LORD MORDEN'S DAUGHTER —OR— THE TRAGEDY OF THE CEDARS.

CHAPTER XIX.

After a few minutes' consultation, the driver was told to take them to Hammersmith.

Again was the precaution taken of stopping the cab a half-mile from their destination.

"We shall be back, say in an hour," Locksley said to the driver. "It is hardly wise for you to loiter in the streets, as you are known to at least one of the people who have been set to watch me."

"I will run my horse into the King George," replied the man. "It is just about nine o'clock, and I will be back here at ten."

"That will do," Rogers conducted his new master by many devious ways into the mysterious of Market-street, finally halting before a small grocer's shop.

"We occupy the upper-part of the house," he explained, "and have the use of this side door."

He rang a bell, which was very soon answered by a thin, pale-faced woman, beyond middle life. It was apparent from her manners and speech that she had seen better days, and her faded eyes almost sparkled with pleasure when Frank said:

"This is my dear mother, sir. Mother, this is my new employer, Mr. Locksley."

"I have heard with gratitude of your kindness to my son, Mrs. Rogers said, when they were inside. "And it seems that some kind fate must have thrown him in your path."

"You are right, madam," Locksley replied, "for so far I am a debtor."

Frank hurried his mother out of the way, saying:

"I will send Miss Deane in here to you, sir. It is the best sitting-room we have."

He went away, and in five minutes the door opened softly, and Dora ran into his arms.

"Thank Heaven, you are safe, sweet-heart," he said, pressing her tightly to him. "Thank Heaven, a thousand times!"

Dora looked up at him, an anxious light in her sweet eyes—her ruddish lips trembling a little.

"Darling," she whispered, clinging closely to him, "do you know how dreadfully you have frightened me? Mr. Rogers came very late last night, and insisted that I accompany him in a cab to see you. I was doubtful, and would not have listened to him, only the cabman assured me that it was all right."

"And it was all right, my sweet-heart."

"But why did you not come yourself, or at least send a scrap of writing? I feared that you had met with some dreadful accident, and when you weren't here, I nearly became hysterical. I am sure that there is some dreadful meaning attached to it. You must not hide anything from me, dear."

"I will never do that, Dora," Locksley said, earnestly. "In the first place I knew nothing of this until you had left Madam Bell's house; and we have to thank Rogers for outwitting Marlowe, and the people he has employed to trace you."

Again Dora clung to him convulsively, and he felt that she was trembling in every limb.

"Have no fear, dear one," he said, leading her to a lounge. "You are safe now, and I will only leave you for a few hours, until you are my precious wife. Mr. Rogers is the young detective I have engaged, and he discovered last night that Marlowe would visit Madam Bell in quest of you. At the very time he was looking after your safety, I was taking legal advice upon the same matter. And, darling, there is only one course open to us."

Dora glanced at him, her lovely face suffused with blushes.

"I can guess what you would say, Edmund," she softly responded. "Only as your wife shall we be free from the vindictiveness of Mr. Marlowe, through Esther and my grandfather."

"That is exactly it, little woman, and it is folly to think of evading them, for they have the law on their side. Do you know that I am liable to be arrested at any moment? I do not wish to alarm you needlessly, but an officer of the law is accompanying Marlowe with a search-warrant. We do not wish to meet this gentleman until we are—one."

He kissed her fondly.

"I am ready, Edmund; I trust you in all things," she told him, shyly.

"I am glad that you speak sensitively— I am glad that you see as I do, darling. Now, I must leave you. Do you know what for?" He tried to speak gaily, but there was a grip of fear in his heart. "I am going to buy a wedding ring and a special licence. Then I must see a clergyman, and to-morrow morning we will be married. I would have liked to place you beyond danger to-day, but I do not see that it is possible, there is so much to be done."

He waited for her to speak, but she was weeping softly on his shoulder.

"You must not think me foolish and ungrateful, Edmund, my darling," she said, at last. "I am ashamed of being so much trouble to you, and of so little use."

"How can you say such things?" he replied, tenderly stroking her shining hair. "Dora, I never knew the value of life until you gave me your love. Without it I should be but a cloud! There! we will not dwell upon that which is gloomy. Before us is a world of brightness, a beautiful garden, filled with flowers and perfumes. We will have a lovely little home, and I shall be furnished with all that is tasteful and beautiful. Do you like the picture, little woman? Do you not think that our lives will be like an idyllic dream? Like a stream that ripples gently along, singing of joy, joy, joy!"

"To make you happy, Edmund, will be my sweetest task," Dora told him. "And, do you know, dear, that I wish that to-morrow were here, so that we could commence our life's journey hand in hand?"

They would have talked in this way for a long time, had not Rogers tapped gently at the door.

"Mr. Locksley," he said, "it is ten o'clock, and it will not be wise to have the cab waiting about the streets."

"I may not be back, darling, until night; but when I do come, I shall have the wedding ring and the license in my pocket. It will not be safe for me to venture here again in the light of day. Kiss me, sweetheart!"

For a few minutes they were locked in a blissful embrace, then Locksley tore himself away, whispering:

"To-morrow—my sweet wife!"

Dora heard him wish Mrs. Rogers good-morning, then his quick steps passed down the rickety stairs, and he was gone.

"Oh, my darling, my darling!" she sobbed. "The future looks so bright; and so beautiful, but I am fearful that we shall never cross the black gulch that rolls between!"

CHAPTER XX.

Locksley did not return to Greely's Hotel, but was driven direct to his club in Piccadilly, where he dismissed the ostler, and gave him a handsome fee.

"You have more than atoned for the blunder you made," he said. "And I shall not forget you, Hoskins."

For an hour Edmund talked with Rogers, and it was decided to postpone the inquiries concerning the missing Lord Morden, until the present difficulties had been surmounted.

"I would prefer that you keep watch upon Miss Deane until I return to Hammersmith this evening," he said, finally. "Engage a room for me somewhere in the neighborhood, and arrange with your nearest clergyman to be ready to conduct a wedding at nine o'clock to-morrow morning."

"Yes, sir," replied Frank. "We live within a stone's throw of an Episcopal Church, and my mother attends regularly, and I know the pastor very well. His name is Plunket, and I believe that he is a man to be trusted, though I should suggest for safety that you go before a registrar in the morning. He will tie the knot in five minutes, if you are provided with a special."

"No," said Locksley, "I should have the feeling that I had not been married at all, were the ceremony not conducted in a church, and by a recognized servant of God. There is something revolting in these marriages, by consent, in the presence of a lawyer, who garbles over portions of the service, just as he would a marriage contract. I am sure that Miss Deane would object as strongly as I do. Beside, one or the other has to live in the district for a prescribed number of days. Arrange with Mr. Plunket, Rogers, and hint at a respectable fee. Clergymen are but human, where money is concerned."

"I will have everything ready as you desire, sir," Rogers promised.

When he was gone, Locksley hastened to the chambers of Fred Fairfax, his barrister friend, having taken the precaution to send a telegram early in the morning.

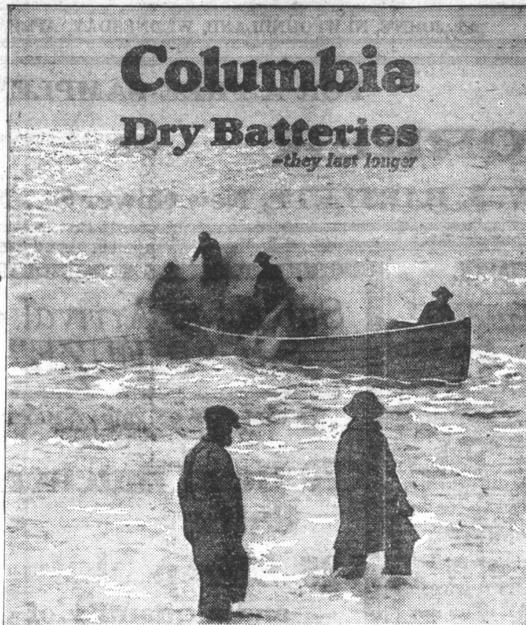

"Just in time to lunch with me," said Fairfax, as he walked into his rooms. "Well, I see that your mind is resolved upon some important step?"

"I want you to witness my marriage to-morrow, at nine o'clock, prompt," smiled Locksley, "and to assist me to-day, if you are not otherwise engaged. In obtaining a special licence, the clergyman will be ready."

People Increasing Who Speak English

OVER SIXTY MILLION MORE PERSONS SPEAK ENGLISH THAN IN 1890.

In the year 1901 the number of people who spoke English was only 29,500,000; by 1890 it has grown to 111,000,000; to-day it is 179,000,000, and is rapidly increasing. More than 10 per cent of the world's population use English as their only language.

By 1950 if nothing unforeseen occurs, English will be used by twice as many people as any other language, and by the year 2,000 will be the means of communication between one-quarter of the inhabitants of the globe.

More than that, since English is being taught in the schools of almost every civilized country, it seems certain that by that time more than half the world's population will be able to read English. There can be hardly any doubt but that, in course of time, English is bound to become the world language.

Let us glance for a moment at statistics of English, the other languages used by the peoples of this planet.

In 1801 French was the most widely used language. In Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics the number then speaking French is given as 31,000,000, or 50 per cent. in excess of English-speaking peoples.

Next came Russian and third German, each with about 30,000,000 adherents. Fourth was Spanish, spoken by just over 26,000,000, and fifth Italian, used by 15,000,000 people.

In the space of 120 years the number speaking French has increased by only a quarter, and is to-day just over 40,000,000; 70,000,000 speak German, 50,000,000 Spanish, 35,000,000 Italian.

The only European language apart from English which has increased on a grand scale is Russian, which is to-day used by about 100,000,000 people. With all due respect to the use and laudables of the Russian language, it can hardly be said to be a serious rival to English.

Chinese is still used by an immense number. The present population of China is supposed to be about 420,000,000. But Chinese is so cumbersome a language that educated Chinese themselves admit that it cannot possibly survive.

The only living language besides English which is at present growing with any rapidity is Spanish. Spanish is the principal language of America from Mexico southwards, and the population of the South American countries is increasing rapidly. Yet even Spanish is no likely rival to English as a world language.

At present three-quarters of all the world's letters and postal packets are addressed in English, more than half the newspapers in the world are printed in English, while their circulation is quite three times that of all the periodicals printed in other languages.

FORETHOUGHT.

We guard against the things we dread, the fall disease, the chilling rain; and then some day when we are dead, we find our caution was in vain. In Kansas, in the olden days, when cyclones made heads and tails of us, we used to gather round to praise the cellar built by Biddad Bare. The walls were made of granite blocks, and it was fashioned to defy the whirling hurricane that rocks the strongest things beneath the sky. "Now let tornadoes do their worst," said Biddad with a prideful grin; "no howling storm that ever burst can hurt the man who sits herein. When I behold a coming storm I'll seek the cellar with my wife, and in that haven, snug and warm, we'll watch the elemental strife. When barns and haystacks hurtle by, upon the pinions of the blast, we'll sit in comfort eating pie, while folks less prudent stand aghast." We praised old Biddad for his sense, the sense that comforts and insures; we said to him, "A few weeks hence we'll all build cellars just like yours." One day when good old Biddad plowed some rolling acre far from home, there rose a sombre, funnel-cloud that blotted out the azure dome. It carried Biddad seven miles, and slammed him through a lot of trees, and with him broke down gates and stiles, and wound his form around his knees. Upon his head it made a dent and stripped him of his socks and shirt; and Biddad was the only gent in all that section who was hurt.

Income Tax Reduced in Britain and Gold Standard Restored

Explorers Report Desperate Conditions Among Eskimos.-Hindenburg Hailed With Exuberance by Monarchists.-32 Killed in Mexican Election Conflict.

PROGRESS OF COMMUNIST PARTY.
MOSCOW, April 28. The fifty-five hundred delegates, from all parts of Russia, are attending the 15th Congress of the Communist Party which opened here yesterday. Premier Vladimir Lenin, whose presence was expected to be the chief feature of the gathering, has postponed his departure from the trans-Caucasian resort of Sukhum, for another week in order to complete a book on the political life, and his friends anticipate that he will soon be engaged with a responsible place in the Government and gradually receive the former popularity and prestige. Among the questions to be discussed at the convention, which will be the most important in the history of the movement, are the question of nationalization, the question of taxation, the question of international relations, and the question of the Communist International. Although the London correspondents are allowed to attend the sessions, it is well to recall that the delegates are busy occupied with the consideration of Russia's economic and industrial situation.

BRITAIN RESTORES GOLD STANDARD.
LONDON, April 28. The House of Commons today passed the British Empire Gold Standard Bill, which restores the gold standard on a solid basis and announced the resumption of the McKenna duties on imported luxuries. After finding additional sources of revenue through increased death duties, a tax on silk and a few other articles, the Chancellor of the Exchequer went to the relief of the General British public by a straight cut of sixpence in the pound on income tax. In announcing Great Britain's return to the gold standard, Mr. Churchill declared there would be complete imperial unity in this policy. Mr. Churchill stated that Holland and the Dutch East Indies, which were very important factors in the world's commerce, would act simultaneously with Great Britain to-day in restoring the gold standard.

EXCHANGE IMPROVES.
NEW YORK, April 28. Demand sterling advanced one cent to 4.83, the highest price in ten years, and less than four cents from parity, within fifteen minutes after the news of Great Britain's return to the gold standard had been received in New York.

HAIL HINDENBURG!
HANOVER, April 28. Steel helmet monarchist organizations seem to have taken possession of Hanover and are celebrating exultantly the election of Von Hindenburg at their favourite restaurants and cafes. Members of these monarchist groups are yelling themselves hoarse day and night shouting, "Hail Hindenburg!" singing patriotic songs and imbibing freely.

A FIGHT TO A FINISH.
OTTAWA, April 28. The men will stand tight until they starve, or there is going to be one of the bloodiest fights ever seen. The men will not recede from their position, because they cannot afford to. In these words Rev. Dr. McAvoy, Baptist Minister, of Glace Bay, indicated the position with regard to miners of Nova Scotia and the British Empire Steel Corporation, in the course of an address to about 50 guests at a luncheon to-day under the auspices of the National Relief Committee.

COLD IN FRANCE.
PARIS, April 28. A cold spell now prevails practically throughout France, and fruit trees which are in bloom are menaced by frost.

FEW FRIENDS OF PROHIBITION.
LONDON, April 28. According to Walter Granville, Grand Superintendent of the legislative work of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars, the Conservatives, broadly speaking are, on the liquor question, against both local veto and public ownership; the Liberals are for local veto and against state ownership; Labor agrees with some form of local option and also with public ownership. On this basis Mr. Granville concludes that the temperance question has fewer friends in the House of Commons than it possessed a good many years back.

FRENCH LOSSES IN MOROCCO.
PARIS, April 28. A captain and 14 men of a French Colonial unit in Morocco were killed and 11 soldiers wounded in fighting with a band of 400 rebels early in April, the Government announced to-day. The battle which occurred near Preftia, lasted three days and three nights. The attacking rebels retreated leaving forty dead.

TESTIMONY OF C.G.M.M. CAPTAIN.
VANCOUVER, April 28. "If you insist upon sending the ship to sea in this condition for God's sake take me out of her." This was the plea which Captain Wm. Bradley, former master of the ill-fated steamer Canadian Exporter, told Mr. Justice Murphy in the Supreme Court yesterday, that he made to shore officers of the Canadian Merchant Marine just before the vessel left port on her fatal voyage in July. The answer he alleges he received, according to his testimony, was, "If this ship is in Vancouver to-morrow morning the newspapers will say that the strikers have beaten the C.G.M.M." With first officer Newton Campbell on the bridge the Canadian Exporter piled up on Willapa Bar, off the coast of Oregon, near the mouth of the Columbia River, early in the morning of July 31, and after several days on the reefs finally broke up and sank. The consignees of the cargo are suing for claims of $45,000, while other consignees having claims in excess of $150,000 are awaiting the outcome of the action.

32 KILLED IN ELECTION FIGHTS IN MEXICO.
NOGALLES, Ariz., April 28. Thirty-two persons were killed in fights and disturbances resulting from city elections, held in the State of Sonora, Mexico, Sunday, officials here declared.

NO SIGN OF DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE.
LONDON, April 28. Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, replying to a question in the House of Commons to-day regarding the possible summoning of another disarmament conference, declared that he did not see any sign of an early call of such a conference from any quarter.

Little Jack Rabbit
by David Cory

"Mother, mother," shouted Little Jack Rabbit, as he looked at the pretty calendar on the wall, "the first of May is almost here. I'd like to give a May Party."

"Would you, bunny boy," answered Lady Love, hugging him close to her calico apron. "Maybe we can, who knows? Why don't you call up Uncle Lucky?"

"Hello, Central One, Two, Three. Guess who's calling? Little Me Wants to talk to Uncle Lucky. Who is always kind and plucky."

"Of course he is. Everybody knows Mr. Lucky. Leftistfoot," answered a voice over the wire. "But give me his telephone number. I can't remember that."

"One, Two, Three, Rabbitville, Little White House on the hill," answered the bunny boy, quick as a wink. In a few minutes the dear old gentleman bunny was enquiring over the wire:

"Who is calling? I don't know. My rheumatism is hurting so."

"Oh, dear me, I'm so sorry, and so sorry for myself," sighed the little rabbit.

"Ha, ha," laughed funny Uncle Lucky, "how can your little pinky toe hurt you? You're too young for rheumatism."

"That's not the reason," replied the bunny boy. "You may not be able to come to my May Day Party."

"Didn't know you were to give one," answered the old gentleman rabbit. "But I'd come, even if my pinky toe ached and I had to hop on one leg."

"He'll come, he'll come," shouted the happy little rabbit, turning to Lady Love.

"Let me speak to him," answered the pretty lady bunny, and taking the

The Black Prince's Well
How many people know where the Black Prince's Well is situated? The story goes that the Black Prince stopped to drink at this well as he returned from the Battle of Poitiers with the captive King of France. The well is just outside Canterbury, near the little village of Harbledown. It lies in a wayside hollow, and is built round with stone, on the top-most of which are carved the Prince of Wales' feathers and the equally well-known motto, "Ich Dien." Both stones and inscription are, however, quite modern, for they were placed there by the late Sidney Cooper, R. A., the famous painter of cattle, who went to live near this spot when he thought he was dying. He lived for fifty years longer.

House of Assembly Proceedings

TUESDAY, April 28. The House opened at 3 p.m. MR. HALFYARD presented petition from the residents of the following places:—Bird Island Cove on the subject of a road; Heart's Desire on the subject of a road; Melrose and Melrose on the subject of a motor road; and the subject of a motor road.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES explained some anomalies in the Encouragement of Shipbuilding Bill which had passed the House and also outlined the intention of introducing a new bill. In the revised bill there was no provision for the use of a dismantled vessel as a ship which was previously used as a ship.

Marine and Fisheries, after which the Leader of the Opposition stated that the Encouragement of Shipbuilding Bill was before the House they fought to have the bounty paid on ships not hauled out of the water, and contented that what they fought for was being granted through the Upper House. He alleged that the resolutions originated in the Upper House, but was informed by the Minister that he was not correct. Mr. Hixman agreed with the point taken by Mr. Ashbourne in reference to the bounty under Schedule F.

MR. HALFYARD hoped that the bill would bring about the ends desired. He felt, however, that the discretionary powers given the Minister were too great under the bill. Mr. Halfyard held that it appeared as if the Legislative Council was dictating to the lower chamber.

THE PRIME MINISTER agreed with Capt. Rendell that the specifications should be embodied in the bill. Capt. Rendell's remarks had been a revelation to him and should be given the fullest consideration.

The Committee passed the Resolutions with some amendments. A bill to give effect to the resolutions was introduced and read a first time. MR. WARREN brought to the attention of the House a letter on the matter of private bills signed J. A. W. McNelly which appeared in the Telegram. One paragraph of the letter he claimed was a gross insinuation. Mr. Warren pointed out that the firm of Warren & Winter were only temporary solicitors for the Power & Paper Co. referred to in the letter. He thought that Mr. McNelly should be brought to the Bar of the House to answer for intimidation. The writer showed ignorance of the House rules 276 and 277. Mr. Warren declared that the aspersions cast on him was out of keeping with his past record of independence, and if by a very remote possibility he had to give a casting vote on the bill he would certainly do his duty, and would not require the directions of an armchair critic to guide him.

MR. SPEAKER said, of the utmost importance to this House is the safeguarding of its prerogatives and the rights and privileges of its members. It protects them not only in their persons and liberties, but against reflections upon their honor or accusations of partiality in the discharge of their Legislative duties. Any such interference with them is resented as an indignity to the House itself, to be not only discountenanced but effectively stopped.

Dealing with the question raised by the Hon. Members for Fortune, I may say that because his law firm acted temporarily as legal adviser to the Newfoundland Power and Paper Co., Ltd., Mr. Warren deliberately refrained from presenting the Petition brought forward on behalf of that Company, and took absolutely no part in its discussion or consideration. He is not a member of the Select Committee to whom the Petition was referred for enquiry and report; nor is he engaged in the promotion, management or passages of the proposed legislation through this Assembly.

As was to be expected from one of his professional standing who has occupied with such distinction the highest positions in the gift of this House and the Government of this Colony, Mr. Warren has acted throughout, in connection with this matter, with the utmost propriety; in complete agreement with the Rules; and in accordance with the best traditions of this Chamber.

I extend to the Hon. Member an assurance that this House views with grave displeasure and emphatically repudiates any suggestions that tend to disparage him, or in any way reflect upon his integrity or reputation. The amendments made by the Legislative Council to the Pure Bred Animals Bill were concurred in.

MR. SPEAKER announced that the Bill an Act to amend Chap. 74 of Consolidated Statutes, entitled "Old Age Pensions," had been returned from the Council with some amendments. He pointed out that as it was a money bill the amendment infringed the privilege of the Lower House.

THE PRIME MINISTER suggested that the matter should be deferred for consideration. THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION held that the amended bill should be rejected forthwith. The Council's amendments to the Hotel Facilities Bill was agreed to.

THE HOUSE then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Supply. THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION on behalf of his following, congratulated Major Cashin on the stand he took in reference to the tariff. He agreed with Major Cashin that no further taxes should have been placed on the fishermen.

MR. SPEAKER followed and expressed his appreciation of what Mr. Hixman had said. He claimed that he did not leave the party but rather was excommunicated because he could not see eye to eye with the Government on tariff matters. Following a reiteration of some of the remarks of the previous session the speaker read the Manifesto of the Premier on which he made some passing comments until recess hour.

NIGHT SESSION. When the session resumed at 8 o'clock, Major Cashin referred to a challenge he had issued before recess via that less than six weeks ago the Prime Minister put a gun to his head to try and drive him out of the party. As a proof he called attention to the redistribution bill which in its original form contained a clause closing any District which had one or more representatives against further by-elections. This was done to keep Sir M. P. Cashin, his father, out of St. John's East. The clause was later dropped. The Prime Minister had told him that he did not want to have his father in his party. If they did not want him, the Government surely did not want his son. He was prepared to resign his seat on the Tariff, and challenged anyone to contest the District against him.

THE PRIME MINISTER asked why it was the intention to keep his father out of the district, why the clause was not kept in the bill. MAJOR CASHIN continuing, charged that Major Sullivan while in London, said they did not want Cashin in the Government. The statement was denied by Hon. Mr. Sullivan and Major Cashin obliged to accept the denial again reverted to tariff matters and declared that the Government was being run by foreigners. He represented the fishermen of Newfoundland and was prepared to stand on the floors of the House until he dropped dead in their defence. He had during the past six months remained with the party acting as a detective in the interests of the fishermen and he claimed any man who supported the Tariff was a traitor to the country. At this juncture the Attorney General took his seat in the House, being absent when Major Cashin challenged an answer to the redistribution clause, and the question was put to him by Major Cashin.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL explained that under the Redistribution Bill the districts were not as formerly, and the clause was in the bill for the general idea that it was unnecessary to open any districts in the interim of the new law coming into force. It had no reference to St. John's in particular which in times past had been represented by one or two members. The Attorney General expressed the view that it was a great mistake to assume that people are always out to attack oneself. It was the Member for Ferryland who gave utterance to the thought about closing St. John's East against his father. The clause was withdrawn when it was revealed that it was likely to appear as an affront. The Attorney General declared that he had never heard the idea of turning him (Major Cashin) out expressed by the Prime Minister, and he assured him that both personally and on behalf of the Government there had been no malicious intent.

MAJOR CASHIN expressed himself satisfied with the answer given by the Attorney General, but not so with that given by the Prime Minister, after which he continued to speak along the lines of his previous utterances until nearly eleven o'clock when he resumed his seat.

MR. LAKE said Mr. Cashin had charged the Government members as not being independent. He wanted to tell him he was absolutely independent. It ill became him to throw slurs across the House. In fact his whole speech was one of slurs and abuse. Mr. Cashin had called Mr. Monroe a traitor to his adopted country, but he contended Mr. Cashin was a traitor of the worst kind in that he admitted remaining in the party for eight months as a detective. Mr. Cashin had talked about having no blood, but his blood was as good as any that ever flowed in the honorable member's veins. Mr. Lake said the men of Burin had confidence in the Prime Minister and the Government, and are not worrying about the tariff. The tariff is not satisfactory to all, no tariff ever was, but we realize that the revenue must be found. He may not be an expert on the tariff, but Mr. Cashin because he was fishing on the banks when Mr. Cashin was attending college. He said that he was protecting the fishermen and he had not lost his independence, and he did not want to have Mr. Cashin tell him that he had. He felt the tariff was for the benefit of the people all around. In Burin they did not want the duty. They were too independent to take it. The people were now on the Banks not looking for dole. He told Mr. Cashin that the Lunenburg skippers were returning to Newfoundland and fishing out of our ports. Mr. Cashin did not know much about Lunenburg or he would not have said anything on that score. Mr. Cashin was not instrumental in having the duty taken off rubber boots as he had claimed. This was done by the Finance Minister when representations were made to him. The people he represented were not St. John's electors, but South West Coast men, and he had no galleries to play to. He said he had done his bit in the Merchant Marine and in the bowels of a submarine, but he did not advertise it as Mr. Cashin had done. It was poor policy to brag of one's war record. The Prime Minister will do good for the country if he is given a chance. No Government can do wonders in eight months. The people of Burin sent him to support the Government and he would do so. He didn't want any more elections. The country couldn't afford to keep the House open any longer. The men of Ferryland didn't get a chance to go to the Banks. Why didn't Mr. Cashin invest his money in the bankfishery if he knew so much about it. After what he had heard he was convinced that the member knew very little of the Bank fishery, but knew how to talk for some hours and say nothing.

THE PRIME MINISTER said all Mr. Cashin had said in six hours he could answer in a quarter of an hour. It was repetition after repetition. He was sorry to see a man who had pledged his allegiance to him criticizing him in all his actions for no reason whatever only excuses about the tariff. He had attacked the Government more than any Opposition member had. Mr. Cashin admitted that he had remained in his party for months to act as a detective, and he had therefore, on his own admission, been a traitor to his party. The clause talked about so much in the Redistribution Bill had been explained by the Attorney General. It was dropped because several members of the party thought it better left out. Mr. Cashin did not make us drop it, and why should any one member make the party do anything they did not want to do? It was not the cause and he had said it was not the Tariff that made him disloyal to the party. The reason was that one morning some months ago a Mr. Tobin came to his office and presented him with a petition to open St. John's East and have Sir M. P. Cashin as the Government nominee. He asked Mr. Tobin whom he represented and he said the Committee of Mr. Higgins. He at once informed Mr. Tobin that any representations that the Committee wanted to make to him had to be made through Mr. Higgins. He plainly told him also that he considered it a piece of impertinence to make such representations to him and not to Mr. Higgins first. He pointed blank refused the request of Mr. Tobin. He then sent for Mr. Cashin and asked him if his father wanted to return to public life as a rank and file member of the Monroe party. Mr. Cashin said yes he did. He (Mr. Monroe) reminded him that his father was an ex-Prime Minister, etc., and he said that didn't matter. He then told Mr. Cashin that he felt in the interests of the party that Sir M. P. Cashin should not be asked back, and plainly put the matter before him that he (Mr. Monroe) could not entertain any such idea. Mr. Cashin then said, I am glad I understand the matter Mr. Monroe, and you and I understand where my father stands with your party. Since that time Mr. Cashin has been trying to get out of the party, and to-night he admitted that during the time since elapsed he has remained in the party as a spy. Mr. Cashin said the tariff put an extra two cents protection on the Tobacco Factory, which was not the case. He reiterated what he said before; he had gone to the Finance Minister and told him that the Tobacco Factory should get no more protection. He challenged Mr. Cashin to agree to have Read Son & Watson verify both their sets of figures. He was satisfied who would be correct. The Imperial Tobacco Company were making no profits on their cheaper grades of tobacco. The $300 and $100,000 tax was put on tobacco factories to aid in paying for an Excise Officer stationed in the factories to see that no smuggling was done. He had already assured the House that there would be no increase in lines and twines. He stated that the Tobacco Factory and the Cordage Company were two of the most beneficial industries in the country. He defended the Government's Tariff policy. He regretted the increase and he had promised to try and reduce the expenditure. It was not being done as well as he would like. He was perfectly satisfied to have the country judge them at the end of four years. He was very much inclined to think that the interests of the fishermen of the country was not the only thing that induced Mr. Cashin to be a detective in the party, but the interests of self and nothing more. He was glad to see him cross the floor where he could do no more harm to the party.

The Committee then rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again. Remaining orders being deferred the House adjourned at 11.30 until the usual hour to-day.

The Enemies of Civilization

The foreign messages during the past few days indicate that Europe is at last awakening to the menace of Communism, and no wonder. The disorders in Germany over a long period, the recent murders in Paris, the attempted assassination of King Boris, followed by the ghastly crime in the Cathedral at Sofia, when one hundred and sixty persons were killed by bombs, disturbances in Asia, and the signs of unrest in various parts of the Empire are attributed to the activities of certain elements subsidised by Russia, in an effort to reduce law and order everywhere to the same chaotic state which exists under the regime of the Bolsheviks.

Referring to the Sofia outrages, a United Press message of April 21st says:

The Daily Telegraph ridicules the idea that Bulgarians alone were responsible for the Sofia outrages, and warns that "numerous dangerous Bolshevik visitors have arrived in England recently, attached to Soviet sanctuaries in one way or another." There has been a similar influx into Vienna, Athens and Constantinople, says the Telegraph, and Greece was astounded to see a personnel of 51 arrive as the staff for the Soviet legation when diplomatic relations were resumed with Russia, while the Vienna legation and annexes "include a bureau of military espionage."

The Morning Post says: "We are again in times when Christianity is threatened by an eastern invasion of barbarians, who in this case are assisted by secret agents and allies in our midst."

The Post charges that the influence of Moscow is behind outrages in Germany, France, Italy, Ireland, Egypt and India.

In this connection it will be recalled that General Primo Rivera, head of the Spanish directory, alleges that the Soviet Government is aiding Spain's enemies in Morocco.

Moscow is exercising every effort to affiliate the various unions in Great Britain, and eventually those in other parts of the world, with the Red International, and at present Russian delegates are holding a conference in London with representatives of British Labor drawn chiefly from the ranks of the extremists.

That the great majority of those workmen have little sympathy for this movement, or are in fact under any delusion as to the ultimate object of their recognized leaders. Anxious as they are to improve conditions in the various industries, they realize fully that this cannot be accomplished by the methods advocated and already practiced with disastrous results by these agitators in many fields.

The views expressed by several prominent British Trade Unionists when it was first announced that the Red envoys were coming to London clearly indicate their attitude. Here are a few of them:

Mr. J. A. Seddon, a former president of the Trades Union Congress: Any attempt to weld the British and Russian trade union movements will, in my opinion, simply result in splitting the British movement. Russian trade unionism stands for something that has been condemned by the organized workers of Britain in conference.

Mr. C. T. Cramp, industrial general secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen:

The vast majority of European trade unionists are opposed to the political influences of the Red Trade Unions

International. . . There is a danger that a continuation of the efforts employed for unity will create far more serious divisions than they can possibly heal.

Mr. W. A. Appleton, secretary of the General Federation of Trade Unions:

The British workman does not care a straw for the project. He is fed up with Russia and with the people who can only think of Russia at a time when British industry is slipping to a position so serious that the British worker may be involved in hardships even greater than those his grandfathers suffered in the early years of the 18th century.

The silence of others is equally significant.

In the list of those who are attending the conference as British Labour representatives, conspicuous by their absence are the names of such men as Ramsay MacDonald, Robert Clynes, J. H. Thomas, Arthur Henderson and of other outstanding persons, who have not only given their lives to the real cause of labour, but by their sane counsel and ability have secured recognition of its claims, and have succeeded in considerably ameliorating conditions in the various fields of industry.

According to the Pravda, a Moscow journal, Zinovieff, the president of the executive committee of the Third International declared that the conference in London was a successful move by the Communist Internationale for the "bolshhevizing" of the world. "We shall continue to fight," he said, wherever our Red trade union exists, but we shall maintain our struggle for trade union unity." By which Zinovieff means affiliation to the Moscow Reds.

In referring to the work of the "missionaries" about to start for London he expresses the opinion, and evidently the wish is father to the thought, that "England is losing her predominance in the markets of the world; that British colonial power is beginning to totter; that class war is becoming fiercer, and that the position of the labour leaders is losing ground."

Claiming that the traditional trade movement in England is trembling in the balance, and that the fighting methods of the old leaders are no longer effective, Zinovieff urges his delegates to do their utmost to give them "the last push" by effecting an Anglo-Russian amalgamation. Once having established Communism in Britain, these fatuous preachers of a vicious creed believe that the way will be prepared for a world revolution.

The pernicious activities of these agitators cannot be disregarded. Already there is sufficient evidence to indicate that they have been extended even to comparatively small industrial centres, and perhaps for their real purpose, the more isolated these places are the better, because ignorance is the most fruitful soil for the seed which they sow.

In Newfoundland we are entering upon a period in which new industrial enterprises will play an important part in augmenting our wealth, formerly derived almost exclusively from the fisheries. So far the industrial life of the country has been little affected by this insidious element of disorder, but it is too much to expect that we shall long be left unmolested. The factor, however which can chiefly be relied upon in this Colony as a means not only of defence, but of prompt attack, against the enemy of civil and religious institutions and of all the ordinances which make for civilization, is the sterling character of the people themselves. They are not kindly disposed to alien doctrines; they are firm in their religious convictions (and we bethink the rash individual who attempts to belittle them); they are law abiding and prefer to live and let live, and they love and reverence their Sovereign, who is the keystone of our cherished constitution, whose basis is Liberty, as distinct from license.

Labour unions have proved themselves indispensable to the industrial world, and great are the services which they render to their own cause, equally great is their responsibility in the cause of humanity generally. This principle has been recognized and acted upon by the broad-minded men who have served Labour well. It has remained for the agitator to awaken discontent and set class against class.

The Remarkable Case of the Member for Ferryland

Mr. Peter Cashin's defection from the Monroe party in the early hours of Monday morning has been received with enthusiasm by the Opposition, even though he has not sought sanctuary in their company, but the doctrine which they have preached on the right of individual members of a party to act on their own and to disregard their pledges of allegiance is not unlikely to have a repercussive effect. The principle does not apply to one party more than another, and it certainly does not make for stability in Government.

Loyalty and obedience to the leader is as essential as loyalty and obedience to the captain of a ship or to the commanding officer in the army, and while the member for Ferryland has apparently been too short a time in politics to appreciate the fact, it might have been expected that his experience in the army, which he has referred to, would have made it clear that if he disagreed with his leader, there was no course left him but to get out or to be put out. That the latter alternative resulted was entirely his own fault.

It does not follow that a member of the party must sacrifice his principles or subordinate the dictates of his conscience to the will of others. He is at liberty to resign, and this may be done, if his motives are sincere, without either alienating the friendship of his colleagues or giving himself cause to feel aggrieved. No more notable examples of such action can be mentioned than those of Lord Morley and Mr. John Burns who, finding themselves out of sympathy with Mr. Asquith and the party in 1914 on the question of intervention in the European war, tendered their resignations in order that they might not embarrass the Cabinet, and their resignations were accepted in the spirit in which they were tendered.

But Mr. Cashin, according to the report of his speech in the House, desired to remain in the party to act, as he says, as a detective. No further comment on his actions in this matter is necessary since he has gone to such pains to make his position plain.

No Report From the Neptune

No report was received last night by Messrs. Job Bros. from the Neptune, and the Post-Telegram has no message as there was trouble somewhere with the lines. The storm, it is believed, made it impossible for the ship to do anything during the day.

Bakers Request an Investigation

The following communication has been forwarded to the Prime Minister by the City Bakers:

St. John's, Nfld., April 28th, 1925.

The Honourable W. S. Monroe, Prime Minister.

Sir,—As, in our opinion, much criticism of a most unfair kind and of a most damaging nature to our business has been made by some members of the Government in the Legislative Council, and which has been given much prominence in the Public Press, we respectfully request that a Commission be appointed by the Government to make an investigation of our profits without delay, and in fairness to us, to make public the finding in this connection.

We are forwarding a copy of this letter to the daily press for publication, and

Annual Billiard Dinner

T. A. & B. SOCIETY.

The annual billiard dinner of the T. A. & B. Society was held in the club rooms last night and proved to be one of the most enjoyable yet held by the Society. The dinner was the result of a tournament recently held and keenly contested; seventy-two players participated, and "spot" sliding up by a margin of ninety points.

The tables were laid out in attractive manner, being decorated with the Society's colours, whilst the armory, where the dinner was held, was also tastefully decorated. The catering was in the hands of the Society's ladies' auxiliary, and left nothing to be desired.

The menu was an excellent one, the speeches were of a high order, and the musical programme all that could be desired.

Mr. M. P. Hynes, Chairman of the T. A. Club, ably performed the duties of toast-master. The following was the toast list:—

THE KING—Prop. The Chairman: "God Save the King."

HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP AND CLERGY—Prop. Mr. P. J. Hanley: Resp. Rev. Fr. Pippy, Spiritual Director.

SONG—Sergt. T. Morrissey.

THE T. A. & B. SOCIETY—Prop. Mr. L. J. Griffin; Resp. Hon. W. J. Ellis, President.

SONG—Mr. Robert J. Power.

THE JUVENILE T. A. & B. SOCIETY—Prop. Mr. Geo. Coughlan; Resp. Mr. Edward Foran, President.

RECITATION—Mr. J. Crowlley.

THE T. A. LADIES' AUXILIARY—Prop. Mr. J. A. Clancy; Resp. Mr. John J. Murphy.

SONG—Mr. J. J. Hickey.

THE GAME—Prop. Mr. Frank Walsh (skip); Resp. Mr. W. J. Myler (skip).

SONG—Mr. W. Dugan.

OUR GUESTS—Prop. Mr. R. J. Power; Resp. Dr. A. H. Carnell.

THE CHAIRMAN—Prop. Mr. J. J. Spratt; Resp. Mr. M. P. Hynes.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

G. F. S.

We would particularly draw attention to the G.F.S. sale, which Lady Allardrye will open in the Synod Hall at 3:30 p.m. Thursday, April 30th.

Very little is known of the work of this world wide Society in Newfoundland. There are 11 outpost branches and the Society is quietly working for the good of the community by striving to raise the standard of the girls of the city and outposts by inculcating its high ideals into their lives; also by providing rooms in the Synod Building where girls may go at any time to work, read or play, especially in this a boon to the outport girls in the city. The Society would like to do far more for the girls than it does, but lack of funds hampers the work. A special effort is being made for the Society all over the world this year as it is the Jubilee year. We would ask all who can to come to the sale on Thursday afternoon, even to have a cup of tea would help and be much appreciated by those who are working for it.

Springs reburst! Aren't you longing to see the flowers? Well come along to Cochrane St. Lecture Room to-night, and see Miss Kiku, our Chrysanthemum flower. apr22,11

Reafforestation

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir—Your very interesting article in yesterday's issue descriptive of the Nfld. Power and Paper Company's plant at Corner Park carries with it the hall mark of reliability as your correspondent's statements are made upon the authority of Mr. Stadler, than whom no one is better qualified to offer opinions that are businesslike, yet conservatively so.

The only regrettable feature of the article is the opinion expressed therein by Mr. Stadler in which he discounts the value of re-afforestation. To the initiated this will not come as a surprise, but to the man in the street, who has heard of afforestation as an agency of great promise, it will be somewhat of a shock.

Mr. Stadler's statement, however, is quite explicable to any one with even an elementary acquaintance with wood craft. All paper producers seek "limits" carrying a wood supply of about forty years' duration. This, Mr. Stadler states his company possesses; therefore it would not be businesslike for them to resort to re-afforestation for 35 years after their 40 year limits are out on waiting for the maturing of the re-afforested areas.

Reafforestation does not appeal to Corporations for the reason stated by Mr. Stadler, but it should and does appeal to Governments whose duty it is to ensure that national assets shall be preserved to posterity to as great an extent as possible.

This is a subject upon which much could be written and with your permission, Mr. Editor, the writer may refer to it again.

Yours truly,

SULPHITE.

Nfld. Exports to U.S.A.

The volume of declared exports to the United States from Newfoundland for the three months ending March 31st, 1925, reached $705,453.22, or the highest since 1920, when, during the same period, the declared exports totalled $1,160,513.95.

As compared with last year, the most noticeable advances were in common cod and codliver oils. Declared exports for each quarter ending March 31st, and covering the past five years, are shown below:

Table with 2 columns: Year and Amount. 1920: $1,160,513.94; 1921: 458,240.48; 1922: 625,444.41; 1923: 426,171.76; 1924: 642,081.00; 1925: 705,453.22

Obituary

JAS. HUSTINS.

Last evening, whilst attending to his duties as Secretary of Lodge Dudley, S.O.E., Mr. Jas. Hustins was suddenly stricken ill and lapsed into unconsciousness. Dr. Anderson was called and responded immediately. He found Mr. Hustins' condition so grave as to need hospital attention, and he was conveyed to the General Hospital. We learn from the Hospital this morning that Mr. Hustins had passed away without regaining consciousness.

Mr. Hustins has been for a number of years employed at the Royal Stores, and was a well known craftsman. He leaves a wife, nee Miss Williams, one son, two brothers and one sister to mourn. To the relatives the Telegram extends sympathy in their hour of bereavement.

Meeting Broadcasted

Station 8WMC was again on the air last night, and the address was sent from the Presbyterian Hall to the Telephone Office, thence by direct line to the Broadcasting Room at Wesley Methodist Church, where the operator, Mr. Walter I. Veay, by using remote control, gave listeners in another town, Mr. Chas. A. Ellis was in charge of the "amplifier" at the Presbyterian Hall.

"Take My Advice"

Last night's performance of "Take My Advice," at St. Patrick's Parish Hall, attracted an even larger audience than on the opening night, all available space being occupied. The performers, without exception, gave excellent impressions on the characters assigned them and on the whole the play was one of the best ever presented at St. Patrick's. Between the acts specialties were given by Misses Ida Howlett and Pauline Vaughan; Messrs. J. Canning, F. Wylie and R. P. Ledmond, and during the evening excellent selections were rendered by the orchestra, composed of Miss Mollie Doran; Messrs. J. Walker, H. Hutten and F. Oliver. The play will be presented again to-night with new specialties and is well worth seeing.

PEPPYS BEHIND THE SCENES

April 28th—Up betimes, and the weather turned to rain, so needs must I go abroad in the raincoat that, which he did leave at my house, but the thing full of holes and do leak greatly, and so is of little use to me and must return it to Povey. All the news I do hear this day is of the bye-election that will be held in St. John's East, and am told that the writ for it will be issued mighty soon, but no news yet of the candidates that are like to contest it. My wife this day giving me for my dinner a pudding which she do find the recipe for in a battered old cookery book that she finds about the house, I am nigh poisoned by it, and is the most villainous stuff that ever I did eat. Asking her to show me the book she did find the recipe in, I do discover that the page is torn across the middle of the pudding, and that having half the ingredients for this prepared, the witless wretch does not notice the tear, and makes the other half of stuffs given in a recipe for curry. The House sits all this day and night, but little progress made. Mr. Warren raising a question of privilege in the afternoon, concerning a letter in the news sheets that did criticize him, and is upheld by the Speaker. On the continuation of the Tariff Debate, Mr. Cashin speaks at length, criticising the Government, and is replied to by Mr. Lake and the Prime Minister. By despatch as out of England, news of Mr. Churchill's Budget, and among other things, do restore the gold standard, and gives a reduction of 6 pence in the pound on the Income Tax. Talking this night with Mr. Stiek, he do tell me how he has many letters from listeners-in who did hear the concert broadcasted by the C.I.B. Band, and were mighty pleased with it.

he could meet the brains and wit of some of the biggest men in the Empire.

HON. MR. MORINE said he had no authority to say that at present. Such appointment was a matter for the Governor in Council.

HON. MR. BISHOP thought while it was entirely proper for the Government to have the right to appoint whom they please, yet great care should be taken to have the best man possible.

HON. DR. MOSBELL was of opinion that this appointment should not be a matter of political patronage.

HON. MR. MORINE replied that it was a matter of political patronage and ought to be. He agreed with Hon. Mr. Bishop that the appointee should be the best to be had.

HON. MR. MORINE said the second section of the Bill was one which he personally differed. As it was not a Government matter it gave him more freedom to speak.

Buick Popularity and Leadership

1925 Buick Six Touring.

In addition to the wonderful value of the Buick car itself, every Buick owner enjoys the dollars and cents value that comes from Buick popularity and leadership.

He gets the advantage of the remarkably low price, with a high standard of quality, that is due to Buick popularity and the resulting production on a large basis.

He is assured of service by mechanics, who know the Buick car thoroughly, wherever he may travel, and for as many years as he cares to drive his car.

He is protected against the abnormal depreciation in value that takes place when a car becomes an "orphan."

REGARDLESS OF THE CAR YOU BUY OR THE PRICE YOU PAY, THERE IS NO GREATER VALUE THAN A "BUICK."

second engineer and the witness prepared the box. This consultation took place about 10.30 and the repairs were completed at three the next morning. Everything went along all right until March 30th, about eleven o'clock in the forenoon, he saw steam coming from behind the patch they had put on. Witness told the Captain and recommended that the boiler be blown down, as he wanted to see what was wrong. He had fears that there was something serious and he wanted to make sure. The boiler would have to be emptied and stripped on the inside. To this the Captain said he would rather put into a harbor as it was feared the ice might come apart. After this they made for harbor and brought up at the Groasis Islands. The pressure was reduced to about 65 and 70 lbs. It was on the 3rd of April when they reached the Groasis Islands. Witness thought between the 30th or March and April 3rd, 500 seals were picked up. They arrived at Groasis Islands about four o'clock in the evening, and she was ready about eleven o'clock in the night, although work could not be begun until the morning. There were two holes in the boiler, the second one was on the other side, with the same reference as regards the cement. This hole was discovered after getting into the Groasis Islands. Witness examined the boiler; the hole was small, about the size of a pin hole. The cement had to be cut away on the inside so that the hole could be got at. For about one inch around the hole the plate work is very thin; the hole was the result of a gradual thinning of the plate around the vicinity. It was only about half the thickness that it should be. The thickness of the boiler, when new, should be about an inch. The hole was enlarged to about half an inch and a bolt was put through it, holding the two pieces, on the inside and outside of the boiler. The patch was about a foot long. Both holes were about the same size and were treated in the same manner. It took three days to do the work, every night and Sunday all day, was also worked. Witness was satisfied with the work. The boiler was then filled up with water (sea water). The door was put on and the fires were lighted. In lighting fires in a cold water boiler like that you have to give it roughly about twelve hours to get a full head of steam, otherwise there will be unequal expansion, and damage caused. The boiler showed steam after three or four hours and in six hours she showed sixty pounds pressure. The boiler was rushed a bit as there were 150 men all after the witness, urging him to rush. He did wrong by rushing her. After putting on the steam, the patch on the port side leaked, and the boiler had to be blown down again. It was found that part of the patch joint blew out. The patches were taken off again, and after being fixed up better than before, were put on a second time. Cement was then put on and allowed to set for 24 hours. The boiler was again filled up and it took 24 hours to get up sixty pounds of steam, and after this they started out again for the ice fields. About half an hour after, when the pressure was about 70 lbs., the starboard patch showed signs of leaking. The pressure was reduced to sixty pounds and continued until they got to Conche, when a patch of cement was put on the outside. The ship was not run into Conche to put on the patch. After this the engine room was in splendid order and the boiler was alright for 60 or 65 pounds of steam. The next harbor put into was Twillingate, after that Pool's Island and then St. John's, and the boiler was working alright at 65 lbs. pressure.

John Murphy, sworn, examined by Mr. Bradley—Witness is second engineer on board the Ranger. He has held the position about six weeks. Previous to that he has been in the employ of Bowring Brothers for 17 or 18 years, being a boilermaker. He has not an engineer's certificate, and is really a boilermaker. Whatever repairs could be made to the Ranger by the shop of Bowring's was done by witness and the other men, since he has been with the firm. The cement that was in the bottom of the boiler when the ship went to the ice was not put in by the witness and he did not know who put it there. He has worked pretty often on the Ranger's boiler. There was cement in the boiler about ten years ago or before. Witness did not see any plates put on the boiler, except what he put on in the Spring. If there were any plates put on the boiler witness would see them provided they were put on the parts of the boiler that he worked at. He helped to put on compensating rings on the front of the boiler. These were put on to strengthen the boiler at this particular part. These rings make the floors of the boiler steam proof. After the boilers were blown down and the patches were put on at the Groasis Islands steam was got up in a hurry, witness did not know at whose instructions this was done. The steam was got up by the firemen at the instruction of the Chief Engineer. Any repairs made to the Ranger at their own premises were done by their own men under the direction of Mr. McGettigan. Repairs were made to the ship at the dock about six or seven years ago. There was a new furnace put in. An inspection of the Ranger's boilers was made last year by Mr. Forbes; witness was in the combustion chamber when Mr. Forbes came in there. At the time Mr. Forbes told witness he had been on the inside of the boiler. Witness had heard some one in there, but did not know who it was. Witness showed Mr. Forbes about twenty stags that were put in the boiler and at which the witness was working. Mr. Forbes then examined where the witness was and said she is looking alright. Mr. McGettigan or others were not present as far as the witness could see.

Capt. Wesley Kean, examined by Mr. Bradley—During the recent sealing voyage there was trouble with the boilers. The trouble was reported on the night of the 11th of March. The Chief Engineer reported it and asked the witness to come down and see it. After going down he saw the water bubbling around as if water were put on a hot stove. It looked to the Captain as if there were holes; the trouble looked about the size of a fifty cent piece. The Chief at first said they would have to blow down and the witness said this would be a killer to the sealfishery. After much discussion a clamp was put on, the Chief Engineer explaining that it would protect the firemen. After this the Captain was continually asking about it, and after three days, the Chief Engineer reported steam was coming out again. The block, the witness inferred, was always considered dangerous, but still the ship continued on until 31st of March the Chief Engineer informed the Captain that the boiler was leaking badly and had to be blown down when convenient to do so. After this the ship was headed westward in order to get into a tight patch of ice in order to blow down. This was outside and it would be dangerous to blow down. It was intended to go to Twillingate, and Cape John, Gulf Island, was made, when the seals were sighted, and the witness went to the Chief and asked him what they would do; the Chief Engineer said go at the seals. In this place 850 seals were shot but such a poor hand of getting around was made that the witness decided to go into Groasis Islands. Here the patches were put on and subsequently they came off again. Witness often went into the engine room and does not remember seeing any more than 58 lbs. of steam. With this the ship would not go along at all when the wind was unfavourable, in moderate weather she would do about four knots. After the boilers were patched the second time it was decided to come home. Witness did not know if it was usual to patch a boiler at sea, he never saw a boiler that needed this to be done to it. Witness saw both holes in the boiler. He put his middle finger through the hole and could do so without fear of cutting it. He also broke away a part of the surface. The log was written up every day. The witness wanted to protect himself and he had a conference with the Chief Engineer and Chief Officer, so that all could come to agreement on one thing. This was noted in the log. There was another paper signed by the Chief Engineer and himself setting forth what the voyage was given up for. This was done as a protection for the captain.

To Judge Morris.—This paper will be produced. Witness is in her five years. She is 54 years old. Adjournment was then taken until Thursday, at 3 o'clock, when Mr. Forbes will be examined.

Our Daily Bread

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir.—I am sure that any person when and after reading your Editorial in Saturday's Telegram cannot but feel grateful to you for the interest which you have taken in the welfare of the general public by so forcibly portraying the injustice perpetrated by the vendors of our daily bread. It is being continually and repeatedly asked why the price of bread should be going up while price of flour is on the down grade, and of course no person can give a satisfactory answer to the question. It is surely the greatest blunder and absurdity that has been witnessed in this unfortunate city of blunders, and we sincerely hope that the persons responsible will without delay be convinced of their error and will immediately rectify matters without further trouble. Yours respectfully, BREAD WINNER.

"The Lure" Powerful Story of Underworld

Masterfully Interpreted By Arlie Marks and Her Players. In their interpretation of that powerful story of the underworld, "The Lure," Arlie Marks and her players reach the heights of dramatic entertainment. In the prologues, which is handled by Miss Marks, this dainty artist wins the instant appreciation of her spectators, who applaud with vigor. The plot, which is indeed interesting, is splendidly handled showing vividly life as it exists in the underworld. The first act, which is entitled, "The Spider and the Fly," is a realistic farm yard. The second is "Molly in the Web," showing how she was lured away from her happy home on the farm and brought to fashionable quarters in New York. The last act, entitled "The Escape," contains one of the greatest fights ever seen on the stage. This forms an exciting climax to one of the most powerful plays witnessed in many seasons. In the role of Molly, Miss Arlie Marks plays the part with her usual winsomeness and charm and adds that touch of realism which is always present. Miss Daisy LeRoy plays a remarkably clever character role, that of Bonnie Bessie. The Dope, Paul Brady, is exceptionally good as the Detective. Lindsay E. Perrin is all at home in the role of Bob Allison, the young farmer. The supporting cast is particularly good. The vaudeville in itself is a feature worth the admission price. The Musical Revue, by Scotty Allison, Peggy Logan, Susy MacDonald and Mickey Kean and Jas. Daley, was a spectacular item and the dancing was neatly executed. The straight-jacket escape by the great Andrews, proved a new sensation to theatre-goers, and all held their breath in suspense whilst he was wriggling to get free—he did so, and in quick time. To-morrow's bill is "Where the River Shannon Flows." Seats now selling. Asparagus fritters are nice served with pimiento sauce. For cleaning ceilings a long-handled brush is indispensable.

The Port of Missing Ships

THE SARGASSO SEA.

(By WILLIAM BEEBE.)

A ship called the "Arcturus" is sailing on a voyage which will be a multiplication of a dozen romances. She will sail to the Port of Missing Ships, to the region where the lost Atlantic lies, to that portion of the sea where the sea-serpent is reported to be found; and all this she does in the name of sober Science. Instead of trying to avoid the Sargasso Sea, the dreaded spot of perilous marine quicksands, she will try to become entangled in its legendary web of vegetation; and if that creature the giant octopus, whose undoubted existence is probably the foundation for many sea-serpent tales, should coil his gigantic tentacles over the bulwarks in preparation for boarding, the genuine cordiality of his reception would surprise him.

The first area which I propose to study is the Sargasso Sea, famed in romantic legend. The canny Phoenicians were perhaps the first tellers of the tale, for they frightened off prospective competitors in foreign commerce by dire stories of what awaited any foolhardy voyager beyond the Pillars of Hercules. The Atlantic, they said, was a piece of dreadful darkness, a muddy and a shallow sea, where great morasses of strange growth waited to twine its slimy tendrils about any ship that ventured there and hold it helpless prisoner for ever. The recent discovery of a large store of Phoenician coins on one of the Azores makes it seem quite certain that those daring navigators from African shores actually saw the Sargasso Sea and embroidered this foundation of fact with their own shrewd fancy.

Six weeks after Columbus had sailed from Cadiz on his first epoch-making voyage, his ships began to pass through great patches of weed, such abundance . . . that the ocean seemed to be covered with them; they came from the west." He took this for a sure sign that they were nearing land; but when they had sailed another week the wind died out and the sea was so calm "that the sailors murmured, saying they had got into smooth water, where it would never blow to carry them back to Spain." It was almost a month after they saw the first weed before they finally sighted the West Indies.

Perhaps it was the experience of Columbus that first gave rise to the legend that the Sargasso Sea was a region of constant calm, for a belief exists even to the present time that here is the graveyard of missing ships, and that all the wrecks and derelicts of the Atlantic eventually drift to this weedy spot, and here, tangled in a mat of vegetation, they slowly eddy round and round in desolate assembly. The truth has been the basis for a thousand fantastic tales, the most picturesque version being that, as the first vast field of wreckage is penetrated, the age of the vessels increases until in the very centre are Phoenician galleys still afloat on a voyage which has no end.

The Portuguese called this place Sargasso, from the word "sarga," a kind of grape. Thus it might be literally translated as the "Sea of Little Grapes," and, indeed, the floating weed is buoyed up by thousands of tiny gas-filled bladders which look like the fruit of the weed, but are in reality only the evic which keeps this nomad of the vegetable world from sinking into the icy depths of the ocean.

Somewhere in this region, too, legendary Atlantis is said to lie. This dream country, the thread of whose legend may be traced through the folklore and priestcraft of a dozen countries, was thought to occupy most of the space where the Atlantic now lies, and there are historians and geologists who are convinced that it once existed, a smiling, happy land that was overtaken by frightful catastrophes, and was overwhelmed by an on-rushing sea. This is by some historians supposed to be the origin of the Flood story, which is so curiously and inexplicably universal; and the theory of a submerged continent is somewhat upheld by the soundings of oceanographers, which show that lofty mountain ranges raise their peaks towards the surface of the Atlantic as they may once have raised them towards and above the clouds.

Although I do not expect to find Phoenician galleys nor to dredge up relics of a lost Atlantis, the undoubted fact of the existence of the Sargasso Sea is enough to promise thrills in plenty. Not the sort of thrill that Thomas Janvier injected into his novel, "In the Sargasso Sea," for we know that no ship need fear permanent entanglement there, and that in this Port of Missing Ships we can expect to find nothing more than a few bits of debris such as may be seen on any part of the ocean. It is merely a comparatively quiet spot, the hub of a huge, vaguely defined circle formed by the wheeling of the Gulf Stream from the southwest and the equatorial current from the southeast.

In preparation for the peculiar requirements of the work to be undertaken, the Arcturus has been outfitted and many odd devices have been installed which will make her the depot of captains called upon by curious passengers to explain the rig of the queer-looking ship they see in the distance. She is 280 feet over all, with a beam of 45 feet, and is by far the largest vessel ever available for scientific work such as that contemplated, her gross tonnage being almost twice that of the yacht L'Hirondelle, on which the Prince of Monaco did such notable oceanographic work for many years.

A large laboratory has been built forward of the bridge deck, containing every facility for the intensive study of captured specimens, and tanks and wells have been installed to keep fish alive, as well as cages for live animals, birds, and reptiles. There is a special dark room for the study of one of the most interesting phases of the life of ocean depths—that is, the luminescence of deep-sea fishes. Many of these creatures, incredibly grotesque in form, carry their own lights furnished by their own bodies, and one of our problems, will be to solve the method of production of this luminosity which serves to irradiate the blackness of the medium in which the fish spends its existence. We have, of course, all appliances for dredging and trawling, and carry a dozen small boats, some with glass bottoms, in which to put off from the Arcturus in pursuit of specimens.

Projecting from the bow just above the surface of the water is a small platform which resembles nothing so much as a cow-catcher. From this, in reasonably calm weather, it will be possible to net floating organisms and to use the harpoon gun. All around the outside of the vessel's hull is a narrow footway furnished with handropes, from which observations will be made, and from a specially large and lofty crow's-nest a watch will be kept for anything of special interest that might otherwise escape unobserved. The Arcturus resembles an old pirate ship, for she is all of wood, with very high bulwarks, and to stand in her hold and look up at the great curved timbers of her frame carries the mind irresistibly to slave ships and buccannering days. The last practical touch is given by the double boom which projects amidships, supporting a gang-plank that ends in mid-air. If Blackbeard came aboard our ship he would see that plank at once and identify it as the plank of footpa'h along which he forced so many of his prisoners to take their last walks. But we plan to walk the plank in a diving helmet, which is a vast improvement over the old style, as any captive would admit. From our lower bang a platform which can be hoisted below water. Seated on this and clad in a helmet, an observer can be let down twenty or thirty feet below the surface in mid-ocean and spy upon the busy life of the aquatic jungle called the Sargasso Sea.

Here the little Sargasso fish climbs about the branches of yellow-brown weed, clinging with fingered fins, and in the masses of vegetation she builds her nest of transparent singlass spun from her own body. Here the place of insects in the foliage is taken by millions of tiny crabs and shrimps, some with luminous eyes and glowing spots like jewels on their minute bodies. Barnacles of many queer shapes make up for a sedentary existence by violently kicking their food into their mouths with their feet, and creatures that might be animal or vegetable, or both at once, ceaselessly wave their delicate fronds and tentacles in the soft yellow light that filters down through the floating forest.

After two months in the Sargasso Sea the Arcturus will turn towards the Pacific, as we plan to visit the Galapagos Islands, where two years ago we spent one hundred magic hours of study and exploration. Incidentally this visit will have a practical flavor, as we expect to find buried treasure. In my book "Galapagos: World's End," I described the adventures of Christensen, the taxi-driver shipwrecked on these islands, and the gold left behind when he and his companions were rescued. Christensen is to be one of the company to revisit the scene and dig up the gold.

The New Diversion

LONDON.—(Can. Press)—The smart young people of London, with plenty of money and plenty of time in which to spend it, have discovered a new diversion which eclipses the Treasure Hunts of last year in freakishness and originality.

The idea itself is simple enough. You stay in bed all day and sleep, and rise about nine o'clock in the evening, have breakfast and begin the day. All the house party, of course, does the same. At one a.m., in the cold hours of the morning, there is lunch, and the day is filled in with moonlight tennis and golf, and some of the guests go and paint night-scapes with electric torches.

A feature of the game is that there are heavy fines for anybody who refers to the fact of it being night-time. For instance, there is a great temptation at breakfast time to say, "What a lovely night," instead of "What a marvellous morning," but that will cost five dollars.

Lady Louis Mountbatten, Mrs. Richard Norton and the young Duchess of Roxburg were among the guests of a "Night-Time Day," which was given a few nights ago by the Hon. T. Fellowes at her house in Eaton Square. Before breakfast—that is about 8 a.m., if the guests went for a ride in the m.w. Lunch was at Mrs. Fellowes' use. There was tennis in the afternoon on the hostess' own courts—electric lamps had to be furnished here—and having changed for dinner all the party went on to the Savoy for cocktails and dinner about seven in

Lawless French Law Students

Praise and encouragement to rioting students were shouted in those Paris newspapers which berate the late Herriot Government for having shut the Law School of the University of France for an indefinite period and for having deposed Mr. Barthélemy, Dean of the Faculty. But some neutral observers say that, although these seem harsh measures, it is difficult to see what other course was open to the Government "short of capitulation to the Camelots du Roi and the Catholic Fascists, who had undoubtedly received their cue from members of the teaching staff, disgruntled at the appointment of Prof. George Scelles." All the trouble began, we learn from the Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, when the University of Paris arranged for a temporary course of lectures upon international law by Professor Scelles, and this informant relates:

"As Scelles happens to hold views on the Clerical issue that are those of the (Herriot) Government and of the majority of the voters of France, the Monarchist and Clerical press, the Camelots du Roi and the new Fascist organizations at once declared a vendetta against him. His first lecture was prevented by a mob of some students and many Camelots du Roi and other outsiders, who occupied the lecture theatre and howled him down. It was then decided to restrict the audience to students actually taking the course and admit only by ticket.

"Mr. Scelles was to have lectured recently under these conditions. But, instigated by the Clerical press, the students seized and barricaded every available lecture-hall, screwed bolts into the doors, piled up furniture against them, and bivouacked there all that night and all the next day in great hilarity, until late in the afternoon an announcement that the lecture had been abandoned sent them pouring triumphantly into the street. By a wise decision of the University authorities the police were not allowed to enter the precincts.

"By this time all the streets around the Sorbonne and every corner on the Boulevard St. Michel were packed with rival demonstrators, students, and others—but mainly others—summoned hither by flaming appeals in the morning press. Even the sober Quotidien had given its main pages to a battle-call on behalf of the forces of progress, liberty and Republicanism. Thus by four o'clock there was in the Lath Quarter all the materials for a first-rate political riot save one—the mood for it. The spirit of the rival clans was as sunny and sparkling as the spring afternoon, and the whole affair passed off as a gigantic 'rag.'

The real sufferers from the closing of the University, we are told then, are the students themselves, most of whom are hard-working and serious, and wish only to be allowed to continue their studies. This correspondent, however, calls attention to the fact that the fall of the franc and the consequent dearth of living has of late enormously diminished the proportion of poorer and more earnest students. The minority who were responsible for the trouble, he avers, belong to "good families," and he speaks of these "irresponsible youths" worked upon by an unscrupulous reactionary press and organization." Of the real victims of this folly, he adds, "nothing of course is heard; they are left to bemoan in their mean lodgings what to many of them is the ruin of their hopes in life." Very different is the attitude of the French press which opposed the Herriot Government. Thus the Paris Journal des Debats declares sharply that the University must not be treated like election districts, and it goes on to say:

"The University is a great moral force in our country whose status should be beyond and above political agitation. The Government offended it twice. It committed an act of favoritism by naming a professor for a place that did not belong to him. It committed an injustice in striking at the Dean, who wished to have order observed and the students respected. What is the origin of all this movement of youth, if not the provocation of the Ministry which proceeded to make an unjustifiable nomination and which closed the Law School rather than abandon a choice that was disputed?"

A bitter opponent of the Herriot Government, Gustave Herve, editor of the Paris Victoire, calls the demonstration of the students a protest of indignation against "a crying injustice committed by the Ministry of Public Instruction and against the disgusting mixing of law politics with our higher education." The story as Mr Herve tells it is this:

"The professors of the Law School had to choose a colleague and presented as their first choice to the Ministry, Professor Le Fur of the Law School of Rennes and as second choice Professor Scelles of the Law School of Dijon, Professor Le Fur is a Catholic Republican, which is of itself a prohibitory vice. On the other hand Professor Scelles is a Free Thinker and a Free Mason . . . nat-

The Best Advertising Medium in Newfoundland

Mr. Wm. Wrigley, Jr., the chewing gum king, of Chicago, in explaining the rapid growth of his company, said it was all due to advertising. "But," interrupted one of his friends, travelling with him to the Pacific Coast, "you have already built up a remarkable business. Why not save some of this advertising money and run along on momentum for a while?" "Well," Mr. Wrigley said, "we have had a fine, fast trip West from Chicago so far. How much progress do you think we would make if they took off the engine?"
