POETRY.

Until it is Settled Right.

However the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes
With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing roll of drums,
Still truth proclaims this motto—
In questions of living light—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Though the heel of the strong oppressor
May grind the weak in the dust,
And the voice of fame with one acclaim,
May call him great and just,
Let those who applaud take warning,
And keep this motto in sight—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Let those who have failed take courage;
Though the enemy seems to have won,
Tho' his ranks are falling, if he be in the wrong,
The battle is not yet done.
For, sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of the night,
Until it is settled right.

O man bowed down with labor!
O woman, young yet old;
Oh heart oppressed in the toiler's breast
And crushed by the power of gold!
Keep on with your weary battle Against triumphant might;
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

SELECT STORY.

A RENUNCIATION.

Just beyond the outskirts of the busy Canadian town stood the Doctor's house. It was long, low, and white, with green blinds and deep shady verandahs, and between it and the high road lay a smooth green lawn and carriage drive.

Perhaps no one was better known in the town, and for miles through the country round, than Dr. Wayland. His tall, distinguished figure, and kind, clever face, with its dignified air of professional calm, had been familiar now for nineteen years. When he had first come to "The Cedars," from one of the large Canadian cities, with his little motherless daughter and a sister some years older than himself, he had determined, in the first shock of recent bereavement, to nurse his grief in solitude and comparative obscurity.

However, like the most of the world, he soon found that work was the best panacea for even the deepest sorrow, and henceforth, he was wedded to his profession alone; he built up an extensive practice and made a name and fame for himself second to none among his brother medics.

Nineteen years of busy life seems a short time to look back upon, but the doctor's hair was plentifully sprinkled with grey, and he said to himself he would let Frank Neville, his young partner, do more of the work after this, as he stepped into his gig one warm September afternoon, to make his daily visit to the hospital.

His daughter Louise stood on the steps, a dainty vision of budding loveliness, her simple white gown setting off to full advantage the exquisite lines of face and figure, while a crimson rose rested against the dark hair, loosely coiled at the back of the small, shapely head. It suddenly struck the doctor with a curious pang that she was a child no longer.

"Do you know, little one," he said, looking gravely down into her shining face, "I do believe you are growing up!"

"Why, father dear, what else can I do," she answered, with a low, sweet laugh, "I am not only growing up, but grown up,—quite. Aunt Adelaide says so," she added, with an air of conscious dignity.

"Indeed," returned her father, looking amused, "if Aunt Adelaide says so, that settles it. Pray how old are you, if one may ask?"

"Nineteen years and four months," she said, quickly raising her dark eyes.

"Ah, yes," he murmured, with a slight, his face for an instant shadowed.

She had come down the flight of steps and was standing close to him. He put his hand gently under her chin, and raising the soft sensitive face, gazed for a moment, then stooped and kissed her, passionately.

"So I have lost my little girl," he said, lightly, after a moment's silence, "and some day somebody will come and want to take this grown up edition of her away from me altogether, I suppose."

"I will not go," she answered resolutely. "I am never going to leave you."

"Not till Prince Charming comes," the Doctor persisted, half laughing, half sadly, "and then it's good-bye to the poor old father."

"Never," she cried indignantly, "you know I will never leave you, father."

"Frederick," said Miss Wayland severely, coming out from behind the leafy screen on the verandah, "how can you talk such nonsense to the child. I hope you remember," she continued, "that it is Grahame's last night with us, and that you will come home in time for dinner."

"Sure enough," said the Doctor, gathering up the reins. "We will miss Grahame, Louise, will we not," giving her a quick glance.

"Oh, so much," she replied earnestly, looking at him with such frank, innocent eyes that he felt quite satisfied.

"You are mine for just now at all events," he called out gaily, as he drove away.

"Yes, and for always," she answered in her clear young voice, as she turned and went slowly up the steps.

Miss Wayland had retired to the cool corner of the verandah again, where some divans and basket chairs were scattered about, made a cosy lounging nook. "You are not going out in this heat, Louise," she remarked, disapprovingly, glancing at her niece's garden hat and the basket on her arm.

"Only to the woods for ferns, Auntie. Grahame is coming with me," she added.

"Oh, very well," said her aunt, relenting.

Just then a door slammed, followed by the sound of some one coming down stairs, two steps at a time, and a tall, broad-shouldered young man came quickly out on the verandah. The face of Miss Wayland and her niece brightened visibly at his appearance.

It was a curious thing that Grahame Coryat's presence always had the effect of sunshine on those around. He was a ward of Dr. Wayland's, the only son of his oldest friend, and at the death of both parents had come to live at "The Cedars" some six years previously. He was very clever, and the Doctor was immensely proud of him, and his university career, just terminated, which had been a series of triumphs and successes from beginning to end. In obedience to his father's wish and his own inclination, he had studied for the Church, and his ardent enthusiastic temperament, joined to great natural gifts, both physical and mental, had caused him easily already to predict a great future for the young preacher. Before settling down to his life's work, by a provision in his father's will, and with the full approval of his guardian, he was starting out for six months foreign travel.

"Yes," thanks; and the valise strapped," he said cheerfully, in response to a query from Miss Wayland. "And Louise," he continued, as he took the basket from her arm, and they went down the steps together, "I have left the books and things in my study up-stairs just as I would like them to be when I come back."

"No one shall touch them. I will look after the room myself," she said quickly. "But, Grahame, what a long time six months is. How dreadfully I shall miss you."

"Will you," he said, smiling gravely at the naive confession, and glancing at the gentle unconscious face beside him.

"So much as that, Louise?"

"Oh, every hour of the day," she replied with a sigh.

"And I," he rejoined quickly, "do you think I shall not miss you?"

"Ah, but there will be so much for you to see and hear, and all the learned professors everywhere to talk to, and you will be so important and dignified when you come back that you will not care for any more of our long walks and talks together," she ended half sadly.

Grahame hit his lips, feeling in his heart that it was going to be even harder to say good-bye than he had thought, and wishing he had not made a certain promise to the Doctor the night before.

"Louise," he said slowly, in an altered voice, "I see a very different picture from yours. I am not one to change, neither are you. Absence will only draw us nearer each other, and when I come back you will still be my dear companion and confidante, my inspiration and help in my life's work."

He paused, watching half anxiously the effect of his words.

A bright smile lighted up her face. "I should like that," she said thoughtfully.

They had passed out from behind the leafy screen on the verandah, and gone a little distance along the road in the opposite direction to the town. Suddenly the silence that had fallen between them was broken by the violent barking of Grahame's fox-terrier, who had been following close at his master's heels, but now made a sudden rush at some object lying under one of the trees by the road side. At first sight it seemed a bundle of rags, but as it gradually rose to a sitting posture, as if in a shadow picture, first the faint outline, then the more certain likeness to a human figure, slowly evolved itself. A wretched, emaciated creature, with an old fur cap pulled low on his forehead, and holding an arm like a skeleton's across the lower part of his face.

They both stopped, filled with pity at the sight, and, calling off Jap, Grahame moved a step or two nearer and spoke a few kind words. His questions met with only inarticulate mutterings, and at last, after several ineffectual efforts, he rejoined Louise, and they went slowly on. As they passed him, the man seemed to shrink lower into his rags, covering the whole of his face, and a faint, subtle scent, as shadowy and elusive as himself, was wafted towards them, enveloped them for an instant, and vanished.

They looked back several times until a bend in the road hid him from sight, and having reached a favorite spot, commanding a wide view across the country, they stopped to admire it afresh.

Far away in the distance, with here and there a white sail skimming across the blue waters of the St. Lawrence sparkled in the afternoon sunshine, and the picturesque rolling country, with its waving fields of ripening corn and grain, and comfortable homesteads dotted here and there, made a fair picture to look upon.

About an hour later, as they were returning, Louise said, "We must look out for our poor tramp. I wonder who or what he was?"

"A French habitant, I think," returned Grahame. "I fancied I caught the words, 'Misericorde' and 'Dieu.' I will speak to the Doctor about him. He was certainly very ill."

But when they reached the spot where they had left him there was no trace of him, though Grahame, assisted by Jap, searched carefully behind bushes and fences; and a succession of visitors to wish the traveller good-bye banished him from the mind of each after they reached "The Cedars."

The Doctor came late for dinner, bringing Frank Neville with him, and the evening was far advanced, and had turned chilly, when they gathered round the light wood fire that sparkled cheerily on the hearth in the big, old-fashioned drawing-room.

"Play something, Louise," said her father, as he and Dr. Neville sat sipping their coffee in the fire-light.

She and Grahame were both passionately fond of music, and at the first notes of Chopin's exquisite Andante, Spianato he followed her to the piano at the far end of the long room, and stood watching the slender fingers as they performed their difficult task with the ease and skill of the accomplished musician.

Just above the piano hung a fine engraving of Millais' famous painting, "Les Huguenots," the last parting of the lovers, one of whom is going away to certain death. A sudden flash of firelight fell across it, lighting up the distant and shadowy corner of the room, and unconsciously the eyes of both were attracted to the picture. The passionate cadences of the music rose and fell, the sound of voices, questioning, pleading, slowly died away, and the last notes, expressive only of resignation, softened into silence.

"That is the only one of the 'Songs without words' that could have inspired the poem on that picture," said Grahame absentmindedly,—"Dedicated to H. playing One of Mendelssohn's Lieder." And in a low, musical voice he began repeating the lines. When he came to the words,

"Should not Love make us braver,
Ay, and stronger,
Either for Life or Death?"

He stopped abruptly. "I suppose there are possibilities of heroism to every one," he said at last, in lower tones.

Louise looked up, her dark eyes full of sympathetic feeling, but suddenly lowered them, her heart beating quickly, and the color rushing to her cheeks.

When had Grahame ever looked at her like that, and what did it mean? She made a hasty movement and the rose in her hair fell at his feet. He bent on one knee to pick it up.

"Louise," he said, in agitated tones, "tell me I may keep it, and that you will not forget me."

She hesitated a moment; then even his quick ears could not catch the softly murmured word, but she raised her eyes to his for one brief instant and he read his answer there.

"Neville," the Doctor's voice was saying, as they came toward the little group by the fire, "Grahame is going to walk in with you to-night. His train goes soon after midnight, and I want you to look in at the hospital on your way and see for yourself that Joyce is looking carefully after that last patient."

"A new case?" said Miss Wayland, from the little table with the shaded lamp where she sat working.

"A very sad one," returned the Doctor, "a poor miserable vagrant who wandered into the town this afternoon. A sort of gipsy, I think."

"I wonder if he is the one we saw," exclaimed Louise; "father, had he an old fur cap on, and was he very thin and ragged?"

"Where did you see him?" inquired the Doctor, turning sharply round.

"This afternoon, lying by the road side, as we went to the woods, sir," explained Grahame.

"Did either of you go near him?" demanded the Doctor quickly, the ruddy colour in his face perceptibly lessening.

"Grahame spoke to him, but could not make him understand, so we left him," answered Louise.

"Did either of you go near him?" he repeated.

"No, father. Why?" she asked.

A look of relief crossed the Doctor's face, but for some reason he did not speak, and getting up walked slowly towards the window. Dr. Neville, glancing at Louise, answered easily, "Oh the poor beggar is dying. He is about worn out, and can't last through the night." His tone, and the admiring glance of his brilliant dark grey eyes, annoyed Louise and she turned away.

"Poor soul," said Grahame, thoughtfully, looking into the fire.

As the Doctor passed his sister she heard him mutter, "Thank God," and when he came back she looked up and said in a low voice, "What is it?" He took up the end of her embroidery and, bending down, replied gravely, "I am not quite certain. He is in the isolated ward, and we have taken every precaution. But," he added slowly, "if it is what I think, I would not have had either of them touch him for a king's ransom."

Not long afterwards the two young men were walking rapidly towards the town. The last good-byes had been said, and Grahame was carrying away with him the memory of a slender white figure standing beside her father in the moonlight, who had watched them till they turned out of the gates, and had called a silver "adieu" after the Doctor's last retort about. His heart was filled with hope and high resolve as he thought of the bright future that lay before him. His singularly clear, transparent character mirrored a good deal more in his countenance than he imagined, and much of what was passing in his mind was easily read by the dark attentive face so closely watching him. It only needed a few skillfully put questions, a carefully chosen word or two of sympathy, and Grahame opened his heart to his friend, little guessing the effect of his words, or the bitter amity that sprang up in the soul of the listener.

Long ago Dr. Neville had made up his mind to marry the Doctor's pretty daughter, but until to-night the possibility of Grahame as a rival had never entered his head. The first dawn of jealousy, "and been when his quick eye noticed the disappearance of the rose which Louise had worn the first part of the evening, and suspicion once aroused, his sharpened sense took note of everything, and doubt soon resolved itself into certainty. That Louise disliked him he had known all along, but instead of discouraging him it just gave the amount of opposition he liked to feel in the pursuit of any object, and added a zest to what might otherwise, he thought, have proved too easy a conquest. But that she should care for any one else formed no part of his plan, and the silent rage that filled his heart convinced him that the sight of his "chateau en Espagne" in ruins would cost him more than he had believed possible. However, a ray of hope shot across the darkness.

"At all events," he reflected, his spirits rising, "I have the field for six months to myself, and will see at the end of that time, my fine fellow, if you are always to have everything this world can give,—riches, honours, and love as well."

DEAR MR. EDITOR.—As a constant reader of your paper I heartily endorse your position in reference to the publication of accounts of murders, murder trials in the courts, and such sad, vile, garbage.

The newspaper to-day is the most unchallenged visitor of every home in our land, and if this be true it should come with clean words and elevating thoughts, for it is listened to and obeyed by the very many it reaches.

Ma Ennon.—With your permission, I rise to second the resolution of Muddy Foot in your last issue. I have just returned from a walk down town and have thus learned that our venerable City Fathers are pursuing the same old trick of former winters in regard to removing the snow from the side walks.

among those added to the church. Candidates for membership were required to stand in the deacons' seat under the pulpit, and facing the congregation to give a reason for the hope within them; this was called, relating their experience, which must be deep and pungent.

They come from the vale, they flock from the hills, From forests and fields, their shops and their mills; No matter what weather, of sunshine or rain, To linger at home, No! the thought they disdain!

A CHEERING TRUTH.

Thousands Prove the Statement

That Paine's Celery Compound Makes People Feel Young Again.

A Cured Man Says: "I feel just as Bright as a Boy."

The Right Medicine For Every Ailing Man and Woman.

All the combined powers of earth cannot stem the tide of truth that sweeps over this Canada of ours in regard to the curing and life-giving virtues of Paine's Celery Compound. Thousands of the best people back up the sensible, plain and unvarnished statements about Paine's Celery Compound published from time to time. The cured thousands send such convincing letters of testimony that the most hardened sceptics are forced to admit that they are founded on the rock of truth and honesty.

The following letter from Mr. A. R. McGee, Dixon's Corners, Ont., assures you, though your case may be desperate and death very nigh, and though doctors fail and other medicines prove unavailing for your relief, that Paine's Celery Compound will do more for you than you can justly realize or hope for. Mr. McGee says: "Some time ago my condition of health was alarming and I suffered very much. I was laid up three days out of every week; and I often said to my friends that it would be better, if it was the Lord's will, that I should be called away. Three of the best doctors attended me, but could not relieve me in any way. It was then I was advised to use Paine's Celery Compound, which brought relief at once. After using this great remedy I find myself a new man, and feel just as bright as a boy of eighteen years. I think it is the greatest medicine in the world, and would strongly recommend it to all who suffer."

An Australian Method.

There seems to be no limit to the devising of means for the transportation of perishable produce to a distance. A new method is that of packing butter in a box made of six sheets of ordinary glass, all the edges being covered over with gum paper. The glass box is enveloped in a layer of plaster of paris a quarter of an inch thick, and this is covered with specially-prepared paper. The plaster, being a bad conductor of heat, the temperature inside the hermetically-sealed receptacle remains constant, being unaffected by external changes. Butter packed in this way at Melbourne has been sent across the sea to South Africa, and when the case was opened, 700 miles from Cape Town, the butter was found to be as sound as when it left the factory. Cases are now made to hold as much as 200 weight of butter, and 40 boys and girls are occupied in making the glass receptacles and covering them with plaster. The top, or lid, is put on by a simple mechanical arrangement, and is removed by the purchaser equally easily. A saving of 25 per cent. on freight and packing is claimed, in comparison with the cost of frozen butter carried in the usual way.

WORK SPOILED.

Did Not Get the Right Kind.

Why labor in vain? Why do you try to dye cotton or mixed goods with common dyes that the makers prepared for all wool goods?

Well, you are not altogether to blame; the dealer who sold you the dye, and who told you it was good for either cotton or wool, is the one who is directly responsible for your loss and failure. He sold you worthless dye because they gave him a large return of profit.

If you had bought the Diamond Dyes made specially for Cotton and Mixed Goods your work would have been well and truly done. These special cotton colors of the Diamond Dyes are the latest discoveries of the best chemists of the world, and are far superior to all other dyes for the coloring of cotton goods.

Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton are quite fast to light, and if you use them your carpets and rugs will be as bright after years of wear as the most expensive carpets you can buy. For dyeing Cotton or Mixed Goods, ask for Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton; take no others.

Bridal Superstitions.

If the wedding ring is lost the couple will separate.

If an apple be thrown upon the roof of the bridegroom's house it is a sign the bride will be happy.

The bride must not look in the glass after performing her toilet unless one hand is unglued.

If a bride tears her wedding dress it is not good.

It is unlucky for a bride to put her bare feet on any bare floor on her wedding night.

To change the name and not the letter is to change for worse and not for better.

If the bride open an umbrella in the house bad luck will surely follow.

It is unlucky for two brides to meet in a church.

The bride should not permit the best man to wear everything black at the ceremony as it is a very bad omen.

Systematic Giving.

A PAPER READ BY MISS IRENE FITCH, AT A RECENT MEETING OF THE WOLFVILLE W. C. T. U.

"Bring ye all the tithes unto the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

And now that this point is clear to us, we want to learn how to give. First: give gratefully as did Jacob after God had promised him such great possessions and blessings and had given him a vision of angels ascending and descending that wonderful ladder, in his gratitude he said "The Lord be my God, and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee."

Give willingly. Ex. 35: 21. "And they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the Lord's offering to the work of the Tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for the holy garments, and they came both men and women as many as were willing hearted."

In Cor. 9: 7, Paul says, "Every man according as his purposed in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."

In Luke, 6: 3-8, Christ himself said to his disciples "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over shall man give unto you because—Ere with the same measure that you mete without it shall be measured to you again." This Bible is rich in promises to those who give as they are prospered. Listen again to the prophet Isaiah in chapter 53: 10. "And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul, then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon-day; and the Lord shall guide thee continually and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water whose waters fail not, and in Prov. 19: 17, we are told "The liberal soul shall be made fat; he that watereth shall be watered also himself."

Now, to whom shall we give? This is a large question and the answer will vary with the circumstances of the giver. Our Saviour said in his sermon on the Mount, "Give to him that asketh thee, and him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away," and again he said "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." David said in Psalms 41: 1 "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble, the Lord will preserve him and keep him alive and he shall be blessed upon the earth." Mark the promises my sisters, how grand and full they are to those who give in God's way, and the poor we have at ways with us. "Trust in the Lord and do good, so shall thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed."

These promises are sure only to those who fulfil the conditions. Are there any here who do not believe in this system of giving and who does not practise the same? I would say to you sisters, you are losing a great deal of pleasure. You are rejecting the blessings which God is waiting to bestow upon you, and implore you to begin at once to keep a tithing account. Charge this account with one tenth of your net income, and credit it with all sums paid out for Christian and benevolent work. To-day count what money you have on hand and put aside one tenth of it. Add to this one tenth of all you receive from day to day, and draw from it as you have calls for aid in behalf of benevolent or Christian work. Try this for one year faithfully, and you will never want to go back to the old shiftless way of giving. Then there is so much we can give beside money, or even bounty of any sort. The "kindly affectionate" greeting to rich and poor alike, the warm, firm handshake, the sympathetic word, the cheery smile, the kindly interest in the neighbor who is not in easy circumstances, how little these cost us, and yet how rich the recipient feels. How the sorrowing heart is cheered. How the lonely home is lightened by a cheerful visitor and a judicious interest. May God help us to pay all our tithes and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus how he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

It is as much the work of Christ to save men here and now from the love and power of sin, and wrong, as to deliver them from sin's penalties in a future world.

MISS ZELMA RAWLSTON.

A Charming Sourette Who Attracts Large Audiences.

She Tells Something of the Hard Work Necessary to Make a Successful Artist—Many Break Down Under the Strain—An Interesting Chat with a Telegraph Reporter.

From the Quebec telegraph.

Those who have attended the performances at the Academy of Music this week, will readily concede that Miss Zelma Rawlston is one of the brightest sourettes on the stage. She is a clever musician and a charming singer, and as an impersonator shows a talent considerably above the average. She has winning ways, a mischievous twinkle in her eye, and a captivating manner. Her magnetism for drawing large audiences is not alone confined to the stage, as she is possessed of a character which is pleasing to come in contact with. It is full of good nature, amiable qualities, and a charm that endears her to all those who have been so fortunate as to have made her acquaintances. A Telegraph representative had the pleasure of an interview with Miss Rawlston which resulted in a biographical sketch of her life being published in these columns on Saturday.

During the course of the interview, Miss Rawlston let out a secret, which she consented to allow the Telegraph to make public. For many years she has devoted the best part of her time to study, sometimes practicing ten hours a day, at the piano alone. It is not therefore, astonishing, that under a strain of this kind, she began to feel the effects upon her nervous constitution. She is of a robust build, and apparently strong physique, and stood the strain without interrupting her studies, until she had perfected that which she desired to accomplish. Like many other artists who have gone before, she completed her work, graduated with the highest honors, and prepared to enter upon her stage career. The reaction of over study, and long hours, soon began to tell upon her and although it did not interfere with her climbing the ladder of fame as an actress, she very soon became cognizant of the fact that she was suffering from a strain on the nerves which threatened sooner or later to result seriously to her health. Her sufferings did not interfere with her engagements, but prevented her from participating in pleasure of any kind. The nervousness increased to such an extent that she became a victim to insomnia, and slowly her digestive powers gave out, and she was fast becoming a chronic sufferer from nervous debility. After trying many remedies and prescriptions, she one day read an advertisement in one of the daily papers referring to the complete recovery of a similar case as her own, with the aid of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She had tried so many patent remedies that she almost despaired of trying any more. Something seemed to influence her to test this preparation, and she ventured to purchase one box of the pills. Before she had used half of them, she began to feel an immediate improvement in her condition, and by the time she had used two or three boxes, she was a different woman entirely, and today there are few actresses who display a better example of perfect health than our representative found Miss Rawlston in when he called upon her last week. The subject was suggested by our reporter seeing a box of Pink Pills in Miss Rawlston's possession. "I always carry them with me," she said, "and would not be a day without them; although I do not take them regularly, I find them a very beneficial stimulus for one in my profession. If the assertion of the benefit which these pills have worked upon me will induce the public to try good, I am perfectly willing that my name should be mentioned, and that the facts should be given to the public."

Miss Rawlston's permanent address is in care of her manager, Mr. Tom McGuire, Room 5, Standard Theatre Building, New York City.

As Well as Ever.

A Brickmaker Listens to Reason—Uses Six Boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and tells it.

Cardinal, Dec. 7 (Special)—Mr. W. H. Odell, perhaps one of the best known citizens of this town, has lately recovered from a long continued and painful kidney ailment. He tells the story of his experience to the correspondent as follows:—

"I have suffered for over a year from kidney disease, the pain in my back being so severe that I was unable to stand to my work."

"Noticing the published cures of what Dodd's Kidney Pills were doing for others I concluded to use them."

"Having used only six boxes I can say that I am perfectly cured and well so that I can attend to business as well as ever I could."

Louis Napoleon was of the opinion that no man should veto who was not married. Married men, he thought, had a different sentiment toward their country than the unmarried, and a greater stake in its welfare. In his opinion, also neither priests nor soldiers should be permitted to vote.

It has been decided that trained Canadian nurses now at work in the United States cannot be deported, the existing law being retroactive; but in future any nurse who goes from Canada across the line may be sent back if she goes under an engagement to work.

As a blood maker, blood purifier, health giver and system renovator Manley's Celery-Nerve Compound is unrivaled.

"The crampiness on the face particularly have been removed, and the trouble in my back as well, and I feel like a new man. I consider Manley's Celery Compound better than doctor's medicines for blood and liver troubles, as it has proved so in my case." Joseph Lafferty, Waterbury, Ont.

Broker (to his valet)—John, I have lost a lot of money, and have had to get an inferior brand of cigars. Do you intend to remain with me? Well, Willie, asked grandpa, have you had all the dinner you want? None, answered the truthful little boy, but I have had all I can eat.

Minards Liniment Cures Canker. Ho—Do you think Miss Kajones is pretty? She—Miss Kajones? Oh, she isn't a bad looking girl—when she has a veil on.

Minards Liniment for sale everywhere. The Count—My dear Miss Goldfinger, I want you to marry me. Oh, Count, I am speechless with surprise. The Count—Zai is all right; your money talk.

Minards Liniment Cures Burns, etc. "Did you hear what Brief, the lawyer, has for a motto?" "No, What?" "Where there's a will there's a way to break it."

Minards Liniment relieves Neuralgia. Mrs. Chipping—So these are your children, are they? Mrs. Marrow—Yes, and everybody says they are just the image of me. Mrs. Chipping—Why, so they are, poor little things.

Lavender—Now, Mr. Thrift, describe to the court the chickens that you charged my client, the defendant, with stealing.

Farmer Thrift goes into details, but is interrupted by the lawyer, who exclaims: "I have some chickens like those myself."

Farmer Thrift (reuming)—The chickens he took are not the only ones I have had stolen!

The folly of prejudice is frequently shown by people who prefer to suffer for years rather than try an advertised remedy. The millions who have no such notions, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla for blood diseases, and are cured. So much for common sense.

Servant (from next door). Please mum, missus sends her compliments, and will be so kind as to sing and play the piano this afternoon!

"Let—Why, certainly! Tell your mistress I'm glad she likes it."

Servant—Oh, it isn't that mum; she's expecting the landlord, and she wants some excuse for asking for a reduction of the rent.

"I'm so glad to hear you speak so encouragingly of Willie Gigg's aunt," she said to her father.

"If I did anything like that it was by accident."

"Why father—you know you referred to him as a young one."

"I did."

"Well, you know it's Willie's ambition to be a lion in society, and maybe he'll grow."

The Tariff Commission elicits some strange and curious facts, but none more true than the good words spoken by both Free-Traders and Protectionists for MINARD'S LINIMENT.

They are our BEST ADVERTISEMENTS, and we esteem them of more value than all the fumes and hares in the country covered with posters.

"Tell 'em, Mr. Blackwell," said Rastus, after a moment's thought, "yo' might put in de words dat I is as honest as I kin be, kin't you?"
