Uneasy Feeling in the English Money Market

Caused by Groundless Rumors of Bank's Embarrassment.

The Situation Really Stronger Than It Has Been for Some Time Past.

London, July 31.—Prices were weak yesterday in all departments owing to the closing out of some weak accounts and to persistent rumors with regard to an oldestablished bank doing business with Portugal. OTTAWA, July 31.—The House went into committee on the tariff changes. The first matter taken up was the sugar duties, and upon the nature of these the Minister of upon the nature of these the Minister of France was interrogated by Mr. Paterson, of Brant. Mr. Foster stated that all refined sugar under No. 14 Dutch standard would have to pay duty.

Sir Richard Cartwright remarked that it would be a very great benefit to the country if the standard of sugar admitted free were fixed at No. 16 Dutch standard, the same as in the United States.

Mr. McMullen drew the attention of the House to the anomalous position in which the Government had placed itself by sending a special commission to promote trade the Government had placed itself by sending a special commission to promote trade relations with Jamaica and fixing the standards of dutiable sugar so low as to exclude the products of that colony. He held in his hand a sample of Jamacia sugar which would undoubtedly grade No. 16 Dutch standard. A gentleman had recently come from Jamaica for the purpose of opening up a trade between this Dominion and the colony he represented, but he was surprised to find out that by the tariff regulations Jamaica sugar was shut out of the Canadian market.

market. Sir Richard Cartwright, to make the matter clear, suggested an amendment which would have had the effect of confining the tax to refined sugars.

Mr. Bowell, however, would not accede to this, because he said it would open the door for all that class of bad sugar termed the low yellow, which was flooding the United States markets to an enormous extent.

Mr. Langelier remarked that Jamaica sugar was excluded, simply because it was a little clanger than the other. It was agreed to extablish a Provincial Grand Lodge in the Northwest Territories and British Columbia.

Thos. Keyes, St. Catharines, grand sugar was excluded, simply because it was a little clanger than the almerican Encyclopædia. The description was considered unjust to the order. This was not a quotation from a free trade organ, but from a paper that supported the Ministers in their protective policy. It was so significant that he called the attention of the Finance Minister to it.

Mr. Wood, of Westmoreland, let out what no member of the Government had what no member of the Government had the courage or the honesty to admit. It was the deliberate intention from the out-set to shut out Jamaica sugar because it was a clean sugar that would be used largely without refining, and, of course, largely without refining, and, of course, bought at a very low price. This would mean an enormous loss to the refiners, because poor people would use the cheap, clean sugar from Jamaica instead of the sugar of the refiners here.

After recess the first, second, third and sixth clauses were tead and carried, and the bill was read a first time as amended.

Mr. Langelier remarked that Jamaica sugar was excluded, simply because it was a little cleaner than the other. It was a very good sugar, and would be sold at 3 cents per pound, and, practically, the effect of the tariff would be to discriminate against this Jamaica sugar in favor of Cuba, a Spanish dependency.

Mr. Bowell, in replying to Mr. Langelier, very skillfully evaded the real issue. He pointed out that Cuba sugar was laid down at $3 37\frac{1}{2}$ at New York and at $3 56 at Montreal, and granulated sugar was sold for 4\frac{1}{2}$ cents and at New York for 4\frac{1}{2}$ cents.

The difference between the two was so light and the advantage to the country so great that the Government thought their policy was fully justified.

Mr. Paterson (Brant), questioned the accuracy of the members figures, although no doubt the Minister himself believed them to be correct. He could not conceive how the Government came to fix the standard at a figure which would exclude from Canada the sugar produced in a British colomy after the Minister had gone, at great expense to the country, to open up trade relations, after sending a commissioner and an AFRIED ON THE BRIDGE.

A Necessary Precaution.

The Cunard Steamship Company proudly boasts that, during the many years of their incorporation, they have never lost by ship wrock or accident the life of a single seaman or passanger. There is little idea of the necessary precautions taken by them for the safety and comfort of passengers. Every berth carries a life-bolt, while patent life boats and rafts are stowed in every convenient corner of the deck. Every ship carries, too, for the free use of passangers and erew, a supply of St. Jacobs Oil, in order that any bruises, sprains, colds, of other ailments, may be quickly and surely cured.

London, Saturday, August 1. THE ENORMITY OF THE RASCAL-

No matter what excuses Sir Hector

Langevin may formulate for not putting a stop to the wholesale peculation of public money through the agency of his department, there can be no longer any doubt that vast sums have been stolen either with his direct sanction and connivance, or by what every honest student of the evidence zentations of the subsidised organs that will must regard as his criminal negligence. The stealings are already shown to mount up into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and many shady transactions interest, which he is sworn to conserve, he are yet to be laid bare in this and almost was the first to move in these investigations. every department of the public service. Indeed, if Parliament is able to adjourn inside of the next two or three months, that action will be taken, not because all the political organs. There is the disastrous influence of the example of men in high places upon the rising generation, who are told in quarters dly to the offending Ministers and "slanders of public men," and that, so long as a man favors a certain trade policy, he must be supported by his falls. must be supported by his fellow party men no matter how great a rogue or how in capable a Minister he may be. There is a further consideration that to the overwhelming mass of "the population is all-important. The money which has been stolen or squandered by the million for the benefit of the Administration or its | will not permit of the payment of a very beneficiaries did not drop from the sky. substantial dividend. It was abstracted from the pockets of the taxpavers, and the extent of the peculation may, in some degree, be guaged by the financial records of the country, Since 1878, when the present Administration attained power, partly on the cry that Mr. | States article that even with a duty equal Mackenzie spent too much money in run- to 9 cents a gallon United States oil finds ning the country, the ordinary public expenditures have been increased from than $24,000,000 to close $36,000,000 a year, while the expenditures a great ado about the oil business. Even the Montreal Star, which at last general election strongly supported the Conservative party, has had its eyes this Mitherto adherent of the Conservative questions of Daminion taxation. party, "is practically on trial for permitting, if not conniving at the systematic robbery of the State by its own employes and by contractors upon a scale of lordly magnificence. * * Canada has been aring out treasure like water, not only for public works, but that contractors may have the where with alto supply election funds; that civil service jackdaws may strut around in peacocks' plumes; that second class clerks may live like deputy ministers and first-class rascals like nabobs. * * * *
Were the Parliamentary Committees to sit antil doomsday they could hardly hope to snoover half of the corrupt acts that have been practiced in connection with the civi administration. Everything points to widely ramified system of fraud. What hope is there of the Conservative party surviving under such a load of scaudal as this? The only hope for the party is in an heroic endeavor to rid itself of such of its members as do not command general public confidence. Further than this, if here are men in prominent positions wh from any cause are a source of weakness to the party it is their duty in a crisis like this to voluntarily efface themselves.

* * It is as sure as fate that the Conservatives will be swept out of power if they do not suc-ceed in forming a Government free from the taint of corruption. Every bye-election will be fought upon the issue of purity in the administration of Governclutely essential to get rid of all compromsing elements in the Cabinet and to have a leader in whose personal integrity the public can have confidence."

What Liberal journal has formulated a stronger indictment of the men now in power than is here set forth? Yet this Montreal Conservative journal is not alone in its de-mand for the clearing out of the rascals. The Toronto News, another paper of the same stripe, gives publicity to a strong protest against the "irregularities and criminalities at Ottawa." This is what it

"If the whole system of departments is not permeated by corruption, the opinion is rapidly gaining ground that it is, and that is a very bad impression to spread among the people. That there are many honotable and theroughly upright men in Parliament and in the departments no one will gainsay, but when men come forward and unreservedly admit that they were in the pay of this or that contractor, that they took money or its equivalent from persons doing business with the Government, the whole system comes under suspicion. Two or three Cabinet Ministers are compromised already by the laxity which they permitted in departments immediately under their supervision, and when after the session the time comes for reconstruction these will have to go. If there is one way more than another in which the Canadian people show their pespect for honesty and fair dealing it is in the displeasure they summarily visit upon delinquents of this kind, as witness the Pacific Scandal. Although Sir John Macdonald was a popular man at the head of a popular Gevernment, the revelations of his dealings with the Allans incontinently broke him and his Government at the same time, and when the people were called on to pronounce an opinion at the polls everyone who was "If the whole system of departments is and his Government at the same time, and when the people were called on to pronounce an opinion at the polls everyone who was engaged with him in that unfortunate business was rejected by the people, and Sir John himself barely escaped defeat. No chances should be taken of a repetition of that condemnation, and the Premier and his able and excellent adviser, Sir John Thompson, will be looked to to remove all cause for suspicion."

This truthful view of the situation, coming as it does from independent Conservative as it does from independent Conservative journals, is worth a great deal more as an indication of the feeling in the country than the excuses and the misrepresee the Ministers through, no matter how much disgrace they may bring upon their party and upon the country. Mr. Tarte was a good Conservative, and in the public As a consequence he has been looked upon as a very bad man; has been traduced and misrepresented by this class of adrift, how many will be left? Besides The dishonor which these men in high that no matter what the country thinks of Sir Hector Langevin has plainly intimated room-mate of his old age, Thomas Mc Greevy, M.P., the Government must stand by him, or they must all go down would cheerfully welcome the total col lapse of an Administration tainted by so

The London Free Press has been making t it regards oil as a natural product? and is it intended to be included in the reciprocity treaty in natural products only, which the Conservative party has promised to negotiate with our neighbors?

If the answer is in the affirmative, where stands the Free Press? If oil is not to be included in the proosal, why not?

Why coal or salt, and not oil? Let our contemporary lay down its remises in this connection before it underepaned, and joins in the loud outery premises in this connection before it under-for a change that prevails throughout the takes to berate those who take a national land. THE records of the doings in the Departments of Sir Hector Langevin and Mr. Dawdney have reached the British metropolis, and even staid old Conservatives are shocked at the reve-lations laid bare and sustained by well-corroborated evidence. For example, the Morning Advertiser sums up its summary of the exposures in these terms: "Our Canadien kinsmen have more than one unpleasant reason at the present moment for being dissatisfied with their rulers." The concensus of English opinion indeed, appears to be that a Government under which such wholesale peculation has grown up has lasted too long, and should be promptly relieved from the duty of managing public affairs.

WHY MAGNIFY WAR?

the Toronto school inspector, complained that in modern school books too much attention was paid to Greek and Roman battles and too little to battles of modern times. The fewer details of wars and bloodlettings supplied to the young of the land the better.

If wars must be referred to, the school historian should be a man of peace, ready and anxious to show how easy it would have been for nations to have settled their lisputes by friendly arbitration rather than by resort to the sword. The appeal to national prejudices contained in so many war histories naturally tends to the cult vation of the pugilistic, quarrelsome side of a boy's nature rather than to the propoga tion of those admirable traits of character that look to the arts that make for peace as the best means of promoting national interests and cementing the nations of the earth in peaceful, inter-dependent harmony.

TOPICS OF TO-DAY. SEVERAL of the young ladies at Chautauqu this year have caused a sensation through going riding on a monocycle.

THE farmer who saved up his cats, in the hope that prices would go higher and higher, now finds that stowing away is not always profitable. It is always best to sell when a moderate price can be obtained.

Down drops the high tax majority on the trade question. In 1888 the majority against reciprocity was 57; in 1889 it was 44; in 1890, on the reduction of taxation resolution it was 37; now it has dwindled down to 26. At this rate the end of the must soon arrive.

THE Lindsay Post has reached the con clusion that National Plunder the definition of the letters N. P. a Ottawa. For particulars read the revela tions before the two committees that for weeks have been kept busy listening to rascalities perpetrated under the present

THOMAS McGREEVY, M.P., says that he destroyed or lost all the letters that passed between him and Sir Hector Langevin, and that he kept no financia records. Sir Hector informs the investigating committee that he, too, has destroyed the letters and telegrams received from Uncle Themas. How con venient, and how very suggestive !

WHAT annoys honest Conservatives is the fact that this whole wretched business at Ottawa was brought to light through a quarrel between two brothers over a disagreement about the division of the plunder.—[Hamilton Herald.

Surely honest Conservatives are no annoyed by the exposure. Honest mer are always prepared to have rascality exposed wherever found, and the offend ers punished, no matter their position. ###

Mr. Spurgoon has been reviewing a book on "Primitive Methodism on the Yorkshire Wolds," and finds in it some stories very much to his mind. He is especially pieased with one criticism of a sermon.

"Ah, say, Mister, you preached a goodish sermon to-night; but if it had been cut ahort at beath ends, and set a-fire in the middle, it wad a dean us mare good."

Mr. Spurgeon "scarcely remembers a better criticism than this."

Another story is of a not very fluent young man, who, being in the habit of saying in his prayers, "Lord, help me to pray," was answered one night by an old man's ejaculation: "And the Lord help thee to give ower."

CHAPTER I.

About 70 years ago a young man

About 70 years ago a young man of strong physique and prepoasessing appearance arrived at New Orleans. He had your from New York of which city he was a native, and had brought with him a considerable sum of money, supplanted by a letter of introduction to Judge Favart de aumartin, who was then at the flood-tide of his fame.

It would not be fair to call our young pan ("our hero" would be the good old phrase) an adventurer without taking pains a qualify the impression that might be promoded. Hepworth Coleman had his own way of looking at life. Fifty years later he could have been a tragedian, probably a smous one; but the conditions were not avavorable to awaken histrionic ambition, at the time whon his character, his tastes, his ambition, should have been forming. What he saw that was most fascinating to him find no distinct form; it lay along the southwestern horizon a dreamy mistreovered something not unlike the confines of romance.

He was rich, and what was, perhaps, a greater misfortune, he had no living kinstolk for whom he cared or who cared for reovered something not unlike the confines by romance.

He was rich, and what was, perhaps, a greater misfortune, he had no living kinstolk for whom he cared or who cared for him. Practically speaking, he was alone in the world; moreover, he had an imagination. Scott's novels, Byron's poetry, the Yrench romances, and I know not what else of the sort, had been his chief reading. For physicial recreation he had turned to teneing and pistol-practice. When I add that he was but 22 and unmarried, the rest way be guessed. But Coleman was not a young man of the world in the worst sense; he had not turned to evil sources of dissipation. Healthy, vigorous, full of spirit, he hevertheless had sentimental longings, as indefinite as they were persistent.

Youth is the spring-lime when "Longen folk to gon on pligrimages," as old Chaucer words it, and it would be hard to find the young man who has not felt the vaguely-outlined yet irrestatible desire to wander-to go over the herizon into a strange, new world. Hepworth Coleman, when he was taken with this longing, felt no restraint coast around him. He was absolutely free: had all the means necessary. Why should he not go where he pleased? If it seems strange that he should have been attracted to New Orleans rather than to the Old World, we must remember what New Orleans was in 1820. No other city, not even Paris, could at that time compare with it as a center of genuine romance. Nor was this romance unmixed with lawlessness of the most picturesque kind. Money poured into it from a hundred sources more or less illegitimate, besides the streams of wealth produced by cotton, sugar and rice industries. Gambling was indeed a fine art, duelling appeared more a pastime than anything else, and what went on in the gilded halls and melody-filled salles may be imagined, I suppose, though I do not care to east a glance that way.

Hepworth Coleman had heard much of the gay city, of its odorous atmosphere, its hospitality, its social charm, the smack of reckless romance in all its ways. S

The letter to Judge Favart de Caumartin was given to Coleman by his banker, who in handing it to him said:

"I don't know the judge personally, never saw him: but he has done a lot of business through us. He is very rich, evidently very influential, and certainly will be of use to you. I feel that I can take the liberty of sending you to him, because—well, he is under many obligations to the bank and is likely to want many more large favors. I fancy that you'll find him a trifle eccentric, but enthusiastically hospitable. A creole of the creoles, I judge him to be, and a representative of the nabobs."

Young Coleman considered himself lucky

A creole of the creoles, I judge him to be, and a representative of the nabobs."

Young Coleman considered himself lucky to carry with him a document that would give him an introduction to a person sorenowned as Judge Favart de Caumartin, of whom he had been recently reading a good deal, owing to a duel fought between the judge and one Colonel Sam Smith, of the United States Army, in which the latter had been killed. The duel had brought out history, from which it appeared that Judge Favart de Caumartin had fought before, not once only, but many times, and always to the death of his antagonist. Along with these facts were disclosed numerous pleturesque details of the judge's past life, with more than hints that in his young days he had been a pirate of something of the sort. The account also made the most of his wealth, his almost reckless liberality, his eccentricity, and, most of all, the air of mystery which still hung over his business operations.

All this was rich food for an imagination already thoroughly saturated with the spirit of romantic adventure, and during the voyage from New York to New Orleans Hepworth Coleman found deep satisfaction in anticipating what he felt was in store for Hepworth Coleman found deep satisfaction in anticipating what he felt was in store fo him. In every fibre of his frame he felt the assurance that he was on his way to new and strange experiences.

His banker had sent a letter to precede his banker had sent a letter to precede his arrival by a few days, asking a friend to secure suitable apartments for "Mr. Hepworth Coleman, gentleman," the consequence being that a dark young man, small, but well built and handsome, met him at the landing to conduct him to his suite of tooms on Royal street.

"Is you Meestu Coleman, sah?" inquired this young stranger in a musical tone of

"Is you Meestu Coleman, san? Inquired this young stranger in a musical tone of voice. "I look for zat man at Prayson."
"Yes, sir, thar is my name," said Coleman briskly, at the same time showing by this look that he would like to know whom was meeting.

"Yeree glad you come, Meestu Coleman; reree glad, sah, indeed. Got your rooms all prepare for you, sah. Yas, sah, zey is beautin' an' sharming rooms."

"Thank you; I am much indebted. Are

For some reason not exactly explainable, this whole proceeding affected Coleman peculiarly. He felt a sort of vague uneasiness, as if he were passing into an atmosphere of mystery, if not of danger.

As he was whitled through the narrow streets he caught glimpses of queer tile-dovered houses, with curious hanging gulleries; high walls and gloomy courts flanked these, and here and there a dusky pelm or a bright orange tree flung out its foliage. Blooming magnolis clumps filled the air with a heavy, languid edor.

But what most attracted the attention of Coleman was a company of four or five

How could that be the celebrated quemse be guardian pirate!
"It cannot be he," he muttered aloud.

"It is impossible."
"Veree well, Meestu Coleman," said the "Veree well, Meestu Coleman," said the young creole, dryly; "but I must inquir yo' pahdon, sah. Monsieur le Juge Favart de Caumartin ees to me well acquainted. I wemark to you, sah, zat zere ees not any mistake."

"Oh, certainly, sir, I beg a thousand pardens "exclaimed Coleman, pulling himself together and seeing his breach of etiquette. "Of course you are right, but I was so surprised to see the judge looking so young. I had supposed that he was an aged man. I am astonished."

"Oh, monsieur, le juge ees not so verce young-not so verce—hees hair not much gray."

young—not so veree—nees hair not much gray."
While they were still discussing this matter the carriage stopped in front of a square, heavy-looking house which, painted a dull red and projecting its upper gallery over the sidewalk, flung out on either side a heavy brick wall on whose top was a jagged dressing of broken bottles and jugs. It looked more like a convent than like an appartment-house.

Hepworth Coleman found his suite of rooms admirable in every respect; large, pertment-house.

Hepworth Coleman found his suite of rooms admirable in every respect; large, airy, luxuriously furnished. His croole conductor parted with him at the door without giving his name or address, and without any explanation whatever of his connection with the matter of securing these elegant spartments or with making his arrival easy and pleasant.

Some silent and obsequious negro servants were at hand to do his bidding; but he soen dismissed them while he flung himself upon a sofa and lit his pipe. Altogether incomprehensible to him were the suggestions of secrecy and mystery connected with his reception; scarcely less so was the youthful—nay, boyish—appearance of Judge Favart de Caumartin.

As if the mysterious atmosphere meant to continue growing denser, it was while he lay on the luxurious scarlet sofa, smoking, resting, and meditating, that a beautiful girl came and stood in the doorway of his chamber. She blushed sweetly at the sight of him, recoiled violently, and then slipped swiftly away, leaving behind her a rustle of fine stuff, a sparkle of rare jewels, and a lingering bonguet of violets and rose.

The old woman retired as soon as she had arranged the repast on a round mahogany table. Coleman found the oysters, the wine, the broiled fish, and the French bread excellent to such a degree that he ate almost everything before him; then leaning far back in his chair he began to study the silver set from which all these good things had been taken. The platter was in the form of a flounder, the sugar-bowl was a trog, the cream-pitcher a heron, the coffeepot a pelican, and on each was cut the name Favart de Caumartin in plain, bold letters. Even on the five-armed silver candle-stick, in which burned five fragrant myrtle wax tapers, appeared that striking inscription. He surveyed the room now with a more critical eye, discovering at once that the pictures, the curtains, the carpets, and indeed all the articles of furniture, were costly and beautiful beyond anything he had ever seen before. Evidently he was in Judge de Caumartin's house.

The moon was shining brilliantly when Coleman went forth for a short walk on the street. Not many people were abroad, it being the dinner hour; but certain cafes were crowded with men and women who were drinking champagne and discussing the dishes on well-spread tables.

At the door of one of these gorgeous rooms Coleman met the young man whom a few hours before he had seen leading the rout of singers in the street. It cocurred to him that now was as good as any time to present his letter to the judge, so he forthwith stepped near him and said, lifting his hat:

As if the mysterious atmosphere meant o continue growing denset, it was able pleasure, however and his pleasure, ower here of continue growing denset, it was able pleasure, however and his pleasure, ower here of continue growing denset, it was able pleasure, however and his pleasure, however and his pleasure, however and his pleasure, ower how here of the growing denset, it was able pleasure, however and his pleasure, however and his pleasure, ower how here of the growing denset, it was held between the weapon across the cheek, saying in a loud with provided the provided in the way has low of the saying and store in miniment danger."

Mile. de Caumartin blushed; she may have felt a touch of guilt because she could not muster courage to tell her father that she had already visited Mr. Coleman.

"I have not seen him yet," continued the judge; "I thought it best to let him have some rest before calling upon him. Cartwright advises me that he is of an excellent family—a man to be given the greatest attention, and for my banker's sake, if for nothing else, I must meet the demand upon my hospitality. He came a fortnight earlier than I expected, but I had Jules watching for him, and you know Jules never fails." for him, and you know Jules never fails."

"But you should have told me before, father, dear," said Mile. Olympe, "only a while ago, while wandering shrough the distant wing of the house, I invaded this young gentleman's apartment. It surprised him evidently as much as it abashed

"The obvious morel of which is," replied the judge quickly, "that you are hereafter to be more careful about what rooms you are tumbling into." As he spoke his dark, oval face with its fine grave smile, was almost like a boy's. The flush that lay under the skin shone through with a suggestion of some repressed stimulus, as if a great passion had forced it up. In his eyes an underglow, so to call it, smouldered with fascinating vagueness.

She was priced to him at $10,000, her 3-year-old record of 2:24½ having stamped her as a good one. But the Major, who is an exceptionally good judge of a horse, preferred to pay the price Jamsen, which he now owns. A few days later Nancy Hańks, then a 4-year-old, trotted in 2:14½, and her price jumped at once to $36,000. The Major does not believe in crying over spilt nilk, but he most his lost opportunity to vecure a possible world-beater.

CHATHAM, Ont., July 12, 1891.

DEAR AUNT FRUDENCE:

Will you have me for your niece please, for I mant to be one very much. It is so nice to get one more aunt than I was intended to have. Did you ever think you were going to have such a number of nephews and nieces before you died. My little Scotch terrier Gypsy is on my lap while I am writing this. He sends his love to Aunt Prudence, and says that if he knew how to write he would send her a letter. You would love him very much if you knew him; he is so fluffy and has such bright eyes. On my last birthday I got a little gred leather collar with a sliver bell for him. I am 8 years old. Good-bye.

DEAR AUNT PRUDENCE:

I am a boy 6 years old. Mamma reads your letters to me Sunday afternoon, generally after the lesson. I have been learning to write all winter so as I could write. Mamma said last night the I could write you one to day. I have a dog named Dan and a big brother, who is dreadfully big, and a turtle. I can't really spell as well as this; mamma is telling me how. I am the youngest in our family, but they haven't called me Baby since I was quite young. My hand is very tired. I am your loving nephew, Freed H. Scott.

I have a baby brother Will, who is very sweet. I love him very much except when he knocks down my block-houses, then I would slap him only mamma is mostly there to stop me. I have a beautiful Noah's ark, only the red paint comes off the roof if you lick it. I have to wear kilts yet, but next fall I am going to have real pants. I ean't think of anything else to say just now, so good-bye.

John Mackay.

If am very glad to hear from you, Jack.

This is my third letter to you. I am here on a visit to a friend of mine. I have been here two weeks. The first week I telt very homesick and cried dreadfully, but now I am all right, though I would like to see my baby brother very much. He is such a little love. Hattie and I play croquet every evening, but she generally beats. We are going to make ice-cream this afternoon. Don't you wish you could have some? I have not been strong ever since spring set in, that is why I was sent here for a change of air. It is rather interesting not to be strong. Your loving nicee, H. M. HARRIS.

[I am glad to hear from you again, Helen. We are becoming well acquainted, are we not? It is very dreadful to be homesick, as I know.—Aunt Prudence.]

A pasturing farmer would be shocked at the suggestion that he put his hay and grain where his stock can help themselves to it in the winter, tread upon and waste it; but his is exactly his aystem in summer mantgement. And then he complains that sarming don't pay !— [Exchange.]

We will wager bhat the above was written by some theoretical authority (?) who never swined an acre of pasture land, or a cow or waste to turn to pasture. It is a pretty theory so write out on paper, this idea of growing the fodder and feeding it at the bare, but in practice it is a pleasing fact that pasturing fatures to the stockman more net profit from the outlay than any other feature of the whole round of the farme. So long as this is he case, the farmer who is after business will be fully justified in his pasturage, however much paper farmers may make fun of him.—Mafine Harmer.

Fifteen years ago, to our certain knowledge, the late Hiram Smith could kgep no more than 50 oows, and the teams it took to work his farm of 200 acrea, when pasturing was relied upon to feed his cows from apring till after haying time, and the harvesting of the small grain. Soon after the time mentioned he commenced soilting from ree, clever and millet, each in season. He crowded the cows, with some number added to the herd, into the small wood lot. Soon after came the silo, winter dairying, and 100 cows, all fed, and not an acce added to the farm, to this day. When he pastured he werked hard to get two or three hundred dollars a head per annum. Under the new regime, with sky or seven hired men, he took his eare, traveled all he wanted to, gave away time and money to improve other farmers, and still "nated down" more than 6 per cent. on the farm at the valuation of $50 per acre, and the same interest on the value of each cow.

improve other farmers, and still "catted down" more than 6 per cent. on the farm at the vagnation of $50 per acre, and the same laterest on the value of each cow.

Who is the "theorist," in the estimation of the Main Farmer?
Chean or untillable land may well be pastered. But no dairy farmer with a business head on him. can aford to pasture tillable land worth $50 an acre, or more.—[Hoard's Dairyman, ... Dairyman, The Virtue of Clover.

Prof. Roberts says, as a rule, clover is the best fertilizer. You may raise a crop and seave the soil richer than before. I prefer to mix alsike with the large red, as the latter will hold up she former, but clover that lodges should be cut as seen as it falls down, no matter at what stage of growth it is. So of corn; it will leave the ground richer. More than 100 years ago this fact was known and men tried to solve the problem, but it was not till within the last ten years that the secrat was discovered. A microbe living in the cells of the roots takes nitrogen from the atmosphere and feeds it to the plant through the cells. Now, to give the microbe plenty of work and keep him from getting lazy, cultivate the ground often, but not deeply; use a narrow spring tooth cultivator and keep it going. Do not go down more than two inches. The prosess serves to pump up moisture from below and lets in the air for the microbes' and corn root cells' breakfast. The microbe aceds air, heat and moisture to be a healthy anicrobe and get in his work well.

Roses from Seed.

A writer in Gardening Illustrated describes his mode of raising roses from reed in open ground and without the aid of class, and although our winters are colder than those of England the same course may, perhaps, be adopted here with some additional protection. He has a long line of seedling plants of roses that were taised from seeds in open ground three years ago. Some of them flowered the same season, but soon died; others flowered the year following. The seed was sown in drills an inch deep and covered with fine soil. In attumn they were lifted and placed in the shelter of a close fence. They were set out the following April, where they have remained since. They must not be left out the first winter. Hardy varieties, when well established, will succeed. The best sovering for the young plants the first winter would be nearly dry moss held by evergreen branches, or dry forest leaves in a well sheltered locality.

The farmer should always give his fowls a large run, because it is doubtful if any erop could be planted on the ground required by the hens that would pay as well.

Keep track of your fowls. Many people that keep a "mixed company" of hens keep some of their fowls till they have far outly dived their usefulness. Do not keep them beyond the third year.

A contemporary advises using a hen and ther brood of chicks in fighting the asparagus beetle. It is said that they will keep the od free from the beetles and that the young chicks will thrive on their food. It is better to keep the ducks in their gards till after the eggs for the day are leposited, as they do not take much care as to the place in which they deposit them when they are engaged in hunting a meal. The rules that apply to beef cattle apply, to some extent, to positry raised for their desh. A fewl to be profitable for this purpose must be "near the ground," that is, the legs should be short and thick. Longlegged fewls are not desirable.

There is no doubt that the present num-ber of fowls in this country would bring twice the revenue that they now do if all twice the revenue that they now do if all the poultry yards were carried on on business principles. A hen is supposed to pay a profit of $1 per year, but there are multitudes of hens that do not pay half of that, merely because the owner does not take pains to inquire which fowls are profitable and which are not.—[Farmers' Review. The lawn may have an unusual supply of sweeds this fine growing weather. If the lawn-mower does not cripple them sufficiently, they can be dug out (and ought to be) with a cout table kuife. And the looner they are out the better, so as to give the grass full possession of the soil.

Painting the flower pots, as was done by a good lady not long ago, is a "mistaken kindness." Those who are well informed know that the health of the plants is promoted by the noresity of the unglazed

Prevention of Bee Swarming

Prevention of Bee Swarming.

The great study of the bee-keeper, remarks a contemporary, is how to keep the bees from swarming. A colony sending out a swarm in the season of honey-flow means almost entire cessation of honey-gathering in the hive for some days, and possibly no more will be stored in the sections that season. By proper management of the swarm that goes out one may get considerable comb-honey. One way is to hive the swarm in frames, having only a strip of comb-foundation about one inch wide in each, which insures straight combs if the hive is level. Then place a case of sections above, and when they are about half filled raise them and put another under, and so keep them and put another under, and so keep thei storing honey before they have much broo

The grain fields as now left after the harvester are failures for pork-making. Farmers make every effort to gather the grain perfectly, yet they appear to think a pig should do as well as he did in our fathers days after their manner of harvesting. It is our belief that a lot of spring pigs that have been accustemed to a full feed of slep would, if turned into the finest wheat field, lose fielsh if the slep ration were discontinued.

Success vs. Failure With Sheep.
The sheep business, like dairying, is a business that cannot be made successful by picking it up one year and dropping it therext. It is a business that needs study, and like dairying, the details of it cannot be learned in one year. It is the man who goes into and sticks to it that wins; and he cannot be breeding for mutton one year and wool the next, neither can hy keep his flock on the feast-or-famine plan during the winter and raise a crôp of healthy lambs in the spring:—[Stockman.

Unacrated milk, says F. D. Curtis, is the mother of most floating curds and cheese spoiled in this way. In shut-up cans it is worse. It is the potent father of tyrotoxicon poison. LONDON, July 31.—In the House of Commons, Henry Peyton Cobb, M. CROOKEDENSS AT CLEVELAND.

At Cleveland on Wesinesday the horse owner, and the driver, George Speare, were expelled from the National Trotting Association, and the reason is thus stated; In the 2:19 class, trotting, a purse of $2.000 was ofered. Ten of the entries were scratched, leaving nine to start. Temple Bar was the natural favorite, and was backed freely. When Jimmy Goldsmith took the first heat with Leicester in 2:18 and repeated in the same position next time in 2:17, the betters began to be suspicious. Then Aline came along and got a heat in 2:20; Temple Bar having come in sixth second and fourth in the three heats. It was evident that Temple Bar's driver, George Spear, was resorting to far different in tactics than those which characterized his piloting the one-eyed stallion to the from in the big field of twelve at Detroit, and he was called up. The judges believed Spear had not driven to win, and they put Gus Wilson in the sulky. With the new driver Temple Bar won three straight heats. In 2:184, 2:193 and 2:23. An examination of the pool books showed that Leicester was being played to win—by some unknown people, and everything looked so suspicious that after the races the judges decided to expel the horse, owner and driver. Temple Bar's carcer on the turf this year has been both ovenerful. Placing a mark of 2:184 after his name at Minnehala, he jumeyed to Detroit and reduced his resort to 2:177, winning the richest stake of the year. Here he beat a great field, and mass now share the fate of the outlaw, unless fortunate enough to gain reinstatement.

The local brethren of the Canadian Order Foresters enjoyed their annual outing at Wonderland Thursday, to which they have been looking forward for some time past. They pienicked at this pretty spot, and during the afternoon a remarkably big crowd took the trip down the picturesque Thames, although the weather was slightly chilly. All who attended enjoyed themselves heartily. Means of entertainment were provided in plently and the grounds suited the purpose admirably. The Seventh Band enlivened the proceedings with a number of fine selections, receiving a good share of attention. Many a happy young couple wended their way to the commodious dancing-hall and kept time with their feet to sweet strains of music from Dayton's orchestra. This was kept up continually during the afternoon and evening. Lunch was by no means the least attractive feature.

A large crowd was drawn to the spot where the sports were held. Great interest was shown in some of the events and competition was in most cases keen. Following is a list of the prize-winners:

George Atken, of This City, Disappears
Without an Evident Reason.

George Atken, of 191 Eathurst street, fins been the driver of Tune's pop wagon for some time. Monday he left the city with a good stock of the refreshments in his vehicle. Tuesday afternoon he put up at McColl's Hotel, Lucan, and later on asked the landlord to look after his team while he went to Forest, assuring him that he wend return the same evening. Since then nothing has been heard or seen of him by parties interested. Detective Phair looked into the matter and found that Atken had taken the train for the west, but to what point he could not ascertain.

Atkin was 24 years of age and lived alone with his widowed mother. All who know him, including his employers, speak well of him. How much money he had with him the firm does not know, although it is considered more than the wages due him. At any rate it was not a great deal. The impression prevails that he has gone to the States, but for what reason is a mystery.

THE EDWARDS' MILLIONS

Tardy Claimants.

The latest sensation regarding the Edwards' estate is furnished by Dr. Claffin, Chicago, formerly of New York, who has been summoned to London, Eng., by a cablegram from his solicitor. Herbert Gladstone. Dr. Claffin is a brother of Victoria Woodhulf and Tennie C. Claffin, who, after an extraordinary career as spiritualists, publishers of a sensational paper and stock brokers, wentto London, where Mrs. Woodhulf married Mr. Martin, a banker, and Miss Claffin became the wife of Sir Francis Cook. Dr. Claffin's wife is one of many heirs to the great Edwards' estate, which includes about 65 acres in the heart of New York estimated at $200,000,000. It has been held on a 99 years' lease, which expires this year. Herbert Gladstone represents the Claffin interests in England, Dr. Claffin expects to receive the greater part of the the Claffin interests in England, Dr. Claffin expects to receive the greater part of the vast estate. Under the English law the heirs must prove their claims within a specified time. Many of the heirs failed to comply, and their shares, Dr. Claffin's solicitor thinks, will go to the Chicago man. In order to secure still more, the husbands of his sisters, with Dr. Claffin have benight up the claims of many of the minor heirs. The readers of the Advergriser are already aware that the Edwards family of Lobo township are among the heaviest claimants for this estate.

WEEKS WEEKS TIME LOOK OUT FOR OUR

"August Flower" I had been troubled five months with Dyspepsia. The doctors told me it was chronic. I had a fuliness after eating and a heavy load in the pit of my stomach. I suffered fre-quently from a Water Brash of clear matter. Sometimes a deathly Sickmatter. Sometimes a deathly Sickness at the Stomach would overtake me. Then again I would have the terrible pains of Wind Colic. At such times I would try to belch and could not. I was working then for Thomas McHenry, Druggist, Cor. Irwin and Western Ave., Allegheny City, Pa., in whose employ I had been for seven years. Finally I used Angust Flower, and after using just August Flower, and after using just one bottle for two weeks, was en-tirely relieved of all the trouble. I can now eat things I dared not touch before. I would like to refer you to Mr. McHenry, for whom I worked, who knows all about my condition, and from whom I bought the medicine. I live with my wife and family at 39 James St., Allegheny City, Pa. Signed, JOHN D. Cox.

MONTREAL, Aug. I.—Shipments of stockers to the old country are commencing again, and sales have not turned out any better than those of the first part of the season. A good deal of money has been lost in stockers this year. The fitst sale for some weeks was that of $39 catte of the Cremona at Aberdeen. From $3 to $5 per head were lost on them. The principal reason for the low prices in Scotland is the scarcity and high price of feed there, which has rendered the purchasing of stockers unprofitable to the farmers.

VOICES OF THE PEOPLE. The Recent Stabbing Case.

(Signed) London, July 31. Mr. Hutchinson's Statement.

Mr. Mutchinson's Statement.

To the Editor of the Advertisers:
At the request of Mrs. Dean, the prosecutrix in the case against C. F. Colwell, issuer of marriage licenses, I ask you to make public her denial of the allegation you have given currency to, that her daughter paid for the license and the ring, and purchased a new suit of clothes for the young man to wear at the ceremony. Mrs. Dean says that there is no truth whatever in the allegation referred to, and on my own part, I will remark that it was not right in my opinion to publish, under the own part, I will remark that it was not right in my opinion to publish, under the circumstances, any such unauthenticated rumor to the supposed disadvantage of the prosecution. It might be weil, in order to save Mrs. Dean further annoyance, to let it be known that Mrs. Dean has no control over the prosecution, which will be conducted entirely in the public interest, and for the purpose of preventing in future such errors (to use a very mild expression) on the part of issuers of marriage licenses—errors which, nothwithstanding Mr. Luscombe's opinion to the contrary, must necessarily inflict to the contrary, must necessarily inflict great harm, and be productive of great misery to the friends of such unfortunate young victims as Miss Jessie Dean. Yours truly, Charles Hurchinson,
County Crown Attorney.

The Chillian Conflict.

Coquimbo, Chili, July 31.—The Chilian Government forces here have been increased by the arrival of a reinforcement of 2,000 men. If the insurgents take the place they will have to fight hard to accomplish their purpose. The Esmeralda and Aconagua, of the insurgent fleet, have got their party into serious complications. The British bark Peral was bound for this port with a cargo of flour, when the two insurgent warships came up and boarded her. They towed her for some distance north, when they released her. In the meantime news of the action of the insurgent wassels reached this port and the British corvette Garnet was sent in parsuit. Murder or Suicide?

Whiten, Ont., Aug. L.—Thursday afternoon, inside the bar of the mouth of the Rouge River, near Port Union, was found a body of a man 5 feet 5 inches in height, heavy sandy mustache, rest of face clean shaved, sandy hair, weight about 140 pounds. Deceased was dressed in dark worsted suit. A leather pocketbook was found on his person, no money being in it. There were in his pockets the addresses of Chas. Cluthe, King street west, near Yonge, Toronto; T. Heintzman, King street west, Toronto, and M. L. Shane. There was blood oozing from the mouth and a bullet wound in the right temple. The bullet appeared to have taken a downward direction into the head. Three men were in the neighborhood last Saturday, one of whom, supposed to be the deceased, was offering $5 to two persons for a horse to drive them to the nearest hotel. On Monday last a brown Christie stiff hat was found near where the body was discovered.

He Fell Among Thieves

"I never found anything in this world," said Gilead philosophically, "that got to be any the better for being bragged about, but that is as fine a piece of engraving work as ever I put a tool on."

"Let Mr. Reid compare it with one of the originals," said Butterfield. He drew one of the originals from his own pocket-book and laid the beside the forgery.

The detection of forged bank-notes had never been any part of Harry Wynnes business, and the experts had already succeeded where he failed. But after a searching and minute examination he could discover no difference between the false note and the real. The whole party awaited his judgment with interest, and even with some show of anxiety. Gilead appeared to take umbrage at the length and closeness of the examination.

"You can look, William. You won't find nothing the matter with my work. If there is a weak point it's in the paper."

It was not Harry's cue to express his own sentiments. He was there to impersonate Mr. William Reid, who would doubtless have been much less surprised than he was at the excellence of the imitation.

"It isn't bad," he said. "A man would have to be suspicious to suspect."

This was accepted by them all as a warm encomium on the work.

"These fellows," said Gilead with a tone

"This was accepted by them all as a warm encomium on the work.

"These fellows," said Glead with a tore and gesture scarcely respectful to his colleagues; "these fellows were in such a cursed hurry to get them on the market that they wouldn't wait to make a big plash with them. They're got out two small parcels, and though there's nothing been heard up to the present, we may it get winded. I b'leeve in decision, and I think, Willie, I shall have you along with me. Pluck and patience are the horses for my money, and I'm for making one stroke, now everything's ready, that will pay it for all outlay. Gentlemen," he continued, solemnly turning round to face his three partners, "I'm game to bet a thousand dollars to a Key West orange that William, is it?"

"Not a bit," said Harry decisively. "Not a bit," said Harry decisively. "Take the thing by the neck and have done with it."

"You see, gentleman!" said Glead. "Now look here, Willie, my proposal all along has been to get one smart bold man the housand francs anywhere. Take the night mail to Paris, put in a day's work fibere about the Paliy Ryal, restorons, banks, money-changers, everywhere, and after that lie quiet. A real live man life you can raise ten biousand sterling in that way. Reckon the exs. and loss on stones a much as we've a right to expect for one while."

"If Mr. Reid ean do business at that rate."

"Said Mr. Butterfield.

"Mr. Reid's done business at that rate," said Gilead. "At that rate and better. Why, nine year ago, with them hundred rouble notes, he passed 'em by the bushel. That was bafore any of you people knew him. I'm derned if I knew him myself when he came home. That fat old German was the eleverest bit of make-up you ever did, William."

"These reminiscences," said Mr. Butterfield, "are extremely gratifying, but I am unfortunately pressed by other business. Can we come to an understanding as to time? When can you, be ready, Mr. Gilfoil?"

time? When can you be ready, Mr. Gilfoil?"

"I cayn't tell exactly," Gilead answered;
"but I think you may reckon on having enough to begin the London boom with on Saturday morning. If William can come down to me on Friday night at twelve I think I can be ready."

"I am engaged on Friday night, said Harry, whose one anxiety was not to appear too anxious.

"Come, come, Mr. Reid," said Heaton, "this is serious business. It is very important, as you know, that the work should be done on Saturday and Sunday. I am afraid we were guilty of an indiscretion in opening with the small quantities we placed at Spa and Monte Carlo. We have heard nothing, but we may hear at any moment. "Well?" answered that hulking stranger into all your secrets."

"You make me sick," said Gilead. "Go away."

"To going," she answered, and Gilead noticed for the first time that she was attired for the streets and that she was attired for the streets and that she was attired for the streets and that she carried as mail black hand-bag.

"You are, are you?" Gilead responded, "And where do you suppose you're going to?"

"The going away for a day—or two, perhaps," she answered. "Perhaps I'm going to Manchester."

"What are you going to Manchester for?" Gilead asked.

"You don't tell me your business," Priscilla esponded, "and I sha'n't tell you mine. Good morning, Glead."

Gilead sat tugging at his goat inft, staring at her with his dead blue eyes, and she coak was ready, and that the portmanten had already been taken down stairs.

"Good-bye, Gilead," said Priscilla. I dare say I shall be back to-morrow."

"Don't you hurry on my account, darling," Gilead answered. The tone was intended for the maid's ears, and Priscilla ireceived the viperous look which accempanied it with no change in the expression she wore.

secret, in her blameless breast. Her mind dwelt more than ever on the memory of her boy lover, and she awoke from her own thoughts in an actual terror to find that Harry had taken the form, the voice, the bearing of Ronald Morton. The very thoughts that did homage to the sacred dead linked themselves about this mere stranger. She tried to hide herself in the memory of Harry, and recalled eagerly a thousand trifles of which she had not thought since his death. She strove to ince herself about with those recollections, but the bronzed face looked through them, of some sudden and unbidden note of Morton's voice sounded in her ears in place of the tones she strove to recall. Her very devotion led her unconsciously to a thousand repetitions of this airy infidelity.

She was a woman of rare common sense, and made a strong fight against her fancies, refusing for a time to admit that they troubled her at all, and for a while she calld succeed in expelling them from her hand. But at length, by mere force of parsistence, they conquered her, and Harry Wynne and Ronald Morton became actually intertwined. Deserved Royaltics.

The Evangelical Churchman says: "We congratulate the Rev. Principal Millar, of Huron College, London, upon his first year's work in connection with the training year's work in connection with the training of young men for the sacred ministry in Canada. We feel sure that the learned Principal of Huron conveys sound Evangelical instruction to the students committed to his charge. He has won the sympathy of churchmen in Western Ontario for the great work in which he is engaged. We learn that it is necessary to enlarge the college huilding in order to provide increased accommodation for the students." The Churchman adds: "We rejoice to see signs of renewed life and zeal in connection with the work in Huron. We are glad to learn that the college is even more prosperous now than in its palmiest more prosperous now than in its palmiest days. The success of Huron in its noble mission is one of the most hopeful signs in the church in Canada."

With kind regards, yours very truly, St. Bonner road, London, E., July 9, 1891. A Gay Young Rounder.

A Gay Young Rounder.

Dyer was known in Detroit as a gay young rounder, and although a capable workman, he spent much of his time with the boys. He met his deserted wife, whose maiden name was Eva Duggan, about two years ago, and a courtship followed that ended in Miss Duggan having Dyer arrested on a charge of illegitimate parentage. To soothe matters Dyer and Miss Duggan were the parties to a forced marriage at the county jail. About that time Dyer formed the acquaintance of Kittie Kramer, aged 17, and the daughter of reputable parents. The two were time Dyer formed the acquaintance of Kittie Kramer, aged 17, and the daughter of reputable parents. The two were often seen in each other's company, much to the annoyance of Dyer's wife. About a month ago Dyer and Miss Kramer slid out of town rather mysteriously, and it was alleged at the time that they were to be married. Shortly after their disappearance from this city they were seen together in Windsor, from which town they left for London. Dyer's wife was well aware of her husband's elopement with Miss Kramer, and seems to be somewhat indifferent. She and her child are rooming with a Miss Kuhn, on Mullett street. The detectives express ignorance of the case, although Dyer is held on a dispatch from the police of this city.—[Detroit News. Dyer is the young man arrested here recently and held by the police on a charge of neglecting to support his wife.

The man why tried Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and was sure of the $500 reward offered by the proprietors for an incurable case, never called for his money. Why not? O, because he got cured! He was sure of two things: (1) That his catarrh could not be cured. (2) That he would have that $500. He is now sure of one thing; and that is, that his catarrh is gone completely. So he is out $500, of course. The makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have faith in their ability to cure the worst cases of Nasal Catarrh, no matter of how long standing, and attest their faith by their standing reward of $500, offered for many years past, for an incurable case of this loathsome and dangerous disease. The remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents. Mild, soothing, cleansing, deodorizing, antiseptic and healing.

To nearly all men a good cigar is an tar-valuable companion, but a bad one is in-tolerable.
