirteen cadets received commissions at the end of their second year; and shortly after that four or five commissions in addition to those given annually, were given to cadets. So I say we have every reason to feel satisfied with the work that is being done at the college. I suppose it would be better, so far as the votes are concerned, to explain each as it comes up. But there is just one word I would like to say in connection with proposals for the future, and that is that very much might be done by the co-operation of the provinces in the matter of introducing a system of drill into the provincial schools. If this government would supply instructors, as we are now doing to a large extent, to the higher schools, some arrangement might be made. I have already spoken to the Minister of Education and the Premier of Ontario and also of Nova Scotia about making some arrangement under which the provincial government would require that a system of drill be taught to the tutors in the Normal schools, and that before Normal school teachers received their school certificates, they should have to pass an examination qualifying them to teach the rudiments of drill in the schools and that the provincial legislature should insist that drill be taught in the schools, if only for fifteen or twenty minutes per day, so that a commencement would be made in the way of teaching drill to the boys. That would improve their physical condition and give them a taste for military affairs and make it very much easier for them, later on in life, to become proficient when they would join some military organization of the country. I have to thank the committee for having so patiently listened to what I am afraid has been a rather tedious statement.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). I happen to be on the retired list as a militiaman, but I remember the day when, as Minister of Militia and Defence, I took, not a deeper interest than I do to-day, in military matters, but when I had to see to the organization of the force. I may tell the hon. gentleman, at the very outset, that in sending the contingents to South Africa he did his work well. As an old Minister of Militia I appreciated the work which the hon. gentleman was called upon to perform, and from old experience knew the difficulties he had to contend with. But, I must say that the difficulties in his case were very much less than those which existed at the time when I was at the head of the Militia Department. The hon. gentleman has made a comparison between the expediting of the Canadian forces to South Africa and those which we had to send to quell the rebellion in the North-west. But, let me tell the hon. gentleman that possibly the fact of his having had fewer difficulties to contend against was due to our previous success in improvising, under very different conditions, a force which, at a moment's call, responded to that call and performed its duty under the circumstances, as thoroughly as the Canadian soldiers have performed theirs in South Africa. The effectiveness of the militia force of Canada does not depend so much upon organization as upon the sturdy hearts and stalwart physique of the men who, loyal to their country and their flag, and loyal to the empire, are always ready to respond to the call of duty.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the organization of cadet corps. Why, that is not at all an organization which originated with the hon. gentleman. It existed under his predecessors. It was under the late government that the first note was sounded, when the cadets in Montreal, following in the wake of the old military organizations, came into the ranks and said: What we want is to start early in life, and to keep up the traditions of the militia corps which we know and whose history we want to continue and whose example we desire to follow. The organization of the cadet corps is, therefore, not a thing of which the hon. gentleman can boast. I had occasion, in a previous discussion, to tell the hon. gentleman that, from my previous experience, I thought it was of the greatest possible importance to Canada to organize cadet corps, and I then said to the hon. gentleman: You should enter into an agreement with every public school and with each local government, and devise some scheme under which any school in the receipt of any subsidy from a local government should be required to drill its pupils two or three days in the week, the federal authorities supplying the rifles and ammunition and furnishing instructors, so that the young men should be drilled from the very beginning of their education. If they were trained early in life, I pointed out that that training they would never forget, and they would become the best soldiers that could possibly be called upon, when they came to manhood, to carry on the military affairs of this country.

Veterinary officers the hon. gentleman has spoken of as a new feature in this organization, but if the hon. gentleman will look up the records of his own department he will see that in every corps, where a veterinary surgeon is required, it is specified in the regulations that such an officer had to be appointed, and such an officer was appointed under the late government and received the rank to which he was entitled.

The hon. gentleman made a point about the exchange of units, and I fully agree with the hon. gentleman, that is one of the greatest possible advantages that could be accorded to our force. With the relations existing between Canada and the empire, if our soldiers are called upon to fight, they shall fight side by side with the British soldiers, upon equal terms of efficiency. It is most necessary, to my mind, that we should educate our soldiers to handle the same rifle as the Imperial soldiers, to know the same drill as the Imperial soldiers, so that when called upon, to go along side of British soldiers, as they have done in South Africa, no difference shall be found between them in efficiency as there has been none in the bravery with which they have fought for the flag and the empire. In my time as Minister of Militia and Defence, all these points were brought before the government. I think I have been fair in my criticism, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) will be fair enough to admit that at that time the evolution of our force had not arrived at the point when these reforms could be carried out. They have been carried out since, but they were not inaugurated by the hon. gentleman. Not only under myself as Minister of Militia, but under those who succeeded me in that high office, the first steps were taken to arrange some means whereby units could be exchanged between the Imperial forces at Halifax and the Canadian force, to the advantage of both.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has spoken of the defence commission, which was organized. On that also, I would refer him to the records of his own department. He will see that a commission was organized long before this commission of which he speaks. There is a book there which was prepared by Mr. Campbell, a naval officer, who had joined the department. These books were looked upon as absolutely confidential, and were prepared for the purpose of giving information to the commission that was organized to study the defence of the country. I am giving details which the hon. gentleman can verify by the statements of officers of his own department.

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) must have misunderstood me. I did not intend to take special credit to myself for the appointment of that commission. I know, quite as well as he does, that defence commissions are of frequent occurrence—of necessity, for conditions change. This commission has done its work, and, after a time there will be another commission. In the War Office the question of defence is being studied constantly. I did not intend to take special credit for this commission; I was merely giving a historical account of what had occurred in the last four years in connection with the department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. minister (Mr. Borden) did not intend to take credit for it, he took credit accidentally. But on the point of this commission, I can refer him to the records of his own department. I have my own copy of this red book which is No. 1, and which was given me as Minister of Militia. One was sent to the Prime Minister, one to Sir John Macdonald as Premier, and one to the Governor General. There were only very few copies of that volume to be given out; and they were thus restricted because it was considered that the volume was of such very high value from the standpoint of the defence of Canada that it should not be known outside of the department or those who took a deep interest in studying the defence.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say it was written by Mr. Campbell?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not written by him, for it is impossible to write a thing of that kind. A study of the defence of the country is picked up from the geography of the country, from records of various kinds. This book was an interesting study made from maps, old records, reports of generals, and everything that pertained to the defence of the country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have never seen it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not surprised the hon. gentleman had to get up a commission, if he had not looked into the records of his own department.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is not there.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is there, or it has been taken away. I have my copy, which I am prepared to show to the hon. gentleman. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the officers of his department, for instance to Mr. Benoit, who, at that time was acting as secretary to the department, he will get information exactly as I am giving it to him now.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Would the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) give me the year approximately?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not give the year, as I am speaking from memory; I did not know the hon. minister was going to make so elaborate a speech. But I am giving him sufficient information to enable him to get the book of which I speak. The point I am making is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) seemed to believe that this defence commission organized by himself was a revelation to this country. It was no revelation at all. In my time the Imperial authorities called upon us to study up the question; as to the means by which we should be prepared to deal with an invading force. We ought to be able to inform the empire what are our weak points, and what we can do within the limits of our force to defend our country and stand by the empire.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is a very important point, and I would like to say a word, if the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) will permit me. In 1897, I was in the War Office a great many times, and in the intelligence branch of the War Office; and there I was shown, in confidence of course, the way in which the books were containing the memoranda of the defence scheme, the great defence scheme of the empire, including all colonies and branches. But my attention was called specially to the fact of the absence of any defence scheme for the Dominion of Canada. That was really the start of these appointments on this particular mission. As I said a moment ago, I take no special credit for this, because it was the intelligence branch of the War Office which was particularly urging that something of this kind should be done; it emanated from them rather than from me.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I know nothing about Australia. When I was in the Department of Militia, I thought I had enough to do to look after Canada. The hon. gentleman, when he was in England, may have overlooked Canada in his anxiety to look after Australia, and some other of the great colonies of the empire. In any case, I have given the hon. gentleman the facts, and he can verify my statements inside his own department, for the books are there to prove what I am now saying. The hon. gentleman says that he applied for medals for service in the Fenian trouble, and also for long-service medals. Now, the hon. gentleman knows that the War Office in England, takes a long time to consider questions such as that. If the hon. gentleman will again refer to the records of his department, he will find that the first application for these medals was made when General Middleton was commanding officer, and when I was Minister of Militia and Defence. I am prepared to give the hon. gentleman all the credit which he is entitled to, but when he makes an elaborate statement—a statement which it took him a long time to make, and which I found very interesting—I think he might give some little credit to those who initiated the very measures which resulted in securing the medals under his regime. Now these are facts, and I speak from intimate knowledge of what took place at that time. I say I am prepared to congratulate the hon. gentleman upon the fact that these medals were sent out from Great Britain while he happens to be Minister of Militia and Defence. But the hon. gentleman cannot claim that the services for which these medals were given, were performed under his regime. When the next medals are given out, then we will be able to discuss whether it took less time to procure them than it took when I was in the position which he occupies to-day.

Now, the hon. gentleman seems to think that he accomplished a great reform, in insisting upon equitation certificates. Why, Sir, if he had picked up any regulation book he would have seen that long before I came into the Department of Militia, and long before he came into it, the regulations insisted upon staff officers and men belonging to the mounted corps having a certificate, they could not get promotion without it. I do not know exactly what the hon. gentleman means by speaking of equitation certificates being required for staff officers, as they were required under all the regulations. A staff officer is a mounted officer, and he must have a certificate of equitation before he can occupy the position for which he is appointed.

Then there are the provisional schools of instruction of which the hon. gentleman speaks. Sir, it was under my predecessor, under the Hon. Mr. Masson, that two of the artillery batteries were organized. I will state the reason for which they were organized. We considered that the militia force of Canada was a defensive force, not an aggressive force, and it was necessary that we should have some schools wherein men who wished to qualify for the active militia could get instructions. General Strange was the first to organize 'A' and 'B' batteries. He was brought out here by the late Sir George E. Cartier, who at the time was Minister of Militia and Defence, and a better officer than General Strange has never commanded the militia of Canada. I am glad to know, that although he has arrived at a very advanced age, he is still enjoying good health, and the honours which long and faithful service has procured him. These batteries became the first schools in which our militia was trained. When I succeeded Hon. Mr. Masson, I organized the infantry school, and the mounted infantry school in Manitoba, and those were all training schools where a man belonging to any branch of the service had to get a certificate before he could obtain his commission. The hon. gentleman says he organized the provisional schools. Sir, the provisional schools were organized in my own time, before Sir Mackenzie Bowell was Minister of Militia and Defence, and before Mr. Dickey's time. But they were much more limited than they are to-day, that I am prepared to admit. But the hon. gentleman has only been forced on by the development of the country. He has a much larger force than I had. He has nearly double the amount of money to expend that was voted by parliament when I was Minister of Militia and Defence. The fact that the hon. gentleman has six or seven provisional schools, when I only had two or three, merely means that he has been pushed along by the course of events which have forced him to increase the schools of instruction which I originated when Minister of Militia and Defence, and which were already doing good service.

Next the hon. gentleman states that the officers who go through training, must be given a preference over those who do not. Well, in my time, no commission was ever given to an officer unless he qualified, and I can recall, possibly, to the hon. gentleman's memory a case. It was a very hard case. He was an officer, who, as a cavalryman, was equal to the best officer I ever met in the Dominion of Canada. I do not suppose it is necessary to give his name, but, unfortunately, for some reason or other, he could not pass the examination before the school. Great pressure was brought to bear upon the minister at that period. He was known to be one of the best military officers in the country, he was a magnificent rider, he was known to be perfectly qualified, and he occupied a very prominent position in Winnipeg. Nevertheless, he could not qualify and he could not get his commission. Well, then, there is no change in the system to-day from that which existed in the past.

Mr. DOMVILLE. What became of him?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not exactly say, except that from the fact that he was such a well-qualified officer, although he could not pass his examination, he was, I think, given a position by the hon. gentleman, which he fills in the most creditable manner to himself.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Is he in the militia now?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He is in the militia, but I could not say what position he occupies. In regard to the medical service the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has taken a great deal of credit to himself, and he ought to. The hon. gentleman, being a medical man himself, probably gave more time to the medical service than to any other branch of the militia. But, I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the organization of the system took place during the troubles in the North-west, when men like Surgeon-Major Bergin, Dr. Roddick and several of the most prominent medical men in Canada, French and English, volunteered their services, went to the front and formed the nucleus of the medical system which exists to-day. When Dr. Bergin, the surgeon-major, died, and when the hon. gentleman was in a position to appoint his successor, he did nothing more than appoint Dr. Neilson to replace the officer who died, but the hon. gentleman has not created any new system. He has merely been following in the wake of those who preceded him, and he has merely been carrying out the organization that obtained long before he was Minister of Militia. When Dr. Roddick and Dr. Bergin volunteered their services we had to improvise medical stores. We had no medical stores, and we had to improvise everything for that short campaign. It was due to the knowledge and ability of such men as Dr. Roddick and Dr. Bergin that we were able to organize a service that in any case was equal to the requirements of the campaign, and through which our men, during that campaign, were prevented from suffering. It was through General Middleton, who was in command at that time, that the medical service was organized. I remember very well, that on the day that he was leaving Ottawa to go to the North-west, he said: The first thing you have to do is to organize a proper medical service. We took up the list of the surgeons in the service, and there were Dr. Powell, Dr. Bergin and Dr. Roddick who volunteered their services, and we got up a medical service which was quite equal to the requirements of the case. The hon. gentleman has also told us that the militia force of to-day is improving a great deal under the course of lectures which was organized under his regime. Well, Sir, I again refer him to his department. The hon. gentleman will see by the records that lectures were delivered in Quebec, in London, in Toronto, and all over the country, at different centres where it was possible to get men to give them such military education as could be conveyed by lectures was given by some of the ablest men that we had. Col. Otter, Col. Montizambert, Col. Wilson in Quebec, and several of the men in whom he places his confidence because they are still retained in their important commands, gave these lectures, and I do not see exactly how the hon. gentleman can imagine that he organized these lectures that had been going on for so long. Now, there is one point in the hon. gentleman's remarks which I object to. The hon. gentleman has taken the credit to himself for sending 200 men to Selkirk and Dawson. Well, Sir, I consider that if a mistake has ever been made, if a useless expenditure of money has ever been authorized by a government, it was in the sending out of 200 men to Dawson and Selkirk.

Mr. DOMVILLE. It was not the minister's fault.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Well, I do not know whose fault it was, and as I do not know whose fault it was I have to attack the minister who sent them out. I want to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) that the fact of its being a mistake is proved beyond doubt by the statement that as soon as these men got out there, or very shortly after, they were brought back, and Canada had to pay for the trip. Mr. Chairman, when the government of Canada sent out the mounted police, I was prepared, and I am prepared to-day, to say that they were right in sending out that force, but, in sending out 200 infantrymen to a country like that, has been one of the greatest mistakes that could have been committed, and if the hon. gentleman is responsible for sending out that contingent, that mistake, to my mind, is one of the greatest that has ever been perpetrated. I cannot exactly say how much it cost. Can the hon. gentleman tell me what the cost was?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Probably $500,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Well, of course, I suppose the hon. minister looks upon $500,000 as very little to send out 200 men to Dawson and bring them back to their headquarters. What did they do? Ask any man who has been in that district, ask any miner, or any one who has come out from the Yukon, and he will tell you that these 200 men were as absolutely useless as if you sent out one man, excepting that the only difference is that the contingent cost Canada $500,000 or $600,000. The hon. gentleman will not be quite certain as to the amount. It may come up to nearly a million, for all I know. But, it was a mistake that I heard discussed long before the hon. gentleman made the statement. Yet, the hon. gentleman looks upon it as one of the great epochs in his reign as Minister of Militia to have sent out 200 men, and to have brought them right back. He has proved that they were absolutely useless when they were sent there by bringing them back.

I agree with the minister to a certain extent when he says that in the future the chief characteristic of our military force must be mobility. I believe that wherever it is possible we should have mounted infantry, and horse artillery instead of garrison artillery. But I heard it rumoured amongst the military men in Montreal that the minister was anxious to transpose the different infantry battalions into mounted corps. That would be a very great mistake. It should be remembered after all that the want of mobility in the British forces was chiefly because of lack of transport as compared with the enemy. The soldier is useless unless he can get to the place where he will be called upon to fight, and in that way the Boers had the advantage, because each Boer not only rode one horse, but he generally managed to have a couple of remounts to follow him. I am opposed to the present infantry battalions of Canada being disturbed, but I do believe that wherever possible when new battalions are being organized, they should be mounted infantry or horse artillery. I again agree with the minister when he says that good marksmanship is of all importance, and I felt it my duty to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to this on a former occasion. The best training that Canada can give to her soldiers is practice in sharp shooting. I would suggest to the minister that he should have ranges wherever it is possible to get men to utilize them, but these ranges need not necessarily be very expensive. The range at Montreal, I am told by military men is probably one of the best on the continent, and the range at Ottawa has proved a great success; but of course these are quite expensive. Wherever men have ranges to fire at I would suggest to the minister that he should give the men free ammunition for a certain number of days in the year, and place it under the control of some officer who would insist upon their firing this free ammunition at the targets. The strength of the Boers lay in the fact that from their childhood they had been trained to handle a rifle, and this, together with the geographical conditions of their country, enabled them to contend against much better trained troops. I believe that if the minister adopts some policy to promote sharp shooting generally amongst Canadians, it will do more than any other thing to make his regime in the Militia Department a great service to the military force of Canada. We have to-day as good rifles as we can get, and although I know it costs money to manufacture the cartridges, yet if we devote that money to encourage first-class marksmanship it will be cheaper in the end than any other system we can possibly adopt. I agree with the minister about the advantages of the Swiss system. It is the best system extant, and is to my mind the most adaptable to the conditions existing in Canada. I think, however, that their annual drill is for a much longer period than ours.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Forty-five days every other year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I thought they were called out every year, but of course I am only speaking from memory. The fact of our drilling our men for twelve days is, to my mind, a waste of money, as it hardly teaches a man more than to learn how to button on his tunic. It is next to impossible in that short period of time to train men in battalion and other drills which go to constitute the education of the soldier. As a matter of fact it only means ten days in camp, because the first day is occupied in getting in and the last day in getting out. When I was head of the department I fought very hard with my colleagues to get the whole force drilled every year. I believe that is a necessity, for the reason that our men enlist for three years and if they are drilled only every second year, they practically have only twenty days' drill during their period of service, which amounts to nothing at all. It is my opinion that if Canada cannot afford to keep up the present number of men, it would be far wiser to reduce the number, but to drill them every year. Although I do not pretend to be an expert, I visited all the camps for three or four successive years with the general officer commanding, and it was quite apparent that twelve days' training was altogether too short for any practical purpose.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Hear, hear.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If we do not train our soldiers properly the money is actually thrown away, and if we cannot afford to train every man for twelve days every year then some other system should be adopted by us. The system suggested by the hon. gentleman of arranging with the schools to drill the children is, to my mind, the most inexpensive and practical system.

Mr. DOMVILLE. At what age would you drill them?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would drill them from the time they enter the school. Of course, it would be necessary for a child to be old enough to carry a rifle.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask a question? About two-thirds of our schools in Ontario are conducted by ladies. The Minister of Militia said that in the normal schools there ought to be drill. I imagine that I see the ladies of our schools drilling their pupils with rifles.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Of course, my hon. friend points out a difficulty, and I think an exception might be made of schools which are under the control of ladies. But when the boys in the public schools come under the control of men, I would apply my system. The rifle league, I am proud to say, was organized by myself, and I was the first Minister of Militia to address them, which I did in the Russell Hotel here. We gave them free ammunition, for which they passed a resolution thanking me as Minister of Militia. They sent in an application, and a deputation called on the government. Sir John Macdonald was present, and I as Minister of Militia, met the deputation.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Last year we issued 164,000 rounds to the rifle league alone.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I say we gave them free ammunition, and the rifle association at its following meeting in the Railway Committee room, again thanked me for it. Now, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he meant by saying that the success of the military college during the last four years had been a great credit to Canada? The military college was organized by Mr. Mackenzie when he was Prime Minister of Canada. He had to contend with great opposition, and even on this side of the House there were men who believed that Canada was not quite ripe for an institution of that kind. I tell the hon. gentleman that every man who has left that college has been a credit to Canada; they have been the best advertisement Canada has ever had. Why, four years ago Girouard was helping Kitchener in the Soudan to extend the authority of the British Empire there. What about the other men in India and elsewhere?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am sure my hon. friend does not wish to misrepresent me. Very likely I may have used those words; but I did not intend to convey the meaning the hon. gentleman attributes to me. If my hon. friend had listened to what I said afterwards, he would have heard me say that there were over eighty graduates of the Royal Military College in Africa to-day; and although I did not mention Girouard by name, I pointed directly to him as one of the distinguished men to whom I referred. I simply wished to compare what has happened since Col. Kitson came in with what was happening immediately before he came in.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I wish to be absolutely fair in my criticism. I mentioned Girouard's name, not because I thought the hon. gentleman had overlooked him, but because the hon. gentleman spoke of the success of the college in the last four years. I am mentioning the names of men who long before four years ago took a very proud position as graduates of the Royal Military College. So far as Col. Kitson is concerned, although I have not the same opportunities of judging to-day as I had when I was the head of the department, from all I can learn, I am quite prepared to admit that he is an excellent man for the position. I have heard men in England speak very highly of him, and I believe the selection made by the government is an excellent one. At any rate, the results show that he is conducting the college in a way that reflects credit upon himself and upon Canada. I am not prepared to agree with the hon. gentleman that the change in the curriculum from four years to three years is an advantage. I think it is not, and I do not believe the raising of the age of matriculation from sixteen to seventeen years compensates for the deficiency. The men who left the Royal Military College after a four years' course, and who had to pass examinations in England, were able to make the highest points against great competition. They went there without influence, having to rely upon their training in a competition where nothing but merit counted, and if that system succeeded so well, in my opinion, it would have been better to have left well alone, and not to have made the changes which have been made. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the numerous applications which have been made for entrance to the Royal Military College. I quite agree with him that they are more numerous than they were in our time; but the hon. gentleman has not surely overlooked the fact that that is caused by the great military enthusiasm of the present time. But whether there are fifty to-day and there were only forty in my time, or not, makes no difference, so long as they came out properly trained and prepared to do their duty to their flag and their country. The hon. gentleman speaks of thirteen additional commissions being given to the cadets. Well, after the Egyptian war, over and above the commissions which were granted the Royal Military College cadets, England granted fourteen new commissions for the trained men of the Royal Military College. But we acted differently from the hon. gentleman at that time. The general appealed to me to know what course we should adopt, and I said to him: Follow the system you have always followed. Take the six highest men for the first commissions, and then take the others who follow and give them commissions in their order of proficiency.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What system did we follow?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman may remember that we had some little discussion here on a previous occasion, when it was supposed the system was not followed.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as the military college is concerned, the system followed in the hon. gentleman's time is the system that is followed now. The commandant selects the men in order of their fitness, as shown by their examination, and their names are sent to the government here and approved by His Excellency, and then forwarded to the War Office.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We will not discuss that part of the programme, but it seems to me that the other day it was not quite so clear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That was with reference to the other commissions outside the military college.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have only one more word to say, and that is concerning the system suggested by the hon. gentleman of coming to an understanding with the provinces about the schools. I think that nothing can do more good for our militia force than to start drill just as soon as possible in the schools. That is done in France, Germany and Switzerland, and it is a pleasure to the boys to go through drill, and not only is it a good training for the future, but is as good training for their physical condition as any that could be devised. I am sorry to have taken up the time so long, but have simply followed the hon. gentleman and tried to be as brief as possible. One thing we are all agreed upon, and that is that no matter how we may differ on other points we all wish to see our Canadian militia force in the best condition. It must be in that condition, not for ourselves alone, but for the defence of the empire, and I think that the sooner the reforms of which the hon. gentleman has spoken are introduced the better it will be for Canada.

Mr. JAMES DOMVILLE (King's, N.B.) This is a matter somewhat removed from the arena of practical politics, and the two gentlemen—the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), and the ex-Minister of Militia (Sir Adolphe Caron)—have endeavoured to approach it without any political recrimination. I admired the manner in which my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) discussed this question. Of course, he wanted to take all the credit he could, as he always does, for what the present minister has done, and I have no doubt he is entitled to considerable credit. There are very few of us in this House who know much about militia matters. I have had a long practical experience, it is forty-two years since I first joined the volunteer corps, and I commanded a cavalry regiment for twenty years, and I am not prepared, looking at the matter from a national standpoint, to accept in their entirety the statements on either side. But that is only a matter of opinion and not one of recrimination.

The hon. Minister of Militia talked about the promotions to colonelcies, and the result of getting rid of colonels in five years. That is starting at the top of the list, but I propose to start from the bottom to the top. You may find a regiment that has had a colonel for a long time, and in which some other man wants to get his place and does so. But you will find regiment after regiment that has neither a colonel nor a major, and in saying this I am not finding fault with the Minister of Militia because it is not his doing. But you will find regiment after regiment with hardly a commissioned officer—all of them provisional. How is that? The reason is that of the officers who go into the militia, some go for one reason and others for another, and they disappear. If my hon. friend will turn to the list of twenty-five years ago, he will not find one of those then on the list here to-day. Therefore, it is not at all in accordance with the facts to say that these commissioned officers continue on for ever. Supposing for a moment that it was a good thing to clear out all the colonels in five years—of course I am not referring to the honorary colonels at all.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, they are too useful to be removed.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Supposing you went through the ninety-eight regiments and retired the ninety-eight colonels in one year, all of them having gone in at the same time. Could you calculate on having ninety-eight officers to succeed them sufficiently well qualified for the work? I do not think anybody would pretend that you could. It is all very well in England in the regular service. The officers there have a vested interest in the service. When they go out they get their pension. If an officer does not become a major or a colonel at a certain date he has to go out, but he goes out on a pension. He knows what is ahead of him, and he can go out with £200, £300, £600, or £800 a year, according to his chances; but take an officer of the militia, what does he get? He has to buy his own uniform, and we know that a cavalry officer's uniform is worth $1,800. Well, if every officer had that expense to undergo, where would you get your officers? Take the military regulations, and you will find that it is perfectly useless to attempt to enforce them. If you did, you would have a mutiny in every regiment. You have to ride with a firm hand and light rein; and if you get a man who can ride a horse and is fit for his work, you will not impose on him the expense of providing himself with this magnificent uniform and the golden cordons that we see flourishing around Ottawa. I do not agree with the minister, but I do not think it is his doing. I can imagine an officer coming from England, taking this view, and we have had a great many commanding officers from the old country, no two of whom agree in their ideas of what should be done. We had General Herbert, a splendid officer, who went into the ranks and drilled the men in sections himself; we had General Gascoigne, who went in for shooting, and we had no ranges. There is no range in Canada to-day except at Ottawa. All the others are condemned because the rifles are superior to the ranges. The buying of the rifles was not the fault of the minister, because it was not he who bought them. But in hot haste we armed our men with effective rifles and omitted to provide places where they could practice shooting. We have our armoury filled with rifles and uniforms of all sorts, and I would burn every uniform in the Militia Department. I would not allow the men to wear a uniform for three years, but would take them out and teach them how to shoot first. It might be a very hard method, but I think that any gentleman who wanted to do service to his country would be willing to learn to shoot. You see them going about Ottawa here with four or five sticks shod with iron—going to play golf, they say. Would it not be better for those young men, and young ladies, too, to learn to shoot. That would be something of practical benefit to the country. Take the case of New Brunswick before it came into confederation in 1867. We had an army of 43,000 men in round numbers—artillery, cavalry, infantry and everything else; and the whole cost was $148,000. To-day with us in Canada the great question is: What is to be done for the future? I say we should start with the foundation; we should reorganize our militia from the bottom. I have no doubt my hon. friend the Minister of Militia has this under consideration. He has not had a chance to take us entirely into his confidence to-night. First of all we should have men trained to shoot. Then we should have our men drilled; then have officers; then commanding officers, and then a general and staff. That is impossible to-day; you must reorganize your militia entirely. Suppose men learned to shoot, where are the non-commissioned officers to drill them? These men cannot go to the military schools; the schools are not large enough in their scope to drill sergeants and drill instructors. Our officers now only get such military education as they can pick up in the twelve days' camp, together with such little work as they can do on their own account. There should be some means to educate these men better. Then, according to the system laid down, as soon as they get into a certain condition they must be commanding officers and they must go into the field and command though they have had no experience and no instructions. We should endeavour to train these officers, either at Kingston or somewhere else. Then send some of them abroad to join the English army, the French army, the German army—to get all the experience they can. Then, when they have had the education, we may choose from them a proper man to command our militia as adjutant general, commander of whatever you choose to call them. There may be five men capable as soldiers for this work, but there may be only one of them who is just suitable to handle the militia of Canada, understanding not only his work as soldier but the people he has to deal with. In what respect can we say that our militia is better than it was five years ago? There is no use in expecting to achieve the desired results by simply bringing generals here. I am told that we are to have a general who is an antidiluvian, one who has been on the retired list for ten or twelve years. If he had been a man of capability, I suppose he would have gone to South Africa with Sam Hughes; and if he is not a man of capability, what is the use of his coming here. I agree with the Minister of Militia—I believe in our own people, and I hold that we shall never have our militia properly organized until we are prepared to allow the minister, without politics being brought into it, to surround himself with young men of ability who know what is wanted, and until we get rid of the attempt to organize without the money necessary to do it. We are not going to have any fighting, I hope, but suppose that to-morrow we were to have trouble, what is the use of us taking out 40,000 men who cannot shoot? What is the use of taking about an ambulance corps and medical staff?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They did good work in South Africa.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Of course, we sent a little force of 2,500 men. It was a very good and effective force—but suppose we were called upon to put 100,000 or 200,000 men in the field, where would you get your officers? If you are going to retire your colonels after five years' service, you have no officers fit to command, and you have to fall back on the mother country, allowing them to send out here people who will be pensioners on us. You must have in the ranks men who can shoot and know their work, and then every rank above that rank, from the non-commissioned to the commanding officers and so on to the general and staff must be efficient or you must abandon the idea of having a militia for Canada. If you are going to have a proper militia, as the minister wishes to do, you must have a large sum of money. If the opposition are really sincere in what they say, they should back the minister up with a good deal of money.

Mr. PRIOR. So we will.

Mr. DOMVILLE. 'So we will,' says the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior). But what will the country say? The country will want something more for their money than when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) was Minister of Militia—as I think he was.

Mr. PRIOR. Not Minister of Militia, but next door to it.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) was responsible anyway. And the rifles that were bought at that time were practically useless. Why, they were not sighted right. I know that from practical use of them. I think the hon. member for Victoria will agree with me in that. I do not know who was to blame. These things will occur. When it comes to the question of militia, it should not be a matter of the pot calling the kettle black and vice versa, but we should all strive together to put the militia on an effective footing, but, as my hon. friend from Victoria said to convince the world that it is so. The force that we sent out to South Africa was not for amateur service. These 2,500 men were sent out partly to demonstrate to the world that if Canada was called upon to defend herself within the gates or without the gates, she had men and organization to do it. But we have not got the organization we ought to have, nor are we striving in that direction. There is no politics in what I say; and I am sure the Minister of Militia will accept it in the best of good faith. The time has come when men on both sides of politics should take a retrospect of the whole position. I begged the Minister of Militia as a friend to have a Royal Commission, as they do in the War Office in England. That would strengthen his hands. If he is attacked by those opposed to him, his answer is: There is the Royal Commission. If there is any kudos to be made out of it, then the minister makes it; and if there is anything to be made out of our experience, then both sides of politics can benefit by it. Take South Africa, is not that a moral for everybody? Here we had scientific officers saying: We want only infantry. They did not go a long way before they found that they wanted artillery, and not long after they found they wanted mounted men. But if you go back to the schools only a few years ago in London, you will find nothing but infantry, they had an idea that cavalry men and artillery men were no good. So all these wars teach us something. They have taught us that if our militia is to be effective, it must be placed in a different position than it is to-day. My hon. friend the minister thinks the officers should always be ready to go out. They spend money and get nothing. The officers keep up the regiments at their own expense, with silver cups and everything. When camping comes round, they have to pay the bills, they have sometimes to entertain Ministers of Militia and other visitors at large expense. But when you come down to some little idea from gentlemen from England who want to inoculate us with some new ideas, then away they must go.

Now, I do not propose to go into this thing any further, because it is a long subject. If I was going into it before a commission with my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), I think we would discuss the organization at every point. I would ask the Minister of Militia and Defence, without attempting for a minute to cavil at what he has done, to look into the future of Canada, into the defence of the empire, if it is to be not merely an empire of show; and I would ask the hon. gentleman to take some of the members of the House into his confidence, and probably he would find that some of the members of this House would be quite as competent to give a good opinion as some of those officers that went from the old country to South Africa. I think we would all agree that in a country like this, where we all understand the uses of an axe, an auger or whip-saw, we would be able to give an opinion as to what was needed in Canada far better than those on the other side would give. If we were taken to England, or to Germany, possibly we might find their ideas of defence and attack would be far superior to ours. But we have learned a lesson in this African war, we have learned that England will fight, that Canadians will fight, that there are no cowards among them. Many mistakes were made, but we have learned that from now out, when they attack an enemy's country, they have got to fight the enemy according to the country that they are in. This kind of fighting we have had before, will not answer any longer. I ventured a remark here a few months ago, which did not meet with very much approval, but nevertheless it was true, when I referred to the way they were carrying on the campaign in Africa. But we have learned a good deal since then. I would like to see the Minister of Militia and Defence discuss this before a committee. There is no use discussing it among the members of this House generally, because they would have so many different views, and so little experience in military matters. But I would like to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence to consider whether Canada is prepared to place herself on an armed footing before the world, as the world stands to-day, or whether she is prepared to abandon the whole thing? Now there is no half-way house between those two positions. If we are going to place ourselves in a position where we can be of service to our own country or to the mother country, then let us never mind whom they send over from England to fill the position or earn a pension. Let us take some of our own men who know what is wanted in Canada. I have every faith in Canadians. I am not so wrapped up in royal titles or in aristocracy, that I am prepared to accept every dictum at a nod or a smile. I shall take an opportunity later on, when we get into details of these estimates, to discuss more fully the militia of this country.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) When the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), took his seat to-night, he apologized to the House for having taken up so much time. Well, Sir, I do not think that there was any need of making an apology, because I do not remember ever having listened to a more interesting speech than the speech he made, and also the speech of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron). I do not think I have listened to a more interesting speech for many years, a speech that must have been interesting to everybody who takes an interest in the militia. The minister took advantage of the occasion to blow his own trumpet a little, and the trumpet of the department, but I do not say he was wrong in that. I can say more than that, I can say that I am glad that I am not in a position to gainsay much that he said. Although my duty as a member of the opposition is to criticise the department, I think there is very little criticism that I can offer on the speech of the hon. minister. There is one matter, however, that I cannot let pass. He said that he wished to deny altogether that politics had ever entered into the Militia Department. Well, we had that question out hot and heavy some few weeks ago in regard to the case of Colonel White and Colonel Vince, where, I must say, I think he showed that politics for once, had influenced his action. But I will say this, that I think the appointments the hon. gentleman has made since he came into the office, especially the appointments in the headquarters staff, and in the higher positions, are very good, no minister could make better ones. He has surrounded himself with a most admirable staff of officers.

In regard to the question whether everything has been done that could have been done in sending away the contingent in good shape, I think we shall have to wait until these gallant fellows come back from the seat of war, before we can decide. There have been rumours, as the minister, perhaps, knows, of shortages in clothing, of poor boots, and several other things; but as no direct charges have ever been made to my knowledge, I think it is only fair that a member of the House, occupying the position that I do here, should give the minister the benefit of the doubt, and not try to make out that anything has gone wrong until we are in a position to prove that such has been the case. One thing is perfectly clear to my mind, and that is that everybody connected with the Militia Department, every officer on the staff, has worked honestly, hard and faithfully to do his best in getting off this contingent to South Africa. As to whether they were sent off as quickly as they could have been, I am bound to say that I think good speed was shown, considering the difficulties under which the minister was placed, in a country like this. I only wish I could say that the government as a whole showed the same desire for speed in allowing them to go. We know perfectly well that Canada, instead of being the first to offer these contingents, allowed some ten or twelve other colonies of the empire to volunteer assistance to the Imperial authorities before Canada did. However, that is hardly a question to bring up on the militia estimates.

Now, just one word in regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for King's N.B., (Mr. Domville). He and I, as a good many hon. gentlemen in this House know, do not agree in regard to the appointment of the Major-General Commanding the militia of Canada. I, for one, am strongly in favour, and will always be strongly in favour, of keeping to the policy that has been in vogue for so many years, namely, of giving the supreme command of the militia to an officer of the Imperial service. In saying so, I do not wish to reflect in the slightest degree upon Canadian officers, or upon any Canadians, because, I believe, we have as good men, considering the advantages they have had, as there are in the world; but one of the great things that appeals to my feelings in this regard is that it is a link that binds the Imperial government to this country. If the government can pick out a Canadian by birth who has passed the Royal Military College, who has gone into the Imperial service, has there had a large experience and proved himself to be a man fit to command a large body of men, either in peace or in war, then, I say, by all means let the Canadian government try to get a man of Canadian birth and place him in command of our own militia. If no such man can be found, then bring a man of English, Scotch or Irish birth here, but, by all means, bring a man who has served many years, who is still serving at the time, and who has had large experience in the Imperial service. I do not say anything more about that except that while, perhaps, some of our Canadian officers may feel disappointed that the highest position in the gift of the department, or of the government, is not to be theirs, I think, the colony is a little young for that yet.

The subject has been so largely covered in the admirable speeches which we have listened to to-night that I shall be able to curtail, to a certain degree, the remarks which I intended to make when the militia estimates came forward. I am one of those who has taken for many years a great interest in the militia service of Canada, having served for many years in the militia myself, and on that account, I may be allowed a little more latitude in point of time than those who do not take such a deep interest in the subject. I see that it does not possess the same interest for every one in the House, because I notice that there are some hon. gentlemen taking advantage of the opportunity for a quiet snooze at this late hour. I do not blame them as we have had pretty hard work during these five long months of the session. I have had the advantage of consultations with some of the district officers commanding and with some of the commanding officers, and I may say that the majority of these gentlemen agree with what I shall put forward in the remarks which I propose to make to-night. I am largely indebted to the officer who is now in command of the Toronto district. I refer to Col. Peters. He and I have been personal friends for many years, he having been district officer commanding in British Columbia, and I am glad to see that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence has put him in such a high position as commanding officer at Toronto. Although we sometimes laugh at him, because he is a man of strong ideas, I think, when we come to look into them we find that he is generally about right. I want to say a few words on the rifle practice and the ammunition of the militia. I think everybody will agree with me that these are about the most important matters that can be referred to in regard to the militia. I am sorry to say that in the past they have been to a great extent neglected. I do not say that there have not been good shots who have taken an interest in the question, but the general public and the militia at large have not taken as much interest in it as I should have liked to have seen. I believe that at the present moment a large portion of the militia force is armed with the very best rifle that there is in the world. That is the Lee-Enfield, but there are plenty of men in the city corps who have never fired that rifle at all. The allowance of ammunition made to the militia men, 40 rounds, if I am not wrongly informed, per man per annum, is, to my mind, absurdly small. I think the hon. minister should make up his mind to supply every militia man who is duly enrolled with at least 250, if not 500 rounds of ammunition per annum. In the United States I am told that they allow a thousand rounds per man per annum. I think an allowance of 250 rounds for every man, these rounds to be shot off under proper surveillance of the officers, and the commanding officers to be made responsible that this ammunition is properly expended, would produce a very great betterment in the rifle shooting of the force. At present, in the camps, and also in the regiments that do not go into camp, the city corps, too much time is taken up in battalion and company movements. Especially is this useless nowadays, as anybody can see by reading the accounts we get from the war in South Africa. In the twelve days' camp that annually takes place it is impossible to train men in manoeuvring, in company drill, battalion drill and shooting to the same extent that the regulars can be expected to be trained. The time is altogether too short, and, therefore, I think that a greater portion of the time would be far better spent if it were devoted to rifle practice and to firing exercise and fire discipline. There is also another change that should be made in a great many cases, and that is, that instead of sticking to the old stationary target, there should be moving targets allowing the men to have practice in the work that they will have to do in the field, giving them targets more like the targets they will have to shoot at if they are called upon for active service. It is hard, I know, to obtain room on many rifle ranges for moving targets; but, while this cannot be done everywhere it can be done in certain portions of the Dominion. The government grants that are given for rifle shooting are at present given largely to the Dominion and provincial rifle associations. I do not want to say a word against these associations, which do a great deal of good, but I think the money could be far better expended. I think if the money were to go to the regiments which the Major-General Commanding knows to have commanding officers who take an interest in and keep their men and regiments up to the mark and which have rifle ranges, I think it would do a great deal more good. They could then have matches arranged on strict service lines instead of allowing these contests to be conducted in a happy-go-lucky manner. I am not a believer in training a small number of men to be first-class shots to be sent out to the ranges with their tubes and glasses and head covers and boxes. I think it is far better to have a thousand men who can shoot more than fairly well than to have a hundred men who are first-class shots and who can hit a bull's eye at 1,000 yards five times out of six. Another thing is the feeling of despondency there is at the present time amongst young men in joining a militia regiment. The young shot has no chance whatever now. If he goes out to shoot for the prizes, he comes into competition at once with men who have been practising for years. The rifle matches should be so arranged that the men would be classified and handicapped in order that the men who have been shooting for years would have no unfair advantage, and then the young men would have some heart put into them. The feeling of the young shot now is: What is the use of my shooting against Tom Jones who has been at it for years, I have no chance of beating him. If the suggestion I have thrown out were adopted, it would also put a stop to what is popularly known as pot-hunting. I do not wish to say anything against these men who go to the Dominion and provincial rifle meetings every year, for they do good, but I say that all the prizes should not constantly go to them. Young men very often cannot pay their way as the majority of the old hands do, and they are often not in such an independent position to get away from their employment. The majority of the men who year after year contest for the prizes, are officers and non-commissioned officers, and as the prizes are good, it pays a great many of them. Nearly all these men who attend large meetings are what might be termed professional shots, and there is no hope left for the younger men. These professional shots, if called upon for active service, being mostly officers and non-commissioned officers, would not have to use the rifle, and so the very men who ought have the practice in sharp shooting are precluded.

Mr. ELLIS. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) allow me to ask him if he does not think it would be better to abolish these money prizes altogether?

Mr. PRIOR. I would not go that far. These rifle matches lead to a great deal of good, but I think a system of handicapping should be introduced so that the same men would not win the prizes year after year. I would be the last to ask the government to give less money for rifle practice, but on the contrary I would hold up both hands to get more. The minister has very fully explained the Swiss system, but I confess I do not quite understand it. However, if its effect is to make every man in the country capable of bearing arms at a small expense, I should be thoroughly in favour of it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In the article to which I referred it is stated that there are 250,000 men in Switzerland (out of a total population of 3,000,000), who are members of these rifle clubs and are effective shots.

Mr. PRIOR. As the minister has made a study of the Swiss system, I can leave its application to Canada with great faith in his hands. Recently I noticed in the Broad Arrow, a service paper of the British army, an article which concluded with the statement: That good shooting, good discipline, good marching and quick and intelligent field manœuvring are points that now constitute a good battalion. The Broad Arrow puts good shooting first of all, so that we as members of parliament cannot do better than to impress upon the Militia Department of Canada that they should endeavour to make it a sine quo non of our soldiers that they should be good shots.

I am strongly of opinion that the drill book now in use should be thoroughly revised. I believe that a commission of intelligent and experienced officers should be appointed to go through that drill book, and to cut out what in the opinion of myself and of a great many commanding officers, is absolutely useless for the Canadian militia. Our militia has no time to pretend to be as highly trained as the regulars in the British service are supposed to be. If trained in a practical manner during their short time in camp they would make a most useful force, as they have proved themselves to be in South Africa. There has been no complaint from any quarter that the Canadian or Australian militia or volunteers were found wanting in ordinary drill; but on the contrary we have heard high praise from them from Lord Roberts himself, and we can rest assured that if he thought they were a mob, as they must be unless they had some drill, he would be the first man to say so.

Now, as to the uniform. I know it is very nice to strut about in fine uniform, and that young fellows like it—even old fellows like it as my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Tucker) will agree. But the time has come in Canada when we should get a business-like, economical and serviceable uniform of a distinctively Canadian pattern. The British uniforms, which we copy at present, are no doubt very handsome, but they are too expensive for the ordinary Canadian who enters the militia. Besides, why should we not have a distinctive Canadian uniform, of which our boys would be proud, even if it were only a kahki suit with a hat such as we saw the Strathconas wear. I believe that our Canadian young men would feel all the prouder of it, if there was something distinctly Canadian about it. At the present time, many of our best young men cannot join the service because of the expense of the uniform, and although the last two generals have stated that they had no need to purchase anything but the undress uniform, yet every man of spirit wants to be dressed as well as his brother officers. I believe that you should have a distinctive, plain practical uniform with an aigrette or something like that for dress purposes. The richest man is not always the best soldier. I have found in my experience in the past that I have been at great trouble sometimes to get a fine young fellow to join, but he refused for the simple reason that he could not afford it, and that is a distinct loss to the country. Another young fellow may not be half as good a man, but his father is willing to put up the money, and he is able to enter the service.

There are two or three branches of our militia service which have not been referred to by previous speakers, and so I may be pardoned for saying a word in regard to them. I wish to speak of the district officers commanding, and of the permanent corps. The district officers commanding at present are in charge of large districts, some of them having ten or twelve thousand men under their control. They are, I am glad to say, a fine body of men of whom any country might be proud; but the only rank they have at present is that of lieutenant-colonel. I think that men holding such a position should at least have the rank of colonel. In war times these gentlemen would be called upon to command either brigades or divisions, with thousands of men under them. In Great Britain, men holding similar positions, in command of districts, nearly always have the rank, at least the brevet rank, of major-general. There are some district officers commanding in Canada at the present time who have been in the service for thirty years—men who have given thirty long years of steady, hard and faithful work for their country, and who have only the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Yet we see many instances of young men joining the active militia who, in three or four years, some even in less time, attain the same rank as those who have served thirty years. To my mind the lot of these men is an especially hard one. They see these young lieutenant-colonels springing up all around them after having put in very little time in the service. Besides, even with their thirty years' service, they are junior to the youngest lieutenant-colonel in the British service. That is not right. I think Canada has shown in the last few months that her men are equal to the men in the Imperial service; and why should not our officers be put on the same basis as the officers of Great Britain? As I have said before in this House, the permanent force cannot be looked upon quite in the same light as the active militia.

They are to all intents and purposes Canadian regulars. However much Canadians may dislike the idea of a standing army, the fact remains that the permanent corps, although called a school of instruction, are Canadian regulars. I hope the hon. minister will take that matter into his consideration, and see if something cannot be done to have these men rank as colonels. With regard to the pay of the officers of the permanent corps and the district officers commanding, I have brought this matter before the House three or four times in connection with the question of pensions; but I am sorry to say that outside of three or four gentlemen who take a special interest in militia matters, I have got very little assistance. An officer commanding a district in Canada at the present time receives $1,700 a year and his quarters; that is the ordinary pay. Where can any hon. gentleman show me a man with the same responsibility on his shoulders, a man at the head of a business or at the head of a department, who has put in years of hard work, who has not more remuneration than that? In some of these districts, there are from 10,000 to 12,000 men at the present time. Why, Sir, in the British service an instance came under my notice of a subaltern of the Royal Marine Artillery in command of only 70 men, who was in receipt of $2,300 a year and his quarters. There is a young lieutenant of the Royal Engineers as Esquimaux who gets $2,000 a year, and yet the officer commanding the whole militia of the district gets only $1,700 a year. In the United States an officer holding a similar command would get about $5,000 a year. I do not say that Canada can afford to pay as much as the United States can; but she certainly can afford to pay more than she does now. An officer in command of a British regiment gets about $2,700 a year, and when he retires he gets a first-class pension. This House readily voted the money the other day to bring the pay of the Canadian troops in South Africa up to the standard of the Canadian militia. If the House and the country wish Canadian privates to be paid more than British privates, surely the Canadian officer ought to be paid as much as the British officer; or, if not paid as much, he certainly ought not to get so much less, as he does at the present time. In the case of trouble, these officers commanding districts will be our chief support, and unless something is done in this regard it will be impossible to get good men to join the service and stay in it. Then, as the minister and other hon. gentlemen who have been around the barracks know, these officers have a certain position to keep up. Many men who know nothing about militia matters have said to me, 'That officer gets $1,700 a year and his house; why, he ought to save money.' But these gentlemen ought to remember that an officer, for the credit of Canada and his regiment, has a certain position to keep up; he must dress as a gentleman and live as a gentleman; and he must incur a heavy expense in the mess room entertaining guests whom he cannot turn away merely with a little civility. Officers are expected to subscribe to this and that, to go to this entertainment and that; so that unless a man has private means, he has, in time, to leave the service, or come to the end of his tether. Not only so, but at sixty years of age these men are dismissed from the service without a pension; and what is the consequence? They are not able to save a dollar. A man who is a bachelor may come out even; but if a man raises a family, which we all ought to do, and raises it properly, he is turned out on the world without a dollar to his name, and perhaps in debt. I am informed that two gentlemen holding the rank of lieutenant-colonel, who have served their country faithfully and well, are now obliged to earn their living by sweeping offices. If that is a fact—and I am told on the best of authority—it is a crying shame and a disgrace to Canada. If the hon. members of this House knew that matters had come to that pass, I cannot believe that they would refuse to hold up their hands for higher pay to the permanent officers. I think all the officers commanding districts, too, should have the same rate of pay. Because one man has 10,000 men under him and another has 2,000 under him, I do not think it is right that one man should get more pay than the other, as their responsibilities are the same. Now, I would like to ask the Minister of Militia in regard to the officers who so nobly gave up their commissions and joined the ranks to go with the troops to South Africa. Some time ago I asked in the House whether these officers would have the first chance of obtaining commissions when any were given. I believe the minister stated that the matter was going to be left to Lord Roberts. Well, I think that is hardly satisfactory, unless the minister recommends that they should be given the first chance. It was a noble example they set, and I think that any man who had a commission and willingly gave it up to join the ranks and go and fight for his country should be the first to obtain a commission given by the Imperial service or by the Canadian government to fill vacancies caused by casualties.

Mr. PRIOR.

Another matter I want to bring up, is the rations now issued to the troops in camp. I put a motion on the Order paper, which was never reached, to the effect that a certain addition should be made to these rations. I am told that the dinners given the troops in camp, are satisfactory, but that the breakfasts and suppers are too light altogether for men doing hard work in the open air. I would ask the hon. minister if he cannot see his way to give, say half a pound of bacon to each man for breakfast, and some dried apples for supper. If he were to do that he would find that the men would do far better work, and there would be fewer men falling out of the ranks, and a more general feeling of satisfaction, and, I may say, feeling of repletion, than now exists among them.

Another question is that of the rifles. I have received letters from some officers with regard to the issue of the Lee-Enfield rifles. The minister informed me, in answer to a question some weeks ago, that a report had been called for from the superintendent of the cartridge factory, I believe, regarding these rifles. I never heard the result, but have been told that some of the rifles sent out from the old country, are what are called plugged rifles, namely, old Martini's plugged and bored with the Lee-Enfield rifling, and after they are fired off rapidly fifteen or twenty times, they show a space between the old barrel and the plug, and are useless. Has the hon. minister had any report to that effect, because if that be true, it is evident that we have been swindled by the old country contractors?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. You mean the late government?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am informed that there is no official report of that kind in the department.

Mr. PRIOR. I would ask the hon. minister to look into the question, and if he will make inquiries, he will find that such is the experience of some of the regiments. Many officers and men have told me that they could not use these rifles for first-class shooting, but had to buy good rifles from good makers. The hon. gentleman knows that in pointing this out, I am only actuated by a desire for the efficiency of our force.

There is another matter to which I wish to refer, and I am sorry to have to detain the House so long, but it is far better to discuss these things at once, than keep them until the votes comes up in supply. The question I wish to refer to is that of a reserve force. We have a reserve of first-class officers, but I do not think the officers are much good unless we have a reserve force of men. It has been suggested to me by one very good man, and the matter has been talked over on several occasions, that the government should have a reserve of some 20,000 or 25,000 men. That could be very easily obtained. We are passing out hundreds of men every year from the active militia, who have served their time and have a very good knowledge of drill. It would cost very little to form a reserve of these men, just as there is a reserve in England formed from the retired men of the regular army. These men might be supplied with a cheap khaki uniform, which would cost very little, and they might be drilled three or four days every year, just sufficient to keep them from getting rusty, and with little expense. The necessary rifles and proper transport and equipment might be kept in store. These should be kept in store even if we had not the men, for in case of trouble, what is the good of calling out men, unless we are able to supply them with the necessary rifles and transport equipment. This is one of the most important matters that can be possibly dealt with by a gentleman holding the responsible position which the hon. minister does.

Another question I would ask is, why the staff course inaugurated by General Hutton at Kingston, was put an end to. It seems to me that that was a most important course. If the militia is to be put on the very best footing, we must have commissioned officers capable of performing staff duties. I was in hopes, when we started that course, that in a very short time, we should have men thoroughly qualified to fill important staff positions, but, if I am rightly informed, that course has been put a stop to. Why, I do not know. All I can say is that I hope the minister will see fit to start it again, and see that the very best men are appointed to follow that course.

I also wish to draw the attention of the House to a notice I read in the newspapers the other day, with regard to the company of Royal Canadian Infantry, now stationed at Victoria, having offered their services to go to China in case any Canadians are wanted to take part in defending the British flag in that country. If such is the case, it does credit to the officers and men of that company, who have thus willingly and bravely offered their services, if required, to be despatched to China. I cannot say that will be a 'happy despatch,' and I hope they will not receive it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The report is a telegraphic one to the newspapers, and I presume will come by mail, but it has not reached the department.

Mr. PRIOR. I hope that the newspapers and the department will give these men due credit for the offer they have made.

There is another matter in which I have taken a great personal interest during the past few years, and to which the hon. minister and the hon. member for Three Rivers have given attention, and that is the repatriation of the Old Hundredth Regiment. That regiment has left these shores, and I am afraid that the same interest will not be taken in it by the home office that it would have done had it still remained here. I know well that the first battalion is particularly anxious to be repatriated as the Royal Canadians. I take an interest in this, because I had relatives in it as officers when it was formed here, and they urged me many years ago to do my best to have this accomplished. I trust that the hon. minister will not lose sight of it, but keep urging the Imperial government to have that matter brought to a successful issue.

The next matter I have to speak about is the younger portion of our population, the school boys and cadets of Canada. I was very glad to hear the hon. minister say, that he thinks it very essential that our public school children and the young cadets of Canada should be thoroughly trained to the use of arms and in military drill. No doubt every commanding officer looks forward to that with the greatest pleasure, for it means the establishment of the very best recruiting ground for him when the boys leave school. They will have acquired a liking for drill, and have become impregnated with the martial spirit, and the first thing they will do will be to join some militia corps. I would like to know from the minister, what means one has to take to obtain rifles for these school boys. We have in Victoria and Vancouver and other portions of British Columbia, as strapping young lads at school, as you can see anywhere, and they are all wanting rifles. They are drilled now, but the drill is of very little use unless you give them rifles. You might provide them with carbines or light rifles, which would be of great benefit to them and to the militia in the long run.

I thank the hon. the Minister of Militia and this House, for having borne with me so patiently, but as this is a matter in which we all ought to take a deep interest, I do not feel myself under any necessity to apologize for having spoken at such great length. As this is a matter in which I have taken a great deal of interest, I shall not apologize for having spoken at the length I have.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it is only due to my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) who has just taken his seat, and to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron), that I should say just two or three words. I think I might say in beginning, that what has taken place this evening should be a lesson to the ordinary politicians in this House—when they see how gentlemen as strong in their political views and predilections as any men in this House, can come together and enter upon a friendly discussion of an important branch of the public service such as the militia undoubtedly is. I appreciate very highly the fair manner in which the ex-Minister of Militia (Sir Adolphe Caron) and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) have approached this discussion and have carried it through from beginning to end, actuated, as I believe them to be solely—chiefly, at any rate—by a desire to throw some light on this important subject, and to give to the House, the country and myself the benefit of their views. I do not find any fault whatever with my hon. friend from Three Rivers for having told us that he himself had had something to do with originating some of the things which he thought I had unjustifiably taken credit for. I think, if he will take the trouble to look over my speech when it is printed, he will see that he is mistaken in some of the cases, notably in the case of the improvement in the medical branch of the service. I distinctly pointed out to the hon. members of this House that I was myself in camp during the time the hon. gentleman was Minister of Militia, and that during his regime some great improvements had taken place.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will permit me to interrupt him for a moment—what I claim, and what I still claim, is that the medical service, which did not exist before 1885 when the troubles in the North-west commenced, was organized then; and I mentioned that Dr. Bergin and Dr. Roddick were the ones who advised the department at that time. I do not pretend to say that the system was as perfect as it became afterwards, by reason of the fact that we had not the advantages which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has possessed since. But the service was organized when the troubles in the North-west arose.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is practically what I intended to say—although very radical changes have been made within the last six or eight months which I believe to be great improvements. I desire to say a word on some of the questions which my hon. friend from Victoria brought up. I agree with him entirely as to the desirability of giving a larger number of rounds per man for the shooting. Under our present system, however, it is very difficult for us to use in the camp more than the number issued. I presume that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) would mean not to limit the shooting to the camps.

Mr. PRIOR. No.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then, I think my hon. friend made a capital point with reference to the question of uniform. I am entirely in sympathy with the view expressed by him as to the undesirability of having our present expensive uniform. As he says, it deters many of the best young men in the country from joining the militia. That is a subject to which I have given some attention, and I am entirely in sympathy with the view he has expressed. With regard to the pay of the permanent force, I agree with him there also. The difficulty is to persuade everybody else of the desirability of the increase. I also believe that we should have some pension system. I promised last year to try to introduce it. I have done the best I could; but, I am sorry to say, that this session must go through without my accomplishing it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) has asked me a question as to the officers who gave up their commissions and voluntarily went into the ranks of the contingents sent to South Africa. I think it was quite right to offer to Lord Roberts the gift of twenty-four of the commissions that were given to this country—I think that twenty-four out of forty was not too large a number to have given to the men in South Africa. I think also that it would have been scarcely proper to have restricted Lord Roberts. I felt that he would call upon Colonel Otter, Drury, Lessard and Evans and the other officers there to advise him as to the best men to receive the commissions. And I think that already at least some of the men who gave up their commissions in Canadian regiments and went to South Africa as privates have been promoted. I think there has been one or two, if not more, cases of that kind. I feel, and have always felt, that these men were entitled to special considerations; and if they do not receive it there, I think they should receive it when they return to Canada. With regard to what the hon. member for Victoria has said in the matter of camp rations I shall be very glad to take that into consideration and see what can be done. The hon. gentleman says that if we are to have a reserve of officers we ought to have a reserve of men. There is a great deal of force in that remark. Still, I think it is of the first importance to have a reserve of officers, because they can be utilized in case of difficulty. But I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that we should have the militia reserve enrolled. Theoretically, we have it already, but practically we have not. I think that is one of the things that the department should take up; and even if the men were only called out for a single day, simply to perfect their organization, I think that should be done. And, as the hon. gentleman says, it could be done at very little expense indeed. I agree also that the country should have a reserve of arms sufficient to arm the reserve in case it is organized. With regard to the repatriation of the 100th Regiment, it came very near being carried out before the regiment left Halifax; but, unfortunately, it was not carried out. I felt that was the opportune moment to bring it about. The matter is still in abeyance, and is now before the War Office. The proposition is that Halifax or some other point in Canada should be made a depot of the regiment; it should be transferred from its present position in Ireland to Halifax.

They would have there all the machinery of an Imperial depot. That is the proposal now before the War Office. There are those who think we would find it difficult to recruit, but the events of the last six or eight months have converted me to the view that there would not be a great deal of difficulty. I have reason to think that the War Office looks favourably upon the suggestion. The hon. gentleman asked me what steps were necessary in order to procure rifles for the cadets of schools. The only thing that is necessary is to complete an organization and then make application to the district officer commanding. We have still a number of rifles that are coming in, as we issue the new Lee-Enfield the old rifles are returned to the store, and we are not only willing but anxious to get rid of them in this useful way.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). I regret that I was not aware that the subject of the militia was coming up for discussion this evening, as I had entertained some views that I would have been glad to have laid before the committee in proper shape. I had the pleasure of listening to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Victoria, and I must say that I heartily approve of them. He seems to have made a study of this question, and they certainly were of interest and of much value to the service. I was especially pleased to note the harmonious and generous spirit in which this whole militia matter was discussed this evening. With regard to giving boys military training, I think no better plan could be adopted than for the Federal government to arrange for giving military instruction to the youths of this country, and imparting it to them in all the public schools. I would suggest the Federal government communicate with the superintendents of education in each province, and let them devise some scheme or plan whereby that instruction and the character of the same could be given during school hours. One-half an hour can be employed very profitably each school day in drill instruction that is now idly employed by the boys in going out for recreation during the term of recess. They are supposed during recess to move about and kick up their heels for physical exercise, which exercise can be profitably employed in military drill. I would not say that such drill should be confined strictly to the boys; if the girls wish to form a corps for similar drill let them do so, where there is a mixed school let each be separate. Where boys and girls are taught in separate departments, they might receive drill instruction in each department. By training of this sort, youths acquire not only the military drill, but a graceful and easy carriage, a fine physique, a martial appearance, and a noble bearing most essential to both sexes, as you will see as they approach and arrive to ripe young manhood or womanhood. I think that if our boys were given military training and some instruction in military tactics it would stand them in good stead in riper years, and they would be better able to shoulder a rifle, and know its use in defence of their country in time of need. It is evident that after receiving such instruction they would be ready to enter the ranks with very little training, but with excellent beneficial results.

I may here mention that I am interested in a little corps of youths in my own county, for whose instruction I am paying, especially for a bandmaster to give them instruction in music. The reason I have not given them instruction in drill is simply because I cannot get the rifles. The hon.

member for Victoria referred to the matter of rifles to be placed in the hands of the boys. If the minister could furnish a certain description of rifle, a little lighter than the present rifle which is being used, I think it would be more advantageous to the boys, and greatly tend to inspire them with a martial spirit if in possession of such arms better than were they drilled without. With regard to a school of instruction, I may say that I referred to it in a letter that I sent to the head teacher at Mahone Bay school in my county on last Empire Day. Unfortunately, I was not able to attend in person, and so I did the next best thing by sending a letter with some advice on loyalty, &c. I think if these ideas were promulgated and brought into practice amongst the youths of the various provinces by the federal government they would have a very useful effect. I would suggest that the Minister of Militia and Defence take this matter up with care and move in the direction I suggest, and I am sure he will see very useful results.

Now, with regard to the uniform, as was well said by the hon. member for Victoria, is a very expensive bit of clothing for an officer to furnish, particularly if he is not blessed with considerable means in the needful. I may mention that my own uniform cost me, with the horse equipment, &c., no less a sum than about $600. Of course, a uniform for an officer of lesser rank would cost less, and we might find the material in Canada and adopt a style of uniform that would cost very much less than that at present in vogue. I do not see why we should follow the example of old England as to the colour and quality of uniform; we can adopt one of our own, if we see fit, in which we would feel greater pride, knowing it to be a Canadian uniform, and the material manufactured at home or in Canada. With regard to the rank of colonel, I do not know whether it would be in place for me at present to offer any remarks on that subject, seeing that there is a Bill coming up for its third reading in that connection. I will, however, venture to say this much, that I think it would be a mistake to place a civilian who has never known anything of military tactics, over the head of a lieutenant-colonel who has risen in the service to possess the title of lieutenant-colonel. I think after he has spent his whole life in that work, borne the burden and heat of the day, it would be unfair to place over his head a civilian without any knowledge of drill or military tactics, simply because he happened to be wealthy, or belonged to some political stripe, or had some political influence with the government of the day. It would be also unfair again to those occupying a lesser rank, such as that of major or lieutenant, or an officer of the staff. If the hon. minister will permit me, I would suggest that the object could be readily attained if he would adopt a mode of procedure which I will here propose. He will pardon me if I make bold enough to dictate to him what I think would be advisable to meet his purpose. I would say that the friend or friends of any person who is desirous of having the rank of colonel or lieutenant-colonel should advise the officer in command of the regiment to bring the matter to the notice of the battalion at a meeting that would be called for the purpose, at which the matter could be discussed pro and con in regard to this party. If it was considered that the appointee was one worthy of the position of being a colonel or lieutenant-colonel, the name so submitted at that meeting and approved of would be reported to the government, or to the hon. Minister of Militia, who would report and make a recommendation to the Governor in Council, if he approved of the nomination, and so accomplish his object. In that way a person would acquire the rank of colonel or lieutenant-colonel, but it would emanate from the battalion, and he would become a colonel or a lieutenant in a way that would be more regular and more satisfactory than if a Bill were passed whereby he would be hoisted into a position by a government or a political party of which he would, perhaps, be very undeserving. I repeat again, Mr. Chairman, that I am sorry I did not know this matter was coming up this evening or I would have been able to have formulated my ideas, and to have placed them before the committee in a better position than, perhaps, I have done this evening.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think it was agreed that when we had two sittings a day we would not sit beyond twelve o'clock. The hon. gentleman knows that we have the Railway and Agriculture Committees tomorrow morning in addition to a morning sitting of the House, so that if the hon. gentleman does not mean to ask us to do more work than we are able to do he will consent to an adjournment, which, I think, will contribute to the expedition of the passage of the estimates instead of interfering with their progress. We have had a discussion that has cleared the atmosphere to a very great extent, and if the hon. gentleman will agree to the adjournment now, I think it will not interfere at all with the progress of the estimates to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I hope the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) will not object to some of the estimates going through. We have spent a good many hours in the discussion. Some of the items may be left over. The course that was pursued last year, after the discussion, was that one item was reserved with the understanding that the whole discussion on every branch of the militia estimates could be had on that item. I am quite willing, and not only willing, but anxious, that an arrangement of that kind should be made now. It seems to me that after sitting here so long we ought to have at least the appearance of getting through with some work, and I would suggest that to my hon. friend as a solution of the difficulty. I would like to give some explanation of the items, and we can reserve one or two upon which the whole question can be reopened at any time when we take them up.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think this is a very unsatisfactory way of dealing with estimates. The hon. gentleman says that we will go through the whole discussion again. It is better not to go over it twice. It is better to give it up to-night and to take up the estimates to-morrow and dispose of them. I do not think it will expedite matters to continue the discussion. The hon. gentleman must admit that most of the points at issue have been pretty well ventilated to-night. There are some points about promotion and other matters that will necessitate some discussion. I think we have done pretty well to-day, and I would ask the hon. gentleman, in his own interest, not to insist upon proceeding. I think it would be far better to adjourn now, and to take up the estimates whenever the government see fit to take them up again. To-morrow will be a very busy day, as the Railway Committee will have an important session, as the Committee on Agriculture will sit at ten o'clock, and as the House will also be in session.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I quite agree with my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron), that, as we have morning sessions of the House, we should not be expected to sit late at night. Although my hon. friend says that the atmosphere has been cleared, the evidence on the Votes and Proceedings of the work that we have done will be rather small. I would prefer that we should take some of the non-contested items to-night and make a reasonable degree of progress. I have no desire to ask the House to sit very late. I think we might take a few items and then adjourn.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think we have done a sufficient amount of work to-day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, we have not done any work that will show on the Votes and Proceedings.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Votes and Proceedings will not be out until we have done the work, so that nobody will know anything about it.

Mr. CLANCY. I think, since we will have two important committees sitting to-morrow, one at ten o'clock and another at eleven o'clock, the hon. Minister of Militia can hardly ask us to proceed further to-night. We have had a very interesting discussion, and the hon. gentleman should remember that he has taken up a good deal of the time himself. I think it is hardly fair to ask us to go on.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will ask my hon. friend to compromise in this way; take vote No. 30 for civil government contingencies. That will leave all the main estimates open for discussion. The contingent vote is the same as last year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Very well.

The committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Might I ask the government what they intend taking up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there is an understanding between the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) and the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) that the Election Bill should be considered on Tuesday, if my memory is correct. Failing that we will go on with the militia estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 26, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

YARMOUTH STEAMSHIP COMPANY AND THE DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). I have a motion to bring before the House, for which I ask the kind indulgence of the House when I state the circumstances. It is for leave to suspend the rules and introduce a Bill permitting the Yarmouth Steamship Company to sell and the Dominion Atlantic Company to buy all the vessels and stock of the former company. The Dominion Atlantic Railway Company runs between Halifax and Yarmouth, and has steamers connecting with Boston. The Yarmouth Steamship Company is an old company, that for many years has had a steamship line between Yarmouth and Boston. A certain amount of rivalry and competition has grown up in the steamship business between these two companies, and has lasted many years. Their differences have been before the Privy Council, and their competition has been, no doubt, disastrous, or at least not advantageous, to both companies. Up to within perhaps a fortnight the rivalry was going on in the usual way in which struggles of that kind are carried on. But the Yarmouth Steamship Company lost its chief manager, the Hon. Mr. Baker, whose death was a great loss to the whole province of Nova Scotia, and probably that fact, combined with the continuous efforts of the steamship company to promote its business, has brought the companies together, and within the last fortnight a proposition has been made by the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company to purchase all the outfit of the Yarmouth Company, and the latter company is in the process of agreeing to the sale. I think that the amount of the purchase is in the neighbourhood of $350,000. No time for advertising or giving the usual notices can be had, and it is of the utmost importance to the two companies, and of considerable importance to the community, that this bargain should be consummated. The Bill has been submitted to the solicitors of both companies, and both have agreed to it, and the Minister of Railways is favourable to the proposition, and requested me to introduce the Bill. I therefore move :

That all the rules and orders be suspended in relation to the Bill authorizing the sale of the Yarmouth Steamship Company's property and certain of its rights, privileges and franchises to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, Limited.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) The date at which this is brought in makes it impossible, I suppose, that the different interests shall have the notices which are thought reasonable and necessary in order that no individual interests may be injured. It seems rather an important thing to undertake to give the power of purchase and amalgamation in a case involving such large interests, without public notice. What statement has the hon. gentleman from the solicitors of the company showing that all the interests are united in this matter, because the majority of interests might be united and individual interests might object and be seriously injured?

Mr. FLINT. I can give the hon. gentleman my assurance that I am personally aware that it is the unanimous wish of the shareholders of the Yarmouth Steamship Company that this amalgamation should be effected. They are very much in favour of the transaction, and the negotiations are going on in the town of Yarmouth.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the extent of the controlling interest? Is it widely distributed or in compact form?

Mr. FLINT. I think that the principal shareholders are in Yarmouth and Halifax, but there may be a few shares held elsewhere. I was in Halifax and met some of the shareholders, and they were all unanimous in desiring to have the sale take place.

Mr. FOSTER. Has there been any meeting of the shareholders?

Mr. FLINT. The Bill does not provide for the sale, but only for the permission to sell, and of course they have to carry through the transactions leading up to the sale according to law.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FLINT moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 185), authorizing the sale of the Yarmouth Steamship Company's property and certain of its rights, privileges and franchises to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, Limited.

Motion agreed to : Bill read the first and the second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

On the order being called for—

Introduction of a Bill to secure uniform conditions in the policies of fire insurance.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) At this time of the session, it does not seem right that any Bill that the government really propose to put through should now be kept back from introduction, printing and distribution. We have already had notice given of an entirely new Bill, the subject of which was discussed at the beginning of the session ; and there does not seem to be any reason under heaven why that Bill should not have been down, discussed and acted upon months ago—but it is left now until the dying hours of the session. Here are two government measures on the Order paper of which notice is given, but neither of them is ready for introduction at this moment.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The first is not a government measure, and though I am not authorized to speak for the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) I believe he does not intend to proceed with it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). As to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), in whose name the other measure stands, he is away at this moment and was away yesterday for a very pious object—that of attending the funeral of Col. Tyrwhitt.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I wish to call attention once more to the fact that I have not yet got the returns from the different departments of the government with reference to the officials dismissed on account of alleged partisanship. Although I have asked for the return for both years, and the House has ordered it, I have only fragmentary returns and returns which only come down to the 26th of April, 1899. Despite all the promises of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and all the even humiliating requests that I have made, I find myself now actually out of court so far as getting the information I want is concerned. The order of the House is treated with contempt—nothing more and nothing less.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) tell me the particular departments to which he refers?

Mr. FOSTER. All of them. There is not one of them that has complied with the order, with the exception of that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—which is complete, if the wording corresponds with the intent, as I explained to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) does not mean that all departments have failed to make returns. I am not aware of anything in my own department.

Mr. FOSTER. Some of the departments have no returns to make. But even of those that have returns to make, none have given anything later than the 26th of April, 1899, and some of them have not even returned up to that date.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think that any dismissals have taken place since 1899.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I know of some. I have a special case, which will be brought up, which took place in 1900.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I wish to say, in regard to the large return that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) brought down, I have looked through it, and the letters I wanted, I regret to say, are not there.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not answerable for that. I do not know particularly what letters the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) wants. But I am sure—and I know that the hon. gentleman has no doubt—that Mr. White would comply with the order of the House.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—ASSIGNMENT OF SOLDIERS' PAY.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) to a letter I have just received:

Seeley's Bay, June 25, 1900.

George Taylor, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—My son Charles, who is in South Africa, signed over half his pay to me. Please inform me the cause of the difference in the amounts we receive. On April 1 we received $11.25; on May 1, $9.20; June 1, $6.

Please favour with your attention.

(Sgd.) A. W. SWEET.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I will get the answer this afternoon if possible.

CORPORAL COURTNEY.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to know from the Minister of Militia if he is prepared to give a supplementary answer in regard to Corporal Courtney?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not yet received an answer. The papers have not yet come. I will telegraph for them to-day.

HONORARY COLONEL.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the Minister of Militia whether there have been recently any Canadian civilians appointed as honorary colonels, and whether the House is to understand that that splendid soldier and military organizer, General Hutton, recommended appointments of that kind.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). All the appointments that were made up to the time General Hutton went away were recommended by him.

Mr. McNEILL. I understood from the hon. minister that he wished the House to understand that General Hutton had recommended—and some of us were a good deal surprised—the appointment of civilians as honorary colonels of military regiments. Were we correct in understanding the hon. minister in that sense—that General Hutton had recommended the appointment of civilians as honorary colonels?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. Canadian civilians?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. In one case, General Hutton certainly recommended.

YUKON TELEGRAPH—MR. PERCY CHARLESON AND THE PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES.

Mr. G. R. MAXWELL (Burrard). Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to make a brief statement. It will be in the recollection of hon. members that the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made a serious charge, in his usual reckless way, against Mr. Charleson, in the city of Vancouver. I did not bring the matter up then, because I thought the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) would make some statement to the House to try to prove the charge he had made—

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I think if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell) is going to rise at this stage, and without any motion, make statements charging gentlemen on this side with making reckless charges, the House will probably be taken a long way afield. I call the attention of the Speaker to it.

Mr. MAXWELL. I simply want to read a telegram—

Mr. FOSTER. I beg to call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell) did not simply read a telegram, but proceeded to make a charge.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Maxwell) that he withdraw that statement about a reckless charge being made.

Mr. MAXWELL. I do not know—unless it is the wish of the Speaker and the House—I feel very strongly on this point.

Mr. FOSTER. I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell) has not withdrawn his statement.

Mr. MAXWELL. I beg to withdraw the statement. However, I shall have an opportunity at a more convenient season.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BERGERON. That is worse.

Mr. MAXWELL. The telegram is as follows:—

Vancouver, B.C., June 13-14.

George R. Maxwell, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Re construction Yukon telegraph. Press dispatch says that my son, Percy Charleson, receives five per cent on all government goods bought here. Sorry Sir Hibbert Tupper made such a charge. I respect his father very much, but must say his son makes a false assertion. My son is in a more lucrative business than politics.

(Sgd.) J. B. CHARLESON.

Brokers here are the Crickmay Bros., who are strict Conservatives.

(Sgd.) DONALD B. CHARLESON.

Mr. Donald B. Charleson, who has signed, is a brother of Mr. J. B. Charleson, the superintendent of Yukon telegraphs.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether an hon. gentleman has a right to rise in this House and read telegrams or letters sent to him, making charges against members of this House? That telegram does that, and does it in a very offensive way. I would like to have your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to the rights of members in that respect.

Mr. HAGGART. It does much more, it contradicts a statement in this House, contradicts a statement by a telegram.

Mr. MAXWELL. I would point out that the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles

Mr. MAXWELL.

Hibbert Tupper) made serious charges against this gentleman, and without attempting to substantiate that charge he runs away now to the Pacific coast. The impression has gone abroad that the statement made by the hon. member in his charge, is true. Now, I say it is surely the right of a member of this House to clear the character of a citizen than whom there is no more honourable and respectable in the city of Vancouver.

Mr. FOSTER. Chair.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I do not dispute the right of the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) to ask for your ruling, but I would like first to call attention to the fact that he read the other day a telegram from a gentleman accusing the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) of making a false and malicious statement. I thought it was an improper telegram, and I think my hon. friend from Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) is not within the rule in reading this telegram. But I do not think the member for York should raise the point, after violating the rule himself within the last few days.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not alter the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must say that the rule has been violated in this case. I think there are some statements in that telegram that, to say the least of it, are unnecessary; but the practice of the House has been, as a matter of courtesy to outside individuals, to allow hon. members to deny charges made against outside individuals. But I think it is unfair to the dignity of the House that suggestions should be made against the fairness of members of the House by outsiders.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Or by members of the House, for that matter.

Mr. GEO. LANDERKIN (South Grey). If a member is shielded by privileges of the House in assailing a person who has no opportunity to reply, it is natural that the person assailed should take the first opportunity to defend himself.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, but he should not strike back.

Mr. BERGERON. I think the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) is unjust to the hon. member for Pictou in saying that after having made accusations he then ran away. My hon. friend from Pictou asked this House to make a full investigation into all these charges, and the government denied the hon. member for Pictou the opportunity to prove his charges.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to call the attention of the government to the fact that a return promised by Mr. Ogilvie over a year ago has not yet been brought down to the House; and to the further fact that the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) has acknowledged before this House that he has telegraphed to Mr. Ogilvie repeatedly for that report, or an explanation of why it has not been sent, and that he also wrote Mr. Ogilvie later, demanding an explanation for his conduct, and that afterwards, in response to a request made from the House, he sent an urgent telegram to know why there was delay. Up to the present hour parliament is in this position, that one of its paid officers, with very great power in the Yukon, has actually refused to send in his report, has actually refused to answer telegrams of urgent inquiry. Parliament is to-day without the information which it ought to have from this officer, and without any satisfactory explanation as to why he has acted in that way. I think we ought to know whether communications with the Yukon have been entirely interrupted, and we ought to know the position of the government in reference to that matter.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have no objection to my hon. friend bringing up the question, he is within his rights in doing so. But this is not the proper time: and moreover, I would remind him that the Railway Committee is sitting at this moment, and the acting Minister of the Interior is not in the House and is unable to give any answer.

Mr. FOSTER. But the right hon. gentleman is here, and I think it more nearly affects him as leader of the government, than probably it does the Minister of the Interior.

The PRIME MINISTER. I decline to discuss this question in the absence of the Minister of the Interior.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 180) respecting Chinese Immigration.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier.)

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Militia—Pay and allowances ..... $381,094

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). There is an increase in this vote of $28,198. The increase in the pay of headquarters district staff is $3,198; and the increase to permanent force, 101 additional men, is $25,000. Major Rivers, of the permanent force, was invalided some time ago as a result of his services in the North-west rebellion, and became unable properly to perform his duties. He was brought to Ottawa to do work here in connection with the medals, he is head of the Medals Claim Board. We have found him an efficient officer, and it is proposed now to make a permanent provision to retain him here. As his services are thought to be very valuable, $1,800 will be used in that way. That, with certain smaller items, accounts for $3,192 of the increase. The rest of the increase is $25,000 additional to permanent force. We have increased the permanent force to 966 men from 865 last year.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the minister passes on to his estimates, will he tell us if there is anything decided as to who shall be the general of our troops here, taking the place of General Hutton permanently.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say to my hon. friend that there is a name before the government for its consideration. I daresay I may be able to state this afternoon, but at the present moment I am not able, particularly in the absence of the Prime Minister, to make any statement in reference to the subject, although I think the matter will be settled in a day or two.

Annual drill ..... $275,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There appears to be a decrease of $25,000 in this vote, but I do not wish to mislead the committee in any way in reference to it. The vote for annual drill will not be reduced. As I have explained several times to the House, we never know in advance when the major part of the force will be called out for annual drill. This year the largest proportion of the force has been called out before the 1st of July. Circumstances may occur next year under which it will not be necessary to do that, but, in any case, I may say that the annual cost of drilling the force has been demonstrated to be about $425,000. I think this has been the cost for the last two or three years, so that although there is an apparent decrease here, no doubt supplementary estimates for next year will be required next session, which will make up the vote for the year to about $425,000.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have your details for $425,000. Look on page 41.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a misprint. It should be $275,000. There are other misprints. A little farther down there is a worse misprint.

Mr. FOSTER. How many men will have been drilled this year when all the drills have taken place?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. About 35,000 within the financial year.

Mr. FOSTER. How many days actual drill do these men get?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They are paid for twelve days, but it takes one day to get into camp and one day to break up camp. That leaves ten days, and then there are two Sundays, which reduces actual drill to eight days. Of course, there are services on Sunday, when the men are paraded and marched to Divine service, which is of some use to them from the point of view of discipline and drill, although the actual drilling days are about eight. The other two days are also useful, going into camp, learning how to put up the tents, and organizing the camp. In the same manner, the last day, going out, is useful, as the men receive instruction in striking their tents, packing them up, and getting ready for the march.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion of this amount is for transport?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. About $45,000.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) How does the minister apportion the transport? Does he give contracts or call for tenders for moving the troops?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have a fixed rate with the railways. Under the Militia Act we have power to force the railways to accept the lowest current rates prevailing at the time for freight and passengers. An order in council was passed some three years ago, when Colonel Lake was here, dealing with the subject. A good deal of reduction was made at that time by the railway companies, as compared with the old rates. As far as steamboats or any other kinds of transportation, outside of the railways, are concerned, we ask for tenders in every case.

Mr. PRIOR. Will the minister say that in all cases he has called for tenders and given the contract to the lowest bidder?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. In all cases to the lowest tenderer?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In all cases.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be with a great deal of assurance that I should attempt to criticise militia matters, but, from a layman's point of view, there are two or three things that strike me. Of these 35,000 men who may, in the course of the year, be called out and given these eight days' drill, how many of them, from past experience, take a second year's drill? What proportion of the people drilled would be recruits or raw men?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a very interesting and very important question. The percentage will differ a good deal in different places. But, my experience is that not more than 66 per cent, and even, perhaps, as low as 50 per cent, will go out a second year.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. FOSTER. Then the point of my remark is this: We are here face to face with an expenditure of close upon half a million dollars, or say, $425,000, each year for the mere purpose of what you may call mechanical drill. This is an immense amount of money. Outside of its being a large amount of money in itself, the question which ought to be satisfactorily answered, I think, is as to whether it is an amount of money for the expenditure of which we are getting the advantages that we ought to get from one point of view and one only—the actual defensive power of the country. I do not think it makes very much for the argument as to whether you have a few persons finely drilled in all the technical movements of the army. The main point, in the end, is this: What is the effective power of the country, as a whole, to defend itself in case of attack, and what is the power of the country if it becomes necessary to make an offensive movement? Now, it seems to me, as a layman and an onlooker, that a great deal of money has been spent in the past, and is being spent at present, upon what is absolutely of no value at all in the actual work of battle, or in the field, and I think nothing has been a greater object lesson to the world at large, and to Canada in particular, from that point of view, than what has taken place during the last six months in the Transvaal. Speaking briefly, and without going into details, it has shown that it does not take any three or four years to make a soldier, that it does not amount to very much as to whether a man has been in camp eight days out of the year every other year or every three years or not. You make soldiers in this age out of self-reliant men, who have initiative, men used to intelligent and self-reliant action; you make soldiers out of these men in a very few days time during the actual work of battle.

Provided that you have the courage, and there is no doubt of that in reference to Canadian militiamen and the Canadian people; provided that you have the intelligence; the initiative; the power to act independently of suggestions which is the characteristic of our Canadian people, and provided you have in the hands of these men an effective weapon and the knowledge by these men that they are able to use that weapon; you have, I believe, the nucleus of the best army in the world, and one which only requires a very little of the active field work under intelligent commanders to make the most effective defence, when defence is necessary, and the most successful offensive movement, when that is necessary. Is there not some way in which you can spend $425,000 much better than to call from amongst our rural population young men of different ages, green as far as anything like military evolutions are concerned, altogether unused to the rifle; herd them in close railway carriages and carry them away to the place where they are put to drill. There is no doubt they will get some good in the eight days they are there, but they get it at a tremendous expenditure of the people's money. Coming right down to common sense, what do they learn after all? They hear the bugle call, they get the announcements that are made from day to day; they know they have to be in at a certain time and out at a certain time; they are to keep themselves spick and span and all the like of that, and they get a certain amount of practice in marching in an order which I suppose once out of a hundred times is not carried out in the stress and storm of battle. During that eight days drill how often do they fire a musket? What knowledge do they get of the power and the control and the use of the one weapon upon which they have to depend in battle for their effectiveness against the foe? I tender my remarks with a great deal of modesty, but I must say that I believe they echo the lay idea which is growing pretty strong in this Dominion, that more effective use can be made of this half million dollars than in gathering these men together in order to give them an eight days drill in the semblance of war manoeuvring, which is so different from the actual that it is of very little use. I presume that 55 per cent of these young men never see a second drill, and during their ordinary avocations they do not practice what they learn in the camp. If they do not forget it they certainly do not learn any more in the interval. Could not the $425,000 be better placed in teaching young men throughout our country the proper use of the proper rifle, and so making them masters of the weapon which is their sole reliance in time of war. I see through the press that there has been some practice with the Morris tube. I do not know what in the world a Morris tube is, but I do not imagine that Lord Roberts has any Morris tube business in the Transvaal, and I do not imagine that the men who simply practice in Morris tubes are going to know very much about the effective use of the rifle in time of war. It seems to me that what you want to get is something like the conditions of war. You want to shoot in the open air, you want to be practiced in taking cover, you want to be practiced in firing at a moving object. The enemy do not stand up and put their hands in their pockets and tell the opposing soldiers to fire at them. Our soldiers in actual warfare will have to fire at those who are taking advantage of every bit of cover, and it seems to me that the mimic warfare that you get out of this drill is just about as useless as it can be in comparison with the better practice which I think they might have. Take your 50,000 or 100,000 men, and with a proper expenditure of money teach every one of them during the year the use of the most approved rifle so that they will have confidence in it and become good shots, and you have an effective force in this country which I think will be sufficient for all our needs. These are in the rough, some thoughts which have been running through my mind for some years and which have been impressed upon me more strongly by the lessons of the South African war. In that war after some experience has been gained the British troops when they advance, instead of marching shoulder to shoulder, three deep, have given up that kind of thing. Now, a reasonable general gets his men as far away from each other as he can so that there will be as little advantage as possible to the shooting of the enemy, and instead of walking right up and waving their flag and daring the whole world, I find that the soldiers now in battle dodge whenever they can dodge, seek cover wherever cover is afforded, and the men who do this are the most effective in the practical art of war to-day. I do not propose to teach the Minister of Militia anything. He knows it all, and I know nothing about it. However, I submit this little screed for what it is worth, and I still maintain that there could be a better use made of the $425,000 than by investing it in the present system pursued during the eight days' drill.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) had been present last evening when this matter was fully discussed, he would have heard interesting views from some gentlemen on his own side of the House, even if he did not pay much attention to mine. There is without doubt a great deal of force in some of the observations which the hon. gentleman has made. However, if he were at all familiar with military matters he would know that it is a very long time since the idea of marching shoulder to shoulder was exploded. That idea only exists to-day in songs.

Mr. FOSTER. It exists in the drill to-day, for I see it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, in marching past on the Queen's Birthday. But, thirty-five years ago when I first became a volunteer, advancing and retiring were done in skirmishing order. However, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says, many valuable lessons have been learned from the South African war, and the most important is that the soldier is no longer a part of a machine in which he apparently has no interest but to march to the front and do what he is told. He must under modern conditions be a man of brains, and capable under a commander of taking advantage of every opportunity he can get to save himself, both during his advance to the front and while retiring.

But I think my hon. friend is quite mistaken in supposing that anything could take the place of annual drill. If any change should be made, I think it should rather be in the direction of increasing the term of the annual camps than diminishing or doing away with it. If the hon. gentleman had said that the time was so short that very little good resulted, and that therefore we should abolish the whole thing unless we saw fit to increase the time, I might be inclined to listen to what he said: but to say that we should sweep away annual drill absolutely is equivalent to saying that we should wipe out the militia organization altogether. We must have organization; that is the underlying principle of an army. Whatever changes may be made in the future, you never can have an army fit to go into the field to fight, either offensively or defensively, without ample and careful organization. That is what is done by the annual camp. The most important part of the education of officers is to send them into the field where they will have an opportunity of putting their knowledge into practice, and learning how to lead men, if the necessity ever arose compelling them to take up arms. So with the men: they must know their places. Even though not more than 50 per cent of them go into camp the second year—and that is a very fair percentage—you will have men who are fond of soldiering; you will have the right-hand men and the left-hand men of sections, and non-commissioned officers; and you will have in these men the nucleus of an army when the occasion arises. I think it would be a very serious retrograde step, indeed, to do away with annual camp. My hon. friend talks about the expense. The expense amounts to about eight or ten cents per head of the population of this country to-day. There is not a country in the world, pretending to be a nation of any importance, and not a colony of the British Empire, I believe, where the expenditure per head of the population for military purposes is as small as it is in Canada. While I am quite at one with the hon. gentleman in believing that in the near future important changes will be made, that evolution will take place which will put matters on a better footing than they are to-day, I am not prepared to advise the House that we can dispense with the vote which is now before us.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I want to say a few words on this question, especially in view of what took place last night. I have always thought that it was fortunate for us in Canada that we are so situated and constituted that the great bulk of our inhabitants can follow the peaceful pursuits of life. I have invariably believed that one of the evils under which European countries are compelled to subsist is the militarism and military spirit prevalent amongst them—not because they desire to cultivate that spirit, but because they are so situated as perhaps to be obliged to do so in self-defence. As an evidence of the baneful effects of that spirit upon the European countries where it is so rampant, I may point out that many of their inhabitants are leaving and coming to Canada, the United States and other countries where they are not compelled to do so much military service. For instance, the Doukhobors and Galicians come to this country because they do not want to fight, but want to follow the peaceful pursuits of life. I do not go so far as to say that the inhabitants of a country should not be compelled to fight in its defence. I think that is one of the duties that devolve upon the citizens of any country—that in the hour of danger they should be prepared to sacrifice human life if necessary in the defence of the country and of the rights they enjoy. But I draw a marked distinction between that and the military spirit which seems to be so rampant in European countries. I was struck last night with the suggestions made looking to the turning of the youth of our country towards a military life. One hon. gentleman said he regarded it as very important that we should make it compulsory upon every school teacher in the country to give military drill to the pupils. I drew attention to the fact that about two-thirds of our school teachers were ladies, and that it would be very inconvenient to put rifles into their hands and ask them to drill their pupils. I mentioned that to show that there is so little disposition to cultivate military discipline in our schools that it would be quite out of the question to expect that suggestion to be carried out: and I think it would be very unwise to incorporate any such suggestion in our school regulations. I can understand that when our young men reach the high schools or the collegiate institutes, it might be desirable to give them that preliminary military training which would be of use to them in the event of their taking to that line in after life; but to carry the system into the common schools of our country I have always thought would be very unwise. According to these main estimates, we have an expenditure to-day on military affairs of $1,618,000. I suppose I would be within the mark in saying that in round numbers we spend $2,000,000 a year on military affairs. I am far from saying that it is not wise to spend a considerable sum for that purpose, because while we remain a part of the British Empire, our position demands that we should incur an outlay and assume a responsibility for our share in the defence of the empire. But I think we may learn from the experience of European countries, where the military spirit is so rampant, that there is a danger of directing too much attention to military matters. There is a danger also of creating a desire on the part of a large number of our rising generation to go into unproductive lines, and this is one of the showy lines of life. No doubt it is useful, in times of need, but, as the ex-Minister of Finance has said, it is remarkable the rapidity with which ordinary labourers and artisans are able to go into military lines and make themselves efficient soldiers when the occasion arises. It is not necessary for a young man to have years of his life taken up in soldiering. Such young men are taken from the farms and the workshops, and from behind the counter, and the experience of the American war, and the recent experience of our young men in South Africa, shows that such men, when put alongside the tried, steady military men of the regular ranks, are able to hold their own and prove themselves equally useful and efficient.

An hon. MEMBER. In the lower ranks.

Mr. SPROULE. In all the ranks except perhaps, at the very top as commanders. One of the great dangers in making military life so attractive for our young men is, that they will be tempted away from peaceful pursuits in large numbers and add to a class who are not wage-earners or producers. There are two reasons which attract young men into military life. One is the glitter, and the other is the comparative ease and luxury it offers, compared with the manual labour required in other peaceful pursuits. We should rather guard against the danger of fostering too much the military spirit in our young country. If history teaches us anything, it teaches us the evils that have resulted from this spirit in European countries, and, fortunately, as we are situated, it is easy for us to avoid those evils. I would, therefore, be rather opposed to the inclination to extend this spirit to any large extent, as some of our military men are disposed to do to-day. It is incumbent on public men rather to sound a note of warning than a note of encouragement when we see the inclination that is manifested in some quarters at present for military display and glory. For that reason, this very large expenditure does not meet with the warm and hearty approval on my part that it does on the part of some hon. members of this House who are infected with the desire to shine on the field of arms.

Mr. JAMES DOMVILLE (King's, N.B.) I think that the hon. minister is right in saying that we should extend our annual drill a few days. A great deal has been said about what can be learned in camp, and no doubt in twelve days a soldier will learn something. Our officers, for instance, will thereby become accustomed to handle and drill large bodies of men. Our men are enlisted for three years: and if 60 per cent only turn out every year, I should say that we should extend the annual drill to fourteen days, and alter our system in camp somewhat by giving more attention to shooting and less to drill. A great deal of this military display which we have witnessed in the past is not of much value. What we want is to turn out men thoroughly able to shoot. The first day of the camp does not amount to anything, neither does the last day when the camp breaks up; then there is a Sunday on which the men cannot drill, which makes three days gone, and the chances are that there will be two wet days when they cannot turn out, and this takes a loss of five days, so that you have only seven days practically in which to teach the men everything. How much shooting can you do in that period? Every one with any experience knows that when regiments go to the butts, a number of men simply fire off their cartridges so that they may show they have shot, and very often a man who does not care about shooting will hand his ammunition over to one who does. I think that if the drill were lengthened by four days, the men could shoot more at their leisure and be better instructed, and then, perhaps, would continue their practice when they reach their homes and take a great deal of pride in learning the business. I should like to suggest also that every regiment should average 350 or 400 men when in camp, so that in the three years each regiment would pass through 800 or 1,000 men, and I should like to see these men who have put in their three years drill placed on the reserve of the regiments, and compelled to remain on that reserve for three years, so that if at any time a regiment should be called out, we would have 300 or 400 men of a reserve to fall back upon to make up the deficiency caused by those who did not respond to the call. Those men on the reserve list would learn to shoot in the way I have pointed out. I would also have the Militia Act amended so as to compel the reserve men to go into camp for one day in the year. Give them one day's pay and their rations, and let them use that day in practicing shooting. By that means we should double up our men, and instead of having 35,000 men capable of bearing arms and shooting, we would have 80,000 on hand, the majority of whom could be put into the field at almost an hour's notice. The same rules might be applied to horses for the cavalry. Let the horses be registered in the various districts and some little gratuity offered for the purpose of registration, so that the men might always know where they could get mounts.

We must also have cannons and machine guns. We talk about putting a force in the field, but we have only rifles for a certain number of men, and we should have sufficient rifles to arm, not only those who go into camp, but the reserve force as well, if we are to have an effective force. I feel very much inclined to agree with the hon. member for York in his opinion, that if we are to go on from year to year not getting more out of those camps than we do for the money we spend, it would be a very good plan not to have them at all. The regiments come into camp filled up with all sorts of men, despite the regulations as to height and health and uniforms, because the great struggle is to get enough men. Everybody is pretty well agreed that we must have these camps. They furnish opportunities for forming acquaintances in life, men from all parts are brought together, and each man is able to see what the other is worth, and obtains an experience which makes him intelligent and which he would not get in any other way. But, what we require in camp is less drill and show and more shooting. We are all agreed on that, and I think that if my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) would reconsider the matter, he would agree that instead of twelve days we had better have fourteen or sixteen days. I think that every officer will agree with me. I am sure that the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) will agree that there are hardly any of the men in any of the regiments who can shoot properly. Of course we have a Wimbledon here, and a Wimbledon in New Brunswick. But when the men went to South Africa the other day, not a single man of the shooting team went out. They have so many thousands a year to spend on ranges, and then the crack shots meet and arrange the matter among themselves. The young men do not go there; the rifle associations are not bringing out these young men and making them efficient as shots. Rifle shooting cannot be practiced without ranges, as the rifles have such range and penetration. I would like to see the government ask a certain amount of money for every district, and offer prizes for rifle shooting at local rifle ranges. I take very little stock, I must say, in the Dominion or rifle associations. There are just a few men who win all the prizes, and they shoot until they are sixty or seventy, and the young men do not come forward to learn.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. And the old men do not go to war.

Mr. DOMVILLE. No; as soon as they can shoot and have spent five years in a colonelcy, the hon. minister sends them away and gets others. I would like the hon. minister to think about this shooting business. Let prizes be offered, even though the smallest trifle, so that a young fellow who takes an interest in shooting, will feel that his skill has been recognized. They all have their girls; as they walk around, they like to have the girls point to them and say: Our man won the prize.

Mr. FOSTER. The point of the remarks I made, and the point of the remarks since made, I think converge on this idea: That while you must have your young men out, and while you must bring them together, the main thing is to see that they get the most and best possible out of the training when they are together, and out of the money that is spent upon them. I think the people of Canada have come to the point where they are not satisfied with the results we have got out of the large expenditure of money up to the present time. And, while parliament, and the country behind parliament, have been generous in the amounts of money placed at the disposal of the militia—and are willing to continue paying—I think the country feels that more should be done to prepare us for defence.

Mr. DOMVILLE.

We are a great country; and while we do not want to be Jingoese, while we do not wish our young men to take as the ideal of life the idle soldier's life, we want our young men to feel patriotism in the first place—and what is equally good—to feel the confidence in their trained ability to enforce that patriotism if necessary. Now, the frills and ornaments have taken up a great part of the money hitherto—that, and the good time. I feel certain that there is a way that could be found out and adopted to make these young men who go into the drill in summer and autumn, something better than they have the chance of being made under the old system. I believe that a system can be worked out and adopted under which rifle shooting will become common throughout the country. Rifle shooting should be supported and aided by the government. You have made a big rifle range at Ottawa. That is good. But it costs a large amount of money, and the people from all parts of this Dominion cannot come to this rifle range to shoot. A few of them do come; but it is said—and, I think, with a good deal of truth—that it is the old hands that come here every time, and while they become crack shots, the young fellows do not find very much encouragement to come. But you should have a system of helping the men to come from within any fair radius to the point where you gather your regiment together, and of developing in them an interest in their rifle ranges and in their rifle shooting. Making appropriations of money for the purpose of encouraging them, so that, whilst they are in the actual work of drill, they may carry on the practice of rifle shooting. The result of this would be greatly to improve the militia; and, what is best of all, we should keep the people of this country with us in the actual keeping up of the defences of the Dominion.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I am fully in accord with the idea of the military camp, if the money of the country is not misappropriated to benefit political friends of the government. I am informed, and credibly informed, that there is a huge job in connection with the military camp going on at Kingston. That is what I find fault with. We spend large sums of money, but very little of it goes to the men who do the actual drill. It is spent for other purposes. I have a letter here, which reads as follows:

Kingston, June 16, 1900.

George Taylor, Esq., M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Taylor,—I inclose a clipping from the 'News' of to-day to throw a little light on the way in which good Grits are rewarded.

This is the newspaper item that is referred to:

Government Pap.

The Meat Contract for the Military Camp.

Con. Millan secured the contract to supply the military camp with meat. His figure was $6.34 per cwt. This morning he showed on the market a telegram from Ottawa, and his contract price for one week will be $8.25 cwt., not much of an increase, but sufficient to indicate that the 'gang is all here.' It seems that the Laurier patriotic and loyal government, in advertising for tenders qualified the same by 'camp opening on June 26.' Mr. Millan tendered, as did others, with the 26th date being the understanding. The government either changed this date or some one erred—and also changed the price for the contractor. The hand of another is seen behind this episode, and the question now is, 'Did politics play a part?' Cornelius is a strong Grit, but many wonder what are Duncan's politics. If Mr. Millan was not a Reformer, would he have been shown the consideration he has received? It is certainly evident that the error was expensive, but the man who secured the contract could just as well have served, with a large margin left, for $6.34 as $8.25. The pap is being distributed, the elections are on. How much will the contractor contribute?

I put a question on the Order paper the other day, and the minister in his reply verified the statement that Mr. Millan had received the contract at $6.34, but that it was afterwards decided to change the figure to $8.25. My correspondent goes on:

It seems that Millan tried to get some of the local butchers to take the contract off his hands (he is not engaged in butchering business at present), but being unsuccessful, he went to Ottawa and succeeded in having the price raised from $6.34 to $8.25. The matter might be worth bringing to the notice of the Minister of Militia.

It appears that Mr. Con. Millan is not a butcher; but he had to be rewarded. He, I presume, was one of the faithful to whom circulars were sent inviting them to tender for this contract. I have not heard if it is the intention of the government to make Mr. Con. Millan an honorary colonel, but no doubt that will follow.

I may say that according to orders the medical officers of the A. M. S. (not regimental surgeons) were to do the work connected with the permanent corps, but Dr. Kilborn, who was appointed a surgeon-lieutenant in the 47th Battalion last June, was given the position of medical attendant at the Royal Military College at $2 per diem. He received his commission of surgeon-lieutenant to the 47th Regiment long after the government had declared that no appointments of the kind should be made, and he is not on the A. M. S. (Army Medical Service) at all.

You might ask if it is the intention to reward Con. Milan with a colonelcy in the militia.

That is the complaint that is heard year after year since this government came into power, that contracts to supply the camps are awarded to political supporters at outrageously high prices.

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Who is the writer?

MR. TAYLOR. Mr. George Kidd, of Kingston.

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend always suspects that there is some corruption or something wrong in the departments. Let me tell him that every contract for every camp in Canada has been advertised publicly, and that every man in Canada is at liberty to tender, and that in every case the contract has been given to the lowest tenderer. I do not know who Con. Millan is, what his politics are. I never inquired, but I am told he is a Conservative. This is what happened at Kingston. The hon. gentleman says that I answered his question, but he did not do me the justice to read more than half the answer. Tenders were asked for supplies for Kingston for June 26. It was found later on that it interefered with some other camp, and that it was necessary to ante-date that camp to June 19. Mr. Millan then said: I am not prepared; I would have been prepared at the prices I offered, but I cannot supply the meat on June 19, at that price, it will cost me more to get it. As a result, he wished to withdraw altogether. Besides this man Millan, there were three or four other tenderers. Evidently they had entered into a combine, all the tenders being between nine cents and ten cents, I think some of them ten cents. The department found itself in the position that it either had to place itself at the mercy of these men, or it had to make some better arrangement with Mr. Millan who was the original tenderer. Negotiations were opened with Mr. Millan with the result which has been given, and the meat was supplied to the camp at Kingston, notwithstanding that the camp was antedated, at a price decidedly lower than that of the three or four other tenderers who had combined in order to put up the price. That is the whole story with reference to Kingston. As to Dr. Kilborn and the Royal Military College, that is another matter; when we come to that item I will deal with it. But, I may say in passing that the hon. gentleman's correspondent is mistaken when he says that Dr. Kilborn is not in the militia. Dr. Kilborn is a surgeon of the militia, attached to one of the regiments at Kingston.

MR. J. V. ELLIS (St. John City). I think it is a pity the hon. gentleman (the member for South Leeds) did not allow the discussion to proceed along the lines on which it was going when he brought this matter up, because we were discussing the general question of how the militia was adapted to the country, and whether it was doing all we desired of it, considering the amount of money that is spent upon it. Like the hon. member for York, N. B., (Mr. Foster) it is a long time since I did any military duty, although I did some; and one has ideals with regard to these things. Every man feels, I presume, that the country should be, man for man, able to defend itself against attack; and one may also have ideas as to how the militia service should be conducted. I may say that I have been in general agreement with both sides of politics in the past as to the management of the militia business. But the hon. member for King's County (Mr. Domville) made a speech here last night which was calculated entirely to shatter one's ideas with regard to the whole militia system; and today the hon. member for York, not having heard that speech, seems to have reached the same conclusion along different lines. I paid great attention to the remarks of the hon. member for King's, because I know he has had a great deal of experience in the militia. I remember with pleasure that once I visited his camp and saw his long line of soldiers stretched out three or four miles, with all his machinery for carrying on war in the county of King's; and I came to the conclusion—of course my opinion was not that of an expert—that his men were pretty well drilled, and that a fair amount of usefulness could be got out of men who go into camp and are drilled for a time at least. What better system can take the place of the present system, it is pretty hard to say. I think the course of the war in South Africa enables us to reach certain conclusions as to the success with which the defence of a country can be carried on by the inhabitants themselves. On the other hand it must be apparent to every person that our own system has not by any means broken down, or even shown to a disadvantage as compared with the war system of that country. The Boers have proven themselves to be good soldiers in matters of defence but not good soldiers in matters of attack. For instance, they were not able to carry on sieges, they were not able to overcome the patience, or the endurance, or the training, or any of those great qualities which the British soldier acquires by association, and which the British officer acquires by study and training. The future historian of the Boer war will come to the conclusion that while they were brave men, and good shots, and had great mobility, they were not trained soldiers, and were not successful in the matter of attack. I presume that our men will learn in the same way, certainly the training the officers get must be of use to them.

One of the great difficulties I observe is that our population is of such a shifting character that when you visit a regiment year after year, as I do some of them at their annual turnout, the new faces which you see gives you an idea that we really have no permanent force, that is to say that while we have a force of men on paper, while we have a certain number regularly drilled, we find that we have not a continuous force that can be called upon one year after another. With regard to rifle shooting I quite agree with the member for York. I asked the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) last night if he would abolish money prizes. I wanted to get his opinion on the custom of giving prizes, and he said: No. But the speech which the hon. member for King's made leads me to the conclusion that he would abolish many of the prizes given at the rifle ranges. I think myself that the government might well begin by abolishing the money prizes given at the main ranges, and acknowledge excellence by giving medals or trophies of some kind. I think when the government spends money in providing ammunition for the men, there should be an ample number of men to take advantage of that offer, and that in consequence better work will be done than is done now by the same men going year after year to the local ranges, or to the county and provincial ranges, and ultimately to the Dominion range to carry off all the prizes. You can sit down really at your own home, and you can speculate, or you can bet, if you care to put it that way, as to who will carry off this and that prize in this particular competition when you know who has started in for them. It seems to me that this is a great mistake, that we are not pursuing proper lines, and I do hope that the hon. Minister of Militia will take this question into his consideration. Notwithstanding what the hon. member for King's, N.B., (Mr. Domville) said last night, I intend to vote this year for the money for the camp. I express my views with a considerable degree of diffidence, because I am not sure that I know as much about the question as I would like to know from the attention that I have given it.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). I do not think it would be a slander to say that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) sees everything through political spectacles, and he can hardly ever give credit to any person who happens to be of the opposite political persuasion for anything in the shape of honesty or fair-play.

Mr. TAYLOR. Con. Millan is not a Conservative.

Mr. BRITTON. I do not know about that, but I will speak about Millan in a minute or two. The hon. gentleman will condemn, in the strongest possible language, conduct on this side of the House that he, himself, would persistently follow and has followed for years in connection with politics. Whether it is in connection with the distribution of literature, or the awarding of contracts, or anything that was done on that side of the House with his sanction and approval, if it is done on this side of the House, or if there is any suspicion that it has been done, it meets with his strong condemnation. In regard to this particular matter, he says that Con. Millan is not a butcher at all. I believe that at this time, his business was in a transition state; he was then selling out his business at the corner of Earl and Bagot Streets in Kingston, but whether he intends to enter into business again or not, I do not know.

Mr. TAYLOR. I read the letter, and it says that he is not in the butcher business.

Mr. BRITTON. He was in the butcher business, and he was engaged in selling meat when this contract was let. Two weeks ago Saturday night, on my way home, I passed Con. Millan's shop, and saw him myself with his apron on selling meat. I went into his shop and we had a conversation about his receiving the contract for supplying meat for the camp. He told me that he had received it, and he was pleased that he had got it. I did not know Mr. Millan as a Liberal, although he may have voted for me and may be a Liberal. I think that Conservatives have claimed him sometimes as well as the Liberals. He is a very respectable man in every way, and I do not think he is what would be called a pronounced politician on either side. He was glad to have received the contract for the supply of meat for the camp at Kingston. On Monday morning early he came to me and said: There has been a mistake in this matter. He showed me a poster, and in the poster tenders were called for the supply of meat for the camp beginning on the 26th of June. He said: What I am asked to contract for is the supply of meat for the camp beginning on the 19th of June. He said: This is very unfair to me, because I cannot supply meat for the week beginning the 19th, anything like as cheaply as I can supply meat for the week beginning on the 26th. I said: You had better make representations to the government in reference to the matter. The fact is the next tenders were very much higher than his. I do not know what arrangement was made, but if I understood the hon. minister correctly, it was that he was allowed, in consideration of the mistake, a higher price from the week beginning the 19th and on to the 26th. The contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer in pursuance of the poster that was distributed throughout the city. When the mistake was discovered an arrangement was made by which the government did not lose anything, but made something instead of asking the next highest tenderer to undertake the contract, which, I think, was a business arrangement under the circumstances. If there is any blame to be put upon the person who put up that poster, let that be made the subject of a little discussion, but, to bring a charge about Con. Millan's tender for meat, which was the lowest tender, and to try to give any political colour to that, and to say that it is merely giving some money to one's friends is not fair. Now, I think that it will not be a difficult thing to answer other matters about which Mr. Kidd has written to the hon. member for South Leeds. When these matters come up we can discuss them in detail. Every one who knows how matters stand in Kingston in regard to those men who have received appointments knows that the government would not be justified in going into the camp of the hon. gentlemen opposite to find persons to fill offices. I think that they would fill them unworthily by going to the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. They can find qualified men to fill these offices when offices are vacant and not made vacant for the purpose, by going to their political friends. In connection with the filling of public offices in Kingston there is not a single appointment that any fair-minded man could say savours in the slightest degree of a political job or anything against the best interests of the country.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten the case of the Kingston post office already?

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to support the views that have been presented by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), and the hon. member for St. John, N.B. (Mr. Ellis) in reference to the great importance of encouraging rifle shooting. I do not suggest any system that may be adopted, but I do think that we have learned a lesson from what has occurred in South Africa, which we should lay to heart, and I am satisfied that there are few expenditures which the government could make that would be more valuable or popular than that which has been suggested.

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire to say that I will most heartily support any grant for the improvement of the militia of this country. This year, above all others, is one in which we cannot treat the militia in a spirit of parsimony. They have done more for this country than perhaps either political party has ever done in any one year. We do not know what will be the outcome of this war so far as military tactics are concerned, or what may be the best line to be adopted for the defence of this country. It may be looked upon as certain that the tactics of war will be changed, but, as I am not an expert in military matters, I have very little to say upon that phase of the question. So far as rifle shooting is concerned, there is no doubt that our militia have not had as much practice as they should have had. It occurred to me that I might mention this fact to the House in connection with the discussion that the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) started this morning: in my own county a prize is given for competition. The county council give a very handsome cup to be held by the company which is best qualified each year. This competition does not take place at the annual drill. It takes place in the autumn months after the annual drill in June. I would not strike out the annual drill, on the contrary, I would suggest to the government that they should supplement it by having competitions between the companies of the different battalions, thereby affording encouragement to the officers to keep their men in proper condition for the competition which will take place in the autumn, thus increasing the benefit of the experience gained in the preceding June. If the minister would consider some such proposition as that, I submit it would be for the welfare of the militia of Canada from whom we have received so much benefit, and who in the future we may well expect will keep up to their traditions of the past.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Last year I brought to the attention of the minister a fair subject of complaint on the part of companies located where there is no government armoury. In the town of Barrie there is a building the property of the government. The captains of the two companies receive $40 a year, the same as is given to the captains of companies outside of the county town. The result is that the captain in the county town is furnished with a free drill hall, whereas the captain in the outlying town has to pay the rent of one out of the $40. It cannot be expected that a suitable place will be obtained at a less rent than $3 or $4 a month, and so the captain of the company outside the larger town has to pay the rent out of his own pocket. He has also to provide for the care and maintenance of an armoury, which in the larger town is supplied by the government. Does the minister intend to give an allowance for the renting of rooms, so that captains in towns where there are armouries will not be $40 better off than captains in towns where there are no armouries.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Before the minister answers that question, I wish to say that last year I urged that some provision should be made in this respect in one of the outlying towns in my constituency, and I was informed that it had been strongly recommended against by the Major-General Commanding. I believe that in the larger towns which are not for the time being the headquarters of the battalion, the companies should be provided with suitable quarters in which to drill.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I understand my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to refer to the rent of buildings in which the captains of companies keep their arms, and for which the allowance of $40 is made. I would point out that the allowance of $40 covers the rent, and for the captains who live in towns where there is a drill hall that is a clear gain to them, and I think it does not do any harm to any one else. Every captain understands distinctly when he receives his $40 a year that he is supposed to take care of the arms and to find a place for them. In my own battalion for instance the captains keep the arms in buildings of their own, buildings which are not worth much to them, and for which they do not have to pay rent, and that I think is the usual practice in the country districts. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) that it is the intention to establish, as rapidly as possible, central armouries for all the rural battalions and then this allowance or part of it will be withdrawn and given to an armourer or a central caretaker who will look after the arms. I do not think that at the present moment I can do anything to meet the difficulty referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett). I will look into this special case and see whether these captains have any right to occupy the building. If they are not interfering with the usefulness of the building for other purposes I suppose there can be no objection.

Mr. SPROULE. Will you not incur extra expense in transferring the arms from distant localities to the central armoury?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That will not amount to very much.

Mr. BENNETT. At Barrie there is a good hall 25 by 60 feet, which is the property of the Dominion government, and it is a splendid place for the two companies to drill during the winter months. You have a district outside of the town which is not so fortunately situated. The captain has $40 paid him. Several times during the year, he has to call on the men to look after the equipment, and the expense of this comes out of the $40. In addition to that he can secure no fairly good room where the arms will be safe for less than $3 or $4 a month, and the result is that he is out of pocket, whereas his fortunate brother officer in the other town is $40 ahead. That is manifestly unfair. Why should not all the captains be placed on the same footing? I myself do not think that the $40 is enough for a man who has to meet all the disbursements necessary. Why should not the government supply a suitable room for the drilling of companies in these smaller towns, which they may utilize during the winter months. In my own town, which is the headquarters of a company, the captain has to hurry around for a week preceding the annual drill, and the day before the camp he brings in twenty or thirty men who never had a uniform on previously, and to say that they are an awkward crowd is no slander on them. Now, in the county town the government have furnished a splendid hall which is heated in the winter months, and the young fellows utilize it for a gymnasium and as a social club. I believe that the conveniences furnished in the larger towns should be extended, and if we cannot build drill halls, then, at least, the government should allow the captain of the company a sum sufficient to hire a hall for the winter months, over and above the $40 allowance.

It being One o'clock, the committee took recess.

At Three o'clock, the House resumed in committee.

Militia—Salaries and wages ..... $73,000

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $3,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). This is the amount for the salaries and wages of civil employees in the outside service. The increase is partly due to the fact that the per diem payment has been increased in some cases from $1 to $1.25, and in the cases of men who have served a long time, from $1.25 to $1.50, on the recommendation of the men in charge of the different districts. In military district No. 2 there is an increase of $730, in No. 4 an increase of $1,600, in No. 5 an increase of $273. In district No. 2 there is a new appointment. In No. 7 there is an increase in the salary of a clerk, amounting to $144.75.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). In No. 2 who was the new appointment, and to whom were the increases given ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not the names. The appointment was that of a labourer at $1.25 a day.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Has he been a long time in the service ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, he is a new appointment.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. A new appointment, with an increase ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to know exactly what it means. You had better let the item stand. It is quite unusual to make a new appointment at an increased salary. I think we ought to have some explanation of that.

Item allowed to stand.

Military properties ..... $175,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is for the care and maintenance of rifle ranges, drill halls, and military properties generally. The rents of ranges, armouries and buildings amount to $10,000 ; fuel, $8,000 ; light, $11,000 ; water rates, $1,500 ; removing snow, $1,000 ; targets, telegraphs, &c., $3,500 ; making a total of $35,000, the usual vote. Then, there is $70,000 divided among the different military districts—the usual vote for repairs of buildings, renewals, &c.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Is it equally divided ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not the list showing the exact amount in each district.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend will admit that in some districts the expenditure must be very much heavier than in others. Some districts have a very small number of military properties, and others a very large number. At Quebec and at Kingston they are the most extensive.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can tell my hon. friend that the money is paid according to the rule laid down during his time. That rule has been followed for years.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. And we will have a list.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What is done with the old drill sheds when they get out of repair ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Those which are reported unnecessary are sold by the government. Perhaps half a dozen were sold within the past year. In some cases, the land belonged to private parties, who gave it during the time it would be used for drill purposes, and after we sell the sheds, it reverts either to the municipality or the private owner.

Warlike and other stores ..... $55,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The details of this vote is as follows: Camp equipment consisting of blankets, water-proof sheets, tents, marquees, &c., $23,000, the same as former years. Harness and saddlery, $16,000, the usual vote. The only change is the vote for medical supplies for camp of $1,000, a new vote. Barrack stores, including sheets, pillows, horse blankets, &c., $15,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Are the stores purchased by public tender ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to ask if any of the stores which were obtained for the Imperial government, were obtained by the Department of Militia and Defence. I am told that during the war in South Africa the Imperial government applied to the Canadian government to use its good offices in obtaining the supplies that were purchased in Canada.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I understand that Lord Strathcona Horse supplies were purchased by the government of Canada. I am also informed that the Imperial government have given out orders to the Canadian government for uniforms and other supplies, which are to be turned over to the Imperial stores in England.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What was done in the case of the Strathcona Horse does not necessarily have any connection with the Imperial government at all. Lord Strathcona requested the Department of Militia to take charge of the organization from beginning to end with certain exceptions. For instance, the purchases of horses he retained under his own control, and the financial part of the business was also entirely kept in the hands of his agent in Montreal. But he asked us to give him the benefit of the organization in the department, which we cheerfully did, and our contractors supplied most of the clothing required. The money was taken out of the vote for the South African contingent and returned by Lord Strathcona's agent. With regard to the Imperial government, whatever was done in that regard was done through Lord Strathcona, who acted for certain contractors in Canada. The department assisted only so far as inspection is concerned, exactly the same way as the English government acts in the case of purchases by the Canadian government in that country. We ask for an Imperial government inspection in the case of arms and so forth. That is all we have to do in connection with the Imperial government. We had nothing to do with the transaction except to loan our inspectors, who would see, before the goods were shipped, that they were according to specifications.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Were tenders called for ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Imperial government acted upon its own responsibility and utilized the contractors of the Canadian government, and the orders were carried out under the inspection of the Canadian inspectors ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. PRIOR. Looking over the report of the minister this year, I find that the deputy minister makes the following remarks:

The necessity of providing a reserve of clothing, camp equipment and barrack stores is continually being forced on my attention; the lack of even a sufficient supply in store to meet ordinary requirements with the promptness and satisfaction so essential to the maintenance of a volunteer force has again and again been a subject of anxiety in the department. In his report dated March 1, 1898, the late Colonel Panet, then deputy minister, pointed out that 'the demands for clothing for the force cannot always be answered with satisfaction on account of the small amount kept in store,' and he 'recommended that the estimates on this head be increased sufficiently to prevent any delay occurring when dealing with requisitions for clothing which is due.' He 'recommended also that a small reserve be kept in store for issue in case of any emergency.'

Further on in the same report, the deputy minister says :

As estimated elsewhere herein, practically the whole of the clothing, the necessaries, the equipment, &c., had to be purchased for the contingents and delivered to them within about two weeks.

Now, that seems to be a very bad state of affairs. In Canada we have a force from

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

35,000 to 38,000 men that may be called upon at any time. A good many of them have been called upon lately, and there was nothing to equip them with from the stores. According to the deputy minister's report—and it is really the minister's report, because he is responsible for it—he admits that though his attention has been called to this matter again and again by his late deputy, Colonel Panet, still this has never been remedied. Whether he has asked parliament to grant him supplies to purchase these stores, I know not ; but I have no recollection of having seen such a sum in the estimates, or of hearing the Minister of Militia make that request to parliament. There can be no doubt that it is a most lamentable state of affairs, if we have a body of troops ready to go to the front, but no means of providing them with the necessary equipment. One excuse, I suppose, can be put forward by the hon. gentleman as set forth by the deputy minister, and it is this :

It may be pointed out that a considerable quantity of clothing, stores, ammunition, &c., paid for out of the appropriation annually voted to the department by parliament is sold on repayment, and the money received therefor, instead of going back to the credit of the department, is paid to the credit of the Receiver General. In the last fifteen years over $225,000 worth of clothing, ammunition and stores have been issued for which payment went into the general revenue.

In Colonel Panet's report, dated December 14, 1892 (page viii.), he refers to this matter, and states 'our estimates may, therefore, be considered as practically curtailed to that extent.'

The conclusion he comes to, with respect to that is perfectly correct. Thus it seems there has been $225,000 received for clothing, ammunition, &c., issued on repayment—which means that it is issued to members of the militia on the understanding that they shall pay for it—and when it is received by the Militia Department, it is not taken by the department, but is turned over to the general revenue. As my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) says, the return from auctions also goes into the general revenue. That is entirely wrong. If parliament votes a sum of money to the Militia Department, that department ought to have the spending of that money, and if they have a repayment of money, when it is repaid, it ought to go to their credit. The deputy minister also said :

The inadequacy of our supplies of the above description was very much felt when preparations were being made to send to South Africa the contingents which have gone there to assist the empire; as you are aware a very large proportion indeed of the clothing, equipment and stores had to be purchased after it was decided the contingents should be sent.

Now, as I have said before, that is wrong entirely. The government should have sufficient stores on hand to equip a large force of men on a very few days notice ; and the minister should not be placed in such a position, that he is obliged to go out at a moment's notice to purchase supplies for these troops. One sufficient reason for that, even if there were no other, is that supplies purchased in a hurry cannot be nearly so economically purchased as they could be if time were allowed to call for tenders. I would ask the minister whether he is satisfied in his own mind that he has sufficient stores, and if not, whether he is asking parliament this session to grant him a sufficient sum to place the stores department in the state of efficiency in which we all expect it to be?

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have no hesitation in saying that we have not the quantity of stores I should like to see—I do not think that a Militia Department has ever had. I hope the day may come when we shall have enough. But, I may say, in this relation, that we have had no suitable storehouse. Particularly since the change was made by which the stores building here was handed over to the Canada Atlantic Railway, our storage room has been very much less than it was before. At the present moment we have no place in which to put a large accumulation of stores. We are building, as will be seen by the estimates of the Public Works Department, a large and commodious special stores building in Ottawa, near the drill shed. And, when that building is completed, if I am in the position which I now hold, I shall ask parliament for a vote for stores; and, even if I am not, whoever may occupy the position, will probably follow that course. I am inclined to think, for my part, that it will be a proper thing to ask for a vote on capital account to put our stores on a proper footing; and after that, we can take the annual vote out of income. So far as the stores purchased for South Africa are concerned—though that matter is not before us, it comes up incidentally, because of the extract read by my hon. friend (Mr. Prior)—I would point out that a large part of the stores which were required for that special service, differed to a considerable extent from those that could have been used here in Canada. So far as the equipment of the force for purposes at home is concerned, I think it is fairly good for emergencies, both as regards clothing and other equipments.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was glad to hear my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), read the extract he did from the report of the deputy minister. From past experience in the department, I know the system that obtains to-day which unfortunately obtained also when I was Minister of Militia. For instance, the stores of the militia in Ottawa, Quebec, or Hamilton, are depleted by the sale of clothing, and by the stores for one reason or another. But goods though no longer useful for the purposes of the force, may be useful to others. Though they represent money which has been voted by parliament to the Department of Militia and Defence, that money, instead of going back to the department, goes into the hands of the Receiver General. This is a system which in my time, seemed to me to be absolutely without justification; I have the same opinion of it still. If parliament, in its wisdom, votes certain money for militia stores, and if for one reason or other they are sold and bring in $200,000 or $300,000, we ought not take that money from the Department of Militia. It seems to me that if the Minister of Militia, exercising his judgment and discretion, decides to dispose of the stores belonging to the militia, that money should be available to the Minister of Militia for replenishing the stores, or procuring improved uniforms, or other articles required for the purposes of the militia.

That is the reason why it has always been impossible to keep up the proper quantity of stores required for the equipment of the militia force in Canada. The vote of every year is about the same; but it is easy to understand that if, out of an appropriation of parliament, one or two hundred thousand dollars are taken in the shape of stores and disposed of by auction, and taken away from militia and put into the general fund of Canada, I say it is impossible under these circumstances to keep the stores up to the condition in which they should be. It has been a crying evil, it still remains so, and I think ought to be remedied as soon as possible.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I always listen with great pleasure and interest to the remarks of my hon. friend on my right (Sir Adolphe Caron), who has had so much experience in the Militia Department, but I cannot agree with him in the principle he has propounded to the House just now. I believe it would lead to the greatest misconception and complication of public accounts. The whole principle is this: If a provision is made from year to year by the House for the demands of the Militia Department, for instance, for stores, the moment you admit that the Minister of Militia and Defence may put up at auction and sell certain stores, and may utilize that money for purposes other than the one for which it was voted, you have changed the whole foundation of parliamentary control. I cannot help thinking that my hon. friend has hardly given that subject the consideration that he usually does to these matters. I am satisfied it would lead to confusion in the public accounts, and it would take away that absolute control by parliament of public funds, so that we may know what is expended by the department year after year. The moment that anything that has been voted on account of militia assumes the character of something that has got to be got rid of, the very money realized should go back to the public treasury, and another vote of parliament should be taken to provide for whatever is necessary.

While I am on my feet I may say that the suggestion that has just been made by the Minister of Militia and Defence would be a very bad precedent, namely, that a large amount of stores should be provided for the Militia Department and charged to capital account, in order to establish a reservoir as it were. That, I think, will be found equally objectionable. I am sure the Minister of Finance will support me in the view that I take in reference to that matter. Especially when you have a very large surplus revenue it would be a very unwise thing, in respect to sums voted year after year to the militia service, to charge any of that amount to capital account. It leads to extravagance in the first instance, and it will lead probably to the accumulation of stores that will afterwards have to be sold at public auction, and probably at a great loss. I think we must keep the administration of public affairs in such a shape that the House and the country may know year by year what the amount provided for the various branches of the public service is. I think it would be introducing a very faulty principle to purchase and charge to capital account stores that, under our ordinary practice, are charged to the consolidated fund for the year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I may have been misunderstood, and I wish to make myself clearer. Every year you have a vote which remains about the same for military stores. Now, you have got in your stores what represents the value of the money which has been voted by parliament. If you dispose of that—I do not mean to say that the Minister of Militia and Defence should handle the money himself—but if the department thinks proper to sell at auction any portion of those stores that money should be reappropriated to the purposes of the militia, that is the position I take. Suppose one year you have a certain amount of money voted for stores, my point is that when you take out of those stores 25 per cent or 50 per cent, you leave your stores minus that quantity, and that money, instead of going into the general fund, should find its way back to the militia. Let it be voted by parliament for militia purposes. Let the Minister of Militia and Defence come down and say in his estimates that last year he sold $5,000 worth or $10,000 worth of stores, and let him ask parliament to vote it back to militia. Let him not take away from the stores the money that parliament has voted for that specific purpose, which parliament voted for the purpose of the militia and for no other purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me the weakness of this system is apparent. Parliament in its wisdom votes a sum of money for a specific purpose and the money is used for that purpose in purchasing stores. Afterwards a portion of those stores is sold and the money comes back—into whose hands? If it is the Receiver General's, then parliament votes it again for that or any other purpose it pleases. But if it goes back to the Militia Department, then it must be under the control of the Minister of Militia and Defence. But there is no safeguard exercised over that expenditure by parliament, in fact parliament has nothing to do with the expenditure after that, the Minister of Militia and Defence has it to spend at his own will, and may spend it very unwisely without parliament having any control over it. You may apply the same principle to the Department of Railways with equal propriety. Let old rolling stock be sold, and that money with equal propriety would be payable to the Department of Railways to be re-expended, not by vote of parliament, but by the judgment of the head of the department. I do not wonder that the stores are short, when we remember that a year or two ago we had such sales as took place of some thousands of rifles that were bought at considerable expense and sold at 25 cents apiece.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Between 75 cents and 80 cents, I think 78 cents.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not find fault with the amount, but I always thought they were sold very much below what might have been realized if they had been sold by public auction.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They were advertised in public in all the leading newspapers of Canada, and were sold by auction.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, it was not generally known, because I have heard a great many say since that they would have taken advantage of it if they had known of the sale and purchased some. I was told by a gentleman who had examined a large number of these rifles that a number of them were new rifles which had never been used. They had cost the country a good deal of money, and they were sold to some foreign corporation for 75 cents a piece.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They were all sold in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. They were sold in Canada to be taken to New York.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not a rifle went to New York. Certainly not a thousand rifles went out of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether it was in the Auditor General's Report, or in an explanation given by the minister himself in answer to a statement that I made in regard to the matter, but I remember the statement being made that on account of the sudden demand, owing, I think, to the war in Manila, a favourable opportunity was given for a contractor to buy these rifles, and that they could not have been sold at the price that they were sold at but for these exceptional circumstances. I understood, whether incorrectly or otherwise, that the rifles were going to the United States.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. At any rate, I thought the amount received was very low, and I think so still. I said then that I held the opinion, as I do to-day, that if there is any necessity for giving instruction in our high schools to the students who assemble there, we might well have retained and used these rifles for that purpose. If we are to go as far as was suggested last night by a number of hon. members in this House and equip our schools, we will require to provide an arm for that purpose, and we will be obliged to pay a much higher price than if we had retained these rifles. Therefore, I think it would have been well to have retained these rifles in the country and to have distributed them in this way.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It would be just as well to correct the misrepresentation which, I am sure, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does not intend to leave upon the House. We discussed this matter last year, and I am sorry to-day to have to repeat what I said then. The rifles which were sold, numbering somewhere about 20,000, were rifles which had been returned after having been used for many years, and they were practically worthless. They were obsolete rifles, rifles which were no longer used by the militia, and would never be used again.

Mr. SPROULE. They were the old Enfield rifles, were they not?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. They required entirely different ammunition, ammunition of a different size from that required for the new rifles, and that reason alone would be sufficient to make them useless for any of the practical purposes of the militia. We were paying a large amount of money for storing these rifles. They were coming back into store as we were issuing the new rifles. We did not require them, and we thought we would be saving money to the country by selling them. We offered them for sale by public tender, and the sale was advertised in all the newspapers in the country. They were sold to the highest bidder at 78 cents per rifle. In reference to the supplying of rifles to the schools, my hon. friend will be relieved when he hears that we have some 30,000 more of these rifles coming in all the time as we issue new rifles, and we are distributing these rifles to the schools. We shall have enough to supply the schools and the cadets.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—DEATH OF PRIVATE LARUE.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I have a very unpleasant announcement to make. I have a report which has just come from Cape Town, dated June 25, which reads as follows:

Regret to report that 7818. Private L. Larue, Canadian Regiment of Infantry, died of enteric fever at Wynberg Hospital on June 24.

Private Larue was an officer of the 87th Battalion, and resigned his commission to enlist on the first contingent. He was wounded on February 18 at Paardeberg. He was a son of Dr. Larue, of Quebec.

Warlike and other stores..... $55,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia to a very serious statement which is made by the Deputy Minister of Militia, and which, I think, demands the attention of the House. The report of the deputy minister is dated April 17, 1900, and it is apropos of this question of supplies. He says:

The necessity of providing a reserve of clothing, camp equipment and barrack stores is continually being forced on my attention; the lack of even a sufficient supply in store to meet ordinary requirements with the promptness and satisfaction so essential to the maintenance of a volunteer force has again and again been a subject of anxiety in the department. In his report, dated March 1, 1898, the late Colonel Panet, then deputy minister, pointed out that 'the demands for clothing for the force cannot always be answered with satisfaction on account of the small amount kept in store,' and 'he recommended that the estimates on this head be increased sufficiently to prevent any delay occurring when dealing with requisitions for clothing which is due.' He 'recommended also that a small reserve be kept in store for issue in case of any emergency.'

Colonel Panet's recommendations have not been followed to that extent, if at all, that seems to me to be now necessary under the new and changed conditions that have arisen since then; in both his remarks and his recommendations I fully concur.

The inadequacy of our supplies of the above description was very much felt when preparations were being made to send to South Africa the contingents which have gone there to assist the empire; as you are aware, a very large proportion indeed of the clothing, equipment and stores had to be purchased after it was decided the contingents should be sent.

This requires no comment to impress upon the House the very grave condition of affairs that has arisen in consequence of the hon. Minister of Militia entirely neglecting to carry out the very wise suggestions contained in the report of his deputy, Col. Panet, to him, in 1898. Col. Panet, in addition to the necessity of being able to respond promptly in reference to matters of this kind, pointed out how very necessary it was to make provision to meet any case of emergency. The emergency arose, and according to the present deputy minister, it found the Militia Department utterly unprepared to meet it. There was consequent hurry, and when there is hurry there is usually a failure of excellence, such as I believe was the case in the present instance. The accounts we have received of the condition of the clothing of the contingents that went to South Africa were certainly not such as to afford pride or satisfaction to Canadians, or to reflect any credit upon our troops in that far-off country when they came to be placed alongside of other troops. The effect of the rain upon their clothing was to present the brave yeomanry of Canada that went there, with their lives in their hands, to defend the empire, and to shed great lustre and honour upon their country, as a very ragged regiment indeed.

I now draw the attention of the minister to this, and say that he stands in the position of being severely reprimanded by his own subordinate, and that not without the very best possible reason, because the fact is pointed out that the minister has neglected to comply with the urgent demands of his predecessor on this matter. The minister is placed in a very indefensible position, and I trust that this will be a lesson to him. He has been told from this side of the House that we are ready to give the government all the means that may be required for to make the force completely efficient to meet any emergency that may arise. This has been a very grave neglect on the part of the minister, and one that has proved not only to be unfortunate but to be attended with very serious and very unpleasant consequences.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This matter was brought up by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) and discussed fully, and in the absence of the leader of the opposition I gave an answer to it. I quite agree with the report of the deputy minister, and I repeat that we have perhaps a better equipment to-day in every respect and a larger reserve than ever before in Canada. I explained in part why I did not ask for a special vote, that at present we have no suitable store accommodation. The central store at Ottawa is much less than it was a few years ago owing to the fact that the building was handed over to the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, and they are using a large portion of it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Why should that be?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was done by the late government, but I am not finding fault with it. I have explained that a vote has been taken in the Public Works for the construction of a large and commodious central storehouse at Ottawa. The contract has been given for the construction of the very large building, and when it is completed, and when there are facilities for taking care of a large supply of clothing, I stated that if I happened to be Minister of Militia then I would ask for a special vote for that purpose. I believe that whoever happens to occupy the office at that time will feel it his duty to ask for such a vote when the stores can be properly taken care of.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Militia stated that he had sold no rifles in the United States. That statement seems somewhat peculiar in view of the following correspondence which I read from the Auditor General's Report:

Audit Office, Ottawa, June 28, 1898.

Sir,—On the February return of the director of stores there is entered a sale of rifles to Hartley & Graham, of New York, as follows:

3,450 Enfield at 25c. ....	$862 50
1,572 Peabody at 25c.....	393 00
70 Spencer at 25c. ....	17 50
219 Winchester at $1.50.....	328 50

No vouchers in connection with this sale have been furnished. Please forward them.

In the meantime, I have to inquire if these rifles were examined and condemned by a board of examiners; and if the sale was advertised and held by auction, or by tender.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

The Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

This is the answer:

Dept. of Militia and Defence,

Ottawa, July 7, 1898.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 28th ult., re sale of condemned stores, I have the honour to inform you that the rifles referred to were obsolete and condemned as unfit for service by the annual boards of survey from year to year. They were altogether unfit for the present requirements of the militia. The sale was not by auction, but by private tender, by order of the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence. There are no vouchers in the case.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

B. SULTE,

Acting D. M. of M. and D.

The Auditor General.

It would appear that the Minister of Militia must have forgotten this transaction.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not at all, but I thought the hon. gentleman referred to the sale of some 20,000 old Enfield rifles. These rifles referred to here were a few odds and ends which Col. Lake, then Quarter-Master General, over and over again reported should be disposed of and which were never likely to be of any use. They were disposed of with my approval by Col. Lake, as Quarter-Master General. I thought the hon. gentleman was referring to the sale of the 20,000 rifles at some 78 cents apiece, and that sale was effected after tenders had been asked for by public advertisements in all the leading newspapers. Last year I had copies of these advertisements here and read them as a reference to Hansard will show. It was stated that that sale had been made to an American firm, but I repeat that so far as I know not a single one of the 20,000 went out of the country. Some people said it was a dangerous thing to allow 20,000 rifles to be scattered amongst people who were not skilled in the use of them and that accident would likely result, but up to the present time not a single accident has been reported. On the contrary, I have been told by military men that this distribution was a great advantage, as it created a taste for rifle shooting and rifle practice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the minister expect that we are to hold Col. Lake responsible for this?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. I am responsible.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then why introduce Col. Lake's name?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND DEFENCE. I said he was the officer who recommended the rifles to be sold.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The responsibility rests upon the minister himself. A few moments ago the minister told us that not a rifle had been sold in the United States, and that not a rifle had been sold for 25 cents, but now we find from the Auditor General's Report, that he sold 5,000 rifles at 25 cents each, and that no vouchers even were forthcoming for the transaction. A more loose and more disgraceful state of affairs cannot be imagined in connection with any department, than that the minister without public tender should sell to parties in the United States, upon what he calls private tenders, these rifles for 25 cents. A more indefensible action and a lamner apology for it I have never heard in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad the minister made the correction, because I had a distinct recollection of what I was speaking about. But I referred to the fact that I had spoken of it in this House, and that I had condemned the sale of rifles to Americans, as they were going out of the country, and suggested that it would have been much wiser, if the department could realize no more than 25 cents apiece for them, to put them in the hands of the cadets in the country. The whole transaction was referred to last year, not only by myself, but by the Minister of Militia. I can scarcely understand the statement he made, that there was not a rifle sold at 25 cents, and not one taken out of the country in the face of the fact that the Auditor General's Report shows the very contrary, and the Hansard containing the admission by himself, last year.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I remember that this matter was discussed very much last year. I think I brought out the fact that a great many of these rifles were sold to one or two firms in Montreal, and a great many were in the hands of well known friends of the administration, who got them at 25 cents apiece. I know that some were sold in my own county at from $1.50 to $2 apiece, and the people who got them for that were well satisfied. So that there must have been a great margin between what was realized by the government and the prices at which they were sold by these parties.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps I had better read from the Auditor General's Report of last year:

Re Sale of Rifles.

Audit Office, Ottawa, Nov. 30, 1898.

Sir,—I have to-day received a statement of the sales of ammunition, military stores and clothing during October, on which there appear the following entries:

Lt.-Col. Cole, 15,000 Snider rifles at 75c..	$11,250
" 195,000 Snider ball at $5 per M. ....	975
" 5,300 Snider rifles at 75c...	3,975

I have to ask for the usual certified vouchers. Were these sales authorized, and by whom? Were they advertised, and if so, in what papers? Were they disposed of by public auction or by tender?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

The Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Dept. of Militia and Defence,

Ottawa, Nov. 5, 1898.

Sir,—In answer to your letter of the 30th instant, requesting vouchers for the sale of 18,300 Snider rifles and 195,000 rounds of Snider ammunition, I have now the honour to inclose herewith:

With reference to the queries contained in your letter of November 30 last, as to this:

1. Were the sales authorized, and by whom? Ans. Yes, by the Minister of Militia and Defence.

2. Were they advertised? Ans. Yes. List of papers herewith.

3. Were they disposed of by public auction or by tender? Ans. By tender.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

B. SULTE,

Acting D. M. of M. and D.

The Auditor General.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that the answer is dated November 5, when the first letter is dated November 30?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The date in the answer must be a misprint for December 5. Here is the list of papers:

London, the 'Advertiser'; Toronto, the 'Globe'; Kingston, 'British Whig,' the 'Freeman'; Ottawa, 'Free Press,' 'Le Temps'; Montreal, 'La Patrie,' the 'Herald,' the 'Daily Witness'; Quebec, 'Le Soleil,' 'Daily Mercury,' 'Daily Telegraph'; St. John, 'Daily Telegraph,' the 'Globe'; Halifax, the 'Chronicle,' 'Recorder,' the 'Echo'; Charlottetown, P.E.I., the 'Patriot,' the 'Guardian'; Winnipeg, the 'Tribune'; British Columbia, Victoria 'Times.'

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I ask the hon. gentleman why he selected Le Temps to receive the patronage of the government?

I thought they repudiated Le Temps when it said: 'Not a cent, not a dollar, not a man, will go to South Africa.'

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is another question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, it is not another question. The hon. gentleman has read a list of government papers which receive money from the reptile fund, and what I want to know is why he includes a paper which they have repudiated as representing the views of the government?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps the repudiation took place since that date—I do not know.

Mr. PRIOR. What make of rifles were those sold to the United States?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The old Snider-Enfield.

Mr. PRIOR. What are the rifles the hon. gentleman has in store now?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The same. We have about 50,000.

Mr. PRIOR. We used to be armed with the old Snider-Enfield, then with the Martini-Henry, and now we have the Lee-Enfield. Was it something prior to the Snider-Enfield that you sold for 25 cents?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None of these were sold for 25 cents, I believe. The rifles sold at 25 cents were a lot of different makes—the Peabody, and other American rifles.

Mr. PRIOR. Were there any Martini-Henry?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None of those have been sold.

Mr. PRIOR. I see that the superintendent of military stores makes some remarks in his report about the rifles. The hon. gentleman said, I think, that 30,000 were ready to be supplied to the schools for the boys.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That would include the Martini-Henry.

Mr. PRIOR. The superintendent of military stores says:

The demand for Martini-Henry rifles for issue to drill companies in educational establishments, since the public schools were brought within the scope of the order in council, has largely increased. The supply of rifles available for this purpose will soon be exhausted. It would seem desirable to limit the issue to young men of a certain age—the rifle must in many instances be too heavy for the lads of which the companies are composed.

Does he refer there to the Martini-Henry rifle alone?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, he refers also to the Snider.

Mr. PRIOR. Then, according to that, the Minister of Militia must be wrong, because

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

he says: 'The supply of rifles available for this purpose will soon be exhausted.'

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may explain to my hon friend, that owing to the fact that the armouries in the rural districts have not been completed, the rural militia are still armed with the Snider-Enfield. We are calling these in—20,000 or so—and they are included in the 30,000.

Mr. WALLACE. Has the minister considered whether it is necessary to have an establishment in the province of Ontario for the manufacture of cartridges, or whether he has taken any steps to establish such an industry?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not. We are enlarging the factory at Quebec, and I have not thought it necessary to go to the expense of establishing another factory at the present moment. The factory at Quebec, with the enlargement now proposed, and the new machinery that is being added, is quite equal to any demands that can be made upon it at present.

Mr. WALLACE. I think we ought to have a cartridge factory in the province of Ontario. There are many reasons for that opinion. I have read a report of an American engineer with regard to the canal system in this country and in the United States, which I think furnishes in itself one very strong argument why steps in that direction should be taken. That furnishes in itself one very good reason why steps should be taken not only to establish a cartridge factory in Ontario, but other methods of defence, in view of what is taking place on the other side of the line. I will take the trouble to read a portion of this report made by Mr. Thomas W. Symonds to the American government in relation to the question of the ship canal from the great lakes to the Hudson River:

Military Aspect.

I am unable to believe that such a ship canal is needed for the military advantages which it would confer. It would only be of use in the event of war with Great Britain for the passage of our warships from the sea to the great lakes. In the event of such a war, it is inconceivable that any of our warships would be allowed to leave the sea-coast for service on the lakes. All that we have, and many more, in fact, would be needed for the protection of our sea-ports and for aggressive operations against the navy and commerce of Great Britain on the high seas. If proper and comparatively inexpensive precautions are taken, the great lakes will, in the event of such a war, need no naval assistance from the sea-coast. An English naval force could only reach the great lakes by way of the St. Lawrence River and its canals, which latter limit the size of vessels to those of a small class. The St. Lawrence lies along and near our border, and within easy reach, and in some cases they can be enfiladed, and even taken in reverse, from good artillery positions on our side of the river. The difficulties of the hostile movement of the river to Lake Ontario would be very great if opposed with vigour, and might easily be rendered impossible by the destruction of some of the canals. Arrived in Lake Ontario, such a hostile force would have to pass the Welland Canal, a canal also within easy reach of our borders and subject to being assailed and destroyed by a land force or an improvised naval force on Lake Erie. Upon the upper lakes—Erie, Huron, Michigan and Superior—the United States has a vast merchant marine, eight times greater in tonnage than the merchant marine of Canada, and vastly excelling in individual ships. If the government, as has been suggested and recommended, would provide at the different lake ports stores of arms and war munitions suitable for arming our best lake vessels, and arrange for taking possession of and arming and manning these vessels quickly and effectively, an American naval force could be improvised upon these lakes which would greatly preponderate over any which could be improvised against it or brought to oppose it.

Here they propose that right here, where there is a narrow place, they could cut the country in two, and we would be left in Ontario without communication with the province of Quebec, and without the supplies necessary to carry on a defensive warfare. That is one reason in itself why we should have a cartridge factory in Ontario. There are other reasons too, but I shall not dwell on them now, only to reiterate, as forcibly as I can, the necessity of having warlike equipments provided in Ontario for those emergencies which are so clearly outlined in the report of Mr. Symonds to the American Secretary of War.

With regard to the sale of those rifles, that looks to me as the most impolitic and absurd way of disposing of them that could be devised. Here are rifles sent over to the United States at 25 cents apiece.

Mr. WOOD. They were not worth that.

Mr. WALLACE. We are asked to believe that the Americans are such fools that they will buy a rifle that was entirely worthless, because if not worth 25 cents it is worth nothing, and these rifles up to that moment had been used by our own Canadian militia.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They had not been used for twenty-five years.

Mr. WALLACE. I refuse to believe that these rifles were so utterly worthless, and that those which were sold for 75 cents apiece were worth less. There are skilled workmen in the government employ whose duty it is to repair rifles when they get out of order, and these men could have put those rifles into excellent state. I get letters every session asking if rifles could be provided, or if possible, to get rifles for rifle clubs all over the country to practice with. It would have been better to have provided those rifles to Canadians for practice after having had them repaired by the government armourers, rather than have disposed of them in the way we did. We know that the wars of the future will depend largely on skilled marksmen, and yet the government are sending rifles out of the country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We advertised them.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the good of advertising 20,000 rifles for sale to a club that wants only about twenty. Why should not the government, when these tenders came in at 75 cents, have decided that it was better to put these rifles in the hands of Canadians, who are willing and anxious to use them in order that they may become good marksmen and be of value for the defence of Canada when required. The government seem to me to be utterly lost to all sense of responsibility. The department was established in order that it might do everything possible for the defence of the country, and yet when the means are at hand to defend the country almost without expense, the government send a portion of our arms to the United States and sell another portion, and once these rifles are sold we have no control over where they may go. The establishment of a cartridge factory in Ontario is urgent and desirable, and I urge the government to do it at once. And I shall be prepared to censure them if they fail in their duty in that regard.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As to the disposal of these rifles, I may say a word with regard to my own experience. When I was Minister of Militia, we had obsolete rifles, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) knows. My deputy minister at the time suggested that we should dispose of those rifles. I refused. We had offers—I am speaking from memory, but I think I am absolutely correct—sent to the department for the purchase of those rifles.

Mr. PRIOR. At what rate?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. At very low rates. I found that the rates were so low that the money we should receive would not compensate us for the inconvenience of sending these rifles off to be distributed. Besides, it was represented to me that the rifles might get into the hands of the Indians of the North-west or others in whose hands the government did not desire to have them. I thought it not worth while to let them go for a few shillings, considering that each rifle was really all right. Though the improvement upon the rifles of that day was considerable, I asked the deputy minister to inform himself upon the possibility of having these guns converted. We had offers from England and also, I believe, from Canada to convert these rifles; but they were not converted. But we did not dispose of these rifles because the amount we would have received was not sufficient to counterbalance the inconvenience and risk we should incur. This was about the time we were organizing companies in the different colleges. The Jesuit College, for one, had applied to have arms sent them; and I thought that if we kept these arms, they might be utilized for these military organizations in the colleges. The hon. minister is in a far better position than I was, because, the whole of the armament has been practically renovated since my incumbency. I believe it was a mistake to dispose of these guns for the small amount that the department received. I was unfortunately detained in the Committee of Railways and Canals this morning, and I find an item has been passed by which an increase is given to two clerks in the department—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, if he would allow me, that in the supplementary estimates, which will be down in a day or two, is an item which will bring up the question of civil government again.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Very well, I can discuss the matter then.

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). I wish to make a remark as to what has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace). It would really be refreshing to hear from that gentleman a single word of praise for anything the government does. During all the time I have sat here, I have never heard him say that anything that was done by any minister was to be commended in any form. Now, with reference to the prices obtained for those rifles—78 cents—I think the government got a fair price. After the Franco-Prussian war, a large number of rifles were left on hand in Germany, quite as good as the rifles under discussion. These German rifles were imported largely by wholesale merchants in this country. I imported many of them, and they cost very little more than the price paid for these rifles by the party who bought them in Montreal. I know there is not one of these 20,000 rifles that went out of the country. I would have tendered for the purchase of them but my position prevented me from doing so. But I bought quite a large quantity of them both for my Hamilton house and my Winnipeg house. They were sold to country merchants in tens and twenties, and by them sold to the farmers—not to learn the rifle practice, but simply that they might have a rifle in the house for an emergency. To say that accurate rifle practice could be learned with these guns is drawing upon the imagination, I think.

Mr. TAYLOR. What did the farmers pay for them?

Mr. WOOD. A reasonable price, perhaps $1.50 in ones and twos and threes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Three dollars each.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Mr. WOOD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) seems to know everything about everything; he knows the business of other people better than they know it themselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know that I paid $3 for one of them, and many others were sold in my town at the same price.

Mr. WOOD. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is not as sharp as I thought he was.

Mr. TAYLOR. That was the price.

Mr. WOOD. I suppose it was twelve months credit—they charge a larger price on yearly accounts than for cash down.

Mr. TAYLOR. They were sold for cash.

Mr. WOOD. But what I wish to say is that the rifles were regularly advertised in the newspapers, and were sold to the highest bidder. They were sold in small quantities throughout this country, and I am satisfied that though they went all over Canada, none of them went to the United States. I think the government did right to sell them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Wood) affirm or repudiate the statement of the Minister of Militia, that one of the great objects of disposing of these rifles at 75 cents was that the people throughout the country might perfect themselves in rifle practice. That is the reason the hon. minister has offered for selling them at this figure. But the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) tells the minister that he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. WOOD. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) would like to see one of his sons shoulder such a musket and go to war.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not disputing, I merely wish to know the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Wood's) position.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). In the report of the chief superintendent of stores, I notice a startling statement. This is on page 2 of the report:

Attention is requested to the issues ordered to be made to field batteries. Equipment to the value of over $50,000 is issued to an officer without any guarantee of safety, and stored in a gun-shed without any adequate protection. The greater part of this equipment is unnecessary for drill purposes. The present establishment of horses for a field battery is thirty-four, yet seventy-eight sets of harness are issued; forty-four sets, therefore, lie in the gun-shed from year to year deteriorating.

I would ask the Minister of Militia if that is the practice—to issue twice as many sets of harness and other equipments as are necessary. Then, again, I observe a little further on he urges the same point that was brought up by the member for Victoria and the leader of the opposition, as to the clothing and the necessity for a sufficient supply. I quote from the report again :

The advantage of having at least one year's supply of clothing on hand as a reserve cannot be too forcibly urged. This would greatly facilitate issues; a sufficient supply of any size could be guaranteed, and exceptional demands could be met without difficulty.

A little further on the same page :

Of the fifteen Maxim guns imported, two are in South Africa, two in the Yukon territory, and two in British Columbia. An additional supply is required.

These are all important suggestions, and I think they should be carried into effect by the department. I would like to ask the minister, as a matter of the highest public importance, if these recommendations and suggestions have been considered, and what action, if any, the government proposes to take ?

Mr. PRIOR. Before the minister answers my hon. friend, I want to say that I heartily endorse the remark made by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) in regard to the necessity of having a cartridge factory in Ontario. The reason that he gave is a very strong one, and there is another reason which I think should be considered, namely, that the one factory might be destroyed by fire at any moment, and we might be left without any cartridges at all. I would ask the minister if he has ever thought of the advisability of having resort to private enterprise for the manufacture of ammunition. In Great Britain I know they do all they can to get private firms to undertake the manufacture of ammunition. Could that not be done in Canada ? I think we have one or two large firms in Canada, the Hamilton Powder Company for one. It seems to me it would be a good idea to look into that matter thoroughly, and see if you cannot get your cartridges manufactured by private firms, perhaps cheaper than the government could do it. At all events, the necessity that exists of having a cartridge factory west of Quebec is a matter of serious moment.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the matter brought up by the member for West York is entitled to very careful consideration, and I shall be prepared to give it consideration, namely, the encouragement of private enterprise in this direction. I may say that that matter occupied my attention more than two years ago. I had several conferences with Dr. Brainard, who has a factory at Lachute, with reference to that subject, and my idea was that the government would undertake to give his company a guarantee of a certain order each year, providing the company would undertake to fit up a factory with machinery sufficient to make a much larger quantity in case it should be required. The negotiations did not come to anything, I was not able to get that gentleman down to any definite statement as to what guarantee he would give, and what increased amount he would undertake to manufacture in case we guaranteed him a certain order each year. Possibly the negotiations may be renewed. Now, replying to the questions of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell), I may say that the first paragraph he read in the report concerning the issue of valuable stores to the field battery, has occupied my attention. Unfortunately, as military men know pretty well, there is apt to be, from time to time, a certain amount of friction between the different branches of the department ; there always seems to be a little friction between the stores branch, the civil branch of the department, and the military branch. I think that probably the superintendent of stores implies, perhaps, a slight reflection upon the military branch. But, I can assure the House that now every precaution has been taken to see that the property issued is properly taken care of.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is it a fact, as is stated in that report, that more equipment is issued than is necessary ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can only say that there has been no equipment issued which the military authorities did not think necessary. Now, with regard to the year's supply of clothing, I have already given the reason why I did not ask for a special vote this year, that was because we had not proper central warehouse at Ottawa in which to store them. With regard to the additional Maxim guns, I think that orders have been given to replace those which have been sent to South Africa. I do not know that it is necessary to increase the order at the present moment, but it is easy at short notice to do so. It is very difficult to get stores at this time in Great Britain, but at almost any other time, by cabling over, we can get any supplies we require inside of ten or twelve days.

Now, one word in reference to the old rifles. The hon. member for Three Rivers said that he had this question before him when he was Minister of Militia and Defence. Well, I think he must be a little mistaken, because when he was Minister of Militia and Defence the rifles which are now obsolete were the only rifles with which the militia of Canada was armed, that is, the Snider-Enfield rifle. Since the hon. gentleman ceased to be Minister of Militia and Defence, $40,000 worth of new rifles have been purchased. I was advised, and I believed that it would be in the public interest, to sell at least 20,000 of the superfluous obsolete rifles. With reference to the statement that I sold these rifles in order to give the people an opportunity of rifle practice, the leader of the opposition is mistaken in imputing that statement to me. What I said was, that I believed one of the results would be to give the people an opportunity, if they saw fit, of using these rifles for the purpose of improving themselves in marksmanship. I may say to the member for West York, that the very thing he thinks ought to have been done, that is, the distribution of these rifles throughout the country, has been done by the government, and to-day 20,000 rifles are scattered among the people of Canada, from the extreme east to the extreme west. So far as they are of any use, I suppose they are now being used for the purpose of practice. But, the hon. gentleman himself understands that the rifle clubs all over Canada would feel insulted if we were to issue to them rifles of this obsolete character. They would be absolutely useless, absolutely worthless. As a matter of fact, they are absolutely worthless. Their limit in carrying power is a few hundred yards, and they are not exact after five or six hundred yards, whereas the rifle of to-day will carry 1,500 yards, or as far as it is possible to see, even with the aid of a magnifying glass. The rifle of to-day is a weapon of precision, whereas the rifle we have discarded is practically worthless, and it would be an insult to offer a rifle of that character to rifle clubs for the purpose of practice.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was called out, but I understood the hon. minister to state that I was mistaken in the statement I made in reference to the obsolete rifles in my time. Is that the hon. minister's statement?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, the statement I made was that the hon. gentleman could not have had 20,000 rifles to dispose of, because the militia were using what was then an up-to-date weapon. The rifle which we have sold was then the only rifle which the hon. gentleman had, and therefore he could not have considered the question of disposing of it. What I suppose he did consider the question of disposing of were three or four thousand rifles which were disposed of at 25 cents apiece, rifles that were heirlooms, that had come down from the old government of Canada, and which had been in the department for twenty or thirty years.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I want to rectify the statement of my hon. friend. I never mentioned 20,000 rifles. I do not know how many there were. I did not intend to dispose of the rifles that the whole militia force of Canada were armed with then. We had different patterns of rifles, amongst them Spencer rifles, a large quantity of which were used in the first trouble in the North-west. The question of the disposal of these rifles was brought to my attention by the deputy, and it was suggested that it would be better to dispose of them. I ascertained what they would bring into the department, and I found it to be a very insignificant amount. Then, it was suggested that we should have them converted, and that, after having them converted, although not equal to the rifle with which our force were armed, they might be brought into use by being utilized in the schools for drill purposes. That was my statement, and the hon. gentleman will find, in the records of the department, the report which was made to me by the deputy at that time. I never mentioned 20,000. There may have been 20,000 for all I know, or there may have been one or two thousand for all I know. I never mentioned the amount simply because I was speaking from memory, but my memory is accurate as to my having discussed the question with Col. Panet of the disposal of, or conversion of the rifle to be utilized in the way that I have mentioned and not to be supplied to the rifle clubs. I am quite at one with the hon. minister as to their rifle clubs. The very best arm that can be found must be given to the rifle clubs. They are composed of the crack shots of Canada, and they must be armed with the very best arm that can be given to them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I understand now that the hon. gentleman referred to the three or four thousand rifles.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not know how many.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think there were about that many composed of Peabody's, Spencer's, and half a dozen other varieties in store at Quebec, and in different places. The deputy recommended that these rifles should be got rid of, or that they should be remodelled and distributed to the schools. Neither was done, and all these years they remained in the stores a bill of expense to the country. They were not issued to the schools, and they were not remodelled. When I came in I found them there, and I found report after report in regard to them. Finally, I said to Col. Lake: Go through the stores from one end of the country to the other and see what they contain. He did so, and he made a very strong report. In view of the fact that we were bringing in the new rifle, which was an additional argument that did not exist in the time my hon. friend was in office, in view of the fact that we were under additional expense and required more room for the new rifles, it was considered advisable to dispose of the old rifles, and as we had twenty or thirty or forty thousands to dispose of we were advised to get rid of them by sale, and that was done.

Mr. SPROULE. In reference to the hon. minister's statement that young men throughout the country would not think of learning shooting with these obsolete rifles because they would only carry straight for, perhaps, 200 or 300 yards—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Five hundred or six hundred yards.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman will find that the good shots in the country learn their shooting with rifles that would not shoot more than 200 yards. The ordinary rifle that is carried through the bush and through the country is the rifle that is most used. I do not see any difference between young men learning to shoot with a rifle that will carry 200 yards and with a rifle that will carry 1,000 yards. It is only a matter of a steady hand and clear sight. I would not have referred to this again had it not been for the statement of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood), that not one of these rifles went out of the country.

Mr. WOOD. I was speaking of the 20,000. I know nothing of the first three or four thousand sold. I was speaking of those advertised last year.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman made the statement in such a way as to leave the impression that none went out of the country. The hon. minister said that only a few of the old Enfield rifles went out of the country. Well, there were 5,090 Enfields, Peabodys and Spencers, which is not a small number. There were in addition 219 Winchesters sold at $1.50 apiece. I remember some years ago some parties buying Winchesters at $15 apiece, and they were considered very cheap at that, because the price then was $25. These Winchesters were sold at $1.50, and there were 1,090 sold for 25 cents apiece, including Enfields, Peabodys and Spencers, to Hartly & Graham, of New York. They were sold to a firm of foreigners at 25 cents apiece, which is a very low figure. They were sold at private sale as the Auditor General's Report shows. The Auditor General says:

No vouchers in connection with this sale have been furnished. Please forward them. In the meantime, I have to inquire if these rifles were examined and condemned by a board of examiners.

The answer is:

The sale was not by auction, but by private tender, by order of the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence.

So that instead of being a small number there were 5,309 of these rifles sold. I said that instead of being sold to men in the country they were sold and taken out of the country, and I find that to be the case. They were sold without tender, without advertisement, and even without vouchers being returned, under the instructions of the minister.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), has received no reply from the minister in reference to the matter which he brought to his attention. Here is a statement, which coming from the chief superintendent of stores, is startling:

Attention is requested to the issues ordered to be made to field batteries. Equipment to the value of over $50,000 is issued to an officer without any guarantee of safety, and stored in a gun-shed without any adequate protection. The greater part of this equipment is unnecessary for drill purposes. The present establishment of horses for a field battery is thirty-four, yet seventy-eight sets of harness are issued; forty-four sets, therefore, lie in the gun-shed from year to year deteriorating.

I only wonder that he did not add: 'Wanted, a Minister of Militia.' More reckless conduct on the part of a minister than to permit this condition of things, it is impossible to conceive. Here we have a Minister of Militia bringing down this condemnation on himself by his subordinate officer; this proof of the utter inadequacy of the minister to discharge the ordinary duties that the country requires of him. This officer says that $50,000 worth of equipments is issued without any guarantee of safety, and that the greater part of it is unnecessary, and the minister brings down this certificate of character furnished by an important officer, and he has no justification and no explanation to offer. These reports from the minister's own officers, indicate an utter want of management, and indicate the fact that there is no person giving attention to the department. I want to get on with the business of the House, and I do not wish to delay; but the minister ought to understand that when he puts on the Table of the House statements from high officers in his department, showing utter neglect on the part of the head of the department, he ought to make some apology to the House for the position he finds himself in.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If any member of this administration waited until the leader of the opposition would admit that any member of the government possesses any qualification of an administrative character, he would wait for the millenium. I do not ask the leader of the opposition for a certificate as to my fitness or unfitness, but I am entitled to expect at least a little fair-play from him. It seems that the hon. gentleman will not extend even that. The issue of these stores is made by the order of the General Officer Commanding, and it is a thing with which the Minister of Militia has nothing to do.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, 'hear, hear.' The General Officer Commanding is responsible to the minister, and the General Officer Commanding knows, or ought to know, and I think did know, what was necessary to have issued in order to carry out his plan with reference to the training of the militia. It seems that the chief superintendent of stores has a different view from the General Officer Commanding, and, in this instance, I am inclined to think that the General Officer Commanding knew better what the requirements were, and what his own objects were, which he may not have explained to the superintendent of stores. Every precaution has been taken to see that the stores issued are properly taken care of, and there is not the slightest question that at the present moment these stores are being properly cared for, and that proper guarantees for their safety have been given.

Mr. DAVIN. I will ask the Minister of Militia to definitely explain what is necessary to be done by gentlemen in the North-west, who are desirous to have rifles and to be equipped as rifle associations? Let me say that what we want for the rifle associations in the North-west Territories, and all over the country, is the very best weapon. I do not differ from the statement of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), that good use might have been made of the discarded rifles for the purposes of drill. But he is mistaken in the idea that you can cultivate marksmanship with a rifle of 400 yards range, in such a way as would help you when armed with a rifle of 800 yards range. The man who has practiced with a 400-yard range rifle would have to relearn his business to a certain extent when he wanted to use a modern rifle. In order that our marksmen may be equal to any emergency, we want to have them armed with the very best rifles. I quite agree with the views expressed to-day, that what we want in order to have marksmen all over Canada, is not centralization but decentralization. You want local initiative, you want local clubs, and if you have in every part of the country local clubs constantly practising, and if from the centre you content yourselves with encouraging this practice by giving prizes, you will accomplish in that way, far greater results for less money than is accomplished by the large outlay, nearly half a million dollars, on the annual drill. Reference has been made in this discussion to the Swiss system, and the hon. minister showed that he had studied that system, or that it had been called to his attention. All over Switzerland, in every little locality, there is an association, the members of which have constant practice; and this practice is not merely a duty, but it is a pleasure. It fills the place in Switzerland that the manly games that fitted men for warfare did in the days of Merry England. I should like to hear from the minister a definite statement of what has to be done in any locality in order that it may have a thoroughly equipped rifle association.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is necessary for gentlemen who wish to form themselves into an association to meet together and adopt certain by-laws. This is the regulation governing the matter, in the Regulations and Orders for the Militia of Canada, 1898, No. 161:

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

All rifle associations applying for aid out of the government grant are required to send to headquarters, through district officers commanding, a copy in duplicate of their rules and regulations for approval.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman will see that that cannot apply to the North-west Territories, because we have not got the militia there. I understand that these are the militia regulations which he is reading from.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There has always been some question as to whether the Militia Act applied to the North-west Territories. As the hon. gentleman knows, the mounted police has been the arm utilized in that part of the country to preserve order; it has taken the place there which the militia to some extent occupies in the rest of Canada. But I may say to the hon. gentleman that the opinion of the Department of Justice has been taken upon the question as to whether the Militia Act applies to the present organization of the North-west Territories, with the result that we are assured that no change of the law is necessary, and that the Act does apply. Having settled that point, which has been settled only within a very short time, it will be necessary, I think, to make a further regulation declaring in distinct terms that for the purposes of this particular regulation, the district officer commanding, say at Winnipeg, shall be the officer through whom these applications shall be made, or that they shall be sent direct to the adjutant-general at Ottawa; and now that my attention has been again specially called to the matter, I give the hon. gentleman the assurance that at once such a regulation will be formulated and promulgated, and that every opportunity will be given to the people of the North-west Territories to form themselves into rifle associations, with the same advantages and the same opportunities as are enjoyed in the rest of Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. That is so far satisfactory, because the opinion that has been obtained from the Department of Justice places the question in a different position from what it occupied in the early part of the session. Early in the session, when I called on the deputy minister, he told me that nothing further could very well be done until an Act was passed; but now that we have the assurance of the Department of Justice that the Militia Act applies to the North-west Territories, and that the present machinery is sufficient, I would ask the Minister of Militia not to make the district officer at Winnipeg the officer to deal with this question. He says another regulation will have to be passed. Then, I would suggest that the order in council embodying that regulation should make the adjutant-general here the officer with whom the Territories will have to deal. Let the Territories deal directly with the Department of Militia. Then we shall be in a position to get ahead, because, as he is aware, up to the present we have always been met with a non possumus.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the Oliver equipment has given universal satisfaction. I heard many complaints about it when it was first issued, and there seems to be a feeling among a good many militia officers that it is cumbersome and uncomfortable for the men, and that better equipment might be found. At the time it was ordered, the experts who were called in to judge it, gave it as their opinion that it was the best equipment that could be found. I would like to know if the officers still consider it a perfectly satisfactory equipment.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as I know, the Oliver equipment has given great satisfaction. We have had no serious complaints. The department, after careful inquiry, both before the present government came into office, and for a year afterwards, decided that it was the best equipment known. I thought I had here the extract of a letter recently published in the Army and Navy Gazette by a distinguished Imperial army officer, in which he says, discussing the conditions in South Africa, that if the British army had adopted the Oliver equipment, some of the serious disasters which took place, resulting from the ammunition having become exhausted, would not have happened. He praises the Oliver equipment in the strongest possible terms, and congratulates the militia of Canada upon having adopted it, and expresses his belief that it is the best equipment in the world.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Has the hon. gentleman received any application for the sale or lease of a portion of the Cove Fields in Quebec? The hon. gentleman knows that these old ordnance properties are divided into two classes, a and b. Class a is reserved for defensive purposes and cannot be disposed of without application to the Imperial government; and class b consists of properties which were handed over by the Imperial government and can be disposed of by the Canadian government without special application to the home authorities, the only condition being that they must be sold at public sale. In my time application was made for a portion of the Cove field, and refused on the ground that it was in class a and could not be disposed of. The Cove field, of course, forms part of the property attached to the Plains of Abraham, and extends from the citadel right out to the Plains. It is used to-day by the golf club, which has considerably improved the property. Being in class a, I do not see how it possibly could be disposed of.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have already answered an inquiry with regard to this matter in the House. There has been an application from the provincial government of Quebec for a portion of this land on which to erect a normal school, but I understand that the land is now under lease, no doubt to the golf club, and, therefore, it is quite out of the question for the government to do anything in the matter.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It could not be disposed of in any case?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia to consider the question of giving aid to the establishment of rifle clubs. The House is aware that the Prime Minister of England has drawn special attention to the great importance of establishing such clubs. I am not now referring to the rifle associations but to rifle clubs. I hope the government will give such aid to these clubs as will promote their establishment generally throughout the country. The Star newspaper has offered very considerable prizes for those who will be first in the field in adopting Lord Salisbury's suggestion and establishing rifle clubs in Canada. Have the government considered the question and what aid do they propose to give?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The question has been under consideration for some time. What I am doing is to consult the district officers commanding and military men in the different provinces with the view of formulating some scheme which will afford the greatest possible opportunity for the formation of these clubs. The department will do everything possible in the direction suggested. Rifles will be issued free, as is generally done in the case of the rifle associations, but how far we could go in the supplying of free ammunition, I am not prepared to say, but, certainly, we can sell the ammunition at cost or less than cost, and might give a limited quantity to the members of each club by way of encouragement. Perhaps, before the House rises, I will be able to add something to the statement I now make.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to ask something, so that the government, if it should decide to give free ammunition, will be able to carry out its decision.

Mr. WALLACE. Where is the supply of gunpowder for the cartridges obtained?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At the War Office. Cordite is the explosive used—the smokeless powder.

Mr. WALLACE. Do the government propose to continue getting supplies from the War Office?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Clothing and necessaries ..... $110,000

Mr. PRIOR. I see in the Auditor General's Report, on page L—3, that the sum of $2,607.32 was paid to James Robertson, inspector of clothing, 227½ days at $10 per day. Who is Mr. Robertson, and what are his special qualifications?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He was formerly a citizen of the city of Hamilton, and a merchant there, and has been doing the work of inspection ever since 1896. He is a most efficient and able inspector, a man who has had great experience in cloths and clothing, which has been his business for many years.

Mr. PRIOR. Was he permanently employed?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He was not at that time. He is in receipt of the same pay as has always been given by the department—$10 a day.

Militia—Provisions and supplies ..... $125,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This is for the camps, and schools and everything?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, to provide rations, forage, fuel, light, postage, and other items, and to purchase twenty-one remounts.

Mr. SPROULE. I would remind the hon. minister, that when the accounts for the contingents were under consideration, I asked for information regarding the amount paid for horses, and he promised to get it for me. I suppose, however, that in the multiplicity of his duties, he has forgotten it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have all that information prepared, and I will get it for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule).

Militia—Transport and freight..... $40,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Is this for the camps?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No; this includes transport for the officers of the headquarters district staff, permanent corps on staff duty (annual drill excepted), $12,000; transport of officers and men of the militia, and permanent corps attending schools of instruction, transport of the permanent corps, to and from stations, $10,000; freight charges and expressage of military stores, also truckage of same, $18,000. This is the vote we take annually, and it is the smallest amount we can manage with.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Militia—Rifle associations and grants.... $38,000

Mr. PRIOR. May I ask if the rifle range in Victoria, B.C., has been made?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The survey has been made, and expropriation proceedings are now going on.

Mr. PRIOR. No work has been done?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, we could not do work until the ground was located. The work will go on at once. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior), there will be no delay.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I desire to ask the minister what is being done with regard to assisting rifle ranges in small places—other than those for Dominion or provincial use?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a very large question. The moment we step outside of the large centres, it is difficult to say where the expenditure will end. But I should feel like recommending that where a piece of ground is by nature specially adapted for a rifle range, where there is a good background, and it would not be necessary to buy a large quantity of land, we should assist to some extent in either buying or renting the ground. I intend to proceed upon that line at any rate. I think there has been some assistance given to small ranges, but not to a very great extent.

Militia—Miscellaneous and unforeseen ... $22,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is an increase of $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. When the total force is drilled, there are more claims on account of injuries, than when only half the force is drilled. Of this increase, $1,000 is for injuries at annual drill. The other $1,000 is due to increase of expenses for telegraphing, legal expenses and so on—which is also the direct result of the annual drill. The telegraphing bill has increased very much indeed as a result of that. The legal expenses have increased on account of the expropriation proceedings which we have been taking and shall have to take in connection with the expropriation of land for various rifle ranges.

Mr. PRIOR. At page L—83 of the Auditor General's Report, I find a charge for the Defence Scheme Committee. What has been done with regard to that?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The defence committee sat here for two or three months and finished their work, and these are the accounts.

Mr. PRIOR. The committee reported?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, and the report has been forwarded through His Excellency, to the Intelligence Department of the War Office.

Mr. PRIOR. It is not published here ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, and will never be published. But it is open for any prominent military man who cares to see it.

Mr. PRIOR. I see, in looking through the Auditor General's Report, very large amounts paid to individual firms—Doull & Gibson, over $7,000 ; Sanford, over $52,000 ; Marsolais & Monday, over $15,000—and so on. I would like to ask the minister whether all these supplies were ordered by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, so far as I know. If there was any exception, it was for the installing of heating apparatus in different depots.

Mr. FOSTER. On page L-72 of the Auditor General's Report, I find an item of $300 for Wm. P. Laird, services, April 25 to July 1, 1898, preparing militia regulations for revision, also revising the same. It seems to me the hon. minister's staff is quite sufficient for that class of work. Why should $300 extra be paid out for some person to prepare militia regulations for revision ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There had been no satisfactory revision for a long time ; and it was thought advisable to employ somebody who had had experience in matters of this kind to do the work. Mr. Laird, I think, has had some experience in connection with the Ontario statutes, and he was employed as being a suitable man, and I think did the work very well.

Mr. FOSTER. Had not the hon. gentleman a man in his own department for that ? Who is so well fitted to revise these regulations as an officer of the department who is familiar with them ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This gentleman is a lawyer, and he had the benefit of the constant advice of military men and the head of the department, the late Col. Panet, to assist him in his work. It was necessary to go through all these regulations and take out all those that were contradictory with each other. That was a work that a lawyer alone could do.

Mr. FOSTER. What experience had Mr. Laird in army regulations ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He had no experience perhaps in army regulations, but he had experience in the codification of statutes, and could easily detect regulations which contradicted each other.

Royal Military College, Kingston..... $70,500

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I had not an opportunity of being present when the Minister of Militia and Defence made his statement with reference to this and a number of other subjects yesterday. I desire to take this opportunity of drawing the attention of the committee for a few moments to what took place in this House on the 19th of March, when, according to Hansard, the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) asked :

1. During what years was Major-General Cameron the head of the Royal Military College at Kingston ?

2. When did his connection with the college cease ?

3. How many cadets were in attendance at said college during each year that Major-General Cameron was in charge ?

4. Who succeeded Major-General Cameron ?

5. How many cadets have been in attendance at the college each year since Major-General Cameron's official connection therewith ceased ?

6. Is it the intention of the government to reinstate Major-General Cameron ? If not, why not ?

I want to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence and the hon. member for North Wellington whether they think any great advantage is to be gained by putting on the Hansard utterly delusive and misleading statements. The Minister of Militia and Defence answered these questions in such a way as to suit the question by giving answers so prepared as to have the effect of misleading and deceiving the people. I think it is a prostitution of the position of a minister of the Crown to lend himself to anything of that kind, and I want to take exception to it. These were the answers given :

1. Major-General Cameron was head of the Royal Military College from August 16, 1888, until August 25, 1896. 2. August 25, 1896. 3. In 1888, 81 cadets; in 1889, 76 cadets; in 1890, 71 cadets; in 1891, 57 cadets; in 1892, 66 cadets; in 1893, 63 cadets; in 1894, 56 cadets; in 1895, 59 cadets; in 1896, 50 cadets. 4. Major Gerald Charles Kitson. 5. In 1897, 57 cadets; in 1898, 75 cadets; in 1899, 87 cadets. 6. No.

Now, I ask the committee if any person with that information before him could come to any other conclusion than that the great increase in the attendance of cadets at the Royal Military College resulted from the change of commandant. I need not tell the House that the Royal Military College before either of these gentlemen went there received the highest commendation from Major-General Sir Andrew Clarke, G.C.M.G., a military authority of the highest character, who put on record his flattering declarations that in his judgment there was no military college in the world superior to the Royal Military College of Canada ; and not only that, but he said he spoke from the curriculum of study which they had in force and from the character of the men who had graduated from that college and had become officers in the British army. Now, in view of the fact that the government have given a great many answers that were not categorical replies to the questions put to them, and have entered fully into circumstances foreign to the question, I ask whether it was worthy of the Militia Department, worthy of the government, for these questions to be asked and these answers to be made in such a way as to deceive and mislead the country as to the comparative merits of the gentlemen who were in charge of the college at the two periods. I say that never in the history of the college did the cadets take a higher position or acquit themselves more honourably from the time they went into the Imperial army than did those who graduated during the period of the management of that institution that it is now sought to be belittled. Now, was not the Minister of Militia and Defence bound in justice to these gentlemen, gentlemen who are not here to defend themselves, to state frankly to the House that there was no relevancy in these questions as to the number of cadets attending the college? Was he not bound to say that since this government came into power they had entirely changed the position of attendance upon that college? Was he not bound to say that they had altered the age of admission? Was he not bound to say that they had reduced the period required for graduation from four years' study to three? Was he not bound to say that they had changed materially the curriculum of the college, and, in fact, had dispensed with a number of very important subjects? And lastly and especially was he not bound to say that the present government had largely reduced the fees payable by cadets entering that college? Every person can see that the questions had no point except the object of casting discredit upon the administration of the college during a certain period. I confess that when these changes were made I feared very much the consequences. I do not speak of the reduction of the fees which is a matter of public policy, and which could have but one result, and that was to produce a larger number of attendants as it rendered the attendance very much more easy, and made the college available to persons who would otherwise be unable to attend. I did express my great fear that the standard of education given at the Royal Military College would be so much lowered as to prevent it receiving that high encomium, that, under the former regime, it had received from the highest military authorities. I regarded the reduction of the period of attendance, before graduating, from four to three years as an experiment, but I am only too glad to learn by the statements that have been made that it has not been attended with the results that I feared. We all have a common interest in the Royal Military College, and in maintaining that high status which, from the first, it has enjoyed. We all have a common interest in finding that such a course as is adopted by whoever is in charge of the institution has enabled its cadets to maintain in the British Empire the very high position to which they have attained. I could point to gentlemen who graduated during the period that Major-General Cameron was commandant of the college, who have received the highest encomiums from the most eminent authorities in the British Empire upon their ability and great knowledge of their profession in which they have been able to serve the empire in South Africa, but I do not intend occupying the time of the House at this stage of the session further than to draw attention to the gross injustice and unfairness—I think I might say dishonesty—of putting questions and receiving answers of that character, thereby misleading the House, or, not misleading the House, because the House understands it too well to be deceived.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I would just like to say a word in reply to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper). I put the question on the Notice paper entirely on my own responsibility. The hon. Minister of Militia never said a single word, directly or indirectly, to me. Since the hon. gentleman has reopened the question, I will give him the reason why I put the question on the Notice paper. I was personally intimate with some of those who attended the military college, and in the course of a conversation one of the cadets told me that Major-General Cameron was virtually a stranger to the cadets of the college, that instead of being personally familiar with them, knowing every one of the cadets by name, and taking an active interest in the progress of the institution, such as he should have taken, he did not know the name of half of these cadets. Having heard a report of that kind I decided, as it was my duty, to put a question on the Notice paper, and I did it of my own accord. I think if Major-General Cameron stands in such bad need of commendation before this House and the country it would certainly have looked better to have allowed some other person to have spoken in his behalf than his father-in-law. I think it would have come very well from some person other than the hon. leader of the opposition. The hon. gentleman characterizes my course as being what he is disposed to call unfair and small. Well, I put the question through a desire to gather information in regard to the duty of Major-General Cameron. I certainly thought that if that was the character of the service that he was giving to Canada in return for the kindness that Canada had shown him, the House should know it. When Major-General Cameron came here we not only put him in the college at a high salary, but, through the good offices, I presume, of the hon. leader of the opposition we provided him with a house, paid for it, and we furnished it. Everything about it was furnished at the country's expense down to the coal with which he warmed his feet. I certainly think in return for all that we should have got better service than that which was reported to me by the cadet as having been rendered by Major-General Cameron, and I pledge my word of honour, as a member of this House, that I have stated exactly what he said to me. The cadet said to me that Major-General Cameron was unacquainted with the students, and that he did not appear to take any interest in them. He came there now and again, strutted around amongst them, looked at them, but, as far as making himself familiar with them and taking any interest in their education was concerned, he did nothing of the kind. That was the reason why I put the question on the Order paper. I had nothing to do with the hon. Minister of Militia, and he never suggested anything of the kind to me. I did it for my own information.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has evidently been misinformed, and I am quite sure, if I may be allowed to use a vulgar expression, that the cadet has been pulling the leg of my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen).

Mr. McMULLEN: No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I ought to know something about it. I was Minister of Militia when Major Cameron came to Canada. I had on several occasions an opportunity of going to Kingston, as hon. gentlemen know. I was always present when the prizes were distributed, and moreover, time and again I had occasion to run down on business of the department, connected with the Royal Military College. I had an excellent opportunity of judging of the relations which existed between Major-General Cameron and the cadets. On more than one occasion it was my pleasure at his own house to meet the cadets who were invited by Major-General and Mrs. Cameron to partake of their hospitality. I can say more; of all the officers who have had charge of the Royal Military College, without disparaging any of the others, I do not know any one who gave more of his time to the institution, or took a deeper interest in the progress of the cadets than Major-General Cameron. The hon. gentleman says that he did not know them by name, that he never met them, that he never mixed with them, but the hon. gentleman must see himself that that would be impossible. The officer commanding in charge of the Royal Military College, has, several times a day to be with the cadets. He has to superintend the instructors. He has the superintendence of the education which is being carried on. It is upon his own ideas that the curriculum is formulated for the scholars. I suppose that well-informed cadet also told the hon. gentleman that Major-General Cameron knew nothing at all. He is one of the greatest scientists. This is a fact that was very well known long before he came to Canada. On most important questions, of great importance to the British Empire, Major-General Cameron was consulted by the Imperial authorities. But take Canada alone; we all know that in a work of great importance, namely, the delimitation of the boundary from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, he was employed by the Imperial government and received honours and decorations for the services he rendered. That cadet may have been one of the cadets who was not very often in the college, and possibly that might have been the reason why he did not meet the general.

Mr. McMULLEN. He was there, and he passed through the college.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Well, if he did, and did not meet the commandant of the college, he must have lost a good deal of his time remaining there. Major-General Cameron may have had people antagonistic to him, as every man in a prominent position will have, but every one who knows Major-General Cameron knows that he was most attentive, so far as the cadets are concerned. And as to his scientific acquirements, there is no use arguing about that, because Major-General Cameron was well known in England to be a man of high attainments.

Defence of Esquimalt ..... $125,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this increase of $16,000 for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As explained to the House last year, a new arrangement was made with the Imperial government in accordance with the terms which that government suggested. The agreement with the War Office, which took effect on October 1, 1899, requires the Dominion government to pay as follows:

- (a) Half the annual cost of the Imperial garrison of 320 officers and men..... $102,207
- (b) Half the prime charges for the barrack accommodation of the force .... 60,000

This was provided for in the estimates of the current year, and does not require to be estimated for again.

- (c) To continue to pay, as at present, the whole cost of the maintenance of the local regiment, the strength to be maintained at the establishment fixed, and the militia to be subject to inspection by the Imperial officer commanding at Esquimalt or the lieutenant-general commanding in North America. $45,000

The establishment of the militia force to be as follows: Artillery, five officers, 150 non-commissioned officers and men; submarine and mining engineers, three officers and fifty non-commissioned officers and men; infantry, fifteen officers, 400 non-commissioned officers and men; total, twenty-three officers, and 600 non-commissioned officers and men.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is the increase for this year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The annual cost prior to the new agreement was about $45,000. Last year the old agreement was in force up to October, when the new agreement came in, and we had a vote in the supplementary estimates to make it up. The new arrangement was suggested by the Imperial government, discussed in the House last year, and acquiesced in, and it involves greater expense to this country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I understand it, the force is provided by the Imperial government, but paid by the Canadian government?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We pay half of it, and the government of Canada provides for a certain militia force as I have mentioned, and which is prescribed by the Imperial government.

It being six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in Committee).

General service medals ..... $15,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). It has been found, under the regulations promulgated, that there is a larger number of medals required than was at first supposed, and the additional vote of $15,000 is required to provide the necessary number of medals for the men who served with credit during the Fenian raids of 1866 and 1870.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the relatives of the parties that were in action and have since died, be entitled to the medals?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The War Office in England has provided that the following are entitled to the medals: The surviving officers and non-commissioned officers and men who, during the operations in question, performed active service in the field, or served under orders from competent authority, on guard at any point where an attack was expected or who were detailed by competent authority for some specific or special service. The date of that order is July, 1898. In the case of any veteran who died subsequent to that date, his medal will be issued to his legal representative.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister a question with reference to medals for the North-west Mounted Police. From time to time, I have brought before his department the claims of the mounted police who served in the rebellion of 1885, to medals, and I should be very glad to know that the hon. gentleman has decided to give medals to the mounted police who fought in the rebellion. I would not disparage the services of those gallant men who in 1867 and 1870 fought against the dubious cloud of invasion that gathered on our confines, but surely no men ever did better service for their country than was done by the North-west Mounted Police in 1885. I should be glad to know what arrangements the hon. gentleman has made to provide those of the North-west Mounted Police who served in 1885, with medals.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can only say, that so far as I am personally concerned, my sympathies are entirely with the gentlemen for whom the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) speaks; and so far as I have any opinion in the matter I feel disposed to recommend that the medal shall be granted to the gentlemen to whom he refers.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the minister if there is any reasonable time put upon the applications of those who are deserving of medals?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None. We are open to receive applications at any time in the future.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose the hon. minister is quite aware that all of those who served in 1866 have not received medals. I am aware that in the county I represent the greater number have received medals, but, for some reason that we have not yet had explained, a number who are equally deserving and who also made application have not received any. I trust it is not more than an oversight, and if it is a case of oversight, I trust that the minister will see that these men are not overlooked.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may inform my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) that the applications have been dealt with in chronological order as received. And, though it may appear that some applications have been overlooked, they have not been overlooked. I know from my personal knowledge that many applications have come in only within the last two or three weeks. I assure my hon. friend that every application will be carefully looked into and will receive the proper recognition.

Militia—Capital account—Arms, ammunition and defences ..... $240,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that? What is it to be expended on?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. With reference to this vote, I have only to say that I am not able to give the whole details. In this vote will be included the purchase of arms and ammunition which may be necessary to carry out the policy of the government, to be initiated later on, with reference to the formation of rifle leagues and rifle clubs to which reference has been made yesterday and to-day, I think that it will be prudent for us as a government to wait for further developments. We know that the South African war will be fruitful in the way of lessons to be taught even to the Imperial army and the Imperial War Office. And I have only to say that we propose to spend this money in accordance with general principles which shall be laid down by the Intelligence Branch of the War Office later on. I may say, moreover, that it is not an additional vote, but it is a balance of the $3,000,000 which was appropriated by this parliament in 1896 to be devoted to purposes of defence.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a rather peculiar statement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) asks for a vote of a quarter of a million dollars, and then follows it up by a statement that he does not propose to give any plan at all as to how it is to be expended, or any particulars as to what kind of armament is to be obtained, where it is to be placed or how it is to be distributed.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is what the minister said. At least he did not give a single detail. If he has details to give, why, of course, we shall be happy to listen.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I repeat what I said—this is a balance of the vote of $3,000,000 which, in 1896, under the regime of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was appropriated by the parliament of Canada as a contribution to the defence of Canada and the defence of the empire. This amount of money here proposed remains unexpended. I say that I do not propose, as head of the Militia Department, to finally conclude the expenditure of this money until the Intelligence Branch of the War Office in England has come to a conclusion as to what is the best arm, the best rifle, to purchase, and as to what is the best method of organizing rifle clubs. I am sure that after what my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) himself has said to-day, after what has been said in the House, he will be willing to leave, not to me, but to the wisdom of the government, the decision as to what course should be adopted with reference to these matters, and will not require me, as head of the department, in advance of the sober and serious conclusions which must be arrived at as a result of the operations which have taken place in South Africa, to anticipate these conclusions by making any statement here to-night. I am sure that my hon. friend, in view of the statements that have been made here to-day by his leader and by the leaders of military opinion on his side of the House, as well as this side of the House, as to the means of organizing military clubs and rifle clubs in the country, will not require me to come down and define, especially and particularly the exact line we propose to take in the expenditure of this money. I am sure that my hon. friend, zealous as he is for the defence of Canada, will be willing to accord to the government of this country time to await developments which will give us the best opportunity to ascertain how this money can be most profitably expended. That is the answer I have to make to my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. I must say that is a very peculiar answer. I do not know what is the matter with the hon. gentleman, but I am quite sure there is no necessity for such emphasis as he has put into his remarks. I never yet saw a minister come before the House with a quarter of a million dollars of capital expenditure, who made such an odd speech as he has made. The amount of emphasis and vehemence in his speech was exactly proportionate to the meagreness of the matter which it contained. What does the hon. gentleman wish the House to infer? That he is going to take a quarter of a million dollars to establish rifle clubs in the Dominion of Canada? That is the only detail the hon. gentleman alluded to at all—that it was not quite yet decided what was best, but after the discussion we have had with reference to the establishment of gun clubs and rifle clubs, he thought he should not be pressed for details. Now, that is somewhat startling. If the minister means to say that this $240,000 is to be expended for some sort of rifle club business, out of capital, I think he will pause before he asks the House to adopt the vote. I, for one, do not propose to give an unlimited capital account to the minister or the government, if it is proposed to scatter it in the formation of gun clubs and rifle clubs upon some plan which is not detailed to the House and of which we know absolutely nothing. He seems to plead that he ought not to be asked to explain this because it is the residuum of the $3,000,000 that was passed in 1896. It is not the residuum of the $3,000,000 that was voted. When we came down in 1896 and asked for this vote, we had to explain in the most elaborate detail, and rightly so, just the kind of arm that we proposed to purchase; and there was on this side of the House, by the gentlemen who were then in opposition, the most exigent demand for complete details and for cutting down the vote to the expenditure upon the plan of armament which was detailed to the House. Everybody who was here then will recollect the debate that took place, and they will recollect that the greatest detail, not only the kind of arm, but the distribution of the arm, the cost of the arm, the manner in which it was purchased, purchased as it was almost entirely through the home government, had to be detailed to the House. Now the minister comes down with a vote of a quarter of a million dollars, and he gives us no idea, he merely appeals to us to put it into the hands of the government without details at all. But, he accompanies it with the most significant statement, by the way, that leads us to suppose that he proposed to spend a large amount of this in establishing gun clubs and rifle clubs. Now, Sir, so far as I am concerned, I think there will have to be a detailed statement of the kind of gun clubs and rifle clubs we are going to have established before we allow this $240,000 to be used out of capital account. What we want to know from the hon. gentleman is the kind of armament that he proposes. We have now, I suppose, the latest arm, and a sufficient arm for our soldiers in the shape of a rifle.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, will the hon. gentleman say that he proposes a vote just enough to furnish our troops with the Lee-Enfield, or that he proposes to discard the Lee-Enfield, and to substitute in its place some other rifle? He must show to this House, before we entrust him with the money, something in the way of explanation as to what arm he proposes to substitute for the Lee-Enfield. For my part, I have not thought for a moment that any part of this $240,000 was going to substitute a new arm for the rifle which we got on the recommendation of the British government, a rifle with which the soldiers of the British Empire are armed all the world over. I supposed that this was in part for bringing up the heavy proportion of the armament for our Canadian militia, large guns, armaments, batteries of one kind and another, in the proportion that we need them. I think the minister ought to take us into his confidence as to the kind of armament and as to the distribution. But, the government, outside of the hon. gentleman, will see how perfectly absurd it is to ask us for such an expenditure as this, to vote a capital sum of $240,000, on such information as has been given us.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the hon. gentleman is somewhat unreasonable. If the occurrences which have taken place during the last eight months had not taken place, I would think that his criticisms were perfectly fair. But the hon. gentleman told us here this afternoon that the conditions had been entirely changed by the developments in South Africa since October last. Because those conditions have changed the hon. gentleman proposes to deny us, not a new vote, but the remnant of the vote of $3,000,000 that we took in 1896 in his regime.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is quite incorrect.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not incorrect.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman, I think, will take my word when I give the explanation. When we brought down our scheme we said that the total scheme involved an expenditure of about $3,000,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not about—exactly.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if the hon. gentleman is a stickler for words, we will say exactly; but, I do not know that anybody was foolish enough to say it would be that to a dollar. $3,000,000 were mentioned, but the vote was not taken for $3,000,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, I think it was.

Mr. FOSTER. My recollection is that it was not. Is the hon. gentleman sure that it was?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, I do not wish to be too sure.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will find that he must not be too sure in that, because only a part of the vote was taken. So, this is absolutely and entirely a new vote, although it may be the complement of what was supposed to be necessary in order to carry out the total new armament which it was contemplated at that time. But the money was not voted; even if it had been it would have lapsed if it had not been spent.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that there was a general consensus at that time that the sum of $3,000,000 should be voted towards armament in this country. I do not remember what the vote was at that time, but I think it was $2,000,000.

Mr. BERGERON. No, it was $1,300,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Whatever it may have been the sum named now is the balance of the $3,000,000, which, by the general consensus of opinion of this parliament in 1896 should be voted for the purposes of defence, was agreed to. Now, I wish to point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) and to this committee, that since that time great events and great changes have occurred, that during the last eight months events have occurred and are transpiring which are vitally instructive. I do not think, in these events one could find any reason for denying the government of Canada the balance of the vote agreed upon in 1896 of $3,000,000, but I do think that my hon. friend may agree with me that there is reason to pause as to the exact manner in which that money should be expended. The hon. gentleman, in more forcible and eloquent language than I am able to command, pointed out to the House this afternoon the importance of the lessons being learned by the experience of the Imperial army in South Africa. Surely, my hon. friend is not prepared now, in view of these important lessons, to say that he will ask this House to deny this vote to this government to be expended after the 1st of July next. I am not able to give the details; I am able to say this, however, that in view of the general desire of the people of Canada to form rifle clubs, in accordance with the general consensus of opinion expressed here this afternoon, we should have the most improved rifles at our disposal to give to these clubs in order to be used in the interest of the defence of Canada. I am not able to say to-night that the Lee-Enfield or the Lee-Metford is the best rifle. Perhaps either of them is, but I do not know whether it is. I am compelled to say that from what I have read of them I have my doubts as to whether either is the best rifle or not. That being the case, it is only prudence for me to say, as Minister of Militia, that I think we ought to wait before giving to this House the details as to how we propose to expend this money. I may say, speaking generally and broadly, that it is proposed to expend the money under the advice of the War Office in Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. The War Office is not responsible to us.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman is condemning the War Office, is he?

Mr. FOSTER. Not so much the War Office as its exponent.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well—

Mr. FOSTER. You ask a question which is not very pertinent, and you get your answer.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a very easy thing for the hon. gentleman to say, and the hon. gentleman can say it with as much facility as any hon. gentleman I know in this House or out of it. What I desire to say, notwithstanding the impertinence of the hon. gentleman—

Mr. FOSTER. I will accept that if the hon. gentleman means impertinence in the ordinary sense.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, then, I withdraw it. I did not mean it in the ordinary sense. I hope the hon. gentleman will understand exactly how I meant it. I withdraw it in the parliamentary sense.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, all right; go ahead with your details.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. These are details that the hon. gentleman may not like. It is the purpose of this government or of the Militia Department to expend this money in accordance with the best advice which can be obtained from the Intelligence Branch of the War Office in England, but not until the headquarters staff here is satisfied that a wise conclusion has been arrived at.

Mr. FOSTER. I appeal to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). Here is a government, and here is one of the cabinet ministers who comes down and asks a grant of $240,000; when he is humbly and courteously asked for an explanation as to how he proposes to expend it, he says: I will spend it as the Intelligence Department of the War Office in Great Britain advises me to, when once the headquarters staff here is convinced that that is the best thing to be done. Now, I invite the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to express an opinion upon that method of getting estimates through. Would it not be lovely? We could get all our estimates through in about three snaps of a small dog's tail, if we did it in that way. But, here is a detail started upon, and we cannot get the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) to follow it out. The $240,000 then, it seems, is to guard against the possibility of our being in possession of an insufficient rifle. The Lee-Enfield is not the best. Will the hon. minister state what other rifle is taking its place in the British Empire amongst the British troops in advance of the Lee-Enfield or the Lee-Metford? Surely he must give us the name of the rifle.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows that in these matters of military training and military discipline it is always in order to have a little lively discussion. However, I think he will say, after all said and done, that it is not a very unreasonable proposition for the hon. Minister of Militia to have asked the House, if they agree in his general policy, which, I understand, was enunciated here yesterday, when I had not the advantage of being here, to vote this sum. I think, we may all agree, after all said and done, that there have been sufficient developments since 1896 to warrant the government in considering very carefully whether some alteration should not be made in the supply of arms to our troops. For example, I have no doubt that gentlemen who have followed affairs in South Africa as closely as the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) has done, will have observed, that apparently, the Boers had succeeded in placing the British troops at a very great disadvantage in numerous encounters from the fact of their being supplied with the very latest species of artillery. Unless our information has been absolutely incorrect the Boer artillery, in a great many cases, was found far superior to the artillery employed by the British government in the field, and probably to the artillery with which we had provided ourselves. I think that was fully apparent.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has been talking about rifles.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If the hon. gentleman will look at the vote he will see that it is for guns, and ammunition as well as rifles. 'Arms, ammunition and defences.' That will include artillery as well as ordinary rifles. As to which particular description of rifles and equipment might prove to be most effective for use in the field, I would not venture to pronounce an opinion, but I think the hon. minister will exercise a very wise discretion in availing himself of the experience of many of our own officers upon their return from South Africa, and also of the experience which the English government have acquired at a very great cost of life and treasure. It may be proved that the equipment which the hon. gentleman and his friends provided four years ago, and which was then and, with reason, supposed to be the very best equipment, is now more or less antiquated. Even so short a period as four years allows of very great mechanical changes and improvements in projectiles of all kinds. Under these circumstances it is not unreasonable for the hon. minister to ask the House to trust a little to the information that may be obtained from actual campaigning, before he decides what particular arm should be supplied to our crack shots. I speak under the disadvantage of not having heard my hon. friend's statement, but if I followed correctly what I saw in the newspapers, the idea was to make use of the advantages we possess in Canada, to train a large number of rifemen who must be supplied with the very best arms that can be devised. I have always felt that in Canada we could probably, in the course of a few years, and without any extravagant expenditure, train a very large percentage of our younger men to the use of the rifle. I do not think it is proper for us, for many years to come, to maintain a standing army to any material extent, but I do think it is quite possible you might have in Canada from 100,000 to 200,000 men, all more or less trained rifle shots. The country which possesses 100,000 or 200,000 well trained rifemen, fairly acquainted with the elements of drill (which are very much simpler nowadays than they used to be, in the older shoulder to shoulder formation), might develop a force which would be of extreme value in the event of any serious danger threatening, not merely ourselves, but the empire at large. It is to that, as I understand, that the minister was directing his attention and inviting the concurrence of the House. Although $240,000 is a large amount of money, yet it would not, I fancy, supply more than 12,000 rifles of the most modern pattern, and it certainly would not go far in supplying us with any considerable quantity of the artillery which is now believed to be the most effective in active service. All that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) desires is, if the House is disposed to repose that amount of confidence in him, that it should not bind him down to any one particular form of weapon, but would be content with a general expression of opinion as to the mode in which our military forces can be best developed. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman agrees with the views I have expounded, but it appears to me they are really the views which are best adapted to our comparatively limited means in providing a sufficiently large number of men to put in the field. I have great confidence in the intelligence and capacity of our people to be turned into good soldiers at short notice. It is a subject which has engaged my attention for a great number of years. It is more years than I choose to mention, since I suggested in a letter to Sir Fenwick Williams, the hero of Kars, the formation of a Canadian Legion, as I called it then, on nearly the identical lines on which our contingents have been sent to South Africa. As far back as 1864, I ventured to lay before the then parliament of Canada, a proposition which, if carried out, would have supplied long ago a large number of men trained somewhat in the way I have indicated. I do not believe it is possible for us, under the conditions which exist in Canada, to maintain anything like a large standing force. I think both sides of the House will agree in that proposition. That being so, is there after all any other mode of developing our resources than by encouraging a large number of our young men from among the volunteers to train themselves to be expert rifle shots. Whether you call them rifle clubs, or rifle associations, or whether you make it, as I would like, a much more important feature of the training which is given in our camps than hitherto; it is obvious that you must have the very best arms. All that is asked for on the present occasion, is that authority be given to make inquiry into the subject, and if satisfied that there is need for a change of armament, to avail ourselves of the equipment which is found to be the best.

Mr. FOSTER. I take it as a very encouraging sign—not of my own wisdom, because I do not pretend to know a great deal about military matters—but it is a very encouraging sign of the trend of public opinion in this country to-day, that we should have heard from the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright), such views as he has expressed. If he will read over what has been said in this House by three or four or five of the gentlemen who took part in the discussion, he will find that he is ipsissima verba voicing the sentiments which they expressed. He certainly is voicing the sentiments which I tried, more feebly than he has done, to convey to the House. I have no desire at all—neither has any person on this side—to be unreasonable, but I cannot help to contrast the suave and persuasive manner and tone of the Minister of Trade and Commerce just now, when he was pleading for a carte blanche vote for his hon. friend, the Minister of Militia and Defence; with the somewhat more vehement tones in which on this side of the House in 1896, he declared, pounding his desk: That not a dollar would the government get, until they had made full explanation in detail. What has changed the principle upon which the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) acted then? Surely nothing. All that we require now is a reasonable explanation. Does the Minister of Militia propose to expend this money in purchasing large arms or small arms? If he proposes to expend a part of it on artillery, let him explain to the House about what he proposes to do. If he proposes to substitute another rifle for the one now in use, that is a somewhat startling proposition, and the minister cannot expect the House to entrust money to him for that purpose, unless he, at least, gives us reason for believing; first, that our present rifle is sadly deficient, and, second, that there is another one in sight which will overcome the deficiencies which he thinks are apparent in the arm which we have at present. I have followed the war in South Africa, and I have failed to find any large expression of opinion on the British side, that the rifles with which our soldiers in South Africa are armed, are not sufficient for offence and defence. I have yet to hear even the suggestion of a rifle for the British force which is considered to be any better than the one in use. We are not disposed to be at all unreasonable, but the government will see that we are perfectly within our right, when we require the broad lines to be laid down on which this expenditure is proposed to be made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we were proposing this vote for the first time, I would agree that the House should have the fullest information. But in view of the fact that this is a mere continuation of the policy generally concurred in by the House, I do not see how the Minister of Militia can add much more by way of explanation. The House agreed that about $3,000,000 should be appropriated from time to time for arms, ammunition and defences. A portion of that money has been expended, not in rifles only, but also in field batteries, and this is a continuation of that policy. This money is to be applied for the same purposes as previous votes. I am told that one field battery represents a cost of $50,000, and consequently, if you supplied four field batteries with guns, you would use $200,000 of this amount.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the purpose of the vote?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. Minister of Militia is not prepared to say exactly how much he will apply to each branch of the service, nor is it necessary that he should. What the hon. gentleman has said is that the science of war is making very rapid progress, and if, as a result of the experiences of the last few months in Africa, a better gun can be used than has been used in the past, he intends to profit by that experience and take the advice of the Imperial authorities, and get the best weapon that modern science has produced. Reference has been made to rifle clubs. In an early part of the discussion the minister explained that the department lends rifles to these clubs on their giving bonds to return them. In short, this is merely a continuation of the policy of the past.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman that the money which Canada contributes for the armament of Canada should be expended in the best possible way; but I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Finance to this one fact, that the Canadian forces are armed with the same rifle as the British; and, as I understand that the policy of this country is that in case of any emergency Canadian and British soldiers are to fight side by side, it becomes an absolute necessity that the arm of the British army should be adopted by the Canadian force. I have followed with a good deal of interest the development to which the hon. gentleman has referred, resulting from the experiences of the war in South Africa; but I fail to see in any of the military newspapers of Great Britain that it is intended to change the rifle with which the British army is now armed. The Lee-Enfield is the arm which has carried England through South Africa, and it is the arm adopted for the Canadian forces. Now, the war in South Africa is fortunately coming to an end, and before the Minister of Militia can utilize this vote, we should know what the British War Office will decide as to a change of rifle; then it will be time enough for Canada. If the hon. gentleman had come down with a fixed policy, and had asked parliament to vote $240,000 to change the rifle which is the arm of Canada to-day, and had stated that the ordnance which he has to-day is not what should be given to our troops, I could understand it. But is it possible to imagine that the Minister of Militia or any other minister would come down and ask parliament to vote $240,000 and tell parliament: 'I do not just know what I want to do with your money now, but next session when I know it, I will tell you.' That is not a policy which the hon. gentleman can have seriously considered; it is not a policy which the parliament of Canada can accept. I believe the Lee-Enfield is to-day as good a rifle as can be placed in the hands of a soldier. It is possible, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, that the development of the science of war will be so rapid that a new and better rifle shall soon be found. It may be found in two years or three years. But does the hon. Minister of Militia expect that parliament will trust his judgment or the judgment of his staff to follow the development or improvement of rifles, and vote him $240,000 without knowing what he wishes to do with the money? The hon. gentleman says there is no importance in this vote, because it is a continuation of a policy that has been accepted by parliament; but, Sir, it must be remembered that when that policy was submitted to parliament, it was explained, and parliament knew exactly what it was doing in voting the $1,300,000. Without saying a word against the good intentions of the Minister of Militia, I want him to treat parliament as parliament should be treated. I want him to say to parliament: 'I believe it will become necessary for us to change our rifle; instead of the Lee-Enfield, we shall have to adopt the Mauser.' The Mauser may be a better rifle than the Lee-Enfield; but the parliament of Canada is not going to vote $240,000 on the mere supposition that the experiences of the future may give us a better rifle which we are not called upon to-day to pay for; because the hon. gentleman himself admits that he does not know whether he is going to make any change or not. As to the ordnance, four or five batteries of improved guns would gobble up the whole of this amount, or next to it. But would it not be more satisfactory to the hon. gentleman's department, as it certainly would be more satisfactory to parliament and to Canada, for him not to insist on this amount being voted to-day, but to say, we may be under the necessity of calling on parliament at a future date to vote a large sum of money to change our rifles and our ordnance? Until the hon. gentleman has a policy, how can he expect any man in parliament to assume the responsibility before the electors whom he represents, of stating, we have voted $240,000 without knowing what we were voting it for? I for one am not prepared to take that responsibility. If I went before my electors and told them that I had voted $240,000 without knowing what it was voted for, they would say that I was not the man who should represent them in parliament. It is not a small amount of money; it is a large amount. Canada is prepared to contribute all that is required to place her forces in a good position; but it is not prepared to leave the hon. gentleman's staff and himself to experiment as to how $240,000 of Canadian money shall be expended, when he does not know that he will require even one dollar of that amount to change the armament which we have at the present moment. They want to build up the Canadian force, but of all the mistakes that could be perpetrated by the department over which my hon. friend presides, none could have a worse result than to lead the people of Canada to believe that that department is not conducted with the care and the prudence which its great importance requires; and if I am to be told that it indicates prudence on the part of the hon. minister to ask parliament to vote $240,000 without telling us what his policy is or how he intends spending the money, then I am unable to understand what prudence means.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Militia is prepared to call a halt in the improving of the defences of Canada. He desires that this government should determine that during the coming fiscal year no progress at all shall be made in that respect. I differ entirely from my hon. friend. I cannot expect him to have confidence in me, but I am surprised that he should have no confidence whatever in the gentlemen who so ably advised him in the Department of Militia during so many years, and who are still taking the same part in the administration of that department. Those gentlemen he now includes in the category of those who are entirely unworthy of the confidence of parliament.

Out of this vote we shall have to provide at least three batteries of artillery at a cost of not less than $50,000 per battery, to replace the three we sent to South Africa. Why should we be bound down to declare that we shall purchase a battery which the War Office in England may have at this moment but which may not be the most improved and desirable battery to purchase. Why should this government not be permitted to wait a few days or weeks in order to ascertain from the War Office what is the best up-to-date battery to purchase in replacement of those we sent to South Africa? That will take $150,000 out of the $240,000 and leave us $90,000, which we propose to expend in the purchase of the best pattern of rifles adopted by the War Office in England, and which we propose to furnish to the various rifle clubs of Canada that may be organized in the future. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to dissent from that policy?

This $240,000 is the balance of the vote of $3,000,000, agreed to by parliament so long ago as 1896. Is the hon. gentleman not able to give us sufficient of his confidence to suppose that those who are at the head of the militia service in Ottawa will be anxious to give me all the assistance they can in deciding on the best kind of rifle to purchase. I cannot understand why the ex-Minister of Militia should desire to pin us down to a statement of what particular kind of battery and rifle we should purchase and not leave us liberty to purchase the most improved arms obtainable. I should think that he ought to be willing to accept as a guarantee my promise that we will only make purchases after we have taken the advice of the War Office in England.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister says that this amount is the balance of a vote agreed to by parliament four years ago. Does that not prove the wisdom of our asking explicit information now? If the department has had four years to consider, and its experts have had four years to determine, what is the best kind of weapon, surely the hon. gentleman ought to be able to give the House now the conclusion they have come to. It is one of the fundamental principles of government that no money should be voted at all until explanations are given. But the hon. gentleman has told us that he cannot yet determine what is the best arm to purchase. But in view of the fact that we not only had the experience of these four years but have had the experience of the war in South Africa, I fail to understand his inability to come to a decision. It has not been proven that the arms with which our infantry were supplied were inferior to those used by the Boers in the South African war. I have understood from reading the reports that the artillery, perhaps, was not equal to what the Boers had; but I did not understand that with regard to the infantry arms. At any rate, our experts have been determining, in the meantime, what are the best arms for our troops. Are we to discard what we have already got and get something else? This is information that the House is entitled to, and information that we must have if we are not simply to go it blind. The hon. member says that we need this to provide three batteries of artillery; if so, he should be able to tell us what kind of battery he is going to provide. Some hon. gentlemen opposite are laughing. I do not know whether that is against what I have been saying or something else, but I would respectfully submit that what I am saying is entitled to fair consideration.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What do you mean?

Mr. SPROULE. I mean exactly what I say—that if the minister is going to buy three batteries of artillery, he should be able to say what kind he is going to invest in.

Mr. DOMVILLE. He means guns.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not talking to the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville).

Mr. DOMVILLE. I was trying to explain that he is not going to buy batteries but guns.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) will permit me—I am not talking to him now. I am entitled to this information from another source.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. A twelve pounder is the lightest battery we sent to South Africa.

Mr. SPROULE. That gives a portion of the information, but the hon. minister should give us a great deal more. As to the rifles, I submit it has not been shown that those supplied to our troops are inferior to those supplied to the Boers. If they are, what is to take their place? Surely our experts, in four years, have been able to determine; and if so, we ought to have the information. It will not be long before the next session of parliament, and no great harm can come if this money is not voted but left to be proposed next session, when the minister is able to give us information which he is not able to give at present.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) need not have been so severe on my attempt to enlighten him. He talks so much that it can hardly be expected that he will be accurate on every question. To us it is a little complicated, when he mixes Mausers and rifles and Morris tubes with batteries.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not speak of Mausers. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) puts words in my mouth that I did not use.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Then, the hon. gentleman should have done so. In criticising the Minister of Militia he should convey some information and not speak of things he does not understand. I admire the hon. member for East Grey, because he does not lose an occasion to talk. In committee I see friends of his own anxious to have him keep quiet. But the hon. gentleman evidently feels that he must have his money's worth, that he must have his name on every page of Hansard. In the kindness of my heart I wanted to explain to him that batteries were cannon. But he did not understand that. If he would ask the Minister of Militia what is the initial velocity of a given cannon, what its trajectory is, the hon. minister would give him the information. But, how can any one attempt to answer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) on a subject like this which he does not grasp? When the hon. gentleman talks of rifles, the minister may fairly say: I cannot tell you at the moment what we are to get. We are not going it blind, as hon. gentlemen opposite did when they left to General Gascoigne to bring in rifles, and the thing was done in such a hurry that it has never been settled yet who got the 5 per cent commission—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am entirely within the rules of order. It has never been proven who got that 5 per cent commission. The rifles were bought in such undue haste that they did not take the trouble to have them properly sighted. Naturally, the hon. member for East Grey is anxious that the Minister of Militia should not fall into the same mistake. I am not prepared to say what the hon. gentleman says is not somewhat to the point. He is a guardian of the purse. The people of Canada do not look to myself and other gentlemen on this side, but to him as leader of the opposition—or expecting to be leader of the opposition; for we know that change and decay are going on, that people pass away, and the time will come when his constituents will press his claims to that high position. They will be able to say that the hon. gentleman was the one who did the work. They will say: Take Hansard—six volumes in one session, and on every page you see ‘Sproule,’ ‘Sproule’—like ‘Castoria’ on the wall. They say that children cry for Castoria, and no doubt the hon. gentleman looks for the time when the whole country will cry for him.

Mr. PRIOR. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) a question? He stated that he does not know who got the 5 per cent. What 5 per cent does he refer to?

Mr. DOMVILLE. The 5 per cent that was debated in this House, that was charged in England on this purchase of guns, of which no explanation was ever given. Am I correct or not?

Mr. BERGERON. No. What is it?

Mr. DOMVILLE. We will make that the subject of discussion a little later, if hon. gentlemen opposite wish. They can go to Hansard and see the whole story. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) sat in the House at that time and ought to know more about it than I do.

Mr. BERGERON. I have never heard of it before.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Oh, yes; you have. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) has heard of more commissions than that too.

Mr. PRIOR. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) explain later on what he means by that 5 per cent?

Mr. DOMVILLE. Do you want to know the item I am talking about?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes.

Mr. DOMVILLE. You are the item I am talking about.

Mr. PRIOR. Surely I am worth more than 5 per cent?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am sorry I did not catch what the hon. gentleman said, however, let that pass. There is a disposition here to criticise the Militia Department unfairly. When we have controversies as to the Mauser and other rifles, as to the 12-pounder guns, and guns of position, these things cannot be decided out of hand. It is a question whether the artillery will not have to take to guns of position. Instead of going into action with a lot of guns which have been proved to be effective, they are found to be useless, because the army who is first in position would not let an enemy come within three or four thousand yards. I think the minister is quite fair in his statement. He says if these loyal gentlemen are sincere, let them show it. We heard a great deal of the loyalty cry some time ago, but that seems to have blown over to a considerable extent because people do not take quite so much stock in it. But it is fair, seeing that Canada is willing to contribute her share towards the defence of the British Empire, that the minister should say that we should be up to time. When you ask a minister here, a member of the Canadian government, not having before him the data upon which to pronounce which is the best gun to be adopted, and when he tells you to provide the money which will enable him to be ready when the occasion arises, which may be before the next parliament, you turn round and say: Is it the Mauser or is it the Remington? That is something that he cannot tell you, because the British government themselves cannot tell. Supposing that we should have trouble in consequence of this war in China, we cannot tell what is going to turn up after parliament prorogues, and suppose the minister finds himself compelled to send 15,000 men to support Great Britain, then you will charge him with negligence, and say: Why did you not provide the best guns for these men before sending them away with obsolete weapons? Why did not you look ahead and provide the money? That is what the hon. gentlemen opposite would say to him. I think the criticism is very unfair. I do think that at this late period of the session those gentlemen who know so little about the subject should keep silent and let some one talk who has some experience. Let us, if possible, shorten up the session and get away to our homes.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat was not here in 1896; but to those of us who were here this is a very interesting discussion. We have heard of rifles before. In 1896 when the Conservative government wanted to give to our militia what was looked upon as a modern arm they were severely criticised by the then opposition. Those who were then in opposition are now talking in just the contrary way to the way they talked then. At that time my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Foster) was representing the Minister of Militia and Defence who occupied a seat in the other House, and he was asking for $3,000,000 to pay for rifles. It was not understood then that more than $1,000,000 would be spent. What were the criticisms made by hon. gentlemen opposite on that proposition? I propose to make only a few quotations from the many speeches made on that occasion. A gentleman who occupies a very high position in this House spoke upon that subject; and the House will see what a howl arose from the Liberal opposition against spending a cent of money for rifles. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) said:

There is one feature in connection with this vote which puzzles me. We have over and over again been told that in the event of a war taking place or Canada being invaded, we could rely on Great Britain's protection; and that the only ground for not severing the colonial tie was that, should international difficulties arise, we might rely on England's strong arm. Now, Sir, I am sorry to hear, under the circumstances, that the government, for the purpose of arming the Canadian militia, have made their purchases, not from private contractors, but from the War Office in Great Britain, and that we are now asked to foot the bills. Is that the protection we have been promised by Great Britain? Is that the position in which we stand as a colony? I think we are entitled to an altogether different treatment at the hands of Great Britain.

Later on he says:

I believe that our public debt is large enough without our Jingoës adding to it a few more millions for an unwarrantable expenditure. I do not think this expenditure was called for, under the circumstances, and I for one am strongly opposed to authorizing the money to pay for that expenditure.

That was the member for Rouville, at present Deputy Speaker of this House. Then there was the hon. member for Maskinonge (Mr. Légris), who was sleeping so soundly a few moments ago while all this discussion was going on. He also took the floor and said:

The course pursued by the government throughout this transaction is an utterly outrageous proceeding, and an insult offered to the House. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have been sitting here now four months; and for the first two months the ministers have kept us here idle, being at the time busy fighting among themselves; and now, in the dying moments of this parliament, when most members have gone home, we are asked to pass this appropriation, and vote the expenditure of millions, which perhaps the government stand in need of for electoral purposes. I fail to see anything else but the interest of the party exchequer in railroad-ing this measure and spending the millions they ask the House to vote, after they have been spent.

That was the opinion of the hon. member for Maskinonge. Later on he says:

I have no doubt that the voters who will be called upon to pronounce themselves within a few weeks will not hesitate in saying that the government have perpetrated another crime. It is quite true that there are so many crimes laid to the door of the present government that the hon. gentlemen are perhaps right in thinking that it matters little whether they go down to hell with a conscience more or less weighted with crime, but I say that such a way of dealing with parliament is an insult offered to the representatives of the people whom they feign to ignore.

The hon. member also said:

From what has been said on the floor of this House, I gather that the government have not been actuated by an earnest desire to serve the best interests of the country, but by that of filling the empty exchequer of the party in view of the election near at hand.

Now, there was another gentleman who spoke. They all got up. I remember, because I happened to be sitting in the chair which you (Mr. Ellis), so worthily occupy now. The hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Bruneau) also spoke as follows:

This expenditure is altogether uncalled-for on this further ground—and I beg to say so before this House and the country with all the Chauvinism of which I am a fervent adept, and in spite of the loyalty professed by the French Canadian people for Great Britain, a loyalty evinced now, as in the past, by their readiness to shed their blood and expend their money for the defence of the country—but I say the people of our country are unwilling to incur such expenditures to fight the battles of England. But we are told: We have bought those rifles, the honour of Canada is pledged, and we have to foot the bill. We have bought $2,000,000 worth of rifles, and the government only ask of us a vote of $1,000,000. Another ground upon which I object to this expenditure is the lack of information as to what they intend to do with the money and as to the purpose to which it shall be applied.

The very case we have now in hand. He says:

Well, the country is surely entitled to inquire, on the eve of general elections, whether the government are in earnest when they come down and ask the House, in the public interest, that vote of money. I, for one, do not believe that they are in earnest. They are so reckless, so extravagant, as evinced by the facts I have just alluded to, that we are warranted in believing that the hon. gentlemen are going to appropriate a certain amount of that vote to meet the exigencies of the electoral campaign which will soon be in full swing throughout the country.

You would imagine that this was said to-night. What did we hear on the hustings? As I said before, this is a picture of before and after. The hon. gentlemen opposite were here then. After the government of Canada at that time had come down, and asked for a grant of money with which to purchase modern rifles to put into the hands of the militia force of Canada, the hon. member for St. James Division, Montreal, (Mr. Desmarais), made a speech at St. Laurent, in Jacques Cartier. What did he say? This will give the committee an idea of the kind of electoral fight that we have to sustain in Quebec. That is what we had to encounter in the past, and probably we may have to meet it in the future, although we are on different sides now. That hon. gentleman said: What did we see in parliament last session? The government of Canada, led by an English Protestant, coming to parliament, and asking for a vote of $3,000,000 to buy rifles for the young Canadians. And you, ladies—addressing some ladies at the back—who have taken so much care of your sons, who have educated them, and have given them your love, have made a great mistake, because if the Protestant Tupper remains in power, these boys will have rifles put in their hands, and they will be sent to South Africa to fight the wars of the British Empire. The women commenced to cry. It was a very sad night, but the hon. member for St. James Division, said: Do not cry; I have a remedy for you. Put out the Protestant Tupper, and put in his place the Catholic French Canadian Laurier, and your children will not have to go and fight in South Africa for the British Empire. That is the fight we have to meet in Quebec. That was after the Conservative government had asked for millions to buy rifles for the Canadian militia, as we felt it our duty to put into the hands of the militiamen of Canada, the best possible arm we could find. I may say, en passant, that these rifles were paid for by hon. gentlemen opposite to-day. Two years ago, I found $100,000 in the estimates, and when I asked the hon. Minister of Militia what this meant, he said, laughing: Well, we have received the guns, and we are bound to pay for them. I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite to recall the time when they were in opposition, and to say if we are not entitled to some details in regard to this vote. The House of Commons, and the people of this country, when asked to vote $240,000, are entitled to ask the hon. Minister of Militia what he intends to do with the money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has given the information.

Mr. FOSTER. He gave simply nothing.

Mr. BERGERON. Surely the hon. Minister of Militia, with all our friendship for him for many years, will not expect the House of Commons or the people of Canada to accept his ipse dixit and vote this money after what we have heard about the emergency ration which is now before a committee of the House. The hon. gentleman is perhaps as honest as can be, but he was played by a contractor to the tune of $1.70 per pound for an emergency ration, and I say, in view of all these circumstances, the House and the people are entitled to know every possible detail as to what he is going to do with the money before we give him this $240,000. Our position is a great deal better to-day than the one taken by hon. gentlemen, when they were in opposition. They were then fighting against the vote proposed at that time, without any possible reason, while, now, we are simply asking for details which is a most reasonable request. We want to know what the hon. gentleman proposes to do with the money before we vote $240,000. I say to my hon. friend, as a friend, that it would be better for him to give us every possible detail. This side of the House, which I may say does not represent the spirit of chauvanism, will grant the money he wants, if he puts us in a position to go before our electors and give them every possible detail that they may ask of us, in regard to this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Any purchases which will be made, will be made through the War Office, and after due inspection by the War Office. We propose to buy three batteries of artillery at a cost of $50,000 per battery, making $150,000, and leaving $90,000 to be invested in rifles, all of which will be purchased through the War Office, and after due inspection by the War Office. That is all the assurance I can give the hon. gentleman, and it seems to me that it ought to be sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. That is some progress made. We see now that $150,000 of this money is to go in pursuance of the policy which was laid down in 1896, and which has been consistently carried out since, towards furnishing large armaments for the purpose of the Canadian militia.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Field batteries.

Mr. FOSTER. We are perfectly willing to let it go at that, and then we will trust the government to get the very best field artillery that can be got. That is fair and reasonable, but the hon. minister has startled the people of Canada with the statement which he has made to-night. The people of Canada have paid upwards of $2,000,000, and they have paid it cheerfully, to arm their militiamen with the best rifle which could be given them by the War Office at home.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At that time.

Mr. FOSTER. At that time, and up to the present time there has not been a single whisper in British Army circles, and there has not been in this Dominion of Canada, against that arm. The arm is the arm with which the British soldier, who is fighting to-day, be it in China or Africa, is armed, the Lee-Enfield. It is the arm that was recommended to us by the British government, it is the arm that they themselves had been using, and our Canadian Minister of Militia, after we have made this expenditure, after we have come to the settled conviction that we have put into the hands of our volunteers the best approved modern rifle, calmly gets up and knocks down the whole edifice of security, by the declaration that in his opinion it is not the best rifle.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister must allow us to use our own ears. He himself stated, in reply to a challenge of mine, that for himself, he believed it was not the best rifle. If it is the best rifle, what justification is there for the hon. gentleman taking a vote for a rifle to supersede it? If we have a sufficient number of these rifles, does he wish to supplement the supply? But, he made the statement that it was not the best rifle and he wanted this money, because, in these trying and quickly moving times, there might be, and I suppose the hon. gentleman, to be consistent, would say that there was something about to be fulfilled which would be better than the Lee-Enfield which he proposed to substitute for the Lee-Enfield. Whatever confidence we might give to the hon. gentleman, he must not ask us to be too generous in that respect, because we are not quite yet in the position, by our vote or silence here, to condemn the rifle of the British government and of our own troops, and put into the hon. gentleman's hands a vote of $90,000 to get a rifle which he does not give even the name of. What is this rifle that is better? It is no state secret. If there is a better rifle who uses it, and who recommends it? The hon. gentleman says we must follow the War Office. That is well. But we have followed the British War Office, and it is the British War Office that has recommended the present rifle for the use of our volunteers. If there is a better rifle not yet evolved into practice, then this vote of $90,000 is not needed, because the new rifle cannot be made practical before we or other representatives of the people will be here, and Canada may be relied upon to profit by any experience in that direction.

Mr. SPROULE. If we knew that the British War Office were arming the British troops with a new rifle there might be some reason for us to follow their example, but we have no information of that kind whatever. Our men are armed with the same rifle as the British soldiers, and the only possible reason for this vote would be to buy more of those rifles. The hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Domville) took exception to what I said. I thought that the hon. gentleman, being an old military man would understand when I spoke on military subjects. I did not suppose it was necessary to treat him with diluted milk food, suitable for babes and sucklings, but after I heard him mixing up military matters with Castoria in the same breath, I could not help thinking that a good dose of Castoria would restore him to that equilibrium which would enable him to give some intelligent information to the House. Even if the Minister of Militia does act on the advice of the British War Office, he should give the information we ask before the money is voted. There may be justification for buying three more batteries, because our present batteries are on foreign service, and it is probably the part of wisdom to keep up our artillery standard. However, the balance of the vote ought not to be passed by this House until we get some reasonable information as to what is to be done with it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Every one is agreed that of the $240,000, a sum of $150,000 should be appropriated.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minister of Militia explained that $150,000 was required for three batteries which would be purchased under the sanction of the War Office, and now after an hour's discussion every one agrees that that is right. The sum of $90,000 is required for the purchase of extra rifles which would buy four or five thousand. The Minister of Militia did not say that we were going to purchase a new rifle, but he said that possibly some improvements might be suggested by the War Office upon the existing rifle.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, my goodness.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and I heard the Minister of Militia repeat several times that whatever rifle is purchased will be purchased under the direction of the War Office.

Mr. FOSTER. Why crowd things down our throats which we know are not true.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Did the Minister of Militia state that whatever rifle was purchased would be purchased on the advice of the War Office?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; but he said the present one was defective.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understood the Minister of Militia to say that probably the experience gained in South Africa, would result in an improvement of the present rifle, and if the War Office should recommend an improvement that he would consider the propriety of making it. The simple question before us is, whether the Militia Department shall be entrusted with a sufficient sum of money to purchase four or five thousand rifles as a reserve, and I do not think there is a man in the House who under prevailing circumstances will oppose that. The assurance given by the hon. minister that no purchase will be made except under the supervision of the War Office ought to be sufficient.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What does the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies) think of the suggestion which he admits the Minister of Militia did make? Every person knows that only recently Canada went to great expense to arm the militia with the most improved rifle that could be found in the world. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows that only the other day a despatch from Mr. Chamberlain to the government of Canada stated that one of the requisites for colonial volunteers going to South Africa was that they should be armed with the precise rifle that Canada is using now. No suggestion has come from any military authority as to any deficiency in our present rifle, or as to any room for improvement, and I want to know what the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) thinks of the Minister of Militia standing up in this House and suggesting that this money is not to be expended for purchasing an additional number of Lee-Enfields, which are certified by Her Majesty's government to be the best weapon known, but that it is to be used for the purchase of another kind of rifle. What does the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) think of such a suggestion being made by the Minister of Militia of Canada?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understood the Minister of Militia to say that if he was so advised by the War Office, he would purchase the Lee-Enfield rifle we now have, but if on the contrary the experience in the South Africa war, induced the War Office to make an improvement upon it, he would consider the propriety of purchasing the improved rifle.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. To come back to the point I ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) what he thinks of the Minister of Militia of Canada starting an idea of that kind? I cannot imagine an act of great folly than for the Canadian Minister of Militia to pretend that there is any defect in the arm that is accepted by the British government as the very best in the world. It is worse than puerile; it is an act of supreme folly for a minister to ask this House to vote such a palpable absurdity as that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is an act of supreme folly, is it, for the Minister of Militia to admit that the War Office of Great Britain is not absolutely perfect? If it is, then I at once agree that I am guilty of an act of folly. I would recommend the hon. gentleman to read the articles in the Army and Navy Gazette, in the Nineteenth Century, in the Contemporary Review, in Blackwood's Magazine, in all the leading reviews of Great Britain, and learn something about a question which he evidently knows nothing whatever about. He will learn that articles contributed by eminent British officers to those British magazines and military reviews, indicate clearly a belief that Great Britain does not to-day possess either the best rifle or the best cannon extant. Is there any crime in that? I am simply stating what any hon. gentleman in this House can inform himself of if he takes the trouble that I have taken to read the current literature of to-day; and I supplement that statement by this further statement that I, as the custodian for the time being of the interests of the people of this country, so far as the Militia Department is concerned, promised them that I would not spend any more of their money in purchasing ordnance or rifles until I was satisfied that I was purchasing the very best that the world could afford. If I am guilty of a crime in making a statement of that kind, then brand me and punish me for so doing. I believe I am conserving the best interests of the people of this country in making the statement which I have made, which is only in accordance with the statements made by many of the most brilliant officers of the British army in the leading periodicals of Great Britain.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Now we are beginning to understand what the hon. gentleman means. The hon. gentleman has discovered, by the perusal of the military periodicals and various journals which he has named as very high authorities, that the British War Office does not know what it is about; and yet he tells this House that he is going to be guided by that same War Office. Will he tell us what he means? He is satisfied that the reason the War Office is attacked in these various periodicals is that it has shown such utter incompetence to manage its business that it has not got the proper rifles and guns; and yet, five minutes before, the hon. gentleman tells us that he intends to follow that same ignorant War Office which is held up to the ridicule of the world as being altogether behind the times, in not possessing the arms necessary to maintain the prestige of the empire.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The people of England should thank God that the hon. gentleman is not at the head of the War Office. The War Office is capable of learning; the hon. gentleman is incapable of learning. Perhaps we should not find fault with the hon. gentleman at this time of day. We have evidence that the War Office of Great Britain has learned something since the inception of the war in South Africa. What I propose to this committee is, that we should wait until the War Office has completed its investigation of the matters to which we are now referring, and that we should take the full benefit of their conclusions, as the government propose to do, before investing the money which we are now asking this parliament to vote. That is all I ask. I have indicated to this committee what we propose to purchase—three batteries of artillery, the balance of the money to be invested in the most up-to-date rifle, as recommended by the War Office at the date when we are prepared to purchase. Surely that proposal will commend itself not only to this committee, but to the people of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another point to be settled. The minister has gone now very far. He has been thoroughly emphatic, what he wants the $90,000 for is not to buy Lee-Enfields. If the minister knows anything about the rifle he intends to buy, let him tell the House something about it. He has stated positively that what he proposes to do with the $90,000 is to buy a rifle to replace the Lee-Enfields.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there is no meaning in what the minister says. He condemns the Lee-Enfields.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. He said it was not perfection.

Mr. FOSTER. He says any man who reads the reviews will come to the same conclusion that he has, that the Lee-Enfield is not the approved rifle. Then he proposes to topple down the whole edifice which we have built, and take away from our people their confidence in the armament which the British government have given to us and to its soldiers everywhere, and introduce in its place—what? Something he knows nothing about, something he gives us no inkling of. What is this other rifle which he thinks an improvement on the Lee-Enfield?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman cannot be serious in the objection he takes. I fail to see where there is any substantial difference between the two sides. I suppose the fair presumption is, notwithstanding what has been said, that the Lee-Enfield is a good weapon. We all think so: and, beyond the expression of some passing opinion, I suppose we shall continue to think so until some competent authority decides otherwise. But suppose the Minister of Militia signs his order for 4,000 or 5,000 rifles, and suppose, as a result of recent experience, the British War Office should say that in their judgment there is some improvement on the Lee-Enfield, should it be the policy of Canada to use the inferior weapon, or should we get the best? That is the whole question in a nutshell. The minister has simply said that he is following the policy of the past, but if, as a result of the war in South Africa, any improvement is discovered either as respects the guns for artillery or the rifles, then that weapon which the War Office decides to be the best is the one he intends to obtain for the militia of Canada. Surely there can be no objection to such a position as that.

Mr. FOSTER. How many Lee-Enfields have we in Canada?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. 40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. And we have 35,000 troops. The minister has sufficient to arm the whole militia and 5,000 to spare.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, we sent 3,000 or 4,000 to South Africa.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman want the $90,000 for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. For the rifle clubs and rifle leagues throughout the country.

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. gentleman has $5,000 already.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We sent about 4,000 of them to South Africa.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman not expect them to come back?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We do not know. They are not here now.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has 40,000 Lee-Enfields, which is the arm of to-day. He does not need $90,000 to supply the Lee-Enfields he may want to use for the gun and rifle clubs.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That will only give you 5,000 guns.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose it does, the hon. gentleman has now more than sufficient Lee-Enfields for the militia, and he has told us that that is an unsafe gun. He should give some information as to what rifle he intends to purchase in its place.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think that my hon. friend is very unfair. I hope that the Lee-Metford or the Lee-Enfield is the best rifle in the world, but there are important British officers who say it is not. I simply expressed the view which has been stated by prominent men in the British army, namely, that the Lee-Enfield is not the best rifle, and supposing we purchase 4,000 or 5,000 rifles we will still not have enough to meet the requirements of the country. If we are to carry out the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition and prominent military men on both sides, and issue rifles to rifle clubs, we will require more rifles than we have now, and the 4,000 or 5,000 included in this vote will still be less than we require.

For purchase of land for rifle ranges.... $75,000

Mr. PRIOR. At six o'clock I said I wanted to say a few words in regard to a matter pertaining to the defences of Esquimalt. I want to draw the attention of the hon. minister to some claims that have for years been before his department. Some five years ago, when the Conservatives were in power, certain gentlemen put in claims for damages to land, which they considered had deteriorated in value owing to the fact that forts had been built at Macaulay Point. The matter was referred to the Department of Justice, and that department gave the opinion that the owners of land at Macaulay Point had a claim against the government. The late government then paid two or three claimants a certain sum in compensation for the loss they had sustained. The consequence was that some fourteen or fifteen owners of property in that vicinity subsequently put in their claims against the government. For several years I have been asking the present Minister of Militia and Defence to take these claims into consideration. He referred me to one department and the other, and finally, when I put him the question in the House, he said that the claims could not be considered. It seems to me that when the Department of Justice determined that the two or three gentlemen who had put in their claims under the late government were entitled to compensation, the other claimants possessed an equal right. The Militia Department, under the late government, referred the matter to its agent, Major Jones, and if the hon. gentleman will look at the correspondence between that gentleman and the department he will see that Major Jones said he did not like to give an opinion, because if he gave it in favour of one party he would have to give it in favour of some twenty-five others. But be that as it may, the Justice Department decided that the two or three, who had filed their claims, were entitled to compensation, and that being the case, the others, who were equally injured, have an equally valid claim. If the Minister of Militia and Defence thinks they have not, I would ask him to allow those claimants to bring their case before the Exchequer Court. That will be satisfactory to me and to those gentlemen who are making the claims.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I wish to say to my hon. friend that it is unfortunate for his friends—

Mr. PRIOR. They are not all friends of mine.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is unfortunate for them that their claims were not settled by the late government when settling the claims of the other two parties.

Mr. PRIOR. Those claims were not put in.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then my hon. friend is not to blame. I congratulate the gentlemen, whose claims he advocates, on the powerful advocacy of my hon. friend. He has been most persistent in season and out of season. There can certainly be no objection to these claimants, to whom my hon. friend refers, referring their claims in the usual way to the department through the Department of Justice, and I shall be happy to see that they get every opportunity of putting their claims forward and receiving the consideration to which they are entitled.

Mr. PRIOR.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. minister knows that these claims have been before his department for more than a year. Will he allow the parties to state a case before the Exchequer Court?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly, I could not possibly object to that. But it is for the law officers of the Crown to decide as to whether they have a claim or not. So far as I am concerned, I shall be happy to expedite the preferment of any claim of that kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will now take up the estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals. The minister (Mr Blair) proposes to make a general statement before taking up the details.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to Capital—Lachine Canal, to build a quadrant pontoon gate ..... $20,000

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). Before the hon. minister (Mr. Blair) makes his statement, I desire to make a correction of a statement I made. I would have made it before, but I was not in the House when any of the railway estimates were under consideration. I made a statement some time ago with reference to the St. John wharf, which statement I made on information furnished to me which I had good reason to believe to be correct. This statement I had already made in the House last session. I have had several letters since from correspondents in St. John, and I find from the tenor of these letters that I was entirely mistaken. I wish to take the earliest opportunity of correcting my statement. I had a letter on the subject from Mr. McLeod, who is, I believe, a judge in St. John. He wrote me a letter explaining the whole facts, and offered to support his statement with affidavits—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) pardon me? I would like him, if he will, to state what was the particular statement made to the House which he wishes to correct.

Mr. HAGGART. It was a statement I made that the amount that was awarded for the wharf was greatly in excess of the amount that I had heard the property had been offered for to private individuals. Here is the letter of Mr. McLeod:

Ottawa, Ont., May 18, 1900.

Dear Mr. Haggart,—In reference to the Long wharf property, so-called, and about which I have written you, I desire to make the following statement:

The facts are these: As I said to you, we never offered the property for less than $100,000. We did offer it to the government for $100,000, but they, instead of immediately accepting our offer, filed plans and expropriated the property, and for greater security to themselves as to the value, appointed valuers. The valuers were good men and leading citizens and well qualified to express an opinion on the question. Leading men of the city on both sides of politics were called as witnesses, such men as W. H. Thorne, E. C. Jones, manager of the Bank of Montreal for over twenty years; D. W. Clark, a well-known wharf-builder, who did a large part of the work on the wharf; and H. D. Troop, of the firm of Troop & Sons, and other well-known and leading Conservatives; George McAvity, of the firm of McAvity & Sons; A. Chipman Smith, who has charge of all public works in the city of St. John, and the late W. W. Turnbull, one of the largest property owners in St. John, the latter of whom are all well-known Liberals, and a large number of other witnesses. The lowest valuation by any witness was $125,000, and the highest over $200,000. We also gave a statement of the rentals then received, showing that we then received a net rental of over $5,000, and the additional rentals which we could receive, and in that connection called the agent of the Dominion Atlantic Railway, which company, as I wrote you, were at the time paying us $2,400 a year for one berth, and the agent stated that there was an agreement to take the other berth just completed, for which they were to pay an additional rental of $1,600.

We claim that the government, having left the matter to arbitration, should pay the amount awarded, that is, the property having been taken, we should get what independent men have said it was actually worth.

We purchased the property at auction about the year 1888, when it was sold by the mortgagee paying for it $25,000. It was then practically a non-producing property, but we made large improvements on it and entirely changed it, and made it, as I have said, a revenue-producing property, spending on it for improvements over $30,000. We never offered it for $25,000, and as I have said, never offered it for less than $100,000. We think, however, that as the government, instead of accepting the offer, fairly enough named valuers to ascertain the value, who took great pains and called, as I have said, a large number of independent witnesses, we should have the value fixed by them. If they had found the value less than $100,000, we should have been obliged to take it, and we think the rule should work both ways.

I have no doubt that if the valuers had not been aware of our offer to the government, we would have got a much larger award. I repeat that I know you have no desire to do us any injustice, and I therefore trust that you will make this correction.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) E. McLEOD.

Hon. John Haggart, M.P.,
Ottawa.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) remember precisely the sum that he stated the property had been offered for?

Mr. HAGGART. I think I stated that it had been offered for $25,000, and that the party who owned the property had a great deal of difficulty in getting an offer even for that amount.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will perhaps remember that he, at the same time, stated that the reason why a very much increased amount had been secured was that they had employed my son as solicitor in the matter.

Mr. HAGGART. The information I got at the time was that the department was defended by the hon. minister's son as solicitor. I have never made inquiries on that point since.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I stated at the time, and I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) to accept my statement, that my son was not employed, so far as I knew.

Mr. HAGGART. I would have accepted any denial of that kind from the hon. minister at once. But he said that his son was full-grown, and he did not know whether he was employed or not—had no information on the subject.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; I stated that, so far as I had knowledge of the transaction, my son had no connection with the business, but that if he had had I thought I should have known it. I think the hon. gentleman will find that in Hansard. I stated I was quite confident that my son had no connection with the matter or I should have been aware of it.

Mr. HAGGART. No; I think if the hon. minister will refer to Hansard I think he will find I am correct in the statement I have made. There was no denial in the form in which the hon. minister now puts it. However, I wished to make the statement I have made, that from the information I have received. I have no reason to doubt the statement made by Mr. McLeod, and I wish to take the first opportunity of correcting my previous statement.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE. I happened to be acting Minister of Railways and Canals when this transaction took place, and, in reality, had more to do with the purchase of the property than the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). No doubt, so far as Mr. McLeod's letter goes, it is correct; but I think it right to say, in reference to the government's position, that that letter does not state the whole circumstance of the purchase. That is all I care to say now.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not propose to ask the attention of the committee at this moment to this particular item, but I do propose to take this occasion to present—

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that it would be more in order, if my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) will allow me, for the chairman to read an item for the Intercolonial Railway. I understand it is on that subject the minister wishes to speak.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not confining my remarks to the Intercolonial Railway. I propose to make a statement, with the permission of the committee, which will have reference not only to the subject of government railroads, but also—although more briefly—to the general subject of the canals. I presume that in this I am making something of a departure from the course that is usually taken. I think it is desirable that the committee should be put in possession of a general outline of the transactions of this government in connection with the railway system rather than to trust to the opportunities which are afforded by a discussion of the items in detail. That is by no means a convenient method of putting in a condensed form such information as I desire to convey to the committee. The committee are aware that under my departmental jurisdiction there are the two great property interests of the country, the canal and the railway interests. I mention the canal interest first, because the canals are in a sense the larger interest, having occasioned the expenditure of a much larger amount of money, and therefore that may be regarded as the larger property of the Dominion.

Now there has always been a marked distinction, in my opinion, between the manner in which parliament has treated proposals for expenditure upon the canals of the country and upon the railways of the country. When the House is asked to vote a sum of money towards the further construction of the canals, I find that there is on all sides a ready disposition to grant the application. Parliament seems liberal and most generous in the readiness with which it accedes to these demands, no matter how large a sum may be asked for. On the other hand, when we are invited to consider grants in respect of the government railways, parliament at once becomes critical, becomes I might almost say parsimonious, and less disposed at all events to exhibit the same spirit of generosity which it invariably displays with respect to canal expenditure. Now there are reasons for this, and I shall take occasion to make a comment or two upon what I believe to be these reasons. First, however, I wish to call attention to the general subject of the canals. The total expenditure in respect to the canals I presume is carried in the recollection of most members of the committee; but I think it will be convenient to give a short statement showing the financial aspect of the question.

We have a mileage from Sault Ste Marie to Lachine of about 1,000 miles of waterway, including the canals and the river system which is called the St. Lawrence system. The expenditure on this system down to April 1, 1900, is very close to $80,000,000; to be strictly accurate, the expenditure in respect to canals generally has amounted to $77,749,586. In addition to that expenditure already made we are contemplating to provide for the laying out of a further sum in respect of the Trent Valley canal, all of which will, when completed, exceed the sum of $6,000,000, and will bring the total up to $85,000,000 or $86,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. For construction alone?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. For construction alone, original construction and enlargement. This last mentioned capital expenditure yet to be made is upon the following canals, namely:

Sault Ste. Marie.....	$1,050,000
Welland Canal .....	1,270,000

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Does that total include the Ottawa River canals?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not include the Grenville and Carillon, the St. Louis and St. Peter's.

Mr. REID. Has the minister an estimate of the total amount it is intended to expend on the Galops Rapids?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amount we propose to expend between the North Channel and the Galops Rapids jointly is $510,000. The amount upon the Galop Rapids will not be very large, because we do not propose to do anything more than remove the obstruction in the rapids. But I would ask my hon. friend if he would kindly not interrupt me until I have finished making this branch of my statement. The amount which we have now voted for canals and which we have not yet expended is $1,327,000; the amount to be paid the present session and asked for in the main estimates, is $2,311,500; the amount to be later provided for will run up to $6,614,000; aggregating the total which I have already stated. It will be convenient, and probably the information would be desired, to state what the canal system has really cost us since its inception; and I will subdivide these items into two distinct periods. The amount expended in addition to this capital expenditure which I have mentioned on consolidated revenue account, from 1868 to 1899 inclusive, is $15,533,867.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that include operating expenses?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That includes all on consolidated revenue account. From 1868 to 1881 inclusive the revenue from canals exceeded the expenditure. The expenditure upon consolidated account, in round figures, was $902,000; or, for the fourteen years within the dates I have mentioned, an average of $64,000 per year. Taking next the period from 1882 to 1899 the showing is entirely different. The expenditures on consolidated revenue account for maintenance, operation and repairs for these eighteen years, total $4,356,000, or an average per year of $240,000. The deficit attributable to the maintenance and operation of canals for the past eighteen years, from 1882 to 1899, has averaged, you will observe, a very large sum indeed. The deficit seems to have been growing from 1882 up to 1892. From 1882 to 1892 it increased from $142,000 to $394,000 per year, varying from year to year, the two sums I have named being the lowest and highest deficits during that period. It has somewhat diminished since that time, and last year the deficit upon maintenance account in connection with the canals, I think, did not exceed $196,000. Now, the committee will see, therefore, that the question of the expenditure, in the first instance, upon this canal system, and the question of the operation and maintenance of this canal system, is a very large financial question indeed, and yet, I am not going to say, or to suggest, that this expenditure is unreasonable in any respect nor have I any disposition to criticise it. There is no disposition throughout the country to criticise it. The people appear to be ready and willing to pay whatever they are asked to pay in order to meet these outlays, and they do it with the most cheerful readiness, because these expenditures are in connection with the canals. But when it comes to the question of the expenditure upon the great railway system of the country—I speak of the railway system which belongs to the government, the Intercolonial Railway—I have discovered, after very close observation a very different disposition on the part of parliament. Every dollar that is being asked for is criticised in the closest manner. I do not complain of the criticism, but the disposition and spirit in which requests for money for these two purposes are met are very different. I think there ought to be as ready a disposition on the part of parliament to maintain its railway system in a proper and efficient manner, and to put it on as good a footing as the railways owned and operated by private railway companies in the country, as there is to put its canal system on a proper footing. It is true that the canal system traverses one section of the country, and that the railway system traverses another. But I would call the attention of the committee to a consideration which ought to lead the minds of members of parliament to regard both services in an equally favourable light. I think if hon. gentlemen would reflect upon the way in which the Intercolonial Railway came into the possession of the government and the important place that it occupies in the country there would be a disposition on the part of the government to deal as generously with it as it deals with the canal system. It traverses a section of the country, not so populous or influential as the portion traversed by the canal system, but still an important section of the country, which depends upon the proper maintenance and efficient operation of this railway, and in supplying that section of the country with means of transport this country is doing that which it engaged to do as a part of the confederation compact. Under these circumstances I think that parliament should consider these expenditures in the spirit in which I invite them to consider such expenditures. There should be no disposition at all to deal with them in a carping spirit. Let me now turn the attention of the committee to the question of railways. I am not going to do anything further than make a passing reference to the subject of the Prince Edward Island Railway. The Prince Edward Island Railway has never been operated successfully in the ordinary business sense; it has never succeeded in paying its operation expenses, and I think the fact that it has not done so is no discredit either to the management of the road nor to the country through which it travels. It is not connected with any great railway system. It is placed under a disadvantage which no other railway in the country is subjected to, and I think that the road has strong claims upon the consideration of parliament. I am sure that there will be no appeal which might be made at any time to this parliament in the interest of the Prince Edward Island Railway which would be treated in other than in a spirit of fairness and generosity. I think the island has a very strong title to the generous consideration of the country in respect to the railway which traverses it, and we have had no hesitation, so far as the government are concerned, in asking parliament to give us any sums which we felt were really necessary to extend the road, or to put it upon a more efficient footing, or to enable it to be operated more successfully.

But, I desire to turn the attention of the committee chiefly to the subject of the Intercolonial Railway. I want to ask. What have been the real causes of the difference in the spirit and disposition of parliament towards the Intercolonial Railway as compared with our canals? I do not think it would be as easy to say what the causes of this difference are as it would be to say what they are not. It is clearly not the case that parliament is unwilling to expend money for a purpose which appeals to its sympathies, or which appeals to its consideration. Evidence that it is not so influenced is abundantly shown by the readiness with which it has always voted money in aid of the canal system of the country. There are some reasons which I think do exist in the minds of the critics of the Intercolonial Railway. I think, in a measure, at all events, this distinction is attributable to the fact that the road runs through a less important portion of this Dominion than that traversed by the canals, less populous, less influential, and I think, further, that it is attributable, in a measure, to the fact that the people do not know the importance of the Intercolonial Railway. They do not know the extent to which it contributes to the business prosperity of the country, and even those parts of Canada which are interested in the canals, and which are ever ready to vote millions in order to extend, enlarge and improve the canals—know nothing at all or very little in regard to the business importance of the Intercolonial Railway and the extent to which that railway has added to the business of the older provinces and has increased the trade between the east and west. I think that if hon. gentlemen, when votes are invited in aid of this railway, were to stop to consider the conditions under which it became the property of the government of the country, if they were to stop to consider the effect of the construction of the railway upon the many business interests of the maritime provinces, if they were to stop to consider how important a contribution the Intercolonial Railway has made to the improvement of business and the extension of prosperity in the upper provinces, they would not be unwilling to treat that railway system with the same consideration that they extend to that with which they are more familiar, and which passes through their own section of the country. I said a moment ago that if hon. gentlemen would stop to reflect upon the condition under which this railway came to be the property of the country, came to be a government railway, their minds would be influenced by that, and by the fact that when the Intercolonial Railway was built it was built as one of the factors, and as one of the terms of the confederation between the provinces, and that if it had not been so agreed upon, if it had not been one of the terms of confederation, there would have been no confederation at all. In other words, the people of the maritime provinces, assuming to a greater degree, perhaps, than they were justified in doing, that there would be advantages derived from a railway connection by railway between those provinces and the provinces of Quebec and Ontario; imagining that they would reap material business advantages from that railway connection, they made it one of the conditions upon which they agreed to come into the union, and by coming into the union, they enabled the older provinces of Canada to escape from conditions which at the time were exceedingly unfavourable to their further development.

Mr. BLAIR.

As one of the terms of that compact, this road became a government railway, and it is entitled to ask the people of Canada to maintain it and to operate it—even though it should be operated at a loss—to maintain it and operate it as a government institution, as well as the means of the people of the country would enable it to be maintained.

Mr. HAGGART. Did the minister say that these provinces entered into confederation on terms unfavourable to their future development?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I made the statement that the people of the maritime provinces insisted upon the confederation assuming the construction and operation of the Intercolonial Railway as one of the terms of union. I believe they expected better results would accrue to them than did actually follow from the operation of that road. They expected they would find a ready market in this portion of Canada for the products of the maritime provinces; but what happened was that it enabled the perhaps more successful manufacturers of Quebec and Ontario, to displace, to some extent, the products of the maritime provinces. It opened up a new field for the extension of the business of Ontario and Quebec, and it placed the maritime manufacturers at a disadvantage, which they did not anticipate. I have never suggested, nor do I suggest now, that by reason of the operation of that railway, advantages have not accrued to the maritime provinces. But certainly these advantages were not to the same extent which the western provinces derived. I appeal to the members of the committee to consider the statement I am about to present, with reference to the past operation of the road and to its present prospects. I appeal to the committee to regard this question in no narrow spirit. I appeal to the House to remember, that even though this road should be maintained at an annual loss, it is for the people of Canada to furnish such means as may be required to fully equip that road, and to place it in the position of being a first-class railway. The country cannot afford to allow that railway to become inferior in any particular. The prestige and the good name of Canada are involved in making the Intercolonial Railway a railway which will compare favourably with any railway in the Dominion. I propose to give the House a statement of the operations of the railway extending over a period of some years.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). I do not wish to interrupt the minister, but I would like to know from him which portions of the road are paying and which are not? It might show that the maritime provinces are not responsible for the deficit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will make a reference to that later. At present I propose to ask the committee to glance at what has been the past history of the Intercolonial Railway, as respects its operating expenses and its annual showing from time to time. You are aware, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Ellis), that there was a time in the history of the Intercolonial Railway, when the difference between the earnings of the road and the expenditure for working expenses—not to speak of the capital outlay—was something in the neighbourhood of half a million dollars a year, taking one year with another. Some years it was above that sum and some years it fell below. That state of things continued until the year 1880, and then there was a new epoch in the history of that railway. Prior to 1880, there had always been these large deficits, but in that year there was a change for the better. From 1880, for a period of four years, there was a slight surplus each year, but in order that I may put the case continuously, let me state what the condition was for a few years prior to that. From 1876-7 to 1879-80 inclusive, a period of four years, the deficits on the Intercolonial had averaged $430,000 a year. From 1880-1, to 1883-4 inclusive, a period of four years, the surplus per year averaged $17,000, a difference as you will observe of a very considerable amount. That I attribute, in a considerable measure, to the stoppage of large expenditures in maintenance, repairs and equipment. I will make clear to the committee later, by a reference to the items in detail, what I mean by that.

From 1884-5 to 1891-2, a period of eight years, again the deficits appear, and they average in round figures, $360,000 a year; some years more and some years less. For these eight years there was a total deficit of nearly two and a half million dollars. Then another change occurred; another epoch arrived, and this was an important epoch so far as the comparison between the deficits and the surpluses are concerned. In 1892-3 there was a surplus of $20,000; in 1893-4, a surplus of $5,838; and in 1894-5, a surplus of $3,815. You will observe that the deficits for the three years previous to 1892-3 were on an average $360,000 a year, and it was made up of the figures for each year as follows:

1889-90.....	$550,000
1890-1.....	680,000
1891-2.....	490,000

In these three years you will see that there was a deficit of half a million of money a year. Then something occurred. I have stated to you what that was. In 1892-3 there was a surplus of $20,000, which was followed by a continuation of surpluses for two years more—one of $5,800 and one of $3,800. Naturally an inquiring mind would like to know what occurred to produce this change. Did the business increase? Was there any marked growth of traffic? How was it that for those years preceding there were what would be described by some as an enormous deficit each year, and that there followed even these small surpluses showing a difference of between $500,000 and $600,000 in each year's results as between 1889-92 and 1892-5? Was it due, as in 1881-2-3-4, to an increase in the earnings? No. There had been an increased mileage, and an increase of something over $600,000 in the actual earnings of the road, in the period of the previous deficits. Was there a corresponding or greater increase in the earnings between the three years of deficits which I have named and the three years of surpluses which I have named? No. Let me tell you what the result was by the actual figures. The gross earnings were as follows:

1889-90.....	$3,012,000
1890-1.....	2,977,000
1891-2.....	2,945,000

Mark you, those were the years of deficits of over $500,000 a year. How does the business compare with that of the following three years of surpluses? In those years the gross earnings were:

1892-3.....	$3,065,000
1893-4.....	2,987,000
1894-5.....	2,940,000

There was altogether no greater increase in the gross earnings in the three years of surpluses which I have mentioned over the three years in which those large deficits occurred than $20,000 per year, or, in the whole, $60,000. Now, this naturally suggests the inquiry, how comes it that such a result was brought about? In the first full year in which my hon. friend administered the department he was able to show a surplus of $20,000. In the year preceding the advent of the hon. gentleman and the year of his advent the deficits were $680,000 and $490,000 respectively; and one would be, as I say, naturally prompted to ascertain, if possible, by close and careful investigation, what were the processes, what was the sleight-of-hand employed by my hon. friend to enable him to produce a surplus with practically the same amount of business that had produced a deficit of over $500,000 a year for the three years preceding? Well, I have looked into this subject, and I think I can furnish to the committee a correct and complete explanation. I am in a position to say, as you have seen, that it was not due to an increase in the business of the road. There was at all events no stimulus given to the traffic. I think I shall be able to satisfy the committee before I get through that it was not due to any remarkably successful railway administration upon the part of my hon. friend—and I am not going to deprecate in any degree his qualifications as a railway administrator. If the hon. gentleman thinks this result is a matter of credit, I am not sure whether the credit is attributable to my hon. friend or not. I am not aware to what extent, if at all, it is attributable to the gentleman who was acting Minister of Railways for some months prior to my hon. friend's accession to office. I believe that during the year prior to 1892, my hon. friend was Minister of Railways for half the year, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell for the other half. In this respect I feel that I am perhaps deficient in information. I am not able to say whether it was through the action of my hon. friend or through the action of Sir Mackenzie Bowell that this transformation took place. I do know, however, that Sir Mackenzie went down to Moncton during the time he was acting Minister of Railways—at least, I am so informed—and that while there he took very active steps to bring this system of annual deficits on the Intercolonial Railway to an end. Now, that was a very laudable purpose, and I am not going to criticise him for it; but I think it is just possible—and I shall refer the committee to the facts which I have gathered on the subject, and invite them to form their own judgment as to whether it is a subject for congratulation or not—I think it is just possible that there may have been a change brought about which was very much to the disadvantage of the Intercolonial as a railway and was not at all a startling exhibition of railway administration. The acting Minister of Railways went down to Moncton, not, as I gather from the results, to study the railway question at headquarters; but for the purpose of ascertaining why this system of deficits continued, and what could be done, consistent with the public interests and with the maintenance and proper business management of the Intercolonial Railway, to bring these deficits to an end; but he went down there with the determination to cut off the deficit at all hazards and by any means, and produce, if possible, a surplus where previously only deficits had occurred. What did he do? He plied his hatchet, he cut and slashed, he reduced the expenditure here and he reduced it there, he reduced the number of trains, he diminished the staff of employees and workmen in the shops, and cut off and curtailed in every possible direction. If I am correctly informed, he called in the leading men at the head of the different departments and said that the government had determined the half-million dollars of deficit should cease, and that they should make such reductions in the expenditure of their several departments as would bring about that result.

He did not go over the road to see in what condition it was. He did not go over it to see whether or not the amounts which had been expended from year to year on maintenance and repairs were larger than the needs of the road required. He did not go over the rolling stock or inquire into the business needs to ascertain whether more trains were operated and more expenditure incurred in the way of stimulating business than the actual business would warrant. He did not do any of these things, but simply gave out his order that the deficit should be cut down, and cut down it was. And I know how the newspapers of the time, which were supporting the government of the day, gave no end of credit to the late administration for having achieved what they described as a splendid result—for having shown a surplus, though a small one, where for years there had been nothing but enormous deficits.

But, it depends on the methods pursued to bring about that result, whether it conferred a legitimate benefit on the country or whether an injury was created—whether the road was being injured or benefited. I have the facts before me, and propose to show that no one who had any real interest in the proper maintenance and operation of that great railway would have taken the course which was then followed. It was a course most disastrous and injurious to the proper maintenance of the Intercolonial Railway. There was none too much money being expended in order to keep that road in proper shape if it was intended—I will not say to be a credit to Canada—but to be maintained and operated as it should be. But those who were controlling the operating of that road got their instructions to cut down the expenditure at all hazards, and I propose to show how this $500,000 of change in the expenditure of the previous years was brought about, and I can give you the precise figures, from which you can draw your own conclusion.

Take 1891-2 as the last year showing this deficit of $491,000, and take one of the following years. In 1891-2, there was expended upon steel rails laid down on the Intercolonial Railway, $150,600; the next year the expenditure upon these rails amounted to $75,000. So that, of the half-million dollars of saving, $75,000 was made up by putting down less rails than in the year before.

Mr. POWELL. More rails were put down that following year than have been put down any year since.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend smiles as if he had accomplished some great feat. I am prepared for my hon. friend's criticism, I am prepared to put the operations of the Intercolonial Railway every month of every year from 1896 alongside the operations of the previous years. Every item of expenditure can be put side by side, and we will see what the results are, and I have a statement before me covering all that ground. If the hon. gentleman will have the patience to allow me to complete my statement, he can then make any comment he pleases.

Mr. POWELL. I have a statement before me, and this is correct.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What has been expended since does not affect the argument or the case I am presenting to the committee in the slightest degree. I am now explaining how this wiping out of the deficits which had existed for years was effected, and I am pointing out that it was not brought about by any legitimate means, but by reductions in the very classes of expenditure which were necessary to the proper maintenance and equipment of the railway. That is the point I am trying to make. The ties furnished in 1891-2 cost $113,000; in 1892-3 they cost $84,500, or $28,500 reduction in that particular outlay. On bridges and culverts, in 1891-2, we expended $169,500, and in 1892-3, $123,500, or $46,000 less outlay. On building platforms, in 1891-2, we spent $88,000, and in 1892-3, $67,000, or $20,000 less expenditure. Repairs to engines, $293,000 in 1891-2, and $234,000 in 1892-3, or $38,000 less outlay. Repairs to passenger cars, $90,000 in 1891-2, and $83,000 in 1892-3, or $7,000 less expended. Postal and express cars, $3,000 of a difference. Labourers and trackmen in keeping up track, $73,000 difference between the two years. Repairs to other cars, $9,000 differences—making in all $300,000 out of these differences I have pointed out. The balance, $100,000, was made up in the reduction of trains, the reduction in the number of train hands, and engine drivers, smaller additions to the stores, and reductions in the men employed on the line.

Mr. INGRAM. Was the business of the community affected by the reduction of the train service?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not only was a very serious effect produced upon business, but there was a marked diminution in the accommodation furnished to the public.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) state how the reduction of stores enters into that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because every year there is a certain sum expended in stores, and in some years—

Mr. HAGGART. That does not enter into it at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg pardon. I have shown to the committee that there was an actual difference in the figures I have given of $300,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman stated that the reduction of the stores entered into these figures. How does it appear and how does it affect these results?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) can address his attention to something larger, if he wants to grapple with the question. I say there was also $100,000 less expended by reason of the trains cut off in all directions, as everybody knows, in the maritime provinces, together with the train hands, and so on. This makes a total of $400,000.

Mr. POWELL. There is a reduction of only $12,000 represented by the train hands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was not taking up the trifling amounts which made this $100,000. But there is an item of $100,000 due to the cutting off of trains and the reduction of train hands and other incidental savings of amounts that were previously spent in the operating of the line. You will observe, Mr. Chairman, that there is necessarily a very marked effect produced by the reduction of these expenditures in the condition of the road-bed, rolling stock, and generally of the equipment of the road. I point to this for the purpose of saying two things: In the first place I say it was injurious to the road; in the next place, I say it is a complete answer to what was said at that time and has been more or less made since, that there had been any marked evidence of success on the part of the minister of that day. Anybody can scamp the road; anybody can starve it, depreciate it. You can cut down expenditure, but when you do so, you are doing serious injury to the railway system of the country. Now, let me pass from that to a statement of recent years' operations under the present administration. I would first give you the gross earnings of the year 1896-7, which were only $2,866,028. From 1896 to 1898 the amount did increase, but not very largely, until it amounted to $3,117,000. This was before we had extended the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. The amount was even larger than it had been—before even in the highest of the years when business was prosperous in the maritime provinces—as prosperous as it was at the best of times. The gross earnings of the road rose from $3,065,000 to $3,117,669, or somewhere about $50,000 greater than it had been during the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Haggart's) best year. In 1898-9 the increase was very marked; it had run up to $3,738,331. The increase, therefore, of 1898-9 was $872,300 over what it was in 1896-7. Hon. gentlemen opposite may remember the statement I made in this House at the time we were arranging for the adoption of our policy of extension to Montreal,—that we might count with reasonable confidence upon an increase in the earnings of the road, of about $800,000. My statement was ridiculed as being fabulous, merely imaginary and capable of accomplishment by taking business away from the Canadian Pacific Railway and probably doing it at a loss. It was said that there was not the business which would enable the Intercolonial Railway, even if extended to Montreal to increase its gross earnings to the extent of $800,000. But, in 1898-9, increase had taken place, and we had $872,000 over our earnings in 1896-7. Now, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a very significant state of facts. During the ten years that elapsed between 1886 and 1896, the fluctuation in the gross earnings in the Intercolonial Railway between the highest and lowest amounts was only $125,000. During all these years, our great Intercolonial Railway system, under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite remained practically stagnant; even though the times were good, though I do not say Canada was as prosperous as it is to-day.

Mr. POWELL. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. minister—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) does not wish to interrupt me, I hope he will not feel under any compulsion to do it—I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. POWELL. But, I wish to point out that the hon. gentleman is wrong. From 1886, the difference instead of being $125,000 is $300,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. In the period from 1887-8 to 1897-8, traffic did not vary more than I have said. The hon. gentleman will have plenty of opportunity to deal with the figures I put forward—

Mr. POWELL. The hon. minister is right for those years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know it. If the hon. gentleman thinks he has any ground on which to attack my figures, he will have ample opportunity to do it. In 1898-9, we have an increase of $872,000. What is it due to? I do not take any credit to myself. I do not say it is evidence of great railway manipulation. I have certainly given my best energies to watching the line and have tried to perform my duties energetically and faithfully. But I do not claim credit for this increase. I do claim that the policy which met with such bitter opposition in this House and in this country from hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends against the extension to Montreal, is the cause to which we are justly entitled to attribute this growth, six times greater than had occurred during the whole ten years preceding. Now, hon. gentlemen may say: Well, that is no great showing, because your mileage was increased. Granted that the mileage was increased, it increased by 169 miles. But I offset that argument by this statement, that there was during the ten years I have referred to an increase in mileage greater by a mile or two than there was by the extension to Montreal; there was an increase in 1891 of 171 miles on the Intercolonial Railway. So you have to look for some other reason than the fact that we have added 169 miles to the Intercolonial Railway during the present regime. It is due to the extended mileage in a sense, but in a different sense to that to which I am alluding. We extended the line into a great city which would give us business and to which we could take business, and to that cause alone I think I may fairly attribute this improved condition in the traffic upon the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BLAIR.

Now, I suppose it will be said that times were good during the last year or two. Well, they were good unquestionably last year, and are still better the current year. But I want to state positively that in the maritime provinces, during the latter portion of the last fiscal year, we did not begin to realise the prosperity and business which the upper provinces realized. When good times do come we are slow to participate in them, and we do not at any time participate in them to the same extent as the upper provinces. But attributing a reasonable increase of business upon the Intercolonial Railway to better times, I set off against that improved business an equal earning prosperity, and equal good times in the maritime provinces during a portion of the ten years with which I have made my comparison. I do not suppose hon. gentlemen opposite are going to affirm that during all the years between 1887 and 1888, and 1897 and 1898, the national policy of protection did not have any good effect in the provinces. But while these good times prevailed the only effect upon the Intercolonial at the most was an increase of $125,000 in the total business between the lowest and the highest. During the year or fifteen months before the good times struck the maritime provinces, we had $172,000 of an increase in our business, furnishing a strong affirmation of the wisdom of the policy of the government in making all possible haste to get into the city of Montreal with our railway. Now, the gross earnings for the year 1898-99, as I have given them to the committee, were $3,738,321. Our working expenses and outlay upon revenue account amounted to $3,675,686. That left us a net surplus for the year ending on the 1st of July last of $62,645. This sum corresponds very closely with the estimate I made at the end of the then fiscal year, when I thought we would have a surplus on the year's operations of $60,000. That surplus amounts to something more than all the surpluses put together during the whole life of the Intercolonial Railway. There have been surpluses for eight years on the Intercolonial Railway, varying from $542.65 in one year to $62,645 last year. Seven of these were under the late government, aggregating $57,517, and the surplus last year exceeded that by over $5,000. Now there is a disposition in the newspaper press and I presume it will be manifested on the floor of this House by hon. gentlemen opposite, to say that this surplus has been brought about by not making as liberal an expenditure upon the maintenance of the road and upon everything that contributes to its improvement, as did the late government. Let us examine the facts and see how far that statement is correct. I make the statement that the results in 1898-99 were not brought about by making a reduced expenditure upon the Intercolonial Railway as compared with the expenditures made during the hon. gentleman's term. I will furnish the committee with the exact figures showing what these expenditures were, and you can draw your own conclusions. For the years 1894-95-96 the amount spent upon roadbed by the late government was $130,912; for the years 1897-98-99 the amount was $134,928, not a large increase, but still sufficient to rebut the allegation that the expenditure in that particular, at all events, has been reduced. For ties, which is a very important element in a railway, in the first three years the expenditure was $184,490 and in the last three years $303,986—$119,500 in excess of the previous year. On lumber and other things which enter into improvements upon the road, the first three years the expenditure was $253,284; the last three years it was $281,758 or an excess of $28,000, making a total increase of $152,000. This is not a large increase. I am not going to claim that it is. I am not putting it forward as evidence that we have made a large expenditure. I am not unmindful of the fact that comparisons are always made between two different governments, by the results, and if you desire to have a fair knowledge, and to come to a fair conclusion as to what is the character of the measure of success which has been achieved by either government, you have to come down to the figures, and you are not likely to make any undue expenditures to produce deficits, if you can maintain your road in as good condition as it formerly was, by keeping your expenditure so that the comparison will be fair and legitimate. With an increased expenditure, averaging $50,000 per year upon the same class of outlay, covering every branch of the outlays on the maintenance of the road, the comparison can be fairly made. The purpose I have in making this statement is this: It is an answer to whoever may allege that the surplus for the year 1899, as shown in the accounts to July 1 last, was brought about, in comparison with the administration of the previous government, by any diminution in the outlay which goes to keep up and maintain the road. I could go into, as I have them before me in detail, the statements of how these different sums were laid out so as to show that the three great classes of outlay, are, for maintenance of way and works, which applies to the roadbed; one for cars, which deals with all classes of rolling stock, and one for locomotives, which deals with that class of equipment, which are covered by different branches of railway expenditure connected with the improvement and maintenance of the condition of the road, have all been maintained in this way. A comparison of the results show, by reason of car repairs, an increase of $72,898, between the two triennial periods which I have taken and by reason of engine repairs, $20,528, between the triennial periods.

Mr. POWELL. Do you include trainmen in the car statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No we do not include trainmen for a very important reason, for the reason that it depends entirely on the amount of business you have, as to whether the number of train hands will be increased. If you want to furnish all the facilities which the business calls for, and all the accommodation that the travelling public require, it might increase the cost of your train service, but train hands are not paid out of these items of expenditure, but out of another class of expenditure which does not go to build up the road. That, of course, is important in connection with the amount of business that is done, but it does not affect the other proposition in any degree. Now, the question which might fairly be put before this committee, and a question which might be fairly put to the country is this: Is there any better or improved showing, as compared with the control of my predecessor, brought about by spending less upon maintenance? The facts which I have referred to, as to the correctness of which I challenge criticism, enable me to answer that question in the negative. So, I think, I can fairly say that the argument, if used, cannot be successfully used, and that it has been disposed of. I have admitted that we have an increased mileage of 169 miles. We have spent 10½ per cent more than my predecessor spent during these years, taking them altogether, whereas during last year we had 14 per cent more mileage. It may be said: By reason of your having 14 per cent more mileage, you ought, therefore, necessarily, to have spent something more for maintenance and repairs, because you have more road to keep up. I mention that in order that I may put my view before the committee on that subject, and in order that it may not be supposed that I desired to present the question other than fairly, or that I intended to pass over any view of the question which might be criticised. It is correct that we have only spent 10½ per cent during these years more than the late government, under these three important heads, whereas during the period we had 14 per cent more mileage. In that connection, I will call the attention of the committee to the fact that we only had this increased mileage during one year, and during four months of another year. We had during the last year, ending July 1, the full mileage of the extension to Montreal. We only had it during four months of the year preceding, so that during the three years in regard to which I have made a comparison, it would not be a fair argument to urge that the expenditure ought to be greater, because the mileage is greater, except to a very limited extent, for the reason that the whole additional mileage has not been in operation for half of this period. For half of this period, this additional mileage has been in operation, but we did not have occasion to make an outlay upon it to the extent that we would have, if it had been some years in our hands, for this very good reason that forty-three miles of the road was entirely new. As to the other portion of the road, one of the conditions under which we purchased it, was that it should be put in first-class repair, and $100,000 was taken out of the purchase price to be expended upon the road, so that we did not require to spend money upon what is called the Drummond County portion of the line. We have only been operating the road for a short time, and any person who has had any experience in any business, much more so, any person who has had any experience in railway business, knows that you must have a railway in operation for a considerable period before you can expect to realise results from it, which you might fairly anticipate after the lapse of a little time. You cannot expect that the business of the Intercolonial Railway arising from its extension to Montreal would jump in a month, or six months, or a year, beyond what it has been during these three years. It will require a longer period, but under the same conditions of business, in five years, the business of the Intercolonial Railway, by reason of the extension to Montreal may be greatly enhanced beyond what it is to-day, as it is to-day greatly enhanced from what it was six months ago. These facts must necessarily be kept in mind if we desire to reach a fair, a just and reasonable conclusion upon the conditions as they exist. As to a large portion of this 169 miles, we did not have to make any considerable outlay upon it, in addition to the outlay I referred to, upon the Grand Trunk Railway end.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you know the exact amount you expended over and above the $100,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am informed it was about $15,000. If we owned the Grand Trunk Railway portion of the line ourselves, and if we were operating it ourselves, you would see at a glance that we would have to bear the whole expense of the annual repairs, which would be very considerable. But we only bear that expense in proportion to the amount of business we do on the line compared with the Grand Trunk Railway and the other lines of railway that are using the road. Our percentage is small, and the charge we have to meet now or at any future time, must be small compared with the charge which we have to bear upon the rest of the Intercolonial Railway which we own ourselves, which we operate exclusively, and in connection with which we get no contribution from any other source. In connection with the results as shown by the accounts for the year ending 31st June last, I would like to impress upon this committee another very important fact, and one which accentuates still more the value of that extension to Montreal. Wherever and whenever the opportunities are afforded me, I shall never cease to impress upon those to whom I am speaking, the utter weakness and the utter failure of the contention which the Conservative party in this House made with respect to the Montreal extension. It is a fact, Sir, that we were able in connection with that extension, not only to produce these results, but we paid the rental $210,000, and had a surplus in addition to it. We practically paid the interest upon the value of the property we acquired. We paid the interest at a higher rate than if we had owned it, because we paid at the rate of 4 per cent on the Drummond County. Was there ever a railway bought by the Conservative government; was there ever an extension of the Intercolonial Railway under their administration that contributed one dollar towards the interest upon the capital outlay? Not one. They never made any addition which contributed to the increase in the business as I have shown, but here we have an act of policy by this government which not only enabled us to produce better results as to the gross traffic upon the railway, but actually enabled us to pay the rental of $210,000 a year, and upon the Drummond County as part of it, interest at 4 per cent upon the whole value of that road. Now, Sir, this came out of the profits. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) ought to have spoken with some experience on this matter, because I understood him to say that at one time he had in his mind the extension to Montreal, although it did not take a very vigorous hold upon him, nor did it bear fruit, but he must have considered the question, and if he did consider the question he should have formed some idea as to what that policy was worth. However, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) would have us believe in this parliament that when we had the Intercolonial Railway running for one full year and produced our accounts, we would show a deficit in addition to the deficit which he had, by a sum not less than the whole rental we were paying. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) on the authority of a gentleman who had been at the head of the department, and with all the weight that brought; when he was condemning this policy of the present government he deliberately predicted that we would show a deficit of $260,000. Now, Sir, as it turns out there is $60,000 the other way, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) therefore, made and error in his calculation of $320,000 a year.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. HAGGART. The error is in your statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I misquote the hon. gentleman?

Mr. HAGGART. No, but I say that your statement is altogether wrong, and I will be able to show it later.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am glad to have the acknowledgement that I did not misquote the hon. gentleman, and if I did not misquote him, no explanation of his can wipe out the conditions as they actually exist. It is possible for my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) to pretend to tell what is going to happen in the future. He may speculate and predict as he has done before, but he cannot wipe out the results as they stand to-day. The accounts are settled, they are kept exactly by the same officers and in the same way as when he was in the department, item after item in detail is published, and therefore, I do not believe that my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) will have an easy task to explain away the unreasonable and incorrect predictions which he made in respect to the operation of this road.

There is another thing that I anticipate will be stated here, because it is stated in the Conservative press with all show of particularity. It is said to us: Your results are misleading and fallacious; you never had a surplus of $62,000, because you have actually maintained the road out of capital and made improvements which were formerly paid out of earnings, and so no wonder you can show favourable returns under such circumstances. Well, Mr. Chairman, I challenge most emphatically the correctness of that statement. I say that I shall be able to convince the House that there is not a shadow of justification for saying that the results which have been accomplished have been accomplished by any such means. Even the opposition papers which are published along that line of railway which are bitterly opposed to this government and would misrepresent it without much hesitation if they thought they could make a point against us by doing so, even they do not say that the condition of the railway, and of the road-bed is not improved. The equipment, I am free to confess, the locomotives largely, the new cars, have come out of capital. But, even as respects that portion of the expenditure, we have not had as large a proportion available to us yet as we are entitled to by reason of the increase in our mileage. When the line was extended by the late government from Riviere du Loup to Lévis, the calculation was made that they were entitled to so many additional locomotives, so many additional passenger cars of various kinds, so many additional freight cars, and they got them; and they were paid for out of capital, legitimately and properly. Now, it is not an avower to say that I have got this equipment largely out of capital, because when we added 169 miles to the railway, we had necessarily to get additional equipment, and we have not yet got the proportion which the additional mileage and the additional business requires, as I shall show the committee before I conclude my statement.

Now, in these statements as I have put them to the committee, I think I have anticipated every reasonable argument that would be made against the legitimate character of the surplus which the last year's transactions have shown; and I think I have answered those arguments, and I think the conclusion must necessarily be drawn that we have this surplus of $62,645 to our credit, as compared to the deficits during the period of the hon. gentleman. The normal deficit got up to about $55,000; that was the hon. gentleman's last deficit; and if you will add that to the $62,645 of surplus which I have shown this year, you have, as between those two years, a comparative difference of $118,000, a sufficient sum to pay the interest upon $4,000,000 at 3 per cent per annum—I think a very fair showing, and a matter of legitimate congratulation. I am not going to make any boast with regard to this, from any personal point of view. I claim no credit particularly for myself. Whatever credit there may be due to the improved business, outside of the extension to Montreal, I think is fairly due to the increased activity and increased interest which the men employed on the Intercolonial Railway have exhibited. I have had no reason at all to be other than satisfied with the way in which they have responded to the demands I have made upon them. Nor do I wish to criticise the hon. gentleman in any serious way. I am entitled, however, to say that with regard to the hon. gentleman, that I do not think he took any interest in the Intercolonial Railway from the beginning to the end of his administration. I think he wanted the deficits to be cut down, and I think he would like to see a surplus; but, as to his making any study of the situation and devoting his talents to it—and I have no doubt he has exceptional talents—I am compelled to believe that the hon. gentleman gave very little, if any, of his ability to the administration of that railway. And I think that is a legitimate ground of complaint against the hon. gentleman, because there is no doubt that if the men employed on the railway know that the minister takes no interest in it, they take less interest, they become less careful and more lax, and you do not get the results that you would if the minister followed matters up closely, kept himself in close communication with the officers, advised with them, got their views and gave them his, and spurred them on to greater interest in their work. I venture to say that there is to-day, and has been for some time past, more activity displayed by the officers of the Intercolonial Railway than there was during the hon. gentleman's administration; and any one who travels over that road will acknowledge that the character of the service, the character of the men engaged in the service, the attention people get, and every other element that goes to make the popularity of a railway, have been improved in recent years beyond what they were during the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not pretend to say that down to the present moment the railway is all we desire it to be. It is deficient, no doubt, in many particulars. It is deficient in its equipment; it is deficient in the number of its locomotives, and in the number of its cars. But it is improving. The money we are spending on it we are spending to better purpose and with better results than was formerly the case; and I am in hopes that in four or five years we may have that railway, in all respects, one which will compare favourably with any other railway in the Dominion.

This brings me to the subject of the capital outlay upon the Intercolonial. I will make a comparison between the expenditure in that particular under the late government and the expenditure under myself down to the present date. The capital expenditure, in round figures, was as follows:

1890-1.....	$ 80,000
1891-2.....	320,000
1892-3.....	297,000
1893-4.....	437,500
1894-5.....	327,000
1895-6.....	260,000

Mr. HAGGART. Where do you get those figures?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I got them from the reports.

Mr. POWELL. They differ tremendously from the official figures in your report.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot help that. I am giving the figures as I have had them taken from the public reports for the whole government system except the Prince Edward Island road. I did not take these figures off myself.

Mr. HAGGART. The figures are all wrong.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under the present administration, the capital expenditure has been as follows, in round figures:

1896-7.....	$ 149,000
1897-8.....	253,000
1898-9.....	1,082,000

Mr. BLAIR.

Of the latter amount, $640,000 was for rolling stock, and there was no corresponding item for rolling stock expenditure out of capital during the recent years of the hon. gentleman's administration. Comparing the three years of Liberal administration with the six years I have given you of its predecessors, the comparison would be, I think, not at all unfavourable to this government, having regard to the fact that we have put the equipment of the railway into the condition in which it is to-day and which is infinitely better, I think, in the judgment of everybody than it ever was before. We have an entirely improved class of locomotives and service. There never was a dining car service until since the change in the administration. There was no such thing as a vestibule train, the locomotives were of an inferior class, and therefore the expenditure which has been made on capital account has produced results which amply justifies it.

Look at the items which go to make up that expenditure closely, and you will not find any of the class which are included in the statements that I have read. These expenditures, every dollar of them, on capital account, are outside of the amounts I have named as paid out of consolidated revenue account, so that the statement cannot be accurately made that we have kept the road up in the condition in which it is by reason of the capital account. An examination of these figures will demonstrate the incorrectness of such a conclusion. Among the items for which we have asked appropriations on capital account, there is only one about which any possible question can be raised, and certainly it cannot be raised with any force. There is only one concerning which it can be contended, with any show of argument, that a similar class of items was charged by our predecessors against revenue. That item is the sum that we have obtained for the strengthening of the bridges on the road. As a matter of policy, owing to the increased weight of engines and trains, it has become imperatively necessary that there should be a strengthening of the bridges quite generally upon the railway. They were built for lighter engines, and must be strengthened if they are to be crossed by heavier engines. When the vote of last year or year before—I do not remember which—was under consideration by this committee, there was a vote on capital account for strengthening the bridges, and I was asked whether it had not been the policy of the late government to expend upon revenue account all that was necessary for the strengthening of these bridges. I stated that I did not think that that was the policy of the late government, although I admitted that there were one or two instances in which that had been done; but I endeavoured to point out that there was no similarity between the classes of work done in the strengthening of bridges by the late government, and what we now propose to do. We are proposing to spend—not all at once, but in two or three years—$200,000 or $300,000, and in referring to what expenditure was made by the late government for the strengthening of bridges, I pointed out that they had only strengthened two or three bridges. I think they were the two Miramichi bridges and the one across the Restigouche.

Mr. POWELL. And the Sackville bridge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. Not one beyond those three I have named.

Mr. POWELL. The Sackville bridge was not charged to capital.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If rebuilt or strengthened, it must necessarily have been built out of capital, because I have had the whole records of the correspondence upon all the bridges on the Intercolonial Railway searched with the utmost thoroughness from beginning to end, with the result that there were only these three bridges, the two Miramichi and the one at Restigouche, and upon those the total, laid out for strengthening, was only $36,000, or about $18,000 a year extended over two years.

But no one, with any desire to be fair, will say that because the late government put in a few additional braces and strengthening rods into three of their bridges, during the whole period of their management of the road, at an outlay of $18,000 a year for two years, I ought to be expected to spend $300,000 in completing, renewing and constructing the whole bridge system of the Intercolonial Railway, and I ought to do that out of earnings. There is no reason or common sense in doing that. If the argument is made that we ought to do this in order that there may be a continuity in the system and a fair comparison between one administration and the other, then I say the very statement defeats itself. There is no comparison between spending a trifling sum for two years upon some additional braces and the strengthening of three bridges, and spending some $300,000 in practically renewing bridges. What are we doing? We are replacing one-half nearly of these bridges by new bridges. We are not in any such sense strengthening the existing bridges; but we put two small bridges together so as to double the strength. We have taken a bridge up at one place and put it alongside a bridge in another place. The bridges were good, they did not require repairs, but practically a renewal, and we took that method of doing it. We put an entirely new bridge down double the capacity of the old bridge which we took up. And I maintain that if any person desires to make a fair comparison between our expenditure upon maintenance of the Intercolonial Railway and our predecessors' expenditure for the same service, he will compare on the same basis the work we have done and the little trifling repairs for strengthening bridges and so on which they have done.

I now come to a statement having reference to the business of the present year, as far as I am in a position to furnish it to the committee. But, perhaps, it is well that I should break off here.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SETTLEMENT OF TRADE DISPUTES— INDUSTRIAL INFORMATION.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 187) to aid in the prevention and settlement of trade disputes and the publication of statistical industrial information.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there to be an explanation of this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. One of the objects of this Bill is, by the aid of boards of conciliation, to promote the settlement of trade disputes and of differences that arise from time to time between employers and employees, and between different kinds of employees. It is hoped that the application of this principle may prevent strikes and lock-outs, and that if, unfortunately, that extreme measure is resorted to in the case of such disputes, the adoption of this method may bring about a more satisfactory and permanent settlement of these disputes.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) says he will use these methods, but he has not explained it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Another object of the Bill is to establish a department of labour. It will be the duty of the department of labour to gather statistical information and other information affecting labour, and to provide for its publication and for its being made accessible to the public generally. In order to carry out that object, the department will publish a monthly gazette, a labour gazette, which, as regards labour, will fill the same place as does the report of the Minister of Agriculture as regards agriculture, and the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the commercial world. This gazette will not be a medium for the expression of opinions, but for the registration of facts. It will be a useful publication for all classes concerned in industrial life, whether employers or employees, and will enable them better to understand not only the conditions affecting their own side, but the conditions affecting the side of the other party. And, with more information, all parties to such controversies will be better able to understand each other's views and conditions, and more amenable to conciliatory arguments and more ready to adopt peaceful arguments for the settlement of controversies. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) asks me to explain the machinery of the conciliation portion of this Bill. I may say that it is not anything new, but is an echo, largely, of the Conciliation Act which has been in force in Great Britain for some four years. Prior to any legislation whatever providing for conciliatory methods of adjusting such disputes, there had been growing up in Great Britain a number of voluntary conciliation boards, which had been able to accomplish a great deal in the way of removing causes or differences, and preventing strikes and lock-outs. The number of these boards in England had increased, and their work had become so important and useful that, at last, in 1896, the Imperial parliament gave recognition to Conciliation Boards by passing the Conciliation Act of 1896. The Act provides for the Board of Trade of England keeping a register of the Conciliation Boards and Arbitration Boards throughout Great Britain, and in that way being in connection with the machinery of conciliation, which machinery can be set in motion whenever the occasion arises. These Conciliation Boards are selected by the interests concerned. The Act provides that if the interests desire it, the Board of Trade in England—it will be the minister charged with the carrying out of this Act in Canada—may, if requested, appoint conciliators or arbitrators. But there is nothing, from beginning to end of the Act, of a coercive character, but the whole rests upon the theory of consent, both in the organization of the board, in their taking any part whatever by way of intervening in disputes, and ultimately in arriving at consent decisions. Failing conciliation, the Imperial Act—and so will this Bill—recognizes reference to arbitration. There is, however, a wide difference between the determination of a dispute by a board of conciliators and by a board of arbitrators. In case of the reference of the dispute to a board of conciliators, the conciliators are the parties to the dispute themselves. The employers or their representatives and the employees or their representatives constitute the board. There is not, as in the case of arbitration, the delegation of power to settle the dispute to an outside tribunal, which may or may not be composed of persons in any way directly interested in the trade concerned, but the persons directly interested in the difference are the persons to settle that difference. If the conciliators arrive at a conclusion, it is a consent conclusion. The parties concerned meet together, employers and employees, around the same table; they exchange views; they become, perhaps, better acquainted, each side with the other, a better spirit is evoked, and the result is that, ultimately, consent is reached. In case of arbitration, it is a delegation of authority to an outside tribunal, whose decision, not being the decision of the parties concerned, is accepted, perhaps, as binding, but not to the same degree of alacrity, perhaps sullenly.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. DAVIN. Who puts the machinery in motion ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will be possible for the machinery to be set in motion either by the parties to the difference themselves, or by the department of labour. Any of the parties can evoke it, can endeavour to secure its good offices for the bringing about of a settlement. There will be no cast-iron rules, one method might be effective in one case and another in another. Hon. gentlemen will find on reference to the reports of the Board of Trade to the Imperial parliament, ample justification for our adoption of this measure. It will appear that it has been effective in England in settling trade disputes of far-reaching importance, and I think there is no reason to anticipate less gratifying results from the principle being adopted in Canada. In Great Britain long before 1896 this system was in force ; since then I think the records show that six-sevenths of all the disputes have been amicably settled by the consent of the parties, either by the board of conciliation or by the parties themselves whilst the boards were in deliberation.

With reference to the labour gazette. I think it may be stated that Canada is behind other countries in not having long since adopted a journal of this kind for the dissemination of useful information in the fields of labour. Great Britain established a gazette some years prior to the Conciliation Act, and that journal I think has been of very great importance in aiding the work of conciliation. I venture the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that there is no subject more deserving of our consideration, no subject of so far-reaching importance, as one that concerns the peaceful, satisfactory and harmonious adjustment of trade disputes. Strikes and lock-outs may have been necessary, but they are an extreme course in dealing with such controversies. Sooner or later an adjustment is arrived at, after great cost to all the parties concerned, and considerable injury to the general welfare. If an arrangement can be arrived at after a strike and after such cost, does it not seem reasonable that we should endeavour to arrive at such a happy state of affairs without such cost, if at all possible, and that gradually it should be recognized that a resort to the extreme course of a strike or a lock-out should only be regarded as justifiable when all other more peaceful and more satisfactory methods have proved ineffective ? I had not contemplated making any observations except merely to state the two objects of the Bill, but since hon. gentlemen have asked me to speak further on it, I have done so.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). The hon. gentleman's course is a peculiar one for several reasons. The somewhat long, and I think I will not be considered harsh in my application of the term, somewhat bombastic introduction of this Conciliation

Bill by the minister, is remarkable for what it does not contain. The hon. gentleman has spoken and has taken his seat, and there is not one member on either side of your chair, Mr. Speaker, who has the least idea of what the Bill is. On general principles, combined with a great deal of assertion, the hon. gentleman has been most prolix and verbose, but he has been severely economical in any statement that he has made which would refer to the scope or to the machinery of the Bill.

There is one thing to which I wish to call attention, if the country's attention during these dog days can be fixed upon what we are doing here in Ottawa. The hon. gentleman himself has said that there is no more important question to be brought before parliament, that there is no question which has such far-reaching consequences as that which he has just introduced. And what is the period of this parliament ? We have now been in session five months almost to a day, we are here with decimated numbers, we are here entirely fagged out ; and after five months of legislation the hon. gentleman comes down with the most important Bill of the session, whose consequences must be far reaching. Now, I ask the members of this House and I ask the country if that is fair treatment for legislators. But I leave that, and I will ask if it is fair treatment for the measure itself. If a labour question and a scheme of conciliation built upon it is worthy the attention of a parliament like this, and no one doubts it, then it is worthy the attention of that parliament in its earlier days, before its forces have been almost completely sapped by the close application of five months attendance here, and by having entered the summer holidays and dog days. What reason has the hon. gentleman for deferring this legislation until the last days of the session ? The matter came up early in the session, on a resolution. The hon. gentleman was told then that the resolution was merely perfunctory, and he was invited to put his ideas into the shape of a Bill. Well, he did not take the warning. There was no impediment, either in the business of the House or for any other reason, to prevent the hon. gentleman from introducing his Bill three or four months ago, when this House was fresh, and when this parliament could have given something of the attention and consideration to a Bill of this kind which was its due.

Now this is exactly on a parallel with other methods of conducting the business this session. What have we seen with reference to the Minister of Militia and Defence ? No more important subject in one way could be brought before this parliament than a general scheme of administration of the militia system of this country. The Minister of Militia and Defence waits until the day before yesterday, when the session is very nearly over and when his remarks can be heard by, and his scheme can be laid before, but a very small proportion of the representatives of the country; and then he comes down at five o'clock in the afternoon and ends at ten o'clock at night, in a general discussion upon the policy and plan of militia methods in this country.

The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), dealing with the great problem of carriage by land and water, waits until five months of the session have passed, and then, in the very dying days of the session, he brings up, in a speech of great length, so far, and which probably is to run into a long part of to-day's session, the whole important question of canals and railways. What is the reason why these hon. gentlemen could not have brought these important questions to the attention of the House before? Is it not better that we shall have a discussion upon these great questions before the means of carrying them out, in the shape of the estimates, are submitted for consideration and brought to a point of conclusion? The estimates had been before the House for nearly three months, more than two months anyway, and yet five months of the session have passed before either of these gentlemen brought these questions up, and, as my hon. friend suggests, the railway subsidies are not yet within sight. Yet, these business men, composing this Liberal government, whose whole profession has been that they are legislating for the people and by the people, are the gentlemen who bring questions like these down at the very fag end of the session, preventing a full inquiry or a fair judgment upon any one of these matters. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) introduces this Conciliation Bill. This means that it cannot be taken up until next week. Then, how many members of this House will be present? I do not think you will find one-fifth of the members of the House present, and if you find them here, impelled by a strong sense of duty, you find them under conditions which are not favourable to a fair consideration and a fair conclusion upon measures of so much importance as this. Therefore, in the name of this parliament, I protest against this method of doing business. It is unfair and unbusiness-like, both in reference to hon. members and in reference to the question that has been placed at this period of the session before us. The hon. gentleman has sat down, and not given us one idea as to what the Bill is. He has mentioned that they are going to publish a gazette, but whether it is to be weekly or monthly, I do not know. There is not one word in reference to it. Who is to edit that gazette? Is it to be a party publication? To whom is it to be attached? The hon. gentleman has said that the report is to bear the same relation to the minister as the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce does to that minister, or as the report of the Minister of Agriculture does to that minister. We want to know if there is to be a ministry of labour, a gentleman added to the present cabinet who shall be the Minister of Labour, and if, under his supervision and authority, the journal, weekly or monthly, whatever it is, shall be issued from Ottawa, and shall be scattered throughout the country. In what way is the journal to be issued? Who is to pay for the journal? Is the whole cost to be borne by this government? Who is to edit it, and when it is edited, is it to be edited in the interest of the party which for the time being has control of the administration? If that be so, I do not hesitate to say that it is doomed to failure from the outset. The hon. gentleman has not given us the least inkling as to how this gazette, whether it be weekly or monthly, is to be issued, and whether it is to be issued from the simply non-partisan and purely labour point of view. He is entirely silent as to whether another minister is to be added to those who already draw their salaries and so poorly perform their administrative duties. He has given us not one word in reference to the rationale or the method of his Bill. I think the hon. minister owes it to the House to give us, with the least interruption to the business of the House, a statement of the general lines and methods upon which the Bill is based that that he proposes shall be passed.

Mr. G. R. MAXWELL (Burrard). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in support of the proposition of the hon. Postmaster General in regard to this Bill. I beg to thank him with all my heart for this effort which is enshrined in this Bill, because I think there has been no Bill brought before the House for many a day that will be hailed with greater delight by the great mass of the people than this Bill. The hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Foster) called the statement of the hon. Postmaster General bombastic, prolix and verbose.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Speak louder.

Mr. BERGERON. We do not hear you.

Mr. MAXWELL. I am very sorry for the hon. gentleman if his ears are a little stopped.

Mr. BERGERON. It is the throat of the hon. gentleman that is stopped.

Mr. TISDALE. Mr. Speaker, we cannot hear, and we are most anxious to hear the hon. gentleman upon this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. If hon. gentlemen will keep order, and if the undertone amongst hon. members ceases, I think it will facilitate business very much.

Mr. MAXWELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) called the statement of the hon.

Postmaster General bombastic, prolix and verbose. I listened most attentively to the statement of the hon. Postmaster General, and I thought it was one of the fairest, one of the calmest and one of the clearest statements possible to have been made by the hon. gentleman in reference to the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be so.

Mr. MAXWELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) complains about the Bill being brought forward at this period of the session. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I have attended here pretty regularly for five months, and I think I am only putting it in a very fair way when I say that hon. gentlemen opposite have consumed a very great portion of time with much less important matters than that which is now before the House. So far as I am concerned, I am quite prepared to stay longer, if it be necessary, in order to have this Bill placed upon the statute-books of our country. The hon. gentleman complains also about members going away. Of course, it has been a long session, to a very great many of us far too long from the financial point of view, but as we have already made sacrifices, and as this Bill will no doubt be satisfactory to the great mass of the people in Canada, I think we are prepared, on this side of the House at least, to make further sacrifices in order to help the hon. Postmaster General in getting this measure through. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has been very unfair in his criticism of the hon. Postmaster General. He said distinctly that this was to be a monthly gazette, and that it was to be under the control of a minister to be nominated afterwards, or to be appointed afterwards by order in council.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not a new minister.

Mr. MAXWELL. Not a new minister at all, but simply one of the present ministers.

Mr. FOSTER. That is something new.

Mr. MAXWELL. It is not new information. I heard the hon. Postmaster General use these words myself. I think if the hon. gentleman had listened as attentively to the hon. Postmaster General as I did, he would not have made that mistake. As one who has known for many years something of these troubles, and as one, who, when a boy, was a victim of these troubles, I am most heartily in sympathy with this Bill. I can remember the time in Scotland when I used to work in the mines, during which time several strikes occurred, in which I was obliged to participate unwillingly. One of these strikes in particular lasted for eighteen long weeks, and not the slightest effort was ever put forth to bring the fighting parties together and bring about a modification of the difficulties. Those who have known something of the hardships of these troubles, the privations and sufferings of the husbands, wives and children, will hail this measure in Canada with the most intense satisfaction and gratification.

Then again, with regard to labour statistics; that is incorporated now in a Bill which is in entire harmony with the demands of labour. For years the labouring men of Canada have been asking very earnestly that this statistical labour branch should be established, and I am very glad that the government has lent an ear to their demand. While this is not to be political in any sense, and not to be biassed in any sense towards any party, yet the very fact of these statistics being gathered and published from time to time will be of immense advantage to our labour interests. Again I say that I am pleased beyond measure that while we have had many serviceable Bills brought before this House since 1896, I know of no Act that will have so far-reaching an influence for good, in the prevention of labour troubles, and in the interest of the working classes of Canada, as this one is bound to have. I am prepared to make any sacrifices so far as time is concerned, or in any other way, in order to get this Bill placed on the statute-books during the present session.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I believe that without exception the members of the House will admit, that this Bill is altogether too important to be introduced at this very late stage of the session. The member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) has said that it is such an important measure that he is willing to make great sacrifices for it. We can all say the same thing, but the objection is not that we are unwilling to make sacrifices, but it is that there is no need why we should make sacrifices. I challenge the members of the government to give to the House one single good reason why this Bill was not introduced three months ago.

Mr. McMULLEN. They can give half a dozen reasons.

Mr. CRAIG. I have not the slightest doubt that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) could give half a dozen reasons, or a dozen reasons for that matter, to satisfy his conscience that everything the government does is right, or at all events that he could support it. I am doing no injustice to the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) when I make that statement, because I cannot conceive of him rising in this House and finding fault with a single action of the government. To use a common expression, he is not built that way. I say, without fear of contradiction, that if the Conservative party had introduced a Bill of this kind at this late hour in the session, there is no man in this House who would have spoken more strongly against it than the member for North Wellington, and in view of that, his action to-day shows just how consistent he is.

The remark of the member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) that if the session is prolonged it is because time was consumed discussing unimportant matters by the members of the opposition; that remark is absolutely without justification. I dispute that statement. The members of the opposition have not wasted time. Everybody knows that the House was called on the 1st of February, and that the government had no business to go on with for a month after that. Departmental reports were asked for over and over again; reports which were absolutely necessary to understand the business before the House, and most of those reports were delayed in presentation, and some of them have even not yet been presented to the House.

It comes with ill grace from any supporter of the government to say that time has been wasted by members of the opposition, for if we search through Hansard, we will find that at least as much time was taken up by supporters of the government as by gentlemen on this side of the House. After all, we are here as an opposition to discuss these things. We are here to represent the people of this country, and to show up what the government is doing so that the electors may understand it. I know little about this Bill beyond what the Postmaster General has stated. The Bill is an important one, and I have no doubt it is a good one, or, at all events, it can be made a good Bill, but one great objection to presenting it at this stage of the session is that it will be impossible to hear the opinions of the labouring men of this country with regard to its provisions. I want to hear from the labouring interests in my own constituency about this Bill, but there will be no time for them to let me know what they think about it. That is not justice to them. It is all very well for the member for Burrard to say that the labouring people will hail this measure with delight, but I can tell him that the labouring people of Canada want to do things after an intelligent fashion, and they want to understand just what this Bill proposes in their behalf. Then again, the employers of labour in Canada have had no time to study this measure. If this Bill is important in the interests of labour, and if it is a true conciliation Bill, it must be acceptable to both parties. There has been no time allowed for the employers of labour to examine into this Bill and to say what they think about it. Without entering into the merits of the Bill at all, I say that it is a sufficient objection to proceeding with it that the two great interests concerned in this country have not had time to place before the representatives of the people their views. I would offer the suggestion that this Bill be printed and distributed throughout the country, and then let it be considered next session, when we shall have the views of our constituents upon it. No interests are going to suffer in the meantime. While there have been some strikes in Canada, yet we have got along as a rule without any serious labour disturbances. I presume that the probability is that we shall have another session of this parliament, so that the government will have a chance to bring in this Bill again, and we shall then have the great advantage of hearing from the labouring men and the employers of this country, their views on this very important measure.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I am rather surprised at the course hon. gentlemen opposite have taken.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is rather amusing to notice the bitter manner in which the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) criticised the Bill, and the statements made by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). It is quite clear that hon. gentlemen opposite feel that the government have taken the wind out of their sails by the introduction of this Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes. They know they were in power for eighteen years, although they had every opportunity of dealing with this great problem, they never had the statesmanship or the manliness to introduce into this House a Bill for the purpose of making an effort to settle disputes between employers and employees. Year after year the Conservatives sat in this House with a strong following. They knew how labour disputes in the United States and in England as well, had paralysed trade and commerce; they knew that in Canada we had strikes which have seriously interfered with trade, but they made no effort to interfere to prevent them.

Notwithstanding that fact hon. gentlemen opposite, during all the years they were in power, never dared or never had the statesmanship to bring in a Bill to provide a means for adjusting those strikes. They complain that the Bill is brought in at the eleventh hour. These hon. gentlemen should look into their own record in that respect. The Bill which is properly called the Gerry-mander Act, was introduced into this House in 1882 within eight or ten days of the close of the session. They hawked it around among their followers, and from one constituency to another, until it was in a shape to suit their friends, and then they introduced it and rushed it through in the dying hours of the session. The Redistribution Bill of 1891 was also introduced and passed in the dying hours of the session. Then, take all their grants to railways; will the hon. member for York mention a single year in which they introduced their grants to railways within one month of the closing of the session? No, he will not. They were always introduced in the dying hours of the session.

Mr. DAVIN. Why do you not condemn this government for doing the same thing?

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend had better keep his temper. It is desirable that these Bills should be introduced at the very earliest moment. The hon. Postmaster General has done many good things for Canada. He has presided over the department of which he is the head with great credit to himself and great advantage to the country; but he has never introduced a Bill into this House for which he will receive more gratitude than the Bill which he has introduced to-day. It is a Bill that will enable employers and their employees to settle their disputes by arbitration. It is a Bill that is very much wanted, and hon. gentlemen opposite realize that both these classes will appreciate it and recognize it as an act of statesmanship and progress such as hon. gentlemen opposite never dared to introduce during the eighteen years they occupied the Treasury benches. They complain that it is introduced in the dying hours of the session. I have never sat in a session during the last eighteen years in which there has been such persistent, never-ending delay caused by the opposition as there has been this session.

Mr. DAVIN. You were not ready for three months.

Mr. McMULLEN. Every day when the Orders of the Day were called, there was some member of the opposition ready to get up and cause a discussion to take up the time. The hon. member for Western Assinibola (Mr. Davin) might be pronounced a political jumping-jack in this House. There was not a day on which he was not on his feet to talk about something. Then, how many times has the House been able to go into supply without these hon. gentlemen bringing up some question for discussion?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am discussing the question. The hon. member for York is complaining because the Bill has come down so late, and I am showing how the Postmaster General was compelled to withhold the Bill till this time. I say that under the circumstances hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible for the delay if anybody is. I will simply say, in conclusion, that the Postmaster General and all the members of the cabinet will receive the united thanks of both the labouring classes and the employers of this country for this effort to establish a system for settling labour disputes without the protracted and ruinous strikes to which the country has so often been subjected in the past.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon.

gentleman who has just taken his seat if he has seen this Bill?

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, the hon. gentleman has the advantage of the rest of this House. We are now in the 147th day of this session, and this is the hour chosen by this government to submit a Bill which that hon. gentleman has declared to be the most important measure that has ever been submitted to this House. I would like to know what this government have been doing? The hon. gentleman says that their predecessors did not grapple with this question. If the question has the importance which the hon. gentleman endeavours to give to it—and I do not underrate its importance at all—he pays a poor compliment to the government of the day, who have sat on the Treasury benches during five protracted sessions without having touched the measure which he has just discovered lies at the very foundation of everything that is important to Canada. The fact is, Sir, that the House has long since learned that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is ready to endorse in advance anything that comes from the other side of the House, although the measure is one that will give the most emphatic contradiction to every principle the hon. gentleman has ever propounded. If there is one man in this House who ought to be more ashamed than another to stand up and make such an address as he has made to-day, it is the hon. member for North Wellington. Why, Sir, it is a matter of notoriety that the hon. gentleman has been compelled to sit behind the government and applaud it for acts for which he condemned their opponents. The hon. gentleman says they have taken the wind out of our sails. Well, they have the wind, but they have not much else. What is the position of this House at this moment? I have great reason to complain. I do complain, that the government should have waited until this hour to bring forward a measure of the importance of this one, and should have evaded attending to the public business of this country until a large proportion of the representatives of the people have been compelled by the necessities of their position to leave parliament and go home, because it was impossible for them to sacrifice any more of their time by remaining here to do nothing. That is the course the government have compelled us to take. From the day this House opened down to the present hour, the opposition have been most anxious to forward the public business in every possible way.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, and I say that public business has been retarded, and the House has been held down, by the sluggish incapacity of this government to do its duty. Early in the session I said to an

hon. member of the government: 'What is the matter? What is the reason the House has nothing to do but to meet and adjourn?' He said: 'You have deceived us badly.' I said: 'How so?' He said: 'We relied upon you for a three weeks' debate, and you gave us only three days.' That was the complaint, and it was a well-founded complaint. The fact is, the hon. gentlemen hoped, while the opposition were debating the most empty address, probably, that ever was presented for the consideration of this parliament, to get their ideas together and to be able to propound some scheme by which they might hope to stem the current of unpopularity—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes—the current of unpopularity that they knew to be rushing like a torrent against them, and only awaiting an opportunity on the part of the great electorate of Canada to sweep them out of power, as the Liberal government of 1878 was swept out of power. And for what reason? It was for the utter incapacity to administer the public affairs of this country, that the Mackenzie government—the Mackenzie-Laurier government—was swept out of power in 1878, and that by one of the most overwhelming verdicts that ever was delivered in this country or any other. Independent Conservatives, who were misled, when an election was suddenly sprung upon the country, gave Mr. Mackenzie a majority of seventy, in 1874. And yet, after four years of misrule, but not so bad after incapacity, but not so great, and corruption not to be compared with that, and under the present administration the moment the independent electorate of Canada had an opportunity they swept that government out of power by a majority of eighty-six. Has any country ever produced such a spectacle? A government brought into power by a majority of seventy, in four years was swept out by a majority of eighty-six. And a similar condition of things exists to-day. The same causes, intensified by corruption to which Canada had always been a stranger until this government secures power—corruption not only on the part of ministers of the Crown, corruption not only shown in measures of the worst character ever offered for the consideration of an independent parliament, but acts of corruption so monstrous that a number of gentlemen behind the government though anxious to support them, were forced to abandon them, and vote against measures that they proposed. The same incapacity that marked the Mackenzie-Laurier government marks this, while, under this government, we see corruption at which Canada stands aghast. It has grown so monstrous that the First Minister, finding that he could not get even his pliant supporters behind him to support the government in refusing an exposure, by the continued work of the Privileges and Elections Committee, had to bring forward a measure which he based upon the declaration that in recent years, there had been an amount of attempted fraud in elections that demanded the attention of a Royal Commission to take that matter up, and by a searching investigation, to expose the condition of things that, otherwise would bring the utmost disgrace upon this country. I will not detain the House by showing how the hon. gentleman kept his promise to the ear, but broke it to the hope. He did appoint a commission, but took good care, as on former occasions of a similar character, to so emasculate their power as to prevent the far-reaching inquiry to which he had pledged himself in order to expose the corruption which had transpired within the last few years, and at which, he stated frankly to the House, even as he stood aghast. What has been the course of the present session? It is absurd to say that the opposition have obstructed, or done anything except shown the utmost readiness to promote public business. What do we find in the record of the session? We find that, having no business for the House, the government has resurrected the old dead Redistribution Bill, merely for the purpose of killing time. They knew that it was a waste of time again to put that measure before the parliament of Canada, after it had been decently interred. But these ghoulish vampires dragged from the grave this Redistribution Bill, and brought it, with its offensive effluvia about it, from its sepulchral abode, again to offend our senses. And what next? Finding again that they had nothing to do, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), brought in a resolution, as he said, for the settlement of disputes. Why did he not then bring in this conciliation measure? The government had had four years to consider the matter, and I think the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) himself will be compelled to admit that four years is enough to enable a government to bring forward one measure worthy the consideration of this parliament. Search through the records for the last four years, down now to the closing days of the fifth session, and you search in vain to find a single attempt to bring forward any measure calculated to promote the progress and prosperity of Canada. At the end of four years, this measure, which the hon. member for North Wellington declares to be one of the most vital importance to the great labour interest of this country—and no one will hesitate to admit that no question demands of parliament more careful consideration than one affecting the great labour element of this country—is at last brought down. That measure is brought in on the one hundredth and forty-seventh day of the session, in the dying hours of the session, when a large number of members on both sides of the House have been compelled to go to their homes to discharge duties that they could not longer defer. I want the Postmaster General to tell me, as this question is the same as that he dealt with before, why did not he, instead of wasting the time of this House in debating the resolution which he brought forward when the government had nothing for us to do, but meet and adjourn—why did not he bring forward this Bill then? Had not he the experience? Had not he the subject before him? Has anything occurred since then to intensify this question of labour? I say it has not. The government had the whole thing before them. But they have shown their utter incapacity to administer the public affairs of this country, by bringing a measure which they declare to be of such importance, to be brought down in the dying hours of the session, when it is impossible that it can receive that attention from members of the House that it should receive, and when it is impossible for the members to gather from public opinion such data and facts as would enable them properly to deal with this question.

Then we had another measure this session—a vote of confidence in the government proposed by one of the leading supporters of the government on the back benches. This also occupied a portion of the time of this House, and wasted it in a perfectly useless discussion. The Minister of Finance was not ready with his budget speech, as he should have been, with all the time and opportunity he had at his disposal, and so, in lieu of other business, the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) was put up by the government to anticipate the budget speech and move a vote of confidence in the government on a question that covered all those within the budget itself. Was there any regard for the public time and convenience of this parliament in adopting such a course? On the contrary, it is an additional proof that this session has been wasted from the hour it met down to the present by the government themselves dealing with public business in a way never before witnessed.

What have we further? We have the supplementary estimates of seven and a quarter million dollars laid on the Table, after a number of the members have been compelled to leave for home and when it is utterly impossible for that enormous additional appropriation to receive anything like the consideration it ought to receive. What have we now? We have now the fact before us that the Minister of Finance, forgetting all the pledges of the past, forgetting every declaration, forgetting that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was submerged up to his neck in declarations of bitter hostility against the extravagance of the Conservative party,—we have the hon. Minister of Finance calling for an expenditure of $14,000,000 over the ordinary expenditure of the late government, and no doubt we will find the hon.

member for North Wellington rising equal to the occasion and declaring that this addition of $14,000,000 to our expenditure is one of the most delightful things we could possibly contemplate. We will find him defending this overwhelming expenditure, which he used to denounce in times past as the means by which a government can bribe constituencies by the erection of public works and other public expenditure.

I ask the hon. Minister of Railways where are the subsidies that parliament is going to be asked for this year? Are there to be any subsidies? Or is the list so long that the hon. minister is ashamed and afraid to produce it? He remembers, I suppose, the emphatic declaration of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) given to the people and embalmed in the pages of Hansard that railway subsidies are the most dire and objectionable form of public corruption that any government can resort to. Is the delay in bringing down these railway subsidies due to a desire on the part of the government to escape the full examination and exposure which might otherwise be given of that expenditure, in describing which the Minister of Trade and Commerce declared that all that was necessary for a government to do, that wanted to remain in power until the end of its days, was to put in sufficient railway subsidies to buy up the constituencies of this country and enable them to control the independent voice of the electorate.

Let me say this to the hon. member for North Wellington, when he gets up, let us have less wind and more substance. Let him put his finger upon one Act of this government that has done anything for Canada. Let him show any measure of public importance, or anything calculated to redeem the promises and pledges these gentlemen gave to the electorate when seeking power.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This discussion is a very fair example of the tactics followed by the opposition all through this session. Complaint is made to-day that a most important measure is brought down late in the session, and yet when it is admitted that we should endeavour to expedite business, we have had the full whole forenoon consumed in a most useless debate. The hon. the leader of the opposition has gone all over the record and spoken on everything he could possibly think of. He has given us a rehash of his old speeches, which have been repeated again and again.

The hon. gentleman makes me smile when he speaks of capacity for corruption. We know his record too well not to appreciate his remarks at their just worth, and he has just given us a measure of his own capacity in the volume of words he has addressed to the House. He spoke of a motion introduced late in the session by the Postmaster General for establishing a fair system of fair wages, and he has mistaken that for the measure for settling disputes.

Let me remind the hon. gentleman that if he forgets his own record the people of the country know it and remember it well. He has dared to speak of the late Mr. Mackenzie. Well, if ever there was a man who was bitterly assailed by the hon. gentleman, it was Mr. Mackenzie, but Mr. Mackenzie has had ample revenge because if there ever was a man applauded by the hon. gentleman it has been the same Mr. Mackenzie ever since he has been no longer in life.

The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) complained that my hon. friend has introduced this measure in a speech full of words but without substance. What a reproach from that hon. gentleman. What have we heard from him this session, but speeches three and four hours long, abounding in words but lacking in ideas.

The Bill introduced to-day was announced in the speech from the Throne and the Postmaster General has done the very thing that hon. gentleman opposite say should be done. He has consulted the parties interested, the workingmen, the employers and the employees, and we have a result of his consultations in the Bill before the House. It is a most important measure, but I would be much surprised if it should be found to be a contentious measure. On the contrary, I believe it will be accepted by both sides because it is not a contentious measure, but simply the embodying and crystallizing of ideas that have been long in the minds of the people. Therefore, I do not think that the discussion need be lengthy.

Now, Sir, I do not want to follow the example which has been given us by the hon. gentleman. I might be tempted to retaliate upon him, but I will not do so. The hours are too precious at the present time, and we want to proceed to business. But if I had a piece of advice to give to the hon. gentleman, the leader of the opposition—perhaps he will not take it from me, we are on good terms personally, I hope, though politically we are far apart—but if I were to presume to give him advice it would be, when he speaks, to give us less wind and more substance.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). This is a government that has even to borrow its jokes. The right hon. gentleman was so poverty-stricken in resource that he has to do what we often see done when we throw a stone at a certain kind of canine animal not strong enough to face us, and he bites the stone and lets you go by in peace. I will postpone what I have to say upon the merits of this measure until the second reading; but I find on comparing it with the English Act that up to the fourth or fifth clause it is a replica of the English Act, and then some new and important provisions are introduced, for instance, the creation of a labour bureau and a gazette, which are not found in the English Act. The hon. gentleman has not said a word about the Act of the same kind that was passed in New Zealand, and which has been at work there since 1895; he does not seem to be aware of how that Act has worked.

Now, Sir, I must say that I entirely endorse the position taken by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), and by the leader of the opposition. My hon. friend from York complained that a measure so important, so far-reaching, touching the two great interests of labour and capital, is introduced at a period of the session when many of the representatives of both parties are not in this House. Is not that a fair and proper criticism? What happened when my hon. friend from York made that criticism? The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)—I see he has fled the House—rises up, and instead of dealing with the Bill, he brings a lot of unfounded charges against the opposition as to its conduct during this session, and then goes back over a series of years in recriminations that are boomerangs and rebound on the hon. gentleman himself. I have just come from the hon. gentleman's constituency; and when a gentleman said in the meeting we had there that the hon. gentleman was about to leave them his last will and testament, and to leave them a legacy of himself, one gentleman got up and said: All I ask is that he will leave me his gall. I say, Mr. Speaker, that a gentleman who defends this government by merely saying that it does the things he loves, is quite worthy of the appreciation of that gentleman up in North Wellington, who said that all he wanted was his gall. It was a good appreciation of the anatomical make-up of the hon. gentleman. The right hon. gentleman reproached the leader of the opposition with confusing the motions, and he said that a motion introduced some time ago by the Postmaster General respecting fair wages, had nothing to do with the settlement of disputes. Now, how do disputes between capital and labour arise? Is it not that the labourer demands more wages and the capitalist says he will not give it? That is a sample of the superficial criticism that usually falls from the Prime Minister. Now, what is the picture presented by this government in the dying hours of the session? It is a drowning government catching at every straw in sight, and this is one of the things it catches at to save itself. It has been looking around lately to know how it was to float, and it has snatched at one thing after another, and one of the things it has snatched at is such extravagance and boundless expenditure that the result will be that the weight of that expenditure will carry it down instead of keeping it up. We have a Postmaster General who is past master in trying to manipulate certain interests for election purposes. He was connected with the Weekly Sun of Toronto—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never was.

Mr. DAVIN. Was not the hon. gentleman part proprietor of it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Never.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I leave that statement to go abroad. I leave the statement of the hon. Postmaster General that he never had anything to do with the Farmers' Sun—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Never.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I let that go abroad. Of course, I have to accept the hon. gentleman's statement, and I accept it. But we know that that hon. gentleman, while the old government was in power, paid attention to the agricultural interests; he was very attentive to the interests of the consumers of coal oil; but he is silent now in regard to the wrongs of the consumers of coal oil, and in regard to the wrongs of the farmers. Now he is coming forward to angle and fish for the labour vote; he comes forward after four years in power, and at the dying hours of the session. The hon. member for North Wellington reproached the opposition that they were eighteen years in power, and did not bring forward this measure. Well, these gentlemen have been four years in power, and with a statute of that kind in England, and a statute of a similar kind since 1895 in New Zealand, they have not brought this Bill forward, until the closing hours of the present session. Mr. Speaker, all these efforts on the part of the hon. gentlemen to save themselves will be unavailing. As the leader of the opposition has said in his own eloquent and powerful manner, the judgment of this country has gone out against them. Take the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), he knows that. He has been up west, he has seen the way ministers of the Crown were received, he has seen the way the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), were received in the west. Why, Sir, they were received in such a manner that even the Conservatives took pity on them, and showed them some hospitality. The right hon. gentleman spoke about corruption. Well, Sir, you cannot keep corruption entirely out of any popular government, but I say that the corruption of the whole eighteen years the Conservatives were in power was but a molehill to the mountain that has been piled up in four years by the nepotists, by the manipulators in deals, by the winkers at fraud, skilful in contrivances to put money into the pockets of friends and middlemen, brothers-in-law, sons-in-law, and all other relatives. They have all been satisfied. There are very few hon. gentlemen on those benches at whom the finger of scorn cannot be pointed as men who have forsworn all they have promised while on this side of the House. The people are armed against them, and the moment they get a chance, the people, who are the judge and jury, will bring in against them a verdict of guilty, and the punishment will be banishment from the ministerial benches.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, having an interest in the Bill before the House, and deeming it one that we should consider it in an entirely different manner from the way in which it has been considered upon the other side of the House, I wish to make a few remarks upon it. First of all let me say that reference has been made by the last speaker (Mr. Davin) to my visit to the North-west Territories. I was quite satisfied with it.

Mr. DAVIN. We were quite satisfied.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Perfectly satisfied, and if the hon. gentleman by the simple statement thinks that he is making anything out of it he is very much mistaken.

Mr. BENNETT. How about Greenway?

Mr. DAVIN. How about your reception at Moosomin?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). All I have to say about the North-west Territories is that the North-west Territories are all right, and that the hon. member for Western Assinibola (Mr. Davin) will find that even his majority of one will diminish so that he will not be heard of again. I was amused at his reference to corruption. If there is a man in this House, in view of recent matters before this parliament this session that should be quiet on that subject, it is the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. member (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough) allow the hon. member for Western Assinibola (Mr. Davin) to state what his point of order is?

Mr. DAVIN. The point of order is this: He says that I referred to corruption, and that if there is any gentleman in this House, after what has taken place this session, who should not do that it is myself. What is the meaning of that? He must take it back.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Because the hon. gentleman pretends not to understand it I must take it back! I cannot do that. He understands it right well.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order again. The hon. gentleman must take that back.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER. All I have to say to the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is that he has no right to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand the Chair, for the first time in this House, to rule that an hon. member cannot rise to a point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER. I want to say to the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) that he is clearly out of order, and so is the hon. member for Western Assiniboia. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia stated his point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He attempted to state one.

Mr. SPEAKER. But he had no right to state one in the middle of a statement of the hon. member for Guysborough. I simply asked the hon. member for Guysborough to allow the hon. member for Western Assiniboia to make his statement.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Passing from that, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I simply make the statement that if there is a man in this House who ought to be silent in that respect the hon. member for Western Assiniboia is the man. Let him judge of it as he likes; I make the statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I ask the Chair whether it is competent for one gentleman to charge another member of this House with corruption.

Mr. DAVIS. You have been doing it right along.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not understand the hon. member for Guysborough to say that he was charging the hon. member for Western Assiniboia with personal corruption.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He made a most distinct charge against the hon. member for Western Assiniboia.

Mr. SPEAKER. You should be the last man in the House to make that statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER. In view of the statements that the hon. leader of the opposition made in his remarks respecting the government, I think he is the last man to raise that point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am bound to say that it is exceedingly inopportune for the hon. leader of the opposition to raise that question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will you permit me to say—?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That the Speaker of the House should make personal charges against a member of this House is absolutely without a parallel.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not making any personal charge against the hon. leader of the opposition.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are making a gross personal charge.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then, I may say that I have no intention of doing so.

Mr. FOSTER. It is an indefensible charge. No Speaker ever made such a charge before.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no member on that side of the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DAVIN. The Prime Minister is responsible for the conduct of those who sit behind him and he is responsible for this kind of thing.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. I think we ought to have an explicit declaration as to where we stand in this House. As I understand it the Speaker of this House rose in his place, and turning to the hon. leader of the opposition told him to his face that he was the last man in this House to make such a statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. TAYLOR. You will do no business to-day nor to-morrow, nor all week.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Speaker did state—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, he has not misunderstood you.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is nothing personal between the hon. leader of the opposition and myself. I have no desire to be unfair to any hon. member of this House. I would be very sorry if any member of this House thought that I, by any means, undertook to charge the hon. leader of the opposition with improper conduct or with making an improper statement. What I wanted to convey was that his statement was not well founded, and that there was no ground for making the charge against the hon. member for Guysborough that he did. Coming back to the statement of the hon. member for Guysborough, I understand that the hon. gentleman withdraws anything personal as against the hon. member for Western Assiniboia.

Mr. DAVIN. No, he has not done so; he must withdraw.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). As I was about to say, now that we have cleared the air—

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. gentleman has withdrawn the charge against the hon. member for Western Assiniboia?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). There is nothing to take back.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I will not take it back.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think my hon. friend could close the matter by simply saying that there is nothing personal as against the hon. member for Western Assiniboia.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). There is no personal allusion to any particular member more than the statement contains.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I will repeat the statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should not continue the discussion. If he withdraws the statement we will go on.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I am going to do it. As I was saying the hon. gentleman opposite—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw, withdraw.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I understood Mr. Speaker to say: Let us go on now.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he did not mean to make any personal charge.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I did not make a personal charge. All I said was that it did not look well in the hon. gentleman's mouth to mention the word corruption after what has been done in this House this session.

Mr. BERGERON. There is the whole thing again.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I say that anything like reasonable debate in this House is at an end, if, when the Chair rules that a statement by an hon. member must be taken back, it is taken back in such a way as to make it worse and to reaffirm it more strongly than before. The hon. gentleman must unreservedly take it back or he cannot proceed.

Mr. SPEAKER. I agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that any personal charges should be withdrawn.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I have made no personal charges.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). If Mr. Speaker says that my statement was out of order I withdraw it.

Mr. SPEAKER. That ends the matter. Now, we will go on with the debate.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Now, I am going to say to the hon. leader of the opposition—

Mr. SPEAKER. Let us discuss the question at issue and drop these personal matters.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Indeed! Are we to have the bitterest denunciation of the government from the other side, and we are not to say one word in defence. The leader of the opposition and his whole horde are mistaken if they think that kind of thing is to go on.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) has no right to speak of any section of the members of this House as a 'horde.'

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I will withdraw, and say the crowd at his back.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and you will take back everything that is wrong, if you stay there for three days.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). If there is a member in this House who ought not indulge in loud talk about the future, it is the leader of the opposition. We heard him stand in his place before last election and grandiloquently declare that he was going to sweep the country, and we know how utterly he was defeated. We know how the hon. gentleman can indulge in exaggeration. Why, last election when he was out in Ontario he received two telegrams from Quebec, and at the morning meeting he said he had many telegrams pledging an overwhelming majority from Quebec; in the afternoon he said he had scores of telegrams, and in the evening he was overwhelmed with telegrams. That is the style of the hon. gentleman. He tells us that the country is with him, but if that is so it is a peculiar thing that he should get up in this House and abuse and denounce a measure which is intended for the benefit of the tolling masses in Canada. If he is sure the country is with him why does not the leader of the opposition approach this matter like a statesman, and say this is a good Bill.

Mr. CRAIG. It is too late.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Too late to do good. Why, I thought the hon. member (Mr. Craig) had some ideas of the principles of Christianity. It is not too late. We are moving in the direction of the legislation in force in Great Britain, and I submit that the question before the House is not whether the government is corrupt or not, but it is whether this Bill is a good Bill or not. The day for bluff to carry an election is gone by.

Mr. COCHRANE. You found that out in Manitoba.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). And you will find it out in Northumberland.

Mr. COCHRANE. Come up and try.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I am going to go where there is some work to be done, and it requires no work to defeat the hon. gentleman. I submit that we badly require in this country the taking of statistics so as to understand the condition of labour. The position of the labour in Canada is different from what it is in the old land, because in England the representatives of labour can meet and make their power felt, but in Canada as a rule the workingmen are scattered in small communities. In the larger cities they do come together to some extent, but unfortunately they have not that information about labour throughout the country which would enable them to co-operate. There is not a public man in England who has not at his finger ends the very best statistics about labour, and there is not an intelligent labourer there who has not an opportunity of studying these statistics. So it is that the labourers and the statesmen in England can come together, and as a result the progress of legislation there is such that the workingman in Great Britain is in a better position to-day than his confrere in any country in the world. In the United States they do not understand it. The whole question there is, not what would be just and fair in the interests of the country and in the interests of labour and of capital; but the question is: What will be its political effect. As our population grows here from year to year, the labouring problem will become all the more prominent, and in order that we may understand the relations of capital and labour, and in order that labour which is the foundation of capital, and which will make Canada a great nation, shall receive just and proper protection under the laws, it is important that this Bill should pass. We anticipated this in Nova Scotia, as we anticipate all progressive movements. We had strikes in the coal mines in that province, and when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough).

Prime Minister of Nova Scotia, he introduced what was practically a conciliation Bill, and I say that no one Bill ever passed in the legislature of my province did more to prevent strikes and to conciliate labour and capital than did that Bill. If this Bill which we are now debating is a good Bill, is it any argument against it to say that the government is corrupt?

Mr. CRAIG. Is it too late to bring it in.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). There again the true Christian spirit comes out. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Craig) does not believe in instant conversion or instant reformation. Time is the essence of the contract with him in all things; and at the back of it all he expects to make a little political capital out of it.

Mr. CRAIG. Not a bit of it.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). This Bill is on the lines of the legislation existing in England, and we have plenty of time in one day to seriously consider it. If there is a member in this House who has not studied the question of labour in Canada he is not fit to represent any constituency in this country. The representative in this parliament who has not made a study of the questions affecting labour and capital in Canada, has not been alive to the public questions of the day. I take it that there is hardly a member of parliament here who has not large bodies of men engaged in mining, in lumbering, in manufacturing, and in the different avocations of life.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) mean to say that every member in this House is sufficiently informed as to the problems involved in the question of labour and capital, to pass this Bill without discussion?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Every member in this House ought to know the needs of labour and capital if he has studied the current questions of the day.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) think he himself is so informed?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I have given the question my best study, and speaking modestly, I believe that I do fairly well understand the question of labour and capital.

Mr. FOSTER. Tell us something about it.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you ever read the Bill?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I can understand that the hon. gentlemen opposite do not study the question. I can understand, for example, the man who only wants to boost the workingman getting up and saying: 'I am a friend of the workingman; I am your man.' That is entirely different from the study of the question. He is simply the vote-taker without reference to the conditions of the man whose vote he is asking. But the man who has studied the question will understand it differently; and I would feel that there was no hope for Canadian legislation in this direction or in any other direction that was right if the hon. members of this House could not more intelligently approach a Bill of this kind. Let us take the Bill and see what is good in it, instead of talking about the dying hours of the session. I trust that we have not received the valedictory of the hon. leader of the opposition; for, with all his faults, he is a giant, whichever way he goes, a giant in statement, a giant in prophecy. Talk of Isaiah and Jeremiah and Ezekiel and all the other prophets; they are not in it with the hon. gentleman. If he were among the prophets of old and the prophets of to-day, he would be elected perpetual high prophet of them all. He would give them answers in a speech of half an hour, he would convince them in an hour, and he would then make them all bow their heads in two hours, in regard to prophecy of the past, the present and the future. He would explain all the prophecies of the past to mean what he wants, he would explain the prophecies of the present to mean just what he says, and he would point to the future with all the influences of heaven and earth converging to return him to power. So that he would cover the whole ground. What has that to do with this Bill? It is marvellous that on the first reading of the Bill such an exhibition should be made. Let hon. gentlemen opposite read the Bill, and let every member, whatever his politics is, approach this question with an honest desire of seeing if there is not in the Bill that which is going to help the wage-earner and the son of toil in Canada, while not doing any injury to legitimate capital. Because, I believe there is, I hope that this House, irrespective of anything else, will come to the consideration of the measure honestly desirous of doing all we can in the direction in which reform is necessary.

Mr. THOS. BEATTIE (London). Mr. Speaker, I must confess that it is somewhat amusing to listen to the members of the government and their supporters, talking of their great interest in the workingman; but their actions do not bear out their words. Three years ago we had an Act passed which was of quite as much if not more importance to the workingman than the present Bill; but that Act is to-day a dead letter. I refer to the Alien Labour Act. There are a large number of workingmen in this country who have been suffering severely during the last three years in consequence of workingmen being brought from the United States and put in their places. At Belleville, the Grand Trunk Railway discharged a number of its employees and put Americans in their places. The same thing has taken place in London and other places. Then, only a short time ago a ticket clerk at Buffalo was absent for a few days on account of sickness, and a man was sent from London to take his place while he was sick; but that man was sent back to Canada. If the government imagine that they are going to obviate all labour difficulties by this Act, they are much mistaken. They had better put in force the Act already in existence before they pass another.

It being One o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I regret very much that I was not in the House when the hon. the Postmaster General introduced his Bill, but I have had an opportunity of glancing over it hurriedly, and I find in it some few imperfections. In the first place it does not define whether or not it interferes with any establishment employing, we will say, from one hand upwards. In other Acts that I know of, take the provincial Act of Ontario, a restriction is placed as regards the size of the factories to which such Acts shall apply. The Ontario Act only applies to factories engaging ten men and upwards. But the Bill before the House does not say anything with respect to the number of employees with which the arbitrators, provided under that Bill, will have power to deal. Then the Ontario Act is not compulsory, but only applies when the parties consent to have it applied, and the question occurs to me, whether we have the right to pass legislation of the kind submitted by the Postmaster General, and which will come into conflict with provincial Acts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). It is not customary to discuss the details of a measure on the first reading, but I do not wish in the slightest degree to interfere with the hon. gentleman's right to raise these points at this stage. I do not quite appreciate his question.

Mr. INGRAM. I have just said that the Bill before the House does not define the number of hands to which it will apply. It does not say whether it will apply in the case of one employee having a difficulty with his employers, or whether there must be a number of employees, and if so, what number. I would like also to know whether this Bill will apply to the province of Ontario, where there is an Arbitration Act in force, with all the machinery necessary to apply it to disputes of every description between employers, who employ over ten men and upwards, and their employees. I would, therefore, ask the hon. gentleman whether this Bill, if it should become law, will apply to the province of Ontario?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This measure deals with differences and trade disputes, '7' a trade dispute or a difference is irrespective of the number of disputants, so that it would apply to anything that came within the definition of a trade dispute or a difference. On referring to clause 3, the hon. gentleman will find what is contemplated to be dealt with by the measure :

Where a difference exists or is apprehended to exist between an employer or any class of employers and workmen, or between different classes of workmen, the minister may, if he sees fit, inquire into these causes and adjust the differences.

The rest of the clause goes on to elaborate that provision. Of course the Bill will apply to the whole Dominion, and its aim will be to promote the establishment of conciliation boards throughout the Dominion, and thus have machinery for dealing with such differences when they unhappily arise.

Mr. INGRAM. I know well that it is not customary to discuss the details of the Bill on its first reading, and I am not in a position to discuss them because I have only read it but once, and very hurriedly, but I have always understood that the provincial governments have power to pass certain legislation, and that legislation passed by this parliament conflicting with such legislation, would be ultra vires. In Ontario we have an Act respecting councils of conciliation and arbitration. I know that some years ago this Act applied to everything affecting labour, except wages. But in the province of Ontario, the greatest difficulties between employers and their employees have arisen on the question of wages, and I introduced an amendment, which was carried through the local legislature, giving these boards the right to deal with the question of wages, the same as every other question. Still this Act of the Ontario legislature is of very little importance, because it cannot be put in force without the consent of both parties to the dispute. So it is with my hon. friend's Bill. Supposing employees are dissatisfied and desire to have an arbitration, they must previously have the consent of the opposite party in the dispute, and if an employer refuses arbitration, the Act is useless.

I am one of those who believe that while arbitration may be a very difficult matter to deal with, there are some disputes—those which cause public interest to suffer—which power should be placed in the hands of the government to interfere with, and settle. Take the city of Ottawa, we have here a very fine electric railway system. Supposing a dispute should arise between the employers and the employees on that system, the present Bill would be entirely useless if the employers refused to consent to arbitration. A provision should, therefore, be put in the Act to meet such cases, by enabling the government, at a certain stage of the dispute, to interfere, and compel a settlement. Take the case of St. Louis, for instance, there public life has been endangered and several lives lost, by its people taking the law into their own hands ; and if such a case should occur in Canada, it would be advisable that some power should be in the hands of the government to deal effectively with it.

Reference has been made by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) to the alien labour law. He said he understood the labour question well and was speaking, as he believed, in the interest of labour. I do think the alien labour law, like the law introduced by the hon. member, lacks in the quality of workableness. It should be amended, so that less machinery shall be necessary to gain the object in view. No person can deny that our workmen are suffering more or less and that our alien labour law is not sufficiently stringent to protect the labourers against injustice inflicted upon them. The government should amend the Act so as to make it more workable and give better satisfaction to the country. I do not wish to take up the time of the House now, because I know that we shall have another opportunity when the Bill is in our hands.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I do not wish to delay the House, but I must express pleasure that provision is being made for the collection of statistics with regard to labour. I rise chiefly for the purpose of urging upon the government the necessity of arranging for the collection of crop statistics in connection with the Department of Agriculture. Arrangements were made some time ago for that purpose, and I am sorry that the present minister has not carried them out. In my judgment, there is nothing of more value to the farmers than to have reliable information which will enable them to form a judgment whether they should sell their grain or not, and this could not be in better form than in the form of reliable crop statistics compiled by the Department of Agriculture. I hope they will deal with the subject when they are dealing with labour statistics.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister (Mr. Mulock) what he means by a 'department' of labour? If it is a department in the ordinary sense of the word, that means a departmental head and another portfolio. But, I presume this is a branch of some other department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Clause 1 of the Bill states that the working out of this Act shall be placed by order in council in charge of one of the ministers. Therefore, this does not mean the establishment of a new portfolio. My hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) suggested the word 'bureau.' That is a term often used.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is used in the United States.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. In the Imperial Act it is called a department of labour. It is not presided over by a separate minister, but is attached to the Board of Trade, a department like that of Trade and Commerce here.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is attached to the Department of Agriculture in the United States.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. The head of the Board of Trade in England, who has this matter in charge, has many other subjects in charge also. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) may rest assured that, no matter what may be the name assigned, it is not intended to create a new portfolio and have an additional minister. If there was no definition of duties, one might be in doubt. But, on reference to the Bill, the hon. gentleman will observe that the duties of the department of labour are named by the Bill. For the present, these duties consist of the gathering and digesting of statistical information and preparing it in popular form for publication, and publishing it in the form of a monthly labour gazette.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

JUSTINIAN SAMPSON AND THE FISH BOUNTY.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. Did Justinian Sampson, of Lower L'Ardoise, Richmond County, Nova Scotia, receive the fish bounty for the season of 1899?

2. If not, why, and upon whose report or advice was the same withheld?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The answers to the hon. gentleman's questions are as follows: 1. No. 2. Because no claim for such bounty has been received at the department at Ottawa.

BASIC SLAG FERTILIZER.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

1. Did the Minister of Inland Revenue receive a copy of the following letter:

United States Dept. of Agriculture,
Division of Chemistry,
Washington, D.C.

H. W. Wiley, Chief.

E. E. Ewell, First Assistant.

W. D. Bigelow, Second Assistant.

April 13, 1900.

Mr. M. Dietsch,
Verein deutsch-oesterr. Thomasphatfabriken,
Hafenplatz 4, Berlin; S.W., Germany.

Dear Sir,—The proper method of analysis of the Thomas phosphate powders has been considered very carefully in this country by the Division of Chemistry of Agriculture and by the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists. Various methods of analysis have been tried very thoroughly. At the last meeting of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, held in San Francisco in July, 1899, the referee on phosphoric acid, as a result of the experiments which had been tried, made the following statement, on page

68 of bulletin No. 57 of this division, a copy of which I send you under separate cover: 'Of the many methods and solvents used in these trials, Wagner's method seems to be the only one that will give uniformly concordant results.'

In the second volume of my work, 'The Principles and Practice of Agricultural Chemists,' on page 74 and following are given the various methods practiced for the analysis of this material. In these the method of Wagner is given the preference, only one objection being urged to it, namely, the failure to specify the temperature at which digestion with the reagents is to be carried on.

You will see from the above that Wagner's method is the only one which has any standing in this country, in the estimation of the basic phosphatic slags, such as the Thomas phosphate powder.

The method referred to has not been adopted officially by our association simply because there is practically no commerce in such goods in this country. Should occasion arise for official control in this country, there would be no doubt of the adoption of the Wagner method in all of its essential points, as the official method for the United States.

Very truly yours,

(Sgd.) H. W. WILEY,

Chemist.

2. If so, from whom did he receive it?

3. Did he answer it?

4. If so, what answer did he give?

5. Does he now see his way clear to instruct the chief analyst of the department to adopt the Wagner method?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In reply to questions 1, 2, 3 and 4, I would say: The minister has no record of ever having received a letter from Mr. H. W. Wiley. 5. On the 6th of the present month, the minister, in answering question No. 6 of that day, stated that the department would be inclined to adopt the system recommended by the Society of Public Analysts in London, whose opinion it is proposed to ask.

PASSENGERS ON BOARD THE STR. ABERDEEN.

Mr. MARCOTTE asked :

1. Whether, on or about May 30 last, the steamer 'Aberdeen,' under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, made a trip from Quebec to Les Eboulements?

2. What was the object of the said trip?

3. At whose request was the said trip ordered?

4. Outside of the ordinary crew what persons took passage on board during the said trip?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I would say: 1. No: the Aberdeen did not make any special trip to Les Eboulements, but touched there on her ordinary trip with supplies down the St. Lawrence. 2. The delivery of supplies to the different lighthouses. 3. It was made in the customary time and manner, without any special order. 4. Sir Alphonse Pelletier and party were taken from Quebec to Les Eboulements.

SEARCH OF PREMISES OF J. H. OSBORNE. OF UTTERSON, ONT.

Mr. McCORMICK (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Upon what authority did officers Floody and Franklin, of the Inland Revenue Department, search the premises of Mr. J. H. Osborne, of Utterson, Ont.?

2. If authorized by the department, what were the instructions given to said officers?

3. By whom was the information laid against Mr. Osborne, and what was the substance of said information?

4. Did the officers discover any violation of the inland revenue law on the premises of Mr. Osborne?

5. What was the nature of the officers' report to the department?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No report of any such matter has been received at the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. In reference to this question, I would ask the Prime Minister to allow that to stand. The answer given, that there is no report, does not fully cover the question on the paper. The party who has asked the question wishes to get the information that it calls for.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection.

YUKON—APPLICATION OF C. HAMILTON AND Mr. CONSTANTINE re COAL.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Mr. Prior) asked :

1. Has an order in council been passed respecting an application to Mr. W. Ogilvie, commissioner of the Yukon district, by C. Hamilton, Esq., and Mr. Constantine for a coal area in said district?

2. If so, what is the date thereof?

3. If an order in council passed, did it refer to any of the areas covered by the following extract from the report of Mr. Ogilvie (33 V., Doc. Sess., 1900):

Coal.

'In my report of 1889, and also in the "Official Guide" published in 1898, I referred to the existence of coal at several points, notably on Coal Creek, in the vicinity of Forty-Mile, and at several other points in that region; also on Twelve and Fifteen-Mile Creeks, between Forty-Mile and Dawson. Since that time several discoveries of coal have been made, which I will not speak of, but simply state that they show beyond doubt that the coal-bearing zone runs through our country, crossing the Yukon River in the vicinity of the international boundary line, and continuing south-east along the base of a range of mountains named the "Ogilvy" range, to the Stewart River. Quite recently, in conversation with a miner who had prospected considerably on the Pelly River, I was assured that a distance of sixty or seventy miles up that stream, on the southerly side, he had, during the process of putting down a prospect hole, run across a seam of coal which he described as being twenty-two feet thick. This shows that fuel will not be wanted for future mining operations in that district.

Mr. McConnell, of the Geological Survey, has made an examination of part of the Indian River district during the past season, and assures me he has discovered in the upper parts of the same some of the tertiary measures. This being so, it is not improbable that coal may be found there, of course, in limited areas.

I consider the existence of these coal areas most important in the development of this country; in fact, it might be considered one of the most important factors in connection with the industrial development of the country, and I am happy to be able to state that the exposures are convenient, easily worked and inexhaustible. As to its quality, I have already referred in this report to a test made of it in the steam fire-engine at Dawson, and I may safely say that it will suit all ordinary requirements.'

4. If no order in council, as above, has been passed, is the government aware whether Mr. Ogilvie is or is not interested in any of the coal areas in the said district, and if he is interested, when did he, if at all, acquire such interest?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. No. 2. Answered by No. 1. 3. Answered by No. 1. 4. Although an application was filed in 1896 by Messrs. C. A. Hamilton, C. Constantine and William Ogilvie for a coal mining location within the territory described in the abstract from his report of 1899, no grant of said location was made. Mr. Ogilvie is not interested, as far as the government is aware, in any coal areas in the said or any other district.

EMERGENCY RATIONS.

Mr. TALBOT asked :

1. Is it true that Mr. White, collector of customs at Montreal, allowed the emergency rations shipped to South Africa to enter Canada from the United States free of duty?

2. Upon what authority has he done so?

3. What is the law in a case of this nature?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 1. R. S. White, collector of customs, Montreal, allowed delivery of emergency rations imported from the United States on collector's permission, without payment of duty, pending entry. 2. Upon his own responsibility. 3. Under the customs laws, imported goods are required to be entered for consumption, unless entered for warehouse, before the collector's permission for the delivery of the goods shall be issued.

TRAMP CATTLE IN NORTH-WEST.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

What steps, if any, are being taken by the government to abate the nuisance of tramp cattle from below the international boundary crowding on to the ranches and feeding grounds of our North-west?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The mounted police on the frontier are instructed to stop the encroachments of tramp cattle from the United States as far as possible. The question as to further measures for checking these encroachments is being considered.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

Is it the intention of the government to take the census on the 'de jure' principle? If so, why? Is not the 'de facto' the true principle? Is not the 'de facto' principle that which has been upheld in the past by the Liberal party?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). It is the intention of the government to take the census on the de jure system. The reason of this is that that has been the principle on which all the census of Canada have been taken, and that for purposes of comparison between different periods it is necessary that the new census should be taken on the same principle as the others.

McNAB LAKE.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

Has McNab Lake, township of Keppel, been sold or leased? If so, who was the purchaser or purchasers? At what price per acre and upon what terms? If leased, to whom was it leased, what price per acre, upon what terms and for how long?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. McNab Lake, in the township of Keppel, was leased to Mr. Edward H. Horsey, of Owen Sound, for the term of 99 years, to hold the same for the purpose of draining the lake and removing marl, clay and any other materials found therein from the land leased upon payment therefor of a yearly rental of $100. The lease provides that the lessee shall begin operations within one year from April 3, 1901, and operate the same for at least, three months in each year. The other conditions in the lease are the usual ones as regards payment of taxes, &c., transfer of lease, sale of liquor and re-entry for non-payment of rent.

SUPERINTENDENT MILITIA STORES, QUEBEC.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Who is superintendent of militia stores at Quebec?

2. Have any instructions been issued to him giving him authority to take the regular employees of the stores away from their regular duties to do his private gardening, furniture moving, &c.?

3. If not, will the government make inquiries and ascertain if the superintendent has not been using these employees for such work?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Lieut.-Colonel W. H. Forrest. 2. No. 3. Yes. I may explain that I found this gentleman in office when I came in. I do not know what evil habits he may have fallen into prior to my coming into office. It is possible he may have fallen into some and he may have continued therein. I will make inquiry into the matter.

BELFAST AND MURRAY HARBOUR RAILWAY.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. Has the government decided to proceed with the survey and construction of a cross section of the Belfast and Murray Harbour Railway from some point not far from Caledonia, passing at or near Montague Bridge to Cardigan Station or New Perth, on the Prince Edward Island Railway, as proposed by notice of resolution on the 21st day of April, 1896, by the late Minister of Railways?

2. Has the government received any petitions asking for the survey or construction of this cross section? If so, how many, including the number of names thereto attached?

3. Has the government decided to call for tenders for the construction of section of the Belfast and Murray Harbour Railway from Village Green to the terminus or any intervening points?

4. Has the government definitely decided as to route, where loop lines have been surveyed? If so, state, with particulars, the route decided upon?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The government has not yet decided to build the cross section or branch line referred to in the question, but the minister hopes to be able to make a personal examination of the locality this summer with a view of reporting to his colleagues thereon. 2. Yes, petitions have been received asking for the survey or construction of this cross section. Four petitions were received. One from Murray River in King's County, signed by Charles L. Barnes, and four others. One from Melville, P.E.I., signed by A. M. Beaton. Another from Grand View and Wood Islands signed by Malcolm E. MacDonald, secretary. A fourth petition received from John G. Mackenzie, corresponding secretary of the Belfast and Murray Harbour Association, and D. MacPhee, secretary of the Glen William Railway Association, signed by thirty persons. 3. Yes, tenders will be called at an early day, but the minister hopes first to make a personal examination of the localities as rival routes are being pressed upon the department for adoption. 4. No, answered by preceding question.

HILLSBOROUGH BRIDGE, SOUTH-PORT.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. When are tenders to be called for the construction of the Hillsborough Bridge at Southport, in Prince Edward Island? Are the tenders to be called for the work as a whole? If not, what division of the work is proposed to be made?

2. What limit of time is proposed for the completion of the work?

3. Does the government provide for the safety of foot-passengers and other persons using the highway portion of the bridge?

4. What is the estimated cost of the bridge now proposed to be built? What was the estimated cost of bridge proposed to be built under section 2 of chapter 4 of the Statutes of 1899?

5. What proportionate share of the cost of the bridge is the province of Prince Edward Island to contribute under the agreement for construction entered into on the 18th day of April, 1899?—capitalizing the half-yearly subsidy from the province at current rate of interest?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Preparations are being made for inviting tenders for this work, and hope in a few days to send out advertisements to newspapers. The work will be divided into two sections, the sub-structure in one, and the superstructure in the other. 2. Not yet fixed. 3. I ask the hon. gentleman to allow that to stand. The answer I have received does not correspond with my own recollection of the facts. 4. The estimated cost of the bridge is $750,000. The original estimate was, something less than $1,000,000. 5. The provincial government shall contribute annually towards the interest on the cost of the construction and maintenance of the said bridge the sum of $9,750 per annum, in semi-annual payments of $4,875; that such contribution shall be deducted half-yearly by the Dominion government from the grants, subsidies or allowances payable by the Dominion government to the said province, the first deduction on account thereof to be made from the grant, allowance or subsidy due and payable to the said province next after the completion of the said bridge, pro rata, according to the number of days elapsing between the date of such completion and the date of payment of such first allowance.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to mention that a rumour is going about in the House and in the newspapers that the prohibition question is to be brought up on Monday. I do not think there has been any statement made in the House about it, and I would like the First Minister to say what truth there is in the rumour.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It has been represented to me that Monday will not be a convenient day, and that Tuesday would be more convenient to several hon. members, and the government are prepared to give Tuesday.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). Will the House sit on Monday?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think the House will sit on Monday, and on Saturday also.

Mr. CRAIG. There is a strong feeling among some of the members that we ought not to sit on Monday, Dominion Day. We have only one national holiday for the Dominion, it is a holiday all over the country, all the cities and towns are celebrating that day. In my opinion the House ought not to sit.

Mr. MARTIN.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend will recollect that on one or two occasions already when we were near the close of the session, parliament has sat on Dominion Day. Of course we would all prefer to celebrate it, but I think it is still more preferable that we should bring on prorogation as fast as possible.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to a book that I have received today from the author, 'Canadian Diplomacy.' I dare say a similar compliment has been paid to my right hon. friend. I only received the book this morning, and have not had an opportunity of ascertaining its merits. It is published by an eminent Queen's Counsel, Mr. Thomas Hodgins, of Toronto, and I have no doubt will contain a great deal of valuable information. At all events, it is very desirable to have a book of that kind in our hands. I rise at this moment for the purpose of drawing the attention of my right hon. friend to the last paragraph in a letter that Mr. Hodgins has written to me in kindly sending me a copy of the book. He says:

Might I suggest that General Cameron's report, referred to on page 86, and also the Alaskan return moved for last session, be presented to both Houses and printed.

I want to call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the fact that this return was ordered by the House, and I think it is desirable that the suggestion made by Mr. Hodgins, who has had access to it, should be adopted, and that this return, along with Major Cameron's report should be brought down and printed. I may say to my right hon. friend, although I speak with great trepidation, for fear of being reminded that a certain relationship exists between Major Cameron and myself, that when the government decided to take up the question of the boundary between Alaska and Canada, I was instructed to communicate with Her Majesty's government upon the subject. Lord Rosebery, the then Foreign Minister, met the then Colonial Minister, the Marquis of Ripon, and the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Mead, and Lord Rosebery said: But, we really have no information upon the subject. It was suggested by Mr. Mead that the services that Major-General Cameron had rendered to the British government in connection with the delimitation of the boundary between the Lake of the Woods and the Rocky Mountains had shown that that gentleman was possessed of a great deal of technical knowledge in regard to such subjects. Upon Mr. Mead's recommendation he was borrowed from the War Department and installed in the Department of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. He made an elaborate report upon the treaties and documents in the Foreign Office. I dare say that the right hon. gentleman is quite aware of the character of the report. It is in the library, and, I think, will be found to be very well worthy of the perusal of any person who is engaged in dealing with that subject. In connection with the matter I may say that the return which has already been ordered by the House, I think, should be brought down, and that it should be printed as well.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The suggestion of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) is certainly a good one so far as it goes, because I have no doubt that the more light that is thrown upon the Alaskan boundary the stronger will become the case of Canada. I think Canada has nothing to conceal; on the contrary, Canada has everything to gain by the most abundant publicity in connection with the question. The reports brought down last session were considered by the Printing Committee, but evidently they did not think they should be printed. Of course, they did not pay that attention to them which, perhaps, they would have if their attention had been brought specially to the subject. But since these papers were not ordered to be printed last session, I do not know whether they would now come within the jurisdiction of the Printing Committee. If they do not do so, I will have an opportunity of looking into the book of Mr. Hodgins, which I received this morning. I have not yet had time to peruse it, but I will give an answer to the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he has considered whether he is going to give the return to an address, notice of which was given by myself, but which has not been reached in the Orders. It has reference to the papers in respect to the bridge over the Richelieu River, and the $35,000 voted therefor by parliament. It will be found on page 6 of the Order paper, under the head of 'notices of motion.'

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I cannot give an answer to my hon. friend to-day. I shall have to look into the matter, and I will give him an answer to-morrow.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond, N.S.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the hon. acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mulock) to the fact that on the 10th of last July I moved for a return which was ordered by the House, and which has not been brought down. Nearly twelve months have elapsed since that order was made, and I have been waiting for it day in and day out, week in and week out. I would ask the hon. gentleman to have it brought down at the earliest possible moment. He will find a reference to it at page 6939 of Hansard, 1899.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). What is the motion?

Mr. GILLIES. It is in reference to expenditures on public works that are specified in that motion.

ROYAL CANADIAN REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I see the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) in his place, and I would remind him of the remark I made yesterday in regard to the offer of the Royal Canadian Infantry in Victoria, B. C. The newspapers state that 'A' Company of the Royal Canadian Infantry have the honour of being the first to offer their assistance in case any Canadian troops should be required in China. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he has had any word of such an offer?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Since the hon. gentleman brought the question up yesterday a communication has been received by the Department of Militia upon this matter, and I have here in my hand the offer of the officers, non-commissioned officers and men serving now as 'A' Company of the Royal Canadian Regiment at Esquimalt, to serve in China or elsewhere in case their services may be required. It is in the following terms:

Hospital Point Barracks,
Victoria, B.C., June 19, 1900.

To Capt. and Lieut.-Col. Mackay,
Commanding 'A' Company,
Royal Canadian Regiment.

We, the undersigned non-commissioned officers and men of 'A' Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, respectfully request that you lay before the authorities at Ottawa, at your earliest possible convenience, the keen desire that we all have of serving Her Majesty Queen Victoria on active service in China or elsewhere.

(Sgd.) CHRIS. W. HOLLYER, Colour-Sergeant.

I need not read all the names, but the name of every non-commissioned officer and man is appended to the communication.

Mr. PRIOR. How many are there?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. About sixty.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). The other day I drew the attention of the hon.

Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) to an incomplete return, and I furnished him with a memorandum of some correspondence that should be brought down.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Copies of the extra letters that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) desires are being prepared.

STATUTORY INCREASES TO CIVIL SERVANTS.

Mr. ALEXANDER McNEILL (North Bruce). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether the government have determined to state a case for the opinion of the courts as to the right of civil servants to their statutory increases. I have called the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) once or twice already to that subject, and I would like to know whether the government have made up their minds on that question. It is one of very great importance, and one of very serious interest to the civil service.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I do not think that we can give any assurance to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) of any intention to carry out the suggestion which has been given by him. Whatever is the desire of parliament as respects statutory increases can be given effect to without the intervention of any legal tribunal.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. STUBBS.

Mr. WILLIAM STUBBS (Cardwell). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to rise to a question of privilege. I find that an hon. member of this House recently, as quoted by the press, has been accusing me, while a member of this House, of acts of which I am not guilty. I see by the press that a charge has been made against me by an hon. member of this House, who, I am sorry to see is not in his seat at present. I have reference to the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). Speaking at the Conservative convention in my riding the hon. gentleman is reported to have made this charge against me, as I find in the following statement in the press:

Amongst the political sins with which William Stubbs, M.P. for Cardwell, is charged, is that of attending the caucuses of the Grit party at Ottawa. Mr. W. H. Bennett, M.P., seems entitled to the doubtful honour of putting this charge in circulation in Mr. Stubbs' constituency. In his speech at Mono Mills, the member for East Simcoe boldly stated that Mr. Stubbs attended these caucuses, and used his statement in proof of the assertion that that gentleman had gone hopelessly over to the Grit party.

Mr. INGRAM.

I emphatically deny that charge. In the presence of the members of this House, and in the presence of the whips of both parties, I deny the charge in toto; it is absolutely false. I have never attended the caucuses of either political party since I came into this parliament.

INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E.I.) I call the attention of the government to the incomplete return they have laid on the Table with regard to the dismissal of R. K. Bruce, formerly inspector of gas at Charlottetown. Some correspondence, which I have information was addressed to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), is not brought down, and the hon. gentleman said that he had received no petitions. That may be all right so far as it goes, but has not the Minister of Marine and Fisheries received letters that have not been brought down in the return?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will look into the matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I did not quite hear the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I gave the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), all that I had relating to the return.

SUPPLY—DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. T. G. RODDICK (St. Antoine, Montreal). Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into supply, I wish to make a few suggestions to my right hon. friend the leader of the government, and to the ministers who may be interested, with reference to the establishment of a department of public health in Canada. I have found on many occasions, when looking up statistics and information generally on the question of health, that I have been obliged to go to two or three different departments, in order to get the facts I required. I would be referred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior, or to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and probably to some others. It seems to me it is time that the government should concentrate this subject more than it is at present the case. I would suggest, therefore, that the right hon. the Prime Minister should take into consideration the advisability of establishing a bureau, or a department of public health. I do not know that we are ready yet for a portfolio of health, as is to be found in other countries, especally in the government of France, but I believe that a department of public health is absolutely necessary in Canada, and when we have so efficient an officer as Dr. Montizambert available, it is an excellent opportunity to begin this work. Under that department would come the following subjects: The deputy minister, or controller of that department would be the sanitary adviser of the Dominion government; superintendent general of marine and inland quarantine; sanitary superintendent of the Indian reserves of the Dominion; director general of the leper asylums; supervisor of the establishment of a service of Dominion vital statistics; director of the sanitary portion of the census; director of the service of the protection of waterways, international and interprovincial; supervisor of the establishment of a sanitary police and of sanitary measures in the unorganized territories of the Dominion; supervisor of the protection of public health against the invasion of tuberculosis or other diseases, by the importation of consumptive immigrants, of sick animals, of unhealthy articles of food, or of undesirable freight, such as rags, &c., which should be thoroughly disinfected at the point of shipment, before being allowed to enter this country. As to the sanitary portion of the census, it is not desirable that the present official should be displaced, because he is a very efficient officer, but he should be asked to co-operate with the controller of this department. The establishment of a sanitary police is a very important matter. I believe there should be a strong corps of sanitary police, under the control of the Dominion government, who could co-operate with the provincial boards of health. I think at present there should be one or two such officials in British Columbia, watching the possibility of the invasion of that shocking bubonic plague, which at present is devastating the Orient. Besides that, I think it is time that we should have in connection with the central government, a bacteriological laboratory. That is a most important thing. At present we have to depend upon England, and upon our neighbours in the United States, for information regarding several very important questions in this regard. This laboratory should be equipped at the expense of the government, and I hope that my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, will be able to find a few thousand dollars to immediately start this work. Such a laboratory should be under the control of a capable man, and I trust that politics would not be allowed to enter into the question of his appointment. He should be the best man that could be found for the money. If this suggestion is carried out, we would have in this country, and right in this city, a laboratory in which would be manufactured tubercular and prophylactic serum of various kinds, and anti-toxine, and where men from every quarter could get information. I was present at a meeting the other day, where a gentleman read a paper on leprosy, and he said that he intended spending two or three weeks in Ottawa during the present season, in order to study this subject at the government laboratory. I was obliged to tell him that we had no such thing in Canada. In the United States they have a very efficient one; and ever since Pasteur, and Lister, and Koch began their work, each government in Europe has been vying with the other in inaugurating this work and comparing notes. Canada is behind the age in this respect. I, therefore, believe it is a matter worthy the consideration of the Prime Minister and of the ministers who may have to deal with it. This branch might well come under the Minister of Agriculture, and he might be named the Minister of Agriculture and Public Health. That would prevent the necessity for a separate department. I understand that already by order in council, Dr. Montizambert has all the emoluments and the position of a deputy minister, so that no change would be required in that respect. I have another suggestion to make, and that is that this government should have at the great ports of exit in Europe and in the Orient, well selected medical men, who would examine as carefully as may be necessary the immigrants who are coming to this country. I myself made passages westward bound on two occasions when immigrants died of consumption who never should have been allowed to leave the port of embarkation. These men should also see that the ships bringing immigrants to Canada are suitable, properly equipped, and disinfected, and that arrangements are made so that in the event of sickness on board the immigrants may be properly attended to. We have no consuls, as other nations have, and hence I think a corps of medical men of this kind would be found most desirable; and when we get our Dominion Medical Registration Act, which I hope will be passed at no distant date, and get reciprocity with other countries, our Canadian doctors will be able to fill those positions. I hope these suggestions will be taken in the spirit in which they are given, and that during the recess something may possibly be done.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I have no doubt that every member of this House and the country will appreciate very much the spirit as well as the manner and the succinctness with which my hon. friend from St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Roddick) has brought this very important question before the House. He has studied these medical questions from the public point of view as well as with the knowledge, the learning, and the advantages which a practitioner of his standing possesses. I think the House will congratulate him on bringing forward this matter even at this late day in the session. I notice that he suggests that it should engage the attention of the government during the recess, in the hope that something may be done at a future session. It therefore does not matter at all that this question has come forward at a late date this session, as no desire or intention is expressed that an attempt should be made to do any of this work this session. It falls to me as the minister who has charge of the quarantine regulations to take up this matter and refer to it along the line the hon. gentleman has taken. It is perfectly true that a little over a year ago I found it necessary to bring the chief quarantine officer, Dr. Montizambert, to headquarters here, and I asked my colleagues in an order in council to give him the title of Director General of Public Health, believing that in addition to the strictly quarantine work, there might come up various matters connected with the public health on which the government might seek his advice and take advantage of his knowledge and experience. An instance of this has already occurred in the passage of certain rules and regulations in regard to sanitation and health on public works, the chief management of which has been placed in the hands of the Director General of Public Health. Consequently this work, although perhaps in other respects not pertaining to my department, has been placed there. I confess I feel myself hardly competent as a minister to undertake the responsibilities of a large department or even of a branch of a department dealing with public health generally, in the wide way in which my hon. friend has suggested. The subjects which come under my particular charge as Minister of Agriculture are rather different in their character from those to which my hon. friend has referred this afternoon, and it would be very difficult, I think, for one who is particularly charged with the agricultural interests of the country to be burdened with the large branch suggested by my hon. friend. But there is another obstacle in the way which I think it would perhaps be more difficult to overcome. It is a fact that in our scheme of confederation, matters pertaining to public health have been relegated to the provincial authorities. Even in the slight way in which as head of the quarantine department I have to deal with these matters, I find some difficulties arising. I find some little clashing of authority, the provincial authorities as a rule being jealous of any interference with what they regard as their special prerogative. I have found this in one or two cases in connection with the diseases of cattle and in some other matters; and I really fear that if we were to undertake to establish here a medical department, or even a medical branch of the Department of Agriculture, we would find that friction increased and great difficulties arising, unless there was some more defined distribution of the relative powers and positions of the local governments and the central government. These difficulties, of course, might be overcome; but, knowing as I do the complications of the legal interpretation of the British North America Act which have arisen on various other questions, I fear that a great deal of difficulty and complication might arise in this case.

My hon. friend has spoken about the establishment of a Dominion medical council. I believe myself that that would probably be a first step in the direction he desires to take, and it would lead to other arrangements by which the medical men of the different provinces might bring pressure to bear upon their various local governments to consent to and co-operate with the Dominion government in establishing some general department and some general laws in regard to public health; and in that way it would accomplish a great good. In saying this, I indicate very clearly what is my deliberate opinion, that in these matters, so far as general principles and general action are concerned, I have no doubt that laws passed by a central authority, with a central administration, could be made more effective and more useful than any local or provincial laws. Therefore, I am quite in accord with the general ideas advanced by my hon. friend. These matters have been brought to my attention and been discussed in my presence by medical men. I have had the advantage not only of my friend's discussion of them, but that of many other leading medical men in the country, and I am very much interested personally in the working out of some such scheme. But I have not felt that it would be justified under the present circumstances in attempting to work it out, nor have I been able to give that time and attention to it, in the multitude of other duties in my department, which I think its importance demands. As soon as the work of the session is over, however, I would be glad to look into the matters which my hon. friend has alluded to, and deal with that correspondence which has already reached a considerable volume in my department, and consult, as occasion offers and permits, with such medical men as have taken an interest in this matter, in conjunction and co-operation with my hon. friend. I understand that that is his suggestion, and I am glad to fall in to that extent with it, although I feel that it would be a little premature at the present time to undertake to draw up a definite scheme. I feel that these things must develop gradually, from a demand on the part of the people, and that if we attempt to force the pace, it would be detrimental to the public interest and would only interfere with our progress towards the goal we have in view.

Under these circumstances, I am glad that my hon. friend has brought the matter up and drawn the attention of the House and country to it, and I shall be glad if the medical men, in their various assemblies and discussions, will go into it more fully and give the government the benefit of their views and advice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I quite agree in the opinion expressed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that we are deeply indebted to my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Roddick) for the manner in which he has placed this very important subject before the House. Its importance cannot be overrated, but, unfortunately, under our constitution, great difficulties are encountered at the very outset. I am free to admit that it was a great misfortune that the question of public health was not made, in the constitution of Canada, a subject pertaining to the central rather than to the provincial governments, because it is that absolute control which the provincial governments have that stands in the way of any organized and effective system being established by this parliament. There is a number of subjects, however, that have been touched upon by my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Roddick) that may properly engage the attention of this House. The formation of a Dominion medical council, I fear, can only be achieved by the various provinces agreeing to pass legislation of a similar character, to be afterwards ratified and endorsed by the parliament of Canada. In that way a substantial step might be taken to obtain that concurrent action in regard to professional status in the medical profession throughout the Dominion, which it would be very difficult to obtain by any other mode.

There is, however, the question of quarantine in the hands of this government, and by the appointment of able and efficient quarantine officers, the public health may be promoted to the largest possible extent, and I am glad to say that, so far as I am able to form a judgment, the officers appointed are men of very high character and standing.

Another question which has been brought up by my hon. friend is the treatment of leprosy. It is not to the credit of the Dominion that at this moment a disease of such a terrible character—but which, happily for us, exists in this country to a very limited extent—should yet exist to the extent it does and should not have attracted sufficiently the attention of the government with regard to the means of furnishing absolute separation, and, at the same time, providing such medical and nursing assistance for those suffering from it as would mitigate and divest it of some of its horrors.

There is also a subject which has been brought to the notice of the House by my hon. friend from Montreal, and no man in Canada, in the opinion of the medical profession, is a higher authority on such questions. He is known and recognized, not only as an exceptionally able member of the profession, but as enjoying, from the high position he holds in the profession throughout the whole Dominion and the standing he has attained in the great medical organizations of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, a prominence and public confidence and respect that cannot fail to make any suggestion from him be accepted as one of the greatest value. He has spoken of the question of tuberculosis in cattle. We know that that practically means what is recognized by the great body of the people as consumption in the human race, and we know that if there is any one disease that inspires dread, and with which the medical faculty have been less able to cope than almost any other, it is the disease of consumption. We know its ravages and extended character. We know that a great number of people annually die from that disease, and that the impression, to a large extent, has governed the medical profession, as well as the public, that it was a hereditary disease with which it was impossible to cope. But, we know that, in the present condition of medical science, that idea is exploded, and consumption is regarded more as a contagious than a hereditary disease. According to the best authorities, consumption in the human family is perpetuated and extended more by the use of milk from cattle suffering from tuberculosis than by any other means. Fortunately for us, the Department of Agriculture has the subject of tuberculosis in cattle thoroughly under its control, and if necessary parliament will give the Department of Agriculture any additional authority that may be required to grapple with it. As I will not have an opportunity, when this subject comes before this House again this session, of discussing it, I may be permitted to say a few words with regard to the extremely interesting discussion that took place in the Committee of Agriculture, when a very eminent professional gentleman, Dr. McEachran, gave an account of a series of most elaborate experiments that he has been conducting on the farm of the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards), who had given him the greatest possible facilities for conducting these most important experiments, and, as far as I am able to judge from the discussion, Dr. McEachran actually demonstrated the great achievements that may be accomplished by the application of professional attainments to the discoveries that have been made with regard to tubercule as a test for finding out the disease of tuberculosis in cattle, and the measures to be taken for preventing the existence of that disease in cattle, and also preventing the milk of cattle thus affected from being attended with the serious effects which at present follow from its use by human beings.

These experiments, as I say, were of a most interesting, and in my judgment, of a most conclusive character and opened up a very wide field for dealing with a subject of gigantic importance—the effect of tuberculosis in cattle, not only upon the herds of cattle, but upon human beings using the milk of those cattle. A suggestion was made that I think well worthy the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, and of the government and this House. That suggestion was that the government should make experiments with a view to ascertain what could be accomplished to exterminate tuberculosis from Canada. It was proposed that they should take a limited field, such as Prince Edward Island, and by the application of the principles that have been demonstrated on the farm of the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards), ascertain what could be accomplished. If the results are as successful as the experiments already made would lead us to believe, they would lead to the result of absolutely exterminating tuberculosis at no distant day from the whole Dominion of Canada. No person can estimate the enormous pecuniary benefit—to speak of nothing else—that would accrue to this Dominion, if the country, at no distant day, could occupy a position of that kind. I am quite sure that the experiments have been carried sufficiently far to warrant the government in taking the matter up. The great difficulty in exterminating pleuro-pneumonia in Great Britain and in the United States, was that it was found absolutely necessary to destroy promptly every animal affected with the disease. That disease has been exterminated in Great Britain, and repressed to the extent it has been in the United States, only by enormous public expenditure, because it was necessary for the protection of the whole country to take this course, and it was felt that the loss should not fall upon the owners of these herds. These experiments conducted so ably and successfully by Dr. McEachran and Dr. Higginson, on the farm of the hon. member for Russell, I think, show conclusively, that it is not necessary, in a great number of instances, to destroy the lives of the animals affected with tuberculosis; but, having discovered the effect of the disease existing, to separate them and thus avoid the great loss to their owners, or to the country, if the country has to pay for the cattle that are killed. I will not detain the House, great and important as this question is, further than to say that the subject is one, taken in connection with the statements of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick), of the very greatest importance; and I believe there is a field for the improvement of public health of incalculable value to the whole country.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I am glad that an hon. gentleman of the well-known ability of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick), has seen fit to bring this matter before the House. The Pacific coast is particularly interested in this question. As the hon. Minister of Agriculture knows, there is quite a danger, at the present time, of the bubonic plague and other plagues being brought into Canada from the east. I am glad to say that I believe the government is paying great attention to quarantine and has got it into first-class condition. I do not think any trouble or expense has been spared in making that establishment as good and safe as it possibly can be. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), has mentioned cases of leprosy that are now in Canada. In British Columbia, we have six cases of leprosy. These unfortunates are kept on D'Arcy Island, not far from the city of Victoria. I have asked questions in regard to their removal and have received answers from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). In answer to one question, the hon. minister said he had never been asked to take the British Columbia lepers to Tracadie. Now, on May 30 last, in this House, the minister said:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

My hon. friend (Mr. Montague), who preceded me in office, knows that the British Columbia people have been asking to have these lepers taken over and dealt with by us. I have never been convinced that the government at Ottawa was called upon to do that, and have not acceded to the request. No new arguments have been given that would cause me to change my opinion.

In 1899, July 24, Hansard reports as follows:

Mr. PRIOR. Has the minister yet changed his mind with regard to the necessity of compelling the lepers in British Columbia to go to Tracadie?

That proves very clearly that I had asked that they be removed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is such a new departure and one of such an important character that I would not, on my own responsibility, like to do it.

One would infer from this that the hon. minister had great objection to removing lepers from anywhere to Tracadie. But I find, in his answers given this session, that he has taken three lepers from Manitoba to Tracadie, one from Prince Edward Island and one from Nova Scotia—and not only that, but he had taken one from Nova Scotia within twelve days of the time when he spoke as he did in the House, stating that this was a new departure. The correspondence in the department will show that the government have been asked time and time again, by my colleagues and myself, to take these lepers, these wretched men, from British Columbia to Tracadie. We were told that this was a contagious disease, and they could not get the railways to carry the lepers. But they got the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry them from Manitoba, why cannot they carry them from the coast? They had to be put in special cars, and these cars had to be disinfected afterwards. But if they can do that for Manitoba or Prince Edward Island, they ought to do it for British Columbia. The government paid for the transportation of these lepers, a sum of about $1,500, and took them to Tracadie, and are keeping them there. And yet, when they have been asked, time and again, to allow the province of British Columbia $1,000, that is, to continue the allowance made by the previous government, they have refused to do it. The last grant for this purpose in British Columbia was in 1895, $1,000; but since then, it has been refused by the present government. We ask and we insist, either that they be taken to Tracadie, or that the $1,000 be paid annually as formerly for their maintenance, and handed over to British Columbia, and that we be treated the same as the other provinces. There are six of them, and last year they cost $1,116.82. The better plan is for the government to take them to Tracadie and let us get rid of them in that province. These lepers at the present time are on an island by themselves. There is nothing to prevent anybody from going on to that island and mixing with these lepers. It is not likely that white people who know anything about them would go near them, but no doubt there are Chinamen and Indians, men and women, who go there to buy vegetables. This is a state of affairs that ought not to be allowed to exist for a moment, and the government can stop it if they take the measure I suggest. They are there without any guard at all, they are left to themselves. Every three or four months a little steamer goes over from Victoria with some inspectors to see if they are alive, and if they have got all they want, and these wretched men are left there by themselves. Now and again one of them dies off. I say that it is not human, the government ought to take charge of them and look after them the same as they do the lepers in other portions of the Dominion. These are all Chinamen, they have paid their head tax to the government of $50 each, and I think the government should look after them during the short time they have to live.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John City). I think this matter is somewhat broader than appears from the observations of the hon. gentleman, because the whole subject of the Tracadie lazaretto is involved. I do not know what view the government may take of it, but after the discussion we had here the other day as to the undesirable character of the Chinamen, certainly we do not want Chinese lepers taken to the east and put into the Tracadie lazaretto. While that is a public institution, it is one of an entirely different character from a general lazaretto founded for the purpose of taking in lepers of all nationalities. It came over to the Federal government from the provincial government when the province of New Brunswick entered confederation.

Although I presume this is not the first time that this matter has engaged the attention of representatives from that province, I would like to get the opinion of my colleagues from that province, as perhaps the suggestion of the hon. member for Victoria might mean more than it appears to him. The strong testimony that the British Columbia members gave against the Chinamen the other day naturally arouses somewhat of a feeling against them.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I think the House is under an obligation to the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine's (Mr. Roddick), for bringing this matter before us. I would take this opportunity of bringing to the attention of the government a communication I have received from Rev. Mr. Ancient, secretary of the Episcopal diocese of Halifax. He writes:

Dear Sir,—In compliance with instructions received from the diocesan synod of Nova Scotia, I hereby forward to you the following copy of a resolution passed unanimously at its last session, which closed on the 18th inst.:

'Whereas, there are lepers in the Dominion of Canada who are very much neglected, being placed on an island without medical attendant, nurse, or even an overseer to attend to a proper and just distribution of food, this synod would urge upon the government of Canada the necessity of taking upon itself the care of all cases of leprosy that may be found throughout the Dominion, believing that such action on the part of the government of Canada is not only proper from a humanitarian point of view, but a wise and necessary sanitary precaution.

'That this resolution be sent to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and to each of the members of the Dominion parliament from the two provinces in the diocese of Nova Scotia.'

Now, so far as I am acquainted with the facts, there are no lepers in the lower provinces who are in the position of neglect such as that described by that resolution. There is a lazaretto at Tracadie which is under the care and supervision of a priest of the Roman Catholic church, who devotes himself to that work, and I presume that some medical supervision, nursing and attendance are supplied. It is a serious matter if the lepers in British Columbia are neglected in the manner stated by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), and I would be glad if the Minister of Agriculture would give us some information in reference to that matter. I suppose there can be no contradiction of the statement made in this communication, and of the statements made by the member for Victoria, and they certainly reveal a state of affairs that should not be allowed to continue. We cannot consent that Canada should leave these unfortunate creatures, suffering under the most terrible of all diseases, in a state of neglect such as described. If there be access open to them on this island as described by the member for Victoria, and they can be visited by Indians and other Chinamen, it is evident that a serious danger exists to the health of the whites also.

Mr. PRIOR. Just one word in defence of the credit of the province of British Columbia. I cannot allow it to go forth that these lepers are neglected in all respects. They get plenty to eat, small houses are provided for them, but they are left alone without medical attendance all the time, and with nobody to take care of them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I received that circular which the hon. gentleman himself has just read, and I replied to it, stating that the expressions used in it were hardly justified from what I knew of the facts of the case. Some years ago I was appealed to in regard to the position of these lepers on Darcy Island, British Columbia, and I felt it was a matter for the local authorities in British Columbia to deal with, I have taken that ground always.

Mr. PRIOR. Why not with the other provinces ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The cases are different, and I think the hon. gentleman would recognize the difference. At that time I caused an inquiry to be made by one of my officers in British Columbia into the facts of the case, and I found that even more was true than was stated by the member for Victoria. These lepers are placed on a small island not far from Victoria. They are visited regularly by a medical man, they are housed, they are supplied with food, and even with some luxuries. Some of them are far advanced in the disease, and are consequently somewhat helpless ; but out of the six, there are three or four who are but little affected, and are able to help themselves and to take some care of the others, and they do so. While they are not attended by any nurses from the outside, they nurse each other. They are able to carry on their gardening operations, they raise vegetables and food, besides the food with which they are regularly supplied by a little steamer that goes over from Victoria. Therefore, they are not at all in a destitute or neglected condition. What care they receive is given them by the provincial government conjointly, I think, with the cities of Victoria and Vancouver. Under these circumstances, I do not think that the terms used in that resolution are justified. I am glad to have an opportunity of putting this statement publicly before the House and the country, as I do not think it right that such a sweeping statement as contained in that circular should go abroad without correction. I would just say further, that, in regard to the Tracadie Lazaretto, it is in the hands of the Dominion to-day by reason of a definite agreement being a portion of the terms of confederation under which New Brunswick came into confederation. The Dominion government was obliged by the terms of confederation to take over the management and support of the Tracadie Lazaretto. If other lepers come to the Tracadie Lazaretto it is by reason of a favour that they are allowed to do so. But, I would say frankly that if we were to undertake to place Chinese lepers there we would have to start another lazaretto. The authorities would not accept Chinese at that institution. That is the chief reason why I felt that it was impossible to take these Chinese lepers from British Columbia and place them in the lazaretto at Tracadie. I grant that the reason which was given is a complete reason ; that is, that these lepers are under the control of the health authorities of that province as other lepers are in other provinces except those in New Brunswick, and if lepers are received there from any other province it is only as a matter of favour. The lepers who have been taken from Nova Scotia and Manitoba to Tracadie Lazaretto have been placed there with the consent of the people who have charge of the lazaretto. Without that consent I do not think we would have the right to impose upon them people from other provinces. I am not speaking now, from a judicial judgment or upon any legal opinion, but this is the ground that I have taken in discussing this question. I think it is tenable ground and a ground which would justify the course of the department in regard to the matter.

Mr. PRIOR. Does the hon. minister contend that if he is responsible for the lepers in Manitoba and Nova Scotia he is not responsible for the lepers in British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly, I am not responsible.

Mr. PRIOR. Then, why does he take lepers from those provinces.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because it was a favour.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Intercolonial Railway ..... $900,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Chairman, before resuming the subject as I left it last evening upon the adjournment of the House, I wish to make reference to the statement I presented in regard to the addition to capital expenditure that had been made during the six years preceding the change of government and from the date of the change of government down. I read the figures which had been prepared for me by the accountant of my department, to which the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) took exception. He was following me, I suppose, with the report in his hand containing the table of the capital outlay upon the government railways, and he observed, or he thought he observed, that there was an error in one of the figures—in the figure which I had given for the years 1890-1. I gave the amount, in round figures, which was added to the capital account for that year at $80,000, and the hon. gentleman said that it did not correspond with the statement he had in his hands. I have had the figures verified or looked at since I spoke on the subject, and my attention has been called to the way in which possibly the difference of opinion arose, or the error, assuming it to have been an error, which was noticed in my statement of the accounts, occurred. By referring to page 41 of the Report of the Department of Railways and Canals for 1891, the hon. member will see that the accountant of the Intercolonial Railway furnishes a somewhat detailed statement of the capital account for the year ending June, 1891. This gives the statement at $79,929.34. I made it in round figures at $80,000. My statement, therefore, was correct, but there is a sense in which it was not correct and in which the hon. member for Westmoreland might have been said to have been accurate.

Mr. BELL (Pictou).

It will be found on reference to a further account, that, properly speaking, perhaps, there should have been added to the $80,000, or the $79,929, which I mentioned, some additional amounts. For instance, there was expended that year upon the Cape Breton Railway $521,441. I am willing to add that to the $80,000, which I furnished the committee last evening. There was expended on the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, $220,886, and I am willing to add that to the amount of the statement I gave yesterday. I am willing, therefore, to correct the statement from $80,000, and by adding these figures to make it $825,000, or to multiply it by something over ten times the sum I stated. I am willing that the hon. gentleman should do that. I did not have it done. I gave instructions to the accountant of the department to make up correctly a statement of what had been laid out yearly on the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway. This seems to have been since included in the gross debt of the Intercolonial Railway, but the expenditures were perhaps not made on the Intercolonial account strictly, because the Cape Breton Railway and Oxford and New Glasgow Railway were not then a part of the Intercolonial Railway. But, nevertheless, in order to yield to the view of the hon. gentleman, I am willing to add these sums which will make the total $825,000 for that year instead of $80,000, and the grand total will then be $2,513,000, instead of $1,750,000.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) had no objection to the figures for 1890-1. It was the expenditure as given by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals for 1893-4, to which the hon. gentleman took exception. I suppose the hon. gentleman included beside the amount named, the expenditure which was made on the Cape Breton Railway, the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, and the Eastern Extension Railway. The figures for 1894, 1895 and 1896 are given in the report which I have in my hand. For 1894 they are $166,000, for 1895 $327,000, and for 1896 $259,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no question about the figures which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has mentioned. During these years the Cape Breton line was properly a part of the Intercolonial Railway. To make sure that my statement was not excessive in any respect, or was not open to any criticism, I had the expenditures upon these two roads eliminated. But I now propose to add them. The figures for the subsequent years which I have given to the House have been verified by the accountant, and I ask that the committee shall assume that they are correct, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.

I concluded my observations to the House yesterday by showing how the Intercolonial Railway accounts stood, and what were the results of the operation of the railway during the last fiscal year. I showed that there was a surplus of $62,000, after having expended on the maintenance and repairs of the line out of revenue, a larger sum of money than had ever before been expended for that purpose.

I dare say that the committee will be interested in learning what have been the results of the operation of the Intercolonial Railway for this current fiscal year. I am glad to be able to state that while the year 1898-9 was a record year in the annals of the Intercolonial Railway, the year 1899-1900, which terminates on the 30th instant, is a still more successful year. I have here a statement for the current fiscal year, and so far as the receipts are concerned, it is practically correct to the dollar. I have the actual receipts for eleven months and three weeks of this year, so that I am obliged to make an estimate for the remaining week, and I cannot be very far astray in placing before the committee the gross earnings for the entire twelve months. I showed the committee that in 1898-9 the gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway had grown more than three-quarters of a million dollars in excess of what they were when the change of government took place in 1896. I am able to tell the committee now that the gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway for the current year will exceed $4,500,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They will amount beyond all question to $4,530,000, and they may amount to $4,540,000, or, we will say, between $4,500,000 and $4,600,000. These earnings have grown rapidly and most significantly. They have grown until they exceed the earnings of last year, which was a record year, by over three-quarters of a million dollars. The fact is, that we have over 50 per cent of earnings in excess of the earnings when the change of government took place. We have added, it is true, 14 per cent more mileage to the railway, but, while we have done that we have added 55 per cent to the earnings of the railway, and that is a subject of congratulation not only to the government, but to the people of the country. In comparison with our predecessors, we have achieved a most significant and unparalleled result. The 14 per cent mileage which we have added to the road has helped us to secure, if it has not altogether secured to us, these additional earnings, but the experience of our predecessors in office was, that when they added nearly 20 per cent of mileage to the railway that addition was not attended by any such results. I will naturally be asked to state the net results flowing from these gross earnings. The question of the net results is a very important one, and it is one which, perhaps, will, to a greater degree, interest the House and the country. I cannot state with the same accuracy the net earnings as I have stated the gross earnings, because I am not in possession of the final accounts for more than ten months of the year. Perhaps it will be early in July before we can know with accuracy what the surplus for the year 1899-1900 is, but I can speak with a good deal of confidence as to what that result will be. It will be remembered that last year I calculated that the net earnings for the year would be over $60,000, and as a matter of fact they amounted to $62,000. I am able to state now with the same confidence, that for this current year we will have a surplus on the Intercolonial Railway of close to $120,000, if it is not beyond that sum. That will be nearly double the amount realized upon the operations of last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not say that a larger result could not have been accomplished. I am free to tell the committee that my view in administering the department is not solely to try and find how large a net result can be achieved on the operation of that railway. My object has been, as far as it was in my power—and I will be able to show that it was, to a great degree, in my power to carry out my object—my object has been to secure the largest possible amount of expenditure upon the maintenance and equipment of the road that our earnings would permit of, so as to enable me to bring the railway to a higher standard than before. At the same time, I will not deny that I have had a desire to preserve a fairly good record, and to show as good results as possible from a financial standpoint. This net result, which I estimate at $120,000, has been brought about without diminishing the preservation of the road in any degree, but, on the other hand, we have increased the outlay for the perfecting of our equipment, and we have achieved that very satisfactory result, although we have spent more money this year than was ever spent in any previous year on the Intercolonial Railway. I will read to the committee a statement, which I have had prepared, of the expenditure for the ten months, the accounts for which have been placed in my hands. For the corresponding ten months ending in April, 1896, the last term of the administration of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart)—a term as favourable to him as any of the years that he held office—the repairs to engines, &c., amounted to $236,328.

For the ten months ending April, 1900, which is the current year, the amount expended upon work of the same character, amounted to $309,000, or $72,673 more for the ten months under the Liberal government, than was expended during the ten months under the Conservative government, with which I am making a comparison. During the ten months ending with April, 1896, there was expended on repairs to all classes of cars, $272,244. During the corresponding ten months of the present year, the amount of exactly the same class of outlay, was $354,955, or $82,710 in excess of that expended in the year 1896. Upon maintenance of ways and works, there was expended in the ten months of 1896, $526,755; and in the corresponding ten months of 1900, there was expended $730,503, or an increase of $203,748. This makes a total increased expenditure upon maintenance of ways and works, repairs to cars, and repairs and renewals to locomotives, of $359,133, or in round figures $360,000 in the current year, over the last year of the hon. gentlemen's administration, or the last year that he held office. The actual expenditure, therefore, of the current year being so largely in excess of that of any year during the hon. gentleman's term, with which comparisons can properly be made, it will be seen at a glance that the net result of the present financial year has not been achieved by any diminution in the necessary and proper expenditure for repairs and maintenance. In order, however, that a fair comparison may be made with the hon. gentleman's year, 1896, I ought to add one-tenth to the expenditure of that year, which I may fairly and properly add, on account of 115 additional miles which I have to provide for over the mileage of the hon. gentleman, in order to make up what my footing ought to be as compared with his. I add, therefore, one-tenth to $1,035,327, which is the gross amount expended by him in the ten months ending with April, 1896, and I deduct the total of the two sums from the gross amount expended in these directions during the ten months of this year, and I take the balance as the excess of expenditure over that of the hon. gentleman. Adding these two amounts together, I give the hon. gentleman credit for having laid out upon repairs to cars, repairs to engines, and maintenance of ways and works, these three classes of expenditure, $1,138,827 which I deduct from the $1,394,460 which I have laid out during the corresponding ten months of this year. This shows that there has been an excess of expenditure during the ten months of the current year of $255,600 over the hon. gentleman's expenditure in the corresponding period of 1896. Therefore, the year 1899-1900, in comparison with the year 1896, shows very much better, even than I have just stated; and I will put together the figures which I think I may fairly put together, in order that you may see just in how much better a position the Intercolonial Railway is to-day, in the year of grace, 1900, than it was under the administration of my hon. friend. I point out a net surplus of $120,000 to begin with; then there was a deficit of $55,000 under the hon. gentleman, and I add to that the increased expenditure of $255,000, upon ways and works and maintenance beyond his outlay, for the same purposes; and I get a sum which I say I am entitled to claim as showing the actual result of the operation of the Intercolonial Railway this year as compared with its operation under the hon. gentleman. If you add $120,000, $55,000 and $255,000 together, you will have $425,000, the sum which I claim as the net result. If I had limited the expenditure on works, maintenance and repairs, as that expenditure was limited by the hon. gentleman, I would have been able to claim to-day a net increase of $425,000 over his showing; or a net surplus of $370,000 for the year, to which I would have added the $55,000 of the hon. gentleman's deficit, making $425,000, to show the actual result of a comparison for the two years. Now, I am willing to carry the calculation a little further. I am willing to do what has never been done before, what it has never been claimed ought to be done in respect to the capital expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. I am willing to enter into a calculation on the question of interest, and I am in a position to contend that the Intercolonial Railway, in this the second year of its operation under these improved conditions, has paid its way, and more than paid its way—that, besides having a surplus, it has, in point of fact, paid the interest on every dollar of capital expenditure that has been incurred by this government in respect to it. I do not admit that the Intercolonial Railway ought to be put in any different position from that of any other public work, because that would be introducing an element of unfairness. I know there is a disposition to say: 'You get parliament to grant you money to improve the road-bed or the equipment of the railway, and you ought to prove to us that you get results sufficient to pay the interest on that added debt.' I wish to say that on sound principles that policy can be repudiated; I do not think the country has a right to ask it. I do not think the thinking men of the country, if they reflect upon it, would make any such demand on this government. I think the Intercolonial Railway is a class of work which is entitled, as I suggested yesterday, to be put on an equally favourable footing with the great canals of the Dominion with respect to capital expenditure, because it is doing a work in the maritime provinces and for a large part of Canada, which is being done by the canals for other parts of Canada. We do not expect that when it becomes necessary to bring the Intercolonial Railway up to a proper footing, when the growth of the business demands it, when the development in any particular direction appears to call for it, there will be any unwillingness on the part of parliament to give the money necessary to put that road into such a shape that it may fulfil the designs in view when the policy of building it was taken up and approved. Therefore, I say, that while we are in a position, by reason of the results of the present year, to pay the interest on every dollar that has been expended in consequence of these improved conditions, we are under no obligation to do it, and I only point to it in order that hon. members may see that even if we were required to do it, we are in a position to meet that requirement.

Mr. BLAIR.

I have given you the capital expenditure, let me repeat it just for the purposes of the present statement:

1896-7.....	$149,000
1897-8.....	253,000
1898-9.....	1,082,000
1899-1900.....	1,650,000

We will have, therefore, $3,134,000 increase to the capital by reason of the expenditures we have made, but there is something I must add. I must add the cost of the Drummond County Railway, and I do it, not because I ought to be asked to do it, but in order to cover the whole ground. My hon. friend opposite, who initiated and introduced this policy when he brought about the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Rivière du Loup to Lévis—a policy with which I have no fault to find—would not think he was very fairly used if called upon to show that there had been an improvement in the business of the Intercolonial Railway sufficient to pay the interest on the cost of that extension. If the wisdom of that policy had been measured by its pecuniary results—I do not say that it ought to be so measured—I think that my hon. friend would have been in rather a difficult position. He would have found some trouble in showing that there had been anything more than an infinitesimal increase in the actual business of the Intercolonial Railway due to that extension.

But I am willing to add the cost of the Drummond County Railway, which was $1,464,000. That would give a total of $4,598,000 addition to capital account in connection with the Intercolonial Railway expenditure and the purchase of the Drummond County Railway. Well, the interest upon $4,598,000 at 3 per cent is $137,000, and that is more than covered by the surplus of the year and by the betterment of the road, which has, as I have shown, run up over a quarter of a million.

One hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars being the interest at 3 per cent upon the total addition to capital, if taken from $425,000, would leave very close to $300,000, as the margin which remains, resulting from the administration of the Intercolonial Railway for the current twelve months, after you make a comparison with my hon. friend's administration in his last year.

There is more than this. We have not only done this upon the same footing, by comparison, with what the hon. gentleman did, but we have been called upon during this current year to very much increase the wages and salaries of the employees. I have reason to believe that there was a hope cherished by some gentlemen, who are much interested in the management of the Intercolonial Railway, that sufficient irritation and dissatisfaction could be created among the employees to bring about a strike unless a very considerable increase was made to their wages. I am not going to suggest that it was necessary for the employees of the Intercolonial Railway to go on strike in order to get their wages increased. I am not going to say that what was done for them by the management of the Intercolonial Railway was done because we feared a strike or as the result of any threat or pressure of that kind. That was not the motive at all. But we realized that the expenses of living had increased, that wages had risen all over Canada, and although the rates on the Intercolonial Railway are not capable of being increased, although we know that the very instant we attempted an increase, the opposition papers would excite the most intense feeling among the patrons of the road and the people served by it. I felt that there was reason in the claim of the employees throughout its entire length, and in some branches of the management, for additions to their salaries. Their claim was a reasonable one, and I gave in to it, with the result that during the year now current we are paying at the rate of $175,000 additional wages to the men, compared with the amount paid prior to this year and during the term of my hon. friend. That is a considerable amount, and it is proper that that should be taken into account when you are contrasting one period with the other, and I think that the public opinion of the country will admit that it was proper for the government to deal liberally and fairly with the thousands of men in our employ and not wait until we were just reaching a period of dissolution and on the eve of an election. The public will admit that we did well to take up these questions as they arose and deal with them in a liberal spirit, and endeavour to stimulate an interest on the part of employees in the prosperity of the road and good feeling on all hands towards its administration.

This is a showing which proves that our policy has not been a mistaken one, and that when we pressed parliament, in face of very strong opposition, to give us an extension to Montreal, we were favouring a wise and prudent policy, the fruits of which bear the strongest and amplest testimony to its wisdom and prudence. We cannot have such a large increase in the business of the Intercolonial Railway without finding ourselves very much embarrassed by reason of our limited equipment. I think it is an almost self-evident proposition that when we have barely locomotives sufficient to do, in a very inefficient manner, the hauling of trains in a business which yields you $2,900,000; you must have very much additional locomotive power to do a business that earns you $4,600,000. If you have barely cars enough to carry a business which yields $2,900,000, you must have a great increase to the number if you are going to do business to an amount of $4,600,000. That is the condition of the Intercolonial Railway. We did not have cars enough in 1896 to more than do the business which was offered to the road; and almost immediately after the change of government, seeing that there was evidence on every hand of growth in the business, we felt that we would have to increase our cars and improve our locomotives, and make upon our equipment a large outlay in order that we might be able to meet the conditions that were arising, and to do the business which was offering to us. And we asked for these appropriations and got them. We did not, perhaps, ask for as much as I would have liked; we did not anticipate, perhaps, fully the extent of the growth that was ahead of us; but we did get some additions to our equipment, and this helped to increase the capital account.

But there is one little evidence as to the progress made. It can be grasped by anybody, and it goes to show what the condition of our car service is—I mean how limited and insufficient it is for the purposes of our business. That is the fact that, while under my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart's) administration, the amount we had to pay for car mileage year by year for several years did not exceed $1,000 or $2,000. That charge has been enormously increased during the last three years. I am sure hon. gentlemen will understand what I mean when I speak of payment for car mileage—it is a sum which is charged against one railway whose cars are being used and detained upon other lines, and which are not compensated for by a corresponding number of cars from those other companies. This balance has been growing enormously against us. Instead of paying $1,000 or $2,000 for the use of cars belonging to other railways, which we paid prior to 1896-7, we find that we are paying nearly $70,000 for car mileage. If we had the capital expended upon which that sum would be the interest at 3 per cent, it would place us in a splendid position. I hope the time is not far distant when we shall have all the equipment we require, and shall not have so large a balance against us on account of car mileage. For the years 1894-5 and 1896, under the late government, the car mileage did not amount to $10,000—the exact figures were $9,450. Prior to that it was much less—in some years it did not exceed $500 or $600. There was no increase of business in these later years to account for the increase; and there is only one explanation I can give, and that is that the cars were not of sufficient quality or they were not being maintained for use up to the standard that should have been observed in order to do the work. But while the amount paid during 1894-5 and 1896 was only $9,450, the sum that was paid by us during the last three years has exceeded $100,000—or eleven times as much.

Now, we have been in a very unfavourable condition, and are, to-day, in a somewhat unfavourable condition as respects our locomotive power. I do not hesitate to say that the locomotives in use upon the Intercolonial Railway down to 1896 and 1897 were of an inferior character, and not worthy of the Intercolonial Railway. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) had not to any extent improved either their size or their quality. They were light engines, and many of them had passed the age when they could be useful in the service. Many of them would have answered as well and better in the scrap heap than running on the road, because they actually cost more to keep them in order than it would have cost to purchase new locomotives. Under the hon. gentleman there were 204 locomotives. We have kept up that number, and have added twenty-three. The number of passenger cars under his administration was 276; we have added forty-eight. The number of freight cars of all kinds was 6,344; and we have added 637. And yet, we have made no addition at all commensurate to the addition we should be entitled to make if the road were to be equipped either with locomotives or with cars in proportion to the amount of business we are actually doing. I have had the proper officer in the service give me a statement as to what he felt we were entitled to in the way of additional locomotives and additional cars, having regard for the growth and increased pressure of the business. His statement shows that the engine mileage has increased 35 per cent, and the car mileage 50 per cent. Our increase of business, therefore, on this basis—which is a fair basis upon which to judge, according to the opinion of experts—shows the proportion of increase that should be made to our car and locomotive equipment.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. minister permit me to ask him a question?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the average life of freight cars according to the estimates of the department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, a freight car, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows, has no fixed life. One kind of car will last longer than another. The ordinary flat car will not last very long, without expensive repairs—it is exposed always to the weather, and the wood must necessarily quickly decay. A box car, which is covered in, will last longer than a flat car, particularly if it is kept well painted and in good shape. I do not know just what would be considered the actual comparison of years between a box car and a flat car, but I should judge that a box car would last double the length of time that a flat car would last.

My deputy tells me that a flat car would last in the neighbourhood of ten years, and he would add two or three years to that for the life of a box car. The average life of a locomotive would be ten years, that is to say, you could put a locomotive on the road in good shape, have it properly repaired when it needed repair, and it would last twenty years. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) I do not complain of him; he was under pressure, I suppose, and not feeling any very great interest whether the Intercolonial Railway was a credit to the country or not—was not anxious particularly to keep up to the highest standard the quality of the equipment. He did not send the cars into the workshops to be repaired as frequently as they ought to go. There were cars—passenger cars—that ran three or four years without going into the repair shops, though that class of cars should be touched up every year. All these things helped, no doubt, to keep down the expenditure on what is called the maintenance account. But, while I say this, I am not complaining of the hon. gentleman.

I think it is well for us to face the facts as they are, it is well not to be too ready to yield to any public clamour which may arise even though a deficit should become necessary upon the Intercolonial Railway. Let us make it our first object to maintain the road in a creditable manner to the country, even though a deficit should occur. Let us keep it in a condition that will enable it to meet the reasonable demands of its patrons and of the country generally. According to the opinion of the mechanical superintendent, I am entitled to add 35 per cent more to the locomotives we have upon the road in 1896; in other words, I am entitled to seventy-two additional locomotives. I am entitled, upon the basis which he has given us, to 3,500 freight cars, of all kinds; we have only added 637. I am entitled to add to the passenger cars, eighty-eight; we have only added forty-eight. I am entitled, therefore, to forty more of these. So you see, it is not possible for any person to say that these demands which are being made upon parliament to enable us to increase the equipment, are unreasonable, are not warranted by the necessities of the case, and are not such as parliament should be unwilling freely to grant.

I am asking this year for appropriations of a considerable amount. Under the branch of collection of revenue alone, I have asked for a much larger sum than has ever been asked for before. In 1895-6, $3,200,000 was the amount voted under the head of collection of revenue: in 1896-7, the sum voted was $3,200,000; in 1897-8, $3,100,000; in 1898-9, $3,600,000. In the main estimates of the present year, I have asked for $3,650,000, and I am obliged to ask for $900,000 more, which will make $4,550,000, at least that is the best estimate I can form upon the subject. Why am I asking parliament to give so large an amount, under the heading of collection of revenue? I am doing it because I cannot operate the road, I cannot pay the working expenses, unless I have a sum approaching this amount. It may not be necessary to take every dollar of this sum, but it will take very nearly this amount, therefore, I have added $900,000, which will make $4,550,000. In that $1,350,000 of increase on this branch of the appropriations alone, you will see accounted for a considerable portion of the increase in the added appropriation which this government are asking for during the current year. I see a statement in the newspaper press that the fact that we are asking this additional sum of $900,000 is a proof that we are bound to have a great deficit upon the Intercolonial Railway. I have explained the reason of that addition. The committee will see that not one dollar of this sum is going to be paid out of anything except current revenue expenses, those which are paid for out of revenue. It is the same with the Intercolonial Railway as with any other department of the government, unless you have a vote for a sufficient sum to enable you to cover all these outlays, you cannot make them, you will have to stop running the

Mr. BLAIR.

Intercolonial Railway. If we should happen to do a ten million dollar business this year we would probably want nine millions of appropriation upon collection of revenue account; and, therefore, the expenses for the year upon the consolidated revenue account would be increased enormously. But, you are getting back every dollar of this, every dollar of money which you are now voting will be returned to you, will find its way into the treasury, and you will have over and above this sum, over and above all other sums that are voted upon revenue account, you will have a surplus when the accounts come to be made out for the year ending June 30 instant, of $120,000 to the good. The present year I am asking on capital account, in the main estimates, for $950,000, and in the supplementaries for the next year I am asking for $400,000, and in the supplementaries for the current year I am asking for $190,000, making a total of $1,540,000. I am asking for this money in order that I may increase the locomotive service. I am only asking for enough to build twenty locomotives this year, which will cost $320,000. I am asking for a sum sufficient to enable me to add 1,250 box cars, which will cost $1,187,500. I am asking for a sum to enable me to get thirty-nine live stock cars, which will cost $37,050. These sums will absorb the three items placed in the main estimates, and in the supplementaries for the current year, and in the supplementaries for the year to come.

Mr. POWELL. What about this $1,915,000 on capital account in the supplementaries brought down last night?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have included the sum in my statement here. I have already mentioned that $400,000 of that amount is for rolling stock. I have shown that the $400,000 in the supplementaries, the $950,000 in the main estimates, and the $190,000 in the supplementaries for the current year, making a total of $1,540,000, have been asked for in order to furnish the three classes of equipment, locomotives, box cars and live stock cars.

There is an item in the supplementary estimates of $420,000 for steel rails. This sum is being asked for in order to put the Cape Breton line in proper shape, to replace the present rails with 80-pound steel rails, from Sydney to Cape Breton, and to put new rails on the main line. The rails there now are 56-pound rails, and have been in use many years. They were old 56-pound rails when they were put down in Cape Breton, they are in a very inferior condition, and are not fit to lie there any longer. We cannot do the business with them. There is unquestionably a great development promised in the island of Cape Breton. The business which is being started in the town of Sydney gives promise of furnishing a large amount of traffic to the road. The department finds itself confronted with this question: Shall we allow that business to be done by water transit, or shall we put the Intercolonial Railway in such a condition as to be able to secure that traffic? It will be a profitable traffic, it will be necessarily a large traffic, and it is in our power, I think, to secure it. One of the things which we are bound to do in order to secure that traffic is to put down new rails in place of those which are now lying on the line. The amount which I have asked for here is the difference between the saleable value of these rails and the cost of new ones. I think $120,000 will suffice for that purpose. I am asking also in the supplementary estimates for a sum to enable me to get a steam ferry for the Gut of Canso. This is practically the key to the railway situation. It is necessary that there should be placed upon the strait a class of steamer which will enable us to carry a full loaded train, whether passengers or freight, to carry the cars over and deliver them promptly without turning the boat, going straight over and coming straight back, and of sufficient strength to confront the ice conditions in winter. We have to do that if we are going to catch the business which is offering now in the Island of Cape Breton. I will enter into that item more in detail later on. I mention it now because it is one of the large items, and because there is no question about the imperative need. If we are going to recognize the need of the railway in the matter of equipment, it is necessary that these things should be done. I think I can appeal to the House with the same confidence as I have done before, in regard to what will be the result of parliament giving us the grants which we asked for. I think I can fairly say that I have not heretofore overstated the probable results, and yet our expectations have been about realized. I have very considerable expectations in respect to the growth of railway business in connection with developments at Sydney and North Sydney. At all events, it is imperative that we should relay the line and improve it, that we should provide additional sidings, and equip ourselves with additional station and yard accommodation and that we should furnish a ferry for the Strait of Canso. That portion of the line between Mulgrave and Truro, is laid with an inferior rail, and it is in an unsatisfactory condition, but it is not in so serious a condition as the line is in Cape Breton Island.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he has considered the question of a bridge across the Strait of Canso. The very large amount which he is asking for the improvement in the ferry would almost indicate that by a somewhat larger expenditure, we would absolutely obtain a through line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), ever given any thought to the probable cost of a bridge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is what I was asking the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was asking the hon. gentleman if he had ever given the subject any thought while he was in the department?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I cannot say that I have. No, I have not, but in passing the Strait of Canso I have had my attention drawn to a locality where a bridge would be practicable. In that connection, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is aware that the necessity for rapid and easy communication had never arisen to the extent that it has arisen very recently in regard to that line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is quite right about that. But I thought that, possibly, among the other subjects, he had considered while he was in the department, this might be one that would have come under his notice.

Mr. POWELL. There was no road in Cape Breton when the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), was in the Railway Department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I think myself, without undertaking to express any definite opinion upon it, that the construction of a bridge across the Strait of Canso would cost many, many times more than the ferry service. With my crude ideas on the subject, I would not like to say that I would construct a bridge across the strait for much less than $10,000,000, or $15,000,000. We are only proposing to ask now for a quarter of a million. It may possibly a little exceed this sum. I want to state the case as strongly against myself as I can. It may be that we will have to expend something over $250,000, but we are in hopes that we will be able to keep it within the $250,000. We are in hopes that the ferry service will afford the accommodation we will need for many years and it is the only practical way of making the connection at present.

Now, I think I have dwelt upon mainly, and though at some length, yet as briefly as I could, the question which I thought would be of interest to the committee in a general sense. I have now one or two observations more to make before I conclude my statement. One question I desire to touch upon, is a question that has attracted a good deal of attention in the opposition press. It has not been much discussed in this House of parliament, but I cannot say quite the same in regard to both Houses of parliament. There is a gentleman in another place, who has attacked, with a good deal of violence, the action of the department in respect to its award of contracts for the supply of lubricating oils. It is very evident to me that the gentleman who has taken this subject up with such energy, has not acquainted himself with the facts, and that he has not really known much about the matter that he was discussing. When I came into the department, tenders had been received by the late government for the supply of oils for the Intercolonial Railway. I think I can say that the contract had been awarded. The contract had not been executed but, it had been awarded to what I considered the company making the most favourable offer. It was awarded very much along the same lines that the contracts had been in previous years, and as far as I could gather, or form a judgment, myself, upon the subject, there had not been satisfaction in the working out of these contracts, as we had a right to expect. Among the many tenderers at that time was a company known as the Galena Oil Company. This is a company which had been organized, which was not then in Canada, but which was an American institution. They tendered upon a new basis for the supply of oils for the Intercolonial Railway. They offered to guarantee to the Intercolonial Railway authorities, that the cost of lubricating the road for a year would not amount to as much per thousand miles during the continuance of their contract, as it had during previous years, by 10 per cent. Or, in other words, they said: We are prepared to furnish oil at a cost of 10 per cent less than oil has cost you hitherto. It looked to me like a very favourable offer, and when I became aware that 90 odd per cent of the railways in America were being supplied by this company with their oil, and were operating under a contract of the same character as, I have reason to believe, I felt that it was an experiment that the Intercolonial Railway might very well make, instead of continuing along in the old groove and getting unsatisfactory service. I thought it would be well to try the Galena Oil Company, and see how their contract would work out. The conditions under which the contract was made, are these: The oils which they supply are charged for at a fixed rate. I state at once, and this is where the gentleman who has been making the criticisms upon this matter has been labouring under a misapprehension, that the prices of the oil they furnish are high, and they claim they are high class oils, but the prices which are charged against the Intercolonial Railway are identical in every particular with the prices that are paid by all the other railway companies. I took pains to satisfy myself that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway Companies pay exactly the same prices for the oils furnished them that this company charge us. But the question of the price of the oil was not a very material consideration, because I had the condition guaranteed, that no matter what quantity of oil we used, and no matter what price they charged, when we came to wind up the transactions of the year our bill should be 10 per cent less than it had been in any previous year. We therefore, stood to win to the extent of 10 per cent in any case. The Galena Oil Company proceed upon the supposition that a good deal of oil is wasted, and so they have experts of their own upon the railway to instruct the enginemen and drivers to be as economical as possible, and they watch them and complain of them if there is any waste. They have therefore, an interest to keep down the consumption, because the less consumption the less they lose under the arrangement they made with us. Under these circumstances I presented the case to the government, and my colleagues cancelled the award of contract that was made, and authorized the entering into this contract, and it has been continued down to the present time. The service has been eminently satisfactory. The officers of the road from the general manager down, are assured that the results have been much more favourable in every way than under the previous system of contracting. After the first contract expired I thought I would perhaps press the point a little further, and I said: You have guaranteed us 10 per cent saving, but we will only renew the contract upon the condition that you will guarantee us 15 per cent. Rather than not get the contract—and I suppose even at that rate it was profitable to them—they guaranteed that the cost per 1,000 miles would be 15 per cent less than it had been prior to the time they contracted with us. Now we have this arrangement recently entered into. We find that the expense for oils on the Intercolonial Railway has been year by year coming down, until we are justified in forming the opinion that we have pretty nearly struck rock bottom. Under the operation of the old contracts it cost to oil an Intercolonial Railway locomotive per thousand miles $3.72, to oil a passenger car 80 cents per thousand miles, and to oil a freight car 22 cents. Now we have got down to the point that we have a fixed contract with them that for locomotives we will not pay more than $2.72 per thousand miles, which is a saving of $1 per thousand miles for each locomotive; and instead of paying 80 cents for a passenger car, as under the old system we have got it down to 20 cents, and we have got the freight cars down from 22 cents to 12 cents. We are, therefore, actually saving under this contract $10,000 a year and upwards in the cost of oils for the Intercolonial Railway. Yet this gentleman denounces this government in all the moods and tenses because we have made this contract. We are paying the same price that every railway company in America is paying. However, this gentleman apparently did not care so much about the price of oils, as he did to make his statement a basis upon which to condemn the government for paying alleged exorbitant prices. I thought it well that I should put the committee in possession of the actual facts, lest hon. gentlemen might be led astray by the statements made in the opposition press and elsewhere, and what are based upon an entirely erroneous conception.

Let me say a word or two in conclusion. I want the House to bear in mind that the improved condition of the Intercolonial Railway during the past year, which is a record of record years, has not been brought about by any diminution of expenditure upon the railway for its maintenance and its repairs, either as respects the road-bed or the equipment. I want the House to remember that the Intercolonial Railway to-day is in a better condition than it ever was before. I want the House to remember that the equipment of the Intercolonial Railway is better than ever before, and on the basis of this year's operations (which I hope will not be an exceptional year) this equipment is costing the people of the country nothing. I want to point out that we can place the Intercolonial Railway to-day alongside of any other railway in Canada, and we can claim honestly that the government has not allowed the character of this great railway system, belonging to the nation to become depreciated in any way whatever. We can claim that our vestibule system of train service is as good as is to be found on this continent. We can claim that the dining car service, which was never given on the Intercolonial Railway until three years ago, cannot be excelled on any railway in America. I believe that the people of Canada take a pride in this railway, and they can now legitimately do so. There may be some narrow criticism because we are spending money, but not only the regular patrons of the Intercolonial Railway, and those who live along the line, but the people from all parts of Canada as well, who travel on that railway, are proud to see that this government road is maintained, so as to be a credit to the country, and that when strangers travel over it they need not be ashamed to point out that it is a railway owned and operated by the government of the country. I believe that the people in all parts of the country will readily respond to a statement of that kind.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman says 'no.' but I believe to the contrary. I believe that while the people will not tolerate extravagance, yet they are proud to see the national railway properly equipped, and they are all the more satisfied because that result has been attained without extravagance. At all events whatever expenditure has been made on the Intercolonial Railway to bring it up to a high standard of efficiency, the results obtained have been commensurate with the outlay that has been made. I want the House to bear in mind that this most satisfactory showing of the Intercolonial Railway has not been obtained by resorting to any means of cutting down expenditure for proper and necessary purposes, or by any manipulation of the accounts, or by any alteration or change in the system of book-keeping. The figures which I have given to this House have been compiled by the officers of the Intercolonial service, the same men who did the work for my predecessor, upon exactly the same basis, and in precisely the same way. I therefore, wish to emphasize these figures. The earnings in the last four years have been as follows:

1897-8.....	3,117,669
1898-9.....	3,738,331
1899-1900.....	4,533,000

A steady, continuous and marked growth—a growth, the possibilities of which were entirely repudiated and denied by hon. gentlemen opposite in their criticisms upon the statements which were made. Now, Sir, is there a parallel in the life of the Intercolonial Railway for such a statement as I have presented to you? No. Stagnation was the record of the Intercolonial during all the preceding years. It has taken a fresh start; it has received a stimulus. I do not care where it gets the stimulus from, the fact remains, and that may be taken as some evidence that the policy and the administration of this government have not been erroneous or mistaken. Now, I ask you to compare the four years which I have given you with the four years just preceding, some of which were as prosperous years as we ordinarily have in the maritime provinces; put the figures for the two periods alongside of each other, and you will be able to draw your own conclusions. The earnings in those four years were as follows:

1892-3.....	$3,065,499
1893-4.....	2,987,510
1894-5.....	2,940,717
1895-6.....	2,957,640

Tied almost to the stake of $2,900,000; they could not get away from it. There was no life in the old road. But whatever may be the causes of it—and I attribute it largely to the policy of giving the road a live terminal in the city of Montreal—we have shown a record of great and continuous progress which, if achieved under the administration of my hon. friend would have evoked adjectives more extreme than any we have ever heard from my hon. friend in his denunciations of the gross misconduct of this administration. Let me emphasize at the same time that this result has not been won by any depreciation in our expenditure. In 1896-7, 1897-8 and 1898-9 there was an excess of $244,926 expended by this government in keeping up the quality of the road over which was expended in the same direction in the preceding three or four years. I do not say that we spent all that the railway would have stood; it would have stood more. We have not spent all that I would have liked to spend, or that I could have spent with good results to the country. But the fact remains that in those three years we spent $80,000 per year in excess of what our predecessors spent in those classes of expenditure which are recognized as proper for the maintenance of the railway. In addition to that, we have paid the rentals of the Drummond County and the Grand Trunk lines; we have increased the wages of our men all along the line to the extent of $175,000 a year; we have paid car mileage in one year alone enough to pay the interest on $2,000,000; and we have given you, without adding to the burdens of the people, a class of service and an improved railway of which the people of this country have no reason to be ashamed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 166) to incorporate the British American Pulp and Paper Company.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

SUPPLY.

(The House resumed in Committee.)

Mr. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). At six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, the hon. the Minister of Railways had just finished a lengthy description of the canal expenditure and the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. Starting at Sault Ste. Marie Canal, he stated his intention of expending about $1,200,000 for the purpose of completing that work. We will have the details further on when the estimates come up, but I cannot see what work is required to be done there that would call for this expenditure. The hon. minister then brought us down to the Welland Canal, and stated that he intended to make an expenditure there of over $1,000,000, and proceeding to the Galops Canal, he announced an expenditure on that work of $750,000, and he followed this up with the statement that he proposed to spend nearly $900,000 on the Soulanges Canal, and a similar amount on the Lachine Canal. He told us that the expenditure on the canal system of the St. Lawrence had now reached the total of $77,000,000 or $78,000,000, and that by an expenditure of $10,000,000 or $11,000,000 more we would complete the St. Lawrence system along with the Trent Canal. To complete this last enterprise, he expected to require about $3,500,000, according to the plans which had been adopted by the department.

I notice that the hon. gentleman, when dealing with the large expenditure on our canal system, did not go into any details, but contented himself with declaring that it was an expenditure to which the people had no objection, and that although the annual expenditure for the purpose of keeping those canals in repair amounted to about $354,000, there was not a grumble, from one end of the country to the other, against it. He did not dwell at all upon the details of the management and expenditure in the case of the canals, but reserved all his details for the work on the Intercolonial Railway.

I would ask the hon. gentleman why it is necessary to spend the amount he proposes, $1,200,000, on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal? I would ask him further, what does he propose to do with an expenditure of over $1,000,000 on the Welland Canal? I thought that the hon. gentleman had completed this canal system. I judged, from the speech, made from one end of the country to the other, that the present government had not only completed the canals but done the whole work. Under their management our canal system was to have been completed, at the latest, in 1898, with a draught of water of fourteen feet navigation. But, evidently the hon. gentleman has not completed the canal system any quicker or cheaper than we would have completed it. Every one knows that the Galops Canal will not be completed even this year, and I would like to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the expenditure on that work. With the thorough knowledge of details and management of all the canals and railways of this country on which the hon. gentleman prides himself, he ought to have no difficulty in explaining some of the details on which I desire to be informed now.

I notice in the Auditor General's Report that Gilbert & Co. have a contract for dredging the Galops Canal, and they seem, strange to say, to have got the contract without tender or anything else. They have had it certainly for three years, and I would like to know really how long they have had it. They only get $425 a day for a dredge and a scow and a tug, and I notice that although the department gives the number of yards taken out in nearly every other case, there are no details given as to the number of yards which Gilbert & Sons have taken out; and I will venture to say that each yard of the excavations made on the Galops Canal costs the country at least $50 per yard. On the same page in the Auditor General's Report you will find that a dredge, scow and tug supplied by a Mr. Cleveland, and no doubt precisely the same as the dredge, scow and tug for which Gilbert & Sons are receiving $425 per day, are doing the work at $100 per day, and, no doubt, the reason is because the work was given out by tender.

Speaking of the Galops Canal, I have drawn already the attention of the minister to the fact, that, perhaps, it was not necessary at all to build a canal there. That part of the work is being utilized now without the expenditure that is being made through the village of Cardinal.

The lock that is being made in the Galops is being utilized, not only for large vessels and barges going down, but is utilized by them coming up stream. I told the hon. minister at the time that this work was unnecessary and also the Rapide Plat Canal. I stated that vessels of a class to be economically used on the canal and which were being constructed at the time would need to have power to drive them at the rate of ten or twelve miles an hour, the rapid at that place being, I believe, five or six miles an hour. I told the hon. minister that an expenditure of two millions might be saved by utilizing the lock which is at present built to get into the canal, and that the old canal could be used for the present barge system, but that for the modern vessels there was no necessity to build a new canal. However, the new canal is being built—though it is not finished, and, I suppose, will not be finished before next year. We come now to the Soulanges Canal. The hon. minister took the contract for finishing the locks at the lower end from the contractor, and, without calling for tenders gave it to Ryan and Macdonald at $200,000 more than the work would have been finished for under the contract of Mr. Stewart. Is that part of the work completed? Is it done better or will it be done any more quickly than under the former contract? I say, no. The contract was taken from a capable contractor and given to another without any advantage being gained, and at a higher price. The minister asked $900,000 or thereabouts for the Lachine Canal. I thought that work was about completed. If the money is not to be spent on an ocean lock so as to use that part of the canal next the harbour for the ocean going vessels, I do not know what the object of it can be.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I stated that the amount was half a million.

Mr. HAGGART. I see Hansard reports it as $967,000, and that must be correct, as the whole is totalled up and makes $10,235,000. I suppose that when the minister speaks of half a million, he means the vote of this year; but what I am speaking of is the amount necessary to finish the work. What I protest against is the claim of the hon. gentleman that this work was completed more expeditiously than it would have been completed under the late government. The work is not finished yet, and I doubt that it will be finished any sooner, or that it will be any better than under my management. The hon. minister is not entitled to any credit. The plan to have the locks 270 feet by 45 feet with a depth of 14 feet of water was approved by Mr. Mackenzie, and, from 1874 to 1878, he worked on that plan. It was continued by the late government up to 1896, when hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. They are not entitled to credit for the initiation of the plan or for anything else in connection with it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) makes a claim—at any rate his followers do all through the country; it is one of their great boasts—that this canal system has been completed in a short time. The hon. minister (Mr. Blair) stated last year that at the rate at which the work was proceeding under my management, the Soulanges Canal would not be finished for forty years. That is on a par with a good many of his calculations, especially with reference to the Intercolonial Railway. However, the country is to be congratulated on that system, and I hope that the best hopes of the country with regard to these canals will be realized. I have every faith in the enterprise; and I believe that in a short time the trade of that vast western country will flow through these canals and find its way across the Atlantic through the different ports of our own country.

The hon. gentleman stated that there was no fault found with the expenditures on these canals. I wondered what he was leading up to. I thought he wanted to show the vast sum of money that had been spent in Ontario and Quebec, leading up to some scheme of aggrandizement in the maritime provinces. It occurred to me that, perhaps, he would propose to purchase all the roads connecting with the Intercolonial Railway. But what he said was only for the purpose of preparing the House and the country for putting $4,200,000 into his hands to be expended on capital account to purchase locomotives and other equipment for the Intercolonial Railway. It required a good deal of reasoning. I do not know how the hon. gentleman ever got it through council. I do not know another Minister of Railways who ever succeeded in getting such a large sum as that to be expended on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway. But, before proceeding to discuss what he said about the Intercolonial Railway, I would ask the hon. minister about that 'infamous bargain' that 'most monstrous contract that ever was entered into by same men' which was made by the right hon. Sir John Macdonald and others with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway with reference to running arrangements on the Intercolonial Railway. In 1897, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) assured the House that he had given notice of the termination of that contract—that the government of the country was in different hands now—and they would not be bled to the extent that others had been by the railroad corporations which had virtually a monopoly of the cream of the Intercolonial Railway's business. I hope he will be able to lay on the Table a fresh agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway. He has had four years to do it. But I doubt very much that he has anything to offer. I doubt very much that he has. I told the hon. gentleman that if he had cancelled the contract he could not have got any better terms, and he would be obliged to accept that. I venture to say at this moment that the hon. gentleman has not been able to make any better arrangement with these railway companies than that monstrous arrangement entered into by the right hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, and which he so much decried.

The hon. gentleman takes a particular interest in comparisons. The management of the Intercolonial Railway from 1892 to 1896 seems to annoy him. In the arrangements that were made between 1892 and 1896 he did not give me credit for doing anything which would be for the reduction of expenditure. He said that I never paid any attention to it. He said the then acting Minister of Railways and Canals went down to Moncton and made all these arrangements by which to effect a saving on the Intercolonial Railway. But he has a different tune this time. The railroad by that proceeding was degraded, the rails were not kept up, the stations were not up to the mark, the rolling stock was allowed to deteriorate, and the road was allowed to decline in every respect. The hon. gentleman's tune is changed now. It was the late minister, he thinks, perhaps, that has done that. When he makes a comparison between my management and his own to show that the road was degraded by false economy, he now blames for it, not Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who presided over the Intercolonial Railway for a couple of months before I took charge, but he attributes the fault to myself. He says that perhaps I have ability if I only applied it, but I have not the energy of the hon. gentleman who presides over the road at the present time, I did not familiarize myself with all the details on the Intercolonial Railway. He points to it now with pride as an officer might point with pride to a private in his regiment and say, Ex uno disce omnes; and he says that now any person stepping on an Intercolonial Railway car will meet civil porters, courteous conductors, and that there is an air of cleanliness about the Intercolonial Railway now which was absent from it before. Well, perhaps the hon. gentleman, among his numerous attainments, has been able to acquire a detailed knowledge of everything in reference to the Intercolonial Railway. You would think from his reading the statistics over which he gloated, that he is acquainted with all the details. He took up the different reports of the different departments and rehashed them to the House, with but a partial understanding of them.

The hon. gentleman, for the purpose of showing the debasement of the road that occurred from 1892 to 1896, points to the condition of the wharfs, stations and everything else on the road. The deficit of the preceding year, 1891, was in the neighbourhood of $400,000, and I was enabled to change it in some manner or another which he explained, to a surplus of $20,000. He said that where my predecessor had expended a large amount upon iron rails, I had only expended something over $100,000, and that the amount expended upon ties was less than before, and he gave some other details, which he made to aggregate $300,000. And to show his knowledge of the book-keeping of the Intercolonial Railway, he said I had depleted the stores which partly accounted for nearly $100,000 more. The hon. gentleman seemed to have a knowledge of his department, he seemed to think that the store account entered into the expenditure and receipts of the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, has found out now by consultation with his deputy, that the stores account has nothing to do with the receipts and expenditures of the Intercolonial Railway. He drew a comparison. He says that from 1897 up to 1900, to show that he had not degraded the character of the road, the expenditure for rails was as great as I had made from 1892 to 1896. He does not say that it was any greater, he does not say that the expenditure was any larger from 1896 to 1900; but for the purpose of showing that I had degraded the road in comparison with its condition in 1891-2, he said that my expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway for rails, ties and these other things was less than the preceding year. But in order to show that he had not degraded the road, he said that his expenditure from 1896 to 1900 was as great as mine.

The hon. gentleman twitted me with a statement that the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway would be a source of loss to the country. I did say so, I stated that the acquisition of that railway and of the terminus in Montreal would be a great loss to the country, and I can prove that such has been the case from the hon. gentleman's figures. I stated that after I had looked into the affair I decided not to acquire it. I saw that there would be two roads competing for the purpose of bringing to the terminus at Point Lévis all that could be expected from Montreal, and that instead of it being a benefit to the Intercolonial Railway to have an entrance into Montreal, we would only have these two roads rivals to each other. Now, what is the result? The hon. gentleman brags about his surplus. He says that his surplus was caused by the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway into Montreal. How does the hon. gentleman find that out? Where are his figures to justify any such statement? He has the receipts of every office in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec, and if he had applied to his deputy he could have found out the contrary. He can find out that there are increased receipts on the Intercolonial Railway by looking at the receipts of the offices. I took the trouble to look them over and to find what the receipts are at the different offices. But that process will not give a correct result, because it gives the total receipts as each office, and there are no deductions for what we have to pay to the different railways for which we collect freight charges. It only gives an approximate result. Now, if he will investigate he will find out that the increased receipts in Nova Scotia alone was $257,000. That was accounted for by the completion of the Newfoundland Railway, by the steam communication from Newfoundland to Sydney, by the immense works which are in process of construction, and the development of the mines in Sydney. But no matter what the reasons were, the increased receipts from the Intercolonial Railway from Nova Scotia alone are $257,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How does the hon. gentleman make that out?

Mr. HAGGART. I will give the hon. gentleman the details, and he will get details to his heart's content in reference to it. The receipts in New Brunswick are as nearly as possible stationary, the increased receipts amounting to $10,000. The total receipts for the Quebec portion of the road are $760,000. The receipts before the completion of the Drummond County Railway and the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway, were in the neighbourhood of $347,000. The increased receipts from the Quebec portion of the road are in the neighbourhood of $416,000. Add $416,000 to $257,000 and $10,000, and it will give the hon. gentleman his surplus. Now, let us analyse the $760,000 which he receives from the Quebec portion of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What year is the hon. gentleman professing to speak of?

Mr. HAGGART. Eighteen ninety-nine as compared with 1897. The hon. gentleman's returns are for 1898-9 and 1896-7.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much is it for 1898-9 in Quebec?

Mr. HAGGART. As nearly as I can make out, $760,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much for 1896-7 in Quebec?

Mr. HAGGART. Three hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars. That allows $416,000 of an increase, including the increased earnings for the Drummond County and Grand Trunk Railway sections of the road. As my figures make it out, it will leave a total for the Drummond County Railway in the neighbourhood of $305,000, taking the mileage into consideration of that portion of the road. The hon. gentleman says that one of the very best bargains that was ever made, was the acquisition of that road, that there was a surplus of earnings for that section of the road. What does he pay? He pays $160,000 a year to the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. $140,000 a year.

Mr. HAGGART. I took the figures that he gave last night. He said that the total amount that he paid was $210,000 to the Grand Trunk and Drummond County. Am I correct?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Now, take the hon. gentleman's surplus at say $100,000 on receipts of $3,800,000; what percentage is that, allowing 3 per cent, 4 per cent, or 5 per cent on that amount? Allowing to the Drummond County section its share of the profits of the road, 5 per cent on $305,000 would be $15,000. The amount earned by the Drummond County is in the neighbourhood of $305,000, and $15,000 from that makes $290,000. The $290,000 is all taken up by the running expenses of the road, because the whole amount of the profits over and above the running expenses of the road would be, taking the average of the whole, about $15,000. Take $15,000 from $210,000, and that shows the loss that the hon. gentleman made last year on this speculation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), be good enough to refer me to the records from which he has obtained these two figures, that I have just asked him about, the receipts from the Quebec portion of the line for 1898-9, of $760,000, and for 1896-7 of $347,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, the hon. gentleman will find them in the Auditor General's Report. They are made up from the amounts received at the different stations in the different provinces. You will find the receipts for Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, in the Auditor General's Report. This is an addition of these amounts taken from the Auditor General's Report. He pays $210,000 in rental for these two roads. And, if you deduct the share of the profits of the Drummond County and Grand Trunk sections, from those of the whole line, it will show the loss which the hon. gentleman has made on the Drummond County and the Grand Trunk Railways, in getting into Montreal. That justifies the statement which I made and which every railway man in the country knows, that the acquisition of those two lines of road must cost this country at least $175,000 a year. That represents a loss to the people of the country of $175,000 a year. The whole of the improvement upon the Intercolonial Railway was practically in Nova Scotia. This is the normal improvement that has occurred in the business of railways from one end of the country to the other. Look at the percentage of increase of earnings of the Grand Trunk Railway, look at the percentage of increase of earnings of nearly every railway in America, and you will find that the percentage of increase is not much greater upon the Intercolonial Railway than upon these roads. The hon. gentleman says that it was an old fogey road, remaining stationary, until he got control of it. The increased receipts upon the road differed very little in 1893, from what they were in 1898, only by about $54,000. If I remember rightly the best year, from 1892 to 1896, showed receipts of about $3,050,000, and the amount which the hon. gentleman received was $3,112,000. To be deducted from that, and it is a fair deduction from the earnings or profits that he has received this year, is the interest on the enormous amount which the hon. gentleman has expended on capital account. According to his own statement, since he came into power, he has expended $3,200,000 on capital account. So that, taking wear and tear, decay, decreased value, and the insurance that is necessary, it would be a fair amount to charge for interest on that expenditure, 5 per cent a year, so that he has to deduct from his profits, to make a comparison of my management of the road, $160,000 a year. In addition to that, he intends to add to that expenditure $4,200,000. He says that the road, when he came into power, was degraded, that it had not modern engines or equipment, and that it was not up to the mark. All I can say is that the road-bed was the best of any railway in Canada, or America, that the equipment was in abundance, and in excess of the requirements of the road. It was so reported to me by my department. My department made the further statement that if we required the Drummond County Railway, we would not require any more rolling stock, because there was a surplus upon the Intercolonial Railway, sufficient to equip that portion of the road going into Montreal.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) made a comparison of the expenditures on capital account between my time in the Department of Railways and his. He told us that the same items were charged to capital account now, as when I was minister. I deny the statement. My instructions were that unless in the case of the acquisition of a large property, the purchase of a railway or something of that kind, that every thing possible should be charged to the current account of the Intercolonial Railway. Even when there was a new iron bridge to be built I did not charge it to capital account. There were four new locomotives bought, and I did not charge them to capital account, but the thing is different now. My instructions were that train equipment and everything else on the road should be kept up in the best possible way, no matter whether there was a deficit or not. The minister has frankly stated that the charges in that section of the country are, perhaps, lower than they are in any other country in the world. Well, that was the policy of the late government. We looked upon that as a kind of a gift to counterbalance the free canal system we have in our section of Canada, and we felt that no more charges should be levied on the people of the maritime provinces than was absolutely required for the purpose of carrying on the business of the railway. If the Intercolonial Railway should fall into other hands, and if modern rates were charged for freight and passengers, it would be just as easy for the management of the Intercolonial Railway to clear annually from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, as it is to make the accounts balance. There is no trick about it. It requires no special knowledge on the part of the minister to do that. What the people in the maritime provinces want is an economical and efficient management of the road, and that the road should be kept in first class order as it was when I was Minister of Railways. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is getting engines and modern appliances; yes, and he has modern means of getting them too. It would be interesting to know the system on which he has purchased these appliances. It is certainly not done in the open as was the case when I had the direction of affairs. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), says he has adopted a better system in regard to the purchase of oil, but if he imposes on other gentlemen in this House, he cannot impose upon me in reference to that matter. When I had charge of the department, every bit of the material that was bought for the Intercolonial Railway was subject to the inspection and approval of the officers, and if there was any doubt between the merits of different materials furnished at different prices, the question of the quality was left to the analyses of McGill College at Montreal. The minister may talk as he likes about this Galena oil contract, but he would save all suspicion if he adopted the methods of his predecessor, and have nothing to do with any purchases no matter what technical knowledge he may be supposed to have. I never had anything to do with private tenders and private contracts and awards when I was minister. A list of fifty or sixty persons was selected, and they were asked to tender, and if any one wanted his name added to that list all he had to do was to make application. I never awarded a contract in my life without the sanction and the approval, and the recommendation of the officers in charge of the railway. In fact, later on, I never looked into these contracts at all. I told them to exercise their own judgment, and that I would hold them responsible, and that I would only decide when two tenders were alike. Even then, I left it to the officers. That ought to be the policy which the minister should follow to-day. As to the oil question, the minister could very easily submit it for analyses to McGill University, as was done previously, and then he would know whether he was getting good oil at a fair price, and he would avoid the suspicion of making private terms with companies who come along and are supposed to offer special privileges.

All the development of traffic on the Intercolonial Railway is due to the development of trade throughout the country generally, and in the maritime provinces particularly. It is not the modern methods of the minister which has brought about that improvement. His sixty ton, or eighty ton engines, are only needed between Moncton and Montreal, where they have a long run, and you do not require on the Intercolonial Railway the expensive engines which they have on the Canadian Pacific Railway or other roads. For what purpose is there to be an expenditure of $4,200,000? amounting to a charge of about $126,000 a year. Does the minister expect that he will get that return out of the extra earnings of the Intercolonial Railway? The amount of the total receipts on the Intercolonial Railway in 1897, was $3,112,000; the highest up to that time, and does the hon. gentleman pretend that his management of the road and the acquisition of the Drummond Railway has developed the trade in that section of the country to the enormous extent of $700,000 or $800,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not a particle of doubt about it.

Mr. HAGGART. Then you are the only person in the whole country that has any such opinion. There is no increased travel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. HAGGART. The accommodation on the Intercolonial Railway from 1892 to 1896, was just as good as it is at the present time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had hardly a through passenger then on the Intercolonial from Montreal.

Mr. HAGGART. We could not have them from Montreal, but we had them from Point Lévis.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had not.

Mr. HAGGART. The Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway carried them to Point Lévis. Your increase of traffic on the Quebec portion of the road is only about $400,000, and that is made up by the mileage of the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway entrance into Montreal. If the hon. gentleman will make inquiries upon the spot, he will find that the total increase on the Intercolonial Railway is merely in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, on account of the development of the mines and the increased trade. I am proud of my management of the Intercolonial Railway. I would not make comparisons between my management and that of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman, I am sorry to say, has not so much modesty; he makes the comparison with evident pleasure. He wants to show how superior a man he is, how easily he has acquired the knack of managing a railway. I do not think he knows anything at all about it—not much at any rate. He is right if he does what I did—I trusted to the officers of the road, after giving them general instructions as to what I wanted. I wanted no useless employees in the locomotive works, nor any more men on the line than were necessary to keep it in repair. I found an economical and efficient manager, and then I left the management in his hands; and I think we had as efficient a management of the road as we could possibly have. I shall, perhaps, have an opportunity of criticising the details of the different items as they come up. I do not enter into calculations of these matters, as the hon. gentleman has done, because there is the hon. gentleman in this House who is more accustomed to handling details than I am, and who will deal with them. But, I can fearlessly compare my management of the Intercolonial Railway with that of the hon. gentleman; and notwithstanding the fact that its terminus is not now in the old city of Quebec, but in the city of Montreal, I will venture to say—and I will leave it to any railroad man in this country—that the enormous expenditure made by this government for the purpose of bringing the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal will never be recouped to the people of Canada—that the earnings of that portion of the road will never pay the interest which the people of Canada have to pay on its cost. I do not think it is necessary for me to make any longer statement than I have made at present; but there is nothing in what the hon. gentleman has stated to show that his management of the Intercolonial Railway can compare with the management of his predecessors. If we have canals or railroads in this country, it is not owing to the hon. gentleman and his friends. The initiation and construction of the canals and the railway system of this country, which hon. gentlemen opposite now glory in, were due to the leaders of the Conservative party of this country, and I believe we shall soon have a further development of the country when the Conservative party again return to power, and when there is a cessation of the lavish and unnecessary expenditures of hon. gentlemen opposite. What possible need can there have been for an expenditure of $3,200,000 on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway since the hon. gentleman came into power? And he asks for next year, $4,250,000. Is it not enough to stagger the people of this country? Why are we to be bled in this way? In order that the hon. gentleman may enjoy the boyish reputation of buying locomotives, painting cars, and making other expenditures which do not amount to the dignity of frivolity.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has discussed the question before the House from a broad standpoint, and has not meddled very much with matters of detail. I can assure you that I was very much pleased to learn from the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals that there was so large an increase in the receipts of the Intercolonial Railway. Every man who has a throb of patriotism in his breast must feel pleased that for some reason or other there is a very large increase of freight and passenger traffic on that line. The transportation facilities of a country afford a tolerably fair index to its commercial prosperity. I am sorry, however, that I cannot congratulate the hon. Minister of Railways on the reason he has put forward for this increased traffic. The hon. gentleman, I may say in the outset, has in his office—not in the office in Ottawa, but in the railway office in the city of Moncton—and under his control, the means of giving a tolerably full and complete statement in respect to this matter which would have been satisfactory to the House and the country. He has not seen fit to do so. I do not know why. During the session I have endeavoured to get some information by asking questions. My questions were generally, though not entirely, shunted off by the minister's expressed desire that they should form the subject of a motion. As you know, that is a very unsatisfactory method of acquiring information in the House, where the Motion paper is so clogged as it has been during the present session. Before proceeding to discuss the main question under consideration, I will direct my attention for a few moments to an attack which the hon. gentleman made upon the management of the late Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart). He accused that hon. gentleman of starving the services of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, the present Minister of Railways and Canals is a very adroit marshaller of facts. I do not know, in my acquaintance, another man who can, by adroit manipulation of conceded facts, give a colouring that is opposed to the truth as the north pole is to the south. In the particular case before us, he attempted. I do not know why, to discredit the ex-Minister of Railways by showing that he had caused a very large reduction in the expenditures on the Intercolonial Railway in the first year of his advent to office. He compared elaborately the year ending June 30, 1892, with the year ending June 30, 1893. Now, I might ask this House, if a gentleman undertook to run economically any department of business, public or private, would not the very first thing he would attend to, in order to succeed in his aim, be the curtailing of unnecessary expenditures? That is what you would expect to find in the management of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways if his management were worthy of the approbation of this country. The charge that he starved the services of the Intercolonial Railway resolves itself into three phases: First, did he starve the locomotive service? Secondly, did he starve the car service? Thirdly, did he starve the service of maintenance of the road-bed? These are the three services to which the Minister of Railways and Canals most properly directed his attention, and to which we must look. If I can succeed in showing that the hon. gentleman expended in 1899 far less upon this service, with an additional mileage of about 170 miles, than the ex-Minister of Railways did in 1892, then I think the charge of having starved the service falls to the ground. What are the facts? The hon. gentleman compared 1892 with 1893, and I will take the same services and compare 1893 and 1899.

Mr. HAGGART.

I will take first, the repairs to engines, which is a very important item. Is this House prepared for the statement that the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) spent in the year 1893 the sum of $233,911 on this item, while the hon. gentleman last year, with 170 more miles of railway to keep in repair, and the engines necessarily being worked a great deal more than before, and with additional engines also, did not spend $233,900, but spent $12,800 less. If the ex-Minister of Railways was starving the service of the Intercolonial Railway in 1893, what shall we say of the present minister who spent $13,000 less upon it in 1897?

That is one branch, I pass on to another. We will take the maintenance of water tanks and pumps along the road, and see what amount was expended upon them. The ex-Minister of Railways, it is true, cut down the expenditure upon that item a small amount, but compared his expenditure in 1893 with the expenditure of 1899, and what do we find? I find that the expenditure in 1893 was $32,193. How magnificently has the present Minister of Railways treated this branch of the service? What was his expenditure in 1899? Why, with 170 miles additional of railway, we find that he spent on this service only $32,325, or an excess of just $132 over the expenditure in 1893.

We will look for a moment or two at the car service, which is chiefly freight and passengers. In 1893, it is true, the ex-Minister of Railways did spend about $7,000 less upon this service than was spent during the previous year. This was a tremendous sin in the eyes of the present minister. The ex-minister was negligent, he had the interests of the west only at heart, he did not consult the interests of the maritime provinces, he did not have an eye to giving a better status to the railway. But how much in excess of the $82,000, spent by the ex-Minister of Railways, has the present minister spent. Why, in 1899 not only did he not spend $82,683, but he spent $8,000 less upon the car service, and with a railway 170 miles longer than before.

But it does not rest there. We will go further. Take the postal car and the baggage and express car service. The ex-Minister of Railways cut down $3,000—a terrible crime in the eyes of the present minister. He was neglecting the interests of the country, he was starving the service of the Intercolonial Railway, he thought of nothing but the canals of the west. But what was the present minister's expenditure? Instead of spending as much as his predecessor, $21,639, he spent very little more than half as much. He spent, not $21,000, but $9,000 less, or only $12,000.

Passing along to another item, the hon. gentleman has had a great deal of freight service to be performed by the railway, and he accuses the ex-Minister of Railways of having starved that service. Let us see how the matter stands. The ex-Minister of Railways spent $208,728 upon that service in the year ending June 30, 1893. The previous year $210,000 had been spent upon it, so that the ex-minister had the temerity to spend $2,000 less—a terrible crime! But how much less did the present minister expend? Did he expend, say $100,000 more in maintaining the rolling stock in a state of efficiency? Why, would you believe it, last year he expended, not only less than in 1892, but expended no less a sum than $36,000 less than did the ex-Minister of Railways in 1893.

Now, we will go a little further; we will pass along to the road-bed itself. The ex-Minister of Railways spent on rails and fastenings in 1893, $75,000. In the previous year he spent $150,000. Over this the present minister grows indignant, he charges the ex-minister with having neglected the interests of the country, with having allowed the road to run down. Pardon if I digress and call your attention to what was going on in the way of renewing the rails on the Intercolonial Railway at that time. A few years previously to the year 1893 a very wise movement was set on foot to replace the 56-pound rails, then in the line of the Intercolonial railway, by 67-pound rails, and for some years this work had been going on. For instance, in 1890, $250,000 had been expended in that service; in 1891, $180,000; in 1892, $150,000. The road was then fairly well equipped with heavy rails along the parts subjected to heavy freight traffic, and it was not necessary to make large outlays thereafter. There was no call upon the ex-Minister of Railways to continue so large an expenditure, and the expenditure dropped to $75,000—a terrible sin. But what about the hon. minister himself last year? How much did he spend? Why, one would imagine that he spent somewhere about $200,000, to hear his intense indignation. But did he spend as much as the ex-Minister of Railways? No. The ex-minister spent $75,000, and the present minister spent only one-half as much, or $38,000, and that he calls keeping the road-bed in a very high state of efficiency.

I now pass along to the question of ties. The hon. minister waxed warm on that question. He said that the ex-minister had placed on the road in 1893, 46,000 ties less than in 1892. That is true, and the present minister attempted to persuade us that he was making an excellent point. But what are the facts? The ex-minister in 1893 placed 84,435 ties on the road, and the present minister has 170 miles more railway—or to be exact, as part is joint section, 132 miles more—and that would be between 1-7th and 1-8th more mileage than the ex-minister had to deal with. Add 1-7th to the 84,000 ties, and that would give you about 96,000. Well, how many ties did the hon. minister place upon the road last year? He put 99,000 instead of 96,000, which was the regular proportion on the road. The ex-minister was allowing the road to deteriorate, says the present minister, but you see the absurdity of such a contention. This matter will bear further comment.

Some time ago I asked the hon. gentleman a question and got from him the answer that on the Drummond Railway of 120 miles, he had laid 17,300 ties during the year 1899. Taking that from 99,000, 82,000 is left for the balance of the road. That means that on the portion of the Intercolonial which represents all that Mr. Haggart had in 1893, he placed actually fewer ties in the year 1899, than the ex-minister, whom he condemns, placed in 1893. I do not think it is necessary for me to pursue the matter further; the absurdity of the hon. gentleman's contention is its condemnation. All that is necessary is to supplement his statement by a statement of the facts. What the ex-minister did in 1893, on that road was noble work. He cut down the expenditures, and yet he left the road in a state of efficiency. The proof of that is that the present minister claims that it is in a magnificent state of efficiency at present, yet he did not expend upon it, even in the glorious year 1899, as much as the ex-minister spent upon it in 1893. But he says that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) limited the train service. I live in as close proximity to the Intercolonial Railway as the hon. gentleman did at that time. The line runs through the town in which I live. I travel the road very frequently; I do not suppose there is a man in Canada who has been on that road in the last ten or fifteen years more than I have—for my business calls me out on the line a great deal. I can safely say that, while there were not as luxurious cars as there are to-day, the train service in 1893, was just as good as it is to-day or even in 1899. There has not been the slightest improvement from that time, with the exception that the cars to-day are much more elaborate and much more expensive than they were at that time. But at that time we had the magnificent cars of the Canadian Pacific Railway which had one of the most finely equipped trains running on the Intercolonial Railway, which was generally patronized by the people.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What did the present cars cost?

Mr. POWELL. I shall come to that later. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) goes further in his claim that his management of the road is most excellent. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there were kings in the land before the days of Agamemnon; there were those who had to do with the Intercolonial Railway who made a record to be proud of. The present leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) made a record to be proud of. The present Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals—chief engineer as he was then called—from whom, I have no doubt the present minister derives a great deal of support, is a gentleman who is believed on the part of the people generally not to be possessed of those feelings that would allow him to be interfered with, in the application of business principles to the management of railways, and he was regarded as a buffer between the government and the public. This gentleman did a noble work, and I will refer to it later on, a work that has been misrepresented—I will not say intentionally, but the effect is just as bad—by the Minister of Railways and Canals last night and to-day. The hon. minister to bolster up himself, to show his magnificent management, stated that in 1899, $780,690 more was received in revenue than in 1896. Well, what about it? That simply shows that there was more traffic for the road. A much better proof of the hon. gentleman's good management would be to show not an additional revenue, but an economical administration of affairs. Notwithstanding his $780,000 additional traffic upon the road, the hon. gentleman is only able to claim a surplus of $62,000—a surplus which is entirely visionary as we shall see later. But suppose even that his claim was well founded, what of it? Go to the record of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway and compare their profits with those of the Intercolonial Railway under the present minister. Why, the hon. gentleman's extra revenue has cost him nearly 100 per cent in outlay. I do not know what the percentage is on the other roads this year; but last year I took occasion to look into the matter and analysed the returns of many railways. On many roads there was a large increase of traffic, and consequently of receipts; and

Mr. POWELL.

I found that in many cases half the additional revenue was profit—that is to say the additional traffic only cost about 50 per cent to carry it. But we will leave that matter for later consideration. The hon. gentleman says: See how grand this is; in the short period of three years, I made an increase of revenue compared with which all former increases dwindle into insignificance. He compared 1886 with 1896—he corrected it afterwards to the period from 1888 to 1898. He says that in all that decennial period there was not an increase of over $125,000. What does that prove? It is very interesting to know that the hon. gentleman has delved into figures; it is interesting to know that he is considerable of an arithmetical magician. But what interest does the country take in that? What is the logical sequence from it? In support of what argument does he adduce these figures and institute this arbitrary comparison? If there is anything in the comparison why not carry it further? If he had compared 1890 with 1894, he would have found that in these years there was an increase not of $125,000, but of $671,000. If he had compared 1880, when the present leader of the opposition took charge, with 1884, he would have found his increase of $780,000, outdone by an increase of $878,000—and furthermore, the present minister has the advantage of an increase of 413 miles of railway. Go further, and compare 1880 with 1890, and what do we find? Why, there is an increase of over $780,000? In that decennial period the receipts increased by $1,900,000—more than doubled. And to help in this comparison the present minister has 330 miles more of railway than they had at that time.

This leads me to the discussion of a point I was glad to hear the hon. minister touch upon, that is the feeling of jealousy that some of our western friends seem to have with respect to the Intercolonial Railway, that too much money is being spent on that road, and that that expenditure is for the benefit of the maritime provinces. I shall detain the House only for a moment or two while I trace the history of the Intercolonial Railway. At the time of confederation we had in the province of New Brunswick, a government railway which now forms part of the Intercolonial Railway. In the province of Nova Scotia there was also a government railway which also now forms part of the Intercolonial Railway. And I will inform gentlemen of the west, members of this House, and through them their constituents, that, so long as we were not bothered with extensions to the old province of Canada, we did not know what a deficit was. Down to 1873, when the first deficit in connection with what is now the government railway of Canada occurred, the average surplus was $60,969.
