Ancient Value of Books. How many, at the present time, car read with a realizing sense of the true loss, the account of the burning of the Alexandrian Library, A. D. 642, by the Caliph Omar? Many will do so; but many more will not. According to the most authentic accounts the collection of books for that Library at Alexandria was begun somewhere about three hundred years before the Christian Era; and in the ime of Josephus there were said to have been gathered there two hundred thousand volumes. How many were added during the five hundred years, and more, that followed before its destruction, we cannot say : but the number must have

It is con-structed, by laying two logs side by side and hewing out a groove in which the logs slide. The mode of operation is to roll the logs into the slide and draw them along with horses, something after the style of a canal boat. When the slide is a down grade no horses are needed, the long train of logs flying down at a fearful rate, making the woods ring when the ends bump together, and occasionally jumping the track where there is a shor The slide terminates at a point on the headwaters of the west branch of the Susquehanna river, whore it has deposited 5,000,000 ft. of logs this season.

As to Wives.

Before this epoch she is se cramped in conventionalities that her very kept covered up, and her heart has room for healthy action. But the bonds are broken on her wedding day, when, from a chrysalis condition, she comes out a butterfly, or a bee, or perchance a wasp Then she begins to breathe freely, and to aim at the supreme happiness of womankind—the having her own way. The husband, still stiff in his own conceit, is fair-ly startled and shaken with the shock of a surprise. The meek and modest maiden whom he courted so cavalierly soon shows him she is a woman with a tongue and with a temper, and a woman who will have her own way. When he talks about Home and Happiness and the Duties of a Wife, all in capitals, she laughs at him for his innocence, and wants to know if he would like to treat her as a child, as did discoveries in the liquefaction of gases her nurse, and her governess, and her mother, and her chaperon, to keep up the proprieties. Possibly some of his veening conceit is thus laughed out of him, and he agrees to take his proper place as his wife's husband, giving up with a sigh the good old copybook and service mottoes about being her lord and master, and getting from her nothing but honour and obedience. If this sensible conclusion be quickly come may be prevented by adding salicylic to, all may yet be well; and should he bear the yoke gracefully, his wife will be easy with him, will let him have his own way in little things, and look as docile as a dove when company is present. But in very few, if any, cosmetics which do not case the unlucky husband clings to the ancient superstition of his own authority, then there will be war to the knife, and none can tell what will happen, save the certain ending that, at some time or other, the wife will succeed in having her own way. To watch a woman training her husband to fetch and carry is a delightful pastime for those who are inclined to philosophic study. With heaven-born instinct the wife knows exactly when to ncorrectness of the pretty stories of smile and when to frewn, and where herself, she turns him round her little finger, and holds him up laughingly to the gaze of a wondering world. Women are not generally humorists; but they cannot help feeling the fun of the thing when they so successfully manage their husbands, who all the while think they are electric motors to the vehicle. The own way. She is not so foolish as to care for the semblances of power. He may perimenter proposes making a larger motor, by means of which he expects the figure-head of the vessel; but the wife rules the rudder, and steers the ship whithersoever she may chance to wish. -The oldest specimens of timber in the world are supposed to be the dowel pins on the opposition of the control ontained in the ancient temples of therefore, only toe often expose them-Egypt. The Fortune Bay "Outrage."

It is announced that the British Government, through Sir Edward Thornton, diameter and 35 feet high; Lombardy have agreed to pay fifteen thousand pounds sterling to the American fishermen as feet high; blue and white ash, 10 inches | compensation for the damages caused them in diameter and 25 feet high; black by what has been called the Fortune Bay outrage. The Americans themselves mus walnut and butternut, 10 inches in be astonished. The facts, as stated by the British Government after an official enquiry, are that some American fishermen followed a school of herring into Fortune Bay, N. F., on a Sunday, and proceeded enclose nearly all the fish. They had no right so to use the shore, and the local law, passed long before we believe, forbade fishing on Sunday. This law was applicable to Americans fishing within the three mile line as well as to the fishermen of Newfoundland. The fishermen of Fortune Bay, indignant at seeing the law so openly and grossly violated, and the Americans doing, with prospect of immunity, what they were not permitted to do tore the nets from the shore, and other-wise injured them and allowed the fish to escape. The Americans at first contended that their fishermen were not subject to the local law, but this ground was wholly untenable. It could not be denied, however, that a mere mob should not take the law into their own hands, as the people of Fortune Bay did, and that the destruction monk to copy for him—that on presenting of the nets by a crowd or mob was not the enforcement of a legal penalty for the crime of fishing on Sunday. It appeared, therefore, that the Americans, although they were acting in violation of the law were entitled to such damages as would cover the loss actually inflicted on them, copy of a History of the Family of Della of course not including, as they sought to include, the estimated value of the fish they might have caught on that Sunday if they had not been interfered with. It is difficult to imagine how any reasonable calculation could bring the damages up to Medicine, in Paris, he not only deposited in pledge a considerable quantity of plate, render American fishermen more daring and reckless and regardless of law in Brit ish waters, and render the presence of a large number of cruisers absolutely necessary if peace is to be preserved. We suppose that the British Government will call on the Government of Newfoundland to pay the fifteen thousand pounds. - Free-

Riparian Rights Again.

We are a little surprised to learn that the Fisheries Department at Ottawa has not yet abated its pretensions of authority to set aside rights established by common law and usage, and that it has failed to learn the lesson enforced by decision of the highest court of New Bruns wick against such pretensions. The Department seems incapable of realising that it is better to retreat quietly from a false position, fortifying itself as far as possible as it retires, than to be driven and routed in demoralization from ground which it has held by unwarranted assumption, backed by misused force and "the insolence of office." We have all read of the veteran disciple of Ananias who repeated his lies so often that he, at last, deceived himself by believing they were true, and the fact that otherwise clear-headed and able men in the Department at Ottawa, still cling to certain of their own regulations as if they were sound and legal, after they have been declared invalid by our Supreme Court, gives color to the assumption that a man may, by continual indulgence of a disposition to deceive and mislead others, finally come to believe in his own tricks and jugglery. At least, we assume that a similar habit of proceeding on false premises has led the Department into open defiance of our Supreme Cous's judgment. Otherwise, we must believe stitute them lex terree, absolutely and without question. The case submitted to the Suprem Court of New Brunswick, four or five years ago, to test the absolute authority in fishery matters claimed over our fluvial rivers by the Fisheries Department — not only as against the general public, but also against the riparian proprietors—was decided against the Department, and has been moved up to the Supreme Court of the Dominion, where it is still pending. Meantime the De-If it were a matter of dispute beween private individuals, in which the respective rights of each were fairly sought to be ascertained, it is easonable to believe that, at least, the party against whom judgment had been given would refrain from acts against which the court appealed to had pronounced. But our Fisheries Department, in that spirit of aggression, presumption and disregard for private interests which has too often characterised it from its first organization, will allow neither prudence, courtesy, nor other proper considerations to prevail in its policy, so long as there is a possibility of using its power, and the public funds at its command to collect and galvan-

The public, as a rule, are long-suffering. Or, perhaps, it would be more correct to say that they are long-indifferent to public abuses which grow out of encroachments upon the rights of the individual.— Isolated individual cases of hardship, which may affect the most important principles that are the bases of public rights and liberties, are too often treated with indifference by the people, generally, who fail to realise the langer that threatens them. During the past fourteen years a constant warfare has been going on between the Fisheries Department on the one hand, and the people of Canada interested in the fisheries on the other. The people, however, have taken little note of the struggle, because they were only abstractly interested and the immediate sufferers have carried it on alone. The Department has been allpowerful, in almost every case, because ts officers have not scrupled to bear down all resistance with the immense influences at their command. These have consisted of the Fisheries Act. giving most extraordinary powers to the officers, and constituting them both accusers and judges of those whom they might select as the objects of prosecution, persecution or maleplence; of a magistracy too often incapable of acting justly and also ignorant of law, and, lastly, of ample public funds, furnished in part by those who were called upon to defend or abandon the rights or privileges attacked. Hundreds of cases of great hardship, involving the impoverishment of families, the suppression of remunerative industries, the confiscation of property rights and even the damage of public interests for the promotion of the personal and political ends of officers or their friends, have resulted, until the people along our coasts and rivers have been obliged to look upon the Fisheries Department as an engine to have contented itself with regulating

It seems that those under whose instruction Overseer, Mowat has acted, simply as ume that they are "a law unto themselves," and that property rights as well as the public money they waste in attacking them, are trifles when compared with the carrying out of their officia assumptions and whims. These gentlemen, cannot, of course, expect to enjoy the fishing thus wrongly taken from Mr. McDonald, but they have a valid claim for damages against the Department, which has evidently taken their money under false pretences. We hope they will claim damages, for the sooner the Department is brought to its senses, and taught that its officers are not absolute masters of the country the better it will be for all.

That once pure and holy brow. Few days gone and thou wert with us True and fair as days of yore; But in death, alas! thou dreamest, Sipping now the blest pure store.

Thon hast gone from friends and parents, Severed, too, from ear h's sad strife; Gladly rid of worldly anguish— Blissful now in thy new life. Oh! Sad heart, be still, it is well These mundane ties dissever, And bid adieu to all beside,— Happiness to gain forever.

Chatham, June 1, '81. How Silas got Margorie BY MARY KYLE DALLAS.

When Robin Sperry went down to eat and drink, Marjorie." Luckden to preach he had only one old riend there, but he made a great imon on his hearers, and in the evivals" that fellowed his arrival, a things hurt religion, and also hurt the preacher of whom they are said."

"You are not hurt by it yet, anyhow," said Silas. "Margorie does not believe in this nonsense, but she calls you the best preacher she ever heard." "She's very kind, I'm sure," said the young minister. "Who is she?" Satan is in me, drive htm out. I want too see him. Come now; go at it.

"She's the girl I'm engaged to, I'm a good Methodist." Robin," said Silas. "You must have noticed her. She's the prettiest girl in the place. She sits in the third pew on with tea roses in it."

Robin; "and she a very pretty girl, indeed; and so that's Margorie!" stood before them. Silas had possess-"We're very fond of each other," "We're very fond of each other," and I are said Silas, "but her father and I are not so fond I are only to call there his face and hands, and with two more not so fond. I am going to call there this evening. Will you go with me?"

"No doubt," replied Silas; "but I a table-cloth draping his shoulders." have to go when I can. Her father is away to-night. There's a meeting of the Agricultural Association at the bate, look at me." hotel. They generally stay until midnight: so this is my time." "You are responsible for the hour," said Robin. "I shall not say anything more about it. Take me, if you think best, or leave me, if you think better, when we get to the door; we have been friends too long not to be quite frank your daughter marry the man of her

"I think it's likely she's in the sitting-room," said Silas, opening a gate which led through the orchard, and don't speak; listen: Why do you supmaking his way to a low door, shaded pose he came?" by a porch, at which he knocked in rather a peculiar manner; and in an in- this afterward, but he was very young stant the door flew open, and there also, and in love himself with a girl stood Margorie herself, a pretty picture, who was far away, and Silas was his with the lamp-light glinting on her right and instead of making an exwith the lamp-light glinting on her golden hair.

"Margorie," said the young man, "I have brought Rebin Sperry to see you. Miss Garnet, Mr. Sperry." "I am very glad to see you, Mr. Sperry," said Margorie—"very glad. much. I'll swear off," said Mr. Garwalk in, please. Silas, I'm glad to see net. "But about letting Margorie you, you know; but pa will not be late have Silas Weld, why, his grandfather peculiar, Mr. Sperry. He was a sea the three-acre meadow, and my mother captain once, and I think that makes used to say she'd no opinion at all of him so," and he isn't very friendly yet Mrs. Weld, his ma."

"Then he'll not think me rude if I

"Pa would be glad to have you call on Silas have Margorie. Dominie, what's him, Mr. Sperry," added Margories your opinion of Silas?" "He admires to hear you preach; and so do I."

"Thank you," said Robin. "I think it is very kind of you to tell me

"It's such a pleasant change," said Margorie; "such a pleasant change from Mr. Graham, poor old gentleman! who had lost all his teeth and never had any ideas. It's wicked not to go to church, you know, but what a trial it ing the pledge, and shortly after Marused to be. I've enjoyed it so much since you came, Mr. Sperry."
Robin said, "Thank you" again and they sat together around the firethe first of the season—and talked very pleasantly. Margorie was hospitable, and cider and doughnuts, which neither of the young men was yet fastidious enough to despise, were brought from the store-room. Robin told Margorie that should he permanently settle in the place, his mother would come to keep house for him. And Margorie declared that she should be very glad. "I love elderly ladies," she said, "and you know I haven't any one, mother, aunt, or grandmother. I hope your mother will like me." Robin said that he knew she would, and he thought also that it would be well for Margorie if she had such a wise counsellor; and over the cider and cakes they fell to talking very pleasantly and merrily. In the midst of this a slow clumping on the broad path of the road became audible. Suddenly the pleasant chat was interrupted. Margorie clasped her plump hands, and Silas turned red.

"It is pa," whispered Marjorie.
"Oh, I told you he'd be early, Silas. Hide yourself. Run into the storecloset-run. Poor pa has been taking too much hard cider-I know it by his walk. He always does at the agricultural meeting. He'll stop at nothing. Hide yourself - hide in the store

"You see, Robin," said Silas, doubtfully, "he promised to kill me if he found me in his house again-and Marjorie is nervous about it-come." "Thank you," said Robin, "go yourself if you like."

And Margorie, who had never ceased wringing and clasping her hands, pushed Silas into the closet, and turned to face her father, who now stumped in with irregular steps, and with a face as red as one of his own prize beets after a good boiling. 'Oh, pa," she cried, hypocritically, "how nice and early you are! And here is the minister waiting to see you." "How do you do, dominie?" said Mr. Garnet. "Proud I'm sure. Been to the agricultooral meetin'. One of my gearly dooties. Sit down; sit down. Glad to see you. Fill your glass. I mean get out something to "I have pa," said Marjorie. "Don't

"I think I had better take my leave, Miss Garnet," said Robin. But before the words were out of the right, and wears a purple velvet hat his lips, the door of the store-closet opened softly, The lamp was sudden-"Oh, yes, I've seen her," said ly blown out; a smell of brimstone stood before them. Silas had possess-ed himself of a box of matches, dampbunches blazing in his hands stood "It's late for a call—half-past nine," before the horrified Mr. Garnet, his head tied up in a silk handkerchief and

A week from that day, Mr. Garnet surprised the temperance lodge by takgorie and Silas were married.

It surely was not his fault, but the young minister's fame was greatly in creased by a report that he had driven Satan out of old Mr. Garnet, and the temporary sojourn which a Methodist minister makes in any place was a pleasant one for Luckden and for himself. Over and over again he told himself that he had been accessory to a very disgraceful sort of trick, utterly unworthy of his dignity; but Silas and Margorie were happy, and old Ma Garnet a temperate man, and Robin never made confession

Smith, of Hard-wick, in the County of Northumberland, Farm-er, and to all others whom it doth, shall, or may "Sweet cider!" said Mr. Garnet, great many very singular things were reported of him—amongst others, that he had driven the devil out of old James Barrow, the notorious drunkard of the place; and the people had seen him—the devil—run down the hill and jump into the lake. The truth of the matter was that Robin was an earnest and yet a somewhat sensational young preacher, and that he had set people thinking. But talking and exaggeration went on, and the rumor grew, and the church was filled as it had not been for years.

Walking home in the evening after one of the brightest meetings of the course, arm-in-arm with his college friend, Silas Weld, Robin heard more of what was reported of him than he had before.

"I am sorry," he said. I think such things hurt religion, and also hurt the preacher of whom they are said."

"Sweet cider!" said Mr. Garnet, to well, boys and grills and women and dominies like it, I suppose. How's religion comin' on I suppose. How I supose. How's land of the fourth was an axia an anxious glance towar

An Automatic Reed Organ.

"THE ORGULINETTE may now be called a celebrated instrument. In tone it is axin to the cabinet Organ, but the organ must be n anipolated by an artist in order to produce music; the UB-BUINETTE is, on the other hand entirely mechanical in its action, and at trilling expense it can be made to furnish an unlimited supply of all kinds of music.—"Toronto Globe.

THE ORGUINETTE is indeed a musical wonder. It is a ministure reed organ, with as strong and melodious a tone as the Cabinet Size. It surpasses the Cabinet Organ, for the reason that the melodious at one as the Cabinet Size. It surpasses the Cabinet Organ, for the reason that the cabinet Organ are the Cabinet Organ, and conserve in the melodious accomplished professor. The Organizaria is the melodious accomplished professor. The Organizaria is captured accounted in the mechanism, and consequently not liable to get out of order."—Montreal Carette. THE A. B. LIME AND CEMENT CO'Y Best Quality Selected Lime By the Car Load at all STATIONS on the AL-BERT and INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAYS.
This Lime differs from all other Brands in the market-having peculiar cement qualities, which hardens it like stone, and makes it imprevious to the action of water. It requires no cement to mprove it, and is the CHEAPEST in the market for all purposes.

For Agricultural purposes it can be furnished by the car load in bulk, CHEAP, and is the best as well as the cheapest fertilizer known.
