What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays Feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulence. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osborn, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are so often given them, by forcing opium, rhubarb, soothing syrup and other harmful agents down their throats, thereby causing them to vomit and suffer."

Dr. J. E. Kitchin, Conway, Ar.

The Centaur Company, 71 Murray St., New York City.

Ex-Member of Parliament.

A CHRISTMAS TALE.

'Twas the day before Christmas.

The city lay replete in its coat of snowy whiteness, flashing back the rays of the sun from every crystal or diamond mounted on its surface. Everything and everybody appeared to be busy with preparations for the coming day. The shopping had been most all completed by those who bought extensively for the season, and everything had been pretty well picked out from among the goods supply of Xmas presents exhibited for sale.

Still there were a few stragglers trying to pick up bargains and complete their unfinished shopping and grubbing because things were all sold. Such was the case in the fancy goods stores, but not with the confectioners. They expected and had prepared for a rush on this the last day to shopping.

The store of Monsieur LeBlanc, the most fashionable confectioner in the city, had been pretty busy all day, and was especially so along in the afternoon towards dusk, when it was crowded with fair and smiling young ladies, wrapped well in furs and with the effect of the sharp cold wind still visible on her cheek.

'Good afternoon, Miss Franclyn,' said the proprietor, and from his familiar tones it would appear that she was an old acquaintance or a regular customer for the sweets exposed to view.

A nod of recognition, both to him and the clerk who stepped forward, proclaimed that the acquaintance was mutual.

She had lately opened her purse in search of a long memorandum, when, turning around she beheld two ragged little urchins, shivering with cold, looking up to the counter and loitering with loving eyes at the contents of the nearest show case.

'At kind,' said the smaller, a little fellow, of about three years of age, pointing at the same time with a grimy little paw to some chocolate in front of him 'at kind; we want 'em.'

His companion, a little girl scarcely two years his senior, clad in a cotton frock and a ragged jacket, at the same time put up her little hand and laid down a small piece of silver, and pointing to the chocolates, in timid tones said she wished 'some of 'em.'

Now Monsieur LeBlanc, the facetious Frenchman, had just stepped into the store, and the children entered, but now coming out he eyed them and walking sharply towards them, took them one by one, and not over gently pushed them towards the door, saying in subdued tone, 'Run out, you little varnishes; run out and go somewhere else for I can't bother with you today.'

'Mr. LeBlanc!' He turned and beheld the flashing eyes of Miss Franclyn upon him, 'close that door.'

'Now my dears,' said interrupting, LeBlanc, who was about to offer an apology, 'come to me and tell me what you want.' She stooped at the same time and lifted each to a stool beside her for I can't bother with you today—

But now coming out he eyed them and walking sharply towards them, took them one by one, and not over gently pushed them towards the door, saying in subdued tone, 'Run out, you little varnishes; run out and go somewhere else for I can't bother with you today.'

'Mr. LeBlanc!' He turned and beheld the flashing eyes of Miss Franclyn upon him, 'close that door.'

'Now my dears,' said interrupting, LeBlanc, who was about to offer an apology, 'come to me and tell me what you want.'

SAYS:

I have been for about ten years very much troubled with indigestion and dyspepsia, have tried a great many different kinds of patent medicines, and have been treated by a number of physicians and found no benefit from them.

I was recommended to try Scott's Emulsion.

I obtained a bottle, and I must say I have found very great relief, and I believe that two more bottles and I will be cured.

I strongly recommend all my fellow sufferers from the disease, to give SCOTT'S EMULSION NEARLY AN IMMEDIATE TRIAL.

A CHRISTMAS TALE.

'Twas the day before Christmas.

The city lay resplendent in its coat of snowy whiteness, flashing back the rays of the sun from every crystal or diamond enured on its surface. Everything and everybody appeared to be busy with preparations for the coming day. The shopping had been most all completed by those who bought extensively for this season, and everything had been pretty well picked out from among the gaily supply of Xmas presents exhibited for sale.

Still there were a few stragglers trying to pick up bargains and complete their unfinished shopping and grumbling because things were all sold. Such was the case in all fancy goods stores, but not so with the confectioners. They expected and had prepared for a rush on this the best day of the shopping.

The store of Monsieur LeBlanc, the most fashionable confectioner in the city had been pretty busy all day, and was especially so along in the afternoon towards dusk, when in walked a fair and smiling young lady, wrapped in furs and with the effect of the sharp cold wind still visible on her rosy cheeks.

"Good afternoon, Monsieur LeBlanc," said the proprietor, and from his familiar tone it would appear that she was an old acquaintance or a regular customer for the sweets exposed to view.

A nod of recognition, both to him and the clerk who stepped forward, proclaimed that the acquaintance was mutual.

She had lately opened her purse in search of a long memorandum, when, turning round, she beheld two ragged little children, shivering with cold, stepping up to the counter and looking with longing eyes at the contents of the nearest show case.

"At kind," said the smallest, a little fellow, of about three years of age, pointing at the same time with a grimy little paw to some chocolate in front of him 'at kind; me want 'em.'

His companion, a little girl scarcely two years his senior, clad in a cotton frock and a ragged jacket, at the same time pointed to a small piece of silver, and pointing to the chocolate, in timid tones said the wished 'some of 'em.'

Now Monsieur LeBlanc, the facetious Frenchman, had just stepped into the back store as the children entered, but now coming out he beheld them and walking sharply towards them, took them one by one, and not over gently pushed them towards the door, saying in subdued tones, 'Run out, you little varnishes; run out and go somewhere else for I can't bother with you today.'

Mr. LeBlanc's face turned and he beheld the shivering and grimy children upon him, 'close that door.'

'Now my dear,' she said interrupting, 'LeBlanc, who was about to offer an apology, 'come to me and tell me what you want.' She stooped at the same time and lifted each to a stool beside her then directing them to choose what they wanted, she waited patiently till they had proceeded to, when she paid the modest little bill and turning to the astonished proprietor she said:

'Now sir, remember

SAYS:

I have been for about ten years very much troubled with indigestion and dyspepsia, and have tried a great many different kinds of patent medicines, but have been treated by a number of physicians and found no benefit from them. I was recommended to try SOUTH AMERICAN NERVE TONIC, and I have used it for some time, and I can say that it has cured me of my troubles. I have gained weight, and my appetite is improved, and I feel much better than I have for some time. I would recommend it to all who are troubled with indigestion and dyspepsia. It is a most valuable medicine, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is the best I have ever used. I have used it for some time, and I can say that it has cured me of my troubles. Still there were a few stragglers trying to pick up bargains and complete their unfinished shopping and grumbling because things were all sold. Such was the case in all fancy goods stores, but not so with the confectioners. They expected and had prepared for a rush on this the last day to shopping.

The store of Monsieur LeBlanc, the most fashionable confectioner in the city had been pretty busy all day, and was especially so along in the afternoon towards dusk, when it tipped a fair and smiling young lady, wrapped well in furs, and with the effect of the sharp cold wind still visible on her cheek.

'Good afternoon, Miss Francely,' said the proprietor, and from his familiar tone it would appear that she was an old acquaintance or a regular customer for some time.

A nod of recognition, both to him and the clerk who stepped forward, proclaimed that the acquaintance was mutual.

She had lately opened her purse in search of a long memorandum, when turning around she beheld two ragged little boys, shivering with cold, stepping up to the counter and looking with longing eyes at the contents of the nearest show case.

His companion, a little girl scarcely two years his senior, clad in a cotton frock and a ragged jacket, at the same time put up her little hand and pointed with a small piece of silver, and said, 'I want the chocolate, and not over gently pushed her towards the door, saying in addition tone, 'Run out, you little varmint; run out and go somewhere else for I can't bother with you today.'

'Mr. LeBlanc!' he turned and beheld the flashing eyes of Miss Francely upon him, 'don't you see?'

'Now my dear,' said interrupting, LeBlanc, who was about to offer an apology, 'come to me and tell me what you want.' She stooped at the same time and lifted each to a stool beside her then directing them to choose what they wanted, she waited patiently till they had procured it, when she paid the modest bill and turning to the astonished proprietor she said:

'Now sir, remember in future that the poorest child has a right to her share of your store and purchase what they choose so long as you pretend to do a business, and that their money is as good as mine or any other person's. Further remember that my patronage in future goes to the man who shows heart-felt sympathy for the children of the poor, and especially at such a season as this when the hearts of men should be filled with best wishes for their fellow beings. These dear little children probably never heard tell of Santa Claus, but some heart-broken mother, grieving to see the want of her children, has grudgingly given to them all that lies within her power to brighten their Christmas for them.'

All this she said in a short time and had attracted the attention of a few of the nearest customers, then without waiting for a reply from the nearest Frenchman, she took the youngest child in her arms and calling the other to follow walked boldly out to her sleigh in waiting and carefully lifting them in bade the driver drive slowly in the direction indicated by the little girl. In a short time they turned down a side street, up an alley of which she said they lived.

Now this course of action on the part of Peryl Francely was entirely new to her. Being blessed with an abundance of the good things of life she had barely seen the dark side but for tender hearted sympathy for the children of the poor, she would have been turned out by the unfeeling man of business and giving way to a sudden impulse she had taken their part in the brave manner described.

Now being come so far she thought she would see the adventure to an end, so bravely following the little one, she mounted a rickety staircase to a small room on the middle floor.

Here the children joyfully burst into the room and running to a bed in one corner, heaped their parcels on the quilt in front of a poor, pale-faced woman, telling with childish glee of the good woman who had given them what they had.

Peryl now stepped into the room and beheld a sight which touched her heart still more tenderly, for the mother, with out stretched arms was caring for the children and blessing the good woman who had befriended them.

A scene followed which it is not easy to describe. The mother thanking over and over again the lady for her kindness, and after listening to a recital of the way in which she, Peryl, had befriended them, told a pitiful tale, one which, alas, is far too common in many a city and one which we should all feel it our duty to relieve in as great a degree as possible.

It seemed that she was a poor widow whose husband had died shortly before leaving her alone and unsupported to fight the battle of life for herself and her three children. The eldest a boy of thirteen years, was all the support she now had, having been taken ill himself shortly before from frequent exposure and want and now she had been finally compelled to give up and take to her bed trusting that the Father of the fatherless would provide for her children.

Now truly God's ways are wonderful, and may it not have been that He took this way in which to provide for the poor and at the same time to show Peryl that life contained something more than the mere living for one's own enjoyment?

She now found a new pleasure in giving to relieve the wants of others and resolved in future to work more deeply in such matters and to spend less time in society.

Being blessed with a kind christian father he was only too glad to see the change in his daughter and lent all the assistance in his power to help the family she had thus providentially found. Through Peryl the mother received parcels, the children were warmly clothed, and for the first time since the death of the father, Santa Claus visited their home making glad all parties concerned.

But here she did not stop. The mother on receiving her health was found to be a suitable situation, and Charlie, her eldest son, who was now a clerk, was able to help himself, coupled with a little sympathy from their fellow beings, they were enabled to thrive and never knew real want afterwards.

And this is not the only jewel that Peryl Francely has added to her crown. Since she has been so kind as to help the family she has had thus providentially found. Through Peryl the mother received parcels, the children were warmly clothed, and for the first time since the death of the father, Santa Claus visited their home making glad all parties concerned.

Mrs. Paed.—Where were you last night? Mr. P.—At a stag party, my dear. 'I thought so when I heard you staggering upstairs.'

For throat and lung troubles Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, seasonably taken, is a certain specific.

The moon (to the sun)—Can't you say out with me for a while to-night. The sun—I'd like to very much, but really I must decline.

To prevent the hardening of the subcutaneous tissues of the scalp and the obliteration of the hair follicles, which causes baldness, use Hall's Hair Renewer.

Maud—I hope you are not going to marry that Mr. Korte. Kate—Really, I didn't think it would make any difference to you, dear, if I did it.

Baby cried, Mother sighed, Doctor prescribed: Castoria!

The scissorman.—Why have they tried the new political editorial writer?

The humorist.—Because there wasn't any fire in him.

MINARD'S FAMILY PILLS are purely vegetable.

First Boy. You're 'raid to fight, that's what it is.

No, I ain't; but if I fight you my mother'll lick me.

How will she end it out, eh?

She'll see the doctor going to your house.

YOUTH CORNER.

POPITY-POP AND THE KITE.

Popity-Pop was watching a beautiful white kite that was soaring aloft in the air. It was a very large kite, and it had a tail that appeared to Popity-Pop to be easily a mile long, it spread out so far behind it. The kite kept getting higher and higher, and farther and farther away, until it looked but a mere little speck in the sky.

'I wonder when it will come down again!' said Popity-Pop out loud, for he was deeply interested in the kite and he wanted to see it closer. 'I will sit on this stone and wait for it.'

Accordingly, Popity-Pop sat down to wait for the kite to come back. It was a beautiful day near the end of summer, the air was fresh and clear, the sun was shining and the sky was a brilliant blue, with scarce a cloud to be seen anywhere. Far above him, Popity-Pop could see the tiny speck that he knew was the kite, and he kept his eyes fixed steadily on it for a long time until they were so tired that he felt obliged to look down for a moment on the grass at his feet to rest them.

That one moment was most important, however, for when Popity-Pop raised his eyes to the sky he was surprised to see no kite like a speck above him, but instead it was standing upright by his side like some invisible bird. It certainly was a very large kite, and Popity-Pop felt a little startled to see it so close to him.

Scarcely had Popity-Pop asked this apparently harmless question than the eagles rose screaming and fluttering, and began to fly about angrily.

'We never even mention the name of the highest mountain in the world!'

Scarcely had Popity-Pop asked this apparently harmless question than the eagles rose screaming and fluttering, and began to fly about angrily.

'We never even mention the name of the highest mountain in the world to each. It is a secret, a great secret.' And they began to flap their wings in Popity-Pop's face, and seemed so very cross that he was glad to catch hold again of one of the bolts of the kite and again to soar off through the air with it.

The angry eagles followed them for a while screaming. 'We will never tell it, it is a secret, it is a secret.' And Popity-Pop was so alarmed that he was glad when the kite took him back to the sunny field again, and as he watched it sail off till it seemed like a mere speck he decided that he never wanted to go again to the home of the eagles on the top of the highest mountain in the world.—J. C. in Woman's Progress.

'Please, Mr. Eagle,' he said respectfully to a large grey eagle who was close by his side, 'Will you tell me the name of the highest mountain in the world?'
