Mr. LAURIER. It matters not whether it was four o'clock or two o'clock. The motion was made at a time when the Government should have acceded to it, because it was perfectly fair and reasonable. If, since that time there has been talk upon this motion, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) must understand that the bullying methods with which he has sought to deal with the House will not be assented to. We want to discuss, fairly, every question that comes before this House. We want to give it every attention ; but if the hon. gentleman thinks that he will carry this measure, or any other measure, by preventing fair discussion upon it, let me tell him that he is much mistaken. The hon. gentleman paid us the compliment the other day, that of saying that in his opinion, and in the opinion of an eminent authority, we were the second legislative chamber in the world. The first chamber is well known. The first representative assembly of the world is the great British Parliament, and such conduct as we witnessed last week and this week, has never been seen in the British Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, Sir——

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We admit that.

Mr. LAURIER. Certainly, the hon. gentleman must admit it. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the best evidence that there has been no obstruction to this Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LAURIER. The best evidence that there has been nothing but a fair discussion is, that almost every clause of the fourteen which have been adopted have been amended by the committee, and that the amendments have been accepted by the Government. Yesterday the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) read to this House a telegram from His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface, stating that he would accept the whole Bill. Well, Sir, what took place when we went into committee upon section 14. Why, the very first gentleman to offer an amendment to that clause was the Minister of Public Works. That took place yesterday. Whose fault is it, if to-day the Bill is not proceeded with ? Who is responsible for the present condition of things ? Where is the Government ? Where is their majority ? Where are the men who are responsible to the country at large ? Sir, they are on the Treasury benches opposite. Whose fault is it, if the hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches have waited for five years before taking up this question ? Whose fault is it, that they issued an Order in Council which was drastic and violent in its tone, and which instead of inviting conciliation on the part of Manitoba, almost forced Manitoba to hostile action ? Whose fault is it, if, when we met in session last year, which we were told was called to deal with this question, after the ordinary business of the House had been discharged ; whose fault is it that the question was never brought up then ? Whose fault was it if the Government were wrangling between rival factions ? Whose fault was it, if they forced the only man who apparently was endowed with courage and conviction on this question (Mr. Angers) to withdraw from the Cabinet ? Whose fault was it, that they said, on the 8th of July last, that they would invite negotiation with Manitoba, and that they allowed six months to pass without any negotiation taking place ? Whose fault was it, that on the 2nd of January we met here to deal with this question, and that we found the Cabinet again divided into rival sections —one portion out of the Cabinet and the other portion in—and the two factions launching charges at the heads of each other : one calling the others, imbeciles, and the other faction calling the other, traitors. Whose fault was it that, after they had patched up their differences, and they were apparently once more a sort of united family, whose fault was it that the Bill was not introduced ? Whose fault was it, that instead of introducing the Bill, the Budget debate was proceeded with ? Whose fault was it that six weeks of this session elapsed before the Bill was introduced ? Whose fault was it, that the Bill was only introduced for discussion when we came to the dying days of the session, and when it was known that the life of this Parliament would end on the 24th of this month. Sir, it was not the fault of anybody but the hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches. Now they say that they have to withdraw this Bill from the committee at the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. LAURIER. Now they say they are not to proceed with this Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. LAURIER. Now they say that if they do not proceed with this Bill it is due to obstruction ? Sir, that is a statement which, for my part, I am willing to leave to the impartial electors of this country.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Whose fault is it, that this Bill was not passed this session ? Is it not the fault of the leader of the Opposition who moved the six months' hoist ? Whose fault is it that the debate on this Bill was kept so long ? Is it not the fault of those who voted for the six months' hoist— the contingent on the right side of the House aided by a large majority of those on the left side ?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). They will get left, too.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Now, it is contended that this Bill was not a proper Bill—that it was not properly drafted. What have we seen in this committee ? We have seen a lot of unnecessary amendments.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Accepted by the Government.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. A lot of unnecessary amendments brought in and discussed for hours ; and for the sake of peace and harmony, and in order to expedite the work, the Government condescended to accept some of those amendments. But I defy any impartial man to compare the wording of those amendments with the clauses they were supposed to amend, and find any difference in them, so far as the value of the legislation is concerned. The amendments were merely changes of words of no consequence ; but the Government, in order to expedite the business, accepted them, and I myself have been compelled to accept them, in order to arrive at the end of this Bill. And when we are told that it should have been brought down before, as I believe it should have been. I must say that, even if the Bill had been brought under the consideration of the present House six months ago, the obstruction which it has met during the short time, or during the long time I may say, that it has been under consideration, would have lasted even longer than it has. How can we expect any sincerity on the part of men whose fault it is that this Bill is not passed, when their first motion was to destroy the Bill by the six months' hoist ? Well, Sir, in the name of the minority I represent, I protest against the obstruction that has been given to this Bill. If there had been a sincere desire on the part of the members of this House who oppose this legislation, to help the minority, the Bill would have been on the statute-book before this. But, Sir, I think it is unbecoming on the part of the leader of the Opposition to protest to-day that it is the fault of the Government that the Bill was not passed, when we know that the first step he took was a radical step, for the purpose of destroying the measure before we had it under our consideration. Now, Sir, it is contended by those gentlemen that they want to come to the rescue of the minority, it is contended that they wish to restore to the minority those rights that they have lost by the legislation of 1890 ; and, instead of coming and helping to pass a Bill which the minority have accepted they obstruct the measure at all its stages. I must say to my friends from the province of Quebec who have voted against this Bill and in favour of the six months' hoist, that not only have the minority in Manitoba, without exception, both Conservatives and Liberals, approved of the Bill, as it has been stated and published, and the Archbishop of St. Boniface, as we all well know, taking a great interest in the welfare of the minority under his charge, has expressed openly his opinion ; and that opinion I must say, has been shared by the whole episcopacy of the Roman Catholic Church of Canada. Some one having told me one day in March that there was a rumour that some of the bishops were either indifferent or opposed to this legislation, I wired to the Archbishop of St. Boniface, who was in constant communication with his brethren in the episcopacy, and asked him if there was any ground for that rumour. His answer was :

> No bishop at variance with me. All are most friendly. Catholics opposing Bill betray Catholic minority.

Now, there is a saying that one may be more Catholic than the Pope. There is also a saying that one need not be called upon to do more than those who are directly interested require, and on this occasion these expressions of tender wishes for the welfare of the minority, on the part of men who oppose this Bill, are not true expressions—are not from the bottom of their hearts. These gentlemen are not expressing their real sentiments in the matter, and their action is a direct contradiction to their saying. I must, therefore, Sir, express my regret that this House has come to the determination to suspend the consideration of this Bill. While, as I have said before, I regret that this legislation was not attempted on a former occasion, as I took occasion to protest, yet, even then, when I asked the Government not to put the measure off until another session, I never had such a support from the left side of the House as I could consider sufficient to warrant me in protesting any further. Moreover, I must say that I have always found that there was no sincere desire on the part of those who pretended to be the friends of the minority of Manitoba, and who voted to destroy the one Bill that could have saved them in their present position.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) It afforded me genuine pleasure to hear the hon. leader of the House (Sir Charles Tupper) declare that had the Government been able to put this Bill through the committee they would have been glad to have the sense of the House taken upon the amendment to the clause 74 put by me upon the notice paper. The hon. leader of the Opposition has just given expression to doubts as to the constitutionality of this amendment. I may tell the hon. leader of the Opposition that had the committee been able to reach this amendment I would have been ready to meet all objections urged against it so to satisfy the House that they were groundless, from a constitutional standpoint. I think my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, could not have helped admitting that my position, in moving the amendment, was perfectly consistent with the constitution of the country, and that in so doing, I aimed solely at restoring to the minority the full enjoyment of the rights which had been taken away from them. As to the statement just made by the leader of the Opposition, as to a certain number of hon. gentlemen having refrained from obstructing the measure before us, I regret to say that the country in general will not share in that opinion, and that during the approaching electoral contest, it will be admitted by the overwhelming majority of his most devoted followers among the electors, and in the press of the country, and at public meetings, that the business of the House has been systematically obstructed and that much time has been wasted in the most factious and flagrant obstruction. Mr. Chairman, were we to size up the lawyers in this House and their value as jurisconsults, from the outrageous opposition offered by them to this Bill, on good ground might we apply to them the unmerciful terms used at the opening of this century by the great philosopher, de Bonald, when speaking of the lawyers of the Lower Empire, he used those scathing words : " When a civilization is worm-eaten, lawyers gather there. While at Byzantium they kept quibbling about an adverb, the Turks were silently moving forward in the dark ; they were not men of words, but men of deeds." Mr. Chairman, while we keep arguing here about an adverb, and, as remarked by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) while a lot of unnecessary amendments were brought in, which were changes of words of no consequence, solely introduced with a view to impeding the progress of the measure before us ; the demon of strife is going about and through this country, blowing the winds of strife, and arousing national and religious animosities. We are about reaching a most unenviable state of things, and I have no hesitation in saying that those who have taken part in the outrageous obstruction offered to this Bill, a measure calculated to restore peace and harmony in our country, those hon. gentlemen, I say, have assumed a great responsibility before the country and will be still more unmercifully arraigned by the historians who will later on record this melancholy phasis of the history of Canada. Confederation was brought about in order to put a stop to our racial and creed wrangles ; and the hon. gentlemen, when trying to fan the embers of the fire of discord and to resuscitate those creed and racial disputes, quelled since 1867, are destroying in us much as they can the structure raised by the fathers of confederation. I wish to state here, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and his followers, who advocate the same political and social tenets, do so, they say, with a view to consolidating the union of the Canadian people. It is with that end in view that they wish to rob the minority of the rights granted them by the constitution. Now, let the hon. member for North Simcoe and the hon. gentlemen who share in his political views remember that in no country was national unity, as we learn from history, brought about by persecution. Nowhere was national unity accomplished, except through the different elements composng the nation being granted the most complete freedom. So it was with France in the past. That the kings of France constantly respected the customs and usages of the nation is a well known fact to every student of history. And so again was national unity brought about in Great Britain. How did Great Britain succeed in building up that immense colonial Empire which makes her the most powerful nation in the world ? It was solely by granting her colonies all the liberties compatible with their political growth. In order to bring about a consummation so devotedly to be wished for, national unity, there is no other way open to us but respecting the rights of minorities and dealing with them in a liberal spirit, so as to make them forget that they are the minority in their respective provinces. Such is the only way to bring about national unity. Let the hon. member for North Simcoe and his followers remember if they sincerely wish to reach that end, that there is no other way of bringing about national unity and building up a nation here, but by teaching the majority how to respect the rights of the minorities. And I venture to tell the hon. member that no worse evil could befall Canada than such a policy as the one he is bent upon implementing in our midst ; because persecution provokes resistance, and should the French Canadians realize that their compatriots are being persecuted at the hands of the English majority in this country, they will retaliate by refusing to learn the language of the majority or use it as little as they can. In the province of Quebec—and it is a fact well-known to every hon. member in this House—the French Canadians have put forth considerable exertions to master the English language. And why so ? Because of the good understanding and the friendship that prevail between the French majority and the English minority in that province. Upon certain occasions, it would have proved an easy task for the French majority to molest the English minority ; but, on account of the friendly intercourse prevailing between the elements and the mutual esteem they profess for each other, the French Canadians have learnt the English language and have drawn closer the bonds of friendship which unite them to their fellow-countrymen of a different origin. Were I an adept of Chauvinism, like the hon. member for North Simcoe, I would tell him : Go on with your anti-French campaign ; you could never find a surer way of maintaining in its integrity and promoting the development of a French nationality in all its different branches throughout the Dominion. Such will be the outcome of that anti-national and anti-patriotic policy which is now advocated by a group of citizens in this country. I do not wish to call in question the earnestness of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), but I doubt very much whether that policy is not made subservient to some selfish interests. It strikes me, as it should also dawn upon every intelligent citizen, that by persecuting the minority, you are striving to estrange the French Canadains from the end which you seek to accomplish, thereby thwarting and checking the progress of that national unity. I declare that national unity is not to be reached save through respect of the liberties and rights of the different elements of our people.

Mr. McCARTHY. Judging by the speech which the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) has just made, I understand that, to some extent at all events, he has made an appeal on behalf of the minority as represented in the Dominion and not merely the minority in the province of Manitoba. Now, we have been dealing here with the question of the rights of the minority of the province of Manitoba ; and whether these people who compose that minority are French or Irish or English, they are entitled to equal treatment on the floor of this House, and they are not entitled, whether French, English or Irish, to any more than fair treatment on the floor of this Parliament. For my part I do not deny to the French Canadians of this country their rights, but I do not admit that they have more than the rights of the other people of this country, whether English, Irish or Scotch. And I am prepared to take the responsibility of defending the rights of those who sent me here and who happen to be of a different nationality from the hon. gentleman, and I think their rights, although they happen to be those of the majority, are equally to be respected as those of the minority whose Bill we have been dealing with. I rise more especially, as this will be the only opportunity afforded of offering my congratulations to the hon. the leader of the House on the step he has at last taken. Hitherto it has been my misfortune to differ with the hon. leader of the House in the different motions he has made and arguments he has presented, and my only regret to-night, when at length he has seen that this House is not to be coerced by means which are a disgrace to this committee and would be a disgrace to any free assembly, is that the hon. gentleman has not done it with better grace. We are now celebrating the obsequies of this Bill.

Mr. IVES. And of those who oppose it.

Mr. McCARTHY. We are now dealing with this Bill for the last time, and the hon. gentleman might just as well have said so instead of pretending that on some future occasion this House would be called upon again to deal with it. Judging by the want of that strain of defiance in the hon. gentleman's tone to which we have listened so often, I venture to say that we are listening to the last we shall hear on this Bill, either in this Parliament or the next. The courage has gone out from the hon. gentleman. We hear no more promise of remedial legislation in the next Parliament, with a great majority at his back to carry it. He has realized that this country will not interfere with the province of Manitoba in its educational affairs, and I am glad to feel that we have heard the last, not merely here to-night but in the Parliament of Canada, of remedial legislation for the province of Manitoba. I have to congratulate my hon. friends who belong to the party to which I still claim to belong.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes; I claim to be as good a Conservative as the hon. gentleman who followed the leader who is destroying the Conservative party in this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Never.

Mr. McCARTHY. I claim that I represent, in the attitude that I am taking on this measure, not merely a few but the great majority of the Conservatives of this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Wait until you know.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not require to wait, I do know, and I say, on behalf of those gentlemen, and more especially on behalf of my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) who has in this struggle put forth efforts which will always redound to his credit, and my hon. friends here to the right of me, that we are, I believe, more truly representing the Conservative party than gentlemen on the Treasury benches.

Some hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. McCARTHY. We have witnessed another circumstance to which I cannot help at this moment drawing the attention of the committee. We have seen two hon. gentlemen ignominiously read out on the floor of this Parliament because they ventured to differ on this question, as truly representing their constituents, from the views of the leader of this House. But again we have seen that hon. gentleman listened to the arguments of my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) and of my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), and did not dare to read them out of the party. He did not dare even to answer their arguments. He did not dare to say a single word, although they obstructed. If we obstructed, if the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) obstructed the Bill, surely these other hon. gentlemen did also. But their sins have not been punished, because the hon. gentleman realized that he had been going too far and that this kind of dragooning will not be tolerated in a free country.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call to the attention of the hon. leader of the Opposition one remark that was made by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and to ask him to give it his most careful consideration. If any one has boasted in this House, during this session, it has been the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. If there is any one thing he has boasted of, it is, as he says and believes, that to-night he is celebrating the obsequies of the Bill at present before the House and the fate of any Remedial Bill that may be brought before it. If there is one gentleman in this House whose joining hands with him contributed to what the hon. gentleman thinks is a funeral—but in which he may be very much mistaken—it is the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OUIMET. I beg to say a few words in reply to an assertion made by the hon. leader of the Opposition. That hon. gentleman has said that the Minister of Justice and myself had expressed the opinion that we were opposed to the amendment of the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont). I have to repeat what I said at the time, when I was asked how we were going to provide the moneys to support the separate schools of Manitoba ; I answered that, so far as the legislative grant was concerned, in my humble opinion we had no constitutional right to dictate to the legislature of Manitoba how they should vote the moneys of the people of the province and also how they should distribute them for the purpose of education or any other purpose. I further added that, so far as the school lands fund was concerned, it was certainly within the power of this Parliament to dispose of that fund in order to come to the relief of the minority. And I further stated that it would be in the judgment of this House to consider whether we should do it now, and by so doing affirm in advance that the government of Manitoba would disregard the law, or whether we should await their refusal to carry out the law. I said that the only question that could be raised was the question of opportunity, as to whether we should do it this year, and assume that the government of Manitoba would resist the law if passed. Because the government of Manitoba have declared that they would never consent to the enforcement of this Act, it does not absolutely follow that once the Act is on the statute-book they would refuse to carry it out. The situation then would be altogether different. So long as this Act is not on the statute-book, no one is bound to obey it, but once it is on the statute-book, no one would assert that the Government of her Majesty in the province of Manitoba would refuse to enforce a law which would have the sanction of Her Majesty, through her representative the Governor General.

I wish to add my reply to the challenge of the hon. gentleman when he said that he was willing to submit to the impartial judgment of the electors of the Dominion. We are just as ready as he to ask for that verdict and are just as confident in the results. Every one knows how we are going to the people. On this side we are a united party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OUIMET. The vote that was given in support of the Remedial Bill shows that we are united in that legislation. The efforts that we have made to put this Bill through the committee and have it enacted into law show that we have a united programme, which will be the programme of every supporter of this Government. I am sure the country will be with us. How are the Opposition ? They are not united either against or for the re-establishment of separate schools in Manitoba.

An hon. MEMBER. We will show you.

Mr. OUIMET. I am sure, and the country will be with me when I state it, that the declarations of hon. gentlemen opposite are never to be taken in earnest. You can never nail them to any policy or any proposition concerning the government of this country. The people know that, and the judgment of the people will certainly be very largely influenced by their strong belief that hon. gentlemen opposite are never to be found tomorrow where they are to-day. They are never sure of professing the next day the same doctrines which they advocated the day before. We know that shifting has always been their policy and will continue to be their policy. After all, this legislation had to be tried before the people at the next elections. Supposing this law had been enacted and the people had declared against it, what would be left of it next session ? It would be wiped out from the statute-book at the first occasion by the party then in power. The country knows that this will be one of the issues before it, together with the fiscal policy, and this will be one of the foremost issues before the electors. If the verdict of the people is to be that minorities have no rights, that they must be refused even those which have been granted them by the constitution, then I would rather sit on the Opposition side for the rest of my life than support any party which would carry out such a policy. The Conservative party is united everywhere in its respect for the constitution. We respected the constitution yesterday, we respect it to-day, and we shall respect it to-morrow. We are the party of equal rights to every one. We are the party which upholds the maintenance of every rights that is in the constitution. And against it we have a party which believes in nothing. I do not believe that the hon. leader of the Opposition believes in anything except in adopting any and every means to secure power which so long he has been unable to grasp. He has twisted his course in every possible way to gain that end, and it is well known that his motion for the six months' hoist had been decided upon even before the Bill had been laid on the Table, before it was known what it would be, before it was known how far it would go, and before it was known whether the Bill would be acceptable to the minority or not ? The object of the Opposition, supported by a fraction of the members on this side of the House, was to defeat this Bill, and the only question with them was, as to whether the six months' hoist would rope in hon. gentlemen on this side of the House or not. Sir, has the leader of the Opposition ever done anything to help the minority in Manitoba ? We staked our political existence on this question, but has he ever said anything that would lead us to believe that he would do something for that minority ? Sir, I am glad that I am with the Conservative party, because I see that the members of that party are the only ones who are prepared to restore to the Manitoba minority the rights which they are entitled to under the constitution. It is true that that is only a small minority in Manitoba, but it is equally true that it is entitled to justice. Sir, as the member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) has said, this discussion may have an effect very contrary to that which the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) expected from his policy of obstruction. If the policy of that hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) were carried out, and if it were successful, it would result in for ever separating the French nationality and the Catholic minority from the majority in this country, and it would prevent in the future, that national unification which everybody hopes for. Sir, the policy of the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) would stop the whole process of the nationalization of the people of Canada. Mr. Chairman, I have this to say in conclusion : We are going to the elections. So far as I am concerned, and I hope so far as the whole of the Conservative party is concerned, happen what may, these principles of equal rights and fair play for all, will be for ever. I trust, the principles of the Conservative party. And, Sir, I believe that when the Conservative party of Canada abandons these principles, that party will be, what the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has made the great Conservative party in the legislature of Ontario, a party of a baker's dozen. Sir, we hold these principles dear to our hearts ; dearer than our positions on the Treasury benches. These principles will prevail, and the country will endorse them, and when the people do endorse them, it will be for the benefit of the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. I think it is exceedingly desirable that at this the last stage of this important measure, we should speak what is the sentiment of the North-west Territories in regard to it. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Ouimet), has stated that the Conservative party will adopt as their banner in the forthcoming election, this Bill which we have been discussing for some time in the House. He says that we shall adopt that Bill as the banner under which we fight. Well, Sir, it would be very inconvenient if that should be the banner under which the Conservative party is to fight, for I shall not be found fighting under that banner. When the second reading of the Bill was before us, an important appeal, which I confess touched me closely, was made to us by my hon. friend from Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith). The speech of that hon. gentleman affected the intellectual standpoint in which I regarded this Bill. But, Sir, I never for one moment wavered in the conviction that I expressed in April, 1895, when first the remedial order was issued, that this House cannot deal with the question satisfactorily. I stated that the principle of appeal and the principle of remedial legislation was in the constitution, but I then added also : That we should leave to Manitoba the settlement of the question because of the insuperable difficulties of dealing with it. Now, a great authority has told us, that the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath ; and, Sir, the constitution under which we work was made for the people of Canada and not the people of Canada for that constitution. If there be in that constitution,—as this session proves and as subsequent sessions will prove if we have this measure before us—if there be in that constitution a doctrine in regard to the relation between the Federal power and the provinces that cannot possibly be introduced into action without the gravest evils, then, Sir, it is of course for a sensible people like the people of Canada, to take the course which is in the best interest of the country as a whole. Mr. Chairman, I lay down this proposition : That the remedy for any grievance must have a proportion to the magnitude of the grievance. I say, that if the application of the remedy provided by the constitution be of such a character, as to entail grave evils and far-reaching consequences of the gravest sort wholly uncommensurate with the character of the grievances to be remedied ; then it is much better for the Parliament of Canada and for the people of Canada, to pause and say : We will not apply to the evils, a remedy which will so completely outbalance the character of the grievances sought to be remedied. Now, Sir, what is the grievance complained of in this case ? I stated here—and the leader of the Opposition stated it, and no man can possibly deny it—that the difference between the proposals made by the commissioners when they went up to Winnipeg, and the proposals made by Mr. Greenway's colleagues, is simply the use of the phrase, separate schools. It is complained in that regard that in the city of Winnipeg the majority of the trustees would undoubtedly be Protestant. Can any one suppose for one minute that in regard to these two things, this country should be cleaved in two ; that the passions, racial and religious, should be set on flame, and that we should have a speech such as fell to-night from the Minister of Public Works—a speech which might be made if the liberties of some portion of the people of Canada were at stake, instead of a grievance largely sentimental and technical. When we talk of any portion of the population suffering a grievance, what we mean by it is this : that a portion of the people suffer under a disability. There is no such claim made in this case whatever. The grievance in this case is brought down to a very small matter. I think I speak for the people of Canada as well as for the people of the North-west when I say, that the people of the North-west would never stand silently by, and the people of Manitoba would never tamely submit to this Parliament legislating in the terms of this Bill and forcing it upon that province.

Mr. MULOCK. The people of the North-west did stand silently by.

Mr. DAVIN. Let me refer to what my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works said about the moneys that would be required, and to the regret he expressed, that we had not reached the 74th clause, and when he spoke as to what might be done about the motion of the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont). Sir, if the amendment of the hon. member (Mr. Dupont) had been placed before this committee, and had been carried into law, do you suppose there is any power in Canada which could enforce it, and the people stand silently by ? What would happen if you were to carry out this Bill in its entirety, and if the Manitoba government did, what undoubtedly the Manitoba government would do. If the government of Manitoba said : We will have nothing to do with that ; what could you do ? Forsooth, you could fall back upon the means of providing money for carrying out your schools system in Manitoba. And, if you did that what would it entail ? Do you suppose that public money could be spent without the people whose money you were spending having an account of how it was spent ? And what does that imply ? It implies a Dominion Department of Education for the sake of one province in the Dominion. Do you suppose that the people of the Dominion would tolerate that ? Do you suppose that the people of Manitoba would submit to that, and do you suppose that the gravest evils would not be the result ? Let there be no mistake about this : If the Conservative party goes to the electors of Canada under the banner of this Bill, you will have a very large portion of the members of this House returned against carrying out the provisions of this Bill. The result would be that you will have, say some eighty Liberals.

An hon. MEMBER. One hundred and twenty.

Mr. DAVIN. I am not discussing that point. What I wish to point out is, that instead of having two political parties as we have hitherto had—and which is the only means of carrying on parliamentary government successfully and smoothly—you will have three parties in the House, and you will have one party united, and the other party—calling itself by what name you like—disunited. As a consequence of that, time and again we shall see important business blocked and no progress made. Is it to be supposed for a moment that for a grievance which I say is largely sentimental——

Mr. BELLEY. No, no.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, I say largely sentimental and largely technical, and I know what I am talking about. Again I lay down the proposition, that under the proposals made by Mr. Sifton and Mr. Cameron, every grievance in this connection that exists at present in Manitoba, would be removed, with the single exception probably of the circumstances connected with the city of Winnipeg. Does any one suppose that a detail like that cannot be easily arranged for ? Is it possible for any sensible man, is it possible for any statesman, is it possible for men who have any important issues to deal with to entertain the proposition for one minute, that you can erect for the people of Canada, a vast superstructure of policy on so narrow a foundation as the grievance that exists at the present time in Manitoba ? If you do, Sir, what does it mean ? As I said before, it means that for a comparatively small matter you are exciting passions, and swelling floods of animosity, and widening angers, and difficulties, out of all proportion to the cause ; and you are imperilling the prosperity of the country and the safety, and the goodness of feeling that ought to exist between the people of the country. I have been sitting in this House, and I have been amused at times, but there has been no moment, however amused I have been, that I have not felt sad to see this second Parliament in the world, come down to the position that we have occasionally come down to. And all for what? Suppose we meet next July or next August, and suppose we have again a Bill like this ; do you think you will not have a repetition of what has taken place this session, and do you suppose if you have a session, of three, or four, or five months, that you can carry a Bill like this ? I disapprove of the whole line of the character of the discussion on this Bill. I studied this Bill. I knew something of the educational condition of Manitoba, and I say : I have no doubt whatever that the Department of Justice did its best to give you a Bill, but I do say, that there is no evidence in the Bill that a capable draughtsman had placed before himself a principle to carry out. We have got a number of clauses which do not hang symmetrically together. It is, as if you had a piece of Gothic architecture, and a piece of Corinthian, and a piece of Roman architecture mixed up together in a building. There is no united or symmetrical idea whatever in the Bill. There is no evidence whatever that a capable draughtsman had charge of it. I am not condemning a certain kind of obstruction. I say that when an hon. gentleman does what the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) said he would do and stands up in this House, and announces that by every constitutional means he would oppose this Bill, then, Sir, I contend that every possible means of obstruction is plainly within his right. Now, suppose you had a session of five months to deal with this measure. If you go into these clauses as they should be gone into; if you discuss them as they should be discussed; the result will be, that after a wise and just discussion, and after a discussion that would be inevitable looking at the state of things, five months, or six months, or seven months might elapse, and yet you could not pass a measure such as this. And when you have done it, what have you done? In the language of South, you have spun out your political five months into one pitiful controverted conclusion, that would lead you to all sorts of litigation and bickerings, and in the end you would accomplish no sort of good. On the second reading I was greatly influenced by the hon. member for Bothwell's speech (Mr. Mills); I was greatly influenced by the appeal of my hon. friend from Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith); but I was also influenced by this consideration, that I had acted for twenty years with the gentlemen who compose the Conservative party; and, as I sat here with my late poor friend. Mr. Amyot, by my side, and counted seventeen men on that side who voted against the second reading, and there were three men on this side—Mr. Carscallen, Mr. Rosamond and Mr. Calvin who were certain to vote the same way—making twenty in all, or a difference of forty in the majority, I thought that the Government were beaten; and I turned round and said——

Mr. MULOCK. Party before principle.

Mr. DAVIN. No; I said that I had acted with those gentlemen for twenty years, and under these circumstances the man would be dastard who would not stand up and break the wave that came to sweep them away; and I rose and did it. I was greatly influenced by that. I do not say I was wholly influenced by that, for I was not. In all crises like this, one is influenced by several motives. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) laughs at that; but if some of his friends had acted on the same principle, if they had introduced a little chivalry into their action on the occasion of the fate of a former leader of the Opposition in this House, it would have been better. But we have come to the end of this matter, and I certainly cannot allow this question to pass from Parliament without saying what my opinion is—that it is not in the interest of the country or in the best interests of statesmanship, it is not in the best interests of the Conservative party, it is not called for by any grievance commensurate with the remedy applied, that we should produce a Bill of this sort which cannot be implemented, which mocks translation into action; and if you translate it into action you can only do it by forging into the constitution a principle ruinous to the very ends you are immediately aiming at and inimical if not disastrous to Canada itself.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, time brings everything to those who can afford to wait. I have had occasion to call the attention of this House—it was unnecessary to call the attention of the western country to the fact that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) took a most peculiar course in politics. His course is peculiar to himself, I think, and different from that of every other member of this House. It has been in the past his universal practice to speak in favour of a measure and vote against it, or to vote for it and speak against it. He has not failed to carry out that policy on this very important matter, although for a time I feared that he was not going to keep up his record in that respect. We are, however, confronted in the west with somewhat of a difficulty in the hon. gentleman's case. He tells us that if the policy of the Government is to be remedial legislation he will not be found supporting the Conservative party. The policy of the Conservative party is to be remedial legislation; there can be no doubt about that. The leader of the House in the presence of the Premier has so announced to-night. Then, I would like to inquire, where is the hon. member for West Assiniboia going to be in the elections. I do not know whether the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) will accept him into his fold. The hon. member says he does not want to go there. I can assure the hon. member that the Liberal party will not accept him into their fold, and he does not want to go there. Then, where is he going to be? A fourth party by himself?

Mr. SPROULE. No, his constituents will leave him at home.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) spoke to-night on behalf of the minority in Manitoba, and undertook to say that he was speaking not only for Conservatives but for Liberals. Without stopping to dispute that statement, I think I can fairly say—and the speech to-night of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia is proof, if proof were needed that my statement is true,—that on this question, by my vote and my voice in this House, I have represented the majority in Manitoba, both Conservatives and Liberals. It is a matter of great regret to Manitoba, and I believe it is a matter of great regret to the North-west Territories, and also to British Columbia, that upon this question the six members solid from British Columbia, the four members solid from the Territories, and four out of five members from the province of Manitoba, have voted in favour of a coercive policy towards the province of Manitoba. I believe, however, that these hon. gentlemen did not in that vote represent the views of their constituents. We have not had the benefit of any remarks from any of those hon. gentlemen, except the hon. member for Western Assiniboia and the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Daly). The hon. member for Western Assiniboia has to-night given us his real ideas.

His previous speeches were merely for the occasion; but now that the matter is over, now that the funeral ceremonies of the Bill are being performed, the hon. gentleman tells us what his real feelings are, and in my opinion he expresses the views of his constituency; and that constituency does not differ in its views on this question from the other constituencies in the Territories, and the different constituencies in Manitoba, and also, I have reason to believe, every constituency in the province of British Columbia. I say, then, that the people of the west have been misrepresented in this matter. I am sorry indeed that we have not had the benefit of any reasons from any hon. member west of Lake Superior, except those to whom I have referred, and also myself—and I may add the Controller of Inland Revenue (Mr. Prior), representing the city of Victoria; and the reason which I understood him to give for supporting this Bill was that the lodge of the Sons of England in Victoria to which he belongs had passed a resolution in favour of the Bill. It is perhaps a little idle for me to make prophecies and boasts as to what the coming elections will result in. The hon. Minister of Public Works has indulged in some boasts of that kind, and during his remarks has ventured to say that in the face of all the facts, the Conservative party go into this fight a united body. I shall not attempt to deal with that statement; but I wish to say that so far as the western part of Canada is concerned, with which I am familiar, the Liberal party certainly do go into this contest a thoroughly united body; and I believe that is true, not only of the western part of Canada, but of the whole of Canada. We have had at the head of the Liberal party in Canada a number of great and distinguished men. We had for many years the Hon. George Brown; we had the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie; we had the Hon. Edward Blake; and I have listened to the highest praise of those great statesmen from hon. gentlemen opposite. But while I have the very highest opinion of those distinguished statesmen, who have led the Liberal forces in Canada in years past, to-day the Liberal party are fighting under the banner of a chieftain who is equal to all of them.

An hon. MEMBER. Put together.

Mr. MARTIN. No, I do not say put together; but I say he is the equal of any of those distinguished gentlemen, and he leads a more united Liberal party than they ever had the good fortune to lead in Canada. There has been some discussion by the hon. Minister of Public Works as to Canadian unity—as to the question of French and English in Canada. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is allotted to the Liberal party of Canada to cap the climax by the thorough unification of the two great races in Canada, by placing at the head of public affairs for the first time in its history the most distinguished French Canadian, and the most distinguished Canadian that Canada to-day possesses.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Mr. Chairman, I should not have troubled the committee had not the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) assumed to speak for the whole North-west Territories with regard to the propriety of the Bill that has been before the House. So far as my constituency is concerned, and I speak for no other, I may say that I was elected on a distinct pledge given in 1891 that I would support no scheme that would tend in any way towards the abolition of separate schools in that western country during the life of this Parliament; and, Sir, it is my firm belief that the people of Saskatchewan, when appealed to at the next general elections, will not have any cause, on account of this Bill, to desert the Secretary of State, and the other Ministers who now hold the Treasury benches. I believe that the people of Saskatchewan, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, believe in the great future of the country; and they believe that future is to be maintained, and the greatness of that country is to be built up only by observing honourably the compacts that have been made between the different nationalities that compose it, and by granting that measure of British freedom that it has always been the boast of every one from the British isles that those who live in the realms of Great Britain should be possessed of. In England to-day we have an exemplification of this. The very question we are discussing now, the question of religious teaching in the schools, is there an exciting question. We know that about twenty years ago Mr. Gladstone brought in his educational Bill, and abolished all sorts of religious teaching in the country.

Mr. McCARTHY. Oh, no.

Mr. MACDOWALL. He created the board schools, in which there was no religious teaching; but now the feeling in England in favour of religious teaching in the schools has grown to such an extent that the present government have brought in a measure to permit of such teaching in the schools. On the subject of education, if I speak my own opinion, I think it would be better that the state should confine itself to elementary training, and that those who wish to get higher education should provide it for themselves. But things have gone further, and we must accept things as they are. I think that when the people of Saskatchewan are appealed to they will recollect that the hon. member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith) and the fathers of confederation who were in authority when Manitoba became part of the Dominion, acknowledged that a compact was made with the Roman Catholic population of Manitoba that their just rights should be maintained, and I believe the people of my constituency will support the Government which gives freedom to the people in this regard. Sir, the hon. member for Western Assiniboia says he considers that the course pursued by the Government in this matter has been unstatesmanlike. If the hon. member wished to express an opinion as to the statesmanship displayed on this question, I think he should have said that it was the government of Manitoba who had acted in an unstatesmanlike manner, because they were willing, for the sake of their party in the province and in the Dominion, to throw away one of the dearest privileges the province possesses, and perhaps for ever lose it from the provincial government—the right of regulating schools. I have only one other remark to make, and that is with regard to what dropped from the hon. member from Winnipeg. He says the Territories will record the fact that four members have supported this measure. Sir, it will be a very short time before this question will be decided. The hon. gentleman can leave it until the elections come off. In two months time he will know; but I venture to say that of the four members that will be returned from the North-west Territories, all will be supporters of the present Government. I do not think the mere fact of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) or the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) stating that we who represent the North-west Territories in this Parliament have misrepresented them, is to be taken as any evidence of the fact. When four supporters of the Government are returned at the general election, we shall have practical evidence that the hon. gentlemen were wrong in their assumptions.

Mr. CRAIG. I regret that I am compelled to rise and take up the time of the House, but I feel bound to do so after the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet). I am a Conservative. I do not know that I am the same kind of Conservative as the hon. member for North Simcoe. I am a Conservative because I believe in the National Policy and moderate protection, and I am sincere in that belief, and the more I have studied the fiscal question, the more strongly am I a Conservative. I had hoped that the hon. member for North Simcoe had come to that view.

Mr. McCARTHY. No, no.

Mr. CRAIG. Because he claimed to be a Conservative, and how he can prove it in any other way I cannot tell. I sympathize with the Conservative party, but I regret that the hon. Minister of Public Works made the statement—and I do not know that he considered it carefully before he made it—that the great question before the country at the coming elections would be the question of this remedial legislation. I should regret exceedingly if this was the case, because I am opposed to remedial legislation. I have taken that ground. I am the nominee of the Conservative party at present, and my constituents will endorse the stand I have taken. Therefore, in that respect, I could not run as a member of the Conservative party, but I hope that is a mistake. I hope that the Conservative party will go to the country on the ground of its fiscal policy, and the general policy of the Government. That is the ground that I am going to the country on, and while the hon. member for North Simcoe claims to be a Conservative, let me tell him something more. My opponent is a McCarthyite, whom the hon. member for North Simcoe has encouraged to oppose me. That hon. gentleman paid a visit to the constituency to help him. He is a McCarthyite, and nominally a Patron, and he says he accepts the platform of the leader of the Opposition. If that is the kind of Conservative that the hon. member for North Simcoe is, I am not that kind. It could not be that the hon. member for North Simcoe set up a candidate to oppose me because I agree with him on the Manitoba school question. We are perfectly agreed on the question of Manitoba school legislation, and, therefore, the only reason he is in opposition to me is because of my adhesion to the Conservative party on the fiscal policy. Both candidates take the same position, as far as Manitoba is concerned, and I only mention this fact because the hon. member for North Simcoe said he was a Conservative. I have only risen to state my position, so that there might be no misunderstanding on the part of the Government. In running as a Conservative candidate, I do so opposing remedial legislation to the utmost, and if elected, I shall oppose it if again introduced into this House.

Mr. WELDON. I wish to correct my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) in his statement concerning religious teaching in the board schools. I have the figures here. In February of last year there were 2,392 schools, known as board schools, in England and Wales, of which in 2,301 religious teaching was given and religious exercises were held. If the hon. gentleman's prophecy with reference to the state of feeling in his territory is as accurate as his statement with regard to the board schools, it does not speak much for his prophecy. There were 1,704,130 children in those board schools; and out of the 2,392 there were only 91 from which religious teachings and exercises were excluded. I wish to make one remark further, and that is to call the attention of the committee to the remarkable statement contained in the letter of Archbishop Langevin, which was read yesterday in the House, and which has appeared in all the papers, namely, that he accepts the settlement embodied in the Remedial Bill as a satisfactory and final settlement. I wish to emphasize those words. Therefore, I understand that His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface accepts all that is stated in section 74 of the Bill as final, so that the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) may no longer expect, even if this Administration should carry this country on the School Bill, that there will be any attempt to implement the provisions of section 74 by a draft on the Federal treasury or the school lands.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I was referring more particularly to the board schools of Scotland. It is known that in very many of them that religious instruction has been excluded and that the denominational schools will, in this new Bill, receive a certain amount of support.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member referred to the schools affected by the Education Bill now before the English Parliament. This Bill does not refer to the schools of Scotland.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall not occupy the time of the House but for a few minutes. With reference to the remark of the hon. member for North Simcoe, that we are celebrating the obsequies of this Remedial Bill, I am rejoiced to say that we are. I am rejoiced to be present at that interesting ceremony, and I hope that in this case there will be no resurrection. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) interjected a remark while the hon. member for North Simcoe was speaking, that it would be also the funeral ceremony of those who were opposed to the Bill. I am not so sure about that, nor am I sure that the hon. Minister is in the position to give an opinion that is worth anything. He may be able to express an opinion as to views of people in his own province, but I am quite positive that he is not expressing the opinion of the people of North Ontario. The hon. Minister of Public Works said that the Government and its supporters were a united party. Well, I feel inclined to dispute that assertion. The Conservative party are not a united party on this question, neither in this House nor out of it—more particularly out of it than in it. I should say, perhaps, that they are more united out of it than in it. But they are united against the Bill. What are the facts known to this House? When an expression of opinion was sought for last year as to those who were opposed to the principle of remedial legislation, the statement was made—and made, I believe, with authority—that 38 or 40 members of the Conservative party were opposed to this legislation. That, I assume, represented fairly the opinion of the Conservative party in this House. We know that influence—I am not going to say now whether proper or improper, though on that I have my opinion—were brought to bear, and as a result only half the number voted against the Bill. But it is a well-known fact that as many more who voted in support of the Bill and against the six months' hoist, did so with reluctance. There is no use disguising that fact, because it is known to all the members on this side of the House. I wish to protest against the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works that the policy of the Conservative party is to be remedial legislation. No, Sir, that is not their policy. He said they would make it an issue, but though the Government may, the party is larger than the Government, and the party has never endorsed that principle. They have never given their adhesion to it. Why, the Conservatives in Ontario, in past years, adopted a different policy in local affairs, where this same principle and question, though on a minor scale, was in issue, and, therefore, there is no authority for saying that the Conservative party is going to make this remedial legislation an issue at the elections. As for myself, and the constituents I represent, and for which I received the nomination of the Conservative party some time ago, I consulted the party at a mass meeting, and I can say for the West Riding of York that they did not endorse the policy of remedial legislation, but, on the contrary, condemned it and passed a resolution to that effect. So that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce speaks of this being a funeral ceremony for the opponents of remedial legislation, when the election comes on, he is speaking of a matter on which he is not well qualified to speak. At any rate, those who are opposed to the Bill have repeatedly asked that the House be dissolved and the verdict of the people taken. We were anxious to do that—and people do not usually rush to their own destruction if they know it—because we were confident that verdict would be one of approval. I must express my satisfaction and relief at knowing that we will now be able to take up the ordinary business of the country, and I must express my regret that we are so near the end of the session as not to be able to give that attention to the business of the country which its importance deserved.

Mr. TISDALE. I would not press myself upon the attention of the committee for even one moment, were it not necessary that I should correct some assertions of the hon. member for West York, as to the policy of the Conservative party in local affairs in Ontario. I totally repudiate, on behalf of the local members of the province of Ontario, and of the Conservative party of that province, that we have ever expressed any opinion upon a matter of this sort. Though I may not be as learned a man as the hon. member for North Simcoe, who took occasion to inform this House last night of his great range of knowledge, though I am only one of the rank and file I have always been a Conservative, I have followed the party in its large lines on policy, both local and Dominion, and I think I am as well qualified to give an opinion in the matter as either the hon. member for West York or the hon. member for North Simcoe. This is the first time that a question of this kind has been raised in the province of Ontario. The other issues raised there were not as to whether the minority should have rights which the constitution guaranteed them, but whether the rights of the minority should be extended by local legislation. The two questions are as distinct as the sun and the moon. It is every man's independent right to differ from his party, but I have yet to learn that it is a principle recognized in England or in this country by either of the great parties, that when a gentleman separates himself from his party on any one question, he is warranted in joining the Opposition in obstructing the measure to which he is opposed. An hon. gentleman goes far beyond his right to differ with his party on any particular question when he joins the party opposite in obstruction. I wish to say to the hon. member for North Simcoe that, humble as I am, and although my knowledge may be much less than his, I have never in any way, directly or indirectly, profited one cent by my connection with the Conservative party. I believe I know something of the sentiment of the people in this country, and I believe that the great Protestant element of the Conservative party is fair enough to give the minority the rights guaranteed to them by the constitution. I represent an old riding where my father (and he came to this country because of his adhesion to British principles) was born, and out of 7,000 votes in that constituency there are less than 180 Catholics. I invite both the hon. member for West York and the hon. member for North Simcoe to come into that county and see whether they can get these fair-minded, honest, straightforward Conservatives to go against granting this minority the rights which the constitution gives them. I would probably not have said one word, but these gentlemen have taunted me for being silent. Do you think that their taunts will deceive the honest sentiment of either Conservatives or Reformers. When we stand up and speak they charge us with obstructing, and when they do not they taunt us with being silent. These gentlemen claim that they voice the sentiment of the great Conservative party of the province of Ontario, these gentlemen who have joined with certain elements of the great Reform party —mind you, only certain elements. I repudiate their assumption of the right to speak for the Conservative party. I tell you this is a matter above party. You may play with it on either side as you please, but I believe, as a Canadian, as a man brought up to respect the great, free institutions of Britain, that the people will say that it is not a party question. Shame on the party that dares to palter with such a matter. While taking pride, as a native-born Canadian, in the honour of representing in my native county in this great representative chamber, I would rather, a thousand times, be defeated than to join in any party tactics and attempt to gain a seat through disregard of great constitutional principles. I want to say further to these gentlemen and the Protestants of Ontario, that whatever we deal out to the minority of Manitoba we must expect to be dealt out to our Protestant brethren in Quebec. I have always had an unbounded faith in confederation, and I believe that if the compacts of confederation are carried out, and if lessons of toleration prevail so that people can live together in harmony, whatever their religion, or whatever language they may speak, then, Sir, we will grow into a great nation. Sir, I may say in conclusion, that while possibly I feel that at many times I may not have lived up to so high a religious standard as I should, yet, so far as I understand the religious principles taught by Christ they are broad enough to embrace all men who repent and believe without distinction as to the manner of teaching or the names of the churches in which they are taught.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) has given us an example of the righteous indignation he can work himself up to on an important occasion. It is not the first time he has attempted to lecture this House in regard to its duties. In my estimation he always appears to assume to himself the right to say what this House of Commons should do, or what it should not do, and then tells us what he knows it ought to do. He told us that if hon. gentlemen did not speak on this question, they were upbraided for holding their tongues. No person upbraided him, because he has been attending to his duties elsewhere for the last fortnight, and he therefore could not speak on the Bill. What part did he take in perfecting this measure? He undertook to-night to castigate the independent members of this House who differ from their party on this question, and. he said that consequently they must differ from the Government on all other measures. This is an unjustifiable assumption, but it is on a par with what he has said in the past, and what he may say in the future—although I have some doubts that when his constituents come to deal with him he will have an opportunity of speaking here in the future. I regard it as my right in this House, to either agree or disagree with my party on this or any other question, when my conscience tells me I should disagree with them. Upon other questions than this I do not disagree with my party, but upon this I expressed my opinion as I had a right to do, and what my constituents sent me here to do. I have at least as good a right to act as I did, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) had to act as he did. I shall continue to do in this House what my judgment tells me is right, and I shall do it not only in the interests of my constituents, but in the interests of the country whether it accords with the policy of my party or whether it does not. As to whether hon. gentlemen who oppose the Government on this question are Conservatives or not, that depends upon what you consider to be true Conservative principles. As I understand the policy of the Conservative party, and as I have announced it for the last fifteen years in the country, I believe myself to be in accord with Conservative principles. I gave the Government notice long ago that I was not in accord with them on this question, and I exercised my right to oppose them on this measure. When I go back to my constituents I will not go back believing that this is the sole and important issue which the Conservative party places before the country. If the expressions given vent to by the Minister of Public Works are to be relied on, then, if the Conservative party make this question the important plank of its platform many Conservatives now in this House will not grace the next Parliament with their presence.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to say, with all courtesy and in all kindness to the Minister of Public Works, that when he speaks as though we, who have been opposing this Bill, are acting in a manner which we believe to be contrary to what the constitution requires, we utterly repudiate any such statement or insinuation. We hold that we are acting entirely in accordance with the constitution in the course that we are taking. I say further, that when Mr. Ouimet says, or insinuates, or implies, that we desire in any degree to deprive the minority in Manitoba of their just rights or privileges, he says, or insinuates something which is also altogether incorrect.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Oh, no.

Mr. McNEILL. I say so. We desire that the minority in Manitoba should have their rights and privileges accorded to them, and we say that we believe that by kindly means, that by approaching the government of Manitoba in the manner in which the government of a free British province should be approached, the minority of Manitoba will obtain their rights and privileges in the best possible manner. We say furthermore, that the government of Manitoba have lately made a most reasonable and a most liberal offer to this Government. We say that they have made an offer, far more liberal than the terms given to the Catholics under the Nova Scotia law, which has been described by the leader of th's House as a monument of school legislation such as any legislature in the world might well take example by. And we say, it is very unfair under these circumstances, to accuse us of narrowness or bigotry, or a desire to deprive the minority of their just rights. I say further to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) who has just addressed the House, that I am not surprised from the manner and the tone in which he addresses members of the party to which he has the honour to belong, and to which I have the honour to belong; I am not at all surprised that he is one of those who think, that the best way to secure the privileges of the minority in Manitoba is by a policy of coercion.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). As a Conservative who is divergent from his party on only one question, I must protest against the banner which was fashioned for the Conservative party by the Minister of Public Works tonight. Before that banner is put in the front of the Conservative ranks, I say that the Conservative party ought to be consulted in regard to it, that I protest to-night against such a banner being held out before the whole party. An opportunity must be given to Conservatives to declare where they are on this question. If we are ever to attain that national unification referred to by the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont), it will not be by passing such a Bill as this, but by adopting other means which will be found for a settlement of this question. It is the duty of each one, who like myself has been consistent in his attitude, to say, that he protests against such a banner being put forward without an opportunity being given to the Conservatives to say, where they stand in regard to it. What I said before in this House comes true to-night: that no party in this country, whether Liberal or Conservative, can stand the strain of such a measure as this Remedial Bill. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) spoke the truth when he said that the grievance which it was proposed to remedy was much smaller than the magnitude for evil of the remedy proposed. That is a sound opinion. There must be some other remedy found for this grievance, and if it requires time to get that remedy, time must be taken. But, Sir, no such thing as the coercion of Manitoba will ever remedy it. I again ask the Conservative party to take time before they go further in this matter. I ask the leaders of that party here, to consult their followers as to what banner we shall fight under in the approaching election.

Mr. LISTER. Before the committee rises, I desire to make a few remarks with regard to the statement of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). I am sure that every person present will be glad to hear the utterances of that hon. gentleman in the direction of extreme toleration to all classes of the community. My hon. friend says, that the question involved in the Bill before the House has never been discussed in the province of Ontario. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman cannot be ignorant of the fact, that for the last twelve or fourteen years the war waged against the Ontario government was a war of religion. He must know that in the elections of 1886, the elections of 1891, and the elections of 1893, the whole charge against Sir Oliver Mowat and his colleagues, was, that they were the mere servants of the Roman Catholic hierarchy; that they had yielded to the Catholic clergy of Ontario, and that for these reasons they should be turned out of power. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) knows that the former leader of the Conservative party in Ontario, the present Chief Justice Meredith, and later Mr. Marter, went to the country upon the question of the Catholic schools of Ontario. It was broadly stated upon every platform, that the people who had been a party to the compact permitting Catholic schools in Ontario, had power to undo the compact, and they urged it should be done.

Mr. BENNETT. Nonsense.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Never.

Mr. LISTER. Yes, Sir; and hon. gentlemen here who represent constituencies from the province of Ontario were the supporters of the hon. members who supported the opposition in the local legislature in the three elections, when the question was the abolition of separate schools.

An hon. MEMBER. Rot.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Do you refer to Meredith's platform ?

Mr. LISTER. Yes, Sir.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). No.

Mr. LISTER. Yes, and they charged that Mr. Mowat ought to be turned out of power because he had made the separate school law workable, and had granted to the Catholics rights which they should not possess, but which were necessary if the separate school laws of the province were to continue in force. And, hon. gentlemen know, that hundreds of thousands of copies of a circular, which I hold in my hand, were scattered all through the province of Ontario, denouncing Catholics, denouncing their clergy, denouncing their religion, denouncing their convents, and denouncing everything else connected with them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. TISDALE. It is the first time that I ever saw that.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Does the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Meredith circulated that pamphlet ?

Mr. LISTER. These circulars were sent all through the province of Ontario. "An eye-opener for the Ontario electors." Let any man read this paper who wishes to appreciate to a small extent the bitterness of the contest which was waged against the Liberal party of Ontario. People were brought into constituencies who had never been heard of before, as ex-priests, and ex-nuns, arousing some of the electorate of the province to a degree that it is impossible to give expression to, and hon. gentlemen on the Conservative benches in this House were found going to the polls and voting for the candidate supporting these people. I am pleased to hear my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) say to-night that intolerance was to be deprecated. I join hands with him heartily, because I know the terrible condition which this kind of politics, and this kind of intolerance has brought into the province of Ontario. The policy of Sir Oliver Mowat was a just policy. In three elections he appealed to the people upon the justness of his policy, and he was returned by the majority of the people of his province. Mr. Marter went to the city of London during the very last election, and he raised the religious cry upon the public platform. He was defeated in London, and afterwards, he openly in the House abandoned any further war against the Catholic schools of the province of Ontario.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Who did he support in London ?

Mr. LISTER. He supported Mr. Essory, the P. P. A. candidate. Go throughout the constituencies in Ontario, and you will find the candidates of the P. P. A. organization supported by the Conservative leaders of that province. But, Sir, it pleases these hon. gentlemen now to be liberal in their ideas, to become tolerant in their expressions, and to say, what we have attempted to deny to the minority in Ontario for the purpose of trying to turn Mowat out of power: we are willing to give to the minority in Manitoba for the purpose of retaining ourselves in power in the Dominion. These gentlemen turn round now and say: We are the friends of the Roman Catholic minority in the province of Manitoba. Sir, the people of this country will understand who their true friends are. They will understand that the men who have stood by them for fifteen years are not going to betray them now. The leader of the House sat in his seat silently when the Minister of Public Works announced that this firebrand is to be thrown into the next election, as the issue upon which the Conservative party is to go to the country. There was not a word of contradiction from him to the statement of the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Finance also sits silently in his seat and does not dare to repudiate the statement of the Minister of Public Works. These gentlemen will go to the country, and when it suits them they will be prepared to raise that as an issue, or if it does not suit them they will be prepared to leave it alone. These hon. gentlemen opposite will say that they are opposed to remedial legislation in constituencies where it is clear that the electors are opposed to that legislation. Sir, if there is anybody to blame for the grievances under which the Manitoba minority labour, it is the Conservative party. If they were so careful of the rights of the minority, they had the clear right in 1891 to prevent the Manitoba School Act of 1890 from becoming law. Why did they not disallow that Bill as they had a constitutional right to do? If it were wrong then it is wrong to-day. If it were disallowed then the Manitoba minority would have no grievance to-day. But, Sir, the Conservative Government did not veto that Act. The elections were coming on and they had not the moral courage to deal with it. They trifled with the question then, and they have trifled with it from that time up to the present. They said, next, let us see what the Supreme Court will say, and they probably knew what the Supreme Court would say. Then they go on litigating the question. They promised the minority that they would introduce this legislation last year, but when they met the House in session their Ministry became disrupted, and they broke faith with the minority, and they did not introduce the legislation as promised. Three of them went out of office; and one of them remains out, no doubt because he had no confidence in the men with whom he was associated. The other two Ministers crawl back again, and give an exhibition which any person in this House who witnessed it will never forget when they stood up like school boys and read their apoligies for the way they had acted. The Government, in order to get them back, promised that they would call a special session to pass this legislation. Six months passed away, and when Parliament met the Act was not drafted at all. I believe it never saw the inside of the office of the Minister of Justice. When Parliament met and had an opportunity to pass the law, they quarrelled among themselves. Seven of them conspired and went out. The Prime Minister denounced them as a nest of traitors, and they denounced him as an imbecile. They remained out ten days, and then went back again; but the Bill was not introduced until the 3rd of March, two months after Parliament met—a Parliament called specially to pass this legislation. They knew then, as they know now, that Parliament would expire on the 24th of this month, and that it was within the power of half a dozen determined men to burk the passage of this Bill. They knew that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), with his ability and determination, and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and those associated with him, had stated publicly that this Bill would not become law. And are the statements which are going about true?—that this Government would say to their Protestant friends, "It is not going to become law; don't be alarmed;" and that they would say to their Catholic friends, "We are ready to die for the Bill." Have the people of Canada confidence in the band of men who are pretending to govern Canada to-day? No; they are acting this session in accordance with their whole career. We have the leader of this House coming from the old country, saying that he has come to see about the Atlantic cable and the fast line; and he comes with a determination to turn my old friend the Prime Minister out of his position. The conspiracy had been hatched before the leader of this House left England; and when he came to Canada, the excuse he gave was the merest pretense. It was so transparent that there is no man living in Canada to-day but believes that he came to turn Sir Mackenzie Bowell out of power. The conspiracy was well hatched; and when it was ripe, he comes to Canada with an appointment to meet the Prime Minister. While he was talking with him about the fast line and the Atlantic cable, the seven bolters sent in their resignations. All honour to the Prime Minister; instead of shaking in his boots, he at once accepted their resignations. And, then where were the boys? Why, Sir, we saw them running through the lobby of this House, one after another, so anxious were they to get back, and so fearful that they never would get there. If the Prime Minister had had the backbone that he had twenty years ago, they never would have got there. But influences were brought to bear upon the Prime Minister, and ultimately he let the boys come back again into the Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The worst thing he ever did.

Mr. LISTER. Within a few days more he will cease to be Prime Minister.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Not he.

Mr. LISTER. And they will kick him off like an old boot. Make a good bargain before you go out, Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Don't let them get the better of you. And the great Sir Charles, the leader of this House, is to be the Prime Minister of this country; and the party in the House think it is a wonderful scheme to carry Canada. But let me tell the hon. gentlemen that Canada knows the circumstances perfectly well. Let me tell them—and I have some knowledge of the situation—that they would have been infinitely stronger in the country with Sir Mackenzie Bowell than they will be with Sir Charles Tupper. Sir, whether rightly or wrongly, the people of this country are afraid of Sir Charles Tupper. They have good reason to be afraid of Sir Charles Tupper. What has taken place to-night is only what every person in this country expected—that the Government have not and never had any intention of passing the Remedial Bill. They are playing and trifling with the Catholic minority of Canada. Return them to power again, and they will snap their fingers at them and treat them as they have done in the past; and five years hence will never see this grievance redressed. The reasonable and proper policy in this matter was the policy propunded by the leader of the Opposition—a policy that appeals to the good sense of every citizen of this country; a policy which this Government, after all their bungling, had to adopt, namely, the appointment of a commission to see if they could obtain a settlement of the question. Instead of doing, as suggested by my hon. friend from Montreal West (Sir Donald A. Smith)—instead of negotiating with a sovereign province having a power as great as their own, they have treated the government of Manitoba as the merest vassals; they have ordered them in a peremptory way to do certain things, or certain things will be done to them. After resisting the proposal of my honoured leader, they at last, when it was too late, accepted it, and sent their commissioners to the province of Manitoba. What a farce it was when you come to consider it. Why, Sir, those gentlemen were only there two or three days. They were received in a friendly spirit by the government of Manitoba: we have their own admission as to that: and we have every reason to believe, from the report made by them, that if what was done at last had been done at first, this Bill need never have been put before this House. We found that there was a disposition on the part of the Manitoba government to negotiate, and we believe that if longer time had been given, if that wise and prudent course had been first taken, no necessity would have existed for the introduction of this Bill at all; but this unhappy question would have been settled amicably between the two parties to the satisfaction of all the people of Manitoba and of Canada. Sir, the majority of the people of the country do not wish to deprive any minority of any right they have under the law; but we recognize that education being a part of the right of the province of Manitoba, it would be well, if it is possible, for Manitoba to settle that question herself. I believe she will settle it to the satisfaction of her own people, and the people of the whole Dominion. We believe that the policy propounded by the leader of the Opposition would have met with this happy result, and if our honoured leader, the greatest political personality in Canada to-day, is returned to power, as we believe he will be, we know that he will be able to settle this agitating question to the satisfaction of all classes and every portion of this Dominion.

Mr. HASLAM. I wish emphatically to deny the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), that the members for British Columbia do not represent the wishes of their constituencies. So far as I am concerned, I have every reason to believe that I do represent the feelings of my constituency. From the very first I have taken the same stand on this question. I have never been asked my views upon it, but I have stated that I would cast my vote in favour of remedial legislation. I have not a constituent, who does not know that; and for twelve months I have not had one objection in any shape or form to the position I have taken. The last statement I made to my constituents on that question was to the Orangemen of the town I live in on the 30th of April, 1895. I made a statement in writing over my own hand, and the last paragraph in it ran thus: "I sincerely hoped, for the honour of the Protestants of Canada, that this question would not come before Parliament, but if it did, I was bound to cast my vote in such a way as would grant to the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba the same rights as the Protestant minority in Quebec now enjoy." The letter was read and discussed in the lodge, and I have had a very kind letter from the secretary, thanking me for the trouble I had taken to explain the question. I have heard nothing since.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What was the explanation?

Mr. HASLAM. I have the explanation, and I will read it. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg has more genuine——

An hon. MEMBER. Gall.

Mr. HASLAM. Yes, I suppose that is the most appropriate word—of any man who ever has had a seat in this House. The explanation is as follows:—

Ottawa, 30th April, 1895.

Messrs. D. McLenan, Kenneth McInnes,
David McKinnell and T. C. Bannerman,
Committee, L.O.L., No. 1576.

Gentlemen,—In reply to yours of the 22nd inst., asking my views on the Manitoba school question, I may say I am opposed to separate schools in any country, but my own opinion is of no consequence in this matter, as the conditions and circumstances surrounding the case leave no room for the exercise of the ballot according to the personal conviction of myself or any other member who tries to get a clear understanding of the case. I will try to place the question before you in as brief a form as possible; even then it may tire you, but there is no other method open to me. I must begin with the first steps towards confederation.

When the fathers of confederation attempted to bring about a union of the provinces, this very question of separate schools was the greatest difficulty to be overcome. Strange to say, the right to have separate schools was the contention of the Protestant party. So determined were they on this point that the fathers of confederation had to make special provisions, not only for the granting of this concession, but also for the perpetuation of it.

The party contending for this privilege were so jealous of any possibility of any future infringement of their rights in this and other points at issue, that they insisted on their contentions being embodied in the original contract of confederation, and that, too, in a way that the Parliament of Canada could not by future legislation, limit or destroy the privileges so obtained.

To satisfy the demands of the contending factions, it was necessary to enter into the scheme in a manner protected by all the safeguards admissable and advisable by law and experience. A contract was drawn up; the contracting parties were the Dominion of Canada first, the majority in each province second, and the minority in each province third. The agreement of contract was the British North America Act. This Act was formulated by the then parties to the contract, so as to protect their several interests.

To prevent any future attempt to make a change in this Act or agreement, it was made law by the Parliament of Great Britain, thus preventing any legislative body in the Dominion of Canada from having power to make the slightest change in the agreement. The Parliament of Great Britain will not make a change until requested by the three contracting parties ; even then, I am not sure a change would be made. With these facts before us, I cannot see how any province in the Dominion can be prevented from having separate schools, if the minority ask for them.

In the case of Manitoba, there was a doubt in the minds of some of the legal fraternity as to whether the minority in that province could claim the protection of the British North America Act, from the fact that the province had no established form of government previous to confederation. To settle this doubt, the minority in this province took the course provided for in the British North America Act, that is, it appealed to the Governor General. His Excellency's advisory board (the Privy Council of Canada) recommended,—and I think properly, too—that the appeal be taken to the Privy Council of England.

I have not heard any one question the decision of that honourable body ; yet, they decided that the appeal was well taken ; in fact, that the rights of the minority were infringed on, that they were clearly entitled to separate schools, if they wanted them.

The Opposition to the Dominion Government politically have, in a number of instances, found fault with the Government for allowing the appeal to be taken to the Privy Council of England. In my opinion, any other course could not be taken. If the Dominion Government attempted to decide, it would look very much like a judge sitting in court on the bench, hearing the argument when his own case is being tried.

So far, the Dominion Government have contented themselves with notifying the provincial government of Manitoba, as representing the majority in that province, of the decision of the Privy Council of England. What action that body will take remains to be seen. I cannot see how any honourable body can, for a moment, think of any course but that of carrying out the contract they have willingly entered into.

It must be remembered the Protestants and Roman Catholics were about evenly divided when they entered into confederation, in Manitoba. There was no coercion—it was a voluntary action, and as such, each of the contracting parties must in honour abide by the contract they have entered into. Suppose the majority of the people of Manitoba were allowed to break faith with the minority without any action being taken by the Dominion Government, is there any reason why the majority in Quebec would not do the same ? Can a law be made for the Protestant minority in Quebec, and another for the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba ? Or, putting it in another light, are we to expect the Roman Catholic majority in Quebec to honourably and honestly carry out the contract they have entered into, while the Protestant majority in Manitoba publicly proclaim their unwillingness to do the same ?

I sincerely hope, for the honour of the Protestants of Canada on this question, a vote will not be necessary ; but if it is, I am in honour bound to cast my vote in such a way as will grant to the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba the same rights and privileges that the Protestant minority of Quebec now enjoy.

I am, yours respectfully,
A. HASLAM.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That will do.

Mr. HASLAM. I dare say it will. I had no intention of making this statement were it not for the charges made and repeated by hon. members opposed to this Bill, that every member who supported it did so because he had been bought body and soul by the Government. I do think that there is one statement that ought to be put on the "Hansard," and that is this, that the opponents of this Bill, while on the floor of the House, were not drunk. That ought to be put in "Hansard" for the simple reason that when future generations come to read the debates on this question, it will be very hard to convince them that these hon. gentlemen were sober.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What was the answer to the letter ?

Mr. HASLAM. It was satisfactory to me. We hear member after member opposing this Bill, getting up on the floor of the House and condemning the Government for its insincerity, for its lack of purpose, for its determination to fool the Roman Catholic people all over the Dominion, and then, before they get off their feet, they turn round and accuse the Government of using its power to purchase the votes of members to induce them to vote in favour of the measure. I would like to know whether any person who reads these debates, can come to any other conclusion than that the hon. members who make such contradictory statements were really not in their right mind. It is rather hard to understand how an hon. member can accuse the Government of insincerity and double dealing and lack of purpose and then turn round and accuse them of trying to purchase votes in order to secure the passage of the measure which they are charged with not being really desirous to pass.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. I do not wish to permit this debate to close without joining issue with the hon. member for Lambton who appears to have got into some quarrel with the P.P.A.'s in his county.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Tell us what you think of Margaret L. Sheppard.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. I wish, Mr. Chairman, you would keep that man quiet. I do not known whether "buffoonery" is a proper term to use in Parliament, but when other members wish to discuss questions seriously, he seems to think of nothing but playing the buffoon. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) exhibited a green paper over there to-night. It is the second copy I have ever seen.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. Hon. gentlemen may say, oh, but I repeat that is the second one I have ever seen. The first was in the hands of Hon. S. H. Blake, who was going along a line of railway to take an apartment in one of the Victoria's in the interest of the Liberal party. I never saw such a document, and I was in plenty ridings in that county. And yet this man gets up from Lambton and ventures to say to the people of this country that that was the literature which Conservative speakers used in the late contest in the province of Ontario.

An hon. MEMBER. What about Margaret L. Sheppard ?

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. I have heard the name but I have not the pleasure of her acquaintance, but I am told the hon. member for West Lambton has. I am told that they were cheek by jowl on the same platform in that county.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. The hon. gentleman says no, but I know whereof I am speaking.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, you do not, you were not there.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. No, nor was the hon. gentleman, but I have the word of the hon. member for West Lambton himself that she was upon a platform there, and that is more than the hon. member for Wellington can say. I never mentioned the name of Margaret L. Sheppard in any speech in this House, but it has always been brought up by the other side. It was brought up by the hon. member for Wellington to-night and by the hon. member for West Lambton the other night.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for West Lambton will be here in a moment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. She was in Lambton supporting the Conservative party in the last election, and in North Ontario too.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. I wish to tell the hon. member for West Lambton and the hon. member for North Oxford that no one knows better than themselves that the campaign of the Liberal-Conservative party in the province of Ontario last time, and the three last times spoken of to-night, were never on the lines laid down by the hon. member for Lambton.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. She was in Oxford opposing Sir Oliver Mowat.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. When I was interrupted by the hon. gentleman, I was saying that the lines laid down by the hon. member for West Lambton to-night as the lines on which we ran those contests were not the true ones. Now, I challenge him and hon. members of this House to prove their statement that the Conservative party advocated the doing away of separate schools in Ontario. It is very well to charge the leader of the Opposition then, now a most respected judge in the province of Ontario, with having carried the flag of intolerance throughout the country, but what was the policy of Mr. Meredith in that contest ? All he advocated was that the separate schools should be put upon the same basis as the public schools, that they should have the same class of inspectors, the same certified teachers, and that we should have the ballot in the separate school elections the same as in the case of the public schools, and that no man should be put upon the trustee board of a high school simply because he was a Roman Catholic.

Mr. MULOCK. You voted for the Bill. These things are in section 74.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. The hon. gentleman knows that what he is stating is entirely incorrect. I voted against all those views.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask a question ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman denied that he favoured the adoption of clause 4.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. MULOCK. My point of order is that he has misstated his action in the committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. LISTER. I desire to ask the hon. gentleman whether he said, while I was out of the House, that Margaret L. Sheppard and I appeared upon the same platform, cheek by jowl or in any other way.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. What I did say was this, that I had never mentioned the name of Margaret L. Sheppard in any speech until it first came from the other side. In the first instance it was mentioned by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) and to-night by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I said that what appeared to be troubling the hon. member for West Lambton was the fact that while Margaret L. Sheppard was not in North Ontario in that contest, she was in West Huron, cheek by jowl with the hon. member for West Huron. That is my statement. And then the hon. member for Wellington contradicted me, and I said that my knowledge that she was there came from the hon. member for West Lambton himself.

Mr. LISTER. If the hon. gentleman said that I was on the same platform cheek by jowl——

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. I did not mention any platform at all.

Mr. MULOCK. You did say the same platform.

Mr. LISTER. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that I was never on the platform with her, that I never saw her, that I know she was in West Lambton supporting Mr. Gurd, whom Mr. Moncrieff wanted to have elected. She was in North Ontario.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. She was not.

Mr. LISTER. She was in Muskoka which was a part of North Ontario and she was in Bracebridge.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. That is in Muskoka.

Mr. LISTER. That is part of North Ontario, and more than that, the hon. gentleman was supporting the man whom she was supporting. And more than that, Mr. Spence, the assistant Conservative organizer, was in the town at the same time working with her, and was chief of the P.P.A.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. In regard to the hon. gentleman's second speech, let me say that the woman in question never was in North Ontario during that contest nor in any county so far as I know. Bracebridge, as everyone knows, is in Muskoka for local purposes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. When he says that she and I supported the same candidate, all I have to say is that if she was ever in Muskoka, I never saw her, and more than that, I had not a vote in Muskoka. I do not intend to delay the House, but I was just going to say that the hon. member for West Lambton would never dare to say to Mr. Meredith, were he off the bench, what he had dared to say of him now he is on the bench.

Mr. LISTER. What did I say ?

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. The hon. gentleman slandered him in the worst possible way, for no one knows better than he that on every platform Mr. Meredith said it was impossible to do away with the separate schools of Ontario, that all he wanted was to make the separate schools as nearly allied to the public schools as possible, and I ask hon. members of this House, even those who are now opposing the Government most strongly, if that were not the position taken by Mr. Meredith. As to the statement of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), I do not know what he was speaking about when he spoke of clause 4. I was not in the House when that clause was being discussed nor when a single vote was taken in committee. I was in the House when the vote was taken as to whether we would take Saturdays or not, and I voted that the Government should take Saturdays. The only vote I have given since I voted against the second reading of the Bill was one to take Saturdays for the purposes of the Government. But in taking that view, I had the authority before me that last year the same thing was done and two Saturdays were taken. The year before the same thing was done.

Mr. LISTER. You wabbled before and you wabble again.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. I wish the hon. gentleman would keep his mouth from wabbling. Three years ago the same thing was done and two Saturdays were taken. If that was voting for coercion, then I voted for it, but I do not look at it in that light. All I have to say in conclusion is that I voted against the second reading of the Bill. There was no clause in the Bill that would satisfy me, and if the Bill came to a third reading I would vote against it again.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman states that he was extremely anxious to secure certain principles in connection with the working of the separate school system in Ontario.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. Hear, hear.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, "hear, hear." And those principles were embraced in clause 4 of this Bill.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. Hear hear.

Mr. MULOCK. And the hon. gentleman wholly abstained from assisting in the consideration of clause 4. When it was before the committee he absolutely abstained from rendering the slightest assistance in order to place on the statute-book those principles that were so dear to him.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. I happened to be a thousand miles away.

Mr. MULOCK. This clause was before the committee for days.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY. Several days, I believe.

Mr. MULOCK. Clause 4 was carried by the votes of the colleagues of the hon. gentleman, and by those of his party who were absent, or who divided themselves into relays in order to pass it. Clause 4 confirms these things which the hon. gentleman says he campaigned against in Ontario. What is the use of his saying, or the use of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) saying, or the use of the member for East Durham (Mr. Craig), saying that they voted against the Bill on the second reading, when all the rest of their action was designed to make the Bill a possibility and when they did everything they could do, except on one solitary vote, to make this Bill a law. It is the most utter and transparent hypocrisy for these hon. gentlemen to say they are against the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MULOCK. The Government laid on the Table this session reports and returns in respect to the Kingston Military College.

Those are not the ordinary returns submitted on an order of the House, but are under the control of the Government. When I applied to see them, I was answered that they had been sent by order of the Government to be printed at the Bureau. I wish to know when members of this House will have an opportunity of seeing them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. member (Mr. Davies) moved that they be printed and I seconded the motion. I think I have seen a printed copy of these papers, and I presume that they will be immediately distributed.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2.30 (Thursday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 16th April, 1896.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 99) further to amend the law respecting Building Societies and Loan and Savings Companies carrying on business in the province of Ontario (from the Senate).—Mr. Coatsworth.)

Bill (No. 96) respecting the inspection of Steamboats and the examination and licensing of Engineers employed on them (from the Senate).—(Mr. Costigan.)

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Mr. DICKEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 102) further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Explain.

Mr. DICKEY. The Bill proposes to make several amendments, none of them of very great importance, with perhaps one exception. Section 179, which deals with the sale of obscene books, is to be amended by including manufacture. It is found that that difficulty, which was not foreseen when the criminal law was drafted, has been springing up, and needs treatment. It is also proposed in section 180 to deal with the transmission of obscene or immoral books through the mails. The section of the Post Office Act which dealt with that subject was repealed, and was replaced by a section in the criminal law which overlooked that class of books, and was confined to seditious books. Section 183, with which the name of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was connected, is repealed, and it is re-enacted so as to include women and girls employed in shops or stores. These large departmental stores are a comparatively modern development, and it is felt that protection is as much needed there as anywhere. Section 197 it is proposed to amend by carrying out the provisions of section 204, which allows betting on legal racecourses. It appears that this difficulty has arisen—that, while betting was lawful during the race meeting, the booth where it was carried on was illegal under section 197. It is proposed to remove that anomaly, without extending the privilege of betting. The next amendment is more important. It refers to section 204a, dealing with horse-racing. A complaint has been made that in some sections of the country racing is held continuously during almost the whole summer, with the result that it becomes not legitimate racing, but a mere gambling arrangement. It is represented that great evils have grown up in connection with this practice, and I have endeavoured to strike at that sort of practice without further limiting the permission to carry on legitimate horse-racing.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). How many days is it intended to give for each meeting?

Mr. DICKEY. Ten days, continuously.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). What interval between each meeting?

Mr. DICKEY. Forty days.

Mr. DICKEY. Twenty days in the year, ten days in the spring, and ten days in the fall, roughly speaking. Section 295 dealt with the distribution of work by lottery. That subsection " c " was put in to meet the case of legitimate enterprises. It was very strongly pressed upon the House when the Bill was before it, and it was put in against the judgment of many hon. members, as being liable to lead to abuse. That fear has been realized, it has been abused; and after trying the best way I could to make some provision that would allow legitimate operations of that kind to be carrid on, without running the risk of abuse, I found that it was impossible to recommend the continuance of that concession any longer, and I have recommended the repeal of that subsection. Section 306 is amended. That section defines stealing as the taking of property into one's possession that has been unlawfully seized. A case has arisen in the North-west Territories where a private person, under a bill of sale, seized properties which it turned out afterwards were not his, but the lawful owner re-took them, and endeavoured under this section to prosecute. The original meaning of the Act was, of course, that this was a seizure by a public officer; and the section is amended to make that more clear by adding the words "by any peace officer or public officer." Section 31a deals with the question of cattle in the North-west Territories. The House will remember that the question of saw-logs, which are a peculiar class of property when they have no individual mark of identity, was dealt with by a clause in the Act, and the mark on the saw-logs was made prima facie evidence of property. The same principle is applied to the ranching herds in the North-west Territories. Section 520 is amended to meet a case that has arisen in practice, which I can scarcely understand as arising under the terms of the Act, but in order to remove all difficulties, it is proposed to add to section 526 the words "provided that nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to combinations of workingmen or employees." Section 703 is simply aiding prosecutions against gambling houses by making certain Acts prima facie evidence. Section 707 is carrying out the provisions with regard to the case of cattle in the North-west Territories; and section 801 is simply a matter of procedure.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to a practice that prevails now to some extent, and which I believe is not met by this section 179, which prohibits the sale of any obscene books or other printed matter. The practice which has been brought to my attention, and to which I call the attention of the Minister, is that of putting obscene cards or photographs in boxes of cigarettes and cigars. These, of course, go with the boxes, and these obscene photographs and prints are also presented to the patrons of cigar stands and tobacco stands, who are even called into a room in the rear and presented with this objectionable kind of prints. Now, the law hardly covers this case; it should prohibit not only the sale but the presenting, or dealing with, or handling any of this class of literature. I call the attention of the Minister of Justice to this defect in the law.

Mr. DICKEY. My attention was drawn to that. I was not able to find any prints that I could clearly say were immoral. Besides that, I think probably it would be covered by the section which applies to sale, in cases where the cigarettes are sold.

Mr. CHARLTON. They are presented, aside from the sale.

Mr. DICKEY. The matter was brought to my attention, but I was not able to find that any practice existed of sufficient importance to warrant me in dealing with it. It is a very difficult subject to deal with, because the moment you touch the mere giving, presenting, or handling anything, you go into private houses and meddle with private affairs; so that the subject is a very difficult one to handle. I would be very glad indeed to meet any practical case that the hon. gentleman can make out when the Bill is going through committee, if it ever gets that far.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may mention that I received a communication from Hamilton, in which it was stated that the circulation of this kind of prints among the school children of that city, was very extensive, and that the effects were most demoralizing and deplorable. I subsequently received a package of these articles, and they are certainly most objectionable. I will take occasion to call the further attention of the Minister to this subject.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he has undertaken in this Bill to define what he means by immoral literature. Three or four years ago works were seized that were passing through the post office, that could not come, according to the general designation, under that class. Nevertheless, this law puts large power into the hands of postmasters, who are not always very conversant with the meaning of the law. I think about fifty years ago there were instances where Paine's Age of Reason was seized. That may be regarded as a skeptical book; it rather comes under the head of philosophy than under the head of immoral literature. It is certainly going a long way to seize agnostic works, and works of that sort, under this designation; and if the hon. gentleman would undertake to distinguish between that class of literature and immoral literature, he would perhaps be doing an essential service.

Mr. DICKEY. That would be a pretty hard thing to do.

Mr. CHARLTON. I guess the hon. gentleman is all right.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PENITENTIARY ACTS AMENDMENTS.

Mr. DICKEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 103) further to amend the Penitentiary Act. He said: This is a Bill for the purpose of enabling the Governor in Council to alter the territory for which penitentiaries are established. For instance, in the western part of Ontario it is much more convenient to take prisoners to the Stony Mountain Penitentiary in Manitoba, than to Kingston. That is the immediate difficulty that it is intended to meet, although the power is general. There are one or two other sections merely to carry out that view.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You say that power is general; how is it taken?

Mr. DICKEY. The portion of Canada for which a penitentiary is assigned shall be subject to alterations from time to time by proclamation under the great seal; now it is fixed by statute. The only other substantial provision is that giving power to the Governor in Council to transfer prisoners from one penitentiary to another. In the case of a vacancy occurring in the wardenship, the inspector has found it very desirable that power should be taken to transfer an experienced warden from one penitentiary to another. Unfortunately they have no power to do that at present; and this is intended to supply it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What does the hon. gentleman mean by power of transferring warden? Does he mean promotion from one penitentiary to another?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes. The Bill provides that the transfer shall not effect the emoluments or perquisites of any officer. It will be a purely internal matter. For instance, where there is a vacancy at Stony Mountain, we may move a man from St. Vincent de Paul, and have the vacancy there.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CHEESE MANUFACTURED IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. RIDER asked:

How much cheese of each kind, white and coloured, was made under Dairy Commissioner in Prince Edward Island, on Government account, in the months of June, July, August, September, October and November, 1895?

Was the Government mark, with date and place of manufacture, stamped on each cheese?

Was the make, in whole or in part, sold or offered for sale during the season of making; and what was the price realized or offered on each month's make?

Were competing bids for purchase of the cheese publicly asked for during making season?

Were any offers received for its purchase, in whole or in part? If for a portion only, for how much, and what were the figures offered?

How much of the above make was put into cold storage in Montreal? What was the amount of freight paid? When was it put into cold storage, where stored, and upon what terms?

Mr. DICKEY.

Has the whole, or any part of the lot been since disposed of? How much, to whom sold, date and place of delivery, and at what price? Were bids publicly solicited before selling?

How much, if any, remains unsold of each kind? Have any offers been made for the balance, and what are they?

Mr. FOSTER. The quantities of cheese made in dairy stations in Prince Edward Island, under the charge of the dairy commissioner, were:

	Boxes.
In May	89
July	7,302
August	5,566
September	5,068
October	2,140

Of these, 22,644 boxes were shipped to Montreal; 693 boxes are on hand at Charlottetown; 2,253 were sold to patrons and locally. Of the cheese shipped to Montreal, 17,211 boxes were white, 5,433 boxes were coloured; 22,644 in all. Of the cheese on hand at Charlottetown, 14 boxes are white, 679 are coloured. Figures designating the date of manufacture were put on each cheese. There was no Government mark, or brand, of the place of manufacture on the cheese. The most of the 2,253 boxes sold to patrons and locally were sold during the season of manufacture. Bids for the cheese were not asked for publicly. No offers in writing were received; negotiations were conducted verbally; and a written contract was made with the firm which offered the highest price. 12,132 boxes were put in cold storage in Montreal, and 10,512 boxes were put in cool storage after November. On 17th August, 5,255 boxes were put in cold storage in the Montreal Cold Storage and Freezing Company's warehouse; on 14th September, 1,630; 28th September, 1,201. On 31st August, 4,046 boxes were put in cold storage in Fraser's cold storage warehouse. The terms were 3½ cents per box per month for cold storage, and 1 cent per box per month after November. The whole lot has been disposed of as follows:—22,238 boxes to Messrs. Hodgson Bros.; 250 boxes to J. C. & G. D. Warrington; 151 boxes to the Montreal Cold Storage and Freezing Company; 5 boxes to be paid for by steamship companies, as lost.

THE OFFICE OF ADJUTANT GENERAL.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked:

1. Is the office of Adjutant General of the Militia of Canada vacant?
2. If so, when did it become vacant?
3. Was Colonel Powell retired against his desire?
4. Has General Gascoigne recommended any person for the office?
5. If so, whom?

6. Has the service suffered in any way by reason of the delay in making the appointment?
7. Who is the Acting Adjutant General?

Mr. DICKEY. 1. Yes. 2. On 1st January, 1896. 3. Colonel Powell did not consent to his superannuation. 4 and 5. Recommendation to Council for any appointments in the department are made by the Minister in charge of the department, and not by the General. Lieutenant-Colonel Aylmer was recommended by the Minister. 6. The staff of the department, with some extra work, have fully carried out the requirements of the service. 7. Lieutenant-Colonel Hon. M. Aylmer.

COMPLAINT AGAINST CAPTAIN DIXON.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked:

Has General Gascoigne reached a decision upon the complaint of the commanding officer of the 63rd Battalion against Captain Dixon and the investigation held by Deputy Adjutant General Maunsell? If so, what is that decision?

Mr. DICKEY. General Gascoigne has reached a decision upon the complaint referred to, but as it has not been dealt with by the Minister. I am not able to give it to the hon. gentleman.

THE ST. LOUIS AWARD.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked:

Is it the intention of the Government to apply for leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Court, and awarding Mr. St. Louis 60,000 odd dollars?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

MAILS BETWEEN KESWICK AND ROACH'S POINT.

Mr. CHARLTON asked:

Did Allan Jones, post office inspector, Barrie, or any other person in the service of the Government, receive any offer for carrying the mails between Keswick and Roach's Point on the expiry of the existing contract? If so, what were the terms of such offer, and when was it received?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Allan Jones, post office inspector, Barrie, received an offer from Lewis Wheeler of $116 on 21st February last, and when Mr. Wheeler was told authority had been given to renew the contract from 1st July with James Cake, he replied on the 13th ultimo, reducing his offer to $75.

RAPIDE PLAT AND SOULANGES CANALS.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) asked:

1. Has any assignment of the interest of W. J. Poupore in the contracts referred to by the Minister of Railways and Canals on the 24th of February, 1896, (page 2176 of "Hansard") and which relate to Rapide Plat (Morrisburg) Canal and the Soulanges Canal, been served upon or left with the Minister of Railways and Canals, or in or at his department, or has said Minister any knowledge of any such assignment, and if so, to what party or parties, or firms or partnerships, was such assignment made, what was the consideration received for same, and has any assignments of said contracts or of the interests of said W. J. Poupore therein been accepted or approved of by the Crown or Government, or by the Minister of Railways and Canals; and if so, what security was exacted by them for the due performance of said contract or contracts so assigned, or in which said W. J. Poupore so assigned his interests?

2. What was the estimated amount of the tender of said W. J. Poupore, or the firm of which he was a member, for the construction of the said sections of the Rapide Plat (Morrisburg) Canal and works in connection therewith accepted by the Crown or the Department of Railways and Canals, or by the Minister thereof; what sums of money have already been paid W. J. Poupore or said firm in connection with the same; what further amounts have as yet been claimed therefor, and what still remains to be done to complete said works, and what is the estimated cost of what still remains to be done to complete said works?

3. What was the estimated amount of the tender originally accepted by the Crown or by the Department of Railways and Canals, or Minister thereof, for those sections of Soulanges Canal now being constructed or built by the firm of Poupore & Fraser; how much has already been paid on account thereof; what further sums have as yet been claimed for same; what will be required to complete said works; and to whom have the sums of money already disbursed in connection with the same been paid, and if to more than one person or firm, what sums have been paid to each respectively?

4. What was the estimated amount of the tender of Mr. Poupore and Company originally accepted by the Crown and by the Department of Public Works, and the Minister thereof, for the construction of the lock and dam at Rivière du Lièvre, referred to by the Minister of Public Works on the 24th of February, 1896, at page 2176 of "Hansard"?

5. Has the Crown or the Government of Canada, the Department of Railways and Canals, or the Minister thereof, since the month of April, 1895, called for tenders, or asked any person or persons, firm or firms of contractors for tenders for any works in connection with said Rapide Plat Canal at Morrisburg or in the vicinity thereof; and if so, for what work or works was such tenders asked, who tendered for same, and when did they so tender, and what tender for same was made by the firm of Poupore & Fraser, and if more than one was received from said firm what were the respective amounts and date thereof?

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. J. W. Poupore has filed an assignment of his interest in the contracts for sections Nos. 1 and 3 of the Rapide Plat Canal, and for section No. 11 of the Soulanges Canal in the department. No action has been taken thereon. The estimated amount of the tenders of W. J. Poupore, or the firm of which he is a member, for sections Nos. 1 and 3 of the Rapide Plat Canal amounted to :

do No. 3	269,676
do do No. 3 ..	186,890

The only further amounts for which claim has been made is $4,000 on section No. 3. The estimated cost to complete section No. 1 is $173,000, and section No. 3 is $85,000. The estimated amount of tender originally accepted for section No. 11 of Soulanges Canal, of which Messrs Poupore & Fraser are the contractors, is $254,937. The amount paid :

To George Goodwin	$42,020
Thomas Feeney	53,780
Poupore & Fraser	79,760
Total	$175,560

The further sum claimed is $6,188 ; the estimated cost to complete is $95,000.

R. L. TUPPER, OFFICIAL INSPECTOR.

Mr. McCARTHY asked :

1. Whether complaints have been made respecting the granting of licenses to a company called the "Manitoba Fish Company" for violations of the law and fishery regulations by the said company, and impugning the conduct of R. L. Tupper, fishery inspector for Selkirk, Man. ?

2. Did the department issue or cause to be issued a commission to Mr. F. E. Elliott to examine into the said charges ?

3. Has the said commissioner made his report, and if so, when was the report received ?

4. What are the findings of the commissioner ?

5. Is it the fact that the chief stockholders in the Manitoba Fish Company are foreigners or American citizens ?

6. Is it the fact that settlers' licenses have been granted to the employees of the Manitoba Fish Company ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. Yes. 2. A commission was issued to Mr. F. C. Elliott. 3. Yes, 2nd April. 4. As the inspector was neither present nor represented during the inquiry, it is proposed to give him an opportunity of making his defence before announcing the findings. 5. Such has been alleged, but the department has no positive information on the subject. 6. No settlers' licenses have been granted to persons as employees of the company.

Mr. McCARTHY asked :

1. Whether Mr. R. L. Tupper, inspector of fisheries at Selkirk, Man., has made any return since the 1st of March, 1895, when the Auditor General, by letter of that date, draws attention to the fact that he has not made returns since April, 1894 ; and if so, for what month or months have such returns been made ?

2. Has any schedule, since that referred to in the letter of the Auditor General, of fishing licenses issued up to 30th June, 1894, been furnished ; and if so, up to what period, and how many licenses does the schedule show have been issued, distinguishing between settlers' and commercial licenses ?

3. What sum of money, up to 1st July, 1895, has the inspector failed to account for, according to the schedule which he had been furnished up to date ?

4. Has the sum of $594.31, for which the Auditor General found the said inspector in arrear, been accounted for ? If not, why not ?

5. Why have these returns not been examined and audited in the department as pointed out by the Auditor General ?

6. Is it the fact that the Auditor General's letter of the 1st March, 1895, containing various charges against the inspector referred to, has remained unanswered ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. Full returns have been made. 2. License book to 31st December, 1895, returned, showing the issue of 306 settlers and sixteen commercial licenses. 3. None. 4. Yes. 5. The returns can only be audited on the receipt of the license book. 6. The personal explanations were given the Audit Office, which appeared to obviate the necessity for further action.

NIAGARA CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. McMULLEN asked :

1. Has any application been made to the Government or any member thereof for a subsidy to the Niagara Central Railway, which railway was bonussed to the full amount the Parliament of Canada grants to railways, namely, $3,200 per mile ?

2. Has the Government any intention to bonus the Niagara Central Railway for the purpose of filling up the decayed trestle work and making the road safe for ordinary traffic ?

3. Has this part of the railway, for which this bonus is being or about to be applied for, the same part or length that was bonussed by Parliament a few years ago ?

4. Has the Government or the Minister of Railways had this road inspected, and if so, when and by whom, and was the report of such a nature, and the condition of the trestle work such as to warrant the Government in permitting this road to be operated with due regard to the safety of human life ?

Mr. HAGGART. Application has been made by the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company for a subsidy for their line from St. Catharines to Niagara Falls, $48,000, $43,000 to replace perishable structures with permanent ones and $5,000 for one and one-quarter miles additional to reach bridges at Niagara Falls. This is asked in lieu of the subsidy of $108,000 granted by 57-58 Victoria from St. Catharines to Hamilton.

YAMASKA LOCK.

Mr. MIGNAULT asked :

1. What was the amount of tolls collected at the Yamaska Lock, in each of the years 1894 and 1895 ?

2. What has been the outlay for managing and working the Yamaska Lock in 1894 and in 1895 ?

3. How much money was expended for repairs to the dam and lock at Yamaska during the years 1894 and 1895 ?

Dues collected	$222 49	$357 78
Cost of repairs...........	291 54	407 80
Cost of administration .	708 14	629 30

DEPUTY MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked :

1. Has John Russell, of St. John, N.B., been promised, with the authority of the Government or any of its members, the appointment of Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries when it becomes vacant ?

2. Has the Government decided to superannuate the present incumbent ?

3. Is it the intention of the Government to appoint Mr. Russell to the position ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have no information that the position of Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries was ever promised to John Russell. In regard to the retirement of the present Deputy Minister, I may say that the matter has not yet been considered by the Government. As to the appointment of Mr. Russell as Deputy Minister, that is not under consideration.

R. LA TOUCHE TUPPER.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. Whether any charges have been made against R. La Touche Tupper, overseer of fisheries in Manitoba ?

2. Has any commission been issued to inquire into these charges ? If so, who is the commissioner, and what is the nature of the charges made ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. Yes. 2. Yes. 3. Fred. C. Elliott, barrister, Selkirk. 4. Irregularities in the granting of fishery licenses in Lake Winnipeg, and the management of the Government fish hatchery at Selkirk.

APPOINTMENTS AND SUPERANNUATIONS.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked :

Have N. B. Colcock, J. N. Young and W. H. Breakall, of Brockville, been appointed or promised offices in the service of the Government ? Has S. J. Boyd of the Inland Revenue Department at Brockville, been removed to some other locality, and if so, where, and who is to take his position at Brockville ? Have James Clark and C. H. French been appointed to positions in the service of the Government ? Has Henry B. Small been superannuated ? If so, when and why ? Who has been appointed to fill the vacancy caused by his superannuation, and at what salary ? What superannuation allowance has been granted to Mr. Small ?

Mr. WOOD. 1. Mr. N. B. Colcock has been appointed preventive officer in the Customs service. 2. Mr. Young has not been appointed, whilst Mr. W. H. Breakall was appointed to temporary work for a period of three months.

Mr. PRIOR. 1. S. J. Boyd has not been removed from Brockville. 2. James Clark has been in the service of the Government since October, 1895. C. H. French is not in the service of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Small has been superannuated. On 1st March, 1896—for age, economy and efficiency. A. L. Jarvis, at $1,800 a year. Superannuation allowance, $1,264.60.

SCHOOLS OF INFANTRY.

Mr. McGILLIVRAY asked :

What is the maximum number of non-commissioned officers and men who may be admitted to the schools of infantry at regimental depots ?

Is there any regulation whereby a minimum number from each battalion would have preference over a major number applying from other corps, and if not, has the advisability of such regulation been considered ?

Mr. DICKEY. 1. Twenty N. C. O.'s and men at each course of instruction. 2. No. It is not advisable to restrict any corps as to numbers, as it sometimes happens that a corps makes no application for the admission of N. C. O.'s and men, and this would prevent the completion of the authorized quota.

THE LATE MR. DENISON, M.P.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, the melancholy duty devolves upon me of calling the attention of the House to the loss of another of its members by death. Lieut.-Col. F. C. Denison was descended from a very old family. One hundred years ago his great-grandfather, a captain of the West York Regiment in England, was one of the pioneer settlers in Toronto. The family has been distinguished from that time for their devotion to military duty. His grandfather, Lieut.-Col. George Taylor Denison, served in the war of 1812, and took an active and conspicuous part during the rebellion of 1837. In 1884 Lord Wolseley was called upon to take charge of the Soudan expedition, and with that judgment and skill for which his lordship has always been noted, his attention was drawn to his experience in Canada of the French-Canadian voyageurs in the passing of rapids. Lieut.-Col. Denison, whose death we are now called upon to deplore, was charged with the duty of organizing the corps of Canadian voyageurs to assist in the arduous and very important duty of surmounting the difficulties of the navigation of the Nile. How admirably that duty was performed may be learned from the volume of Major-General Brackenbury on the Nile expedition, in which he placed upon record the very remarkable fact that owing to the presence of the Canadian voyageurs, the ascent of the Nile had been attended with much less difficulty, been accomplished in a much shorter time, and involved a much smaller loss of life. And he placed upon record the still more remarkable statement that but for the presence of the Canadian voyageurs on that occasion, the descent of the Nile would have been impossible. Lieut-Col Denison distinguished himself in a military capacity on that occasion, took part in several actions, and finally became the victim of a severe endemic fever, which quite possibly laid the foundation of his subsequent bad health and decease. The Imperial Government showed its sense of the great services performed by Lieut.-Col. Denison on that occasion by awarding him a decoration, and the honours thus so well earned attracted great attention to the very valuable and admirable manner in which he had discharged his duties. It was my good fortune to have the pleasure of meeting Col. Denison when he was in command, a few years ago, of the Bisley team, and I am able to say that no gentleman who has been entrusted with the discharge of that important duty has acquitted himself in a more satisfactory and admirable manner. Hon. gentlemen in this House have had an opportunity of knowing him in his capacity as a representative of the people much better than myself. It was, however, my good fortune to have the pleasure of sitting with him here, as a fellow-member, in 1887 and 1888, and he paid a very short visit to Parliament during the present session. I have had the opportunity of seeing and knowing that hon. gentleman sufficiently in his capacity as member of Parliament to know that he gained the respect and confidence of gentlemen on both sides of the House for the manner in which he discharged his duties. I am quite sure that every member of this House will join with me in deploring, in the most sincere manner, the untimely death of a gentleman who, in every position of life, earned the confidence and respect of all who knew him.

Mr. LAURIER. It is also to me a melancholy duty, and if the event admitted of such an expression, I should also say a melancholy pleasure, to add my testimony to the words spoken just now by the hon. leader of the House of our late colleague, Col. Denison. Col. Denison came from a military race and was himself a good soldier, as he proved on many an occasion. It was his privilege to show his military qualities in very different quarters—in the forests and prairies of the North-west and in the classic land of the Pharaohs. As a member of this House, it is true to say of him that while he had opponents he had no enemies. He was a man of few words and strong convictions, one of those who seldom took part in the debates in the House, but who, whenever he did, spoke with a conviction that carried weight and authority. He carried weight and authority through his very sincere character, and through the amenities of his manner, and I can assure the House that on this side as well as the other his loss will be mourned by all. The loss of such a man is always to be mourned, and to be mourned all the more that we are engaged in conflict, sometimes very bitter conflict, in which it is always satisfactory to know that in dealing with men of the character of Col. Denison, you can always rely that whatever they do is done from the very bottom of their hearts and consciences in this respect, Col. Denison's life will give an example to all those who had the privilege of being associated with him in his parliamentary career.

Mr. COCKBURN. As an intimate friend of the late Col. Denison, and as one closely associated with him in the representation of the city of Toronto, it may not be out of place that I should ask for a moment the time of the House to add a few simple words of my own to the tributes of praise which has been so eloquently given by the two gentlemen who have preceded me. I am sure that I but express the unanimous opinion, not only of those gentlemen who belong to the Liberal-Conservative party, to which party Lieut-Col. Denison belonged, but the opinion of every member of this House, when I say that Col. Denison was but a short time in this House before he won the respect of all, and that he commanded and retained that respect and esteem until the hour of his death. He was indeed, as was remarked by the eloquent leader of the Opposition, a man of firm, strong convictions and character, and being a man of that stamp he wished to see his convictions carried into practical exemplification. But at the same time, he was a man of that liberality of sentiment that he was quite prepared, while ready to enforce his own views, to acknowledge the sincerity and honesty of the views of those who might differ from him. He was indeed, as has been eloquently remarked, an example for us to follow. In his private life he was a most loving father, and I am sure that it will be many a day before we can fill his place with a man of as high character as that of Col. Denison, not only in all the private relations of life, but also in the discharge of his public duties. I cannot trust myself to say more. My heart is full on such an occasion, and I can only say that in his death and in his life we have an example which should tend to mitigate, to some extent, the severities of political warfare we have witnessed during the last six or seven weeks.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I cannot expect to add anything to the well-merited eulogiums which have been paid to my late colleague, Col. Denison. Those eulogiums will find a very sympathetic response in the hearts of the people of the city of Toronto, where Col. Denison was best known, and where he was respected and beloved. I may add that, as a citizen, as a soldier, and as a member of Parliament, Col. Denison has always been known for his patriotism, his courage, his devotion, and his conscientious discharge of his public duties. When his friends, and when the people of Toronto generally, read the very high testimony that has been paid to his memory in this House, not only by his political confreres, but by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, who has rendered such a graceful tribute to his memory, they will feel honoured at having the deceased gentleman for a representative. I have had the honour of being acquainted with Col. Denison for a number of years, and I have been intimately acquainted with him as a colleague in the representation of Toronto for the last five years. I can heartily endorse all that has been said about his high character. I do not know that there is a member in this House who was more fully impressed with the idea of the conscientious discharge of his duties to the people. Day and night he was in his seat in the House, and at the committees he was always present. Not only will his family feel the bereavement of his death, but the people of the city which he had the honour to represent will equally feel their loss. This House regrets the departure of one, who, to the utmost of his ability discharged the high duties confided to him.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to inquire about three returns which have been ordered by the House and which have not been brought down. First, the correspondence with regard to the cost of the North-west Territories exhibition, ordered three months ago, and which is necessary in considering the Supplementary Estimates. Second, the census of the North-west Territories, taken by the North-west Mounted Police, ordered two months ago, and which is important with regard to the Bill introduced by the Minister of the Interior; and thirdly, a return ordered on the 17th February last, for the cost of land conveyance of mails in British Columbia since confederation.

Mr. DALY. The North-west census return was brought down weeks and weeks ago.

Mr. MARTIN. I have not been able to find it in Mr. Polkinghorne's office.

Mr. FOSTER. I am just writing a note to inquire about the expenditure in connection with the North-west exhibition.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I shall ascertain, and let the hon. gentleman know tomorrow, with reference to his question on the British Columbia mails. I am under the impression that the Deputy Minister told me it would take a long time to prepare.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. McCARTHY. When the Bill in my name with reference to the Dominion Elections Act was up for second reading, the Minister of Justice said he would examine it and would possibly put it on the Government Orders. Since that, the Bill was referred to a select committee who have reported it, and, as it is a Bill which is required in view of the approaching elections, I trust the Government will see that they will facilitate its passage.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The question will be considered, and the Government will be able to state to-morrow what action they propose to take upon it.

THE ARMENIAN OUTRAGES.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the leader of the House, whether he will take over in the name of the Government, the motion with regard to the Armenian outrages. I apprehend there will be no debate upon it, and I believe it to be desirable that we should pass this resolution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would be very glad, indeed, to endeavour to comply with the hon. gentleman's request, if the House, by common consent, would accept the resolution. As I have already stated, the Government have great sympathy with the resolution of the hon. gentleman, and if it were taken by common consent, I have no objection at all to the Government placing it in a position to be considered.

Mr. CHARLTON. For myself, I would not propose to speak to it, and I think none of my friends would do so. I simply wish the resolution placed upon record, and I think it highly desirable that it should be done.

SUPPLY—THE SOULANGES CANAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, some two or three weeks ago, I moved for the correspondence and papers in connection with the contracts for sections 4, 5, 6, 7 and 12 of the Soulanges Canal. These papers were brought down, and they involve questions of very great importance. I propose before the House goes into Supply, to call the attention of the House and of the country to some facts in connection therewith. Of late years, we have got into a system in Canada with respect to the voting of money for the construction of public works, and with respect to the expenditure of that money, which is calculated to very seriously injure the best interests of the country. It has become a common thing for Ministers to propose a vote for the construction of a large public work, and to let the House vote the money under the assurance that the greatest care has been taken in the preparation of the estimate, and that the amount appropriated will approximately, at any rate, be what is required. However, experience has shown us that either through gross carelessness on the part of the officers charged with the preparation of the estimates, or gross carelessness, and sometimes criminal carelessness in the carrying out of the works, the amount voted by the House forms but a small proportion of the actual cost which the country has afterwards to pay. I have ventured the assertion that the repeated incidents of this kind that have occurred of late years have grown to the magnitude of a public scandal. Not a week has gone by since, in answer to questions put by hon. members on this side of the House, official statements were given by the Government of the estimates and expenditures in connection with five or six of these large public works; and I would just ask the House for a moment to pause with me while I read the official report of those estimates and expenditures. I do it to draw the attention of the House, if I can, to the grave importance of the point I am endeavouring to accentuate, in the hopes that when I come to submit the facts which I have drawn from these papers, they will get more than ordinary attention. We had the construction of the Little Rapids Locks, for which the estimate was $45,000, while the expenditure reached the enormous sum of $255,000. We had the Galops Canal, for which the contract price was $312,000, and the sum of $629,630 was actually paid. We had the St. Charles Branch Railway, for which the estimated cost of the expropriated lands necessary for the construction of the work was $228,800, and the actual amount expended, $909,336. The estimated cost of the railway works built on that land was $327,000, and the actual amount expended was $822,272; so that the total estimate of land damages and works together amounted to $566,000, while the actual expenditure reached the enormous sum of $1,732,238. We had the Langevin Block, in the city of Ottawa, right under the shadow of the Parliament buildings, the estimated cost of which was put at $440,000, and the actual cost of which has reached $727,000.

Mr. MULOCK. Seven hundred and seventy-two thousand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My hon. friend reminds me that the total cost was $772,000, but that embraces $52,000 for fitting the building up, and I exclude that altogether, because it was not in the original estimate. I confine myself to the cost of the building itself, and the excuse offered from time to time to Parliament is, I believe, that that was caused by the fact that the specifications did not contain an estimate for the roof at all. And in addition to the actual cost of $727,000, we have an outstanding claim against the Government, and still unpaid, of $295,000. Then, we had the Curran Bridge, the estimated cost of which was $223,000, and for which we actually paid $405,000, and we have an outstanding claim still to meet of $79,000. I have said that these official facts and figures, which have been given to this House within the last week or two, justify my statement that the appropriation and expenditure of public money for the construction of public works have grown in the last few years to the gravity of a huge public scandal. This Parliament spent its first session in investigating the alleged frauds in connection with the construction of the Quebec Harbour Works, the Lévis Docks and the Esquimault Docks; and it was proven conclusively in evidence that many hundreds of thousands of dollars were permitted to be stolen from the public exchequer and passed over to the contractors, and disbursed by them—some portions in debauching the electors, and others for their own private purposes. The result of this was that the Canadian name of which we had been previously so proud was dragged in the dust; and our good name and good fame became a public scandal and almost a public disgrace. It therefore behooves us to watch carefully the contracts which are now being carried out; and it having been brought to my knowledge that there was a possibility—nay, a probability—of a very grave scandal, indeed, in connection with the construction of sections 4, 5, 6, 7 and 12 of the Soulanges Canal, I thought it my duty to move for the papers in this House, and to have them brought down, in order that the matter might be fairly laid before the House, and that such explanations as the Government deemed necessary might be placed beside the statements I propose to make. The contract, as I have said, was to build sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the canal. It was entered into on the 9th day of May, 1893, and it was to be completed by the 31st day of October, 1894. I need hardly say to the House—for that is a matter of every-day occurrence—that the contract was not completed according to its terms, nor was any effort made, so far as I have been able to gather from the papers, to compel the contractor to perform his contract according to the terms.

Mr. LISTER. Who was the contractor ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The contractor is a Mr. George Goodwin, of the city of Ottawa; I do not know anything about the gentleman, except by name. The contract was for the excavation and the construction of those sections of the canal. A part of the contract required him to excavate the canal, and to dispose of the material which he got in the manner described by the contract. at some 20 cents per yard. The contract also provided that in places where the level of the water for the canal was higher than the adjoining banks, there should be built water-tight embankments to prevent the water overflowing the adjoining land ; and that for that portion of the excavation which was placed on the water-tight embankments. the contractors should be paid, besides the 20 cents for excavation, an additional sum of 15 cents per yard. The contract also provided that the surplus excavation taken from the bed of the canal should be disposed of in the manner pointed out by the engineer in charge, and the engineer in charge. following the strict lines of the contract. directed the contractor to place the surplus material, after he had built up the water-tight embankments. on the outside of the water-tight embankments. The manner in which they were to be built. and the manner in which the excavated material was to be united with the land on which it was placed. were all definitely provided for in the contract. In the first place, the top soil was to be removed, the land was to be mucked and ploughed up, and a good union made between the subsoil and the excavation placed upon it. The breadth of this was to be fixed by the engineer, the slopes of the water-tight embankment were to be fixed by the engineer, and the breadth of the top surface, so that everything seemed. on the face of the contract, to be clearly and accurately defined. I merely wish to state generally what the claim made on behalf of the contractor. and which the Government are about to concede—which, in point of fact, they have conceded—is. The contractor claims not only that he shall be paid 20 cents for the excavation out of the canal. and not only 15 cents for that portion of the excavation which went to form the water-tight embankment. but also 15 cents per yard for that special portion of the excavation not required in the water-tight embankment and which was placed by the engineer on the back or other side of this embankment. In other words that in addition to being paid an extra 15 cents for that portion of the excavation which was to be permitted to be put into the water-tight embankment, he was to be paid the same for that portion put behind it. You will find that the contract does not permit him to put in the water-tight embankment any sod, roots. or material of that kind. He was to be permitted simply to put in the soil itself, and the soil was to have all these things taken ont of it. But the top soil which he took out from the space to be covered by the water-tight embankment and also the sand and porous material which he took up from the bottom of the canal, were parts of the surface which were thrown over into the embankment behind the water-tight embankment. The amount of the claim which the contractor makes for the payment of 15 cents for that material. represents, on his own contract, the sum of $210,000, while the similar contracts all along the canal containing similar provisions, will, if similar claims are made and yielded to,—and of course if they are yielded to in this case they must be in the others—involve an expenditure, as stated by the engineer of from $500,000 to $750,000. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is not a mere trumpery trivial matter, but a matter, the decision of which necessarily involves an expenditure of Government money of not less than half a million dollars, and which, in the opinion of the engineer in charge and his assistants, will probably represent three-quarters of a million dollars. Therefore we are justified in devoting ourselves carefully to the consideration of the contract and the facts with it to see whether or not there is any foundation for this claim at all. I regret that the duty which I am about to discharge will involve my reading a portion of those papers. I wish generally to call the attention of the committee, so that they may understand the trend of my argument as I go along, to certain broad facts in connection with this scheme. The first one is that the engineer in charge of the work, Mr. Monro, a skilled engineer of great repute in this country, I am told, although he is personally unknown to me, a man, I am told of unblemished character and standing very high in his profession ;—denounced the claim of the contractor, to use his own language,—as preposterous. The assistant engineers of the chief engineer in charge, Messrs. Allison, Coutlee and McNaughton, each submitted a report against the validity of the claim. The chief engineer of railways, after considering the contract itself and the report of the engineer in chief who had charge, and the report of the several sub-engineers, reported against the validity of the claim, and said he had no doubt whatever. The whole matter was referred. at the instance of Mr. Goodwin, the contractor. to the Department of Justice in 1894. At that time the late Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice. In March, 1894, at the instance of Mr. Goodwin, the claim he was preferring against the Railway Department and all the papers were referred to the Department of Justice for its legal opinion. and Sir John Thompson—I presume it was he—the opinion is given as that of the Minister of Justice—reported, after considering the matter. adversely to the claim. Sir, the contractor was not satisfied with the report of the engineer in charge of the work, backed up by the sub-engineers, endorsed by the chief engineer, and reviewed and endorsed by the Minister of Justice and his deputy, Mr. Newcombe, but he pressed again and again upon the department the reconsideration of his claim. He asked to have the special engineers examined. They were examined and cross-examined by himself, and he had the examination and the cross-examination of the sub-engineers referred to the Department of Justice, at that time presided over by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). That hon. gentleman wrote to the Department of Railways stating that the Department of Justice would only decide the law after the facts had been finally determined by the Department of Railways, and the fact which the hon. gentleman specially wished to know was whether the material in the back embankment, lying behind the water-tight embankment, could be said to be a part of the water-tight embankment. There were two answers given to that. One was given by a gentleman who signed himself the acting law clerk of the Railway Department, Mr. Doull. He reported that it was not part of the water-tight embankment, and he said I report this, as a juror, after examining the evidence taken and the cross-examination. The matter went from the acting law clerk to the department to Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer, and he united his verdict with that of the acting law clerk, by saying that it did not form part of the embankment. So that we had in addition to all these things which I have recited, winding up with the opinion of Sir John Thompson, the fact determined by the Department of Railways that this excavated material, for which the claim was made, was not a part of the water-tight embankment. Now, if that fact was truly found, of course, there was not a shadow of a claim under the contract at all. Now, what have we upon the other side? The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), the ex-Minister of Justice, resigned his position as such, on the 7th January last. On the 15th January my hon. friend (Mr. Dickey) was appointed Minister of Justice. And in the meantime the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) was acting Minister of Justice.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman makes a mistake; I was not acting as Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Daly) was acting Minister.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) For the purpose of my argument, it is just the same. Between the 7th and the 15th January some member of the Ministry was acting as Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Your point is that I was out.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was out on the 7th, and the present Minister was not sworn in until the 15th, and between those dates there was an acting Minister of Justice. After the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) was sworn in as Minister of Justice——

Mr. DICKEY. After?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes; on the 15th January, the Deputy Minister writes to the department, saying that the ex-Minister of Justice, before going out, had verbally told him that the claim should be allowed. And upon that verbal opinion of the ex-Minister, reported second-hand by the Deputy Minister, and signed by the deputy and not by the Minister, this department was asked and assented to the proposition—assented, mind you, to the proposition—that it should reverse the reiterated opinion of the chief engineer, the opinion solemnly given from time to time by the sub-engineers the reasoned opinion of Sir John Thompson in March, 1894, and the opinion of Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer of railways and canals, and scatter them all to the winds. I contend, Sir, and I say it respectfully, that the Department of Railways and Canals was not justified in accepting a short note from the Deputy Minister, saying that the ex-Minister, before he had gone out, had verbally intimated to him that he had a certain opinion on this matter—a casual opinion. I do not care whether it was a casual opinion or one he had thought out. There was no reasoned opinion, no opinion signed by the ex-Minister. It was reported to the department that the ex-Minister had ceased to be Minister, and, if they had desired to reverse the reasoned opinion given by Sir John Thompson and his deputy, and concurred in by all the experts in the department and on the canal, the least they could have done was to get a reasoned opinion from the out-going Minister, assented to by the responsible Minister of the department of that day. But, Sir, I have stated generally that, so far as the papers show, no opinion whatever has been given by the present Minister of Justice, nor is there any opinion found here signed by the ex-Minister, nor was there any opinion given, as far as I can judge, from the acting Minister of Justice, from the 7th to the 15th January. Now, before I go into the papers more in detail, I conclude my general summary of the subject by saying that the Auditor General was instructed by the Department of Railways to reverse the decisions and judgments of these responsible people and pay off this $220,000. He refused. He submitted the case to independent counsel in Toronto, Mr. Lash, ex-Minister of Justice.

Mr. McCARTHY. You say the Department of Railways directed the Auditor General to allow that amount?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Deputy Minister of Justice sends this short note I speak of to the Department of Railways and Canals. The Department of Railways and Canals, upon that, make up fresh measurements and certified them, and sent them to the Auditor General, saying that these additional measurements were made up and sent pursuant to the opinion of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. McCARTHY. And not certified by the engineer ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They are signed by the chief engineer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) As chief engineer of the work, but only conditionally, and because he was ordered by the chief engineer of the department. I understand my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) to ask whether the engineer in charge under the contract certified. He has certified, but conditionally as I have said, and the only certificate to the Auditor General is one from the Department of Railways, sending in a new and additional estimate said to be sent in pursuance of the opinion of the Minister of Justice. Then the Auditor General asked for the papers, and received them. He forwarded all the papers to independent counsel, and I may tell the hon. Minister that the Auditor General's Act authorizes the Auditor General to employ independent counsel in matters of this kind in order that the interest of the public may be safeguarded. Well, Sir, he got an opinion from Mr. Lash, which, before I sit down, I shall have the honour of reading—a carefully reasoned opinion, agreeing with that of Sir John Thompson, with that of Mr. Schreiber, with that of Mr. Monro, the chief engineer, with that of everybody else except that of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who is reported by Mr. Newcombe as having expressed himself as wholly of a contrary opinion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear. But perhaps the hon. gentleman will misunderstand that "Hear, hear." I do not agree with the way the hon. gentleman has put that, that Mr. Newcombe reported that I held a contrary opinion to that of Sir John Thompson.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not in those words.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But he expressed my opinion, undoubtedly. I shall argue that there was no contrary opinion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I shall read the opinion, and the House will have to judge between us. Now, having given that outline, sufficiently definite and lucid, I hope, to enable the House to understand the papers, I propose to ask the attention of such hon. members as will favour me while I call attention to the more prominent facts to be found in these papers. I will first call attention to the contract and the specification attached to it. My quotation from these papers will be very short. The contract provides—4th section :

> The several parts of this contract shall be taken together to explain one another and make the whole consistent, and the specification is made part of the contract.

> There will be only two classes of excavations recognized or paid for, viz. : Earth or solid rock.
> No allowance whatever beyond the prices tendered for excavation will be made for haul. The surplus material arising from the prism set on section No. 7t, shall, after making up the banks on that section, be carried forward to widen the embankments of sections to the eastward ; and the surplus on section No. 6 shall be dealt with in the same manner, so that all the excavations rising from the sections embraced in this contract west of lock No. 5 will be disposed of in making the embankments on each side of the summit level between stations 180 and 460 ; filling around the various structures, &c. This distribution of material to be made as will be directed by the chief engineer without entitling the contractor to any extra allowance whatever. The attention of parties tendering is specially drawn to this section of the specification.

Now, I call the attention of the House to this section referring to excavations generally, and the disposition of the excavated material generally. Now I come down to section 11, which specially relates to the water-tight embankment. I call special attention to it, because it is upon its meaning and terms that the validity of the claim largely depends.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thought the hon. gentleman was reading from the specifications of the contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The contract provided that the specifications should be part of it. This is section 11 :

> Wherever the surface level of the water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top soil must be removed for such width and depth as may be considered necessary to form the embankment seats. The material arising from this mucking to be deposited where pointed out. It will be paid for as ordinary earth excavation. The seats shall also be well roughed up with plough so as to make good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment. Puddle walls or cut-offs to be made where required—the puddle to be prepared and laid on as specified hereafter.
> When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and approved—and not till then—the banks shall be carried up in layers of selected material of about eight inches in thickness, well spread—the lumps broken—watered—trodden down, or otherwise compacted, and carefully shaped to the heights and slopes given by the engineer.

> Only such portions of the embankments as shall be laid out by the engineer and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specification, will be paid for as earth in water-tight banks.

Now, the hon. gentleman will see that this specification carefully and specially provides for the class of material which should be used in the water-tight embankment; it specially provides as to the foundations on which the water-tight embankments were to be built. They were to be prepared of such width and depth that there might be a proper union between the sub-soil and the excavated material put upon it. One would not imagine that, upon an ordinary reading of this section, there could arise the possibility of doubt, but the contractor says: Not only am I to be paid for the water-tight embankment which I build as a superstructure upon that foundation so prepared, but I am to be paid extra for the very stuff which I take out and which cannot be used as a water-tight embankment, and which I throw over to the back of it—the waste material; I am to be paid for the surplus of excavated material which I take out of the canal, which is not required for the water-tight embankment, and which I also throw over. Now, there is the whole claim, $210,000, 20 cents a yard for excavation, 15 cents additional for the water-tight embankment and the spoil bank in its rear. The dispute is about the 15 cents. The 20 cents was to cover everything excavated, except the portion put in the water-tight embankment.

Mr. MULOCK. He claims 15 cents for the rejected material.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is not a proper term, the surplus material not required for the water-tight embankment.

Mr. McCARTHY. The waste.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It could be put alongside the water-tight embankment, or it could be put anywhere else.

Mr. GILLMOR. He claims 35 cents for what he argeed to do for 20 cents.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes, he claims that. Now, that is all I deem it necessary to read to the House from the contract, excepting the schedules of prices in the contract. Those two schedules are 4 and 5, and are found on page 26 of the papers: "Earth excavation by cubic yard, 20 cents; earth in water-tight embankments, 15 cents." So that it would appear at first sight, and appears to me, after a very lengthy examination into the whole matter, that there could not be any reasonable doubt about it. I do not mean to say the hon. gentleman may not show that there is a reasonable doubt, but, so far as I have gone, I cannot find any room for reasonable doubt. Now, let me go on and read that part of it. The contractor entered upon his contract, and he was not proceeding very well, and the engineer called the attention time and again of the Department of Railways to the fact that the contractor was scamping his work, doing the easy part, and leaving the heavy part undone, with the intention of throwing the heavy part upon the Government afterwards. Now, on 3rd November, 1893, Mr. Monro writes:

> Mr. George Goodwin has a very large force engaged in doing all the easy work on sections Nos. 4 and 5. This is what is usually termed "skinning the job." The excavation taken out to date is about 230,000 cubic yards, which probably costs a little more than half the contract prices. That is to say, he is rushing through the inexpensive part of these sections which were grouped together to get an average price and ensure the hauling forward of the material at the west end. The masonry is untouched also, and the long hauls avoided. Of course it will follow that whatever profit can be squeezed out will go into Goodwin's pockets, and when the work has to be relet it will cost more to the Government than if it had been let to a reliable man at fair all round prices. You will see at a glance that some of the masonry prices are absurdly low, and as there is not in my mind the least chance of the contractor finishing the work, it is manifestly unfair that he should be permitted to continue his present tactics. However, the season will soon close down now and the matter must be settled one way or another. Your attention is particularly drawn to this part of my report.

Now, he followed that up on 15th November by another letter to the chief engineer:

> Sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, Goodwin has now the principal part of his force of scrapers engaged on section 5 (east end) and he continues to do the easy part of the work of this contract as previously intimated. I do not think it is at all fair that this should be permitted and a reduction will be made in the excavation price in the next progress estimate, because this price was intended to cover the cost of the excavation and completion of the earth work of these sections as a whole, including, of course, these portions of 5, 6 and 7 where the hauls are long and the material is heavy blue clay, which will be obviously much more expensive to remove than that which he is at present scraping out. This seems to be the only equitable course to follow in such a peculiar case. The diminished rate should be made to correspond with the relative value of the work done.

That is the report of the engineer. I may remark that a portion of these papers related to the claim made in respect to blue clay, and it was rejected by the department, and I do not propose to take it into the discussion. We are keeping to the one point only. Now, Mr. Speaker, that was the report made by the engineer, and on this I wish to say nothing more than a passing remark, that I cannot find in the papers that this very proper discharge of his duty by the chief engineer was taken any notice of at all in the department. If it was, the papers brought down failed to show that any notice was taken by the department of this skimming and scamping by the contractor. I call the attention of the House to the report made by Mr. Schreiber, on November 27th, 1893, in which he said :

> With respect to the material to form water-tight embankments, this work is being carried on and is being paid for in accordance with the terms of contract, which I can see no reason to disturb.
> With respect to the lock and bridge masonry to which he refers, for which his price is $12 per cubic yard, I may explain this is all face cut stone Ashlar, and what Mr. Goodwin proposes is that instead of the backing being of concrete, he shall be allowed to build it of masonry and receive $12 per cubic yard. Such a course, it appears to me, would be an unsafe one, establishing a precedent difficult to contend with in the future, and whilst I cannot recommend the acceptance of any of his propositions, I am strongly of opinion that in his present feeble state of health, he will not be able to give the work the necessary attention to enable it to be carried through to completion satisfactory and in a reasonable time, and for that reason, I firmly believe that it would be in the public interest, if possible, to relieve him of his contract.

That was the report made by Mr. Schreiber to the secretary on a memorandum submitted by Mr. Goodwin. He concurs in the opinion that the engineer is right in the measurement he allowed in measurements for surplus material thrown at the back of the water-tight embankment. The contractor has drawn up a long memorial to the department, in which he made several propositions, among them, 1, to be allowed to resign the contract ; 2, to be paid increased prices if the contract was carried out. This was not done for some reason. I call the attention of the House to the fact that in that letter of Mr. Schreiber he gives his adhesion to the construction of the contract placed upon it by Engineer Monro. On December 4, Mr. Monro further reports as follows :—

> Engineer's Office,
> Coteau Landing, P.Q., 4th Dec., 1893.
> In the progress report addressed to you on the 15th ult., I state that Mr. Goodwin continues to do the easy part of the work of his contract for sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, and that a " reduction will be made in the excavation price in the next progress estimate, because this price was intended to cover " the earth work of these sections as a whole, including, of course, those portions of 5, 6 and 7 where the hauls are long and the material is heavy blue clay, &c., &c.
> On this point I beg to refer to paragraph 7, page 2, of the specification for these sections, to which the attention of parties tendering is specially drawn.
> As the contractor has expressed to me his intention of not proceeding further with this work until some " understanding " is arrived at, I deem it proper to ask for your instructions in this matter before sending a progress estimate for the month of November.
> Your obedient servant,
> (Sd.) THOMAS MONRO,
> M. Inst. C. E.
> To Collingwood Schreiber, Esq.,
> Chief Engineer, Canals,
> Ottawa, Ont.

On December 6 he follows up with a further letter, as follows :—

> Coteau Landing, 6th Dec., 1893.
> Sections 4, 5, 6 and 7.
> As stated in my last report it was my intention (in view of the facts) to reduce the price of the earth work as returned in the October estimate. This so far consists of the cheapest portion of the excavation—all the long hauls and heavy clay being avoided. The contractor does not, I believe, intend to go on with the work until some understanding is arrived at. He evidently seems to think his contract of no effect. He should, in my opinion, be summarily dealt with and an example be given through him that agreements of this nature cannot be thrown aside with impunity. As instructed by you I have returned, subject to revision hereafter the excavation referred to at its full price pending some arrangement for pushing on the work and by which the specification will be properly carried out.
> Your obedient servant,
> (Sd.) THOMAS MONRO,
> M. Inst. C. E.
> To Collingwood Schreiber, Esq.,
> Chief Engineer, Canals,
> Ottawa, Ont.

So we see that up to the end of December the contractor was not only skimming and scamping the work, but he was trying to get out of the contract. On February 16th, the next step was taken by the department, and it was to make a reference to the Department of Justice. On page 2 of that communication is the following :—

> Mr. Goodwin claims that " as the specification stated that all the excavation would be used in making up the embankments " he expected, when he tendered for the work, that he would be paid for the whole of it at both rates, viz. : 20 cents per yard for the excavation and 15 cents per yard for the embankments. He has deposited for embankments above the surface level of the water in the canal a quantity of material in excess of the amount which, in the opinion of the engineer, is required to form water-tight embankments, and his claim is that he should be paid for all such surplus material deposited. He says, " so long as the material from the excavation is disposed of as directed, no matter how wide the embankment may be made, the full width should be paid for."
> Mr. Goodwin's contestation is that clause 7 of the specification bears out his claim. This clause reads as follows :—" No allowance whatever beyond the prices tendered for excavation will be made for haul. The surplus material arising from the prism, &c., on section No. 7, shall, after making up the banks on that section, be carried forward to widen the embankments > of sections to the eastward ; and the surplus on section No. 6 shall be dealt with in the same manner, so that all the excavations arising from the sections embraced in this contract west of Lock No. 5, will be disposed of in making the embankments on each side of the summit level between stations 180 and 460 ; filling around the various structures, &c. This distribution of material to be made as will be directed by the engineer without entitling the contractor to any extra allowance whatever. The attention of parties tendering is specially drawn to this section of the specification.

> It appears to the department that under the wording of the above section the contractor is required to deposit for filling and widening purposes, but without "extra allowance," the material excavated, but that under the clauses relating to water-tight embankments a portion of such material, if laid down in a manner prescribed, may be entitled to the special rate of 15 cents.
> Be pleased to advise whether the contract wording coincides with Mr. Goodwin's interpretation, or with that of the department.

I call attention to the fact that the Department of Justice, at the time presided over by Sir John Thompson, gave an opinion based on these statements of the Department of Railways. Mr. Schreiber, at that time, appears to have changed his opinion. He previously had agreed with Engineer Monro

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is that letter signed by the secretary of the department ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The phrase is, "it appears to the department." Mr. Schreiber had previously given his own opinion that the contention could not be sustained. What was the opinion of the Department of Justice on this subject ? It was given on 28th February, 1894. The reply acknowledged the receipt of the communication ; it then recites the contractor's claim and the sections of the contract and specification, which I have already read. After these quotations the letter goes on to say :

> If I correctly apprehend the facts of the case it would appear that the engineer has found it necessary to have water-tight embankments and has so directed—that he has laid out such embankments under the terms of the specifications quoted, and that as to the embankment built upon the site located by the engineer there is no objection to pay Mr. Goodwin the specified prices of 20 cents per cubic yard for earth excavation, and 15 cents additional per cubic yard for earth excavation, and 15 cents additional per cubic yard for earth in water-tight embankments. Mr. Goodwin has, however, deposited behind the water-tight embankments so constructed additional material which is not required as part of the water-tight embankment and he claims that inasmuch as he so deposited the additional material under the directions of the engineer he is entitled to be paid therefor, not only the 20 cents for excavation but the additional 15 cents for earth in water-tight embankments. The Minister of Justice is of opinion that the specifications do not admit of the construction contended for by Mr. Goodwin. It is stipulated that the earth excavation shall be formed into embankments, and that the rate of payment allowed for each earth excavation shall cover the cost, not only of excavation but also of hauling and forming into embankments. These are ordinary embankments. Water-tight banks are clearly distinguished in the specification from ordinary embankments, and it is stipulated that only such portions of the embankments as shall be laid out by the engineer and made up in strict accordance with the specification relating to water-tight banks shall be paid for as earth in water-tight banks. The material in question not forming any portion of the embankment laid out and made up under the direction of the engineer as a water-tight bank therefore cannot be brought under the item of earth in water-tight embankments for the purpose of entitling the contractor to the extra 15 cents compensation.

So, Sir, we arrive down to the 20th of February, 1894, with the reasoned opinion given by Sir John Thompson, after considering the facts carefully, that there was no ground whatever for the contractor's contention. One would suppose that that would close the matter, but it did not. There is a persistence on the part of the contractor, which, I suppose, is the result of a very long experience with the department, and he knows that if he wants to get a claim he must keep at it, and that one opinion, or two opinions, or three opinions, or the combined opinion of the chief engineer and the consulting engineer and the Minister of Justice won't stand in the way, if he pegs at it long enough, until he gets the ear of somebody in the long run.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps it depends a little on the time. Political exigencies may come in.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Now, the following spring, we have Mr. Schreiber's letter to Mr. Goodwin, dated the 17th April, 1894, some six months after the engineer had reported, and two months, at least, after the opinion of the Minister of Justice. He says:

> Ottawa, 17th April, 1894.
> G. Goodwin, Esq.,
> Ottawa.
> Dear Sir :
> The superintending engineer reports under date of the 16th instant that the manner in which the works on sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the Soulanges Canal have been conducted and carried on in the past, has been most unsatisfactory ; it appears you have been doing the cream of the work, leaving the most costly work undone, as it is absolutely necessary, now that the working season has opened up, that the work should be vigorously prosecuted, I hereby call upon you to at once proceed vigorously with the work in such a manner that the easy and the more costly work be carried on simultaneously, otherwise the interest of the Government will have to be protected in the monthly progress estimates.
> I shall be glad to hear from you upon receipt of this communication that you are arranging for an immediate prosecution of the work on the lines suggested.
> Yours truly,
> (Sd.) COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER,
> Chief Engineer.

That is all the notice Mr. Schreiber appears to have taken of the report of the engineer, and then we find Mr. Goodwin wrote back asking for a consideration of his case, and the Deputy Minister of Justice writes asking if, in his opinion, he has correctly stated the facts upon which the opinion previously given had been delivered. I had better read that letter, because, in my judgment, it is important. It is as follows:—

15th April, 1895.

With regard to Mr. George Goodwin's claim under his contract for the construction of certain sections of the Soulanges Canal for payment of earth and water-tight banks, I have the honour to inform you that Mr. Goodwin has submitted for the consideration of the Minister an elaborate memorandum (pp. 131—169) putting forward his view of the case, with the statement of his facts and reasons. I observe that by my letter to you of the 28th February last, which at my request has been returned to me for reconsideration, I stated my understanding of the facts as follows :—" It would appear that the engineer had found it necessary to have water-tight embankments and has so directed ; that he has laid out such embankments under the terms of the specification (No. 11 water-tight banks) and that as to the embankment built upon the site located by the engineer there is no objection to pay Mr. Goodwin the specified prices of 20 cents per cubic yard for earth excavation, and 15 cents additional per cubic yard for earth in water-tight embankments. Mr. Goodwin has, however, deposited behind the water-tight embankments, so constructed, additional material which is not required as part of the water-tight embankments."

I understand further that although this additional material, in respect of which Mr. Goodwin claims, was deposited where it is under the direction of the engineer, yet it does not cover any portion of the site laid out by the engineer for water-tight embankments, nor has the material in question been built up as a water-tight embankment under the direction of the engineer in accordance with specification No. 11.

Before dealing with Mr. Goodwin's memorandum, I would like to be informed by your department, whether my understanding of the facts as stated above, is correct, and such as your department is prepared to substantiate, as a matter of fact. If the above statement is not exactly in accordance with the facts, will you be good enough to inform me as to what correction should be made.

Awaiting a reply at your early convenience.

I remain,
Your obedient servant,
(Sd.) E. L. NEWCOMBE,
D.M.J.

That was in the month of April, 1895. Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice, has consented to reopen the case, has received a long memorandum from the contractor, and has asked from the Department of Railways whether, in respect to the facts on which his opinion has been previously based, they concur in the statement he therein makes. Well, Sir, we have the opinion of the department in reply to that, given on the 8th of April. It is as follows :—

8th April, 1895.

I have the honour, by direction, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, stating your understanding of the facts in regard to the claim of Mr. George Goodwin under his contract for the construction of certain sections of the Soulanges Canal for payment of earth in water-tight banks.

In reply I have to inform you that you have stated the case very correctly and to suggest that should you desire it, the superintending engineer, who has charge of the work on the ground, might be summoned to Ottawa, and explain the matter verbally to you.

Be pleased to advise this department if you wish to consult Mr. Monro in connection with this claim.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN H. BALDERSON,
Secretary.

E. L. Newcombe, Esq.,
Deputy Minister, Dept. of Justice.

So that the Department of Justice, which based its opinion upon an assumed state of facts, is told that the facts as they assumed them are correctly stated. What took place then ? The suggested examination was made, and Mr. Schreiber, on the 30th August, writes the following letter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman intend to convey that Mr. Newcombe was not consulted after that suggestion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That may be, but I can find nothing in the papers to show it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As a matter of fact, he was.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I can find nothing in the papers to show that. Before I come to the examination of the engineers, I wish to call the attention of the House to a letter written by Mr. Schreiber to the Minister of Railways on the 13th of August, 1895 :—

According to my reading of the contract, he is only entitled to be paid for that part of the canal bank which was laid out by the engineer, under the specification, for water-tight banks, the full amount of work so done has been returned in the progress estimates.

So that you have the Department of Justice told that they correctly appreciated all the facts upon which they based their judgment ; you have the chief engineer writing to the Minister of Railways and Canals that he fully concurs in the view taken by the chief engineer of the work, that there is nothing at all in the claim that this man Goodwin makes ; and you have the examinations of the assistant engineers under Mr. Monro which were held at the instance of Mr. Goodwin.

Mr. LISTER. Was Mr. Monro examined ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He does not appear himself to have been examined, because he had given his report.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He was at the examination.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He was at the examination, and put some questions; and the examination was taken in the presence of Mr. Goodwin, who cross-examined the witnesses.

Mr. MULOCK. When was that examination?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On September 11th, 1895. Mr. C. R. Coutlee is examined on page 101, as follows :—

Q. How did you lay out this water-tight embankment?—A. A line was laid at 101 feet from the centre, then the canal prism and bank seat were stripped of sod and vegetable mould, and that was carried to the rear of the line 101 feet north and south—then slope stakes were set on the stripped ground for the cutting. That portion between the sloped stakes and the lines 101 feet from the centre was the part designated as water-tight.

Q. Did you put in the stake at the rear of this water-tight bank?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there any bank in the rear of what you call the water-tight bank?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the distance from the centre line of the canal to the rear slope-take of that bank? —A. That was variable, of course.

Q. What was the top of the bank?—A. The front crest of the whole bank as built would be 98 feet from the centre line and the rear crests, respectively, 128 and 148 feet, south and north of the centre line of canal.

Q. That would give the width of the top of the bank?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there any preparations made for the seat of this bank and water-tight embankment?—A. Yes; the sod was stripped from this water-tight bank seat, and after being approved of, either by himself or the chief engineer, the bank seat was roughed by ploughing.

Q. What did you do with the material taken out of the seat of the bank?—A. It was placed in the rear of the line of 101 feet south or north of the centre.

Q. What instructions did you give to the contractor with regard to the stakes—or his agent on the ground?—A. That the ground was to be stripped between these two lines of stakes 101 feet north and south of the centre, and that this bank seat was to be left open for inspection, and when inspected to be roughed by ploughing, and that up on this bank seat, only the best material from the cutting was to be placed, and carried up so as to be of the width of five feet, at high-water mark, on Lake St. Francis.

Q. Did you give these instructions to the contractor himself, or his agent on the ground?—A. To his agent on the ground, Mr. Dawson.

So that you have Mr. Coutlee saying that, in pursuance of the terms of the specifications, he expressly staked out the width of the water-tight embankment, had it ploughed up, had the top sod taken off, and had it roughed, so that there would be a proper union of the material to be placed on it; and everything was done to place beyond the possibility of doubt that it was anything but a proper water-tight embankment for which the foundation had been prepared. There was no possibility of believing that the refuse thrown at the back of a water-tight embankment was a part of the embankment itself.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman does not want to misrepresent the facts. The whole embankment is laid out backward and forward, and it is sloped both ways.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I thought I had stated that clearly. I am pointing out that there could be no possibility of doubt, from what Mr. Coutlee stated, that the express width of the proposed water-tight embankment for which the foundation had been prepared, had been marked out and staked, so that the contractor could make no mistake about it. Then, on page 105, he says :

Q. Do you consider that the embankments are water-tight when finished up in the way that they have been done so far as the work has progressed—that they hold the water?—A. In my opinion the forward portion of the bank is water-tight, but the joint with the rear portion is not water-tight.

Q. You state that the front portion of the embankment is tight—that means that the whole bank is tight?—A. The front portion of the bank is tight.

Then Mr. McNaughton was examined; and any one who wishes to understand the case I would advise to read his evidence on page 107, where he gives a nice sketch, showing how this water-tight embankment was to be built and staked out, thus conveying a better idea of the facts than is done by mere question and answer. He is examined as follows :—

Q. Will you explain how you laid out the water-tight embankments?—A. A certain portion of the bank, 112 feet from the centre line, was mucked and this material was thrown in the rear of the banks.

Q. Was there any other portion of the bank besides the water-tight bank to form the canal bank at this point?—A. The canal banks were laid out 50 feet wide on the top on one side and 30 feet on the other.

Q. Will you explain how the water-tight bank was built? What was the preparation for it and the manner of carrying it out?—A. This portion of the bank was mucked, that is, the sod and vegetable matter were removed.

Q. You were going to state what preparations were made for the forming of the water-tight banks?—A. That portion of the banks 112 feet from the centre line was mucked, and all the vegetable matter was removed, and the material was thrown in the rear of the embankments. Afterwards this space that was mucked was roughed up with the plough, and then the bank was built up with scrapers.

Q. What did you do with the muck that was taken out of the seat of this bank?—A. It was thrown in the rear of the 30 and 50 feet embankments.

So that hon. gentlemen will see that the refuse which was not thought fit to form part of the water-tight embankment was thrown to the rear, and it forms a part of the rear embankment, for which the contractor is claiming the same price as for the water-tight embankment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What was the width of the top of the water-tight embankment ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Five feet.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman any evidence where the width of five feet is given ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not further than the evidence given by Mr. McNaughton and his colleagues.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman has any evidence bearing on that, will he read it ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I cannot read any more than I have given. Mr. McNaughton put in the following sketch, and that sketch will show that the water-tight portion was 5 feet wide at the top and that the whole water-tight embankment and the poriton thrown in the rear of it is 50 feet wide at the top in some places and at other places 30 feet. The water-tight embankment is not a variable width but is but 5 feet all along. The other is variable depending on the quantity of spoiled material thrown over.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not, I am reading from the evidence.

Mr. HAGGART. You read it all about the slopes of the stakes being different in width. That is on account of the irregularity of the grade. You do not understand it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand it thoroughly. I have enough practical and technical knowledge to understand this evidence, and it is so plain you cannot go astray. I suppose the engineer understood it, and he has stated it so plainly that there can be no mistake about it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The bank on the top is on one side 30 feet and on the other side 50 feet.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The width of the bank cannot have the slightest effect on the construction of the contract. I had better read :

> Were all the embankments of 50 feet in width on it ? Both embankments, 50 and 30 feet wide—were they made in accordance with this specification ? This specification described water-tight banks. I ask whether these embankments, 30 and 50 feet wide, were made up as water-tight embankments in accordance with the specification ?—A. No.

There is the evidence of the other engineers on which I cannot lay my hands and which coincides with what I have read.

On the 17th September, 1895, the then Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) writes to Mr. Haggart inclosing the evidence of the engineers, parts of which I have read, informing the Railway Department that he cannot undertake to enter into a dispute between the engineers and Mr. Goodwin. He said :

> The duty of reporting upon the facts in a matter of this kind seems to me to devolve upon your chief engineer, and I would venture to suggest that your chief engineer should satisfy himself as to the conclusions, and upon communicating this conclusion to my department, no time will be lost in giving an opinion as to their legal effect.

Then Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper writes another letter on the same day :

> My dear Haggart :
> Referring to my letter of this date on the subject of Mr. Goodwin's claim, I would like to add that while I refer to the chief engineer, you will understand, I hope, I do not mean chief engineer as distinguished from yourself ; of course the head of the department or his responsible officer will suit that purpose.
> The question of fact in dispute upon which I would like to know your decision arose upon a statement made by Mr. Monro, one of your engineers, to the effect that portions of the embankment were not laid out by the engineer, nor made up in accodance with the specifications with regard to earth in water-tight banks.
> What I desire to be informed is :
> First. Whether these portions of the embankments with respect to which disputes arose were laid out by the engineer.
> Second. Whether these portions were made up in accordance with the specifications with regard to earth in water-tight banks.
> Third. Whether these portions were made up as required and directed by the engineer in charge.

With regard to the first question there never was a shadow of doubt, so far as I can see, from the papers at all. The engineer in charge not only laid out the water-tight embankment but the size of the other embankment—how far they were to go out. And the hon. gentleman has sent to him a letter from Mr. Doull, the acting law clerk, in which, on the crucial question, he said :

> Whether these portions were made up in accordance with the specifications with regard to earth in water-tight banks ?
> My answer is they were not. The top soil was not removed to form the embankment seat. These portions were not well ploughed so as to make good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment. Nor were these portions laid out by the engineer and made up in strict accordance with the specification.

So that the hon. gentleman had the reply there that they were not. On the 2nd October, Mr. Schreiber follows that up with the following letter, also containing a sketch explanatory of the matter :—

> To the first question I say : The portions of the embankment in respect to which the dispute has arisen, were laid out by the engineer in the following manner.

Here Mr. Schreiber gave a sketch :

To the second I say :

These portions were not made up in accordance with the specification with regard to earth in water-tight banks. They were made up as follows :—

The muck or surface earth was taken from the seat of the portion marked on sketch as water-tight bank, and cast into the rear portion of the canal bank, the remaining portion required to make up the canal bank, was the same class of material as that used to form what is shown as water-tight bank on sketch, and according to the statements of the engineers in immediate charge of those sections, there was only a slight difference made in forming each part of the embankment, except as regards the mucking and roughing up the seat of the portion shown on sketch as water-tight bank, and the using of the vegetables and other porous matter in the rear portion of the canal bank.

So that Mr. Schreiber reports that the vegetable and porous matter was not used or allowed to be used in the water-tight portion and that the base or foundation of the water-tight portion was mucked and prepared to receive the water-tight clay upon it and the other was not—the only distinction which one would suppose would exist between a water-tight embankment and a portion not water-tight. I call attention for the moment to these facts. The department is answered, they got their information, and everything is in favour of the opinion they had previously given, and on the 4th September, 1895, Mr. Monro makes a report to Mr. Schreiber on this contract. I shall have to ask the House to bear with me while I read that report :

Soulanges Canal, Engineer's Office,
4th September, 1895.

Sir,—I beg to reply to your letter of the 27th ult., as follows :—

I presume that the following extract from page 2 of the specification empowers me to discriminate as to what portion of the canal embankment on section numbers 4, 5, 6 and 7 shall be made and paid for as water-tight bank. Namely :

Water-tight banks, wherever the surface level of the water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top sill must be removed for such width and depth as may be considered necessary to form the embankment seats. The material arising from this mucking to be deposited where pointed out. It will be paid for as ordinary earth excavation. The seats shall also be well roughed up with a plough so as to make good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment. Puddle walls or cut-offs to be made where required—the puddle to be prepared and laid as specified hereafter.

When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and approved—and not till then—the bank shall be carried up in layers of selected material, of about eight inches in thickness, well spread—the lumps broken—watered—trodden down or otherwise compacted, and carefully shaped to the heights and slopes given by the engineer.

Only such portions of the embankments as shall be laid out by the engineer, and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specification, will be paid for as "earth and water-tight banks."

After reading it over and over again, I have not been able to see where the doubt comes in.

Mr. LISTER. There is no doubt.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Let us get the answer. I have no wish to prejudge the case. But so far I have been unable to see where the doubt comes. Mr. Monro goes on :

Acting under this behalf I gave my assistants instructions which were varied to suit the conditions of each case ; the embankment dimensions being as described in their replies to my query on this subject hereto appended.

From these it will be seen :

1st. Only part of the inner sides of the embankments next to the canal prism were laid out for water-tight banks.

2nd. Only over the portion intended as seats for water-tight embankment was the surface soil, &c., removed. This obviously limited the extent of water-tight embankment as it is clear that no bank could hold water if built on a permeable stratum or foundation.

3rd. The vegetable soil, sand, roots, &c., which were removed from the front of the embankments in order to afford a water-tight seat for those portions which I considered necessary to be water-tight, was thrown into the rear of the embankments, which are therefore more or less spoil-banks. The subjoined sketches show this.

It is, I understand, claimed by the contractor for sections 4, 5 and 7 that the additional price of 15 cents per cubic yard which under the specification applies only to the water-tight portions of the embankments ordered by me and so executed should be paid for all embankments on the sections whether water-tight or not. The money effects of this would be roughly as follows :—

Cost of excavation under the contract, say, 2,000,000 yards at 20c.	$400,000
Cost of excavation under the contract, say, 600,000 water-tight at 15c.	90,000
If paid for as claimed then, say, 20,000,000 at 35c.	$700,000
Difference in favour of Goodwin, say..	210,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In that calculation he takes all the banks, whether water-tight or not, aside from this particular question, where the bank was run along above the margin of the canal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He is showing what the difference is between the claim made and the claim Mr. Goodwin would be entitled to make.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He says : "For all embankments, whether water-tight or not."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He goes on to say :

That is to say, the Government would have to pay the contractor $210,000 for alleged work which was neither necessary to be done—nor was it done—or ordered to be done.

> If such a preposterous demand as this were entertained on these sections there would be no reason why other contractors should not be similarly dealt with. This would result in the canal costing from one-half to three-quarters of a million dollars more than my estimate for earth excavation, whilst in my humble opinion not a shadow of valid excuse could be given for such a course.
> In this connection let me draw your attention again to the fact that the work on sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 is almost at a standstill, whilst the contractor for these sections is practically a defaulter on section 12 of this canal, which has been abandoned by him since the fall of 1893.

This is one of the most terrible indictments ever drawn against a contractor, but the contractor appears to have been taken under the shelter of the department from time to time. Now, we have attached to this, and I have to read these also in order to make the claim complete, the statements of the engineers under Mr. Monro. The first is Mr. Allison, of Coteau Landing. He gives a sketch of the water-tight embankment, and spoil-banks at the back, and goes on :

> Where there was a surplus of good material, the mucking was laid out to clear the 1 to 1 back slope. In building the banks, the water-tight part was built up in thin layers of the best material. The back part included the mucked material from the east of the water-tight bank, &c., the surface material from the canal excavation. It was made up in heavy or shallow dumps.
> East of the River Rough, on section 10 (and for a short distance on section 9) it was necessary owing to scarcity of material, to build up the water-tight portion first ; and a back slope of 1½ to 1 was used to prevent danger of slides until the rear portions should be built. The mucking was taken out to the slope stakes for this 1½ to 1 slope ; but only that material placed in front of the 1 to 1 slope has been returned as water-tight bank, because the contractor was permitted to put lumpy and otherwise doubtful material close to the back of the bank.

The next is Mr. Coutlee, who says :

> I have the honour to state in reply to your memorandum of 31st August, that the area over which water-tight bank was ordered to be built on sections 1 and 2, 3 and 4, extended from the edge of the cutting to a line 101 feet from canal centre. This area was cleaned of surface soil which was deposited on the sod in rear of water-tight bank seat.
> This seat was generally left uncovered for your personal inspection and when approved it was roughed up by ploughing. Only material free from sods, roots, &c., was allowed to be laid over this seat, and particular care was taken with the bonding of the first layers with the natural ground. Objectionable material was ordered to be deposited in the rear portions of the spoil-banks. Stakes defining the rear limit of the water-tight bank seat, were set out and marked “ bank seat.” Verbal instructions regarding the top width and height of water-tight banks were frequently given to managers and foremen on the work, and no instances occurred of special pains being taken with banks, by misunderstandings, in rear of the line laid down, nor was the sod or top soil ever removed in rear of this line, nor was roughing up by ploughing ever resorted to outside of the rear of the water-tight bank seat.

Mr. McNaughton gives a similar sketch and says :

> The general method was to first muck those portions of the embankment seat where it was intended that water-tight embankments should be made. The material arising from this was thrown into the rear of the banks and the surface soil was not removed, there being no intention of making the rear of those banks water-tight.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, apart from this question, whether he thinks the banks were water-tight or not ?

Mr. DAVIES (PE.I.) I should judge, from the evidence—one witness says——

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But what is the hon. gentleman's own opinion ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) One witness says the spoil bank part of the embankment is not. The hon. gentleman did not pay attion while I was reading. At the junction of the spoil-bank with the water-tight bank, if I may distinguish the two, it is not water-tight.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But the front is water-tight.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The next thing we have is a letter which I would almost denominate the unfortunate letter which was written on 15th January, 1896, by the Deputy Minister of Justice. There is nothing here to show that the Minister of Justice had formed any opinion. He left no record in his department, he signed no opinion, he assigned no reasons, but the Deputy Minister of Justice writes this memorandum :—

> Sir,—Referring to your letter of 4th October last inclosing additional correspondence, and the report of your chief engineer with regard to contractor Goodwin's claim as to payments of construction of water-tight embankments on the Soulanges Canal, I have the honour to state that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, while Minister of Justice, gave the matter very careful consideration, and heard Mr. Goodwin in support of his claim. The Minister came to the conclusion that the claim was one which should be allowed by your department, but he resigned his office before the advice could be communicated to you. He desired me, however, to inform you that he had reached the conclusion which I have stated.

Now, I submit that if the ex-Minister of Justice reached that conclusion adverse to the conclusion which his predecessor had reached, adverse to the opinion given by the engineer in charge of the work, adverse to the scientific technical opinions held and expressed by the three assistant engineers, adverse to the very strong opinion which the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals had given two or three times, and if the ex-Minister gave an adverse opinion, which, if acted upon, would involve an expenditure of $750,000, I say it was his bounden duty to submit that adverse opinion in writing, and, above all things, to give the reasons in that opinion on which he had reached his conclusion. I say that it is trifling with the taxpayers of this country, and trifling with this House, if a reasoned opinion such as this which had been come to by the Department of Justice and communicated to the Department of Railways, backed up by all the scientific men I have mentioned, can be reversed without any reasons being given and communicated by the deputy to the Department of Railways, unsigned by the Minister, and without a single reason being advanced in support of it. Sir, I cannot understand that conduct at all. But what do we find? We find the department hastily acting upon this second-hand verbal opinion. The deputy takes good care not to say that he has changed his opinion. He had given his opinion before, he does not change it, he does not say he did. He says: I am directed by the gentleman who has resigned his office, to say that he had formed an opinion, but without giving any reasons. But the Department of Railways were not slow to act upon this changed opinion, there is no loss of time then. Then, we find three days after that opinion was communicated to the department, the department acting promptly and quickly, so that that man might get his hard-earned money. On January 18th, the department writes, through its secretary, to Mr. Schreiber:

> I inclose herewith two copies of your report of 2nd October last, in the matter of Mr. George Goodwin's claim in re water-tight on sections Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7 on the Soulanges Canal, together with two copies of a letter from the Deputy Minister of Justice, dated 15th January instant, from which you will see that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, when Minister of Justice, examined into this claim and came to the conclusion that Mr. Goodwin's claim should be allowed. I am, therefore, to instruct you to act in accordance with that conclusion.
> (Sd.) JOHN H. BALDERSON.

Instanter, no other opinions admitted, no further examination required, the chief engineers, the assistant engineers, everybody to be overruled, and the $210,000 of public money to be paid over to meet this claim. Then we find the estimates to which I have referred, and signed subject to condition. Mr. Thomas Monro signs: "Signed by me subject to the conditions stated in my letter of 26th February, 1896." Mr. Schreiber certifies also under similar conditions. They are merely signing mechanically, and obeying as subordinates what they are ordered to do.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman knows that under the contract, the chief engineer is the sole judge of the quality and quantity.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The chief engineer has given his judgment adversely to what the department now contends it should be.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you mean to say that I overruled the chief engineer, or ever said a word to him on the subject?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not know whether you personally did. I say the department did. I do not know who does the work.

Mr. HAGGART. You know the department does the work under a contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I know that the chief engineer certified that under the contract they were not entitled to this, and I know he was overruled, and when the Auditor General applied to him and asked him how he could make such a certificate, he says he was informed that he was not to exercise his own judgment when that judgment was adverse to the opinion of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. HAGGART. Informed by whom? Now tell the whole of it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am going to read it. I do not understand the nature of the interruptions which the hon. gentleman is making.

Mr. HAGGART. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, if I misunderstood him. I understood him to say, or insinuate, that I had overruled the engineer and ordered him to make this report.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not use the hon. gentleman's name at all. I am speaking of what the department did. I read a letter from the department, written by the secretary, instructing Mr. Schreiber to carry out the new opinions alleged to have been held by the ex-Minister of Justice, and when Mr. Schreiber comes to sign the estimates, in order that the money may be paid out by the Auditor General, he does not sign as expressing his own opinion, but says expressly that he signs it under order of the Minister of Justice, and according to the opinions of the Minister of Justice, "Collingwood Schreiber certifies as regards item 5 in accordance with the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice." Mr. Schreiber could not do anything else. He had put himself on record that this claim was an outrageous claim which could not be defended or justified. He says here: I sign simply as a matter of form in accordance with the direction of the Minister of Justice; and Mr. Monro signs, "but subject to the conditions contained in my letter of 26th February." This letter is not brought down, but of course I assume it will be brought down before this debate closes.

Mr. MULOCK. Will you read the letter of the secretary of the department to Mr. Schreiber?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have read that. The latter part says: "I am therefore to instruct you to act in accordance with your conclusion." That is the conclusion that Mr. Goodwin's claim should be allowed. I say, therefore, that the Minister of Justice gave his opinion, and the Department of Railways ordered Mr. Schreiber to act upon that opinion.

Mr. MULOCK. Who authorized him to write that letter ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not wish to be drawn away from my argument. I say Mr. Monro's name has been obtained to that certificate, and he says : I signed it subject to the condition expressed in my letter of 26th February. Mr. Speaker, we must have that letter, and we must have it before this debate closes. It would be an outrageous thing to have Mr. Monro going upon record as certifying himself to be a rogue, because he would certify that if he had signed without an explanation to Mr. Schreiber that he had said in his previous letter that the claim was a preposterous one, which should never be allowed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman contend that under the circumstances the chief engineer should pay no attention to the opinion of the Department of Justice ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am coming to that point in a moment. There is some interesting correspondence upon this very point. The Auditor General quotes for the chief engineer of railways the section of the Act which constitutes him the judge as to the prices and quantities of work, and he tells the chief engineer that he cannot shelter himself behind the opinion of the Minister of Justice, that the duty and onus is cast by law on him to certify to prices and quantities and he must certify to them.

After Recess.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I had reached the stage of this history when following the letter written by the Deputy Minister of Justice to the Department of Railways and Canals. I called attention to the fact that the secretary of the department had written to Mr. Schreiber, chief engineer, referring to Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's letter, and saying that he was therefore to instruct Mr. Schreiber to act in accordance with that conclusion. The Minister of Railways rather checked me at the moment for assuming that when his secretary wrote that he was instructed to notify Mr. Schreiber to that effect, he, the Minister, was the person who gave him the instructions. I cannot think I was wrong in making that assumption. Surely the Minister will acknowledge on reflection that I was right ; surely that letter signed J. H. Balderson, Secretary, in which he said " I am therefore to instruct you to act in accordance with that conclusion," was a letter written by the direction, or at all events, with the authority and knowledge of the Minister. If the hon. gentleman wishes to repudiate personal liability or knowledge as regards that letter and that authority, I shall be very happy to accept the repudiation ; but if the hon. gentleman does not repudiate it, surely I am within my right in saying that when the communication was made by the Deputy Minister to the Railway Department, the head of that department, Hon. John Haggart, Minister, authorized this secretary to instruct the commissioner to act upon it, and I produced the secretary's letter in vindication of that statement. I ask the hon. Minister, am I right in assuming that such is the fact ; did the hon. gentleman authorize it or not ? Will the hon. gentleman answer that question ? Did the hon. gentleman authorize his secretary to write the letter of January 18th.

Mr. HAGGART. I never saw the letter. When a letter is signed as a matter of form, I am responsible.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman does not know. If that letter was written on a matter of that kind without authority, that secretary should be dismissed instantly. Here is a letter involving a possible expenditure of $750,000, written instructing the chief commissioner to take action for the payment of that money, when the secretary knew it was in direct violation of the chief engineer's opinion, of his reiterated opinion, of chief engineer Monro's decided opinion, spoke and reiterated several times, against the opinions of all the assistant engineers on the canal, against the opinion of Sir John Thompson, and if the secretary without instructions wrote authorizing such payments of money he should be dismissed without a moment's hesitation. I am inclined to think that the hon. Minister on reflection will come to the opinion that he must have instructed his secretary in that regard. And just here I ask the hon. gentleman, because it is impossible for me to go on properly without it, if he will produce the letter written by Mr. Monro, to which I called attention just before adjournment. That letter, dated 26th February, was the communication to which Mr. Monro referred at the foot of the new estimates which he signed from the instructions he got from the department, when he said. " Signed by me subject to the conditions stated in my letter of 26th February, 1896—Thomas Monro." If the hon. gentleman will lay that letter on the Table, it will enable the House to understand and appreciate the point to which Mr. Monro raises objection, the claim which he called a preposterous claim, more clearly than hon. members can do without it. I will now draw my history to a close, unless I can get that letter so as to be able to make a few comments on it, and if I cannot obtain it before I resume my seat, some hon. members who will follow me will have an opportunity of commenting on it. I desire now to call the attention of the House and the country to the action taken by the officials after the secretary of the department instructed Mr. Schreiber, after Mr. Schreiber acted on that instruction, after Mr. Monro's qualified and conditional signature was obtained to the amended estimates, and the documents had been sent on to the Auditor General. I have come to the conclusion from reading the report that we may thank heaven we have an Auditor General, and moreover we may thank heaven he has the courage of his convictions: that he understands he is not a mere machine but has certain responsibilities and duties under the Audit Act, that he understands he is an independent officer and is held strictly to account by the House for the discharge of his duties, and I am glad to see from the papers I have before me that this gentleman was prepared to assume and did assume the full responsibility for taking independent action in this matter. Sir, what took place? We find here a letter of 29th February, 1896, written by Mr. McDougall to the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Schreiber, which is as follows:—

> Let me acknowledge receipt yesterday of your application No. 345 for $73,260 in favour of George Goodwin, on sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the Soulanges Canal, as follows:—
> No. 5, earth in water-tight embankments
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | 542.607 yards at 15c. | $81,390 |
> | Less 10 per cent drawback | 8,130 |
> | Payment now requested | $73,260 |
> The item of 542.607 yards is marked "classification in accordance with decision of Minister of Justice (see letter of January 15th, 1896.—T. M."
> The certificates on the summary are "signed by me subject to condition stated in my letter of February 26th, 1896.—Thomas Monro," and certified as regards item No. 5, in accordance with the letter of Deputy Minister of Justice, dated January 15th, 1896.—Collingwood Schreiber.
> Please send me copies of the correspondence affecting this point; a copy of Mr. Goodwin's contract, which I have not yet received; and a diagram in elucidation of Mr. Goodwin's claim.

Then followed certain correspondence between Mr. McDougall and Mr. Schreiber, with the details of which I need not trouble the House. I proceed to the action taken by the Auditor General in the premises. That officer is authorized by the Audit Act to employ counsel in matters of doubt, and to obtain the legal opinion of that counsel as to how he ought to act, and whether he ought to pay or not the claims put before him. He obtained that opinion from a gentleman peculiarly qualified in matters of this kind to give an opinion—a gentleman who for a great many years filled the position of Deputy Minister of Justice with acceptance and with great credit to himself. I find here the opinion of Mr. Lash, of Toronto, formerly Deputy Minister of Justice, dated the 17th March, and addressed to the Auditor General in the following words. I need not quote a certain part of that opinion which I have already referred to.

> In re Goodwin contract. In places where the surface level of the water was higher than the ground alongside the engineer fixed the width and depth of the top soil to be removed. Both width and depth varied, the width from 101 to 112 feet from the centre line of the canal, and the depth from less than one foot to several feet. The material arising from the removing of the top soil, called "mucking," was deposited in rear of the space from which it was removed. The space mucked was roughed with the plough and the bank was carried up in layers as directed by section 11 of the specifications. The total width of the base of the canal bank as finished covered the space in rear of the mucked part on which the soil removed in mucking was deposited, and although (except the absence of mucking) there was only a slight difference between the mode of forming the part carried up from the mucked space and the part in rear, yet the material used in the rear part included vegetable and other porous matter, which were not used in the other part. The contractor claims payment for the entire quantity in the whole bank at the rate of 15 cents per yard, contending that it is "earth in water-tight embankments" within the meaning of item 5 in the list of prices. The engineer in charge denies the claim, except as regards that part of the embankment carried up from the mucked space, contending that the remaining part is covered by item 4 in the list of prices, and is included in the 20 cents per yard allowed for earth excavation. The difference in money between the two contentions is large, amounting on this contract alone to over $200,000, and on the whole canal to between $500,000 and $750,000. I am asked for an opinion as to the proper construction of the contract with regard to the question involved. I have had the advantage of perusing copies of two communications from the contractor to the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, dated 22nd March, 1895, and 12th September, 1895, setting out fully the contractor's contentions, and containing lengthy arguments on his behalf. The importance of the case calls for a critical examination of the contract and for an explanation of the reasons for the opinion which I have formed. The specifications are declared to be part of the contract, and it is provided by clause 4 that the several parts of the contract shall be taken together to explain each other and to make the whole consistent. Items 4 and 5 in the price list and sections 6 and 11 of the specifications must be read and considered together. The contractor contends that section 6 cannot be properly admitted as a factor in the consideration of "the question at issue, because (he argues) it is inconsistent with item 5 of the price list and with section 11 of the specifications, and as one must be disregarded and as section 6 is the general clause and section 11 the special clause, the latter must prevail and the former be excluded." Not only does clause 4 of the contract require that the several parts shall be taken together to explain each other and to make the whole consistent, but the law relating to the construction of contracts "makes it the duty of any one construing this contract to adopt a construction which will give effect to each part and to avoid a construction which would exclude a part. Sections 6 and 11, properly understood, are not inconsistent. Section 6, it is true, is the general clause, and section 11 is the special, but instead of the special including the general, it is to be treated as an exception to it only, leaving to the general clause in all other respects its full application.

Under item 4 of the price list, and section 6 of the specifications, the price for earth excavation, viz., 20 cents per yard, covers the whole embankment formed with earth so excavated, and it is only under item 5 of the price list and section 11 of the specifications that any additional payment can be claimed for such earth in the embankment. The question, therefore, is : For how much of this earth does section 11 provide payment ?

The section contains a clear definition of what is meant by "earth in water-tight banks." Its concluding words are, "Only such portions of the embankment as shall be laid out by the engineer, and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specifications, will be paid for as earth in water-tight banks." The section is dealing only with such portions of the general embankment as are to be made water-tight. This is the key to its construction, and, bearing this in his mind, its construction is not defective.

In these cases the top soil must be removed from such "width and depth as may be considered necessary to form the embankment seat." What are the embankment seats he referred to ? Clearly the seats of a portion to be made water-tight.

Further, the seat shall also be roughed up with "a plough so as to make good bond with the first layer of earth," forming the base of the embankment. What base is here referred to ? Clearly the base of a portion of the embankment to be made water-tight.

Further, "When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and approved, and not till then, the bank shall be carried out in layer of selected material." This can only refer to the portions resting on the prepared seats.

The removal of the top soil, in some cases to the depth of several feet, was not a mere matter of form ; it was evidently an essential part of the formation of the water-tight portion of the bank, as no bank would be water-tight if built on porous base or foundation. In this connection it will be proper to notice an argument submitted by the contractor in support of his contention that the base of the whole embankment for its whole width should be considered as the prepared seats referred to in section 11. He quotes the clause in the contract which gives the engineer power "to make any change which he may deem expedient in the dimensions, character, nature, location or position of the work," and he argues, as I understand him, that under this power, the engineer might dispense of the whole of either the mucking of roughing up with a plough, and that, having directed only a portion of the surface to be mucked, &c., he had, in effect, to dispense with the mucking of the remainder, and that consequently the whole base of the embankment, mucked and unmucked, must be considered as "properly prepared, inspected and approved," so as to entitle a contractor to claim that the whole bank carried up from the base contains "earth in water-tight embankments," to be paid for at 15 cents per yard. This argument disregards the concluding words of section 11, that only such portions shall be paid for as "earth in water-tight embankments" as are made up in the way described, viz., the top soil first to be removed so as to form the seats ; then the seats to be roughed up with a plough so as to make a good bond with the first layer of selected material ; then the layers of selected material to be put on in the manner described. But, irrespective of this, I would point out that by directing only a portion of the surface to be mucked, the engineer is dispensing with nothing. It is only by virtue of his direction that the mucking is to be done, and where his direction ends the duty. To avoid the force of this answer to his argument, the contractor is driven to contend that important words should be eliminated and disregarded. He says that the words "when so directed" refers only to the time when the formation of the banks may be proceeded with, viz., after the foundations have been inspected and approved, and that consequently they "may be considered as eliminated." Such a construction would be directly opposed to the well-known rule of law above-mentioned, to say nothing of the fact that preparation of the foundation is the first step in the formation of the water-tight embankment, and that this first step cannot be taken without the direction of the engineer.

For the foregoing reasons, I am clearly of opinion that the contractor's claim for 15 cents per yard for the whole quantity of earth in the embankments in the cases referred to cannot be supported.

I return the papers.

And I am, yours truly,
(Sd.) Z. A. LASH,

There is a carefully prepared, reasoned opinion ; and I think it would puzzle any gentleman who attempts to differ from Mr. Lash to dispute the premises he lays down in these quotations from the contract and the specifications, or to dispute the conclusion that the water-tight embankment was specially marked out to be mucked, and that what he calls the waste embankment adjoining the water-tight embankment does not come within the clause of the specifications which calls for the payment of 15 cents extra. I do not know that any opinion of mine would add any weight to that given by the late Sir John Thompson and Mr. Lash, covered as it was by the opinion of the engineers on the canal and the opinion of the chief engineer of the department. But I have gone over this matter very carefully ; and, although I had not the advantage of having any reasoned opinion on the other side to look at, I am absolutely in unison with the conclusion the Department of Justice first reached, which was endorsed by Mr. Lash, and with the reasoning by which that conclusion was reached ; and I want here to call the attention of the House to the prominent fact that the money could not have been paid without the signature of the chief engineer of the canal. The signature of the chief engineer of the canal was put conditionally to the new estimate : it was the subject to the conditions specified in his letter ; and unless we see what those conditions were and what the letter is, we cannot attach the slightest weight to the signature which that officer was compelled to put, as a matter of form, to an estimate which he did not approve of, and which was made up in a manner entirely at variance with the way he thought it should be made up. I say I will leave the comments on that letter to be made by those who will read it; but it is perfectly plain, reading the pronounced opinion given by Mr. Monro, that this claim is a preposterous claim, that when he was compelled to sign the estimate afterwards, and sign it conditionally, he only did in obedience to the pressure of the officers above him, which the hon. Minister at the head of the department is bound to-night to explain, if he can. Until he explains it satisfactorily, he must stand before this country personally responsible for this attempt to take three-quarters of a million dollars from the public treasury. He may be able to explain it; I will wait to see whether he can; but the papers, so far as they go—I say it advisedly—disclose a scheme for the withdrawal of public money from the public treasury and its transfer to the pockets of a contractor, which, in my humble opinion, neither the contract, the specifications, nor the professional opinions taken thereunder justify; and I decline to accept the verbal opinion which Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper is said to have given to the Deputy Minister, which is not reasoned, which does not appear as a sufficient authority to overturn the great mass of opinion, professional and otherwise, which I have read to the House this afternoon and to-night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss to understand thoroughly the reason for the applause that greeted the hon. gentleman when he sat down, or indeed the reason for the applause which greeted him when half-way through his speech, unless it be that he shows considerable physical energy after a long and exhausting sitting of this chamber; because the hon. gentleman pretended, at the outset of his observations, to desire to call the attention of the House to certain important facts; and, not concluding with a motion, I fancy the hon. gentleman's intention at that time was simply to direct particular observation to the very important question of the proposed allowance of a large claim, as he puts it, of a contractor in this country. Now, the hon. gentleman wound up his statement with an insinuation of most serious character; and I shall have to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the liberty he has taken all through this pretended statement with the papers and documents that have been in his possession for some time. I do not know that I can credit the hon. gentleman entirely with a burning desire to put a fair and candid statement before the country; because if the facts are all as he has put them, and the conclusion is so certain as he thinks it is in regard to the application of the law, why should he smell scandal, and open up with an allusion to the scandals of by-gone days, and in fact, invoke a discussion on the several questions as to over-expenditure on public works, canals in particular?

The hon. gentleman would have made a more forcible statement if he had kept to what he said, on one or two occasions, was his real intention, and that was to call the attention of this House directly to certain important facts. But the hon. gentleman made a grievous mistake in another particular. From his argument one would suppose that, in a hurry, acting on an ill-considered opinion of mine, the Railway Department was in such a position that this large amount of money would soon be paid out of the public treasury, and that the Auditor General had simply called the attention of Parliament to this case in the ordinary way, and it only required a statement of fact to be made in order that hon. gentlemen might express their opinions. But I want to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to this fact, that the money has not been paid.

Mr. McMULLEN. Thanks to the Auditor General.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Whether the hon. gentleman thinks the Auditor General is to be thanked or not, under the statute there are certain duties which devolve upon the Auditor General. I propose to show that, in my capacity as Minister of Justice, I did my duty to the best of my ability, and just as well relatively as the Auditor General has attempted to do his; and he is entitled to no particular credit for doing his duty, and I fancy would be the last man to ask the eulogium which the hon. gentleman has paid him in this single particular during this session. But his duty having been performed, the fact remains that this decision about which the hon. gentleman complained so much,—the decision reached by me when Minister of Justice and communicated, after I had ceased to be Minister of Justice, to the Railway Department —is not the final opinion or the final action of the Government in the case, because, under the law, the Auditor General having availed himself of the privilege given him by statute of consulting private counsel, and challenged the correctness of the conclusion at which I arrived, it is the duty, under the statute, of the Government, before anything further is done with regard to the admission of this claim, to obtain that which the hon. member for Queen's seems to long so much for, the opinion of an actual Minister of Justice when in office. The case, after going to the Treasury Board in due course with Mr. Lash's opinion and the Auditor's objection, will be submitted again to the Department of Justice. The present incumbent will be called upon to advise the Treasury Board, and the Treasury Board will be bound to take his opinion, whether it agrees with that of Mr. Lash or his predecessor. So that I think, in a calm, dispassionate statement, much of the hon. gentleman's argument might have been eliminated, and he could have saved a great deal of time in coming directly to the question, which, after all, is the question he desires to discuss in the main, and that is whether this claim of the contractor Goodwin was a claim that should have been allowed within the meaning of "water-tight embankment" in the contract between Mr. Goodwin and the Crown, because that after all is the main question before the House and that was before me. The question is somewhat involved. Any hon. gentleman must admit that, under the circumstances and under the practice that has hitherto obtained, if the hon. gentleman had no idea of a coming campaign and was not hard up for campaign literature, I am making no unusual claim when I say that I was entitled, as a gentleman directly responsible to Parliament and the country, to the ordinary courtesy of a notice of this discussion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I had written a notice to the hon. gentleman and showed it to my leader, which I intended to send across to the hon. gentleman this morning, but my leader told me that he had notified the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will believe me when I say that the first intimation I got was from the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) of whom I casually asked this afternoon what was to come up, and he very kindly replied that he thought it was something connected with the Soulanges Canal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I had written a note to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I told him I did not know whether it was that or something else.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And the hon. gentleman from Queen's was only going to give me notice this morning.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I only knew that I was to bring it on myself at noon to-day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But evidently the hon. gentleman has pondered over the papers for some time, as I give him credit for having followed carefully the voluminous correspondence. If the hon. gentleman be serious in the conclusion at which he arrives, has it not been the regular course to have these papers in the possession of hon. gentlemen to whose judgment the appeal is made. Other questions not half so important have been printed and distributed during the session, so that hon. gentlemen who wish to pay attention to the facts and argument may easily do so.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman said that we were to have the papers before us. Can he tell us why this letter of the 25th February, 1896, has not been produced, in obedience to the order of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I must decline to answer questions of that kind. They are not in line with my argument. The hon. gentleman is endeavouring to break in on the line of my argument by an observation which has no application whatever to the larger portion of the argument which the hon. member for Queen's made this afternoon, and which I was endeavouring to answer. No resolution was to be moved on this occasion, and therefore would it have been strange for the hon. member for Queen's to have asked me to make the opening statement? The statement made by him, followed as it has been by a strained and a most unfair argument, reflecting not only on my ability but on my integrity, the insinuation running through it all, the observation made and which was cheered by hon. gentlemen opposite, that there was a campaign fund—such insolent observations as were made across the floor of this House, while the hon. gentleman proceeded to outline his statements of fact, warrant me in saying that, under the circumstances, if the hon. gentleman wishes to treat the House, the country and myself fairly, he would have asked me to explain these papers which had been brought down. At the outset I desire, with regard to this so-called statement of facts, to challenge the accuracy of the hon. gentleman. He has all through his argument begged the question. The question is what is a water-tight bank within the meaning of that contract. Time and again he endeavoured to point out that I was of the opinion that all the spoiled material and all the muck and surface material that was thrown outside of the water-tight bank ought to be all allowed. Nothing of the sort. I claim that I have not given the opinion at any time, nor entertained it, that the material outside the water-tight bank should be paid for as earth within the water-tight bank. We must deal with these words "water-tight embankment," but the hon. gentleman, in a large part of his argument, begged the question by charging me incorrectly with entertaining the opinion that the material outside the water-tight bank should be classed as material in the water-tight bank.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The only basis I had upon which to form an opinion of what the hon. gentleman's opinion was was the letter of the Deputy Minister of Justice, in which he said that the hon. Minister's opinion was that Goodwin's claim should be allowed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And so I was, and so I am of the opinion at the present moment, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's argument this afternoon. The hon. gentleman's argument is based upon a version of facts that I challenge, and in settlement of that difference between us, I appeal with confidence to the record which was in his hands, and from which it will be my duty, I am sorry to say, to quote at some length in order that the facts may be laid before the House. I challenge the following statements seriatim: First, that the engineer directed the surplus of water-tight bank to be placed outside; second, that the whole of the top sod of the water-tight bank was ordered to be removed; third, that the Government conceded 15 cents a yard for the material outside the water bank; fourth, that the sides were thrown over and behind the water-tight banks and paid for as earth and water-tight-bank; fifth, that Sir John Thompson reported adversely to the claim allowed by me; sixth, that the claim is for earth and not for water-tight bank; seventh, that I reached a conclusion adverse to that of my predecessor in office.

So there is a great difference between the hon. gentleman and myself, and I only wish it were possible by simple reference to without quotations from the papers which have been brought down, but which are not printed, that a fair judgment could be reached between him and me. I am sure the hon. gentleman will admit that it is a happy thing that my successor in the Department of Justice will have the advantage, if it be any advantage, of the views the hon. gentleman has expressed and of the version of the facts which he has laid before us this afternoon before this intended robbery—as he regards it—of the public treasury has taken place.

Before I enter into the facts and give my statement of the reasons that led me to the conclusion that has been so much discussed, I desire to take issue with the hon. gentleman respecting the effect of the construction of this contract in the opinions of Mr. Monro and his two assistants, or of his two thousand assistants, if he had them, or of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals. He is the first gentleman of the bar in this House, certainly within my parliamentary experience, who has bearded a Minister of Justice because that Minister, in reaching a conclusion on a matter of law, did not pay regard to the interpretation placed upon a contract by engineers, no matter how eminent. It is not the duty of engineers to give opinions on these matters. It was not the duty of Mr. Monro to give opinions of that character, and Mr. Monro betrays, at any rate, a very strong feeling in this matter, it seems to me, by using such extraordinary language as he does in some of his letters. But I submit that no matter how strong his opinion may be or the opinion of any other layman, they are at best but poor guides to the Department of Justice in reaching a conclusion in the interpretation of a contract. Now, the hon. gentleman has stated that the estimates in a matter of this kind ought to be approximately correct, and he finds fault because there has been an excess of expenditure over the estimates in connection with certain works, and will be, perhaps, in this case—though the papers did not disclose, as far as I recollect, the approximate estimate of this work or how the expenditure will come out in view of this decision. But I ask him, can he indicate any canal ever built in Canada—and we have expended over $50,000,000 on canals—that was built approximately within the original estimate. On the contrary, I believe the records show a very large excess of expenditure in works of this character, and from necessity. In the time of Mr. Mackenzie and even subsequently, Mr. Page, the hon. gentleman will recollect, used to act as arbitrator on claims of contractors in connection with contracts that he himself had prepared, and on many occasions awarded large sums above and beyond either the contract sum or the estimate in connection with the contract. So these preliminary statements of the hon. gentleman only suggest suspicion. No fair argument can be founded upon them. Then the hon. gentleman refers to the letter written by the Deputy Minister of Justice on the 15th January, and stating expressly that I, when Minister of Justice, had reached the conclusion that this claim ought to be allowed. Let me state to the hon. gentleman—and he can take so much of what I say that it is not supported by the records here for what it is worth, but I think it is a reasonable statement—that it seems to me that a certain course must have been invariably pursued by gentlemen who have occupied the position of head of any department under the Crown. Whether you go from one department to another, or whether you leave a department and the Government, there must be matters with which you have made yourself familiar and which have involved a great deal of labour, but which are still unfinished. It occurred to me, and I still think it reasonable, that it is the duty of the incumbent to wind up as many of these matters as he can. This record shows that for many months the claim of Goodwin had been before me, that there had been these references to the Railways Department for further information, information that had never been before my predecessor, and information that had great weight with me in reaching the conclusion that I did reach. Months had been occupied by the investigation of these papers, and it was the only matter of any importance, I believe, that was not wound up by me when I left the Department of Justice, that could fairly be laid at my door as my duty. And, having had the claim before me, having finally heard all there was to be said on the matter, having investigated all the papers very carefully, right or wrong, I came to a certain conclusion. I intimated that conclusion to my deputy, when I was Minister of Justice, and told him I intended to so report. Now, these references of the hon. gentleman this afternoon to the absence of a reasoned opinion are, I think, wholly beside the mark. My opinion, as Minister of Justice, as the opinion of a judge, as the opinion of many of my predecessors, might be either an opinion with reasons or an opinion without reasons.

Mr. LAURIER. We would prefer the former.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) is kind enough to say that he prefers the first. But I can appeal to the records of the department, safely, I believe, for proof of my statement, when I say that there are as many opinions of my predecessors, including all the eminent men who have filled that office, without reasons as they are with reasons. Certainly there is nothing in connection with the duties of the Minister of Justice that even makes it indirectly his duty to give reasons for its conclusions. The responsibility is, of course, with the Government for the conclusions that he reaches, but the absence of those reasons is a mere matter of convenience or otherwise to those who examine into the subject. Again, as to the Minister signing opinions, it is the exception for a Minister to do anything of the kind. I can appeal to the leader of the Opposition, who has had Cabinet experience, I can appeal to his colleagues sitting around him, whatever the practice was in Prince Edward Island, when I say that it is an exceptional thing for the Minister of Justice, or the Minister of any other department, to sign officially a departmentl document. The practice is for the Deputy Minister to sign; that practice has always obtained. It is the duty of the deputy to sign as conveying the opinion of the Minister of the department. Sometimes in ordinary and trivial matters he conveys his own opinion as the deputy head of the department. In a matter of any importance where the Minister must be consulted, his opinion is conveyed by the Deputy Minister of Justice, who puts in words to the effect that "the Minister directs that this opinion should be expressed," &c. Therefore, the hon. gentleman was arguing without a knowledge of the practice that obtains in the departments here, and has obtained ever since these departments have been constituted. Then I come down to the question which the hon. gentleman has raised. When Mr. Goodwin's claim was first put in, as the memorandum of the 16th November, 1893, will show, he raised a question in regard to embankments generally, and claimed the two prices for the embankments, whether water-tight or otherwise, even along that canal, where there is a portion of the bank which is above the water level, and is not required to be water-tight. Speaking with general reference to his claim, it was practically this, that as the whole bank had to be water-tight, and was shown on the plan before the tenderers to be below the level of the water, that the earth put in these banks above the canal should generally be allowed as earth in a water-tight embankment. On February 11th, 1894, the Railway Department so put the question to the Department of Justice, as I think I can show by reference to that letter, where it states :

> Mr. Goodwin claims that his specifications state that all the excavation would be used in making up the embankment he expected when he tendered for the work that he would be paid for the whole of it at both rates.

The hon. gentleman who brought this question up will follow me, I am sure, in regard to the point of this observation. It is to show the question that was dealt with by Sir John Thompson as distinguished from the question which came before me. I intend to point out in these papers that I understood that the question dealt with by him was entirely different from the question dealt with by me. In the letter of 28th February, being the opinion to which the hon. gentleman made reference, intimating the view of the Justice Department at the time, there is this observation :

> I understand that the contractor makes two claims which are denied by your department ; first, with regard to the payment for excavation deposited in an embankment of the canal.

The facts recited in that letter involved, as they were finally presented to me, the very difficulty with which I had to deal, and with which Mr. Newcombe, the deputy, had not to deal. Now, what were the facts recited in the letter of 28th February, 1894, which the hon. gentleman says intimated the opinion of the Department of Justice of that date, and which was contrary to mine ? The recital is to this effect :

> That only such portion of the embankment as shall be laid out by the engineer and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specifications, will be paid for as earth and water-tight banks.

After having stated the claim of the contractor, that the water-tight bank was practically the whole bank :

> If I correctly apprehend the facts of the case, it would appear that the engineer found it necessary to have water-tight banks, and has laid out such embankments under the terms of the specifications quoted."

Now, I must interpolate here this observation. The Department of Justice, according to the recital I have read, understood that the engineer had laid out the banks under the terms of the specification, distinguishing clearly between water-tight embankments and ordinary embankments. The department goes on to say :

> Upon the statement by the engineer, there is no objection to pay Goodwin the specified price of 20 cents per cubic yard for earth excavation and 15 cents additional per cubic yard for earth in water-tight embankments. Mr. Goodwin has, however, deposited behind the water-tight embankment so constructed additional material > which is not required as part of the water-tight embankment.

The hon. gentleman makes his argument by adopting a recital, the correctness of which I dispute, a recital that the contractor had made a claim which did not apply specifically to water-tight embankments only, and then evidence had been taken in regard to what water-tight embankments were. The Department of Justice, going on those grounds, came, according to that letter, to a different conclusion from mine, and as the facts are recited there I do not see speaking off-hand, how I could reach a different conclusion. But it is in regard to the very recital of facts there, that the whole difficulty has arisen, as I think I will be able to show. I will read again :

> Mr. Goodwin has, however, deposited behind the water-tight embankments so constructed, additional material not required as part of the water-tight embankment.

Now, in order to make the distinction clearly, I would point out the difficulty that there is involved here, as I think can be seen when I say that the Minister of Justice at that time understood that the question raised was : You build a water-tight bank, and you have more earth than you need for the bank. You throw it away behind the bank ; you spoil it, you waste it. It is not part of the bank, it has nothing to do with the bank as your recital states. The hon. gentleman said it had. We may differ in regard to a good deal of this subject, but surely not as to that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It has nothing to do with the question as to a water-tight bank.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am elaborating this statement that Mr. Goodwin had deposited behind the water-tight bank additional material not required as part of the water-tight bank, that the facts were of such a character that only one answer could be given. I have no quarrel with the decision of February 28, 1894. I do not pretend that I am infallible on this matter any more than the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). He entertains a strong opinion, as I do ; but many able men in the Department of Justice have found their opinions could not carry a Government case through a court of law, and we must discharge our duty to the best of our ability and submit to free criticism and judgment. There is no doubt that in that recital the facts were not as clearly stated as the facts were after an examination, which had not taken place at that date—after the contractor had been permitted to point out that this decision was based upon a state of facts by no means admitted. Even Mr. Lash, at this late date, as will be seen from his opinions, was discussing the entire quantity in the bank. There is no such claim as that which Mr. Lash evidently supposed was being pressed against the Government. The claim is only for the earth in the water-tight portion of the bank. I will refer to another letter, part of which I do not think was read. I have been informed casually that the letter of February 28th does not appear to have been sent at the time it bears date. Nothing may turn on that, because it was sent in August, 1894, during Sir John Thompson's time. On April 5th, 1895, there is a letter written by Mr. Newcombe, who says :

> I observe by your letter of 24th February, returned to me for consideration——

Those words indicate, what was the fact, that the papers were sent in due course of business to my department to deal with ; and I may state, and the Minister of Railways and my colleagues will bear out the statement, that there has grown up a habit within the last few years, one which I do not altogether approve, of references being made, for instance, by a deputy, who visits the department with the whole file of papers in the office, instead of adopting the usual, and I think more regular course, of sending a covering letter which marks the transmission of papers from one department to another. The object of the Deputy Minister is no doubt to hasten the transaction of public business. In this case, there does not seem to have been a covering letter sent, and the only reference to papers coming back to me, on which I can lay my hands, is a letter of April 5th, which says :

> I observe from my letter to you of 25th February, which at my request has been returned to me for reconsideration——

The deputy goes on to say, referring to this difference of fact :

> Mr. Goodwin has, however, deposited behind the water-tight bank he has constructed additional material not required as part of the water-tight bank.

Quoting the very phrase of the letter of February 28th, 1894. He adds :

> I understand further, that although this additional material, in respect to which Mr. Goodwin makes a claim, was deposited where it is under the direction of the engineers, yet it does not cover any portion of the site laid out by the engineers for the water-tight embankment, nor has material been placed there as for a water-tight embankment, under the direction of the engineers and in accordance with the specification, clause 11.

I think the real point at issue is misunderstood. The correspondence proceeded, and the hon. member for Queen's made several references to it. However, Mr. Newcombe asked again as to the facts :

> Before dealing with Mr. Goodwin's memorandum I should like to know from your department whether the facts are such as your department is prepared to substantiate as matters of fact. If the statement is not exactly in accordance with the facts, will you be good enough to inform me as to what correction could be made.

There is no doubt the chief engineer, Mr. Monro, and the other engineers, all held the opinion that this case did not admit of any question; what they thought was, that the really water-tight portion of an embankment, laid out according to the instructions of the engineers, was the only portion for which a contractor could be paid. I have every respect for those engineers, and I possess no qualification to enable me to discredit their opinion as engineers; but neither as Minister of Justice nor as a member of the legal profession will I be influenced in the slightest degree as to what portion of the bank under that specification should be paid for. I give hon. gentlemen opposite all the benefit of these laymen's interpretation and opinion as regards the question of law. They were against my other view, and hon. gentlemen opposite may increase the value of their opinions by additional lay opinions, but I do not think that could be seriously argued in a court of law, or before members of the bar. The Railway Department, no doubt the chief engineer directing the letters carrying the business along, stated the facts were as received by the Department of Justice, and that department was referred to Mr. Monro. My deputy saw Mr. Monro, and Mr. Monro, it appeared, still had the same strong opinions that he had held throughout the case, and he simply left us where we were in regard to this matter. As to the water-tight bank, the engineers were water-tight also, and would not yield in any respect as regards their opinion given, as it was always, in a general way. Mr. Goodwin wrote to the Minister of Railways:

> I have learned incidentally that the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals have not made such a statement of the facts in relation to this matter as does justice to my case. I submit that a clear distinction should be made between statements put forward as facts and statements put forward in the nature of an interpretation or argument. I prepared a statement in support of my claim. Your department accompanied this with observations and along with these observations of the department it appears that Mr. Monro, engineer of the works, has verbally informed the Justice Department, among other things, viz.:
> That portions of the embankment in respect of which the dispute arises were not laid out by the engineer, nor made up in accordance with the specifications with regard to earth in water-tight banks. This involves, as you will see, a question of fact, and a question of interpretation, viz.:
> As to whether the embankments were laid out by the engineer and to the dimensions to which they were formed is a question of fact.

With all humility I have no hesitation in agreeing with that statement, namely, that: This is a question of interpretation of a contract, and it is not a question of fact.

> As to whether the embankments were made up in accordance with the specifications with regard to earth in water-tight banks is a question of interpretation. I may remark that of the many statements which I have put forward as facts in the presentment of this case, the department has not given a direct denial to any one of them. That the engineer laid out the embankments to the dimensions to which they have been formed, i.e., that is to say, so far as the work has progressed, the embankments have been made up within the lines given by the engineer, is a question of fact which I have already put forward in a previous memorandum, and now assert in the most positive manner. I regard this as a fact which should be corroborated by your department before the Justice Department gives a final opinion on the claim. Mr. Monro has informally denied this fact, and by coupling it with a question of interpretation. In asking your department to corroborate my statement with regard to that question of fact, I will not use the term "water-tight embankments," as that term does not seem to be regarded by your department as applicable to embankments considered as a whole. I will, therefore, use the term "embankments."

I do not think the rest of this letter has any bearing upon the course of my argument. But, perhaps, in making my statement, so that it may be understood in reading, I will have to read a letter of mine, which will indicate, in connection with what I have said, the difficulties that I appreciated and felt were involved in this case. I wrote to Mr. Haggart, on the 17th September, 1895, as follows:—

> Referring to my letter of this date on the subject of Mr. Goodwin's claim, I would like to add that while I refer to the chief engineer, you will understand, I hope, I do not mean chief engineer as distinguished from yourself. Of course the head of the department or his responsible officer will suit that purpose. The question of fact in dispute upon which I would like to know your decision arose upon a statement made by Mr. Monro, one of your engineers, to the effect that portions of the embankment were not laid out by the engineer, nor made up in accordance with the specifications with regard to earth in water-tight banks. What I desire to be informed is:—
> First,—Whether these portions of the embankment in respect to which the dispute arose were laid out by the engineer.
> Second,—Whether these portions were made up in accordance with the specifications with regard to earth in water-tight banks.
> Third.—Whether these portions were made up as required and directed by the engineer in charge.

The House will observe that I was only dealing with the question which relates to the banks where the water level was above the side of the canal. No other portion of the bank was concerned at that time. If the papers do not make it clear, I refer to the chief engineer, who saw me personally on this subject, as is usual, to explain from time to time what the question in dispute really was, so far as anything was necessary that was not made clear by the papers in the department. Then we come to Mr. Munro's statement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) has referred to Mr. Monro as an authority of the greatest importance. I have no doubt of his standing as an engineer. I do not question it in the slightest degree; but I say that he could assist me in this matter, chiefly by giving facts, and not by giving his opinion as to the construction of any part of the contract. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) mentions as a matter of importance that Mr. Monro—he refers to his instructions given to his assistants, and his assistants refer to the instructions received, and as to what they understood. It cannot surely be contended that, if Mr. Monro and his assistants had in their minds a clear idea and understanding as to what was to be paid for as earth in water-tight banks, that that settles the question. That evidence could not be given in a court of law. We could not, in endeavouring to protect the Crown, give as evidence these conversations and these understandings that the Government engineers entertained. I do not doubt in the slightest that Mr. Monro, when he drew the contract, intended just what he says now; but it is not the first case, nor the hundredth case, where the engineer has failed to have incorporated in the specifications of the contract his exact intention. He would not be heard before a court of justice to say what he intended. The court looks at the specification and the contract together, and gives a decision accordingly. No construction, or interpretation, or understanding by the engineer, no matter how eminent he may be, would be worth a straw in a court of justice. Referring to this oft-quoted section of the specification:

> 11. Water-tight banks.—Wherever the surface level of the water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top soil must be removed, for such width and depth as may be considered necessary, to form the embankment seats. The material arising from this mucking to be deposited where pointed out. It will be paid for as ordinary earth excavation. The seats shall also be well roughed up with a plough so as to make good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment. Puddle walls or cut-offs to be made where required—the puddle to be prepared and laid as specified hereafter.
> When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and approved—and not till then—the bank shall be carried up in layers, of selected material, of about eight inches in thickness, well spread, the lumps broken, watered, trodden down or otherwise.

I want to call the attention of the House to a point not made clear by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies): That the width of the top of the bank on each side of the canal never varies; the top surface being 50 feet on one side and 30 on the other. The base or bottom work did vary in accordance with the natural formation of the country along which the bank went. All those matters were for the engineers. They fixed these widths and distances, and they vary, but you have along that bank on each side one compact bank, with a fifty-feet top, sloped according to the directions of the engineers, and built up under their instructions. On the other side you have a bank 30 feet in width on top and sloped accordingly. The contention I supported was that, wherever that bank was above the water level of the canal, that whole compact bank, undivided in any part, but built between the stakes laid out by the Government engineer, raised and compacted as directed, that is, earth and water-tight bank that is water-tight in fact in every part of it. There is no dispute, and there cannot be any dispute on that question. And the only earth that is not in the water-tight bank is the earth running along the canal at the margin of the canal, where the water is not above the level of the canal. That is the distinction, and that is the idea running through that whole contract. It was uniform, as I have shown, in regard to the width of the top all along. Where it was not required to be water-tight, the payment was to be of one character, the bank was to be built in a certain way, and not half so carefully as the other. But, in the other case, not only was the width of the top given to the engineers, but the slopes were fixed, and there was one compact, harmonious whole there. Contrast that statement, which I make on the authority of the papers, with the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) to-day. He put before the minds of the members of this House that there were two distinct bodies of earth. There was a nice, narrow, compact, carefully made bank, and away behind it a lot of waste material thrown at the back; whereas, as a matter of fact, there is but one bank, and the distinction I make as to the water-tight bank and the made-earth bank is not so much to be found in the margain of the canal, so to speak, as in the length of it; the ordinary earth excavation going to the ordinary earth at one place, and the water-tight bank being where, according to the reason of the thing, a water-tight bank was required. Let us continue the quotation from Mr. Monro. He says:

The understanding he has all through is that only a portion of this ordinary and regular bank, which I call water-tight, should be considered as water-tight and paid for as such, because, with the rest of the bank made up as it was, that was all he required himself, as he now says, for that purpose; and I say that intention of his cannot control the language of the contract to which I will refer later on:

> 2nd. Only over the portions intended as seats for water-tight embankments was the surface, soil, &c., removed. This obviously limited the extent of water-tight embankment as it is clear that no bank could hold water if built on a permeable stratum or foundation.

And Mr. Lash—and I say it with all deference—falls into the same error as Mr. Monro in regard to that. Mr. Lash takes as one of the tests whether the embankment was water-tight or not, whether a part of the surface was removed, sod taken off, and the earth roughed up by the plough. That is his test; but suppose that no earth was removed, and the contractor came across a bit of land which had been prepared already by the previous owner—the sod skimmed off, and there was the water above the margin of the bank. The bank in every part had to be carried up, and compacted, and made so as to keep the water out. If Mr. Monro's and Mr. Lash's idea be correct, that is not a water-tight bank, because forsooth one thing had not to be done that he expected. It had to be made water-tight; in fact it was water-tight, but because of this omission in connection with the basis of the bank, the contractor has to do that work, and yet to be told that he has not made a water-tight bank in the eye of the law. I think that is an illustration which will bear application all through the discussion and the criticism of this contract. Now, I have referred to the prevailing idea of Mr. Monro, so as to give the hon. gentleman the full benefit of it, and I think I have shown that his test is not a correct one. I want now to refer to the plan adopted for laying out this embankment. I want to show what the actual facts are in reference to the directions given in regard to the construction of this bank. This is the chief engineer's report transferred to me:

> The muck or surface earth was taken from the seat of the portion marked on sketch as water-tight bank, and cast into the rear portion of the canal bank, the remaining portion required to make up the canal bank, was the same class of material, as that used to form what is shown as water-tight bank on sketch, and according to the statements of the engineers in immediate charge of those sections, there was only a slight difference made in forming each part of the embankment, except as regards the mucking and roughing up the seat of the portion shown on sketch as water-tight bank, and the using of the vegetables and other porous matter in the rear portion of the canal bank.

It is of great advantage in the discussion of a question of this kind, what I think is denied both to the hon. gentleman and myself, to have the exhibition of a plan. But I might make a desperate attempt to show in a sense where this dispute is, as it could be shown by the plan. For instance, on the plans exhibited at the time of the tenders, there is not any mark for the bank above the water level other than the 30-foot surface and 50-foot surface on the opposite sides of the canal. There are the slopes as now constructed, with the whole bank sloped down regularly on both sides. But the little sketches made by the engineers show, inside of those single lines on the original plan, a little segment running 5 feet only at the top, and then an imaginary line drawn inside of the slope of the one bank to a certain point much nearer the margin of the canal than the outer end of the whole bank, built as it was originally intended. I think it is perhaps as well to bear that in mind, as I go on, to see how these banks were laid out, in fact, after those plans were made and the tenders were put in upon them. I may point out, and I take all the responsibility of doing it, that I had due regard to this in dealing with the Crown case—that this evidence, which in my opinion favoured the contractor, was brought out without the assistance of counsel, and from the mouths of our own engineers, whose honour I do not in the slightest degree impeach, but who had from the first the strongest views against him, as even their own evidence will show: and the admissions made by them in the hands of this contractor—no trained counsel—carried to my mind perhaps more weight with regard to the question than would otherwise have been the case; because I inferred that if these statements were obtained in that manner, in litigation, should we resist a claim of that kind, the contractor's case could be made fifty times stronger. But let us see how the banks were laid out. The examination of one of the engineers referred to by the hon. gentleman, Mr. McNaughton, appears quoted in a letter from the acting law clerk of the department, dated 20th September, 1895:

> Q. In the cross sections of the canal bank how many stakes did you put in and where?—A. A cutting stake was put in the face of the prism and there was a stake at the back of the canal banks.

That is the distance to which the hon. gentleman will not allow the contractor to go at all in his claim as to what constitutes the bank:

> To conform to the width of 30 and 50 feet on the top, these slope stakes are at every station.

The claimant asked that the whole bank should be considered, but after the whole thing is constructed under the direction of the engineer, the contractor is told his claim is to be whittled down to such portion of the bank as the engineer thinks would be water-tight, without any of the rest being considered at all. We are asked to believe that, although that was all required and done, only a very small proportion indeed was required for the embankment at all, and that all the rest which the engineers required the contractor to do was so much spoiled material. Then Mr. Doull quotes the question to Mr. McNaughton:

> In laying out the base of the embankment for the total width of the embankment, did you lay it out at such width as to afford a slope of figure 2 horizontal to 1, vertical both for the front and rear part of the canal embankment so that it would diminish to 50 feet in width on the top on the north side?—A. Certainly.

The hon. member for Queen's has a great deal to say as to the way in which this whole bank was conducted, as to the extent of roughing up with the plough, and mucking. But the contractor was at the mercy of the engineer. Clause 5, to which the hon. gentleman did not refer at all, gave the engineer absolute power to vary the contract, either with regard to quality or the material to be used, or the character of the work. With that clause this engineer is asked whether these portions—now we are speaking of what the hon. gentleman calls the bank in the rear—whether these portions were made up as required and directed by the engineer in charge :

> Q. Were the banks, as a whole, carried up as you required them to be built ?—A. Yes.
> Q. On the whole were the banks made up to the dimensions ordered, are they within the given line ?—A. They are within the given lines that are finished.
> Q. Were the embankments made up according to your directions ?—A. Yes.

That is the answer as to how the banks are made up. A great deal is said about the spoiled parts of the banks, and the porous and vegetable matter, but all this was not before Sir John Thompson. Not a line of Mr. McNaughton's evidence was in his possession. He was simply asked to interpret with regard to water-tight banks and ordinary banks. None of this information, which I have been dwelling on, was before him at any time. But as to the material of one portion of these banks, the muck or surface earth was taken from the side of the portion marked on the sketch as water-tight bank. But I submit, without fear, from a legal point of view, and that is the only point of view from which I had to regard this subject, the evidence is not material and does not bear on the meaning of that contract. But as to the material of one portion of these banks :

> The muck or surface earth was taken from the seat of the portion marked on sketch as water-tight bank, and cast into the rear portion of the canal bank, the remaining portions required to make up the canal bank was the same class of material as that used to form what is shown as water-tight bank on sketch, and according to the statements of the engineers in immediate charge of these sections, there was only a slight difference made in forming each part of the embankment, except as regards the mucking and roughing up the seat of the portion shown on sketch as water-tight bank, and the using of the vegetables and other porous matter in the rear portion of the canal bank.

Now, I have a further reference from the chief engineer on that question of fact as to how those banks were made up. Now, then, I come to the section itself, and I think that does not involve such plain sailing as the hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think. I do not think section 11 is so clear that the hon. gentleman could only smell a scandal in the mind of a man who would hold an opinion different from his. First of all, I would premise this, that my construction of that contract is that the contract, read from end to end, and the different clauses on this subject read together mean what the original plan would indicate was intended, that water-tight banks should be alongside of that portion of the canal where the water was above the margin of the canal, and the embankments into which excavation should go were along that portion of the margin of the canal above water level altogether of the canal. And if you start with that idea, and I think it the correct one, many of the difficulties conjured up to-day disappear entirely, and you have a rational and reasonable interpretation of this contract. The one portion that I refer to did undoubtedly require a water-tight bank the other portion did not call for anything of the kind. What does this section ? It draws a distinction. There is a section relating to ordinary embankments where the price is 20 cents. Then we come to the water-tight banks where the price is 20 cents and 15 cents :

> Wherever the surface level of the water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top soil must be removed for such width and depth as may be considered necessary to form the embankment seats.

The hon. gentleman put a construction upon that which I venture to say no court of law has yet put. For instance, "in these cases the top soil must be removed," and because that is found there, unless you actually and, in fact, remove the top soil, you disturb the whole meaning of water-tight banks. That is the argument of the hon. member for Queen's. As top soil no water-tight bank !

That is the way in which he makes this thing look, as far as his statement can carry, like a hideous job. Now, I call attention to these words "over such width and depth as may be considered to form the embankment seats." And again the hon. gentleman places a monstrous construction, as it seems to me, on these words, and he controls the whole of it by saying that settles the extent of the embankment seat. Reading it without a pause, you get some construction of that character out of it. But the rational construction, the construction that I think is sound in law is that the top soil, where it is necessary, is to be removed to the width and depth directed by the engineer expressly, and the whole is done in order to form the embankment seat. There is another thing there that shows that only such portion as is top-soiled is to be the embankment seat. It was never intended, and it would be ridiculous to assume, that only where you found top soil—and it was only where you could find it that it could be removed—should be the embankment seat for water-tight bank. It says further : "the material arising from this muck to be deposited where pointed out." Well, it was deposited where pointed out. It was deposited under the direction of the engineers at the back of the bank with the fifty-foot top, the one bank formed symetrically according to the directions of the engineers who laid it out. But we are told that the minute there is a bit of that found in any portion of this uniform bank, it destroys the character of the bank and makes it ordinary embankment, though it is part of the water-tight bank. The hon. gentleman says the moment you find a piece of muck there the whole bank drops from 20 cents plus 15 cents down to 20 cents. It goes on: "The seats shall also be well roughed up with the plough to make a good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment." And the hon. gentleman says that they only roughed up a little of all this bank, and therefore you can only go the distance of the roughing up.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Because, in the engineer's opinion, that was all that was necessary to form the basis of the embankment; but this does not limit the embankment. Surely the hon. gentleman will see that in a work of that kind that the roughing up was done under the direction of the engineer. And, if the hon. gentleman's narrow construction be right, the measurement of the bank would be a terribly difficult problem, because, wherever the plough did not go, there would be no water-tight bank. I say that construction is extraordinary and could not be sustained. Then, it goes on to say that the object of that is only to make a good bond with the layer of earth. That is the reason of it, and where you have the earth bonded and the bank formed, surely the business of the ploughing is not going to determine the character of the bank. Then further, "Pudle walls, or cut-offs, to be made where required—the puddle to be prepared and laid as specified hereafter." That is part of the same clause. Now I will call attention to this: "When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and proved"—and we reached that stage—we find that the claimant in this case, according to the engineer, did the work on that bank of fifty-feet top, and the bank with the 30-foot top under the instructions properly prepared, and this part of the work was inspected and approved. And what happened? I read from the clause relating to water-tight banks: "The bank shall be carried up in layers." Is there a dispute that the bank was carried up in layers? The part the hon. gentleman refers to is imaginary. The part he refers to was not carried up in the way the House would be led to believe, but it was carried up and made a complete mass, a water-tight bank and other material added to it, so that you could distinguish one from the other. This clause says that the bank shall be carried up in layers of selected material—and I ask your attention to this because the hon. gentleman argues that if there was any material like the working up in the rear portion of the bank that destroyed its character as water-tight bank. I ask attention to the last word of the clause that controlled that "carried up in layers of selected material of about eight inches thickness, well spread—the lumps broken—watered—trodden down"—and now mark these words "or otherwise compacted and carefully shaped to the heights and slopes given by the engineer." Well, all that was done by this contractor. They gave a slope for the 50 foot top—not the five foot top—as well as for the 30 foot top on the other side. The shape was for the large top, not the small top, and the slopes and the heights covering the banks as a whole where the water-tight bank was required and at a place where all the argument in this House cannot show was not actually and in fact a water-tight bank. Then to read the other part. "Only such portions"—and this part is the foundation for much of the hon. gentleman's argument—of the embankment as shall be laid out by the engineer and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specifications will be paid for as earth in water-tight banks." By that clause they cut out this imaginary part of the bank. I say the part of the clause read in with the contract relates to a portion of the bank longitudinally that was not required by the engineer to be made in such a way with such a face or such slopes or water-tight. I have already referred, and shall not do more, to the fact that the engineer is given the power to change the dimensions and character of the work. Mr. Lash, it is fair to mention, attaches no importance to the clause, practically throws it out as of no value. I do not rely upon it. I did not rely upon it when forming my conclusion, but I think it would be considered to have some bearing upon the construction of clause 11 of the specification. Now, in the specification, the construction of which, after all, taken in with the evidence and cross examination of the engineers, is the important matter. It refers to soil removed from water-tight bank being paid for as ordinary earth embankment. The hon. gentleman dwelt upon that. Now, I contend in that case that it all depends upon how the removal took place. Whether the contractor put that along side the water-tight bank in one direction, or lower down the canal in another, he could have no claim for the haulage. He was getting his 20 cents, that is the bargain he made, and he gave the Government the right to use that stuff where they pleased. The width and depth of the removal did not constitute the limit of the seat. No one says it but the hon. member for Queen's. There are no apt words intimating that the width and depth control the seat. That is to be according to the discretion of the engineer. In one place it is obvious that the depth would be to a certain extent and the width the same; but they vary according to circumstances; the width and depth are clearly at the discretion of the engineer. Now, I think I have gone over a large part of the reasons which influenced me in coming to that conclusion. I was not in the slightest degree influenced by the calculations as to how much it was going to cost the Crown. That was no part of my duty. Whether it was to cost $2,000, or $200,000, or $270,000, mattered not to me, nor should it matter to any Minister of Justice. No Minister of Justice ever gave more anxious consideration than I did to this case. I never pretended to be infallible, I have confessed in this House my own poor estimate of my ability for that office. But I do say this, that the ablest men that have filled the position, have lived to find that they made a mistake; and men in my profession have made mistakes outside the department as well. I do claim, however, that my opinion in this case was given, not only after a careful and anxious consideration upon material never before my predecessors, but upon evidence of the strongest character; and, having reached that conclusion, the mere fact that I left office on 7th January, as the hon. gentleman says, did not seem to me a sufficient reason why I should shove the whole of this matter upon my successor in office. The state ran no great danger after all. The hon. gentleman has incidentally referred to the fact of the Auditor General's duties, and of the assistance he has at his command. My opinion has been met by a counter opinion. I have shown in one particular wherein I think Mr. Lash has not appreciated the facts that were before me. But those opinions will undergo in due course another sifting and examination, and upon my successor will fall the responsibility of dealing with this matter. He will have the benefit of the discussion in this House, he will have the benefit of all that can be said here in regard to the subject, and I do not mean in the slightest degree to depreciate that. But in the circumstances, I conceive that I had a duty to perform; I performed it to the best of my ability, and I submit to the judgment of this House in regard to it. One word in relation to the practice that obtains between the departments. I am sure the member for Queen's will not be supported by the member for Bothwell in regard to the responsibility of the Minister of Railways and Canals after the Minister of Justice has given an opinion. No matter who fills the office of Minister of Justice, the opinion or advice of that department is an absolute protection under our form of government, as the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in England is to any department. The responsibility of the Railway Department in Canada ends, so far as the interpretation of a contract goes, after they have put all the material they have in their possession, before the Department of Justice. If there be a mistake here, it is wholly mine, it wholly rests upon myself, except that constitutionally the Government remain responsible for any action that may have been taken. But the Railway Department, in this matter, did all that they should do in referring to the Department of Justice the contract, with the material, and every other information I desired. When that opinion was sent back, matters, I think, very little. In regard to what conversation took place between the secretary of the department and the Minister, and his conveying the opinion of the Department of Justice to the chief engineer, the chief engineer qualified his certificate by directing particular attention to the fact that he and the Minister of Justice differed about it. But he submitted the opinion of the Department of Justice, and so drew the particular attention of the Auditor General to it. I think the subject is a very proper one for the House to consider. Those other matters of detail only tend to perplex and confuse the minds of both laymen and professional men who want to look into the subject. So far as the question involves a large amount of money, the real question is confined, it seems to me, to section 11 of that contract.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to ask my hon. friend one question. Is the case that my hon. friend is making out, in what I thought was a very candid statement, that the whole bank of fifty and thirty feet was a water-tight bank?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Wherever the water was above the base of the canal.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was good enough before he sat down, to tell us that this was quite a proper question for us to bring up in this House. I am sure we are all very much obliged to him for giving us a sort of ex-post facto permission to bring it up and consider it. I think, whether we had that permission or not, that it is one of the most important questions that has ever been brought up in this House, both as regards the extraordinary persistence with which the claim has been pursued from year to year, and with reference to the extent of the claim. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways whether the letter from Mr. Monro of 26th February last, that was suppressed in the correspondence, has been procured yet.

Mr. HAGGART. I have got the letter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. "Suppressed" is hardly a fair term.

Mr. EDGAR. What term shall I use?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Omitted.

Mr. EDGAR. I would like the hon. gentleman to be kind enough to send it across. Another thing on which the ex-Minister of Justice thinks he should be congratulated, is the fact that the whole of this case will come in review before the present Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think I said that. What I said was that I congratulated every one that the Minister of Justice would have the advantage of this discussion.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. gentleman, I understood, thought it was a good thing for the country, even if he had made a mistake in his legal opinion, that we would have the benefit of a revision of it by the present Minister of Justice. If that be the case, and according to the particulars it would seem so now, who is entitled to the credit for that but the Auditor General, and the opinion he obtained from Mr. Lash. We are told that under those circumstances the money has not been paid over, under what I must still think is a very ill-considered and incorrect opinion given by the ex-Minister of Justice. I certainly think it was a most extraordinary circumstance that two weeks after the Minister of Justice had resigned his office, when he had ceased responsibility for discharging the duties, and while there was an acting Minister in the department, the Deputy Minister should have been induced by some one to send that opinion out of the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not wish to conceal anything. It was sent at my special request. I called at the Department of Justice and saw my old deputy, and I told him that was the only matter unsettled ; I reminded him about conveying my opinion before I left the department, and I said I would be obliged to him if he would intimate that opinion to the department concerned. There was a letter sent. Before I ceased to be Minister of Justice, after giving consideration to this claim, I thought it was one that should be allowed.

Mr. EDGAR. I think that was a most improper and unconstitutional proceeding on the part of a private member of this House, who had ceased to be a responsible Minister of the Crown, to go to a public office and advise the Deputy Minister, when there was an acting Minister of Justice, to go and give the opinion of the ex-Minister of Justice to another department on a case of this importance. It was a glaringly improper and unconstitutional proceeding, I venture to say, for any ex-Minister to take. Has the ex-Minister now given up going to the Department of Justice and expressing his opinions ? If he did not give it up for a week, he may be acting in that way yet. The Minister of Railways had no right to act on that opinion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was exactly what I stated. Attention should be called to the fact that it was the opinion of the Minister of Justice who dealt with the case, and whose opinion was recorded by him before he left the department.

Mr. EDGAR. It was the opinion of a past Minister of Justice. That was the impropriety of it. There was no written opinion —it was a report of a verbal opinion of an ex-Minister of Justice. The Minister of Railways was so anxious to have this opinion carried out, one which was to reverse all the opinions of his engineers, and reverse the opinion of Sir John Thompson, that he took that scrap of paper, which had no legal authority, and ordered his chief engineer to make out a certificate under it ; and it was done. That is the position in which the Ministers find themselves on this question. The Minister of Justice complained of want of notice to-day in regard to this amendment. Only on 15th January, the hon. gentleman knew so much about it that he had to go into a Minister's office and order a letter to be sent to another department. He cannot have forgotten all about the facts, and he must be familiar with them, and so I do not think he has much reason to complain of want of notice under these circumstances. The facts are within his own knowledge. The ex-Minister of Justice proceeded to state, and to state correctly, that the question is as to what are water-tight embankments. I am sure he occupied a very unfortunate position on this question. One would imagine there must have been a conspiracy against the then Minister. All the officials of the Railway Department, all the four engineers entirely disagree with the hon. gentleman as to what are water-tight embankments. The late Sir John Thompson also entirely disagreed with the hon. gentleman on that same point.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. EDGAR. I contend he did, and I think I shall have no difficulty in showing it. The Deputy Minister of Justice from his correspondence throughout this case apparently disagreed also with the ex-Minister who has spoken to-night. I should like to know whether in the interpretation of simple words in an engineering contract, a contract similar in character to what is drawn up and worked by the engineers during their whole lives, the uniform opinion of a number of the Government's own engineers, experts at the business, as to the practical interpretation of those sections which they are to work out themselves, does not amount to anything ? How are they to tell the contractors what they are to do, if they do not understand the meaning of the sections ? They do tell the contractors what to do, and they are experts in the matter. No attempt has been made by the hon. gentleman to depreciate the skill, honesty or experience of the Government engineers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Certainly not.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. gentleman has not done so. I therefore say that those engineers before the House and the country are entitled to the highest consideration, and their opinions, unless under the most extraordinary and singular circumstances, should not be overruled. Now, what are the clauses in this contract which are of importance ? The question is simply as to how much should be paid on this contract for a certain quantity of earth excavated. The contractor's ordinary excavation was paid at 20 cents a yard ; and I want to point out to the House that under this contract the contractor was to haul that earth as excavated from the canal and to form banks with it, and in some cases to take it long distances, without being entitled to receive one single cent more per yard for it. It was only in the special case where he had the right to utilize a portion of that excavation in the making of a water-tight embankment that he was allowed 15 cents more per yard for it. That is the simple position of the case. Let us see what the specification says. It reads :

> The price tendered for earth excavation must cover the entire cost of excavating, hauling and forming it into embankments, all kinds of material found in the pits for locks, weirs, or other structures, and in the prism of the canal or side works wherever excavation is necessary.

Is not that as clear as the English language can be, that they were to get 20 cents for excavation, including hauling and formation of embankments. Section 7 has a special significance, and it is an illustration of what they were to do for that 20 cents. The provision is made in section 7, that they were not only to use that excavation, and haul it for banking up the section they were building at the time, but they were even to take it away and bank it on other sections of the canal without charging anything more. It says :

> No allowance whatever beyond the price tendered for excavation will be made for haul, and the surplus material arising on section 7, shall be taken up to section 6, and so on.

It goes on to say :

> This distribution of material to be made as will be directed by the engineer, without entitling the contractor to any extra allowance whatever. The attention of parties tendering is specially drawn to this section of the specification.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not disputed.

Mr. EDGAR. It could not possibly be disputed, because it is in the specification.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. EDGAR. I think it has a great deal to do with the question. Section 11, which refers to the water-tight embankment is very clear and simple too, and you have to read it in connection with the other sections of the contract which I have referred to. It says :

> Wherever the surface level of the water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top soil must be removed for such width and depth as may be considered necessary to form embankment seats.

That is, the water-tight embankment seats :

> The material arising from this mucking to be deposited where pointed out. It will be paid for as ordinary earth excavation. The seats shall also be well roughed up with a plough so to make good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment.

That is, the water-tight embankment :

> When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and improved—and not till then—the bank shall be carried up in layers of selected material of about eight inches in thickness, well spread, the lumps broken—watered—trodden down or otherwise compacted, and carefully shaped to the heights and slopes given by the engineer.

Given by the engineer for what ? Why, of course, for the water-tight embankment. That is what they are talking about. Then there is this special provision at the end of section 11 :

> Only such portions of the embankments as shall be laid out by the engineer, and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specification,

That is from the seat to the top :

> Will be paid for as earth in water-tight banks.

Can any English speak plainer than that ? And that has been uniformly interpreted, contrary to the view of the ex-Minister of Justice, by the Deputy Minister, Mr. Schreiber, by Mr. Monro, the chief engineer of the work, by Mr. Allison, assistant engineer on one section, by Mr. Coutlee, assistant engineer on another, and by Mr. McNaughton, assistant engineer on another section. They have no sketches of the way the thing is done, and as to what they mean, and they are all the same. Here is a sketch on page 107, which shows the complete embankment of the canal, and the portion of that next the water of the canal is called here "water-tight portion." And, underneath that is shown the "mucked portion," that is the seat of the water-tight embankment as shown there. On the other side it is exactly the same, and that is of course the water-tight embankment. They all tell us that the excavation was put in the nearest place it could be put. It was put on what they call the spoil bank, behind the water-tight embankments. I would refer to the letter which the Minister of Justice has brought before the House, as I believe it will throw some light upon this point. That is the letter which was referred to by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) as the letter of the 26th February, 1896, that Mr. Monro wrote when he signed this certificate, and containing the conditions on which he signed that certificate. I will read that letter to the House as it is important it should be known :

> Coteau Landing, 26th Feb., 1896.
> To Collingwood Schreiber, Esq.,
> Chief Engineer of Canals.

> of George Goodwin, contractor, with reference to the embankment of sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 of Soulanges Canal. There is no precise statement of this claim in my possession, but I understand the decision has been given by the late hon. Minister of Justice, to the effect, that all the embankment on these sections must be paid for as water-tight throughout, and that this decision must govern the preparation of the progress estimates. The last of these was up to the 30th November, 1895. These show a total earth excavation of 1,103,713 cubic yards; water-tight banks, 450,733 yards. Should the whole be paid for as if made into water-tight embankments, the estimate would be as follows: Excavation as above, 1,103,713 cubic yards. As all this went into the banks, the amount of the lattter would be, with 10 per cent deduction for shrinkage, 993,240 cubic yards. As a matter of fact the balance of 542,607 now returned as water-tight is spoil bank, made up partly of sand, sod, loam, and other pervious materials, standing upon the unmucked surface of the natural ground. It was merely designed to back up the water-tight lining of the inside slope of the prism which was put in as specified. It was not intended to be water-tight, nor was it ordered to be made water-tight, nor has it been made water-tight. The question appears to me to be one of fact only, and I must reaffirm my previous reports on the subject. I have prepared the estimate as directed by you, but it is on the distinct understanding that my responsibility does not attach further than to a mere statement of quantities.

In the face of such a letter as that from the engineer in charge, how could the Minister of Railways have pressed on the Auditor General for the payment of these amounts? The public will not be able to understand what influences could have been brought to bear upon the hon. gentleman to go against the direct refusal of a trusted officer of his own department in that respect. Now, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has assumed in the most jaunty way that the late Sir John Thompson knew nothing at all about these things when he gave his opinion. Why, Sir, the opinion of the 28th of February, 1894, written by Mr. Newcombe, shows that it was a well-considered expression of opinion. It is a long statement of the case, covering five pages of typewritten foolscap—is this ill-considered and valueless opinion of Sir John Thompson. Why, Sir, it was not based on mere hearsay. It was based on a prior report of Mr. Schreiber on the subject, dated the 27th November, 1893. In this report, which is addressed to the secretary of Department of Railways and Canals, Mr. Schreiber says, practically, to his chief:

> Mr. Goodwin's communication of the 16th instant, in relation to the works on sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the Soulanges Canal which he is carrying on under contract, having been referred to me, I have the honour to report that, with respect to the material to form water-tight embankments this work is being carried on and is being paid for in accordance with the terms of contract which I can see no reason to disturb.

That is Mr. Schreiber's opinion before Sir John Thompson's attention was called to it. Why, Sir, among the papers there are dozens of pages containing this elaborate communication and argument of Mr. Goodwin in favour of this change being made. That, of course, was before Sir John Thompson's opinion; because, in the first place, Mr. Newcombe's letter giving Sir John Thompson's opinion refers to Mr. Schreiber's letter of the 16th instant, and Mr. Schreiber's letter of the 16th instant refers to Mr. Goodwin's communication. Therefore, the whole matter was before Sir John Thompson: and is it to be supposed that, reading these specifications, which were also before him, he was not sufficiently advised as to what should or should not be allowed? He had Mr. Goodwin's whole claim here. It would take me half the night to read it. How can it be said that with all this before him he had not the case before him? But, Sir, what new light was thrown on the merits of this case after Sir John Thompson's opinion, and up to the 15th of January last? Everything I can find in the paper is entirely against the opinion given by the hon. ex-Minister of Justice. We have evidence piled on evidence in these papers to show that after Sir John Thompson had given his opinion, the more the matter was probed, the more strong and clear it became that he had been perfectly right in the position he took. For instance, take the engineers. I have told you what Mr. Schreiber said. Let us take the opinion of some of the other engineers on the matter. Remember, this is the new matter wh'ch Sir John Thompson did not know about, but which the hon. member for Pictou knew about, and which altered his opinion so very materially. Now, here we have, on the 4th of September, 1895, a letter from Mr. Monro, whose more recent letter I read a little while ago. He addresses Mr. Schreiber, and quotes the whole of section 11 about the water-tight banks. Then he says:

> Acting under this behalf I gave my assistants instructions which were varied to suit the conditions of each case; the embankment dimensions being as described in their replies to my query on this subject, hereto appended.
> 2nd. Only over the portions intended as seats for water-tight embankment was the surface, soil, &c., removed. This obviously limited the extent of water-tight embankment as it is clear that no bank could hold water if built on a permeable stratum or foundation.

This is some of the new information which the hon. member for Pictou is going upon to form his revised opinion. Mr. Monro goes on:

> 3rd. The vegetable soil, sand, roots, &c., which were removed from the front part of the embankments in order to afford a water-tight seat for those portions which I considered necessary to be water-tight, was thrown into the rear of the embankments, which are therefore more or > less spoil banks. The subjoined sketches show this.

That spoiled bank, that waste material, that part of the bank without any foundation, with a permeable soil, the ex-Minister of Justice tells us to-night, is, in his opinion a water-tight embankment, and should be paid for just the same as the rest of the water-tight embankments. Now, there is no use of piling evidence upon evidence. All these reports of engineers are just the same. But in this letter the engineer gives some information as to the cost to the country of reversing his opinion, which I think should have made the guardians of the public treasury pause before they tried again to get this persistent contractor satisfied by having this extraordinary claim allowed. Mr. Monro says the money for all this would be roughly as follows :—

Cost of excavation under the contract, say 2,000,000 yards at 20 cts..........	$400,000
600,000 water-tight at 15 cts............	90,000
If paid for as claimed then, say 2,000-000 at 35 cts.	700,000
Difference in favour of Goodwin, say..	$210,000

> That is to say the Government would have to pay the contractor $210,000 for alleged work, which was neither necessary to be done, nor ordered to be done. If such preposterous demands as this were entertained on these sections, there would be no reason why other contractors should not be similarly dealt with. This would result in the canal costing from one-half to three-quarters of a million of dollars more than my estimate for earth excavation, whilst in my humble opinion not a shadow of valid excuse could be given for such a course.

Then he goes on to give his idea about the merits of this claim. He says :

> In this connection let me draw your attention again to the fact that the work on sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 is almost at a standstill, while the contractor for these sections is practically defaulting on section 12 of the canal which has been abandoned by him since the fall of 1893.

It is almost useless to quote any more engineers' opinions, because they are all on the same line. And this is the new information on which the ex-Minister of Justice changed his opinion. What is the hon. gentleman's theory about this business which he explained so long to the House ? Undoubtedly a portion of this embankment, much the smaller portion of it, is water-tight—sufficiently water-tight to keep the water of the canal in its place. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) claims that because the front of that is water-tight, the whole is water-tight, although the engineers expressly say that it is not, and was never intended to be water-tight, and that no money has ever been expended to make it water-tight. Yet the ex-Minister of Justice makes this extraordinary contention. Let me show its absurdity by an illustration. If you take a bushel basket and put inside of it a patent pail, and pour water into that patent pail, the water does not go out of the pail or through the basket, and therefore the basket is water-tight. But, if you were to dip the basket into the river, or if you had water flowing in on the other side, you would soon find your theory upset.

Mr. McNEILL. Would the hon. gentleman tell us shortly what is the case the contractor makes out for himself ?

Mr. EDGAR. I suppose that he was so much in default that he wanted money. He takes section 11, which refers to water-tight embankment, and which says :

> Only such portions of the embankment as shall be laid out by the engineer and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specification will be paid for as "earth in water-tight embankments."

And he argues that that means that if any of these banks were laid out by the engineers, as they were, they would be all water-tight embankments.

Mr. McNEILL. Whether the whole is constructed in layers or not ?

Mr. EDGAR. Yes, as long as they are laid out by the engineer, they will be water-tight. That is the view that the ex-Minister of Justice took. In a letter to the Minister of Railways on the 17th September, he asks for answers to three questions :

> What I desire to be informed is, first, whether these portions of the embankments with respect to which disputes arose were laid out by the engineer ?

The portions about which disputes arose, were the portions in rear of the water-tight embankments. Of course, the answer was that they were.

> 2. Whether these portions were made up in accordance with the specifications with regard to earth and water-tight banks.

Of course they were not.

> 3. Whether these portions were made out as required and directed by the engineer in charge ?

These portions outside of the bank ; of course they were, but they were not made up in water-tight compartments, and it is on that that the hon. gentleman goes. He has adopted the construction of the latter part of section 11 which was contended for by the contractor, on the answers to those questions, and he says that those points were not before Sir John Thompson. Does anybody accuse Sir John Thompson, or Mr. Newcombe, of being so semi-idiotic as not to know that if banks were made there of any kind, they were laid out by the engineers ? That could not have been in dispute, so that the wonderful new information referred to by the Minister of Justice was not really information at all. But the argument he rested upon was that because the inside portion was water-tight, it is all water-tight. That is the whole of his argument, from beginning to end. Now, the whole story of this contractor is extraordinary. As long ago as the 3rd November, 1893, the engineer, Mr. Monro, made a report on the subject in which he severely criticises this favourite contractor Goodwin. Reporting to Mr. Schreiber on the date mentioned, he says :—

> Mr. George Goodwin has a very large force engaged in doing all the easy work on sections Nos. 4 and 5. That is what is usually termed "skinning the job." The excavation taken out to date is about 230,000 cubic yards which probably costs a little more than half the contract prices. That is to say he is rushing through the inexpensive part of these sections which were grouped together to get an average price and ensure the hauling forward of the material at the west end. The masonry is untouched also, and the long hauls avoided. Of course it will follow that whatever profit can be squeezed out will go into Goodwin's pockets, and when the work has to be relet it will cost more to the Government than if it had been let to a reliable man at fair all-round prices. You will see at a glance that some of the masonry prices are absurdly low, and as there is not in my mind the least chance of the contractor finishing the work, it is manifestly unfair that he should be permitted to continue his present tactics. However, the season will soon close down now and the matter must be settled one way or another. Your attention is particularly drawn to this part of my report.

Then on the 16th November, 1893, Goodwin puts in this claim that we are considering. He evidently thought that something must be done and, as Mr. Monro says in another place on the 4th December :

> As the contractor has expressed to me his intention of not proceeding further with this work until some understanding is arrived at, I deemed it proper to ask your instructions.

And so on. He was trying to come to an understanding, and because he was so much in default that he was afraid of being turned off his work he wanted to arrive at an understanding with the Department of Railways on this question. It was considered, reported upon and decided against him, and he could not get his understanding satisfactorily considered. The decision against him was given in February, 1894. But he lost little time in making a strike for an understanding,—on the 12th March, 1895. The answer he received from Mr. Schreiber was that he was to go on with his work, and then, as he did not go on with his work, on the 17th April he was told again to go on with his work or his contract would be forfeited. But that did not disconcert Mr. Goodwin, for on the 22nd March, 1895, he sends in a tremendously long statement reaching from page 131 to 169 in these papers setting out these grievances. And then again on the 12th September, 1895, he makes an extraordinary admission. He applies for relief, and he says "the question of facts may now be regarded as settled." On the 17th September, 1895, it appears the then Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) thought the facts were not settled and asked these three famous questions and called for new information as to the facts whereas the contractor himself in his letter of a week earlier says "the question may now be regarded as settled ; the question of interpretation or argument now remains to be considered." And the contractor kept on pressing and pushing his claims ; although they were rejected by every engineer and by the Department of Justice until, when, under the most extraordinary circumstances, the ex-Minister of Justice allowed them. I think the House and the country ought to be deeply grateful to the Auditor General for having taken the stand he has taken and having used his statutory power to obtain the opinion of eminent counsel, Mr. Lash, upon this question. That opinion, as we naturally might expect, entirely supports the opinion of Sir John Thompson and is absolutely contradictory of the opinion of the hon. member for Pictou. Well, that, I understand will come in due course before the Treasury board, and whether the Treasury board will take the responsibility, with these facts before them of supporting the unsupported opinion of the hon. member for Pictou, we shall see. However, the matter has to come before the present Minister of Justice and I shall be surprised if his conclusion are not more in accordance with those of Sir John Thompson. But when this assault was made by such an unworthy contractor upon the treasury of the country, if there was a doubt, surely the least that could have been done was to say : Let this man bring his claim in court and recover from the Government if there is law in his favour. No ; they were eager to lose this $210,000, and between $300,000 and $400,000 more to the other contractors on the same canal, and they took this side wind of opinion, this unconstitutional interference of the hon. member for Pictou, with the affairs of the Department of Justice as an excuse for ordering the chief engineer to report this certificate, and Mr. Monro also had to give his certificate to get that money out. I am glad to say that we have at last got that letter from Mr. Monro which shows the protest he made at the last moment against being forced, as he was by his superior officers to act. After what has been shown, I hope the country will not be called upon to pay this excessive demand.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish to say a word in reply to the charge that has been partly brought against my department. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) prefaced his remarks by citing a number of cases in which the expenditure upon public works was largely in excess of the estimate and declared that these increases had become a scandal and it was time public attention was drawn to the matter.

He instanced the case of the St. Charles Branch, and particularly the Galops Canal, in which there was an estimated cost of $312,000 and an expenditure of $629,000. All I can tell the hon. member for Queen's is that since I have been at the head of the department, the cost of any work under my control and under the chief engineer of my department, has been as near the estimate as the works of any railway manager, or of any other railway department in the world. I defy the hon. gentleman to mention any case, except one, where the expenditure was largely in excess of the estimate. When he says that the estimates of the Galops Canal was $312,000 and the expenditure $629,000, he forgot to tell you that the estimates, the tenders and the advertisements for the contract, were prepared by the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Page, and there was no interference with them until I was called upon to make the payments of the balance of $627,000. I was so doubtful of the quantities and the estimates that I refused to pay the balance, and the party recovered the amount in the Exchequer Court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Were not the plans changed ?

Mr. HAGGART. There was not a change in the plans, nor a change in the specifications. Let me mention that in Great Britain, where their engineers are exceedingly careful in making estimates, I find, according to the Annual Registrar, that the estimate for the Manchester Canal was £5,750,000, and the cost £14,998,000. And so in nearly every other work. There are always some things which an engineer cannot calculate upon, and sometimes the expenditure is largely in excess, and sometimes only slightly in excess. The hon. gentleman makes charges against this Government as to their management of public works and contracts. He forgets to tell you that from 1874 to 1878 they let $3,000,000 worth of contracts without any tenders at all, and over $4,000,000 worth of contracts with out any estimates. They did not let the contracts to the lowest tenderers, and the excess of the expenditures over estimates is much greater than such public works conducted by my department. Now, as to this particular charge which the hon. gentleman has made to-day. There was a contractor on the Soulanges Canal who thought he had a claim against the department for a different classification from that which he was getting from the engineer. The engineer in charge who drew up the specifications, insisted upon one style of classification being made. The contractor appealed from the chief engineer to the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Justice, in the first instance, agreed with the department.

Mr. McCARTHY. Can the hon. gentleman say the nature of the appeal he made to the Department of Justice ?

Mr. HAGGART. He simply wrote a letter to my department, stating that the work was wrongly classified, and asking my department to get the opinion of the Minister of Justice on the classification. He did not appeal on any clause in the contract. Let me draw your attention to the clause in the contract to show how little responsibility rests upon my department with reference to these matters :

> The engineer shall be the sole judge of the works and material in respect to both of quality and quantity, and his decision on all questions in dispute with regard to work or material, shall be final.

The provision used to be that he had the power of interpreting the meaning or intention of a contract, and the plan and specifications. Those are the powers of the engineer. Now, what is the practice of the department ? Since I have been at the head of the department, neither myself nor the Minister of Public Works ever saw an estimate of what quantity the chief engineer certified to. The chief engineer is the only judge as to quantity, and I would have no right to tell my chief engineer that the quantity was wrong, and that he should make such and such quantities and such and such classification. I never attempted to do it, because I know the chief engineer, who is the deputy of my department, would not be guided by me in that respect for one moment. Then as to the interpretation of the contract, what are his duties ? Where he has any doubt about it, he has obtained the opinions of Sir John Thompson and of Sir Alexander Campbell, as to what his duties are. The very fact of his sending over to the Department of Justice and asking their opinions on a particular subject shows that he has doubts upon it, and has to get their opinion. His instructions are that when he gets an opinion from that department, it is sufficient justification for him to work upon it, and to make certificates in accordance with it. The hon. member for Queen's states that, notwithstanding these letters that were sent to me by Mr. Monro, I caused no inquiry to be made as to the progress of the work, and the scamping of the work. The moment I received those letters, I sent the chief engineer down there to report, and he reported that the work was being conducted in accordance with the specifications.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is not in the papers.

Mr. HAGGART. The Deputy Minister reported to me, and drew my attention to the clause in the contract which says that he was perfectly justified in constructing the work in the manner he did, that he was to use so much material out of the prism and excavation for the canal, as would build up the banks fifty feet broad on top on one side, and thirty feet on the other. The clause is this :

> The surplus material arising from prism, &c., on section No. 7, shall, after making up the banks on that section, be carried to widen the embankments of sections to the eastward ; and the surplus on section No. 6 shall be dealt with in the same manner——

It was left in the bottom for the purpose of being carried onward to make the embankments to the eastward.

> —so that all the excavation arising from the sections embraced in this contract west of lock No. 5, will be disposed of in making the embankment on each side of the summit level between stations 180 and 460.

The chief engineer reported to me that the work was being carried on in accordance with the specifications. It is true that the contract was not rushed forward as rapidly, perhaps, as might be, but that was partly owing to the fact that the Minister of Finance would not grant me sufficient sums for the purpose of pushing on the work as rapidly as I would like ; because he said he wished the contractors would proceed slowly in order not to make the expenditure on capital account larger than he wanted it to be. Now, it is true that the two engineers, in making their certificates for the Auditor General, drew his attention to the letter which the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar) read a moment ago. The chief engineer virtually stated to the Auditor General that his certificate was in accordance with the instructions of the Minister of Justice, but was not in accordance with his own opinion on the subject. The chief engineer knew perfectly well what course would be pursued. He was aware that the duty of the Auditor General was to pay the amount or to get advice on the subject—which he did—and if the Railway Department was not satisfied, an appeal would be made to the Treasury Board, which would inquire into the whole matter, and obtain another opinion from the Department of Justice. Such cases very often occur. The certificate given by Mr. Monro has the following condition attached : "Signed by me, subject to the conditions stated in my letter, dated 26th February, 1896." The certificate given by Mr. Collingwood Schreiber is signed by him—"certified as regards item 5, in accordance with the letter of the Department of Justice, dated 15th January, 1896." There is, then, no charge of laxity made against the department in this respect. The fact of the matter is this. The Minister at the head of the Department of Railways and Canals never sees a certificate and never knows of a payment made. An hon. gentleman opposite has stated that I had imposed my will on the department, and had practically compelled the chief engineer to sign that certificate. That gentleman never consulted me in regard to the certificate. I never imposed my will on him. He told me that the opinion which he had obtained from the Department of Justice when Sir John Thompson and Sir Alexander Campbell were the Ministers, was to the effect to be guided in all matters involving legal interpretation of contracts by the Minister of Justice. Hon. gentleman opposite may challenge the Minister of Justice as regards his opinion on this question.

Mr. LISTER. He never gave an opinion.

Mr. HAGGART. The Deputy Minister is the only one who sends over an opinion of the department, and it is signed by him. He stated that the Minister of Justice had given a decision before he left the department, and he communicated that decision to my department.

Mr. LISTER. It was a verbal decision.

Mr. HAGGART. It is never in writing.

Mr. LISTER. Sir John Thompson's opinion was in writing.

Mr. HAGGART. It was conveyed by the department.

Mr. LISTER. There was a minute in the department.

Mr. HAGGART. No minute was transferred to our department. All communications from the Minister of Justice are by letter from the deputy, expressing the opinion of the department on the subject. In regard to the interpretation of this contract in question, lawyers may differ on it. There are three clauses which bear on it. Clause 1 contains the following provisions :—

> The canal will be generally 100 feet wide at bottom, with slopes in excavation of 2 to 1 throughout. The embankments forming the sides shall be of such top widths as will be directed, and be carried up to the height of 161 feet above datum on the summit level. Below lock No. 5, the top bank shall be 143 feet above datum, or such other height as may be directed.

Clause 7 is as follows :—

> No allowance whatever beyond the prices tendered for excavation will be made for haul. The surplus material arising from the prism, &c., on section 7 shall, after making up the banks on that section, be carried forward to widen the embankments of sections to the eastward ; and the surplus of section 6 shall be dealt with in the same manner, so that all the excavation arising from the section embracing this contract west of lock 5 will be disposed of in making the embankment on each side of the summit level stations 118 and 460 ; filling around the various structures. This distribution of material to be made as will be directed by the engineer without entitling the contractor to any extra allowances whatever. The attention of parties tendering is specially drawn to this section of the specification.

Clause 11 says :

> Wherever the surface level of the water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top soil must be removed for such widths and depths as may be considered necesary to form the embankment seat. The material arising from this mucking to be deposited > where pointed out. It will be paid for as ordinary earth excavation. The seats shall also be well roughed up with plough so as to make good bond with the layer of earth forming the base of the embankment. Puddle walls or cut-offs to be made where required—the puddle to be prepared and laid on as specified hereafter. When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and approved—and not till then—the banks shall be carried up in layers of selected material of about eight inches in thickness, well spread, the lumps broken, watered, trodden down or otherwise compacted and carefully shaped to the heights and slopes given by the engineer. Only such portions of the embankments as shall be laid out by the engineers and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specification will be paid for as earth in water-tight banks.

The whole question arises on these clauses of the specification. The contractor contended that he was entitled to the whole prism as bank, that it was made the same way, that the slopes were laid out by the engineers, that the banks were made perfectly level at the top, with a slope of two to one on each side.

Mr. LISTER. What otherwise would have been done with the spoil ?

Mr. HAGGART. It was not necessary to make it into banks, which involved a great deal more expense, as they were made with a slope of two to one. A large quantity of spoil might have been deposited at a particular place. I am not contending for the interpretation of the Minister of Justice, as given against my engineers. I was inclined to the opinion of the engineers ; but, on lookink over the specification, I came to the conclusion that there is great doubt in regard to it, and as to whether a court of law might not hold the Minitser of Justice's interpretation of the clauses of the specification to be correct. All I know is that I stuck by my department : that the engineer in charge of the works reported that the contractor was not entitled to his claim, as did the chief engineer, and until the Minister of Justice stated that he was entitled to it under the contract. Then the chief engineer reported to the Auditor General, and he regarded his report in such a way that there was nothing for the Auditor General to do but to employ counsel to find out what his duty was, whether the interpretation of the Minister of Justice was correct, and then there was the further protection of an appeal from the Auditor General to the Treasury Board, in maintaining the opinion given by the Minister of Justice on the subject. So far as I am concerned, I never see a certificate as to the quantity of the work, and never know anything as to the classification of the work. Under the contract that is vested in the deputy head of the department. He has charge of it, and I suppose that, ministerially, I am responsible for it. If the deputy goes wrong continuously, I suppose there is a ministerial responsibility upon the head of the department ; but, under the contract, the deputy measures and classifies in nearly every contract, and up to this contract, I believe, the legal part of it was vested in him as to the interpretation of the contract. Now, I am informed the interpretation of the specifications and the contract rests with the Department of Justice, and on that legal interpretation my department acts As I said before, I never see a quantity ; I never have had a conversation with my deputy directing him in any manner as to the classification that shall be made, or as to the quantity of work he shall return. The only conversation I have with him would be purely ministerial, as to the amount of the security required and as to the return of the deposit. But, as to the mechanical part of the contract, I have nothing to do with reference to it. Notwithstanding my ministerial responsibility, I say that the chief engineer is the sole judge in reference to these matters, and he is made so by the contract. I have inquired into this matter thoroughly, and I can say that I fully endorse the action of my chief engineer in reference to it. He was careful in all his transactions throughout this affair, and he acted in strict accordance with his duty as deputy head of the department.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am somewhat surprised at the argument which the Minister of Railways has put forward in his own defence. His argument is that he is not personally responsible, but that, under some arrangement which I have not yet been able to understand, the Department of Justice becomes answerable for the legal construction of the contract, and the certificates which the engineer in chief has directed in this case to be made, rests upon that legal construction. It is not very difficult for any person who is at all familiar with these contracts, to understand the facts which have been stated, and about which there appears to be no dispute. There is not much difficulty in arriving at a conclusion as to where the blame in this case rests. The contract provides in the 8th clause the engineer shall be the sole judge of work, material, quantity, &c., and his decision on all questions in dispute on these matters shall be final, and no additional work or changes shall be deemed to be executed unless the same are executed to the satisfaction of the engineer. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has pointed out that, by reason of some alterations, the words which we find here are eliminated, and that up to this time it has been within the power and the duty of the engineer to determine matters of fact, as well as interpret the contracts. The latter duty, it appears, has been taken away from him. Why that was done we are not called upon to inquire now. We find that, all that is left to the engineer is to determine the question of fact, and that his determination of the question of fact is final and conclusive. The first thing the House ought to make up its mind to is: Is the dispute on a question of fact, or a question of the interpretation of the contract. If it is a question of fact, then the decision of the engineer is final. If it is a question of the interpretation of a contract, then it appears to me that the contractor has a right to present his claim, and the department has a right to present their view, and a court of law would determine as to the proper interpretation of the documents. Now, Sir, the facts are not very much in dispute, nor are the specifications which are to regulate the issue here between the contractor and the department. In the first place, the specifications say that the price tendered for earth excavation must cover the entire cost of excavating and hauling and forming into embankments, &c. Another section provides that the distribution of material is to be made as is directed by the chief engineer, without entitling the contractor to any extra allowance whatever, and the attention of parties tendering is specially drawn to this part of the specification. If that stood alone, what does it mean? It means that all the material taken out in the excavation of this work is to be disposed of in the manner pointed out under this provision, and it stipulates in the plainest possible terms that for distributing the excavation, and at the places and in the manner specified under the direction of the engineer, no additional price is to be allowed. There is no question of interpretation there. There is nothing to send to the department about. No engineer requires a lawyer to tell him what that means; no man who reads it requires any instruction on that point. Well, what more do we find in this contract?

> Wherever the surface level of water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top soil must be removed for such width and depth as may be considered necessary to form the embankment seats.

In other words, you have to cut down the top until you get solid ground so as to form a base on which to make this embankment.

> The material arising from this mucking to be deposited where pointed out. It will be paid for as ordinary earth excavation.

There is no difficulty about that. We have first got the material which is excavated in making the canal, the raceway, and so on. That has to be excavated and distributed, and is paid for at one price, which I understand is 20 cents per cubic yard. Then it goes on to say:

> The seats shall also be well roughed up with a plough, so as to make good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment. Puddle walls or cut-offs to be made where required—the puddle to be prepared and laid as specified hereafter.
> When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and approved—and not till then—the bank shall be carried up in layers of selected material, of about eight inches in thickness, well spread, the lumps broken, watered, trodden down or otherwise compacted and carefully shaped to the heights and slopes given by the engineer.
> Only such portions of the embankments as shall be laid out by the engineer, and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specification, will be paid for as "earth in water-tight banks."

Now, what is there to interpret in all this? Has any engineer, from beginning to end, ever expressed the slightest difficulty of interpretation? No, Sir; we are told here that every engineer of the department, from the subordinate engineers on the ground, fortified by the opinion of Mr. Monro, who was in charge of them, endorsed by the chief engineer here—all agreed without a shadow of doubt, that the portion of this work which was to be paid for as extra was that which was properly within what was called the water-tight embankment; and to prevent any shadow of doubt, if there could be any about it, we are told that the matter was referred to the Department of Justice to satisfy the importunity of this contractor; and the late Sir John Thompson came to the conclusion that there was no claim and could be no claim on the part of this contractor beyond what had been certified by the engineer. But what I want to direct the attention of the House to is that this was a plain and simple matter of fact. Was this a water-tight embankment that the engineer certified to? Did he certify to all that could be called a water-tight embankment, or was there anything beyond that? It is a matter of fact, and on a matter of fact the engineer is the sole judge, and his decision is final. I need not remind the Minister of Railways—I hope I need not remind any gentleman of my profession, who has had any experience of contracts—that the decision of the engineer is so necessary that until his certificate is obtained, the contractor has no right to recover one solitary cent. That will be found later in the contract, if I am not mistaken. Now, what is the pretext on which this monstrous claim—I do not think the language is too strong founded. The engineers have remained of the same opinion, but the late Minister of Justice expressed a verbal opinion before he left office, that the legal construction and interpretation of this contract required the department to pay, not merely for the work which the engineer said, in point of fact was done, but for work which the engineers still say has not been done. Mr. Monro, acting on the directions he received from the department, signs the formal certificate, but he does it under protest. It is just as a man employing a contractor insists on the engineer certifying to his getting 50 per cent more than he is entitled to. That is the position this matter is in. The Government here, representing the country, and being the employer, are insisting on the engineer, who is placed in authority between the employer and the contractor, certifying that the contractor is entitled to be paid, whatever the percentage is in this case, amounting to $210,000 more than the engineer says he is entitled to. Well, Sir, that may be done, but I think the country will be puzzled to know how it can be done. We have engineer after engineer saying that the contractor is not entitled to it; we have the department shirking the responsibility: we have the Minister standing up in the House and saying that he is not to blame. God knows, he says, I never was told of it or heard of it; and he adds, with equal truth, I never do see these things or know anything about them. I think we can believe that; but he is allowing a gentleman in the Department of Justice, by a verbal statement, to control the action of his officers, under some standing order, which is not in the contract. By what right, I would like to know, does Mr. Schreiber send and ask the Department of Justice to interpret this contract? There is nothing in the contract requiring that. The Minister says he did not tell him; he is not responsible: he did not know of it. Who, in the name of common sense, is responsible? Where is the term of the contract that says the Department of Railways and Canals is to take the ipse dixit of a gentleman who, ten days before, was at the head of the Department of Justice, but who, at the time this document was signed, had no more responsibility than any other man in Canada. I deny that there ever was a question of interpretation of the contract. I say that the contract is so plain and clear that no person can doubt its meaning. The dispute arises, not on the interpretation of the contract, but on a question of fact as to which the engineer's decision is absolute and final. I am glad that this money has not yet been paid, and hope that this discussion may be in time to save its payment. But what is the position? The hon. Ministers tell us this: A certificate was made by Mr. Monro at the direction of the chief engineer of his department. The chief engineer ordered Mr. Monro to do that, under a standing regulation of the department, according to which, in matters of interpretation, he is to be guided by the Department of Justice, and without his knowledge and without any responsibility on his part. And then he says all that is candidly told to the Auditor General. In other words, that was not concealed from the Auditor General. No, we are bound to acknowledge that these engineers throughout acted in the most honourable and straightforward way. Mr. Monro deserves the thanks of this House and the country. In the position in which he was placed, it took a pretty bold man to stand up and defy, as he did, the evident wishes of the department; and while he was putting his hand to the document, he placed clearly before the department and everybody the fact that he was doing it mechanically and not because he was certifying that the work was really done. That goes to the Attorney General. Then the hon. Minister tells us that if his department wish to appeal, it could do so to the Treasury Board. Appeal from what? From the Auditor General's decision, given on the opinion of an independent lawyer, that this country is not responsible for that money. The department is going to appeal to the Treasury Board to see who is responsible. It is the Treasury Board that seeks to make the country pay the claim. The generosity of the department is unbounded. It is not content with paying its honest debt, but when its own engineers say that the claim is not one which ought to be entertained, when the Auditor General, taking independent advice, says it is a claim which has no foundation in justice, or necessity or honesty, the department is going to appeal to the Treasury Board, and then the Minister of Justice may be consulted again. This is going back to the origin of the trouble. There was a change in the personnel, but if there had not been a change, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who is the cause of the trouble, would have guided the Treasury Board and overruled the Auditor General, and so the money would have been paid out. I understand the Minister, who surely is responsible if any one is, to say that he believed in the certificates of his engineers, that he thought those engineers were right, and that at this moment he thinks his engineers were right. If the engineers were all of the one opinion and if the hon. member for Pictou was of another opinion, and if the Auditor General and his advisers were of the opinion of the engineers, what would one think was the proper thing to do? Surely it is a case for the courts. Surely before this money is to be paid out, the Government will ask the Exchequer Court to determine which is right and which is wrong. Are they going against the interests of the country, to overrule the Auditor General and insist, by this farce of going before the Treasury Board and taking the opinion of the Minister of Justice, in overruling the Auditor General and paying out this money which, as I understand, would involve, in the end, something in the neighbourhood of three-quarters of a million dollars, when the simple easy expedient is open of asking the Exchequer Court whether Mr. Goodwin is entitled to anything more than the engineers have certified to. I was interested not long ago in a case where a dispute arose between a contractor and the engineer. What did the Government do? They sent it to the Exchequer Court. By a simple order made by the hon. Minister himself, the Exchequer Court is served with jurisdiction to determine the question. I trust that this discussion is not too late to prevent the performance of what does, on the face of it, appear a most suspicious transaction; and if the hon. Minister thinks there is still a possible claim on the part of Mr. Goodwin, let the matter be referred to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. DICKEY. I desire to say only a few words on this question, chiefly from the departmental standpoint, and in doing so of course I wish to avoid any expression of opinion whatever on the merits of the construction of the contract. First, because I have no opinion, not having had the opportunity of looking at the contract carefully enough to form an opinion, but chiefly because possibly I have to deal with this matter myself. I think that the hon. member for Simcoe has somewhat misapprehended the position of the Department of Justice with reference to the Government. All large companies have a solicitor, and there is only one way of acting with reference to the solicitor of a large institution, and that is to trust him altogether or else employ somebody else to watch him. The Department of Justice stands to the several departments of the Government somewhat in that relation. In the administration of every department of the Government, questions connected with the interpretation of documents and various other questions of law are continually arising, and I understand the invariable practice to be that when a difficulty occurs as to which some authoritative decision is required, the authority, so far as the department is concerned, is the Department of Justice, which acts as solicitor for the Government. It is difficult to conceive how business could be carried on upon any other system. Either each department should have a solicitor and depend upon him or each department should engage a solicitor outside at heavy expense, or a department of the Government, such as the Department of Justice, presided over by a member of the profession, should be charged with the responsibility of determining the various legal difficulties which arise from time to time. I do not for that reason see why the hon. member for Simcoe finds such fault with the position taken by the hon. Minister of Railways. Assuming for one instant that there is actually a legal difficulty in the construction of that contract,——

Mr. McCARTHY. That is the reason I found fault, because the engineer never pretended there was any difficulty.

Mr. DICKEY. I understand the hon. gentleman to agree if there were a legal difficulty, the only way to settle it is to refer it to the legal branch of the Government.

Mr. McCARTHY. Undoubtedly on questions of law.

Mr. DICKEY. With reference to the particular question on hand, and without expressing the slightest opinion with regard to the proper interpretation of the contract, I wish to say only a very few words. The hon. Minister of Railways has been thoroughly consistent in his action in this matter. His officers, from the first, told him that there was no question about the proper interpretation of this contract. They told him that the contractor was entirely wrong. The hon. Minister of Railways took that view and seems to express that view to-day. In answer to a question some time ago, he very frankly told the House that he had formed the opinion that the contractors were wrong, but that the Department of Justice had overruled him. So far as the Department of Railways is concerned, I think the House will be perfectly satisfied that that department has been standing off this claim to the utmost of its ability, from first to last, and is doing so at the present time. But the claim was referred to the Minister of Justice, and it seems to me that this attack, if it be an attack at all, is directed against the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and against him alone. And what is it for? At the utmost, it is an attack upon him for making a mistake in his construction of a contract—for delivering bad laws to the Department of Railways. I desire to offer no opinion as to that, but I wish to protest, as one who is, for a short time, perhaps, in the Department of Justice, against the proposition that a Minister of Justice who honestly considers a claim and gives the best interpretation that he can, is to be judged in this House as prima facie guilty of fraud and wrong-doing because his opinion turns out to be not well-founded in law. The hon. gentleman may be entirely wrong in the law he has delivered. He may be entirely correct. But I am satisfied that no hon. gentleman who knows him, who has listened to this frank, reasoned statement to-day, can doubt that he felt himself forced to the conclusion that the interpretation that he placed upon the contract was correct. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), for whose opinion on these matters I have great deference, takes a strong view to the contrary. But I can appeal to him from his experience in his practice, to acknowledge frankly that questions that have appeared perfectly plain have turned out after discussion and investigation not to be so plain. The hon. member for Simcoe has heard this discussed to-day. I do not think he heard the statement of the hon. member for Pictou, as I think he was absent from the House at the time. The hon. member for Pictou made, at any rate, a perfectly intelligible statement and supported it by arguments that seemed sufficient, to his mind. I rise to protest against the assumption that assuming his conclusions are wrong, therefore he should be held up as guilty of fraud or of anything more than a mistake in law. The hon. member for Pictou was for a long time head of the Marine and Fisheries Department, and I have heard with pleasure from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and I have read in the newspapers of the country, from time to time—last December was one occasion that

I recollect—frank acknowledgment of the ability which he brought to bear in the administration of the affairs of his department of his thorough uprightness as an administrator and his entire disregard of political considerations, sometimes much to the displeasure of his political friends. If one thing can be said of the hon. member, it is that in his administration of the Marine and Fisheries Department, he not only gave the attention that a man would give to his own business, mastering all its details, but he administered it fairly, honestly, and without regard to political considerations. That spirit the hon. member carried into the Justice Department, administering the affairs of that department as he had done the affairs of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I protest, so far as he is concerned, against imputing to him wrongful motives, even assuming that he has in this particular instance made a mistake with regard to the law. With respect to the future conduct of this matter, I dare say it will come before me to advise the Treasury Board. Of one thing this House may be certain and that is that where one Minister of Justice before me has expressed an opinion, and another has expressed what may be considered different opinion, I will be very slow to express any opinion that would oblige the country to pay this sum without reference to the courts. Of course, I bind myself to nothing, but that is a conclusion that any one would naturally come to in view of the varying decisions of the Ministers of Justice who have preceded me. I do not propose to discuss the matter on its merits or to labour the matter further, but I think it fair to make these few remarks, partly from a departmental standpoint, and partly with regard to the well-known character of the hon. member for Pictou.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) a question. I would like to know if he can inform us what quantity Mr. Goodwin excavated altogether.

Mr. HAGGART. About 2,000,000 cubic yards.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, as I understand it, on the contention supported by the late Minister of Justice, we should be called upon to pay 35 cents for every single yard excavated. As well as I can follow the discussion, that appeared to be the result. And it did seem to me, looking at it from a non-legal standpoint, that this was utterly contradictory of the express terms of the contract. That contract stated explicitly that we would pay 20 cents per yard for the excavation which was not employed in a certain way. Now, it seems that we are called upon to pay for the entire excavation at 35 cents per yard, very nearly double what the engineers appear to have considered adequate not only for excavating, but for hauling and depositing the material.

Mr. HAGGART. That is only the partial excavation of the prism, and what was taken out was used to make the embankment. The rest may be far in excess of what is required to make the embankment, even though it is thirty to fifty feet on top for the entire length.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be ; but I understand that, for what he has done so far, the decision is that he is to be paid 35 cents per cubic yard. I merely rose to ask that question, because it struck me that it had an important bearing upon the whole subject. It was perfectly clear that 600,000 yards were allowed for at 35 cents. There remained a balance of 1,400,000 yards in dispute. The engineers were ready to allow 20 cents, but Mr. Goodwin claimed 15 cents additional, or $210,000 in all. So that for every yard he has excavated, according to Mr. Monro's letter, he claims 35 cents. I desire to add to what the hon. member for North Simcoe has said, that as a matter of business, it is my strong opinion, based on the practice that has prevailed in the department, as a rule, and which ought always to prevail, that in a case like this, where there are two Ministers of Justice, apparently, giving opposite opinions, and where there is a lawyer of eminence well conversant with the whole details, who is opposed to the contention of the late Minister of Justice, if there ever was a case that ought to be taken before the courts, it ought to be this one. If this claim is granted it is sure to afford a precedent for a whole class of similar cases. If this payment is made of $70,000, or whatever it be, there is not the slightest doubt that a swarm of claims will at once spring up based upon this one, and we will escape cheaply if we do not have to pay $750,000 before this matter is ended, that is, if this present payment is conceded, and the Auditor General is overruled. If this is done without an opinion of the courts of law being obtained, a grave responsibility would rest on the Minister of Justice and on the department. Now I would like to have heard a definite statement from the Minister of Justice on that point. I think the Government might well have assured the House that, after the presentation of facts that has now been made, nothing would be paid without an appeal to the courts. It appears to me that this is their simple duty, and I am perfectly certain that this House and the country at large will expect of them to do so in their own interest. I think they ought not to allow this debate to close without expressing a distinct opinion on that subject.

Mr. DICKEY. I could not very well pledge myself to take the case to the courts, as I may come to the conclusion that this claim should not be allowed at all.

Mr. GIBSON moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. DICKEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 17th April, 1896.

PRAYERS.

THE ARMENIAN OUTRAGES.

Mr. CHARLTON. I ask leave to present the motion I have in my hand, which meets the approval of the hon. leader of the House, and which he is anxious should be presented, on the understanding that the time of the House is not to be used in discussing it. I beg to move, therefore :

> That this House expresses its deep sympathy with the sufferings of the Christian population in Asiatic Turkey, and trusts that further endeavours will be made to alleviate their lot, and that, for this purpose, concurrent action by the Christian powers, including the United States of America, may be secured.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have much pleasure in seconding this motion. The hon. gentleman was good enough to confer with me with reference to the terms of the motion, and I at once assured him of the deep sympathy of the Government. I am gratified to find that in addition to the Christian powers in Europe who have taken such measures as they were able to take to relieve the Armenians from the great suffering they have experienced, reference is also made to the United States of America, whom, I am sure, we will be glad to see associating with the powers of Europe in this very important action.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 104) to amend the Act respecting the representation of the North-west Territories of Canada (from the Senate).—(Mr. Daly.)

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. TISDALE moved that Bill (No. 31) to incorporate the Hudson's Bay and Pacific Railway Company and Bill (No. 85) to incorporate the Montreal and Province Line Railway Company be placed on the Orders of this day among the private Bills for consideration in Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the eleventh report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways and Canals.

Motion agreed to.

ADDITIONAL SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE FOR QUEBEC.

Mr. DICKEY moved that on Monday next the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution :—

> That it is expedient to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts by providing for the salary of an additional judge of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, at a salary of $4,000 per annum.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Mr. McCARTHY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to Bill (No. 14) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, as amended by select committee. Yesterday the hon. gentleman who leads the House promised that an answer should be given to-day whether the Government would or would not either put the Bill on the Government Orders or give facilities for further consideration. It has been amended after careful consideration by select committee, and probably it would not take more than half an hour to consider it here.

Mr. DICKEY. It is because I disagree with the hon. gentleman as to the time it would take in discussion here that I am not able to assent to his proposition. The time at the disposal of the House now is barely enough for the actual necessary work of the session ; and, while the main features of the hon. gentleman's Bill commend themselves to me personally, there is in it an element for controversy that, it seems to me, would exhaust a good deal of time. I regret, therefore, that I could not ask the House to put it on their Government Orders, in view of the state of the Government Order paper itself.

VOTERS' LISTS OF 1896.

Mr. DICKEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 87) respecting the voters' lists of 1896.

Mr. CHARLTON. Explain.

Mr. DICKEY. It is to do away with the revision of the lists for this year.

Mr. LAURIER. Why do you not make it permanent, instead of doing it every year ?

Mr. DICKEY. We will consider that.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a point in connection with this Bill to which I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice. These lists upon which the general election will be held were perfected in 1894, and they will be two years old before the general election takes place. After the general election, I presume, in all probability, there may be some protest and some members unseated. Now, there will not be time to revise the lists before the by-elections in these constituencies will have to take place. Therefore, it will be three years from the time the lists were revised before these by-elections will be held. There should be some provision for perfecting these lists in some way before the electors are called upon, perhaps next September, or from then until next December, to record their votes in these by-elections. There cannot be a revision until a year from next month, but some provision might be made for the elections that I refer to that are to be held in the meantime.

Mr. DICKEY. I think the case is open to the remark that the hon. gentleman has made. I do not know how far it would be right for this House to presume that any member in it is going to be unseated for bribery and corruption and to legislate on that basis.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You do legislate on that basis.

Mr. DICKEY. But Parliament will meet, I assume, very shortly after the elections, and I dare say there will be time to make some provision. I do not think it would be right for the House now to take action on the presumption that there would be any large number of counties opened after the general election.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not say there will be, but there may be ; and, judging from the past three elections, we have every reason to suppose that there will be a certain number of constituencies in which irregularities occur and the members lose their seats. I wish to secure to the electorate the full exercise of their franchise, and the hon. the Minister of Justice can readily understand that holding an election on a list three years old, many citizens are certain to be disfranchised.

Mr. CASEY. There is another point to which I would like to call attention. It is very proper, I suppose, to avoid the unnecessary expense of a total revision every year. But, on the other hand, the fact remains that at the best, as my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has pointed out, the list will be a very old list before the general election comes on, and still older for the by-elections. Therefore, I urge on the hon. Minister the propriety of adding to such a Bill as this, a system of registration of voters who have become qualified since the making of the list, similar to that in force in the provincial elections in the province of Ontario. We all know that, in towns especially, the personnel of the electorate changes rapidly, and that a difference of two years in time will make a difference of a very considerable percentage in the voters' list. A large number of men come of age every year, and come into the enjoyment of income sufficient to qualify them to vote, and it is really too bad that they should not have the right to go upon the voters' list even at the last moment. I need not explain to the House or to the hon. Minister the system in use in Ontario. It is familiar to all the Ontario members, at any rate, and other members must have seen descriptions of it and how it is worked. I think it can be said that the system has worked well in Ontario, and has made the lists used at the elections much more representative up to date of the actual electorate in the country than could have been done under any other system. I would ask the hon. Minister to consider, before this Bill gets through committee, whether he could not add a provision of that kind. I would like to know whether he has considered it, and if so, what he thinks of it.

Mr. DICKEY. The Ontario system is not in use in all the provinces of the Dominion, and the people are not accustomed to it. While it might work in Ontario, I am quite sure that it would not work without experience, and a great deal of machinery, in other parts of the country. Therefore, I do not think it would be practicable at all to put a rider of that sort on this Bill. I do not see how it could be worked out.

Mr. CASEY. The people outside of Ontario are not accustomed to it, but neither were the people of Ontario accustomed to it until recently. Yet the system has worked well from the first. I take it for granted that the people of the rest of the Dominion, and the officials outside of Ontario, are quite intelligent enough to make the system a success in every province. I do not see any objection to making it a rider to this Bill In fact, it would be particularly appropriate.

Mr. IVES. I was going to ask if the hon. gentleman proposes to strike off the names of electors that had ceased to be qualified, as well as to add new names.

Mr. CASEY. That would be a fair arrangement; only that would amount to a form of revision. There is a method of detecting unqualified voters, to a certain extent, by the oath ; there is no means now of obtaining the franchise for those who do not happen to be on the list.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Minister of Justice raised the objection to the proposition made by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) that we should make use of the provincial lists, that the system in the different provinces vary, that while that system as worked smoothly enough in some of the provinces, it would require a good deal of machinery and would be difficult to apply the principle. Now, the principle was applied and worked smoothly enough for the first eighteen years of confederation ; and when the Franchise Act was passed in 1885 there certainly was no public demand for a change in the law ; there were no petitions before Parliament asking that any such change should be made ; nobody had discovered at that time that eighteen years' experience had developed any difficulty in the application and use of the provincial lists. When the law was introduced here, it was introduced by the Government for several reasons assigned, and one of these reasons was that it was necessary to establish a uniform franchise throughout the Dominion, and that in adopting provincial franchises we would have a system that varied in different provinces. But before the Bill had been perfected, the Government had adopted this principle, had adopted universal suffrage in Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, had adopted a suffrage based upon personal property in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and had established a system under which the qualifications were certainly as varied as they had been before under the provincial franchises. Now, experience proves the operation of this Bill has been cumbersome and very expensive. It costs members who desire to attend to the revision of the lists in their riding large sums of money to do this work efficiently. I suppose the average cost to members throughout the Dominion, in attending to the revision of the lists, is probably not less than $500, and probably the average is $750 of expense to each member, that is, if he wishes to see that the lists are properly revised ; and this is an onerous burden. Then again, people have to look after two lists. A voter has to see that his name has been placed on the provincial list for provincial purposes, and he has to see again that his name is upon the Dominion list for Dominion purposes ; and the fact that two lists are in existence begets confusion and creates trouble.

Now, Sir, although I am sometimes accused of borrowing examples from the United States, I think it is worth our while to look at the experience of that country with regard to this very matter. Of course, the first federal system was established in the United States, and after ten years' experience under the articles of federation, a constitutional convention was called for the purpose of framing a constitution for the thirteen states. Now, the suffrage question was debated by that constitutional convention for a long time, and several propositions were made with regard to the suffrage that should be established for national purposes for voting for members of Congress and President of the United States. One proposition was that there should be a uniform suffrage established by the government of the United States, a uniform basis of qualification throughout the entire thirteen states, and the states that might afterwards be admitted, and that this suffrage should require voters' lists made expressly for the purpose of national elections. Another proposition was that the states should provide for the mode of elections of Congressmen in each state and for the mode of casting votes for Presidents. A third proposition was that the suffrage in existence in the different states should be adopted ; and after the most exhaustive discussion, the decision arrived at by the constitutional convention was that the most popular form of suffrage in each state should be adopted ; and the constitution reads that the suffrage in use in the states for the lowest branch of the state legislature should be used ; and if there was any difference in the qualification, the lowest form of qualification should be the qualification of such states for the election of members of Congress and Presidents of the United States.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. gentleman knows they have changed that since on account of the supposed misconduct of some of the states.

Mr. CHARLTON. No, they cannot change it, they have not altered the constitutional provision. They have made laws in some states with regard to the proper carrying out of the provision where ballot-box stuffing had prevailed, and there had been armed intervention at the polls ; but the law has been in force since 1784. Now, the experience of the United States for 112 years under this system has proved that it works without friction, that it works to the perfect satisfaction of all classes ; and there has never been in that country the slightest demand for any change in that suffrage.

Now, under the state laws by which this suffrage is provided, there are provisions for registration. Of course their elections come differently from what they do here. Here we have elections when the House is dissolved by the Crown ; there the elections are held at stated intervals by provision of statute, so that it is known when the revisions must be made. But under the provisions of the law the revisions are made and the names are added to the voters' lists for a period within six days of an election, so that there is no possibility of men who are entitled to the suffrage, if they will attend to their privileges and rights, being debarred from them. Here, on the contrary, we have a law and we suspend its operations from time to time. It has been so unpopular in its working that it has been necessary for the Government to do that. The revision of these lists every year would have created so much dissatisfaction, would have been so expensive, as to have led to the repeal of this law. But we go on suspending the revision of the lists, sometimes for one, and sometimes for three years: but we have never held an election in this country on a recent list since this law was passed. The last election was held on a list two years old. There was no citizen of Canada under the age of twenty-three years who had voted in that election, and we are sitting here now as a Parliament elected on a list eight years old. All these things are anomalous. This is a system that does not work properly, it does not work in the interest of the public, it is expensive; it is worse than expensive, and it is not as advantageous as the one which it replaced. It was said in the United States when this question was debated, that it would be desirable to have a uniform franchise and a uniform qualification. But that was set aside, and in some states there was a freehold franchise, in other states there was a property franchise on personal property, in other states there was universal suffrage; and gradually the franchise in the various states came nearer and nearer to the same level, until finally universal suffrage prevailed in nearly all the states. Now, I contend that no good reason has been developed in the experience of the eleven years since we adopted this law, that would warrant us in saying that it ought to continue. On the contrary, abundant reasons have developed in practice for leading us to the conclusion that the sooner this measure is wiped from the statute-books, the better. The local lists prepared for local purposes in the various states are prepared by the representatives of the people; they are prepared by the municipal officers, in Ontario at least. The assessor assesses the taxpayers in the towns, and from that assessment roll they are placed upon the voters' lists. When the township council meet for the purpose of revision, those who are improperly placed on the lists may be appealed against, and those who are not placed upon the list may be appealed for; and when the work of revision is done, there is an appeal to the county judge. That is exactly the system that prevails in England. When we adopted this system in 1885, it was stated that we were doing it because we wanted to have a system conformable to the English system. They had revising barristers there, and we wanted revising barristers here, we wanted a system conformable to the English system. But we have got a system which is the exact antipodes of the English system. The English voters' lists are made by the overseers of the poor. The overseers of the poor are municipal officers, elected by the people. The revision is made by the overseers of the poor, and the final revision is made by the revising barristers in the same way as the final revision is made in Ontario by the county judge, after the municipal officers have done their work. Now, the revising barrister in England is a purely judicial officer. He is appointed, not by the Government, but by the courts, and he holds his office for a limited period: his appointment is temporary and his functions purely judicial. In Canada the reverse is the case. The revising officer is appointed and holds office during the pleasure of the Government, he is a servant of the Government and after he has completed his work he remains a Government official. He is practically a czar, he cannot be reached by public opinion or public protest; no amount of misconduct would succeed in securing his dismissal from office unless the Government chose to do so. After the preparation of the lists they are sent to the Government printing office here, where they are printed under the supervision of the Government, and the lists in many cases are stuffed; the greatest outrages and frauds have been perpetrated after the final revision of the lists by the revising barrister, and after they have been sent to Ottawa names have been put on the list which had not been put there by the revising officer, and names left off that were put there by the revising officer. I received a letter from one of my own committeemen, in which he stated that in his own polling division in the township of Windham there were twelve names on the list which had been struck off by the revising officer, and they got back in some way or other. This whole system is cumbrous, expensive, and is altogether an absurd system under the circumstances of the country. If we return to the provincial lists used before this law was passed in 1885, we would save half a million dollars on every revision, and avoid a vast amount of expense and trouble for the candidate to Parliament and to the public generally. For this reason I urge on the Minister of Justice, who has recently assumed that position, and who appears to be actuated by a sincere desire to discharge the duties of his office fairly and impartially and in the interest of the country, to give fair consideration to these objections. He must know that a list of this kind works very grave injustice in nearly all the by-elections. We have a list practically two years old for the general elections, and for the by-elections the list will be three years old. This disfranchises a very large portion of those properly entitled to vote: it is an unjust law, an expensive law, a cumbrous and absurd law, and no one who understands thoroughly the working of the law will be prepared to deny that such is the case, and I urge on the Finance Minister the propriety of making this suspension of the revision perpetual.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am myself somewhat of the opinion that it is a great deal more than likely that the Parliament which succeeds this one is likely to deal with this question by briefly disposing of the Act respecting voters' lists altogether and bringing back the provincial lists. But passing over that question, which is within the realms of the future, I want to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to a certain case which I mentioned the other evening and which bears rather considerably, I think, on the point as to whether it is not possible to attain the end in some way and accept for the time being my hon. friend's suggestion with respect to those particular elections which will probably be held after the next Parliament has been elected. I pointed out that in the case of a single county, where the elections had been held on the lists of 1891, the next revision, after an interval of three years, showed there was a change of 1,700 votes in a total nominal vote of very little over 5,000, and an actual recorded vote of, I think, 3,700. There were virtually 1,000 names struck off and 800 names added, to the best of my recollection. The total change in the list during those three years, found by actual count, for all the particulars were obtained as to the numbers in each separate polling division, amounted to 1,700. Looking at that fact it does appear that there is very great force in the objection taken by my hon. friends, and that as it may be difficult to amend the Act so as to make provision otherwise, it ought to be arranged in this fashion, that failing to have the lists revised in 1890, in the case of those particular elections which may occur within a given period, say before 1st March of next year, the provincial voters' lists, if of later date, shall be used. As a matter of fact, the provincial voters' list does include the vast majority of persons entitled to vote, and the anomaly and unfairness of having an election on a voters' list which is three years old, will thereby be avoided. The change is very great in my own province. I am not prepared to speak so much for other provinces—but I may remark that this example to which I have referred is taken from a rural constituency, the great bulk of the population being farmers, and it is well known that the change of population is greater in towns and cities than it is in the rural constituencies. If the hon. gentleman chose to accept that arrangement and use the Ontario lists, which are made every year, as I think is the case with the other provinces, he would not be abandoning a principle. It is our duty, strictly speaking, to provide that every year the voters' lists shall be revised. The expense and inconvenience are, however, so great that we rather have shirked the duty ; but we know there will be a very great number of elections disputed and a large percentage of by-elections will be held in 1897. I think when we are dispensing with the necessity of revising the lists now, although in strictness we should have the work carried out, but it would be very inconvenient to do so, we should make reasonable provision for seeing that the great bulk of the electors shall fairly be represented. That can be done with a minimum of inconvenience by adopting the suggestion I make, and if a revision occurred at a later period no practical mischief could result, and the Parliament which succeeds this will have a full opportunity of discussing the question.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A remark has been made by the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) of which notice should be taken. The hon. gentleman has stated that twelve names which had been struck off a voters' list, I presume at the last revision by the judge, were found upon the list when it was finally published. That is a very serious imputation to cast upon two officials of the Government of very high standing, the revising officer and the Queen's Printer. I should be exceedingly sorry to have any imputation thrown on the Queen's Printer, in whose hands these lists are kept ; and I should be exceedingly sorry that such an imputation should lie against the county judge who acted as such revising officer. A charge of this character should not be preferred unless there is some evidence laid before the House, and if made, it is the duty of the Government to investigate it. No man's political position will be safe if it is considered possible that any number of names finally disposed of at the last revision before the Court of Revision could be dealt with by anybody at a subsequent period. The hon. gentleman has made a charge of a very serious character, and it should be either refuted or established, and a charge which reflects so seriously on the position of the Queen's Printer should not be passed over, but it should be investigated by the Minister of Justice. I say it should be thoroughly investigated and disproved or established, involving as it does a serious charge against two prominent officials, the revising officer, and an official of high standing here, the Queen's Printer.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, I think the House will agree with me that so grave a charge as that ought not to be made in this House by any person without some ground being given for it. It is absolutely contrary to all fair dealing that any such insinuation or statement should be made. This amounts to a charge of the grossest malfeasance of office, and no such charge should be made by any hon. gentleman, unless he is prepared to give some satisfactory reason for making it, and then it should demand the most prompt investigation.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may say that when I received the letter referred to, I wrote to the gentleman who sent it, asking him to give the names in order that I might investigate the matter. I have no more at present than the statement of the gentleman, that twelve names were on the list that were struck off by the revising barrister, last revision. This matter has been discussed before in the presence of the hon. leader of the House, and I have made the same charge.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I never heard of it before.

Mr. CHARLTON. I made the same charge when Sir John Thompson was leading the House, in reference to a polling district in South Norfolk, in which case I was informed that names not on the list were put on, and names which should be on the list were struck off. I have heard this report from various districts at various times. I do not know that I am warranted in saying that it was done in the printing office, or that the authorities at Ottawa are responsible for it. I can imagine that it might occur in this way : The revising barrister completes his investigation, and leaves his clerk to make out the lists, and it is possible perhaps that those clerks might be tampered with.

Mr. DICKEY. Or make mistakes.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not know how it occurred. I do not wish to be understood as placing the responsibility on any one in particular, but I believe that such cases have occurred. This is a cumbersome system ; the revision is not carried out in the broad light of day, as is the case with the provincial lists which are prepared before the township councils. The whole system of the Franchise Act leaves it open for these things to occur. In the matter of the provincial lists, men responsible to the people are engaged in the revision, and the ratepayers see that the proper names are on the list. The lists are prepared by the township councils and the final revision made by a judicial officer, who has no connection with the provincial government at all. Under the very nature of the system provided for in our Franchise Act, these things are liable to occur, and they warrant me in the statement that the sooner we get rid of that law the better.

Mr. EDGAR. In my own riding, I know of just such cases having occurred, but I do not blame the Queen's Printer at all. I know perfectly well that I attended the revision in several places in my riding. In the town of Uxbridge I had struck off about seventy voters, and they were marked by the judge in his book as having been struck off. I took them down, name for name, in my note-book, and so did another person who was present. I paid no more attention to the correction of that list, but, when it was finally printed, more than thirty of those names were reinstated, some way or another. I certainly do not blame the Queen's Printer, nor do I blame the revising officer for it. I inquired from the latter gentleman, and I found that his books had been accessible to others, and I have no doubt that his pencil marks were deliberately erased by some one. It was very skilfully done. There were three polling divisions in Uxbridge, but the names were not all tampered with in the same polling place. They were divided pretty equally over the three polling divisions, and even then they were not consecutively arranged by the person who reinstated them, so that they could not be dropped by accident in the printing office. They were distributed nicely over each polling district, in order that the thing might be noticed as little as possible. I do not know whether I was not to blame myself, to some extent, because there is a provision in the law that the candidate, or his representative, can make a final correction of the proofs. I must candidly admit that if that had been carefully attended to, this thing might have been discovered in time. It shows, however, that there is a looseness about the system, and an opportunity for frauds of that kind being perpetrated.

Mr. MARA. The work of preparing the voters' lists could, I think, be simplified and the expense lessened, if the provincial lists were taken in the first place as the basis.

Mr. CHARLTON. Why not take them as the lists ?

Mr. MARA. No ; take them as the basis, and then supply machinery for adding names not on the provincial lists, either by the appointment of a revising barrister or some other person. Then, in an off year, when there is not a complete revision of the lists, you could allow names to be added by a supplementary list. That is the practice followed in British Columbia, and it has been found to work very well. There is not a complete revision of the list every year, but there is an opportunity afforded new comers who are qualified to vote, to get their names on. This list is added to the original list, which is filed in the Supreme Court.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. My hon. friend is considering the matter from the standpoint of his own province, but his suggestion would not work at all in the province of Manitoba. There the provincial lists are only prepared at such time as they are required for provincial elections, and in the case of a federal election we might find that they were four years old. On the other hand, the qualification of voters is quite different. We have in Manitoba one man one vote, while the qualification in federal elections is based on property or revenue. The adoption of the provincial lists in Manitoba would be perfectly valueless to us. They have in Manitoba a similar system to what we have here, except that the revision is not entrusted to the county court judges, but is placed in charge of local barristers selected by the Government, and I have heard a good many complaints as to the partiality of some of those gentlemen. The Dominion lists, on the other hand, are prepared by the county court judges, who are well qualified to discharge the duty, and I do not think there has been the least complaint about them.

Mr. DICKEY. It seems to me that this discussion is taking a very wide range, in dealing with the principles of the Franchise Act. I know it is a very popular amusement in this House to debate the Franchise Act, but that has been pretty thoroughly done during the last few years, and I trust that the committee will not proceed further in that line just now. The practical suggestion before the House is the one supported by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) ; that is, to make provision for constituencies vacated after the next election. That is, after all, a practical question, to be settled on the balance of convenience ; and looking to the difficulties of making any proper provisions just now—taking, for instance, the question of persons disfranchised under the local lists in the various provinces and other considerations of that kind, and the amount of detail that would be required in a provision to meet the case—it seems to me that the general convenience would be better served by leaving the next Parliament, which will meet probably very soon after the 1st of July, to deal with any case that requires treatment.

Mr. LAURIER. And abolish the Act altogether.

Mr. DICKEY. Well, possibly, under certain very unlikely contingencies. I think that is the more practical thing to do, for we should not in this Parliament, as the hon. member for South Oxford has so often before remarked, deal with matters that can be better dealt with in a new Parliament.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman had come to that wholesome frame of mind a little time ago, it would have been better for all parties.

Mr. DICKEY. My conversion has been slow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope it has been thorough, and I may remind him of his conversion before the House rises. I am not speaking without good warrant when I say that the changes have been enormous. I have referred to the revision of 1891, after the general election in the constituency of West Durham. I stated that the total changes had amounted to 1,700. I find that I was mistaken. They amounted to very nearly 2,600, after barely three years ; 842 Reformers were struck of the whole list, and 926 Conservatives ; 489 Reformers were added, and 413 Conservatives ; so that there was a change in that case of very nearly half. I presume that there must have been some rather extraordinary circumstance in that case, but these are very carefully prepared figures, giving each ward in detail. Now, there would be very grave objection to making no provision for the taking of a new election where the changes are as great as those I have mentioned ; and I suppose that similar changes have taken place elsewhere, though perhaps not to so great an extent.

Mr. DICKEY. Is it not a question of when that provision is to be made ? I suggest that it should be left to the next Parliament.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is perhaps something in the suggestion of the hon. gentleman. On the understanding that the hon. gentleman will carry out that newly formed belief of his, I may be disposed myself to concur.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not wish to prolong the discussion ; but in reference to the subject on which I have already spoken, the statement made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) does not appear to place the matter at all on a more satisfactory footing. From his statement it would appear that the lists may be tampered with while in the possession of the revising officers. That certainly should not be. Somebody ought to be responsible for the safe-keeping of those lists ; and some executive action should be taken by which the revising officers shall be made to understand that on any future occasion they shall be held responsible for any lists in their possession. Either they or the Queen's Printer ought to be held responsible for the safe-keeping of the lists afer the final revision has been completed.

Mr. MULOCK. I agree with the provision of this Bill as far as it goes. It does not go far enough, in my opinion. It only suspends the revision for one year. I think that is a movement in the right direction. It would have been perfect if it suspended the revision for ever. The remarks made by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) go to show how disappointing this measure is and inasmuch as it is a principle upon which we are all committed one way or other, having more than once had mandates from our constituents upon the subject, we are thoroughly in a position to-day to deal with it. It is not like another measure on which Parliament was deliberating a short time ago, when we did not think it would be proper for us to legislate in advance of knowing the sense of the people. On this question, I think there is practical unanimity throughout the whole country in favour of the abolition of the Franchise Act and a return to the provincial lists.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MULOCK. While one or two may say "No," I think the people are substantially in favour of repeal. Such, I think, is the sentiment of my riding, regardless of party. Those who on each side take part in the work of revising the lists, all agree in private conversation that it has become a nuisance—and worse than a nuisance—an expense to both sides, and of no advantage to any, unless to those engaged in the work. There are a few hundred dollars a year spent in each riding to put the Act into force. That money goes into the hands of printers, revisers and their clerks, with a few outside of them, and to that extent the Act may have some supporters ; but in addition to the direct charge on the treasury, we have the enormous charge on all of those interested in the business. Both sides are obliged to appoint clerks and to take other steps to see that the lists are made correct, and this costs time and money. I am within the mark when I say that the revision in ordinary ridings has cost at times to one side alone nearly $2,000. I do not know what the average would be, but I think I am within the mark in saying that it would be perhaps $500 to each side every time there is a revision. If so, $1,000, at least, of actual outlay is incurred, to say nothing of the waste of time, outside of the expense incurred by the Government itself. Thus, taking the constituencies as numbering 215, we have a cost of about $300,000 to the Government and $200,000 more, at least, paid out by private persons ; so that there is half a million dollars, at least, thrown away whenever a revision takes place. The fact that it becomes necessary so frequently to suspend the revision speaks eloquently in favour of the objections to the Act. You find no redeeming circumstance in connection with it. We have complaints as to how it can be used to defeat the very judgments of the revising officers. The law is supposed, in the abstract, to meet all cases ; but the very point referred to by the hon. member for West Ontario was sought to be guarded against by a recent amendment. It was found, when the last amendment to this Act was before Parliament, that in the interval between the lists leaving the revising officer and the printing by the Queen's Printer, and their being subsequently signed by the revising officer, very material changes took place. It is not necessary to attribute those changes to fraud. It is quite sufficient, and in most cases the proper explanation, to attribute them to mistakes. Any one who has taken part in the revision knows that there is a great deal of detail. Memoranda have to be kept as to the allowance and disallowance of objections, a record is kept of the decisions, perhaps not as accurate and methodical as is necessary ; and so, when the roll is prepared by the clerks, they may, in the very best faith, commit many errors. Very often, even if the lists leave the clerk's hand in perfect shape to go to the Queen's Printer and be sent back to be signed by the revising officer, in the interval, more mistakes may creep in. In order to avoid such mistakes, Parliament provided that the roll should be exhibited for a certain period of time in the office of the revising barrister, so that any errors might be pointed out and corrected. But, notwithstanding that precaution, errors are still creeping in. The law provides penalties for wilful violation, but there is no way of holding persons liable for errors which occur in good faith, so that I doubt if we can improve the machinery so as to secure a more faithful observance of the letter of the law. That being so, it is quite clear that we have arrived at a condition of things when it is impossible to make use of this law in such a way as to have a perfect list, and we are ex-necessitate forced to the conclusion that this system should be abandoned and that we should resort to another, which is conceded to be a better one, the system of adopting the local voters' lists. That has many reasons to recommend it, of which economy is not the least. The circumstances of our country are not such that we can, for no value, spend half a million dollars every time we revise these lists. Moreover, the revision has proved so cumbersome and expensive that the lists are never revised up to date, and elections take place on the old lists. It is recognized in Great Britain that when there is any material change in the list of voters, Parliament should at once go to the country. For example, a short time ago, under the Gladstone Government, the franchise was enlarged, and Parliament, being a representative institution, did not think proper to remain any longer in session, but dissolved at once so as to allow the newly-added electors to have a voice in saying who should make the laws of the country. If that be sound principle, should we not see that we have a system of voters' lists which will represent the electorate to the latest possible date, so that when a dissolution takes place, Parliament will be elected by the electorate of that date, and not by a small section of it. I think I am within the mark when I say that inasmuch as when this approaching election takes place, two years will have elapsed since the last revision, at least one-fifth of the electors will be disfranchised. In two ways we will not obtain the will of the people at the approaching election. In the first place, there will be a larger number upon the list today who are not entitled to vote, and whose names would be struck off if we had a revision. Under the Franchise Act, however, these people will be entitled to vote, because that Act provides that every person whose name is on the last revised list is entitled to vote, no matter if subsequently he may have lost the franchise. In the second place, there is a very large number of persons who, within the last two years, have acquired the qualification, but who have not had the opportunity of having their names added to the lists. So that the Act wholly defeats the spirit of our institutions, inasmuch as it results in the election of a House that does not represent the voice of the people. It appears, therefore, to me that the present is a most opportune time to revert to the old system, and we can do so in a simple way, and in a very short time. Every one is familiar with the present system, and has practically condemned it, and every one is familiar with the provincial system, so that it would only require a little united effort on the part of hon. members in order to at once abolish this old institution and replace it by a new and a better one. On behalf of the unfortunate taxpayers, overburdened to-day with public taxes, our appeal to the Government should be successful. There are many worthy directions in which a half of million dollars could be expended rather than on a worthless institution such as the Dominion franchise lists. We have people in the corridors to-day asking for aid for most meritorious objects, and who are denied it on the ground that there is no money. For example, I understand that delegates are in attendance in the lobbies asking for subsidies to a Dominion exhibition, towards bringing out British associations, and so on, and that there is going to be very little assistance given them because so much public money has to be wasted in putting in force the Dominion Franchise Act and other unnecessary and useless enterprises. I could point out many directions in which this money might be better expended ; I can point out none in which it would be worse. So that under all circumstances, now that the committee is seized of the matter, we should give a coup de grâce to this institution and adopt one that would do justice to all.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It appears to me that the solution of the whole difficulty lies in the suggestion made by my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock). If the Minister of Justice would just assume a little courage, and deal with this question by repealing the Franchise Act, it would obviate the necessity of the constant appeals made to Parliament for the purpose of suspending its operation. I look upon the Franchise Act as one of the many mischievous measures that have been pressed through Parliament within the last ten or fifteen years, exceeded in unfairness by no Bill except the Gerrymander Act—and that Act will always stand in the history of Canada as the worst and most unfair Act that ever was passed in Parliament. Except the gerrymander, I do not know of any statute that is more unfair, nor do I know any that is more expensive to both political parties, than this Franchise Act. And now the hon. Minister proposes to suspend its operation for another year. I do not know what the consequences of the suspension will be in other counties, but I know what they will be in West Huron. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that in one municipality of four polling subdivisions there has been no revision for six years, and, if this Bill is carried, the next election will be held on a voters' list six years old. It is true that a court of revision was called, but the revising officer, whose duty it was to attend, did not attend the court. The result is that in the last election they voted on a list five years old, and in a general election they will vote on a list, as I have stated, six years old. The presence on that list of names that ought not to be there, and the absence of names that ought to be there, may effect the result of the election. In part of another township there was no revision in 1895. Now, the Franchise Act is unfair in many other ways ; it leaves entirely too much in the hands of the revising officer. Let me give the Minister of Justice, who has the reputation of being a fair man, one or two instances. In the town in which I live there are several men who have been property owners and voters for thirty years, whose names are not upon the voters' list. Where did that fraud occur ? It must have occurred either with the revising officer or in the printing establishment here. I can conceive of no other way in which it could have occurred. Within a radius of a hundred yards of the house in which I live, there are several men whose names have been left off the voters' list. There are a score of names which, at the court of revision, were directed to be put on the voters' list, but they were not to be found when polling day came. There were scores of names ordered to be stricken off the voters' list that appeared on polling day. I need not tell the hon. gentleman that these names ordered to be stricken off and not stricken off, were not those of Liberals, and that the names that were put on improperly were not those of Liberals. The effect of the last revision of the voters' lists in West Huron has been to deprive the Liberals of very nearly the number of my majority, at all events of a very large number. Now, if the hon. Minister wants to be fair to all parties, let him repeal the Franchise Act, and do what his predecessor, the late Sir John Thompson was inclined to do—adopt the local list. Those lists are cheaper, they are fairer, and they are much less trouble to the candidates than those we use. The time to do this is now. A very short and simple Bill, as short and as simple as the one now before us, will accomplish the whole purpose, and I am satisfied I am within the mark when I say that 80 per cent of the voters within this wide Dominion will be pleased with the change. Let the hon. Minister signalize his advent to the distinguished position he occupies by repealing entirely the Franchise Act and adopting the system his predecessor was inclined to adopt. As long as this Franchise Act remains upon the statute-book, it will be an enormous expense to both political parties, and it will never give satisfaction to either political party. Why, I have heard the strongest Conservatives, who were candidates, declaring that the Franchise Act was one of the worries of their lives—that the expense, the labour and the time consumed in looking after the voters' list were a grievous burden to them. Apart altogether from the expense borne by the Government in paying revising officers, in paying clerks and in printing, the expense entailed upon those who aspire to positions in Parliament is almost beyond calculation. I say again, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman wants to distinguish himself as Minister of Justice let him repeal the Franchise Act, and cap that by repealing the Gerrymander Act.

Mr. CASEY. I thought that the hon. Minister of Justice probably understood the nature of the Ontario Act to which I referred, but I judge from his answer that he scarcely realizes how simple its provisions are. It applies in the case of the provincial lists to manhood voters--that is those who have no property qualification. I should propose in the case of the Dominion lists that registration should affect those classes of voters whose qualifications can be established without the investigations required in the making up of the ordinary lists or revising of the same, for instance, the sons of farmers and property owners, and income voters. The provisions of the Ontario Act are made to apply tentatively only to the cities, and it might, perhaps, be wise to apply the system with the same limitation in the Dominion, at least to the cities and towns over a certain population.

Under the Ontario system the boards of registrars who make these amendments to the list are composed of certain persons ex-officio, judges, police magistrates, masters in chancery, and so on, according to the size of the city and the consequent probable number of names to be added. These ex-officio registrars may appoint others to assist them as they may be required to do the work. It will be seen that the whole system of registration is put beyond the control of the Government of the day, and vested in official hands, because there the whole board is either ex-officio or appointed by men other than the politicians concerned. Then, immediately after dissolution of the provincial chamber, or after a by-election, if that by-election occurs more than a year after the last registration has taken place, notice is served on this board of registrars by the clerk of the legislative assembly, who discharges the functions there of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery here, and then the board sets to work. The provision of the law is that within six days after dissolution, or issue of the writ, as the case may be, this board of registrars shall begin to sit, and shall hold four sessions on consecutive days, and during certain hours. Then there is a provision for a board of appeal from the decision of the board of registrars, and the results are finally certified by the registrars to the clerk of the peace.

It will be easily seen that this is a simple and non-partisan machinery, capable of being applied at once to any city or large town in Canada. It also offers to the young men who have come of age and begun to earn incomes since the last registration took place, a very ready way of getting their names upon the list. They simply have to appear and swear to their qualifications, and, of course, are liable to penalties for perjury if they describe themselves wrongly. All that has to be established in the case of the Ontario voters' list, is their age and citizenship. In the case of the Dominion voters, it would be their name, age and relationship to a property owner, such as would qualify them under the law, or the possession of sufficient income, etc. This process would not involve the notices and the lengthy proceedings involved in annually revising a list. It would involve very little expense, and it would bring the lists down to date. Now, we all know that especially in cities that is a very important matter. Why, in a town of some 3,000 inhabitants in my own riding, at the last revision of the voters' list, we were compelled to strike off about 500 names, and add about 300, on a list which originally comprised only about a thousand names; a change of 800 names was made on a list of a thousand, in a case where the list had not been revised for three years. How much more imperfectly it must represent the voting population after six or seven years. Now, if that is the case in a small town, what must be the case in a large city, where the labouring population, especially, changes very rapidly? I think there is an extremely strong case for adding such a provision as this.

My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggests that there ought to be a provision for striking off names. Well, if we went into questions of qualification that would require notice to the parties, and all that sort of thing, and proof of loss of qualification, it would take too much time. It would be difficult to go into such proceedings as that on a hurried registration of this kind, immediately preceding an election. But the Ontario statute, though it does not provide for that, does provide in another form for an amendment of the list, by assessment commissioners in cities, to this extent, that they are to knock off the names of all who have lost their qualification by death since the last registration; and this provides that a certificate of the proper officer to the death of such a person, is sufficient evidence on which to strike his name off the list. Therefore, if these two plans were adopted we would have the list amended; first, in the direction of adding all the names who have become qualified as income voters, or as property owners' sons ; and, secondly, by striking off the names of those who have died since the last registration. I need not urge how important this last step is. It is well known that whoever else may vote at a city election, all the dead men are sure to vote ! The live men may be absent, or may be paid not to vote, or may lose the franchise in many ways ; but the dead men are sure to poll their votes. Therefore, I consider an amendment in this direction quite as important as the other, and I would strongly urge on the Minister, even at this late date, to take the Ontario Act, and with the necessary change of machinery, substituting certain Dominion officials for certain provincial officials who are directed in the Ontario statutes to take action, he could, before the close of this House, a week hence, have this very important addition made to the Bill. There are some suggestions about postponing changes to the meeting of next Parliament. Now, in my opinion, this is just the time, before the elections come on, that such a change should be made. When we have a Franchise Act so oppressive and costly that we cannot afford to put it in operation every year, we have most especial need of this supplementary revision, and I hope the Minister will take that into consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is one point that has been overlooked that I think might be brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice. I have in my hand a copy of a municipal voters' list. I find that there is a column for each different kind of voters. There is, first, the name ; then there is the column for jurors ; then, a column that denotes their qualification ; then a column that sets out the municipal voters : and those who vote on a manhood franchise is also designated. Now, an additional column denoting those who may vote at a Dominion election, could be very easily added to the present municipal voters' list, and an addition of that column, and providing that each municipality at the revision shall adjust the names of the electors properly qualified to vote on the Dominion list, would cover the whole ground. Then the municipal officials would have to give public notice of the day of revision, and those interested, or their representatives, both Conservatives and Reformers, would have full notice to attend. I believe there are no men who are better capable, from personal knowledge, of completing an accurate voters' list for the townships than the reeves and the members of the township council. They generally live in different sections of the townships, and are well acquainted, as a rule, with the residents, and they are better able to say who should vote than any other men you can possibly get. Now, if that addition was made to the present voters' list in Ontario, at least, in my opinion, it would cover the whole ground. Now, I would not, for a moment, cast any reflection upon the revising barrister who has charge of the work in my riding. I believe he started out with an honest intention to make a proper and perfect list, and that he did everything in his power for that purpose. He did his work fairly well, and with a great deal of care. But, after all, it is impossible but that errors will creep in ; men that should be on are not on, and men, in some cases, are off that should be on. Now, with regard to the unfortunate condition, that of young men coming of age, I think it is a low estimate to say that one young man in every twenty of the population comes of age each year. I believe one out of twenty of our population is a young man, twenty-one years of age, and the Minister of Justice will realize that this class becomes a very important addition to the voters' list. One out of every twenty means, in our whole population, 250,000 young men that come to years of maturity in Canada every year. We may say that there are 250,000 young men come of age in 1894, after the revision, and 250,000 more came of age in 1895, and, up to the date of the election in 1896, that will be disfranchised. Now, that is a very serious consideration. I admit that even under the municipal system a certain percentage would be disfranchised. You cannot possibly get any system that is absolutely perfect ; but I do believe that by adding a column to the municipal voters' list in which would be recorded the name of every elector entitled to vote at the Dominion election, would be the nearest thing to perfection that you could possibly get. I commend, in a certain sense, the Government for suspending the revision for one, two or three years, because it is a very expensive thing, both to the country, and to members of Parliament to have a revision every year. Any man who proposes to become a candidate would have to devote his whole time to it the year round. If he is going to attend to the revision of the voters' list and perform the duties devolving upon him as representative, he might cancel every other engagement of life and devote himself to that business exclusively. I think the whole trouble could be avoided by the change I have suggested, and I respectfully suggest this amendment to the Minister of Justice, and hope that something in that direction will be done, and that the country, as well as the candidates for Parliament will be relieved of the enormous expense, annoyance and trouble to which they are subjected in trying to make a voters' list for their ridings.

Mr. CHARLTON. I should like to put this matter in another light in order to impress on the Minister of Justice the injustice of the procedure under this Act. I would ask him what he would think if a Bill were introduced here providing that no Canadian citizen under twenty-three years should have a vote, extending the age from twenty-one to twenty-three. Would that be a Bill which would meet his approval and the approval of the House and the country? Yet that in practice is the effect of the Dominion Franchise Act. At the elections of 1891, we had a list which practically provided that no citizen of Canada should vote who was under twenty-three years of age. The elections of 1896 will be held on a list perfected in 1894, and under that list all citizens under twenty-three will be debarred from voting. In case of by-elections the limit is raised even higher still. By-elections have occurred between the last general elections and the present time, when no one could vote who was under twenty-six years of age. After presenting this view, I am satisfied the hon. gentleman would never consent to enact a law prohibiting men from voting if they were under twenty-three years. It is unmistakable that under the operation of this law citizens will be debarred from voting until they have considerably passed twenty-one years. Still the revision in almost every case occurs many months, or one or two years before the elections. That has been the character of the operation of the Act, and it will continue to be so. It provides a voters' list which can be acted upon anywhere from one to three or four years subsequently to its preparation, so that even young men under twenty-four years of age will be disfranchised. It is a ridiculous, unjust and unnecessary system. All these outrageous provisions are secured at great public cost. The direct cost of a revision is a quarter of a million dollars, added to that is the printing of the lists in the Government printing office and all incidental expenses; and this money is all paid in order that we may inflict an outrage on the voters of the Dominion, to put into operation a law which has practically the effect I have pointed out. The provincial voters' lists are prepared annually. It would be impossible to have a general election held on those lists where any one over twenty-two years of age would be debarred from voting. In Ontario the assessment is made in the winter. The assessors' rolls are completed sometimes in February or March. Then they are submitted to the township council, and on that list the names of persons entitled to the provincial franchise and the municipal franchise are set out. Then the time for holding a court of revision is fixed—the date is known. It does not require any legal machinery to be put into motion to have names placed on the list, but a person whose name is not on the list makes application, and he has his name placed there. If some person's name is on the list which should not be there, a ratepayer comes up and protests against it, and in a most informal manner the circumstances are inquired into and substantial justice is done. Then if any ratepayer in the township holds that the court of revision, consisting of the township council, has failed to do justice, he can appeal to the judge of the county, and there is a final revision made. The list is ready in June, and so it is impossible to hold an election where young men would be excluded if they are more than a few months over twenty-one years. The provincial lists are preferable; they are prepared regularly, the Dominion Government can avail themselves of them without expense, and they are inevitably better lists because they are prepared by local officers and an effort made to do justice. The applicant does not require to send notice in a registered letter or to comply with any legal form; he comes and presents his case before the township council, and it is settled according to justice. It is astonishing that so absurd a law as the Dominion Franchise Act, should be allowed to remain on the statute-book.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to ask the hon. gentleman a question. The hon. gentleman has said that the provincial lists are to be preferred by reason of this fact, that if a man's name happens to be on the list and some person objects to that name, it is not necessary to serve the individual with any notice or intimation, but the council can act behind his back and remove the name. That is a form of argument which may appeal to the hon. gentleman's sense of honesty, but it is manifestly unfair that a man's name should be removed simply by the interference of some one who applies to have that name removed.

Mr. CHARLTON. I made no such statement, and no such inference can be drawn from any statement I made. I said the proceedings were inexpensive, informal and simple; that a man could apply to have his name placed on the lists, or make application to have a name struck off, but I did not say that the council would proceed to act on it without proof being furnished. I have asserted that the proceedings are more informal, less expensive and more direct than the procedure under this Act before the revising officer. Under the provincial system the whole machinery is more simple and less expensive, and the lists are prepared in accordance with the desire of the people that every one who has a right to vote shall have his name placed on the list. The system of preparing lists in the Dominion is claimed to be substantially the system in England, which we professed to copy when we passed the Franchise law, but which is in no essential respect a copy of the English Act or similar to that law. While the municipal councils make the lists in Ontario, the overseers of the poor who are municipal officers elected by the people, make the lists in England. While the county court judge in Ontario revises the lists as the last court of resort, the revising barrister in England revises the work of the overseers of the poor, and he is simply a judicial officer appointed by the courts, and holding office for a limited term. For all the reasons that have been urged, and in the light of all experience that has been acquired, I assert here that this is an absurd and an unjust and an expensive measure, and the sooner it is repealed the better for the country, and the sooner will be met the wishes of the great mass of the electors of Canada.

Mr. FLINT. This is a very good opportunity for expressing an opinion as to the Franchise Act, and as to the future conduct of Parliament in regard to it. There is no other Act on our statute-books which is more generally condemned by men of all parties and by the country at large. Experience has taught us that the Act is cumbersome, expensive, unfair, and open to almost every objection which an Act of Parliament can be open to. It imposes upon candidates, or their friends, of all political parties, a personal expense and responsibility from which they ought to be freed. It is a well-known fact that in many constituencies hon. members here have been put to great private personal expense in looking after the revision. If they are lay men they feel bound to employ legal advice in order to ascertain the proper procedure under the Act, and they are also compelled to employ agents and assistants in order to present their qualified supporters before the revising officer. It seems to me that any reasonable system of revision should exempt men in public life from all the trouble and expense which this Act entails. There are no complaints in the local legislatures as to the operation of the local franchise Acts in this regard. There is the safeguard that the local revisers are leading men in the community, men of responsibility, who revise in company with their neighbours, and any gross attempt at perverting their duty would immediately lower them in public esteem. There is, in fact, scarcely any charge against the local revisers in any province that they have acted in a violent partisan manner. I am happy to say that with very few exceptions there have been no charges made against the Dominion revising officers. However, in some way or other, it has occurred that in the interval between the lists leaving the hands of the revising officers and their final publication, a large number of names have been tampered with, and great irregularities have occurred. In the case of the addition of one or two names surreptitiously, it is almost impossible, without expensive legal proceedings, to ascertain where the fault lies, and men are inclined to put up with the fraud rather than resort to the expense and trouble necessary to punish those who are guilty. But, Sir, there is a more serious charge against the Franchise Act than that with regard to the private expense entailed on those interested in elections. It has entailed enormous public expense on the country. The predictions made by the opponents of this Franchise Act have been fully verified by experience, and we know that the first revision cost the country over half a million dollars. The Government, in view of increased expenditures and deficits accruing year after year, became extremely anxious that this enormous expense should be reduced, and to a certain degree they succeeded in that, by cutting down the salaries of the officers and the cost of printing. Still, the expense is enormous. All parties agree that the proper working of a Franchise Act should involve its being revised annually, in order that when a constituency becomes vacant, those persons who are entitled to vote should have an opportunity of pronouncing their opinion on the political issues existing at the time. The expense of this Act, so far as the Government is concerned, has been the great bugbear ; and they have from time to time postponed the revising of the lists on this account. We are to-day on the verge of an election in which those who contest the constituencies will be endeavouring to influence voters, a large majority of whom, although on the lists, are not in a position to vote, having either died or left the country, while an immense number of others who ought to vote and assist in moulding the opinion of the next Parliament will be unable to exercise the right of the franchise. Many young men who have come of age since 1894 will find themselves unable to vote. Under a properly regulated Franchise Act, such a scandal, because it is a scandal, would be impossible. In a general election, not a sudden one, from an unexpected dissolution of Parliament, but an election foreseen, which comes from a dissolution of Parliament by effluxion of time, we find tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of voters unable to exercise the right of the franchise, while the names of thousands of others who have either passed away or left the country, will be on the lists, a subject of embarrassment and danger to those who are endeavouring to conduct the elections honestly. Where large numbers of men have removed from the country altogether, greater opportunities are opened up for corrupt combinations of men for purposes of personating. All these objections combine against the further continuance of this Act on the statute-book. So far were these evils felt by the late Prime Minister that in 1894, he laid on the Table of this House a Bill designed to remedy them. That Bill was received with such favour that I had a strong hope that the Government would again introduce it, and ask the assent of Parliament to it ; and I believe that with some unimportant amendments, which might have been made to it on the suggestion of this side of the House, it would have passed through Parliament almost unanimously. I trust that one of the first acts of the next Parliament, whatever party may be in power, will be to remove this Act from the statute-book, and relegate the preparation of the voters' lists to the various organs for that purpose in the different provinces. While this Parliament may to some extent determine who should be granted the franchise and the general principles on which the franchise should be conducted, a great means of corruption and unfairness, and a source of expense, would be removed for ever. It is a matter of surprise that Parliament has put up so long with this combination of expense and injury to the cause of political morality. The truest interests of the country will be promoted by its repeal.

Mr. FORBES. I want to ask the Minister of Justice, in the event of his having control over such legislation as this in the next Parliament, if there is any possibility of his adopting the suggestion made by Sir John Thompson some few years ago, when he introduced a Bill to substitute for the present cumbrous system, those systems which are in force in the various provinces of the Dominion. If it should be held out to this House, and through this House to the country, that there was a possibility of the present objectionable statute being wiped off the statute-book, possibly a great deal of the feeling which exists to-day might die an early death ; and I should think it would be rather to the interest of the Government, and also to the interest of the hon. Minister of Justice, if he could lead us to hope that in the event of his being honoured with a seat in the Cabinet after the next election, he will, immediately on the assembling of the new Parliament, bring in a Bill, not merely to suspend the vicious operation of this Act for twelve months, but to repeal it altogether, and, following in the footsteps of his worthy predecessor, Sir John Thompson, substitute the systems in force in the various provinces. If we could hope for that, I think we might bear with the Act for the little time it may have to live between now and the coming elections. The suspension of the operation of the Act for one year is, of course, necessary, in view of the fact that it is impossible to have a revision before the elections come on. It will be necessary to have the lists revised immediately after the elections, because, as we can readily foresee, there will be a large number of members returned to this House as supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite by the aid of human devices with which hon. gentlemen opposite are familiar ; and it will be necessary that the causes which led to their return, against the well-known views of their constituencies, should be inquired into by the courts. In view of that, it would be wise and almost essential, that the present electorate should have a voice in the selection of their representatives. If the hon. Minister of Justice himself should be so fortunate as to be returned to support the present Government, for he knows very well that the gentleman running against him, is backed up by a very large number of the best people in the county of Cumberland, that distinguished county will feel not that it is slighted by having the Minister of Justice as its representative ; but some of his followers in that county, as of yore, will certainly have violated the Act, and his seat will rest on a frail substructure, which will be liable to be smashed from under him by the courts of law, and he may find himself without a seat, if he does not do like the coon did to Davy Crocket and as he did before, resign before the gun is fired at him. If in such a case the hon. Minister could find his county without a representative, surely he would not want to go back for election upon a list three years old ? Probably his by-election could not come on until January, March or April, 1897, in which case he would find himself running on a list of September, 1894, and that based to a great extent on a municipal list of the spring of that year. We would have him running on a list three years old, and I know that he would like to thoroughly represent the electorate of the country. When you recollect that there will be in that county thousands of young men who have grown into manhood in the interval, and who are well qualified to record their opinion on the issues of the day, but who by an Act of six or seven lines, passed in 1896, are precluded from exercising the right of a citizen, he must see that to pass this Bill in its present shape would be an insult and a reflection on the standing of the young men of that county. If he would provide that there shall be no revision during the next six months, instead of during the present year, that would be sufficient, because there must be a meeting of Parliament within the next six months, and it will be wise to leave it open for the Governor General in Council to direct that in the fall a revision should take place, so that thousands of young men well qualified to-day to vote should be put on the lists. It would be wise for the hon. Minister to reflect seriously before deciding to force this Bill through in its present shape. The hon. Secretary of State referred to some remarks made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) with reference to the way in which the provisions of the Franchise Act are abused. The hon. member for North Norfolk said that many names were struck from the list after they had passed, or while they were passing through, the hands of the revising barrister, and before they came back from the printing office. It is well known that in scores of instances those lists have been tampered with to the detriment of the Liberal party. After the lists left the revising barrister and were sent to Ottawa, they were tampered with. Between the first time the court sat and the last time the several lists reached the hands of the revising barrister for distribution, the greatest outrages were perpetrated.

Many names were struck off which were put on by the court, and others added which had been struck out.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). Where was that done ?

Mr. FORBES. In Nova Scotia, in my county.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). In mine too, I could prove.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). Give the names.

Mr. FORBES. I could give scores of names. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Smith) himself—I will not say himself personally, but some zealous friend in his behalf—had thus secured undue advantage for his benefit. There is enough human nature in the Tory party of Ontario to take advantage of every opportunity afforded them to score a victory. I have several cases in my mind's eye in Nova Scotia, where, after the revising barrister had met the two counsels representing the parties and had agreed to rectify the lists, the lists were tampered with, while these parties went out to lunch. Names which it was agreed should be struck off were added, and names which it was agreed to add were struck off. It was not at the time suspected that any party to the sitting had been deliberately guilty of fraud, but after the third sitting, when they got through the alphabetical list, the representative of the Liberal party asked permission to check over his list with that which the revising barrister was sending to the Printing Bureau for the first printing. In doing so, he discovered some eighteen or twenty names in this one polling section which had been added or struck off improperly. It was agreed that if the representative of the Liberal party would not make the thing public, such a thing would not occur again. The revising barrister apologized, and said it was done by somebody else while he was at dinner. What was the surprise of the agent of the Liberal party when he found, when the lists came back some two or three weeks later, that these very names which had been struck off were still there, in violation of the first contract. That is a case in which the blunder, as the revising barrister called it, happened at Ottawa. He said he would correct and send them forward, and afterwards he said he had corrected them and sent them forward, and they came back in that mangled condition. It caused the agent of the Liberal party trouble, annoyance and expense to follow this thing up to prove that these lists had been tampered with between the time they were revised between the parties and the last time they came back from Ottawa. They were changed and restored to a fair condition. Now, there is no use telling us who have been through the mill of these revisions, that opportunities are not afforded to the revising officers to tamper with these lists. There is no use telling us that these opportunities are not taken advantage of. I will not say that this is done by the friends of one party entirely. I dare say the agents of the Liberal party do take advantage of it. But there is not a case in Canada to-day that I know of, of a revising officer who is such an over-zealous friend of the Liberal party that he will lend himself to these irregularities for the sake of that party. There are times when it has happened that a very clever agent on behalf of the Liberal party may have induced the revising officer, probably without full warrant of reason, to do things which otherwise that revising officer might not have done. But there are numerous cases on record where the revising officer has lent himself body and soul to assist the Government party in stuffing these lists and in crowding off Liberal names, and so filling the lists with the names of persons pledged to the support of the Conservative party, so that the opponents of the Government are not given a chance to score a victory. It is such things as that that aroused in the public mind the belief that the Electoral Franchise Act is unfair. And as long as the Government persists in appointing partisan revising officers, who place their party ends above reason and conscience and justice, and who lend themselves to unscrupulous acts, the people of this country will take every opportunity to condemn the Franchise Act and to condemn the Government for allowing it to remain upon the statute-book. Sir John Thompson saw that difficulty. Wise statesman that he was, honest statesman that he was, he saw that this Act was leading to the subverting of public opinion, it was leading to the lowering of the moral tone of the officials appointed by this Government and was being used by the emissaries of this Government as a means to entrench the Government in power. It was because of these things that Sir John Thompson desired to repeal the Act and adopt the local franchises of the several provinces as the law of the Dominion. Thus he gave voice, and argument, and reason in favour of the principles that the Liberal party have said for many years should be adopted—the principle of establishing the local franchises as the franchise of the elections for this Parliament. The point upon which the Government for so many years opposed this principle so vigorously and declared so loudly that the Liberal party were wrong, was that this Parliament ought to make a franchise for its own elections. But that has been answered by the ablest jurist the Conservative party have ever had in this Parliament since confederation, and I think it would well become the present occupants of the Treasury benches, if they would follow the course pointed out by that great man, and, by a short and simple Act of this Parliament, declare that the Franchise Act and all amendments thereof shall be repealed and the Franchise Acts of the several provinces shall form and be the electoral franchise system for the election of members for this House.

Mr. IVES. Oh, oh.

Mr. FORBES. I am glad I have the support of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. IVES. Especially as regards the adoption of the local lists of Nova Scotia. Of course, they are perfectly fair. Nobody is disfranchised there.

Mr. FORBES. Nobody who did not want to be disfranchised or ought not to be disfranchised. Every citizen who desires to vote can get his name upon the list. The lists are made up fairly. The servants of the Government here, who are controlled directly by the agents of the Dominion Government, who hold threats over them and bring pressure to bear upon them to vote any particular way, have not their names upon the lists. But nineteen out of twenty of them who were on the list, have desired to be deprived of their franchise. The Government railway employees and the customhouse employees whose names have been upon the Dominion lists, have been coerced to support the Government candidates. And when the local elections came on, the attempt was made to coerce them in the same way to vote against the provincial government, because it happened to be a Liberal government, even against their own wishes in many cases. And nineteen out of twenty of them asked to be disfranchised, so that they might be free from the technical influences which this Government exercised upon them in the local elections. You cannot find a more thoroughly representative list of electors than the list of Nova Scotia. It is carefully prepared, made up with very little expense to the several municipalities. The means of proving qualification are the simplest possible, and no man, on establishing his claim, has been refused the right to have his name upon the voters' list. No man's name has been struck off for partisan purposes. These lists are not made up and revised by partisan judges or by representatives of partisan councils. I know that in the county I have the honour to represent, and the same is true of other counties, to my own knowledge, the assessors who make up these lists are chosen from both parties, that is, each party has a representative upon the board of assessors, and no element of partisan politics influences the assessors. To say that the operation of the local Act in Nova Scotia is not fair to the citizens of the province is to say what is not warranted by the facts. I have known of no case of the charge that men have been left off the list in that province which has been sustained by the fact. Besides, the franchise in the province of Nova Scotia is broader than it is in the Dominion elections.

The qualification of the electors in Nova Scotia is broader than it is in the other provinces. In Prince Edward Island it is broader still, and in the province of Manitoba it is also broader. So I think if the Government were to accept the local franchises of the several provinces they would get a stronger electorate and fairer representation of the voice of the people. They would get a fairer opportunity of ascertaining the sentiments of the people on any public question if they were to adopt the electoral lists of the provinces instead of adhering to this ancient, unworkable, unpopular, costly, and, I was almost going to say, iniquitous Act we have to-day. I think it is the duty of the Government to see that no election should be run in this country except upon the latest possible lists. If the elections are held in the month of May or June this summer, we will have lists nearly two years old.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). How much older than the local lists ?

Mr. FORBES. About eighteen months older.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). You would have to use the list of 1895 for this election.

Mr. FORBES. Not in all cases.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). You would certainly have to this year.

Mr. FORBES. I am looking more especially to the case of Nova Scotia. The lists there are being made up now, and in several weeks they will be completed ; full electoral lists of that province will be completed and ready for use ; so that when the elections take place on 18th June, as we are told they will by the Government papers this morning, we will have lists not eighteen days old on which to run the elections. You could not get better lists if this Government were to exhaust all their ingenuity in devising federal machinery for the purpose. I do not know what would happen in Ontario, but I do know that the local lists must have been made up in 1895 in Ontario.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). They were finished in the fall of 1895.

Mr. FORBES. That would make them fourteen months newer than the list on which we are going to run our elections this year. Therefore, according to my hon. friend's contention, it is the bounden duty of the Government to amend this section which the Minister is trying to put through the House, and add a provision that in the prospective election the several electoral lists last prepared in the provinces of this Dominion, shall be the lists upon which the elections shall be held. How simple that would be. What a representation that would give of the popular voice on these great questions which are before the electorate. You would know then without a shadow of doubt the opinion of the electorate upon the Remedial Bill which we have discussed so long in this House. I am sure the Government would not want to submit another Bill without first obtaining the voice of the people upon the question; and if the policy of the Government on this question should meet with the approval of the electorate, and a majority of members should be sent back to support the Secretary of State, the godfather of the Bill, then he would feel safe in going forward and submitting another Bill. What would be better than for the Government to take the local lists and make them the basis upon which to hold this election ? I think the Minister of Justice and the Government are making a constitutional mistake, I think they are practically violating the constitution of our country. There is no doubt that under our form of constitutional government the Ministers in charge of the affairs of the country are responsible to the people. True, it is said that they may only appeal to the people once in every five years. Now, why is it that they do not desire to get the latest view of the people upon the public questions of the day ? Why is it that they are afraid of the voice of the people ? Why does the Government do everything it can to prevent the people from expressing their views ? We have pleaded time and again that the important matters of legislation which have been submitted to Parliament this session should remain in abeyance until after the people had spoken upon them. We reiterate that plea now in respect to all the important questions which will be submitted at the next election, and we ask that the entire electorate shall have an opportunity of expressing their views, which can only be done by appealing to an electorate based upon the local lists. I think if the Minister of Justice will look at this matter from the standpoint of a constitutional lawyer, he would say to his colleagues in the Government: It is most unfair that we should debar so many of the electors of our country from taking part in this election, and I feel disposed to ask Parliament to suspend the operation of this Act for one year, and to accept the local franchises of the several provinces. I think if the Minister of Justice was to take that bold stand, he would be commended by all the people of the Dominion. He has mapped out for himself in Parliament a course which shows that he is not willing to violate the constitution and to run counter to the sentiments of the electorate. If he would adopt the suggestion I now make to him he would add one more laurel to his wreath. Let him ask that the Bill stand over, and that the Government accept this amendment and give to all the electors of the country an opportunity of expressing their views upon these important questions.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 2229) respecting the Montreal Turnpike Trust.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will now make his explanation in regard to this resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. Without going into the early history of the matter, suffice it to say, that by an award of the commissioners given a few months since, the Montreal Turnpike Trust bonds, which by the award of the commissioners in 1870 had been made an indebtedness to Quebec, was given the Dominion, so that we became sole creditors of that company. The total amount of the bonds that are now out—more have been issued—is to the value of between $187,000 and $200,000. Of these bonds, the Dominion Government owns the value of $187,000, practically they own all the bonds, having got them on two investments, one the investment made by the old province of Canada on Indian funds account, and the other a purchase by the Government in 1871, I think, from the Union Bank. However, at present the matter stands in this way, that the bonds outstanding are of the value of $187,000 held by the Dominion Government, and we are practically sole creditors. Interest has been paid on these bonds, upon the Indian fund investment ones to 1871, and upon the Union Bank purchase, I think, up to 1881. Since that time no interest has been paid, and the accrued interest and the principal standing in our books at the present time amount to about $310,000. The total accrued interest, together with the principal, would come to over $400,000; but some time since we ceased debiting these accounts for arrears of interest from year to year, so in our books the indebtedness stands at $310,000. After looking the whole matter over, and talking it over with the trustees of the Turnpike Trust Company, and having a conference as well with the Quebec government, we came to the conclusion that it was necessary, in order that we might realize as much as possible from this asset of the Dominion, to put it on a basis which would give the Turnpike Trust Company some fair grounds for redeeming its bonds and at the same time paying its interest. The Turnpike Trust Company have at the present time about fifty miles of road under its charge. It had more, but certain portions of the road they formerly possessed have been commuted as to their tolls by the municipality of Montreal, and instead of paying tolls they are allowed interest upon a capital sum, and the amount fixed for the basis of commutation in the case of Montreal has been the rate of $4,000 per mile. We adopt that same basis of commutation, and ask in this Bill for power to allow the Montreal Turnpike Trust Company to issue bonds on that basis; that is to say, that practically we will cancel all indebtedness; issue 200 bonds of the value of $1,000 each, on the basis of $4,000 for each mile, there being fifty miles; and pay interest at the rate of 3½ per cent, a condition being attached that all surplus funds over and above what are necessary to pay expenses, $7,000 interest on the bonds, shall be used in redeeming outstanding bonds. Taking the history of this company, taking the increased outlay, which of course in different years varies very much; looking also at the fact that electric railways are now running and others are being projected which will diminish to a certain extent the income of the trust, the calculation is arrived at that there will be probably, unless the revenue falls away more than is expected, the sum of from $8,000 to $10,000 of surplus each year. $7,000 of that sum will be necessary to pay interest on the bonds, and the rest of the surplus will go for the redemption of the bonds this year. We think this arrangement would place the trust on a basis upon which the company will be able to pay us the interest each year, that we will be able to cancel a certain number of its bonds, and that each year, by calling in bonds and saving the interest thereon, we will put the bonds in a position of appreciation, so that the trust will be placed on a basis of solvency, and ultimately we will get the face value of the bonds, $200,000, and accrued interest in the meantime. I have looked into the matter as carefully as possible, as have also the officers of my department, and we have come to the conclusion that this is the best basis on which to place it. The Quebec government have a joint interest in the trust in a certain way—the province has always had the appointment of a certain number of trustees. It has signified its assent to this arrangement, and promised concurrent legislation, which is necessary so far as that province is concerned. That is briefly a statement of the case. Any further explanations necessary will be given on the Bill when the clauses of the Bill are considered in committee, or at the present time, as hon. gentlemen opposite wish.

Resolution considered in committee and reported.

After Recess.

MANITOBA AND NELSON VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 65) to incorporate the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company.

Mr. FOSTER.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MACDOWALL. I beg to move, Mr. Chairman:

> That section three be reconsidered and that subsection two thereof be struck out, and that the following, being the clause reported by the Railway Committee, be substituted therefor:—
> The powers granted for the construction and operation of a line between Portage la Prairie and Gladstone shall not go into effect if the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company gives this company reasonable and proper running arrangements for its trains and traffic between Gladstone and Portage la Prairie; and, in event of there being a disagreement between the said companies as to what are reasonable and proper arrangements, the question in dispute and the price, terms and details of such arrangements and the agreement to be entered into between the parties shall be settled by the Governor in Council upon the application of either party, and his determination thereon shall be final and binding upon both companies.

Notice of this amendment was given on the 6th day of April, and it is in the Votes and Proceedings of that day. When the Bill came up before the Railway Committee, the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company objected to its line being paralleled from Portage la Prairie to Gladstone, and the clause was put in which is in the Notice paper of the 6th April. This was assented to by the promoters of the Bill, and owing to the routine proceedings not being forwarded to Toronto, the solicitors of the Manitoba and North-western Company had no notice that any change was intended. The substituted clause which was moved by the mover of the Bill, gives the Manitoba and North-western Company no protection at all, simply permitting the Governor in Council, if they choose, to suspend the construction between Portage la Prairie and Gladstone. It remains there as a constant menace to the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company. I hope, Mr. Chairman, there will be no objection to this motion. The Manitoba and North-western Railway Company has already completed between two and three hundred miles through this country, and if this Bill were carried, as it stands now, it would do them very great damage in their desire to complete the railway. I therefore hope that the committee will agree to reconsider this section 3, and adopt the amendment which was agreed to by the Railway Committee.

Mr. FLINT. What is the nature of the amendment?

Mr. MACDOWALL. The Manitoba and North-western Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway occupy a certain narrow territory west of Portage la Prairie, and those two roads are ample for that territory. This road is proposed to parallel these lines for fifty-two miles, and there is really only traffic for the two lines. It is proposed to have running powers over the Manitoba and North-western for the fifty-two miles, and if any difference arises between the two companies as to that, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council shall have power to adjudicate between them. That seems to be fair.

Mr. FRASER. Does the hon. gentleman mean that we can give running power over another road by an Act of Parliament, without the consent of the other road ?

Mr. MACDOWALL. Failing an agreement between the two companies, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council shall have power to arrange the terms.

Mr. FRASER. I am very doubtful if we can do that.

Mr. MACDOWALL. This amendment was agreed to by the Railway Committee of the House, and then the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company proposed an amendment in the face of the one adopted by the Railway Committee. The Manitoba and North-western now seek to have the amendment which was adopted by the Railway Committee incorporated in the Bill.

Mr. CASEY. Why was not this amendment inserted in the Bill by the Railway Committee ?

Mr. TISDALE. The amendment was adopted by the Railway Committee and subsequently, when the Bill came into Committee of the Whole, the present amended clause was substituted for this one. What the hon. gentleman asks, is to strike out the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole, and to insert the amendment adopted by the Railway Committee. Both parties were before the Railway Committee.

Mr. CASEY. I do not know that it is within the power of the House, after having passed this Bill through Committee of the Whole, and made certain amendments, to reverse that process now, and strike out the words that we, in our wisdom, saw fit to put in, and reinstate the words that we, in our wisdom, saw fit to strike out. I would like to have the opinion of the leaders of the House on that point of order, and your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. What has been already adopted in committee on this Bill we cannot now undo without the unanimous consent of the committee. The only way to make the change would be, on the motion for the third reading of the Bill, to move to go back into committee for the purpose.

Mr. FLINT. I would be disposed to favour the views of the promoters of the Bill as far as possible ; but I think the explanation has not been very clear as to what the effect would be of passing the Bill just as it is, except that it would compel this company to parallel two existing lines of railway, which of course is not desirable. If the effect of this amendment would be to prevent that, I think the committee might possibly strain a point and allow the amendment to be substituted.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the point of order should be disposed of before we discuss the merits.

Mr. CASEY. Your ruling, Mr. Chairman, is that if anybody objects, we cannot go on. For my part, I wish to hear full reasons for the change. If these are satisfactory, I will not object. If they are not satisfactory, I shall be inclined to insist on the point of order. I want to get the reasons why the promoters of the Bill ask the committee to reverse its judgment.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Mr. Chairman, as you have ruled that I cannot move this now, I beg leave to give notice that I will do so on the third reading of the Bill.

Amendment withdrawn.

On section 6,

Mr. SUTHERLAND. At the last moment I have received a very important communication in reference to this Bill, complaining very bitterly of the change that has been made without notice to the parties interested, especially the Manitoba North-western Company, since the Bill left the Railway Committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that the matter is disposed of for the present by the ruling of the Chair that the change can only be made on the motion for the third reading of the Bill. That will give time to consider the objections that have been made.

Mr. CASEY. I understood you to rule, Mr. Chairman, that the change can be made now by unanimous consent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. But there is not unanimous consent. The amendment has been withdrawn, and there is no use discussing it now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Even if the hon. gentleman has withdrawn the amendment, it is the privilege of any member of this committee to take exception to this clause, if he chooses to do so. I have not had time to examine into the objections made by interested parties, though they seem to be worthy of consideration. We know that the owners of that road have invested a large amount of Canadian capital in it, and I think it would be very unfair to pass legislation in the way we are doing without giving them notice.

Mr. DALY. The ordinary notice was given.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The letter which I have just received and opened since this committee has been in session, states most emphatically that they attended the Railway Committee while this Bill was passing through that committee, and that certain amendment which they thought affected their interests were made at the last moment without notice to them, and they ask that before the Bill be passed, they should be heard by Parliament. That is only fair and right. The letter, which I shall be pleased to hand to the members of the Government, has impressed me, on hurriedly reading it, that the objection is well taken. I understood the hon. member for South Norfolk to say that he had received some notice of this objection, and if so, I think the Minister of Railways ought to take it into consideration, and explain to the committee his views with regard to it. I am perfectly willing to say frankly that I am not prepared at the moment to say whether the objection is well taken, or what amendments should be made; but I do claim that in the face of these important statements we should not proceed with this Bill hurriedly, but should give an opportunity to the parties to be heard, unless the Minister has had the matter under his consideration, and can explain it to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. The fullest possible notice has been given; it has been given here this evening; and the proposed amendment of this clause can be brought up on the third reading stage when we can have a full discussion as to whether the one clause or the other should be adopted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In a matter of this kind, which was discussed at great length before the Railway Committee——

Mr. DALY. It was not discussed at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, it was consented to by the Minister acting for the Government.

Mr. DALY. The amendment before the House was put on the Order paper in the ordinary way, and the gentlemen got the same notice that anybody else got, that this amendment was to be moved in committee. No advantage was taken of them, and if there is any objection to the amendment, it can be considered on the third reading.

Mr. MACDOWALL. They did not receive notice, and therefore I have brought up this motion to-day. As the Chairman has ruled that it is out of order, I give notice that when the Bill comes up for the third reading, I will move it, and endeavour to get the amendment of the Railway Committee approved of.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are these lines already constructed or in course of construction?

Mr. DALY. No.

Mr. TISDALE. The whole discussion has been properly ruled by the Chairman to be out of order; but if the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will state the facts as I understand them. The Manitoba North-western Company, who are asking to have this amendment changed, have their road constructed. The other road is not constructed. It is a road running about 600 miles north and it will parallel the Manitoba North-western for a distance of 40 or 50 miles. When the Bill was before the Railway Committee, it was made a condition that the company should not have power to construct at all, provided they could make an arrangement with the Manitoba North-western for satisfactory running powers, which was to be decided by Order in Council. Subsequently the wording of this clause, I understand, was not considered satisfactory to the promoters of the other road, and they asked the Committee of the Whole to change the wording of the clause, which was done. So far as my feelings go, I think it is only fair for the Manitoba and North-western Company that the fullest discussion should be had before this amendment is made, because it is one of the few roads in the North-west, the promoters of which have put their money into it. As the point of order has now been raised and there will be the fullest possible opportunity for discussion at the third reading, I suggest that we suspend discussion until it is in order at the third reading. At that time, unless I be satisfied by reasons adduced that the decision of the Railway Committee was not a good one, and that the amendment put in by the Committee of the Whole was a better one, I propose to uphold the decision of the Railway Committee.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Were both companies represented before the Railway Committee, and did they give their assent to the amendment?

Mr. TISDALE. Both companies were represented, and the Railway Committee came to a decision, after hearing both.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A gentleman, whose name I have no objection to giving, if necessary, and whose name would satisfy the House that he would not make a statement which is not reliable, protests against this amendment as a breach of faith, and that sufficient notice was not given of it. It may be possible that notice was given, according to the rules of the House, that the amendment was intended to be made in Committee of the Whole, but no hon. gentleman will say that that was a fair notice to the parties interested, especially when no opposition was expected to the Bill as it left the Railway Committee. I agree with the chairman of the Railway Committee. I am not in a position at present to take exception to the amendment, except from the strong statement made to me by this gentleman who claims it is a breach of faith. He says that they appeared before the Railway Committee, and that the solicitors of this company, with the consent of the Minister of Railways and the Railway Committee, did agree to a certain amendment which was adopted by that committee, and that without any notice to them, it was changed in Committee of the Whole, and that the wording of the amendment is such as to undo completely the agreement that was entered into between them with the consent of the Minister of Railways and the Railway Comittee.

Mr. HAGGART. Does he say that the Minister of Railways was a party ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It reads here that the Minister of Railways consented. Of course, the hon. Minister was present. We all consented. The Railway Committee consented to the agreement come to between the solicitors. I appeal to the House to say that when legislation is before the committee, and the solicitors, in good faith, have come to an arrangement with which the committee is satisfied, this House, as a rule, is satisfied, if no public interest is interfered with. If the Government of this House, however, considered it desirable or necessary to change the decision come to by the Railway Committee, the parties are at least entitled to notice. This is a breach of faith, and the proper procedure now is for this committee to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no necessity for that, because all that is necessary is to proceed with the Bill, and on the third reading this matter can be reversed, if it is the wish of the House, after full examination, to do so. The hon. gentleman would defeat his own object, because then we would not have the opportunity which would afterwards be given, on the third reading, to move to substitute the clause as it came from the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With that understanding, I shall make no objection now. I have no desire to oppose the Bill, but I only rose, in view of the strong statement made to me, that this amendment was a breach of faith.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Of all the members of this House, I am the most concerned in this amendment being carried. I know that no one in the North-west desires in any way to burk the remainder of the Bill. They merely wish to have this amendment, and this can be fully discussed and carried on the third reading.

Mr. CASEY. The House may not choose to go into committee when the Bill comes up for third reading.

Mr. FOSTER. He cannot make it now, that is his only chance.

Mr. CASEY. It is only in committee that a full discussion of such a question can be had, and it would be better to leave the Bill in committee until it can be so discussed.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 8,

Mr. FORBES. On what ground does this railway, which is being constructed through the prairie lands of the North-west ask this Parliament to allow it to issue bonds or debentures to the extent of $20,000 per mile ? This is greatly in excess of anything the company can require, and when these debentures are placed upon the market, with the stamp and approval of Parliament, investors are induced to purchase them, who otherwise might not do so. This is largely in excess of the requirements of the road.

Mr. DALY. It is exactly the same as any other road.

Mr. FORBES. Not for any road in the country I come from.

Mr. DALY. We are not talking of your country.

Mr. FORBES. I am speaking of what is right and fair. Whoever heard of a man getting the full value of his property returned by way of mortgage ? The cost of this road cannot be more than $25,000 per mile.

Mr. FRASER. I think we should get over this kind of nonsense about how much we will permit companies to lend. For myself, I believe that it is not a question for us at all, but for the investors themselves. If any man wants to lend $5,000 or $10,000 or $100,000 let him do it.

Mr. DICKEY. Free trade.

Mr. FRASER. Decidedly. And I am glad to know that the hon. Minister is a convert to that sound doctrine. I hear a good deal about Parliament restricting this man and that man, as though the men who invest money were simpletons.

Mr. GIBSON. Some of them are.

Mr. FRASER. Then they are all the more likely to be deceived if a definite figure is mentioned for such bonds as these, making it look as though the investment of this amount had received the imprimatur of Parliament. But there is no man going to invest a dollar in a railway company without seeing what that railway is like. Again and again this question has come up and I wonder that my vigorous words and better sense have not had more effect. I know that the level-headed men in this House agree with me that the House has nothing to do with this kind of thing.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have strongly urged before now that it was folly to grant charters to parallel existing lines. There is no way by which the construction of railways can be frustrated so well as by granting charters indiscriminately. No doubt, this line will be looking for a land grant. We have already granted to railways about 44,000,000 acres of the arable land of the North-west, of which 25,000,000 went to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, with regard to the very serious amendment that is going to be made to this Bill——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are not on that. The hon. gentleman is speaking on the preamble of the Bill, which is already carried. An amendment has been taken up. We are at clause 8.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was coming to that point. I am sure that the members of the Railway Committee, and I think I may safely say the chairman of that committee is against allowing the issue of bonds far beyond the cost of constructing a road. I have had some experience in railways, and I know that, in a level country, you can build a road complete with rails and stations and a sufficient quantity of rolling stock, for $5,000 a mile less than the figure here given. I do not quite agree with my respected friend (Mr. Fraser) on this subject. Where you are constructing a line through a difficult country it may be necessary to grant very extensive bonding powers, but granting powers for $20,000 a mile for a road presenting no engineering difficulties is unwise. My hon. friend says that if the English investors are foolish enough to put their money in it let them do it. But we know very well that the money for these enterprises must come from England, and we should do all that is necessary to maintain the credit of our country and of our public enterprises. To allow parties to sell bonds for more than cost of a work may result in injury to the credit not only of our railways but of all our incorporated companies.

Mr. CASEY. It is not often I have to disagree with my hon. friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser), especially where a question of free trade is involved. But when it comes to free trade in railway bonds, I cannot go the whole way with him. It is all very well to say that English investors are sharp enough to look after themselves. But when English investors see an Act of this Parliament authorizing the bonding of a road for $20,000 a mile, then, accustomed as they are to the careful and business-like methods of railway legislation in the old country, they come to the conclusion that this House and its Railway Committee have satisfied themselves that there is some relation between the amount of bonds and the value of the work.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is because the Act mentions a sum.

Mr. CASEY. As my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) suggests, the Bill would be less likely to deceive investors in England if it named no limit at all. If the English investors were left to themselves, they would themselves place the limit upon the investment, but when they see an amount stated, they take it for granted that we have done our duty as legislators and that this is a safe amount to loan. We all know that it does not cost anything approaching this sum to build and equip a road through that prairie country. I should say that $5,000 a mile for construction through that northern country, which is approximately the district traversed by this road, is about the correct figure. The hon. member for Alberta will know that better than I do, and he will agree with me, I think, in that. I believe I am putting it at an outside figure. For us to authorize this company to issue $20,000 bonds per mile for such a road, is, I think, improper on our part. It is useless to argue that we have been in the habit of acting in this careless manner before? That is quite true, but I think it is time we stopped. Our railway legislation as a general thing has been too careless. We have been accustomed to take it for granted that when the solicitors on both sides have agreed, as has been mentioned once or twice, and when the Minister of Railways did not make any objection, everything was all right. I think we should have a more careful system of legislation. Now, I move, in pursuance of the views I have expressed, that the words "twenty thousand" be struck out of this clause, and the words "twelve thousand" be inserted in lieu thereof. Of course that is not an exact valuation of the road, but I think it is coming much nearer to it than the amount now mentioned in the section.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot move that now because no notice has been given of it.

Mr. GIBSON. I understood you to rule that the committee should confine themselves entirely to the clause now under discussion. If we pass that clause as it stands, we shall authorize the company to raise bonds and debentures to the extent of $20,000 a mile. Well, any hon. member who has not had an opportunity of visiting the North-west Territories and Manitoba, will feel inclined to think that $20,000 was a very modest sum for which the road might be bonded. But after visiting that country and looking at the level prairie over which the road is intended to run, without a stream to cross, without a public highway to cross, without an overhead bridge to build, and no grade to contend against, with a 20-foot trestle sufficient to cross the widest stream —when you consider all these things, you will think that $20,000 is too high a figure to put in this section, even if we allow the standard weight of rails at 100 tons to the mile, and allowing the most fancy prices for steel rails at $30 a ton, you have $3,000 a mile. Then allowing 1,760 yards to the mile, and ties 2 feet apart, at 50 cents each you arrive at $1,320 a mile. Adding the cost of the rails and the cost of the ties, you can only bring up the cost of this railway to $4,320 per mile. The grade is not heavy, I say as a practical man that the cost of grading will not be $500 to $750 per mile. They will simply have to put in the plough and turn a furrow to divert the water from the track, and take the loose earth thrown up by the plough and pack it between the ties, and the result is that that railway can be built for from $5,000 to $6,000 per mile; and yet this company asks this House to give them bonding powers to the extent of $20,000. It simply means that the promoters of this road can put into their pockets $10,000 a mile, if they should succeed in floating bonds in England at par. The worst feature of this scheme is that immediately after this clause we are now discussing, wherein they ask for legislation to enable them to float bonds to the extent of $20,000 per mile, they ask this House, in clause 9, to give them power to enter into an agreement with the Manitoba and North-western, the Winnipeg and Great Northern, the Manitoba Railway, and the Canal Company. Here you see in a moment that this is simply a scheme got up by the promoters of this road to put into their pockets $10,000 a mile if they succeed in getting this Parliament to give them this power to bond the road for $20,000 per mile. I am safe in saying that the road will not cost more than $6,000 or $7,000 a mile, or $8,000 at the most, when all equipped, so that you have a margin of $12,000 a mile; and allowing $2,000 for floating debentures, the promoters will have a clear margin of $10,000 a mile. They admit that they are asking this legislation to enable them to transfer their interests to other roads not at present in existence. Any one who has visited that country is aware that nature has provided the most easy means of building railways all over the North-west Territories and Manitoba; and when we consider that even in the eastern provinces railway promoters are content with a margin of $20,000 per mile, you will see the extraordinary nature of this proposed legislation where we are asked to empower the promoters of this railway to go to the money markets of Europe and to pledge the good faith of Canada to the extent of $20,000 a mile in bonds and debentures. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is time we should stop and think, and that we should not pledge the credit of Canada to every wild-cat scheme that comes before this House. I endorse every word that has been spoken by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey), and I think that $12,000 a mile is ample for all purposes of this railway. I enter my protest as a member of this House against this Bill empowering this company to pledge the faith of Canada to floating bonds to the extent of $20,000 a mile.

Mr. CASEY. I now give notice that I shall move this amendment on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I also wish to enter my protest against this Bill. In my opinion this is a most absurd and ridiculous clause, and ought not to be passed into legislation. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), who has a practical knowledge of the subject, estimates that the road will not cost more than $6,000 or $7,000 a mile; yet it is proposed to give the company bonding powers to the extent of $20,000 per mile. The committee has already passed the clause under which the capital of this company to build this road, 600 miles in length, is to be only $2,000,000 with $200,000 paid up. So the position is this: The road is proposed to be 600 miles in length, the paid-up capital will be $200,000, and the company ask bonding powers to the extent of $20,000 per mile, or $12,000,000. The scheme is so absurd that it cannot be defended for a moment, and such a wild-cat scheme should not be submitted to the House. It is one of the most outrageous pieces of legislation ever proposed. Not only does this company propose to build 600 miles of railroad, but they want also power to build steamers, telegraph lines, public warehouses, and in fact almost everything. No doubt, if this Bill goes through, the company will subsequently apply for a railway subsidy of $3,000 or $4,000 per mile. Then the company can go to England and float their bonds, pointing to the fact that the Canadian Parliament has given them bonding powers to the extent of $12,000,000. In this way investors living in the old country are led to place money in schemes that do not earn dividends. The result of this system is that the prospects of meritorious schemes are injured. The committee should hesitate before it proceeds further with the consideration of this Bill, in regard to which notice of important amendments has already been given. The Bill should be referred back to the Railway Committee, and an opportunity given for all parties to be heard. I am thoroughly opposed to the whole scheme, and the Bill should not be further pressed.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), no doubt, feels he is doing great service to the English money-lenders. I am sure that those investors must feel safe when they have an hon. gentleman rising in Parliament in order to protect them from being robbed of their money. It would be much better, however, that we should pass on to the next clause, which is really an important one. I give notice that on the third reading I shall move an amendment to section 9, which allows two-thirds of the shareholders to decide important issues. I remember a case in point. There was the New Glasgow Iron and Coal Company, and the New Glasgow Steel Company, and it was resolved to amalgamate the companies. Amalgamation was supported by 98½ per cent of the shareholders, there being 1½ per cent hostile. The question was fought in both Houses, that the right of amalgamation should not be given, even if there was a fraction, equal only to about 1 per cent of the shareholders opposed. Yet under this Bill it is proposed to give two-thirds of the shareholders the right to carry an amalgamation scheme.

Mr. CASEY. I shall require very full explanations of this Bill.

Mr. DALY. This Bill is being talked out, and the people interested will understand it.

The time for Private Bills having expired, the committee rose.

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST.

House again resolved itself into committee on resolution (page 2229) respecting the Montreal Turnpike Trust.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a private corporation, or a semi-municipal corporation, or what is it ? Who are the trustees ?

Mr. FOSTER. There are five trustees, two of whom are appointed by the Quebec government, and three by this Government. The trustees for the present year are Mr. Richard White, president ; Mr. A. Lamarche, vice-president ; Mr. Doran, Mr. Deguire and Mr. Lapointe.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How was this trust created, and how did we come to be mixed up with it ? The hon. gentleman told us that we become liable for this, under some decision of the arbitrators, but if I understood him aright, he said the investment had been made on account of some Indian funds.

Mr. FOSTER. Both are right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the nominal rate of interest ?

Mr. FOSTER. Six per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did we lend $200,000 to this trust ?

Mr. FOSTER. No. This was a trust created by Lower Canada in 1841 by legislation in that year, and there was also legislation with regard to it in succeeding years. The persons incorporated were empowered to issue debentures at a certain interest. If by reason of the tolls not being sufficient to pay the expenditure, arrears of interest accrued, the government of Lower Canada was in a certain way responsible. They had the power to pay these arrears of interest. The trust was created by the Parliament of Lower Canada, and when the provinces were united it became a subject of further legislation. The government was empowered to invest in those debentures—not this Government, but the government of Lower Canada, and afterwards the government of United Canada. They did invest on account of Indian funds, a sum which, in the end, became lowered to $67,200. That became ours at confederation. $120,000 were also held by the Union Bank, and I think in 1871 that was taken over by this Government, so that the Government became the possessors in these ways of $67,200 and $120,000 of bonds, making $187,200. It was supposed that these were guaranteed by the Quebec government ; by the government of Lower Canada in the first instance. The award of the first commissioners in 1870 made the provincial government liable for these. Quebec, however, traversed that claim, and the whole case was argued before the present arbitrators, and last year a decision was given absolving the provincial government from liability, and making us the creditors of that trust fund ; so that we have to look to the trust fund to-day for the $187,000. The accrued arrears added to that principal, amount at present to about $410,000. These bonds bear 6 per cent interest. They have been in arrears in one case since 1871, and in the other case since 1881. In consequence of the development of electric railways, it has been practically impossible for the trust to discharge the interest at 6 per cent, and make repairs and meet their expenditures. The basis upon which we propose to put this is the same as that taken for commutation by the municipality of Montreal, on the basis of $4,000 per mile of their road. That, on the fifty miles of road, makes $200,000. I am asking power to replace the present debentures by debentures for $200,000 at 3½ per cent, and so put it on what I think will be a solvent basis.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It does not appear that the security is worth one solitary cent. They have been in arrears of interest on one part since 1871, and on the other part since 1881. If it has been honestly administered, what is the use of talking to us about 3½ per cent, or any other per cent ? What chance have we of getting any interest out of it, if for fifteen years not one copper has been paid ? Apparently, this belongs to us now. How do the Quebec government come to appoint two commissioners?

Mr. FOSTER. They have now no interest, so far as holding the bonds is concerned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, why not take it and make the best we can out of it ?

Mr. FOSTER. That will not commend itself to the judgment of the hon. gentleman as being the best thing to do.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think anything could be worse than what we now propose to do ? Supposing this trust to be honestly administered, of which, of course, we have no evidence, pro or con, it has not paid one copper of interest for fifteen years. I suppose the reason they did not pay any interest was because the expenditure they incurred was so great as to absorb all the tolls. What good is there in our nominally throwing off $200,000 and taking $200,000 worth of bonds, which there is no sort of presumption can be made to pay anything at all ?

Mr. FOSTER. There are two reasons which I think the House will consider sufficient. In the first place, we had nothing to do with the management of this road until the award of the arbitrators made these bonds practically our property. Therefore, we owning practically all the stock, have the appointment of all the trustees. We have appointed three trustees, and we have got the management down to a good business basis ; and the result of the last year's business has led us to suppose that our calculation will be about correct.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you any balance sheet ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then lay it on the Table ; we would like to see it.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, as I stated this afternoon, the expenditures have varied from year to year, according to the amount of repairs that have been put upon the road. The revenues compared with the expenditure for a series of years, taking into account the present conditions of the road, leave it a fair matter of conclusion that, with prudent management, the expenditures may be made, the tolls collected, and from $8,000 to $10,000 of surplus obtained each year. Seven thousand dollars of that would pay the interest upon the bonds, and the policy of the Government is to devote the surplus, whatever it may be above the $7,000, to the retirement of bonds. In that way the bonded indebtedness becomes yearly less, and consequently the burden of interest on the trust becomes yearly less. I do not think there is any ground for doubt, though of course you cannot tell what may happen, that if placed on this basis, and properly managed, as it will be under our direct supervision, the asset, which has been perfectly useless to us for a number of years, will realize that amount of interest on the $200,000 of bonds while they run, and the ultimate payment of the bonds themselves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman inform us why no interest was available during all that period ?

Mr. FOSTER. Simply because the expenses took up the whole of the revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under the same management ?

Mr. FOSTER. There is an entirely different system. The trustees, for a long period, were practically unlimited, but we have brought them down to a limited number, and are taking the greatest care in the appointment of them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long has Mr. White been president ?

Mr. FOSTER. Two or three years, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who was his predecessor ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. CASEY. Does the Minister consider the assets of this trust good value for the present amount of our claim ?

Mr. FOSTER. No, I do not think they are, otherwise I should have asked that bonds be issued to the amount of our claim. But it is, to my mind, perfectly impossible for them to pay interest and keep the road up, if our full claim of $410,000 is insisted upon. It is possible, I believe, if it be put down at this reasonable amount, that we may get the interest on the bonds.

Mr. CASEY. Has the hon. Minister had a valuation of the assets by any competent parties?

Mr. FOSTER. There can be no valuation except the tolls.

Mr. CASEY. Has he had any valuation of them?

Mr. FOSTER. The yearly statement shows the amount of the tolls.

Mr. CASEY. The Government are practically the sole owners at present, and I do not see what they are to gain by taking $200,000 of bonds at 3½ per cent, instead of leaving our whole claim as it is. We are entitled to all the earnings over and above the expenses ; then, why not let the management go on and pay the Government whatever profits there may be ? It seems to me we would then get all that the road is capable of earning. By diminishing our claim one-half, and taking only 3½ per cent, we are debarring ourselves of this property in the future if it becomes more valuable.

Mr. OUIMET. The property does not increase in value. On the contrary, it decreases on account of the electric tramways covering the whole island, either now or in the near future.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It does not appear to me that we are getting any sort of consideration. Are we to make good to the Indians the value of their interest ?

Mr. FOSTER. No, it was simply an asset that came over to us at confederation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is an asset for which we are, I suppose, to account to the province of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. That has been accounted for, I suppose. This is our part of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I doubt that. I fancy this may result in our paying money out. The receipts amounted, in 1895, to $52,000, and the disbursements were as follows: Labour, stone-breaking, stone purchase, coal oil, winter contracts and petty accounts, $30,788. That may or may not be a correct statement. The road may be well-managed or it may be ill-managed. This is a case in which, if the road has come recently into our hands, our own engineers ought to have examined and reported upon it, and we should take a year of actual experiment to see how it works. We cannot be any worse, and we may make a considerable saving. I notice an item of general expenses, amounting to $6,390.68. What is that? Then, there is an issue of debentures of some $20,000. What they were for does not appear.

Mr. FOSTER. You have there the items, and, if we look at the items, we will probably get at the general expense.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Your general expense is $6,390.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be the expense of engineers, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you any detail of that?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The point I make is this. The hon. gentleman tells us that we have a claim of $400,000. He proposes to take $200,000, and does not get one particle additional security by releasing the other $200,000. And he proposes to make the interest 3½ per cent. That may be all well and good, or it may not. There appears to be some subsequent creditors to ourselves. I see debentures issued. Is there a number of creditors behind us? We are the first mortgagees of this road; are there second mortgagees?

Mr. FOSTER. We hold practically all the debentures.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here are $10,000 issued in 1893. Has the hon. gentleman been buying those debentures?

Mr. FOSTER. No. That was in 1893, but you do not find any in 1895.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see, in 1895, under the head of disbursements, $2,800 paid, and $3,200 in 1894, and $19,800 paid in 1895.

Mr. FOSTER. Those debentures are issued in the one year and then paid out of the receipts in the other. As I understand it now, the turnpike trust is practically free from debt other than the $187,000 debentures which we hold.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would appear that what ought to have gone into our pocket as interest, has gone to pay second mortgagees. Our claim was the first. Very considerable sums have been paid out to subsequent mortgagees. That is not right. The first mortgagees should have been paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Take 1893, for instance. If the receipts were not sufficient to make the necessary repairs, for repairs had to be made in order to run the road and collect the tolls, advances were required, and those debentures covered the advances.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a mighty ingenious hypothesis which the hon. gentleman has made without looking at the facts. In 1893 the receipts were $58,000, and the total expenditure about $43,000, so that it would not have applied in that particular case. I do not greatly believe in this haphazard way of doing business. I think that the Government, in this matter, having a large claim of $400,000, should have an investigation made by competent authorities, as to what this property is really worth, and also what it could be worked for.

Mr. FOSTER. What recourse has the Government?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It could take these 50 miles and have them run in a business-like fashion, if it is good for anything. These 50 miles, with a revenue of $52,000, may be a good property or a bad one, and it is quite clear we are going to abandon our claim and are not going to get anything from it. If there is anything to be made, we are to have $200,000 at 3½ per cent; where the rest of the money, supposing there is a surplus, is to go, I do not see. It does not go into our pockets, that is clear.

Mr. FOSTER. Whatever surplus there is will redeem the bond.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Our bonds? To whom will the property belong, then?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a long way distant. The Government has the appointment of the trustees.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We are the owners; I do not see the fun of issuing bonds to ourselves. If we are not the owners, but are going to be the owners in the long run, who will benefit ultimately by this arrangement, if it prove to succeed?

Mr. FOSTER. It is the turnpike trust, managed by trustees, and we appoint the trustees.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it to be our property?

Mr. FOSTER. It would seem to belong to us, as far as the management is concerned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is not as clear and definite an answer as we should expect. Who is to be the ultimate beneficiary in the matter ?

Mr. OUIMET. The public of the island of Montreal. This was a Government commission, just like the harbour commission, and for many years it was administered by trustees appointed by the Government. I am not in a position to say whether it was the negligence of the Government of the time or not, but the result of the administration was an accumulation of indebtedness larger than the original capital advanced, which was $187,000. Every cent taken out of the people who travel on these roads, is so much taxation taken out of the people of Montreal and the surrounding country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that very clearly.

Mr. OUIMET. If the Government at the time did not see that this turnpike trust was properly managed and paid its interest, as it went along, the Government would be the parties to suffer for it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not the innocent inhabitants of the island of Montreal.

Mr. OUIMET. I do not think that would be fair. This is a very practical arrangement, which will enable the original capital to be reimbursed with reasonable interest at 3½ per cent. The money will cost the Government only 3¼ per cent. These trustees will be appointed by the Government, and the property will be public property. Whenever the indebtedness is paid off, the people who belong to the island of Montreal will be relieved of the tax in order that these people should have to pay nothing less than is necessary to keep up this service. These toll-gates are a nuisance. In every civilized country they have been taken away.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I wanted to know was who were to benefit ultimately by this arrangement. The hon. gentleman tells me, the inhabitants of the island of Montreal.

Mr. OUIMET. I hope so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I have the greatest desire to see the people of the island of Montreal profit, but I might respectfully suggest that there are other places besides, that would like similarly comfortable arrangements.

Mr. OUIMET. But after this is settled the property will be public property. The turnpike trust is a Government commission, and these roads are public property. They were supposed to be the property of the local government up to last year, when the division of assets between the Dominion and provincial governments was made, but now this property has reverted to the Dominion Government. That is the reason why we have to deal with it, and I think it is much wiser to bring it down to a business footing and really try to get back what we can. We shall get back more than the capital invested, and I should say that after this is paid and the property is free, I should think that those who are entrusted with the conduct of affairs of the country at that time will see that a fair arrangement is made for the Government as well as for the public. In the meantime we shall have paid off not only this indebtedness, but also the interest at the reduced rate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. What amount was charged to the Dominion Government at the division as the value of this property ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About $300,000, I think the Minister said, but the sum due is about $400,000. In one sense or other this owes us, say, about $400,000 to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. With the principal and arrears of interest—yes. I think the common-sense way of looking at it is simply this :—There was a trust which was managed by trustees appointed by the provincial government. There comes a time when the Government has the bonds of that trust to the amount of $200,000. The Dominion supposes that Quebec is at the back of that as guarantee and charges that against the Quebec government, believing that the Quebec government will ultimately be liable for it. That opinion was based upon the award given by the arbitrators in 1870. That award, however, has been reversed, Quebec having taken exception to that liability. The award now given is final and the Quebec government is absolved from liability in that respect. So now we have no one to look to but the Montreal trust. For these bonds, part of which we hold from 1871, and part from 1881, we have received no interest. It came to be practically impossible for us to enforce our claim. The management of the trust paid out everything that was received in expenses and repairs on the road. Their balance sheet from year to year showed that everything that was taken in was paid out.

Mr. CASEY. There was a surplus of $15,000 last year.

Mr. FOSTER. But their balance sheet on the whole from year to year showed that everything was paid out.

Mr. CASEY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. One balance sheet showed the surplus of $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. But I am taking an average of years. The time comes when the concern gets into our hands as sole creditors, and we have the appointment of trustees. We have appointed trustees, reducing the number to a workable board. I do not know, but I think under the old management there were some 20 trustees. During the last year we have reduced this, I think, to five, and we have put the whole affair under good management. Now, the whole question is whether we shall insist upon the arrears of interest which will bring the claim up to a total of $410,000——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will not the city of Montreal take it all ?

Mr. FOSTER. That may be. They have not made any such proposition. If we take the basis of commutation which the city has made with the company for certain parts of the road, we find it was $4,000 per mile. Put it on that basis. There is a fair chance that the trustees appointed by the Dominion Government can work that out, paying 3½ per cent interest. I do not think that they could do it with the whole indebtedness and at the rate of 6 per cent. You must recollect that as the years go by there is increasing desire to get rid of tolls and toll-gates and toll roads. There is also the extension of electric travel which, of course, diminishes the tolls. Taking all these things into consideration, if on this basis we can get back the face of our bonds and a fair interest, it is certainly better than leaving matters as they are. I do not think we can push matters to the extreme with any hope that the trustees can work out the indebtedness. On the basis here proposed there is a chance for them to work out the indebtedness. It is a practical question whether we shall take this and realize upon our asset or whether we should leave it in the old form.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister says he thinks the view he takes is the common-sense view. It seems to me that the phrase is scarcely applicable. He tells us that he does not know exactly how things stand. He thinks there were formerly twenty trustees and that now there are six. But he is perfectly sure that the management at the present time is good. He says that the Government own the whole property of the trust and are entitled to every cent the property earns. But he says the trust could not pay us the amount of our claim. Now, whether they could pay us the whole of our claim or not, they could at least pay us as much as could be made out of the property. Yet the hon. Minister proposes to be content with half our claim and with 3½ per cent interest and to give up our position as sole owners. We are to take bonds under the Act 59 Vic., chap. 65 of the legislature of Quebec, which appears to be an Act to authorize the trust to issue bonds. But it does not appear that we are to be the only bondholders.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman refers to that I say that the power to issue bonds is limited to $200,000 and the Act was passed with a view to carrying out this arrangement.

Mr. CASEY. Then that is cleared up, and we shall be the only bondholders. If we have the road under good management under the Government's own trustees, why not leave it as it is, and take what it is able to pay ? Why not get everything there is in it, instead of going through the form of reducing our claim to $200,000, and going through the form of assenting to 3½ per cent interest ? We do not know that they can pay even as much as 3½ per cent interest. They have not been paying anything for years past. Why ? Because, the Finance Minister says they have been paying everything out. But it appears that in the only year the record of which we have before us, they made $15,000. Where did that go to ?

Mr. FOSTER. It went into the road.

Mr. CASEY. The trust say it did not. They say they had that surplus over expenditures of all kinds. It must have gone into somebody's pockets. It did not go into the road, or that would have appeared in the accounts.

Mr. OUIMET. It went into the bank.

Mr. CASEY. No doubt, but not without somebody's name attached to it. It would be deposited, I suppose, to the credit of the Turnpike Trust. The Minister of Finance, does not even know himself—well, he gave one name, but he does not know the number of the trustees, and cannot tell us what has become of that $15,000 profit made in one year, and why the Government did not call upon the trust to pay that over with the interest they owed to this Government. Now, what does it matter whether the interest is 6 per cent or 3 per cent? We should have had that $15,000 paid over to this Government in that particular year. The Minister of Finance says that on the average year they made no profit, but he gives no figures to back that assertion. The only account he lays before the House shows a profit of $15,000 in one year ; and yet he says on the average year there was no profit. I cannot accept that statement on the face of the evidence laid before the House. There have been other years when there have been $15,000, or some other amount of profit made, and whether that has been put into the bank or into the hat, we do not know. We know there are very convenient places always for surpluses of this kind to slip into about election times.

Mr. FOSTER. Now you are getting on to familiar ground.

Mr. CASEY. Yes, very familiar ground, indeed. We are accustomed to that sort of thing, and we cannot avoid a suspicion of that kind in a case of this sort, and the Minister knows well that the House and the country will feel that suspicion. Now, on the whole, I think it would have been much better to take the line the Minister of Public Works has taken, and to say that it was proposed to make this arrangement as a present to the people of Montreal.

Mr. OUIMET. It is not a present. I said that this road had not been properly managed, and you can see that by the results. If it has not been properly managed, are the people of the city of Montreal to pay for that back expenditure? The people of Montreal agree to take more than the original indebtedness and to pay the interest off and repay the capital.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They ought to have it, then.

Mr. OUIMET. It is a public road.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister of Public Works has said in effect that this will be a present to the people of Montreal. When the Minister of Finance was asked to whom the benefit would accrue, he could not tell, but the Minister of Public Works told for him that the benefit would accrue to the people of Montreal, by a reduction on the tolls, I suppose.

Mr. OUIMET. This must not be considered as a revenue-bearing property. This road was originally for the public, and was the property of the general public. The Government took hold of it and managed it for the public, and the result was a deficit. Now that the property is better managed, it is in a position to make a return.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister stated distinctly that if there was any reduction in the cost of managing that road, or any reduction in interest payable upon these bonds, the benefit would accrue to the people of Montreal. He said that every dollar that that trust earned came out of the people of Montreal in the shape of tolls. That is perfectly true. Every dollar that a toll road earns comes out of the people who pay the tolls. He says it is not a question of a revenue-earning concern. It is a revenue-earning concern; it is a profit-earning asset, and the Government has invested in the bonds of that revenue-earning property to the amount of $187,000, largely the property of our wards, the Indians, to whom we must account for that money so invested. It is our absolute duty, without regarding the people of Montreal, in the first instance, to see that we get what that investment calls for. It is not our duty, as trustees of the Indian's money, as trustees of the money of the people of Canada, to buy up toll roads for the relief of the people of Montreal.

The Minister of Public Works says we are getting tired of toll-gates. So we are; but how are toll-gates abolished throughout the country? Does the Government buy them, or does the district buy them up? The city of Montreal bought up the tolls on part of those roads, at the rate of $4,000 a mile, and that is a perfectly legitimate transaction. The city council of Montreal takes the money of the people and buys up, at $4,000 a mile, the turnpike trust interest in certain miles of that road. Now it is proposed that this House shall, to a certain extent, repeat that operation with the people's money. I will tell you what is done elsewhere, where toll roads have been abolished. In my own county, there is a toll road, and a negotiation was set on foot to purchase that road by the county of Elgin. What is the course that is to be pursued? An inquiry has to be set on foot, before a commission, into the management of that road from the time it started, in order to put a value upon the road as a revenue-bearing property. Those who manage the road have got to give an account of how much they spent in repairing it, and how much they put in their own pockets, and so on.

Now, in this case, before we make any bargain with that turnpike trust—which is not a public trust, or it could not give bonds, it is a property vested in certain incorporated persons as a turnpike trust, who give bonds and who have the handling of the moneys received and disburse any profits arising from this transaction—I say we should make these people give an account of their stewardship during all the years they controlled that road, and we should ascertain the value of the road as a revenue-paying property, and then decide whether we could reduce our claim against them or not. In the first place, it is our duty to get all that claim if we can; in the second place, to get as much as we can; in the third place, before we make any reduction of our claim, to ascertain what the value of the turnpike is as a revenue-paying property. In one year it was $15,000, or over 3 per cent on this $400,000. Now, I say that this is a proposal either to relieve the people of Montreal of tolls, or else to relieve the individuals who compose the turnpike trust, of the interest. If that property is entirely ours, if we have the power of appointing trustees, we can appoint efficient men, we can have them do the work on a business basis, and we can make all that there is to be got out of it.

The whole transaction has been brought so suspiciously before the House, the explanations come out in such a roundabout way, imperfect ones in the first place, from the Minister of Finance, others which showed the real drift of the transactions coming from the Minister of Public Works, that this House cannot be satisfied that this is an honest attempt at legislation. I believe it is an attempt to make a present of half of this claim, either to the residents of a certain neighbourhood, or to put it in such a shape that individuals may make a large profit—of course, a political profit is the end in view for those gentlemen who organize it. It is a nice thing to say to the people of Montreal: We have relieved you to the extent of $200,000; but I do not think that is a use to which we can honestly agree to allow our public money to be put.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would point out to the Minister of Finance that, according to the statement now in the hands of the member for Simcoe, the net profits for last year were put at $13,000, being roughly about 3 per cent on $400,000. Now, I would have no objection in the world to taking a less sum than $400,000, but it does appear to me that before we conclude this matter, it would be far better to sell this for what it was fairly worth to the people of Montreal, or of the island of Montreal, and let them paddle their own canoe, and manage this according to the best of their ability. It does not appear to me that we are doing any good to ourselves. Hon. gentlemen tell us that we are really controlling the Montreal Turnpike Trust, and have the appointment of the trustees, or the majority of them. Why the Quebec legislature should have the appointment of two, if they own none of the bonds, I do not exactly see. Still, as we have a majority, it does not much matter. But we are virtually making arrangements with ourselves, we make arrangements with men whom we ourselves appoint. The thing virtually amounts to this, that of the $12,000 a year, we expect to receive $7,000, and then to apply $5,000 in liquidation of this claim. Well, that is all very well, but it practically amounts to this, that at the end of twenty or twenty-five years, we will have taken, practically, about ten shillings in the pound on our claim, and I suppose that the people of Montreal will have the road free. I suppose that is the upshot of it. That does not seem prima facie an arrangement we ought to carry out until we have made further experiment with respect to the property; and we should obtain some additional security, such as debentures of the city of Montreal, which the city can well afford to give to the Government. That would be a business-like arrangement of the matter. In the present instance, we are really dealing with our own funds.

Mr. McCARTHY. Suppose there is a surplus over and above the payment of interest on the debentures, who is to receive it ?

Mr. FOSTER. It will be devoted each year towards retiring bonds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That we own.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McCARTHY. When they are paid, who will get the surplus ?

Mr. FOSTER. When they are paid off, which may be a long time, the Government will receive it.

Mr. OUIMET. Twenty years hence the Government will still appoint the trustees. It will be a matter of arrangement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I guess the arrangement will be such that the inhabitants of the region, if the debt is paid off, will get free tolls.

Mr. OUIMET. That cannot be, because the cost of maintenance is $40,000 a year, and the revenue is only $52,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We will not get the benefit.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is this an incorporated company or a corporation ?

Mr. OUIMET. It is a public corporation in the same sense as the Montreal Harbour Commission or Trust.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the better way would have been to have realized the asset.

Mr. FOSTER. This arrangement will place us in a position so that we can realize something from it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think so.

Mr. OUIMET. The arrangement made by the municipality was on the basis of $4,000 a mile, and we have taken the same basis as a basis for settlement.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). With whom ?

Mr. OUIMET. With the turnpike trust. Suppose the city of Montreal bought it, you could only ask for $4,000 a mile.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Would not that be a very much more satisfactory way of dealing with it ?

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot force Montreal to buy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What on earth is the good to us. We are entitled to $12,000 a year, which is the surplus. Why should we not take it ?

Mr. FOSTER. Under this arrangement we get everything the road earns. We put it under fair management, and as directly as possible under our own control. The interest on the bonds is to be paid, and any surplus above payment of interest goes towards clearing off the face of the indebtedness. But it is perfectly hopeless to pay interest on $410,000 at 6 per cent, and endeavour to make the road pay.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a surplus of $12,000 a year, which is sufficient to pay 3 per cent on $400,000. Why should we not have that surplus ?

Mr. FOSTER. That amount is for the year 1895.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am taking the president and secretary's own statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Who said you were not ? I am not asking the hon. gentleman to take my statement. No doubt the year 1895 shows a surplus of $10,000 or $15,000. If you take different years you will find that some years show a surplus and other years a deficit. During some years a large proportion of the roads have to be repaired at great cost. No money will be put into anybody's pocket or go into anybody's hat. The surplus varies. If you take the history of the trust for some years, it will show during some years large deficits and during other years surpluses. Under the arrangement proposed, whatever the surplus it goes to the Government; that is, it retires bonds, and thus diminishes the trust's indebtedness to the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What good is that? What advantage is that to us? We are entitled to the whole of the surplus, and why should we not require the payment of it. The hon. gentleman proposes to take $200,000 in lieu of $400,000, and there is no apparent reason why we should do it when the road is earning $12,000 or $13,000 a year. That is enough to pay 3 per cent on $300,000 and leave a surplus. The hon. gentleman does not get one copper's worth of additional security by this arrangement. I could understand an arrangement with a solvent party like the city of Montreal, which might offer us its bonds to the value of $200,000, and I would approve such an arrangement, because we could then get out of this business. But I do not approve of striking out by a stroke of the pen $200,000 which belongs to the whole population of Canada, until, at all events, we have tried what this road is really worth, and know more about it than we have learned to-night.

Mr. IVES. It is like the case of a merchant or banker writing off one-half of an asset. This road is the property of Canada. This asset, as stated by the Finance Minister of Canada, is placed at $410,000, and he proposes to enter it at $200,000, and to issue bonds representing that amount. But every dollar earned will come to the Government, and when all the liability is paid off, the road will be in possession of the Dominion. This is a common course followed by business men; it is writing off a debt at 50 cents on the dollar. If the assets show a further sum, we keep it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not the same thing, and I will prove it is not the same thing.

Mr. McCARTHY. I find that during three years the surplus was a good deal more than the Finance Minister seems to think. The average was $10,000 or $11,000 annually.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the statement of the secretary-treasurer; he considers the surplus nearly $12,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. That was at the end of 1895. At the present time, owing to the heavy repairs which have taken place since, there is a deficit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to making a very liberal bargain with the people of Montreal, who are really interested. I will read the last sentence of the report of the secretary-treasurer, which says:

> I have to repeat the belief expressed in former reports, that with care, the roads will be able to realize between $10,000 and $12,000 to a certainty, over expenses on each coming year's transactions.

That is his opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. If it does that, we will get every cent it realizes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, because you are going to apply it as a sinking fund to extinguish your debt.

Mr. FOSTER. When the principal is paid off, it is still the property of the Dominion.

Mr. McCARTHY. If these debentures are paid off, then all payments cease.

Mr. FOSTER. But we still have the right to the property.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman has not read the debenture. The moment the bonds are paid the claim of the Dominion ceases. If it is a bad asset, an arrangement might be entered into; but, if it is able to earn $10,000 a year, there is no reason in the world why the $10,000 should not go in the payment of interest. It seems to me that what we propose is not the business transaction that was spoken of by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. FOSTER. It would redeem three bonds a year. There is a good deal of contingency as to how long it would take to wipe out the bonds, especially in view of the possibility of these toll-rates continuing to decrease.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is the very reason why you should not do this. We are taking all the chances of these contingencies. We have not got any interest for years, and, without any rhyme or reason we are reducing a claim upon a property which is earning enough to be capitalized at $300,000, and we are reducing that without improving our security one way or the other.

Mr. FOSTER. We will give them a more hopeful chance by putting it on a paying basis.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the property is absolutely the property of the Dominion, why not apply the excess earnings to interest upon any money that may be invested? Why should any portion of it go towards the reduction of the claim of the Government on a property that is absolutely insolvent? The hon. gentleman has not given any reason why the claim should be extinguished at all.

Mr. FOSTER. This arrangement does not preclude us from accepting an offer from the city of Montreal. In fact, it really appreciates the bonds.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is dealing with this property as if it were not the property of the Dominion, but the property on which the Dominion had a lien, and he proposes to adopt a system by which that lien will be extinguished. If the Government has simply a lien upon the property, that would be a rational proceeding, but that is not what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. IVES. It is difficult to understand how the Government can lose anything whatever under this arrangement. It is analogous to the case of a banker writing off 50 per cent of a debt that he has not made anything out of. Every dollar which is received from this trust is paid to the Dominion. The interest on these bonds is paid, and then whatever is left over each year is applied to the redemption of the bonds, and if the time should ever happily come when these bonds are paid, then the property is still the property of the Government to be sold to the city of Montreal or to anybody else. This property was first managed by the province of Quebec, with a large board, the members of which, I presume, received fees, and perhaps it was not so economically managed as under the present board. If this would be the loss of a cent to the Government in any possible way, there would be some reason for the criticism of hon. gentlemen opposite. If the bonds of the Montreal Harbour Trust were to be paid off by the receipts of the harbour, the harbour would still remain ours, and would continue to be managed by the board. It is exactly the same in this case. The Montreal Harbour might then turn their earnings into the consolidated revenue fund, or the Government might reduce the fees and charges and make it a free port for shipping. The same with this trust. The Government, when these bonds are paid off, may reduce the tolls and sell the property to the city of Montreal or keep up the tolls. The property remains in the control of the Government. Not one single sixpence is given up, or presented to anybody, or lost. It is simply a question of good or bad management. The whole thing is analogous to the case of writing down a claim which is not worth its face.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the hon. gentleman's analogy is a good one. In the first place, according to the statement made by the secretary, the property is worth more than the hon. gentleman and the Government propose to fix the value at. The hon. gentleman is assuming to deal with this property as if the Government had a lien upon it. If the Government were to receive back what they estimate as the present cash value of the property, and to receive interest on the money they have invested in it, when that cash value is repaid to the Government by a sinking fund, and when the interest is paid from year to year, surely the city of Montreal can well say to the Government, "You have got back all the money you have invested in these properties, they are local and municipal in their character, and you have really no further claim on those roads." That is possible, and the Government are facilitating that contention.

Mr. FLINT. Is the Dominion Government of Canada the only creditor of the turnpike trust, or are there other creditors holding bonds ? Are all the obligations cut down pro rata ?

Mr. FOSTER. We hold all the bonds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are there no other debts ?

Mr. FOSTER. There may be some running debts, but I think at the present time they are all cleared off. There is no other bonded indebtedness. The whole objection of hon. gentlemen opposite seems to be that we are taking off the accrued interest. They owe us now accrued interest and principal to the amount of $400,000. The bonds amount to $187,000 at 6 per cent, and we are taking bonds for $200,000 at 3½ per cent. We get a little larger amount of bonds, and the Quebec government authorizes this trust, which it created, to issue bonds to the amount of $200,000 at 3½ per cent to replace the $187,000 at 6 per cent. Is any liability for arrears of interest taken off by the substitution of 3½ per cent bonds for 6 per cent bonds ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should say it was under this clause.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it would be. The Bill which I propose to put before the House provides that the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General may make arrangements with the trustees of the Montreal Turnpike Road for the redemption and cancellation of the debentures of the trust, that is, the $187,000 of 6 per cent bonds now held by the Government of Canada, and for replacing them with debentures issued under the Act of Quebec, which was passed last year. It seems to me that simply substitutes bonds at 3½ per cent to the amount of $200,000 for bonds at 6 per cent to the amount of $187,000, with the idea of getting this trust down to a business basis. Suppose we go on, and suppose the revenues allowed the trustees to pay the interest of 3½ per cent on $200,000, and redeem a certain number of the bonds and at a long distance in the future they arrive at a point when they would have cancelled all the bonds, then, is not the arrear of interest which remains still an indebtedness ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should say not, and it is quite clear that Mr. White does not so understand it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was this trust created by the Quebec legislature ?

Mr. FOSTER. It was by Lower Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course, I suppose that the whole of that proceeding was ultra vires, because the property did not belong to the province ?

Mr. FOSTER. It was the property of Lower Canada in 1840.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understood the hon. gentleman to say that it was held that this was the property of the Dominion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. White states :

> An arrangement has been made with the Finance Department of the Dominion Government, by which they have agreed to have introduced at the present session of the Dominion Parliament, an Act to authorize the acceptance of an agreement made with them and for which the authority has been taken from the local legislature by the trust. A copy of the Act with the form of debenture is printed herewith, and it is intended that as soon as the Dominion Government are in a position to close the arrangement, to pay the interest for 1895, say, $7,000 and redeem $5,000 of the principal debt.

It is quite clear from Mr. White's statement that he considers that the arrear of $229,000 of interest would lapse absolutely.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it would legally.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When was the trust created by the provincial legislature ?

Mr. FOSTER. In 1840. There was also legislation in under the United Provinces, I understand.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Legislation by the province since 1867 would not be legal if the property was in the Dominion.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why make this reduction at all ? Why not take the bonds to the full amount due the country ? I am afraid that the Finance Minister is setting a bad example. If this is going to result in throwing off arrears of interest, the next thing will be that we shall be hearing from that notable bridge we talked of some time ago. It will be said that it was prudent to abandon the interest in the case of the Montreal Turnpike Road, the same thing should be done in other cases. I look on this measure as an encouragement to debtors not to pay interest. If the value is really in the propriety, why should we abandon any part of our claim ?

Resolution reported.

OCEAN STEAMSHIP SERVICE—FRANCE AND BELGIUM.

House resolved itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 2230) respecting ocean steamship service.

((In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) be kind enough to explain what ports in Canada and France and Belgium will be touched, what is the size of the steamships, and what are the prospects of trade ?

Mr. IVES. In view of the French Treaty and of the fact that a very considerable trade has already sprung up, and that the prospects are growing better all the time, and in view of the provisions of the French tariff, which imposes a surtaxe on Canadian goods, unless sent direct to France, the Government have thought it wise to propose this measure, by means of which they expect to secure a fortnightly direct service between Canada and Bologne, or Havre, and thence to Antwerp. The vessels are to have a carrying capacity of 2,500 tons. They are to be fitted with cold storage for the carrying of perishable products which require artificial temperature. They are to be fitted for the carrying of a small number of first-class passengers and a larger number of second-class passengers. Their minimum speed is to be 10½ knots per hour, and the vessels are to be in all respects first-class, and are to carry the mails direct. The Canadian port in summer is to be Montreal, and in winter St. John and Halifax.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In what does the growing trade of which the hon. gentleman speaks, consist ?

Mr. IVES. The greatest development has taken place in lumber and fish products—dried fish. I am not able to give the exact statistics, but the trade has increased very materially. Lumber, particularly in the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec, has increased in export. Last year there were large contracts made in the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec for delivery as soon as the treaty came into force, and these deliveries are being made largely from the Miramichi River and the River St. Lawrence. Then, the export of dried fish from the maritime provinces has considerably increased, and there has been a large increase in the export of lumber and codfish and haddock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What kind of articles does the hon. gentleman expect to export to France by means of cold storage ?

Mr. IVES. Fresh meat, butter and cheese, particularly cheese and fresh meat.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It strikes me that France and Belgium are in the habit of exporting these identical articles to England.

Mr. IVES. The cheese which France exports is very expensive and used by wealthy people, but the French buy very largely Canadian cheese, which is consumed by the poorer classes.

Mr. LAURIER. I have but little doubt if proper conditions are followed and a good class of steamers are subsidized, we may expect a tangible result from such a line as this. The efforts we have made up to the present have not been very favourable. We subsidized a line a few years ago, and the result was nothing but disappointment, but I believe that was due not so much to lack of capacity for trade between Canada and France as to the inferior character of the steamers. If there is a possibility of increasing trade between Canada and France, there are many good reasons to believe that by this scheme we may increase it. I can bear testimony to the fact that the export of lumber has largely increased, and I believe there is also a prospect for another trade, which at present is threatened, to some extent, in Canada, the export of live cattle. Our live cattle are not scheduled in France.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know what the tax is ?

Mr. LAURIER. I do not, but I know that last year France imported from Italy and Algeria no less han 174,638 heads of cattle. If we had to compete in the French market with Italy and Algeria, we ought to find a field there for our live cattle. One of the lines of trade between France and Canada last year was the export of cattle to France. About 900 head of cattle was exported, which, if not much in itself, gives us hope for the future I hardly think we can compete with the French people in these lines, because they are large exporters of them. But in fish and lumber and live cattle, we may build up a considerable trade. I think it is worth while to try the experiment, and if the Government get a good class of steamers, well fitted for the purpose, the line may develop results that may be very gratifying. I would like to know from the Minister if any engagement has been made with any particular line. I think I am correct in saying that tenders were asked for some few months ago. I should like to know if any tenders were put in and accepted, and if any negotiations were entered into, and if entered into, were they completed.

Mr. IVES. Nothing was completed, because the Government had not had the power to enter into an arrangement.

Mr. LAURIER. The Government have not always been so careful.

Mr. IVES. We are improving. Besides that, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) is a new beginner and would not like to take the responsibility of making a hard and fast arrangement without having the authority of Parliament.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know, incidentally, as it is a point of some interest, whether the practical intention of this subsidy we are voting is to supersede the arrangement which was proposed of having a French port for the fast Atlantic service ?

Mr. IVES. Yes ; part of the Bill I propose introducing is a section repealing the part of the fast line subsidy by striking out the words "connecting with a port or ports of France." So when we ask for tenders for the fast line, tenderers will be free from that obligation, and we hope to get the advantage of the subsidy we are asking for now in the form of a reduced sum for the fast line service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Which is to be the terminal point in France ?

Mr. IVES. That has not been settled, but probably Boulogne, as the great railway company that makes it terminus there has taken considerable interest in the company that have been negotiating to undertake the service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Like my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier), I should be glad to see our trade with France increased. And certainly there is need for it, for I observe that within the last fifteen years it has fallen from $800,000 to $335,000.

Mr. IVES. I think the current year's figures will show much better.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I shall be glad to see it. Our trade with Belgium has been very irregular. Does the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce know why the trade with France has decreased ? In 1894 it was $544,000, and in 1895 it was $335,000. In the case of Belgium, for some reason, it fell from $708,000 in 1894 to barely $251,000 in 1895. Can the hon. gentleman tell why these decreases have taken place ?

Mr. IVES. I suppose the hon. gentleman is reading from the Trade and Navigation Returns. These figures are the direct trade returns, and are made up from the export entries. A great deal of the trade with France is done by means of German steamers, the "Hansa," and others, that go to Antwerp. Then a great deal is credited to the export to Great Britain or Belgium.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Undoubtedly Great Britain is the great entrepot. Still, this is rather an indefinite way to get at the figures of such a trade. Can the hon. Minister give any reason for the statement he makes ? Has he had facts put before him by his agents in France or elsewhere that our trade goes through England ? I do not see why it should. It seems to me that transhipment and middlemen's charges would be prohibitory.

Mr. IVES. Formerly when the exports showed a larger trade, a very considerable part of the trade was by direct shipments by sailing vessels. Latterly, since steam vessels have driven sailing vessels almost entirely off the water, and as neary every ship sailing from our ports with Canadian exports goes to Great Britain, that fact, I think, accounts for the apparent decrease of exports to France. I do not think there is any real decrease.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me that in the financial condition of the country, it is a very serious proposal to make that we should pay $50,000 a year in addition to the obligations we have already undertaken. Before we hastily decide to authorize the Minister of Trade and Commerce to enter into an engagement of this kind, we ought to know more definitely what we hope to gain by it. I notice that our trade with France is only $3,000,000 in all. Unless there is something we hope to open up a market for, we should hesitate about spending this money. The leader of the Opposition made reference to the cattle trade opening up with France. That would be a most desirable thing, seeing that our cattle trade with England is in a very unsatisfactory condition. I notice that notwithstanding the efforts made to prevent the Bill coming law, evidently it is the intention of the British Parliament to permanently exclude our cattle. Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce hold out hopes of trade with France? Have any inquiries been made with regard to the probability of opening up an outlet for our cattle in that country ? What is about the price realized in France, as compared with that realized in England ? What are the regulations regarding the disposal of cattle in France, compared with those in England ? I can understand that a line of this kind may not be expected to carry live cattle. But I would like to know if it is likely to increase trade.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say with reference to this matter, that there has long been a very strong desire on the part of this House to have direct trade with France. Any person who takes the trouble to look at the importations into France of articles that Canada could supply, will see that there is an immense field provided we had direct trade, and especially under the operation of the existing treaty, which enables many of the products of Canada to be admitted into France upon much better terms than from many other countries. That has already been shown in reference to lumber and wood, and there is a very large field for wood pulp as well. Now, when a fast line service was contemplated, the House was very desirous that there should be direct communication made by means of that service with France. It was one of the points we had in view. We were reluctantly compelled to abandon that, because we found that it would greatly increase the difficulty of having a fast line service between the United Kingdom and this country. In order to meet that difficulty this resolution is proposed, providing a subsidy for a fast line of steamers between the United Kingdom and Canada, and freed from the obligation of going to France, and the Government felt it was only right, under these circumstances, that we should provide——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me—I thought that stipulation was part of our Act.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is, and the object of getting this resolution is to amend that Act so as to avoid the necessity of the fast line service making France a terminus. That is the object I am just dealing with. I say, therefore, it would simply carry out the policy which has long prevailed in this House of having direct communication, and finding we are not able to have it in that way, it is proposed to have this line of direct communication with France and with Belgium. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has called attention, as the leader of the Opposition has done, to the fact that while our cattle are scheduled in the United Kingdom, they are allowed to be admitted in to France, and I have reason to believe that, although the exclusion was put in force in regard to Belgium, at a very early day that restriction will also be removed, so that we will be able to send live cattle both into France and Belgium. I have the very highest authority for saying that the French authorities, whose attention has been drawn closely to this question, have made careful examination, and are quite satisfied that there is no danger of pleuro-pneumonia being introduced into France by cattle brought from Canada. So I think, under these circumstances, seeing that there is a large import of live cattle into France annually, and that the trade is open to us, it is very desirable we should take advantage of all opportunities by having a direct line of steam communication between Canada and France, and thus avoid the 'surtaxe d'entrepot,' which has been a great hindrance to trade between Canada and France. By removing that, I think we have every reason to believe that we shall have greatly increased trade with France, and also with Belgium. Hon. gentlemen opposite have mentioned that as France is a large exporter of cheese, there is not much reason to anticipate that Canada would be able to do a very large trade with France in cheese. But it has already been pointed out by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the cheese that France exports is very expensive, whereas there is an enormous import into France every year of an inferior description of cheese.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Such as we make in Canada ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, but such as we can make in Canada without the slightest difficulty. I have no doubt whatever that under this direct line of communication, attention will be drawn to the fact that an inferior description of cheese is now largely imported into France from Switzerland ; and I drew the attention of this Government to the fact that I thought there was a very great opening for the introduction of cheese made in Canada of the same character as that which is so largely imported into France. The more I have examined the subject, the more confident I am that by means of a direct line of steam communication with France and Belgium, we shall greatly increase our trade with France in a large number of articles that Canada produces, and for which there is a great demand in France, and of which there is a large import every year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said, I think, a little while ago that there was a large importation of cattle from Algeria and Italy.

Mr. IVES. If the hon. gentleman will allow the resolution to go through, I will be prepared, on the next stage, to furnish the particulars of the imports into France, so as to be able to answer any questions concerning the imports of cattle and such articles as we are likely to export to them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And what we are exporting at the present time ?

Mr. McMILLAN. Will this line of steamers carry passengers and also cattle ?

Mr. IVES. The main object of the line is to carry freight. The carrying of passengers will be quite a secondary consideration.

Mr. LAURIER. I gave the figures as to cattle with a view to developing a trade which does not exist, but which might be established. If France imports cattle from Italy, knowing the condition of Italy, there appears to be no reason why we should not be a successful competitor in that trade. France also imported from Italy and Algeria 1,198,987 head of sheep. This is another branch in which we could compete successfully with any European country. I mention these facts by way of illustration of the possibilities of trade. I have no doubts as to being able to develop a trade in cheese. The French are a peculiar people ; they have their own diet, and I do not think it will be easy to change their habits. They do not import a very large quantity of cheese, and what they do import is from Switzerland. But there are two branches of trade which are susceptible of development, lumber and all articles connected with lumber, and live cattle and sheep.

Sir CHARLES. TUPPER.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of Ways and means.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like a statement of what the hon. gentleman proposes to do.

Mr. FOSTER. I have received quite a large number of representations during the course of the year with respect to tariff changes. Some of them are of a very great deal of importance, all are of some importance. Whilst I have had some opportunity of looking over them, I scarcely think it possible at this stage of the present Parliament, and this stage of the session to propose anything that is very drastic, but there is one item which I think there will be no disposition to oppose on either side of the House. The House will remember that three years ago I think we adopted a policy, for the sake of stimulating mining enterprise in different parts of the country, especially in the newer parts, of allowing such mining machinery—and last year we added smelting machinery—as is not manufactured in Canada to come in free. That arrangement expires on 1st July, and it is represented, and I think the representations are true, that it is of importance that this privilege should be extended. So I ask the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means to provide for the extension of that freedom of entry for that kind of machinery for one year from 1st July, 1896.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think there is no objection to that proposition, so far as I am concerned ; I certainly will raise none. I would go a good deal further in the same direction.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER moved the following resolution :—

> That it is expedient to amend the Act 57-58 Victoria, Chapter 33, intituled : " An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs " :—
> By providing for an extension to July 1st, 1897, of the time which " Mining and Smelting Machinery which is at the time of its importation of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada " —as expressed in item 643 of Schedule B to the said Act—may be imported into Canada free of Customs duty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection to allow this privilege to be extended to all mining and smelting machinery. The committee had better pass it through without the exception, for I think, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Mara), it will be more acceptable to you and your constituents.

SUPPLY—THE SOULANGES CANAL CONTRACTS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GIBSON. The subject that has been discussed for some time passed is so simple in its nature and character that it almost appears to me that the defence put up by the late Minister of Justice and by members of the Government, more particularly by the Minister of Railways and Canals, was one that could not be borne out by the facts. The work is so simple in its nature that to my mind as a practical contractor, the idea of an extra or a claim being set up by the contractor who has this work under the Government is so indefensible that it seems to me to have been almost a waste of time and energy on the part of the ex-Minister of Justice who spoke last evening, and while I had not the pleasure of hearing his defence, I have had the opportunity of reading his speech. This piece of work is one of the most simple in its nature that has been undertaken by the Government for many years. There is nothing in the contract under which the work was performed on that section in question which involves anything that would lead to a difference of opinion as to whether the report and estimates supplied by the resident or chief engineer, or whatever name may be given the official by the Government, should be questioned in any particular whatever. During the past ten years I have had something to do with works of that nature, and I want to say right here and now that the gentleman who appended his name to the specification under which the contract was let, and who had the supervision of the work, is the only man in my opinion, who could read and fairly interpret what the meaning of the specifications was, notwithstanding the opinion of the ex-Minister of Justice to the contrary. No man in this country is better able to deal with the subject than Mr. Monro who acted as chief engineer on that part of the section of the public work in question. Mr. Monro is not a novice at this class of work, and while he may differ and differ honestly, and while I believe the ex-Minister of Justice may differ from him honestly, the hon. gentleman should give Mr. Monro credit for technical and special knowledge in connection with public works not exceeded by any man in the Dominion. I can take the ex-Minister of Justice back to 1854, when the present chief engineer of the Soulanges Canal, Mr. Monro, was the assistant of Mr. Keefer, who laid out the water works in the city of Hamilton, and from 1854 up to the present day, Mr. Monro has been an acknowledged authority on hydraulic engineering. There is no better evidence of that, than the fact that Mr. Monro was selected by the Government to go to England and report upon the Manchester Ship Canal. I am proud to know that Mr. Monro is to-day the accredited representative of the Dominion of Canada on the Deep Waterways Commission. I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that in 1870, when the construction of the new Welland Canal was in contemplation, Mr. Monro was the man who was selected by Mr. Page to locate the line of that canal. His services were retained to the country, and under his supervision that portion of the canal from the summit level on lock 24, or beyond that to Allanburg,—I am not exactly sure where his section ended—at all events from Lake Ontario level up to Lake Erie level, Mr. Monro was the engineer under Mr. Page to carry on to a successful completion the Welland Canal. I defy the Minister of Railways and Canals, or the ex-Minister of Justice, to stand up in this House, and contradict the statement I make : that during the whole time the Welland Canal work was being carried on, from its inception to its completion, the report of Mr. Monro was never contradicted either by the contractors or by the chief engineer, Mr. Page. Mr. Monro to-day, and Mr. Thompson are without exception the best hydraulic engineers that I know of in this country. I have nothing to say against the ability of Mr. Schreiber other than this, that Mr. Schreiber is entirely a railway engineer. As far as my practical knowledge goes, and as far as I know of his work and of his worth, Mr. Schreiber has few equals and no superiors as a railway engineer. But, why should the Minister of Railways and Canals, or why should this Government demand the services of Mr. Schreiber in the triple capacity, of Deputy Minister, chief engineer of railways, and chief engineer of canals, when we know that these three offices were at one time held by three very eminent men. Mr. Trudeau was the deputy to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and I am glad to be able to say, that during the long time that that gentleman occupied a position in the public service of our country, not a stain ever rested on his character. I need not remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the services rendered to the country by Mr. Page. You, Sir, have had more parliamentary experience than I, and as I heard you say the other night you have been for 22 years in this House. Mr. Page was for 40 years or more in the service of Canada, and during the whole of that time, there never was a charge against him as chief engineer of Canals, or never an accusation against him of wrong-doing. I had some experience working under him, and there never was a contractor on the line of the Welland Canal, from Port Dalhousie, from the level of Lake Ontario, to the sumit level of Lake Erie at Port Colborne, who was not willing to leave his case to the decision of Mr. Page, if the contract or specifications did not cover any portion of the work which they undertook.

Thank God, during the whole of the forty years that Mr. Page was chief engineer of canals, the fair fame of Canada was never tarnished by boodling, either by contractors or engineers. Mr. Monro, acting under Mr. Page, had charge of the lower portion of the Welland Canal, and he was ably seconded by Mr. Thompson, who superintended the work from Beaver's Dam to Lake Erie level. Neither of these gentlemen have ever been charged in this House with doing aught that was wrong. I am sorry to say, that Mr. Thompson, who was given a prominent position upon the Sault Canal, was sent back to St. Catharines, because no doubt it was found convenient by the Minister of Railways and Canals, to move that gentleman from the Sault and put him on the Welland Canal again. You have dual management on the Welland Canal at the present time. The old superintendent is still retained, and Mr. Thompson holds the position of consulting and chief engineer. The superintendent still draws his salary, while Mr. Thompson presides over the canal. You have a double set of officers on the Welland Canal, because perhaps it was found convenient by the Government that Mr. Thompson should be moved from the Sault Canal. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, and I have some practical experience, that of all the pieces of work that have been let by the Dominion Government for many years, I do not know of any work that is easier of construction than the Soulanges Canal. If you, Mr. Speaker, had the papers that are under my hand, at your disposal, you would feel that the class of work on that canal is so simple in its nature that I am almost taken aback to think that the ex-Minister of Justice needed half an hour or an hour to discuss it. I had not the pleasure of hearing the speech of the ex-Minister of Justice, but I was astonished when I read it, to see that he thought it necessary to devote so much time in defence of this piece of work. This work was simply a piece of excavation for the purpose of raising an embankment to keep the water at a certain level. Necessarily, of course, an embankment had to be erected of such a size as to keep within bounds the weight of water required for canal purposes, as well as the displacement of water by the vessels passing up and down the canal. The engineers—and I have no reason to doubt their ability—very properly specified that the banks at the top of the slopes should be thirty feet on one side and fifty feet on the other side. Some hon. gentlemen in the House might ask why this difference ? If the canal had been simply a straight cutting, without any deviations, it would not have been necessary ; but the zigzag shape in which this canal is built in making the various turns that are necessary, requires on the convex side of the canal an embankment much stronger than the one on the opposite side. Naturally, then, the engineers provided for a fifty-foot embankment on the top of the slope, with a batter on the inside, with a slope of two to one on the inside, and one to one on the outside ; and on the other side, an embankment of thirty feet, with the same slope. Having had a little experience in matters of this kind, I was astonished to find our good friend the ex-Minister of Justice supposing that the contractors who had this work under contract should have any claim on the Government for an extra in connection with it. I have not seen the work ; I have only seen the plans and specifications ; but, having some slight knowledge of canal building, I have not known a plainer piece of work during the six sessions that I have had the honour of a seat in this House. The plans and specifications were made by Mr. Monro, who is, without doubt, an authority as to the requirements of those embankments. Mr. Monro made the contract ; and, with all due respect to my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice, there is no man in this country who knew better what he wanted in making this contract than the gentleman who drew the specifications. I am bound to assume that he is a far better judge of what those specifications meant than any lawyer in this House or in this country ; and if the ex-Minister of Justice had been properly advised, he would have stood by Mr. Monro's contention. This surplus material of muck, boulders, loose earth, and debris of every description, that was taken out of the prism of the canal, was simply dumped behind the embankment, because it was not required. The Government engineer in charge had it in his power to ask the contractor to remove that to any place he liked without entitling him to any claim for extras ; because it is provided in the specifications. There was no need for this extra work behind that embankment, and the material was put there, not for the purpose of helping the Government, but for the convenience of the contractor. Many men would like to be paid for the sawdust, and the rubbish and the bark contained in a tree ; but you know, Mr. Speaker, that you are only paid for the lumber or the square timber you produce. But here we have the ex-Minister of Justice submiting to this House, an argument to show that these contractors were not only entitled to 20 cents for excavating the prism of the canal, and 15 cents for raising the banks, but likewise to 15 cents for putting rubbish behind the banks, which they were obliged, if the engineer insisted, to take half-a-mile away to spoil ground. It seems to me that the ex-Minister of Justice never gave the question his serious consideration ; for he has too good a head upon him to pass a claim of that kind, especially in view of the fact that Sir John Thompson had decided against the contractor. I will stake my reputation that there is not a practical man in the Dominion of Canada who will say that these men were entitled to 15 cents a yard for that work. Two classes of excavation are recognized and paid for, namely, earth and solid rock. I could quite understand that if traprock or gneiss or other special excavation had been necessary, there might have been some grounds for a claim, but in this case it has not been shown, either by the speech of the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) or the report of the engineers, that there was a difficult piece of work met with. Further than that the contract provides that:

> The price tendered for earth excavation must cover the entire cost of excavating, hauling and forming into embankments all kinds of materials found in the pits for lock, weirs, or other structures, and in the prism of the canal, raceways, side ponds or wherever excavation is necessary; except solid stratified quarry rock.

Is there in the contract any plea set up by the contractor for solid quarry work? So far, I have failed to find anything of the kind, and I am bound to assume if that has not been discussed, that nothing of the kind has been done. In section 7 the contract says in the margin:

> No allowance whatever beyond the price tendered for excavation will be made for hauling.

I ask the ex-Minister of Justice how he reconciles with that his decision that these men were entitled to a water-tight embankment by putting over the muck and dirt and superfluous material behind that embankment? How can he call that a water-tight embankment? He cannot do it, nor can any other living man. It is simply the spoil or waste put in there for the convenience of the contractor. The hon. gentleman smiles, but he knows that this portion is not water-tight. The other is where the care is taken, where the mucking is done and ploughing and the layers are laid and every care exercised that it should be impervious from water percolating through it; and when that is done, the superfluous stuff is simply dumped over the back. And the ex-Minister of Justice thinks they should be entitled to 15 cents per cubic yard for that superfluous material put behind that piece of work. What need was there for its being put behind that embankment? It might just as well have been put a mile away. That embankment which was made by order of the engineer, was sufficient to contain the water; and yet the ex-Minister of Justice holds that because that superfluous stuff was thrown behind, these contractors are entitled to 15 cents a yard for it. The country has to thank Mr. Monro and the Auditor General for having saved in this one section alone, $210,000. If the decision of the ex-Minister of Justice had been carried out, three-quarters of a million dollars would have been wasted on this canal. The ex-Minister of Justice knows he could not compel the engineer to make a report of that kind, and he knew that Mr. Monro would not make a report of that kind. I have this to say, that the whole Department of Railways and Canals is a screaming farce in his respect, that the men who are in charge of the work are not allowed to give their opinion, but their opinions are set aside, and the matter is sent to the Department of Justice to twist it, so as to suit themselves from a legal standpoint, and instead of standing by the country they stand by the contractors.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I must remind the hon. gentleman that the last statement is hardly fair to the Department of Railways. So far from the officers not being allowed to give their opinion, a large part of the hon. gentleman's opening remarks went to show that the engineers gave an opinion adverse to the claims.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. gentleman simply confirms my argument that these men have taken, without exception, the course that they knew of their own knowledge what should be done and paid for, but the Department of Justice took the other course, and recommended against the engineers and against the chief engineer, and these men had to humiliate themselves and sign a certificate that, according to the opinion of hte ex-Minister of Justice, they were obliged to sign. Is that not correct?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. Is not that a nice state of affairs? Let me tell the ex-Minister of Justice—and I do not want to be hard on him, I want to give him credit for being honest—I have some experience of contracts, and I will say this, that there is not an engineer on a railway or any public undertaking in the whole Dominion whom the solicitor of the corporation will not stand by. But in this case, the solicitor of the corporation, the custodian of the people's funds, goes aganst the engineer and stands by the contractor. The engineer on a railway reports that my claim has no foundation in fact. What do we find? We have to go to law to establish our claim. Why did not the ex-Minister of Justice, instead of recommending the payment of $210,000 for work that is absolutely unnecessary on this canal, tell the contractor to go to the courts and establish his claim. Thank God, as somebody has said in this House, that the Auditor General and Mr. Monro intervened, and Mr. Schreiber. As I said before, Mr. Schreiber is overworked. He occupies the positions of Deputy Minister and chief engineer of Railways and Canals, which positions were formerly held by three men; and every member of this House who attends the Railway Committee knows that there is no more assiduous officer in the employ of the Government. But it is too much to expect of any one man to occupy a position that was formerly filled by three different men.

Mr. Page was the man who occupied the position of chief engineer of canals. He was asked at one time to become Deputy Minister of Canals. Scotchman-like, he told the Minister that he would be jiggered if he would be a deputy for anybody. There is this to say about Mr. Page, that in all his public experience the contractors always considered themselves safe in his hands; and when he was removed from the position of chief engineer and empowered by the Government to act as arbitrator, there was not a contractor in the whole Dominion who was not willing to leave his case in Mr. Page's hands.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear, and get something by it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes; and I am prepared to give testimony that I have done work under him. And I am not afraid to say that in the forty years Mr. Page was chief engineer of canals, the stain of dishonour never rested upon his name. And if Mr. Page had been living to-day, and had been chief engineer of Soulanges Canal, on which my good friend Mr. Monro has been doing his work, the opinion of the ex-Minister of Justice would never have been taken, because Mr. Page would at once have decided that the contractor was not entitled to a dollar of this claim. And Mr. Monro who prepared the specifications had a schooling of forty years under Mr. Page, and next to him is one of the ablest and also one of the most fearless engineers in the service of the Government. I am glad to know that in this Dominion there are men in the public service who are not afraid of the Minister, or of any one who stands over them, who are fearless in the discharge of their duties, and who will not put their names to documents that will bring them into disgrace. Fie upon the men who consider that the decisions of those responsible for our public works and who have the practical and technical knowledge of many years is to be set aside when the Government requires to befriend a contractor who may have taken a contract under price. And the contractor may appeal to the Department of Justice, and justice will be done to the contractor, but no justice will be done to the country, for the contractor is the first consideration. Last night the Minister of Railways and Canals stood up in this House to speak on this subject. I do not wish to do him an injustice, and I will quote his own words. He was questioned by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) as to whether he could, of his own knowledge, say how this work was being prosecuted and if he knew of the recommendation made either by Mr. Monro or Mr. Schreiber, or as to whether the decision had been adversely commented upon by the Department of Justice. He said:

> I never see a quantity; I never have a conversation with my deputy directing him in any manner as to the classification that shall be made or as to the quantity of work he shall return.

I would like to ask what we have responsible Ministers for? What do we pay the Minister of Railways and Canals $8,000 a year for? Is it simply to stand over his deputy and never ask him a question? Is it possible, it is reasonable that in a work of this kind where a matter of $210,000 is in dispute, the deputy never dared to tell the Minister, or the Minister never had the curiosity or did not take the interest in his department to know how the question was to be settled. And he says:

> I never asked my deputy and my deputy never told me.

Why, he ought to be ashamed to say that he is the Minister of Railways and Canals, and to think that a matter of $210,000 is in dispute, and he should have nothing to say about it. And not only $210,000, but if that amount is paid, we find that Mr. Monro reports that if that principle is applied along the whole length of the canal there will be a total of some $750,000 to pay to the contractors. Three-quarters of a million dollars and yet the Minister has not the curiosity to ask his deputy how the contract is proceeding, or how the settlement is going to be made. He said further:

> The only conversation I have with him would be purely Ministerial.

I cannot understand exactly what that means. And I do not know that even the ex-Minister of Justice would understand that, because I am bound to say that when he was the honoured head of the department, nothing took place in that department that he did not see the bottom of. He did not leave it to his deputy, and never took his deputy's word without looking into the matter himself. He says further:

> But as to the mechanical part of the contract I have nothing to do with reference to it. Notwithstanding my Ministerial responsibility, I say that the chief engineer is the sole judge in reference to these matters and he is made so by the contract.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will remember that that was Mr. Mackenzie's opinion with regard to technical matters—he held his chief engineer responsible.

Mr. GIBSON. If I remember right—it is a matter of history now—Mr. Mackenzie shielded himself behind the report of Mr. Page, and said that any man or any Minister might well stand behind Mr. Page, because when Mr. Page made a report it was a report that any Minister could stand or fall by. I will ask the ex-Minister of Justice if there are not some engineers in the public service that dare not do a thing against the Minister's advice? They are afraid. And we have the evidence now that Mr. Monro dared do such a thing. And so did Mr. Schreiber. There are men in the public service afraid of the Minister. I thank the ex-Minister of Justice for bringing my attention to what was done in Mr. Mackenzie's time. He left the department to his chief engineer, and properly so, but for forty long years the work of this country was done by Mr. Page and to-day his name is honoured and revered by men who have worked under him, knowing that scandal never rested upon his name. But in the Department of Public Works and in the Department of Railways and Canals there is no public work completed within the last ten or twelve years that has not cost from 50 to 100 per cent more than it ought to have cost, and every one of them has been attended with disgrace, fraud and scandal. And yet the Minister says : I did not know anything about it ; I was not there ; I left it to my deputy. Take the Curran Bridge, which it was estimated by a gentleman who was in the gallery to-night, Mr. Hannaford, for many years the honoured chief of the Grand Trunk, would cost $170,000. And yet that work cost $490,000. And we were told by the Minister of Railways and Canals that the money never would be paid. We were told by the Minister of Railways and Canals that the money was not all paid, but whatever portion of it was paid was paid in his absence, by the Premier, Sir Mackenzie Bowell. His duty was, in leaving the department, to leave instructions behind him that the sums of money that had been already paid for the construction of the Wellington Street bridges, were of such a nature that no more should be paid without his warrant. He left no instructions of that kind. Pressure was brought to bear upon the acting First Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and we find that nearly $490,000 were paid for a work that could have been well done for $170,000. Then, we are told in this House that the claims of this gentleman, Mr. St. Louis, are very nearly half a million dollars. He went to the Exchequer Court and got judgment against the Government for the full amount, because the Government had no evidence as to the number of men employed, or the amount of work done, or the amount of material used. The men in the employ of the Government were servants of the contractor. He appealed to the Exchequer Court and got judgment against the Government for $65,000 and $15,000 interest; so that we are $15,000 worse off than if the Minister had paid over the $490,000. Is that something that the Government of this country should be proud of ? I should think not. The Minister of Railways said the other night that no public work can be done for the estimate of the engineer. Well, I will tell him of a public work of far more importance than this we are discussing to-night, the Sarnia Tunnel, that was built under the St. Claire River by Mr. Hobson, the engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway Company ; and when that work was finished, there was nearly $200,000 to spare under his estimate. The hon. gentleman says that under the Mackenzie regime every public work that was estimated for, cost more than the estimate. I defy the hon. ex-Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State to get up now and mention a single case, when Mr. Mackenzie was in power, or the hon. gentleman and his colleagues were in power, where the Government came to this House and asked for an additional grant to meet an under-estimate made by Mr. Page. I want him now to get up and mention a single job where Mr. Page was short in his estimate. Mr. Page always provided for money enough to carry on any work he had undertaken ; and no engineer who has any regard for his reputation, and who had carefully considered the plans and specifications, would come to this House and ask for half a million, when the job actually cost a million.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is a practical man, and understands the building of canals, and I would ask him to state any one canal in our whole system that has ever been built within the estimate.

Mr. GIBSON. I will tell the hon. gentleman, and he has got means of getting information that I have not got. But I will challenge him now to produce in this House an instance of any piece of work that ever overran the estimates made by Mr. Page in canal building in this country for forty years. I say that no engineer who regards his reputation as worth anything, would ever think of asking $500,000 for a job that was going to cost $750,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I will undertake to produce a great number of cases in which the estimates made by Mr. Page were overrun in the construction of public works in this country. I will at a future time meet the hon. gentleman's statement that distinguished engineers never make such mistakes. Let me draw his attention to a fact that I have no doubt is within his own knowledge, in relation to the construction of the Manchester Ship Canal, a very important work constructed by private capitalists in England. The hon. gentleman, I think, will admit that if there is any place in the world where engineering has been brought to the highest perfection, it is in the United Kingdom. Well, Sir, I hold in my hand a statement of the amount for which that contract, which was let to distinguished contractors, perhaps the ablest and most distinguished contractors in the United Kingdom. The original contract price for the Manchester Ship Canal was £5,750,000, and the cost of that work, under the direction of the ablest engineer that the United Kingdom could produce, was £14,948,-

552. I could not give the hon. gentleman more conclusive evidence of the failure of the argument he has been trying to make.

Mr. GIBSON. I heard this last night in the speech of the Minister of Railways and Canals, when he was trying to make an argument like that which the Secretary of State has just tried to make.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was not in the House, and did not hear the speech of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. GIBSON. The Minister of Railways said that, according to the "Annual Register," the estimate for the Manchester Ship Canal was £1,500,000, and the cost was £5,750,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have given the hon. gentleman the correct figures. I asked Mr. Schreiber to get me the correct statement of the cost of that work, and these are the figures he furnished to me, and I think they are a complete answer to the hon. gentleman's statement, that distinguished engineers never make under-estimates of any important work they are carrying on.

Mr. GIBSON. I quite agree with the Secretary of State. There are circumstances in every piece of work, there are unforeseen difficulties that no man can possibly expect to occur. But where careful borings are made, and careful surveys are taken, and the nature of the soil and the nature of the country are taken into account, they rarely make mistakes. These things are usually provided for by men who understand their business. It is a matter of common history that the Manchester Ship Canal, in exceeding the estimate, out-Heroded Herod, so to speak, and exceeded the expectations of the most sanguine people who took an interest in that work; in other words, it went beyond their contemplation altogether. But there were some circumstances in connection with that work that I need not here mention, because I am bound to assume that the hon. gentlemen who occupy seats in this House are aware of the history of the Manchester Ship Canal. Mr. Monro was sent to England to make a special report on the Manchester Ship Canal, and this fact alone shows the high opinion in which he was held by the department and the chief engineer. I know nothing personally of the cost of constructing the Manchester ship canal, and if the construction of our public works is kept within reasonable amounts as estimated by engineers, it is all the more creditable for the engineers, as showing that they are more far-seeing than those in England. The Secretary of State has intimated that the work on that canal cost a great deal more than was estimated. But there is the fact that when railway construction began in England the cost of putting a Bill through the House of Commons in some cases reached £20,000 a mile, and I refer the hon. gentleman to Whittaker's Almanac in confirmation of that statement. We all know how that in this country we have a ready way of doing business. A corporation make an application to Parliament to erect a bridge. The Bill goes before a committee, it receives its second and third reading and passes this House probably in six or seven weeks. The Secretary of State knows that in England in many cases an ordinary high level bridge that may have been built in the 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th or 18th century requires to be widened for the convenience of the public of the present day. It is necessary to make application to the Imperial Parliament for liberty to make the bridge wide enough for the purposes of the highway. What occurs? It may take the life of a Parliament before this concession is granted But in this country such a Bill can be passed through this Parliament or through a local legislature in as many days as it sometimes takes years in England. The Manchester ship canal has cost more than was contemplated by the engineers, no doubt; but that is not a reason why the Government should pay Mr. Goodwin $200,000 to which he is not entitled. The Auditor General, Mr. Monro and Mr. Schreiber, the latter two refusing to agree to the payment except under special conditions, have saved the country $210,000, and these services should be recognized. The Minister of Railways and Canals should be ashamed of the statement he made the other night that he left the management of his department to his deputy. No man has a right to depute his responsibility to his deputy or to his secretary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to confirm a statement I made in regard to Mr. Mackenzie and his subordinates. In his evidence given before the Canadian Railway Commission, he stated:

> I always depended upon Mr. Fleming and upon the best information from his subordinates, and he was always allowed most perfect liberty and authority in conducting the surveys, which were wholly upon his responsibility—we, of course, having the political responsibility, as usual.

These are almost the words used by the Minister of Railways last night.

Mr. GIBSON. But if Mr. Fleming's advice had been taken, the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been put through on the line of Selkirk, Rapid City, Edmonton, through the Rocky Mountains and across to the Narrows at Vancouver Island. But the Minister of Railways, who was then Sir Charles Tupper, opposed the advice of Mr. Fleming.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I find that five contracts let by Mr. Mackenzie were estimated to cost $3,587,096, and they actually cost $5,391,926.

Mr. GIBSON. I have not a record of all the work done by Mr. Mackenzie's Government at my fingers' end.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This shows the amount which the expenditure exceeded the estimate.

Mr. GIBSON. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is confusing engineers' estimates with contracts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I refer the hon. gentleman to the report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is another matter altogether.

Mr. GIBSON. Were there not changes made in the specification ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a point on which the hon. gentleman relies.

Mr. GIBSON. It is most unfair reasoning.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is the hon. gentleman's reasoning, not mine.

Mr. GIBSON. I am not a lawyer, but I have practical knowledge as to what contracts should be. The ex-Minister of Justice has not shown that he can justify himself before the House and the country as to giving a decision in favour of the contractors, and recommending payments for a water-tight embankment when it was only spoil embankment. Sir John Thompson gave this matter some consideration, he was in accord with Mr. Monro and Mr. Schreiber at the conclusion at which they arrived. Now, the ex-Minister of Justice appears to have come to a conclusion entirely different from that arrived at by Sir John Thompson.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman was not here last night. I said the very opposite of that, and gave some reasons, at any rate, in support of my argument, that there was no difference of opinion between Sir John Thompson and myself.

Mr. GIBSON. Then how did the hon. gentleman recommend the payment of this money, when Sir John Thompson recommended to the contrary ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Because the facts stated to Sir John Thompson and the facts stated to me were different.

Mr. GIBSON. Ah. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) should have been careful enough to have taken into his consideration the evidence supplied to Sir John Thompson..

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I took that, and more.

Mr. GIBSON. In all fairness to the chief engineer, to Mr. Monro, the resident engineer, and the man who drafted the specifications and knew the import of this work, I think the opinion of these men should, at least, have some consideration at his hands. The question is simply whether the ex-Minister of Justice should allow $210,000 to be paid to Mr. Goodwin the contractor, when the engineers, men who had forty years' experience in work of this kind, say under their own signature, that this man had no claim whatever in law, and no claim as that work was practically carried out. The ex-Minister of Justice should have been very careful in this matter before he established a precedent that would apply to all the contractors on the canal, and which would incur an expenditure on the country of three-quarters of a million of dollars ; and a precedent that would last for all time to come —or rather so long as this Government is in power, which I hope will not be for all time to come. So far as I have read the papers, and so far as I can judge from the argument of the ex-Minister of Justice in reading his speech, I can say from my practical knowledge and experience, having been all my life on public works—and twenty-seven years on public works in this country —the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was not justified in the conclusion he came to, in recommending to the Minister of Railways and Canals the payment of this $210,000. I was glad last night to hear the present Minister of Justice say that if the matter came before him, so far as he was concerned—I think he said without prejudice to the case—according to the opinion he held last night, the contractors had no claim and he would not pay the money. In my opinion this is a trumped-up case. Perhaps I should not blame the Minister of Justice for it, but it is a case trumped up by the contractors to extort $210,000 from the people of this country. By establishing this precedent, not only would this contractor benefit, but the other contractors on the canal would also reap the advantage, and the country would suffer to the extent of $750,000. We were told by the Secretary of State, and by the Minister of Railways and Canals last night, that public works cannot be carried on under the estimate. I say right here, that the principal reason why engineers cannot estimate properly, and why public works cannot be carried out under the estimate, is because the Government goes out of its way to find excuses for paying men large sums of money that they are not entitled to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have listened with a good deal of attention to this debate——

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Might I ask the hon. gentleman to adjourn the debate. I want to make a motion, with the consent of the House, that when the House adjourns to-night it shall stand adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow, instead of ten o'clock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is perfectly reasonable.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved :

That when the House adjourns this day it do stand adjourned until Saturday at 3 o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 18th April, 1896.

PRAYERS.

THE CONDITION OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter of very great public importance, and will put myself in order by concluding with the usual motion. I take this means of bringing this matter to the attention of the House, because no other means is afforded me. In former sessions, I have endeavoured to bring to the serious consideration of the Government, similar matters, with a view to the correction of abuses and removal of grievances ; but, up to this moment, I regret to say, nothing has been done in the direction sought. I intend to invite the attention of the House to the condition of the militia of Canada generally, and to certain features of it in particular. In the first place, I venture to say that the people of Canada have, with the greatest willingness, contributed large sums of money, year after year, for the improvement of the militia system. The growing expenditure has been acquiesced in without complaint, and the only requirement on the part of the public appears to be that they shall get good value for their money. The people of Canada are essentially a patriotic people. There is a widespread military spirit in every part of the country. There is no disposition on the part of any public man to impose upon the administration of this department, a penurious or cheese-paring policy, and, if the representatives of the people are moved by a generous spirit, it is because, in that respect, they voice the sentiments of the country. But the country is entitled to efficiency in this, as in every branch of the public service, so far as the means at the disposal of the Government will admit, and it is entitled to wise economy in the expenditure of the people's taxes. And it is because this branch of the public service has failed, I submit in a large degree to fulfil these conditions that there is to-day a feeling, and a well-founded feeling, that the country is not getting full value for the money that is so freely poured out, and so cheerfully placed at the disposal of the Government. But a few short years ago the entire expenditure on our entire militia system was not half a million dollars. It has grown year by year until we find in the Public Accounts for the fiscal year closing the 30th June last charges of about $1,600,000 on account of the militia. That is a large sum of money, Mr. Speaker ; it represents a very large proportion of the public expenditure. And there is a feeling abroad that a very considerable portion of that money is not wisely expended, that it is wasted, that it is used for political purposes to pay the beneficiaries of political appointments at the expense of the militia of Canada. Take, for instance, our permanent corps. Every one will admit the importance of the maintenance of the permanent corps within reasonable limits. But we must remember that there is but a limited amount of money, and there are other demands than those of the permanent corps. There is great expenditure upon permanent corps, permanent staff, officials, high and low, while the service is scamped where it ought not to be. What has become of the system of annual drill which was said at one time to be a sine qua non of efficiency ? Where are the camps that were at one time annual, but have now become biennial? I might go into greater details on these important points, but I do not want to take up many minutes in the consideration of the subject, so I pass on as rapidly as I can. But more particularly do I wish to call the attention of the House to certain incidents in connection with the system which are certainly calculated to cause discouragement and distrust in the great volunteer army of Canada. Our soldiers are not working for a living as are the men of a regular army. We have a volunteer system, a system of citizen soldiery, where each man, from the highest to the lowest, makes great personal sacrifices in order to promote the efficiency of the service. And, Sir, if there is one feature in connection with the volunteer service more essential to its success than another, it is that each man, whatever his position, shall feel that he will receive justice at the hands of the governing body in regard to every matter concerning him in his military capacity. Sir, this is not the first time I have been obliged, on the floor of Parliament, to call attention to what I regard as an abuse of power. Two years ago it was my privilege to call the attention of this House to what was then recognized as a gross act of unfairness on the part of the Administration. I refer to the treatment meted out to Colonel Lazier of, I think, the Argyle Regiment, Belleville. What occurred on that occasion will be within the memory of every hon. gentleman. Colonel Lazier, who had been, if I remember well, twenty years at the head of his regiment, was summarily cashiered by an arbitrary order—cashiered in disgrace because it was stated that he had been short in his public accounts, and had, in other respects, brought his regiment into an inefficient condition. Here was a military man, a man of high professional position, a man at that time occupying a judicial position, that of Master in Chancery, a man who, in every respect, enjoyed and deservedly enjoyed the confidence of the community. He was summarily dismissed and his dismissal read out in general orders throughout the land. What justification was there for that act ? I will not trouble the House with details ; sufficient to say that the matter was brought up in Parliament and it was shown that Colonel Lazier had been dismissed without inquiry, without court martial, without the right of fair trial to which every British soldier is entitled ; dismissed arbitrarily and tyrannically. And but that there was a power of public opinion behind him, he would now be living under a cloud in his own country. But the case was brought up on the floor of this House. Military men and civilians, irrespective of party, moved by a sense of justice, demanded an investigation, which had been refused, and the result was that in the succeeding session, the Minister of Militia, who on that occasion, when the matter was under discussion on the floor of the House, had justified his arbitrary act, and said that he would have absolute discipline in his ranks and absolute fidelity, and charged that Col. Lazier had been shortcoming in both these respects, and further that he had been shortcoming in his accounts—that hon. gentleman, to-day the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Manitoba was obliged, before he left office, to place on record a statement that his administrative act in the dismissal of Col. Lazier was unwarranted, and that the charges upon which he had delivered that judgment were baseless. That officer, instead of living under disgrace, instead of standing before his officers and fellow-soldiers having the status of a cashiered servant, unworthy of wearing Her Majesty's military uniform, was reinstated in office, and given an honourable discharge. Well, this is not the first incident, nor the only incident, I could mention if time admitted. Some years ago Lieut. Browning, of the Governor General's Body Guards, was similarly treated. Under the then Minister of Militia, the present Postmaster General, an order was made calling upon him to send in his resignation on or before a certain Thursday, or he would be dismissed and gazetted out the following Saturday. I was in this House at the time and laid his case before Parliament, and it was my privilege to say a few words on his behalf. The opinion of this House was against such a tyrannical act, and the then Premier, Sir John A. Macdonald, stood up in the House and stated that he would take the authority out of the hands of the Minister of Militia, because the Minister of Militia was misusing his power. He said on the floor of Parliament : Before I will allow that order to go into effect, I will give Lieut. Browning a fair trial. No member of the militia of Canada shall have judgment delivered against him untried. Sir, it is the privilege of every citizen, be he filling a civil or a military position, it is his right as a British subject to have a fair trial. I will refer to another case, an eminent case, and this is one reason among many that impelled me to take this course now, for this is the last opportunity there will be to appeal to Parliament and to ask that the powers that be shall stay an arbitrary hand, and do justice towards a worthy citizen. Sir, we have in the city of Toronto a regiment known as the Queen's Own. This regiment has been in commission now for over a third of a century ; it has on all occasions acquitted itself with credit, and has won deservedly the approbation of the country. In times of trouble and in times of peace the Queen's Own, from its inauguration up to the present moment, has deservedly enjoyed the confidence of the country. Sir, the Queen's Own stands to-day among the foremost regiments of Canada for efficiency. It is full of men fired with military spirit, commanded by officers of unblemished reputation and absolute efficiency. At the head of that regiment to-day is a gentleman, Lieut.-Col. Hamilton, who has risen from the humblest position in the ranks to be the lieut.-colonel of that regiment. For many years he has acted as lieut.-colonel in that regiment ; for many years, under his administration, that regiment has continued to enjoy the confidence of the public and the confidence and respect of the military profession of Canada. Under the management of Lieut.-Col. Hamilton no one will say that the Queen's Own has deteriorated in character. Sir, as a citizen of Toronto, knowing something of the standing of the Queen's Own, I venture to say that you will not find one citizen in the whole city of Toronto, with a population of 200,000, who will not refer with pride to the status of the Queen's Own to-day. Is that not to be attributed, to some extent, to the command ? The subalterns, the field officers below the colonel, exercise, of course, great influence, but the chief responsibility rests upon the man who is in command of the regiment. Now, for all the years that Lieut-Col. Hamilton has been colonel of this regiment, not one citizen of Canada has ever dared to say that it has deteriorated in efficiency, or that the morale of the regiment is not all that it ever was, or that it ought to be. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into controversial facts, I am not going to prejudge facts; but let me state briefly the particular emergency through which this crisis arises. As I understand it—an inquiry, of course, may disclose facts differently—but as I understand it, at this moment the Government have called upon Lieut.-Col. Hamilton to send in his resignation, threatening him with dismissal unless he does so. Sir, will it be believed by any man here that they threatened to dismiss him without an inquiry, without assigning valid reasons, and after he has himself made a statement that certain of his officers have not been conducting themselves as they ought? I understand that Lieut.-Col. Hamilton had occasion to make a report reflecting upon the action of some of his officers, and here I call the attention of the leader of the House to this material point. Lieut.-Col. Hamilton, as I understand it, stated to the Government, through proper channels, for the information of the responsible authorities, that certain of his officials entered into a conspiracy against him for the purpose of rendering his administration an impossibility, and thereby compelling him to resign his command; and that communication, so sent, instead of being dealt with as it ought to have been, instead of the proper authorities inquiring into that charge, turned round and notified Lieut.-Col. Hamilton that they proposed to dismiss him. Now, did anybody ever hear of a more unjust procedure? When the colonel, upon whom devolves the responsibility for the maintenance of discipline in the regiment, makes certain charges against his subalterns, instead of the charges being investigated, instead of a proper inquiry being had to prove or disprove them, the authorities say: We dismiss you, Col. Hamilton.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On what ground?

Mr. MULOCK. On no grounds. We call on you to send in your resignation or we will dismiss you. I do not care what the grounds are. Whatever the grounds are, it is the very foundation principle of the whole system that a man should have a fair trial. If a policeman arrests a man engaged in the most unlawful act, he cannot execute lynch law upon him. The man is entitled to a fair trial; and yet this arbitrary Government have, not only in 1894, but in 1896, endeavoured to apply lynch law in the militia affairs of Canada. Sir, the Government are going to destroy the Canadian militia by such conduct. If every man who volunteers, who makes his sacrifice cheerfully, loyally and patriotically for the welfare of his country feels that he is serving under an ungrateful administration, or under an administration that does not appreciate the rights of each member of the force who, I ask, is going to serve in such an administration? And so, Sir, it fills me with indignation to think that such arbitrary and unjust treatment should be administered to any man who is so largely making sacrifices for the benefit of his country.

Mr. LISTER. During thirty years.

Mr. MULOCK. I have the statement here, but I will not go into details.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Do you know his age?

An hon. MEMBER. Forty-eight.

Mr. MULOCK. I can give all the information, for I have the details under my hand, but I do not wish to prolong the debate, and I am not going into the merits, one way or the other, but I take this point, that before an officer of the service can be dismissed in disgrace, he is entitled to a trial. Let hon. members of this House and the people of Canada understand that; let the members of the militia service understand whether they hold office at the arbitrary and irresponsible will of some Minister, or are they to be treated as gentlemen and as persons having rights, because it is not the first time it has happened, and it is not the first time the Government have had to publicly apologize. Let it now be settled once for all whether the service has rights or not. I repeat that I am not going into the merits. One story is good until another is told; but as in the army, a soldier is entitled to a court martial, to an inquiry, so the Queen's regulations run in Canada and apply to the Canadian service. If they do not, it is not too soon to make them. A similar trouble, I understand, crept into a regiment in Montreal, commanded by Colonel Strathy. There was some friction between Colonel Strathy and some of his officers. Yesterday I see two of his majors resigned. We know nothing about the circumstances, nor why their resignations were handed in, but certainly there was trouble, and it did not result in the Government calling on Colonel Strathy to resign or be dismissed.

I now pass away from that branch of the subject, as I wish to refer to another matter. Here I make another complaint against the Government. Two years ago I brought to the attention of the Government another branch of the militia system, the Kingston Military College. I tried to point out to the Government wherein it was necessary to reorganize that body, and although I have endeavoured to induce the Government to put that institution on the lines sanctioned by the constitution, yet they have refused to do so. Do not understand me as seeking the destruction of the Kingston Military College ; what I desire is that the college shall be placed upon a sound basis, and administered according to the constitution and according to the conditions of the country. What do I mean by that ? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is no part of the duty of the Dominion Government to embark in the ordinary business of civil education. Under the Confederation Act education is a subject assigned exclusively to the provinces, and the Dominion Government is only entitled to deal with that branch of education which is necessary in connection with some subject exclusively assigned to the Dominion. Inasmuch as militia and defence is a subject exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament, I conceive that it is perfectly constitutional for the Dominion Parliament to expend public money for the promotion of military education, and there is where the line should be drawn. Instead of drawing the line there, the Military College at Kingston has been turned into an ordinary collegiate institute, or little university for teaching ordinary subjects necessary to qualify young men for civil avocations. If hon. members turn to the official prospectus issued by the college from time to time, they will find that the management make this statement, that this college—I am now only paraphrasing the prospectus—not only imparts a technical education qualifying men for militia appointments, but also educates them to fill the ordinary avocations of life, such as professional and business life. If hon. members turn to the Queen's regulations they will find it officially stated in a recent issue that graduates are educated for the learned professions, and so on, in Canada. I draw the line there, and I say that branch of expenditure on civil education, not being part of a military education, as unconstitutional ; it is a mere duplication and involves an unnecessary expense. For example, we have at Kingston public schools, a collegiate institute, and a university, all engaged in doing excellent work. In that same city, or a little distance away, we have a military college. This military college has a staff of professors and instructors, a large number of whom are engaged in the same kind of work that is done in the public institutions to which I have alluded, the Collegiate Institute and Queen's University. What possible justification is there for the duplication of a staff of professors for the purposes of educating young men civilly ? If there were no such facilities in Canada, perhaps you might, from the very necessity of the situation, justify that departure ; but can it be said that in any part of Canada to-day men cannot obtain all the education necessary in order to enable them to receive a fair military education ? No one will for one moment make the statement that to-day it is necessary to have a second collegiate institute at the city of Kingston ; and that is what you have got in the Kingston Military College. The result of this is unnecessary expenditure. What next ? An unnecessary expenditure is one thing, but this condition is bringing down public opinion on the college, it is making the college unpopular, whereas it should be made popular. It is doing an injury to the militia spirit in Canada, and is calculated to make the people in time deal out more reluctantly than they do to-day the public taxes for the maintenance of the militia sytsem. My point, therefore, is that the Kingston Military College must be reorganized. Let it do the work which alone constitutionally this Dominion Government has a right to embark in, imparting military education, and in doing that reorganize entirely the principle on which the college is now being administered. At present it is nothing but a rich man's college. It costs the parents of a boy $1,600 to put him through the college, $400 each year for a four years' course. That is an expense which practically removes the facilities of the college from the great masses of people. Very few pupils attend it. The way in which it is administered has placed it beyond the reach of the people, and only the favoured and fortunate few are able to take advantage of it, and that at an enormous expense to the country. To-day, there are, I understand, fifty-seven students or cadets, all told, an average of something like fifteen a year. Fifteen students a year at this college, because the system of administration places the college beyond the reach of the masses of the people. In that way it is failing to do the limited good it otherwise might do. Let me show you how this results. Two years ago, when I brought the matter before the House, there were fifty-six students, and a staff of thirty-six persons, but to-day there are thirty-seven of a staff all told for the education of these students. From the Auditor General's Report, I find that up to the 30th June, last year, the superior staff of that college consisted of fifteen professors and their assistants, whose salaries amounted to $28,981. There were also twenty-one of a subordinate staff, composed of servants, and sergeants and gunners, and so on, costing $8,104. The two staffs, aggregating thirty-seven persons, cost, in salaries, $37,085. Let me briefly point out, Mr. Speaker, the way in which the money is wasted to secure the students. This college costs the country anually, $60,000 or $70,000, and it costs each student $400 a year besides, or about $25,000 to the students alone. This institution maintained at that expense, succeeds in attracting, each year, fifteen students from all Canada, and on page 52 of the Auditor General's Report, I have a statement as to where some of the money goes. I find that in order to gather in those fifteen students per annum, the Government is obliged to advertise in 107 newspapers in Canada, and the Auditor General's Report sets forth the money paid for these advertisements.

An hon. MEMBER. Are they good Conservative papers ?

Mr. MULOCK. I expect so, but I would not blame the Government for not giving their advertisements to Liberal papers. However that may be, for each one of these students —assuming that every mother's son of them would not have gone there except for the advertisements—it cost $123 on account of advertising alone. As the probabilities are that none of them went to the college because of the advertisements, you can well understand what a waste of money there is under that one item. I may say that a number of the professors would not be on the staff if the scheme were carried out according to the spirit of the law. For example, if this institution were to confine its labours to imparting a military education, would we have professors of French, English literature, chemistry, geology and mineralogy, drawing, painting, civil engineering, and so on. I submit not. Well, Mr. Speaker, the graduates of that college have taken some interest in it. Speaking here on a previous occasion, I pressed upon the Government to organize a board of visitors, which is provided for under the Act, and allow that board of visitors to investigate and make a report as to whether any reforms were or were not necessary. That board met and there was a majority and a minority report from it. The majority report recommended, among other things, that the head of that college should not be a permanent officer, but should be in office for a limited period only. I am sorry that the Government have not seen fit to lay upon the Table everything submitted by that board. When I asked the Government to submit the report at first, it was submitted in a partial condition. I received information from a reliable source (from graduates who had learned the nature of the report) that the full report had not been laid upon the Table. That was an oversight, I am sure. The present Minister of Justice stated so, and I accept frankly and unreservedly anything he says ; so that in commenting upon that omission, the hon. gentleman will give me credit for sincerity when I say that I attribute that omission wholly to accident. However, it had the effect of delaying the matter in Parliament. I was told yesterday by a graduate—this I am not able to prove at present—I was told by a graduate of the college who called upon me, that the Government had not yet laid upon the Table the full report. How is that ? He told me that in connection with the official report, which I now have in my hand, there was another report, and that attached to the report submitted by the board was a large amount of evidence. I submit that that evidence should have been laid upon the Table. Upon what was this report based ? I am told that the evidence would have warranted inferences and conclusions more prejudicial to certain persons connected with the college. I am told that the evidence warrants and demands more radical conclusions than are set forth in the majority report. I submit that in view of that, it would have been fair to the House, if the whole of the evidence had been laid before us ; and if there were any further recommendations, even if they were of a semi-private character, they should not be private from the public, and they should be placed before Parliament. But let us take the report as we find it. There is a growing feeling in the country that the college is not up to the times. We have at the head of it, a gentleman who was, no doubt, distinguished in his day, but, according to the report of the majority, military education is a progressive science, whilst persons high up in the service, and up in years are calculated to be satisfied with the existing condition of affairs. As a result, the mildest inference one can draw from the report of the majority, is that the head of the college is not, to-day, up to the times ; and that the college must suffer until a younger and more vigorous person is placed in command. It is a delicate subject. I hesitate to express any opinion upon that point further than to refer to the recommendation of the commissioners, which ought either to be acted upon or disapproved. At present it stands confronting the public, and those who joined in that report are men of known standing, who certainly would not, either from ignorance or from any improper motive, join in a recommendation that was not in itself fair and just. The commissioners who made that recommendation were Col. Powell, acting Adjutant General of Canada ; Lieut.-Col. Duchesnay, Deputy Adjutant General of No. 7, Quebec District ; Lieut.-Col. H. Smith, of the London district, and Captain Duncan Macpherson. There was a minority report presented by Mr. Sandford Fleming, who was one of the commissioners. In his report, which is dated the 18th of November, 1895, Mr. Fleming expresses himself as follows :—

> If I understand the purpose for which the Royal Military College at Kingston has been established, it is with the primary object to provide the means of imparting a military education, the final object being to assure the presence in the community in after years, of a number of thoroughly educated military men, who although engaged in civil life would be available for service in any critical emergency.
> While the importance of this object must be to the fullest extent admitted, we must equally consider the advisability of attaining it in the best manner with due regard to cost.
> My examination of the college and the system followed satisfied me that neither of these re> sults are obtained. It may easily be seen that the institution is over-manned. From the information laid before us there are now in residence 57 cadets, while the staff under pay, of officials, professors, assistants, subordinates and servants reaches the total number of 37 ; and the number does not include the caterer's department, which being under contract is entirely distinct. The work of the college conducted on this costly scale has furnished the results which I will briefly submit.

> During the past five years the military college has turned out on an average 13 3-5 per cent graduates per annum. Without taking into account the outlay incurred in erecting and equipping buildings, or interest on capital invested, this result has been attained at a cost for each graduate of (say) $5,510. Of this total sum, the graduate himself has paid (say) $1,450 ; the part borne by the Dominion in the current outlay has been $3,700.

And in reading this I am reminded of the result of my investigations, which I laid before the House two years ago. Admitting that this college was established for the purpose of providing military men with an education to fit them to enter the Canadian service alone, and bearing in mind that the Government had ignored that object, I think there had been, at the time I speak of, only eleven graduates of this college placed in positions where their qualifications could be of advantage to the whole service of Canada. The result was that up to that time it had cost Canada between $90,000 and $100,000 for each graduate who was placed as an instructor in connection with the militia of Canada. In case my recommendations should have any weight, would you superannuate under the ordinary system, as you did Lieut.-Col. Powell ? Would you give them a bonus ? Or, how would you thin out the staff, so as to bring the expenditure within justifiable limits. These are matters for consideration ; but certainly the difficulty of thinning out the staff must not stand in the way of bringing it within proper limits, and thus saving the college from public indignation. Allow me to read a little more from Mr. Fleming's report :

> The education imparted is not confined to a military training ; the cadets are admitted to the institution with an imperfect civil education and professors and lecturers are required to teach them the branches of ordinary education commonly taught at the schools and colleges of the country. As a consequence of this system four years are necessary to complete the education of the cadet ; the length of the term involved under the elaborate combination of professors, officials and others, greatly increase the expense to the cadet himself, as well as to the Dominion.
> This is not the course followed at the great military schools of England. At Sandhurst, where young men are trained for the cavalry and infantry, the length of term is one year and a half. At Woolwich, the school for the engineer and artillery, the highest branches of the military profession, the period is two years.
> Conceiving that experience has demonstrated the wisdom and expediency of limiting the period of military training to one and a half and two years at these famous schools, I had difficulty in understanding the necessity for prolonging the term to four years in Canada. The explanation of my colleagues on the board was, that the circumstances are peculiar in Canada, and any departure from the present system is not advisable. The board asked the three highest officers of the college an expression of opinion, on the principle of having cadets a shorter term in residence at the college and requiring them to complete their civil education before entering. None of the answers furnished were in favour of changing from the present system.
> Notwithstanding these adverse views, the impression I had first formed remains unchanged. I am unable to see sufficient reason why we cannot with propriety follow the example of the mother country and take means to render it unnecessary for cadets to remain longer than two years at the Royal Military College. The means which naturally suggest themselves are to convert the institution into a purely military college, and, as in England, leave the ordinary schools and colleges of the country to educate those who are to be cadets, in English, French, mathematics, physics, chemistry and natural science. That is to say, candidates for cadetship should be proficient in these branches of study before they are admitted to the military college.
> When this institution was first established there may have been greater reason for the course then adopted, which is still followed, but that time is past.

I think Mr. Fleming is in error as to the course followed at that time. When the college was established, it was intended that the education should be confined wholly to a military education ; and Mr. Mackenzie, speaking in Parliament at the time, said that it would only be necessary to have a couple of professors, that the college would be established in some military town where it would be possible to get the advantage of the permanent corps, and where there would be facilities for the students to receive a civil education, and that in that way the expense would be comparatively trifling. But unfortunately those economic days have long since gone by. Mr. Fleming goes on to say :

> I think I am quite correct in saying that in Canada, to-day, a better civil education can be had outside than inside the military college, and at far less cost.

When Mr. Fleming says that, he says a great deal ; and he is by no means a mean authority. Himself a man of learning, connected with an institution of learning, and one who has taken much interest in the education of the youth of the country, he speaks with authority. He goes on :

> It appears to me that the change suggested would confer many and great advantages, and would result in a very great reduction of expense, not to the Government only, but to the cadets themselves. As one direct effect, it would admit of families availing themselves of the privileges of the college who are now debarred by the question of cost. I do not think it an exaggerated view when I express the expectation that the reductions of expense added to other inducements which I shall presently refer to would lead to a great increase in the number desiring to become cadets.

> As the whole matter presents itself to my mind, the facts and principles connected with them, may thus be summarized :
> 1. That a good civil education is the essential groundwork of complete military education, as it is of all professional educations, and that it should accordingly precede technical studies.
> 2. At the Royal Military College at Kingston an attempt is made to impart a civil education as well as a military education.
> 3. At the Military College a civil education is obtained at an excessive and unnecessary cost.
> 4. Civil education is not one of the constitutional functions of the general government.
> 5. There is now in all, or nearly all, the provinces of the Dominion, ample provision for imparting to the youth of the country the best civil education.
> 6. Military education at the English schools is limited at Sandhurst to one and a half years, at Woolwich to two years.

Then he goes on to draw other deductions, for instance, in subsection C :

> The Military College at Kingston should be a military college and nothing else. So constituted, the course of instruction need not exceed two years.

Suppose, for a moment, that the course of instruction was limited to one and a half or two years, how it would at once popularize the college. The length of time would not be prohibitory, while the expense would be comparatively light. Instead of there being but fifty-seven candidates, you would probably have several times that number. You would duplicate the advantages at only a fraction of the present cost, and I think that this is a good axiom, that the higher the cost, the less use you will get out of the college. The more elaborate and the more expensive the system, the less public good will result. So that, if you bring it down to a popular basis, in the way I am suggesting, you will at once increase the numbers of those who will take advantage of the college and in that way benefit the public. There is one point that members of the House have frequently dwelt upon, and in which I do not altogether agree. This view is not limited to one side of the House alone. I think my hon. friend from Kingston entertained it, and so do some others on the other side. It is said that the graduates of this college have the best claim upon civil appointments, and should be appointed whenever there are vacancies, provided that their technical education would specially adapt them for those positions. I do not agree in that proposition. It is not necessary for us to maintain a college in order to qualify men to fill civil appointments. The qualifications for civil appointments can be acquired in the various educational institutions throughout Canada, so that I do not justify the maintenance of this college because of the requirements of the Civil Service at all. The college can only be justified by the requirements of the militia. The outcome of the teaching of the college must be felt on the militia of Canada for good, or else the college must go. I lay down that proposition. If these men are to get the benefit of this luxurious education in Kingston largely at the public expense, and are to have besides first claims on all the civil appointments in Canada, and be entitled to superannuation at an early age, certainly they will be the favoured children of Canada. So that I dissent altogether from the doctrine that this college can be maintained for the purpose of preparing officials to obtain civil appointments in the gift of the Crown. There are a number of other matters in connection with the service to which I would like to refer but will not. The case of Colonel Hamilton I hoped to have had occasion to bring to the attention of Parliament on a former occasion, and to have been able this session to discuss it fully, and if it comes up at this late hour, it is because of the state of the Order paper and the early demise of Parliament. I am sorry to have dwelt so long upon the subject, but in the meantime, while the Government may not be able to give me any pledge with regard to the reforming of the Kingston Military College, because that may be the task of an incoming Government, yet so far as Colonel Hamilton is concerned, he having been called upon to send in his resignation or be dismissed, I ask the Government, in view of what I have argued and of former mistakes, to stay their hand and do justice to an officer in the proper military way by giving him the advantage of a fair trial.

Mr. DICKEY. I am sorry that I was not able to be in the House when the hon. gentleman was addressing himself particularly to the matter of Colonel Hamilton, but notes of his points have been put in my hands and I have been able from his subsequent remarks to learn pretty well the line of argument which he took. I am not able, I regret to say, to give the hon. gentleman very much information with regard to this particular case. It is one that has happened recently, and as no notice of this motion was given to me, and I believe none was given to the hon. Minister of Militia——

Mr. MULOCK. I did not give notice of it because it was only this morning that it was brought very prominently to my attention by a person closely connected with the threatened danger.

Mr. DICKEY. I am not challenging the hon. gentleman's motives, but simply noting a fact which, the House will see, very much limits the information which the hon. gentleman is likely to get by a discussion of this question. I have been able, however, to see the hon. Minister of Militia since the hon. gentleman was speaking, and I am informed that there was trouble in the regiment commanded by Colonel Hamilton, that an investigation was held by the Deputy Adjutant General of the district, Colonel Otter, that Colonel Otter made certain recommendations to the general officer commanding, on which the general officer commanding arrived at the conclusion that the best interests of the service required that Colonel Hamilton should resign the command of the Queen's Own Rifles, and that he placed that alternative very clearly before Colonel Hamilton, saying that it meant either the disruption of the regiment or his resignation. I am not able to say at all whose fault it is, I am not able to say whether it was due to the mismanagement of Colonel Hamilton or whether it was anything in the nature of a combination against Colonel Hamilton among the officers and men. I know nothing whatever of the circumstances. But, as I understand it, the case was investigated by the Deputy Adjutant General and the fact was that the regiment could not longer exist under the command that it then had, and for these reasons Lieut.-Col. Hamilton was asked to hand in his resignation. The hon. gentleman has referred to the case of the Royal Scots of Montreal. It seems to me that this is a most unfortunate way of conducting a discussion unless the hon. gentleman is prepared to state the two cases are on all fours with each other. I know nothing of the case either, except what I have seen in the newspapers. All that I can say is that the same officer dealt with both cases. This was the general officer commanding, who, so far as I am aware, knew nothing of either of these commanding officers, and who has no local prejudices, no party prejudices, no personal feelings of any kind, who is an officer of the very highest record in England, and who is actuated by one single idea and that is to do what is best for the majority of the militia of Canada. And, therefore, I can say to the hon. member for North York, without personal knowledge of the circumstances, that the fact that the matter was dealt with entirely by General Gascoigne, gives me very great confidence that full investigation would satisfy any person really wishing to get at the facts that nothing but fair-play and a sincere desire to promote the best interests of the militia had actuated the General in his course.

Mr. MULOCK. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ?

Mr. DICKEY. Certainly.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. Minister happen to know whether Lieut.-Col. Hamilton was allowed to be present at the investigation ?

Mr. DICKEY. I do not know anything about it, I am only speaking from information I received that Col. Otter held an investigation.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not sure, but I understand that the investigation was without his knowledge or that he was allowed to take any part in it.

Mr. DICKEY. I am not able, I regret to say, to speak as to that.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not speak definitely on that point.

Mr. DICKEY. I regret that I am not able to give the hon. gentleman any more definite information, for the reason I have stated. Now, with regard to the Military College, I submit that while the hon. gentleman has been very persistent year after year in dealing with this subject, and while the Government must certainly be aware about his views of the reports that were laid upon the Table, the discussion is really premature. These reports were delivered to the Government in the middle of a term of the college, when the professorial staff was engaged in the work of instructing the students. It would have been fatal to the interests of the college for the Government to take precipitate action with regard to any of the recommendations contained in either of the reports. The action to be taken must certainly be delayed until the current school year is completed and the students go to their several homes. The hon. gentleman has spoken of another report still which was delivered by the visitors to the department. The hon. gentleman is quite correct. The report was given to me, and it did contain evidence such as he describes. But it was not handed to me as a report of the visitors ; it was handed to me by the Adjutant General as a confidential memorandum for the confidential information of the Minister, not in any sense as the report of the visitors of the college. I am not quite sure whether it was given with the consent of all the visitors. It may be signed by all. My impression is that it was handed to me by Col. Powell himself——

Mr. MULOCK. I am informed that it was part of the report, that all were fastened together and handed into the department, but Col. Powell separated them.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. gentleman's information is quite incorrect as to the shape in which it reached me——

Mr. MULOCK. I am not speaking of how it reached you, but of how it reached the department.

Mr. DICKEY. It came from Col. Powell entirely separate from the report and as a confidential memorandum dealing with the personal characteristics of the several profesors of the college and one thing or another like that of a highly confidential character; and, viewing it in that light, I would not make it known without the distinct order of the House. Therefore, though there is such a report, I did not feel it to be my duty to bring it down.

I do not know that any good purpose would be served by my discussing the questions the hon. gentleman has raised. The hon. gentleman has referred to the minority report made by Mr. Fleming. Now, Mr. Fleming left the visitors before they had concluded their investigation and their deliberation, as I think appears by his letter, and made up a separate report without consultation with his confreres. There is really only one idea in the report of Mr. Fleming, and that idea is one which the hon. gentleman from North York seems to have adopted, namely, that the Military College should not give what has been called secular education——

Mr. MULOCK. I said civil education.

Mr. DICKEY. Civil education—as distinct from military education. Mr. Fleming elaborates that theme. He plays various melodies, but the theme is always the same.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the question of religious education arises in this connection ?

Mr. DICKEY. No ; the hon. gentleman may feel quite sure that there is no religion in the schools and therefore he may make his mind easy.

Mr. MARTIN. It seems to be a godless school.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes. Mr. Fleming makes the point I have referred to, and presses it home and argues it in various aspects. That is a view which was entirely dissented from by the rest of the board of visitors. That is a view from which, so far as I have been able to form any opinion, I absolutely and entirely dissent. I dissent if only for one reason : The men that have been turned out of this college have made a record for themselves in the British service that is unique. Since they began going into the British service, some sixteen or seventeen years ago, there has never been one cadet of the Royal Military College who has, as they say in the army, gone to the bad. There is not one single man of them who has been a failure. And I think that when you say that after sixteen years' experience of men who are gathered from all parts of Canada to attend that school, you pay the highest possible compliment to the type of education that is imparted to them there. Not only have they not gone to the bad, which I am told by officers of the army is a remarkable thing, taking the average of the army, but they have proved themselves, from a professional standpoint, the superiors by far of the men who come out of Sandhurst, Woolwich and other English institutions. In technical and military knowledge, in military spirit and in every other respect they have shown themselves the superiors of the English-educated youths. I do not refer only to conspicuous examples. There are conspicuous examples, but these perhaps you might attribute to the personal qualities of the men. Some of these men who went out were born soldiers, and not made so ; but wherever you take the trouble to follow them, whether you go to India, or whether you go to the coast of Africa, or wherever you go, you find that these Canadian boys that when from the Royal Military College, are climbing up hand over hand ahead of competitors who were educated at Sandhurst and Woolwich. Now, what is the reason of that ? That surely is a very relevant question. I venture to make this statement, that if application were made to the Commander in Chief in England today for a thoroughly efficient and reliable young man to do a delicate duty, requiring training and the qualities that go to make up a good military officer, the chances are largely that, passing by the enormous bulk of men in the British service, he would put his finger upon a Canadian who was educated in the Royal Military College at Kingston, to undertake that work. That has been done over and over again. Now, the question arises, What is the reason of that ? It cannot be because the man was born in Canada ; it must be a question of education and bringing up. In Sandhurst and Woolwich the course is a year and a half and two years, and the education is purely a technical and military education. Now, what is the education given at the Royal Military College ? It is a combined civil and military education. But I want to point out this fact, that of that combined education, the civil part is all looking towards the military part, and in aid of the military part ; the two go hand-in-hand. When a cadet goes into the college he is given an education in hand drill, and put in shape physically, and goes through a regular routine of gymnastics and all that sort of thing. Then begins his military and civil education combined, one branch goes on with the other. The hon. gentleman must realize, and the House must realize, that the conditions of warfare have entirely changed in recent years. I suppose that fifty years ago a knowledge of chemistry would have been practically useless to a soldier. To-day war is really a mathematical science, it is no longer what it used to be. It is conducted with scientific weapons, produced by experts upon regular scientific deductions and calculations ; and the whole conduct, particularly of artillery, is purely a question of high mathematical training. Then the subject of explosives comes in, requiring a knowledge of chemistry, a knowledge of topographical surveys, and a special knowledge of the surface of the country is required. Therefore I say that the civil education is almost entirely ancillary to the military education. The hon. gentleman suggests that we should have a two years' course.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not say a one or two years' course, but I said a reduced course.

Mr. DICKEY. Mr. Fleming takes that view, but Mr. Fleming says, and says quite properly, that in order to make a good soldier nowadays, you must have a thoroughly educated man, and I think Mr. Fleming points to Queen's University as a very proper place where cadets could be educated. What does that mean ? It means that the men who go into the Royal Military College, if they are to be thoroughly educated, would have to be graduates. If they are going to be properly educated men they must have been two or three years at a university, and what is the result of that ? The result of that is that you would enormously reduce, in my opinion, the number of men who would go to that college, because it would come to be a question of getting an education anyway ; they would have to go to some expense in getting an education. Now, there are very few families in this Dominion, at least, who, after their sons have graduated from a college, can afford to send them to the Military College again to get a purely military education, without prospects of certain employment, and merely in order to perfect themselves in that particular branch. It is a common thing in this country for people to put their sons through a college course, and then give them a course in medicine, or a course in law. But a man who is educated in that way comes out of a medical college, or comes out of his legal training, with a profession which he can immediately turn into money, he can set himself up in practice and make a living for himself. But the hon. gentleman proposes that a man shall take a year longer, or perhaps two years longer, to get his military and civil education combined, and at the end of that time he would have no better chance for employment than he had when he came out from a university with his B.A. Therefore, it seems to me that a judicious admixture of civil education with a military education is an absolute necessity in order to turn out the highest class of men. In support of that I can only appeal to results, I can only appeal to the men who have been turned out, and who are competent to take high positions in the British service. I ask the House to be very slow to adopt offhand a proposition which does not meet with the approval of four out of five of the members of the board of visitors, and which, so far as I know, is approved by none of the educationalists belonging to the college. Their opinion, no doubt, would be subject to suspicion, because their employment might depend upon the continuation of this system. But at any rate, for what it is worth, there is the opinion. Now, the hon. gentleman says that the expense is too large, that the staff is too large. The hon. gentleman and the House will understand that it takes as large a staff to put sixty men through a given course of training in a number of branches, as it does to put 120 men through. It is like any other business, the moment you enlarge it, you reduce the average expense. The real cause of the great cost of this college is the small number of cadets that attend it. The staff that is employed there could handle, probably, five or six, and for aught I know, ten times the number of cadets that they handle now. That is, they could give them an education in a general sort of way without any more assistance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any comparative statement showing the experience at Sandhurst, Woolwich or West Point ?

Mr. DICKEY. Well, the difference is this, that at Sandhurst, Woolwich and West Point, they have a large and wealthy population to draw from, and the average expenditure is much smaller there because a much greater number of students attend those institutions. If we had fifty or sixty millions of people to draw from, doubtless we would have ten times as many students.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but he seems to have given some attention to this point, having been Minister of Militia himself, and I thought he might have obtained some information concerning the expenditure at West Point which, I may remark, is the nearest in point of organization to ours ; in fact, I think our system was organized, to a considerable degree, on the West Point model. Speaking subject to correction, a comparison between West Point and Kingston Military College might not by any means be very disadvantageous to us. I am not at all certain as to that point, but it would be interesting to obtain the information.

Mr. DICKEY. I was referring more particularly to the English military colleges. I had the figures from West Point when I was in the Militia Department, and I do not know that they are unfavourable to us, but I am not in a position to give an opinion on the point. I am drawing attention to this fact, that we cannot altogether depend upon the average of figures for each student without knowing all the conditions of the problem. The real question which the hon. gentleman intends to raise, is this, not the average cost of the education of each student, which is really irrelevant, but as to whether the staff of instructors is too large, whether there is too much organization for the education of the students. On that point I have no knowledge myself, except that when Minister of Militia, I pressed that view strongly upon the commandant and the authorities at the college, and I was not able, during the time I was Minister, to make that personal investigation I should like to have made; but I was satisfied, from the representations they made to me, that the staff, with the exception of one or two instances, in the lower grades, for instance, men such as drill instructors, where there might be small economy effected, was not too large and there was not a professor or instructor who could be spared. In that connection, I should like to refer the hon. gentleman to the majority report of the visitors, which says:

> The cadets admitted each year are placed in the same class, and although the professorial and instructional staff is required at the present strength, they can perform similar functions for classes of the maximum of 26 without detriment to efficiency.

So, in the opinion of the board of vicitors, the present staff, so far as professors and instructors are concerned, is not too large for the duties it has to perform.

Mr. MULOCK. What sources of information did the visitors possess on which they arrived at their conclusions, except the advice of the professors and their own knowledge? None of them were university men.

Mr. DICKEY. They went there with instructions from me as Minister of Militia to exhaust every source of information available inside the college walls, and I believe they fully carried out that instruction. They heard every class of opinion that was represented there, and one of the visitors was Mr. Macpherson, one of the first graduates, a man who has always kept up his connection with the college, and maintained his scientific training, and holds a distinguished position as divisional engineer on the Canadian Pacific Railway. He was there with the board, and he concurred in that remark.

Mr. MULOCK. My point is that the only persons who are competent to arrive at a finding on such an inquiry are either persons having themselves expert knowledge as expect educationalists, or persons having evidence of experts as educationalists to guide them. I do not know that any member of the board, except Mr. Fleming, is in any way connected with our educational institutions, and therefore they were not able to speak from their own knowledge as to the capacity of the staff as regards the needs of the students. So they had only the evidence of the staff of the college to guide them.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. gentleman is aware that you may go from Scylla to Charybdis. You may wish to avoid non-educationalists, and you may stumble across prejudiced educationalists. Whatever this opinion is worth, it is the view of the visitors of the college. The question has been raised whether we have constitutional jurisdiction to give the education we do give. I think there is nothing serious in that objection. The question really is as to the needs of military education. If it is reasonably necessary for a military education that arithmetic be taught, no court in the land would draw a distinction between arithmetic and land surveying, and say the college was acting unconstitutionally because it taught one branch that was not strictly military in its nature. The Act establishing the college says, in section 1, as follows:—

> There shall be an institution for the purpose of imparting a complete education in all branches of military tactics, fortification, engineering and general scientific knowledge in subjects connected with and necessary to a thorough knowledge of the military profession, and for qualifying officers for command and for staff appointments; and such institution shall be known as the Royal Military College, and shall be located in some one garrison town of the Dominion.

It really comes back to whether the education given is reasonably necessary to complete the military training, and in support of that condition, I offer the opinion of the four visitors of the college, who were strongly opposed to Mr. Fleming's view, and the records of the men who have come out of the college and entered the military profession. As I am reminded, the Major General commanding is also strongly in favour of the system which at present exists at Kingston, and would be utterly opposed to adopting the system at Woolwich and Sandhurst under which he was brought up. The recommendations in both these reports will certainly have to be considered and taken into account, and whatever action is necessary will have to be taken upon them, whether it will be done by an incoming Government or by a continuation of the present Government, is a question which the future will unfold, but, at the present time any discussion as to the merits of the matter would be entirely out of place. I do not think the hon. gentleman wants to attack the results of the Royal Military College, that he wants to throw the slightest aspersion on the men which the college has turned out. He will admit that they are a credit to Canada as well as to the institution, and therefore we should be very slow to throw over the course of education which has produced those results.

Mr. EDGAR. The Queen's Own Rifles is a regiment of which Toronto is justly proud. It is one of the historical regiments of Canada, one of the first organized, and it has had the good fortune, from a soldier's point of view, of having been brought more than once into active service. The people of Toronto, Ontario, and Canada are justly proud of that regiment. Thousands of the citizens of Toronto who are now spread over the world passed through the ranks of that regiment. As an illustration of that fact, I may say that I wore the uniform of a full private myself thirty-four years ago. I may add that a son of my own wore its uniform through the North-west rebellion, as a private. The well-being of that regiment and its honour affect very closely the feeling of the people of Toronto and Ontario, I can assure this House. The progress of the regiment from its earliest beginning, when there were only two or three companies, to its present condition of ten companies, has been steady and has been wonderfully maintained. It has always been advancing in efficiency, until I think the climax was reached last autumn when there was a church parade in Toronto on the 3rd of November, in which the Queen's Own Rifles and all the military forces in Toronto took part. While the Queen's Own Regiment has only what they call an establishment—that is a full complement of officers and men—amounting to 458 all told ; at that church parade in Toronto 724 men of the Queen's Own turned out.

Mr. DICKEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. EDGAR. Does not that show its efficiency ? Well, Sir, who has been the commanding officer of that regiment for the last six and a half years ? Sir, Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton has been its commanding officer. But, a few weeks ago, there were some extraordinary and almost incredible statements going the rounds of the press, to the effect that Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton, who had brought that regiment up to its present high efficiency, was asked to resign by the Militia Department. Now, Sir, when I heard that I was surprised. I was in Toronto about that time, and a friend of Colonel Hamilton whom I met, corroborated the fact, and when I came down here I put certain questions on the Order paper. It was almost incredible and I could not believe that it had taken place. My questions were answered on the 6th of April last by the Minister of Justice acting for the Minister of Militia, and the following are the questions I put and the answers thereto :—

Mr. EDGAR asked :

1. Has Lt.-Col. Hamilton, of the Queen's Own, Toronto, been officially asked to resign ?

(a.) If so, upon what grounds has his resignation been demanded ?

2. Have any, and what charges been formulated against Lt.-Col. Hamilton, and by whom ?

(a.) If so, has he been given any opportunity to meet them ?

3. Has Lt.-Col. Hamilton made any charges against officers of his regiment ?

(a.) If so, has an inquiry been ordered thereon ?

Mr. DICKEY. The following answer has been handed to me :—No. 1. He has. (a.) On the grounds that, as Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton had, unfortunately, lost the confidence of the officers and of the regiment, and their good-will, a deadlock had occurred, highly injurious to the regiment, and it therefore became necessary to effect a change in the command. No. 2. No charges whatever have been formulated against Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton. No. 3. Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton has made a charge against an officer, for not handing over to him, when ordered, certain moneys received by this officer from other officers ; but the officer in question, who was acting as treasurer for the whole, had received from the other officers a notice that he was not to part with the money which had been handed over to him for safe-keeping, and he was, therefore, perfectly justified in his refusal. The charge, therefore, made by Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton for disobedience of order, was no charge at all, and, therefore, no inquiry was needed.

Now, Sir, the information given then has not been supplemented by anything which we have heard to-day from the Minister of Justice. I suppose as a matter of fact there is nothing more to be said in defence of the action of the Government towards Colonel Hamilton. Sir, what does this show ? It shows that an efficient officer, whose regiment, if not the best, is certainly one of the very best regiments in Canada, has been threatened with expulsion, with disgrace, and has been requested to resign under the threat of being cashiered. As a matter of fact he has had the regiment taken out of his hands. He has refused to resign without knowing some reason why, and we have the avowed statement made before the country that that meritorious officer, without the shadow of a charge having been formulated against him, has been dealt with as if he were a military criminal, and practically cashiered from his high command. I say, Sir, that the country, and the militia forces of the country, will want to know if that is going to be the practice of the Militia Department in the future, because it never has been the practice in the past. I have here a letter from a gentleman in Toronto who gave me the information on which I put these questions, and he points out several errors in the reply of the Minister. He has reference to the complaints which were made by Colonel Hamilton against officers of his regiment, and in relation to which an inquiry was refused by the department. My informant says, that the officer who held the money referred to was Lieutenant Mitchell, who had acted as treasurer of the fund. He continues :

> Lieutenant Mitchell held money from two sources, viz. : officers' fees and regimental money. This money was held at the credit of what is called suspense fund. Colonel Hamilton was directly responsible for these arms and accoutrements, for which his personal bond is held by the Militia Department. The money was held to indemnify him, but for convenience had been handled by the treasurer. Lieutenant Mitchell's term of office had expired and he > refused to continue longer in the position of treasurer. Under these circumstances Colonel Hamilton instructed him to hand over this money to himself, amounting to about $250. Lieutenant Mitchell asked the Colonel to excuse him for a few minutes. Returning shortly he said he had consulted two or three senior officers and they had instructed him to hold on to the money and he refused to give it up. This was a clear act of insubordination and conspiracy as the money was regimental money for which Colonel Hamilton was alone responsible. The purpose was to embarrass the management of the regiment.

From that it would appear that Colonel Hamilton as commanding officer was responsible for this money ; that he had ordered his subordinate, a lieutenant of his regiment, to hand that over to him when the lieutenant had given up his office, and this subordinate positively refused to comply with that. That was a clear case of insubordination and the Government refused to make an inquiry into that at the suggestion of the colonel of the regiment. This letter goes on to say :

> The department appears to have adopted a new rule, namely, that written charges by a commanding officer enforcing discipline are to be ignored, while secret verbal statements from dissatisfied, insubordinate officers who conspire together are to be accepted as truth and acted upon ; the severest penalty known—the dismissal of the commanding officer—being enforced without opportunity for him to reply to any statements that have been made.
> So far as known three-fourths of the officers in the regiment have never been asked their opinion respecting Col. Hamilton. The fact is, the Deputy Adjutant-General who sent the report to the General did so after holding hole-and corner meetings with a few disaffected officers impatient for promotion, and also after actually descending to look for complaints from sergeants, some of whom had been reprimanded for unmilitary conduct.
> The methods employed in this instance have been unprecedented, and no other officer has ever before been accorded such treatment. Had the political proclivities of the parties been reversed, the officers who have instigated the Colonel's removal would have been court-martialled and dismissed for insubordination and conspiracy.

Mr. DICKEY. What is the hon. gentleman reading from ?

Mr. EDGAR. From a letter which I received from a gentleman in Toronto, who communicated to me the circumstances on which I founded my question. I think he is quite right when he refers to this charge of conspiracy and insubordination among the officers. I hold here the regulations and orders of the militia of 1887 ; and I find that rule 140, which is remarkably applicable to this case, says :

> One of the fundamental and most necessary rules of military discipline is to forbid anything bearing the appearance of combination, to obtain the redress of grievances, among individuals composing a military force. If officers or men, whether on active service or oherwise, have any grievance, their complaint should be laid before their commanding officer in respectful language, each individual speaking for himself alone. Meetings of officers may be called only by the commanding officer, who is responsible that they shall be for a particular purpose.

When subjects of that kind were brought to the attention of the Department of Militia by the commanding officer, and he asked for an inquiry, I say it was a most extraordinary part of this whole case that an inquiry was refused. Now, can any one say that Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton, who has been six years and a half, since 1889, in command of this regiment, is unduly hanging on to that command, and unduly standing in the way of the fair prospects of promotion that military officers very properly entertain ? I say he is not holding on for an undue length of time. I have here a list, which certainly surprised me, giving the length of the terms of the commanding officers of the existing military force of Canada. Colonel Hamilton, as I have said, was appointed in 1889. There are in command to-day two colonels who were appointed in 1864, thirty-two years ago ; there are three who were appointed in 1866, one in 1869, one in 1870, two in 1871, one in 1873, four in 1874, among whom is an hon. member of this House.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who is that ?

Mr. EDGAR. Colonel O'Brien. In 1876 there were seven appointed, who are still in command of their regiments, and one of these is an hon. member of this House, Colonel Tyrwhitt. There were eight in 1877, one in 1878, one in 1880, three in 1881, one in 1882, one in 1883, three in 1884, ten in 1885, five in 1886, eight in 1887, three in 1888, and four in 1889, before Colonel Hamilton was appointed. Therefore, there are to-day in the militia of Canada sixty-nine commanding officers who are senior in appointment to Colonel Hamilton, and there are only forty-six who have been appointed since he was. Therefore, there is no shadow of excuse for saying that this colonel of a regiment should be dismissed because he has been too long in command. Some other reason than that must be found. Take the history of the Queen's Own itself. Had it colonels in command as long as Colonel Hamilton ? Its first colonel, who was in command when I was a private in the regiment, Colonel Durie, was six years in command until he died ; Colonel Gilmour was nine years ; Colonel Otter was nine years ; Colonel Miller and Colonel Allan were both in command for shorter terms, as they died during their terms ; then Colonel Hamilton comes with his six years and a half. Now, has this regiment suffered in efficiency during Colonel Hamilton's time ? I got the militia reports while my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) was speaking, and, looking at the annual reports of inspection of this regiment, I find that in 1891 there were found to be ten companies, a brass band of forty men, and a drum and bugle band of thirty men, and both of these bands were excellent. I find that the establishment was 458 men, that the strength of the regiment at the time of the inspection was 618, that the general conduct of the corps was good, and the general state of the clothing, arms and accoutrements was very good, and that the field movements were very well done. In 1892, after giving details similar to the above, the report winds up with these words :

> This battalion is remarkable for its strength and enthusiasm in all duties.

And still Colonel Hamilton was in command. Then later, in 1894, the Militia Report says: "This battalion is 200 men over strength, and in excellent order. It is a great credit to the militia force." That is the official report of the Militia Department. Where is the excuse there for cashiering Colonel Hamilton without investigatiion or notice ? I admit that there is an arbitrary prerogative power resting in the Government, in the Militia Department, to advise the Governor General to dismiss or cashier any officer in the service. But does that prerogative right, at this time of day, in this free country, authorize any arbitrary set of men to dismiss and disgrace a worthy officer without an inquiry or an opportunity to answer whatever hole-in-corner investigation may have been made ? No such thing as that can be tolerated in this country by any class of men, much less by the high-spirited gentlemen who compose the officers of the militia. They should not be treated as serfs, or slaves, or dogs. The Minister of Militia is not a Czar or Sultan to dismiss or disgrace them at his own will. What would have happened, in Colonel Hamilton's position, if he had accepted the proposal from Ottawa that he should send in his resignation ? Everybody would have pointed the finger of scorn at him and said that he had resigned to avoid an inquiry. He would have been disgraced for the rest of his life. But instead of resigning, he asked for an investigation, and I took the opportunity of telling him, when I saw him to-day, that I proposed to bring this up in Parliament. Then let the Militia Department dismiss him if they dare, and the people of this country will know the reason why. It would be an insult to the militia if such a thing were done. No colonel commanding a regiment can dismiss or cashier a corporal without an inquiry. Who is this head of the Militia Department, who is not a soldier, and never was, that he can cashier or dismiss a lieutenant-colonel without inquiry, under the rules and regulations ? Let me draw your attention, Sir, to another order of our Canadian regulations and orders of the militia, with reference to inquiries. It is order 155 :

> Courts of inquiry, as a general rule, sit with closed doors——

We are told by the department that there was an inquiry.

> Courts of inquiry, as a general rule, sit with closed doors, but they may be either open or closed, according to the nature of the investigation, or as may be directed by the convening officer. The accused party should be present, and may either answer or refuse to answer any question put to him, or may avail himself of the opportunity to explain any particular act, or any part of his conduct on which an imputation prejudicial to him may have arisen.

But in this case, Colonel Hamilton knew nothing about that inquiry until it was over. He does not know anything about it to-day. There was an ex parte hole-in-corner inquiry at the instance, he says, of a few insubordinate officers of the regiment, who were desirous of getting into Colonel Hamilton's shoes. The whole thing is against the ordinary principles of justice, and all the rules of the service. Then, look at the Queen's Regulations of 1892, which, I understand, are the guide in all unprovided cases. What does rule 35 of section 5 say?

> Whenever an officer is disadvantageously reported on, or when the answers to any of the questions contained in the confidential report are not thoroughly satisfactory, the particulars of the report are to be read verbatim to him by the officer making it, in presence, when possible, of the inspecting officer and of the second senior officer of the corps. If the officer unfavourably reported on is not present at the time of the inspection, the above particulars are to be communicaed to him by letter.

You see that he is to have the fullest opportunity of knowing the charges or the secret private reports, if they are against him, and he is, like any free man, to have an opportunity of answering them. I am going to take the responsibility, without Colonel Hamilton's permission, of reading a portion of a letter which he has addressed to the general officer commanding. It is a public letter, of course, but it has not been brought before this House, and I will read the whole of it, if the hon. Minister desires. He first refers to the answer of the Minister of Justice, which I read, as to the nature of his charge against Lieutenant Mitchell, and shows that the department did not understand it or did not report correctly what that charge was, and it was one apparently on which he was entitled to an investigation. He says that a clear breach of trust existed in the case of that subordinate officer in his dealing with the money. And he goes on to say to the general in command :

> I have no doubt, Sir, that I can show that much of the information the department has received is on a par with the above ; but it is only when statements are made public that corrections can be made. I have respectfully and repeatedly urged that all the circumstances connected with the Queen's Own Rifles matters be thoroughly inquired into before any action > be taken to dispossess me of my command, but my remarks have been studiously ignored, and I have not been even accorded the courtesy of a reply to any of my communications.

That is the way a commanding officer of a crack regiment is treated in this country. He was not given even the courtesy of a reply to any of his communications. Col. Hamilton goes on to say :

> Without a charge against me, without a trial, and in the face of the facts that my regiment is thoroughly efficient and is in a better position to-day than when I assumed command, I am ordered to step down and out to make way for certain ambitious young officers, who seem to stand better with the department than I have the honour of doing.

That is a manly, straightforward letter, and I cannot imagine, in the face of that letter, the department will dream of taking this hole-in-corner inquiry as a serious ground for asking Colonel Hamilton to resign, without giving him a chance, with or without closed doors, of meeting his accusers and having the case thoroughly investigated. The hon member for North York referred to a case in Montreal, Col. Strathy's case. What happened there ? I understand that in that regiment there is a regular rebellion, that nearly all the officers, and not, as in this case, only a small portion of them, are utterly dissatisfied with their colonel. A large number of them have threatened resignation. According to to-day's papers, the two senior majors have resigned. We have not heard of resignations being threatened in the Queen's Own. Has Col. Strathy been ordered to resign? No, Sir ; the General has been sent down twice to try to make peace between Col. Strathy and his officers ? Has the General himself gone to Toronto once ? He has never gone near Toronto to make peace between Col. Hamilton and his officers. Is it possible, Sir—I am sorry to believe it possible, but I am afraid the people will think it so—that the reason of the unfair treatment of Col. Hamilton, and of the more patient treatment—I do not say it was unfairly favourable—treatment of Col. Strathy is that Col. Hamilton has been for years an active Liberal, while Col. Strathy has been just as active a Conservative ? One of these officers has the ear of the department and the other has not. The officers complained against Col. Hamilton and had him dismissed without a charge. The officers complained against Col. Strathy and they have been told to resign rather than that Col. Strathy should resign. Perhaps this was the right way to do it. But if it was right in Col. Strathy's case, why would it have been wrong in the case of the Queen's Own. It will be a sad day for the militia of this country when the people get the idea, as they will from cases like this, that the militia service is conducted on political principles. If there has been one thing that we have been more proud of than another in connection with the militia system, it was that there was no political favouritism about it, but that every man got his promotion according to his merits, whether he was a Liberal or a Conservative. Here is a case where no good reason can be given that I have heard of except that of Col. Hamilton does not profess the political creed of the present Government. I am sorry to make the charge, but it appears that there is no other way to account for the persecution. Fortunately, Parliament is open to the complaints of the people. If there is no justice to be obtained for any officer of the militia outside of Parliament, thank goodness his complaints can be ventilated here. If Col. Hamilton has done anything to disgrace himself as an officer and a gentleman, if he has not been efficient in the command of his regiment and assiduous in the performance of his duties, let him be dealt with after fair inquiry, and let him not be dealt with more leniently than any other officer. Justice is required in these cases or the militia service will become a disgrace to the country ; and it will be all in vain to send to England for improved arms for the militia, to build the forts upon our shores and to maintain our Royal Military College at great expense, if the confidence of the people in the Militia Department is shaken, as it will be, by a repetition of transactions such as that now under consideration.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would be the last man in this House to raise any question unfairly as to the methods by which discipline should be maintained in the militia force. But there are circumstances in the case which have been referred to which seem to me to be of an exceptional and extraordinary character. Now, one must admit at the outset that there may be cases in which those responsible for the administration of militia affairs would be justified in taking, would, in fact, be compelled to take measures for the dismissal of an officer against whom it was not possible to bring any charge that would call for a court of inquiry. Let me say a word or two with regard to this class of cases to see if it this is one of them. We can suppose the case of a man who has been captain of a company or even a field officer, and has shown himself efficient and has the certificates of legal qualification for promotion. Yet, after promotion has taken place and a little knowledge is acquired of his qualifications to fill the new position, it may be found that he is utterly unfit for his command. It might be found that, though he had fairly performed his duty in a subordinate, he was incapable of taking command of a regiment or of assuming rank involving greater responsibility than he had been accustomed to bear. It might be found that it was impossible for him to get on well with his subordinates, or he might develop peculiarities of character that were not noticed when he was in a subordinate position. One can easily understand that there are many qualifications which such a man might lack. The lives of men might be endangered through his inefficiency. His incompetency might show itself in a variety of ways, and while there might be no charge that would justify the holding of a court-martial or of a court of inquiry, it might be necessary for the efficiency of the service, that uch an officer should not remain in command. But, Sir, that would be a very extreme case, and it would be necessary to justify such interference by showing that there could be no possible question as to the necessity and validity of the action. Does that rule apply to this case ? Here we have an officer who has been for six years in command of the regiment. During the first four or five years of that command, so far as we know, no question was raised as to his capacity to fill the position to which he had been appointed. He had fairly earned his promotion, had risen through the ranks through the various grades of the service. He had every necessary qualification, and his appointment as commanding officer came in the usual course of seniority, I presume, and nobody raised any question as to his fitness. Now, has anything taken place during his period of command that would, in the public eye, justify the inference that he is not fit to command. It has been shown by the last speaker (Mr. Edgar) that the regiment during his command has attained the highest state of efficiency. No reason is suggested on the score of the colonel's inability to command the regiment, on account of his control or discipline. On the contrary, everything that a commanding officer could do to promote the efficiency of the regiment has been done. Then, on what possible grounds can the authorities have arrived at the conclusion that this officer is no longer entitled to command ? There must be something that is not apparent to the public eye. There must be something below the surface which has justified, in the first place, the Deputy Adjutant General of the district making a report. We cannot assume, we will not—at any rate, I will not—assume that the officer in command of the forces has acted upon anything but what he believes to be a reliable report to justify him in recommending the action he has recommended to the Militia Department. Now, we inquire, how is it that that report has been arrived at ? We know it is proper that officers in command shall make reports as to the efficiency of those under their command, and if the officer commanding that regiment had been found to be so incompetent, or so inefficient for any of the reasons I have referred to, as to make his remaining in command any longer a disadvantage to the service, why, that must be stated in a report from the officer who is his senior. Well, that officer, of course, is the Deputy Adjutant General of the district, and we must assume that the General in command has acted upon some such report. Well, in the absence of any apparent cause for such action being taken, we must naturally look below the surface and try to understond what possible grounds there may be for it. Then the Deputy Adjutant General, I say, must have had some grounds to go upon, and as it is not from anything apparent in the condition of the regiment, then it must certainly be from some circumstances connected with the interior economy of the regiment. It must be something which has taken place of which the public at large are not aware, and which it appears to me they have no means of arriving at. It would appear, then, that there must have been some interior motion on the part of some of the officers of the regiment to bring about this result. Well, Sir, one can hardly imagine that such could be the case, because there is no principle more distinctly laid down in the Queen's Regulations, there is no principle which must necessarily be acted upon more strictly, if anything like discipline is to be maintained, than that which provides that there shall be nothing like a combination on the part of any officers, or men, no matter whether they are officers, non-commissioned officers, or men :

> 140. One of the fundamental and most necessary rules of military discipline it is to forbid anything bearing the appearance of combination, to obtain redress of grievance, among individuals composing a military force. If officers or men, whether on actual service or otherwise, have any grievance, their complaint should be laid before their commanding officer in respectful language, each individual speaking for himself alone. Appeals for redress by " round robins," or by means of any document bearing the signature of more than one complainant, are strictly forbidden.
> 141. Meetings of officers may be called only by the commanding officer, who is held responsible that they shall be for a proper purpose.

That is one of the Queen's Regulations bearing expressly upon this point ; so that if there has been anything like a combination among the officers of this regiment in order to bring about the retirement of the officer whose conduct is called in question, it is in direct defiance of the Queen's Regulations ; it is in direct defiance of one of the most essential principles which requires discipline in all militia affairs. Now, Sir, if such has been the case, and if it is possible that any combination among the officers, any dissatisfaction of this kind, no matter for what purpose intended, can be brought to bear upon the Government without the knowledge of the commanding officer, for the purpose of bringing about his retirement, I say that no commanding officer of a regiment can consider such a position one that he can hold with honour or self-respect. If I am to be at the mercy of any combination among my officers, no matter for what object, who make complaints to my commanding officer and those are acted upon without my knowledge, why, Sir, I could no longer continue to hold that position either with respect to myself or with benefit to the regiment under my command. This is a question which every officer commanding a regiment or a company in this country, is strictly interested; for while I say we must admit the validity of the rule that cases may arise in which the direct action of the Government may be necessary, those must be limited strictly to cases where the incompetence or the inefficiency is, at any rate, so apparent that there can be no question whatever as to the necessity of a remedy being applied. But if there can be a cabal among the officers, if there can be even any insubordination which is to be taken hold of by the officer in command of the forces and acted upon without notice to the commanding officer himself, or anything in the nature of an inquiry, where there is no possible show of reason why that officer should be deprived of his command, so far as anything appears in regard to efficiency or to the good conduct of his regiment, then I say that the position of no commanding officer is safe. If it is not desirable that an officer should remain more than a certain number of years in command of a regiment, then let that rule be laid down and let us understand it. If an officer is to be retired because he has been long enough in the service of the force when he has been there six and a half years, what justification can there be for myself, for instance, remaining in command of my regiment for over twenty years? If it is necessary that he should be retired, it is three times more necessary that I should be retired, and it is necessary that other officers should be retired who have been six years in command. There is no such rule in the service, there is no such rule requiring the retirement of an officer at a certain date. There is such a rule in the Imperial service that has been acted upon in recent years, and with great harshness, I think, and with no great benefit to the efficiency of the service. But though there was such a rule, it is exceedingly unreasonable to say that in order to gratify the ambition of somebody who wishes to obtain a command and who excites a cabal among the officers of the regiment for that purpose, therefore a commanding officer is to be compelled to retire, or compelled to resign, when no better reason can be assigned than such as exists in this instance. It does appear to me that in this case the conduct of the Administration with regard to Colonel Hamilton requires some explanation better than has yet been given to this House. I feel personally interested in this matter, and I am sure every officer commanding a regiment must feel interested, because the measure dealt out to Colonel Hamilton may be dealt out to any of us. We might any of us, according to what appears on the surface, be at the mercy of any cabal among our officers, of which we may know nothing, of which we may hear nothing, of which we may remain in absolute ignorance until action is taken, when it is altogether too late for us to save a reputation which we have hitherto honourably enjoyed. I quite understand that no inquiry is given in this case. I quite understand that it is futile for him to ask for an inquiry because there is no charge; no charge is made, and it rests entirely and must rest entirely upon the report of the officer commanding the district. His report is, of course, a confidential report, and such a report can only be acted upon when there is such apparent grounds and such strong reason for action as certainly do not appear in this case. Had the regiment been inefficient, had there been any general expression of discontent among either officers or men, had there been any single evidence of either one of these things, either inefficiency on the part of the regiment itself, for which the commanding officer is responsible, or had there been any such general expression of discontent, of which of course there might be evidence, and had that been put in officially, in regular form——

Mr. DICKEY. That is expressly alleged.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That is not alleged in any such form as justifies the action that has been taken.

Mr. EDGAR. That is expressly denied by Colonel Hamilton.

Mr. DICKEY. That is alleged, though, on behalf of his department.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But what certain knowledge have the department in this case? In this case there has been no resignation, nobody has resigned. What evidence have we of this discontent? There is not the slightest evidence of it; it rests entirely upon the ipse dixit of somebody who is responsible neither to this House not to the country. The Government have no knowledge whatever of the existence of any such cause as justifies the retirement of this officer. I take the case that occurred in Montreal the other day, and to which reference was made. That stands in a very different position. The discussion has shown great discontent and dissatisfaction among a number of the officers of the regiment. There is no proof, however, that dissatisfaction prevails among the officers of the Queen's Own, and, at all events, no evidence has been brought to prove dissatisfaction. Now, why is that difference in the treatment of these cases? I am not going to charge that any action has been taken on political grounds. One of the strongest reasons why I have always been in favour of an Imperial officer being in command of the forces in Canada is that I expect from such an officer a more thorough and impartial consideration of all questions, either as regards personal or political interests, than would be obtained from an officer who belonged to the forces in this country; and if I cannot place absolute confidence in the Imperial officer selected and sent out here, who is supposed to be entirely free from bias, then one of the strongest reasons for my constant advocacy of the appointment of an Imperial officer will be removed. I repeat that I would not impute to the commanding officer any influences of that kind; but we have before the House public statements of the difference in the treatment of the two cases. In the first case, the regiment was practically disorganized, and a very considerable number of officers had actually resigned; yet we find matters patched up, the colonel allowed to continue in command, two majors have either resigned or been dismissed. But all this disorganization does not appear to be considered important. That regiment never attained the same efficiency as the Queen's Own. There were all the evidences of complete demoralization and disorder in the Montreal regiment, yet the colonel is retained in command; but in the case of the Queen's Own, the colonel is most harshly and unfairly dealt with, so far as we are able to judge from outside circumstances, and he is suspended from his command under circumstances which, to say the least, to an officer who has served for many years in the force, must be exceedingly unsatisfactory. I quite admit the necessity of the rule by which the Government shall, in certain cases, interfere and take command over an officer who is manifestly and entirely unfit for his position; but the people of the country will require that there shall be some tangible evidence of that inefficiency, and if it is merely a question that a commander cannot get on with his officers, there must be better evidence adduced than has been submitted in this case, and there must not be suspicion, either that political influence has been brought to bear, or that there has been anything like combination on the part of officers to bring about the result, in order to secure personal advantage to themselves.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman think that an officer should or should not have the right to be heard before a decision is arrived at?

Mr. O'BRIEN. That will depend entirely on the case. Certainly an officer should be communicated with; he ought to be made aware of the grounds of objection. This may have been done in this case in question, but it does not so appear. The officer says it was not done.

Mr. MULOCK. The answer he got when complaint was made was that he should send in his resignation.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The treatment in the case was exceedingly harsh, and it will not be considered satisfactory unless a better explanation can be given than has already been furnished. Although I did not expect at this time to discuss militia matters, but to bring up some questions in that regard on the Estimates, yet as this subject is now before the House, I will take advantage of the circumstance. I ask how it is that this Government, which acted with such promptness in the case of Colonel Hamilton, and which took so much trouble to smooth over the militia difficulties in Montreal, and which has recently appointed as Deputy Adjutant General, a man whose qualifications are unknown to the force, at all events, and who has never done anything to warrant the position he has secured, has ever since the 3rd or 4th of January left the office of Adjutant General unfilled. This is one of the most scandalous acts connected with the militia, for it occurs at a time when fresh arms are being obtained for the service, at a time when the country was considered to be threatened with danger—this time was selected to dismiss an old and competent officer, who, though not brilliant, knew thoroughly his duties as adjutant general, and the Government then left the office vacant for three months Why was that done? What influence has been brought to prevent that office being filled? We hear a great many rumours, and hon. members have undertaken to bring political influence to bear in support of the appointment of some certain individual to the position. Colonel Powell should not have been retired, if it was necessary to retire him, until some one had been selected for the appointment, and was prepared to take up his duties. How can it be expected that an officer doing temporary duty can do this work and carry it on with efficiency under such circumstances? He does not know but that any day some one may step into the office and take the position permanently, and the fact that the Government, in the present condition of affairs, left the office vacant under these circumstances, is a wrong for which the Government should be held responsible and punished by this House. At a time of danger, when it is considered probable that Canada may be called upon to assist in the defence of the Empire, the Government choose to dismiss an efficient public servant, the Adjutant General, and then wait for some political exigency to arise before they appoint his successor, and an appointment has not been made up to this day. This is one of the worst acts connected with the present administration of the Militia Department, the keeping of this office vacant at this particular time. There are important questions to be considered, including providing new arms, preparation for annual drills, and an immense amount of work connected with the routine of the service. I again ask, why is the office still vacant? Was not Colonel Otter sent to England to take a special course of instruction in order to qualify him for this position ? Yet he is passed over. Then there is another officer of long experience in New Brunswick who is passed over. If the appointment is to go according to seniority, one of these officers is entitled to the position—I do not say whether they are the best fitted for the position or not. But the best officer should be selected, and to bring political influence on the Government by deputations in order to press the claims of certain officers, is an outrage on the militia force.

A discussion has taken place with respect to the Kingston Military College. I am quite tired talking about militia matters, as I never find any particular benefits result from it. When the present Minister of Justice took that office, I had some hopes of improvement, and I yet believe that had he remained there, those hopes would have been fulfilled, and we would have had a thoroughly efficient Minister at the head of the department. I deeply regret that when he had become somewhat conversant with militia affairs he was removed to another, I will not say a higher sphere. That hon. gentleman always showed intelligence and wilingness to listen to representations made to him. We have now a Minister who does not know anything about the Militia Department, who never troubled himself about militia matters, and the efficient deputy head, by whose advice he might be guided, has been retired, and the whole department is demoralized.

Mr. MULOCK. He is not a military man.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I was going on to say—and I have expressed this opinion during many years—that while the Military College is entered under military expenditure, it is of no particular value to the militia force ; it does not benefit the force in the slightest degree, and we do not get from it any officers into our regiments. I venture to say that there are not five officers holding commands in the active force who passed through the Royal Military College. Some of its graduates are in the Mounted Police, and they do valuable service to the country, no doubt ; some are in the Civil Service departments, and on the marine service, but they are not encouraged to enter the active force, they do not enter it, and, so far as the college is concerned, it is of no value to the force whatever. It may be all right for the Government to maintain such a school. Properly conducted, it would be the best school in the Dominion, and if I had a son I would send him there ; but I would not send him there with a view to his subsequent appointment on the active force. Some of the graduates earn distinction in the Imperial service. I have no objection to that, I am sure we are proud to see them occupying those positions, and it is satisfactory to know that Canadians who graduated from our military college can enter into the Imperial service, and distinguish thmeslves, as many of them are doing to-day. But that is a totally different question from the efficiency of the active force, because we do not get the benefit of the services of these graduates. The men may go elsewhere and we do not have them. Therefore, if you like to maintain the college well and good, but do not charge its cost against the active militia, and do not delude yourself with the idea, that by spending $60,000 or $70,000 a year on the Military College, you are doing any benefit to the active force, because practically you are not. I have made a suggestion —well, there is no use making suggestions here about the militia, because nobody pays attention to them—but there is one suggestion I made which I think might have been of some practical value. That is, that every graduate of the Military College should be at once attached to the regiment of the county he belongs to. I am sure the young men would be pleased at that, and then they could go to the annual camps and assist in training and drilling the men. If that were done, we could get some benefit from the Military College, but we do not get any benefit now. Even that suggestion was pooh-poohed, because it was said that it would interfere with the June examinations. Which is of the more consequence : that the June examinations should be carried on at a particular time, or that this college which costs $70,000 a year, should be made of some value to us ? The suggestion is one which I repeat. It is of practical value, for it would bring the college into harmony with the forces, and make the graduates of some service to us. I fail to see why there should not be classes at the college which officers of the active force could join and be instructed by these fifteen professors you have there. The present course of the college is not suitable for that purpose, but surely it could be made suitable. We have three or four schools throughout the country maintained at enormous cost, under the name of this permanent force, and which, although they are a heavy drain upon our resources, do not attain the object for which they are intended. Has any one ever taken the trouble to calculate what it costs to train a single officer at our military schools? Why, the amount is something fabulous. I am opposed altogether to maintaining this permanent force on its present basis. It is too small to be a standing army. In case of war, what would become of it ? To be of any service at all, it would have to be broken up and the men distributed among the different regiments.

Mr. PRIOR. Others want the permanent force, if you do not.

Mr. O'BRIEN. We do not want it in its present shape. We have 100 men in Toronto, who half the time are doing fatigue duty and mounting guard. The number there could be cut down to at least one-half, and still do all the work that it is intended to do. That permanent force of ours is just a delusion. I quite admit the advantages we get from it, but I say they are not at all commensurate with the expense it is to the country. I for one should be pleased to see some more efficient method adopted by which these schools should be utilized for giving instruction to officers. Twenty officers is the greatest number which can be taken into that school at Toronto at any one time. They remain there three months, and it is not at all too long, but the course is so expensive that very few men can afford the time and money necessary to take it. There is not accommodation, even for those who do attend. The whole thing might be put on a more efficient and less expensive basis. There, we have an expensive corps ; everything is on the very highest style of military art, and expenses of every possible description have been incurred to maintain a force, which is not of any more value than any one company of active militia in the country, and yet it costs as much as the whole drill of the active forces. We are spending altogether too much upon accessories, and altogether too little upon the main essentials. We had reason to hope this year that we would have a change so far as the drill is concerned, but present appearances do not seem to point towards that result being obtained. I do hope, at any rate, whatever else is done, that this will be accomplished, and I for one trust that hon. gentlemen opposite, when the militia estimates come to be considered, will supplement our loyal resolutions by voting all that is necessary to enable us to accomplish whatever can be accomplished under our present system.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question. He referred to the three months' course required from officers desiring to attend the permanent corps for instruction. The hon. no doubt remembers that under the old system the instruction in the military schools was so conducted that men could pursue their ordinary avocations during part of the day, and were not required to go into barracks. Under that system very great numbers went through the schools. Does the hon. gentleman prefer the present system, whereby they are required to abandon their avocations for three months ? Which does the hon. gentleman think produces the better results ?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the present system is decidedly the better. As far as officers in country corps are concerned, when they go to Toronto, of course they cannot pursue their ordinary avocations. I take it that it requires all their time to learn their duties, and I do not think there is any fault with the present system on that ground, But I do say that much more could be made of it. The expenses might be largely reduced, so that the cost per man to the officers who are instructed might be diminished. We go to needless expense, and to talk of it as a permanent force, or to speak of it as the standing army of Canada, and to offer it to the Imperial Government—well, of all the ridiculous pieces of braggadocio, that offer was the worst that ever was perpetrated. The offer of the Royal Regiment of Canadian Infantry to assist Her Majesty's forces, which was made through the High Commissioner some short time ago, was most absurd. Of all the preposterous and ridiculous proposals that was the most ridiculous. It could not possibly have accomplished anything. Made in such a form as it was, it did strike me as the most preposterous piece of bombast that ever was perpetrated.

Mr. DICKEY. Does the hon. gentleman think that we could not take charge of the military works at Halifax and free a British regiment there ?

Mr. O'BRIEN. You could not take charge of the works at Halifax without destroying the value for which your force exists. That force is intended to instruct our officers, and if you put it on garrison duty at Halifax, your instruction ceases just at the time you want it most. These schools are only useful as schools, and to assume that the companies there are a regular force is contrary to the intention for which we vote the money here. We never voted money to have a standing army of 300 or 400 men, but for the purpose of having schools of instruction. I admit that under the Act there is power to use them for other purposes, but they never have been employed for maintaining fortifications. Their only use is in the military schools, and they can do nothing else. I say, Sir, that if there is any fighting to be done, the proper force to do it is the active force of Canada, and not these paid pet companies. I do not want to see them put forward as representing the active militia of Canada. They are a distinct and different force, and if there is any work to be done at Halifax or anywhere else, the proper force to do it is our active militia, and not this permanent corps which is intended only for giving instruction. The active militia of Canada will never submit to the attempt to put these permanent companies forward to represent our active forces. It is time that those who are responsible for the administration of our military affairs should take the question of instruction into consideration, and endeavour to find out whether we cannot obtain better results at a less cost than we do at present. There are a variety of other things connected with our military system which one would like to talk about, but for my part I have talked on them in my early days in this House, and I found it was mere waste of breath and time, and I had to give it up. I will endeavour to do my own duty as best as I can in the force. Practically the force remains to-day, in spite of all the money that has been spent upon it, in exactly the same position that Robertson Ross left it twenty-five or thirty years ago. Not one single improvement has been made since then, with the single exception of the establishment of these military schools, which have cost the country an amount altogether disproportionate to the amount of benefit we receive from them. When we have a Minister who knows something about the force, and its needs, if we ever arrive at such a happy state of affairs, I hope that matter will be taken up and dealt with on a satisfactory basis.

Mr. STAIRS. Before this question is put, I would like to say one or two words respecting the Royal Military College. I approve of the suggestion made by the hon. member from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) that it is very desirable indeed that some means be devised for attaching the cadets to the regiments of the active force in the district from which they come. I know that there is a very strong feeling among the cadets in favour of this. They want to have the opportunity of drilling with the active militia force in the camps. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the affairs of the militia force just now to say how this can be done; but I feel confident that means can be devised to enable the cadets to have this advantage, and I commend the matter to the attention of the hon. member of the Government who is representing the Militia Department in the House. With respect to the question of civil and military training or military training only in the Royal Military College, I think that without the civil training you would find that the attendance at the college would very greatly decrease. You would find it impossible to get any considerable number of men who had graduated in other colleges to attend the Royal Military College for a military training alone. I feel this the more strongly, from personal experience, because I have a son in the college; and I feel quite certain that I would not have sent him there had it not been that a civil and military training were combined in the college. I am not certain that this militates in any way against the interest of the militia force or tends in any way to lessen the military spirit or the chances of the cadets, or to lessen the number of young men in Canada taking up the military profession. I feel sure that a great many young men who have attended the college at Kingston without any intention of taking up the military profession for life, have eventually, as a result of the military spirit that has been stimulated by the education they receive there, taken commissions in the Imperial service.

After Recess.

Mr. STAIRS. Before six o'clock I was pointing out that if the civil training in the Military College were dispensed with, it would be difficult to keep up the attendance at the college, because the class of young men in Canada whose parents have the means to enable them to take a course at a regular college preparatory to entering the Military College, are comparatively few. Most of our young men, after having finished their education, feel obliged to enter some active occupation at once. Many instances might be cited of graduates of the Military College at Kingston, who went there for the civil as well as for the military education, having afterwards entered the Imperial service, and having added largely to the reputation of Canada in the eyes of the world. The great object to be aimed at is, I think, to increase the number of cadets. The question of the cost of the education of each cadet in the college has been referred to. I have not looked into the question closely; but it seems to me that it may not be possible to reduce the expense of maintaining the college while at the same time keeping up its efficiency. I do not mean to say that every proper attempt should not be made to economize by cutting off every useless expense; but the main items of expense, such as the cost of teachers, I imagine may be difficult to reduce to any great extent. Therefore every endeavour should be made to encourage the young men of the country to attend the college. Sixty students in attendance at such a college seems to be a very small number. There is at present only sleeping accommodation in the college for sixty or seventy cadets. The visitors in their report recommend that that accommodation should be increased to about 100. This is a recommendation which I think should be adopted. Then, I think the Minister of Militia should consider a greater number of what means can be adopted to encourage the young men of Canada to attend the college. To this end the parents of young men should be made acquainted with the fact that the advantages to be obtained at the college are such as to give young men a better start in life and a better chance of obtaining employment, than can be obtained from any other kind of education. It has been suggested that commissions in the permanent force and also positions in the Civil Service, where technical qualifications are required, should be as far as possible given by the Government to graduates of the college. This is a very old suggestion, which has been made time and again; but I do not know that anything very practical has yet been done in that direction, and I would again urge it upon the attention of the Minister of Militia. Respecting the cost of educating students in the Military College, I think we should have some idea of the cost of educating students in other colleges. In this connection, I was very much interested in noticing in the report a statement given by General Cameron, the commandant of the college, in a letter addressed by him on the 17th of March last to the Deputy Minister of Militia, in which he gives a comparison between the cost of each graduate in the Royal Military College and the cost of each B.A. graduate of Toronto University. This comparison was given in reply to a statement made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) in this House. General Cameron said:

In my opinion, $5,085 would not be a high price at which to value the militarily trained graduate,—having regard to the purpose for which training has been given to him. Be this as it may, however, I venture to submit the annexed statements by way of comparison between the cost of producing a university graduate upon whom the country has no claim, and the cost of a Royal Military College graduate. In each case the method of estimating the cost is that adopted by Mr. Mulock, M.P.:

Cost of each graduate, Royal Military College, to the country, according to Mr. Mulock, M.P., up to 30th June, 1893:—

do Maintenance	565,151 73
do Repairs to buildings	69,058 72
14 years' interest on $110,321.88 at 4 per cent	61,780 18
Gross Expenditure	$1,271,602 66
Deduct fees, &c., received	279,917 80
Net expenditure by Government	99,684 68
195 graduates, $991,684.86, each chargeable to Government	5,085 56
One-fourth of this amount for annual charge, each graduate Royal Military College	1,271 39

I understand that General Cameron gives this as the hon. gentleman's own figures.

Mr. MULOCK. If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, he does not, nor are they anybody's figures. I am amazed that General Cameron should place on record a statement that is absolutely incorrect. The country does not contribute more than $60,000 a year towards the Arts Society of Toronto University, and there are trained for that nearly 1,000 undergraduates a year, between 800 and 1,000. The public treasury contributes less for the education of whatever may be the number of graduates in Toronto University than it does for the fifty-seven graduates in the Military College. It is a disgraceful report for a man to send to the Government.

Mr. STAIRS. I will just give General Cameron's figures, and of course the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman said they were mine.

Mr. STAIRS. I did not say that the figures which apply to the University of Toronto were the hon. gentleman's, but only the figures that apply to the Royal Military College.

Annual cost, as in 1893, of each B.A. graduate of Toronto University, calculated by the method adopted by Mr. Mulock, M.P., in the case of the Royal Military College:—

At p. 23, "University of Toronto, report of committee appointed by Board of Trustees, 1893, capital and income accounts," sites, buildings and contents, in university use, valued at $1,328,966.40, at 4 per cent.	$ 53,158 65
At p. 24, unproductive land, valued at $1,029,677.72, at 4 per cent.	51,187 10
At p. 29, same annual expenditure	116,856 50
Total	221,202 25
*100 B.A. graduates in 1893, then annual cost per graduate	2,212 02
Less received in fees	31 46
Chargeable to Endowment Fund, for each graduate	2,180 56

*Number taken from records.

Comparison of results, according to Mr. Mulock's method of calculation:

Annual charges against endowment for each Toronto University B.A. graduate	$ 2,180 56

I do not understand General Cameron to contend that the cost of the undergraduates as given in his statement regarding the Toronto University, is the cost to the public. I presume there must have been a very large fund independent of that altogether. I only mention this for the purpose of pointing out that in estimating the cost of graduates of the Royal Military College, we must not be unfair to the college, and should make every allowance. It is not to be expected that in a college, which is only educating at one time about sixty pupils, the cost will not be much larger than in a very large institution like Toronto University.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As regards the case of Colonel Hamilton, I am not prepared to speak. The only thing which I would press on the attention of the Government is this one point. It appears from the statement made to-day, which the Government are bound to take notice of, that an inquiry was made into that officer's conduct without his knowledge. If that was done, it appears to me, in all conscience and reason, that Colonel Hamilton has a perfect right to demand that a court of inquiry should sit upon him. If I understood the Minister of Justice (Mr. Dickey) aright, he declared that a report had been made, and, having made that statement publicly on behalf of the Government, Colonel Hamilton is undoubtedly entitled to demand an inquiry and to demand that he should not be dismissed without it. There can be no reasonable doubt about that, and I trust that before this discussion closes the hon. Minister of Justice, who is acting for the Department of Militia, which he formerly represented, will see fit to assure us that that will be done. However, my more immediate purpose was to say a few words as to the position of the Royal Military College itself. I have told the House before that I have reason to believe that there is a great prejudice at present in the public mind against the college. That is in part, I think, an unreasonable prejudice, and in part founded on a misapprehension of some portions of the case, to which I shall call the attention of the House. In part, however, it has arisen from a grave piece of maladministration on the part of the Government, which must be redressed if that college is to do anything like the work which it ought to do. With respect to the question of expenditure, I would like to call attention to the fact, that while there is no doubt that the college is only doing at this moment one half of the amount of work it was intended to do—for it was framed on the understanding that we would have about 120 pupils there—still, after all is said and done, the expense is not quite as great as it is supposed to be. I find in the Public Accounts of last year that the total expenses are put down at $64.568, which, I presume, includes all the expenses. I find that, on the other side of the sheet, there are credited for receipts, which I presume are the sums received from the pupils, $19.274. The House will therefore observe that the net cost to the country is $45.294 for fifty-seven pupils. That is only one-half, or less than one-half the number we ought to have, and if we had the whole 120, the probabilities are that the net cost per head would be reduced to a certainty one-third, and perhaps very nearly one-half. There is no doubt that this is a very heavy sum, $45,000 a year for 57 pupils, of whom 12 or 14 are all who graduate at present. Still it may be well to observe that when this college was founded it was founded upon what may be called the West Point model. I noticed that in the case of West Point so far as I am able to follow the statements contained in the American reports, in the year 1892, which is the last report I have, they had 252 pupils. I think the cadets do not pay anything.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Some of the cadets are paid.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They get an allowance of $20 a month.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But I think they pay something out of that, so that it is out of one pocket and into the other. I was going to say—and it is well that the House should be in possession of the facts—that the gross cost apparently, I say "apparently" because one is obliged to take the information as it is in the military reports, which may or may not be accurate, is $310,000. This is exclusive of the pay of a detachment of cavalry and a detachment of infantry who are told off for service at the school and who answer, no doubt, to some of the thirty-seven employees of the Kingston Military College. Though we have only half as many pupils as we ought to have, and the cost per head is increased beyond what it ought to be, the cost per cadet is about $800 at our institution and in the case of West Point is about $1,200. That is worth recollecting, because it shows that in any college for a special purpose such as this you must be prepared to pay a considerably larger sum per head than you would pay in the case of an ordinary collegiate institution. I may observe that the object which the Mackenzie Administration had in view when we instituted this college was this—we desired to provide a reasonable number of trained officers for the service of the militia and the Mounted Police and of our permanent corps. And in the next place, my friend Mr. Mackenzie, who, as the House may remember, had the entire control not only of the railways and canals but of all public works, had the idea, which must go for what it is worth, that it would be well to offer a very limited number of appointments in the public service in the way of engineering appointments as prizes among the best men of this college. To that we subsequently added, by concurrence with the British Government, four commissions in the British regular service. Our idea was that we would have a graduating class from 20 to 40 each year, and we would give these graduates five or six appointments in the public service here and the four British commissions to be distributed among the best men. We had no idea of everybody who graduated claiming an appointment as of right, but we thought the public service would be benefited by distributing a number of commissions in our military service, if I may use that term, or in the engineering branch of the Public Works among the best of these men. And I may observe also that under us the appointments were a sort of scholarship or prize. The sum required to be paid by each pupil was much less than is paid at present, and the consequence was that we had a vastly larger selection. There were very few substantial farmers in Canada at that day who could not afford the sum that was requisite to enable a lad to go through the college during our regime; and, as a matter of fact, a number of the students in the early days were sons of farmers or sons of artisans, and I am glad to tell the House that not a few of these have distinguished themselves in very high degree in the British service and elsewhere. However, what we are more concerned with is the position of the college to-day. It will be within the recollection of the House, I am sure that it is in the recollection of the Minister of Justice, that our late and lamented friend Col. Denison last year called the attention of the House in very strong language indeed to the condition of the college. Those hon. gentlemen who wish to refer to that speech, will find it in the " Hansard " of 3rd July, 1895, page 3781. They will see that Col. Denison's statement amounted to this : He declared, speaking with knowledge—and as a man who has paid great attention to these matters his statement was worth having—that it had come to his knowledge that the college had run down to a very great extent. He declared that whereas, as the Minister of Justice stated, and as I can testify, for a very considerable time the college had maintained a high reputation, and that graduates from the college had distinguished themselves in the British service and elsewhere, that within the last three or four years, there had been a marked decadence in the college, the standard had not been maintained the college was falling behind. And he attributed that result in a large degree to the fact that the present commandant had passed that time of life at which he could be expected to take an active interest in military matters and was a gentleman who had never had any special qualifications for the post. That statement I emphasized and repeated on the floor of the House, and if the House will permit me, as this is a matter of considerable public interest, I will take the liberty of calling attention to what I said on that occasion ; and it will be as well, because I shall have proof to offer presently as to the accuracy of the statements I have made :

> I want to call the attention of the committee, and especially the attention of the Minister of Militia himself, to the undoubted fact, which he can verify if he chooses, that the Military College at the present is not maintaining anything like the high standard which it maintained a few years ago. I am very sorry indeed to differ entirely from the Minister and his authorities on that subject ; but I speak with knowledge, after having consulted men who are at the very least quite as well qualified to offer an opinion upon it as the Minister of Militia can possibly be. I state here on my responsibility, that it is a known fact—right well known to the old graduates of the college and right well known, if the hon. gentleman chooses to consult them, to many officers in Canada and in the British service to-day, that the college is not maintaining anything like the high standard which it attained a few years ago. I want the hon. Minister to understand that distinctly. I make that statement, on my responsibility, as one of those originally concerned in founding the institution, and who takes a great interest in it. I further say that there is no doubt whatever a first-class mistake was made when an officer on the retired list was put in command of the college. I do not want to say a word against Major General Cameron in his personal capacity, but it was a most unfortunate and ill-advised act when an officer who had ceased to be actively concerned in the management of any military force was put in command. If you are going to keep the college up to anything like the standard it has maintained until recently, you must have an officer in command who has a live interest in the service, who has not retired, but is looking forward to active employment, and who has a distinct personal interest in keeping himself in touch with all the latest military improvements and advance in military science. That no retired officer can by any possibility do. It is not done at this moment, and men who are in active service to-day, graduates of that college, are perfectly aware of the facts which I have stated. The college is not maintaining and will not maintain its high reputation until you obtain as commandant an officer in active service with a future before him.—" Hansard," July 3rd, 1895.

Since then, it may be in consequence of my remarks, then of the remarks of Col. Denison and others, a commission visited the college, I suppose at the instance of the Minister of Militia of the day. Now, Sir, we have here the report of that commission, and it is very remarkable that it bears out in the most emphatic fashion the declarations which I then made, and which Colonel Denison then made. I take the first statement, and that is with respect to the matter of drill, a matter of considerable moment in a military college :

> The drill is not up to date, and, according to evidence brought before the board there is a slackness in discipline. With a view to correcting these defects, the board is of opinion that the college should be brought more than at present under the supervision of higher military authority.

Now, such language in the official report on this question, made by three officers in the employment of the Government, is a very grave thing indeed. These gentlemen will not go out of their way, we may rest assured, for the purpose of reflecting unfavourably on an official like the commandant of the Royal Military College, known to be a near relative of Ministers in this Government. Then they go on to say—and this is another matter of very considerable moment to which attention should be called :

> These boards consider that the education of the cadets who attend the Military College, should be continuous, be thorough, so far as the means within reach will permit, and of a modern type——

And here I call the attention of the Minister of Justice who, in his capacity of Minister of Militia, was utterly disbelieving of the statements made by Colonel Denison and myself. Here is what the late Adjutant General of Canada, Colonel Duchesnay, Colonel Smith, and Captain Duncan Macpherson, report :

> —and that, in order to insure this desirable result, the commandant should be changed at short intervals of, say, five or seven years, as may be found expedient or necessary ; also, that as long as it is necessary to employ the services of a military officer from Great Britain as commandant, he be required to be an officer of not higher rank than Lieutenant-Colonel on the active list of the Imperial regular army. By following such a plan, new blood, so to speak, will be constantly infused, and the system will be prevented from running into a groove by carrying with it instruction in respect of those changes in army administration that experience may suggest as conducive to the public good.

Now, Sir, it is not easy in official language to find a stronger condemnation of the conduct of the Government in keeping there a retired officer of more or less advanced years, entirely out of touch with the progress of military ideas. We know that these official documents, particularly under the circumstances that I have alluded to, are generally very carefully worded. They imply very much more than they state openly; and there can be no doubt therefore that when you find four officers of this Government,—no, one of them, I believe, is an officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the other three are officers of this Government, although I am not sure whether Colonel Powell was retired at the time—you find these gentlemen corroborating in the strongest way the statements made by myself on the floor of this House less than one year ago, that I could hardly have asked for a more complete vindication of the statement I then made than is contained in those sentences. But, Sir, we go further. Not merely do the Board of Visitors speak in this manner—and mind you this is a unanimous report by the military part, because Mr. Sandford Fleming could not be expected to report on matters of drill, or discipline, or upon the question whether the commandant should be in active service or not. But we find that the gentleman who is now the officer commanding the militia, on the 2nd December, 1895, reports as follows:—

> I have the honour to submit for your consideration the following points which struck me as deserving of notice, at my late inspection of the Royal Military College at Kingston:
> 1. The Commandant.—I am decidedly of opinion that there should be a limit to his term of appointment. I cannot but think that after a certain lapse of time, and man loses that zeal, activity and interest which it is so absolutely essential should be kept up in the case of the officer in chief command of a military educational establishment. Young men are especially quick to receive impressions; and energy and great personal smartness of dress and appearance are, in my opinion, essential to form a good commandant. In my opinion, this position is one that should be thrown open to some exceptionally smart, energetic officer of the Canadian militia. But there should be a fixed limit of the term of appointment, renewable, perhaps, for a limited extension at the option of the Government.

Now, Sir, those are two exceedingly strong expressions of opinion coming from the quarters they do. I have beside that another extract. The hon. gentleman will remember that I spoke, as I said, with the authority of officers of experience, also with the authority of the graduates who had passed through the college, and who I believe, to their credit be it said, one and all retain a lively interest in this institution. I have here an extract from the proceedings of the 12th Annual Meeting of the Royal Military College Club of Canada, held on Saturday, 29th February, 1896, at the city of Kingston. This club is composed of the various graduates within reach, who have passed through the Military College, and this is what they say:

> The hon. Secretary was instructed to send the following to the Minister of Militia and Defence, and to every member of the House of Commons, and such other persons as the managing committee may think fit, as being the opinion expressed at the Royal Military College Club meeting.
> That the Royal Military College Club of Canada, having had before them for some years the knowledge of the unsatisfactory state of affairs within the Royal Military College, have noted with great satisfaction the fact that the real condition of the college has been recently brought to the notice of the Government, in the report furnished by the Board of Visitors for 1895, feeling sure that the points therein noted and the recommendations therein contained, call for prompt action on the part of the Government.
> That up to the present time the only effect of this report has been to create in the minds of the public an impression in the highest degree detrimental to the college, and that unless immediate action is taken with regard to this report, the result will be a still further falling off in the number of candidates for admission at the coming entrance examination, and that this will give increased cause for objection to those who base their opposition to the college on the grounds of an expenditure for maintenance disproportionate to the number of cadets in residence.
> That with regard to the points noticed by the board as being unsatisfactory, as also with regard to the recommendations made by the board, and most particularly with regard to that recommendation having reference to the rank and appointment of commandants, this meeting desires to express its fullest concurrence.
> That it is emboldened to do so, in view of the fact that every member of this club, having passed through the college at different periods of its existence, the past and the present state of the college being within the personal knowledge of the various members of the club, and that the present admittedly defective administration and its consequences, as shown in the report of the Board of Visitors, are matters of the most heartfelt interest and concern to them.
> That this meeting ventures to press upon the notice of the Government these existing imperfections in administration, drill, discipline and methods of instruction, mentioned by the Board of Visitors for 1895; also the serious injury to the college that will result from allowing these imperfections to exist without steps being taken to immediately remedy them in accordance with the recommendations of the board.

Sir, it is not often that it has been in the power of anybody to submit from such sources as these, such a mass of independent testimony, not merely corroborating, but proving up to the hilt, every word that I said in my place in Parliament in 1895 on this subject. You have got, Sir, the report of your own official visitors, of the four military men among them, at least; you have got the report of the officer now in command of the militia of Canada; you have got the report of the body officially representing the graduates of that college, all concurring and all demanding the same thing, all pointing out that the college has deteriorated; all pointing out that the drill is imperfect, that the discipline is broken down; all pointing out that it is necessary, in order to remedy these evils, to remove the present commandant and substitute for him some officer in active service, and in touch with the present military requirements. The fact of the matter is that I was at the pains to see some of those gentlemen, and what they state is very simple, very clear, and very plain, and ought to commend itself to the Minister of Justice, ought to commend itself to the Government, ought to commend itself to the good sense of every man in this House. First of all, they point out that at this present time military science, more than has been the case for many years, is in a state of flux, that very great changes, very great improvements, very many new developments, are going on all the time. The drill of ten years ago is antiquated drill today. It is necessary, if we are going to do any good with the college, that we should have a man there not well instructed in the tactics and strategy of five or ten years ago, but who knows thoroughly what is going on to-day. It is a moral and physical impossibility that any man should be able to do this unless he is an officer in the active service, with a future before him, and with something to stimulate him to study, something to induce him to keep abreast of the times. I always felt that on that ground alone, it was an utter and criminal mistake to place a retired officer in such a position, even if he were otherwise well fitted for it. It is a case, of all others, in which the man appointed should be a man in the full exercise of his profession, who looks forward to future distinction in his profession, which, as everybody knows, is not, and cannot be the case of an officer who has retired entirely from active service. What is the defence of the Minister of Justice? It is noteworthy what the defence is. His defence is not that the report is wrong, not that General Gascoigne is incorrect in the statement I have read, it is not that the graduates are wrong, but the hon. gentleman says. Look at the results, at the high position obtained by the graduates. What does that mean? Does it mean that the graduates of the last three or four years are equal in standard to those of previous years, and that they are attaining high distinction? We cannot know anything about recent graduates for a considerable time to come. The graduates of whom the hon. gentleman spoke were those who left the college ten or twelve years ago, and some perhaps six or seven years ago, many of whom entered the Imperial service, became known and distinguished themselves. But those men were not educated under the present system, they were educated under the former system, under former commandants, and any credit due is due to the previous administration and not to the present administration. I do not pretend to say that none of the graduates who have left the college within the last two or three or four years may not do well, for this reason, that they are picked men, although the number from whom they are picked is smaller than formerly, and it must be presumed they have a rather strong bent in the direction of military service. It is not a pleasant thing to say—and I regret to be obliged to say it in this House—but there is no doubt that the appointment of the present commandant was a job; and that although the gentleman personally is a worthy man and a gallant officer, he is one who never possessed any special qualifications for the position, and it is perfectly well known that he would never have obtained the appointment if he had not happened to be a near relative of the Secretary of State. Very great evil has resulted, and very great evil will result unless the matter is cured. There is but one way of curing it, and it is the duty of the Government now to tell this House what they propose to do. This subject has been before them for months and months. It is probably six or seven months since the report was received. I observe it was sent to the department in November, 1895. The Government have had an abundance of time to make up their minds on this point. The Government should tell the House what they are going to do on this report, which is signed by the Adjutant General of Militia, as chairman, by Colonel Duchesnay and Colonel H. Smith, and is fortified by the concurrence not only of the General in command, but of all the graduates of the college who were accesible and able to take part in the reunion of 26th February. Those men were trained in habits of discipline, and the hon. gentleman may be perfectly well assured that they did not use the strong language they use reflecting on the administration of the college for some years back unless they perfectly well knew what is going on, unless they felt the reputation of the college, which is dear to them, was at stake, and they decided that nothing but a thorough and radical reform in the direction pointed out could, by any possibility, give the college a chance. I am sorry to know that the college is unpopular, because I think, if properly managed and handled, it might, without costing us too much, be made a valuable adjunct to our military system, and because I have taken pride, as have hon. gentlemen opposite, in noticing that the graduates of the college have attained, under the circumstances I have detailed, a high reputation in the British army. But it is utterly impossible to us to believe that there is any reasonable chance of the college being maintained if the present system is continued. Here we have a report showing a laxity of discipline, and showing bad drill, and there is no evading the fact that these two results are largely due to the administration. and the commandant must be held responsible for them. I have no doubt that that gentleman does his best, and I say that personally he is a worthy man and a gallant officer, but he is not abreast with military science as now understood. and this is so emphatically the case that it is the duty of the Government to disregard personal considerations and look to the welfare of the institution. The Government were warned last year, even by their own supporters, as well as they are warned this year, and by the accumulation of evidence obtained, that the time has come for a change, and I ask them with all this knowledge they have acquired, are they prepared to act on the report of their own commission and General Gascoigne? If not, they take a very heavy responsibility on themselves, and unless they do act under these circumstances, it will be utterly impossible to save the college, and it may be utterly impossible to save it at all. Before this House rises, or at the furthest, on Monday, we shoud know what the decision of the Government is.

Mr. TYRWHITT. In rising to take part in the present discussion it is not my intention to enter into a general criticism of the Militia Department, but simply to make some references to the Military College at Kingston incidentally. I have had some experience of that college, and while I recognize the necessity for its existence. I would remind the Government that there is an agitation going in the country for its abolition. I have endeavoured out of the House to justify its existence, and it would be well if in discussing the subject here we did so temperately in order that the people who do not possess military minds may not imagine there is difficulty in justifying its existence, and I hope hon. members on both sides of the House will recognize the wisdom of having such a college, and will seek to make it popular among the taxpayers of the country. For my own part, from my knowledge of the college, I can speak with nothing but gratitude both of the officials connected with it, and of the people of Kingston, generally, who do so much to make the institution popular and the lives of the graduates pleasant, during the time they are there. Now, Sir, the subject which I rose particularly to address you on, was to say a word on behalf of my friend Col. Hamilton of the Queen's Own. I approach the subject with the full knowledge of my responsibility as a commanding officer, and the impropriety of my criticising the actions of those who are in authority over me, and over Col. Hamilton. But, it appears to me, Sir, that the circumstances are rather unfortunate, and it would be more satisfactory to myself and to other commanding officers, were a more full explanation given to us than we have had up to the present time. As I understand it, the commanding officer is responsible to his sovereign for the maintenance of discipline, efficiency, and a proper system of economy in the unit under his command. His authority within his unit is paramount under all circumstances and in every situation of the service. It is his duty both to enforce by command, and to encourage by example, the energetic discharge of duty, and the steady endurance of the difficulties and privations which are inseparable from a military service. Not having the papers before me, and not being thoroughly informed, I am speaking from my general knowledge and from my recollection of the circumstances as detailed to me. I am led to believe, that the origin of the difficulty in the Queen's Own was, as to the propriety of the commanding officer insisting upon an explanation with regard to certain funds in the hands of a junior officer. As allusion has been made to that particular point, I will quote from the "Queen's Regulation" a paragraph, which appears applicable to this case. Section 7, clause 3, says:

> The commanding officer is responsible for the proper application of all regimental funds, and will supervise and control the action of committees formed for their management.

It would appear from this clause that the commanding officer was perfectly within his right in asking, not only for an explanation, but also for the full control of the funds in possession of this junior officer. And, Sir, I am given to understand, that the action of the authorities has been brought about, owing to representations having been made to Col. Hamilton's superiors, by a number of junior officers in the regiment. I will quote a paragraph from the "Queen's Regulation" on discipline, which I think ought to settle that point:

> One of the fundamental and most necessary rules of military discipline, is to forbid anything bearing the appearance of combination to obtain redress of grievances, among individuals composing the military force.

Now, Sir, I am given to understand that this rule has been most flagrantly disobeyed in this case, and that the action which has been taken against Col. Hamilton, was at the instigation, or by a combination of a number of his juniors, who have made certain representations to the Deputy Adjutant General. That action has been taken without giving Col. Hamilton an opportunity of testifying in his own behalf, or possibly making explanations which might lead to an opposite decision. I can only say, Sir, that it would be satisfactory to myself, as a commanding officer—not knowing but that my turn may come next—and it would be satisfactory to other officers in the Canadian Militia, if an investigation were to take place, and if the causes which have led to this action were published, in order that we might know what to expect. Speaking for myself, Sir, I have been in the Militia—I am almost ashamed to say how long—but it is about thirty-five years. I have been a Brevet Colonel for twenty years, and Colonel commanding a regiment for ten years, and I certainly should feel that I was being harshly dealt with, were I dismissed from the force, as I might be to-morrow, without any reason being given me for it.

Mr. LISTER. Mr. Speaker, so far as the Military College is concerned, I confess that I know very little about its present condition or its past working. I may say, Sir, however, notwithstanding all that has been said by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in favour of that college ; the impressions that I formed about it in the past were not entirely favourable. I have always failed to see the necessity for the Military College at Kingston, in view of the fact that we have throughout the country, many educational institutions capable of giving to every citizen of this country, the highest education at a minimum cost. I fail to appreciate the absolute necessity for a Military College in this country, with its small population. It always seemed to me that our military schools should have furnished a sufficient military education to the gentlemen who join the militia of Canada. Perhaps, Sir, a good deal might be said for the college, if the original intention had been strictly carried out. It was intended at one time, that graduates of that college should occupy positions in the active force of the country, and that other graduates should receive appointments in the Civil Service of Canada. The result, however, has been, that we have the satisfaction of knowing that during all these years a certain number of graduates of that college have received appointments in the Imperial service. That flatters our national pride to a very great extent, but when we come to consider the enormous cost at which that pride has been gratified, one hesitates to come to the conclusion that the Military College has done all that was hoped for from it, by those who first started it. The report which I hold in my hand shows that every graduate at that college has cost $5,510. The greater portion of that has been contributed by the country. If, however, the country at large had taken advantage of the education given to the graduates at that college, there might possibly, and probably would be, an excuse for its existence. But as a matter of fact, the graduates of that college, when they have sought to obtain positions in the public service, have found it just as necessary as if they had been graduates of any other college, to obtain the requisite political support before they could obtain appointments under the Government of the country. They had to secure the support of members of Parliament favourable to the Government before they could hope to obtain a position in the Civil Service of Canada. The result of that has already been, with the exception of perhaps four young men who yearly find positions in the British service, that the graduates of the Military College at Kingston are to be found principally in the United States. We have educated them, the country has paid for their education, and they are forced out of the country into a foreign country in order to make their living. I know nothing about the commandant. All I know is what is set forth in this report. The commandant is, no doubt, a worthy man and a good soldier. So far as that is concerned, I have nothing to say. But there is no doubt considerable force in the argument of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that this is a progressive science, that what was proper a year ago may be improved upon to-day, and that it is necessary that a young, vigorous, progressive officer should be in command of the college in order that the students may be abreast of the times. The report is before us, and I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact, which he himself admits, that everything in connection with the investigation is not before Parliament. Why is it necessary to bring down, in fact, two reports—one printed and given to the House, and another which the hon. gentleman says is a confidential memorandum? The only inference that can be drawn from the statement of the Minister is that the confidential memorandum differs from the report which he has laid before the House. It is possible that that memorandum may be more condemnatory of the management of that college than the report which we hold in our hands.

Mr. FRASER. It must be, or else it would be produced.

Mr. LISTER. That, I think, is logical. If it was favourable to the college, it would have been produced here along with the other papers which the Government have thought proper to lay upon the Table of the House. Now, the gentlemen who composed this committee and who made this report, say this about the employment of graduates of that college :

> Some inducement or additional encouragement should be given to graduates to attach themselves to militia corps, and the board suggests that graduates who thus show their interest in the militia or are doing regular military duty in the country should, after a reasonable and defined period of service, receive promotion. Graduates should also be given the preference in filling vacancies in the permanent military force, and in other departments of the public service of which their training particularly fits them.

That is all right as far as it goes ; but I can only repeat that if Canada educates these young men, as it does at an enormous expense, Canada has a right to demand their services; Canada has a right to find for them positions in the public service, which they are fitted to fill, and not give those positions to civilians who can bring sufficient political influence to bear to secure them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I may tell the hon. gentleman, in support of what he is saying, that in the Marine Department, before my time—I think in the time of the present Minister of Finance—there was employed a Mr. Stewart, a graduate of Kingston College. That gentleman now does, as efficiently as an Imperial officer did before him, for a salary of about $1,700 a year, certain hydrographical work, for which we had to pay about $4,000 to the Imperial officer; and his work is accepted by the Admiralty in the same manner as was the work of the Imperial officer.

Mr. LISTER. The statement of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is of course very gratifying, and it shows how the services of these cadets might be utilized.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There are several others in the same branch.

Mr. LISTER. I desire particularly to refer to the treatment accorded to Col. Hamilton at the hands of the Government. I think I may say, without fear of contradiction, that every officer in the country against whom a complaint is made to the superior military authority, has the right, before condemnation, to demand that the charges made against him should be fully and properly investigated, before any action is taken in regard to him by such superior officer. It is a matter that affects not only the individual against whom a complaint is made, but a matter that affects every military man throughout the length and breadth of this country; because the power that is exercised to-day, perhaps tyrannically, upon one man, may be exercised to-morrow in the same way upon some other man. Besides that, there is a feeling of sympathy existing between men in the military service; and I believe they will be found resenting an injury to any officer, regardless altogether of the political convictions of that officer. If you are to maintain discipline in the citizen army of this country, it is of paramount importance that the men composing that force should be dealt with the most perfect fairness. It is of paramount importance that no man in the military service of this country should feel that he has been treated unjustly by his superiors. If it is known that a worthy officer, who has served his country for thirty years, is to have his head taken off and his reputation besmirched by perhaps the thoughtless action of some superior officer, it will create a feeling of resentiment against that officer, and against the Government which permits it to be done. My hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) spoke this evening about suggestions he had made to the Government year after year, and he spoke hopelessly of any of those suggestions being adopted by the Government. But I hope that the suggestions offered to the Government in this case by the military men in this House, and by other hon. members, who demand for Col. Hamilton a fair investigation into the charges which have been made against him, will be listened to by the Government and acted upon; and that if Col. Hamilton is to leave the service of Canada, he will leave it after having received a fair and open trial and a just verdict at the hands of the proper authorities. I trust, Sir, that an act which would be tyrannical and worthy of Turkey or Russia will not be permitted in this country, because if the facts are as stated in this House, the treatment which has been accorded to that gentleman is treatment which would be worthy only of those countries. There is a growing feeling in this country, whether it be well founded or not, that the militia is becoming a vast political machine, and that men who belong to the Liberal party have no chance of promotion or fair-play. We know that officers seeking promotion have enlisted the active support of members of the House of Commons supporting the Government to advance their interests, and we know that in many of those cases these representations have been listened to, and officers, who, under other conditions, would be entitled to these positions have been overlooked and political influence has prevailed. Unless that ceases, the militia, as a body, will be utterly destroyed. Merit and merit alone should be the guide to promotion, that should be the only qualification which should induce the Government to advance military men. Unless the Government do something to dispel that feeling in the minds of militia officers, the force ere long must fall into a condition which all will deplore. It appears, so far as Colonel Hamilton is concerned, that complaints were made by his subordinate officers,—men who would be advanced if he were dismissed or resigned. Those complaints were made contrary to the regulations and contrary to all military law, but they were listened to by General Gascoigne, and upon them and without investigation, Colonel Hamilton was told that he must resign or be dismissed. Think of it, an officer who had served in the force for over thirty years, and who had risen step by step, on his merits, from the rank of private to the highest position in the force, against whose courage not one word can be uttered, who brought the regiment to the highest state of efficiency—such a man is to be disgraced, all the years he served his country for nothing are not to count, he is compelled, to resign or be dismissed. That is the decree of General Gascoigne who was brought into this country to command our forces. I do not believe that he would dare in England exercise the powers he has attempted to exercise here, and we want him to know that we appreciate freedom, right and justice as much in Canada as they do in England; and what he dare not do in England, he shall not do here. It was cruel treatment. Col. Hamilton refuses to resign. He says: Dismiss me if you dare; I have done nothing unworthy of a soldier; there is nothing against me which would justify any such treatment. And remember that this man, Col. Hamilton, asks for an investigation. He made charges against the subordinate officers, but no attention was paid to the charges made. His letters were not acknowledged; but the charges which had been made by the men under him were listened to and upon them General Gascoigne writes to him: You must resign or I shall dismiss you. I appeal to the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Dickey) and the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Desjardins) to say whether that is fair treatment. I say here that when General Gascoigne has taken that position, it is not fair that an investigation should be made except by a parliamentary committee. We should let General Gascoigne understand that there is a power higher than he, and that is the Parliament of Canada. And unless the charges are established, justifying the extreme course taken by this officer, he should not be asked to resign. What shall be done? The letters of General Gascoigne should be withdrawn at once. Lieut.-Col. Hamilton should be restored to his command at once. Then let them formulate charges against him, and let those charges be investigated openly in the full light of day in the presence of Colonel Hamilton and the men who make them. Let these men substantiate these charges if they can, and then if their charges are of sufficient magnitude to warrant dismissal, if they are proved, let him be dismissed. But I denounce the manner in which this case has been gone into and dealt with. I say again that it would be worthy of tyrannical Russia or Turkey, but it should not be listened to in Canada above all other countries. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice knows nothing apparently, about the charges which were made and the difficulties that took place in this case and those in the case of the Royal Scots of Montreal. It appears that, so far as the Queen's Own was concerned, four or five officers threatened to resign unless Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton was dismissed. But some nineteen officers of the Royal Scots of Montreal, made charges against their commanding officer, Colonel Strathy, and stated that unless these charges were listened to, and Lieutenant-Colonel Strathy removed they would resign. Now, I want to show you how these two cases were dealt with.

THE QUEEN'S OWN RIFLES.

Ottawa, March 28th.—Among military men in the city considerable interest is felt in the affairs of the Queen's Own Rifles, so many officers and men of the regiment being known in Ottawa. To-day, speaking to your correspondent, General Gascoigne said it was true that the administration of the corps had been handed over for the time being to Major Delamere, but whether the Major would take command as colonel of the battalion he could not say. He had seen a statement in the papers to the effect that Major Delamere would not take command of the regiment if it were offered him, but he had seen nothing official on the point. As regards Col. Hamilton, he desired it to be understood that there were no charges against him. The affairs of the battalion had got into what the General designated as an uncomfortable position, and following the English practice, it was better that Col. Hamilton should step out. The action of the department involved no slur upon Col. Hamilton. He trusted it would lead to greater esprit de corps, and enable deserving promotions to be made.

That is what General Gascoigne says so far as Colonel Hamilton is concerned.

THE ROYAL SCOTS' TROUBLE.

Montreal, March 29th.—The trouble between Lieut.-Col. Strathy and the officers of the 5th Royal Scots, it is expected, will be settled satisfactorily. Major General Gascoigne has been for several days engaged in patching up a truce, and it is understood that both parties will make concessions, and that by this means the trouble will be healed.

There is the way in which General Gascoigne deals with two officers of equal rank. Without going to Toronto, without investigating the question himself, he listens to the complaint of half a dozen officers who are to be promoted if Colonel Hamilton is got rid of and he says so himself in plain terms, that these officers have been intriguing and conspiring against Colonel Hamilton. He asks Colonel Hamilton to step out. But when we come to Colonel Strathy, what do we find? Why, Sir, General Gascoigne himself goes down to Montreal, he stays there, as the paper tells us, for several days patching up the difficulties between nineteen officers who complained and Colonel Strathy, and the paragraph ends with the statement that he hopes his efforts will be successful. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, upon what principle General Gascoigne can deal with these two men so differently. If it was right for him to go to Montreal for the purpose of settling differences there by his presence, was it not equally important that he should go to Toronto and use his good offices to settle the differences between Colonel Hamilton and his subordinates. While he attempts by his presence and personal influence in Montreal to settle the difficulties in that case, he writes to Colonel Hamilton: Your resignation or your dismissal. Why this difference in the treatment of these two men? Is it because the Colonel in Montreal is a strong supporter of the Government that he is treated in this considerate way ? Is it because Colonel Hamilton is not a supporter of the Government that he is treated in a different way ? I do not say that it is, but these are the facts and one is inclined to the belief that there must be some reason for the Government dealing differently with one officer than with another. According to this newspaper clipping no complaints have been made against Colonel Hamilton. If there were no complaints, what grounds had General Gascoigne for asking Colonel Hamilton to resign, what grounds had he for saying unless he resigned he would be dismissed ? There is no question about it that the treatment accorded to Colonel Hamilton is a grave scandal in the administration of military matters in this country. There can be no question but that a gross outrage has been perpetrated upon that gentleman. As I stated a few moments ago, Colonel Hamilton has served his country for upwards of thirty years. He has risen from the ranks to the command of the regiment which he has now the honour to command; and without any charge being made against him, and merely for the obvious purpose of advancing men who are below him, without any investigation being made as to his conduct, so far as we are informed, or so far as it appears to this House, General Gascoigne, in an arbitrary and tyrannical way, taking advantage of his position, orders this man to resign, or in default of his resignation he will be dismissed. We have the statement of General Gascoigne himself that the regiment commanded by Col. Hamilton is the best drilled and the best equipped regiment in Canada. That is his own statement in the report furnished to Parliament. There is no complaint made against Colonel Hamilton in that report. The report shows that Colonel Hamilton has discharged all his duties. There is reason to believe, contrary to the statements made by the General himself, that the regiment was all he had a right to expect. But the true secret of this is the statement made by the General that the removal of the resignation of Colonel Hamilton would allow half a dozen officers under him to be promoted. Sir, has it come to this in this country that the intriguers and the people who conspire are the successful men, are the ones who are to succeed and be promoted, and that the man who knows his duty and does it is the man who shall receive no consideration at the hands of the Government ? There is no doubt, from the view which we are able to take of the affairs of that regiment, that an intrigue has been going on for a long time, an intrigue has been going on among certain of the officers, and only a small minority of them, an intrigue for the purpose of getting rid of Col. Hamilton. They have, in violation of all military regulations, sent in their complaints against a superior officer to an officer superior to him, instead of sending them in through the colonel. These complaints have been received. When General Gascoigne says there are no complaints, he is not frank and candid in his statement, because there is no doubt from the statement made by the Minister of Justice that certain complaints were sent in, because, he says, an investigation took place by Colonel Otter, I think, of Toronto. Now, Sir, if such an investigation took place, then there must have been complaints, and if these complaints were sent in, they were received contrary to military regulations altogether, and the duty of the officials was to have returned these complaints to the men sending them in, and to have court-martialled the men who made the complaints. But instead of that, a sort of Star Chamber examination takes place, Colonel Hamilton is never notified, there is no attention paid to the charges made by him, he is never informed that these men had made complaints against him, he is never informed that an investigation was to take place after these complaints, and if an investigation did take place, it took place without notice to Colonel Hamilton, and without his being present. Sir, was ever such a condition of affairs heard of before in this country or any other ? Natural justice demanded that Colonel Hamilton should have been summoned, that he should have had an opportunity of meeting his accusers, he should have had an opportunity of making his statement, or of calling his evidence before those making the investigation. But instead of that, we have an ex parte investigation, an investigation made without the presence of Colonel Hamilton at all, an investigation of which he was entirely ignorant, and upon that ex parte investigation the General in command, under the Government of this country, finds a verdict of guilty, and order him to resign or he will be dismissed. Sir, I say that such conduct as that violates all natural justice, it violates every rule of law, it violates every military usage and regulation. It is without support in any quarter. There is no authority at all for such conduct anywhere. The meanest criminal charged with the pettiest crime, has an opportunity of making his defence, and seeing and examining the witnesses who are brought against him. But here a man occupying the honourable position of colonel of one of the first regiments in this Dominion, a position he has held after long years of service, is not accorded the common courtesy of being notified as to when this investigation is to take place. He is denied the rights which would be accorded to the meanest criminal for the most trivial offence, namely, the right to be present and hear the evidence against him, and to defend himself against the charge. Then, Sir, what do we find? They have not yet dismissed him. It appears he refused to resign ; but in order to insult him, in order to offend him more and more if possible, without informing him of any trial or investigation, the general in command orders that the military stores should be turned over to the major of the regiment, taken out of his possession ; and while they nominally leave him colonel of the regiment, they, in fact, turn over to the major all the militia stores, and deprive him of the rights which he has as colonel of the regiment. Sir, if it be true that this man has been treated in the way stated here this afternoon, without trial, without notice of any charges at all made against him, upon complaints made by officers under him, and who would be advantaged by his dismissal, if this be all true, if it is possible that General Gascoigne has acted in this way, then I say that General Gascoigne should step down and out, and go back to the old country. Sir, we have had these generals over here, two or three of them, of late years. We had General Middleton here, and he had to leave. We had a general after him. and it was found convenient for him to leave. And now we have another general who has only been in the country for a very few months, and almost the first act he does is an act so unjustifiable, so tyrannical, so arbitrary, as stamps him, I believe, as unfit to occupy the position to which he has been appointed. Sir if it is true that General Gascoigne has acted in the way that it is claimed he did, he ought to be dismissed from the service of this country. What possible reason is suggested for asking the resignation of Col. Hamilton ? It is said he has been too long in the service. That can be no reason. We have the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), a colonel, who has occupied that position for twenty years at least, and we have the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt), who has occupied the position of colonel for a good many years, and both of those gentlemen are many years older than Col. Hamilton. If long service was a good ground for the dismissal of Col. Hamilton, then it would apply with greater force to the two hon. gentlemen I have named. Surely it cannot be seriously argued that a man of forty-eight years of age, who has been colonel of a regiment for six years, must be dismissed? That is not the law, it has never been the practice in this country, and it is not pretended that this action is on account of long service, but General Gascoigne suggests it is about time Col. Hamilton should be relieved of the command of that regiment. The facts are very brief. Col. Hamilton has been for five or six years colonel of a regiment. During that time the regiment has attained a remarkable degree of efficiency. The general in his report declares it to be one of the best regiments in the Dominion of Canada. There is no charge, so far as I know, made against the colonel in command ; there is a complaint made by subordinate officers in the regiment. There is no charge against the capacity and ability of the colonel in command. An intrigue is promoted among certain officers, who will be advanced by the colonel's resignation. A complaint is made. On that complaint is said a hearing took place, and an investigation was held, to which Col. Hamilton was not a party, of which he had no notice, and no opportunity whatever was afforded him to know what the charges were, of meeting and confronting the men who made them. On the proceedings of that star chamber investigation the General wrote a letter to Col. Hamilton requesting him to resign or he would be dismissed. These are, in brief, the facts. There is no charge made against Col. Hamilton that he is not an efficient officer. The evidence of the General himself shows that he must be efficient, because his regiment had attained a remarkable degree of efficiency. This man who had served Canada for thirty years without a blot on his character or reputation, whose management of the regiment had been all that could be desired, this man who had served all these long years without pay, but from a love of the profession and from a desire to see the regiment with which he had been so long connected attain that degree of perfection it has attained, was thus treated. For these reasons, he had remained a member of the regiment and become its commanding officer, and without a single substantial charge being made against him, but on an investigation taken in secret, on a charge which has never been made public, this officer, who had made complaints against some of his own officers and asked an investigation, without getting an investigation into the charges he made, without even obtaining a reply to his letter, without receiving any notice that any charge was made against himself or had been investigated, was suddenly told by General Gascoigne that he must resign his position, or be dismissed. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you can recollect in the whole course of your life more cruel treatment accorded to any one, more unjust treatment, and a greater act of illegality committed than the act of General Gascoigne towards Col. Hamilton. I feel that when the people of this country, and particularly the militiamen, come to know the way the Government have allowed the general to deal with this militia officer, there will arise in the breast of every citizen and volunteer a feeling of indignation as to the way in which Col. Hamilton has been treated, which was utterly unjustifiable and thoroughly illegal. Instead of receiving approbation at the hands of the General, Col. Hamilton has been tried and convicted without being heard, on charges made in secret, and made at a secret trial that would be a disgrace to the star chamber of Spain in its worst days. There is nothing else for the Government to do but to have this officer restored to the position of full command of his regiment, and if there are any charges to be made let them be made and be fully and fairly investigated, and if Col. Hamilton is guilty of any offence that justifies the extreme punishment which General Gascoigne has thought fit to inflict, let it be inflicted ; but if they are not true, let him stand before the world as a man who has been charged unjustly, let him be acquitted and again occupy the position at the head of his regiment. It is a disgraceful act that a worthy officer should be compelled, under circumstances such as I have detailed, to resign a position which he considers an honourable one, and if he resigned or allowed himself to be dismissed on charges of which he knew nothing and of which he was innocent, he would be guilty of conduct unworthy of a soldier. He would be unworthy of himself if, on the threat of General Gascoigne, he resigned. Let the General or the Government dismiss him if they think proper. He has a right to demand that he shall have an opportunity fully and fairly to meet any charge made against him, and unless such trial takes place, and if the Government insists on the General's recommendation being carried out, then hon. gentlemen opposite will be blamed for having done an act of the grossest injustice to a worthy and capable citizen and soldier of Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I ask the attention of the House for a few moments while I invite its attention to the subject of discussion on the motion to adjourn. I shall not enter into any discussion of the subject of the dismissal of Col. Hamilton. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) has spoken of that at length, and has stated the principle which is involved in his dismissal. It seems to me of very grave consequence to this country, if our volunteer force is to be maintained as an efficient defensive force, that its non-political character shall be preserved, and if men are to be called upon to vacate their places in the military service or volunteer force because of political views and opinions, then the efficiency of the force is necessarily at an end. In England the right of the Minister to interfere as regards the regular army and the volunteer force is not at all recognized. Everything relating to appointments and to dismissals in the organization is under the control of the Commander in Chief, and not under the Minister to whose department that commander in chief belongs. It seems to me that that same principle should prevail here, and for the military head of the militia force of Canada to become a subordinate officer in the Department of Militia, to carry out the wishes and intentions of the Minister of Militia from its political side, I cannot otherwise than regard as extremely mischievous. So far as the resignation of Colonel Hamilton is concerned, I dismiss the subject with these observations.

Now, Sir, I wish to say a few words with regard to the Military College at Kingston, and in reference to that institution my views are those of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). What he has said here this afternoon I cordially concur in. I do not think that the ordinary educational institutions of the country will at all meet the requirements which the Military College at Kingston is intended to serve. So long as mankind are what we know them to be, it is necessary that some attention should be paid in every political community to the cultivation of a military spirit, and to making some preparation for the defence of the country. It seemed to me at the time this institution was established—and I have never heard any reason to change my opinion—that one of the most efficient means of defending this country is to provide a body of well-trained men, who, if the necessity arose, could be placed at the head of the military forces of this country, and under whom it would soon become efficient and better qualified to perform the functions that the country would expect from it under such officers, than it could under men without any such scientific training. And, when we take into consideration what would be the fair cost of an institution of this sort, and the number of men who are trained in it, we have this question to answer : Could we, for the same amount of money, in any other way, make so effective a preparation for the general defence of the country. In my opinion, we could not. Now, this institution, in a large degree grew out of the experience of our neighbours across the line during their civil war. Many thousands of men during that contest were called into the military service of the republic ; many men were placed at the head of companies, and of regiments, and of armies, in the service both of the North and of the South ; and any one who followed the history of that war with any degree of care, cannot come to any other conclusion than that the vast majority of these men who were without a scientific training, failed in the contest, while those who were eminently successful, were men who had been trained at West Point. That institution afforded a body of men who had a scientific military training, and when the necessity arose for their active service, they proved themselves eminently efficient in promoting the interest of the republic. It seemed to me that a body so trained in this country would form a valuable nucleus around which a military organization, efficient for defensive purposes, could be organized whenever the necessity arose. Then, Sir, I have already said, that it is necessary at least, not to destroy whatever military spirit may exist in the country. The preservation of that spirit and the affording to it of necessary avenues for its fair and legitimate expression, does not, in my opinion, in any way tend towards the cultivation of a spirit of "jingoism." It is essentially different.

But in every community there are persons of military instincts, and an institution of this sort, where they may receive a military training and enter into the Imperial service, is a matter of some consequence. In fact, it has become one of the bonds of union between Canada and the rest of the Empire. Some years ago, when the British Government were reorganizing their army and undertaking to make their navy more efficient, an inquiry was had into the various military institutions of the United Kingdom, and into military schools of a scientific character upon the continent of Europe and of the United States. When the Government of Canada established this military school at Kingston, the reports that were made at that time, 1870, were examined; and especially were they examined by the Prime Minister; and West Point in New York was taken rather as the model for the Kingston college than any of the other institutions. In fact, the report of Colonel McDougall—afterwards General McDougall, who saw service in this country—on the West Point Military Academy, was the one that was specially before the Government when the Kingston College was established. When Coloned McDougall was sent to investigate at West Point, he was instructed to report. First, on the objects of the academy and its relation to the army, and its resemblance to the three English institutions: Sandhurst, Woolwich and the Staff College; secondly, he was asked to examine into its administration and organization; thirdly, into the number of persons who were there receiving military training; and fourthly, into the length and nature of the course of study which was there adopted. He was also required to examine into the relative importance of different studies: mathematics, surveying for the fortifications, military law, and those branches of international law which military men are called upon to exercise. I do not know how far that is taught in Kingston, or whether there is a professor for that purpose.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is taught.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is one of the necessary subjects, because a military man in active service may be called upon to capitulate, or to obtain the capitulation of some other person, and he wants to know the law that is applicable to the government of armies in active service. Then, with regard to military history and modern languages, these are subjects which it is important that men who are receiving military training should understand. He was also asked to report upon the relative importance attached to what may be regarded as the practical side of military training, as compared with the theoretical side. It is well known that in England, for the vast majority of the men receiving a military training, more importance is attached to the practical than to the scientific or theoretical side. In fact, one gentleman, a professor, said to me on one occasion, "You have more men in connection with your technical college in Toronto studying the scientific side of engineering than there is in all England." In England, he said, the mining engineer studies the subject practically, but he knows little about scientific principles that underlie the work that he is called upon to do. That statement applies to the military training given in some of the military institutions in England. But I have before me the report on West Point and the Military Academies of France, Prussia and Austria, from which it will be seen that on the continent of Europe generally more attention is given to the scientific side than in England; and when the Kingston Military College was established, we felt that the organization that existed at West Point in New York, owing to the condition of society in the United States and the circumstances of the country for which it was necessary to make military provision, bore a closer resemblance to ours than the other. Now, I am not going into a discussion of the question raised by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), as to how far a literary training should be given in these institutions, or how far our educational institutions in the various provinces render such literary training in the military college unnecessary, so that the student may obtain his literary training elsewhere and come into the institution with that training already acquired. This, however, was observed by one of the professors of the institution at West Point some years ago, that it takes some little time to acquire a military habit in a people who are living in an unmilitary country; and it was thought that a course of study extending over four years had a very decided advantage in this regard over a shorter period of study. Then, with regard to this institution, there are a good many suggestions made in Mr. McDougall's report, to a few of which I desire to call the attention of the House. In one paragraph he says:

> All the professors and instructors, with their assistants and acting assistants, have been educated at West Point, with exception of the chaplain, the professors of French and Spanish, and the sword master. All are regularly enrolled in the military service of the United States, and subject to military discipline.

In another paragraph he says:

> The professor or chief instructor in each branch is responsible for the efficiency and uniformity of the system of instruction in his own department.

Again, he says:

> The assistant and acting assistant, professors or instructors are always appointed from among officers on the full pay of their regiments who have graduated at the Academy, on the recommendation of the professor or chief instructor of the branch in which there is a vacancy to be filled.

Again, he says:

> The term of duty at the Academy, of the assistant and acting assistant, professors and instructors is fixed at four years, at the end of which period they return to regimental service. Duty at the Academy is obligatory on every officer who may be selected for it, and is considered as part of the general service which every officer who has graduated at West Point owes to the country.

Further on he says:

> The nation is also benefited. Many young officers acquire at West Point scientific knowledge and habits which cause them to be sought for important posts in civil life. Some obtain lucrative positions as professors in the different State universities. Some become connected with railroads, and other public improvements. In these cases the loss of the army is the gain of the public at large.

Further on in this report he points out that the discipline in the institution is very strict, that if persons fail in punctuality and in keeping up the minimum standard of efficiency in the various classes they are not retained as students in the institution, and that this possibility of dismissal constantly hanging over their heads secures an amount of diligence and attention which is of very great consequence in training for active military service; and he quotes this paragraph from General Barnard, of the United States Army:

> As disbursing officers of the Government they (the graduates of West Point) have proved faithful when too many not graduates have failed. As engineers they have commanded the entire confidence of the Government and the communities which they served, and have been the principal agents by which our fortifications, our works of public improvement, our railroads, canals, public buildings, and our light-houses and harbour works have been brought into existence. In the ranks of our legislators, our jurists, our agriculturists, our merchants, our ministers of the Gospel even, they have been found and have ever acquitted themselves with honour, and commanded their full share of respect from their fellowmen.

He then continues:

> What is claimed for the training at West Point by its advocates is, not that it necessarily turns out brilliant men, but that it prepares for the service of the state a number of educated men who may be depended on, as a general rule, to serve it faithfully and ably in many different useful capacities.

At the conclusion of this report Mr. McDougall says:

> The knowledge acquired must always have a positive value; and where opportunity occurs it will in most cases probably lead to distinction, as has been proved during the late civil war; but the encouragement held out by the state to distinction at West Point, so far as regards advancement in the army, falls very far short of what, in good policy, it ought to be.

And the reason assigned for it is that the political influence connected with official appointments sometimes stands in the way of a proper utilization of this force. What I am calling the attention of the House to is—not that those who established this institution were mistaken in their view of its importance—not that its graduates may not be made highly useful to the state—but that the Government have not utilized their services in the administration of public affairs to anything like the extent that they might have done. It does seem to me that when these men are trained, they should be placed in the volunteer force in order to make that force efficient. They could be employed in connection with the North-west Mounted Police in the engineering operations of the country, and in whatever sphere of duty which the Government might find it advantageous to utilize their services. There is no doubt that if you make it a condition that persons should have the literary attainments of undergraduates of the first or the second year of the course in the university, you could diminish the number of persons employed on the teaching staff, and otherwise diminish the cost of the institution. But I would myself be very sorry to see that the institution was so mismanaged as to lead to its abolition. I think this would be a mistake; for, in my opinion, there is no other part of our defensive service that can be so useful as this, which secures the graduation in military science of a trained class of men, upon whom the country could rely if danger should arise.

Mr. POWELL. I shall not attempt any discussion or criticism of the commandant's course, but it does strike me that all the documentary evidence is against the contention that the Military College is deteriorating. In fact, I should say, from the documents before the House that the college is becoming increasingly efficient. These reports made by the Board of Visitors which have been made, can be boiled down to two or three objections raised against the institution. An objection is taken as to the drill and as to the discipline of the institution. Drill and discipline are, of course, essential to the successful management of any educational establishment, I care not of what nature. Carlyle has said, and said truly, in one of his essays, that diligence is the summation of the virtues of a student; and he might have added where we find manifested a high degree of diligence there is accompanying it, a high standard of decorum and excellence. Every charge that can be brought against the institution falls to the ground, and is disproved by its great educational success. As regards the buildings and property of the institution, all agree that they are maintained in a very excellent condition, indeed. As respects drill, the charge is that it is not up to date. The answer to this charge will appear in the report of the commandant, in which he says that a more advanced drill was adopted, but in obedience to the order of the Militia Department that drill was changed. The Militia Department had a lower standard, a more antiquated form of drill, if I may term it, and in order to have uniformity throughout Canada, the college, under orders from the Militia Department, reverted to a system that was somewhat out of date. But, admitting that the drill is somewhat out of date, the objection urged is that the system adopted is poorly observed, and this objection is not well founded. The drill is especially under the care of officers who are brought out from England, from time to time, so that the drill shall be up to the highest point of excellence. The commandant says :

> The means of preventing the drill becoming antiquated are already provided in this institution. Artillery and engineer officers from the Imperial service succeed one another at short intervals and superintend the drills, in addition to which an exceptionally well qualified non-commissioned officer of the Scots Guards and a most able staff take part.

Mr. MARTIN. How does the hon. gentleman explain the report of the visitors in which they say the drill is not good.

Mr. POWELL. They do not say it is not thorough, but simply that it is not up to date, and they recommend that the institution be placed immediately under charge of the officers who will have control of the Militia Department. I have shown that in accordance with the opinion of the Militia Department, a more antiquated form of drill was adopted in substitution for a more modern one. Apart from the question of the efficiency of the drill, drill does not appear to be a great desideratum in a military college. In England, where much more attention is given these matters, we find that the board of visitors of the two celebrated colleges there, Sandhurst and Woolwich Academy say in their report :

> It appears to the board that too much time is devoted to drill at the expense of those technical studies which form the chief raison d'etre of the college.

Now, the hours for drill at Sandhurst and at the Royal Military College of Canada are practically alike, except that on Wednesdays and Saturdays there is drill in ours. In another report on Woolwich Academy, they say :

> For the same reason that the school of military engineering has been established, it cannot be expected that cadets can be turned out from the academy fully instructed in the science and practice of gunnery and qualified for the general duties of the artillery service.

The time this inspection was made was early in the season. The cadets had hardly settled down to the work of drill ; only a few weeks had then been put in by the students. As to the general efficiency, General Herbert, in 1894, which is less than two years ago, made a report in which he said :

> The value of technical military training given at the Royal Military College has been thus proved to be of a character which, in the event of any serious emergency, would be of inestimable value to the Dominion. The practical nature of the general educational training has been so frequently enlarged upon by the commandant that it needs no more than a word of admiration from me.

That is authoritative, pointed and conclusive. In the report of the board of visitors, we find, on page 5, the following :—

> The board commend to your sympathy and consideration the Royal Military College, which is performing a high class and most useful work, and it believes that the military and civil education carried on cannot be profitably separated but should be continued to be conducted substantially as it is at present.

Then, again, Major General Gascoigne, on page 24 of his report says :

> I was greatly pleased with the physique and general appearance of these young men. Take them all round, they were a body of youths of whom Canada may justly be proud. They were of unusually good physique, well set up, with a healthy appearance and pleasant manners. I noticed that their hair was not kept as closely cut as should be in a military, or indeed in any other college, but with this trifling exception to which I directed attention, there was nothing whatever to take exception to, but quite the reverse.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He does not allow for football.

Mr. POWELL. In seeking for a subject for adverse criticism, he is driven to remark that their hair is a little too long, and practical people must feel he is descending to trivial matters, indeed. His report adds :

> I feel confident that every one of these young men, whatever his future may be, whether civil or military, will leave the college greatly benefited by his stay there ; will be improved in tone and manner, and will, therefore, be a better citizen of this great Dominion. The country should therefore be proud of the college, and do its utmost to improve and help it. I consider that the mixture of civil and military education is a most happy one, the discipline taught by the military element at the college being of the utmost benefit to all alike, whether their destination be civil or military, and as the number of military openings to young men is exceedingly limited in Canada, it is absolutely necessary that there should be a civil education side by side, and I consider that this is most happily arranged.

Now, the commandant of the institution is not practically an instructor at all. The other professors have the entire onus of both the scientific and literary teaching, and it is these men upon whom devolve the real working of the institution. Of them, the General says, on page 23 of the report :

> 2. The Professors and Instructors.—So far as I was able to judge, the military instructors were all exceedingly keen, energetic and zealous officers, with a great desire for the welfare and good of the college. They set a good example to the cadets, take a great interest in their recreation, as well as their studies, and I was in all respects satisfied with all.

Later in his report there is an exception by way of a criticism as to the professor of French.

Let us look at the last report of the commandant submitted to Parliament, and we shall be afforded the best test available, the test of examination. By way of prefatory remark I may say that the commandant is in no way responsible for the examination, and he is not an examiner. In his report he is simply giving a summation of the results The students are divided into four classes, and in page 43 of the report for the year ending the 30th June, 1895, we have the standing of those classes. I extract the following from the report :—

Year.	1st Class.	2nd Class.	3rd Class.	4th Class.
1892-93..	15,203	10,685	9,260	3,693
1893-94..	18,307	15,177	8,240	4,315

The commandant further says :

> Excluding the class which joined in 1892, a most satisfactory and very marked improvement is shown in the work done.
> Of 3,693 in 1893 ;
> 8,240 in 1894 ;
> And 9,763 in 1895,
> Has not practically improved on the standard of 1891-92.
> In pleasing contrast with the unfortunate absence of success on the part of this exceptional class, is the steady and decided advance shown by the successive first classes.
> In these the average records of each member have been :
> In 1892, 15,042.
> In 1893, 15,203.
> In 1894, 18,307.
> And this year, 22,264.
> The marks gained in the full four years' course by the junior member of the present graduating class are 48,228.
> In the fifteen years during which the college has been passing out graduates——

I direct the attention of the House particularly to this statement :

> —there have been only seventeen instances in which a graduate has made a higher record than the junior graduate of this year.

It may be said that this does not count for much that he must have been an exceptional student, and his proficiency was not due to his training in the college :

> Only once—by Mr. Vercoe, in 1892—have the records of the three senior graduates of this year been exceeded.

Mr. Vercoe scored	56,458
This year Com.-Sergt. Major Frith, gains	56,331
Bn. Sergt. Major Wilkes, gains	56,266
Co. Sergt. Major Hayter, gains	55,580

I think that speaks very highly for the character of the institution. I would also call particular attention to what follows :

> Excepting only the three years 1883, 1892 and 1884,——the average score of graduates of this year is higher than the score of the leading graduate of any previous year since the establishment of the college.
> On no previous occasion has there been an "honour list" comparable with this year's.
> Every member of the 1st class graduates with honours.
> The conduct of the cadets has been generally satisfactory.

Now, we may talk, basing our criticisms on idle rumours floating about emanating from parties who may be disgruntled, or from sinister motives, express hostile opinion ; but here is a record which excels every previous record, so it is useless to talk of the institution lapsing into a state of inefficiency. The commandant and the college could have no higher commendation, no more complete vindication than these opinions and facts I have quoted.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Before I refer to the Royal Military College of Kingston, I wish to make a few remarks in regard to the general question of the militia. I am strongly in favour of having the militia of the country put upon the very best footing we can afford to put it on ; at the same time I wish that the officers in charge of the militia establishment would seek to bring about such reforms as to improve the condition the militia has been in for the last few years. I do not suppose there is a single member present who will say that the militia has been in a proper condition for years past. I have no personal knowledge from experience in regard to this matter, my information being gathered from the reports which have been placed before the House from time to time, and which set forth the condition of the service, and the changes which should take place in order to put the militia in a state of efficiency. Now, we cannot get better evidence than that of Major General Herbert. The Major General was a man independent of every party in this country. He came to Canada for the purpose of inspecting the militia and introducing reforms and, if possible, placing the militia upon a higher plane of efficiency than it occupied before. Major General Herbet had no axe to grind. He was not controlled by political motives, he could not be controlled by any political party, and his main object must have been to discharge efficiently the duty resting upon him as commander of the Canadian militia. If we take the information given us by such men as this, we must be led to the conclusion that the militia of the country was wholly disorganized, and that the officers and staff of the militia did not discharge their duties in an enlightened and intelligent manner which would enable them to bring the militia to the high standard at which we all desire to see it maintained. I wish to place before this House and the country the opinion of Major General Herbert. In reading over his reports this afternoon I made several extracts from the report of 1891, which was placed before this House, and, I suppose, particularly placed before the Department of Militia. He refers especially to the rural corps, the importance of which cannot be exaggerated. Although we as a Parliament are willing to vote sufficient money to put the militia of Canada on a basis of efficiency, we are not willing to go on spending money without receiving value in the form of a well organized and efficient militia. Major General Herbert says :

> The rural corps are very deficient in instruction and their organization is still more defective.

He says they were not only disorganized, but they were very defective, defective in the number of men and many defective in physique. He says :

> I am satisfied that in the past, the results obtained in militia training, have not been commensurate with the expenditure.

There he charges that a large amount of money was spent for which no adequate results were obtained. That is what we on this side of the House have maintained for years past, that we were paying too much money for the organization of our militia, and that we were receiving back inadequate results in regard to equipment and so on. Then, again, he goes on :

> There is not a battalion that can turn out in complete marching order in a given time.

Now, supposing it had been necessary, during the troubled wave that passed over our country a few months ago, to call out the militia, according to the statements made here by Major General Herbert, the militia was not in a position to be called out, and placed in the field.

> Moreover, the equipment does not exist in store which it would be necessary to issue in the event of need.

There again the Government is charged with neglect, because it is stated that they had not the stores, they had not equipments, they had not the necessary appurtenances to place the militia in the field provided an emergency arose. Still, the Government never represented to us that there was not sufficient money voted to put the militia in an efficient condition, and yet here their own officer, whose duty it was to see that there was efficiency in the militia, have told the Government that although they had plenty of money, they had neglected to place the militia on that basis which would make it efficient in case of emergency. Then, again, he gives his opinion still further :

> I have not inspected a single battalion in which the men's boots would have stood one month's actual service.

Now, I ask the Government from whom they purchased the boots that would not stand one month's active service. Was Major General Herbert wrong, or were the the boots of such a character as he describes them to be ? If they were of such a character as he describes them, then I say that the Government neglected its duty in accepting such material from any manufacturer to whom they gave a contract ; and in that way they were expending the people's money for articles which were declared to be below par, and not fit for the object for which they were purchased. Then he goes on still further and speaks of the saddlery and harness as being of an inferior quality, just as the boots were. Now, I would ask any person who represents the Militia Department here—and it is a great drawback that we have no person in this House who represents the militia. We speak upon this question and ask important questions that should be answered in the interest of the country, and in the interest of the militia, but not a solitary individual is here to answer them. The present Minister of Militia is in the other House, or in his bed ; at any rate, he knows nothing about the question, and if he were here he could give us no information. No doubt, the Minister receives a little superficial information from his underlings, but he is not in this chamber, and there is the utmost ignorance prevailing with regard to this department. How is it possible for you, or for any other person, however clever, to obtain a knowledge of the Militia Department in a few months, or a few days ? You may obtain a superficial knowledge from those in the department, but you cannot attain that knowledge which will enable you to introduce reforms by which the entire militia of the country may be placed upon a better footing, and a higher basis of excellence than it was before. Now, in 1891, when Major General Herbert made this report, I think the present Postmaster General was then Minister of Militia. He went out shortly afterwards, and the present Premier came in for a few months, and acted in that capacity. Now, I ask you how it was possible for the present Premier to take hold of a large department like this, and in a few months understand its details, and be able to introduce reforms that would be of any advantage to the militia of this country ? No matter how clever, no matter how much knowledge he might have in a superficial way of the Militia Department, it would be impossible for any man in so short a time to grasp the whole question, and be able to deal with it. He was only in a few months, and then the present Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba succeeded him. He only paid a very partial attention to it, for he was away a large portion of the time on the other side of the continent. The Militia Department was ruled by the Deputy Minister and others under him without any responsibility, and with no special knowledge of the requirements of the service. When he passed out then the present Minister of Justice came in and remained for a short time; and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that had he remained permanently, I think he might have done something for the department, for his heart was set upon the discharge of his duties, and probably after a year or two, he would have been able to introduce the reforms. When the present Minister of Justice passed out of the position he so well filled for the few months in which he discharged those duties, another new man came in, a man who has never been noted as a military man any more than myself, and who has no special knowledge of what is required in the Militia Department. He has to depend altogether on the information he gets from others, and therefore how is it possible for him to introduce reforms and carry them out, and place the militia upon a proper and safe footing. Now, let us hear what Major-General Herbert has to say about the clothing:

> The clothing is fairly good in quality, but the system of issuing it is open to very grave objections, for it is complicated, expensive, and satisfies nobody.

Now, there is a direct charge against the working of the system, not so much about the quality of the clothes as in regard to the system of issuing clothing. Now, if the Minister of Militia was here we could ask him whether the Government have taken steps to effect the reform suggested by the General, who had special and technical knowledge of the subject. But we have no person here to answer questions, and though we can talk and place our talk upon record before the country, there is not a single Minister or member supporting the Government who is able to tell us anything about this subject; and still they want us to vote a large sum of money to continue the militia in that unsatisfactory condition. Now, Major General Herbert still goes on:

> It cannot strictly be said that any system existed for the issuing of clothing and equipment.

Is it really true that there is no system by which clothing and equipments are issued? If there is any system, then the officer who made such a statement could not understand his duties, but we cannot suppose that for one moment, because it was his duty to investigate the matter, and he was in duty bound to thoroughly understand before he expressed his opinion in a public report. But he did not hesitate to express his opinion, and he distinctly said there was no system. Yet we are spending large sums of money yearly on these articles. This year we are spending a very large sum, and last year we spent over a million and a quarter upon the militia. This is the condition of the militia according to the evidence of the officer who came from England to take charge of the force, and whose duty it was to place its true condition before the people. No hon. gentleman opposite, not even the Minister of Militia has pointed out that Major General Herbert was wrong in any particular in this regard. If General Herbert is right, then the Government are guilty of neglect of duty. The General goes on to say:

> At present many corps are unprovided with issues to which they are entitled, while others get more than their share.

The General said that articles issued to the militia are not issued equitably, fairly and justly, that some corps receive little and others receive far more than they are entitled to. These are not my words, but the words of the highest authority on the subject. Still we have no Minister to inform us whether there have been any reforms or not. Again, the General says:

> I am thoroughly confident that if the country is to receive an adequate return for its militia expenditure, a reorganization of the staff is necessary.

Here the General tells us seriously that if the service is to be efficient and we are to receive a return for the large sums expended a reorganization is necessary; and later on the General states that inefficient officers must be changed in order to carry out reforms so much needed in the militia. He further states in his report of 1891:

> The rural corps are very deficient in instruction, but their organization is still more defective. Money is paid for instruction by officers who are incapable of imparting it. Arms and equipments are for the most part obrolete.

This is a very serious charge against the Government and its officials. Not only is the militia inefficient and in a disorganized condition, but he says money is paid to officers who are incapable of discharging their duty. If that statement is true this House should know whether those officers have been dismissed and other officers appointed to convey the necessary instruction. If they have not been changed, then I charge the Government with neglect of duty in placing money in the hands of officers appointed by themselves who were unable to instruct the militia corps. I have been reading so far from the Major General's report of 1891, and I will now read from the General's report of 1893, when he referred to the same matters, thus showing that during the interval no steps had been taken by the Government to carry out the reforms suggested. The General says :

> The condition of a large portion of the equipment in use by the militia is even worse than I have already reported.

The General found out during those two years that instead of having exaggerated the condition, the equipment was even worse than when he first investigated it, again showing that the Government allowed matters to drift along without securing any higher efficiency. The General proceeds :

> Not only is a great part of it (the equipment) worn out with age, but much of that used is of the worst possible quality.

There were new boots purchased from contractors at high prices, and when they were used for the various corps throughout the country the General characterizes them as a very inferior quality. Can it be supposed that the Government were discharging their duty in accepting from contractors at high prices inferior goods ? The General should be a good judge of these matters ; no doubt he was. He goes on further to say :

> I have seen saddlery and other equipments when issued fresh from the store, which failed to endure ordinary usage for twelve days in camp.

Surely it must have been strange saddlery that would not stand two weeks' wear. The Government must be condemned for accepting such trash from contractors at high prices and issuing it to the militia of the country. I would like to know what justification or excuse the department can offer ? These statements are thundered into the ears of the Ministers, and they sit there without giving any satisfaction to the people as to why this neglect is continually going on. He says again :

> I have seen boots which have been issued to soldiers, the leather of which had no more consistency than paper.

It must have been very bad leather indeed if it had not more consistency than paper. It shows how utterly bad these articles were although they were accepted from the contractor and paid for as first-class. Speaking of the military storehouses, he says :

> They are filled with an accumulation of worthless and worn-out equipments, obsolete military stores, and condemned utensils, for the care of which an unnecessary number of men are employed.

Here is the opinion of an efficient officer, unbiassed, without any axe to grind or political end to accomplish. He was here simply to express his opinion of the matters that came directly under his observation. In 1891, General Herbert referred to the inefficient state of the Militia Department, and in 1893 he repeated it. Col. R. H. Davis, who was in the army for a great many years, and who studied military matters as thoroughly as any gentleman that was ever in a Canadian corps, was forced to make the following statement in a paper which he read before the Military Institute in Toronto, in 1895, two years after Major General Herbert's report. He said :

> We have no force fit to take the field, nor organization for camping, nor stores to supply. The Militia Department knows nothing about the rural militia and cares less. Then darkness and ignorance which are worse have prevailed for years. The country well knows and the department should know that the militia is not only disorganized but demoralized.

Here is a man who took a pride in the militia of this country, who was colonel of a battalion for many years, and who makes this statement for the purpose of arousing the attention of the Government, surely he had no object to serve except the welfare of our militia. The "Military Gazette," a paper published in the interest of the Canadian Militia, a paper which wishes the militia to receive justice, gives the following warning note to the Government in the number for January, 1895 :—

> The militia has never been in a worse condition than it is to-day. Ignorance, incapacity, and systematic neglect are the prime characteristics of the present military system.

There is another charge made against the Government for the sole object of awakening it to a sense of its duty. Ignorance, incapacity, and systematic neglect prevails in the Government with regard to the militia, and yet they ask us for $1,472,000 for the purpose of carrying out the Militia Department this year. If the members of the Liberal party were sure that that money would be economically expended, we would not have the slightest hesitation in the world to grant that money so as to put the militia on the highest possible plane of efficiency. But when we know from undeniable evidence that our money is squandered, I feel hesitation to allow it to be expended by men who have proved themselves so incapable. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would direct your attention to the Military College for a short time. I am not opposed to the Military College provided that it is conducted along the lines of its original purpose. If we receive the largest possible return in the way of the equipment of our young men for military service, I am not opposed to paying a reasonable sum for the continuation of that Military College. The object of the establishment of that college in 1876 is well known to those who have read the Act of Parliament in reference to it. It was intended to give our young men a knowledge in the various military branches of education, so as to enable them to take their position as officers in our militia in case of war. The object was not to make it a university in which general branches of education would be imparted to the students. Let me read the Act passed in 1874 so that it may be known what this college was originally intended for. Chapter 36 says :

Whereas it is expedient to make further provisions for the education of the officers of the militia in military knowledge and matters connected with military instruction, Her Majesty enacts as follows :—

Sec. 1. An institution shall be established for the purpose of imparting complete education in all branches of military tactics, fortifications, engineering and general scientific knowledge on subjects connected with and necessary to a knowledge of the military profession and for qualifying officers to command and for staff appointments. Such institution to be known as the Military College, and to be located in some one of the garrison towns of Canada.

You will see from that extract from the Act that it was not the intention of the Government at that time to teach other branches than those which bore specifically and directly on military matters. But I find that now nearly every subject taught in the university is being introduced into the curriculum of the college. Now, I ask any hon. gentleman here what these subjects have to do with military education. I know that my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) states that a man would be better equipped by having a knowledge of all the modern languages, all the sciences, and every mortal subject that is taught in every educational institution in the world. So would we all ; it would give us a strength and a power that we would not otherwise possess. But in introducing these subjects into the curriculum of the Royal Military College at Kingston, we are infringing on the functions of our universities, academies and high schools, established largely by the province of Ontario, to impart that knowledge to young men at much less cost than it can be imparted at the Royal Military College ; and just as in my own profession or in the legal profession a man requires to become equipped in these subjects before he is allowed to enter upon the study of the technical part of those professions, the same rule should apply in the case of persons entering the Military College to prepare for the military profession. Now, let me mention a few of the branches which are taught in that institution. French—I suppose a man would not be a soldier unless he understood French, if an Englishman, or unless he understood English if a Frenchman. To my mind, it was absolutely beyond what was intended that the Royal Military College should teach French to an Englishman or English to a Frenchman. Then, English literature—that is a branch of study taught in our schools and universities. Why should we establish a chair in the Royal Military College for the purpose of teaching English literature ? Again there is chemistry. What has chemistry to do with fighting in the battlefield ? What has chemistry to do with the tactics which a great soldier would have to work out before the enemy ? Again, take physics ; take geology and mineralogy ; take freehand drawing and painting—what have these to do with military matters ? I might go on and mention many other branches. Now, do you not see that when four years are required for graduation in this institution because these subjects are taught, if the knowledge of these subjects were acquired outside of the Royal Military College, two years inside of that institution would give to the young men attending it all the knowledge in regard to military matters which they now acquire in four years of their course ? In that way the term would be shortened and the expense lessened. But, passing from that, I want to draw the attention of the House to the extraordinary expense of the institution. When the institution was established it was stated that it would only cost from $8.000 to $12.000 a year. That amount has been greatly exceeded last year, it cost nearly $65,000, and the expenditure has been going up every year since 1876, the year in which it was established. It would probably be interesting, if not for the House, yet to the country, to see the gradual increase in expenditure and in salaries during the existence of the college. The salaries paid each year since 1876 to superior and subordinate staffs, were as follows :—

Or an average during these four years of $13.278. Now, take the years since 1880, when the first graduate took his diploma :

1886	40,661
1891	36,451
1892	34,814
1894-95	37,085

Or a total expenditure for salaries since the first graduate took his diploma, fifteen years ago, of no less than $559,580, or an average of $37,305, as compared with an average under the Mackenzie regime, of $13,278, or an increase of 105½ per cent. And these figures do not represent all the expenditure in connection with the institution. The total expenditure on the Royal Military College since its establishment in 1876 up to the 30th June, 1893, was as follows :—

Total expenditure for maintenance..	$1,140,764
Repairs on building	69,059
Paid by Public Works Department..	110,322
Total	$1,320,145

Now, I have a return before me which shows that the number of cadets who graduated from 1880 down to 1893 was 195, and each graduate cost the country $6,670. Dividing that by the term of four years, we have an expenditure for each year per graduate of $1,692. If that be not extravagance, then I would like to know what is. Now, the graduates themselves paid to the college in addition $279,917, which would give an amount paid by each graduate of $1,436, and that divided by the term of four years would make about $350 per year, which it cost each graduate personally, in addition to the sum of $1,692 which it cost the public. This makes a total cost to the graduates and the country of nearly $2,000 a year for each graduate. In view of these facts, will any one vote for a continuance of that institution on its present basis ? Again, what has become of these 195 graduates, each of whom has cost the country $6,670 ? Are they giving the benefit of the training they have received to the people of this country ? I find that there are sixty-three in the English service, and however loyal I may be to England, I do not see what benefit it is to us to expend $6,670 on a graduate in order to educate him for the English army. I have no objection to his joining the English army, but I do not see that his doing so will bring much profit to Canada. In the Canadian service there are sixty-eight, and in the North-west Mounted Police there are six, making seventy-four all told in our military and Civil Service. We are preparing in this college men for the Civil Service of the country just as a lawyer is trained to discharge his duties. We are taking from the country large sums of money to prepare these men for our Civil Service, in which they will draw large salaries from the public treasury. But there are many of us who have gone to the universities and higher schools for the purpose of being adequately equipped to enter the same service, the only difference being that we had to pay for our own education, and were not trained for the public service at the expense of the country. The total number in the English and Canadian service is 137. Where are the others gone ? They are not in the country at all. Out of 195, we have only information of the whereabouts of 137. Of the others a number were in the Japanese war at the head of Japanese soldiers, and some were at the head of Chinese soldiers. They left our country and gave us nothing in return for the money we spent on their education. Now, for each officer in the military service it cost the country $9,720, and for every one known to be in the country it cost $7,790. In view of those facts, which are taken from a return brought down in reply to the motion of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), we must admit the necessity of reorganizing this institution on a different basis. Make it a military college, and cease to continue it as a university. Make the term two years, and give in those two years military training, and cut off the two years now devoted to the literary training. We will thus save large sums, and the institution will be kept up at a higher and better standard than it is to-day. I do not oppose the continuance of the college, but the present system on which it is based. I am opposed to the great extravagance which has been shown in its management during past years, and I would just say this, that the country has come to a pitiable pass if every department of this Government is managed as loosely as the Militia Department. There is no justification for the condition of the militia to-day. No one will say that the statements of either of those gentlemen whom I have quoted are not well-founded, and yet no effort has been put forth to reorganize the militia corps. In fact, the Minister who is at the head of the Militia Department is not in a position to take any steps, from his own knowledge, and therefore he allows the thing to go on drifting from bad to worse, so that we are spending a million and a half of money every year and receiving nothing in return, and if it were necessary to call out the militia we could not put a battalion properly equipped in the field. These are the statements made by men who are in the best position to judge of the facts. If these statements are in any way exaggerated, let them be corrected and the facts placed before the country.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to make a few explanations in reference to some remarks of the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs). He quoted from the letter of the commandant of the Royal Military College to endeavour to justify the expenditure of that college by comparison with what he alleged to be the expenditure of the University of Toronto. Since the hon. gentleman made his speech, I have possessed myself of the last official financial report of the University of Toronto laid before the provincial legislature. For the fiscal year which corresponded with the academic year 1893-94, I find the total amount of public money expended upon the university, I mean money derived from the province in the way of interest for revenue for government endowment, was $71,227.44. But that money does not come directly to the university in the form of cheques ; it is the result of managing the university endowments which must be managed at the university's expense. It is necessary to deduct the cost of managing the fund in order to see what amount applied to education is. The public accounts show that the cost of managing that estate during the year referred to was $6,449.50. This deducted from the gross revenue leaves $64,777.88, as the total sum of public money expended upon the University of Toronto both for educational and examination purposes during the academic year 1893-94. For that expenditure the university educated, I think, quite a thousand undergraduates and examined—outside of that work which the Military College does—and graduated 365 men. The figures which I have given as to the undergraduates have reference to the year just gone by, because I do not find the figures for 1893-94. But the expenditure I have given for 1893-94 represents substantially the expenditures for 1894-95, there has been no change in the capital account, and therefore no substantial change in the revenue account, the revenue for 1894-95 being practically the same as that for 1893-94, we have $64,777.88, the gross sum derived from the province of Ontario, expended in the education of about a thousand undergraduates and in conducting examinations which resulted in the graduating of 365. For that sum of provincial money, not counting fees from students, &c., we conducted examinations in arts, law, medicine, agriculture, music, dentistry, pharmacy and pedagogy, practical science and engineering, $7,214.35 ; branches of expenditure unknown in the Royal Military College. The total cost of conducting these examinations was $7,214.35, which is work not done by the Military College. And if you deduct that from the total sum of $64,777.88, it leaves us $57,563.53, as the expenditure from provincial sources upon the educational side of the university of the year in question. In other words, we expended of Ontario money in the education of say a thousand students in the year gone by $57,563.53, whilst for the same year the Royal Military College expenditure was $68,022.22 upon the education of 57 cadets. The average per capita expenditure therefore on these 57 cadets was $1,191, while for the university students the average expenditure was $57.56. In other words for one dollar expended on an undergraduate of the university of Toronto over $20 was expended on the education of a cadet at the Royal Military College.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) who is well qualified from his connection with the institution to speak with authority, has defended the University of Toronto against the unfair comparison made by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs). I have no doubt that that hon. gentleman, followed the figures of Commandant Cameron in his remarkable letter intended to answer the report of Mr. Sandford Fleming. The commandant takes the figures given last year by the hon. member for North York as being correct, and thus assumes that the cost of turning out each graduate since the school was started amount to $5,000 on the average. Then he undertakes to show that it cost not more, but very nearly half as much, to educate a graduate of Toronto University, and in order to do that he gives the following peculiar calculation which he says he has taken from the committee appointed by the board of trustees in 1893 :

At p. 23, " University of Toronto, Report of Committee appointed by Board of Trustees, 1893, Capital and Income Accounts," sites, buildings and contents in university use, valued at $1,328,966.40, at 4 per cent.	$ 53,158 65

In other words, he adds the total revenue of the university to the total expenditure of the university, and proceeds on that basis to calculate what it costs to turn out a graduate in that institution. But even if these figures were correct the comparison would be sufficiently glaring. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Dickey), who represents the Minister of Militia in this House, is a graduate of the University of Toronto, and he knows as well as I do that there is no comparison between the education given in that university and the Royal Military College. If it were true that the Kingston education costs only about twice as much as the Toronto University education, it would be a bad enough showing for the Military College ; but my friend the vice-chancellor of the university has clearly proven that it costs twenty times as much to take a man up to the Kingston College standard, as it does to make him a graduate of Toronto University.

Leaving for a moment the question of military education, which I would like to return to again if I had time——

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. member if he proposes to talk up to the Sabbath ?

Mr. CASEY. I propose to finish what I have to say on this subject. I wish to say a few words in regard to the scandal that has been created by the action of the General commanding, in regard to the command of the Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto. It has been pointed out that that regiment stands in a peculiar position. It has been the nurse of military men, and officers for many other regiments throughout Canada. It has graduated, so to speak, through its ranks, many who have sat on the floor of this House, and who have attained greater distinction, perhaps, in other walks of life. I have had the honour myself of wearing the uniform of a private, and of holding the rank of a non-commissioned officer in that battalion, and I feel naturally a kindly interest in it to this day. I consider that the present case is a scandal which would have been notorious in connection with any regiment in Canada, but it has become a special subject of criticism and condemnation in the case of that crack regiment of the Canadian militia.

The policy of the Government towards the militia should tend to encourage the best men to enter it and stay in its ranks, and should, above all, be such as would encourage the best men to act as officers. In the selection of the commanding officers of regiments, the Government should act, and I believe all Governments do act, so far as you can expect of any government, independently of political considerations. When a commanding officer is selected it should be on the ground of efficiency and general qualifications. When a commanding officer is placed in command of a regiment, he should be retained there as long as his efficiency continues, and until some charges are proved which would justify his removal. While he is there, his authority should be maintained, and insubordination amongst his officers and men should be put down, without which it is impossible to carry out discipline in the regiment; and in maintaining this discipline he should be backed up by the Government and by the General commanding the forces.

All these maxims have been violated in the case in question. I have no time to go into it fully, but all know from what has been stated, that there have been no charges made against Colonel Hamilton. There has been some talk about an investigation being held by the Adjutant General into the conduct of Colonel Hamilton. Why, Sir, there were no charges against Colonel Hamilton! The fact is that Colonel Hamilton himself made formal charges of insubordination, of plotting, and of intrigue against some of the officers under his command; that he offered to substantiate those charges; that he called for an investigation of those charges, an investigation which he had a military right to have.

Mr. DICKEY. Where does the hon. gentleman get that information?

Mr. CASEY. I think if the hon. gentleman is familiar with the documents in the case, he will be aware where I get that information.

Mr. DICKEY. No, I am not.

Mr. CASEY. If he will ask the General commanding, who has been free enough in talking to the press about the matter, he will be able to inform him that my statement is perfectly borne out by the facts. I have seen copies of letters in which that is stated, and they are to be had in the department, where the hon. gentleman has access to them, and I think they are in the papers brought down.

Mr. DICKEY. Colonel Hamilton did make a charge, not of the character the hon. gentleman says at all, but with reference to the payment of money.

Mr. CASEY. There was a charge in reference to the payment of money, and that was the act of subordination. That is the very letter I refer to. A certain officer had charge of the regimental funds which were under the colonel's orders. They were put in charge of this officer, and he refused to give them up when called upon to do so by the colonel.

Mr. DICKEY. That is not a charge of general conspiracy among the officers.

Mr. CASEY. There are charges, both of conspiracy and insubordination, because this officer refused to give up the documents put in his charge, and which he held in a position of trust. It is a charge of insubordination and dishonesty against that officer. There was also a charge of conspiracy in that certain officers banded together to break up the financial standing of the regiment, and embarrass Colonel Hamilton so that it was hoped he would have to resign.

Mr. DICKEY. There is no charge of that kind.

Mr. CASEY. There was a charge of that kind, and the General not only refused to investigate that charge, but even to answer Colonel Hamilton in regard to the charge that he made. Not a single letter from him was answered except by the cool and insulting method of directing the Deputy Adjutant General to inform him that he had the choice between resigning and being kicked out. I say there is not a volunteer, there is not a man of soldierly instincts, there is not a gentleman, whether he be a soldier or not, who is not compelled to sympathize with Colonel Hamilton in the circumstances of this case. He has not been treated with the courtesy due from one gentleman to another, he has not been given the justice which he has a military right to demand, and I say that the General commanding, whatever be his rank or experience in the Imperial army, has not acted as a true soldier would act in this matter. If he has any knowledge of the traditions of the army to which he belongs, he has not carried them out. I do not doubt that he has knowledge of them, but I say he has not carried them out. I say the facts of the case would prove that if an investigation were granted. Instead of granting the investigation demanded by Colonel Hamilton into the conduct of his officers, he turns round and, without investigation, merely after consultation with whomsoever he chose to consult in the matter, he decides that Colonel Hamilton must walk out or be kicked out. I say that is an outrage that should not be tolerated. Whether it be the Government that is responsible for this outrage, of the General officer commanding, is for the Government to make clear to this House and the people of this country. I say, in closing, that military discipline has been violated, military usage has been broken, and the constitutional rights of officers and men of the volunteer force have been abrogated, by the action of either of the General or of the Government in this matter, and they have got to settle that between them.

Motion (Mr. Mulock) to adjourn, negatived.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER moved :

That on Monday next and following days until the close of the session, the House shall meet at 10.20 a.m., with a recess from 1 until 2 p.m. ; that there shall be two distinct sittings on each day, one from 10.30 a.m. until 6 p.m., and the other from 7.30 p.m. until hour of adjournment ; that Government business shall have precedence at such sittings, and that Private Bills will be taken up for one hour only at the beginning of the evening sittings of Monday and Wednesday.

Mr. LAURIER. I object to this proposal. I suppose the hon. gentleman does not propose to sit on Sunday.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not our fault.

Mr. LAURIER. It may not have been your fault.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order. It is not legal or constitutional to sit on Sunday morning.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not a point of order.

Mr. CASEY. I propose to show that it is a point of order. This House is only capable of sitting on legal days. We have been breaking the rules of this House even by what we have been doing. The point of order is, that this motion could not be made, that it was made when the clock was pointing one or two minutes after twelve, and therefore it was Sunday morning. I submit, therefore, that the motion has not been made and cannot be put.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion has been made, it has been put to the House, and is now before the House.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to say——

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman who made the objection seems to think there is a question of morals involved.

Mr. CASEY. A question of order.

Mr. FOSTER. On one side of the House or on the other. He stood on his feet and obstructed until after twelve o'clock, into the Sabbath ; but the hon. gentleman now rises to a point of order. There is no point of order, but there may be a breach of the moral law if the business of the House, which has been obstructed until twelve o'clock, is carried on in order that it may be disposed of. The hon. gentlemen opposite have had their way during the whole of the afternoon and evening ; they have not allowed us to do any business. They commenced, I suppose, with that intention, and they have carried it out until this time. I do not intend to press the motion, because I do not propose to be a party to transacting business, even at the suggestion of hon. gentlemen opposite, on the Sabbath Day. If the motion is allowed to go, I shall be glad ; if it is objected to, I shall ask my hon. friend beside me to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. DICKEY moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. (Sunday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 20th April, 1896.

PRAYERS.

ELECTION LITERATURE.

Mr. EDGAR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the Government to a statement which was made to me on the best authority a short time ago, that over in the Department of Agriculture of the Dominion Government, there are some thirty or thirty-five clerks, permanent and temporary, in the pay of the Government, hard at work circulating Government political literature throughout the country. Among other things there are tons, I believe, of the eloquent speech of the Minister of Finance on the Remedial Bill, and there are also hundreds of weight, at any rate, going out of a Conservative pamphlet called a Political Review, or Topics for the Election of 1896. Now, what I complain of, and I believe it to be an undoubted fact, is that a large number of clerks of the Government, paid for by public money, should at this moment be engaged in circulating party political literature, which should certainly be put a stop to by the Government the moment their attention is drawn to it.

Mr. FOSTER. As acting Minister of Agriculture I know something about what the hon. gentleman has surmised, although nothing as to the allegations he has made. I may say promptly and at once, that the statement is entirely unfounded, that there are twenty or thirty clerks in the pay of the Government sending out election literature.

Mr. CASEY. How many ?

Mr. FOSTER. Are you aware that a single clerk in the pay of the Government is sending out election literature ?

Mr. CASEY. I am.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not. I do know that election literature is being sent out. The hon. gentleman is so modest that he would not say a word as to its being sent out by gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are sending it at our own expense.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we have settled one question satisfactorily to the House, at least; we have settled it, too, so as to have no recriminations from the other side. It is perfectly right that this election literature should be sent out. Hon. gentlemen opposite are sending it out, and they attack us for sending it out, not on the ground——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. They attack us for sending it out——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, the hon. gentleman is misstating the facts. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to say what I wish to say, he can then take objection to it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is deliberately imputing to my hon. friend a statement which he did not make. He did not attack the Government for sending out election literature, and the Minister has no right to say he did.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, who said they did ? The hon. gentleman cuts me off in the middle of my sentence, and won't allow me to finish it. I say that the hon. gentlemen opposite attack us for sending out election literature, not on the ground that we are sending out election literature, but because we are doing it at the expense of the country. I give an emphatic denial to the latter part of that statement. Some ten, or fifteen, or twenty young ladies are at work, but every one of them are paid by the election committee and not by the Government.

Mr. EDGAR. Does the hon. gentleman deny that a permanent officer of the Government is in charge of that crowd ?

Mr. FOSTER. A permanent officer of the Government is not in charge of that " crowd."

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say——

Mr. SPEAKER. This question cannot be debated without a motion.

Mr. LAURIER. Only one word. Do I understand that some ten or fifteen young ladies are in the Agriculture Department working, not for the department, but for private parties.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know where they are working, I know that ten or fifteen, or twenty are engaged in sending out election literature, as we have a perfect right to do, and we are paying them ourselves, and not the Government.

Mr. CASEY. Are they not working in the Agriculture Department ?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Here is some of their literature——

Mr. SPEAKER. Orders of the Day.

MANITOBA AND NELSON VALLEY RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 65) to incorporate the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are on clause 9 of the Bill, and I may inform hon. gentlemen that I have in my hands an amendment which has not yet been put, and which, if put, might simplify matters.

Mr. MARTIN. I believe that there has been a misunderstanding on the part of the promoters of this Bill in connection with this section 9. We had before the Railway Committee a deputation or representative from the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company, protesting against the route of this company on the ground that it parallels their line. I do not wish to be considered as subscribing to the proposition that this Parliament is not entitled to give a charter for a road which will parallel a road already constructed. That is a proposition which is sometimes put forward by railway companies, and it was put forward in this case by the Manitoba and North-western. They suggested that this company should not build a line from Portage la Prairie, but build from Gladstone or Arden on condition that the Manitoba and North-western were prepared to make running arrangements with the company. I understand, however, that this section does not specially refer to that point, and so I withhold further remarks until the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There has been notice given of an amendment by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) to this clause, and it would facilitate business if it were moved now.

Mr. FRASER. I move the following amendment :—

Strike out the words " provided that " in section 9, line 23, and lines 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30, and insert instead the following :—

Provided that such agreement has first been approved by ninety per cent of the shareholders at a special general meeting of the shareholders duly called for the purpose of considering the same, at which meeting shareholders representing at least ninety per cent in value of the stock are present in person, or represented by proxy, and that such agreement has also received the sanction of the Governor General in Council.

Mr. MARTIN. Not only should some explanation be offered by the promoters of the Bill, but the Government should explain the meaning of these words. The House should remember that the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway, in which was included the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company, have had from this Government for many years a land grant, consisting of 6,400 acres per mile in Manitoba and 12,800 acres per mile outside of the province. The company has not been able to float the scheme or any part of it on that land grant. The land grant has lapsed many times, but has been renewed ; the charter has also lapsed, but has been renewed. The company also obtained very liberal bonuses from the Manitoba legislature. I do not intend to go into a history of those bonuses. The land grant and those bonuses together have not enabled the company to build any portion of the line except 40 miles out of Winnipeg, and I intend to lay before the committee the circumstances connected with the building of those 40 miles. Those 40 miles were constructed in the fall of 1886, and were constructed in this way. The province of Manitoba in 1885 passed an Act for the purpose of aiding railway companies that had received land grants from the Dominion of Canada. That statute was passed, perhaps, more particularly with regard to the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company, a company which had a land grant, and the Manitoba government, in that statute, agreed that they would advance provincial bonds bearing interest at 5 per cent, running for thirty-five years, at the rate of $1 per acre, for every acre of land grant. This company had 6,400 acres per mile, so that, under that statute, provincial bonds to the extent of $6,400 per mile were advanced the Manitoba and North-western. That turned out to be a very unfortunate transaction for the province of Manitoba, as there are outstanding nearly a million dollars of provincial bonds bearing 5 per cent interest, for which the government have the security of the land grant, but from which, so far, they have been able to realize very little. That statute was a general statute applying to all railway companies having land grants, and it enabled the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to make the advances if they saw fit. The Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway, as it was then called, applied to the local government for an advance of provincial bonds under the provisions of that statute, and the provincial government agreed to make the advance to the extent of forty miles, which amounted to $256,000. The company gave the contract to Mann & Holt, who tendered for the construction of this railway at an outrageous sum. They built the line in a kind of a way ; that is to say, they turned up the prairie a little and laid the ties, and put the rails upon the ties, and, so far as my knowledge goes, that is all the work that was done upon it. For this they received from the company the proceeds of these $256,000 worth of bonds, which, I believe, they had to sell at a slight discount. I am, perhaps, going a little ahead of my story by saying they had received these bonds. In the meantime, the railway company applied to the local government to hand over to it the $256,000, as, according to their contention, the railway had been completed. The Dominion Government had not, up to this date, transferred the land grant to the company, so that the company were not in a position to transfer the land grant to the local government, and, therefore, the local government refused to hand over the bonds. The whole question then was, as to what the Dominion Government would do. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), who was at that time provincial treasurer of Manitoba, came to Ottawa to see if he could not help this railway company out, by obtaining the transfer of these Dominion lands. The result of his mission was that the local government handed over to the railway company these bonds, amounting to $256,000. The local government, however, did not obtain the transfer from the railway company, because the railway company had not obtained the land grant from the Dominion Government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) however, reported to the Manitoba government that the lands would be immediately conveyed to that government, and he did that, as he said, upon promises made to him in Ottawa by Mr. John Henry Pope, the Minister of Railways, and by Sir John A. Macdonald. The railway company got the bonds and handed them over to Mann, Holt & Company, and, of course, they were an outstanding liability on the province of Manitoba. The Dominion Government refused to hand over the railway land grant to the company, and I regret to say that refusal has continued in force up to the present day. The government of Manitoba had handed over to this company $256,000 worth of bonds, which are outstanding, upon which they have paid the interest duly each half-year, and the principal of which they will have to pay, eventually. For that handing over of bonds, the provincial government have no security whatever, and, naturally enough, that matter has been one of very considerable interest and discussion in the province of Manitoba. I think I can fairly say—and I do not think the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) will differ from me in this—that that transaction had very considerable to do with the final downfall of the Norquay government, which occurred in 1887, about a year after this transaction. It was thought that government had not displayed that careful regard for the interests of the province, which they should have, when handing over these bonds. I must, in fairness, give the explanation made by the hon. member (Mr. LaRivière), as to the reasons which induced him to advise the Manitoba government, of which he was then a member, to hand over these bonds. He says, that he came to Ottawa, that he saw Sir John Macdonald and Mr. Pope, Minister of Railways, and that they gave him an explicit and definite promise that these lands would be handed over without any further conditions or delay. On the contrary, Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. John Henry Pope, both emphatically contradicted that statement, and said that they never had at any time promised the hon. member (Mr. LaRivière) to hand over the land grant. The hon. member (Mr. LaRivière) went into details, and he stated that he received this promise from Sir John Macdonald in the presence of Mr. Pope, and also from Mr. Pope in the presence of Sir John Macdonald, and that it occurred in the office of the Minister of Railways in Ottawa. In answer to that Sir John Macdonald said that he had not been in the office of the Minister of Railways for two years previous to that time. So far as we were concerned in Manitoba, it became a clear question of veracity between, on the one hand, two Ministers of the Crown for the Dominion, the leader of the Government, Sir John Macdonald, and Mr. John Henry Pope, Minister of Railways, who positively asserted that they had never had any conversation in regard to this matter, and had never seen the hon. gentleman at all, and, on the other hand, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) who says he advised this Government to hand over these bonds, on the express promise of those gentlemen, that the lands would be immediately handed over to the province. That is the position of affairs; and, as I say, the extreme looseness with which the hon. member for Provencher carried on these transactions and undertook to hand over such a large sum as $256,000 of provincial money to a railway company without a scratch of a pen to justify it—without anything whatever but his statement that he had a promise from these two Ministers of the Crown. I have gone into this matter in order that the committee may consider whether they are going to allow the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company to enter into an agreement with the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company for the purpose of obtaining control of a railway already built, and the franchises of that corporation, without making some provision for the province of Manitoba, which has more interest in this institution than any other body. Now, I contend here, as I have always contended in Manitoba, that it was the duty of the Dominion Government to protect the provincial government as far as they could. I contend that it is the duty of this Parliament to protect the interests of one of the provinces of this Dominion. That land grant is still in the hands of the Dominion Government; it has never been handed over to the company, because there is no pretense that, in the construction of these forty miles, they have ever earned any of it, and I contend that it is the duty of the Dominion Government to hand that land grant over to the provincial government, and not to this railway company. But if this clause passes, we shall have the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company coming to the Government and claiming the land grant as an innocent purchaser. There is nothing on the records to show that the Manitoba government are interested in this matter, and these people would have no notice. I do not suppose that they would even have notice of any remarks I make here to-day. They could well say that they have never heard that the province of Manitoba was interested in this matter; and I protest most strongly against a proposition to allow the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company to sell out its franchises and this railway to a new corporation without duly providing for the claim of the Manitoba government—a claim which I think is based in justice; because, as between the statement of the late Premier of this Dominion, Sir John Macdonald, and the late Minister of Railways, Mr. Pope, on the one side, and that of the hon. member for Provencher on the other side, I have no hesitation in believing the latter. I think it is incredible that that hon. gentleman would have come to Ottawa and stayed here, as he did for a considerable time, in the meantime corresponding by telegraph with his government at Winnipeg, without seeing either of those gentlemen in regard to this matter. Any other conclusion would be most derogatory to the hon. member for Provencher, if the statement of Sir John Macdonald and Mr. Pope was true, that he never came to see them and never got any promise from them. In that case, of course it follows that the hon. gentleman must have been in a conspiracy with the promoters of this railway company to defraud the province of Manitoba out of this large sum of money. I say that much as I differ from the hon. member for Provencher in his local politics, and strongly as I have condemned him for his administration of local affairs, I have always thought that he told the truth in regard to that transaction. But, of course, that does not absolve the hon. member and his colleagues in the government at that time from the just criticism that they never should have handed over such a large sum of money upon the mere verbal promise of any man. I think that no one better appreciates the justice of that criticism to-day than does the hon. member for Provencher: and I venture to say that never again would he transact a matter of that magnitude in the extremely loose manner in which that piece of business was transacted. This sum of $256,000 was got from the province and handed over to the railway contractors; and I have no hesitation in saying that that sum more than paid those contractors for all the work they did. They supplied no rails; they did nothing whatever but a little grading and putting down the ties and laying the rails. They did not ballast the road or fence it; I do not think they even surfaced it. Besides, they had a judgment against the company for a very large sum of money, the balance of their contract. The steel rails were obtained by the grossest misrepresentation and fraud on the part of that railway company, in dealing with the steel rail company in the old country, from which the rails were obtained.

Mr. DALY. You would not dare to make that statement outside of this House.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, I have made it many times outside of this House, and I am quite prepared to do it again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you prepared to assault the hon. gentleman if he does?

Mr. DALY. Oh, no, not at all. I would not demean myself by doing that.

Mr. MARTIN. I would ask the Minister of the Interior if he is prepared to deny the truth of the statement?

Mr. DALY. I am, most certainly.

Mr. MARTIN. Then, the hon. gentleman declares that these rails were paid for?

Mr. DALY. No, that is not what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the hon. gentleman say that they were not obtained by misrepresentation?

Mr. DALY. Yes. That is the point.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it to be supposed that any steel rail company would, of their own accord, ship out steel rails for 40 miles of railway, on the credit of a company that had no assets or standing of any kind? It is not to be supposed for a moment. These rails were shipped on the expressed representation of the promoters of this company that the makers of these rails would get those bonds. That was the misrepresentation. They were to get those bonds from the local government, and they never got a bond or a dollar, and they are to-day without anything whatever from this company for those rails, and the result was that the company became insolvent, and one large shareholder, a gentleman who had been in very easy circumstances and who had reached the age of something over eighty years of age, was entirely ruined. He made a trip to Winnipeg a few years after, when I was in the government, to see if there was any possibility at all of his getting any money or security for those rails. He told us that the transaction had completely ruined him, and he was responsible for the support of a very large family. We have heard a good deal in this House, in connection with other enterprises, of the necessity of keeping up the credit of Canada in the old country; but nothing could have been more calculated to hurt the credit of Canada than these proceedings. The promoters of that company have gone to England, year after year, since then, in order to float the whole of this scheme, and no matter where they went, this old scandal always confronted them, because the creditors of the Steel Rails Company made it their business to see that every financial company in London was fully apprised of the circumstances. The scheme has thus been effectually prevented from being floated in the old country, and I hope that it has not had, as it probably has had, a disastrous effect upon legitimate schemes which have been attempted to be floated upon the London market. Transactions of that kind are sure to act against all kinds of schemes, no matter how legitimate and reasonable. After these 40 miles were built, various attempts were made to change the character of the bonus given by the local government to the road but without avail. At length, in 1891, the Parliament of Canada offered a new bonus to this railway company, but I have this to point out, with regard to that new bonus which was offered, that the Minister of the Interior of that day, the Hon. Mr. Dewdney, pointed out most expressly and definitely that it was not to be a bonus for the construction of the road to Hudson Bay, but for the construction of a colonization road 250 miles long, running northerly from the city of Winnipeg. That bonus consists of an agreement to pay the sum of $80,000 per year for twenty years after the completion of the railway in return for the carriage of the mails and other Government service. And the most peculiar thing to be noted in regard to that bonus is that there is nothing in the statute which compels the railway company to do any carrying. The moment it is completed for 250 miles, whether the company is in a position to operate the road or not or whether it be operated or not, the liability of Canada begins and has to be discharged, year after year, for twenty years, to the extent of $80,000 a year, whether the company carries a pound of nails or a single passenger for the Government or not. There is no obligation on the railway company to do anything. All it has to do is build the road and then the Government must begin paying it $80,000 a year during twenty years. I venture to say that in the long history of railway bonuses and railway grants in Canada, no similar proposition can be found. That was put through this Parliament, and the company again endeavoured to float this 250 miles of this scheme upon the London market. All kinds of rumours were in the newspapers as to the immediate construction of these 250 miles, but nothing whatever was done. At that time, the proposed route of the Hudson's Bay Railway was northerly from Winnipeg along the forty miles that were then constructed, continuing that line up between Lake Winnipeg and Lake Manitoba, across what are called the Narrows, north of Lake Manitoba, and then going up on the west side of Lake Winnipegosis, crossing the Saskatchewan, and then on to the Hudson's Bay. More recently the company has adopted another route, running westerly instead of northerly from the city of Winnipeg, south of Lake Manitoba, and then upon the west side of Lake Manitoba instead of on the east side until it gets up to Lake Winnipegosis, and then the rest of the distance taking the same route as before. Last session, one of those periodical events that have occurred so often in connection with the history of this railway company occurred again, and it was found that its charter was about to expire. The company had omitted to give the notices required by law with regard to a private Bill, and the Government introduced the Bill as their own in order to extend the time for the completion of this road. That Bill was attempted to be put through this House in the dying days of last session. Exception was taken in this House to those clauses of the Bill which had that effect, and the Speaker ruled that they were out of order, that the Government could not, in a public Bill, introduce private legislation. So all of these clauses, or all of them except one, were struck out in this House. The Bill went to the Senate, and there another clause was found to be open to the same objection, and that clause was there struck out. Let me draw the attention of the House to the very curious circumstance that in the Bill which had come through, there was this provision—that the Government could divide the bonus of $80,000 a year for twenty years, which was granted in 1891, into two portions, and make it $40,000 a year for twenty years for the construction of one section of 125 miles, and another $40,000 a year for twenty years for the construction of the second 125 miles, not increasing the bonus, but making half of it available to the company when they had completed 125 miles of road. But there was this additional very peculiar circumstance—that the Government were authorized to transfer that $40,000 a mile from the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, as it was then known, to any other company chartered to build a road into the Dauphin country. Now, a good many years ago this Parliament passed a charter to incorporate the Portage la Prairie and Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company—I think that was the name. That company was organized for the purpose of constructing a railway from the town of Portage la Prairie to Lake Manitoba, a distance of about seventeen miles. The company intended to dig a canal to connect Lake Manitoba with Lake Winnipegosis, and in that way open up the Lake Winnipegosis and Lake Manitoba country. The government made a land grant to that company of 6,400 acres per mile, for the seventeen miles of railway from Portage la Prairie to Lake Manitoba. The company were unable to go on with their enterprise, but one or two sessions afterwards, they came to this House and got an amendment to their charter, which gave them, in addition to the right to build to Lake Manitoba, the right to build from the town of Portage la Prairie, by the west side of Lake Manitoba, into Lake Winnipegosis country, about 125 miles. In due time, because, it would appear the gentlemen who had got this charter were very influential with the government of the day, they got another land grant of 6,400 acres per mile for 125 miles. It was the intention, when they made this second application, to build a railway from Portage la Prairie up west of Lake Dauphin into the Lake Dauphin country. However, they were unable to go on with the work. Last session it was found that their charter was about to elapse, and they made application to renew that charter. The Bill came up in the Railway Committee, and the renewal of the charter was opposed most vehemently by the promoters of the Hudson's Bay Railway, aided by the hon. Postmaster General, and, I think, one or two other members of the Government. This company, with the assistance they were able to get from the members of the Government, and the members of the House, defeated the Bill for the renewal of this Lake Dauphin road charter. A resolution was introduced in the House, by whom I have forgotten, that the Bill be referred back to the Railway Committee for further consideration. Strange to say, although the Bill had been thrown out by a considerable majority in the Railway Committee, no objection was made in the House to this resolution to reinstate it. The Bill went back to the Railway Committee, and again we found the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company opposing the Bill very strongly, and again we found the hon. Postmaster General and other members of the Government, and supporters of the Government voting against the renewing of the charter. Again the Bill was defeated in the Railway Committee. In this House another motion was made to reinstate the Bill and refer it again to the Railway Committee. Strange to say, that motion was unopposed and was duly carried. The Bill came up in the Railway Committee for the third time, and this time, through some occult means, not apparent on the surface, a number of those who had previously voted against the Bill were not in their places, and the Bill was duly carried. It was then reported, in due course, to the House, and went through its different stages in this House and the Senate, and became law. In the meantime, since last session, the Manitoba legislature has passed an Act to bonus the Dauphin road by guaranteeing the interest and principal of bonds, I think to the amount of $9,000 per mile, and it is now announced that the road is to be built. It is also announced that the Government have taken away the bonus of $40,000 for twenty years, offered to the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway, and have transferred it to the Lake Dauphin road. Now, it is most important that the country should know whether that statement is true or not, for what the people in Manitoba and the North-west are interested in with regard to this matter is not a colonization road running one hundred or two hundred miles northerly or westerly from Winnipeg, but a railway to the Hudson's Bay, providing an additional outlet for the products of that country as a means of competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, with a view of getting a reduction of the extremely high and onerous freight rates that are now oppressing that country. So, if it be true that the Government have abandoned the Hudson's Bay Railway, which is now called the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway, the people of that part of the country would like to know about it. I scarcely see how that course can be harmonized with the very strong declaration made this session by the Secretary of State in favour of the construction of a road to Hudson's Bay. I find in this connection that this same railway company, the renewal of whose charter was so strenuously resisted by a portion of the Government last session, and never would have been put through only for the loyal support which it received from Her Majesty's Opposition—that railway is included in this section of the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Government are bound to give us explanations on this matter. The Government know that the position of private Bills just now is an extremely precarious one, that in fact they cannot get them through without the consent and approval of the Opposition; they have abandoned other Bills, and have selected this one to shove through this House. Now, why have they done that? What is the meaning of this section? Is it proposed that the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company shall start out with a clean sheet, guilty of none of the sins of the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, but entitled to all its franchises and all its advantages? I am not prepared to deny that it would not be a good thing that these costs to which I refer, should be able to pass into oblivion in some way or another; and I do not believe myself, and I have always expressed that view, that there ever will be a railway constructed to Hudson's Bay, except by new men and by a new company. But I would like to know whether that is the intention of this Act. If that is the intention of this Act, this House is entitled to know it, because it is not merely a private Bill, it is not a question in which the promoters alone are interested, but it is a question in which the whole country is interested on account of the bonus that stands now upon the statute-book. It is a question in which the province of Manitoba is financially interested to the extent of $256,000 of principal, and a large amount of accumulated interest already paid upon these bonds. Therefore, I want to know if it is proposed by the Government to hand over the franchises of the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company to the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company, with this large concession from this Government, this valuable land grant of 6,400 acres per mile from this Government, and then add a grant of $6,400 per mile upon the security of that land grant from the local government. That is the first road that is proposed to be absorbed by this new corporation, the next one is the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway, the situation of which I have already explained, which is entitled to a large bonus in cash and in land from this Government. The next is the Manitoba and Northern Pacific Railway Company, a company which has had no bonus either in land or in money from the Dominion Government, and as to which we are not so much interested, and the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, another company which has a very large bonus in the way of a land grant from this Government. There is just one point with regard to that company's land grant to which I would like to call the attention of the committee. That is a company incorporated for the purpose of constructing a railway into the Dauphin country, a most laudable enterprise. That is a portion of Manitoba which needs, and which is entitled to, a railway, but strangely enough the only valuable land grant which the Government had at its disposal to give this company, was the lands that would be benefited and made valuable by the construction of a railway in the Lake Dauphin district. But what did the Government do with that land? Why, they have given it all to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They have deliberately taken the valuable land in the Lake Dauphin Company and handed it over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a most improper thing to do, unless they had demanded from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the immediate construction of a branch of that railway into the Dauphin country. So this railway company which proposes to construct a railway into that country, and as to which a contract, I believe, has already been let, and operations are to go on at once, does not get the land which it will develop by this railway, but is obliged to take other and much inferior land. Now, I claim that this land up there does not in reality belong to this Dominion at all, it belongs to the people up there, and should be used for the purpose of developing that country ; I mean that this Government does not own it for the purpose of handing it over to some favourite of theirs, they hold that land in trust for the people of Canada, and the proper course to pursue with regard to it is so to use it that it will develop the great North-west in which Canada is so much interested. Now, they have in this particular case, and I am sorry to say that has been the rule rather than the exception in dealing with Dominion lands, the Government have deliberately refused to use the land for the purpose of developing the country, but have handed it over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to be held by them as long as they see fit. I was going to say they could not get it until they built the railway, but I believe they can, I believe they are entitled to that land now.

Mr. DALY. What are you talking about ?

Mr. MARTIN. The land in that district.

Mr. DALY. Then why are you wasting so much time in discussing it ? You know well that the Canadian Pacific Railway were entitled to that land in virtue of section 11 of their agreement, and the Government were compelled to give them the land whether they liked to or not. There is no choice in connection with the matter. They complied with the conditions of their Act, and the Government, in accordance with that Act, had to schedule that land for them.

Mr. MARTIN. This is the first time I have heard that explanation.

Mr. DALY. I have given it twice already.

Mr. MARTIN. You may have given it, but I have not heard it. Well, that is worse and worse. Here is a country 80 miles away from a railway, a most valuable country. I do not hesitate to say that as soon as a railway is built into that Lake Dauphin district, this land will be worth easily $8 or $10 an acre. It needs a railway, for it is already largely settled. The settlement would go in there very fast were it not for the fact that it is so far away from a railway ; and these gentlemen have deliberately decided that they were bound, under section 11 of the Canadian Pacific Railway's agreement, to hand over the land to them. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company quietly waited until some other company should build a railway there and make the land valuable. If that is the meaning of the arrangement, there is another reason added to the long list of reasons which time has proven to be correct why the Opposition were justified in 1880-81 in opposing the contract for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Could a more monstrous act be imagined than that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should be entitled to hold a monopoly of the odd sections in the Dauphin country more than one hundred miles away from the railway.

Mr. LISTER. It was Sir Charles Tupper's work.

Mr. MARTIN. The people of that part of the country are eighty miles distant from the railway, but they are much more distant from the Canadian Pacific Railway, because the nearest road is that of the Manitoba and North-western ; yet the Canadian Pacific Railway, under the provisions of its contract, as interpreted by hon. gentlemen opposite, are allowed to retain this land and wait until the province of Manitoba build a road there, when the railway company will be prepared to sell it at $8 or $10 per acre. In the clause now under consideration the new company, called the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company, is to absorb several existing corporations, the Manitoba and North-western Company, Winnipeg Great Northern, the Manitoba and Northern Pacific Company or the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, provided that the agreement is approved by a two-thirds vote of the shareholders—to which the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) has moved an amendment to substitute 90 per cent—and the agreement is sanctioned by the Governor General in Council, such agreement to be published according to the regulations in certain newspapers. Where is there any protection of the rights of the Manitoba government in this Bill ? There is no protection whatever, and it is most essential that the rights of the provincial government should be protected. I go further, and say that all the creditors of the railway company should be protected before the company is allowed to sell its franchise and property to any other company. That company has many creditors. It has among its creditors the province of Manitoba to the amount of $256,000 and accumulated interest, which amounts to a very large sum. Then there is the firm of Mann, Holt & Co., contractors, with whom the company made a contract at two or three times the proper price, the contractors receiving for the railway without rails more than it was worth with rails. Another creditor is the Steel Rails Company in England. That is a claim which Parliament should protect, and it should be paid off before any transfer is made. There is another claim which the Dominion is bound to look after and protect, and that is the claim of a son of the Secretary of State, Mr. Stewart Tupper, a lawyer in Winnipeg, whose claim at one time was $40,000, but it runs up now to nearly $100,000. Surely Canada is under an obligation to protect the rights of every member of that distinguished family, and it would be highly improper that we should not all have the same strong desire already expressed in this House by the Secretary of State that this company should go on, if for no other reason than that Stewart Tupper should get his $100,000. That is almost axiomatic—it requires no advocacy at my hands in this House. We have had cases of this kind before in Parliament, but they occurred prior to my time. We had the case of the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway, a company which was chartered to build a road from a point this side of Carberry west to Battleford, which received a land grant from the Dominion of 6,400 acres per mile. The company went on and constructed a few miles of road, paying for little or none of it, going into debt practically for the whole of it. Then an application was made by the Great North-west Central Company, to enable it to take hold of the charter of the Souris and Rocky Mountain road. What was done? This Parliament insisted that if the Great North-west Central took over the franchises and rights of the Souris and Rocky Mountain they should also take over its liabilities, which was eminently a fair proposition. Accordingly in that charter there was inserted a provision to that effect. That appeared on the surface to be a harsh provision because the new company proposed entirely to abandon the work done by the old company and construct the road from a point thirty or forty miles further west; yet Parliament insisted, and properly so, that the new company should take over the franchises and land subsidies of the old company, but should not be allowed to escape the liabilities which the old company had incurred. The result was that the new company were compelled to pay and did pay the debt, or rather they arrived at a compromise at about 50 cents on the dollar. We had another case in connection with the Toronto, Buffalo and Hamilton Railway Company. In that case application was made to Parliament for some new privileges. I understand that the contractors had failed to pay their men for material, and that Parliament insisted upon the provision that these claims must be paid before additional privileges were granted to that company. I make the same claim now on behalf of the province of Manitoba, and also on behalf of the other creditors of this company. All the claims against it should be paid by the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company, if it is going to get these 6,400 acres per mile in Manitoba, the 12,800 acres per mile outside, and also $80,000 a year for twenty years, for the construction of these 250 miles. Is not that a fair proposition? Yet we find the Government deliberately trying to press through this House a Bill, without any such protection to the province of Manitoba or to the creditors of this company. It is my duty, as a representative of Manitoba, to protest against any such Bill. The practice of this Parliament, to which I have alluded, is illustrated by the course taken in connection with the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway, where franchises were asked for by the Great North-west Central Railway Company, and illustrated in the case of the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company, not later than last session. It is a reasonable, fair and just practice, and one that should not be departed from in the case of this particular railway company, whose Bill we are now considering. We had the Manitoba and North-west Railway Company objecting to this road because it paralleled their line from Portage la Prairie to Glastone. Why is it that we have not had the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway opposing this road when, as a matter of fact, it paralleled their line right through from Portage la Prairie to the Hudson Bay. The reason for that is plain, and the reason is, that there must be an arrangement or undertanding between these two parties, that this old disreputable company, the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, which has so many sins to account for—some of which I have made reference to to-day—desires to go into oblivion, and desires at the same time to retain its franchise in the name of a new corporation. It is true that there is nothing on the face of the Bill to show that, because the applicants are George Carr, and George Flett, of London, Eng.; George G. Foster and H. S. McDougall, of the city of Montreal, and George E. Kidd and some others of the city of Ottawa. Most of those gentlemen I do not know, but so far as I do know, they have had nothing to do with the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company. The House will easily understand, however, how a little matter of that kind could be arranged, if it were intended to put through surreptitiously this legislation, without calling the attention of Manitoba and of Canada to the real intention of it. It would no doubt be easy to obtain the name of these individuals in order that they might act in the meantime for the parties concerned. I think I have shown, Mr. Chairman, admirable reasons why this absorption of other railway companies should not be permitted. I think I have shown reasons why the Manitoba and North-western Railway should not sell out its franchise and its railway to this new company. The Manitoba and North-western Railway Company has been a very considerable benefit to Manitoba and the North-west. It has been to a certain extent an independent road, but as it has no outlet from the country, it has been obliged to be practically a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Still, it has been very useful in opening up the districts through which it runs. That company had the misfortune to be exploited in its early days, by that bane of all railway construction, the charter-monger, or the speculative railway builder, who is in it not for the purpose of legitimate investment on his own account, but for the purpose of obtaining a big share of the Government subsidies granted to a particular road. The result is, that this company has standing against it liabilities which make its fixed charges much beyond what they ought to be, if it had against it as a liability only the amount actually expended in constructing the road. That has been swelled up by a process that all members of this House will understand, a process by which the promoters of a company divert a large portion of the money raised from the purposes of the company into the pockets of the promoters. This unfortunate curse has thrown that road into bankruptcy, which I hope will be only temporary. It is now in posesssion of two receivers, and expensive litigation has been going on for a number of years. In the first place, the road sold bonds for its first 180 miles, which bonds are held by capitalists in the old country. The road has been extended a considerable distance beyond the first 180 miles, and the bonds issued not having been sold, that has been built by the company itself. For many years, the shareholders of the company, who are almost exclusively the Allans, of Montreal, paid the interest upon these bonds—not out of the earnings of the railway company, which were not sufficient for that purpose—out of their own pocket. At length they becaume tired of anteing up the interest every six months, and so they allowed it to go into arrears. The bondholders took proceedings on the equity side in the Court of Queen's Bench in Manitoba to realize on their security. In the meantime, application had been made by come creditors of the company for a receiver, and a receiver had been appointed. The court also appointed a receiver on the part of the bondholders. The matter in dispute between the bondholders and the company is this: The portion of the road covered by the bonds is a paying portion. The earnings from that portion are sufficient to pay the working expenses and also the interest on the bonds. The deficit comes from the new portion of the road, which is owned by the company, without any liability against it. The company claim that the bondholders of the first 180 miles are only entitled to have applied on their interest the net profits of the company, after the whole line has been worked; that the company seek to have the surplus profits earned upon the first 180 miles applied, not to the payment of interest on the bonds on that 180 miles, but to wiping out the deficit that arises in the operation of the balance of the railway. In brief, that is the dispute between these two parties. The Court of Queen's Bench in Manitoba, overruling the judge in the first instance, has decided in favour of the railway company, that the earnings of the railway must be first applied in paying the expenses of the whole railway, and, after that, whatever surplus there may be, is to be applied in payment of the interest on the bonds on the first 180 miles. An appeal has been taken by the bondholders from the decision of the full court of Queen's Bench in Manitoba, direct to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, ignoring entirely the existence of the Supreme Court of Canada—a practice which I find to be growing in the different provinces of Canada, and which largely does away with the usefulness of the Supreme Court. I do not know what that practice arises from—whether because the public are losing confidence in the Supreme Court, owing to the many reverses which that court has sustained at the hands of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or whether because of the likelihood of an appeal being taken to the Judicial Committee, and the desire of the parties to save the expense of an intermediate argument at Ottawa. However, that case is now pending before the highest court in the Empire; and for that reason, I say that, without duly protecting the interest of these bondholders, we should not allow some third party to come in and set up some claim to this railway on the ground of being innocent purchasers for value. The clause says that this is to be done by the consent of the shareholders of the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company. Now, that would be eminently unfair. It would be most unfair to allow this railway to be handed over to the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company, without getting the consent of the bondholders, because it is shown that the bondholders are directly interested, and that they have a decree from the court in Manitoba, foreclosing their mortgage on a portion of this railway. In the face of that state of the facts, are you going to allow the shareholders, who have very little interest in the company, or 90 per cent of them, to transfer this railway, with its franchises, to a new company, that new company, at the same time, taking over a number of other railways, and making a new corporation altogether? Surely that is a course which this House will never allow without first consulting the bondholders of the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company. While we know, as a matter of fact, that the company itself is aware of this Bill, because it has appeared and protested against some other provisions, we have nothing here to show us that the bondholders of the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company have any knowledge whatever of this proposed legislation. Under these circumstances, I do not think that we can fairly allow 90 per cent of the shareholders deliberately to interfere with the rights of the bondholders, without any knowledge or consent on their part. Then, there is another difficulty—I have already alluded to it—that the provincial government have an interest in this matter. They are the creditors of the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company to the amount of over $1,000,000, advanced to that company under the provisions of the statute passed in 1885, for which, it is true, they hold security in the land grant of the company; but there has been great difficulty in getting the Dominion Government to do anything for the provincial government in this matter, in the way of helping them to get the proper transfer of this land grant. I say that the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company should not be allowed to enter into this arrangement proposed in section 9, without the consent, not only of the shareholders, but also of the bondholders and the other creditors, the principal of whom is the provincial government. There are also other creditors, I understand, who have obtained judgment against the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company. There is, to my knowledge, a number of claims that have not been put into the shape of a judgment against this company. Are you going to allow its position to be materially altered, merely on the consent of 90 per cent of the shareholders. Are you not going to find out whether these creditors—one of them for the large sum of over a million dollars—are agreeable to this proposition, before giving it the sanction of this House. I think that we are entitled to some explanation from the Government with regard to this matter. Then there is the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, which also proposes to be absorbed. If there are strong reasons why the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company should not be allowed to be absorbed, how much stronger reasons are there why the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway should not be allowed to be absorbed without, at any rate, the consent of its creditors. Why, the company has no existence except in the way of debts. Its assets are all liabilities. They consist of forty miles of railway that have practically disappeared and left the prairie as it was before the railway was built. The ties have been burnt up by the farmers for firewood, the rails have rusted, and the bank has settled down and grown up with weeds ; and as against that nominal asset of forty miles of road, on which the train is never run, it has this long array of debts—first, the debt of $256,000 to the province with the accumulated interest of many years ; next its debt to the steel company in the old country for the purchase price of the steel rails for these forty miles ; and then there are the other claims I have referred to, among them the claim for the legal expenses of the firm of Macdonald, Tupper & Co.

Mr. FORBES. Is there judgment for that ?

Mr. MARTIN. There is judgment for $40,000, and a large amount of work was done since that. I would like to know if this firm of lawyers have consented to this transfer. Then there is the claim of Mann, Holt & Co., for the balance of their contract. Are they agreeable to this consolidation ? We are entitled, in a case of this kind, to know if these parties are consenting to this consolidation. I do not think that the notice in the papers, which does not include any particulars as to this clause 9, is any notice whatever. I think that the Railway Committee should have required the service of a specific notice upon all the parties who were going to be affected by this particular clause, before the committee allowed it to pass. You should not confer vested rights by legislation of this kind unless and until you have served the people or corporation affected with a definite and distinct notice of what you propose to do. Then if the parties interested fail to appear, after due proof of the service of the notice, and a reasonable time having been given them in which to appear, the committee might act in their absence ; but I am sure that if the Government in Manitoba were aware of the proposition to hand over this railway company and these franchises, in which they are so much interested, to a new company, without the new company being under any obligation to pay the liabilities, that government would have had a representative before the Railway Committee to protest against such action. They have never been notified and do not know anything about it. The same remark applies to the steel company in the old country. Have they any notice of the proposition now made to this House to take away from that railway company its franchise ? The company has not got any assets, but it has some franchises that are valuable. It has $80,000 a year for twenty years, amounting to $1,600,000. That is a matter of some value. It has 6,400 acres per mile for 250 miles and 12,800 acres per mile for about 500 miles, which is also a matter of some tangibility. You propose to take these things that are of value from the company's creditors and leave them nothing. It is a most unrighteous, a most unfair proposition, and one that I do not think this committee will sanction, after it has been put in possession of the real facts of the case. I do not know whether the late Manitoba Railway and Canal Company has any creditors or not, but I think that, in view of the large assets which the local government in Manitoba are proposing to give that company, the local government ought to be notified, because under this arrangement they become creditors of this company to the extent of $9,000 a mile—the arrangement being, as I understand it, that the local government guarantees not only the interest, but also the principal on the second mortgage bonds to the extent of $9,000 a mile, the first mortgage bond being $7,000 a mile, and in guaranteeing the interest and principal upon these bonds, they become large creditors of that company. And they have never been notified of any proposition to hand this company over to the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company. For all these reasons, I submit that this clause should be struck out and that a company like this should not be allowed to get these advantages without notice to all the parties interested, and if any of those parties object, the clause, so far as it affects them, should be amended.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems as if the discussion on this is to go a long way and cannot have very much result. There is very important business which the Government would like to get at, and it would be better perhaps if the committee would rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, and I make that motion.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before the hon. Finance Minister's suggestion be adopted, some answer should be given to the very serious and important indictment which has been presented by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I do not think, in the face of that long and very interesting history which he has given of this matter, that we should permit this committee to rise, and thus ignore that very serious and important indictment connected with the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company and other lines to be affected by that clause. The hon. gentleman has undoubtedly given this House an amount of information that we have not been placed in possession of in past years and also a very considerable amount of information of a very desirable character with regard to the standing of the railway companies to which it is proposed to give the right of amalgamating or entering into running arrangements under this 9th clause. Unfortunately the policy adopted by the Government of chartering railways in the North-west and giving them very large land grants, and in some cases financial subventions, has raised a desire on the part of a great many men to seek the duplication of these advantages in the interest of these several schemes they represent. What is the result ? We have the most desirable sections of the North-west, of which this is certainly one, made the scene of the operations of speculators who secure charters carrying the hope, at least, if not the promise, of a land subsidy and a considerable money subsidy per mile and affording a basis for efforts to secure the investment of English capital. It is most unfortunate in the interest of Manitoba that such a system should have been inaugurated. This Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway Company, by the treatment of their creditors in the old country have made a record that is not creditable to themselves and must be a serious backset to Manitoba by hampering the efforts of those who seek to secure capital for the construction of railways needed in the province. We cannot afford to sacrifice the interest of that province by chartering companies with such large powers and allowing them to make combinations with those having other charters. It is contrary to the well-known policy of the Canadian people to permit railways to amalgamate for their own advantage, for, the tendency of such a policy is to raise the rates of carriage so as to make the people pay more than the real value of the service they receive. This clause places this company in a position to enter into arrangements with any of three lines. In the first place if they cannot make running arrangements with the Manitoba and North-western, they will have the right to parallel that line for fifty miles. It is a most undesirable thing to give a company a charter to parallel an existing line. Such a policy must close the door against the investment of money that might be got in England for legitimate schemes. In populous countries where the carrying trade is very large, as for instance, England, it might be reasonable to adopt such a policy, but, in a country to which we desire to attract population it is a fatal policy, because it actually prevents the construction of roads. When two companies are chartered to build parallel lines and the representatives of one go to the English money market for the capital, they are met at once with the prospectus of the other company and investors decline to assist either. Now, as I have said the history of the Manitoba and North-western road has been an exceedingly unfortunate one. It was projected many years ago and it has often been before the House asking changes, bonuses and advantages of one kind or another. I am not here to defend the promoters of that road, but to say that the history of that road is enough to add very seriously to the difficulties in the way of any other companies securing money for the construction of a road. And if we pass this Act to help them to get out of the unfortunate, I might almost say disreputable, position they have got into by amalgamating with another company, by handing over to another company their powers without carrying the responsibility and indebtedness they accumulated, it would be unjust and unfair to their creditors both here and in the old country. The province of Manitoba is struggling with many difficulties, financial and otherwise. It is possible that one of these difficulties arises through handing over $250,000 of bonds without taking due care to get in hand the securities they ought to have had. I say it would be unfair to that province to permit a company, by the simple transfer of the right it now enjoys, under the guise of associating with another company, to gain relief from their responsibility. It appears that some forty miles of steel rails were supplied. These rails are supposed to cost from $3,200 to $3,500 per mile besides the carriage. So that these rails would represent a total of $130,000 to $150,000. It appears that the party who supplied them has never been paid a dollar and the transaction has been the means of ruining the gentleman who became the chief dupe, which I think is not too strong a word in considering the nature of the transaction. By that unfortunate transaction, the honest earnings of the head of a family for a lifetime have been swept away, and his family left penniless, because he permitted himself to be drawn into the trap which I have no doubt was set for him. Now, were we, by legislation of this kind, further to facilitate that company in getting rid of their responsibilities, we would be no better than those who took advantage of these men in that way. Then it appears that a large number of these have been creditors of the Manitoba and North-western, and they have not received a single cent. Now, are we, by this clause No. 9, going to facilitate that company placing themselves in such a position that they will escape payment in every single instance? Why, Sir, I can well remember in the Railway Committee of this House, where we exercised power in the interest of the crditors of a railway company, and where we secured to creditors protection. Now, if we did that in these cases, certainly we should all the more protect the rights of creditors here in every single transaction where Canadians, as well as foreigners have had confidence in the honour and respectability of Canada, and, in the future of Manitoba. I contend that we should not allow a clause of this Bill to pass that would at all facilitate an interference with creditors who have invested large sums, and who are not in any way protected under the provisions of this Bill. I must reiterate that, in my humble opinion, the system of indiscriminately granting charters to railways, with the addition of privileges, as a rule, to favourite companies, has been a mistake, in the interest of this country. Now, we have a Bill here that is clothed with a soft pad; the voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hand is the hand of Esau. There is here an evident determination to take advantage. It looks very nice, it is very plausible, but, after all, there is evidence of a secret compact that is going to be carried out by which those creditors in England that have invested their money, are going to be subjected to loss. Now, Sir, I think we should declare once for all, that we will not continue this indiscriminate granting of charters to lines of railway in all directions. The unfortunate inception of this system was when we began giving away 6,400 acres of land per mile, and along with that, in some cases, money subventions, towards the construction of railways. While that policy might have been justifiable in earlier years in Manitoba, and while I do not now propose to condemn it, I do say that, in my opinion, we have reached the point where, above all things, we should not charter parallel lines; we should not grant charters to lines that run even within a moderate distance of each other. There is plenty of room in that country for the construction of railways: why should they ask to be allowed to run side by side with each other? Some sections, for instance, the Dauphin section, is entirely deprived of a road by the fact that the land has been given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the land is gone which would be a temptation to any company to build a road there, unless the Canadian Pacific Railway chooses to build a branch line into that country. I understand that it is a desirable country, many people have gone in there, and many more would go if there was any hope of a road being built into that section. But it is an unfortunate fact that the public lands, the great backbone of any scheme for the construction of a road, are given completely into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and any company getting a charter to build a line would have to buy the right of way from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They could not get an acre of land, either to the right or to the left, because it has passed entirely from under the control of the Dominion Government. This is a valuable section of country which would very soon be settled up if there were railway facilities, but there is not a single acre of land to offer as an inducement to any company to build a road in there. I see by the clause of this Bill now under consideration, that we are going to facilitate the amalgamation of four companies, one we are now chartering, and three others; we are going to give them legal authority to enter into any arrangement they like, to become all one line after each has been subsidized by the Dominion Government in the way of land grants, and after getting, possibly, some assistance in money grants. We are here considering a clause to enable these people to put their heads together, and to put the people of that section of country to great inconvenience and loss in order that these men may better their own condition. We have had many land grabbers and railway speculators who have gone to Manitoba with the hope of making fortunes by schemes of this kind. We know that in the early history of that province, a great many men thought they saw openings for making fortunes in that country, knowing that the country was a splendid country, and that there would, sooner or later, be an immense influx of settlers; and these men thought there were millions in it. Many of them went there with the expectation that they would make millions in a very short time. Some of them got railway charters, and when they had secured their subsidies they tried to sell their charters and failed, and the roads have never been built. Why, every session of Parliament we have had applications for a renewal of charters. Once, twice, thrice, and in some cases even four times, these companies have come to Parliament asking for their powers to be extended. These men have been getting the land and trying all the time to sell their charters, and sell their land grant to induce some person that has got money to put it into the construction of the line, and in that way would get a certain amount for themselves, or wring something out of the speculation. It has been a most unfortunate history. Manitoba has been subjected to the indiscriminate granting of charters and to quarrels among charter-mongers, who held franchises and vied with each other in the amount of land controlled. The North-west Central Railroad Company was in litigation for years, and if any road had a good prospect of earning a dividend it was that undertaking. Two bodies of shareholders sought to gain control. Two boards of directors were elected ; the contest went into the courts, where it remained three years, and in the meanwhile the people, who were raising very large crops in that district were deprived of the advantage of railway communication. The whole system should be changed, and if the Bill under consideration will allow the Hudson Bay Company to escape its responsibilities by uniting with another corporation as part and parcel of it, this Bill should not pass. After the strong indictment of the company by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), and the arraignment of the Minister of the Interior, an answer could properly be expected from the Government. Now, they refuse to say anything. I would like to hear the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) give some explanation with respect to the $250,000 transaction and the bonds that were handed over. I quite admit that we are not here to protect the financial position of any province. No doubt, however, the Minister of the Interior will be prepared to make some statement. Surely he has the welfare of Manitoba at heart.

Mr. DALY. I have.

Mr. McMULLEN. I should like to know whether he is prepared to admit that the statements made by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) are true or not.

Mr. DALY. Two statements have been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg, to which I desire briefly to reply. First, the hon. member stated that the Government were forcing this Bill through the House. The Government have nothing whatever to do with this Bill any more than any other private Bill ; they have no more interest in this Bill than in any other private Bill, and consequently the hon. gentleman is wrong so far as that is concerned. Second, the hon. gentleman said that clause 9, as it now stands, would mean that the railway company asking incorporation would enable the Winnipeg and Great Northern charter and assets to pass to this new company, and the creditors of that company would be deprived of any lien they might have. Since that statement was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) I have seen the promoters of the Bill, and they are willing to strike out the words Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company wherever it appears in the Bill. The Government have no interest, good, bad or indifferent, in the Bill. All they seek is to try and get through this private legislation. The object of the motion which the Finance Minister was prepared to move was to let the discussion on this Bill stop at this point, and proceed with the next Bill. If it is the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite not to let through any Bill, we will then know it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I hope the hon. Minister of the Interior does not mean to throw across the House the insinuation that we are desiring to obstruct the passage of any Bill. I am glad to learn from the hon. Minister of the Interior that the company are prepared to eliminate from the Bill everything relating to the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay road. I am glad also to hear that the Government are not responsible for the legislation contained in this Bill, for heaven knows they have enough responsibilities to carry without the burden of the questionable provisions of this Bill. It will be satisfactory to have the Hudson Bay Company eliminated from this Bill, because the history of the road has been a most disastrous one. The history of the road shows that it was partially built, rails laid down, and the roadbed allowed to become covered with brush ; the ties have been taken away by settlers and burnt, and the rails lying scattered along the roadbed ; and yet there are claims against this road amounting in one case to $1,000,000, and in another case to $250,000. With respect to the steel rails obtained by the company, any corporation that desires to get financial standing so as to be able to borrow money for the purpose of railway construction should not be connected in any way with the Hudson Bay road. I am therefore glad to know that the Government are disposed to eliminate that provision from the Bill. But there are other objections as we have learned from the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), and I would like to know what the Government proposes with regard to permitting this company to amalgamate with the other lines. Years ago in this House, there were very strong protests against allowing companies which we chartered, to amalgamate for their own benefit. One of the chief advantages of a railway, is that its construction may afford competition, and if they are allowed to amalgamate the result is that the people are forced to pay increased rates. This amalgamation of railways has been the curse of the western states of the Union. In Missouri and Kansas where they grow large crops of corn, the companies fix their rates, not on the basis of what it would pay them to carry the corn, but on the basis of the extent of the crop and the prices at which it would sell. In this way the railway companies reap the benefit of a good harvest, instead of the farmers who ought get the return. We do not want to place our western country in the same position as the United States in regard to railways. We do not want to allow them to combine together and charge excessive rates for the carriage of wheat, or of cattle, and to make exorbitant profits out of it. There is plenty of room in Manitoba and the North-west, and if this company wishes to construct the road and to act independently, I believe that this House would not object to granting this charter. If there is anything that would justify the length of time which has been devoted to the discussion of this Bill, it is the admission of the Minister of Railways who said, that owing to the eloquent address of the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) they were forced to consent to the amendments exempting the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway Company from being a party to this amalgamation.

Mr. DALY. Who were forced ?

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister said he consulted them.

Mr. DALY. I said the promoters of the Bill were anxious to get their Bill through, and so they wished to remove any objection to it.

Mr. McMULLEN. It would pay the Opposition to talk five hours longer if we could force this company into being an independent line. This House should set its face against granting charters which allow railway companies to amalgamate, and to extort excessive rates from the public. The Secretary of State told us that there were sixty million bushels of grain produced in Manitoba and the North-west last year. There will undoubtedly be a large increase in the next ten years, although I do not wish to speculate as to the quantity for fear I might stretch it too far, or become a false prophet. I trust that country will develop enormously, and one of the best ways of helping its progress is to prevent a combination amongst railways to charge excessive rates for the transport of the products of the North-west. I object to the clause now under discussion, in the interest of those men who have claims against the railway, and in the interest of that poor old English veteran, over eighty years of age who came out here, whose money was taken from him under false pretenses, for the supply of steel rails for these forty miles, and who has not a dollar left in his old age. We should allow that railway, either to struggle out of its difficulties, or to go down to its grave resting under the disgraces that have characterized its transactions so far. It is to be hoped that no line chartered by this House in the future, will ever have such a history as that. I was surprised to hear that the law firm of Macdonald & Tupper in Winnipeg, had also a claim against that road, because I know very well that the full power of hon. gentlemen opposite would be exerted in the defence of the individuals who compose that firm, and all their relations. Now that this amalgamation is not going to take place, the judgment which they hold against the company may possibly be good, and they may be able to creep out of their difficulties.

Mr. FRASER. I would like to know whether the Government will accept this amendment or not, and then we can proceed.

Mr. DALY. The Government has nothing to do with the acceptance of the amendment or not. The Government have nothing to do with the Bill.

Mr. FRASER. I beg your pardon, I meant the promoters of the Bill. We have had such a plethora of Government business recently that I thought we had nothing else before us. I would like to know if the promoter of this Bill is willing to accept this amendment ?

Mr. LISTER. The House may not accept your amendment.

Mr. FRASER. We have obtained the step if we get the consent of the promoter of the Bill.

Mr. MARTIN. We do not care for that.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. member may not care for anything ; but if we get the consent of the promoter to a reasonable proposition, I think we have taken a step in the right direction. I feel strongly on this question of amalgamation. I feel that no company should be permitted to amalgamate with another without the greatest possible safeguards being provided. It may be conceded at once that two railway companies may amalgamate under better conditions than two companies having diverse objects. For example, a company to manufacture iron may not very well amalgamate with a company to manufacture glass. The general principle is certainly correct, that one company ought not to be permitted to amalgamate with another except with the consent of its members, or a very large majority of them. I think the majority mentioned in the Bill is too small. I can very well see how a very small minority might prevent two companies amalgamating which ought to amalgamate ; but I think my amendment gives a fair margin. Ordinarily, of course, outside of Parliament the assent must be unanimous. Even one shareholder in a company can get the decree of a court to stop the amalgamation.

Mr. MARTIN. What about the creditors ?

Mr. FRASER. The creditors may be damnified, but I am only now speaking of the individual shareholders of the two companies. The reason I make it 90 per cent is that, as both railways are running almost in the same direction, at least for a part of the way, and are intended to be operated practically in the interest of the same section of country, I thought we might very reasonably assume that if 90 per cent of the shareholders of the two companies agreed to the amalgamation, it would be all right. Of course, we must draw the line somewhere. We must permit two companies to amalgamate on some principle, and my amendment is with the view of leaving the smallest possible chance of a wrong being done to any member of either corporation. I hope the promoter of the Bill will see that this is a reasonable and just amendment. I move it on the general principles that ought to guide us in granting charters. Perhaps I may be wrong. Perhaps I should have said 95, 96, 97, or even 98 per cent. In saying 90 per cent, I had in my mind a Bill which I had myself before Parliament, in reference to the amalgamation of two companies in the town in which I live, in which case less than 2 per cent of the stock objected ; and it was shown to the entire satisfaction of the committee before whom the Bill came that the amalgamation proposed was in the interest of the shareholders of both companies. At the regular meeting called, the only persons who objected were one or two shareholders who were somewhat cranky about the matter. The amalgamation made no difference to them, because they only wanted their cash.

Mr. TISDALE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain how this rule was adopted ? It was during the session of 1887, that what was called the Model Bill was evolved by a committee appointed for that purpose. Up to that time, we were putting different provisions into railway legislation, and it was decided by the Railway Committee that a committee should be appoined to prepare a Bill with a lot of formal clauses, for the purpose of shortening the Acts as much as possible, and the clerk who had supervision of the printing was instructed to follow the general lines of the Model Bill. This provision only applies to railway Bills ; and it was recommended and agreed to that two-thirds should be the number. The hon. gentleman has argued the matter fairly ; and I know, from expressions he has used before, that he has questioned whether or not that number was large enough. But I would put it to him that it is hardly advisable just at the conclusion of a session, in which we have passed many Bills providing for two-thirds, that we should pick out one to make an exception of it. If it is reasonable to enlarge the majority of the stockholders in a provision of this kind, it might be well, in view of the past, to change the Model Bill in that respect in another Parliament. We have passed this session a number of Bills containing a similar provision, and I put it to the hon. gentleman because I believe he is sincere in regard to this, whatever other hon. gentlemen may have been.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not think I have gone beyond order because I have heard hon. gentlemen objecting to some of the other remarks as not being on this issue, and the hon. member for Guysboro' has confined himself entirely to this motion.

Mr. MARTIN. The whole clause is before the committee, as well as the amendment.

Mr. TISDALE. We are discussing the amendment. If I remember aright, the hon. member for Winnipeg sat down to bring himself in order by allowing the hon. member for Guysboro' to move this very motion.

Mr. MARTIN. Not to bring myself in order.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not know what other reason the hon. gentleman had.

Mr. MARTIN. Because he asked me to.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. member for Guysboro' is discussing his motion because he has long held the view expressed in it, but I put it to him whether all our railway Bills, having been passed with this clause, stipulating this majority, it is fair to the Railway Committee that we should take out one particular Bill, and in that Bill materially change the clause which has been so long in use. I appeal to the House to keep our railway legislation this session on the line on which we have passed so many Bills. I am not saying that there is not a good deal to be said in favour of the hon. gentleman's amendment, and that it should not be a matter for the Railway Committee to take up at some future session, and revise this clause as applicable to all Bills ; but I do not think there is an hon. member on either side of the House who has sat on that committee, as the hon. member for Guysboro' has the last six or seven years, but who will admit the great advantage to us of keeping to this general provision throughout our railway legislation, and not altering it in one particular case. A discussion arose the other evening on a most important change in the Bill, and I have here a clause prepared and assented to, and signed by the parties interested, and which they are willing to substitute for the other clause, so that the main difficulty that arose in the earlier discussion of the Bill has been removed.

Mr. EDGAR. Does that signed clause refer to the matter in which the Manitoba North-western was concerned ?

Mr. TISDALE. It does.

Mr. EDGAR. I have some letters about that.

Mr. TISDALE. Counsel on both sides have agreed.

Mr. EDGAR. When will it go into the Bill ?

Mr. TISDALE. On the third reading, as a subsection to clause 3. It is a clause approved and signed by the counsel of both parties.

Mr. MULOCK. Did Mr. Barwick sign that agreement ?

Mr. TISDALE. Mr. Kingsmill did, and he had instructions from Mr. Barwick and the Allans, who are the parties interested.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to protest against the reflections cast on my remarks by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale). I do not know whether he intended to say that it took me too long to lay before the House and the committee the important matters I have discussed. If that was his intention, I would suggest that instead of speaking ten minutes——

Mr. TISDALE. I only spoke five.

Mr. MARTIN—he did not require a quarter of a minute to tell the House every point he had to suggest. It strikes me that the hon. gentleman rose, not so much to discuss the amendment, as to draw attention to the fact that he occupies a very important and high position in this House as chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals. He never fails to avail himself of the opportunity—and opportunities do occur from time to time—to draw the attention of the House and the country to the great position he occupies as the head of that committee; and as has been stated in this House during this session, the hon. gentleman is not only the chairman of the most important committee of the House, but he is that committee. He occupies three-quarters of the time of that committee in giving his views and dictating to it what it shall do. Not satisfied with that, the hon. gentleman wished to call the attention of the House and the country to the great work he did in 1887 in preparing this Model Bill. He was, perhaps, a little modest, he did not exactly, in clear terms, call our attention to the fact that he was the committee which developed that great piece of legislation, the Model Bill.

Mr. TISDALE. I was not chairman then.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to call attention, on behalf of the hon. gentleman, as his modesty will not allow him to do it, to the fact that in 1887 was accomplished one of the greatest things ever done in the Parliament of Canada. One of the most useful pieces of legislative work ever accomplished by an hon. member of this House was the Model Bill which the hon. gentleman evolved out of that deep fund of railway knowledge which we know he possesses.

Mr. DALY. He can get some pointers from you on railway matters.

Mr. MARTIN. The small modicum of knowledge that I have on railway matters, I have gathered from that hon. gentleman since I became a member of this House. I have sat at his feet in the Committee on Railways and Canals during three sessions, and I admit the soft impeachment that I do know a thing or two about railway legislation. But what I do know I have learned from the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I have gathered it during the numerous occasions in which that hon. gentleman has used his position as chairman of that committee to deliver long harangues to the committee on the general principles of correct railway legislation, and I believe that I have now, as far as my limited abilities would allow me, absorbed, to a certain extent, a knowledge of the fundamental principles upon which railway legislation should be based, and I wish to tender to the hon. member, in the dying days of Parliament, before he and I cease to be members of this House, my heartfelt thanks for the admirable manner in which he has conducted the deliberations of that most important committee, and for many long and able disquisitions with which, as chairman of that committee, he has favoured us.

Mr. FRASER. My reason for moving the amendment to this clause is because the railway to be built is in a very important part of the country. I admit the strength of the argument of the hon. gentleman that we have put this in various Bills, but, so far as my recollection serves me, these Bills were for roads in the older provinces, where there was not so much fear of anything being done to affect the shareholders. Of course, the hon. gentleman is correct when he says that my views on the question are not the views of to-day. I have long felt that we were too lax in permitting corporations to come together by a two-third vote, which is the vote required by the Model Bill. My reason for asking that this amendment be pressed is because this railway is in that new country which ought to receive more consideration than it has yet received from this Parliament, and it should be in no wise hampered by permitting legislation of such a character as will enable a majority of the shareholders in any one or more companies to bring about an amalgamation that would not be in the best interests of the people. I am doing this now because this is the first Bill relating to railways in the North-west that we have had the opportunity of considering this session. In a new country there cannot be so much competition as will grow up with increasing population. But we should so legislate that the settler, who ought to have our first thought, shall be benefited and not injured. While the Model Bill would be all right, under ordinary circumstances, I think that, for that new country and in the case of such a Bill as this, we might well consider whether we should not make what might be considered exceptional legislation.

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LISTER. The Bill in which the clause now before us was first incorporated was a Bill relating to the old Hudson Bay Railway Company, a company formed for the purpose of constructing a railway from Winnipeg to Hudson Bay. That company, with all its vicissitudes, has become thoroughly discredited, and the object of the Bill now before the committee is the chartering of a new company composed really of the old men, but without the sins, so to speak, of that old company. When we look at this clause 9, and consider for a moment the enormous powers which it bestows in the way of consolidating with and absorbing other roads in the province of Manitoba, and when we look at the first clause and remember the fact that the gentlemen who seek incorporation are comparatively unknown to this House or to the people of the country and consider their financial ability to carry on the undertaking which is to be incorporated by this Act of Parliament, we cannot fail to be convinced that after all there are wheels within wheels, and that this company is simply the old company under another name. I have no doubt that the object of the promoters of this company is to ask Parliament for a subvention that will enable the promoters either to sell the charter which they ask Parliament to give them or to build the road without the cost of a dollar to themselves, and with a large surplus to enrich those gentlemen who are promoting the enterprise. It would not do for the Government to vote two and a half millions of dollars to the old Hudson's Bay Railway. The people of this country have been thoroughly convinced that the old Hudson's Bay Railway Company was simply a charter obtained for the purpose of making money for the promoters, so it would not do for the Government to repeat the experiment they sought to carry out in 1894 and 1895. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that in 1894, when the Government intended to go to the country they thought it was necessary to make those preparations which this Government usually makes, and of which I believe there is abundance of evidence in the acts of the Government intended to go to the country they cessary to go to the country, of course, following these old methods, they thought it was necessary to make preparations in the way of buying up provinces. Whether they were honest or not, at all events their intention was to make the people of the province believe that they intended to carry out what they purported to do. At the time I speak of, the Government fully intended to go to the country. They had passed the remedial order, they thought that would satisfy the people as to their policy upon that question; and contrary to all law, in secret council, the Ministers assembled around the Council board in the Council Chamber, and without any authority of law at all, they sat down and pledged Canada to the payment of $2,500,000 to the Hudson's Bay Railway Company. Sir, it was done secretly, it was not intended that it should be made public, but in some way it did become public property; and all who remember that time will recollect the fact that there was indignation from one end of the country to the other, that a Government, without the authority of Parliament, without knowing that Parliament would confirm what it had done, but trusting to its power over its followers to lead them to approve of whatever the Government might think proper to do, it passed this Order in Council binding this country to pay to this railway company $2,500,000 of the people's money. They subsequently determined that it was not wise to go to the country just at that time, and the order was revoked, and the hopes of the promoters of that scheme were dashed to the ground. Nothing but condemnation was heard from that time of a Government which could have raised their hopes to such an extent as to grant an Order in Council for that enormous sum of money. Then, Sir, the desire of the people to make something out of nothing, is very striking. Other railway companies, the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company, the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, the Manitoba and Northern Pacific Railway Company, and the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company—all these schemes were promoted, and legislation was obtained in the hope and expectation that the subventions would be so generous that the promoters of the different companies would be able to construct, not at their own cost, but at the cost of the country, and have a handsome surplus left for themselves. For some reason or other these schemes have not been gone on with; and now we have before us this Bill, which is really the old Hudson's Bay scheme, this Bill known as the Manitoba and Nelson Valley Railway Company. Now, I believe there can be no doubt that if this company becomes incorporated, the intention is to take over all the subventions of the old Hudson's Bay Railway Company, with its land grant of 12,400 acres per mile outside of Manitoba, and 6,200 acres per mile within the province, and to get in addition to the $2,500,000 in the shape of subventions, $80,000 a year for twenty years upon such portions of the road as may be constructed, that is to say, for the first 200 miles of road. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the scheme contemplated by the legislation sought under the Bill which we are now considering. The question is, under those circumstances, whether Parliament should enact the law that section 9 has set out in the Bill. It has been argued with great force, to my mind, at all events, that before Parliament authorizes this railway company to take over any of the railway companies mentioned in section 9, there should be a provision in the Act requiring that this company should pay the liabilities of the company or companies which it takes over. If Parliament authorizes this company to take over the Hudson's Bay Railway Company, it is undoubtedly guilty of an act of injustice to the creditors of the Hudson's Bay Railway Company. The history of that old road has been told so often that to this House it should be almost needless to repeat it. But, Sir, there is no question that in a sort of a way, forty miles of that road was constructed—constructed, I have no doubt, at a price paid by the company to the contractors, enormously in excess of the actual value of the road and work done. There is the fact that a company authorized by this Parliament to construct what is known as the Hudson's Bay Railway, under authority of an Act of this Parliament which authorized it to contract debts, did contract very considerable liabilities in England for the purchase of rails to be used on that road. Not one single dollar of that liability has been paid. The rails are rusted on the prairies, the men who supplied the rails, we are told, are, no doubt, rusting too, for they have never received a single dollar of the price which was to be paid for those rails.

An hon. MEMBER. And never will.

Mr. LISTER. Certainly they never will unless this Government, in the exercise of the power which it possesses, provides in this Act that before the assets of that railway company can be absorbed by the railway company which is now seeking incorporation, it shall take it subject to the payment of the just liabilities of the company. Why, Sir, the Secretary of State is very careful about the credit of Canada. The hon. gentleman is constantly telling us how the credit of the country is being imperilled by legislation. But I would remind the hon. gentleman that next to the Chignecto Ship Railway nothing is more calculated than the Bill now under discussion to injuriously affect the credit of Canada among foreign investors. The provision suggested from this side of the House is not a new one. We have provided over and over again that in case a railway company takes over the interests of another company, or in case of the amalgamation of two companies, the company taking over the old company is enabled to do so by legislation subject to the payment of the just debts. The member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) has informed the House that there are judgments against the Hudson's Bay Railway Company for very large amounts. There is the debt for the rails, amounting to between $100,000 and $200,000 ; but more important than all is the claim that Macdonald & Tupper, lawyers, have against the company, amounting to something less than $100,000. We may forget the English creditors, we may forget the judgment creditors, but we are bound to remember this firm of lawyers in Winnipeg. The lawyers must always be attended to. There was no evidence adduced before the committee that any of the creditors who have claims against this company were notified as to the powers which it was proposed to obtain when the company was incorporated. But what is the position of affairs ? Men who are stockholders in the company, and who in all probability never paid a single dollar into it, have power to turn over to the company we are asked to incorporate the whole of the assets of the Hudson's Bay Company, and thereby defraud every creditor. Section 9 provides that the transfer may take place, that the amalgamation may be accomplished by a vote of the stockholders of the company regardless altogether as to what the bondholders of the company would decide, and in face of the fact with which we are familiar that railways in Canada are not built with the money of the people except in the sense that they are paid for by the taxes of the people. If the people of the Dominion put money into railways it is only temporarily ; they deposit it in a bank to the credit of the company and draw it out again, and they never intend, and they never do pay practically anything on account of stock. So while a company may have shareholders who have never paid a doller but who are credited with the investment of hundreds of thousands of dollars and perhaps millions, they exercise power which should really rest with the bondholders. The Government is not acting fairly in this matter. The Government cannot deny their liability for this legislation in this sense, that it could not be passed unless the Government assented to it, and they could, if they wished, protect the province of Manitoba against the tremendous loss which it met through the incompetence of the former provincial secretary of the province, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière). That hon. gentleman occupied a position in the Cabinet of Manitoba, placed there by the Lieutenant-Governor of the province, elected by the people, the hon. gentleman being supposed to have a reasonable degree of business capacity, entrusted by his colleagues came to Ottawa as the envoy of the Manitoba government, to meet the Government here, having at the time $264,000 of the bonds of the province in his pocket. What did he do ? Without a line from the Dominion Government that they would transfer the land grant of the railway company so that the province might have security for its money, the hon. gentleman handed over to the company provincial bonds to the value of $264,000. That will condemn him in Manitoba if he lives for a hundred years—the fact that he handed over bonds to that amount without obtaining a dollar of security. Year after year the people of Manitoba, crushed as they are by the taxation of this incompetent government, eaten up with freight rates, lost $264,000 in provincial bonds. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite propose to give power to this company to secure the land grant which the Hudson's Bay Railway obtained and also the money subsidy. The hon. member for Provencher has not attempted to justify himself for his extraordinary conduct. The hon. member for Winnipeg excuses him, because the hon. member for Provencher said he had a conversation with Sir John Macdonald and Hon. John Henry Pope and they agreed to hand over to the province of Manitoba as security for those bonds the land subsidy of the Hudson's Bay Railway. Those gentlemen denied that they ever had any conversation with the hon. member for Provencher from which any such agreement could be inferred, and that there never was such an agreement. Yet the hon. gentleman turned over to the promoters of the Hudson's Bay Company bonds to the value of $264,000, for which the province has received nothing and for which it holds no security whatever. And the hon. gentleman thinks he did what was right. But the point I wish to emphasize is that before this Bill becomes law, it is the duty of the Government to see that the province of Manitoba is protected and indemnified against loss so far as it is possible to do so by this Bill. Section 9 of this Bill gives the company power to absorb the railways mentioned in the section, and it has been argued with very considerable force by my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen), in his very powerful remarks upon this Bill, that the policy of the Government in allowing parallel lines of railway is a mistaken policy, and not in the interest of the railway companies or of the country. And, Sir, a moment's reflection must satisfy anybody that there is a great deal in the contention of my hon. friend. As I said, there is no man with any money who is fool enough to put it into the construction of a railway because the experience of railway investors in this country has been that there is no money for the investor, although there may be considerable for the officials and for the promoters of the road. The object of railway promoters is to construct the road out of money that may be granted by the country in the way of subsidy, and to get considerable borrowing powers, and to induce the British capitalists to invest their money in the bonds of the company. If the railway company is to sell these bonds at a satisfactory price, it must establish that the scheme undertaken is likely to be a successful and profitable one. Therefore, if you load down the scheme by parallel lines, you must destroy the chance that the company has of raising money in the foreign market. Investors naturally ask whether there are other roads running parallel to this, and if so, these roads would of course divide the traffic and so reduce the profits. It is perfectly apparent to any one who thinks of it for a moment, that granting charters to railways to parallel other lines and divide the traffic of the country, must of necessity interfere very seriously with the selling value of the bonds of one or other company. But a greater objection than all this is the fact that in order to make the road pay expenses where it is paralleled, it becomes necessary to charge much higher rates, and these rates are taken out of the pockets of the producers of the country, be it in Manitoba or any other province. I think, Mr. Chairman, that where the power is given, as it is in section 9, to the shareholders to take over the other railways mentioned, it should be provided that if these companies have issued bonds, then the bondholders should have the same power of voting as have the shareholders. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) that a two-thirds vote is not a fair expression of the feelings of the people who may be interested in the road, and that the proportion should be much greater. My hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) illustrated his argument very fully and with reasonable clearness, and I think that hon. members must conclude from his arguments that the safety of the shareholders to a great extent depends upon the adoption of the amendment which he proposed to the House, namely, that instead of having two-thirds of the shareholders voting, there should be 75 per cent, or 85, or 95 per cent, not only of the shareholders, but also of the bondholders, if any bonds have been issued. I do not think it is necessary to elaborate to any great extent the fairness of placing the bondholders on an equality with the shareholders, when we remember the manner in which railways are constructed in this country; when we recall the fact that the shareholders, as a matter of fact, put no money whatever in the enterprise, and that all the money has been given to them either by the Government, or by municipal corporations, and further, by such sums as they may be able to raise by the sale of bonds upon the English market. If we allow things to go on as in the past, the time is coming when Canadian railway bonds will become thoroughly discredited in the markets of the world. We grant a charter to a company, and under that charter we give bonding powers of from $12,000 to $20,000 per mile. These gentlemen sell the bonds at a discount in the English market, and they take a large portion of the money thus received and put it in a fund, and then they say to the shareholders: We secure your interest for ten, fifteen or twenty years. The railroad is built out of the money raised upon the bonds, discounted as they are; the interest for twenty years is paid out of this money also, and the shareholders think everything is safe, until they awaken to the startling fact that the road is not paying its running expenses. I contend, Sir, that instead of giving this enormous bonding power, and unduly stimulating the construction of railways, they should only have such bonding powers as will build the railway, and not such as will make the men who are connected with it rich. The schemes we know of, and the ingenuity devised for the purpose of getting money out of this sort of thing, are perfectly surprising. Sir, Parliament cannot be too careful. What are the facts ? Individuals go to work, get a railway charter, and sell the bonds for more than the road costs. Every one knows that the construction of a railway in the prairie country does not exceed $9,000 per mile, equipped and ready for traffic. Yet, every day we see these roads bonded for from $12,000 to $20,000 per mile, and we grant subsidies here of $3,200 per mile, besides land grants. We know all that. And what do these promoters do ? With a bonanza of that kind in their hands, they form a construction company, of themselves and their friends, and undertake to build the road at an enormous cost ; and, having built it, they put the difference between the actual cost and what they receive into their own pockets, and everybody knows what a big subscription they can give to the Government at election times. That is the way the thing is worked ; that is the way these men are made rich. Why, Sir, what does it all mean ? Coming to Parliament, at its last session, when the Government expect to be squeezed, they get a charter through Parliament at a cost of $100; and, having got that, they proceed to get a subsidy from the Government of $3,200 or $6,400 per mile, with land, and so on. No wonder the time of this Parliament is taken up in granting and re-enacting railway charters. Year after year, this thing goes on. For some reason or other, Parliament has refused to pass a General Railway Act, under which any number of people might get an Act of incorporation. The Government keep the matter under their own control—shall I say for some sinister reason ? A number of men come here and get an Act of incorporation which costs them $100; then they go to the Minister of Finance, and he grants them a subsidy; and then they have got something to sell, and they go out on the market and sell—what ? A bit of paper which costs them $100, and a subsidy which has cost them nothing, but which comes out of the pockets of the ratepayers of this country. That is the way this matter is worked. But, Sir, we have a duty to perform. Parliament has imposed upon it the duty of protecting a portion of the people of this country. We have no right to pass legislation here that will enable any man to defraud any section of the community. I therefore repeat that Parliament is derelict in its duty when it passes an Act such as this, permitting the amalgamation of railway companies, without providing that the absorbing company shall become liable to assume the just debts of the company it absorbs. That is the necessary preliminary, I take it, of all legislation of this kind. But, Sir, that is violated in this Act. While it allows and authorizes a company, which is sought to be incorporated, to take over the other companies—companies which are largely involved, and involved for debts about the justness of which there can be no question—Parliament permits this company, on the votes of shareholders who have never paid a dollar of stock into the company, to take over the assets of these other companies, and thereby defraud the creditors of those companies. That is the position in which the proposed legislation places the other companies ; and it is a question whether it is not the duty of Parliament, even at this late date, to make that section more perfect, by providing that these companies shall assume the liabilities of the companies which they absorb. The amendment of the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) is well worthy of the consideration of this committee. That amendment provides that, instead of two-thirds, 90 per cent of the stock is necessary to vote for the amalgamation. But I go further than that hon. gentleman. I say that, in addition to the stock, where bonds have been issued, the bondholders should have an equal voice with the stockholders in the affairs of the company. I repeat that I think it is the manifest duty of the Government and Parliament to see that the province of Manitoba is thoroughly and fully protected from loss through the negligence of the hon. member for Provencher. Negligence, Mr. Chairman, is putting it very mildly. No, I will not call it criminal negligence. The hon. gentleman came down here, with $264,000 of bonds of the province of Manitoba, bearing 5 per cent. He was a member of the government of Manitoba, and was intrusted by his colleagues to come down here to turn over those bonds to the promoters of this railway, upon the Government of Canada agreeing to transfer the land subsidy to the province of Manitoba as its security. The hon. gentleman came down here, and, according to the statement of Sir John Macdonald and John Henry Pope, he delivered those bonds over to those promoters without one scratch from the Government of Canada that they would turn over the land subsidy to the province of Manitoba. My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) says he has no doubt that that hon. gentleman was telling the truth when he said that Sir John Macdonald and John Henry Pope promised to turn over this land grant ; but we have only the word of the hon. member for Provencher as against the statements of those gentlemen.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has he witnesses ?

Mr. LISTER. He has not witnesses. It is a matter of veracity between the hon. gentleman and Sir John Macdonald and John Henry Pope. He goes back to Manitoba without the bonds, and without the lands.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who got the land ?

Mr. LISTER. I do not know who got the land. He gives up bonds for $264,000—a king's ransom—and he goes back to Manitoba and tells his government that they promised to turn over the land grant.

They denied it. They said they had never promised anything of the kind. It is the most astounding bargain that any public man ever made, and the province of Manitoba has to pay the interest, and will no doubt have to pay the principal. I ask the hon. gentleman, as a matter of fact, did Sir John Macdonald and John Henry Pope promise to turn over that land grant? Is it true that Sir John Macdonald was not in John Henry Pope's office at all? The hon. member for Provencher has a right to let the House and the country know; because, if it was as he says, then Parliament is bound in honour to see that the province of Manitoba is secured before this money is paid over. This Bill, so far as I can see, is merely the old Hudson's Bay Railway with a new dress on, escaping all the liabilities of the old company, escaping its liabilities to the province of Manitoba, escaping its liabilities for the steel rails now rusting on the prairie, and, worst of all, escaping its liabilities to Macdonald, Tupper & Company. It is the duty of the Government to intervene, and see that the creditors of the company are protected. The amendment of the hon. member for Guysboro' should be added to this section, and I think it should further be provided that, in case of amalgamation, this new company shall assume the liabilities and debts of the corporations amalgamated with it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I expected that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) would have risen to defend his position.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. To make this thing regular, I think that my name should be inserted in the Bill.

Mr. MULOCK. What did you do with the bonds?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is due to the House and the country that the hon. gentleman should give the reasons which induced him to take the extraordinary course he seems to have taken. The hon. gentleman who, at the time, occupied the high position of Provincial Secretary of Manitoba, was entrusted by his colleagues with this large amount of bonds, and instructed not to give them over until the Dominion Government transferred the land grant, so that the Manitoba government would have some security for the bonds. He violated his commission by giving up those bonds without obtaining this transfer. What would you think of a government giving bonds for $256,000 to a railway company without any security at all? The proposition is on its face absurd, and although I have but a small opinion of the foresight and honesty of that government, yet I do not think that any government would have been so foolish and derelict in its duty as to give up such a large amount of bonds without any security. In fact we know that that was not the case, but we know that the hon. gentleman, in violation of the conditions imposed, deliberately handed over these bonds without getting any security at all. And what a miserable excuse he made when he went back. His excuse was that Sir John Macdonald and the Hon. John Henry Pope, then Minister of Railways, had agreed to transfer that land. Why did the hon. gentleman not hold the bonds until they did transfer the lands? No business man would make a transaction like that without some consideration. Was there any consideration and what was it? The hon. gentleman is bound to give some explanation, but so far he has not seen fit to say a word. Perhaps he thinks that silence is the best policy, but it seems to me that if there were any justification for the course he pursued, he would make it known. I am sure that you, Mr. Chairman, would not remain silent under similar circumstances. This Bill should not become law. From beginning to end, it is one which should not receive the approval of Parliament. We are asked to give extraordinary powers to this company, and not only that but the other clauses of the Bill are so contrary to all ideas of what is proper that I wonder at the Government persisting in pressing it upon the attention of the House. This Bill will incorporate a company which will parallel for a long distance other lines already chartered and bonussed. In the first place, I object to your chartering another road to run parallel to one already incorporated. That is a policy which will only end in the destruction of both roads, especially in a country where the settlement is so sparse that it is hard to make one road pay. Then again we should never give a bonus to a railway company unless the promoters have put some substantial sum into the enterprise themselves. For the company to build this road 600 miles long we ask a capital of only $1,000,000, 10 per cent paid up—in other words, a cash capital of $100,000. The road will cost, I suppose, at least $8,000 or $9,000 a mile. That would mean a total of about $4,500,000; and for an enterprise like this we ask a cash capital of $100,000; and we give the company bonding powers to the extent of $20,000 a mile. Why, the thing is simply ridiculous. Then we look at the further powers of the company we find that they are enormous. They not only ask power to build this road but also to carry on the business of building and operating steam and other vessels on the navigable waters in connection with its railways, and improve the navigation of those waters. They may build and operate elevators and other warehouses and carry on a general warehousing business and may purchase grain and other freight and may erect dockyards, wharfs and piers at any point on or in connection with their railway. Then they may build and work telegraph and telephone lines and may transmit messages not only for the road but for the public. So that really they are a telegraph and telephone company as well as a railway company. They take power to enter upon lands, to break up roads and impede or turn aside travel for their own convenience. The Bill has so many objectionable features that I feel sure that the Government have not fully considered it, and in order that they may do so, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

EDMONTON DISTRICT RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta) moved concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 54) to incorporate the Edmonton District Railway Company.

Sir RICHARD CARWRIGHT. What is the amendment ?

Mr. FOSTER. It provides that the powers of the company under section 4 shall be subject to the provisions of the North-west Irrigation Act.

Amendment concurred in.

YUKON TRADING COMPANY.

Mr. HASLAM (for Mr. Corbould) moved second reading of Bill (No. 89) to incorporate the Yukon and British Columbia Trading and Development Company of Canada, Limited. He said : The object of the Bill is simply to carry on a general trading business in the Yukon country. I may say that the powers we wish to obtain, have been granted to several other companies by the Parliament of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

BRITISH AMERICAN COAL AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 76) to incorporate the British American Coal and Transportation Company.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This seems to be a railway and coal company combined.

Mr. POWELL. Yes, the railway facilities are incidental to the working of the coal mines. The main object is the mining of coal, and incidental to it is the construction of a railway. There is transportation by sea as well, and there is also a telegraph and telephone line.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the length of the railway ?

Mr. POWELL. Not exceeding thirty miles at the outside. The road is within the county of Cumberland, N.S., and runs between two ports, one of which may be on the north shore and the other on the Bay of Fundy. It does not go beyond that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to inquire why the hon. gentleman comes here. Prima facie, I should think this was a local matter, and ought to be dealt with by the local legislature. There is no reason in the world, that I can see, why we should have to deal with this matter.

Mr. POWELL. There is no question that it is entirely provincial. But it is not an exceptional Bill in that respect. I think there are abundant precedents for it.

Mr. FOSTER. No. 89 that we have just dealt with, is of that character.

Mr. POWELL. Furthermore, it has this peculiarity, that it is in connection with a transportation company, which would legitimately come under the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That only shows the impropriety of pressing a Bill like this without proper discussion on the part of the House. The hon. gentleman will find that in 1882 this House adopted the principle that railways connected with certain great trunk lines, were to be regarded as railways for the general advantage of Canada. But you could not make such a declaration with regard to this railway, which is wholly within the province of Nova Scotia, and under the jurisdiction of that legislature, and surely we cannot give ourselves this jurisdiction.

Mr. POWELL. In section 4 there are matters which come under the jurisdiction of the Dominion, such as navigable waters. It is an interference with them.

Mr. OUIMET. In the original incorporation of the company it was stated that the work undertaken by the company was for the general advantage of Canada, and I think that as we have assumed the jurisdiction, we should keep it. Besides, the object of this Bill is to serve the general interests of the Dominion shipping which does business between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy. Another consideration is that the work which this charter authorizes the company to build, is a work which was intended to discharge a liability originally undertaken by the Dominion of Canada. This is to take the place of the Bay Verte Canal, and that canal was part of the Dominion scheme to benefit the navigation of the Dominion, and was as such a part of the general canal system of the country as any other canal on the St. Lawrence River, or elsewhere. This work was to take the place of that Bay Verte Canal, and it was consequently a work for the Dominion of Canada. It was for the Dominion of Canada to see that that obligation was discharged, and Parliament has adopted the suggestion that was made at the time, that instead of a canal it should be a ship railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What Bill is my hon. friend discussing ?

Mr. OUIMET. I thought we were on the Chignecto Marine Railway Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must congratulate the House on the extreme care and zeal with which the Ministry are taking charge of, and looking after, legislation. My hon. friend has addressed a masterly argument to this House ; unfortunately the Bill with which he argues the matter, is not before us, and not likely to be.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) cannot say that he has only made one mistake in his life, or he would not have been on the Opposition benches eighteen years. He will have to acknowledge before he dies that he made not one mistake, but a great many dozens of mistakes, and he is still making mistakes which will keep him on the Opposition benches for some time.

Mr. EDGAR. What I object to most strongly is that in the dying days of the session, when there is so much business standing on the Order paper, there is evident obstruction, and discussion of utterly irrelevant matter.

Mr. POWELL. In regard to the second clause, looking into it more carefully than I did at first, it is apparent that it necessarily involves passing into New Brunswick. The river Laplanche is near Missiguash River which forms the dividing line between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The Laplanche is not navigable for vessels, the Missiguash is navigable, and at the confluence of the rivers lies the Cumberland Basin. The mouth of the Missiguash is an artificial harbour which partly lies in New Brunswick. As two provinces are involved in the Bill, it is necessary to invoke the legislative powers of this Parliament.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where does it appear on the face of the Bill that the company has to go into New Brunswick ?

Mr. POWELL. It does not appear on the face of the Bill ; but that does not alter the fact that the company must go into New Brunswick.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I call the attention of the House to the provisions of the law under which we are undertaking to legislate. They are as follows :—

> In each province the legislature can exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming wihin the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated : that is to say—
> Local works and undertakings, other than such as are of the following classes :
> Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province.

There is nothing of the sort in this Bill.

Mr. POWELL. I have informed the hon. gentleman that there is.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I point out that there is not. There is not a word in the Bill to show that such is the case. The hon. gentleman refers to section 2. What does it say ?. It says :

> The company may lay out, construct and operate a railway from a point at or near the mine known as the Stanley Mines, in the province of Nova Scotia to a point at or near Amherst in the said county, and may extend the said railway to the Cumberland Basin, at or the mouth of the River Laplanche, and from a point at or near the said mines, to the Northumberland Straits, at or near Tidnish in the said county of Cumberland.

All in the county of Cumberland, and all within the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. EDGAR. This Bill has not the usual clause, declaring that this work is a work for the general good of Canada. There is no reason for inserting it ; and if there be no reason for putting it in, it is without the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

Mr. POWELL. While I acknowledge the astuteness of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), his astuteness is not infallible. In the first place, " at or near Tidnish, in the said county of Cumberland " does not mean that the terminus of the railway is to be in the county of Cumberland. It is that the terminus is to be at or near a point which is within the county of Cumberland. The mouth of the Laplanche River is not over ten yards from the interprovincial line.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Everything is to be " in the said county of Cumberland."

Mr. POWELL. The Laplanche is in the county of Cumberland, but the point where the railway strikes may be within New Brunswick.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. POWELL. But I say yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman's familiarity with the county cannot set aside the Bill before us.

Mr. POWELL. We are not setting aside the words of the Bill. Supposing we were to make a statement regarding an offence, that it was committed at or near such a place.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In the county of Cumberland.

Mr. POWELL. Not in the county of Cumberland " at or near Tidnish." But Tidnish is not to be the terminus. The terminus is to be at or near a certain point, which point is in the county of Cumberland.

Mr. LISTER. Then it is to be in the county of Cumberland.

Mr. POWELL. The mouth of the Laplanche is in Cumberland. This is to be at a point or near it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. POWELL. The actual point is within New Brunswick.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman cannot ask the House to adopt his reasoning. He says that from his local knowledge of the topography there is a possibility that this railway going from one terminus to another may touch the other province. But there is nothing on the face of the Bill to justify the statement that the railway is going into the other province.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Nothing at all.

Mr. POWELL. We will put it in.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell, that the railway is to be in Nova Scotia. The Bill states that the road is to start from "the Stanley mines in the county of Cumberland in the province of Nova Scotia to a point at or near Amherst, in the said county, and may extend the said railway to the Cumberland Basin." That is in Nova Scotia.

Mr. POWELL. I beg your pardon.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) "At or near the mouth of the river Laplanche, and from a point at or near the said lines to the Northumberland Straits at or near Tidnish in the said county of Cumberland." There is nothing to show or to justify the committee in assuming that this Bill will extend the railway beyond the confines of one province, and unless it is explicitly made to do so on the face of the Bill, the hon. gentleman has no right to proceed with the Bill, because we would be adopting a vicious principle and causing a conflict of interest between the Dominion and provinces. If it is desired to get a Dominion charter for a provincial company, this House must be satisfied that there are special reasons for doing so, and that the work is for the general advantage of Canada ; and unless this is done, this House cannot be asked to adopt such legislation as is now before it, unless it assumes the control over all these charters.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I call attention to these words in question. They do not bear out the construction which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) undertakes to place on them. It does not say that Cumberland Basin is at or near Tidnish. That is a point fixed geographically. It is not necessary to say where Tidnish is ; what is necessary is to say where the terminus of the railway is to be, and it is declared to be in "the said county of Cumberland."

Mr. POWELL. Let hon. gentlemen look at the language of the clause. The terminus is to be at Cumberland Basin. It may be in the county of Cumberland—no portion of the Basin is——

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes.

Mr. POWELL. Except a small portion of the shore, the littoral. But as a matter of fact, Cumberland Basin is common to the counties of Westmoreland, N.B., and Cumberland, N.S. The only qualification in the Bill as regards the Basin of Cumberland is "at or near Tidnish," which does not exclude Westmoreland, in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not at all.

Mr. POWELL. The promoter of the Bill, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen), is not present. I will telegraph him for more particulars as to the objects of the Bill, and will probably have an answer to-morrow. In the meantime I will ask the committee to report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

BRIER ISLAND FOG ALARM.

Mr. BOWERS asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government to replace at once the fog-alarm building at Brier Island, Digby County, Nova Scotia, which was destroyed by fire on the 3rd instant ?

2. If so, will the said building be constructed of brick or wood ?

3. Will the rebuilding be by private contract or by public tender ?

4. If by public tender, when will such tenders be advertised for ?

5. In the meantime will there be any temporary arrangement so that some kind of alarm will be in operation for the protection of shipping in foggy weather ?

6. Was any blame for the recent disaster to the said building attached to the engineer in charge ; and if so, the nature of it ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. It is intended to replace the fog-alarm building, which was burned down on 27th ult., at once by a temporary shed, and to rebuild permanently at a later date. 2. It is not yet decided whether the new permanent building will be of brick or wood, but it will probably be of wood. 3. The temporary shed is being put up and the machinery refitted by day's labour, under the supervision of the lightkeeper and fog-alarm engineer. The permanent building will probably be erected by contract. 4. When information has been obtained and plans and specifications prepared. 5. Every possible effort is being made to put the machinery in condition to resume the fog-alarm with the least possible delay. It is hoped that the alarm may again be in operation within a week. 6. An investigation into the origin of the fire has been made by the agent of the department, but his report has not yet been received.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CHEESE.

Mr. RIDER asked :

What was the total expense account for freight, storage and insurance on the whole lot of Prince Edward Island cheese up to date of their disposal to Messrs. Hodgson Bros. and Messrs. J. C. & G. D. Warrington ?

When and what price was the lot disposed of, to wit : 22,238 boxes to Messrs. Hodgson Bros., 250 boxes to Messrs. J. C. & G. D. Warrington, and 151 boxes to the Montreal Cold Storage and Freezing Company ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The expense for freight from Prince Edward Island to Montreal on the whole lot of Prince Edward Island chesee was $2,507.36. The storage charges are $1,550, with some small differences to be adjusted. The insurance paid while in warehouse in Montreal was $725.08. The lot of 22,238 boxes was disposed of to Messrs. Hodgson Bros. on January 25th, 1896, at prices and on terms which were not to be made public until the cheese were sold by Messrs. Hodgson Bros. The lot of 250 boxes was disposed of to Messrs. J. C. & G. D. Warrington on December 12th, 1895 ; 100 boxes at 9 cents per pound, and 150 boxes at 9½ cents per pound. The lot of 151 boxes, damaged in the warehouse of the Montreal Cold Storage and Freezing Company is to be paid for at the rate at which the bulk of the cheese was sold.

GEORGE F. ROBINSON OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked :

Has George F. Robinson, of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, an employee of the Customs, been superannuated ? If so, for what cause and when ? How long was he in Government employ, and what allowance has been made him ? Was any "time" added to his actual service ?

Mr. WOOD. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that George F. Robinson was superannuated on the 1st March, 1896. He was in the Government employ twenty-one years, and his retirement carries the full amount payable on account of that length of service, viz., $210 per annum. His age is 72 years.

LEVIS GRAVING DOCK.

Mr. McSHANE asked :

Is it not true that the proposed new line of steamers will be 500 feet or more in length, and that the length of the graving dock at Lévis is only 475 feet ; and in the event of an accident happening in the river where will these steamers be repaired ?

Mr. OUIMET. The graving dock at Levis is 484 feet in length. The matter is now engaging the attention of the department.

INSPECTOR OF HALIFAX DRILL SHED.

Mr. FORBES asked :

Is William Bishop, stonecutter, of Halifax, employed by the Public Works Department at Halifax as inspector of the building of the drill shed at Halifax ? When was he employed. What salary is he receiving for such work and who pays him ?

Mr. OUIMET. William Bishop, stonecutter at Halifax, is employed by the Public Works Department as inspector under the control of our resident engineer and inspector of buildings, Mr. Dodwell, since the 9th of August, 1895. He is paid $90 per month by the Department of Public Works.

ACT RESPECTING SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole tomorrow to consider the following resolution :

That it is expedient to provide that for the present session of Parliament the deduction of eight dollars per day mentioned in section 26 of the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, Chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes shall not be made for twelve days in the case of a member who has been absent from a sitting of the House of which he is a member, or of some committee thereof, during such number of days, but that this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section 25 of the said Act, and that in the case of a member elected since the commencement of the present session it shall not apply to days prior to his election.

Motion agreed to.

THE QUEEN'S OWN RIFLES.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire to ask the Government in regard to the Queen's Own matter : If the Government is prepared to give an investigation, I wish to suggest who compose the court, shall be independent of the Government, and be those who have already had to do with the inquiry ; and, if possible, that they should be selected from officers in command of battalions outside of the immediate district in which all parties connected with the Queen's Own are particularly known. That suggestion is not mine, nor is it the suggestion of any person to the complaint one way or the other. It has been made to me by a member of the Militia force—not of the Queen's Own—who is sincerely desirous of seeing a fair inquiry, so that the verdict will be acceptable to all.

Mr. FOSTER. I will draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman.

WAYS AND MEANS—MINING AND SMELTING MACHINERY.

The following resolution was read the first and second time.

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Act 57-58 Victoria, chapter 33, intituled : "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs" :—

By providing for an extension to July 1st, 1897, of the time which "Mining and Smelting Machinery which is at the time of its importation of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada"—as expressed in item 643 of schedule B to the said Act—may be imported into Canada free of Customs duty.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 105) to amend the Acts respecting duties of Customs.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BEHRING SEA CLAIMS CONVENTION.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 100) respecting the Behring Sea Claims Convention.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We want some explanation of this.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The object of the Bill is, first, to provide for the assent of Canada to the Behring Sea Claims Convention, and, second, to provide for the powers of the commissioners to be appointed pursuant to the convention. These are the principal provisions of the Bill. I do not think any further explanation is required before we go into committee.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has there been any Imperial legislation passed in respect to this, by virtue of which we are acting ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is provided that sittings may take place at Victoria, B.C., or at San Francisco, California. Any sittings that may take place at San Francisco, legislation by the United States Congress will be necessary, and for such sittings as may take place at Victoria, this legislation is requisite.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope there will be no objection to going into committee at once on this Bill. It is a most important Bill. It is the culmination of a long series of negotiations which we have had, and is the sequel of the Paris tribunal award. It is necessary that provision should be made for it, and it ought to be made at once.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I move that the House resolve itself into committee.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

1. The convention or treaty of the eighth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six, which is set forth in the schedule to this Act is hereby assented to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to have a little information as to the precise position of our claims. To the best of my recollection, about ten years have elapsed since Canadian vessels were seized on the high seas, hundreds of miles distant from shore, and Canadian seamen were thrown into prison ; and up to the present time not one copper of damages has been paid to us. I think we ought to know exactly what position these matters are in. I am aware, of course, as everybody is, that the President of the United States made a recommendation to Congress ; but I am also aware that Congress did not in any shape or way give effect to it ; and when we are acting on this matter, we ought to require, in our own interest and in the interest of our fellow-citizens in British Columbia, some satisfaction as to the indemnity to be given to them for the outrages committed upon them. Upon that point neither the British Government nor our own Government have given any satisfactory assurance that I know of. I would like to know what the hon. gentleman has to say before we assent to any more of these conventions.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I may say that a convention to arrange the terms upon which commissioners should act to settle these claims has just been terminated. Legislation is now being obtained by the United States Government to give effect to that convention. Perhaps I had better state briefly the present position of that convention, and the negotiations which have led up to the present result. After the particulars had been prepared and interchanged, the United States Government took exception to some of the claims put forward by the Canadian Government through the proper channel, and negotiations continued for some time. Recently, when the convention came before the Senate, objection was taken to several points, only two of which were considered of very serious importance by the Canadian Government. The first was the elimination from the convention of one of the paragraphs which embraced the claims of four vessels which were on the list of those that should be taken up and considered by the convention. It was claimed that they should be struck out, as not being entitled to consideration by the commissioners. Another demand was that the convention should be changed by striking out the word "actual," and replacing it by the words "legal and equitable." In order that the House may understand the significance of the change, I will read the clause :

> It shall be open to the Government of the United States if it shall think fit, to raise the question of its liability before the commissioners in any case where it shall be proved that the vessel was wholly or in part the actual property of a citizen of the United States.

It was suggested by the United States authorities that the word "actual" be replaced by the words "legal" or "equitable." To this, however, the Canadian Government found it impossible to accede, in which they were upheld by Her Majesty's Government.

These were the only two points considered material, or in which any question of principle was involved in the changes the United States suggested. Representations were made to the Imperial Government on that question, and our contention was maintained, so that no change has been made by the United States Senate in these two important particulars, considered by the Canadian Government as material. The only changes made were of minor importance, and acceptable both to Her Majesty's Government and that of Canada.

2. The commissioners appointed or to be appointed pursuant to the said convention or treaty, or pursuant to the said convention or treaty as finally ratified by the high contracting parties, shall have all such powers, rights and privileges as are vested in the Supreme Court of British Columbia or the Exchequer Court of Canada, or in any judge of either of the said courts, on the occasion of any action or proceeding, in respect of the following matters :

(i) the enforcing the attendance of witnesses, and examining them on oath, affirmation or otherwise ;

(ii) the compelling the production of documents and things ; and

(iii) the punishing persons guilty of contempt ;

and a summons signed by the commissioners, or one of them, or by the secretary of the commissioners, may be substituted for and shall be equivalent to any formal process that can be issued in any such action or proceeding for enforcing the attendance of witnesses or compelling the production of documents and things.

2. A warrant of committal to prison for the purpose of enforcing the powers conferred by this section shall be signed by the commissioners or one of them, or by such secretary, and shall specify the prison to which the offender is to be committed, and shall not authorize the imprisonment of the offender for a period exceeding three months.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) By subsection 2, you authorize the secretary to sign a warrant of committal to prison for contempt of court. The committal may be signed either by one of the commissioners or by the secretary. It seems to me that it ought to be signed by both the commissioners.

Mr. DICKEY. I can quite understand the objection to the committal being signed by only one of the commissioners, because we might conceive of a conflict of opinion between the two, but that objection does not apply to the secretary because he would necessarily only sign on the instructions of the commission. It is a mere matter of convenience, and I do not see any objection to that procedure if the commissioners choose to adopt, and I do not see why we should not give that alternative. As to the one commissioner, I see a practical difficulty, and there might be a difference of opinion. I would be willing to strike out the words "or one of them" if hon. gentlemen thought necessary. We shall have time to get the Bill through the Senate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose that the American Bill, which we have not seen, provides that when a commission sits in the United States a witness residing in the United States shall be summoned upon the authority of the American commissioner. Then suppose that they are sitting in British Columbia and you propose to summon an American witness who is in Canada and you could not get the consent of the American commissioner. Your commissioners would not have practically uniform powers. The House ought to be informed as to what has been done in the United States.

Mr. DICKEY. If the hon. gentleman will look at the treaty, he will find that it must be left to the Americans to pass such legislation as they deem proper. They might make none——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They might impose disabilities.

Mr. DICKEY. If they did it would be a breach of the articles. They make such provision as they think proper, and we make such provisions as we think, under our law, appropriate to the case. I do not think that it is necessary that they should be identical, because the considerations might not be identical. The only question for the committee to consider is whether these are proper conditions for our side of the line.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But we are the party who want to succeed.

Mr. DICKEY. Therefore we must make our machinery as good as we can here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman would do well to strike that out. Both commissioners would have to act.

Mr. DICKEY. In order to get rid of the difficulty, then, I move to strike out the words "one of them."

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported and read the third time and passed.

INSPECTION OF HORSES.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 95) to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman please give some explanation of this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I gave an explanation at an earlier stage, but, no doubt, the hon. gentleman was not in his place. We wish to have the power to inspect horses that are in the country and supposed to be diseased, but more particularly for the present, horses that are being exported from this country. Some cases have arisen of horses exported during the last four or five months to Liverpool, and after they had arrived there glanders were found. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Montague) was in London at the time and cabled to his Deputy to have all horses that are sent out from our ports inspected. Investigation of the Act showed that we had no power to inspect horses and the amendments we now propose are simply and solely to give us the power to inspect horses as well as other animals.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It strikes me that these sections should be printed giving the full section with the part intended to be inserted in italics so that we may have the whole before us and understand it more clearly. This is the most unsatisfactory mode of passing legislation. Without the Act before us we cannot tell whether it means what is desired.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me I will make that plain. The necessity for this Act has arisen within the last few days and it has been impossible to do better.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But it would not have taken much trouble to put it the other way. It is a very bad style of legislation and a very bad style of draughtsmanship. Constant blunders arise, and we are put to trouble in examining the amendments in connection with the original clause. I do not know who is responsible for this but the law department, it seems to me, ought to do better.

Mr. FOSTER. The Act, chapter 69 of the Revised Statutes says:

> The expression "animals" means cattle, sheep, horses only where specially mentioned, swine, goats and all other animals of whatsoever kind.

It does not allow what we want to arrive at. It is amended by the present clause, which is perfectly plain:

> 1. Paragraph (b) of section two of "The Animal Contagious Diseases Act," chapter 69 of the Revised Statutes, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—
> "(b) The expression "animal" includes cattle and all other animals."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This makes confusion worse confounded.

Mr. FOSTER. I think not. In the old clause the only limitation is as to horses, and that is removed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The proper form of amendment would be to strike out the words relating to horses in the original Act. But in the form in which this is put here, under the rule ejusdem generis it would not cover horses.

Mr. FOSTER. How is that?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). "Cattle and all other animals" would mean all other animals of the same class.

Mr. FOSTER. It includes cattle and all other animals.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But that is all other animals of the same genus. All other animals would not embrace horses.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the original Act the word was plural, in this Act it is singular. In the interpretation paragraph in the original Act the word "animals" is referred to a number of times, and you put an interpretation upon it. Now, you are using the word in the singular number. "The Governor General may, from time to time, cause to be slaughtered, animals suffering from infectious or contagious diseases."

Mr. FOSTER. If we define the singular, I suppose the plural would be included.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You are putting in an interpretation clause, you are saying a particular word means so and so. I suppose the draughtsman may have had some reason for changing it.

Mr. FOSTER. If you define the word "animal," it must carry the definition to the plural.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You can use the word "animals" in several places throughout the Act, but it would not necessarily embrace everything the interpretation clause makes it embrace.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If you want to get at horses, why not use the word horses?

Mr. FOSTER. The expression is used in both Acts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The expression "animals" is in the original Act. Now, the expression "animal" as such is not used in that Act, it is the plural that is used.

Mr. FOSTER. I think both "animals" and "animal" are used dozens of times.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the Minister thinks it covers both, I am satisfied. The two expressions are not necessarily identical.

On subsection 2,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the nature of that disease, antinomycosis?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know. It is some terrible disease which they wish to guard against.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I am almost as much in the dark with regard to that disease, as he is himself. I only saw the Bill a moment ago, but we all know that antinomycosis is some variety of fungus disease affecting the intestines. I fancy this may be some disease affecting the skin, and which is contagious.

Mr. McGREGOR. It is usually called glanders in horses.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is some other name for glanders. Dr. McEachern has suggested that this be put in the Bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is it a disease to which cattle and horses are subject ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. What does my hon. friend think ?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think it affects cattle. I would like to ask the Government if they intend to pass a law that will give any remuneration to individuals whose animals have to be slaughtered on account of these contagious diseases. I had a letter the other day from a farmer asking whether the Government paid anything for animals that had to be destroyed on account of these diseases. I would like to know what the Government's intention is with respect to this matter. This disease is generally termed "lumpy jaw." Quite a large number of animals have been affected this last year by this disease, and are going to be destroyed. A considerable number went to Montreal and were stopped. It comes to be an important matter whether a farmer is to receive any compensation for animals slaughtered on account of this disease, for it must be remembered that in other countries compensation is given.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is bringing up a question which will require a great deal of discussion. It is too late in the session to enter into it. I do not propose to alter the present Act. All I want is power with respect to the inspection of horses. At another session the subject to which my hon. friend has referred may be taken up. I may say, however, that we do make compensation in the cases to which he has referred.

Mr. McMULLEN. I quite agree that possibly this is not exactly the time to raise the consideration of the question brought up by my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan). But the hon. gentleman simply asked whether the Government had seriously considered the point as to making compensation. I have received a communication from a farmer in my riding who has eight steers, three or four of which have developed lump-jaw. I believe this disease is contagious, for it appears to have spread to all the animals in the same barn. It is very important that the Government should consider the question of remuneration. I will state my reasons for holding that opinion. It is impossible to tell whether the animal at first is suffering from this disease, and should be slaughtered or not. If animals are seriously affected, they are liable to be slaughtered by the owners and the carcases sold for beef, whether the disease has developed to any serious extent or not. If the disease has developed even to such an extent that the animal is unfit for food, the animal may yet be slaughtered and the carcase sold. The disease appears to be becoming very prevalent, and it is important that an announcement should be made by the Government as to the course they intend to pursue in regard to it. An effort should be made to cure the disease in its inception. No doubt if proper applications were made promptly, the animals might be cured, but farmers seem to be totally incapable of dealing with it, and ordinary veterinarians throughout the country do not seem to be very successful in removing it so as to make the animal worth anything. A Government bulletin should be issued, setting forth how the disease should be treated, and compensation should be made for animals slaughtered. It is exceedinly desirable that a clear and distinct utterance should be made by the Government on this important question.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE DEFENCE OF THE DOMINION.

Order that the House resolve itself into committee :

To consider a certain proposed resolution to authorize the Governor in Council to raise by way of loan a sum or sums of money, not to exceed in the whole the sum of three million dollars, as may be required for the purpose of the defence of the Dominion, such loan to be raised under the provisions of that portion of chapter 29 of the Revised Statutes of Canada relating to public debt, and the raising of loans authorized by Parliament, and the interest thereon not to exceed the rate of four per cent per annum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he cannot, except by unanimous consent, go back on the Order paper.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, on Government orders.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt hon. gentlemen will give their consent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know about that. I think the hon. gentleman must follow the rules.

Mr. FOSTER. I have gone through the Order paper time and time again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know that practice is occasionally followed.

Mr. LAURIER. That is a very heavy item you are bringing on now.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but it is a very important one. I might say a word with respect to it. On the occasion, I think, of the debate on the Address, or the debate on the Budget speech, this matter was spoken of in the House. There was a very marked unanimity of feeling on both sides of the chamber, and hon. members who spoke of it, not a few, were very strongly in favour of every proper provision and even generous provision being made for the militia, and for putting the defences of the country, so far as we could, into a proper and adequate state. I think there was very little, if any, dissent from that proposition ; there were strong expressions on both sides of the House, by leading members, in favour of the proposition. On the strength of that and because the matter was urgent, the Government acted, and the Government is very desirous, indeed, that the obligations which it has undertaken, and which it has undertaken willingly, and because it was supposed to be necessary, and because of the practical unanimity of the House, should be kept. The obligation cannot be kept unless the House, before it prorogues, gives the authority which the Government requires for those expenditures, for a portion of them at least. I therefore hope this will be considered a strong reason why hon. gentlemen opposite should not, at this moment, make any objections on the technical point. Let us discuss the subject and come to a conclusion adequate to the gravity of the question.

Mr. LAURIER. There are items in the Supplementary Estimates which show appropriations to the extent of $1,000,000. We have had no information as to how this matter stands, and as to what has been done, and so on. It will be desirable to have a discussion before we take any vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I am prepared to give as full information as I possess ; but I understand that now we are discussing whether we shall take up the matter at all.

Mr. LAURIER. We can take it to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman object to take it now ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The matter is of very great moment, and I know that a number of members wish to be present and discuss it.

Mr. FOSTER. There are a number here now. It is only half-past ten o'clock, and I cannot see a more proper hour to take it up. If we take it up we are willing to discuss it, and this is a matter of great interest to the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We will discuss it to-morrow.

Mr. LAURIER. To-morrow.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

House resolved itself into committee on a certain proposed resolutions (page 4254) respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. Minister give us some details of this transaction.

Mr. FOSTER. I will re-state the details. The proposals as outlined in this, is to advance to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal a sum not exceeding $2,000,000. That is for two purposes. It is for the redemption of certain debentures issued by the commissioners and for the payment of certain loans and advances made to them ; and, for the construction of certain new works in the harbour of Montreal. The matter stands at the present time in this way. Under the present Act the commissioners have certain powers of borrowing. They have the power to borrow for new works to the extent of $1,000,000. They have the power to borrow for the redemption of debentures already out, which at the present time amounts to $2,711,000 ; so that their total borrowing power under the present Act amounts to $3,711,000. This proposal is to make an advance of $2,000,000. Out of that $2,000,000 they are to have the $1,000,000 for new works the same as at present. Out of the other $1,000,000, they are to redeem the debentures that are due, and these due debentures and advances that have been already made upon the works done, amount in round numbers, to the $1,000,000 or very nearly that. The debentures that are due are in part held by the Dominion Government and in part by the public, that is, those that are due, or will become due about the 1st of July. There is held by the Dominion a sum of $260,000 and $49,000 and $76,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What rate of interest ?

Mr. FOSTER. At the rate of 5 per cent. There is held by the public, and which become due about the 1st of July, $104,000. So that they have to redeem out of this advance, the $385,000 of debentures held by the Government, and $104,000 held by the public. They have also advances from the banks, for works which they have been going on with, and for which they have made no issue, to the amount of $420,000. These sums with interest make about $972,185. The proposition is then, briefly, to retire the debentures held by the Government at 5 per cent, and advance them money for the payment of those, and the payment of advances, for new works, at 3½ per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the interest been paid up to date ?

Mr. FOSTER. They have always paid their interest regularly. There is no arrearage of interest due the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They propose to pay $395,000 indebtedness to the country, and to incur an indebtedness of $1,615,000.

Mr. FOSTER. More than that. They propose to pay off $385,000 held by the Government, and $104,000 held by the public, and they propose also to pay the overdrafts or advances for works done up to the 1st of July.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But as between the Government and the Harbour Commissioners, the indebtedness for advances made, is $2,000,000, and the payment to the Government is $385,000, and there will be a further indebtedness of $1,615,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman apparently is going to make considerable advances of various amounts, and he has got some considerable engagements already. From what source does he propose to advance this money ?

Mr. FOSTER. The money, of course, is not all to be advanced at once. The $1,000,000 will be on the one hand, recouped to the extent of $385,000, which they owe us at the present time. As far as I understand it, the works of improvements so far definitely decided upon, will go on at the rate of about half a million a year, I think ; so that it will extend over some length of time. If the consolidated fund revenue is not sufficient for it, it will have to be raised by loan.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman promised to bring me down a return some time ago, containing a statement of our liabilities in that line, but it has not yet appeared.

Mr. FOSTER. I ordered the preparation of the return.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was ordered by the House a good while ago, at the suggestion of the Minister of Finance, who rather demurred at supplying it to the Committee on Public Accounts. While I do not object to the present transaction particularly, it is desirable that we should know how much we require to provide in all these various ways. Here is a sum of $1,600,000, and there are a very considerable number of other items, first and last, for which money will have to be had, making in all, I suspect, probably $12,000,000 or $15,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Not as much as that I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not by any means clear about that. There is a large quantity of subsidies of various kinds, maturing due. There is a large quantity of other subsidies asked for on various accounts, and there are railways proposed to be built, and there are very heavy expenditures on our canals—we will not say much about the Chignecto Ship Canal business at this present moment.

Mr. FOSTER. You had better keep that in reserve.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will keep it in reserve. There are a variety of things of this kind, and when you come to tot them all up, they amount to a very considerable sum of money. And when you are making all these arrangements, it is as well to understand when and how you are going to provide for them ; because while this is not an unreasonable arrangement, perhaps, still, the hon. gentleman does not want to be incurring liabilities which will require him to borrow the large sums of money "on call," I presume.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When we pledge ourselves to these things, we ought to know definitely how the money is to be provided. Has the hon. gentleman authority at this present moment to borrow any considerable sum of money in the English market ? I am not quite sure how that matter stands, but I have some doubts myself whether the authority taken is sufficient to enable us to contract a loan of three or four million pounds sterling.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps my hon. friend would be better satisfied to have this explanation when he sees all that is brought down. In the Supply Bill, there is always a clause on which that particular comes up, and then I shall be glad to give my hon. friend full information. With reference to this loan, it is not necessary to say very much. All hon. gentlemen know the importance of the city of Montreal, what a great seaport it is, and this commission has always paid the interest, and the revenues seem to be increasing and to be fairly buoyant. The percentage is a little more than the money costs us, and I wish all our investments were as safe.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total amount now loaned to the Montreal Harbour Trust ?

Mr. FOSTER. They have debentures running now to the amount of $2,711,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What portion of that is held by the Dominion ?

Mr. FOSTER. $385,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this an ordinary transaction, or is it the first of its kind ?

Mr. FOSTER. We have had transactions of the same kind. Harbour commissioners have been appointed and we have loaned money to them.

Mr. McMULLEN. What harbours have we loaned money of this kind to ?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Quebec Harbour is an instance.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has any been loaned to the city of Toronto in this way ?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. LAURIER. I presume that there must have been some correspondence between the Government and the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal with respect to this loan before it was agreed to, and the hon. gentleman must realize that it would be quite proper to have this correspondence laid on the Table before the next stage is taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I really think there has not been much correspondence. Montreal is so close to Ottawa that on matters connected with the harbour, the commissioners generally come to Ottawa, and talk it over. But I think there are some papers, and I will bring them down.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). These matters ought to be matters of record.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a matter of record.

Resolution reported.

OCEAN STEAMSHIP SERVICE—FRANCE AND BELGIUM.

Resolution reported from Committee of Whole respecting ocean steamship subsidies, read the first and second time and concurred in.

Mr. IVES moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 106) to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST.

Resolution reported from Committee of Whole respecting the Bonds of the Montreal Turnpike Trust, read the first and second times and concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 107) respecting the Bonds of the Montreal Turnpike Trust.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—SOULANGES CANAL CONTRACTS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster :

> That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may remark that this is open to the same objection. I do not want to raise it particularly. But there must be some reasonable understanding that we are not to be kept here all night.

Mr. FOSTER. I know that my hon. friend will not object to that, because there are so many interested, on his own side of the House, in speaking.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before that motion is carried, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the subject that was brought to the attention of the House and the country by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) on Friday last. I think, Sir, that the thanks of this House and of the Dominion of Canada are due to that hon. gentleman for the clear manner in which he has presented the case to the House. There is no doubt that during the past few years we have had to discuss a good many cases of this kind. It is a lamentable fact that scarcely a single public work has been constructed in Canada in the last few years the cost of which has not largely exceeded the first estimate, and with the construction of which there has not been connected a great deal of scandal. It is needless to refer to the many public works in connection with which there has been carelessness, negligence, mismanagement or connivance with the contractors, on the part of those entrusted with the affairs of state. The public money has been wasted to a very large degree ; and I am very sorry to say that this case, which was brought forward by the hon. member for Queen's, is similar in its nature to those that have already received the attention of this House. In fact, Sir, the importance of this work can scarcely be overestimated, when we consider that about three-quarters of a million dollars of this country was very nearly wasted. It was no credit to the Government that it was not wasted ; but I hope that the publicity which has been given to this matter will prevent the Government from going any further in the course they outlined. This contract is so plain that no one could be misled as to the meaning and intention of the contracting parties. The plans and specifications were prepared by Mr. Monro, an engineer of great ability and long experience, and who had been for many years in the employ of the Government. Every precaution was taken so that both the contractor and those over him should thoroughly understand what was required and what was contracted to be done. The contract provided that only two kinds of excavation are to be paid for—the excavation of earth and solid rock, and the price for earth excavation must cover the entire cost of excavating, hauling and forming it into embankment, and all kinds of material found in the pit for locks, weirs and other purposes, and in the prism of the canal or side works wherever excavation is necessary. The contractor was to excavate this canal and convey the earth taken out of it along the canal, so as to form a bank on each side where required, and for this work he was to get 20 cents per cubic yard. Some of this earth had to be drawn a long distance, but the engineer very carefully provided that no allowance whatever beyond the prices tendered for excavation will be made for hauling. Then it is provided :

> The surplus material arising from the prism, &c, on section number 7, shall, after making up the banks on that section, be carried to widen the embankments of sections to the eastward, and the surplus on section number 6 shall be dealt with in the same manner. So that all the excavations arising from the sections embraced in the contract west of lock number 5, will be disposed of in making the embankment on each side of the summit level between stations 180 and 460.

Then it provides that this distribution of material shall be made as directed by the engineer, without entitling the contractor to any extra allowance whatever. The intention of parties tendering was specially drawn to this portion of the specifications, so that you see every precaution was taken. I do not see how anything could be plainer. Then it goes on to provide that:

> Wherever the surface level of the water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top soil must be removed for such width and depth as may be considered necessary to form embankment seats. The material arising from this mucking to be deposited where pointed out. It is to be paid for as ordinary earth excavation. The seats shall also be well roughed up with a plough, so as to make good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment.

So that in this provision for water-tight banks everything necessary is provided. It further provides that:

> Only such portions of the embankment as shall be laid out by the engineer and made up in strict accordance with the foregoing specification, which will be paid for as earth in water-tight banks.

These are the principal portions of the specifications and contract that I need refer to, and it seems to me that everything is set out in the plainest possible terms, so as to avoid the possibility of mistake. What is the result ? The contractor goes to work and completes a certain portion. Then, after he is paid by the engineer according to his contract, he puts in a claim for 15 cents per cubic yard for earth which he claims went to form this water-tight embankment, but which the engineer says was not required. The earth was the surplus taken from the top of the soil and not intended to be put in the water-tight bank. Under the contract, he was to put that out of the way where the engineer directed it. The most convenient place for him to put it was to throw it behind the water-tight bank. It did not form part of the water-tight bank. As the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) pointed out, it might just as well have been dumped ten miles away from the water-tight bank for all the good it did. It is simply put there as a convenience and not as part of the water-tight bank. But this contractor, Goodwin, put in his claim for 15 cents per cubic yard for this waste material. Of course, the engineer in charge, Mr. Monro, treated it as a monstrous proposition and reported against it. The matter was submitted to the chief engineer of the department, Mr. Schreiber, who also reported against it. The contract was plain and clear. Every other engineer in connection with the work, Mr. Allison, the assistant to Mr. Munro; Mr. Coté and Mr. McNaughton, assistant engineers on other parts of the work, all agreed with Mr. Monro's contention, and chief engineer Schreiber's contention that the Government should not entertain this claim. This claim amounted to the sum of $210,000, but if it were allowed, all the other contractors on the canal would have come in in the same way, so that the total amount which the Government might be called upon to pay is not less than $750,000. But the contractor was not satisfied but asked the department to refer the claim to the Minister of Justice. The matter then came before the Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson. No doubt Sir John Thompson gave to this matter the careful attention he gave to all matters connected with his duties as head of a department. I have no doubt that the contract and everything else bearing on the subject was investigated and thoroughly investigated. Sir John Thompson was a man who never did anything without doing it well. He was, indeed—and I have much pleasure in testifying to that, and other hon. gentlemen will say the same—a most admirable head of his department. He was thorough in all his actions, and no doubt when this matter was brought before his attention, he fully inquired into it, from beginning to end. No doubt he consulted with the chief engineer and the other gentlemen who had knowledge of the subject. After investigating the matter he reported against the claim, taking the same view as expressed by the engineers. Up to this time, we have every single authority reporting against the claim, as a claim without foundation. One would suppose that that would have ended the matter. But after all these men had reported against it, something still further was done. One would almost be led to conclude that the Government were actually in league with this contractor. I cannot understand how the Government would dare to bring this matter up. Unfortunately, we had a new man at the head of affairs in the Justice Department, a gentleman, as the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon described him, young, impetuous, intemperate and not very skilled in the affairs of his department. Now, I wish to call attention to this curious proceeding. Now, I cannot understand how the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) took the course he did. He had the case under consideration for a long time. He had submitted certain questions to the Railway Department, and had all the information before him, but, though he had the matter under consideration for months, he did not make a single report upon it until after he went out of office.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say, in reference to the act of Sir John Thompson, that the papers were not returned in my time, but they were returned in the time of Sir John Thompson, to the Department of Justice for reconsideration. After the letter of the 28th February, which, as I say, was delivered late in the summer, the papers were returned in September of the year of Sir John Thompson's death. The papers were standing in the department when I came in as Minister of Justice.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That does not make any difference. When the hon. gentleman came in, he found the papers there. He examined them, no doubt, as he ought to have done, and sent to the Railway Department for further evidence. He got all the evidence he wanted, and though he was there for seven months, he never made any report at all. On 5th January he bolted, went out of office, he resigned his office as Minister of Justice, he was no longer a member of the Government at all, he had no more authority than any private member of this House. But during all that time there was a gentleman filling the position of Minister of Justice; the hon. Minister of the Interior, I believe, was acting Minister of Justice. He was in charge of that department, he was responsible to the people of this country, he was administering the affairs of that department, and the late Minister of Justice, the present member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had no authority, or no control over that department in any way. On 15th January the present Minister of Justice was appointed, and he was then the responsible head of that department. Now, what happened ? Strange to say, the late Minister of Justice, the member for Pictou, although he was not a member of the Government, although he had no control over that department, he went to the Justice Department and instructed the secretary of that department to write to the Minister of Railways the following letter :—

> Sir,—Referring to your letter of 4th October last inclosing additional correspondence, and the report of your chief engineer with regard to contractor Goodwin's claim as to payments of construction of water-tight embankments on the Soulanges Canal, I have the honour to state that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, while Minister of Justice, gave the matter very careful consideration, and heard Mr. Goodwin in support of his claim. The Minister came to the conclusion that the claim was one which should be allowed by your department, but he resigned his office before the advice could be communicated to you. He desired me, however, to inform you that he had reached the conclusion which I have stated.

Now, if the late Minister of Justice had arrived at that conclusion, why did he not take action while he was in charge of that department ? Why did he wait until after another man had been appointed ? What business had he to go to the Justice Department when there was another man there responsible for it ? The present Minister of the Interior was acting as Minister of Justice, he had charge of those papers, he was responsible to the people of this country, he was administering the affairs of that department, and yet here is a private member of Parliament who has the audacity to go to the Justice Department and tell the secretary that he, forsooth, had arrived at a certain conclusion when he was Minister of Justice, but he had not the manliness while Minister of Justice to send that report to the Department of Railways. But he said to the secretary : I have arrived at that conclusion, I want you to send that report to the Minister of Railways and Canals. Sir, I never heard of a more outrageous proceeding in my life. I think the Minister of Justice had no business whatever to go there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No, just wait till I get through.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is using very hard terms and I would like to explain——

Mr. CAMPBELL. You just wait till I get through. I say that the hon. gentleman had no business whatever to go there and instruct the secretary to write that letter. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the secretary of that department had no right whatever to yield to his request. What business had he to write, at the dictation of a private member of this House, a letter to the Department of Railways that he, forsooth, had arrived at a certain conclusion when he was Minister of Justice ? Did the secretary of that department ask the then Minister of Justice, about this. No, he did not ; then he ought to be dismissed. I blame the member for Pictou, in the first place, I say he did a wrong act, that he had no business whatever, that he had no authority to do what he did ; it was a thing that should not be tolerated at all for a private member to go there and instruct the secretary to write such a letter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me——

Mr. CAMPBELL. What do you want to say ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is using strong adjectives——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, this is a strong case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—and that is my reason for interrupting him, because I think he does not want me to be placed in an unduly unfair position. He has asked questions directed largely to me. I may not have made myself clear when I stated my position in the House the other night, but I would like to answer the hon. gentleman's question with regard to my action after I had ceased to be Minister of Justice. My action, Mr. Speaker, amounted to this, that having reached a decision when I was Minister of Justice, my Deputy knowing that I had reached a decision, I submit that I took no liberty in reminding the Deputy Minister that I had dealt with that matter before I left office, and in suggesting to him that he should communicate that decision, which was the only decision of mine that had been reached and not communicated to the department, while I was Minister of Justice. I wished to remind him of a fact that in the discharge of my duty as head of that department, as he well knew, I had reached a decision, whether right or wrong,— and that, of course, is a question for discussion. But I think the hon. gentleman presses the point rather unfairly in regard to me, suggesting that this matter should be cleared off the slate, so to speak. I may say that if I were in the same position again, I would do precisely the same thing. I asked the secretary simply to state the fact that while I was Minister of Justice, and being the responisble head, I had reached a certain decision, and I think he was perfectly right in stating the fact.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I do not think the hon. member for Pictou has made his position any better. He says he arrived at this conclusion when he was Minister of Justice. Then why did you not put it in writing and sign it yourself ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am asked a question, and I am ready to answer it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Wait till I get through, and then you may answer it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. gentleman, that it is the practice when a Minister of Justice puts his opinions in writing and signs his name to it, that the Deputy conveys the opinion of the Minister of Justice to the department. He signs the opinion which he submits to the Minister for his decision.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The point is this : The hon. gentleman says he arrived at that decision while he was Minister of Justice ; then it was his bounden duty to communicate it while he was Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the point I wish to explain.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you, I cannot allow these interruptions.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then don't ask me any more questions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I say it was his bounden duty while Minister of Justice to communicate that opinion, and not wait until he had ceased to be a member of the Government at all, and until another man was in charge of that department. I want to know if he consulted the Minister of Justice before he ordered that letter written ? What right had he to go into the department while there was a Minister of Justice there ? because there was a Minister of Justice all this time, the office was never vacant. Whether he was permanent or whether he was acting Minister of Justice, does not make any difference, he was responsible to this House and the country for the discharge of those duties. But the hon. member for Pictou went in there deliberately, after he had ceased to be a member of the Government at all, and I suppose, in the absence of the Minister of Justice. I suppose he went in there while the Minister of Justice was away, and in that side way he told the secretary that he had arrived at this conclusion while he was Minister of Justice. That is a most reprehensible practice. The hon. member for Pictou did an injustice to his late colleagues. He did what no man should do, he did what he had no right to do, and the Deputy Minister of Justice had no authority to write that letter, and he subjected himself to immediate dismissal and he should be dismissed. Suppose I went into a department and told the Deputy Minister to write a letter giving instructions, what would be thought of my action ? The hon. member for Pictou was only a private member and he should at least have consulted the Minister of Justice, because the hon. gentleman was only a private member, however prominent he might be. We blame the member for Pictou for doing what he should never have done, and we also blame the Deputy Minister of Justice for acting without authority, for acting beyond his power, for writing a letter which he never should have written, and for which he will be held responsible by the House and the country. It is most strange, taking the course of the hon. gentleman right through, that any Minister sworn to look after the public interest and to protect the treasury should have acted as did the Minister of Railways, for no sooner was this scrap of a letter sent to the Railway Department than the Minister, without any delay, sought to have the matter adjusted. He sent post haste for new measurements, he instructed the officers of the department to prepare new estimates, and to send them right over to the Auditor General for payment. Did any hon. gentleman ever hear of a more outrageous decision than that ? The Minister of Railways on this opinion given by a private member who had ceased to hold any position in the Government and was not responsible to any one except his constituents, undertook to deal with this matter involving $750,000 on that scrap of paper, and advised payment by the Auditor General. I leave it to any business man to decide whether he ever heard of a more outrageous decision. One would naturally think that when that letter arrived at the Railway Department from an hon. gentleman who was not a member of the Cabinet, but only a private member of the House, any business man seeking to guard the rights and privileges of the people would hesitate and ask himself, who is the man who sent this letter ? It is the ex-Minister of Justice. But he is not a member of the Government—he is not Minister of Justice. There is a Minister of Justice. Why then did not the Minister of Justice sign that letter ? I did not ask the member for Pictou for an opinion ; I did not refer the paper to that hon. gentleman ; he had no right to order the Deputy Minister of Justice to write such a letter. Those are questions that would naturally arise, and if any man was careful of the interests of the people and considered from whom the letter emanated, and that its author was only a private member of the House, he would not have acted upon it. More especially when every engineer had reported against the claim, when Sir John Thompson had reported against it, one would naturally suppose the Minister would further investigate the matter. But so anxious was he that his good friend Mr. Goodwin should receive about $210,000 and that the other contractors should get their boodle out of it, he immediately sent orders to the engineers to have new estimates prepared, and ordered payment of the whole sum. I cannot conceive of any more scandalous transaction in the history of the country. This same practice to a less extent has prevailed for years. There has not been a single public work constructed in which similar transactions have not gone on, and as the Government get older they get bolder, and the transactions are getting more flagrant and the Ministers are taking greater risks, until now they are prepared to pass through almost any proposition. The Minister of Railways was anxious to ascertain some loop-hole to enable him to pay extra money. The matter was referred to Sir John Thompson, but he would not agree ; and it was only when the hon. member for Pictou assumed control of office that the matter was considered favourably. But that hon. gentleman, when a Minister of the Crown, did not dare to make a report favourable to this claim, and it was only after he had ceased to be responsible as a Minister and became simply a private member that he proceeded to the department, where he had no right to go officially, and instructed the secretary or Deputy Minister to write a letter, to be sent without consulting the Minister of Justice at that time. In regard to this claim, both the late Minister of Justice and the present Minister of Railways and Canals are very much to blame. I can scarcely imagine whatever induced the Minister of Railways, on that scrap of paper, unsigned by any member of the Government, not authorized by any member of the Government, unauthorized by the Minister of Justice of the time, and only authorized by a private member of the House, to instruct that on such order payment of this claim should be made. What had the Minister of Railways to say in reply ? He excused himself by stating : I never saw that letter, my duties were simply ministerial ; I never saw the contract nor the estimates, and I do not know anything about them ; all these matters are left to my chief engineer. The same excuse was put forward in the case of the Curran Bridge, where $200,000 of the public money was stolen, but the hon. Minister did not know what was going on. The people of the country will, however, hold him responsible. If he did not know it, it was his bounden duty to know, and for knowing he is paid $8,000 a year. We do not pay the hon. gentleman to act as a figurehead, but we expect him to take charge of the department and exercise good judgment, and it is no excuse for him to say that he did not see this letter on which the money was ordered to be paid. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has done great service in bringing forward this subject, and I trust the discussion will be the means of preventing such scandalous transactions in the future. The whole thing seems to me most absurd. The thanks of this country are due to the Auditor General. If it had not been for the Auditor General, watchful, careful, vigilant as he is, guarding the interests of the people of this country, anxious to preserve those interests ; that watchful, careful, shrewd intelligent man, when these estimates came in, he saw at once that they were irregular. He did not do like the Minister of Railways. He did not profess to be ignorant of the whole transaction. He did not pay out the money. He did his duty. He saw the people of the country were being swindled out of three-quarters of a million dollars, and he immediately referred the matter to a former Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Lash, of Toronto ; and Mr. Lash at once agreed entirely with all the engineers, and with the late Minister of Justice (Sir John Thompson), and on his report the Auditor General refused payment of this claim. Before this debate closes, the Government should assure the House that on no consideration will this money be paid until they are forced to pay it by a court of law. For my part, I think the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) greatly erred in the course which he took. I believe also that the Minister of Railways should receive the censure of this House for the almost indecent haste, and the flimsy pretext upon which he ordered the payment of this money. I am glad that the money has not been paid, thanks to the Auditor General, and before the debate closes I think that the Government should assure us that none of it will be paid until it is so decided by the Exchequer Court.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have listened with great attention to the discussion on this important matter. In my humble opinion, the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) acted with a great deal of haste and with a great imprudence, which is very sad to behold in one who occupied so high an office. After carefully summing up the several provisions of the contract, I cannot for the life of me understand how the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) ever came to the conclusions he did. Applying ordinary common sense to the interpretation of the clauses of the contract, I do not know how he thought it his duty to recommend that the work claimed by Mr. Goodwin should be paid for as water-tight embankment. Clause 2 says :

> No allowance whatever beyond the prices tenderd for excavation will be made for haul. The surplus material arising from the prism, &c., on section 7, shall, after making up the banks on that section, be carried forward to widen the embankments of sections to the eastward ; and the surplus on section 6, shall be dealt with in the same manner, so that all the excavation arising from the sections embraced in this contract west of lock No. 5, will be disposed of in making the embankments on each side of the summit level between stations 180 and 460 ; filling around the various structures, &c. This distribution of material to be made as will be directed by the engineer without entitling the contractor to any extra allowance whatever.

This clause fully disposes of the whole question of hauling and delivering this stuff, wherever the engineer directed it. And, when this contract was advertised, the second part of this clause was as follows :—

It evidently was the intention of the department to press upon the consideration of the tenderers the clause that I have just read, for the purpose of indicating to them very clearly and very distinctly what they would be required to do in the matter of the delivery of the stuff excavated out of the canal. Then we come to another section, and it reads as follows :—

> 11. Water-tight Banks.—Wherever the surface level of the water in the canal is higher than the ground alongside, water-tight banks shall be made when so directed. In these cases the top soil must be removed, for such width and depth as may be considered necessary, to form the embankment seats. The material arising from this mucking to be deposited where pointed out. It will be paid for as ordinary earth excavation. The seats shall also be well roughed up with a plough so as to make good bond with the first layer of earth forming the base of the embankment. Puddle walls or cut-offs to be made where required—the puddle to be prepared and laid as specified hereafter.

Then the next clause says :

> When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and approved—and not till then—the bank shall be carried up in layers, of selected material, of about eight inches in thickness, well spread, the lumps broken, watered, trodden down or otherwise.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, who was in the best position to judge what were "water-tight banks," under the meaning of that clause. Was it the Minister of Justice, or was it not rather the chief engineer, the engineer in charge, and the engineer on the work ; the staff is composed of engineers of over thirty years' experience in the construction of canals. They said that they were not water-tight banks and could not be considered as such under the specifications. But, in the face of all that, the Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) overrides the views of these engineers and his distinguished predecessor (Sir John Thompson), who was at one time Premier of this Dominion, and who as a rule discharged the duties of Minister of Justice with acknowledged ability. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) ruled to the contrary, in the face of the clearly expressed opinion of his predecessor and the entire staff of engineers, when every single official, when every engineer on the canal, when the chief of the Railway Department, an engineer of extended experience ; when Mr. Monro, an acknowledged authority, a man of undoubted experience, and a man whose career had been such as should have awed the Minister of Justice before he set aside his opinion with regard to this matter, when all these gentlemen said they were not water-tight banks. In the face of all that, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) set aside these opinions, and made a ruling directly opposite to that made by Sir John Thompson. I have no desire, Sir, to charge that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) did it for an improper purpose. I do not know what his object may have been, but as a young man, as an inexperienced barrister, as a man who had never earned his spurs at the bar, as a man who had never distinguished himself in an important lawsuit, as a man who was taken into the Department of Justice as a stripling you might say ; he assumed very serious responsibility when he overrode the views held by engineers of eminent standing, great experience and high character. He overrides the views expressed by his chief engineer ; and against all that evidence he declares that Mr. Goodwin is entitled to be paid for water-tight banks, which the engineers say are not water-tight banks. Who is to judge ? Let us read this clause again :

> When the bank seats are properly prepared, inspected and approved—and not till then—the banks shall be carried up in layers of selected material of about eight inches in thickness, well spread—the lumps broken—watered—trodden down, or otherwise compacted, and carefully shaped to the heights and slopes given by the engineer.

The engineer in charge of this work declares that these are not water-tight banks, under the contract ; and the Minister of Justice, in the face of that declaration, says : "Although you are an engineer of thirty years' standing, and although you have all the engineers of the department on your side, I maintain that you are all wrong, and that my opinion should override your opinion and the opinion of every engineer in the department." It is an amazing piece of responsibility for a young man to take, to give a decision of that kind, and the manner in which it was given was, in my opinion, exceedingly imprudent. The ex-Minister of Justice retired from office without giving this decision to his deputy before he did retire. He had given expression to an opinion, and he wished it to be confirmed, and he does not hesitate to express that wish. A few days ago, the Secretary of State, in trying to defend the excessive expenditures on public works in Canada, pointed to the fact that the Manchester Canal had cost a great deal more than the original estimate. While I think he said it was estimated to cost £1,000,000, it had eventually cost £15,000,000. Did the hon. gentleman mean to lead the House to suppose that this increased cost was owing to any extras being granted to the contractor from time to time? Not at all. If the hon. Secretary of State had posted himself with regard to the causes of the increased cost of the Manchester Canal, he never would have risen to make the statement he did. Now, what was the cause of the increased cost of that canal? The first estimated cost of the work was £5,870,000 sterling. The estimated output of material was 45,976,950 cubic yards; but, owing to various unforeseen and unfortunate occurrences from time to time, the company were subjected to enorcous expenses. In the first place, they had to fight the whole city of Liverpool. The harbour board of that powerful city opposed the location of the canal, and the company had to go before Parliament three times for amendments to their charter. After they did get their charter and let the contract, the contractor, after he had gone a considerable length with his contract, unfortunately died. The result was that the company had to go to arbitration, which lasted over a year, to get a settlement of all the claims of the recent contractor, which cost them a great deal of money and delay. In the meantime, the cost of labour and material had risen over 20 per cent. Then, owing to floods, washouts, and other unforeseen occurrences, they had to move an increased amount of material to the extent of 7,936,000 cubic yards. Of that they could have no possible notice or form any idea, because it was caused by the overflow of the Mersey, and other streams. The original width of the canal, 120 feet, was increased to 170 feet, to allow ocean-going steamers to pass each other. Then they were compelled to build a canal two or three miles alongside the Mersey, in order to prevent the sewage from the cities above flowing in and seriously interfering with the depth of the harbour of Liverpool. All these things together added enormously to the cost of the work, and brought it up to what it eventually turned out to be. But was any sum added for the purpose of granting to any contractor one pound in addition to what he was entitled to under his contract? Nothing whatever. There was no litigation at all with regard to extra charges. The contracts were completed and the cost would have been very much lower than it was, had it not been for the enormous cost to which the company were put by the persistent, enduring opposition of Liverpool. This is the explanation of the increased cost of that gigantic undertaking. But the hon. Secretary of State, in order to divert attention from the charges made against the Government of extravagance in connection with Government works, says, "Oh, look at the Manchester Canal." Its original estimate was but a small sum, but before it was finished it cost fifteen million pounds sterling. I have the explanation of this before me in the "Nineteenth Century Review," in which the whole history is given, and according to which the hon. Secretary of State (Sir Charles Tupper) was not justified at all in using the Manchester Canal as an example. But "any port in a storm" for the Secretary of State when he or his party is in a tight place. I do hope that for the well-being of this country in the future, no Minister of Justice will ever again undertake to override the opinion of the chief engineer and officers of his department. I hope that never again will Parliament have the exhibition which we have in this case of a young man, an inexperienced lawyer undertaking to overrule the opinions of all the engineers and of his predecessor, who was a man of great ability and whose views he should not have set aside without greater consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 21st April, 1896.

PRAYERS.

ELECTORAL LISTS, VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 108) to make special provision with respect to the election to be held in the electoral district of Victoria, B.C., at the next general election.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. PRIOR moved the second reading of said Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. PRIOR. This Bill is for the purpose of removing a grievance that exists in the electoral district of Victoria. When the last lists were made up, the revising officer only allowed one polling place in Victoria district proper, in which there are 1,039 voters. In Esquimalt, a portion of said electoral district, he only allowed one polling place for 850 voters. So it was perfectly impossible to get all the votes polled at the last election. This Bill is simply to give power to the returning officer to create sufficient polling places in accordance with the Act, that is to allow every 200 voters to have a polling place.

Mr. EDGAR. I think I saw it stated in the press that this Bill was in the right direction, but did not go far enough. Does it cover all the polling places in the hon. gentleman's district which are too crowded, or not.

Mr. PRIOR. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that the Bill goes far enough, so far as I know. It covers the district. In the city the returning officer allowed too many voters for the polling places, but under the statute as it now stands the returning officer has power to divide them up alphabetically ; so no legislation is required for that purpose.

Mr. CASEY. A Bill of this kind affecting the representation of the people should be introduced into this House and not in the Senate, and it should not go further than the first reading at the present time. At all events it should not go to a second reading until it has been printed.

Mr. PRIOR. The Bill does not alter representation ; it makes no difference to the extent of one vote. No names are added to the voters' list, nor are any taken away. It simply redistributes them in a more convenient manner, and according to the Act. If the hon. gentleman wants to see the Act, I can show it to him ; but I ask the House to pass this Bill, as it will be of great advantage to the electors in the district.

Mr. CASEY. I object to more than the second reading being taken.

Mr. PRIOR. We can take the Bill into consideration in committee to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN. I support the objection taken by the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), that a Bill of this kind should not originate in the Senate, especially when its purpose is to change the law with respect to the House of Commons. It seems to me that the mode of procedure followed should be resented by this House, and that when the Controller of Inland Revenue comes here and attempts to railroad a Bill of this kind through the House, we are bound to have an opportunity of seeing it in print. The hon. gentleman showed the Bill to me and I had glanced over it, but I had not time to read it. He is now pressing it too far, and he is asking this House to put it through without any chance being given for discussion.

Mr. PRIOR. The House can consider the Bill in committee to-morrow, and in the meantime hon. members can have the opportunity of looking it over.

Mr. MARTIN. It should be printed, so hon. members might have an opportunity of knowing something about it and considering it. The hon. gentleman has not taken the proper way to get his Bill through. It cannot go through without the consent of the Opposition, and if he attempts to put it through in this headstrong manner, it will not be assented to by the Opposition, and I will not assent to it. I cannot say at the present moment whether the Bill is a fair one or not. Surely the House should have an opportunity of looking over it and knowing something about it before it passes the second reading. If it is now understood to be before the House on discussion of the second reading, I want to discuss it. At the outset, I wish to point out that the Bill as introduced into the Senate is quite different from the Bill now before the House. The original Bill has been cut up and almost entirely changed. I am not sure what the rule is, but I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if the Bill can be proceeded with on a motion for its second reading unless by unanimous consent. If such is the case, I object to the second reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. The House can pass a Bill through two stages if it so desires.

Mr. MULOCK. Without the Bill being printed ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot now object to the motion that the Bill be read the second time, for the House has already ordered the motion for the second reading to be considered, but the hon. gentleman can divide the House on the second reading. The question now is whether the Bill shall be read the second time.

Mr. CASEY. Can a Bill be read the first and second time at the same sitting ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, if the House agrees ; and the House has so ordered. The House has ordered that this Bill be now read the second time.

Mr. CASEY. By what rule ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has not been attending to what has been going on in the House.

Mr. MARTIN. I suppose the motion is now open for discussion, and I will attempt to discuss the Bill although under great disadvantage. I do not know what the nature of the Bill is.

Mr. MULOCK. Where is the Bill ?

Mr. MARTIN. This is a Bill to gerrymander the city of Victoria in a special way.

Mr. PRIOR. You do not understand it.

Mr. MARTIN. Probably not ; but I say the hon. gentleman has no right to attempt to railroad this Bill through the House before hon. members understand its provisions. The hon. gentleman took advantage of my absence to push the Bill through and to get it read the second time.

Mr. PRIOR. At ten minutes to three I spoke to the hon. gentleman in his seat. I let him read the Bill over, and I asked him, if he had no objection, to allow it to pass, as it was equally fair to his friends and to mine ; that it did not put any names on the list or take any names off, but it only gave to voters the right they have according to the law. Instead of taking advantage of the hon. gentleman, I waited until the proper time arrived, and when motions were called I moved the first reading of the Bill, and if the hon. gentleman was not in his seat at the time it was his fault, not mine.

Mr. MARTIN. I had no idea that the hon. gentleman was going to endeavour to rush the Bill through, without giving an opportunity for full discussion. I did not know that the Bill was on the Order paper. Surely this is the proper time to discuss it, although it is very difficult under the circumstances to consider it on the motion for the second reading. I understand it to be a gerrymander, as the hon. gentleman said it was. It is an attempt to gerrymander the city of Victoria, and it is an outrage to bring it in at this late period of the session. I did not think the Controller of Inland Revenue would be guilty of such a thing. He asked me to consent to the Bill, and I asked him time to look into it, and in my absence, while I was doing that, the hon. gentleman called the order for the second reading. If I had known he was going to do that I would have been in my seat.

Mr. PRIOR. If I had not introduced the Bill when motions were called, I could not have brought it in at all to-day. I gave the hon. gentleman notice, and I brought in the Bill at the proper time.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman did not give me notice.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) asked to have it read the second time, and as I thought there was no objection to it, I did not oppose that request.

Mr. MARTIN. I have before me a copy of this Bill as it was introduced in the Senate. It appears from the first section that we are asked to revise the work of the revising officer of the city of Victoria. How can we do that without the voters' list being before us? It is the most absurd proposition that has ever been presented to this House. The hon. gentleman comes here with the proposition that the city of Victoria is divided in an absurd way, but if so, it has been done by the returning officer whom he appointed himself. If he did not appoint him, the other member for Victoria (Mr. Earle) recommended him. And let me ask, is there not a man in the city of Victoria of sufficient intelligence to make a proper voters' list under the Franchise Act, without obliging Parliament to fix it up for him ? Parliament has no time to spare in patching up lists like this. There is too much important business to be done here. The hon. gentleman was a party to passing the Franchise Act through this House, and he is now attempting to railroad this Bill through in the same way as they tried to railroad through the Franchise Act, in 1885. Now, I am very much at a loss to know why polling division No 11 has to be divided into five or six polling divisions. Why did it require an Act of Parliament to alter polling division No. 11, and why is it not necessary to alter polling division No. 5, or any other polling division in the city ? Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) some sinister motive in dividing up division No. 11 ? If there are too many votes in division No. 11, there are altogether too few votes in division No. 12, and why does he not rearrange those two divisions without creating five new divisions at an extra cost to the country ? I understand that many of these polling divisions in the city of Victoria have five or six hundred names upon the voters' lists for each division. If we are going into the patching-up business, let us do it fairly, and the only way we can do it fairly is to have the voters' list before us. How are we going to make a new list if we have not the old list before us ? How is it that No. 11 is picked out ? Why do you not fix up No. 12 ? By section 2 of the Bill the hon. gentleman proposes to provide that these hived polling subdivisions shall be made, and the names placed thereon when it appears that (a) their residence is stated in the last-mentioned list, or (b)——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is going on to violate the rule which I pointed out to him before. He cannot, on the second reading of a Bill, take up the clauses separately, and discuss them separately.

Mr. MARTIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to avoid breaking the rule in that respect, and will discuss the general principle of the gerrymander involved in this Bill. Now, I am opposed to a gerrymander. I think it is very improper legislation. If it is wrong to gerrymander the different constituencies, surely it is wrong to gerrymander one of them. I know that the hon. gentleman is hard pressed in Victoria. I know that he came nearly being defeated in a by-election three months ago, and I do not wonder that in his extremity he comes here and tries to fix up the constituency in some shape to make his election sure. I do not blame him : but I think the Opposition would be very wanting in their duty if they allowed him to railroad this Bill through the House for the purpose of gerrymandering the polling subdivisions in Victoria, in order that he may by that means get elected when he knows that he cannot get elected in any other way. In 1891, on an old voters' list made away back in 1889, the hon. gentleman had a majority of 600. Since that time there has been a revision of the list, and there are double the number of names on it that there were in 1891.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me one word. It will not take from his time. The hon. gentleman is opposed, I think, to this Bill, and desires that it shall not be railroaded through the House. The Bill comes from the Senate, and is now before us for its second reading. We will not ask the House to go into committee upon it until to-morrow, when the hon. gentleman will have ample time to see what the Bill is, and to oppose it if he thinks necessary. By speaking against the second reading now, the hon. gentleman blocks all the business of the House, and I ask him whether he thinks that is well at this stage of the session.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman knows that advantage was taken of my absence to propose the second reading. I was not here to object, which was entirely due to a request from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) himself, because I was prepared to stay in my seat and watch this Bill, and object to it when it came up.

Mr. LAURIER. I appeal to the leader of the House that, as there was a misunderstanding in regard to the second reading of the Bill, whether the debate had not better be adjourned until to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. There was not a misunderstanding.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes. The hon. member for Winnipeg says that if he had been here when the second reading of the Bill was proposed to-day, he would have objected ; and as the second reading was moved, I took it for granted as a simple matter of course that there was no objection, and agreed to the second reading. The hon. gentleman knows that there was a misunderstanding, and under the circumstances I think the Bill had better be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman will not insist on that. The hon. member who introduced the Bill from the Senate gave notice to the hon. member for Winnipeg that he was going to introduce it. The only thing the hon. member for Winnipeg objects to, I understand, is to the Bill being railroaded through the House without discussion. We will not ask for the committee stage until to-morrow. The hon. gentleman must recollect that we are within two days of the prorogation of the House, and I do not think it is too much to ask that the hon. member for Winnipeg shall forego his right to a long discussion to-day. He has the right to it, of course, but he will have ample opportunity to oppose the Bill, if he wishes, on the committee stage, and afterwards on the third reading of the Bill. No power on earth can put the Bill through this House against the endurance of the hon. member for Winnipeg, if he chooses, even if he allows the second reading to pass. I commend that position to my hon. friend.

Mr. MARTIN. Hon. gentlemen opposite hold me down to the strictest law, calling me to order the moment I appear to be getting out of order, and then they appeal to me to allow them to break the law. I do not think that they approach this thing in a very reasonable spirit. I say this Bill is now up for a second reading, directly in the teeth of the suggestion made to me by the hon. member for Victoria. I say I would not have been out of this House, but I would have been here prepared to object, as I had a right to object, to the second reading being taken, had not the hon. gentleman come to me ten minutes before the House met and asked me if I could not consent to it. I said I would look up my information and see whether I could do so or not : and while I was away looking into the matter, at the request of the hon. gentleman, the hon. gentleman takes advantage of my absence and gets the Bill called for the second reading. I say I have a right to protest against that kind of conduct, and I do protest against it most strenuously. I am very sorry if it obstructs the rest of the business ; but that is not my fault. If the Government insist on pressing for the second reading of the Bill under circumstances of this kind, then it is they who must take the responsibility of obstructing the business of the House, and not I. I have now to do by discussion what I had a right to do, and would have done, simply by getting up and objecting, had it not been for the advantage that was taken of me by the Controller of Inland Revenue, by getting me out of the House in order to put through the Bill while I was away.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman has no right to say that. He is only telling an untruth.

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. MARTIN. I think it is perfectly true. The hon. gentleman came to me and asked me if I would consent to this Bill being read a second time to-day, and I went to see whether I could or not, and while I was away the hon. gentleman takes advantage of my absence, knowing that I was away for that purpose, and proposes the second reading of the Bill. Under these circumstances, I do not think the observations of the second lieutenant leader of the House are at all justified. If the Government are bound to obstruct all the business of the House for the purpose of enabling the Controller of Inland Revenue to carry out the purpose he had apparently in coming over to speak to me, it is not my fault. I have a right to protest against conduct of that kind, and I do protest against it most strenuously. Now, returning to the Bill, I say that I am very much opposed to gerrymander. I believe that this is clearly, as far as one can understand it by the Bill as introduced in the Senate, a proposition to gerrymander the city of Victoria, presumably in the interests of the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue (Mr. Prior). It proposes to take out one polling division and to cut that up into five pieces.

Mr. PRIOR. That is not so.

Mr. MARTIN. I must object to that. I do know that it is so because here is the Bill.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman has got a copy of the Bill which was printed before the amendments of the Senate were made.

Mr. MARTIN. Has anybody in the House got any more ? The hon. gentleman is proposing to railroad through the House a Bill and none of us know what it is. What I have before me is a proposition to gerrymander and cut into five pieces one particular polling division in the city of Victoria, B.C. Now, I know that the hon. gentleman was very much disappointed in that polling division in his recent election. He expected a very large majority in that polling division and he did not get it. I have not the exact figures, but I know that the hon. gentleman did not get anything like as large a majority in polling division No. 11 as he thought his great merits, as the sitting member for Victoria and his elevation, in a second-class manner, into the Cabinet of Canada, entitled him to receive from the electors in that polling division. I am informed that there were only 298 votes polled in this polling division No. 11. Now, why should that be cut up into five divisions ? That would only give forty in each division. Surely the House is not going to adopt the principle of going to the expense of a deputy returning officer and a poll clerk, and all other expenses of a polling subdivision in order that the hon. gentleman may have forty votes polled in the one place. Why, in many of the electoral divisions at an election there are as many as 300 voters. This is not the only place in Canada where 298 votes have been polled in the one subdivision. I would like to know why the Government do not take up all the voters' lists in Canada. The Government recently issued an atlas showing the different electoral divisions and the polling divisions. Now, if we are to go into the business of revising these polling subdivisions, I protest against doing it in this piecemeal way. Let us go into Committee of the Whole and get all the voters' lists before us and find out every polling subdivision in which 298 votes or more are polled, and divide that into not less than five pieces, especially if that is going to benefit the Controller of Inland Revenue in the extreme position in which he finds himself in with regard to the electors of Victoria. If the hon. gentleman desires really to remedy anything that is wrong, he would have introduced this Bill in the regular way early in the session, he would have put his notice on the Notice paper, and given us an opportunity of knowing what we were going to do. Instead of that, what does he do ? He gets it put through the Senate, and he brings it in here and has it read the first time, after the Bill has been amended in the Senate, and when not a member in this House knows what is in it except himself. He says that I am wrong in saying that he is going to cut up polling division No. 11 into five pieces. If not, what is he going to do ? What is he going to do with polling division No. 12, where there were only thirty votes polled ? I cannot understand, unless there is something radically wrong, some nefarious project on hand, why the Senate has been induced, at the instance of the First Minister of Canada, to interfere in a matter which belongs entirely to this House. I think we should object to this interference by the Senate with the privileges of the House of Commons. We had another case of that a session or two ago, which has caused a great deal of trouble in connection with the North-west Territories. I objected to that, and I object to this. I object to the proposition of a junior member of the Cabinet to take up the time of this House in doing a work that he ought to have been able to find a man intelligent enough in the constituency of Victoria to do properly without coming to this House. But if he was coming to this House, why did he not come in a manly, straightforward way. Why did he try, as he has tried this afternoon, to sneak through this legislation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not in order in saying that the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue is trying to sneak legislation through this House. The House has ordered the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I will withdraw the word "sneak." But I do not think that the rules of the House are such as to permit an hon. member doing what the hon. gentleman is doing. There is nothing in the rules of the House which prevents an hon. gentleman proposing a motion which cannot get through without the consent of the House, and if he knows that one of the members of the House is going to oppose the motion, and if he will go over and get that member to leave the House on a pretext, I do not know what words are strong enough to characterize actions of that kind. I do not wish to use unparliamentary language, but I make the complaint that the hon. gentleman induced me to go out of this House——

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman knows that what he is stating is untrue.

Mr. EDGAR. That is the second time the hon. Minister has used that unparliamentary expression.

Mr. PRIOR. I have no wish to be unparliamentary, and I withdraw the expression.

Mr. MARTIN. I say that the rules of the House do permit a member to put through, as long as there is no one in the House who understands the position to make the necessary objection, a motion of this kind. Now, I did understand the position with regard to this matter. I noticed this Bill being introduced into the Senate, and I was sitting here for the purpose of preventing the hon. gentleman bringing in any motions that were against the rules of the House, and which required the unanimous consent of the House before they could be adopted. And the hon. gentleman came over here and induced me to absent myself from the chamber long enough to enable him to introduce this Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, I say he did; I say I would not have been——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member should confine himself to the discussion of the Bill. The House has already ordered it to be brought up for a second reading, and the argument the hon. member is making would be against what the House has already decided, and not against the second reading, which is now before the House.

Mr. LAURIER. But if the House ordered a second reading under a false impression?

Mr. MARTIN. I shall obey your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and shall endeavour to discuss the Bill, but I find it difficult to discuss a Bill that is not before us. I tried to discuss the Bill as well as I could, but he denies that he proposes to slice No. 11 up into five pieces. I would like to know, then, what he is going to do. We are asked to pass the second reading of the Bill, and nobody except the Controller of Inland Revenue knows what it is. I know that it is proposed to gerrymander the city of Victoria, and I am opposed to gerrymanders. The rules of the House prevent me from taking up the clauses and discussing them seriatim, and compels me to confine my remarks to the principle of the Bill. Now, the principle of the Bill is to gerrymander the polling subdivision of the city of Victoria, B.C., and it is proposed for the purpose of giving the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue some advantage over his opponents in that city. I do not exactly know how that advantage comes in, but that does not affect the fact. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, had some object in appointing a revising officer who knew so little of his duties as to put 1,200 or 1,300 voters into one polling subdivision. The House will understand that the constituency of Victoria is composed of the city of Victoria, and a considerable district outside the corporation limits, extending, perhaps, ten or twelve, or more miles. One polling subdivision was like a belt encircling the city, and on election day I met men there who told me they had to come two or three miles to vote, as they had to cross right through the city in order to get to the polling station which was at a hotel called The Willows. It appears to me that if the hon. gentleman is going to patch up his polling divisions, he could not do better than improve No. 10. Why does he select No. 11? If his reason is that there are too many voters there, why does he not rearrange No. 12 where there are too few voters. One reason, no doubt, is that he got nearly all the votes in that polling subdivision—thirty against three cast on the other side. He comes here and asks Parliament to take up its time when it has other very important business before it, to gerrymander the polling subdivisions of Victoria, but he leaves No. 12 untouched. In No. 11 district there were 170 votes polled for the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, and 128 for Mr. Templeman, giving the former a majority of forty-two. I understand the hon. gentleman was very much disappointed with his majority in No. 11, and he thinks that if he could only get the polling stations closer to these men, they might still have enough party feeling left to walk a hundred yards, or fifty yards, but he cannot induce them to walk a mile or a mile and a quarter as was necessary in many cases in the last election. I would ask why he does not do something with polling place No. 1, where I find there were 147 votes for Prior and 168 for Templeman, or a total of 315 votes, as against 298 in No. 11.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman wants to know why I did not alter Nos. 1 and 2. Evidently the hon. gentleman does not know anything about the statutes——

Mr. MARTIN. I decline to allow the hon. gentleman to interrupt me. I have the floor and I will not allow him to abuse me in that way.

Mr. PRIOR. Will the hon. gentleman not allow me to answer him?

Mr. MARTIN. No; the hon. gentleman can answer me when I get through. I would like him to tell us why district No. 1, in which he was in the minority but in which there were 315 votes polled, is to be left untouched in this rearrangement. In No. 2 there were eighty-three votes polled for the hon. gentleman, and seventy-one for his opponent. Now, that is more like the size of the polling divisions contemplated in the election law, which, as I understand it, seeks to allow one poll for about 200 votes. Now, at the Temperance Hall, eighty-one votes were cast for the hon. gentleman, and 103 for Mr. Templeman—not too many. At Oak Street, No. 4, there were 189 votes polled for the hon. gentleman, and 234 for Mr. Templeman. I call the House to notice that where there is a majority for Mr. Templeman, this House is not asked to gerrymander that polling division ; it is only where there is a majority for the hon. gentleman, and there were very few of them in which the hon. gentleman had a majority, where he is asking us to apply the gerrymander, he does not ask us to gerrymander the whole of this city. At Oak street there was 423 votes polled, the hon. gentleman is willing to let that go, but he is bound to have No. 11 cut up into five pieces. He wants to have a polling division of over forty votes where his friends live, because they are old, decrepit and infirm, and many of them cannot go that far to vote. At polling division No. 5, the court-house, there were 196 votes polled for the hon. gentleman, and 155 for his opponent. He had a majority there, but he is not asking us to gerrymander polling division No. 5. Why don't he gerrymander polling division No. 5 ? Why does he leave that alone when he is bound to have No. 11 gerrymandered ? At. No. 6, Harmony Hall, the hon. gentleman got 127 votes and his opponent 150. Why don't he gerrymander No. 6 ? Why does he pick out No. 11, and insist upon stopping the public business of this House in order to fix up, for his own purpose, that polling division, and not the whole constituency ? I could understand if, by some accident, this voters' list was illegal, or if there were reasons, as they are in the Kootenay district, where a large new population has come in since the voters' list was made, and there were reasons why there should be a parliamentary interference with the operation of the Franchise Act—then I could understand why the hon. gentleman should come here. But to fix up one miserable polling division, one solitary polling division in the city of Victoria, he gets a Bill introduced into the Senate, and now he has got it before this House, and insists upon us discussing it, though he won't tell us what it is, we have not got it before us. Then at No. 7, Cain Street, the hon. gentleman got 103 votes, and his opponent 92. So far as numbers are concerned, that does not require any gerrymander. At Government Street the hon. gentleman got 135 votes, and his opponent 82. That runs a little over the ordinary limit, but it might be allowed to pass. At James Bay the hon. gentleman got 122 votes, and his opponent 96. At the Willows, No. 10, the hon. gentleman got 190 votes, and his opponent 174. Now, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why he don't fix up No. 10. Why does he confine his proposed gerrymander to the polling division No. 11, when polling division No. 10 appears to be in a worse shape ? Polling division No. 12 is in the country also. Here are three of these polling divisions, 10, 11 and 12, that are out in the country, or partly outside the city. In No. 10 there were 364 votes polled ; in No. 11, which the hon. gentleman proposes to gerrymander, there were 298 votes polled ; in No. 12 there were only thirty-three votes polled. Now, if the hon. gentleman proposed to take 11 and 12 and put them together, he would have in the two places 331 votes. That would not be too many to have in two polling divisions ; it would not be exceeding the limits to have 331 votes divided into two polling places. Why should Canada pay out, for the purpose of giving the hon. gentleman's constituents a chance to vote for him, the expenditure for establishing six polling divisions where two only are necessary ? This is a Senate Bill introduced by Sir Mackenzie Bowell ; it is all I have before me. The hon. gentleman has sent over to me, a member of the House of Commons, in discussing a Bill in the House of Commons, a piece of paper that has been before the Senate of Canada, a piece of paper which purports to be a Bill introduced in the Senate. That is all I have, that is all the hon. gentleman can give me ; and he comes here now and asks us to perpetrate this gerrymander in this polling division, and cut it up into five pieces, and he does this on the authority of Sir Mackenzie Bowell in the Senate of Canada. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the Senate has nothing to do with originating these things in the first place. I have read in works on parliamentary practice that it is considered one of the privileges of the House of Commons to introduce any legislation affecting the constitution of the House of Commons. Now, here is a Bill that is plainly in that direction, it is plainly for the purpose of affecting one particular constituency in the House of Commons ; and the hon. gentleman gets it introduced in the Senate, and then he comes here and asks us to discuss it, and he has not enough regard for the privileges of this House to have the Bill printed and circulated among the members before asking them to pass it. The hon. gentleman wants us to pass it without our knowing what the Senate has done with it. I would like to know whether the Senate has made any amendments to this Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. He said they had.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to know what those amendments are ?

Mr. DICKEY. I will explain them if the hon. gentleman will give a chance.

Mr. MARTIN. If I allow the hon. gentleman to explain them, then I lose my chance of speaking. I have not finished my remarks yet, I want to enter my vigorous protest against this kind of legislation, just in the face of an election, too. Consider how suspicious it is. If an election was going to take place two or three years from now, if we made a mistake, we could remedy it at any other session, but we know there is going to be an election before another session is held. This Parliament has had too many sessions already, and we have not that guarantee, we have not that safeguard, there is not going to be another session of Parliament where we can remedy mistakes that we are liable to make in our haste in attempting to legislate upon this question when we have not got the necessary data before us. The hon. gentleman proposes to tell us what the amendments are. Will the members of this House be able to carry in their heads the changes in this Bill ? I submit that we ought to have a printed copy of it. It is one of the rules of this House that amendments should be printed in English and French, and distributed to the members. We have nothing of that kind. All we know is that by some accident, by some fact, or circumstance, intentional or otherwise, a revising officer was appointed for Victoria who had so little idea of what should be done in order to make a voters' list for that constituency, that he put some 1,200 or 1,300 votes into one polling division, and only 60 or 70 into another. I am not sure as to the number that are on the voters' list, because we have not got the voters' list before us ; but I know of the numbers that were polled, and I find that in No. 11 there were 298 polled, and in No. 12, right alongside, there were only 33 votes polled. Now, that is the kind of a man the hon. gentleman selects as revising officer for the constituency of Victoria. What is the result of selecting a man of that kind ? The hon. gentleman had to come here to Parliament and ask to have a special Act passed, before this election comes on, in order to remedy the gross blunders of this gentleman selected by himself. I would not object to that, I would not be prepared to object to the voters' list of electors for Victoria being patched up by this House, and the polling divisions altered, if I knew, and if the House knew, that there were good reasons for making these alterations. We have no reason given whatever. This Bill is brought forward simply because the hon. gentleman did not like the way in which the voters went at the by-election in January last. The hon. gentleman seemed to think he owned Victoria, and had a pre-emptive right to be elected for the city, and he was astonished that he did not secure at least the majority that he had formerly obtained. Although the number of voters on the list was twice as great as in 1891, when the hon. gentleman had a majority of over 600, he failed to obtain a comparatively large majority at the by-election, which might be estimated at 1,200, and only secured a beggarly majority of 100 votes. I regret he had even 100, but that is past and gone, and now we are face to face with this proposition submitted by the hon. gentleman, to provide that every five or six voters shall have a special polling place, in order to try and induce them to walk the distance to the polling booth to vote for him. The hon. gentleman then will have appointed a deputy returning officer for each of those polling districts at $5 a day ; a poll clerk, a constable.

Mr. PRIOR. We do not need any constables there.

Mr. MARTIN. Then there will be all the patronage connected with the renting of polling places and other matters. While I do not blame the hon. gentleman for making the proposition to divide No. 11 into five pieces, I do not know why he did not go through the whole constituency and divide up all the polling districts. If it would be advantageous to divide No. 11, why should it not be advantageous to divide No. 10, and all the others in the city ? The votes in some of the polling divisions in the city far exceed, are, in fact, one-half more than the number of votes polled in No. 11 ; yet the hon. gentleman does not propose to divide them up. I called on him to explain why he wanted to divide No. 11 and not No. 9 and the others, but he had no explanation to offer. He simply asks the House to put this Bill through, and the only reason he has so far given is that the Senate has passed the Bill. It is, however, no reason why the House of Commons should pass a Bill affecting the privileges of the House of Commons simply because the Senate has passed it. It covers a matter with which the Senate has nothing to do, although, of course, the Senate has to pass all Bills of this kind. But surely the hon. gentleman was as well aware when he arrived here about the middle of January of the existence of these difficulties in regard to polling divisions as he is to-day. Why has he left the consideration of this Bill to the last moment ? The hon. gentleman was not one of the bolters, or mixed up in any way with that complication, and he had ample time to attend to matters of this kind. He failed to do so, and allowed January, February, March, and the greater part of April to pass, and now, at the eleventh hour, he asks the House to agree to a Bill introduced into the Senate affecting the constitution of this House, introduced in the Senate in a different form from that in which it is submitted to this House, and hon. members do not know the character of the modifications and alterations. I have, therefore, many reasons to submit against the second reading of this Bill. The Bill should have been introduced in this House, and not in the Senate. Next, this is too small a matter to occupy the attention of the House during its last moments, and the second reading should not be allowed to pass. Then, the principle of the Bill itself is objectionable, that No. 11 should be cut up into five pieces and the other districts allowed to remain as they are at present, which would not be done if the Bill were founded on a proper principle. This Bill is an attempt to gerrymander one of the polling districts of the city of Victoria, and it is therefore against the best interests of the country. The House should not permit legislation of this kind to pass through the House at the last stage of the session. At all events, the House should be placed in possession of some reasons why the Bill should be passed. I have heard no reasons given. It appears there were 298 votes polled in polling division No. 11. I am free to admit that that number is too many for one polling division, but I venture to say there are many polling divisions in different constituencies in Canada in which at the last election there were as many as that number of votes polled. What right has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) to ask particular privileges for his constituency. I have a great respect for the hon. gentleman's constituency. I think it is one of the finest parts of Canada, and is entitled to every consideration from this House, but I do not know why there should be special legislation for it in regard to the voters' list. The hon. gentleman has made a mistake in appointing an incompetent man as revising officer. That is the misfortune of Victoria being represented by the hon. gentleman. That is one of the things in which Victoria suffers, just the same as many other parts of Canada.

Mr. DALY. Like Winnipeg, for instance.

Mr. MARTIN. We have no trouble in Winnipeg.

Mr. DALY. No, but it suffers from its representative.

Mr. MARTIN. I can say that for Selkirk. I am opposed to granting the request of the hon. gentleman to gerrymander polling division No. 11. If we are to gerrymander any polling division at all it should be No. 10, because there were nearly 100 votes more polled in it last election, than in No. 11. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can commence my remarks again, for I have just got a copy of the Bill as it passed the Senate, but I have not had time to read it.

Mr. FOSTER. Sit down and take a little time.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not know whether it would be in order for me to read it or not.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Very well, I will read it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is in order for you to sit down.

Mr. MARTIN. I can read it standing up. Here it is:

> For the purposes of the election to be held in the electoral district, Victoria, B.C., at the next election, the returning officer shall, forthwith upon the receipt of the writ of election, subdivide polling districts No. 11 and 10 of the said electoral district, into not less than five and not more than six polling districts.

I see they amended the Bill in the Senate by taking in polling division No. 10. They knew more about his constituency in the Senate than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) did.

Mr. SPEAKER. I trust the hon. member will remember the rule of the House. He cannot discuss the Bill clause by clause on a motion for second reading.

Mr. MARTIN. I merely wish to read it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has been discussing the clause he has read. I have already ruled that on motion for the second reading, the Bill cannot be discussed clause by clause.

Mr. MARTIN. Then I am out of order in reading it ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Then it will be a little difficult for me to know what the Senate has done with the Bill. We are asked to pronounce upon the principle of a measure that has been passed in the Senate with certain amendments, and we are not allowed by the rules of the House to know what these amendments are. Surely there must be something wrong with the rules of the House if that is the case. I will have to go back and discuss the Bill as it was introduced into this House because I know what it was. The hon. gentleman proposes to gerrymander polling division No. 11. I would like to know why he does not take in division No. 10.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is in the Bill as amended.

Mr. MARTIN. But I do not know whether it is or not. I must compliment the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) in refusing longer to trust this revising officer who has proven such a broken reed. He proposes to trust the returning officer in the future, and I trust he will select a returning officer who knows his business. If it is our duty to patch up this voters' list at almost the last day of the session, then we have got to correct all the mistakes that have been made by revising officers in Canada. I am informed that in other constituencies in British Columbia the revising officers have allowed more than 200 names on the electoral list for a polling division. I am told that in many other electoral districts in the province of British Columbia there are more than 200 names in polling subdivisions. Perhaps I misunderstood the hon. gentleman: but, so far as I could gather that was the only reason he had to suggest for making this change, and I do not see why we should confine ourselves to the province of British Columbia. What about the North-west Territories? There are no voters' lists there. But what about the province of Manitoba? If we are going to fix up the errors and mistakes of the revising officer for Victoria, I think we are entitled to make a thorough scrutiny of the voters' lists of the other provinces of Canada. In order to do justice, in this manner, I think we should call upon the Queen's Printer to furnish us with a correct copy of the voters' list of every constituency in Canada, and let us find out—it would not take very long—in how many of them there are more than 200 names in a polling subdivision. If the Controller of Customs proposes that the House should adopt the principle in this case, it is our duty to provide that the returning officer in each constituency shall have power to divide any such polling subdivision into not less than five or more than six pieces. You have no right to go into this matter piecemeal; you have no right to extend a special privilege to Victoria. It seems to me that the Bill should not be read the second time, for the reasons I have attempted to lay before the House; first, that the Senate is not the proper body to institute legislation of this kind; second, that it is too late in the session to take up a matter extending so widely as this matter is bound to do, if we treat it on principle, and do not confine our action to patching up one constituency, but extend it to the whole of Canada; and, third, that the hon. gentleman's proposition in itself is not fair or reasonable, because it takes one particular polling subdivision in his constituency, and leaves out the others. He says: "This particular polling subdivision has more than 200 names in it, which were put there in error by the revising officer, and I propose that the returning officer shall have power to divide it into five pieces." I say that is wrong in principle. I say that the revising officer is just as much to blame for putting too few names in a polling subdivision as too many, and I say that he has committed as great a blunder in only giving thirty-three votes to No. 12 as he has in giving 298 votes to No. 11. For all these reasons, I submit that the hon. gentleman should not be allowed the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. DICKEY. I desire shortly to give to the hon. gentleman who has been vociferating for them for some time past, the reasons, which he did not seem willing to take in the middle of his speech. The situation in Victoria, as I understand it, is this. There are, first, the city polling districts. Then there are, practically outside of the city, Nos. 10, 11 and 12. No. 10 district has 1,039 votes in it, and No. 11, 850. No. 10 district is about eighteen miles long, and the present polling place is in one end of the district, so that voters are obliged to travel from fifteen miles downwards, some of them, in order to poll their votes. This, of course, is a great practical inconvenience. As the hon. gentleman has said, it is not in accordance with the spirit of the Election Act adopted years ago, which was that there should be small polling districts of 200 voters each in the country, for the convenience of voters, and to enable the votes to be promptly and conveniently polled. It is quite evident to the House that to compel 1,039 voters to vote in one polling booth in a day——

Mr. MARTIN. There are only 298.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. gentleman knows that there are 1,039 on the list. All these men have a right to vote, and if the hon. gentleman makes the calculation, he will find that they will have to vote several per minute in order to get their votes polled in one day, which is contrary to the ordinary practice under the Act. The proposition of the Bill is that these polling districts 11 and 10 should be grouped together and divided by the returning officer so that the several new polling districts that are to be made shall contain 200 voters each, or as near that as may be.

The hon. gentleman has talked about gerrymander. There is no question of gerrymander in the improper sense, but there is a question of gerrymander similar to that introduced in the Bill which this Government carried in 1892—that is to say, there is public convenience served. But in the improper sense there is no gerrymander, because it is not proposed to touch a single voter. All that is proposed to do is to furnish him with facilities near his home and business for polling his vote. The hon. gentleman said that this was a Bill intended to give the Controller of Inland Revenue the seat. That may be. I think the Bill is open to that objection. I think that the more men vote, the more likely the Controller of Inland Revenue is to get back; and if he can get all the votes polled, he is very likely to come back. But I am sure there is no sinister motive in it. The hon. gentleman spoke of No. 12. I am informed that that is a small settlement in the end of the district, which is separated by five or six miles of vacant property from the settlements in No. 11, so that it is a great convenience that these people who live near No. 11 should vote near their homes. There are about seventy voters upon that list, so that there is no object whatever in grouping that with the other. The hon. gentleman has also referred to the polling districts inside the city, and asks why we do not divide them up as they are considerably over the 200. The reason why we need not interfere is because the returning officer has power, under the Act, to divide those up alphabetically, so as to suit the convenience of voters, so that the returning officer can cut the lists into as many alphabetical divisions as he chooses, can put the polls as close together as he chooses, and so afford every facility for the voters to poll their votes. The hon. gentleman will see that there is not the slightest attempt on the part of this House to express any opinion at all as to what the divisions should be. The House does not attempt in any way to divide the districts, but simply asks the officials on the spot to undertake the division, and from the hon. gentleman's own observations, he has quite convinced this House that it is better to take the returning officer, who has the charge of the district, rather than the revising officer whose failure to carry out his instructions has caused the whole of the trouble. I do not think there can be any serious objection to the Bill, whose sole object is to afford facilities to voters of both shades of politics to poll their votes, and thus get really the true sentiment of the constituency. Therefore, I hope the hon. gentleman will not prevent this Bill becoming law and thus prevent the voters in Victoria from expressing their opinions on the issues of the day.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. Minister of Justice informs us that the House will see that such and such provisions are made by this Bill. How will the House see it? The Bill was not before the House when the second reading was moved, and it was only distributed a few moments ago. The House is not seized of the provisions of the Bill and cannot tell what they are. It is premature, therefore, to ask the attention of this House to a Bill, of the provisions of which it is ignorant. I think there is something wrong in the practice of permitting a Bill to be introduced in the Senate and permit stages to be taken in this House on such Bills before the Bills are before this House. The hon. Minister himself admitted he spoke in ignorance of the actual provisions of this measure. He was unable to state what they were. He did have some general impression as to the character of the Bill, but was ignorant of the exact provisions, and when it was placed in his hands he attempted to read it for his own information and that of the House, but was prevented, under the rules of the House, from so doing. Now, if the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) with regard to the course taken by the hon. member for Victoria is correct, certainly the House must sympathize with the hon. member for Winnipeg. He tells us that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) crossed the floor and asked him to make an examination into the character of this Bill in order to satisfy himself as to whether it was a Bill that should receive its second reading.

Mr. PRIOR. I did not.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am repeating the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg.

Mr. DALY. Which the hon. member for Victoria denies.

Mr. CHARLTON. And that in his absence, the hon. member for Victoria moved the second reading of the Bill. It is a question of veracity between the two; but certainly whether the hon. member for Winnipeg is under a misapprehension or not, he was ignorant of the character of the Bill, as every member of this House was. I, for one, protest against the consideration of a Bill by this House, dealing with the constitution of this House, which originated in the Senate. The Senate has no business in regard to any matter that pertains to the election of members of the House of Commons, and it is an impertinence on the part of the Senate to interfere in such matters. The circumstance is in itself suspicious that the hon. member for Victoria should have found it necessary to have this Bill originated in the Senate of Canada to deal with a question pertaining exclusively to the House of Commons. He goes to his friends in the Senate, he has this Bill introduced, it was sent over here without being printed, he moves the second reading in this House, and the Bill, which originated in the Senate, pertains to matters over which this House has exclusive jurisdiction. This is an irregularity which should be resented by this House, and it certainly will by the Opposition. It is time that we arrived at some decision as to whether we shall be permitted to know what is the character of the legislation which is sent over from the Senate before we are called upon to act upon it. I am not prepared to say what the character of the Bill is. I have not had time to examine it. It was laid on my desk a few moments before the hon. member for Winnipeg concluded his remarks, and I ask that time be given me to learn what the provisions are before I am called on to vote whether it shall receive the second reading or not. Now, Sir, the hon. Minister of Justice tells us that some inconvenience exists in Victoria on account of the large size of certain polling subdivisions. Admit that, where then should that inconvenience have been rectified? Where should legislation for the purpose of remedying that inconvenience originate? Certainly in the House where the member who is elected by these people sits. What has the Senate to do with the size of polling divisions in Victoria or elsewhere, or with the constitution of any riding in the Dominion? By virtue of what authority or right is such a measure as this originated in the Senate, a measure affecting the privileges and constitution of this House? I hold that it is an outrage of the privileges and prerogatives of the House of Commons of Canada. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Dickey) says this is not a gerrymander in the bad sense. I suppose the hon. Minister would admit, then, that there have been gerrymanders in the bad sense in this country. I doubt that that hon. gentleman would rise in his place and justify the gerrymander of 1882 by which one-half of the electors in Ontario elect two-thirds of the representatives from that province who sit in this House. This is an interference with the divisions of a riding, and if it is admitted to be a gerrymander in any sense, it is a matter that the House is bound to look carefully into before it gives its sanction to the measure. This the House is not now in a position to do, as it has not sufficient knowledge of what its provisions were. The Minister of Justice is certainly a very candid gentleman. He tells us that the Bill is designed to give the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) a seat in this House. I presume that is the object of this Bill, and for that reason I have very little sympathy with the purpose of the Bill. I suspect the whole transaction ; it is a crooked one. The fact that the Bill originated in the Senate, the fact that it is not before us in such shape as to enable us to give it proper consideration, the fact that it is declared to be for the purpose of assuring the seat of one hon. member in this House—all these are reasons for opposing the Bill at present. If we are allowed time to examine it and a fair and dispassionate consideration of it and the circumstances attending it, we come to the conclusion that the Bill is all right, then, by all means, let it pass. But as we have not had time for that examination and consideration of the provisions of the Bill, we are entitled to ask for delay. For that reason, I repeat, the proposition made to postpone the second reading of the Bill until it is in the hands of members long enough to enable them to consider it, is a fair and reasonable one.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think that in the interests of the progress of business of the House it is much to be regretted that the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition in relation to this matter has not been taken. It was a very reasonable request under the circumstances, as it was evidently under a misapprehension that the formal motion for the second reading was brought up. That having been discovered I think that under the circumstances, it was unwise to press forward a Bill which it is impossible that hon. members can have fairly considered. A good deal may have been said about this Bill, but I think the House will admit that under the circumstances there was some occasion for it. As has been remarked, this transaction is somewhat suspicious. This Bill originated in the Senate, although it deals with a matter relating exclusively to a constituency of this House. That of itself has a rather sinister look about it. Then there appears to be an attempt—I do not say that it is so—to get the Bill through in a surreptitious manner. This motion was an unusual one, yet it was marked by a persistence on the part of the leader of the House as well as of the hon. gentleman introducing the Bill so great as to heighten the feeling of distrust. Now, what is the course usually followed with reference to Bills from the Senate ? If this were a usual occurrence, one would not think so much of it, but where will you find an instance during this session at any rate, or even during past sessions of a Bill being not only read the first time, which is right enough, but proposed for a second reading, without going upon the Order paper and without being printed and placed in the hands of members. Not going into the merits of this Bill, what is the importance of it ? Suppose that it is perfectly harmless, as the Minister of Justice says, it must not be forgotten that it relates only to one constituency. The Minister of Justice says it is not a grave matter. Then why depart from the wise rule and procedure in dealing with the subject. Take up the Order paper and consider the Bills that are upon it. I find here :

> Second reading Bill (No. 84, letter I of the Senate) an Act further to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act.—Mr. Dickey.

I presume that is an Act of greater importance than the one now before us as it has been defined by the Minister of Justice. There is no attempt made to set aside the usual rules of procedure to go on with the second reading of that Bill. It is read the first time, it goes upon the Order paper, it is printed and copies are placed in the hands of members. Members can consider the Bill and come to an intelligent decision with regard to it. Then I find the following :—

> Second reading Bill (No. 90, letter H of the Senate) an Act further to amend the Railway Act.—Mr. Haggart.

This is a matter of general import. The whole country, and not one constituency alone, is interested in this Bill. But the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) does not seek to give this a second reading the same day he introduces it, but he allows the usual forms to be observed, and when the Bill comes up for the second reading members will be able to discuss it with an intelligent knowledge of its provisions. Take another case :

> Second reading Bill (No. 86, letter J of the Senate) an Act respecting the Revision of the Statutes.—Mr. Dickey.

I presume that this is a matter of quite as much importance as the Bill that was thought to be railroaded through by this unusual procedure. But after it is introduced it stands upon the Order paper until copies are in the hands of members and there has been time for every member to acquaint himself with its provisions and give them fair consideration.

> Second reading Bill (No. 96, letter M of the Senate) an Act respecting the inspection of Steamboats and the examination and licensing of Engineers employed on them.—Mr. Costigan.

This also goes through the usual course although, no doubt, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Costigan) would hold it to be a much more important measure than the one before us. The same is true of the next item on the Order paper :

> Second reading Bill (No. 101, letter L of the Senate) an Act to amend the Act respecting Wrecks, Casualties and Salvage.—Mr. Costigan.

Then we have :

> Second reading Bill (No. 98, letter P of the Senate) an Act to amend the Act respecting the Protection of Navigable Waters.—Mr. Costigan.

This is a matter of general import, but we find that it is allowed to go through its regular course and no attempt is made to hasten it unduly. Then we find on the Order paper the following :—

> Second reading Bill (No. 104, letter R of the Senate) an Act to amend the Act respecting the Representation of the North-west Territories in the Senate of Canada.—Mr. Daly.

This is certainly a Bill of wider scope than a measure which affects only one constituency. But no attempt was made to read it a second time before it was printed. I might quote other instances from the Government Orders ; and on the Public Bills and Orders you find Bills which also might be quoted as cases in point. Now, the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) has pointed out that in this matter he is forced to discuss a Bill which is really not the Bill before the House, it having been amended after it was first printed. And it was not until after he had been speaking about an hour that it was placed in his hands. It is only placed in my hands now, and I cannot discuss intelligently the question whether it should or should not be read the second time. I recognize the ruling, and I merely read the clause and point out to you that I, at any rate, am not in a position to deal intelligently with it for the reason that I have not the statute that is to apply. The second clause says :

> For the said purposes the whole of each of the said present polling districts shall be so subdivided and the alphabetical subdivision required by subsection 6, added to section 23 of the Electoral Franchise Act, by section 6 of chapter 18 of the statutes of 1891, shall not be made for any portion of the city of Victoria which lies within the limits of either of the said present polling districts.

Well, I have not got the different statutes under my hand, I do not know how they work, I do not know how they would fit in, I do not know what the effect will be, and there is no time for inquiry. I say that under these circumstances, it is a gross departure from the rules of the House that would not have been permitted at all, only it was supposed it was a Bill there would be no contention about. But when it was mentioned clearly that there was a misunderstanding, that exception was taken to it, that it had a suspicious appearance, coming first from the Senate, and then being forced through this House, these circumstances do justify, it seems to me, the discussion which it has received at the hands of this House. This discussion might not have been required if the proper procedure had been followed, and members had had an opportunity of thoroughly understanding the Bill ; then other business of the House which is pressing for consideration, might have been proceeded with. I think this Bill having been introduced by a member of the Government, upon the Government principally lies the necessity of giving proper facilities for the despatch of the business of this House in relation to it.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry the offer made a moment ago by the Minister of Finance was not accepted, that is to say, that the Bill should take a second reading now, and be left over to take the committee stage to-morrow. I think we might come to that understanding now, and let the second reading be taken.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF YALE AND CARIBOO.

Mr. DICKEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 109) to make special provisions in respect to the election to be held in the district of Yale and Cariboo at the next general election. He said : This is also a Bill relating to a constituency in British Columbia, of which mention was made a few days ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin). The present member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Mara) has been pressing this matter upon the attention of the Government during this session, with a view of obtaining a new voters' list altogether for that district, on account of the rapid development of the southern and northern portions of the district, in consequence of mining industries there. It was felt to be practically impossible to get a new revision of the list, and the Government are now submitting the Bill to meet the difficulty as far as they can. The principle of the Bill is that any person on the voters' list for Yale and Cariboo can vote where he is on election day, at any polling place in the constituency. There are evident difficulties with regard to it, and the Bill has provisions in it to meet those difficulties, as far as possible, and that is the utmost the Government feels able to do at the present juncture of affairs. It will, at any rate, meet a great part of the practical difficulty in the Kootenay district, and in the Cariboo district.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very sorry that the hon. gentleman has not been able to do something of some benefit to the constituency when he was about it. I am glad to learn that the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo has been urging a new list upon the Government, although, in the previous debate that occurred on this matter, the member for Yale and Cariboo took the opposite view, and urged the adoption of the course which the Government has adopted, while I contended for the adoption of a course, not of making a new voters' list for the whole constituency, but a new voters' list for that portion of the constituency in what is known as the Kootenay district. The hon. gentleman has said that is not practicable, but he has given no reasons to the House. At the request of the hon. gentleman, I saw his deputy with regard to that matter, and his deputy expressed the opinion that it was quite practicable, and the suggestion I made to him could be very easily worked out in connection with this matter. I do not intend to discuss it at any length at this stage, but I regret that the Government cannot see their way clear to giving the large number of persons who have gone into that Kootenay district since the list was made, a chance to vote in this election. I think their action will meet with the disapproval of that section of the constituency, and I do not think the hon. member himself can escape responsibility for the Government's action in this matter.

Mr. MARA. A word or two in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin). He led the House to infer that when I addressed the House on this subject about a month ago, I opposed a new revision for the whole district. I did not oppose a new revision for the whole district. It was only when the Government declared it to be impossible, or rather impracticable, to revise the whole list of the district of Yale and Cariboo, that I suggested this as an alternative scheme that would partially, if not wholly, meet the difficulty. The hon. gentleman is well aware of that, because, in a conversation I had with him, I pointed out that in the northern as well as in the southern portions of Yale and Cariboo, mining development had caused an increase in several mining camps, the distance between them being from 500 to 600 miles, and I advocated a complete revision of the united district. Now, the polling division of Alexandria should be subdivided into three polling places ; Keithley should be subdivided into two ; there should be polling places at Rossland, Trail, Pilot Bay, Sandon, and Three Forks. Christina Lake should be divided into two polling divisions ; and Osoyoos should be divided into three, and there should be a poll held at Horse Fly. This Bill provides for the subdivision of those different polling divisions ; but the necessity has arisen owing to the rapid mining developments that has taken place in those different parts of the united district since the last revision was held and, as I have stated, the distances are great, being 400 or 500 miles apart.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the Bill would open the door to frauds at elections, if it were carried, and it is wholly inadequate to meet the requirements of the case. The district which the hon. gentleman represents was made an exception to the ordinary rule at the time of the elections, until, I think, last year, when the hon. gentleman or some of his friends had carried through this House and through the Senate without any discussion a Bill altering the previous arrangement, and making the rule in the Cariboo and Yale districts correspond with the rule that prevails in the ordinary districts of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman's district, so far as I understand, embraces over 150,000 square miles of territory. I am told it is wholly impossible within the time ordinarily allowed for holding an election to give the necessary notices in all the various settled portions of the hon. gentleman's district, and the result is that the changes proposed in the law a short time ago, which has come into operation, are of such a character that a large portion of the electors in the constituency will be disfranchised when the election comes to be held. Is that not so ?

Mr. MARA. No. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will explain why it is not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am willing to give way, but not to resign my right to continue my observations.

Mr. MARA. The district of Cariboo when an electoral district by itself would require a much longer time than the united district for this reason. The returning officer was appointed from the vicinity of Barkerville. From Ashcroft to Barkerville the distance is 300 miles, which had to be travelled by stage. It took from four or five days for the writ after leaving the nearest point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to reach the returning officer. Then he would have to send back to Kamloops to have the notices printed. After nomination, the same would take place ; he would have to send back to Kamloops to get ballot papers printed, this taking up a week or ten days. Whereas in the united district Kamloops would be the residence of the returning officer. There are printing offices there, and the notices can be distributed from there, it being a central point to every part of the district within six days. The outside settled parts of the district can be reached within six or seven days from Kamloops and even in less time if necessary. So the hon. gentleman will see that it is not necessary there should be the additional length of time for the united district that there was for the district of Cariboo when it stood alone.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My information is that it would take more than two weeks to reach some of the settlements in the hon. gentleman's district from any point on the Canadian Pacific Railway. I mention this as evidence of the hasty and inconsiderate manner in which the House has undertaken to deal with the representation of the people of this country in Parliament. It certainly is of the first consequence in any attempt to alter the law relating to parliamentary elections that all the facts should be known and every case submitted to this House should be carefully considered. That certainly was not the case as regards the change made in the period of time within which the elections should be held in the hon. gentleman's district, a district at the present time containing between 150,000 and 200,000 square miles where settlements are extending from one extreme portion of it to the other. If it were intended by the Government to deal with this subject in this Parliament, surely this matter should have been brought to the attention of the House at a period when all the facts could be considered, and the House could make itself certain that no wrong would be done or injury committed in any portion of the electoral district. The Minister's proposal is this. As I understand, there are a large number of people who have gone into this district since the last revision took place. So far as they are concerned they will be disfranchised, they will not have the right to vote under the Bill which the hon. gentleman proposes. But the hon. gentleman proposes that people who formerly lived in one portion of the district, a district as large as the whole of the province of Ontario, should be at liberty to vote in some other section 400 or 500 miles away from the place of their former residence, where their names were entered on the voters' list. Surely that is no greater reason for permitting those persons to vote at a distant point than for permitting settlers from Ontario to vote, who have left the district in which they are registered and gone to British Columbia. There is as much propriety in the one case as in the other. In either case there certainly would be room for the commission of very serious frauds at the elections. A man might be personated, a man might vote who had not his name on the voters' list, and in a great majority of cases fraud might be committed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, tomorrow, to consider the following proposed resolutions :—

That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say :—

1. To the Ontario, Belmont and Northern Railway Company, for 10 miles of their railway divided into two sections : First, from Marmora village to the junction with the Ontario Central Railway ; second, from the Belmont Iron Mines to Marmora village, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 56 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $32,000.

2. To the Cobourg, Northumberland and Pacific Railway Company, for 49 miles of their railway, from Cobourg to the Ontario and Quebec Railway, in lieu of the subsidies granted by 53 Victoria, chapter 2, and 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $156,800.

3. To the Ontario and Pacific Railway Company, for 58 87-100 miles of their railway, from Cornwall to Ottawa, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $172,400.

4. To the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway Company, for 32 miles of their railway, from Bobcaygeon to Pontypool, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $102,400.

5. To the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company, for 35 miles of their railway, from Campbellton towards Grand Falls, in lieu of the subsidies granted by 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, and 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $112,000.

6. For a railway from a point in the parish of St. Valentine, in the county of St. John, to a point in the parish of St. Rémi, in the county of Napierville via Scottsville, Napierville and St. Edouard, for 12 miles of such railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $38,400.

7. To the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste Marie Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and also the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by 53 Victoria, chapter 2, both of which were regranted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, the whole not exceeding $86,400.

8. To the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway Company, for 56 miles of their railway, from a junction with the Grand Trunk Railway at Rideau, or some other point near Kingston, to Smith's Falls, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy calculated on the basis of three and a-half per cent on the amount of such subsidy so granted, to be paid in semi-annual instalments, for such period not exceeding twenty-one years as the company may elect, which represents a grant in cash of $179,200.

Provided that upon the completion of 28 miles of the said railway a semi-annual subsidy may be paid proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole fifty-six miles : Provided also, that the company may deposit with the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General a sum not exceeding $1,170,000, in consideration whereof there shall be paid to the company for such period not exceeding twenty years as the company may elect, a semi-annual annuity calculated on a basis of three and a-half per cent on the amount so deposited : Provided further, that the Governor in Council may permit the company to assign the said subsidy and annuity to trustees by way of security, for any bonds or securities which may be issued by the company in respect to their undertaking.

9. To the Bracebridge and Baysville Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from Bracebridge towards Baysville, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

10. To the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company, or such other company as shall have constructed the same, for 49½ miles of railway from Woodstock to Hamilton, in the province of Ontario, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 54-55 Victoria, chapter 8, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $158,400.

11. To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway, for 25 miles of their railway, from St. Thomas through the counties of Elgin and Middlesex, towards Forest station or Park Hill, on the Grand Trunk Railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $80,000.

The said subsidy to be paid by instalments, the first on the completion of the section from the intersection with the Canadian Pacific Railway to Strathroy ; the second on the completion of the section from the town of Strathroy to the village of Arkona ; and the third on the completion of the section from Arkona to junction with the Grand Trunk Railway, at or between either Forest or Park Hill.

12. To the Great Eastern Railway Company, or to such other company as shall under the direction of the Minister of Railways and Canals perform the work, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by 53 Victoria, chapter 2, for a bridge over the Nicolet River, and also for a bridge over the St. Francis River, of a subsidy of 15 per cent on the value of the structures, not to exceed $32,655.

13. To the Great Eastern Railway Company, or to such other company as shall under the direction of the Minister of Railways and Canals perform the work, for 30 miles of their railway, from the River St. Francis to the Arthabaska Railway at St. Grégoire Station, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, first granted by 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, which balance was regranted by 54-55 Victoria, chapter 8, not exceeding in the whole $79,600.

14. To the Columbia and Kootenay Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by 53 Victoria, chapter 2, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, a portion thereof to be applied to the construction of a branch line from near Robson to a point below the rapids, not exceeding in the whole $23,200.

15. To the Nipissing and James Bay Railway Company, for 25 miles of their railway, from at or near North Bay Station on the Canadian Pacific Railway towards James Bay, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile ; also for 43 miles of their railway from North Bay towards Lake Tamagaming, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile ; all in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, and not exceeding in the whole $217,000.

16. To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from Coe Hill or Gilmore or some point between Coe Hill and Gilmore to Bancroft, via L'Amable or as near thereto as practicable, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 56 Victoria, chapter 2, 1893, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

17. To the Manitoba and North Shore Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from Little Current to the Algoma branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, also for 10 miles of their railway from Little Current to Wilson, on the Algoma branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, in all 40 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $115,200.

18. To the Thousand Islands Railway Company, for an extension of their railway to connect with the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, the Kingston, Napanee and Western Railway, the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway, or the waters of the Rideau Canal, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, not exceeding in the whole $30,000.

19. For a railway from St. Placide to St. Andrews, 8 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $25,600.

20. For a railway from St. Eustache to St. Placide, in the county of Two Mountains, for 18 miles of such railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $57,600.

21. For a railway from a point on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway on Isle Jésus, in the county of Laval, towards St. Eustache, for 12 miles of such railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $38,400.

22. To the Coast Line Railway Company, for 35 miles of their railway, from Yarmouth towards Shelburne and Lockeport, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, to the South Shore Railway Company for 35 miles of their railway from Yarmouth towards Shelburne and Lockeport, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $112,000.

23. To the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, for 25 miles of their railway, from a point at or near the Strait of Canso, towards Cheticamp, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, for a railway from Port Hawkesbury towards Cheticamp, 25 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $80,000.

24. For a railway from Lime Ridge, in the county of Wolfe, in the province of Quebec, northerly through the county of Wolfe and into the county of Megantic, a distance not exceeding 50 miles from Lime Ridge, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $160,000.

25. To the Kingston, Napanee and Western Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, being extensions, additions or branches in the counties of Peterboro', Hastings, Addington, Frontenac or Leeds towards iron or other mines or mineral lands, payable in instalments regulated by the length of each of the said extensions, additions or branches, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, not exceeding, with the amount already paid, $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $59,667.20.

26. To the Joliette and St. Jean de Matha, Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from St. Félix de Valois to Ste. Emélie de L'Energie, in lieu of the subsidies granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

27. For a railway from St. John to Barnesville, for a distance of 10 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, or exceeding in the whole $32,000.

28. For a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway between Norton and Sussex stations towards Havelock, 20 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

29. To the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company, for 50 miles of their railway, from the Victoria branch of the Midland Railway to a point at or near the village of Bancroft, in the county of Hastings, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by 56 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding in the whole $145,000.

30. To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company, for 85 miles of their railway from Aylmer to Pembroke, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by 47 Victoria, chapter 8, provided the Ottawa River is crossed at some point not east of Lapasse, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding in the whole $73,172.

31. Towards the restoration or renewal of the railway bridge on the South Eastern Railway over the Yamaska River at Yamaska, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy equal to one-third of the actual cost of the renewal of the bridge, but the grant not to exceed in the whole $50,000.

32. To the Woodstock and Centreville Railway Company, for a railway from Woodstock to the international boundary between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine, 26 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $83,200.

2. That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively ; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively ; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make ; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

3. That the granting of such subsidies respectively shall be subject to such conditions for securing such running powers or traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, as the Governor in Council determines.

4. That the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidized,—except as to subsidies with respect to which it is hereinbefore otherwise provided.

Motion agreed to.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House resolve itself into committee to-morrow, to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to build and operate, as part of the Prince Edward Island Railway, the following lines of railway, that is to say :

(a.) From Southport to Murray Harbour South, with a cross line connecting with the Prince Edward Island Railway, between Peakes and Cardigan stations, touching at or near Montague Bridge ;

(b.) From Souris or Harmony Station to Elmira :

(e.) From Summerside to Richmond Bay ;

(f.) From some point at or near O'Leary's Station, to some point on the western coast between Brae and Cape Wolfe ;

(g.) From Wiltshire to Victoria.

Motion agreed to.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. BERGERON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask a question of the Government. I desire to know if the Government can give any information as to whether they have arrived at a decision in regard to the request made the other day by a very important and influential deputation from Montreal, which came here and asked that a grant of money be allowed the city of Montreal towards holding an international exhibition in 1897.

Mr. FOSTER. In answer to the hon. gentleman I would say that a very large and influential deputation from the city of Montreal waited upon the Government and urged the propriety of assistance being given by the Government to an international exhibition which it was proposed to hold in Montreal in 1897. The deputation was heard by several members of the Government, and since that time the Government have given the matter certain consideration. It is not possible, of course, owing to the state of public business, that any money grant could be initiated and carried through Parliament this year, in aid of that project; nor indeed is it absolutely necessary that such should be done, as it is only proposed that the exhibition should take place in 1897. The Government, however, has no hesitation in saying, that it is favourably disposed towards the idea of holding an International exhibition in Canada ; an exhibition which should be fully representative, and upon a basis which would insure its success. And the Government propose to ask a committee of representative men from amongst the promoters, to confer with it with a view to arriving at a basis upon which future action shall be founded in respect to that matter.

Mr. McSHANE. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to say something upon this very important question.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no question before the House.

Mr. McSHANE. I will conclude, Sir, with a motion to adjourn. Last Saturday a deputation of some three or four hundred merchants, business men, and leading citizens of all classes came from the city of Montreal to ask the present Government to give them a grant in aid of an international exhibition to be held in the city of Montreal. I had not the pleasure or the honour, to have an invitation from the gentlemen who came on that deputation, and I regret that indeed, because I am here to do my best endeavour to promote the interests of the city of Montreal and its whole surroundings. Sir, there are two opinions as to the answer given to the deputation by the Government. These gentlemen on that deputation were told that the people of Montreal would have first to deal with the city of Toronto before any answer could be given them. I think that was a very lame answer for the Government to give that very important deputation, and I will tell you why I think so. The city of Montreal deserved a better answer from this Government. The city of Montreal has supported the present Government for many a long day. In view of the fact, of the great benefit that Montreal has been to the Government, and the great service which that city in the past has always given to every enterprise of the Government, I say from my seat here, that it was a miserable answer to give to the people of that city. We have on the Order paper Government resolutions asking for immense grants of money towards wild-cat railway schemes. We have also a recommendation from the ex-Minister of Justice to give away $210,000 to a contractor. If that money was not paid, the thanks of the country are due to one honest servant who was put in office during the regime of Mr. Mackenzie, the Auditor General, Mr. Lorn McDougall who nipped this fraud in the bud. As you have heard in the House, Sir, not only would that $210,000 have been given away, but it would have amounted in the end to nearly three-quarters of a million, as it would have paved the way for other contractors, who have similar claims. The Government are willing to do things of that kind. I do hope that they will not again give such an answer to the citizens of Montreal. I know the Government stand to-day somewhat in dread, and I know they have had a private meeting to-day with the gentlemen who came back from Montreal, because the feeling in that city, when that important deputation went back, was such, that not one man could hardly show his face as a Government candidate in the coming election.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McSHANE. You may say "Hear, hear," but you will hear, hear, a little more about it. The members of the Government cry out "hear, hear," and I do hope that they will give half a million dollars at least to the city of Montreal. I am sure that the whole Dominion will sanction that grant. Why should the people of Montreal be told by the Government to arrange with Toronto. The people of Montreal are proud of the city of Toronto, and we trust that they will have an exhibition such as they have always had and perhaps a better one. I must say that the gentlemen who have got up that exhibition in the city of Toronto for years, deserve a great deal of credit. Their exhibibitions have been a pride to Ontario, and I hope, that if possible they will be greater and better exhibitions in the future. The exhibition which we want to hold in Montreal is one that will attract people from all parts of the civilized world. We have large tracts of land in our North-west with no settlers to cultivate it. We know that when our immigrants come here, although they are brought out by the Government, they remain with us but a short time, and then take their departure across the line. We hope, Sir, that great numbers of persons from all parts of Europe will visit our international exhibition. If the Government makes this grant, a vast and lasting benefit will accrue to the whole Dominion. The city council of Montreal will do its duty, and the people of Montreal will do their duty by subscribing generously.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McSHANE. The hon. Minister of Finance is laughing, and I do not know why. Perhaps he thinks that the question before the House is not of much importance, or perhaps he thinks that my remarks are of little consequence. But, Mr. Speaker, I venture to say, that he has changed his tune, and the leaders of the Government have changed their tune since that deputation left here on Saturday. I speak here representing the city of Montreal, and I am sorry there are no others of the gentlemen representing that city in their seats at present. I am sorry none of them are here to assist me to ask this Government to give the aid that we require for the exhibition.

I do not wish to reproach them, for perhaps if they thought the question was coming before the House this afternoon, they would be in their seats. I know that one hon. gentleman of Montreal has always taken a great deal of interest, not only in the city, but in the province of Quebec, and in the Dominion generally. I refer to Sir Donald A. Smith. Mr. Speaker, my humble efforts may be but little in the eyes of the Government, but I voice the feelings of the citizens of Montreal in this matter, and if the Government refuse this aid they cannot afford to go before the province of Quebec as they shortly have to do. We want no miserable pittance from them. We want a good grant. I say that Montreal has never received a cent from this Government. It is time that the wants of Montreal should be brought before the Government. The merchants and the people of Montreal were promised day after day, and month after month, that certain things would be done for them, but nothing ever was done. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this very important question will arouse a feeling in the breasts of the Government that that city can be no longer set aside. Montreal is the chief city of the province of Quebec, and the greatest and grandest city in the Dominion of Canada. I was glad to see that last night the Government, after having been told that they had done nothing for the city of Montreal, introduced a resolution granting to the Harbour Commissioners, $2,000,000 of bonds. We should have had, years ago, a great deal of money given to the city of Montreal by the Government; but we have hardly had anything from them except insults to the merchants and business people of that city. But this is changed now, and I know that to-day the Government are on the tip-toe of expectation, and are ready to promise anything. But we want no promises: we want the solid, sound cash given. Promises are empty. Before I sit down, I desire to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Public Works—I believe it comes under his department. Since I came here I have received letter after letter from a very important portion of the people in one part of the city of Montreal: I mean the inhabitants of Point St. Charles. I wish to ask the Government, who owns Mill Street? Is it owned by the city of Montreal or by the Government?

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. member is getting away from the question. He proposes to move the adjournment of the House to bring up the question of an appropriation in aid of an International Exhibition to be held in Montreal in 1897. He cannot discuss any other question on this motion.

Mr. McSHANE. This is a grievance.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the House would be aggrieved if I were to allow a breach of the rules.

Mr. McSHANE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the House, but I am here to do my duty to my constituents, and I am certain that if the Government were only aware of the state in which that portion of Point St. Charles is——

Mr. SPEAKER. I have already pointed out to the hon. member that he proposes to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of bringing up a question, and he must confine himself to that question.

Mr. McSHANE. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the other members of this House for listening to me; but I thought I would take the opportunity of bringing this matter up, because I shall have no other chance. Therefore, before I sit down, I desire to ask the Government if any one of their representatives here can stand up in his place and say positively that they will assist the city of Montreal in getting up their great international fair, by contributing to it half a million dollars, as we have asked.

Mr. IVES. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is, I presume, familiar with the opera of "The Mikado." He will remember a character in that opera called Pooh Bah, who was accustomed occasionally to be insulted, and for those insults he was always willing to take compensation in cash. The hon. gentleman says he represents the great city of Montreal. I should be very sorry to think that he did represent the great city of Montreal.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. IVES. He has represented the city of Montreal to be a Pooh Bah. He says that the people of that city have frequently been insulted by the Government of Canada, and that now, for those insults, they want $500,000 in aid of the great fair.

Mr. McSHANE. I did not say anything of the kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McSHANE. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to state that I made no such statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am sure the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce will accept the statement made by the hon. member.

Mr. IVES. I will accept the statement, but I certainly understood the hon. gentleman to say that the city of Montreal and its business men had received nothing but insults at the hands of the Government, and that the time had now arrived when compensation for those insults must be given. That would be necessary to soothe the injured feelings created by that bad treatment. Then the hon. gentleman has represented the delegates from the city of Montreal who came here the other day, as coming for that purpose. He says that, inasmuch as they were told by the Premier, among other things, that Toronto had arranged for an exhibition in the same year, and it might be advisable that some arrangement should be made to avoid a clashing of the two, the deputation went back to Montreal unable to hold up their heads, and that the result of that remark of the Premier is that not a Conservative candidate can be elected in the city of Montreal.

Mr. McSHANE. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. IVES. That was the position the hon. gentleman placed before this House. It is all very well to get up here and make a stump speech, but the hon. gentleman should not feel so sensitive when that speech is stripped of its oratorical flourishes and its rhetoric, and its exact meaning is put before the House and the citizens of Montreal. Now, I have too high a regard for the great city of Montreal to believe that that deputation came here, as the hon. gentleman represents them, to present a pistol at the head of the Government on the eve of a general election, and to demand that the sum of $500,000 should be promised, immediately, without any hesitation, without any consideration, and without consulting the House of Commons at all: because it is impossible to take the opinion of the House of Commons at this stage of the session. I say I repudiate, on behalf of the city of Montreal, the statement the hon. gentleman has made, that unless the Government of this country promise, unreservedly, unqualifiedly, and at once, that $500,000 shall be granted for the proposed exhibition, then the city of Montreal will change its politics, and no Conservative candidate can be nominated. Now, I know the city of Montreal too well to think that that was the view with which those gentlemen came up here. It is true that it was rumoured about the lobbies of the House that the Liberal party were instigating this great deputation and that it was politics rather than the exhibition which was the object they had in view; and from the speech of the hon. gentleman, one might be prepared to say that there is some little foundation for that suspicion. Two days ago the deputation came here. They were answered by members of the Government who addressed them, I venture to say, in as encouraging a manner as could have been expected. Two days have elapsed, and the hon. gentleman rises in his place and makes a stump speech, in which he threatens the Government with the loss of the whole of Montreal, unless they come down at once with $500,000 in solid hard cash. I say that the city of Montreal has no reason to be proud of the way in which the hon. gentleman has represented that city to-day.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the House will doubt the good taste of the reply which has just been made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) to the very civil question put by my hon. friend (Mr. McShane). Whether the city of Montreal is satisfied or not with its representatives is a question which the city will have the occasion to answer by and by. My hon. friend asked a necessary and a very civil question, and the Government were at liberty to give what information they chose in reply. They have not chosen to speak with any definiteness, but that is their own business and with that I have no fault to find. All I have to say is that they have to answer to the country for this as for everything else. But I would point this out to the hon. gentleman as perfectly justifying the motion of my hon. friend at this moment. It is very true that a delegation came from Montreal two days ago to interview the Government on this question. That the answer which was given them was not satisfactory is shown by the fact that to-day there is another delegation from the city of Montreal to have this answer supplemented. If it had been satisfactory, if it had been definite, it would have been so understood, but, as my information goes, there was no certainty in it. The delegation could not make out whether it was fish or flesh, and therefore another delegation is here to-day, I understand, again to interview the Government on that same subject. Under the circumstances, I submit that my hon. friend, who, as a representative of Montreal, naturally has at heart everything that concerns the welfare of that city, was quite within his rights when he brought up this question in a very civil, temperate speech, which gave no occasion for sneers from anybody, much less the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. COCKBURN. I regret that the hon. member for Montreal Centre should take so much to heart the kindly advice given him by the Government and tendered to the Montreal delegation by the Government, to consult with the city of Toronto. I think the advice was but natural because the city of Toronto, some time ago, before any action had been taken by Montreal, had made advances to the Government and had asked for certain aid to the great international exhibition to be held in that great city of the west. My hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. McShane) may characterize Montreal as the greatest and grandest city on this continent or in the Dominion, but I can assure him that the people of Toronto consider that they have a city equally worthy of notice, equally worthy of rivalry in every respect with the city of Montreal. At any rate in matters of exhibition, they have for years shown themselves able to manage an exhibition second to none on this continent. And the advice was very natural that the Montreal delegation should go and consult those gentlemen from Toronto who know so well how to manage an exhibition. Let me tell the hon. member for Montreal West——

Mr. McSHANE. Montreal Centre.

Mr. COCKBURN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; there is indeed a great difference between the two members. Let me tell him that the great city of Toronto has managed its exhibition, and managed it super-excellently well, without going to Parliament with huge demonstrations, without making a political demonstration and a demand of $500,000 as the price of their allegiance. We have managed our exhibition through our own efforts, and it is only when we desire to extend it and make it worthy of the Dominion in every respect, it is only when we desire to bring in goods from Europe, Asia and America, and give it a great international character, that we in Toronto think it necessary to go to the Government and ask a small pittance—not $500,000 or anything of the kind, but just sufficient to balance the additional expenditure the city would have to undertake in order to have the exhibition of an international character which they contemplate to have in the year 1897. My hon. friend might call it a very miserable pittance. He says he is not here to ask simply for sympathy or recognition. I may tell him that all the city of Toronto asked for was the recognition of the Government. We have not asked for money. We were willing to leave that to the good sense of the House. It is a matter which must be discussed, and time has been so much wasted that it could not be brought up this session, but we asked the Government to recognize the great efforts being made for Canada by Toronto and to give us their countenance. And next year, when matters are quiet and this great party has returned with an overwhelming majority, we will be able to discuss matters quietly, and we shall come to you, not with any huge demonstration to force the hands of a Government supposed by some to be in extremes and demand a grant of $500,000, but simply to ask the Government to give what is fair and reasonable. It is not within the competence of the Government to make any such promise as the hon. gentleman requires. We are the people who hold the purse strings, and I think the demand made on the part of the delegates from Montreal, if they were actuated by the spirit in which the hon. gentleman says they were, is one which could not be considered. I think it would be an outrage on the liberties and privileges of the House if they had come here with any such intention as the hon. gentleman ascribes to them. I coincide fully with the views of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he tells us that he has a higher opinion of the gentlemen of Montreal than to imagine for one moment they were coming here entertaining such views as have been ascribed to them by the hon. member for Montreal Centre. I trust that this House will fully consider the position in which they are placed in reference to this matter and that no rash action will be taken. I have that confidence in the business men, both of Toronto and Montreal, to feel that they consider as wise the advice given by the hon. Minister, and that they should meet in council together with the representatives of the city of Toronto, and see if they could not determine to hold an exhibition in common—one that would not conflict with the other. I believe there is room for both. The exhibition in Toronto would be more representative of the large agricultural interests of every province while at the same time we intend to make it largely representative of the manufacturing products of the Dominion. At the same time, I can easily understand—the city of Montreal being divided as it is from the city of Toronto by some 330 miles—that there might possibly be room for both exhibitions, and that as we shall have the pleasure of the presence in 1897 of the British Association and various other organizations and literary societies, the fact of there being two exhibitions may tend perhaps to benefit Canada.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman propose to have two international exhibitions in the one year?

Mr. COCKBURN. I am not making any proposal with reference to two exhibitions, but I tell the hon. member for Queen's that I think it would be well for the two cities to see if together they could not organize some plan for holding one great international exhibition, and that apparently was the advice given those 300 or 400 gentlemen from Montreal as an advice that would be worthy of their consideration. I think that it was a very natural advice to give. A representation came from Toronto, not numbering 400 or 500, but composed of men who had devoted a large portion of their time to exhibition matters, to see what arrangements they could make with reference to holding an exhibition at Toronto. And I think it was natural, indeed it was but the act of a gentleman to tell these gentlemen that Toronto was beforehand with them, that they were already in a manner committed to Toronto, but it would give them great pleasure if the two parties could meet and bring before the Government some plan by which one exhibition, wherever held, would enable the Dominion to reap the full benefit of the outlay that the Government would make upon it. If such an organization could be effected, and I do not see why not, the forces could be united for the holding of an exhibition.

After Recess.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The reply of the Government to the delegates from Montreal was satisfactory in this way, that at least there is a hope held out in that answer. If

I understand that answer well, it means that the Government have come to the conclusion that they will have an interview with the committee of the international exhibition in Montreal, which committee will be here to-morrow, so as to give a more official and more satisfactory answer than was given on Saturday by the Ministers to the large delegation from Montreal. The delegation from the city of Montreal was not, I must say at once, a political delegation. It has been asserted here by hon. members of this House that the citizens of Montreal, to the number of 400, came up on Saturday to present a pistol at the Government's head unless the Government was ready to grant them all they thought right to ask in the interests of the city. That was far from being the spirit in which the delegation came here on Saturday. If you will refer to the speeches that were made on that occasion by members of the delegation, you will find that they one and all refer, not only to the interests of Montreal, in this matter, but generally to the interests of the Dominion. It was in that spirit that they came here to Ottawa. And why did they come? They came to make just and fair representations to the Government. This is the second delegation of the citizens of Montreal to interview the Government in relation to this important question, for a year ago a delegation, not so numerous, waited upon the Government and represented the case. The intention at that time was to have this international exhibition in 1896. For reasons that are well known to the citizens of Montreal and to the public, that idea could not be carried out. The interview with the Government at that time was not satisfactory enough to justify those who were ready to go into that scheme to subscribe the amount of money that was necessary. But it created a public spirit in Montreal, and it convinced the citizens that if they were to organize properly, if they showed that they were ready to put their hands into their own pockets and provide, say half a million dollars, they could, as good citizens, come before the Dominion Government and reasonably ask for their co-operation. That is what they did, and I think there is no reason to find fault with them for having done so. If some of those who came to interview the Government were not quite satisfied with the answers given to the deputation, that is not a difficult matter to explain. The answers of the Ministers were not, I must say, wholly satisfactory; they were non-committal. As for myself, personally, so far as the answers went, as I said to the newspaper reporters, I was perfectly satisfied. But, of course, you cannot prevent people from thinking that, coming in such numbers, and representing, as they did, the wealthiest people of Montreal, and the business people of Montreal, the Government should have acceded at once to the request that was made. If some of them think that, there is no reason to reproach them for it. I am sorry to be obliged to say that the answer made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) to the remarks of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. McShane), as well as to the remarks made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) seemed to be made not quite in the spirit in which they should have been. This is probably due to misunderstanding. But if all the facts are put before the House and before the country, I am sure that this matter will be considered by the Government to be as important as it has been considered by the citizens of Montreal. The memorandum that was laid before the Government by his worship the mayor of Montreal on Saturday, reads as follows—and you will see that it contains nothing except what is designed for the best interests of the citizens of the whole Dominion :

> The first of July, 1897, will be the 30th anniversary of the Royal Proclamation, binding together in one grand federation the several provinces of British North America, now extending from ocean to ocean across the American continent.
> During this eventful period of our national life, the Dominion of Canada has marvellously progressed in the development of the immense resources of its extensive territory.
> In every branch of our agricultural and manufacturing industries, extension of trade and commerce, scientific and educational attainment, philanthropic and religious institutions, Canada has obtained a most prominent position, and is now prepared to invite the nations of the world to visit our shores, and take part in the development of our future greatness.
> We have arrived at that point in our national existence when we are obliged to compete with rival nations in foreign markets, and no better or more practical method can be devised of showing to advantage the eminence we have attained, than by inviting foreign countries to participate in a grand display of the products of all nations in the commercial metropolis of Canada.
> With ocean navigation at our port, a fast Atlantic steamship service appearing in sight, the enlargement of our canals, railway communication from every point on the continent, extensive grounds picturesquely located on the side of Mount Royal, a most hospitable and cosmopolitan population of three hundred thousand (300,000) progressive people, the seat of the greatest financial, educational, railway, transportation, manufacturing, commercial, scientific, philanthropic, and religious institutions in the country, the city of Montreal is pre-eminently endowed with all the requirements necessary to assure the greatest possible success of the proposed international exhibition.
> The Canadian sections must necessarily be the main feature of the undertaking, each province being expected to show to the best advantage its special productions. Through the friendly rivalry thus created between the sister provinces, the home collections, no doubt, will be a revelation, not only to foreign visitors, but also to our own population, the majority of whom are unaware of the immense progress that has been made in the various departments of industry and agriculture in Canada.

Every nation, with which we have commercial relations, and more particularly Great Britain and her colonies, will be sure to make their respective departments as complete and attractive as possible. Montreal is the geographical centre for some fifteen millions of people, and a large attendance may confidently be relied upon. Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Detroit, and other large cities, are only a few hours' ride from Montreal,—cities possessed of the largest purchasing power on the continent of America.

To carry out this national undertaking will entail a large expenditure of money during the years of 1896-97. Several extensive buildings will be required for both the Canadian and foreign sections. The grounds will have to be enlarged and suitably ornamented ; hotel accommodation must be increased, extra boats and cars will be required, workshops will supply building materials, and manufactories begin to prepare their exhibits and installation ; in fact, from ocean to ocean, the whole country will be awakened, and will resound with the busy preparations for Canada's international exhibition.

At this period when depression in trade has been almost universal and few countries have weathered the storm more successfully than Canada, no more practical nor opportune occasion than an international exhibition could be devised to bring Canada and her resources prominently before the world and thus contribute to the general prosperity of the Dominion. The experience of other countries proves that successful international exhibitions have always been accompanied and followed by an immediate revival of profitable business ; extensive orders, which provide employment for years afterwards, are the necessary result, and new avenues of trade are opened up for the products of the country ; while, with each visitor, capital is brought to the country from every part of the world. The Dominion of Canada, with its products and resources, will be extensively advertised, capitalists will invest in the country and enterprising immigrants will be induced to settle in the fertile plains of our western provinces, and assist in developing the vast mineral wealth of the country.

At this very moment, when the British Colonial Secretary manifests such deep interest in the welfare of the colonies and their possible closer relations with the mother country, the time seems specially opportune for this Dominion to demonstrate its ability to supply Great Britain with the necessaries of life and many of the raw materials so essential to her manufacturing interests.

Thirty-six years ago, His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, visited Canada with the object of inaugurating the Victoria Bridge. Would it not be possible for His Royal Highness to be induced to visit once more this Dominion to inaugurate the Canadian international exhibition, and place it under his august patronage ? The presence of His Royal Highness in Canada would be the occasion of the most enthusiastic and hearty demonstration of loyalty and devotion to the future ruler of the British Empire.

Montreal is willing to assume its full share of the financial responsibility of this great undertaking, but we do earnestly appeal to the Hon. Premier and the Dominion Government to view this our request for substantial support and official endorsation on the broad basis of national advancement which the Canadian international exhibition is bound to secure ; the desirability of promoting the general prosperity of the Dominion ; and last, but not least, the potent consequences which our national display may have on the future relations of the Dominion of Canada with the mother country and other portions of the British Empire.

On behalf of the Citizens' Committee,

R. WILSON-SMITH,
Mayor.

Montreal, 16th April, 1896.

This was accompanied by another memorial, signed, not only by the Mayor of Montreal, but also by the President of the Board of Trade and the President of the Chambre de Commerce, two bodies, composed of the best people of the city of Montreal. This memorial also makes no allusion whatever to sectional or political considerations ; on the contrary, it again repeats substantially the arguments of the first one, that is to say, that the citizens of Montreal came here as representing the best interests of the Dominion of Canada. I shall have to ask the indulgence of the House while I read this memorial also :

That the summer of 1897 is deemed an opportune time for holding in Montreal a great Canadian international exhibition ;

That the Dominion of Canada, in common with all other countries, although to a lesser extent, has been passing through a period of great commercial and industrial depression, and that it is eminently desirable that exceptional efforts should be made to give an impetus to the trade and commerce of the country ;

That the decision to hold a great Canadian international exhibition in the year 1897 would have an immediate and most beneficial effect upon the business of the Dominion ;

That the enterprise would afford immediate employment to many mechanics and artisans who are much in need of employment, not only in the work of preparation for the exhibition itself, but in the preparation of numerous private enterprises which the project would bring into existence throughout the whole Dominion ;

That, apart from all considerations of merely local and temporary advantage, it is high time to bring the great agricultural, manufacturing, mining and fishery resources of the Dominion conspicuously before the notice of the civilized world, in order to attract capital for the full development of those resources, and to bring about that great increase in immigration, which is essential to the general prosperity of the country ;

That the Canadian international exhibition, if held next year, would be the only great international exhibition to be held during that year, and that, if this opportunity is allowed to pass by, it will probably be many years before an international exhibition can be held in Canada so free from foreign competition ;

That much interest has lately been aroused among European exhibitors in Montreal as a suitable field for exhibition purposes, and that the undersigned have every confidence in being able to obtain the most cordial support from foreign governments and exhibitors ;

> That it is desirable that the proposed exhibition should be held upon a scale never before attempted in a British colony ;
> That all classes of the community of Montreal are taking a lively interest in the project and are prepared to do their share in assisting it by their money and their labour ;
> That the Imperial Government, the various provincial governments and the governments of foreign countries will form their estimate of the importance of the Canadian international exhibition from the importance that appears to be attached to the enterprise by the Dominion Government ;
> That, if the enterprise is granted the cordial endorsation and generous financial support of the Dominion Government, the citizens of Montreal are prepared by the extent of their subscriptions to give ample financial guarantees that the enterprise shall not fail for want of financial support or active promotion ;
> That the Government may reasonably expect to be directly recouped to a large extent for any expenditure it may incur by the receipt of customs duties upon articles imported for exhibition and afterwards entered for consumption ;
> Therefore, the undersigned respectfully ask the Government to give the proposed Canadian international exhibition its official sanction and financial assistance to the extent of $500,000, the whole to be upon the condition that at least an equal amount be contributed by Montreal citizens and from other sources .
> It is also understood that any profit or surplus remaining at the close of the exhibition, after the repayment of the preference stock, shall be devoted to such national object in Canada as may be decided upon by the executive committee of the exhibition.
> It is also the desire of the undersigned that the Dominion Government should have full representation upon the board of management and direction.

The Mayor of Montreal supplemented these two documents by some remarks that were entirely in accord with their contents, making, I repeat, no sectional appeal whatever, but treating the subject from a Dominion standpoint entirely. Now, as I have just said, this project has the unanimous support of the citizens of Montreal without distinction of political party ; and the delegation that came here was composed, mostly—I may say without fear of contradiction—of citizens having the same political faith as the present Government. Therefore it cannot be even suspected that this delegation came here for the purpose of bringing any political pressure to bear upon the Government to make this grant on the eve of an election ; on the contrary, the scheme was put plainly before the Government as a national enterprise, and in that spirit it must be treated. Let me also read an article from the daily "Star," of 17th April, 1896 :

> To-morrow a large and influential deputation of Montreal citizens will wait upon the Dominion Government to ask official recognition and suitable financial assistance for a great international exhibition to be held in Montreal next year. There have been exhibitions in Canada before, and some fairly good ones, but there has never been held in Canada a really great exhibition. Canada is rich in natural resources ; in the Dominion there is practically unlimited scope for the investment of capital and the employment of labour. What the country needs is to impress upon the world that this is a country of magnificent opportunities. A great international exhibition would do much to develop our trade relations, to attract the right class of immigrants and to encourage judicious investment of capital. There never was a time when an international exhibition was so badly needed in Canada. The need of some such stimulus to our trade is evident. In common with other countries we have passed through a period of great depression, and although we have less disasters to chronicle than some of our neighbours, we have not escaped unscathed. To many of our people, the decision to hold or not to hold an exhibition next year is a matter of vital consequence, and they are awaiting the settlement of the question with great anxiety.
> That Montreal is the place in which to hold Canada's first great international exhibition we hope will not be difficult to establish. Being the commercial metropolis of the Dominion, at the head of ocean navigation, the centre of a magnificent railway system, the one city in which the two great races which form the bulk of the population of Canada are found in great number, possessing all the facilities for entertaining a host of visitors. Montreal is an ideal spot for an exhibition. Not the least reason for holding an exhibition here next year is that our people have made up their minds that they want one, and are prepared to pay handsomely for one. The fact that the Government has not been in the habit of paying much attention to petitions emanating from Montreal in the past will not, we trust, be followed as a precedent on this occasion. By every consideration of justice to Montreal, and of the interests of the Dominion as a whole, it is to be hoped that the Government will see its way clear to do the handsome thing to the Montreal delegation, and come down handsomely.

Any one reading these quotations from papers favourable to the Government will understand that this deputation did not come here with the objects represented a few moments ago by an hon. member who addressed this House. Some of the delegation explained earnestly what the delegation wanted, and they expected a clear and concise answer. They did not get it, and the course of the discussion was subsequently continued among the citizens and in the press. Yesterday in the Montreal city council, a motion was proposed by Ald. Rainville, seconded by Ald. Atwater —who is a good friend of the present Government—endorsing the action taken by the delegation, in the following terms :—

> That this council cordially approves of the project of holding a Canadian international exhibition in Montreal in 1897, and earnestly desires that the Dominion Government will give the enterprise its hearty co-operation and generous financial support, and, furthermore, this council hereby endorses the memorial presented to the Government by the delegation of Montreal citizens and others on last Saturday, the 18th instant.
> We realize the far-reaching benefits which will accrue to the trade and commerce of Montreal as well as the Dominion at large, by the hold> ing of such an exhibition, and we believe that the time suggested is most appropriate, and we earnestly pray that the Government will unhesitatingly accord prompt support in every respect.

> This motion was carried unanimously with the understanding that it will immediately be telegraphed to Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

If to-day a second deputation has to come to Ottawa, it has come with this resolution in hand, and with the determination of having a clear and precise understanding on the matter, and it is only fair and just that it should be so. We are on the eve of prorogation, and if something is to be done, the citizens of Montreal are entitled to know it. If the answer given by the Minister of Finance means anything, it means this, that to-morrow some members of the Government will meet the deputation from Montreal, which is more of a committee than a deputation, headed by the mayor of Montreal, and come to some satisfactory arrangement by which this demand of the citizens will be granted. There was a remark made during this discussion that this exhibition would clash with the Toronto exhibition, and that we should first agree with Toronto about holding the proposed international exhibition in 1897. I understand that the mayor of Montreal has met representatives of Toronto, and it was discovered that the Toronto exhibition, although possessing great importance, would be only an exhibition of agricultural produce.

Mr. COATSWORTH. No, not at all.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). We shall have a Midway Plaisance.

Mr. FOSTER. An Egyptian mummy.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If this is to be a Dominion exhibition, there can be no objection to holding it the same year as the international exhibition. I understand this Dominion agricultural exhibition will last three or four weeks. The committee of the international exhibition at Montreal do not intend to have an agricultural exhibition in connection with the international exhibition and instead of injuring Toronto the international exhibition will help it, because after the exhibition in Toronto is over there is no reason, if the committee of the international exhibition makes the necessary arrangements, why the agricultural exhibits should not be also shown at the International Exhibition during a period of two or three weeks, which would be of advantage to exhibitors. I see no objection to such an arrangement, and no objection has been taken by our citizens, after discussion of the whole subject. It is only a question as to arriving at an understanding as to the date on which the Dominion agricultural exhibition will be held in Toronto, and to have that matter settled. If a spirit of jealousy is shown between the two cities, both exhibitions will be injured. I observe a despatch published in the Toronto "World" on the subject of the international exhibition, and if the spirit shown in the telegraphic despatch should be continued and the spirit of jealousy fostered between the two cities, I repeat that injury will be done to both exhibitions, and no one will be benefited. The despatch to which I allude is headed :

> After Dominion Money—Montreal sends 400 Citizens to Ottawa—Half a Million Wanted—Nothing Small About the Commercial Capital—Features—Speeches in Aid of the Startling Appeal.

The despatch goes on to say :

> Ottawa, April 18.—(Special.)—The deadhead delegation from Montreal, which is trying to squeeze half a million dollars from the Government for exhibition purposes, struck town this afternoon. It was large in numbers and eminently respectable in appearance. Under the inducements held out of free transportation over either line of railway, who would forego the temptation of a pleasant holiday jaunt to the capital on a bright spring day, with prospects of seeing and hearing the leading gladiators in the parliamentary arena and the possibility of securing a big pot of money for their beloved city ?

This language is used in regard to a most important deputation. Another paper has treated the deputation in about the same way, and its article is reproduced in the Toronto "World" to-day, the paper to which I allude being the Hamilton "Spectator." Speaking on behalf of the citizens of Montreal, and as a citizen, I think I may say that we entertain no jealousy whatever towards Toronto, and if Toronto can get from the Dominion $50,000 or $100,000——

Mr. MACLEAN (York). $500,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We have no objection. On the contrary, we will try and help Toronto to get it. If the people of Toronto had come to Ottawa and asked a grant which would be justifiable and reasonable, for an international exhibition, we would not for a moment have opposed that delegation, and Montreal should be treated by the Toronto "World" and the other newspapers in the same spirit. But, of course, these things I suppose cannot be helped, and we have got to stand it. But if we have to stand it we have also the right to put the facts as they should be, and as they are, before the House and before the country. Although there may be some dissatisfaction amongst those who composed the deputation, I am sure, —as has been stated publicly—that the citizens of Montreal are so in earnest about this project, that they are bound to carry it out. Of course, they must first have the official endorsation of the Dominion Government, and they must also have that financial support which the Government has always extended to such an exhibition in every country of the world. The project has originated in Montreal, and everybody admits that it is the best centre in which to hold an international exhibition. I do not see why, therefore, because it is the city of Montreal, that Montreal should not get fair support and fair treatment. I have stated, and I repeat it, that we do not intend—it is far from the idea of any member of the delegation, and it is far from my thoughts also—to make any political capital out of this question. It is a question upon which we must all be united. If it is a good thing, and if it is in the interests of the Dominion, there is no reason why we should not agree about it, and why we should not be treated on a fair basis, and treated on a business-like principle.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Coming as I do from a city that believes in exhibitions, I am very glad to have heard the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Préfontaine). We have had in Toronto for a great many years one of the most successful annual exhibitions that is held on the continent of America. About five or six years ago, the plan was first proposed to hold, next year, a Dominion exhibition, and during the years that have intervened, the matter has been developed from time to time. I think it was in 1893 that Sir John Thompson, then the Premier of the Dominion, opened the Toronto exhibition, and the proposition was made to him at that time, that we should hold a Dominion exhibition. I am glad to say it was very favourably received by him and by the members of the Government who were then present at the exhibition. Since then the preparations for the Dominion exhibition have been going on, our buildings and grounds have been enlarged, and I think I may say without boasting, that we have one of the finest exhibition grounds that can be found on this continent; fronting as it does on Lake Ontario, approachable by the steamers and by the railways, which run to the gates, and approachable from all the hotels in the city by the trolley cars, which also run to the gates. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine) did not intend to belittle our exhibition in any way, when he said he understood it was to be an agricultural exhibition. I wish to assure my hon. friend and to assure the House, that it is not in any sense confined to being an agricultural exhibition, but it is an exhibition of all the arts and manufactures and products of this Dominion. As such we intend to hold a Dominion exhibition in 1897; that is, if we can secure, as we have some reason to expect, the endorsation of the Dominion Government and such aid from them as may be necessary.

Mr. CASEY. How much do you want them to endorse for?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). $100,000.

Mr. LISTER. You only asked $50,000 a week ago.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). We will take $100,000 if Montreal wants $500,000.

Mr. LISTER. You asked $50,000 a short time ago.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Have I said anything else.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman beside you (Mr. Maclean) did.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon. gentleman beside me is not speaking. A statement was laid before the Government the other day by a deputation from the Toronto city council and from the Toronto Exhibition Association. Of course, I do not wish to reflect on the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine), but if the magnitude and respectability of a deputation is to count for anything, then we can get from Toronto as large and respectable a deputation as the Government may wish. I think that for three or four years past, a deputation has each year waited upon the Government from Toronto with regard to the Dominion Exhibition. It has been fixed for the year 1897, now for several years, largely with the historic idea in view, because it was about the year 1797 that General Simcoe first came to Toronto, or York, as it was then called. It is far from our desire that there should be any conflict about this matter. We have no desire to come into collision with the sister city. It is a larger city than ours—although we think not very much larger—and is most highly respected by all the commercial people of the Dominion. But we have been first on the ground, and we think that will entitle us to a great deal of consideration from the Government. I am sure that that fact will also receive due consideration from the gentlemen who are supporting the international exhibition in Montreal. It appears to me, however, that if the parties who are interested in both cities were to get together they would be able to determine very soon whether or not the two exhibitions are going to clash with each other. Of course, if they do not, some arrangement ought to be made, and there would be no reason why both should not go on. The exhibition at Toronto at the present time is generally held for about two weeks in the early part of September—from the 5th or 6th of September until about the 20th. If I remember aright, the proposition is to hold the Dominion exhibition in Toronto next year for a couple of months. I do not know to what extent that will fall in with the plans of the citizens of Montreal for their international exhibition. I can assure my hon. friend that so far as we are concerned, and so far as it lies in our power, we shall most heartily work in with them, and shall do our utmost to make their exhibition a success. I did hope when I first heard of it, that the Montreal people would put their exhibition a year later. I did hope, as we had been on the ground for some years promoting the Dominion exhibition, that they would have felt it to be wiser to delay their international exhibition for another year, as it would seem possible that there might be some collision between the two. However, no doubt the citizens of Montreal have considered that, and considered it not only in their own interests, but in the light of that courtesy which we in Toronto have always received from them. While we will not relax our efforts in the interests of our Dominion exhibition in Toronto, I feel no doubt in my own mind that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) and the citizens of Montreal, will take such steps as will prevent any possibile collision between the two exhibitions next year.

Sir JAMES GRANT. I have listened with interest to the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Préfontaine) on the subject of the international exhibition, and I have also listened with interest to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) with reference to the Toronto exhibition. I was, however, amazed to find that neither of these gentleman made any reference whatever to the great exhibition which we are holding here annually at the capital. Exhibitions of a national character require to be centralized. In the years when a great exhibition was held in London, there was but one exhibition, and the same was the case with the Paris exhibition, and with that held in Chicago two years ago; and if there is to be an international exhibition held in Canada, it is high time that the various cities should appoint delegates to meet together and co-operate so as to have one exhibition for the Dominion of Canada, such as will have a world-wide reputation. We know that there is nothing so well calculated to establish the reputation of a country as an exhibition of its products. It is amazing what has been done in the city of Toronto in the last few years in that line, as was pointed out to us this afternoon; the exhibition held at Regina last summer was a marvellous illustration of the growth of the North-west country; the people of the metropolitan city of Montreal have great reason to feel pride and satisfaction in what they have accomplished in their annual exhibition; and the same is true of those held in the maritime provinces. We have but one aim and object in view in these various exhibitions, and that is the advancement of the material prosperity of our people, and the desire to place on record what our people are able to exhibit of our products. How is this best to be accomplished? Is it by an annual exhibition at any one of the great centres? No; there requires to be, not a division of labour, but a unity of labour, and a unity of design in all portions of Canada. We should centralize our efforts. I was amazed this afternoon to hear the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. McShane) speak as if the Government had actually done nothing for that city. What has the Pacific Railway done for it, and is not the construction of that great work due to the Conservative party? Where would the development of Montreal be to-day but for the Pacific Railway, and the deepening of the St. Lawrence, both of which works are due to the Conservative party? There is no city of Canada to-day which has derived greater benefit from the Conservative party than the city of Montreal; and when, forsooth, a junior member for that city finds his way here and tells us that the Government of Canada have done nothing for Montreal, it is high time he should be made aware of the fact that no Government has ever done more for the advancement of the material interests of that city than the very Conservative Government in which we have so much pride and satisfaction to-day. With reference to the city of Ottawa, let me say that if anybody has the slightest doubt of the progress and development of this portion of Canada, I would strongly recommend him to see our annual exhibition. We are expending on that exhibition this year no less than $40,000, and we are not asking the Government of Canada for one dollar. But I have this to say, that if Montreal and Toronto are to receive large sums of money from the Government for their exhibitions, why should not the capital of Canada? We desire to co-operate with you, and if you accept my idea, rely upon it, you shall have the efforts of the people of the capital to assist the province of Quebec in promoting that great exhibition. I have very little more to say; but I am pleased beyond measure that the people of Montreal have taken into their serious consideration the desirability of promoting a great international exhibition, because I think the day has arrived when Canada can afford to do something in this direction, and whatever is done, let there be unity of endeavour from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. LEPINE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I coincide fully with the views of the hon. members who preceded me, in connection with the international exhibition which is to be held in Montreal. It is a most important national undertaking, which is entitled not only to the recognition and official sanction of the Dominion Government, but also to the cordial support of every hon. member of this House. For this undertaking is not exclusively in the interest of the city of Montreal, but is bound to have an immediate and most beneficial effect upon the interests of the whole Dominion. An international exhibition will enable the various provinces of the Dominion to extensively advertise and bring their resources prominently before the world, and show the immense progress that has been made in the various departments of industry and agriculture in Canada. The interests of the whole Dominion will be benefited by it. Therefore, from every standpoint, this scheme is of the utmost importance to the country. The numerous delegation which came up from Montreal on Saturday last, being composed of representative men in the world of finance and in the higher branches of trade and industry, have perfectly well laid before the Government the advantages that would accrue to the country from the holding of an international exhibition in Montreal. I doubt not but that the Government will do what is fair and just by the citizens of Montreal and what is most conducive to the general interests of the Dominion, in providing the necessary means to carry out such an important undertaking. I shall not go, Sir, into all the details of this question, as the subject has already been fully dealt with by the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Préfontaine), who has pointed out the benefits which will result from the enterprise being carried out to a successful issue. But, before resuming my seat, I may be allowed, Sir, to recall to the remembrance of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. McShane) the fact that whenever a question involving the interests of Montreal is brought up, he is not the only representative of that city to rise in this House and champion the interests of his constituents. I think the hon. member, instead of indulging in the remarks he has made this afternoon, would have acted much better in joining with the delegation from the city of Montreal when they waited upon the Government on Saturday last. This afternoon another delegation also interviewed the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) and the Minister of Militia (Mr. Desjardins), with a view to coming to an understanding about that undertaking, and to ask for certain aid to the international exhibition. That delegation was most cordially welcomed by the hon. Ministers, and I even believe that the members of that delegation are now satisfied that the Government are going to acquiesce in their request. I earnestly hope, together with the hon. members who preceded me, that the Government will see their way to grant without delay the financial assistance asked for by the delegation.

Mr. SPROULE. As a western man, I can heartily agree with a great deal of what is contained in the prospectus of this international exhibition. There is no doubt of the great benefits that would accrue to the country from the holding of such an exhibition. In this connection, I was struck with the extreme modesty of the request that came from the city of Montreal for a grant of $500,000. They might as well have asked for a million. The amount is generally two millions when we are required to put our hands into our pockets to make a grant for the city of Montreal; so that this is a very modest request on their part. But what I wish to say is this. If the money is to be spent to the best advantage, and so as to bring about the best results to the country at large, the exhibition should be held in Toronto instead of Montreal. For years, one of the best exhibitions on the continent of America has been held in Toronto, and the company that have managed and developed that exhibition from year to year for the last ten or twelve years, have shown their ability to design and carry out a great undertaking such as is proposed much more successfully than the people of Montreal have ever done. If you gave to the managers of that exhibition half the money asked for by Montreal, you would have double the benefits accruing from such an exhibition; because they have already spent large sums of money for exhibition purposes in Toronto, and they have now at their disposal extensive grounds and large and commodious buildings, besides having the advantage of all the advertising that has been done, from year to year, in bringing that exhibition before the world. Therefore, I hold that if such an exhibition is to take place, it ought to be held in the city of Toronto. I feel no jealousy whatever of the city of Montreal. It is a very fine city and a very important one; but if such an exhibition is held, it ought to be held in the most central and convenient place, which would be accessible both by rail and by water, and which has the greatest advantages for making the exhibition a success. These, I think, everybody will admit the city of Toronto has. There is no doubt that half the work is already done in Toronto that would be required to be done for a great exhibition; and I venture to say that $500,000 would go twice or three times as far there as the same amount of money spent in the city of Montreal. Therefore, if the Government contemplate making any such grant, as I trust they will at some time in the future, though I question whether 1897 will leave sufficient time for preparation, I hope they will decide to give it to the city of Toronto, which has shown its ability to manage such a gigantic affair as a great international exhibition, and in such a way as to extend to the reputation of Canada, more successfully than the city of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prevent any hon. gentleman from speaking, but I hope all will be as brief as possible. It is now nine o'clock, and for all the business we have only a few hours left, and there is yet to come before the House some very important business, which ought not to be thrown over, even by the discussion of such an important matter as an international exhibition, which is to take place in 1897.

Mr. CASEY. I do not intend to occupy much time; but it seems to me that the proper thing for any one who represents a metropolis is to try and get the next grant for an exhibition. I can say, like the members from the city of Toronto, that there is, in my constituency an exhibition that has gone on for many years with ever-increasing success. It is held, as no doubt many members of this House are aware, in Wallacetown, and its success is proverbial throughout Canada. It would, perhaps, be premature for me to ask for a grant for the next year; but, as the hon. member for Ottawa (Sir James Grant), in addition to others, has been asking for a grant, I think it would be proper that the claims of this great fair in my county should be placed before the House.

These delegates who have come down here to see about subsidies appear to have been labouring under a slight mistake. It would almost appear as if they thought that the present controllers of the purse were to be permanently in that position, and that all that was required in order to get a grant was to have the promise of the existing Government. I think it would have been wise for them to have explained the claims of their different exhibitions more fully to hon. gentlemen on this side, but not a single one of those deputations, that I am aware of, approached the Opposition with regard to these matters.

The two cities of Toronto and Montreal seem to have different views. Montreal is voiced by our active friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. McShane) who was the first to take up the cudgels and who calls for the hard cash. Toronto is more credulous, and asks by the mouth of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) only for the countenance of the Government. It is true that the hon. member for Toronto East (Mr. Coatsworth) went a step further and wanted the endorsation of the Government. When I asked him how much they wanted the Government endorsation for, his honourable friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) replied $100,000. I am far from certain that the Government's endorsation is worth any such sum. If they happened to have the cash about them, it would be all right, but I do not know, under existing circumstances, that their endorsation would be good for very much. I do not know how much their countenance would amount to although they have a certain amount of cheek, and I do not know how much their promise to the city of Montreal would be worth.

They are giving vague election promises all round. Of course this dedesired countenance asked for by the hon. member for Centre Toronto can only mean that a grant is to be required at some future period. I am not saying anything for or against the grant. It is a thing that we should properly consider when asked for a definite sum, but the people of Toronto need not imagine that, when the Government grant their countenance and endorsation, it is really giving any valuable asset towards holding the great proposed fair. I would ask the hon. members for Montreal to remember that promises come very free at election time, especially under circumstances such as these, when it seems very unlikly that the Government would have time to get all their estimates, at least, through this House, and very unlikely therefore that the claims of Montreal can be put on any solid basis before the end of the session. Let the people, both of Montreal and Toronto, remember that they are only getting vague generalities and nebulous promises.

The only other point I need refer to is the absurdity of having two such exhibitions in the one year. Of course it cannot rationally be intended by anybody to have the two in the same year, and I must go this far with the views tendered by the hon. Minister of Finance to the people of Montreal, that they should consult the people of Toronto about this exhibition. I will go further and say it is the duty of the Government to make up their own minds, as a Government, where the exhibition ought to be held in 1897, and not hold out false hopes that it may be held in two or three places at the same time in the same year. It is meant of course as a bid for the elections to hold out vague hopes of its being held in various places. But if it should be in their hands, at some future day, to grant aid for exhibition purposes, let the Government take care not to repeat the mistake they made at the Regina exhibition of putting the money in the hands of irresponsible individuals to spend. Let it be put in the hands of the responsible manager of the institution or of some responsible officer whom we can hold to strict account.

Mr. McSHANE. I was very glad indeed to hear the moderate way in which this question was discussed by the hon. member for Toronto. His remarks were very moderate and reasonable, and I wish to remove the false impression under which the member for Centre Toronto seems to labour with regard to my feelings for the great city he represents. He certainly misunderstood my remarks, because I have no other feeling towards Toronto but one of kindness. I have had the pleasure of twice visiting the great fair held in Toronto, and I have always found its people most hospitable and their fairs very successful, and would reflect credit on my country, and have always so expressed myself both in that city and elsewhere. And I can assure the hon. members for the city of Toronto that there are none who rejoice more in the prosperity and progress of that city and of the people of the West generally than the people in the province of Quebec. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) may understand the views and feelings of the people of Sherbrooke, but I take issue with him when he poses as the exponent of the opinions and desires of the people of the city of Montreal. And I may add that there is a feeling and one for him of bitter memory which is not likely to fade from the minds of hundreds of labouring men in Montreal and elsewhere, and that is connected with the construction of the Hereford Railway. I represent the city of Montreal, and the people there know me too well to take any account of the unkind remarks the hon. gentleman has made and the unjust motives with which he has charged me and which he pretends I have given expression to. I deny the right of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to impose himself on this House as voicing the sentiments and feelings of the people of Montreal; and if I thought it worth my while, I could tell the hon. gentleman something which perhaps he would feel ashamed of. But I tell him here that the people of Montreal want none of his dictation, that they will not be led by him, and that however he may lead and gull the people he represents, he cannot lead and gull the citizens of Montreal.

Motion (Mr. McShane) to adjourn, negatived.

FIRST READING.

DEFENCE OF THE DOMINION.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 2230) respecting the Defence of the Dominion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman propose to make his explanation when the Speaker is in the Chair ?

Mr. FOSTER. I can give now a short resume of what is intended. The resolution speaks for itself, Mr. Speaker, and moreover the proposal has been discussed to a certain extent in this House. Hon. members are quite well aware of the circumstances out of which the proposing of this resolution arose. It was felt by the Government, and I think it is a general feeling throughout the country—I am quite sure it is the unanimous feeling of men of military instincts—that there is a necessity for placing the militia of this country, so far as arms and equipment for the defence of the country are concerned in a better position than they have been in. First, as regards arms, a rifle for the individual volunteer, and, in the second place another indispensible part in the defensive armament, the field guns, which will form a second account in the investment that is to be made from the money which it is proposed to ask Parliament to authorize us to raise. Then there is, along with both of these features of the armament the general equipment and accoutrements which go with them and which require no explanation at my hands. There is also the ammunition which is used by each of these divisions of the armament and which must be supplied in fairly adequate quantity so as to furnish the motive power for the armament intended for the use of our volunteers. This, together with some rapid firing guns, make up, in fact, all that is at present engaging the attention of the Militia Department and the Government. The kind of rifle gave rise to a good deal of discussion in the press of the country and among military men and a great deal of care was bestowed upon it. The Government had but one desire and that was, irrespective of a slight or even a considerable difference of the cost, to put into the hands of the Canadian volunteer what was considered to be the most approved rifle. Opinions may differ as to whether a single rifle or a magazine rifle is better. Our militia authorities were in close touch with those military authorities in Great Britain, and, as the result of very careful investigation and communication with the highest authorities the Government has decided to purchase the Lee-Enfield rifle. This is a new magazine rifle, which, I believe, is now being manufactured and which will be placed in the hands of their own soldiers by the British Government, and is considered by the war authorities there as being the best rifle that is now in sight. Basing its action on the circumstances out of which this resolution has arisen and the sympathies of Parliament and the evident wishes of the country, the Government lost no time in undertaking to have these armaments made ready for use in Canada and they have placed orders in Great Britain for a supply. They have ordered 40,000 of the Lee-Enfield rifles and 2,300 of the Lee-Enfield magazine carbines for the cavalry. Then there are to be four batteries of 12-pounder guns complete with an adequate amount of the best present known ammunition. These, with all that belongs to them, all that is necessary for their complete equipment, will cost about $1,800,000 or $1,900,000, or say, $2,000,000 of the sum we are asking the House to vote. Our military authorities here and those with whom they have consulted consider that this equipment will be of the most excellent equipment in every way and thoroughly up to date, if one may use that expression with reference to it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How many field guns altogether ?

Mr. FOSTER. There are four batteries of six guns to a battery. Our authorities consider these to be sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What did they cost ?

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman wish me to go into details now. I think that that would be scarcely necessary. I say that we are getting these arms with ammunition at the very best prices. I have the statement of what they will cost here, but probably it will be better to take that up in committee. One point I wish to emphasize and that is that in order to get these at the smallest cost we have undertaken to pay for them very promptly, and our engagement necessitates the payment of £100,000 in April, and a little more than that in the latter part of June.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). From whom are they bought ?

Mr. FOSTER. They are bought from the War Office in Great Britain, and the payments are to be made to the War Office. All will be delivered by the middle or at least by the end of October of the present year. With reference to the other $1,000,000 which has not yet been appropriated, the Government, frankly speaking, wishes to have the loan of $3,000,000. It will depend upon circumstances and partly also upon what may be considered best by the authorities here and at home in close conference and communication with each other, as to whether that shall be spent at some near time in the future and as to how it may be spent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is the whole liability incurred to the War Office ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, $1,844,000, I think.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be as well that the hon. gentleman should give us some more details. As I understand his proposition, it is to supply sufficient arms and accoutrements for 40,000 men. He might give us a little more details as to the cost of the rifles and ammunition separately, and also as to the cost of the artillery and the ammunition provided for it. So far as I understand him, the $2,000,000 of which he spoke will be consumed in providing for 40,000 stand of arms, and in providing twenty-four guns.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would also like to know if I understood the Minister correctly to say that our liability for this $1,800,000 is entirely with the War Department, and not with any private contractor.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The money is paid by us to the department ?

Mr. FOSTER. Everything goes through them. We deal with the War Office directly, and no one else. I may say that they are given at cost, and we give a commission of 5 per cent for inspection, and the like of that, all paid to the War Department. I think the rifles are given to us at cost. I think it is the general practice carried out by the War Office that they supply from their own factories a certain proportion, and they get the rest of the supplies through the trade. They are carrying out that plan in supplying us ; so that although we deal simply with the War Office alone, our purchases are divided into two parts, those which are furnished directly by the War Office from the Government factories, and those that are furnished to us by the War Office through the trade, that is, not the Government factories, but the makers of war material outside the Government factories. Now, the rifles cost from the trade £4 sterling ; the bayonets and scabbards are 13s. 6d. ; carbines, 2,300, cost £8,000. Those are factory supplies. The rifles from the Government factories are supplied at £3 10s.

Mr. MULOCK. What rifles are they ?

Mr. FOSTER. The Lee-Enfield. As I said before, everything is inspected and approved by the inspectors of the War Office, and for that inspection a charge of 5 per cent is made. Then there is the ammunition, eighteen million rounds "303" ball cordite, costing £76,000, that is from the Government factory ; 9,000 rounds "303," dummy drill, £50 ; army chests, £3,550 ; ammunition boxes, £6,400 ; four batteries 12-pounder guns, £24,000 ; 12,000 rounds of gun ammunition, £12,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How many of these are supplied from the War Office factories ?

Mr. FOSTER. 21,150 rifles are supplied through the trade at £4 each, and 18,850 Lee-Enfields and 2,300 carbines from the factories. 20,000 bayonets and scabbards are supplied by each.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the sum total altogether ? I do not make it quite as much as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. The sum total of those I have read amounts to £325,000, or a little over $1,500,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is only just about one-half the three millions.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I have only read for the rifles, the four batteries and their supply, and the bayonets and scabbards.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then we want to know what he wants the other million and a half for ?

Mr. FOSTER. Besides the items I have read, there are other things. There are fifty Maxim guns of the latest pattern, and 1,500,000 rounds of ammunition for them ; 200 sets of wheel harness, and 400 sets of lead harness.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cost of the harness ?

Mr. FOSTER. I will give a short but comprehensive list, which will show the cost of what has been ordered so far. It appears that the cost of the harness, Maxim guns and ammunition, together with the Lee-Enfield rifle, is £228,000. Then the estimated cost of the carbines is £10,000.

Mr. MULOCK. They were included in the former estimate ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, with the exception of the harness and Maxims. If you add those with their equipments and ammunition to the item I have read, the total will come up to about £379,000, or about $1,850,000.

Mr. DICKEY. Col. Lake went over with authority and with a general order to which the hon. Finance Minister has referred. He has made a certain purchase, which the hon. Finance Minister has stated to the House. chased from the War Office. The balance of chased from the war office. The balance of the material will bring the amount up to $1,850,000. But at the present time I am not able to give more information than the original estimate as to what the harness would cost.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that all ?

Mr. DICKEY. The contract made with the war office is for that amount.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that all the contract so far made ?

Mr. DICKEY. I am not quite in a position to say ; but it is all so far as I am advised. The approximate cost of harness is $59,000. The original intention was to have ordered fifty Maxim guns, as the Minister of Finance stated ; but Lord Wolsley did not advise that course to be followed. He advised that we should spend the money at our disposal on artillery rather than on Maxim guns, and under his advice the order was changed when Col. Lake was in England ; and Col. Lake's present instructions are to buy what the Finance Minister has said, the necessary harness and fill the order, except as regards Maxim guns, and spend on Maxims whatever balance there might be. I am not in a position to say how many Maxims will be obtained, because the amended order as regards artillery will use up a large part of the money intended for Maxim guns. The artillery ordered is of a different and superior class and is necessarily more expensive.

Mr. CASEY. What will be the cost of the artillery ?

Mr. DICKEY. £26,000.

Mr. EDGAR. What is the cost of each Maxim gun ?

Mr. DICKEY. About $3,000 without ammunition.

Mr. CASEY. How many guns will £26,000 purchase ?

Mr. DICKEY. Twenty-four guns. The order of which the Finance Minister spoke was for the improved gun—it is a thoroughly modern gun.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the same number of guns will be obtained, but of superior quality.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, they will be 12-pound rifle guns, breech-loaders.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has not stated what it is proposed to do with the remaining $1,100,000.

Mr. DICKEY. As the Finance Minister explained, that question has not been determined, though it was thought more prudent at the time that a larger vote should be taken than was actually required to be expended at the moment. An equipment is very much needed for the force, and the General has been making experiments with various equipments, and has been consulting the War Office as to the best to be obtained, and I am inclined to think he will advise the purchase of an equipment.

Mr. CASEY. You mean the strap arrangements.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes. It would be almost necessary, if the militia had to take the field, to have new equipments, for the old equipment, as hon. members of this House well know, is almost totally useless and worn out, and some of it is thirty or thirty-five years old.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is any money to be spent in fortifications or field works ?

Mr. DICKEY. No.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The House and the country will be very much gratified to find that the expenditure to be made by the Militia Department under this proposed proposition is to be made direct with the War Office. That relieves the Government of any possible imputation.

Mr. CASEY. Not the whole of it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Practically all of it. If it is to be purchased through the War Office, it does not matter whether it is obtained from the Government factory or from private factories under the War Office. The prices are fixed and the inspection is the same. The money will go direct to the War Office, and as we know exactly the price of each article, the whole transaction is eminently satisfactory.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman understand the money will go through the War Office ?

Mr. DICKEY. The payment will be made through the High Commissioner's office. The officials there will be notified that a certain contract was completed and a draft will be sent on a certain day which will have to be paid.

Mr. CASEY. Not for harness and saddlery ; they are to be private contracts.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not want the hon. gentleman so to understand the matter. All I desire to intimate was, that I could not be sure the harness and saddlery could be bought through the War Office. I am sure Col. Lake will do so if he can. When I was Minister of Militia I sent Col. Lake to England in order that he might make all the arrangements that he thought best. I thought this would save correspondence and enable the Dominion to get better terms, and I think he has been eminently successful. He has managed all the details of the business without any instructions from this side, the only thing he has asked having been a general concurrence in the result of his negotiations, but the whole details have been settled by Col. Lake himself.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think in that respect also the Government have been fortunate, because Col. Lake is an officer in whom the country has absolute confidence. He is a man, who since he has been in the department here, has gained the good-will of every officer in the force with whom he has come in contact, and has earned for himself the confidence of the country. I am quite sure that all business done through him will be done in a business like and satisfactory manner. So far as the armament already provided for goes, it is very satisfactory. I was glad to hear the Minister of Justice refer to the equipment, which in my opinion is as important as the rifle. Until we have a proper equipment it is idle to talk about our forces being fitted for the field. I would rather take a force into the field with an inferior rifle and reasonably good equipment, than with a first rate rifle and no equipment. I trust that the Government will press the matter with regard to equipment. There is nothing more absolutely essential at this moment for the efficiency or our forces, than is their equipment. That equipment can now be obtained in this country, according to one suggested plan, and a most efficient one. For my part, I think the Government cannot do better than accept the equipment which has been invented by Dr. Oliver of Halifax, which seems to me to answer every purpose, and to be as perfect as we can possibly get it. Whatever equipment the Government do get, let them get it as soon as possible, and let it be as simple as possible, and free from any of the defects which have been found in the equipment of the Imperial Service. If we have the arms that are now in the way of being purchased, and have the equipment, there is another thing which should be taken into account. There ought be provision made for the purchase of heavy guns for defensive work. I think the Government would be exceedingly foolish, if they propose to spend any money upon fortifications, because all modern experience shows, that the most effective fortifications are those which can be thrown up with a spade, which require no skilled workmanship, and which can be provided where they are needed in a very short time. The history of modern warfare has shown such fortifications as were thrown up at Plevna, and elsewhere, to be the most effective. There are some points such as Lévis, and other places, where, no matter what fortifications we may improvise, heavy guns are required to make them effective. I think the Government ought at any rate, enter into negotiations or make inquiries as to the best method of placing heavy guns, either having them in this country where they would be safe and accessible, or else have them prepared on the other side of the Atlantic, so that in a short time they could be brought here. That would be a very expensive thing, but at the same time I think we ought to make a commencement of providing the heavy guns which would be necessary for such fortifications as we contemplate at Point Lévis, or such as might be necessary to be thrown up in any part of the country where a defensive position was to be established. I think the Government, if proper restrictions can be provided, could be justified in asking for this additional amount. I think that they ought to be in a position to obtain the heavy guns I have spoken of, which are exceedingly costly, and which cannot be provided, for much less than the balance of the money that is in hand. I would like to ask the Minister, whether any inquiry has been made with regard to heavy guns, or whether any proposal has been entered into for the supplying of them ?

Mr. DICKEY. With regard to the question of heavy guns, I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. O'Brien), that that has been very carefully considered by the general officer commanding, and I think the country is very much indebted to him for the extreme care and moderation with which he has prepared his details of arms, &c., for the force. Very many Imperial officers, might, on an occasion like this, have gone into extravagant expenditures looking to the equipment of our force and in a way that was really not necessary. I think it is a motive of economy that has so far influenced the General in not advising the immediate purchase of any large siege guns such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. O'Brien) mentions. But, he has all the information in the department with reference to them, and knows where they are to be obtained at very short notice. The question of equipment which the hon. gentleman mentioned, is one of a good deal of difficulty. The British Government has had a good many equipments on trial and rejected them one after the other. They are just now experimenting with a new one, and it is a question whether we should adopt the Oliver equipment or wait until the British Government had completed their investigations. All these matters are being considered, but I think it is quite possible that some of this money will be expended in the supplying of equipment.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What would be the cost of each equipment ?

Mr. DICKEY. I am not able to tell the hon. gentleman exactly. Dr. Oliver wanted to sell his patent to the Dominion and let us manufacture them ourselves in our own stores. That would probably be a more convenient way, because there would be an end to it. If you had to pay, say, from $2,000 to $5,000 for the patent, you would have it and you could always use it. The only other way would be, to pay Dr. Oliver a royalty for the equipment purchased, which would be I think a very dangerous experiment. It is, I believe, merely a question of a lump sum to pay to Dr. Oliver for the use of his patent, if it is determined to adopt it. I do not wish the committee to understand that the General has decided to recommend Dr. Oliver's equipment at all, because he has not come to any determination on that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What would be the cost of, say, such an equipment as is used by the British soldiers ?

Mr. DICKEY. Individually they are not expensive.

Mr. O'BRIEN. About $5.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not think it would be even so expensive as that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The total cost of equipment in that case would not exceed $200,000.

Mr. DICKEY. $200,000 would furnish the whole force, and buy the patent, I should think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Apart from the question of the $1,000,000 which is not accounted for yet, I want to know, what is the intention of the Government with respect to the $1,000,000 which is asked for in the Supplementary Estimates. Is that intended to be part of this vote ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it is. Although we have the statutory authority to make the loan, yet I think we are entitled to come to Parliament to ask a special appropriation, especially since Parliament is in session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All you propose, is, to ask for the $1,000,000 this year ?

Mr. FOSTER. There is something more in the Supplementary Estimates for next year, I think.

Mr. CASEY. As far as I can understand from the hon. gentlemen who have been explaining this matter, about £380,000, or $1,900,000 worth of rifles, guns, ammunition and general equipment has been contracted for already ?

Mr. DICKEY. The contract is only $1,625,000 at present, so far as my advice is. Our agent is instructed to buy the rest.

Mr. CASEY. And his estimate would bring it up to about the figure I have stated ?

Mr. DICKEY. That is correct.

Mr. CASEY. In the first place it seems to me most extraordinary that the expenditure of a vast sum like this, should be put in the hands of any one man. I can echo what has been said of Colonel Lake by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), as far as I know him, and as far as I have had evidence from others. But Colonel Lake is, after all, only one individual ; and, although his judgment may be excellent, and his qualifications for selecting arms and ammunition perfect, I do not think that the policy of such a large expenditure should be left in the hands of one person. I think it is for the Government, after full consultation with experts of all kinds, to say how much they will spend on rifles, how much for guns, how much for Maxims, and so on, and to trust Colonel Lake with the actual purchase.

Mr. DICKEY. That is what was done.

Mr. CASEY. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that the Government dictated what sums should be spent for each particular class of article to be bought ?

Mr. DICKEY. No, but they instructed Colonel Lake what rifles he should buy, and how much he should buy, and how much artillery he should buy, and of what class ; and Colonel Lake closed no contract without the Government ratifying it. All I intended to convey was that as to the details, such as the inspection of the rifles, and all those details which necessitate personal contact, the Government had nothing to do with them, and knew nothing about them.

Mr. CASEY. For that part of the work I do not think you could have better judgment than that of Colonel Lake. What I objected to was, that any steps should be taken which would relieve the Government of responsibility. Then I understand from the Minister that the choice of the particular rifle, the Lee-Enfield, was a Government measure ?

Mr. DICKEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. CASEY. That was my chief objection to this whole expenditure, and it has been largely disposed of by the explanation the Minister has given. My criticisms, then, so far as they are criticisms, will have reference to the policy of the Government in each particular.

I do not know whether I should not have made the objection first, that the Government have begun at the wrong end with this expenditure. They should have taken the vote in the first place, before authorizing the expenditure at all. They should have had the fullest discussion in this House of what they proposed to do, before they did it, and not afterwards. It appears to be too late now, with regard to this $1,625,000 at all events, for us to say whether we want to spend it or not, because the Government are in honour bound, committed, as far as the Militia Department has committed them, to this transaction. And, after that has been done without consulting the House or saying a word about it, except that they were going to get a certain number of rifles of a certain pattern, the Government come and ask us to foot the bill. I cannot go further without denouncing that action on their part as utterly unconstitutional. If a war had broken out, such as the rebellion in the North-west, the Government might have been justified in incurring whatever expense was necessary for the public safety; but, in time of profound peace, when it is merely a question of renewing the equipment of the militia all round, to authorize an agent to expend over $1,500,000 without giving any particulars to Parliament, or asking Parliament for a vote of money, is an utterly outrageous and unconstitutional proceeding.

If the Government undertook to spend that much money on a public work of any kind in the same way, what denunciations of it would we not have heard all over the country? In fact, the statute law of the country is such that they could not spend it in that way on a public work, without first obtaining the authority of Parliament. I am very much in doubt whether they have any legal authority to commit us to the expenditure either. I am not discussing now the particulars of the expenditure, or what should or should not be done in the way of purchases. I am discussing the policy of expending that amount of money without asking the consent of Parliament or having an opportunity for it. I very seriously doubt whether the Treasury is or has been bound by anything that the Government have done under these circumstances; but as far as the Militia Department could bind the Government, it has bound them, without the shadow of an authority from Parliament for that expenditure.

As I have said, this is a time of peace, and the expenditure of this money is purely a question of policy and not a question of necessity or emergency. When this House met, the Government were not ready with the Remedial Bill; they were not ready with a lot of things that had been spoken of; and if they wanted this money spent immediately, why did they not in the early days of the session bring down this resolution, instead of bringing it now at the end of the session. If there were any possibility of their being what is vulgarly called a "nigger in the fence"—if there were any possibility of their being a contract to be "sweated" in connection with this transaction, the circumstances would amply justify us in suspecting the presence of that coloured individual, and that sudorific process. We are told that this money has been spent through the British War Department. I want to know what that means? Were these stores bought from the British War Department?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes. There is a contract signed between the British War Department and our agent.

Mr. CASEY. All the harness is bought from the British War Department, and not from any private contractor?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. I do not understand whether it is ordered by the British War Department, or is of government manufacture.

Mr. DICKEY. We do not know where it comes from at all. We get it from the War Department, and our contract is with them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When was the contract made?

Mr. DICKEY. On March 4th.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And under what statutory authority? The Minister of Finance said there was statutory authority for this?

Mr. DICKEY. He spoke of statutory authority to borrow, if this resolution passes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understand the Minister of Finance to say that there was statutory authority.

Mr. FOSTER. No, we wanted to get statutory authority by this resolution.

Mr. CASEY. Under what authority was the contract signed?

Mr. DICKEY. That is a legal question, I suppose?

Mr. CASEY. I am asking the hon. Minister of Justice, and he ought to know.

Mr. DICKEY. I think the hon. gentleman takes the right view of it. The country and the Government are committed to it as far as the Department of Militia can commit them. We need not go back to the circumstances under which the steps were taken at the time. They were not as quiet as now.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister admits that the contract is not binding until it is confirmed by this House.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not at all.

Mr. CASEY. That is the necessary inference from his statement. I asked under what authority the contract was signed, whether statutory or otherwise, and he is unable to tell me. He admits there is no authority, that my impression of the case was correct, and that the country was committed to this bargain only so far as the Department of Militia was concerned. That is, as a matter of policy, the Government are committed to it through the Department of Militia; but I am glad to see that the Government, as such, are not committed to the contract, that it is not a binding contract, and that we are at full liberty to discuss it as if the formality of signing it had not taken place. In other words, the money could not be recovered, under that contract, as it stands, so that the Government have gained nothing by the rather sharp practice of signing the contract first, and coming to ask us for the authority afterwards. That, I say, is the only possible inference from the statement of the hon. Minister of Justice himself.

We come now to consider the question of those very stores, knowing that there is no valid contract for them. I protest against asking Parliament in the last few days of its existence, led by a Government in the last stages of its existence, to vote an enormous sum such as that asked for in this case. No such sum should be spent without a royal commission—without consulting, not only General Gascoigne, but militia officers all over the country, such as my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt), and other militia officers, in and out of the House on the subject.

Mr. DICKEY. We consulted the War Office.

Mr. CASEY. The War Office has not the spending of our money. It has not the knowledge of the needs of Canadian volunteers, and has not the knowledge of our people, it has not the knowledge not only of our needs but of our capacities for payment, that those should have who arrange for the spending of $1,600,000 of our money, not to mention the larger sum. It is not the War Office gentlemen who should be consulted in connection with the equipment of Canadian militia, but it is the peculiar circumstances of this country and the men who are to command our forces in action, if they are ever to be in action, and the men who are to use the arms. It is all very well to consult the War Office about the merits of the different arms, because they have experts in these matters, though I notice that their experts change their opinions very frequently. But on the policy of the equipment for Canadian volunteers, it is not the War Office that should be consulted. There should have been a royal commission before this money was spent, and the fullest inquiry into everything connected with the present state of the militia.

It is useless to spend $3,000,000 on a volunteer force which is disorganized in other respects. When there is discontent in the ranks, when there is plotting and intriguing among officers of battalions to get rid of their superiors, giving them new equipments is not all that is required. Understand, I am not opposed to the getting of good equipment for our volunteers. I have always been the first to demand proper equipment, but I think that the volunteers themselves, and we in this House, should have a voice in saying what rifles and equipments they should get. I would ask, has the Lee-Enfield rifle been tested in active service by any portion of the British army ?

Mr. DICKEY. The barrel has been tested and the breech action separately.

Mr. CASEY. The breech action is the same as the Lee-Metford ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. And that has been tested in actual service ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Has the rifle already been used in active service ?

Mr. DICKEY. The Enfield barrel has, but not with the Metford-Lee breech.

Mr. CASEY. I think we should have hesitated before adopting a rifle that has not been tried in active service. We know exactly what the Lee-Metford is and what it will do in active service. I know the theory on which the claim to the superiority of the Lee-Enfield is advanced. There is a difference in the grooving. The Lee-Metford has a rifling of small ridges. The Enfield barrel, which is applied to the Lee-Enfield, has shallow grooves instead, and it is claim that that will have a better effect than the Lee-Metford. If it has not been tried in active service or by the firing of a great many rounds, we do not know what the effect of the hard-cased bullet, which is used in this rifle, and which is coated with German silver, would have upon the shallow grooving peculiar to the Enfield rifle. I would consider, as an old user of rifles, that the shallow grooves would be apt to wear out under the strain.

Mr. DICKEY. The report of the experts in connection with the War Department is that the life of the Enfield barrel, with the Lee breech action, is three times the life of the Metford barrel.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That depends upon the powder.

Mr. DICKEY. Under the same conditions, with the cordite ammunition.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman tells me that the War Office experts say they have compared the life of the barrel with these two different grooves. That has been experimented on in the workshops by firing a number of rounds ?

Mr. DICKEY. I presume so.

Mr. CASEY. If that be the case, it is strange that the Lee-Enfield has not replaced the Lee-Metford in the British army.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is replacing it.

Mr. CASEY. Do I understand from the hon. Minister that the Lee-Enfield is now being manufactured for the British army instead of the Lee-Metford ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Well, that is a question for experts. I can remember when the Martini-Henry was introduced, and knew the chairman of the committee of experts who secured the adoption of the Martini-Henry, but the opinion of experts in regard to the Martini-Henry rifle were far from being borne out by the actual performance of that rifle.

Mr. DICKEY. It is a good rifle.

Mr. CASEY. It is a good rifle. The point I make with regard to a Martini-Henry is that while there is still a difference of opinion among authorities as to the Lee-Metford and the Lee-Enfield, while these rifles are very costly—I have forgotten the exact price per rifle——

Mr. DICKEY. The price is £4 13s. 6d. with the bayonet and scabbard.

Mr. CASEY. Well, these are comparatively high prices, and while we could obtain a large stock of Martinis at a very low figure, as they are being replaced in the British army by the other rifle, I think it would have been less extravagant if we had commenced with only a few thousand of the magazine rifles, and had in the meantime filled up our corps very cheaply, probably for nothing, with the discarded Martini-Henrys from the British army. When I say "discarded" I do not mean to suggest that there is any fault in the weapon. Many thousands absolutely new, the British Government have no use for, and they probably would have presented these to an important colony such as Canada if we had asked for them. At any rate, they could have been had at a cheap rate. Except the new magazine rifle they are the best arm in the world, and are still very useful, though imperfect in details to which I need not now refer. I am aware that the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) and some others in the militia have a lingering preference for the old Snider over the Martini, in which preference I cannot join them, knowing that the Martini, though a hard-kicking rifle, and hard to clean and all that, is much more accurate at a long range. My first point, then, is that we would have consulted economy if we had got a few thousand magazine rifles at a time, and have filled up, for those who did not get magazine rifles, with Martini-Henry's. Then, I take it for granted that the ammunition to be bought will be cordite ammunition. Of course, it is pretty well understood nowadays, at any rate it was claimed in a recent and very important debate in the British House in which the fate of government was at stake, that cordite ammunition does not keep very well. We shall probably have to import it in small quantities or else manufacture it in this country. The manufacture has been commenced here I understand. I do not think that is the cheapest way to get it, but we could not bring in a large quantity, as it could not be relied upon to keep. Then, as to the artillery guns, there is no doubt that the chief reliance of an army nowadays is in plenty of field artillery. The rifle is an absolute necessity, but, for the purpose of getting an advantage over an enemy, a plentiful supply of field artillery is necessary. If we were called upon to put a force into the field, I think it would be found that a rather large number of guns for the field artillery would have been a better investment than ordering all the magazine rifles at one time. As to guns of position, I think there are heavy guns at Quebec, a considerable number having been left by the British Government.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, and some in Halifax. They are muzzle loaders and of an old pattern, but they are very efficient guns when set up.

Mr. CASEY. I remember them twenty years ago. I do not think the necessity for guns of position is very pressing. The gun that we require is one that can be taken about wherever it is required for use ; and I cannot object, if we are going to make our force really efficient, to a reasonable expense in the way of field guns. I understand the hon. Minister to say that the guns are of the latest pattern ?

Mr. DICKEY. They are the Royal Horse Artillery guns.

Mr. CASEY. Is there much difference in price between them and those it was originally intended to procure ?

Mr. DICKEY. A good deal. I will give the hon. gentleman the figures in a moment.

Mr. O'BRIEN. While the hon. Minister is looking for the figures, I desire to say that I think it exceedingly questionable whether it is wise to get the newest pattern gun, because they require more accurate primings of the fuse than the old ones.

Mr. DICKEY. The original estimate for 9-pounders, about $3,000 apiece.

Mr. CASEY. And these are about $5,000 apiece ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. The difference was only in the calibre ?

Mr. DICKEY. No ; in style too. These others were muzzle loaders.

Mr. CASEY. It is always a question whether it would be better to get a large number of guns, even though not quite so good, rather than get a smaller number of a better gun. The ammunition, no doubt, will be more expensive also, so that the purchase of these better guns will involve a continuous expense. I rather fear that the twenty-four of them is a high number to get. Coming to the saddlery and harness which the hon. gentleman proposes to get, I make that out about $220,000.

Mr. DICKEY. The amounts are $59,000 for harness and $106,000 for saddlery.

Mr. CASEY. I thought that was $160,000. That is a total of $165,000. I am aware that all harness and saddlery and leather goods are much cheaper in Canada than in the old country. Was any attempt made to learn what these could be made for in Canada ?

Mr. DICKEY. Not that I know of.

Mr. CASEY. I think that in that respect the hon. gentleman made a mistake in authorizing Col. Lake to buy without ascertaining the price for which these stores could be obtained here. No doubt the pattern will be peculiar, but our saddlers could make anything that they get orders for, and we should have the advantage of having the goods made at home, as well as the advantage of getting the goods at a low rate. I remember that this principle used to be carried so far in connection with the clothing of the volunteers, that very inferior scarlet cloth was used on the ground simply that it was of Canadian make. These items account for everything but a sum of a little over $1,100,000. This is the amount which we are asked to vote without any particulars as to what is intended to be done with it. Of course I do not suppose the Minister expects us to vote it in that shape, and will give us particulars before he expects the resolution to go through committee. Is he prepared to give now the particulars of the $1,100,000 ?

Mr. DICKEY. I have dealt with that subject already. I told the hon. gentleman that probably out of it the equipment would be furnished.

Mr. CASEY. About $200,000 ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, roughly, and that as to the balance, I was not prepared to say what disposition would be made of it.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think the Minister can expect that much money to be put in his hands without knowing what he thinks of doing with it. Now, the Oliver equipment has been spoken of. I have seen that exhibited here by the inventor during this session. I know the Oliver equipment is a very old story, it has been thirty years in existence, and he has never secured its adoption in the British army.

Mr. O'BRIEN. So much the worse for the British army.

Mr. CASEY. At all events, the experts in whose judgment we trust for guns, harness, saddlery and all these things, have never seen fit to adopt the Oliver equipment; and I should not fancy, from what I have seen of it myself, that it was the most comfortable thing in the world to wear. I have never worn it, but I have worn the old knapsack, and carried my duds and my grub, too, along with it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. You did not carry your grub in the old knapsack, surely.

Mr. CASEY. No, I carried part of my grub inwardly, and the rest of it in my haversack. I do not think we should vote anything for equipment until the Government are prepared with a plan of what equipment they intend to purchase. They should take the House fully into their confidence about these matters, just as the Minister of Public Works is compelled to take us into his confidence when he proposes to build a Government building, or a canal, or anything of that sort. I say that at the present time, when there are only a few hours between now and prorogation, even with the explanation which the Minister does not seem able to give us, it would be out of the question to vote this $3,000,000. While I sympathize heartily with the position of the volunteers, I hardly see my way to condone the course the Government have taken in regard to this matter, nor can I bring myself to give assent to everything the Government may spend out of the million and a half to two million dollars, without taking the House into their confidence, after they have come down and told the House that the thing is settled, the stores selected, and the contract made, so far as the Department of Militia is concerned, and all that we have got to do is to pay for it.

Mr. DICKEY. If the hon. gentleman will carry his mind back to Christmas and New Year's, he will remember that things were not in a very pleasant state in some quarters of the world, and that Colonel Lake left Canada on the first week of January on this mission.

Mr. LAURIER. Why was not this resolution brought down earlier ? It has been on the Order paper since 25th February.

Mr. DICKEY. The course of business in the House must answer the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CASEY. If I look back not quite so far as Christmas, I can remember that there was a state of war even in this peaceful city, even within the peaceful walls of this building. There was war, not of the seven against Thebes, but a war of seven against somebody whom we shall not name. That is the principal war we had on at that time, that is, the war of the bolters. However, I can understand to what the hon. gentleman refers, the war scare between England and the United States.

There is no doubt that we all did get an idea for a time, and I cannot say that it was perfectly groundless, that something or other might precipitate a war at any moment between those two countries, and that Canada would be the principal sufferer. But I did not expect to hear it pleaded by the Minister of Militia of this Government, or the gentleman who acts for him, that that war scare was sufficient to justify the unconstitutional expenditure of the vast sum of money which we are asked to vote to-night. If a war were really imminent, if there were any actual prospect of it, it might have to be done. But I am more than astonished to hear the Minister plead that that war scare was the cause of this large expenditure of money. If so, it shows greater weakness of heart on the part of Ministers, than I ever gave them credit for, if they were so easily scared as all that. I admit that events were sufficient to make us think about the position of our volunteers, sufficient to make Ministers set to work to perfect a plan of equipment, and to induce them to ask Parliament, at the very earliest date, to consider a plan and to vote this money. But we went on, we settled the war of the seven against the other seven, and we began a lot of other matters. We had a long debate on the Budget, and on the 25th February this notice was put on the paper. It was after that notice was put on the paper that the Government ventured to sign contracts as if the money had been voted by the House. There, Sir, is the strongest proof of their unconstitutional action that could be required. I regret to say, taking it all into consideration, that I do not see at this moment how I can possibly, speaking for myself alone, agree to sanction the vote of this money, spent unconstitutionally as it has been in part, or was to be spent at least, and as to the other part of it, we are asked to vote for it without any explanation of what is going to be done with it. Sir, $1,100,000 is too much money to put into the hands of the Government without explanation at the end of the sixth session of Parliament, and a few weeks before an election. I say boldly and frankly that whatever may be our consideration for the volunteers, our experience of the Government has been such that we cannot consider them fit to be trusted with that amount of money, without a shadow of explanation of what they intend to do with it, without a shadow of guarantee as to the purpose to which it shall be applied ; and unless I get greater light as the discussion goes on, I shall have to oppose granting that money just now. I do not mean that the money should not be granted at any time, if it were judiciously appropriated, and after proper precautions were taken to ascertain what should be done with it. But I do not see my way just now, with all my old volunteer feeling, to sanction a vote of this extent, at this particular time, and under these circumstances.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). With regard to the character of the arms which the Government have bought, I wish to call the attention of the House to a report made by the Secretary General in South Africa, with reference to the wounded in the contest between Dr. Jameson's forces and the Boers.

The Secretary General says, in the report he has made :

> As regards the nature of the wounds, there were no incised wounds, neither bayonets nor swords having been used. All injuries were gunshot wounds. Those made by the Lee-Metford were much cleaner and healed much quicker, almost all by first intention. One burgher, shot through the lungs, left the hospital a few days after admission, convalescent. The entrance orifice of the bullets was exceedingly small, and few of the larger vessels having been divided, the hemorrhage was, in consequence, slight, the wound closing almost immediately on itself. The exit was about the size of the entrance, and in all cases was much smaller than that made by the Martini. Where the bullet, however, had struck the bone, as in the head wound of a burgher, it completely shattered it. The wounds inflicted by the Martini were of a much more serious nature—viz. : larger, jagged, slow-healing, with bad entrance and worse exit. Judging from personal observation, I should say that there cannot be a doubt that the Lee-Metford bullet is inferior to the now antiquated Martini as a man-slaying projectile.

That report is of considerable consequence in a matter of this kind, where the Government are purchasing arms, because the character of the wounds inflicted is one of the important considerations to take into account in considering the efficiency of arms. But I have not risen to call the attention of the committee to that matter particularly ; I wish to call attention to the very extraordinary position in which this question is at this moment. It seems from what the Government have said that Parliament was in session when this matter was first acted upon, and without inviting the sanction of Parliament, and without asking Parliament for any appropriation, the Ministers took on themselves to incur a large liability and charge upon the revenues of the Dominion. I do not think that in a long series of years, perhaps during the whole of this century, an instance can be found where Ministers have incurred an obligation such as has been incurred in this case, and I know of no case since parliamentary government was established, where Ministers undertook to make purchases with Parliament in session, without the sanction of Parliament. When Ministers have been obliged to act in a great emergency when Parliament is not in session, they have come down and asked for an Act of Indemnity from personal consequences of their disregard of the law. Ministers have in this case certainly wholly disregarded the principles of the law. It is true the Government may make a contract, it is true also that the Government may make an official appointment, but without an appropriation that contract must fall to the ground, and that official appointment become nugatory, where any salary attaches to the office. So the result is that for a long series of years no appointment has been made in England, and no contract entered into without the sanction of Parliament, or without some statutory arragement by which the contract was to be laid before Parliament for its approbation or disapproval after it had been made. There are instances where that has been done. There are statutes which specially provide for a case of that sort. This is not one of them. When the Finance Minister referred to the matter this evening, I supposed he referred to some statutes, of which I had no recollection, which gave him authority to make this purchase, and subsequently obtain for it the sanction of Parliament. But there is no such authority. Let me call attention to a case which the Minister of Justice no doubt remembers, the case of Buckley vs. Edwards, where, in New Zealand there were appointed by the Governor of the Island, on the advice of his Ministers, a chief justice of the Superior Court and certain other judges. The Government of New Zealand had appointed a certain number of judges and provided for them. Subsequently, one of the Ministers was added to the list, for under the statute the number was not fixed, and the Government could add to the number. Mr. Edwards, who was a Minister, was appointed to the Bench, and his right to sit there questioned by the succeeding Administration. The Court of the Island was divided on the validity of the appointment, and the case went to the Privy Council. What did the Privy Council hold in that case ? That this appointment was an invalid appointment, that it was the duty of the Government first to have asked and obtained the sanction of Parliament to the constitution of the office. The statement was that the Act contemplated that a salary should be attached to the office, and the Government had advised the Crown to make the appointment before Parliament could vote that salary. That is a case which illustrates what has been done here. Parliament was in session. If this was a matter of urgency, it would be sufficient ground for calling Parliament together. The Government propose to expend $3,000,000, and they have actually made a contract which amounts to nearly $2,000,000. By what authority was that contract made? By what authority was that charge made on the public treasury ? There is no authority whatever, not a scintilla of authority. The duty of the Government, if there was urgency, was to have called Parliament together at an early day and asked for the necessary appropriation. That has not been done. The Ministry have entered into the contract, they have broken down every barrier by which the rights of Parliament are secured, if Ministers can go on and make contracts of this sort without the sanction of Parliament. This is a most serious matter. I do not say that the force should not be armed. I agree with that proposition. I do not say that more than necessary armament and equipment has been bargained for. I am inclined to think that it is not. I do not think the arrangement was an unreasonable one, but the sanction of Parliament should have been obtained before the first step was taken. If there was danger threatening, and difficulty likely to arise before Parliament could be called together, it was the duty of the Government to inform Parliament of the fact the moment it was called together, and ask for an Act of Indemnity. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not asked for an Act of Indemnity, and have not asked Parliament to thus relieve them from the responsibility of their illegal step. These are illegal steps. Hon. gentlemen opposite have burdened the country with $2,000,000 expenditure, when Parliament alone was able to vote the money. So there is a more serious defence than the defence of the country, and that is the defence of the institutions of the country, which have been attacked by the course taken. We are entitled to a full statement by the Administration showing what was the urgency that induced them to take this step, and what was the reason for not consulting Parliament in regard to the fact that such a step had been taken.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not think I would differ at all with the hon. gentleman as to his statement of constitutional usage, as a general principle, but I am inclined to think the hon. gentleman is forgetting a little the circumstances under which we were some time ago. The hon. gentleman is perfectly well aware of the circumstances that took place early in the year. I do not wish to refer to them in detail, it is not a thing very pleasant to discuss in detail on the floor of the House. But the hon. gentleman knows that there was a state of tension existing, and that it was very desirable, as well that the state of the armament of Canada should not be discussed in Parliament during the early part of this session. At all events, I think so.

Mr. LAURIER. I think so, too.

Mr. DICKEY. That is the view that I took of the matter. I considered it not as a precedent, I considered it not as an invasion of the regular constitutional usage which the hon. gentleman has pointed out ; but I considered it as a national emergency, in which the Government, as the executive head, was fully justified in taking these measures which it judged to be necessary in the interest of public safety; and then come afterwards to Parliament for the necessary authority to pay the bills. It is, I suppose, quite open to Parliament now, if it dissents from the policy of purchasing these arms, to refuse to pay the money. It is quite within the competence of Parliament to do so. But, the hon. gentleman, of course, is perfectly aware that under certain circumstances, action must be taken promptly and taken effectually. The question of providing these arms was taken up before Parliament met, and arrangements were then made. I do not think it would have been wise or prudent, in the state of feeling when the House first met, to have given the details of what was going on, to be discussed by the public. It is all very well now to talk. I thank Providence things have turned out very differently from what we feared. It has turned out that our fears were not in any sense realized. but the hon. gentleman can quite understand that a different state of affairs might have been existing to-day, that another turn might have been taken, and that the passions of those on both sides of the question might have aroused to such an extent that they could not have been allayed. The Government's action might have been justified by events, which this Government would be very, very sorry to have seen happen. Taking all that into account, I think the action of the Government was perfectly justifiable. It certainly was not in any sense meant to be a derogation of the existing constitutional usages with regard to the executive action without the authority of Parliament. It was done purely as an exigency, and it was done in the manner it was done and without coming down to Parliament and discussing it at that time, simply because it was thought by the Government that it was in the public interest that the course should be taken which they did take.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dickey) quite appreciates the gravity and importance of the position taken by my hon. friend (Mr. Mills). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Dickey) seems to think that because there was what he terms almost a national crisis existing, that the Government were justified in incurring an enormous liability without consulting Parliament.

Mr. DICKEY. Does the hon. gentleman dispute the principle or the facts ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I dispute the principle. If a national crisis existed, the duty of the Government was to have taken the House so far into its confidence as to ask authority to incur a debt of one million, or five millions, or ten millions, or twenty millions. as the circumstances required. It does not follow from that that the House would necessarily feel itself justified in discussing any details of the course which the Government intended to take. But the point insisted upon is this : that the Government, as a committee of this House, had no constitutional power whatever to pledge the credit of the country to the expenditure of millions, without first having the authority of Parliament for so doing. It is useless to tell me that it would not be in the public interest to discuss details of that kind. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Dickey) has no right to assume that the House would have insisted upon discussing details which are not in the public interest. It would have been quite sufficient for the Government to have come down and to state that affairs had reached such a grave crisis that they felt compelled to ask the House to give them a credit of so many million dollars as they needed and to ask the House to accept their assurance that it was not in the public interest to discuss the details of how the money was to be spent. In point of fact, the crisis might be so grave that the Government would be justified in asking the House for a point-blank credit of several millions without saying how they were going to disburse it ; and the House might have given them that credit. The House would then determine whether it was in the public interest to discuss the matter. But, Sir, the principle involved is simply this : Can the executive at any time it thinks fit—more especially when Parliament is sitting—incur a liability upon the country—it does not matter how much the liability may be—and ignore Parliament altogether. If Parliament once sanctions and approves of that, the hon. gentleman must surely see that Parliament almost dissolves itself. There is no occasion for having a Parliament at all, if it is only to come here and ratify an act which the Government has already done. Take the case of the United States. Would the President dare to incur a liability or an expenditure of millions of dollars without the sanction of Congress ? Why, if he dared anything of the kind he would be voted insane and put in an asylum. Do you suppose that the executive of the United States would dare to incur an expenditure of millions of dollars under such circumstances.

Mr. DICKEY. If it was necessary they would, and they did during the civil war.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And if it was necessary in the public interest that he should do it on a certain day, he would come down to Congress immediately and get his Bill of indemnity, just as you ought to have done here. If matters were so grave—and nobody contends they were—and the crisis was so urgent that you could not wait an hour without incurring this expenditure, then your plain duty was to come down to Parliament the day it was called together, take Parliament into your confidence, tell Parliament what you had done because of the gravity of the crisis, and ask for an indemnity vote. You did not do that, but you sent a man to England to incur the liability after Parliament met, without consulting Parliament, without any statutory authority, and without authority from Parliament by a resolution, and after the thing has been all done, you come and ask us to ratify it. My own judgment is, that if you came before Parliament at that time, and asked for this vote, you would have got it, and would probably have got the whole $3,000,000 without a word about it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question. What would be the effect on the public outside of the passage of a vote for that amount when it would be published all through the country that we were raising $3,000,000 to arm our forces ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman (Mr. Coatsworth) must have lived through life without reading English history at all. If any expedition is to be fitted out at any moment in England, cost what it may, the Chancellor of the Exchequer comes to Parliament and asks a credit, and he gets it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is a different thing.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where is the difference ? The principle is the same, and I believe it is more necessary to enforce that principle in this country than in any country in the world enjoying representative institutions. There has been growing up, is growing up daily and consolidating itself in the minds of the members the idea that the Government, as such, can spend public money.

An hon. MEMBER. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes. There is the idea that the Government can spend the public money, that in some way or other they have authority to draw it out of the treasury, and that they can get Parliament to ratify it afterwards. I am raising my voice, in unison with my hon. friends, in a solemn protest against such a principle and such a policy, which, if adopted, will destroy representative institutions altogether. I am not questioning for one moment that this money ought to be voted, and that some of it may be voted. I am avoiding that branch of the subject altogether. I am saying that the Government should be censured for a high-handed, indefensible act, in incurring a liability of one or two millions of dollars when Parliament was in session, without taking Parliament into their confidence, and asking the permission and authority of Parliament to spend the money. I say that if Parliament passes this conduct by without recording its disapproval and censure of it, Parliament will be adopting a course that will destroy its own influence and independence. In fact, it will destroy the right and necessity of its own existence at all. We might as well have a Government to carry on the affairs of the country during the whole life of a Parliament, and simply call us together in one session to ratify what they have done. Parliamentary government is made a farce by such conduct. The very key of parliamentary government is the control that the representatives of the people have over the expenditure of public money. Give up that key, and your power and usefulness are alike gone. The Government of England, strong as it is, backed up as it is by an enormous majority, possessing as it seems to do the confidence of the people, would not have dared, even in the late European crisis, to spend a sum of money similiar to this unless there was a statutory or parliamentary authority for the expenditure ; and if they had done so, not an hour would have been lost by them in coming down and asking the approval of Parliament and getting a Bill of indemnity. This is a much more important matter than some hon. gentlemen seem to imagine. The very question put by the hon. member for Toronto shows how little he appreciates its gravity. As long as we are a Parliament, let us insist that the Government, who are after all only a committee of this House, shall not dare to spend a dollar of public money, unless they have statutory or parliamentary authority for doing so. I repeat that if the hon. gentleman had come down in the first days of the session and said that there was a national crisis impending, that the Government required a vote of $5,000,000, and that it was not in the public interest that the manner in which the money was to be spent should be discussed, he would have got the money without five minutes discussion.

Mr. DICKEY. I am quite sure we would, in the state of feeling that then existed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I say that the House is the best judge, and the only judge of when it is in the public interest to discuss a matter, and when it is not. If the House chooses to vote the money without discussion, nobody can say a word against it. All the Government is bound to do is to advise that it is not in the public interest to discuss the question. If the House acquiesces, well and good. But in this case, I say that the Government have blundered in a matter of great and grave importance ; and unless their conduct is rebuked now, it will establish a precedent which may result most injuriously in the working of our public institutions in the years to come. Therefore I enter my serious and strong protest in condemnation of what they have done.

Mr. DICKEY. I can assure the hon. gentleman that no one in the House has a greater abhorrence of bureaucratic government than I have, and I am entirely with him in that view of the case. I think the discussion is a useful one ; but surely we cannot be far apart on the question of elementary constitutional principles. I concede at once the principles laid down by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) as being the correct and sound parliamentary principles, and I would expect the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) at once to concede that there are occasions when the Government may act without the authority of Parliament, assuming and expecting the ratification of Parliament afterwards.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If Parliament is not sitting.

Mr. DICKEY. We will limit it to that for the present. Supposing the country were invaded, are the Government to go to Parliament and get a vote before they can move a man ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No. I do not say anything of the kind.

Mr. DICKEY. It is of great usefulness that we should agree on constitutional principle. The application of those principles to the case in hand is of course another matter. All I say is this, that having regard to the state of feeling that existed last year, the Government were justified in taking action, and taking prompt and immediate action, without reference to Parliament. It was so advised by its military advisers ; it took that action ; and the consequence is the resolution now before the House. As I remember —I am speaking subject to correction—the North-west rebellion took place during the sitting of Parliament ; troops were hurried to the North-west ; large engagements were made with the Hudson's Bay Company ; and enormous expenses were incurred.

Mr. LAURIER. And Parliament was constantly informed, from day to day.

Mr. DICKEY. No vote was taken.

Mr. LAURIER. Votes were taken immediately.

Mr. DICKEY. I am speaking subject to correction ; I have not looked at the record ; but as far as my memory goes, no vote was taken for the contract with the Hudson's Bay Company for supplies to the troops. That was done by the Government acting with a view to the safety of the nation. That was the view taken of the action of the Government in this case. When they gave this order, having regard to the enormous imperial interests involved, it was considered best to act in the way they did ; but I would not wish the committee to suppose that their action was in any sense in derogation of any of the constitutional principles laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. LAURIER. The defence just set up by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is the best evidence of the truth of the position which has been taken by my friends to the right and to the left of me. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice does not only deny the correctness of the proposition that no money is to be spent except on the previous appropriation by Parliament ; but he says that in this case there is an exception to be had to the rule, because at the time Parliament was called to meet, in the first days of January, when there was to some extent a cloud of war hanging over us, it would have been inadvisable or unwise to call public attention to the fact that Canada was under the necessity of providing an armament and making provision for the contingency of war. The proposition which lies behind this assertion is that it would have been unwise to call the attention of the various nations, and above all of the nation with which we might have been at war, to our proposed course.

Mr. DICKEY. To discuss it in detail.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the difference ? The hon. gentleman is forgetting that in the Speech from the Throne attention was called to a measure intended to provide for the better arming of the Canadian militia and the strengthening of Canadian defences. What greater notice could have been given of the intention of the Government to incur this expenditure, and when public attention was so invited, it is but folly for the hon. gentleman to say now that, under the circumstances of the case, it would not have been wise to invite attention to the fact that we are arming the militia. The position he now takes invites that attention.

Mr. DICKEY. No.

Mr. LAURIER. What else does it do ? How can the hon. gentleman justify his course ? Parliament was notified in the Speech from the Throne that it was to be asked to supply the money to arm the militia and strengthen the defences, and then the Government took no further action in this House, but went about making contracts without calling upon Parliament to vote a cent of money. There is a manifest contradiction between the proposition of the hon. gentleman to-day and the statement of the Government at the opening of the session. That is not all. Later on in the session, on the 25th February, this motion we are now discussing was called for the first time to the attention of the House. Notice of it was given, which is the first step in the case of such motions as this, and from the 25th February to the 21st April, nothing was done with this motion. In the meantime, the Government were acting upon it. In the meantime they made contracts. We have it from the mouth of the hon. Minister that the first contract was made on the 4th March. I ask if it can be pretended that the Government should have taken this initial step, to spend such an amount as $1,000,000, when they had on the Order paper a resolution to warrant the making the expenditure and never brought that resolution to the attention of Parliament ? The hon. gentleman must admit that such proceedings are altogether antagonistic to the spirit of parliamentary government. Although there may be a disposition to deal generously in the arming of the militia, after all there is something more sacred than the arming of militia, and that is maintaining intact the institutions which are the bulwarks of everything we hold dear in the country. The hon. gentleman spoke a moment on the rebellion in the North-west. I forget the particulars of what took place at the time, but I am sure of one thing, that as soon as the rebellion broke out, every step which was taken for the defending of the country, the sending of militia, the making of contracts, &c., was communicated from day to day to Parliament, and Parliament was kept constantly aware of what was going on.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. gentleman says that the contract was made on the 4th March. That is true, but he knows that Colonel Lake left here early in January and was in constant communication with the War Office and constantly communicating with the Government here confidentially with reference to various advices that he got from the War Office and other authorities, so that the thing was continuous, and although the formal contract was signed on the 4th March, it represented negotiations which had been going on since the 1st January.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to say but very few words on this matter, which is one I have always taken great interest in. I do not wish to say anything with regard to the question as to whether it was right or wrong to ask for a vote now, because my hon. colleagues, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Militia, can look after that, but I do take exception to two or three remarks which have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) seemed to think that the militia of Canada would be perfectly satisfied if the Government had seen fit to provide them with Martini-Henry rifles instead of the new rifles. As a militia officer, I wish to give that an emphatic denial. The militia force would not be content with any but the very best rifle, and I do not think the Government would be doing their duty if they did not provide the militia with the very best magazine rifle that can be obtained. It is all very well to say that the war scare has passed, but the time may come at any moment when our forces may be called to defend the British Empire ; and should such an event take place, it would not be fair for the Government to send our militia to the front with anything but the very latest modern weapon. The moral effect of sending men to the front with the Martini-Henry against the Lee-Enfield or Lee-Metford would be very disastrous. The hon. member for Bothwell I have always looked upon as a man of peace. I have always thought he was wrapped up in his books, but from his remarks he is evidently of a most bloodthirsty disposition. He says that the Government should not arm the militia with any weapon that does not make a fearful wound. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the military authorities do not look on the weapons in the same light as he does. The great idea is not to make a terrible wound, such as the Snider and Martini make, but merely a wound that will put a man hors de combat for the time being, and that the Lee-Metford or Lee-Enfield effectually does. It does not make a wound such as is made by rifles that force a large bullet through with a slow velocity. The new rifle, with a small bullet and a very high velocity, gives a tremendous shock to the system, and puts a man out of the fight, and that is all that is needed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He comes into it again very soon.

Mr. PRIOR. Any man armed with one of these new rifles can carry a great many more bullets and fire off a great many more at the same time than if armed with a Martini. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, and shall merely repeat that, speaking for my own corps and also, I believe, on behalf of the whole militia, our militia will not be satisfied with anything but the very best and latest magazine rifles. And we know they will give the Government credit for deciding to supply them with these weapons.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I agree with the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue's last remark that if arrangements are to be made to supply the militia with a new arm, that arm should be the very best. I go further, and say that the whole equipment should be of the very best description. However, that is not the subject under discussion at the present time. I cannot but take exception to the proposition to grant, in this manner, and at this time, a large amount of money without having had more inquiry, and without a report or some other means of information as to what should be done in the way of arming the militia. I feel, in common probably with a great majority of the officers and men, that we have, for the past number of years, not had that organization that we ought to have, and in connection with this matter I think this a very opportune time for ascertaining the facts, notwithstanding what the hon. Minister of Justice has said, that for a short time just previous to the meeting of the House there was a feeling of uncertainty as to what the relations might be between Great Britain and the United States. That feeling, I think, had all passed away before the meeting of the House, and before any action, so far as we know, had been taken toward the expenditure of this money. I do not wish to discuss this matter in detail, but I must agree to this extent with the gentlemen who have spoken on this side of the House, that I do not think that this is a strictly constitutional action, nor do I think it is in the interest of the country or of the militia that this action should be taken without some inquiry being made, without the various claims being submitted to the country, and especially to the officers and men in the militia that they may have an opportunity of expressing their views in regard to the cases, and I say this because there is a feeling among the members of the militia organizations that especially for the last few years we have been practically drifting. There has been a great deal of dissatisfaction among the officers and men of the force, and I think that the time has arrived for the matter to be taken into careful consideration and an inquiry made in some way, either by a commission or in any other way that would be most effective to make it clear what reorganization ought to take place in order to put the militia in a more effective condition than at the present time. I say for myself that I am in favour of any vote of money that would accomplish this end. Hon. gentlemen have taken the opportunity of calling the attention of the House to the very unsatisfactory state of affairs with regard to the militia, and I think that almost every session gentlemen interested in this matter, perhaps those on the other side more frequently than on this side have called the attention of the Government to the unsatisfactory state of the militia. And I say that I believe now is a very opportune time, instead of voting this amount of money to be appropriated, perhaps, very unsatisfactorily to the force. In following purely the advice of the British War Office and the British officers, it should not be forgotten that conditions are so very different that many mistakes have been made, and maybe, after a large amount of money has been expended, we shall find that it is devoted to a purpose, and expended in a manner that is not best in the interests of the Canadian militia. I say we have not had sufficient information to enable us to clearly discuss this matter and to express our views as to whether we are moving in the right direction or not. I say not only the details of how this particular money is to be expended, but the whole question of the reorganization of the militia force ought to be considered. I think it is unfortunate that we have not the Minister of Militia in this House when this large amount of money is being asked for and important matters in connection with the militia are being discussed. I believe that no harm could come to the militia of the country if this matter was postponed until such information and report can be presented as will enable us to arrive at such conclusions as will be to the best interest of the militia force and of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have listened with a great deal of attention to this discussion. I am quite surprised that the Government should have assumed the responsibility of placing a contract of this magnitude after Parliament had been called together, and without consulting the representatives of the people before doing so. If there was any object in placing the order in the hands of the manufacturers of war implements the Government should have asked the House to consent to it. I can understand an act of this kind in the case of an emergency arising when it was impossible to get the representatives of the people together; but under the conditions that existed at the time this order was given and in the face of the fact that the representatives of the people were here, the transaction was a gross violation of the principles of representative government, and the Opposition should resent pointedly and determinedly the assumption of power on the part of the Government. Is Parliament here merely to register the decrees of the Government? Are we here merely for the purpose of endorsing what the Government do? Are we here to bow in quiet and submissive obedience to what they consider to be right? I do not consider that is the duty of the representatives of the people. We are here to criticise, we are here to investigate. While I realize the responsibility resting upon a Government in extraordinary cases, I say that under the conditions in which this contract was let, when the representatives of the people were in session, in face of the intimation in the Speech from the Throne that they were going to be asked to consent to an expenditure of this kind, for the Government to come down at the close of the session and say they have made this expenditure and ask us to endorse it, in my humble opinion they are guilty of a gross violation of the constitution, and an abuse of the position they occupy. I consider that this House is not justified in ratifying this contract. The necessities of the case were not so urgent. Why, every time that a little ripple passes over the glassy sea of peace, we are not to take fright and launch out into great expenditures. Every time that England may have a little trouble with Venezeula or some other minor republic on this continent, are we going to justify the Government in making enormous expenditures with the expectation that war is going to take place between us and the United States? I do not think there was any justification for it at all. We know perfectly well that every time a general election is drawing on in the United States, they get up a war scare, and make announcement that there are going to be difficulties, and they do it all for a purpose. We have got accustomed to that kind of thing, we have a repetition of it every three or four years. We listen to these things, we see in the American press the expressions of hostility and bitterness, but England understands all that. Why, Sir, tail-twisting has become a common thing in the United States, and because we see a little exhibition of it now and then, are the people of this country going to be driven into making enormous expenditures for war purposes? Why, we should have to do that every three or four years, whenever a general election takes place in the United States. I have no doubt after the approaching election in the United States something else will arise, some other difficulty may come up and disturb the peaceful horizon of this continent, and then, if hon. gentlemen opposite are in power, they will rush into another contract for two or three millions, with the idea that we are going to have trouble at once. I contend that the course the Government has taken is most objectionable, and should meet with the condemnation of this House. When the representatives of the people were assembled here the Government had no right to enter into this contract without asking our consent. And now, in the dying hours of this session, we are asked to sanction an expenditure of two or three millions for the purpose of purchasing war material, when in reality there was no sufficient justification for it by anything that occurred in the United States.

Mr. LISTER. It is not a matter of scare or no scare so far as the proposed expenditure is concerned. I have no doubt the Government pretended they were scared, whether they were or not. Where it enables them to expend two or three million dollars, they will often get scared, because if there is a Government in the world that likes to spend money, it seems to me that the gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches to-day are just that Government. Now, this militia question has been discussed over and over again in this House for the past thirteen years. It is a notorious fact that the militia of this country is in a thoroughly disorganized condition. The attention of the Government has been called to it session after session, but our representations have fallen upon deaf ears. Soldiers through the country were complaining, session after session, of the material that was supplied to them for clothing, and the Government took no steps to remedy it. Favourites of the Government were supplying this clothing, inferior clothing that the militiamen put on and which would scarcely last a week, in some cases not a day. But suddenly, because the President of the United States, on account of a little apparent trouble between Great Britain and Venezeula, because of a little proclamation issued by the President of the United States for the purpose of catching votes, as the presidential election was coming on, the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches thought fit to get panicky, they became afraid that Canada was going to be invaded, that war was going to take place between the United States and England. Why, Sir, if they live until war takes place between the United States and England they will live to be a great many times older than the oldest of them to-day. But they used that as a pretext for the purpose of expending three millions of the money of the people of this country. The hon. gentleman says it was a critical period. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman thought that it was critical, he honestly believed it was critical, but what did he do ? This proclamation was issued by the President about Christmas time, and Parliament was called on the second day of January. At that very time the hon. gentleman should have asked Parliament for an appropriation. It is not a question of scare, it is not a question so much of the expenditure of money, as it is a deliberate wilful violation of a well-understood principle in the constitution, that the representatives of the people should govern the expenditure of money. Sir, this is not the first time that hon. gentlemen have violated that feature of the constitution. It was convenient for them to have an Act of Parliament passed whereby they might expend hundreds of thousands of dollars by Orders in Council. We all know that the Government of the day have abused the privileges which we gave them of expending the public money by Orders in Council. In this case, I do not suppose any Order in Council was issued, but what do we find ? Parliament met on 2nd January, the panic was over long before this contract was entered into, which was on the 2nd or 3rd of March. No panic existed then, and there was no possible reason why the Government should not have taken Parliament into its confidence at that time. There was no possible danger of creating any feeling in the neighbouring republic or elsewhere, because it is a notorious fact that our militiamen are imperfectly armed, that sooner or latter new arms must be provided for them. So that the excuse of the Minister of Justice that it was on account of the critical condition of affairs at that time falls to the ground because there was nothing critical about the position of affairs then. The crisis had passed, the little ripple had gone over, the storm had cleared away, small as it was. So the reason for the action of the Government at that time ceased to exist. What did hon. gentlemen opposite do ? There was no hurry for buying these arms then, there is no hurry for buying them now. What should have been done ? This Colonel sent over to England may be a very able officer and a thoroughly reliable man—I know nothing about him ; but instead of consulting this officer alone it was the duty of the Government to have consulted the militia officers of the country. The Government had no right to take on themselves the responsibility of sending one man to England to involve this country in contracts to the amount of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000. They exceeded their power, and this indeed is admitted by the Minister of Justice. They sent this officer to England to enter into contracts without having obtained the authority of Parliament ; the Ministry had not such authority, that authority was vested only in Parliament, and so any contract made has been made without the authority of law. The hon. gentleman says in excuse of the Government's action that a crisis was on. I repeat that the crisis had passed. I assert that it was the duty of the Government to have consulted the militia of Canada. But this was not done; everything was carried out in the office of the Minister of Militia. This is the first information as to the steps taken by the Government. While I am always willing to give the Minister of Justice credit for fairness and frankness, because ever since he has occupied an official position he has extended courtesy to every one, and been apparently frank and desirous of doing what is right, I think in this case the hon. gentleman is somewhat disingenuous when he says that it was the crisis which impelled the Government to act as they have done. The hon. gentleman further proceeded to excuse the Government's action by stating that any announcement that Canada was rearming its volunteers might have raised antagonism in the minds of American statesmen. But that reason falls to the ground when it is remembered that in the Speech from the Throne it was announced that such steps were to be taken, and when we remember that in February notice of the resolution now under discussion was placed on the Order paper. I submit that the reason given by the hon. gentleman for the improvident way in which the Government have acted entirely falls to the ground. There was no reason for entering into this contract without first getting the authority of Parliament. Parliament was sitting, and it should have authorized the borrowing of money for the purpose of purchasing those arms. According to the action taken by hon. gentlemen opposite Parliament would be called simply to record the acts of the Government. All constitutional law and responsibility are entirely ignored. The Government upon its own responsibility, without the authority of Parliament, undertakes to enter into contracts involving millions of dollars, and thus commits a direct violation of the constitution, and commits an act which, if recognized by Parliament, virtually abrogates the powers of Parliament as a representative body. There is no use calling 215 members here if the Government of the day can upon its own responsibility undertake to spend the taxes of the people. The Government is really a committee of the House. They have no power unless authorized by Parliament to spend one dollar of the public funds, and if such funds are spent without proper justification they come within condemnation and censure. In the case of an invasion of this country no objection could be or would be taken because all parties would do everything necessary to resist an attack. But no invasion took place, there was no danger of invasion; the difficulty had passed away and peace prevailed. But if there was danger where would we be? Here we are in April, and we have received no new rifles. What would the soldiers have been doing? They would have been fighting with the old rifle. I think the Government by their action have seriously violated the constitution. Under all the circumstances the Government should be severely censured and condemned by Parliament. I believe they will be condemned by the country at large when the true facts become known. This is not a time for unnecessarily embarking the country in enormous expenditure, for thousands of people are at their wit's ends to know how to meet their business engagements; they are loaded down with taxation, they are without markets, business is prostrated and people are fortunate who are able to make ends meet at the end of the year, and many thousands and tens of thousands are in actual want of the necessaries of life. Yet at such a time as this Government are rolling up the public debt by millions, increasing the annual expenditure, and making it utterly impossible for an incoming government to reduce taxation. In four years no less than $15,000,000 have been added to the public debt in addition to an enormous amount of taxation taken from the people. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite will declare that we are not spending enough money, that the public expenditure should be $40,000,000. That no doubt will be the amount this year, and our expenditure will be so large that it will be necessary to borrow in the English market $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 to meet our obligations, and during this year we shall no doubt add millions to our public debt. This is a time when we should go slowly. This is a time when we should give the people of the country a chance to recuperate, a chance to get upon their feet. This is a time when we expect the Government of the country to help the people, instead of loading them down by enormous increases to the debt of the country. This Government seems to be forgetful of their duty to the people. They seem to think that the money belongs to them, that the stream from which they have taken it will keep on flowing, and that they can expend it as they think proper, whether it be in the interest of the country or not, so long as it is spent in a way that will keep themselves in power. Sir, the conduct of the Government should be condemned. In violating the constitution they are disregarding the best interests of the country, and I believe that when we appeal in a short time to the electorate, the people of this country will declare in no uncertain voice, that the Government have been false stewards indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to say just a word or two with reference to this. We have been now about two hours on this resolution. It has been very thoroughly discussed, and we have been able to draw several conclusions from the tone of the discussion which has taken place. There is other very important business, and if it is the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite that this resolution shall not be passed, and the Government shall not be put in funds to keep its obligation, why, we might as well recognize that in time and go on to some other business that hon. gentlemen opposite will feel disposed to allow us to do. The constitutional ground, was taken by the early speakers in the debate, and urged with a great deal of force. To a great extent it was acquiesced in by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, but it is not unimportant to briefly review the state of things as they actually were, not as they appear to us now. The hon. gentlemen who have spoken last, have diverged from the first argument, and the member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) have left the ground of any unconstitutionality, and have taken bold and strong ground against any expenditure for the militia at all, so far as the armaments are concerned. I have no doubt, Sir, that these two hon. gentlemen largely voice what is the real sentiment of hon. gentlemen opposite, clothe it however much they may under the constitutional garb. Very well, Sir, here we are. In December of last year a state of circumstances arose, which hon. gentlemen opposite are quite at liberty now to discount as harmless tail twisting, and the like of that. It was not so considered by the people of this country. It was not so considered by the people of Great Britain, and I do not think there is any circumstance that has taken place within my memory, at least, in connection with which feelings were drawn so tensely between the different members of the great Anglo-Saxon world as they were during December of last year. At that time the Government was here and the Parliament was not. And, acting as in an emergency, the Government thought it would not be doing its duty, if it did not take immediate steps to put the militia of this country, so far as arms and armaments were concerned, into a state of efficiency for whatever might happen to the extent with which as we could reasonably do it. It was under that sense of duty that the Government acted. Hon. gentlemen opposite have made much of the fact, that after Parliament met, the Government did not at once take Parliament into its confidence to a large extent. In the Speech from the Throne the Government made a discreet allusion to the fact, that expenditure would be called for under this head, and in the debate upon the Address there was not a single gentleman on the other side of the House, who at the time took exception to the expenditure which would be proposed in pursuance of that paragraph of the Speech. Well, Sir, matters having commenced before Parliament met in session, they went on. The circumstances of the session were somewhat exceptional. On the 25th February this resolution was placed on the records of the House, but, Sir, when the Budget speech was delivered—and that was early in the session—a rather full explanation was made by myself as to the expenditure which would be called for under the head of militia, and hon. gentlemen opposite, who opposed the policy of the Government in other respects, did not take occasion at that time to utter one word of dissent against the proposition which I plainly stated there with regard to the expenditure for putting the militia into an adequate state, so far as arms were concerned. Not only did they not take exception to it, Sir, but gentleman after gentleman on that side of the House, as well as on our side of the House, expressed their earnest sympathy with the effort which was outlined there, and their sympathy with such an expenditure within reasonable bounds. I remember expressions that were used to the effect, that any expenditure within reasonable grounds, to put the militia of the country in a state of efficiency as far as arms were concerned, would have their sympathy and their co-operation. More than that, Sir, when afterwards a resolution of sympathy was before this House and was spoken to by hon. gentlemen on both sides, in which the idea of mutual co-operation in the way of defence was one of the strong elements ; gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, vied with gentlemen on this side, in expressing their sympathy, and in expressing their co-operation with these endeavours on our part to place ourselves in accord with what seemed to be the perils, and the exigencies, and the demands of that time. So that from the first up, so long as Parliament has been here, there has been no attempt on the part of the Government to conceal from Parliament that expenditures were taking place, and that these expenditures would be considered. Here we are at the present time, having, because we felt it was our duty in the first place to initiate the expenditure, and having informed Parliament that such expenditure was being carried on and that a vote would be asked for, as I did most explicitly in the Budget address, having done that, we are under these obligations. These obligations ought to be met, and it rests with this Parliament as to whether or not they shall be met. Granted, that hon. gentlemen who oppose this, take as strong ground as is possible on the constitutional question, do they take the responsibility of refusing to pass a measure which will put us in a position to fulfil the obligations which at that time, every member of this House—certainly the great majority—thought, were obligations, which for the peace and security of this country, ought to be taken, and ought to be cheerfully met. Sir, I think this is somewhat of a comment upon that splendid feeling which was evoked in Great Britain, on account of the sentiment in Canada, which was so much lauded by prominent men on the other side of the water, and which raised Canada so high in their estimation, as a colony of people whose interests were so closely allied with those of the mother country, that they threw their lot in with the lot of Britain, and were willing to make common cause with her in the defence of a common country. It is rather an instructive, and I do not think an altogether praiseworthy comment upon that, when a few weeks afterwards we are asked to authorize the money to pay the expenditure, to put our own troops into that state of efficiency, that we should have so many hours wasted, and so evident a disposition not to put the Government into a position to carry out these obligations, and to discharge them for that purpose, which I believe at that time no one in this House thought anything else of, than that it was a worthy purpose.

I do not speak thus in the way of finding fault. I want to state the circumstances such as they are, and I have stated them frankly and clearly. What are you going to do about it ? Make your strictures, if you choose, if we have not done what we ought to have done, according to constitutional practice. But here we are with this condition of things. Do you believe that our militia should be well armed ? If so, are you going to grant the means to put them in a proper condition of equipment ? which both sides of the House acknowledge they require. I think we ought to take a sensible view of this matter, and at this hour of the session make up our minds whether we are going to pass this measure or not. If we are not, we cannot do it. I frankly admit that we are in the hands of the Opposition, and I appeal to the leader of the House, the leader of the Opposition, to say whether or not we may expect to be met with co-operation in this measure, and have it passed. If we see that we are not to be so met, we may as well yield to the inevitable, and pass to some other order of business, on which we can agree. There are several orders of great importance as well as this one. It is only in the interest of business and the rapid conduct of the business that I ask that we should come to a conclusion speedily. If this is not to pass, let us come to that conclusion, and we will go on to some other order of business, rather than tire ourselves out and retard the progress we might otherwise make. I would like to appeal to my hon. friend whether or not we are to have his co-operation in passing the Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the hon. member has been perfectly fair in his statement of this case. He cannot properly say that an hour and a half or two hours' discussion on a vote of $3.000.000 is a very unreasonable or a very unusual thing. But I would just recall to his attention the fact that on the 31st of January, something like forty days before this contract was actually signed, the hon. gentleman was requested by myself to let us know what the Government were doing, and he refused to do so. Now, under the circumstances I think the hon. gentleman—I told him so at the time—should have complied with my request. He should have stated in his Budget speech what he then well knew, what the requirements were, and should have brought down to us, promptly, the actual contract, or at least the information of whatever was likely to be required, and had the discussion then and there. That would have been far more satisfactory to the House, and would have been in accordance with constitutional practice, and with common sense and business habits, and would have avoided all this discussion. I do not think the hon. gentleman has any right to say that my hon. friends have, in the least degree, refused to do whatever was reasonable for the purpose of supplying a fair armament for our militia. That was not their contention at all. They know, and we all know, that they had it in their power, if they wished, to refuse it ; but that was not their contention. But I think even the most determined jingo would admit that the Parliament of a free country has the right to know at the earliest possible moment, what amount of money the Government require, and what arrangements are made ; and it is very much to be regretted that the hon. gentleman did not accept our invitation at the time he made his Budget statement. If he had done so, all this trouble would have been avoided. The criticism has been fairly made, as was admitted by the Minister of Justice, that a Government has no right to enter into contracts while Parliament is sitting without consulting Parliament, or at least letting Parliament know what they are doing, and that is quite a different thing from acting in an emergency when Parliament is not sitting. That is the point. There was no difficulty whatever in the way of the Government taking Parliament into their confidence and obtaining its full consent and concurrence. If there is any trouble now, it is simply due to the unfortunate reticence of the hon. gentleman on the 31st January, which I commented on at the time. The House must remember that I tried again and again, for the purpose of avoiding such complications as have now arisen, to wring out of the hon. gentleman some statement as to what the Government wanted or proposed to do. It is a matter of great regret to me that they did not tell us. The hon. gentleman must have known at the time, or a cable to his agent in England would have obtained the information. I told him at the time that it was a most ostrich-like proceeding—that there was no need to be alarmed at the effect on the nerves of the American people, if that was what he feared, of the fact that Canada wanted to borrow three or four or five millions for the purpose of arming the Canadian militia. All this trouble is due to the unhappy disposition which the Government have shown on different occasions not to take Parliament into their confidence. All through, for years, at the time of the Budget statement, when we ought to have information of all these matters, the Government have been keeping things at the back of their head—whether in regard to railway or military subsidies it did not matter. They would not make a fair, frank and honest statement at the time. when the thing could be discussed. And when this matter is laid over to the last days of the session, and a discussion arises upon it, the hon. gentleman makes it a question of loyalty. Well, that is absurd. This side of the House has always been ready to grant what is necessary for the defence of the country; but when large sums of money are being voted, we require to know for what purposes they are to be expended ; and we have reason enough to know that the Government cannot be entrusted with the expenditure of large sums of money without constitutional safeguards. Now, Sir, it is late in the session, I admit, and we cannot have this matter discussed as fully as we would like, but I wish to point out that if any trouble has arisen, it is due wholly to the hon. gentleman's own unfortunate reticence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Even at this late hour of the night, I do not propose to allow the Finance Minister to make the statements he has made unchallenged. In the first place, he may as well learn, what we have been trying to impress upon him session after session, that the old plan of holding back important measures until all the members are tired, and slipping them through at the end of the session, and begging members not to occupy the time of the House, has seen its day,and can never be repeated again. That old plan has seen its day and cannot be repeated. The people of this country will not submit to railway subsidies and grants of millions being brought down at the last moment and members being asked to curb their criticism owing to the short time at their disposal. In this particular case, the Opposition are not open to any of the strictures of the hon. gentleman. In the first place, the magnitude of the sum we are asked to spend would justify more than the two hours' discussion given it. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in his statement that the expenditure was incurred while Parliament was not sitting or that Parliament was taken into the confidence of the Government from time to time. The gentleman who left this country with authority to spend this money did not leave until Parliament had met. The Government had advised the world that Parliament was to be called upon to give its authority to spend the money necessary to put the militia force in a better state of efficiency, and it was the bounden duty of the Government before incurring any expenditure, to submit to Parliament the resolution now before it. They did not do that, and when pressed, time and again, for a commission, refused to give it.

Mr. FOSTER. Time and again ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, I brought it up myself once.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was brought up time and again, and the hon. gentleman never gave any information. He never told us that this contract had been entered into. We learn that for the first time to-night, and I submit that his appeal to us to make our little conventional protest and let the thing pass is an insult. We are not here to make conventional protests. We ask Parliament to make a solemn, serious protest of a kind that will prevent the repetition of this thing. There is no use in making protests which are not to be effective. It is childish, if not insulting, to ask us to pass this resolution on the ground that it is a loyal move. That is not what we are discussing. Whether the expenditure is justifiable or not is another matter.

Mr. FOSTER. You say it is not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Your side did.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We have confined ourselves to saying that the course of the Government has been unconstitutional and they ought to be censured. As far as I am personally concerned, I expressed the opinion that the Government should not now ask for a dollar of money except what is absolutely essential to carry out their obligations. So far as the million dollars is concerned, the hon. gentleman is not justified in asking Parliament for it all.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not asking Parliament for it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So far as the other is concerned, Parliament may, after recording its solemn opinion that the course of the Government is bad, authorize it.

Mr. FOSTER. When ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) At any time.

Mr. FOSTER. It would have been in the Estimates last week——

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We have not had the Estimates before us.

Mr. FOSTER. You would not allow them to come in.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is inaccurate, as usual.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, he has persistently fought the approach of the Estimates since Thursday of last week.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have done nothing of the kind. There has been neither persistence nor obstruction, nor fighting off the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know what else you would call it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not know that the hon. gentleman attempted to go into the Estimates but twice, and then for a very short time and at a very late hour. He is not going to escape from the point before us by irrelevant statements of that kind. The point which I tried to emphasize was that by the very insulting reference to the action of the Opposition and by the attempt to show that we ought to be content wih making a little conventional opposition, and then leave things go, the hon. gentleman is simply trifling with the House. We are not content to let the thing go, and if it passes the hon. gentleman may consider himself exceedingly fortunate if he only gets off with two hours' discussion when the merits have not been one-half discussed as they ought to be.

The committee reported.

RAILWAY ACT.

Mr. HAGGART moved second reading of Bill (No. 90) further to amend the Railway Act. He said: The object is to make valid certain resolutions which were passed by the different railway companies to do things which they had the power to do under bylaw. It is to allow them to do certain acts by resolution which they had hitherto done by by-law. The Bill thoroughly explains itself. The exact change is that it authorizes to do by resolution certain things which the company have power to do by by law.

Mr. LISTER. I think that the object of the Bill is to cure certain irregularities in the appointments and superannuation of servants of railway companies. As a matter of fact some of the servants who had been with the company for many years were superannuated and their superannuation provided for by resolution instead of by law as the Act required; and the object of this measure, as I understand, it to validate what has been done and to enable them to superannuate by resolution. I think it meets with the approval of all the railway companies and I do not see that there should be any objection to it.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Sir Charles Tupper:

> That on Monday next and following days until the close of the session, the House shall meet at 10.30 a.m., with a recess from 1 until 2 p.m.; that there shall be two distinct sittings on each day, one from 10.30 a.m. until 6 p.m., and the other from 7.30 p.m. until hour of adjournment; the Government business shall have precedence at such sittings, and that private Bills will be taken up for one hour only at the beginning of the evening sittings of Monday and Wednesday.

Mr. HAGGART. I move in amendment that instead of "Monday" in the first line the word "Wednesday" be substituted, and in the last line the words "Monday and" be struck out.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is Wednesday now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You had better make it "Wednesday to-day" instead of "Wednesday next."

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no objection either to the amendment or to the motion. I think it is fair enough. But I suppose the hon. gentleman will agree to sit not later than one o'clock at the evening sitting.

Mr. FOSTER. It is pretty near one o'clock now.

Mr. LAURIER. If you sit from 10.30 a.m. to 1. a.m., that should be enough.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we are not disposed to be unreasonable, and it would be better for my hon. friend not to seek to tie us down. We shall not sit unreasonably long.

Mr. LAURIER. That is very elastic.

Amendment (Mr. Haggart) agreed to.

SUPPLY—SOULANGES CANAL.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster:

> That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LISTER. I take this opportunity of resenting to some extent the statement made by the Minister of Finance that the Opposition have been fighting the Estimates. The inference that the hon. gentleman wished to be drawn from that statement was that the Opposition were resisting the efforts of the Government to get into Committee of Supply for merely obstruction purposes. I would remind the hon. gentleman that for two long months after meeting here this session we did practically nothing. Instead of the Estimates being handed to hon. members of this House, and instead of the Government taking advantage of the time it then had to have these Estimates discussed and passed, the Government were fighting among themselves to decide which faction should have supremacy.

Mr. FOSTER. Refer us to the page in "Hansard." All that has been said a hundred times.

Mr. LISTER. That will be read again, and when the hon. gentleman is present too. When I remind the House that the subject I am about to discuss involves the possible loss to this country of three-quarters of a million dollars, hon. gentlemen will understand that it is a matter of sufficient importance to engage the attention of the House and to justify us in directing to it the attention of the country. The Opposition would be recreant in the discharge of that duty which they owe to the country, if they allowed these scandalous transactions which have been brought to the attention of the House in connection with the Soulanges Canal, to pass unchallenged. Sir, I think the people of the country will understand the importance of the subject, and I think there will be a greatful feeling extended to the Opposition in this House for having prevented the Government from paying out of the public funds of Canada to one contractor, $210,000 for work alleged to have been done, and which was in fact never earned, and to other contractors upon the same canal, who would have been entitled to demand in like manner from the Government, payment of sums aggregating $500,000, making, as I said before, $750,000 in all. I say that the passing of a Supply Bill, when we consider the fact that Parliament must meet again within a few short weeks, is insignificant and not to be compared with the importance of the subject which has been discussed, and which I propose briefly to discuss this evening. Sir, what are the facts connected with this important transaction? A statement of the facts is all that is necessary to enable any man of common understanding to come to the conclusion that if a trusty officer had not stood between the Government and the people, the treasury of Canada would have been depleted to the extent of $750,000 for the purpose of paying a claim which, to use a slang phrase, was as bogus a claim as was ever presented. I think the people of this country have a right to be thankful that there is an officer standing between the Government and the people, who is at all times prepared fearlessly to discharge the duty which the law casts upon him, that no smiles and no frowns from the Government, or any member of it, will induce him to shrink for a single moment for the discharge of those duties. Sir, we have a right to be thankful, in addition, that there is an engineer in the employment of the Government who is not pliant, who is prepared at all costs to stand up as he should do in defence of the interests of the country at large. The country has two trustworthy officers through whose action Canada has been saved the enormous sum of $750,000. Sir, let us look for a moment at the facts of the case as they undoubtedly stand. Mr. George Goodwin, the contractor, is a friend of the Administration, and we know from past history how the contractors of this country, many of them, stand towards the Administration of the day. If my information is correct, Mr. George Goodwin has on one occasion subscribed $5,000 to the election funds of the Conservative party. George Goodwin is known to be a supporter of the Conservative party, he is known to be a close friend of some members of the Administration, and the persistency and pertinacity with which he pursued that claim, shows that he had some reason for believing that ultimately, when the proper time came, probably this claim would be allowed. Three years ago he first put in the claim against the Government. He was a contractor for certain sections on the Soulanges Canal. Under the terms of his contract he was bound to do certain excavating for 20 cents a yard, and he was bound to build a water-tight embankment for 15 cents a yard. That embankment was to be built out of the excavation of the canal, and all the waste material beyond what was necessary for the construction of the water-tight embankment, was to be placed wherever the engineer in charge told him to put it, and he was bound to put it there without extra charge. In other words, he was entitled to 20 cents a yard for the excavation, and he was entitled to 15 cents a yard for a water-tight embankment wherever that embankment was necessary to be made. All the other excavations were to be taken out by him and placed in such position as the engineer in charge thought proper to direct him to place it. Well, the work went on, and Mr. George Goodwin, the friend of the Government, thought he saw an opportunity of making something in addition to what he was entitled to under the contract; so he puts in a claim against the Government, and claims 15 cents per yard for all the waste that was taken out of the canal and put in the place where the engineer in charge directed him to put it, when, as a matter of fact, he had no right under the contract to one single farthing, for the contract provided that no charge should be made for that work, the contract provided that he should put it where the engineer directed him to put it, and that he should receive nothing for putting it there. But no one, perhaps, knew better than the contractor that he might get something out of it, and he put in a claim in 1893 to the department, claiming to be paid for the waste excavation at the rate of 15 cents per yard, amounting to $210,000. Sir, we have heard about figuring up and figuring down. We know that the dealings between the Government, and contractors in some cases, have not been square and above board. We know, as a matter of fact, to-day that the country was robbed of nearly a million dollars in the city of Quebec by the contractors there, McGreevy and Connolly; and we know, because it has been sworn to, that these public contractors who had received nearly a million dollars more than they were entitled to receive, contributed nearly $200,000 to the election funds of the Conservative party. We know that, and we know moreover that a Minister of the Crown did not object to taking from public contractors a portion of the subsidy which had been granted by Parliament to those contractors for the purposes of swelling the election funds of the Conservative party. We know all these things, and therefore we have a right to be suspicious when any gross wrong-doing has been discovered such as has been discovered in the case now under consideration. What does Goodwin do? Why, Sir, in 1893 it is suggested to his bright mind that, under all the circumstances, he could make a claim and induce the Government of the day to pay him for this waste excavation $210,000. He makes the claim to the Department of Railways and Canals. The claim is referred to the then Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson. The advice of the engineers was first taken on the claim. Mr. Monro, in charge of the work, reported that the contractor was not entitled to anything; he reported distinctly and decidedly against any claim. In addition to the report of Mr. Monro, we have the reports of his assistants, both of whom reported that under the contract, Mr. Goodwin had no claim against the Government for the work on which he based his claim, and if any one reads the contract it is difficult to imagine how, whether he is a lawyer or a layman, he can conclude that Goodwin is entitled to anything for the claim made on the Government. Section 7 of the contract says:

> No allowance whatever beyond the prices tendered for excavation will be made for haul. The surplus material arising from the prism, &c., on section 7 shall, after making up the banks on that section, be carried forward to widen the embankments of sections to the eastward; and the surplus of section 6 shall be dealt with in the same manner, so that all the excavation arising from the section embracing this contract west of lock 5 will be disposed of in making the embankment on each side of the summit level stations 118 and 460; filling around the various structures. This distribution of material to be made as will be directed by the engineer without entitling the contractor to any extra allowances whatever. The attention of parties tendering is specially drawn to this section of the specification.

The language of that section of the specification is so plain that it is difficult to imagine how any one could construe it in any way other than the construction placed upon it by Mr. Monro and his assistants. But that was the construction placed upon it, not only by those gentlemen, but by the chief engineer, Mr. Schreiber. He reported to the department that Goodwin had no claim. So we have Mr. Schreiber, chief engineer, a man eminent in his profession, possessing wide experience, accustomed to construe these contracts, reporting that Goodwin had no claim. Mr. Monro, the engineer in charge of the work, and his assistants, reported to the same effect. Mr. Goodwin protested; he knew what he had done for the Government, and he hoped that by pressing his claim the time might come when it would be allowed. He haunted the office of the department, and went personally to the Minister of Justice; he wrote letters, put in claims, and day after day he sought to have the claim allowed. We had as Minister of Justice at that time, a very eminent man, without speaking disrespectfully of subsequent incumbents of the office, Sir John Thompson was a very eminent man, an able lawyer, and history will record that he was as honest a statesman as we ever had in this country. Sir John Thompson read the papers, and he gave an opinion covering three or four sheets of type-written paper, and he reported that Goodwin had no claim against the Government. It might be thought that this would have been an end to the Goodwin claim against the Government, and he would have ceased to press his so-called claim. People who thought that did not understand Goodwin. A change took place. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was appointed Minister of Justice. He went into the office, and if we look at the papers on file, we will see that Goodwin personally interviewed the Minister, that the Minister wrote saying that was not a proper method to take, that Goodwin had no right to go and interview him personally, that his claim was against the Government, that the Minister of Justice was adviser of the different departments, and he could only take his instructions from the Department of Railways and Canals. By the tone of the Minister's letter, it was evident that he did not wish to have Goodwin call and interview him personally, but that Goodwin did so is evident from a letter on the file. We do not know what took place in the Department of the Minister of Justice any more than the fact that the representations made by Goodwin so persistently in pressing his claim at last induced Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper to have an examination of that claim. I do not know whether the Minister, on a perusal of the papers had not come to the conclusion that Goodwin had no claim, or that he had not agreed with the opinion which Sir John Thompson had given. There is no paper on the file which throws any light on that portion of the case. At all events, it was determined by the Minister of Justice that the engineers should be called and examined. A day was fixed for the examination of all parties, and I believe the Minister of Justice, in making that investigation was desirous of satisfying Goodwin, that he was willing to go as far as possible in investigating his claim. The engineers were called; they were examined in the office of the Minister of Justice, and the evidence given by them strengthens the position taken by the former Minister of Justice that Goodwin had no claim and he could have no claim under the terms of the contract. After that examination occurred one would have thought that the Minister of Justice would, after having gone over all the papers, and heard the evidence given by the engineer in his presence, have left for the guidance of his deputy a memorandum setting forth the facts and the decision at which he had arrived regarding the claim. That should have been on file for the benefit of the Deputy Minister, and in order that he might communicate to the Department of Railways and Canals the opinion of the Minister of Justice. But no such communication is on file. As to what decision which the Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) came to, it is impossible to say, because there is nothing on record to show what took place. He told us, and the letter from the Deputy Minister of Justice also shows, that the decision of the department was that the claim of Goodwin should be paid. When did the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) come to that decision, and when did the examination of these witnesses take place ? It is evident that there was no decision come to by the ex-Minister of Justice, although he says that he formed the opinion that the claim was allowable, and that the facts were not all before Sir John Thompson when he gave his opinion against this claim. I listened to the hon. gentleman carefully, for the purpose of trying to see if he could give any sound reason for differing from the opinion of Sir John Thompson. I was unable to discover any reason in his speech, why he should have differed from the opinion given by Sir John Thompson. I take it for granted that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper will to-day admit that he was in error. I may assume from the remarks which the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Dickey) made, that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper made a grave error when he advised in any way, that the Government should pay the claim of Goodwin. All the engineers of the Government denied liability, Sir John Thompson had given an opinion that there was no liability, and Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was assuming a tremendous responsibility when he advised to the contrary. His manifest duty under the circumstances was to have said to Mr. Goodwin : In the face of all these opinions against you, I cannot undertake to act upon my own judgment, although I may be favourably inclined to you ; the amount involved is too great for me to take the responsibility upon my own shoulders of recommending its payment, but if you think you have a claim, the Crown will consent that you should prosecute it in the Exchequer Court. In that way the hon. gentleman would have been relieved from the responsibility, and if Goodwin had a claim he would have obtained his money, and if his claim was without colour of right he would have been defeated in the lawsuit. Be that as it may, what do we find ? There is no record in reference to the matter in the Department of Justice. We have the statement of the former Minister of Justice, that after the conspiracy had ripened against the Prime Minister, and when he and six others resigned, as he was vacating his office he says that he spoke to the Deputy Minister of Justice, and told him that the claim of Goodwin should be allowed. Sir, the Deputy Minister of Justice made no record of that at all. If he had received that statement from the Minister of Justice, and looked upon it as an opinion to be acted upon, his duty would have been to at once advise the Department of Railways and Canals. But there was no action taken on the part of the Deputy Minister of Justice to notify the Railway Department that the ex-Minister (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said that the claim was to be allowed. Nothing was done, until, as Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper himself tells us, when he had ceased to be Minister, when he had ceased to have the power to exercise any of the functions of the office, when another Minister was in charge of the department, he goes back and speaks to the Deputy, and tells him again that Goodwin's claim was to be allowed. Why did he not go and see the then Minister of Justice (Mr. Dickey) ? He had no right to go to the Deputy Minister of Justice at all. His plain duty was to have gone to the actual Minister, and to have stated to him : I came to such and such an opinion upon this case, and if you agree with me, you should direct the Deputy Minister to inform the Department of Railways and Canals. But no communication took place between the ex-Minister (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and the acting Minister on the subject. Is that the way in which the work of the Department of Justice is discharged ? If that is the way the servants of the country act, who are paid $8,000 a year to discharge their duties, then, Sir, I am sorry for the country, because I will venture to say that in the office of the most obscure country lawyer, you will find records of opinions, given and records of what action has been taken. But, in this, the largest law office of the country, with all its clerks, with all its servants, with everything to enable the work to be done as perfectly as possible, there is no record whatever upon this very important matter. The astounding statement is made to this House, that when Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper ceased to be Minister of Justice, when he had no power to interfere with the department, he goes back to the deputy, and tells him that this claim of Goodwin should be allowed. The deputy evidently did not think the statement made by the retiring Minister of Justice was to be acted upon, because as a matter of fact he took no action upon it, and it was not until the interview of the ex-Minister of Justice with the deputy that any step was taken at all ; and what was it ? Why, as soon as the ex-Minister of Justice had told the deputy that this claim ought to have been allowed, the deputy writes to the Department of Railways informing that department of the decision of the ex-Minister of Justice ; and within three short days afterwards we find an order from the Department of Railways to the Auditor General, to issue a cheque for the payment of the claim of Mr. Goodwin. The Auditor General, under the statute, if he thinks that for any reason a claim should not be paid, has a right to take independent legal advice as to the validity of the claim. The Auditor General asked for the papers and read them, and became satisfied that the claim of Goodwin was not a valid claim, and he refused to pay it ; and, for the purpose of fortifying himself in that position, he took advantage of the provision of the statute and wrote to Mr. Lash, an eminent lawyer in the city of Toronto, who had been formerly Deputy Minister of Justice, sending him all the papers, and asking him for an opinion as to the responsibility of the Government to pay the claim. Mr. Lash, after considering the whole question, writes a long opinion, going over all the facts, and advising, as all others had advised, that Goodwin had no claim against the Government. But the Minister of Railways says that opinion does not mean anything, because, forsooth, if the Minister of Justice refused to pay the claim, it would have to go before the Treasury board, and the Treasury board would have to pass judgment upon it before the money could be paid—in other words, the Treasury board would have to overrule the decision of the Auditor General before the money could be paid. The Treasury board, I suppose, acts upon the advice of the Minister of Justice. The advice which the Minister of Justice had given to the Department of Railways, as conveyed in the letter of the Deputy Minister, would, I apprehend, in the opinion of the Treasury board, be good law in the case. So that if the matter had gone before the Treasury board, the Treasury board would have been confronted with the opinion which the Deputy Minister said the Minister had given, namely, that it was a claim which Goodwin was entitled to recover from the country ; and upon that opinion, the Treasury board would have overruled the decision of the Auditor General and directed that the money should be paid to Mr. Goodwin. But, Sir, the country found out something about this matter ; the people's representatives found out something about it ; the newspapers found out something about it. Look over the reports of the cases that come before the Treasury board, and you will find that the Auditor General does not count for much when he refuses. You will find that he is overruled always—that he is hardly ever, if ever, sustained ; and if this case had not been made public, the chances are that the Auditor General's decision would have been overruled by the Treasury board, acting on the opinion conveyed to the Minister of Railways by the Deputy Minister of Justice. So far as Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice is concerned, I say he had no right to act upon the request of the ex-Minister of Justice, made after he had retired from office. I say it was the bounden duty of the Deputy Minister of Justice, before he wrote that letter, to go to the acting Minister of Justice and get his consent to the transmission of the so-called opinion to the Department of Railways before he wrote it at all. But, strange to say, there was no communication between the acting Minister of Justice and the Deputy Minister of Justice in regard to this claim at all. The acting Minister of Justice does not appear to have had it before him or to have seen the papers, and the Deputy Minister of Justice was at fault and was censurable for having dared to write that letter to the Department of Railways without the sanction of his chief at that time. The chances are that had the acting Minister of Justice seen this contract, he would have given the same opinion as Mr. Lash, Sir John Thompson, and all the engineers, namely, that George Goodwin had no claim against the Government whatever. None of these steps were taken ; but, fortunately for the country, it was found out in some way that this claim of Mr. Goodwin was not a valid claim, and we have the assurance of the present Minister of Justice that the claim will not be paid, at all events until Goodwin has established his claim in a court of law. I do not think there is any danger that Goodwin will ever resort to a court of law. I think we have heard the last of this claim. I hope we shall hear no more of it. I hope that when Mr. Goodwin attempts to get the payment of it again, as he no doubt will, the Minister of Justice will say to him : "That claim cannot be paid, because it is not a just claim, and under no circumstances will the Government allow it." This is a matter which cannot be ventilated too often because it is just as bad, so far as a claim of this kind is concerned, to be careless and ignorant as it is to be dishonest. The effect is all the same on the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite handle millions upon millions every year and evidently have come to look upon millions as we do upon five dollar notes. What does $210,000 amount to ? We have the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways, as a matter of fact, he knew nothing about the letter having been received by his Deputy Minister, that the correspondence was handed to the Deputy in his department, and that he himself knew nothing about it. That is the statement of the hon. gentleman. I do not suppose that any one will pretend that Mr. Goodwin did not go to him more than once for recognition of this claim, but, at all events, the hon. gentleman has told the House that the communication from the Minister of Justice to his department was not given to him. At all events, we have the fact that the letter, which is written by Mr. Balderson, the Secretary of his Department, directed that this money should be paid, and that letter must have been written under instructions either from the Minister himself or his deputy, the chief engineer in that department. There is this fact which tells against the hon. gentleman's position. The deputy in his own department or the chief engineer (Mr. Schreiber) had reported against this claim ; and if what the hon. gentleman says is correct, then the deputy and the officials in the department, knowing that this claim had been reported against, knowing that the lawyers had reported against it, knowing that the department generally had refused to pay it, and knowing that the Minister of Justice had reported against it—we have to accept the statement that the deputy in his department, without his knowledge, knowing all these facts, took upon himself the responsibility of directing that this claim should be paid. Be that as it may, however, we have the satisfaction of knowing that the country, through the vigilance of the Auditor General and through the action of the Opposition in this House, has been saved over $750,000.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Department of Agriculture.—To provide for the employment of H. B. Small, two months at $140.45	$ 280 90

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does that come to be asked for ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Small is a very old officer of the department. When I went into the department, I made a general reorganization of the department. In that reorganization, I retired Mr. Small and appointed in his place Mr. Jarvis, and I thus saved Mr. Jarvis' salary by that means, because the vacancy made by his promotion was not filled. In order that Mr. Small, who was a very faithful old officer, should be fairly dealt with, I had intended to give him a couple of months leave of absence, as no years were added to his term, and then superannuate him, but a mistake was made in the Order in Council, and he was superannuated a couple of months before I intended.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How old is he ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Between 65 and 70.

Mr. GIBSON. He is one of the best officers in the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The head of the department must be the judge, and I think that any one looking into the department will see that I did what was best for the service.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is he in good health ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is his allowance ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will tell the hon. gentleman in a minute.

Mr. McMULLEN. As this is a question of superannuation, I think it an opportune moment to draw the attention of the committee to the number of superannuations that hon. gentlemen opposite have made during the past year. I find that they have taken advantage of the Act to retire a whole host of civil servants. Up to the 31st December, 1895, they retired under the Act within the year 111 officials. The gross amount of allowance is $62,068.64. They retired five, after granting a gratuity of $2,610, which leaves the net sum of $59,458.64 of an annual charge upon the revenue of this Dominion as long as those 106 superannuated officials live. They have added, under the figures I have given 106 to the superannuation list. They have superannuated in all during the last five years in which hon. gentlemen opposite have been in power, 320, and have added to the annual outlay on superannuation during these five years $170,158.62. The expenditure under superannuation would now be about $100,000 a year and the receipts $67,000, which would leave a net loss of only $33,000 ; but owing to the additions they made to the lists during the last five years they have been in power, the outlay is now over $300,000 a year, and the receipts only $67,000, which makes a net loss to the country of $233,000 a year. This superannuation system has been so utilized by hon. gentlemen opposite that we have enormous additions to the drain upon the country's resources year after year. The actual drain made during the years this Government have been in existence, the amount paid up to the 30th June, 1896, to those they have added to the list in the five years is $307,297.10. That is the amount paid out to superannuated officials whom they have placed upon the lists from the time they took office up to the 30th December last. The amount that I have stated, $110,700, will continue to be paid to the superannuated officers as long as these men live. I understand that gentlemen opposite claim that they are saving the country large sums of money each year by the application of the superannuation system to these officials. But when we consider that they have superannuated the number I have stated within one year, it is perfectly plain that the system is abused. When we come to examine these cases we find that men are superannuated and others are appointed who receive the same salaries. Take the case of the Assistant Receiver General in Toronto. I think Campbell was his name. He got a very large superannuation allowance, something over $2,000 a year and Mr. Creighton was appointed in his place—at a reduced salary ? Not for a moment. He received the same salary that Mr. Campbell received before he was superannuated.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And he is not much older than Mr. Creighton.

Mr. McMULLEN. About the same age, I believe. When a political friend of gentlemen opposite presses very strongly upon the Government for some comfortable place to retire for the rest of his life, some other man is superannuated upon a large retiring allowance and the favourite is appointed. If gentlemen opposite are prepared to challenge the statements I have made, I am ready to give the name of every man they have placed on the superannuation list for five years to prove the accuracy of the statement I have made.

Mr. McSHANE. I desire to ask the hon. Minister a question. I understand that when he became the head of the department he superannuated four or five officers. I have heard a good deal about that. I am sorry that there are no French Canadians here at present. I do not want to raise any question of race or religion, but if he has discharged any French Canadians or Irish Catholics, I would like to know why he discharged them. Were they unfit for their duties ? And were others appointed in their places ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have no hesitation in answering the hon. gentleman squarely. I trust that no man in this House thinks that any Minister in either a Liberal or a Conservative government, in dealing with the question of reorganizing his department, would stoop so low and so far neglect his duty as to consider what church an officer attended or to what nationality he belonged. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to say to this House and to this country——

Mr. McSHANE. That is not answering my question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will answer the question if the hon. gentleman will have the decency to listen to me for a moment. So far as I am concerned, I do not consider where a man worships or what nationality he belongs to. It has been my fate to think it my duty to reorganize both the departments in which I have been. When this charge was made against me in connection with the national and religious cry, I took the opportunity of looking up the superannuations I had made both in the State Department and in the Department of Agriculture, and I discovered that all the ground there was for the charge that some hon. gentleman had felt called upon to make, the charge insinuated by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. McShane)——

Mr. McSHANE. I did not make a charge. I asked a question based upon what I had heard.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am very glad the hon. gentleman does not make a charge. I have only to say that I looked up the nationality and religion of the men I had superannuated. Speaking from memory—the hon. gentleman will find the figures in the newspaper interview I gave—there were five Protestants and about four or five Catholics. Until the charge was made I had never thought of this phase of the question. When I went into the State Department and later when I went into the Agricultural Department, whether hon. gentlemen opposite will believe it or not, I made an honest effort so to reorganize the departments as to get the best service possible. In the Agricultural Department I retired four or five men, and I am prepared to defend every retirement I made. And I am prepared to answer the statements with regard to men being retired and others put in at equal salaries, because there was not a case in which I superannuated a man and did not abolish his office.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Temporarily.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. MARTIN. Long experience leads us to suppose that it will be only temporarily.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Every office must be created by a vote of this House, and hon. gentlemen will find it time enough to insinuate that these savings are only temporarily when they are asked to create more offices. Let them look at the estimates of 1896-97, and they will find that not a single office is estimated for the occupant of which was superannuated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Take the estimate of this year and compare them with other years.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The comparison will show that about $10,000 is saved as compared with 1895-96.

Mr. MARTIN. There are the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not asking for a single appointment under supplementary estimates.

Mr. MARTIN. No ; but you can ask for that next year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When these appear it will be time for hon. gentlemen to find fault. I believe that by the reorganization I save $8,000 or $10,000 to the department. I superannuated these men and put that money, as hon. gentlemen will see by referring to the Main Estimates, into the establishment of experimental stations, both fall wheat stations and fruit stations, in establishing a crop report for the farmers of the country —in other words, putting the money into practical service of the farmers, and hon. gentlemen opposite, instead of finding fault should be pleased that the effort is being made to get the best value for the money that is being spent. So far as the superannuation of Mr. Small is concerned, he was no doubt a good officer in his day. But I found that he was not doing what I believed to be valuable service for the money he was receiving from the country. He was in receipt of a salary of $2,300. I superannuated him and appointed in his place at a salary of $2,000 Mr. Jarvis, an old tried servant in the department, though still a young man, and I saved the salary of $1,800 which Mr. Jarvis had been receiving, because I abolished the clerkship which he held previous to his appointment. I leave the facts to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I am sure there is no comfort in those facts for them and no evidence to support the charges that were made.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can you give us the amount of Mr. Small's superannuation allowance and his age.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think he is between 65 and 70 years of age. He was in the service for twenty-eight years, and his superannuation will be therefore 56 per cent of $2,300.

Mr. McSHANE. I have been told by some of the old countrymen here in Ottawa, and I have been told by some French Canadians, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture had discharged them from his department, and I want to know if he has replaced them by men who were able to discharge the duties of the office.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is trying to make another addition to his charge. I just told him that the men I removed from office, have not been replaced by anybody else.

Mr. McSHANE. I asked the hon. gentleman: Is it true that he has discharged so many French Canadians and so many old countrymen of one religion, and has not replaced them by men of the same faith ? I ask him that question can he answer it ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have already answered it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of fact, I find the savings made in the Department of Agriculture nominally amounts to a little over $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. There are statutory increases amounting to $1,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking of reductions. About $5,500 were saved, but against that there are superannuation allowances amounting to something like $4,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When I used the figures eight, nine or ten thousand, I referred to the decreased vote as regards permanent officers as well as regards temporary help. If he will notice the Estimates, he will find there is a reduction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice the saving was almost entirely eaten up by the increased superannuation. There was a saving made of $2,000 in the ordinary Estimates, no doubt. A saving was talked of in the Estimates of last year for these same contingencies, and these Supplementary Estimates take back all the saving and adds $500 besides.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is true that too small a vote was taken last year, and we are asking this year $2,500 to finish it. But I may tell my hon. friend that we have given notice to a number who are on the temporary list that we shall discharge them very shortly.

Mr. FLINT. I think the observations of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) are quite startling to the members of the committee. I think there must be a wrong system which gives such results. On several occasions since I have been a member of the House, the matter has been discussed as to why persons who were superannuated and who were really not unfit for the discharge of public duty, were not distributed among other departments, instead of being placed as a charge upon the revenue during the rest of their lives. I think that where it becomes necessary in the re-organization of a department to suit the ideas of a new Minister that certain servants should be dismissed from that particular employment, unless they are ill or too old to be of any more service, should these men be placed in some reserved list, and drafted into other departments of the Government. The nature of the services discharged by the great bulk of the civil servants, is very similar. They are copyists, accountants or writers, or gentlemen who perform duties of a similar character, and are as well fitted to discharge those duties in other departments, as in the department from which they are superannuated. It seems to me that this ought to occupy the attention of the Government. While it would not be proper to check their very proper ambition to increase the efficiency of their departments, it does seem to me that advantage has been taken of this in the Civil Service to saddle a large number of retired persons upon the exchequer. The figures given by the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) certainly deserve our attention. It is true that 106 persons have been added to the superannuation list of the past year, and a large majority of these are still qualified to serve the country. I think in many instances, it must be a great hardship to them to have their means of living so reduced, and to be thrown upon the world without employment, and their life made a charge upon the country, while in most instances new men are brought in at as great or even greater salary who have to learn all the duties these civil servants have learned. The attention of the House and the country should be directed to the subject, and I hope it will be a subject taken up early in the next Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the hon. gentleman will leave it over to the next Parliament.

Mr. FLINT. I call the attention of the House to its importance, and I urge hon. members who may return here to take it up in all earnestness, so that before another Parliament closes there will be a Superannuation Act on the statute-book of which Canadians will be proud and with which they will be satisfied. Last year the superannuations were increased by nearly $60,000, 106 persons being added to the list, and in many cases they were well qualified to discharge the duties of the office, and a great wrong was done to the public service by the manner in which they were superannuated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to say a few words on this important matter.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman wishes to discuss the subject, we had better leave the item till to-morrow. I move the committee rise.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What business is proposed to be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FOSTER. The Estimates and a few Bills.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 22nd April, 1896.

Morning Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 10.30 a.m.

PRAYERS.

LABOUR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. FOSTER. In the Public Bills and Orders, there is one Bill that was passed by this House, and which went to the Senate. It came back from the Senate with a verbal amendment which rather destroys the effect of the Bill. I refer to item number 38, on the Public Bills and Orders. It is rather a pity, when the Bill has received the sanction of the House and of the Senate, if it should not have its final stage. I beg leave to move, with the consent of the House, that the order, number 38, be placed upon Government Orders.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE MASSON.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, there is a matter to which I wish to bring the attention of the Minister of Justice to whom I gave notice in reference to it, and if necessary I will move a motion of adjournment, although I do not particularly want to do so, except to comply with the rules. The matter to which I allude has reference to the appointment of Mr. Masson. Now, Sir, on a former occasion, my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) called the attention of the House to the fact, that a communication had been received, and correspondence had been put on file in the Justice Department, as he was informed, from the junior judge of the county of Huron ; and to that the Minister of Justice made a reply which I think appears to be sailing extremely close to the wind. Now, Sir, I wish to place on record what actually happened, and it will be for the House to say, and it will be for the Minister of Justice to say, whether or not the criticisms that we have made upon that matter, are or are not justified. On the 16th May, 1895, Mr. B. L. Boyle, the junior judge of Huron, addressed the following communication :—

> To Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper,
> Minister of Justice, Ottawa.
> Dear Sir,—You are, no doubt, aware of the death of Judge Toms, late senior judge of the county of Huron. I am prepared to do the work, and I am an applicant for the county judgeship.

To that letter, on the 20th May, 1895, the following letter was received by Judge Doyle :—

> My dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 16th inst., applying for promotion to the county court judgeship of Huron, and I placed your letter on file for consideration when this matter is being dealt with.
> Yours faithfully,
> CHARLES H. TUPPER.
> His Honour B. L. Doyle,
> Junior Judge of Huron, Goderich, Ont.

I find also that the following petition was addressed to the Minister of Justice at Ottawa :—

> Petition of the undersigned barristers and solicitors practicing in the county of Huron, in the province of Ontario, showeth as follows :
> That His Honour Judge Doyle, the present junior judge of the county of Huron, since his appointment, has well and faithfully performed the duties of his office with credit to himself, and we believe to the satisfaction, not only of the profession, but of the public generally. And we feel that he is well entitled and should be promoted to the senior judgeship ; and his appointment thereto will meet with general approbation. We therefore respectfully request that his elevation to the office of senior judge for the said county be duly made.
> Dated this 28th day of August, 1895.

This petition is signed by F. Holmstead, J. W. Best, R. S. Hayes, and apparently twenty others ; in fact the great majority of the barristers and solicitors practising in that county.

Now, Sir, under those circumstances it does appear to me that it requires explanation, when the Minister of Justice in replying to the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) informed that hon. gentleman, that there was no such correspondence on file in the Department of Justice. Mind, I do not mean to say that there might not be a loop hole found to creep out of, but I do say that it is sailing most exceedingly close to the wind, with such correspondence on record and on file in the Department of Justice as I have just read ; that such a statement should be made to us when we were engaged in debating that question. I add this : that there appears to me to be no sort or shadow or doubt now, under all the circumstances, that the member for North Grey (Mr. Masson), during the entire of this session, if not during the entire of the preceding session, was to all intents and purposes, as has been stated on the floor of this House again and again, sitting here in practical defiance of the Independence of Parliament Act, and to all intents and purposes, with that appointment in his pocket. Now, Sir, I do not want, at this stage of the session, to do more than to place these matters on record, and let such explanations as can be given (if any can be given), be given by the hon. Minister who is more particularly affected. Were is possible I would have been glad to have waited for the Minister of Justice to be present, but I sent him a letter to the effect that this would be brought up on the first opportunity, and this is the only opportunity I may have. I desire now to leave this matter, but in order to comply with the rules, I move the adjournment.

Mr. LISTER. When this matter was discussed the other day, I ventured to state that I had information that Judge Doyle had applied for the position, that he had represented to the Government the fact, that two judges in the county of Huron were unnecessary, and that he was willing to discharge the duties. I was surprised at the answer of the Minister of Justice, that no such communication from Judge Doyle was on file. Now, Sir, it turns out, from the correspondence read by the hon. member (Sir Richard Cartwright), that the Minister of Justice, to say the least of it, had made a statement to the House, which has not been borne out by the facts. The charitable view to take of the matter is, that the Minister of Justice, at the time he made that statement, had not informed himself at all as to what the true facts were, and that he made it in ignorance of those facts. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has shown to the House, by evidence that cannot be disputed, that at the very time the Minister of Justice made this statement to Parliament, that no application had been made, or that no representation that a second judge was not necessary in the county of Huron ; at that moment upon the files of the department was evidence directly contradicting the statement made by the Minister. One is amazed, Mr. Speaker, that the Government should have made the appointment at all, and it is impossible to resist the conclusion stated by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson), at all events during all of the present session had been promised the position which was ultimately conferred upon him by the Government, namely, the position of senior judge for the county of Huron. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the appointment was entirely in violation of the Act of the legislature which forbids the appointment of another judge to the county of Huron. I say that this Government, for the purpose of finding a place for a supporter, ignored entirely the law of the country which provides, that in counties where the population is not 80,000, only one judge should be appointed. Prior to the passing of that Act in 1896 this Government had a right to appoint two judges in a county where the population exceeded 40,000, but in 1896 an Act was passed whereby it is provided that only one judge should hold office in a county where the population was less than 80,000. Now, the population of the county of Huron is less than 80,000, and under the Act of 1896, that county is entitled to only one judge. Yet, in violation of that Act, the Government has appointed another judge, and it has burdened the taxpayers of this country for the payment of the salary of that judge so long as he may live. Sir, there is grave doubt as to the validity of the appointment at all. The two county judges under the former law had equal jurisdiction, one having the same power as the other in every regard. The only difference between those two judges was, that the man holding the last commission should be the junior judge. Their rank was equal, and the mere naming of them as "senior" or "junior" was only for the purpose of distinguishing as to the date of the appointment. Then, Sir, I contend that when the Act of 1896 was passed, providing that there should be only one judge, the moment the vacancy took place in that county, the surviving judge became by operation of the law, the judge of the county. He became the senior judge of the county because his commission, of necessity, must be prior to the commission of any other appointee. I submit that in law, Judge Doyle then became the judge of the county court, and the distinction of senior and junior judge ceased to exist the moment the other judge died. That distinction was never anything more than conventional. The moment the senior judge died the junior judge became by operation of the law the judge of the county court of the county of Huron. Therefore, the Government in appointing Judge Masson, as senior judge to the county of Huron, violated the law in spirit and in letter. No matter what they put in their commission, no matter whether they described Judge Masson as senior judge or not, Judge Masson could not be appointed, and the mere fact of describing him as senior judge does not make him senior judge, because the Government had no power to create that office when the junior judge was living, and when by operation of law he became senior judge. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that as a matter of law, Judge Masson is not judge of the county of Huron at all. Judge Doyle is the judge of the county of Huron, and if it were possible to appoint a second judge for that county, Judge Masson would be the junior judge for the county of Huron, because his commission is latest in date. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do think that under all the circumstances, it was a very scandalous thing for the Government to make this appointment. Whether they had a right to make it under the strict letter of the law or not, is another question. I say; that it was a violation of the spirit of the Act, even assuming that the appointment was technically right. We have the evidence before the House that the county of Huron has less than 80,000 inhabitants, and we have the evidence before the House that one judge was abundantly sufficient to discharge the legal duties of that county. There was no necessity for the appointment, and the Government made it for the sole purpose of finding a position for a political supporter, and not because it was in the interest of the county or in the interest of the country. When I spoke of this matter before, I intimated to the Minister of Justice that I had information that a communication had been sent to the Government that Judge Doyle was willing and expressed his ability to discharge all the duties of the office of judge of the county of Huron, and the answer I received from the Minister of Justice was that no such communication was in his department. I felt reasonably sure that such a communication had been received in some department, and I took it for granted that, if it was not in the office of the Minister of Justice, it would be found in some of the other departments. However, the position which I then took has been thoroughly sustained by the evidence which my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has read to the House this morning. As the hon. Minister of Justice was not in his place when this was read, I take the liberty of reading it again. This letter is dated the 16th of May, 1895 :—

> Hon. Sir C. H. Tupper,
> Minister of Justice, Ottawa.
> Dear Sir,—You are, no doubt, aware of the death of Judge Toms, late senior judge of the county of Huron. I am prepared to do the work, and I am an applicant for the county judgeship.

In reply to that letter the Minister of Justice wrote :

> My dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 16th instant, applying for the promotion to the county court judgeship of Huron, and have placed your letter on file for consideration when this matter is being dealt with.
> Yours faithfully,
> CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

So that my hon. friend, in making the statement that no such correspondence was in the department, had evidently not looked it up, and was in error, because, as a matter of fact, that correspondence was there. For the information of the Minister of Justice I also call his attention to the petition which was read by the hon. member for South Oxford, addressed to the Minister of Justice, and signed, I believe, by nearly every practising barrister in the county of Huron, in which it is stated :—

> That His Honour Judge Doyle, the present Junior Judge of the county of Huron, since his appointment has well and faithfully performed the duties of his office, with credit to himself, and we believe to the satisfaction, not only of the profession, but of the public generally ; and we feel that he is well entitled and should be promoted to the senior judgeship ; and his appointment thereto will meet with general approbation ; and we therefore respectfully request that his elevation to the office of the senior judge of the said county be duly made
> Dated this 28th day of August, 1895.

In looking over the list of petitioners, I think I am safe in saying that nearly every local practitioner in the county of Huron signed this petition. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to understand what justification the Government can offer to the House or the country to the appointment of Mr. Masson to the position of senior judge of the county of Huron. I maintain, as I said before, that the moment the senior judge of Huron died, that moment the junior judge, in view of the Act of the Ontario legislature, became judge of the county ; and what possible excuse the Government can give for ignoring that legislation it is difficult to understand. The position of the Government can only be explained upon the theory of that they had promised, not this session, but last session, before the Act of the Ontario legislature had become law, that Mr. Masson should receive the position of judge of the county of Huron, and felt bound to carry out their promise. Why, Sir, it was an open secret. Everybody knew for monthes past that the position would be given to Judge Masson. I find no fault with Judge Masson himself, though I find fault with the appointment ; I think he will discharge his duties satisfactorily, but I do find fault with the Government in not appointing him in some county where two judges were required, or in a county where there was a vacancy and where a judge was required. But under the circumstances, I think the Government are deserving of censure for making the appointment they did in the county of Huron, and if the matter were tested in the courts. I think it would be found that the appointment of Judge Masson is an utterly illegal appointment.

Mr. DICKEY. Mr. Speaker, with regard to the correspondence from Judge Doyle. I may say that I have no doubt whatever that the letter read by the hon. gentleman is a correct letter ; but, in reading the file, I certainly did not get any impression whatever that Judge Doyle had made the statement that he alone could do all the work in the County of Huron. I remember no such statement at all, but I daresay it is quite correct, and all I can say is that if it is correct, the statement I made to the House before was made under my then impression.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman does not question the letter.

Mr. DICKEY. No, there is a letter from Judge Doyle. I thought it was purely a formal notification of the death of the senior judge. That is the impression that I carried away, but, of course, I may have been entirely wrong, and do not dispute for a moment what the hon. gentleman says.

Mr. LISTER. He says : I am prepared to fill the position and make the application.

Mr. DICKEY. Quite so. Does the hon. gentleman say that that petition is on file in the Department of Justice ?

Mr. LISTER. I am not able to say that it is on file, but it is addressed to the hon. Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not like to venture an opinion after being wrong about the letter, but I am quite satisfied that that petition is not on the file given to me as the file containing the letters and papers on the matter. I do not know that any good purpose will be served by my discussing this question at any very great length. I cannot at all agree that there is any doubt as to the legality of Mr. Masson's appointment. The statute says that in case more than one county judge is appointed for any county, then, unless otherwise expressed in the commission, the judge whose commission has priority shall be styled the judge of the county court, and the other shall be styled the junior judge thereof. I understand that section to mean that where the appointing power does not make a selection, the priority of dates in commission shall settle the priority as between the judges, but the Ontario government or legislature, in passing that statute, expressly reserved for the appointing power the authority to say which should be the judge and which should be the junior judge. That, I contend, is implied in the words " unless otherwise expressed." The legislature laid down a very definite rule to prevent disputes as to priority, as between the judges, and to apply the Salaries Act of this Government, and that rule was that seniority should give priority unless it was otherwise expressed in the commission. We find an analogy in the chief judges and puisne judges of the courts. The jurisdiction of the chief justice is no greater than that of a puisne judge, the only difference being that he is head of the court, and has a larger salary. Supposing a statute like this applied to the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and provided that when the chief justice died, on the appointment of a new judge, unless it was otherwise expressed in the commission, the senior judge should be the chief justice.

Mr. LISTER. Suppose the statute said there should not be any more judges ?

Mr. DICKEY. We will come to that presently. It is perfectly clear to me that it would be competent for the appointing power, by virtue of the very limitation of the section, to express in the commission that the new appointee should be chief justice. This is exactly the same position. The appointing power may appoint a judge to-day, who will be the judge notwithstanding the fact that there is a junior judge who has been years in the county. The question as to who shall be the judge is a matter to be settled by the appointing power. Now, the Ontario statute of 1895 provides that no junior judge shall be appointed under certain circumstances. But the junior judge is distinct from the judge. The distinction is drawn by the very statute that the Ontario legislature was amending, and it is drawn in the Dominion Act which makes the salaries different. The judge begins with $2,000 and goes up to $2,400, and the junior judge gets $2,000 only ; so that although there is no difference in jurisdiction, there is a broad distinction drawn both in the Ontario statute and the Dominion statute.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman read the section in the Ontario statute.

Mr. DICKEY. It reads as follows :—

> In case more than one county judge is appointed for any county, then, unless otherwise expressed in the commission, the judge, whose commission has priority of date, shall be styled the judge of the county court, and the other judge of the same court shall be styled the junior judge thereof.

My argument is that those words " unless otherwise expressed " reserve to the appointing power the choice as to who shall be the judge and who the junior judge. I was proceeding to say that the Ontario Act of 1895 provides that no junior judge shall be appointed. There is a clear distinction between these two offices. It was perfectly competent for the Ontario legislature to have said what the hon. gentleman contends they meant to say, but if the Ontario legislature said that there should not be any more than five puisne judges in the province, that would not affect the question of the chief justice, because they would be dealt with on terms that were perfectly well-known, and had an established meaning in the legislature and at the Bar, so that it seems to me that it was the clear intention of the Ontario legislature to provide that there should be one judge in the county and he should be the judge with the salary of to $2.400.

Mr. LISTER. Then the position the hon. gentleman takes is that in the case of a death of a junior judge, the Government has no power to appoint, but in the case of the death of a senior judge the Government can appoint and thus maintain the two judges, in spite of the evident intention of the Act that there should be only one where there is a population less than 80.000.

Mr. DICKEY. That is my contention under the legal position of the Act of 1895.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is an Act of 1896 too.

Mr. DICKEY. If any argument were needed to sustain the position that I am taking now, it is the Act of 1896, which shows beyond a doubt what the Ontario legislature thought.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What does the hon. gentleman say they thought ?

Mr. DICKEY. That the Act of 1895 did not prevent the appointment of two judges.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They removed any doubt on the question ?

Mr. DICKEY. I do not think it was a question of doubt. It simply shows what they meant by their previous Act, and after that came out they changed their policy and said that there should only be one judge. Now, with regard to Judge Doyle, he is a junior judge of the county. Supposing it had been desired to appoint him a judge, a commission to him would have been necessary, I submit. He is entitled, after three years' service, to an increase of salary. When would that increase of salary begin ? When he was appointed a judge, and he would have to be appointed a judge, I submit, by a commission, because his present commission is as junior judge of the county. I have not a shadow of doubt with regard to the legality of the appointment. As I explained to the House before, I was not aware of the pendency of the Act of 1896. I am perfectly frank to say that if I had been aware of the pendency of that Act, it would have very strongly affected my view of the situation, for I think it is a most important and relevant fact to take into account. And I am the more free in saying that, because, with regard to the surrogate fees, I had not the same feeling. I felt, with regard to the surrogate fees, that it was a mere question whether a new appointment should be made by the Ontario government or not, that the system of the county court judge administering the surrogate court was an excellent one that was working in every county in Ontario, and the change proposed was not a radical change, was evidently not due to anything wrong in the system, was not intended in any way to affect economy in the public service, but was simply a transferrence of the fees from a man who is our officer to a man who would be the officer of the other government. So I did not feel, so far as that is concerned, that the matter was important. But I certainly should have felt the importance of the pendency of the Act of 1896. If the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario had notified this Government or my department of the pendency of that Act and his intention to press it into law, we should have been in a position to deal with the question on the basis of that information. But as that was not done, I acted in absolute ignorance of it, and my deputy also informs me that he had no knowledge whatever that such legislation was pending. It is very difficult for us to watch our own legislation and keep track of that. The Ontario legislature is composed of a single body ; Acts are passed through with the greatest facility when it is necessary, and it would be quite unreasonable to ask a Deputy Minister of Justice to keep track of every Act passed in every legislature in the Dominion before it comes to him to be dealt with in the regular way. I am glad to hear the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) say that he thinks Mr. Masson will make a capital judge. I feel quite sure that I shall never have reason to regret having recommended Judge Masson so far as his own merits are concerned. I believe he will be a credit to the county court bench of Ontario and will discharge his duties thoroughly well. I am quite satisfied that his appointment is perfectly legal and that no question will ever be raised as to that point. I do not think there is anything more I can say which will throw light upon this question.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not know any great public interest will be served by discussing at greater length the legality of Judge Masson's appointment. That question must be determined by the courts of the land. The Minister of Justice has ventured to express his opinion in pretty strong language that the appointment is technically legal, and, while other gentleman in the House entertain very grave doubts upon the point, I assume that if those doubts are shared by the Administration of Ontario, the proper steps will be taken to test the question in the courts of the land. Therefore I shall not press that branch of the inquiry further. I still adhere to the view I ventured to express on a previous occasion, and regret that I cannot share in the one which the hon. Minister of Justice expresses. But the point before the House and that which the country and the House is most deeply interested in is not whether Judge Masson is a legal judge, but whether his appointment was a proper appointment. I do not understand there ever was a question raised as to the qualification of that gentleman to hold a county court judgeship. I do not understand that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) when he denounced this appointment as a "flagrant indecency," in any way impugned Mr. Masson's legal attainments. What has been charged and what is charged is that the time and the manner of his appointment call for severe censure of the Government on the part of this House. The hon. Minister frankly admits that if he had known the facts that he ought to have known, the appointment would not have been made. The hon. gentleman takes the House into his confidence and frankly tells us that if he had known of this statute of the Ontario legislature which was read the third time on the 1st April, 1896, and which provided that hereafter only one judge should be appointed for every county of not more than 80,000 population, he would not have recommended any appointment in this case in Huron. He pleads ignorance on that point.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the date the hon. gentleman gave?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Act was read the third time on the 1st April. I was told in the debate that Mr. Masson was sworn in an hour before the Bill received the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor. I do not understand the Minister of Justice to defend himself on the ground that Mr. Masson was appointed an hour or five minutes before the Act was assented to. That would be a technical point unworthy of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DICKEY. No; that was not my point.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No, of course not. The fact of importance is that the Act was read the third time and passed by the Ontario legislature providing that there should be no longer two judges in counties such as York. The hon. Minister says he was not aware of it and that he recommended Judge Masson's appointment in ignorance. The hon. Minister in the multiplicity of his responsibilities in connection with his legislative duties here may not be aware of these things, but I think the House has a right to assume that his department shall keep the run of Acts of this kind and that their business was to be aware of the fact that this Act had been passed. It is not creditable to somebody who should have informed the hon. Minister of the facts that he should have been uninformed of an important statute such as that. Therefore, I say that the Government as a whole must have known, and those officials who are specially charged with the care of these matters ought to have communicated the facts as they existed to the Minister. Now, we have come down to this that, as a matter of fact, an appointment was made that would not have been made had the facts been known. The appointment was made under the most suspicious circumstances and should never have been made at all. The other point the hon. Minister has not touched upon, and that is that the vacancy has been kept hanging over the head of aspirants for years—or for about a year, the vacancy having occurred, I believe, in April, 1895. I believe it is understood that Mr. Masson was an applicant for the office. The ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), I believe, said he was not aware of it and that no application had been made to him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is true.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Of course I unreservedly accept the hon. gentleman's statement. Still, I think it was generally known that Mr. Masson was an aspirant for the appointment. I heard it stated in the corridor that such was the case. And the appointment was kept dangling before his eyes for twelve months. And the fact of his desiring the appointment and of the appointment having been kept open must have affected his conduct in this House. The appointment under the circumstances, and particularly after this Act that the Ontario legislature had passed, is a crime on the part of the Government and a shame and disgrace to them. I say Mr. Masson never can hold that independent position which the county court judge of Huron ought to hold, if he had been appointed under other circumstances. His personal qualifications need not be mentioned, and need not be discussed; but the circumstances of his appointment are open to the severest condemnation and censure, and the admission made to-day by the Minister of Justice does not relieve the Government from the odium and disgrace which surround and are attached to the whole appointment. I do not want to discuss the other point that the hon. gentleman has taken up about the Act passed in 1895 reducing the salary. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) reminds me that the Surrogate Act was passed in 1896. Then we stand in this very curious position, that two acts were passed affecting Mr. Masson's right to that appointment, seriously affecting it. The minor one, which merely affected his right to the office, the hon. gentleman had full knowledge of; as to the major one, which affected his right to the appointment at all, I accept his statement that he was ignorant of it. I say it is a most extraordinary thing that the department over which the hon. gentleman presides had knowledge of one Act, the smaller one, and could have been in ignorance of the main one. I accept his statement of ignorance, but I cannot exonerate him from being a party to the act, which I say is a disgraceful act, of appointing a gentleman to a judicial position after the appointment has been kept dangling before him for twelve months, for the purpose of unduly influencing his political conduct and vote in this House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not wish to prolong the debate, nor do I think I can add very much to the discussion except in regard to one point which the hon. gentleman for Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies) has raised in regard to an omission on the part of some one, he did not say what official, to follow closely the legislation of the local legislature, and whose duty he says it was to be thoroughly aware of what Bills were passing through the Ontario legislature. Now, I think it would be difficult for the hon. gentleman or any member of this House to show that it was the duty of any one in the Department of Justice, or any other department of the Federal Government, to watch carefully the legislation as it passes through any of the local legislatures of this country. I say without hesitation that that duty could not be performed, and I will be contradicted by no man who has been in the Department of Justice, that with the staff there, very efficient though it be, it is the most difficult thing in the world for the gentlemen in that department to keep au fait with the Bills that are introduced and passed in this House. It is their duty to follow every private Bill, every public Bill, and every Government Bill in this legislature, but with that enormous work, together with all the departmental business,and the various departmental references, it is absolutely impossible for these gentlemen to take up and watch the proceedings of a local legislature, particularly when that legislature is sitting simultaneously with this Parliament.

Mr. MULOCK. Like my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies), I accept the statement of the Minister of Justice that he was unaware of the legislation of the legislature of Ontario, the Act doing away with the junior judge ; but I cannot assent for one moment to the statement made by the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that it is not the duty of the Department of Justice to know all the local legislation that is going to affect the administration of justice. The hon. gentleman says that it will be difficult to show that it was the duty of any member of the Department of Justice to follow pending legislation affecting the administration of justice in a local legislature. It is quite clear that some one was following that pending legislation of the province of Ontario very closely. I have never heard yet any explanation of the undue haste with which this appointment was made. How came it that that appointment was made at the particularly critical moment when it was ? Does the ex-Minister of Justice offer any explanation ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know nothing of it.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the Minister of Justice offer any explanation on that point ? There is no gentleman in this House, there is no member of the Government, upon whom I am more solicitous not to cast the slightest reflection, than upon the Minister of Justice, because I unreservedly express my absolute faith in his honesty of purpose, and high regard for personal honour. So that in view of that statement, in view of my opinion of the Minister of Justice, I find myself in a very embarrassing position on this occasion, because the recommendation came from him, and he has not up to this moment made an explanation how it came about that the appointment was made at that critical moment when it was made. All the circumstances pointed against such an appointment at such a time. The subject had been discussed by Parliament, it was known in Parliament and in the country that Mr. Masson was an applicant for this office, it had been suggested on the floor of the House, and a semi-denial given. The impropriety of the proposed act had been a subject of discussion, I myself had introduced a Bill to deal with just such cases, that Bill had been discussed, public opinion had been expressed in various ways against such procedure. And yet in view of the impropriety of the transaction, in view of the lack of necessity for the appointment, at that particularly critical moment, the machinery of the Department of Justice is set in motion and this appointment is made. Now, the Minster of Justice, of course, is relieved personally of any intention to violate the spirit or letter of the law, or to take advantage of legislation about to go into effect in Ontario. But then he lands the department in the other dilemma, that the department is not being administered properly, there is a defect in its administration, and a grave mistake has been made. The Minister of Justice tells us that had he known the law, had he known the legislation that was pending, he would not have made this appointment ; and further, had he known that Judge Doyle had asserted that a second appointment was unnecessary, that would have affected his judgment.

Mr. DICKEY. I did not say that.

Mr. MULOCK. No, the hon. gentleman did not say that, but surely if the hon. gentleman had appreciated the statement contained in Judge Doyle's communication that second appointment was not necessary, what would the hon. gentleman have done ? There were only two papers on file, the hon. gentleman says, only two communications, one of them consisting of the letter of Judge Doyle, extremely brief, in which he says that he desires to be promoted, and that a second appointment is unnecessary ; and another communication, I do not know what it was. There were only two papers, the Minister said, one of them being this letter ; and of course I exonerate the Minister of Justice from having appreciated the statement in that letter, but the statement was in the letter, in plain language, that a second appointment was not necessary. Now, there was undue haste, or else these two documents on file would have been read and understood before the department made this appointment. Now, we have it on the admission of the Minister of Justice himself, that a charge for the lifetime of the present incumbent, Mr. Masson, has been made on the public service, first, in ignorance of a communication on file in the department as to the unnecessary character of the appointment ; and secondly, in ignorance of a statute about to come into force in the province of Ontario, which in itself would have prevented the appointment being made. That act of the province of Ontario, representing the opinions of the people of Ontario, is a protest against the duplication of these offices, a protest of the whole province ; and yet the ex-Minister of Justice stands up here and says that it is not necessary for the Department of Justice to know what legislation is passing in a province in respect of which he is going to make appointments affecting the administration of justice. It is an inconceivable state of affairs, that the whole Department of Justice, with its deputy, and its chief clerks, and its second-class clerks, and so on, never heard of the pending legislation, but that Judge Masson should have been appointed out of the House, suddenly, after having been expecting this office for months and months, hurrying off by the first train, rushing up to the Deputy Attorney General, and getting sworn in before the critical hour arrived when His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor would assent to this law. Now, the Minister of Justice knew nothing of it, but does he say that none of his officers knew of it ? Why, Sir, if none of his officers knew, then every one of his officers that ought to have known, should be dismissed. What are they there for except to know ? What is the Department of Justice for except to administer ? We would not accept ignorance of the law as a plea for any mistake made, either in civil or criminal matters ; and in like manner, we must not accept as an exoneration, ignorance of what was in a moment to become the statute law of the province. Now, it is an unfortunate thing that this difficulty should have arisen in connection with an appointement to the Bench. If there is one branch of the service more than another about which there should be no possible doubt, if there is one thing more necessary than another, it is that the public should have entire confidence, not only in the administration of justice, not only in the personnel of the Bench, but in all the circumstances that lead up to appointments to the office. Judge Masson's usefulness on the Bench is impaired by the circumstances under which his appointment was made ; public confidence in him, however he may be entitled to it, will not be given to him as unreservedly as it otherwise might be. On that point I will say that in my opinion the whole business of promotion on the Bench is a mistake. It is the custom in Canada to promote judges by seniority. We see this in all branches of the judiciary, and so long as that is the practice Judge Doyle was entitled to the benefit of it. It was not because the practice was disapproved of that he did not get his promotion, some other reason existed. But I think it would be better if it were made part of the law of the land that every appointee to the Bench should remain for life in the position to which he is appointed, or until he left the Bench. In Canada there is too much aspiration among those in lower positions, and expectation of preferment is natural where promotion is part of the practice. I think it is a bad practice and cannot too soon be put an end to by special enactment applicable to all future appointees. It would not be fair to make such apply to present appointees in the judiciary. That being the case no justification has been given for passing over Judge Doyle ; no explanation has been made of the indecent haste with which Mr. Masson was appointed, and of the ignorance pleaded by the department that they did not know existing circumstances which, if known, would have prevented the appointment, and the imposition of increased burdens on the people ; and the Government stand convicted of one further act of inability or incapacity to administer some of the simplest matters connected with the discharge of public business. I suppose it is the duty of His Excellency to make appointments when the Government recommends them. It would have to be an extreme case I presume to cause His Excellency to refuse to do, but if His Excellency should come to the conclusion that public opinion to-day is inflamed against the corruption that has taken place in this House by having the independence of members interfered with by promises of office—and we know there are large numbers, scores of members waiting here to be appointed—it seems to me His Excellency would have very good reason for refusing to assent to any appointments should the Government recommend them. The public will watch with great anxiety the administrative Acts of this Government before the next Parliament meets. I do not know under our system and with the limited powers His Excellency may possess, to what extent he would be warranted in refusing to act upon the recommendations of the Government, but if we were tied in by his instructions and by the supposed limit of his powers, nevertheless I believe public opinion would go a long way to excuse him if he refused to sanction the appointments of office of any member of the present House of Commons on the recommendation of the present Government, at all events until Parliament again met and we had a stable Government in office. I submit that time should elapse before public opinion would sanction any such appointment being made.

Mr. McMILLAN. If there is a county in the Dominion that does not require two judges it is the county of Huron. One reason is that between 1881 and 1891 the population of the county was reduced by over 10,000 souls. So there is not so much work to do at the present time as there was in years past, and if I am not mistaken, the report of the Bureau of Industry shows that the population of the county is still diminishing. I hold that to make an appointment such as the one now under discussion, especially at such a critical time in the history of the country as at the present, leads to the suspicion that the appointment was made for services rendered. I hope such was not the case, but the question was put very clearly by an hon. member on the other side of the House, would the appointment of Mr. Masson have been made if he had voted against the Remedial Bill? I say the appointment is liable to the construction that it was made in return for services rendered for the Government. I am well acquainted with Judge Doyle, who has efficiently performed the duties of the office and is quite able to do all the work. It appears that owing to the ignorance or negligence of the Minister of Justice with respect to the laws of Ontario, this country is to be saddled for years to come with the expense of an extra judge when there was no necessity for his appointment. The Government should be properly posted on all questions of this description. The people of the county of Huron have been taking a very active part for years in having the salaries of public officials strictly inquired into and no appointments made except they were actually necessary in the public interest. No necessity for the new appointment exists in this case, and there can be no reason for it except as a return for party services rendered to the Government.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Speaker, as I shall not have another opportunity before the close of the session, I wish before this motion is disposed of to refer briefly to the imputations cast upon myself by hon. members during the course of the remedial debates particularly by the member for North Norfolk and the member for North Simcoe, and also to similar allusions by newspapers throughout the country, the purpose of which seems to be to make it appear that I was improperly influenced by the Government to vote for the Remedial Bill. Without expressing any opinion as to the propriety or impropriety of this method of attacking the independence of members of this House, I wish to say, Sir, that neither upon the Remedial Bill nor upon any other question that ever came up before this House have I ever been influenced or even asked how I was going to vote by the Government. I have usually supported them, sometimes voted against them, but always upon my own judgment and apart altogether from any personal consideration. As to the Niagara collectorship, I have to say I several months ago abandoned any intention I may have had of claiming that office, and I communicated this decision to the leader of the Government, Sir Mackenzie Bowell during the period of the Cabinet crisis in January last. I wish to add as well that I have no promise of this or any other office, nor am I an applicant for any office nor am I under any obligation to the Government directly or indirectly other than that which properly attaches to any member who was elected to support their public policy.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It appears to be the habit of the Government when they get into a hole and find they have done something of which they are ashamed, to seek to defend themselves by pleading ignorance. We had an instance of that the other night when the Minister of Railways was seeking to defend himself in regard to an action by which the country lost $750,000.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am only using that as an illustration; it is not my intention to discuss it. Now, the Minister of Justice has taken a leaf out of his colleague's book, and he has told the House that he did not know that the Act referred to was being passed by the Ontario legislature. I wonder if that is the way the Minister of Justice is administering his department throughout. That defence, however, cannot be raised on the part of the officials of the department. If such were the case, why was there so much haste in making the appointment, why was it necessary to take an hon. member out of this House, appoint him to the position, send him by express train to Toronto, have him sworn in, and succeed in accomplishing this just one hour before the office to which he was appointed was abolished. The department knew well that if the appointment was not made within those twenty-four hours it could not be made, and if it had not been made the people would have saved a large amount of money. In regard to the question of junior judges, the Government are greatly to blame for appointing junior judges in almost every county. There are forty-three county court judges in Ontario, and also twenty-three junior judges, and there is scarcely one county where two judges are necessary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why don't you tell that to the local legislature?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The local legislature does not make the appointment. The local legislature, however, passed an Act so that you could not make a subsequent appointment; and so anxious were you to evade that law, that you took a man out of the House and got him sworn in before the Act came into force. Now, I find that this is becoming a very serious matter. I find that in the province of Ontario our county judges are costing this country about $155,000 every year. We have twenty-three junior judges in the province of Ontario now, and I venture to say that not one of them is required. In the county of Huron, for instance, as the hon. gentleman states, the population has gone down in the last decade over 10,000; and for one or two years, one year at least, the administration of justice has been performed by only one judge. Has there been any complaint that there was anything wrong? Has anybody petitioned that another judge should be appointed? Has not everything been going on well? Then, why the indecent haste of the Government in making a second appointment? In the county I have the honour to represent we have two judges. The senior judge some years ago was asked whether he wanted an assistant; and, to his credit be it said, he replied "No, he was able to perform all the duties of that office, and did not want any assistant—that he would rather not have an assistant"; and yet this Government appointed a man ten years older than himself—I think he is now about eighty years of age—to the position of junior judge, in order to give him a position for the rest of his life at the expense of the people; and to-day there is not half enough work for the one judge, let alone two. I say our whole judiciary wants remodelling. We have too many judges in the province of Ontario. We are paying our judges too much; they are getting too high salaries. I find that for holding courts in Ottawa some $1,500 is paid to the judges for travelling expenses, and yet I believe every one of them travels on a pass. I hope this discussion will induce the Government to mend ther ways in this respect. I do not think any appointments of junior judges should be made. There is not a single county in the province of Ontario where one judge is not able to perform all the duties; and instead of appointing second judges, I think the Government should take this matter up, and get rid of one of the judges in each county as fast as they can.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would ask the hon. member for South Oxford if he will allow me, if he happens to know the date upon which this amendment of 1896 was introduced into the Ontario House? I am told that it was introduced on the Friday preceding the Tuesday on which assent was given to the Bill. If that statement be true, it is very important in connection with the confession of the Minister of Justice that he was unaware of this legislation being under consideration in the local House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cannot answer that; I do not know what time it was introduced. What I would point out to the hon. member for Pictou is that there appeared to be two Acts going through—the Surrogate Court Act, and that respecting counties having less than 80,000 population. I do not, of course, pretend to say that the Minister of Justice knew of this amendment, but I think there is very little doubt that the Ontario Opposition kept the hon. member for North Grey aware of it. But I do not know at what time it went through.

Motion to adjourn, negatived.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I want the opportunity of saying one or two words of personal explanation. I see it reported in the papers that my remaks in reference to appointments given to this country by the Imperial Government were made to apply to the 8th Regiment of Canadian Hussars of New Brunswick, Col. Domville's regiment. I simply wish to say that my remarks had no reference at all to that corps; I was not thinking of it. What I said had reference to offers made by the Government to the Imperial Government on behalf of the country at large, and not to voluntary offers from any one particular corps.

MILL STREET, MONTREAL.

Mr. McSHANE. I will not keep the House more than a moment, but I wish to take this opportunity of asking the Minister of Public Works, as I am requested to do by a large number of the inhabitants of Point St. Charles, whether Mill Street belongs to the Government or to the city of Montreal? If it belongs to the Government, why is it that it is kept in such a dirty state from one end of the year to the other? The people in that vicinity pay large taxes to the city of Montreal, and I believe the city tells them that the street belongs to the Government. I may say that people have to travel kneedeep in mud on that street, from one end of the year to the other; and along the bank of the canal, when they go that way, they have to travel in mud also. I know that the Minister of Public Works will try to see——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot make a speech on this subject.

Mr. McSHANE. I ask, does the street belong to the Government or to the city of Montreal ?

Mr. OUIMET. I am very sorry that I cannot answer the hon. gentleman's question. This matter has never been called to my attention before, neither by the city council of Montreal nor by anybody else, and I am not aware that the department has anything to do with that street.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution :—

> That it is expedient to provide that for the present session of Parliament the deduction of eight dollars per day mentioned in section 26 of the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be made for twelve days in the case of a member who has been absent from a sitting of the House of which he is a member, or of some committee thereof, during such number of days, but that this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section 25 of the said Act, and that in the case of a member elected since the commencement of the present session it shall not apply to days prior to his election.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not rise to offer any objection to the passage of this resolution.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Although my own opinion is strongly adverse to it, if hon. gentlemen want to know. But I rise to say that if it is the policy of the House that this amendment should be made to the statute, it should be made a permanent amendment, instead of being brought up here every session.

Mr. FOSTER. I would be glad to accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion ; but as this is a moribund Parliament, perhaps we had better leave it over.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I accept the reason, and I will apply it to everything else.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to emphasize the statement made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). I really think that if this is going to be adopted, it should be made permanent. I am sorry the Government did not bring in an amendment this year making this permanent, if it is considered a matter of justice to members who live at considerable distances. The present Act unquestionably militates against those who live at long distances from the capital and who cannot get home during the session. Some adjustment should be made to meet their case.

Mr. GIBSON. Many of us who are business men must of necessity be called away many times from the House during a session of Parliament. I understand that the sessional indemnity was based upon a three months' session. If it is likely to be prolonged for four or five months, that simply means that business men have to leave Ottawa more frequently to attend to their business, and thus often have less money for a five months' session than they would have for a three months' session. When a session goes beyond 90 days, the time beyond that should count against the time lost. This would be a far more reasonable way of adjustment than adding so many days. This should not be a matter for discussion every session, but should be settled on some permanent basis, one way or the other.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the meaning of those last two lines ? Do you mean the resolution shall not apply ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, a man might be elected twelve days after the beginning of the session, and he would not get paid for those twelve days.

Resolution reported, read the first and second times, and agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 111) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CUSTOMS TARIFF.

Bill (No. 105) further to amend the Customs Tariff, 1894, was read the second time, considered in committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

STEAMSHIP SUBSIDIES.

Bill (No. 106) further to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies, was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

> 1. The section substituted by chapter eight of the statutes of 1894 for section three of chapter two of the statutes of 1889 intituled An Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies," is hereby repealed and the following sections substituted therefor :—
> " 3. The Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, on such terms and conditions as to the carriage of mails and otherwise as the Governor in Council deems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year."

"4. The Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding five years with any individual or company, for the performance of a fortnightly steamship service between a port or ports in Canada and ports in France and Belgium, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council deems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of fifty thousand dollars a year."

Mr. IVES. The committee will observe that the first clause repeals the clause of the statute named in the Bill referring to a subsidy for the fast Atlantic line and re-enacts the same clause, leaving out two or three words providing for connection between terminal ports in Great Britain and a port or ports in France for the fast line. The fast line scheme is therefore disentangled from the necessity of making connection with a port or ports in France. And the provision is made in the second section for direct steam communication between Canada and France for a term not exceeding five years and at a cost not exceeding $50,000 a year, the port to be Montreal in summer and St. John and Halifax in the winter. Full explanations were made the other night with regard to the matter. Some questions were asked and answered as to the probable business to be done, and I was asked to be ready to give the committee when next it sat some further information as to the imports of France of such articles as we were likely to be able to furnish. I am prepared to give that information, and as it will only take a few minutes, I think hon. members will be glad to receive it. The subject of fresh butter was mentioned the other night by me as an item in which we might look for some trade with France. Some hon. gentleman objected that very little butter was imported into France, and that on the contrary, France was a large exporter of butter. It is true that France imports a large quantity of fresh butter.

Mr. LAURIER. Where from ?

Mr. IVES. I will give the hon. gentleman the information. The imports of fresh butter into France for 1894, which is the last year for which I could get the figures, amouted to $2,780,615 worth. The leading countries from which this butter was imported were Belgium, $1,882,087 ; Italy, $700,440. The other countries from which smaller amounts were imported were Germany, the Netherlands, and Switzerland. In salt butter, there was an importation in the same year of about half a million dollars, the bulk of which came from Italy I also mentioned the subject of cheese, and some hon. gentleman opposite said that cheese imported into France came mainly from Switzerland. I find that the total importation of cheese into France was $5,395,805, and that Switzerland furnished $2,309,964; the Netherlands, $1,522,938; Italy, $677,230 ; and other countries smaller amounts, making the large total I have named. The value of eggs imported was $3,977,072, the largest importation being from Italy, which furnished eggs to the value of $2,405,169 ; Belgium coming next with $739,562. There were importations from other countries which it is not necessary to enumerate. There was also a very large importation of apples and pears, the total being $335,742 ; of apples and pears fresh for cider, $5,449 ; of apples and pears dried for the table, $6,974 ; of apples and pears dried for cider, $69,161 ; of fruits, preserved without sugar or honey, $184,275. Coming to the item of fish, which I mentioned as being one of those in which we could expect a large trade with France, I find that the exports into France were as follows :—Fresh fresh-water fish, $527,738 ; all other fresh fresh-water fish, $408,790 ; of fresh sea herring, $1,635 ; and of all other fresh sea fish, $788,800. The imports of salt, dried or smoked codfish made the enormous total of $5,128,545. Of stock fish, $73,669 ; of herring, $7,690 ; and of all others, $676,608. In animals, I find that the importation of cattle was $12,328,200, the largest importation was from Algeria, while no less a sum than $1,832,426 represents the importations from the United States. Of sheep, the numbers imported were 1,997,858, of a value of $15,178,877. Coming to lumber, I find that the item of building timber in the rough or sawn, the importation was $20,645,923. Of boards, planed, grooved or tongued for flooring, the importation was $210,705 ; of staves of oak, $7,081,638 ; and of other staves, $23,341. Now, I think it will commend itself to the judgment of hon. members that of the articles which I have enumerated, and of which I have given the importations into France for 1894, Canada can fairly compete for a portion of the trade if we have the direct line, and are saved the surtaxe which, if it were imposed would seriously restrict and interfere with our trade.

Mr. WELSH. I am opposed to this fast line altogether. I do not think that the St. Lawrence navigation is fitted for twenty-knot steamers. It is all very well if you run a twenty-knot line from Halifax or New York to England. That is simply a ferry.

Mr. IVES. Let me set the hon. gentleman right. This is not the fast line question that we have before us, but the proposal for a line to France.

Mr. WELSH. I did not so understand it. But the line to France I have no objection to.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister is under a misapprehension. This proposal covers the fast line. The main point before the committee is the Bill providing for this subsidy of $750,000 a year.

Mr. IVES. But what we have before us now is the eliminating of the words providing for the connection between Liverpool and France. The present statute relating to the fast line, as it stands, requires the fast line to connect with a port in France. We wish to amend the statute in that particular.

Mr. WELSH. I shall probably not have another opportunity to give my opinion on the fast line. I understood the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) to refer to the fast line carrying cattle and lumber and all these articles that he mentions. If it is the intention of the promoters of the fast line to carry cattle, I should not be so inclined to oppose it, because the line then would be of benefit to the farmers. I wish to say a few words against establishing a fast line between Europe and Montreal. After passing by the banks of Newfoundland in a voyage from the east to Montreal, you have either to go through the Straits of Belle Isle or around Cape Grace, and you have to enter a region of fog and ice, a region of strong currents. Then you come into the difficult navigation of the St. Lawrence, where a twenty-knot line, I think, would be dangerous. My opinion is that it will be making a hole in the water. I would certainly never support a twenty-knot line to Montreal. But if you want a twenty-knot line to St. John or Halifax—Halifax is my favourite port—then you can immediately leave a port which would be as favourable as the port of New York, you can get clear of the ice and fog at once. In the present resources of our country, I think it is unadvisable to spend $750,000 on a fast line. So far as Montreal is concerned, we know that ships are always waiting there for freight and cargo, they take cargoes as an accommodation, there are more ships than can procure cargoes. Ships go there seeking cargoes every day, and there is no lack of freight room for the produce of Canada at Montreal. We have now got twenty-knot line. They are a very good line, for ordinary passengers. I am an old seaman, and I would just as soon go through the St. Lawrence, if not sooner, by an Allan Line steamer, as I would by one of a twenty-knot line. They are a very good line, well disciplined and well conducted, and I have crossed in them often. I think, in view of the state of our finances, in view of the deficit we had last year, that we ought not to add $750,000 to the burdens of the taxpayers of Canada at this time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that while clause 4, which provides for a steamship service between France and Belgium and Canada, might be passed, clause 3 ought to be left standing. There is no doubt whatever that bringing up an important question of that kind at this stage of the session is an improper thing, and I think this matter ought to be left over for a new Parliament to consider. This means a good deal more than may appear to hon. gentlemen. As I understand, this strikes out the provision for a terminal point in France. I will read the clause :

> The Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, on such terms and conditions as to the carriage of mails and otherwise as the Governor in Council deems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year.

Now, the House will note that under that clause the Government might conclude a contract for a ten years' service ; there is nothing in the world to prevent them, as this clause stands. We are putting into the hands of the Government power to do absolutely as they please with $750,000 a year. Now, I think that at this present time and under these circumstances, the Government have no right to ask anything of the kind from us. Such a power ought to be handed over to the new Parliament to deal with, and to the new Parliament only. For my part, more particularly in view of what we have seen of the way in which the Government guard the public chest, it does appear to me that the demand to have absolute power to deal with $750,000 a year for ten years, is a great deal too much to ask, and a thing that ought not to be consented to by this House. I have said that as to the clause providing $50,000 a year for a service between Canada and France and Belgium, I will raise no objection to it ; but I do say that to bring up this proposition as it now stands, and to place in the hands of the Government unreserved power on that, is a thing which we ought not to do, and which the Government ought not to ask. What harm can result from letting this stand for a couple of months ? We have to meet here within two months, if we do our duty, and this matter can then be properly considered and discussed. I think the only course for the Government to pursue is to drop clause 3 at present, let the thing stand as it now stands, and let the new Parliament discuss the matter, and discuss it with the information and light it will then possess. Sir, we must remember that our last year closed with a deficit of four million dollars, and we must remember that it is very doubtful indeed whether the Government can keep down the expenditure to that point that they proposed. If these subsidies which are in the Supplementary Estimates I have now before me are passed, it will raise our nominal expenditure to about $38,000,000 a year. Now, there is very little prospect, as the hon. gentleman knows, of our receipts exceeding $36,000,000 a year—they may do so a very little —judging from the returns we now have ;

and in that case a deficit this year of more or less amount is probable, if not certain. Under such circumstances, we ought to see our way clear before we agree at this session to give an absolute authority to the Government to enter into a contract for what they are pleased to call a fast weekly service, on such terms and conditions as are before us. There is absolutely no limitation; they may make this rate or that rate, or no rate at all. They would be perfectly at liberty to deal with this in any shape or form they please. Now, I say until it is known that they have the confidence of the country, they ought not to ask for this power at this period of the session. I think this is an unreasonable request, it is a matter that should be left alone for the next two months. When the next two months have passed over our heads, we will know better what to do. I do not want to be understood as saying that a case may not, under certain conditions, be made out for very liberal treatment for steamship lines, and I am not unwilling to consider that in a proper way and at a proper time; but I am not willing to be a party to placing any such power as clause 3 asks for in the hands of the Governor General in Council under existing circumstances, and I submit that the Government ought not to ask for it at this particular stage. We do not want to throw any needless obstacles in the way of their getting what they asked for in the first instance, that is, $50.000 for a line from Canada to France; that I am quite willing they should have if they deem it expedient, as there are possibilities of developing trade with France. But I do think it is not safe, it is not prudent or constitutional, that a Government which, within another week, must be before the country, that a Government which is actually in extremis at this particular moment, should be entrusted with such ample and uncontrolled powers as this is, for entering into a contract on any terms and conditions they see fit. Sir, I object to that, I think the House ought to object to it, and I do not think this should be passed in its present shape at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not quite see what ground the hon. gentleman takes. He seems to ignore what has already taken place in this House, almost every year for the last five or six years. He knows just as well as any member sitting in this House, that it has been the absolute policy of the Government, a policy which has been affirmed on two occasions by the passage of resolutions granting $750.000 on one occasion, and $500.000 on a previous occasion, without the proposition being challenged.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, whether that be true or not, the constitutional proceeding has been taken, the Government has declared their policy and brought their policy down to this House on two separate occasions. That policy has been embodied in Bills, on the first occasion, in 1889, granting a subsidy of $500,000 for ten years, and on the latter occasion, in 1894, granting an extension of that subsidy, and making it amount to $750,000. Now, my hon. friend is altogether too late, and is altogether wrong, I think, in making an objection to the changes in the present Bill, which does not affect the subsidy in any way, shape or fashion, and doing it on the ground that such important legislation as this ought not to be introduced at the end of a session. That is the defined policy of the Government, that policy having been assented to by Parliament and in the most formal way by the giving, under the very same wording as is given here, to the Governor in Council the power to enter into a contract on the terms for which the money was granted by Parliament. What is the objection taken now by the hon. gentleman? Simply this: his objection is to the changes, but there is not any change in substance, there is not any change involving the money grant to any extent whatever, or involving the power of the Governor General in Council to any extent; these remain exactly the same as they were. The only proposition on this point so far as that clause is concerned is this, that whereas now we have established a steamship connection with a French port, we now propose that the terminus of the fast line be in the United Kingdom. The reason for this proposition is apparent. An independent line is now proposed to be established between Canada and France. Does the hon. gentleman wish to tie the hands of the Government in its attempt to establish the fast line by forcing a connection with a French port, while there will be this independent line running between Canada and France at the same time? That is not reasonable, and the hon. gentleman should not take that position. We are not asking for any other powers than such as Parliament have granted on two occasions; we are not asking for any more money for the fast line, we are only asking for a verbal change in paragraph 4, which gives certain powers to the Governor General in Council, of which I observe the hon. member for South Oxford is now very suspicious. But the older he gets the more faith he should have in his fellowmen and in the Government, and it does not do the hon. gentleman credit to hold a contrary opinion. The hon. gentleman has no ground for opposing this proposal. Surely the hon. gentleman is not opposed to the establishment of the fast line of steamers; but the establishment of that fast service between this country and the United Kingdom involves a little more than a line considered simply from the Canadian standpoint. It is a service which is approved from the Canadian standpoint, but since the last legislation on this subject the British Government have also taken this matter into consideration, and they have made a proposal by which the Imperial Government propose to aid the fast line between this country and the United Kingdom by a grant of $350,000 a year running over the term of the contract.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman state that the Imperial Government have definitely granted that sum ?

Mr. FOSTER. I have stated what I have said, that there is a proposition from the Imperial Government to assist this line to that extent. That is true.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman has never laid any official papers on the Table showing that offer, and the Prime Minister of England has expressly contradicted the statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I have stated what I know is perfectly correct. More than that: negotiations on that line and starting from the policy twice affirmed, have been and are at present going on with the British Government, and to-day plans and specifications for those vessels, as to their tonnage, size and equipment, are being revised by the Admiralty Office in connection with the Colonial Secretary's Office, and we expect that these matters will be agreed upon ; and it is of the utmost importance that the policy which has been affirmed twice by that Parliament, a proposition which has received the sympathy and support to that extent of the British Government should not be defeated simply because we ask a verbal change in an Act of Parliament, which is necessary and reasonable because of the provision for the establishment of an independent line between Canada and France.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This proposal involves a great deal more than a verbal change, as the hon. Minister of Finance well knows. It is an important modification of the terms on which we agreed to give an annual subsidy of $750,000. That might or might not be too much to grant for a fast line from Canada to England, touching at France. What are we on the Opposition benches asking ? Simply this, that the matter be delayed for two months ; we are not opposing the proposition, we are not seeking to throw it out. There is perfectly good reason why it should be delayed. It is a matter of the gravest doubt, to say the least of it, whether this Government will be empowered six weeks hence to deal with any contracts. Under these circumstances they should not ask to be entrusted with the management of this matter. It should stand over until either they return with a distinct and clear mandate from the people giving them authority to deal with the public revenues, or their opponents are placed in office. There is no going behind the fact that under clause 3, whether the British Government have promised aid to the extent of $350,000 a year, as the Finance Minister says, or as the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) says, the British Government have not promised to contribute anything, this Government has power to make ducks and drakes of this grant of $750,000 a year for ten years. They should not ask that concession under these circumstances ; they should wait until we know whether they or the Opposition are to be charged with the duty of dealing with this question. It is quite possible that a contract might be made utterly at variance with the policy adopted by this House, which was for a service with a speed of twenty knots, and yet when we came some time ago to cross-examine hon. gentlemen, when I cross-examined the Finance Minister myself some years ago, the twenty-knot service whittled down, and became a myth, and the speed diminished to fourteen or sixteen knots instead of twenty. I do not think, under these circumstances, the House should be asked to place this expenditure under the control of this Government. They have already an Act on the statute-book, which we know they cannot use, and so no harm can arise. It may, however, become an exceedingly serious matter if $750,000 a year is added to the expenditure and no provision made for it. We have had a very large deficit from the past year, and we are likely to have a deficit for the present year. The Finance Minister has been extremely cautious, and has made no estimate whatever as to what revenue he expects to obtain for the succeeding year, but unless it is much more prosperous, there will be a deficit in 1896-97 on our present lines. It is not asking too much that this matter should be postponed for two months, and that is all I am asking. If the hon. gentleman comes back with a majority we will not be disposed to oppose his proposal ; but at the present moment we should not alter the terms of the statute. I repeat that the grant of $50,000 a year for a service between Canada, France and Belgium is perfectly fair. The House agreed to let that vote pass. But this proposal involves the placing of an extremely large sum at the command of the Government under circumstances which warrant some action on our part. The hon. gentleman says that as I grow older I should have more faith in my fellow-men. I have more faith in my fellow-men, and one branch in my faith is that the wicked will do wickedly, and probably more wickedly, if they get the power to do so. I do not feel disposed at this present moment to aid and abet the Government in getting control of this sum of money. I do not know what they will do with it. There is nothing in the whole of this clause to prevent them from giving this subsidy for any kind of service they like. Under the terms of the clause they might give it for a five-knot service, for a ten-knot service, or for a fifteen-knot service, for there is no limitation at all to their power.

I do not think, Sir, that they should ask it. I do not think they should get it. As to the general policy of the matter, it was regarded with very grave doubt and suspicion at the time. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is not correct in saying, that this matter went unchallenged, because there was long discussion in the House as to the policy of it. Moreover, I may remind the House that the whole circumstances surrounding the matter have changed, and will be changed materially by the passage of this apparently insignificant section. The British Government have not as far as I understand consented to anything definitely. We have not any evidence as to what terms they are disposed to give in making this arrangement. The whole matter so far as regards our St. Lawrence service, will bear a very grave doubt. I have never been satisfied at all that it was safe to run extremely fast steamers on that route, with all deference to the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and some of those who supported his opinion. I know that a very great number of our best navigators, and a very great number of our very best shipowners, regard it as extremely dubious. I will grant this much to the hon. gentleman: that our present service is defective and requires improvement; but I am not by any manner of means satisfied, and I never have been satisfied, that the way to benefit the people of Canada at large was by attempting to compete with what are known as ocean greyhounds, to Europe. I am very much of the opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock), that that cannot be done with any hope of success, under the conditions imposed. I can understand very well the propriety of having a Canadian line running a great deal faster than at present, but that can be obtained, as has been proven, for a smaller sum than $750,000 a year. Now, Sir, it was pointed out very clearly at the time, that after all said and done, all you get out of this, if you can get it, would probably be a mere five or six months mail service, for it cannot be an all year service, for reasons which are perfectly patent to everybody. This scheme which was originally called a twenty-knot service, but which is now sunk to a mere fast-weekly steamship service—which may mean something or may mean nothing, as the case may be—this is a very different affair indeed from what we were originally asked to consent to. I do not at all approve of the idea, under existing circumstances, of placing this power in the hands of a Government which is not at this present known to possess the confidence of the country. When this matter was proposed originally, the Government had no doubt a right to say that they represented a majority of the electors at that time, and therefore that they might be fairly trusted with those negotiations. Now, it has gone on for several years. Very curious circumstances have attended the various negotiations which took place with Mr. Huddart. I remember that when the papers were laid on the Table, it appeared to all of us, that the Government were giving away a very great deal on very dubious representations. I do not want to say anything about Mr. Huddart—about whom I know very little, and about whom the investing public know very little either—except this: that he appears to have entirely broken down in the proposition he made to the Government, and I suppose the Government do not propose to negotiate with him any longer, or at any rate, that they will require him to associate with persons of far greater capital than he possesses. I do not admit at all, that because two or three years ago, the Government had a right to say they represented a majority of the electors; that the Government have the right to say now, within forty-eight hours of the time when this Parliament shall dissolve by efflux of time: trust us with several millions of money, give us a credit, allow us to make any contract we please, give us the privilege to deal with any human beings we choose as the beneficiaries of this fast line service. That is asking a very great deal more than the Government had power to do before, because I was well aware that the clause which they say is a mere verbal alteration, was a clause which very materially affected the possibility of getting that contract, and a clause which made the $750,000 a year a much less important matter than it would otherwise have been. The hon. gentlemen know that themselves. Now, Sir, under all these circumstances, if this is to be discussed at all, it should be discussed separately and apart. Let the Government take their $50,000 subsidy, that is to say, let them take clause 4, and let the other matter be held over until such time as we meet again. No detriment can arise to the public service from that. The hon. gentlemen are not in a position to come down to us and to say: Here is a contract actually made to which the British Government are part. I submit that it is in accordance with sound constitutional principles, I submit that it is in accordance with our traditions and with common sense, too, that the Government, just on the eve of an election, should not make important changes in a contract, and that the Government should not be trusted with unreserved and uncontrolled power over a very large sum of money. It is for that reason, as every constitutional authority agrees, that in the mother country, they object very properly to even granting ordinary Estimates, which is a much less serious matter than to granting a subsidy of this kind. I will just read to the House a passage from Todd's Parliamentary Government in England, which bears on that point:

> When Parliament is about to be dissolved, it is manifestly improper to call upon the House of Commons to vote either the full amount, or all the details of the proposed estimate, and so commit the country to the financial policy of > Ministers whose fate is about to be determined at the general election. The supply of credit should be restricted to such an amount as may be absolutely required for the public service, until the reassembling of Parliament, and the vote on account should not be regarded as in any degree pledging the House to an approval of the entire estimates.

Well, here is a proposition which involves a great deal more than the Estimates.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, it is a ten years' estimate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes. It is not sufficient for the Government to say : two or three years ago when your pockets were full of money, and when the country might be supposed to have confidence in us, we agreed on such a proposition, and you granted us such power. That is an entirely different matter from saying that we will do such a thing on Wednesday the 22nd day of April, in a Parliament which must be dissolved by efflux of time on the 24th day of April, and it is a proposition which ought to be very seriously considered by this House. I repeat, that we are not disposed to oppose the giving of a reasonable subsidy, or even a large subsidy, for the purpose of promoting an efficient service between Canada and England. We are not disposed either to oppose reasonable arrangements with the Imperial Government. It is a very long time ago, I may tell the hon. gentleman, since I myself proposed substantially such a scheme as this, to the late Sir Stafford Northcote, at that time Chancellor of the Exchequer, and it would have been better, I humbly think, if the Imperial Government had concurred with us then, and agreed to our proposition. But it takes a long time, I am aware, to move the English Government, and they are very apt when they are moved to attach some onerous conditions. But that does not affect the point I raise, which is that during the next six weeks, or two months, no possible harm can come to the country by leaving matters as they are. If we on this side of the House happen to be in power, we shall be prepared to deal with the subject in accordance with the best interests of the country, and if the other side get into power, we shall have no power to prevent them dealing with it. Has the hon. gentleman got any papers to lay on the Table ? If I am not mistaken, he alluded to some correspondence.

Mr. FOSTER. I said that correspondence had gone on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to lay it on the Table ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I have it here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You ought to have it before we deal with this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman is going back to the principle of the matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am going back to principles. One is that this measure gives very unusual power to the Government, and another is that it should be left over until after the election, which is the proper time to take up these important questions. That is a reasonable and just proposition. I do not think the Government have any right to bind this country for a term of years to this large undertaking, while they are not sure of possessing the confidence of the country.

(At One o'clock the committee rose for recess, and resumed at Two o'clock.)

Mr. FOSTER. I think there was a little misapprehension as to the time we were to reassemble. As I see that the Minister is not here, I am going to move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again ; and we will take the matter up again to-night after dinner.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the Minister lay the papers on the Table ?

Mr. FOSTER. The papers are being prepared, and they will be here in half an hour.

Committee rose and reported progress.

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST.

Bill (No. 107) respecting certain debentures of the Montreal Turnpike Trust held by the Government of Canada, was read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Bill (No. 110) respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, was read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman had better not move the third reading of the Bill. We have not seen it at all.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all right and the trouble is that the Senate is now in session and——

Mr. LAURIER. But the greater trouble is that we have not seen the Bill at all.

SUPPLY—MAILS BETWEEN BATTLEFORD AND SASKATOON.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to bring to the attention of the House very briefly a matter which I have already tried to bring before the House and upon which I have endeavoured in former sessions to get information, but without success until this year. Last session I moved for papers on the subject, which were not brought down until the 24th

January last. The question I refer to is that of the mail contract between Battleford and Saskatoon. I have drawn attention to the fact that the Government in the North-west and British Columbia deliberately renew the contracts for the carriage of mails without submitting these contracts to public tender and at figures away beyond that the work ought to cost. A very glaring example of that in the province of British Columbia is that of the contract awarded to the British Columbia Express Company, for four years and without tender at a figure double what the work could be done for, for the carrying of the mails between Ashcroft and the Cariboo district. The amount paid for this service is $24,000 a year, or $4,000 more than the same company used to get when they carried the mail from Yale, a considerably longer distance. This is a case as to which we have not yet had the papers. But the papers in regard to the contract for carrying the mails between Battleford and Saskatoon were laid upon the Table this session. For this service the Government has been paying $7,049.20. Now, that is the figure that this contract was let at twelve or sixteen years ago when supplies in those territories were very costly, and we find that this contract is in force at the same figure to this day. This contract expired in December, 1894, and without advertisement and without tenders being called for, it was arbitrarily renewed with the Messrs. Leeson & Scott for four years at the same figure—$7,049.20. Now, I wish to read a few communications that have been received by the Postmaster General from persons in the neighbourhood who are willing to do the work at a very great saving to the Government. But, in spite of that information being before the Postmaster General and the Government, the contract was again awarded without tender to the former contractor. I may say that I know particularly one gentleman, Mr. Dewar, of Battleford, who is and for years has been prepared to do the work at a considerable less figure than that I have mentioned as the contract price. The first letter I refer to is dated from Prince Albert and dated 19th December, 1892, and addressed to Mr. MacLeod, Post Office Inspector at Winnipeg :

> Will you be good enough to send me replies to the following :—Who are the mail contractors for the mail service between Saskatoon and Battleford ? When was the contract awarded, and when does it expire ? And what is the contract price for the service ? This information, I believe is obtainable from your office, and an early reply will greatly oblige.
> Yours respectfully,
> C. R. STOVEL.

No reply was received to that letter, but I merely read it to show that on the 19th December, 1892, Mr. Stovel of Prince Albert had this contract in mind and was desirous of obtaining information with regard to it. I find I was mistaken in saying there was no reply. A reply was sent to Mr. Stovel, and on the 7th January, 1893, he writes to the Postmaster General, as follows :—

> Replying to an inquiry from me addressed to P. O. Inspector MacLeod, and by him forwarded to Ottawa, your superintendent stated in his favour of the 28th December, 1892 : "That the contractors for the Battleford and Saskatoon mail service were Messrs. Leeson & Scott, who are paid at the rate of $7,049.20 per annum and the period of its termination is undetermined." May I be informed whether this contract was awarded or let by tender ? Will the public have an opportunity of tendering for this contract in future ? and if so, when ? For reference, if necessary, I have the honour to name Mr. D. H. Macdowall, M.P., Saskatoon.
> I have the honour to remain, Sir,
> Yours respectively,
> C. R. STOVEL.

Now, the statement from the Postmaster General's Office that the time of the ending of this contract was not determined was inaccurate, as it expired in December, 1894. Then again on the 2nd February, 1893, we have from the same gentleman a formal offer addressed to Sir Adolphe Caron, Postmaster General, as follows :—

> Referring to communications from your department addressed to me and dated the 27th December, 1892, and 20th January, 1893, in which the name of the contractors and rate paid for mail service between Battleford and Saskatoon is given and the statement made that the question of putting the existing service up for tender will receive the consideration of the Postmaster General.
> I beg to submit for the Postmaster's General's consideration this proposal with reference to the mail service between the points named. I will agree to deliver mails at Battleford within 30 hours after receipt of them at Saskatoon and will deliver mails from Battleford within 30 hours after receipt there at Saskatoon to connect with trains on the Port Arthur branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway twice per week during the summer months, say from 1st April until 1st November, and for the balance of year—winter months—will agree to deliver mails at points named within 48 hours after receipt, or at times and hours to be named by the Postmaster General, for the sum of $5,000 per year. By this arrangement the time occupied in receipt and delivery of mails at Battleford and Saskatoon would be materially lessened and an annual saving to the Post Office Department of $2,049.20 would thereby be effected.
> Should this proposition meet with the favourable consideration of the Postmaster General, I am prepared to and will deposit any reasonable sum at the Imperial Bank of Canada at Prince Albert as security that I will enter into a contract and fulfil the terms thereof based on the proposals I have made.
> I have the honour to be, Sir,
> Yours respectfully,
> C. R. STOVEL.

I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that this offer to do the work in better shape and less time was made in the early part of 1893, nearly two years before the contract had expired, and the offer was to do it for $5,000, making a saving of over

$2,000 to the country; and yet, in the face of that, the department deliberately renewed the contract in December, 1894, without giving Mr. Stovel or any other person an opportunity of tendering for this work. They deliberately gave $7,000 for doing the work which they knew a competent hand was prepared to do for $2,000 less, and put up cash as security for the performance of his contract. There is another letter from Mr. Stovel to Mr. Macdowall, dated 27th February, 1893:

C. R. Stovel, L.D.S.,
Dental Surgeon.
Prince Albert, 27th Feb., 1893.

Dear Mr. Macdowall,—As promised I am sending you a request to ask you to be good enough to use your good influence with the Postmaster General to obtain for me acceptance of the offer I have submitted. Father Blais is writing Hon. Mr. Ouimet to ask his co-operation also, and I certainly think I have reason to hope that even if my offer is not accepted, the service may be put up for tender as should be done.

With respects, I remain, &c.,
Yours truly,
(Sd.) C. R. STOVEL.

Then there is another gentleman in Prince Albert, or near there, at Batoche, who also had his eye on this work, and had been corresponding with the department. I refer to Mr. J. Gingras. His letter is dated 27th February, 1893, and is written in French and I shall merely give the substance. He asks if the Government is ready to make any changes in the mail service between Battleford and Saskatoon, or between Battleford and Fort Pitt, and Fort Pitt and Thunder Mountain and Fort Qu'Appelle. He says he is ready to carry those three lines for $25 a trip, or $4,500 a year en bloc for the whole three. Referring to other communications he had made to Mr. Macdowall, he points out that the department pay Scott & Leeson more than double the amount for which he offers to do this work. He is prepared to do the three trips for $4,500 per annum, for which the Government at that time paid $9,000. Then there is another letter from Mr. Stovel addressed to Mr. Macdowall:

Prince Albert, 27th Feb., 1893.

D. H. Macdowall, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I am writing to advise you that by last mail I forwarded to the Hon. the Postmaster General a communication respecting the mail service between Battleford and Saskatoon, and therein submitted a proposal as follows:—That I would agree to deliver mails at Battleford from Saskatoon and at Saskatoon from Battleford twice per week within the space of 30 hours in summer and 48 hours in winter, or within hours named by the Postmaster General, for the sum of $5,000 per year. The rate paid for the same service at present is $7,049.20 per year, so that were my proposal accepted a clear saving of the sum of $2,049.20 would be effected. The present contractors are non-residents of the district in which the service is carried on, and it would seem but just that the residents of the district should have opportunity of enjoying the benefits arising from the expenditure of public moneys in their district. In view of the fact that acceptance of the proposal I have submitted would reduce the cost of this service by over $2,000, and lessen the time now occupied in the delivery of mails at points named, and believing that with your personal knowledge of the subject, you can convince the Postmaster General of the desirability of the change, I take the liberty of asking you to be kind enough to see the Minister and urge his favourable consideration of my offer.

Yours respectfully,
(Sd.) C. R. STOVEL.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Saskatchewan did see the department, but evidently he communicated with him because we find a letter to Mr. Macdowall from Mr. Stovel amongst the records of the department. However, his communication has no effect. Then we find also a letter from Mr. Gingras to Mr. Macdowall, dated Batoche, 22nd February, 1893, in which he points out that he had made an offer to the Government to carry the three mails for $4,500 a year, for wheih the department are now paying over $10,000. He says that he tendered before for the same while Mr. Haggart was Postmaster General, but never succeeded in getting the contract, but now that the term of the contract is nearly up and that we have a new Postmaster General, he should like to try again. Then we find, on the 4th March, 1893, a letter from Mr. Macdowall to Sir Adolphe Caron:

Stovel tells me he has put in an offer to convey the Battleford mails at a price which will effect a saving to the Government of $2,000 a year.

I hope you may be able to meet his wishes or put up the work for tender.

Now, I wish to call attention to this most outrageous case. Here is a responsible member of Parliament, supporting the Government from the constituency, drawing the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that one of his constituents is prepared to do Government work at a saving to the country of the large sum of $2,000 per annum, and suggests that his offer be either accepted or that the contract be put up for tender when it expires. The Government pay no attention, but go right on deliberately and renew the contract, when it expires at the end of 1894, to the old contractors, Scott & Leeson, for the sum of $7,000, although they have positive proof that good responsible men are prepared to do the work at a saving to the Government of $2,000 per annum. Then again we have another letter from Mr. Macdowall, with regard to Gingras's letter, dated March 15th, 1893:

Dear Sir Adolphe,—

I inclose you a letter from Mr. J. Gingras, of Batoche, dated 27th ultimo, asking for mail contracts between Saskatoon and Battleford, Battleford and Fort Pitt, and Touch Hills and Fort Qu'Appelle, and stating the price for which he will perform the service.

Then there is another letter from Mr. Boucher, who was a member of the North-west Council at the time. It does not appear to whom the letter is addressed, but he calls attention to Mr. Gingras' offer to take these three mail contracts at a saving to the department of $2,200 per annum, and that he, Mr. Boucher, is prepared to enter into partnership with Gingras to carry out the work. Then there is another letter from Mr. Macdowall, to the department, dated May 1, 1893 :

My dear Sir Adolphe,—

Mr. C. R. Stovel, who put in an offer for the conveyance of the Battleford mail at a lower rate than you pay at present, has asked me to write you inquiring what decision you had come to in the matter, and I also inclose a letter from Mr. Boucher, M.L.A. for Batoche on the same subject.

Now, I wish to draw the special attention of the committee to the following leter from Mr. Stovel, in which he again draws special attention of the department to his offer :

Prince Albert, June 28th, 1893.

The Hon. A. R. Angers,
Acting P. M. G. of Canada,
Ottawa.

Sir,—An offer which I submitted for the consideration of the Hon. the Postmaster General some months ago, and which I was informed would receive the attention of the Post Office Department, still remains unanswered. The facts are as follows :—For the mail service between Saskatoon and Battleford, North-west Territories, the department pay for a semi-weekly service at the rate of $7,200 per year. My proposal, which you will find, I believe, in the department, is to carry on the same service, but making a reduction of time if necessary in delivery of mails, for the sum of $5,000 per annum, thereby effecting a saving of the large sum of $2,200 per year to the public and your department, which I beg to submit as an item of considerable importance. My application was strongly recommended by Mr. D. H. Macdowall, M.P., Dr. Sproule, M.P., and Rev. Père Blais of this town. In making the proposition for the contract I state that any reasonable sum which the Postmaster General would name I would deposit in the Imperial Bank as a guarantee that I would enter into and fulfil the terms of a contract based upon the proposal made by me, all of which I am still prepared to do. Since receiving notice that my application would engage the attention of the department, I have heard nothing further about the matter, and I feel that I am not receiving justice at the hands of the Post Office Department. Aside from the strong recommendation of Mr. Macdowall, whose wishes it is doubtless the desire of the department to consult, as a question of saving the sum of $2,200 per year, I would respectfully urge a decision in the matter. In a private letter to Sir Adolphe Caron I have stated that I am prepared to deposit in the Imperial Bank here the sum of $500 that I will enter into and carry out the terms of a contract for the service and am prepared to give the most responsible security for the efficiency of the service. I have since first voting in 1878 been a loyal supporter of the Conservative Governments, and as you, Sir, are doubtless aware under such circumstances, have sacrificed time, &c., in the interests of my party, and while I do not ask for favours on the ground of past support to the Government, at the same time I do not see why those conditions should be hindrance in the way of my receiving simple justice in the matter of receiving a share of public expenditure in the district in which I am making a home. The present contractors do not reside in the district. Trusting that my application will receive due consideration, I would respectfully request an early reply.

Then there is another letter from Mr. Gingras, dated March 9th, 1894, the following year :

In reference to carrying mail from Saskatoon to Battleford, I would like to know if the tender I put in last fall has met with the approval of your department, or if you intend making any changes, for if you are, I would like to know so I could put in a fresh tender. By letting me know you will much oblige.

Yours respectfully,
(Sd.) J. GINGRAS.

Then there is another letter from some other party, dated 28th January, 1895, just after the contract had been awarded to Scott & Leeson without tender. This letter is addressed to W. W. McDonald, M.P. :

I have the honour to draw your attention to the fact that as far as the public can know, the post office contracts for this district have neither been advertised for locally or tenders called for. Messrs. Leeson & Scott, the previous contractors, are still running it, nobody else apparently being given a chance. Attached is extract from blue-book showing our local mail, also Messrs. Leeson & Scott's contract under Manitoba division.

We should be glad if you can explain this matter to us, as Messrs. Leeson & Scott have held the contract against all opposition for a number of years, the local people getting no chance whatever, though they would willingly run the mail for half the sum that Messrs. Leeson & Scott get.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servants,
(Sd.) BRINE & FETHERSTONHAUGH.

Now, there is evidence of men who are on the spot, and who were in a position to know stating that if these contracts for which the Government pay a large sum of money yearly, were put up at public tender, they could get the work done with one-half the amount. Mr. McDonald says, in reply to Mr. Stovel :

I inclose letter which will explain itself. I think if statement inclosed is true, the matter should be looked into at once. Please answer soon as I can answer the writers, Brine, & F.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are the facts, and I wish to bring this additional fact to the knowledge of this House, that these individuals, Messrs. Scott & Leeson, who have got these contracts in the North-west Territories, year after year, without any competition being allowed, without any opportunity to local men, these men are very large contributors to the election funds of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, I say, Mr. Speaker, that that kind of proceeding is something to which a very hard name might properly be applied. What can you think of a Government who deliberately take the people's money for the purpose of running their elections in this way ? They need money for elections, Scott & Leeson are prepared to give the money, and in return for the money that Scott & Leeson hand over to them for election purposes, the Government deliberately go to work and give contracts to Scott & Leeson by which these men make $6,000 or $7,000 a year more than these contracts could be efficiently done for by persons who are prepared on the spot to take the contracts and carry them out. Now, I say the Government might just as well issue a cheque directly from the Post Office Department to their election committee ; so far as the offence is concerned, it would not be any worse to take the money of the people directly out of the treasury for the purpose of running the elections, and hand the money over to their election committee. The bargain is too plain ; it is the clearest case of the Government deliberately giving a contract to a firm at a very much larger figure than the work could be done for by any other person, deliberately refusing to allow other persons an opportunity of tendering for this work, and then taking that money practically out of the treasury by getting it back from Scott & Leeson as a subscription for their election funds. I say that that kind of administration has ruined the Northwest. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is all the time talking about hindrances to the North-west, but I would ask him if it is not true that there is no fairness in the awarding of Government contracts, not only in the Post Office Department, but in all the other departments of the Government ; in connection with the Mounted Police, in connection with the Department of the Interior, in connection with the administration of Government affairs in the North-west Territories. They are all done on this basis, in order that the Government may take their toll out of the public contracts given.

Mr. DALY. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I cannot allow that statement to go uncontradicted. I say the statement that the hon. gentleman makes is wholly beyond the truth, and I dare him to prove it.

Mr. MARTIN. I am proving it right here. What better proof can I give ? Here is a contract that Scott & Leeson have held for fifteen or sixteen years, to carry the mail from Battleford to Saskatoon at $7,200 per annum. Before the last renewal of that contract, Mr. Gingras and Mr. Stovel offered to do the work at a largely reduced figure, and I would call upon the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) to say whether these men are competent to do the work. We have his letters recommending their application, we are told that he strongly recommended their application. I do not know the men, I never heard of them before. I do know that Mr. Dewar, of Battleford, has, time and again, offered the Government to do the very same work, not for $5,000, but for $3,700. Now, what better proof does the Minister of the Interior want of the statement I have made ? My statement is that the Government might as well have put their hands into the treasury and taken that money for election purposes as do it in this roundabout way.

Mr. DALY. That was not the hon. gentleman's statement. His statement was that every contract let by the Department of the Interior and the Department of Indian Affairs was let so that the Government could take toll out of it. I deny it, and I put the hon. gentleman to the proof. I say there is no foundation in fact for any such statement.

Mr. MARTIN. I say there is. This is a mere sample.

Mr. DALY. What has that to do with those departments ?

Mr. MARTIN. The same rule applies. Everybody knows it.

Mr. DALY. No.

Mr. MARTIN. Nobody out there can get a contract from the Government unless he is ready to ante-up for election purposes.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman made a charge against the administration of the affairs of the Interior Department, and the hon. gentleman has no right to make any such statement unless he is prepared to prove it. I put him to the proof.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member has appealed to me. I know that the contract was given to the lowest tenderer, because I have faithfully endeavoured to get things for my friends and could not get them, for the Government gave the contract to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I can endorse what the hon. member for West Assiniboia has said.

Mr. MARTIN. Was this contract given to the lowest tenderer ? The contract was let to Leeson & Scott at $10,000, while it could be done for $5,000 by men who are prepared to give ample security. Instead of work being done for $7,200 per annum, it could be done for $5,000. Brine & Fetherstonhaugh point out that there is no chance of any one obtaining a contract from the department except the firm of Scott & Leeson. I know they are large contributors to the election fund of the Government in the North-west Territories and Manitoba. They do not contribute their own money, but money which has been obtained through the hands of the Government. It would be much less expensive if the Post Office Department were to issue a cheque direct to the election committee rather than have the funds pass through the hands of Scott & Leeson, who, of course, do not hand over all the money they make on contracts to the election committee, but only part of it. It will be much cheaper to take the money directly out of the treasury rather than pay these people as brokers, as is done to-day, to convey money obtained from the Post Office Department into the hands of the election committee. It is a perfect outrage on the people. The same conditions prevail in the province of British Columbia. Here is a contract with the British Columbia Express Company, which has been renewed time after time without tender at $24,000 per annum, which, if put up for tenders, would be done for less than $12,000 per annum. The hon. member for Yale may know something about this contract by which the company get $24,000 per annum for carrying mails from Ashcroft into the Cariboo district, whereas in former years they only got $20,000 for carrying the mails from Yale, a much further distance, before the completion of the railway to Ashcroft.

Mr. PRIOR. Does the hon. gentleman say that the company do not do more mileage now than they did at first?

Mr. MARTIN. They do less for $24,000 per annum than they formerly did for $20,000. Of course, I do not know so much in regard to these British Columbia matters, but I say that I know that Scott & Leeson are contributors every year to the Government election funds. I do not know whether the British Columbia Express Company contributes, but it is the company's interest to do so.

Mr. LISTER. Who are the members of the company ?

Mr. MARTIN. I think the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Mara) was formerly manager of the company, but that his brother now manages it. Whether the hon. member has any interest in the company I do not know.

Mr. MARA. When an hon. gentleman refers to a member of the House and says that he or his brother is a member of that company, the proper time to make the contradiction is now. I wish to say that neither the member for Cariboo, nor his brother, nor any relative or connection of his has any connection whatever with the Cariboo Express Company ; nor has the hon. member for Cariboo or any relative or connection of his by marriage had anything to do with the British Columbia Express Company during the life of the present Parliament.

Mr. MARTIN. Had they prior to that time ?

Mr. MARA. The British Columbia Express Company, as nearly every hon. member of this House knows, was founded by the late Mr. Barnard, who was at one time a representative of Cariboo in this House, and who is the father of the present member for Cariboo.

Mr. MARTIN. Give us the history as to when the change took place. I am not making a charge.

Mr. MARA. The change took place several years ago. So far as I know, the Express Company consists of S. Jingley, P. Jingley and J. G. McKay ; they are, I believe, the owners of the British Columbia Express Company. I believe that never at any time has that company contributed one dollar to any election fund or candidate in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN. I should like to know what possible excuse there is for giving the company a contract at $24,000 a year, when the Government can get the work done for $12,000 if it were put up to tender. In the case of Scott & Leeson, we know they are contributors to the election funds.

Mr. PRIOR. You do not.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, I know it too well, and they are doing to-day a contract in the Territories for an amount of $10,000, $12,000 or $15,000, which could be done at any time for one-half of the amount by reliable parties. I know that to be the fact with respect to them. With regard to the British Columbia Express Company, it is a fair inference that the Government do not deliberately allow the company to take $12,000 more than they should have taken without giving some consideration for it. I say that is the inference—I do not know anything about it. With regard to the connection of the hon. member for Cariboo with the company, I make no charge—I do not charge the hon. member for Cariboo as violating the Independence of Parliament Act. An hon. gentleman asked me, if I knew who the members of the company were, and I said I had been informed that at one time the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Barnard) was a member of the company, and that at the present time his brother was managing it. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) tells me that Mr. Barnard's brother is not managing it, and, of course, I accept his statement. I know nothing about it at all. I say that these two instances are a sample of what is done in the North-west Territories and British Columbia, in the way of utilizing the public service for the purpose of accumulating an election fund. If the Government wish to protect themselves against a charge of that kind, they should put up these contracts for tender. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has advised that. Prior to the expiry of the Battleford and Saskatoon contract, he wrote urging the department to put it up for tender, and he pointed out that a responsible man that would give security to do the work for $5,000, and also, that Mr. Gingras was prepared to do for $4,500 per annum work which was costing the Government $10,000 a year. The Minister of the Interior is most indignant that such a charge should be made against the Government, and against his department. I am not prepared at the moment to furnish the proofs as to the hon. gentleman's department.

Mr. DALY. And I defy you to do so, or anybody belonging to you.

Mr. MARTIN. I was going to say——

Mr. DALY. You are irresponsible.

Mr. MARTIN. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daly) is so indignant at any suggestion about his own department, what does he think of his friend the Postmaster General who makes no denial of my statement ? The Minister of the Interior is just as responsible for what the Government does as is the Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron).

Mr. DALY. You are shifting your ground now stay where you were.

Mr. MARTIN. I say that the same principle permeates all the departments in the North-west.

Mr. DALY. I am sorry that parliamentary rules do not permit me to characterize your language in the way I would like to.

Mr. MARTIN. I am sorry that parliamentary rules do not permit me to characterize this conduct of the Government in the way it should be characterized. There is a very strong word in the English language which will apply to a Government who deliberately take the people's money out of the treasury for such a purpose. Hon. gentlemen opposite know what that word is, and I need not apply it. I have brought this matter up in the House, time and again, but I never had the information so completely as I have it now. It is always difficult to get proof, as to these matters, but we know that public services in the North-west are charged for at from two or three times the amount they should be charged for. There is a clause in the Post Office Act, which allows the Postmaster General to renew a contract without tender if he sees fit. Surely there must be a reason for that. What is the reason that this contract was extended without tender, for those persons who are such large subscribers to the Conservative election fund. Sir, I am glad that the general elections are so close at hand, when the people of the North-west Territories, under the protection of the ballot will be enabled to express their dissatisfaction with a Government which has been so derelict in their duty, as I have proved this Government to be with reference to the mail contract in that country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was not in the House when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) first brought this matter up. The first part of his remarks applied to a contract which was renewed long previously to the time when I became Postmaster General. I do not in any way attempt to shirk the responsibility of the action taken by the department, even before I was Minister, but if the hon. gentleman had let me know that this matter was going to be brought up, I should have hunted up the records in the department so as to be able to reply to him.

Mr. MARTIN. I did not know when the Government was going into Supply.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have no manner of doubt that the hon. gentleman was in perfect ignorance of the time when the Opposition would consent to allow the Government to conduct the business of the House, and so he did not let me know, I consider that is a condescension on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) which I must acknowledge. I should like to call the attention of the House to this fact. In the Territories and in British Columbia, and in those portions of Canada which have not the benefit of railways, these contracts are made with companies who have to expend a large amount of money in securing plant. For instance, in the case of this express company referred to, they have to have several hundred horses to carry out their contract with the Post Office Department.

Mr. MARTIN. Those other parties are willing to do that.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) even when he was very offensive in his language, and he might permit me to express the views of the department in relation to these contracts. The department enters into contracts with companies which have to spend a large sum of money in securing the plant necessary for carrying out these contracts. Time and again, when it became a question of calling for new tenders, our inspectors reported to the department that it was impossible to get any other company who were prepared to enter into such a contract. That is one of the very reasons which very often militates in favour of continuing the contract with these very large companies without tenders. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not know a single man composing the company who were awarded this contract; and I had no other reason for renewing the contract than the reports of the inspectors and the other officials of my department, who know technically the work of the department very much better than I could pretend to know it. The contract with the British Columbia Express Company has been in existence ever since confederation.

Mr. MARTIN. Hear, hear—without any tender.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should like to know whether every gentleman who represents a constituency in British Columbia is not prepared to say that but for that company the population out there would have been placed in a position that would have been absolutely intolerable. There was no mail service possible, except through a large company, having a large capital at its back, and a very extensive plant for the purpose. When have we received any complaint in regard to the carrying out of that contract ? The hon. member for Winnipeg seems to take a great deal of interest in the future of British Columbia. He comes here and makes a complaint merely for political purposes, and tries to show that the Government have not done their duty. He states that the contract has not been given to the proper company, though all the representatives from that province agree that the contract has been carried out efficiently, and that the people who now hold the contract ought to continue to have it. I hardly expect the hon. gentleman to approve of anything we have done or are likely to do ; but although I would like to satisfy him, I will continue to administer my department without considering it indespensable to get his advice as to the manner in which the department should be administered. The service was originally let by tender, and it has been continued with the express company ever since ; and if the contract is continued to the same company, it is because it was impossible to have the work performed properly by any other organization at a lower price than was being paid.

Mr. McSHANE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Postmaster General has stated, in the course of his remarks, that the contract was given to this company in British Columbia because it cost a great deal of money to do the work, and because it was impossible in a few days to get any other contractor who would be able to perform the contract. I desire to say that such a statement is unwarranted and unfounded. There must be a very poor state of things in British Columbia and the North-west if there are not hundreds of people there who could provide a few horses and a few wagons to carry the mails. Talk about plant—what does a plant cost ? It would not cost near a thousand dollars. The hon. gentleman has done the same thing in the city of Montreal, where there are hundreds of people ready and willing to take the contract for carrying the mails in that city at less money than the present contractor. I am sure the city of Montreal has as large a mail service as British Columbia or the North-west ; and yet the hon. gentleman did not think fit to invite tenders there. No corporation or other institution thinks of giving out work of this kind without tenders.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Would my hon. friend permit me to ask him a question about Montreal ? Does he know who the contractors are for the carrying of the mails from the stations to the post office ?

Mr. McSHANE. I am not asking about the stations.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am asking a question of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McSHANE. I speak of carrying the mails from the letter boxes to the post office. I say that there is no corporation in any part of the country that does not invite tenders for any sort of supplies or services that they require. I ask the Postmaster General if he would pay out of his own pocket $25,000 for the carrying of the mails in British Columbia, or $10,000 for carrying them in the North-west when he could get good responsible men to carry them for half the money ? Mr. Gingras is as responsible and as good a man as the man who is now carrying the mails. All that is required is four or five men and four or five horses to do the work. I desire to tell the hon. Postmaster General there are a great many people in the city of Montreal and all over the country who were looking forward to have an opportunity to tender for the carrying of the mails. Did they get a chance ? No. Were any tenders asked for by the hon. Postmaster General from the North-west, British Columbia and Montreal ? No. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but it is in keeping with their other performances ; it is in keeping with everything they have done lately. They have been so long in power that they own the country, and we saw an evidence last night, when the hon. Finance Minister had to go down on his knees before the hon. leader of the Opposition to beg of him to be loyal and not condemn him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McSHANE. And not condemn a most villainous transaction.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot refer to a past debate.

Mr. McSHANE. It is not fair to the people of the country, it is not fair to the men who pay the taxes and who want to have fair-play—it is not fair that these men should be set aside for the favourites of the Government, but the day will soon come when the people will effect a change.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I very much regret that the hon. Minister of Finance had to kneel before the leader of the Opposition to make him loyal. I am sorry indeed that he should have been put to that trouble. I should like to tell the hon. gentleman that the Grand Trunk Railway has the contract for the carrying of the mail.

Mr. McSHANE. Did the Grand Trunk Railway pay the late Mr. Kennedy for carrying the mails ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman all he wants at once. I say that the contract for conveying the mail from the different stations to the post office is in the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. MARTIN. But the hon. gentleman was referring to——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. MARTIN. I rise to a point of order. The hon. Postmaster General has already spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER. He has already spoken, but it is the custom in this House, and the invariable custom in England, when a question is raised, that the Minister should have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. MARTIN. By consent.

Mr. SPEAKER. No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not going to occupy the time of the House at any length, but I wish simply to give the information which the hon. gentleman is seeking. The carrying of the mails from the various stations is in the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway. There is a contract for the carrying of the mails from the Canadian Pacific Railway station in the city of Montreal with Mr. Kennedy. Tenders were called for. Mr. Kennedy did not get that contract without tenders being asked for. The contract has been renewed because under the statute the Postmaster General has a right, if the service is properly carried out, to continue these contracts, and so the contract with Mr. Kennedy has been continued.

CHARGES BY LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WORSLEY AGAINST LIEUTENANT-COLONEL MURRAY.

Mr. BORDEN. I desire to bring to the attention of the House a grievance affecting a gentleman who at one time occupied a prominent position in the militia of this country. Prior to that time he had been an officer in the British army, and up to the moment when the circumstances occurred to which I shall refer, he has always been held to be a man of the highest honour and had enjoyed the fullest confidence of the Government by whom he was employed.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. gentleman the names of the gentleman to whom he is going to refer ?

Mr. BORDEN. His name is Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is on the Order paper as a notice of motion.

Mr. BORDEN. I have a notice of motion for the papers but I do not understand that that precludes me from discussing the matters to which I am going to refer. I am not going to refer to papers for which I moved because I have not got them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The motion not only refers to the papers relating to the charges preferred by Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley but the action taken thereupon, the resignation, and every conceivable phase of the subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. No doubt, if the hon. gentleman proposes to discuss any matter connected with this matter on the Order paper he is out of order. I have not been able to gather if he is out of order or not, but if he proposes to discuss any matter connected with the charges preferred by Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley or any of the other matters contained in the motion, that will be out of order.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite your attention for a moment to the form of notice of motion and the extent to which it precludes hon. gentlemen from discussing questions. I understand the rule to be that if any notice of motion is given upon any subject, and that notice is on the Order paper, it precludes the discussion of that subject being brought up, either by the person who gave the notice or anybody else. Now, the hon. gentleman had a notice on the paper for certain papers in connection with Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley, with the object of basing a motion of some kind, I suppose, upon these papers. I do not know what his object is ; it does not appear before the House ; he simply asks for certain papers. It is not possible that because a notice of motion is given asking for a letter that therefore every member of the House is precluded from discussing any subject to which that letter may refer. If such a rule were laid down, it would be quite possible to shut off the discussion on every conceivable subject, by giving notice that you would move for papers in connection with that subject. I have looked into the point within the last few days, and I think if you refer to the authorities you will see that the rule is an intelligible, a defensible and a just one. The rule is that when notice is given for the discussion of a public matter, neither the mover nor anybody else can, by a side wind, or otherwise, bring up the discussion of that motion. But where an hon. gentleman gives notice of his intention to move for papers simply, that does not preclude a discussion on a substantive motion on that subject. And why ? Because no notice has been given of the substantive matter which he wishes to discuss, and you are only precluded from discussing the motion of which notice has been given. The hon. gentleman does not propose to discuss the papers regarding which notice of motion has been given. He says he cannot get the papers, that he desired them for the purpose of discussing the subject, and that as he cannot get them he has to discuss the subject without the papers. I submit that there can be no doubt that the authority quoted by Bourinot, and by May, which I have looked up in the English "Hansard" bear me out in my contention. There are two cases referred to in the English "Hansard" where the Speaker called the attention of a gentleman who attempted to move in the House to the fact that a substantive motion was on the paper relating to the subject he intended to discuss, and said : Because you or somebody else has given notice relating to that subject-matter, you cannot discuss it now. Now, there is no notice of substantive motion given here, but a mere notice asking that certain papers be produced. And if you think it out for a moment, you will see what a dreadful conclusion any other position would drive us to. At the beginning of the session any member might sit down and give a notice asking for the papers on twenty different subjects, which notices would have the effect of shutting off discussion on almost every subject. For instance, if he wished to stop the discussions on the Customs administration, he would ask for papers and correspondence relating to the Customs Department, and the whole discussion with regard to the Government's administration of the customs would be stopped. In the same way the discussion of the Militia Department could be prevented, and so on. I think that would be reducing it to an absurdity, and I am quite sure that the interpretation I suggest is a correct one, and that it does not prevent the discussion of a question simply because papers relating to that question have been moved for.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to call attention to the fact that this motion of which notice has been given, does not express, nor ask the House to express any opinion on the case of Colonel Worsley. It is merely a notice of motion for information in regard to the case of Colonel Worsley, and is not, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), a substantive motion on the subject. This notice of motion, of course, would preclude the moving of any motion to get information in regard to Colonel Worsley and would prevent, perhaps, censure of the Government in regard to their action concerning Colonel Worsley. But my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Borden) merely wishes to discuss the matter, and does not intend to present a motion on the subject, but merely to discuss it with the information he has, and without the papers which are the only thing referred to in the notice of motion. Besides the inate unfairness of the interpretation which the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) would put upon the rule of the House, I would remind the House that we are constantly discussing, in some way or other, matters, notices of motion for information on which appear on the paper. For instance, I had a notice on the paper for some time asking for information concerning the duties of the High Commissioner in London and during the whole of the time that that notice was on the paper the question of the High Commissioner's duties, his relations to the Government, and his performance of his duties were constantly referred to in the course of the debate without objection from anybody. I might give other instances, but probably that one is sufficient. I am very strongly of the opinion that the object of that rule is, as pointed out by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies), that we should not infringe upon the subject-matter of any motion on the paper. If the motion on the Notice paper were a motion of censure of the Government for its conduct in regard to Colonel Worsley, I do not think we could not discuss it now ; but as it is a motion for papers, I am sure you will see that that rule does not apply.

Mr. EDGAR. Looking at the notice of motion, it certainly can only be held to be a motion for papers. It seeks information with regard to, first, the charges against Colonel Worsley ; second, the investigation of those charges ; third, the action taken thereon ; fourth, the resignation of Colonel Worsley, and all correspondence relating to the subject, and especially the papers that are given in the list. Of course, we know that on these motions for papers, a general discussion may arise, but it is not a motion of censure. There is nothing in the motion even to show that there is a grievance of any kind, or that it is a grievance the hon. gentleman proposes to discuss. The only case in Canada, I believe, which is quoted to show that the discussion of a motion on the paper cannot be anticipated by motion to go into Supply is the case decided by Speaker Anglin, when Mr. Chas. Burpee, in 1876, undertook to follow that course. Now, I looked up very carefully a few days ago, in the Votes and Proceedings, the motion of which Mr. Burpee had given notice, and I found that it was a substantive motion going into the whole question of the Bay Verte Canal, and declaring that it was the duty of the Government to do so and so about that canal. It was not a motion for papers at all, it was a substantive motion, dealing with the two reports, a majority and a minority report, concerning that Bay Verte Canal, and of course the rule there would apply. Following our own precedent, following the good sense and the reason of the rule, and following the English precedents which my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies) has quoted, I should hope that you would decide that when the papers are simply moved for, that does not preclude a discussion of the matters that may be contained in those papers, because it would be a most extraordinary practical limitation upon the privileges of members of this House, and prevent us from discussing grievances on going into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BORDEN. I desire to point out to you that under the point taken by the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), it would be possible for that hon. gentleman to prevent a discussion of this subject altogether this session. Now, I gave notice with a view of getting the papers, and I went across the floor of the House and spoke to the hon. member for Pictou, telling him that my object was to get the papers. When I wanted the motion carried without discussion, as a number of motions were being made without discussion, the hon. member for Pictou objected to that motion being carried without being discussed, for the reason, I suppose, that he wanted to discuss it. I subsequently explained to him, and he will bear me out in this, that I intended to discuss it in another way, that I wanted the papers first. So it seems to me very inconvenient that there should be a ruling of this kind, because, as pointed out by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies), it would be possible for a gentleman to prevent this House from discussing any subject by putting a notice on the paper from time to time during the session. Now, it is manifest that there cannot be any such intention as that in our rule.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand the hon. gentleman now desires to discuss some matters connected with Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley, and the point is taken that because a notice of motion has been given for the production of certain papers concerning some charges made by Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley against another gentleman that is the same subject-matter as something concerning Colonel Worsley himself. There is nothing in this notice asking for an investigation, or asking any opinion of the House on any charges whatever. It does not ask for the production of the charges, it asks for the papers connected with the charges.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It asks for papers connected with the resignation.

Mr. MULOCK. Supposing we test this in another way, supposing this order was complied with, then the House would have the papers on the Table. These papers might disclose the grounds of complaint, and my hon. friend would be perfectly in order in putting on the paper a notice of motion, and calling the attention of the House to the alleged grievance disclosed by this evidence. The discussion of a grievance, therefore, would be a wholly different thing from the discussion of the evidence which precedes the discussion of the grievance; and it would be perfectly in order to follow up the production of these papers by a motion dealing with the facts disclosed by the papers. It is perfectly clear, then, that a motion would be in order if my hon. friend intended now to deal with the charges affecting Lieutenant-Colonel Murray. But I understand that what he is about to discuss now is the case of Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley. That is the main feature of his discussion, and in that discussion it may be that he would have to refer to collateral matters such as affects Colonel Murray, or some other person. But the subject that he proposes to discuss is absolutely different from the matter referred to in the motion. If the motion was to discuss charges made by Colonel Worsley against Colonel Murray, it would still be in order to discuss the case of Colonel Worsley himself. Colonel Worsley is before the House under this discussion, and Colonel Murray is before the House in the motion on the paper. Colonel Worsley's case is no way involved in the motion on the Notice paper.

Mr. SPEAKER. It seems to me clear, from the authorities I have been able to look up with regard to this matter, that if it is proposed to enter into a discussion which has relation to a notice that has been given by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden), it would be out of order upon going into Committee of Supply:

> Members may discuss various questions on the motion for the Speaker to leave the Chair, without moving any amendments thereto—a great latitude being always allowed on such occasions; but they may not refer specifically to any vote which has passed, or is about to be discussed in committee; nor to any resolution of the Committee of Ways and Means; nor to any Bill or Order of the Day. Neither will a member be permitted to debate a motion of which he has given notice.

Then, reference is made in this book to the case that was mentioned by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies):

> On 10th April, Mr. Burpee was proceeding to address the House respecting the Bay Verte Canal, but he was stopped by Mr. Speaker, whose attention was directed to the fact that he had given notice of a motion on the same subject.

Now, the notice of motion which was given by Mr. Burpee on that occasion, read as follows:—

> That the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to take into consideration the majority and minority reports of the commissioners appointed by the Government to report upon the commercial advantages of the proposed Bay Verte Canal.

The question that I have to determine, is as to whether the notice of motion which the hon. member for King's, N.S., has placed upon the Order paper, is one on the same subject as that which he now proposes to discuss. If it is so, then clearly, from my point of view, he would be out of order in discussing it. Of course, it is for the hon. member himself to say as to whether that is the case or not.

Mr. BORDEN. Of course I admit at once that there is a very close relationship between the cases. But what I intended to discuss was the action of the Government with reference to Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley.

Mr. SPEAKER. That seems to be clearly referred to in the notice that was given here :

> Copies of all the papers in any way relating to the charges preferred by Lieut.-Col. Worsley, late Deputy Adjutant General for Military District No. 9, as well as any other person, against Lieut.-Col. Murray, late paymaster of said district ; the investigation of said charges ; the action taken thereupon.

It seems to be the very subject that the hon. member for King's, N.S., now declares it is his purpose to discuss.

Mr. BORDEN. I did not intend to refer to the papers, because I had not the papers ; I intended to make some inferences from what has taken place. Of course, Sir, I bow to your ruling.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me the hon. gentleman would have to speak under great difficulties, and could neither do his subject justice, nor could there be any fairly adequate discussion under these circumstances, because my hon. friend would find himself running against the decision of the Chair at almost every turn.

Mr. BORDEN. I could make a statement of the facts, which would do justice to a man who claims to have been very seriously injured, who claims to have suffered loss of position, loss of honour, and who claims that if a fair statement of his case, which he has placed in my hands, were but before the people, it would only be doing a simple act of justice to him, and enable him in some degree to vindicate himself from the extreme injustice done to him by the Department of Militia. I think I could establish that, if I had the opportunity of doing so.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member had adopted a different course he could have done what he now proposes to do : if he had either refrained from placing this notice of motion on the paper, or have allowed it to drop. I think the House will understand that the objects of these notices of motion are these. One is that the House shall not be surprised. Another is that every hon. member shall have an opportunity to bring up any grievance and ventilate it. If an hon. member chooses to place a notice of motion on the paper he must confine himself to it, or when the notice of motion is called he should allow it to drop, if he thinks it more convenient to bring the subject up on the motion to go into Supply, and the House can not refuse to allow the notice of motion to be dropped.

Mr. BORDEN. I placed the notice on the paper at an early period of the session. On two occasions when notices of motion were called and allowed to pass without discussion this motion was reached. I was absent from the House on the first occasion. I asked the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) to move the motion. For some reason whether there was objection taken or not, I do not know, it was not moved. The next occasion when motions were moved without discussion I moved the motion, and the hon. member for Pictou objected to the motion being carried without discussion. Thus I could not proceed. Since then the Government have taken every private day, and there has been no opportunity from that moment to the present either to move this motion or allow it to drop or speak to it. To-day the hon. member for Pictou takes the point of order which prevents me discussing this question. I desire to make this statement, and it is only fair to me that I should be allowed to do so.

Mr. MULOCK. I think Mr. Speaker has misapprehended the motion, and will desire to be corrected if in error. Mr. Speaker has given an opinion on this matter, special reference to the words investigation and charge. What is the grammatical connection of these words with the notice of motion. The full reading of the clause would be for copies of all papers relating to the charges preferred by Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley ; the investigation of such charges ; the action taken thereupon, and resignation of Lieutenant-Colonel Worsley and all correspondence relating to the subject, and especially all papers. So the motion does not call for any investigation or any action or an investigation, but simply for the production of papers. All through the motion there is the same request for papers.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the question of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I adhere to my opinion.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to bring up a question of considerable importance to the section of country in which I reside, and it has relation to expenses of the militia. I consider a very unfair division of money is made under this head. Men go to camp and drill for 50 cents per day. I desire to draw attention to some expenses which should be reduced, if not abolished. This country is paying $1,500,000 a year under the head of militia. Some attention was called the other day to Kingston Military College. I now draw attention to certain expenses in connection with the organized forces in different cities in the Dominion. "A" battery, Kingston : 116 men, previous strength, 132, average, 124. Dr. Wilson, Surgeon of the corps, has drawn during the last nine years, $11,584, or an average of $1,287 annually. "B" battery, Quebec, 143 men, previous strength, 145, average, 144. Dr. Sewell has drawn during nine years, $11,- 504, or $1,278 annually. No. 1 infantry, Toronto : 88 men; previous strength, 90, average, 89. Dr. Strange has drawn $11,609 in nine years, or $1.281 annually. No. 3, St. John's Quebec : 87 men, previous strength, 84, average, 83. Dr. Campbell has drawn $11.183 in nine years, or an average of $1.243 annually. Then we come to No. 4 Infantry Battery, Fredericton. The present strength is 103, previous strength 94, average strength 89. Dr. Brown has drawn in nine years $10,743.15 for attending to that corps, or $1.193.68 per year. Then, in reference to "B" Dragoons, Winnipeg. The present strength is 143, the previous strength 145, average strength 144. Dr. Coad has drawn $10,934 in nine years for attending to that corps, or an average yearly of $1,214.88. That is, in all, 683 men who have been attended by these six doctors for nine years, and they have drawn during that time $67,568.80, or $7,507.05 on an average per year. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that this is a complete sacrifice of public money. It is unfair to ask the young volunteers of this country to attend drill every other year for the miserable pittance of 50 cents a day, when doctors who are attending these corps in Toronto and Quebec and other cities, and who perform very little services, are drawing such a large sum as this. Dr. Wilson, of "A" Battery, drew $11,458.50 for attending to 132 men, or an average of $86.80 per man. Dr. Sewell, of "B" Battery, Quebec, drew in the nine years $11.504.50 for attending the 144 men, or an average of $79.88 per man. Dr. Strange, of No. 2 Infantry, Toronto, drew $11,230 for attending to eighty-nine men, or $124.77 per man. In the case of Dr. Strange, I notice that he was granted leave of absence for 104 days.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was he doing ?

Mr. McMULLEN. I presume I might answer that question by saying that he was canvassing. He was out, no doubt, on an election tour and a substitute was appointed during that time, and this country has paid the substitute for the 104 days a sum of $379.60, while at the same time Dr. Strange drew his pay for the full time of his vacation. In that way, in the case of these men in Toronto, it has cost the country $129.07 per man to attend to their medical wants. Then Dr. Campbell, of No. 3 Infantry, St. John, Quebec, drew $11,193.50 for attending to eighty-three men, or an average of $134.84 per man. Dr. Brown, of Fredericton, drew $10,743.15 for attending to ninety-nine men, or an average of $108.50 per man. Dr. Codd, of Winnipeg, drew $10,934 for attending 144 men, or an average of $70.30 per man. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that is a gross and scandalous and extravagant expenditure of the public money. These doctors attend to their ordinary professional duties. No doubt, Dr. Strange, of Toronto, attends to his profession regularly, and he is drawing over $100 a month as surgeon to the corps to which he belongs in the city of Toronto, and when he was 104 days on leave of absence last year the Government paid his substitute $3.50 per day and gave him full pay at the same time. If that is not sacrificing public money I do not know what it is. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comparisons. Take, for instance, the Central Prison at Toronto. There are about 383 inmates there, and they are attended to by Dr. Aikens, and he, for $1.000 per year, devotes his time to them, while the doctors of this Government, whom I have referred to have not one-third of the number under their charge. There is a poorhouse in the county in which I live, the inmates of which number 150, and the medical attendance is let by competition, and the doctor gets $150 a year. In the poorhouse in the county of Huron, the doctor attends to over sixty inmates for $100 a year. Mr. Speaker, the point I want to make more particularly is this : that while throughout the rural districts the young men are asked to enroll themselves as volunteers, and to attend drill they get the miserable pittance of 50 cents a day while they are out. In the face of this, the doctors in these cities and towns are drawing enormous salaries, which are taken out of the militia vote and put into their pockets for virtually doing nothing. This should receive the immediate attention of the Minister of Militia. There should be a more equitable distribution of the money voted for militia purposes. We do not want a lot of city bloods, the same as those I have mentioned, stepping around, and virtually doing nothing and drawing money that is supposed to be contributed for keeping up the militia of this country. Six of these doctors have drawn $69.000 in nine years, for the purpose of attending to men who are in good health. The country has to pay for this sinecure. The people are feeling the strain that they are subjected to in this way, and I hold that these expenses should be cut down at once. The struggling farmers of this country, struggling with the difficulties of life, trying to make both ends meet, are asked to send their sons out to drill for ten days at 50 cents a day, whilst doctors of the kind I have referred to are drawing enormous sums in the city, and doing nothing at all for it. I hope that the next Parliament will forcibly draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to this outrage.

SOULANGES CANAL—THE GOODWIN CONTRACT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will remember that we had rather a long discussion on the subject of the Goodwin contract on the Soulanges Canal. Now, a statement was made by the Minister of Justice that I do not quite understand, and I desire to know from him or from the Finance Minister, exactly what the Government propose to do. Do we understand that the Government have decided not to pay for these contracts unless the claim is established in a court of law. The answer of the hon. gentleman to my observations left me in doubt as to whether these things would be decided in a court of law or not, if Mr. Goodwin persists in his claim.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not know that the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) should ask me to make any pledge. I do not know that I would be in a position to make any pledge. I do not know that I can go further than I did before. My own feeling is that if I have any doubt about it, I shall certainly refer the matter to the courts, in view of what has taken place before. I might come to the conclusion that there was not claim at all, and report against it ; but I think I can go so far as to say that I would not like to recommend any payment to the contractors without referring it to the courts.

THE CASE OF LIEUTENANT-COLONEL HAMILTON.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer again for a few moments to the case of Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton. In another chamber the Minister of Militia referred to this case. What I am pressing for is an investigation. It has been represented in the press that there was an investigation at which Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton was supposed to have had a fair trial. I desire to say that I am in receipt of a telegram from a gentleman, not Colonel Hamilton, but one who knows the facts, who asserts that there was no investigation of which Colonel Hamilton was cognizant, or at which he was present, or was represented in any way. I am instructed to say that if there was an investigation, Colonel Hamilton was never communicated with in regard to it, was not a party to it, was not present in any sense, constructively or actually, and knew nothing about there being any such investigation, until he was in this House and happened to hear it referred to by the hon. Minister of Justice. So that if the Minister of Militia has given the public to understand that there has been, in any sense, a trial, it is a wholly incorrect representation of what occurred. I wish to ask, therefore, whether it is proposed to have a full, open, frank and fair inquiry into the case of Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton. It is absolutely necessary that such an inquiry should take place, because Colonel Hamilton has sympathizers ; and if we want to have this matter dealt with in a way that will give complete satisfaction to all, there must be a tribunal that will enjoy the confidence of all. The matter is assuming considerable importance in the city of Toronto, if I am correctly advised, and also amongst the militia outside of Toronto. I have had communications from officers far removed from Toronto on this subject, and there is a widespread feeling that the officers of the militia force are not safe when treatment such as has been accorded to Colonel Hamilton may await anybody in the service. If discipline is to be maintained in the force, it is absolutely necessary that the officers and men shall feel themselves sustained by the authorities, and that the authorities will be the very last to encourage insubordination. In this case, there is an idea abroad, rightly or wrongly, that the authorities, on this occasion, have not stood loyally by the head of the regiment, but have sympathized with a section of the officers, who, it is said, combined to render the administration of the regiment by the colonel an impossibility. If so, the Government have sympathized—shall I say it—with conspirators—I do not wish to use a harsh word—but with those who should have been subject to discipline, and loyally supported their chief, and, if they had grievances, should have made them known at headquarters. If a number of officers of a regiment can unite, even with good motives or with justification, and adopt irregular methods to embarrass their superior officer, instead of making their charges to the proper authorities, there is an end to the militia force. Every man in command must feel that he has at the head of the Department of Militia, an upright, impartial judge, who will defend him in the administration of his high office, and who, if any charges are made against him, will have them investigated according to military law. I do not wish to be assumed as taking a side one way or the other. I know nothing of the merits of this issue—who is right or who is wrong. I am taking exception to the course adopted by the Administration, who, to the public mind, appear, for some unfortunate reason—either from partisanship, or a lack of appreciation of their true duties and responsibilities—to have made the great blunder of giving effect to a combination against the head of the regiment, not in the military way, but in a way which, if repeated, is going to cause every officer to feel that his office depends, not upon military sense of justice, but upon the whim of the Minister of the day, and upon the extent to which he can bring influence to bear in any contest between himself and his fellow officers.

Mr. DICKEY. I desire, on behalf of the Government, to repudiate, in the strongest possible way, the imputation that any political feeling was concerned in this matter.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not say political.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. gentleman said party.

Mr. MULOCK. I meant as between the two parties in the regiment. I did not mean political.

Mr. DICKEY. I am very glad to hear that, because I think it would be very unfortunate if any idea of that kind got abroad. Since the hon. gentleman spoke first on this subject, I have had an opportunity of seeing the General, and discussing the matter with him ; and other members of the House have also seen him and discussed it with him ; and I am satisfied that if the hon. gentleman saw the papers, his views would be very much modified. I propose to lay the papers on the Table to-morrow, and they can be printed, if necessary, and be discussed.

Mr. MULOCK. That is very unfair without giving Colonel Hamilton a trial. What do these papers disclose ?

Mr. DICKEY. If the hon. gentleman objects, I do not wish to do it. I propose to do it in the interest of the force, because I am quite sure that if the hon. gentleman saw the papers, he would not express any dissatisfaction with the course the Government have adopted.

Mr. MULOCK. They are ex-parte papers.

Mr. DICKEY. I would leave it this way. If the hon. gentleman will look over the papers in the department and then thinks it will be in the interest of Colonel Hamilton to have them laid upon the Table of the House, they will be laid on the Table, and if he thinks that they will not further Colonel Hamilton's case, they will not be brought down. That is the best offer I can make. I desire nothing more than to do what is fair in the matter. I could not, on behalf of the Government, desire any further investigation, and I do not think it is altogether fair for the hon. gentleman to ask for further investigation before he has seen the papers

Mr. MULOCK. I cannot accept such responsibility. I am not representing Colonel Hamilton in one sense. I am bringing to notice an alleged grievance, and the department will take their own course, whatever they think right. I simply urged that this officer is entitled to a trial, and the hon. gentleman offers to lay on the Table a number of papers, which of course are ex-parte. I have a telegram here which shows that one of the papers in evidence is a private letter to the General from an ex-Sergeant-Major, whose resignation was accepted to save him from court martial, after the court of inquiry showed he called an illegal meeting of sergeants and arranged with some to refuse to parade during General Gascoigne's visit last November. No one ought to be convicted on papers of that kind. In my judgment, there is only one proper course to be taken, and that is to have an impartial inquiry.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think that the course offered by the hon. Minister ought to be satisfactory under the circumstances. We must assume, and I assume as a matter of fact, that the action of the Government or of the General is based upon a report by the officer whose business it was to investigate, and that officer is one whose character and position are such as to warrant the belief that his report will be acceptable proof, at any rate, of anything he may say. I think if Colonel Otter's report, which will be an essential part of those papers, be laid on the Table, that is a reasonable answer to the present demand. It would be perfectly in order after Colonel Otter's report has been laid on the Table,—which is the one thing on which we have to go—to take further steps, if that report be not satisfactory. I think the Government are doing what we have a right to expect when they lay the papers on the Table. With that, I for one, feeling very deep interest in the matter, feel I ought to be satisfied.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the public are entitled to these papers because the action of the Government was distinctly challenged as being purely a political action. It was charged that because the colonel of the regiment happened to be opposed to the Government in politics this action was taken, and no doubt that impressed some hon. members. The hon. member for Lambton attacked General Gascoigne in rather a marked manner and referred to him repeatedly, and I think the public interest makes it wise and expedient that we should have if possible the exact ground on which the Government did act.

Mr. EDGAR. It is not certainly my fault that we do not know the exact ground on which the Government acted, because as long ago as the 6th April, I put a question to the Government to know what they had done, and the reply then was by the Government that he was unfortunate in not agreeing with his officers. I asked if any charges had been formulated against Colonel Hamilton, and if so had he been given an opportunity to meet them and the answer was : "No charges whatever have been formulated against Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton." I read a letter the other day from Colonel Hamilton addressed to the General on this subject as to whether he had notice or not, and he said in that letter :

> I have no doubt, Sir, that I can show that much of the information the department has received is on a par with the above ; but it is only when statements are made public that corrections can be made. I have respectfully and repeatedly urged that all the circumstances connected with the Queen's Own Rifles matters be thoroughly inquired into before any action be taken to dispossess me of my command, but my remarks have been studiously ignored, and I have not been even accorded the courtesy of a reply to any of my communications.

I would like to know if that is the way to treat a commanding officer. Then he goes on and says :

Without a charge against me, without a trial, and in the face of the facts that my regiment is thoroughly efficient and is in a better condition to-day than when I assumed command, I am ordered to step down and out to make way for certain ambitious young officers, who seem to stand better with the department than I have the honour of doing.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the report of Colonel Otter, which I assume, states all the grounds on which action was taken, is laid upon the Table, we shall know at once what it is and be able to judge as to the action of the Government.

Mr. EDGAR. What I am inclined to think that it is very unfair to Colonel Hamilton, without giving him the opportunity of answering the allegations made against him, to lay those charges upon the Table of Parliament. I do not think the hon. member for Muskoka, when he reconsiders the case, can suppose it is fair for anybody to make an ex-parte statement and lay before Parliament the last day of the session. That would be making the matter worse and worse. He is threatened with being cashiered without an investigation, and now it is proposed to place an ex-parte inquisitorial report on the Table, which had been made without the knowledge of this officer whatever and without any notice given him.

Mr. DICKEY. It is already on the Table of the Senate.

Mr. EDGAR. That is a very improper action and I cannot understand it. I surely cannot believe that the hon. Minister of Justice should think that is a fair way to treat an officer. You may have an investigation and then let the results be laid before Parliament, but you ought not to lay a confidential report before Parliament. I do not deny that the Deputy Adjutant General has the right to send in what confidential reports he chooses or is directed to send to the head of the department, but when those reports are made without an investigation, they should not be made use of. The Queen's regulations, 1892, rule 35, provides :

> Whenever an officer is disadvantageously reported on, or when the answers to any of the questions contained in the confidential report are not thoroughly satisfactory, the particulars of the report are to be read verbatim to him by the officer making it, in presence, when possible, of the inspecting officer and of the second senior officer of the corps. If the officer unfavourably reported on is not present at the time of the inspection, the above particulars are to be communicated to him by letter.

Nothing of the kind was done. But a confidential report, without its having been communicated to him, without his having an opportunity to answer it, without any investigation, is laid on the Table of the Senate to add insult to injury or injury to insult. But a full and fair and proper investigation for the honour of the service and the honour of the gentleman who is interested in the service should be had.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if these statements or accusations were communicated to Colonel Hamilton ?

Mr. DICKEY. I am not in a position to tell the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because it does seem to me the grossest injustice, if the accusations against him are not laid before the officer whose conduct is impugned that he may be able to meet them.

Mr. HUGHES. It is not my intention to delay the House, but as an old personal friend of Colonel Hamilton, I was very much grieved to see the course that has been pursued towards him in this matter. Colonel Hamilton, as every one knows, has been a most efficient officer. He is a political opponent of mine, but I am glad to say that among the militiamen of the Dominion that counts for nothing. I did all I could to get for Colonel Hamilton a fair inquiry in this case, but I was not advised of the situation until it was too late. The usual executive military course had been pursued. The report of the Deputy Adjutant General at Toronto who had conducted the investigation had been received, and following the practice in the old country, Colonel Hamilton was asked to retire. I am sure that those conversant with the case will not blame the Major General commanding for the course he has taken. I am sorry to say that I have observed some attempts made to fasten the blame on General Gascoigne for his action in this matter. No blame can attach to General Gascoigne. He received the report of his Deputy Adjutant General, and of course it is impossible for the Major General commanding to visit all these places——

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, as I am not informed on the subject—during the debate it has been stated that this officer was tried without having notice of what the charge against him was. If this is so, surely the fact must be known to the General.

Mr. HUGHES. No. The course pursued is this : The matter is referred to the Deputy Adjutant General, he does not hold a trial under the military system, as that is not permitted except by court martial, but he simply takes all the evidence he can get, and, of course, he should hear both sides of the case. What I wish to say is that similar cases to this have arisen on several occasions ; and I think it is most unfortunate that an officer commanding a battalion or an officer commanding a company should be placed in the position that Colonel Hamilton has been placed in without having an opportunity of presenting his side of the case and defending himself. I could name several cases that have been brought up in this House of men, some on one side of politics and some the other, who, for some reason or other, perhaps rightly, perhaps wrongly, have been displaced on reports made against them. And I think certainly this matter should be taken up seriously by the Militia Department and that, in future, at all events, no officer should be displaced without having a fair opportunity of meeting whatever charge may be made against him privately—because these charges are referred privately to the Deputy Adjutant General and are considered by him as strictly confidential. I regret that the case should have taken the form it has. Still no blame attaches to General Gascoigne. If anything is wrong it is in connection with the conduct of the case in the city of Toronto. I hope the matter will not be allowed to drop and that Colonel Hamilton will have justice meted out to him.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have not taken part in the debate, but I would like to understand the case more clearly. It does seem absolutely incredible that the department could have acted as they are said to have acted in this case. If I understand it, a secret investigation was held into certain charges privately preferred against Colonel Hamilton and that investigation is held in Toronto by the Deputy Adjutant General——

Mr. O'BRIEN. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt him. I understand that no charges were made against Colonel Hamilton.

Mr. LISTER. So they said.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then some statements against Colonel Hamilton——

Mr. MULOCK. There could be no inquiry if there was no charge.

Mr. O'BRIEN. These grounds will be disclosed by Colonel Otter's report.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that his report is as to certain charges——

Mr. O'BRIEN. Not charges.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Let us say then the report concerning the conduct of Colonel Hamilton, and that report the General thinks is sufficient to justify Colonel Hamilton's dismissal. And it has been stated that this report has not been submitted to Colonel Hamilton and he has not had an opportunity of putting in any reply.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not know about that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) To my mind as a lawyer such a course would be unfair and unjust, and I cannot conceive it possible that such action has been taken by the department. If as the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) said the General had this report in his hand and knew that the officer whose conduct had been impugned had never had an opportunity to see this report or to answer what was said against him. If that had been the course followed, it seems to me one of the most arbitrary and unjust actions I can recall to mind. There must be something more to be said. I cannot conceive a British officer and a gentleman dismissing the commander of a regiment without taking the usual and ordinary common-sense precaution of referring the charges to him and having his reply, in order that he might form a judgment with both sides of the case before him. To refuse the officer an opportunity to answer is in direct violation of British fair-play and justice, that I can hardly conceive that the General could have been a party to it. And then I respectfully submit that if it is intended to make that ex-parte report and the action taken upon it by the General, part of the records of the country for all time to come without Colonel Hamilton having had an opportunity of putting his reply alongside, it would perpetuate the injustice.

Mr. DICKEY. A good deal on the other side has been put on "Hansard."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But there is a distinction between a speech made by a member of this House and put on "Hansard" and an official report which might destroy Colonel Hamilton's usefulness for all time to come and would certainly be a cloud upon his professional character and conduct, particularly as the General, upon that report, practically dismisses him by asking him to resign. But as a person to whom these gentlemen are all quite unknown and looking at the matter quite impartially, it does seem to me that this man is being treated in a most extraordinary way. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Dickey) who acts in this House for the Minister of Militia, what is the military routine with respect to charges of this kind? Is this the way in which such cases are usually carried on? Are there no rules prescribing what shall be done in cases of this kind?

Mr. DICKEY. I think the rule was fairly stated the other day by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). One can understand that a state of affairs might arise in which it would be undesirable to have an officer remain in command of a regiment. Every man is not fit for the command of a regiment, and if the force is to be maintained in efficiency only proper men must be kept at the head of the several corps. The question is what are you going to do with a man, who, perhaps, is utterly unfit to command, but still has done nothing wrong—simply happens to be a round man in a square place. The practice in the British army, as I am informed by the General, is an every day affair. The commander in chief sends to a colonel and says he would like to have his resignation, and that is the beginning and the end of it. Where there are charges affecting a man's moral character or his conduct the charge is investigated. But in a case like that where it is merely by routine of the service, if a man does not happen to be intellectually or morally qualified for a command, you must get rid of him, although that does not disqualify him from the other functions of life.

Mr. EDGAR. Does the Minister know that the official reports of the Militia Department every year during Colonel Hamilton's command, commend the regiment, and say that it has steadily improved ?

Mr. DICKEY. I have heard reports about that, and I am quite willing to accept the statement of the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock) in that regard. But I am just speaking of a case which it seems to me would bring about a dead-lock, and there would be no means out of it. But I have not seen the papers on Colonel Hamilton's case.

Mr. LISTER. There seems to be a difference of opinion between members of the Government in this House, and members of the Government in the Senate. We understood from the letters and other papers which were read during the former discussion on this matter, that no charges had been brought against Colonel Hamilton at all, yet, as a matter of fact, an investigation had taken place by the Deputy Adjutant General, and the result of that investigation was communicated to the department, and, as I understand, the result has been laid upon the Table of the other House. The statement made by Colonel Hamilton was that if any such investigation had taken place it had taken place without his knowledge, that he had not been notified, and that he knew nothing at all about it. In the Ottawa "Citizen" of this morning, I find this matter was brought up yesterday in the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman is not going to quote from proceedings in the Senate.

Mr. LISTER. If I am not permitted to refer to what took place in the Senate, I merely wish to say that other members of the Government have stated that formal charges were made against Colonel Hamilton, and that he was notified and had an opportunity of meeting those charges, that an impartial investigation had taken place.

Mr. MULOCK. Who said that ?

Mr. LISTER. The Minister of Militia—that an impartial investigation had taken place ; in effect, the statement was that the report of the officer who made that investigation would be carried out. Now, Mr. Speaker, which House is to be credited with having told the exact facts ? We have it from the letters of General Gascoigne himself, produced in the discussion here, that no charges had been made against Colonel Hamilton. Then we have the further statement that charges must have been made against the colonel, because the matter was referred to the Deputy Adjutant General, and that gentleman held an investigation, and came to a decision, the result of which was that Colonel Hamilton must resign or be dismissed from the service. We have the Minister who is answerable altogether, stating that an investigation took place of which Colonel Hamilton had notice, that a decision was come to, and that the Government, in effect, would carry out the terms of that decision. I think it must be clear to every person who has any sense of justice, that if Colonel Hamilton is unfit to retain command of the regiment for any cause, he has a perfect right to have an investigation, at which he shall be present, and have an opportunity of refuting the charges made against him. Sir, if there was a proper investigation made into this matter, it might turn out that instead of Colonel Hamilton being to blame, the five or six junior officers who were seeking to destroy him are really the ones that ought to be punished by the Militia Department. Yet we have the startling fact, because one can hardly describe it by any other term, of the Government, acting on the advice of the General in command, having the charge investigated against an officer, without notice to that officer, without the officer knowing what charges were preferred against him, charges that were no doubt formulated by the junior officers of the regiment for the purpose of getting rid of the senior officer; and we have the Government acting upon those charges, holding a secret investigation, and upon the evidence, whatever it may have been, given in that investigation, notifying the colonel that he must resign or be dismissed. Is it possible that the discipline of the Canadian militia is to be kept up if the Government adopts such a policy as that ? Is it not encouraging the junior officers of the different regiments throughout the country to conspire and intrigue against the officer in command, when they think he stands in the way of their promotion ? That is the effect of it, and it will have the effect of destroying discipline in the force, and of making the men dissatisfied, and the result will be as bad as if the Government had done everything possible to destroy the efficiency of the force. Why, it is a clear invitation to the junior officers to stab their commanding officer by intriguing, by conspiring amongst themselves to get up the charge that unless the commanding officer is discharged, the regiment will be injured and its efficiency impaired. It is a direct invitation, I repeat, to the junior officers of the regiment to do that, and for aught we know, that has been the effect of it. Sir, the position that Colonel Hamilton takes in this matter appeals to every man's sense of justice. The action of the Government in putting upon the Table an ex-parte investigation, an investigation which Colonel Hamilton did not attend, which he had no opportunity of attending, is an injustice to Colonel Hamilton that no language can adequately condemn. I can hardly conceive that the Government would be guilty of acting in this way towards an old and tried officer ; I do not wonder that hon. gentlemen in this House connected with the militia, one after the other, stands up and protests against the treatment which Colonel Hamilton has been receiving at the hands of the Government, because, after all, it is the Government that is responsible for the treatment which has been accorded to this gentleman. I say that this report from General Gascoigne should be withdrawn, and the Government should at once issue a commission that will appeal to the confidence of the country at large, for the purpose of investigating the so-called charge against the Colonel. The ex-Minister of Justice says that General Gascoigne cannot go to Toronto for the purpose of investigating this matter, that he leaves it to his adjutant. But, Mr. Speaker, I remind you that in the case of a Montreal regiment, General Gascoigne did go to Montreal himself, and remained there for several days ; and instead of dismissing or threatening to dismiss the commanding officer, he tells us himself that he tried to patch up the difficulties between that officer and those under him. In that case there were nineteen officers who had made charges against the commander of the regiment, nineteen officers who complained that the efficiency of the regiment could not be kept up if Colonel Strathy was left in command. We did not find in that case that there was an ex-parte investigation, that there was a Star Chamber trial ; but we find that the General goes down to Montreal and tries to settle the difficulty ; he has an interview with all parties concerned, and the whole object of his visit appears to have been to settle the difficulty between the officer and the men. How different has been the treatment accorded to this gentleman in Toronto. Why should the Government treat one officer differently from another ? Why should they not all be treated alike ? The question naturally suggests itself : Is it possible that the Government is seeking to destroy an officer because he happens to be a Liberal ? I cannot believe there is any such intention on the part of the Government. I am forced to the conclusion so far as the militia is concerned, that there is no politics in it, or at all events there should not be, because the moment the political element is introduced into militia matters, the force is utterly and completely destroyed. I ask the same fair treatment for Colonel Hamilton as has been accorded to Colonel Strathy ; and I further ask that this so-called report should be withdrawn, because I look upon it as adding injury to insult, and prejudicing Colonel Hamilton's case ; in effect he has no case because when the report is laid on the table the Colonel has no right to make any reply to it. While Colonel Hamilton is in the force his mouth is closed and his hands are tied. That officer is placed in an unfair and unjust position, and I appeal to the sense of justice and fairness of the Minister of Justice to satisfy the militia force and the country by having a new investigation on the charges, and if Colonel Hamilton has done anything wrong to entitle him to dismissal, then no one can complain if the General dismisses him.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think I would be doing my duty were I not to make a plain statement at this time. On Friday last we proceeded to go into Supply, the Remedial Bill having been withdrawn on Thursday, for, as stated by myself, at that time, we needed supply even for the current year, and sums were absolutely necessary if the public services were to go on, and the obligations of the Government were to be met. From that time until this we have been trying to get into Supply. We did succeed this morning at about 1.30 a.m. ; but we stuck at the first estimate because hon. gentlemen opposite proposed to go and did go into the whole question of superannuation. I want to say to hon. members on both sides of the House that matters are in such a position that unless we do get Supply this afternoon or evening, it is perfectly useless to go through the form of voting items here because we cannot get them through in time for prorogation, which will occur to-morrow at 3.30 or a little later. Whatever the House proposes to do in that way it must make up its mind to do this afternoon and evening. We came here at 2 o'clock.

Mr. MULOCK. You were half an hour late.

Mr. FOSTER. The leader of the Opposition has professed to be kindly disposed and to fairly meet my wishes that we should get into Supply and obtain some money at least for the necessary services ; but I have not found any results. There has been no open barrier of opposition raised by him ; but his good wishes do not seem to have materialized, and we are exactly in the position I have indicated. For the current service supplies are absolutely necessary. There are not many items which should provoke very much or very heated discussion, but we are approaching the end of Parliament, and it will be impossible for us, or whoever comes back to lead the Government, to overtake supplies with all the preliminaries that are necessary before sometime in the month of July. But from 1st July there are important services to be provided for. One I will mention, payments to our treaty Indians, who assemble in the first days of July expecting that the country will implement its promises and will have the treaty money ready for them. I speak of that simply as one item. These matters which have been discussed are important. Every hon. member can exercise his right to bring up a grievance or discuss a matter which he thinks of importance, and they are important; but are we not losing a little of the sense of proportion, and is it not possible at the end of the session that some of these other important matters can go by, and is it not sensible and right for us to prepare a little for the actual services of the country? I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite; it is entirely within their own hands. It is not with any sense of shame or humiliation I state it, but nothing can be got unless the Opposition allows it to be got. The whole of the responsibility rests on them, and it will be so looked on by this House and the country. If hon. gentlemen opposite choose to obstruct Supply we cannot get supplies; if they choose to throw other subjects in front, as they have a perfect right to do, we cannot get any supplies. It remains for the hon. gentleman to say whether he will facilitate this matter, and surely it is a sensible proposition that we should for a few hours devote ourselves to the real interests of the country.

Mr. LAURIER. We are doing nothing else than devoting ourselves to the best interests of the country. The hon. gentleman is also impatient in regard to this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I have been very patient.

Mr. LAURIER. I take a very different view. The hon. gentleman knows that the motion to go into Supply is the only occasion afforded hon. gentlemen to bring forward important matters, and I am sure the whole country will agree with me that all the subjects brought forward for discussion on the motion to go into Supply have been fair and legitimate subjects. The hon. gentleman says there is obstruction. Hon. members have a right to exercise the privileges they possess of bringing up matters which interest themselves or their constituents. On this matter there is no disposition to prevent the hon. gentleman from getting the necessary supplies to which he is entitled, but there is a time for everything. The hon. Finance Minister has certain rights to look after; we also have certain rights to look after. The hon. gentleman must be aware that there are two sides to this matter. There is no disposition, I repeat, on this side of the House to prevent the hon. gentleman obtaining what supplies he is fairly entitled to. We will go into Committee of Supply presently and apply ourselves to that business; but I protest against the insinuation made by the hon. gentleman that every word uttered to-day has been obstruction to Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that.

Mr. LAURIER. I am very glad to hear it. We did what was fair and legitimate in discussing matters of public importance to-day, and when we get into Committee of Supply, as we will do presently, we will do so again.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To provide for the employment of H. B. Small for two months at $90.45, being the difference between his former salary as secretary and his present superannuation allowance........	$180 90

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Finance Minister charged me a few moments ago with having gone generally into the question of superannuation last night. The hon. gentleman took a very great advantage of me when I was delivering my speech some time ago on superannuation; and this is the only opportunity I have had of placing some information before the House which I desired to submit.

Further amount required for contingencies—
Clerical and other assistance............	$2,000
Stationery	500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On this item reasonable information should be given. Last year $1,500 were taken for this expenditure. I commented at that time on the exceedingly foolish practice, as I thought, of cutting down estimates for mere appearance's sake. One of two things must have occurred: either, I was quite correct on that occasion, or some extraordinary circumstances have occurred calling for this additional amount. We desire to know in some detail why this amount is required.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman himself has stated the true reason. The estimate last year was too small to provide for the service of the department. When I entered the department in January, I found that almost all the money for contingencies had been expended. I found that almost all the contingencies were gone, and there was a considerable temporary staff there, a great portion of which was required to do the work of the department. I went over the list very carefully, and I may say to my hon. friends opposite, that I hope to be able to decrease it considerably. Indeed I have given a number notice, that I shall not require their services in future, on account of the reorganization which has taken place because of the redistribution of the work. So far as this vote is concerned, it is simply to pay these parties who will have done their work up to the 1st of July. I perhaps could have done without two or three of them some time before the 1st of July, but there seems to be a general disposition, when you are relieving an officer of his position, not to be too harsh at least, and consequently I did not relieve any of them until the 1st of July.

Mr. McMULLEN. This thing of granting money en bloc without having any detailed statements is exceedingly objectionable.

Department of Indian Affairs—
Further amount required for contingencies—

Clerical and other assistance............	$100
Sundries	500

Mr. DALY. The item in the Main Estimates last year was reduced by $500, and we found that the money left was not sufficient to meet the service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The fact of the matter is that last year the hon. gentleman expected the election at an earlier time, and the Estimates were cut down, I guess to meet the exigencies of the political situation, without any regard of what the real cost was likely to be. I know the Finance Minister had a deficit to meet and he was endeavouring to make reductions without much caring whether they were likely to be carried out or not. I recollect telling him at the time that I had not the slightest doubt that pretty large supplementaries would be brought down as they have been. He took great credit to himself at the time for making the reductions.

Governor General's Secretary's Office—
Further amount required for contingencies—

Printing	$ 300
Sundries	3,000

Mr. FOSTER. The $3,000 is almost entirely for extra telegraphing which was due to the Behring Sea negotiations and difficulties, necessitating very long and repeated cablegrams with the Colonial Office.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does the Behring Sea matter come in during the current year ?

Mr. FOSTER. The whole negotiations with the United States and Great Britain, with reference to the commission for damages, the action of the United States Congress, and the different positions taken by the British Government and the United States government have been very full during the year.

Post Office Department—
To provide for the payment to E. P. Stanton of the difference between his salary as a 1st class clerk and that of a chief clerk, from the 1st July, 1895, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.................... $300

Mr. COSTIGAN. From what I have learned from the Postmaster General, Mr. Stanton was at the head of his class for a number of years as a first-class clerk. He had served upwards of twenty years, and a vacancy having occurred he was promoted by Order in Council. The promotion took place in the usual way, but there was an Order in Council that was not repealed, although several promotions have been made. They have to make a certain number of marks in the Civil Service to entitle them to promotion. Objection was taken with reference to that and this provision in the vote is to meet it. This is one of the most deserving cases of promotion I know of.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He did not fail to get the marks ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand that an examination is required from a first-class clerk before he is made a chief clerk ?

Mr. FOSTER. A promotion examination is necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What kind of an examination does he undergo ?

Mr. FOSTER. With regard to the duties of his office ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is rather a general and vague term. He is not, I suppose, put through a course of differential calculus.

Mr. FOSTER. It consists of an examination of the duties of the higher office, carried on under the Civil Service Examiners, and I think the papers are made out by the deputy head of the department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can understand that an examination is necessary in the junior branches, but in such a case as this, it seems to me that this is pushing the thing rather too far. My explicit opinion is that the heads of the departments ought to be held responsible for choosing the best first-class clerks to be chief clerks. I do not think it is any good interposing a buffer in the shape of a Civil Service examination for promotions of that kind. It seems to me that the Civil Service Board of Examiners are arrogating to themselves a matter which belongs more properly to the head of the department himself.

Mr. FOSTER. That is their duty, as laid down by the law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If that be the law, I think the law in that respect is an ass.

Post Office Department—
Further amount required for contingencies $2,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason for this ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The amount voted last year for contingencies was not sufficient, and this amount is put in for the purpose of meeting the deficiency.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the Estimates for 1896-97 the hon. gentleman takes $38,800, yet he required for the services of the current year $42,500

Department of Militia and Defence—
To provide for one months' pay of Abraham Marks as extra clerk............ $33 33
To pay Major T. C. Watson for services rendered.. .... 33 33

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The amount is not large, but what were the services of Major Watson ?

Mr. DICKEY. Mr. Marks was employed to help to get out the militia list, and Mr. Watson was in Col. Lake's office collating some records for him.

Board of Civil Service Examiners—
To pay J. F. Waters as secretary to the Board $150, and W. Foran for clerical assistance $50, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary $200

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Civil Service Act seems to be very much in the way. Have we not got a secretary to that Board of Examiners as it is ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am afraid that my hon. friend has not watched the changes which were made in connection with that board. When I went into the State Department, there was a secretary, Mr. LeSueur, a very old gentleman, who received $700 a year, and he had a clerk at $1,000 a year. I retired these two gentlemen, Mr. LeSueur without additional superannuation allowance, and Mr. Keays, who received something like $200 a year of superannuation allowance. Then I appointed to act as secretary of the board Mr. J. Francis Waters, who was already doing duty as a first-class clerk in the department. Mr. Waters is continuing the work he did, and, by working nights and holidays, is doing this additional work ; and I am bound to say—and I think my successor in that department will bear me out in the statement—that he has done the work in a most admirable manner, and is a very splendid clerk indeed. We were unable, however, to pay him anything for his services unless it was specially voted by Parliament. The only fault to be found with this vote, I have no hesitation in saying, is that it is altogether too little, and we are not giving enough for the valuable work done. The same remarks apply to Mr. Foran, who has been his assistant. Both of these gentlemen have done excellent work.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was Mr. Waters's salary without this ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think it was $1,700 or $1,800.

Mr. McMULLEN. This vote is to give him something in addition to a very good salary which he receives already. I do not know why we are getting in the habit of suspending the Civil Service Act so frequently. On the first page of these Estimates we are asked three times to suspend that Act. If we are suspending the Civil Service Act in so many cases, the hon. gentleman had better bring in a Bill to suspend it altogether. It appears to me absurd." Every third item in these Estimates contains the provision : "Notwithstanding the application of the Civil Service Act." In the case of Mr. Waters, of the Agriculture Department, who is in the employ of this country at $1,800 a year, doing very ordinary work, going to his office at 10 o'clock in the morning, and leaving it at 4.30 in the afternoon, and having Saturday afternoons to himself and several weeks holidays in the summer, there is a move to give him an increase of salary because he has done some little thing outside of the ordinary routine of his duties. This thing has been going on for a number of years, and the consequence is that every clerk in the Government is waiting for an opportunity to put in a claim for extras.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What age was Mr. Keays, when superannuated, and how many years service had he done ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am speaking from memory, but I believe a young man and his salary was $900 or a $1,000, and his superannuation allowance amounts to something like $200. In other words, the hon. member for North Wellington is finding fault with the reorganization of the Civil Service Board which has saved to the country nearly $1,700 a year, and the work is done better than before.

Mr. McMULLEN. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. McSHANE. I have asked the hon. Minister of Agriculture, time and again, why he has discharged so many of these employees, and now he tells us that this Mr. Waters is over-worked. Did he work night and day ? Would it not have been as well to have given an opportunity to some of those men who were discharged to do some work instead of over-working Mr. Waters.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That was previous entirely to this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt the statement of the hon. Minister is correct with reference to Mr. Waters. No doubt he is a very good officer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Very good, indeed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But I want to call attention to this fact. We have, as a rule, set our faces, and with good reason, against the plan of appointing any man to two distinct offices. The reason is very obvious. If you allow offices to be duplicated, it ends, as a rule, in the duties of one or the other being neglected. There are always one or two exceptionally good men who are paraded as excuses for this kind of thing. Mr. Waters may be a case in point. He may be able to discharge his duties perfectly as a first-class clerk and do this in addition, but for one Mr. Waters who does these duties without injury, you will find, if you continue this practice, that there will be thirty or forty men, not by any manner of means so good, who will be allowed to receive extra pay for different employments, and the service will suffer. There is no doubt that the provision in the Civil Service Act, forbidding a man to hold two offices is a sound one, and I think ought to be adhered to more than it has been. With respect to Mr. Keays, as far as I understand, no objection was found to him.

Mr. FOSTER. I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should think that it would have been better and more economical, as I presume he cannot have been more than thirty-four or thirty-five years old, not to have superannuated him but to have found employment for him elsewhere. This practice of superannuating men, even at a comparatively small figure, very rarely results in any good to the public service. I would have entirely approved of reducing the expenditure by finding a place for Mr. Keays elsewhere, but am not sure that superannuating him is a very desirable or trustworthy thing. And as to the other, it does appear to me, in spite of the fact that Mr. Waters may be perfectly able to do all this and do it very well, that we would in the long run have to pay just as much as we did before. It will not be this year perahps or next year, but no doubt Mr. Waters's salary, in the fulness of time, will be considerably increased on the very ground that he is doing service for which another man was paid a considerable sum before. I do not think it is a satisfactory and good precedent, no matter whether one exceptional man may be able to fill two offices or not, for us to ratify that, and more particularly in the case of the Civil Service examiners, who are supposed to be looked upon, in some respects, as a sort of model.

Mr. McMULLEN. When was Mr. Keays superannuated ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. On 1st July, 1895. So far as his abilities were concerned, I have nothing to say whatever, but I say to the hon. member for South Oxford that I did not consider the state of his hearing, which was exceedingly bad, qualified him for the sercretaryship.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister of Agriculture says he has reduced the expenditure in the Department of Agriculture by the superannuation of a number of clerks. Does he consider that it is reducing the expenditure by superannuating Mr. Low at $2,200 a year and appointing Mr. Scarth at a salary of $3,200. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture now costs us $5,400 instead of $2,200.

Further amount required to pay salary of T. W. Hodgins and Wm. O'Keefe, $98.75 and $91 respectively, from 1st May, 1896, to 30th June, 1896, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.................. $189 75

Further amount required for stationery. 500 00

Mr. DALY. Hodgins and O'Keefe have been messengers for a great number of years in the Department of the Interior. On the opening of each session, they leave the department and come over here. O'Keefe is messenger at the door of the Press Gallery and Hodgins is messenger in the Library of Parliament. As soon as Parliament prorogues, they go back to the Department of the Interior. They get only the one salary. Their salaries cease in the Department of the Interior when they come over here. According to the Civil Service Act of last year, these men, not having passed the Civil Service Examination, would not have been eligible for employment after Parliament ceased, and this is to provide their salary between the time Parliament ceases and the end of the year. Unfortunately for them, the 1st January being a holiday, they were not in the employ of the department on that day, and on the 2nd January they came over here ; and according to the construction of the Civil Service Act, if they came back to the Department of the Interior, we would not be able to pay them without this vote of Parliament.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a very curious arrangement.

Mr. DALY. It has been going on this ten or twelve years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman then has two messengers in his department who serve him for eight months in the year and who serve us for four months. The deduction to be drawn from that, I am afraid, would be, that if you could dispense with their services for four months, you could do so for eight months.

Mr. DALY. I put one man on in their place.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That one man does the work of the two.

Customs Department—
Further amount required for contingencies—Sundries $2,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the explanation of this ?

Mr. FOSTER. The explanation is the same as that in regard to the post office, that people had to be employed to do the work and they must be paid. There has not been quite enough money to pay them up to the end of the fiscal year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I perceive that in 1894-95 they took $7,000 for this service, and in 1895-96, being seized with an economical fit, they pared it down to $5,700. And what is the result ? Great credit was taken by the hon. gentleman's friends for the vigour with which he applied the pruning knife in the session of 1895. And the result is that now they want $7,700 for this service. Well, I hope the hon. gentleman will not try to be economical any more ; for if he does the result to the treasury will be terrible. He cuts down $1,300, and we have to pay $2,000 for the economy.

Department of Public Works—
Further amount required for contingencies—
Stationery	$600 00
To increase the salary of the Secretary of Public Works Department to $2,400, from 1st July, 1896............	$187 50

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is that for ?

Mr. OUIMET. Mr. Roy, the secretary of the department, was appointed secretary in 1890, when he was in the enjoyment of a salary of $2,100. That salary consisted of $1,800, his regular salary as an employee of the department and $300 as joint secretary of the Minister. He had been previously, and up to that time the private secretary of the Minister, and had $1,500 as a regular employee of the department, and $600 as private secretary. When he was appointed secretary of the department, he was given $1,800 and the Minister retained his services as joint private secretary, Mr. Macpherson being the English private secretary, and Mr. Roy the French private secretary. Thus he was in the enjoyment of $2,100, the ordinary allowance of $600 being divided between them. The Minister left the department, and Mr. Roy found that his salary was virtually reduced by $300, because he was no longer private secretary. And so it has gone on since. If he had been provided for as he ought to have been, he would have been now in receipt of $2,400, the maximum of his class. It is just to remedy what I think I might call this injustice that this amount is asked for.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I fail to see the injustice. I tried to follow the hon. gentleman, but may have misunderstood him. Has Mr. Roy remained secretary of the department and secretary of the Minister also ?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But you want to pay him the salary he would have had if he had discharged the duties of these offices ?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then I fail to understand.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman knows that a private secretary of a Minister enjoys an extra salary of $600 beyond his ordinary salary as clerk in the department. And it has been the practice for a long time when an officer ceases to be private secretary to give him such a place in the department as will assure him the same salary that he enjoyed at the time he was secretary. Of course, to be the private secretary of the Minister for a long time is the very best qualification a man can have to occupy a high position in the department. That is the case of Mr. Roy, and if the usual practice was not followed in his case at the time, that is no reason——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand it he was joint private secretary, and only received half the allowance.

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. His former salary as first-class clerk could not exceed $1,800.

Mr. OUIMET. He was chief clerk.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the hon. gentleman did not make him chief clerk and employ him as secretary too ? That is contrary to all custom.

Mr. OUIMET. I do not know what the custom was at the time Mr. Roy was appointed. I was not in the department at that time. I have explained that before he was made secretary of the department he was in the enjoyment of a salary of $2,100, including $1,500 as first-class clerk. Then he was appointed secretary of the department, and, at the same time, he was retained as joint secretary of the Minister, in order not to increase the salary that he had before as private secretary and clerk of the department. His salary was made $1,800 which, with the $300 he received as joint secretary, made up the same salary that he had before, $2,100. That allowance of $300 was withdrawn from him when the Minister, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) left the department. Then Sir Frank Smith acted as Minister of Public Works, and he had his own secretary. Thus it happened that Mr. Roy was left with only $1,800, a practical curtailment of his salary of $300. We do not give him what he had before, but we place him in the same position as he should be now if he had been in the enjoyment of his salary of $2,100, plus the $50 annual increment which is usually given making a total of $2,400.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see exactly on what principle the hon. gentleman is acting. If I remember rightly, the minimum salary of a chief clerk is $1,800. Apparently, according to our estimates, this gentleman is in receipt of $2,025 for 1895-96, and the hon. gentleman proposes to run that up at one swoop to $2,400, because that is the effect of this vote. That is to say, he proposes to give half a dozen yearly increases all at once. Now, I do not think that any case has been made out for that. I think that for a gentleman who had been secretary and is made a chief clerk, with a salary which goes up ultimately to $2,400, that was quite a sufficient recognition of his merits. It must be remembered that as first-class clerk he could only get to $1,800, and he was only entitled to $300 besides as joint secretary, making $2,100. Now, the hon. gentleman proposes to raise him to $2,400.

Mr. FOSTER. But that has gone up by increments since.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, his present increments amount to $2,025, that is the legal salary he is entitled to.

Mr. OUIMET. $2,050.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. $2,025 is what is put down for the salary in 1895-96. Now, I do not see that the fact of a man's having been a joint private secretary, and having been promoted thence to be chief clerk, which is a very decided step—I do not think that should entitle him at one bound to get a promotion which puts him on the footing of a chief clerk accountant, and the chief clerk of the engineering branch, both of whom, I fancy, are officers of much longer service, and have by long service attained to the full amount of $2,400. I really do not see that anything has been said by the hon. gentleman that would justify us in departing from the obvious meaning and intent of the Civil Service Act, and making a secretary $2,400 all at once. I do not at all object to his getting $2,400 in the usual course by ordinary increases, but you are here giving him a lift, practically, of seven years at once.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman will admit that it would be unfair to curtail the actual salary enjoyed by any member of the Civil Service. We are bound to pay him if he is a good clerk.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You do not curtail his salary.

Mr. OUIMET. Yes, it was $2,100, and we cut it down to $1,800.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You propose to raise it to $2,400.

Mr. OUIMET. If his salary had not been taken back to $1,800, he would now be getting $2,400, and it is to place him in the position that he should have been in. We place him in the position that he would have been in if that unfair curtailment of his salary had not taken place in 1890, in which case he would now be at the maximum of his class.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It means practically that you are giving this gentleman an equivalent of seven years' increase at once. Now, I do not think that sufficient cause has been made out for that at all. I do not agree with the contention of the Minister of Public Works that if a man has been a first-class clerk, and receiving $1,800, and getting $300 besides as as joint secretary, when you make him a chief clerk, I do not agree that that constitutes a reason for raising him to the maximum of his class, which is practically what you are doing now. He is to be jumped from $2,050, which is not such a bad salary, up to $2,400, that is to say, he is to get seven years' increase at once. Now, that is not in accord with the rules of the Civil Service Act. It does not appear to me to be unfair to this gentleman that he should climb up, as others have climbed up, by yearly increases. His promotion from the position of first-class clerk to that of joint secretary is quite sufficient promotion, and certainly does not leave him out of pocket, or if it does leave him out of pocket, it is merely $50.

Mr. OUIMET. $300.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Nobody objects to his getting $2,050, and nobody objects to his going up in due degree to $2,400. But what is proposed here is to lift him to $2,400 at once. Now, it does appear to me that we should have some more substantial reason than has yet been given for that departure from our use and custom. I should think that unless they are differently constituted from other men, the other chief clerks would have a right to feel aggrieved that a man far junior to themselves should be put at once on the same level.

Mr. OUIMET. I have shown how unfair it would be to cut down the salary of a good officer, and every one knows how inconvenient it would be. $300 may not be a very large sum, but for a man who has a family, it sometimes entails a good many privations. If his salary had been cut down for misconduct it would be a different thing. He was getting the salary of $2,100 before 1889, and I do not see why he should be cut down now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has a wrong conception of the matter altogether. I understood his explanation when he gave it first, and I saw it was indefensible. Nobody is trying to cut him down. He, as one of the chief clerks in the department, had the good fortune at some time to be appointed one of the Minister's private secretaries as first-class clerk. For that piece of good luck, he received $300 extra, making his salary $2,100.

Mr. COSTIGAN. He was receiving $1,500 and $600 before he was appointed secretary of the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He afterwards received $1,800 and $300, so he received $2,100 for the discharge of both duties of chief clerk and joint private secretary. Afterwards the gentleman is appointed to the office of secretary of the Public Works Department, and for that he receives $2,050. He ceases to be assistant private secretary, and the hon. gentleman contends, although he has got promotion in the department, that he must for all time to come have in addition to that, the $300 he once received as assistant private secretary, although he does not do the work, for no sufficient reason in the wide world.

The proposal is absolutely indefensible. It cannot be considered for a moment, it only needs to be stated to show its absurdity. He has been doing duty as assistant private secretary. He has been obtaining an excellent salary for his work. He is secretary of the department and receives $2,050 per annum, or within $50 of the amount he obtained when he held the joint offices. In his new position his salary will increase every year. If we pass this item, we adopt a principle which will land the Government in a pretty serious position. The Government are proposing to make a present of $300 odd a year to this officer, and the question must arise why other clerks should not obtain similar concessions from the Government. Why should this officer be singled out and granted this extra sum ?

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister of Finance appeals to the Opposition to allow the Government to pass some of the Estimates. I cannot see how the hon. gentleman can expect hon. members on this side of the House to allow items of this kind to pass without opposition when they are unnecessary and unwarranted increases. Hon. gentlemen opposite have pursued a course in the direction of granting increases all along the line ; we never find any reductions, only increases. The Minister of Public Works is well aware that it is cheaper to live in Ottawa now than it was ten years ago. Why is Parliament continually asked to commit violations of the Civil Service Act and grant increases which cannot be justified ? If the leader of the House can justify an increase of $100 it is a step towards justifying an increase of $500. How does the Minister of Public Works expect that clerks in other departments will not take advantage of the increase now under consideration. Does he not expect that other clerks will put forward claims and contend that their services are equally valuable to the country ? The Government should abide strictly by the provisions of the Civil Service Act. Hon. gentlemen opposite have asked the consent of the Opposition to the passing of some of these items, but several of them are so objectionable that hon. members on this side of the House will have difficulty in giving their consent. The people of the country are asked to pay over $3,500,000 to maintain the Civil Service, and every year the expenditure is increasing. The expenditure is much more now than it was when the Liberals were in office, in spite of the fact that there have been deficits in the past, there are deficits facing us, and there will probably be deficits in the future. It is an absurdity, an injustice and an outrage on the people.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Do I understand the Minister to say that there will be no further increase ?

Mr. OUIMET. No further increase.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the committee are entitled to hear some defence from hon. gentlemen opposite. Surely hon. gentlemen will be able to put forward some kind of defence. I do not object to passing any item when reasonable explanation is given, but the explanation does not justify this increase. I think we are entitled to a more satisfactory defence. If hon. gentlemen opposite want time, let the item stand, but it is not fair to ask the committee to pass items which they cannot justify.

Mr. FOSTER. The item may stand for the present.

Bill (No. 76) to incorporate the British American Coal and Transportation Company.—(Mr. Hazen.)

HUDSON BAY AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 31) to incorporate the Hudson Bay and Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Macdonell, Algoma.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the first clause be adopted ?

Mr. MARTIN. No. I would like to have it read.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY—CANADIAN CREDIT.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I will not speak at length, but I am going to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to a matter on which I am sure he will agree with me. He has very often denounced from his place those incendiaries who attempt to run down the credit of Canada, and I want to call his attention to one incendiary who is very busily employed in that work at present. I find in a recent issue of a paper the following :—

> Canadian securities, with the exception of Canadian Pacific Railway, were dull and weak to-day. The only explanation of the continued dullness and weakness is that the public are keeping out of stocks until it is seen what effect the elections will have on the industries of the country. If the Liberals should be successful in the forthcoming elections, and the tariff programme which they now propose is given effect, there will be many empty factories in Canada, and the banks will have large losses from industrial accounts. These are, of course, only possibilities, but they are taken into account by intending buyers of stocks. In the meantime it is not likely that banks will be free lenders. No advance in rates is looked for, but money will probably continue tight until the elections are over.

Now, Sir, that is an attempt to pull down and destroy the credit of Canada. It is taken from the "Mail and Empire," and I am sure the Minister of Finance, who has so often denounced our pessimistic utterances on the future of Canada, will join with me in declaring that this is the most utter moonshine, and that the very opposite result to that predicted here is likely to happen.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but no cloud is so dark but there is a silver lining, and the silver lining to this cloud is that the party in opposition will not get into power.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is that the hon. gentleman's explanation of the condition of things spoken of ?

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BORDEN. I rise for the purpose of making a brief statement with reference to a matter which I think concerns the honour of this House and the honour of the Privy Council of this country. I desire from my place in Parliament to make this statement : That I am in a position to prove that the Hon. William Ross, formerly a member of Mr. Mackenzie's Government, and the Hon. Thomas Coffin, also a member of that Government, since deceased, never agreed to share their salaries with any member of the House of that time, or with anybody else, and that they never did share their salaries to the extent of one farthing with anybody, and that any statement made in the newspapers or anywhere else to the contrary is absolutely without the slightest foundation in fact. I deem it proper to make this statement, and I trust that the utmost publicity may be given to it. I make this statement on the authority of the Hon. William Ross and on the authority of the Hon. W. H. Ray and other members of this House ; and if the rules of the House permitted, I would refer specially to the cause of my bringing this matter before the House ; but I am precluded from doing that. If the rules of the House further permitted, I would read the statement of this hon. gentleman to the House, but I believe I am precluded by the rules of the House from so doing.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I think the hon. gentleman's remarks refer possibly to something that transpired in the House on Wednesday last, and I find that the report in "Hansard" puts into my mouth words which I did not utter. I did not accuse the Hon. Wm. Ross of having made any arrangement with regard to salary. The fact is, I never mentioned the name of the Hon. Mr. Ross. The gentleman whose name I did mention was Mr. Ray. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden) spoke to me about this matter to-day, and we both looked at "Hansard," and I think it is quite evident that the mistake arose through the reporter not catching the words I did utter. The unrevised report was not sent to me so that I was not able to correct it. I was quite willing that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden) should bring this up in the House in order that I might have the opportunity of stating that I never charged the Hon. William Ross with sharing his salary, and I regret very much that the hon. member for King's did not take the opportunity when the hon. member for Pictou was present (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), to bring this matter up, as he would be able to corroborate me.

Mr. BORDEN. I am sorry that the hon. member for Pictou is not here. But that is not my fault, and I had no opporunity until now to bring the matter up.

Mr. FORBES. I might be permitted to add a few words to this effect, that it is strange the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) would presume to contradict "Hansard," when the statement was made by the hon. member for King's confirming what he said in "Hansard," and borne out most positively by the hon. member for Pictou. The hon. member for Pictou particularly referred to the Hon. Mr. Ross as well as to the Hon. Mr. Ray, saying that these two gentlemen had been taken from the Conservative party into a Liberal government, and had shared their salaries with two other members, one of whom is living, the Hon. Mr. Ray, and the other is deceased. The hon. member for Shelburne himself spoke after the hon. member for Pictou, if I remember rightly—at any rate it is so recorded in the press—and said that he had reference to another distinguished gentleman, a former member of this House, but now deceased, and charged him with having shared the salary of one of those Cabinet officers. It thus results in the hon. member for Shelburne having made a statement with reference to two gentlemen, one of whom is deceased. As regards the one who is living, when challenged the hon. gentleman denies his assertion, and leaves the slander against the dead man remaining. It would have been much more becoming for the hon. member for Shelburne to have apologized for the reference he made. With regard to the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who is not present, no doubt the reply of these gentlemen refutes what he said.

Mr. BORDEN. I would like to know just what correction the hon. member for Shelburne desires to make in the statement which he made to the House on Wednesday.

Mr. WHITE. What I meant to say was that the Hon. Mr. Coffin had divided his salary with two members of the House, but not Mr. Ross. Mr. Ross' name was not mentioned. I never charged him with having had anything to do with such a transaction, and never heard that he had.

NOMINATIONS AT YALE AND CARIBOO, B.C.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to call the attention of the Government briefly to the necessity of placing the constituency of Yale and Cariboo in the same position as the constituencies of Algoma and Gaspé, with regard to the question of nomination. The Government will remember that formerly the constituency of Cariboo was included in those constituencies in Canada in which the returning officer is allowed to make special arrangement for nomination on election day. When the constituency of Cariboo was united with the constituency of Yale, it was deemed best not to continue that particular law for the new constituency of Yale and Cariboo. Probably that was all right at the time, but since the law providing for the new constituency of Yale and Cariboo had been passed, there has been a large influx of people into the Kootenay district in the constituency of Yale and Cariboo, and all the reasons which apply in the case of Algoma and Gaspé apply very strongly to the constituency of Yale and Cariboo, so far as the Kootenay district, part of that constituency is concerned, which make it necessary that there should be a longer time between nomination and election day in that constituency than in other constituencies. I would suggest the advisability of bringing in a short Bill, adding this constituency to that list. I do not know what the view of the hon. member who represents that constituency is, but the matter has been brought to my attention by residents in the Kootenay district who are afraid that if the ordinary law is put in force, the election will be a very partial and unsatisfactory one, for the reasons I have pointed out.

Mr. MARA. I understand that the reason for giving a longer time between the issuance of the proclamation and the election in Algoma and Gaspé is on account of the long distances and the time that must elapse before the notices can reach the several polling divisions. But with Kamloops as the centre from which the proclamation will issue and ballots be distributed, there is really no necessity. Every part of the district, that is every polling division, can be reached in ample time. What is really required is that the voters should have more polling divisions to enable them to vote, without the inconvenience of having to travel 50 or 60 miles. The Bill that was introduced by the hon. Minister of Justice will largely remedy that, and if the hon. gentleman will assist in passing that Bill, there will be no cause for complaint on the score of voters not being able to reach the polls. As regards the accession of population in Kootenay district, that district is within easy access of Kamloops. There are very few points in South Kootenay that cannot be reached in three days, which, I am sure, the hon. member for Winnipeg will admit is ample time. What is really required is a subdivision of some of the polling divisions to enable the returning officer to appoint more deputy returning officers and have more polling divisions, so that voters can vote without having to travel too long a distance.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To Mr. R. G. Davis for 27 days' services, from 1st July to 27th July, 1895, as stenographer to Chief Justice and judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary $52 41

Mr. McMULLEN. What is Mr. Davis's salary, and what position does he occupy ?

Mr. DICKEY. He is a stenographer to the chief justice. Last year the Supply Bill was not passed till the 22nd July, and there was no provision made for him from the 1st to the 22nd. This is simply to maintain his regular salary which was not provided for in the last Supply Bill.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was he engaged at the time you mention ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes ; he works regularly in the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. He was not otherwise engaged ?

Mr. DICKEY. No.

Administration of Justice—
British Columbia—Additional amount required for circuit allowance......... $1,000

Mr. MARTIN. What is the reason of this ?

Mr. DICKEY. The bills for circuit allowances in British Columbia are very large, as hon. gentlemen know. Travelling there is very expensive and the allowance is high.

The bills now before the department will almost absorb what is here voted. One item that has largely increased the expenditure at this time is that the travelling allowances of one county judge for about three years are to be paid. The department was not able to get from this judge the items of his expenses until lately.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why ?

Mr. DICKEY. There was a very long correspondence about it. The judge professed not to be able to give them, and the department positively declined for some years to pay. When I came in the judge made another attempt to get this allowance, but I also declined. Finally he came here and submitted evidence to the Deputy Minister which was satisfactory as to the items, and they agreed upon an amount. I do not know exactly what it was, but it was a considerable amount.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the judge's name ?

Mr. DICKEY. Judge Bole.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No ; I want to know why a judge holds back these necessary statements. I have no sympathy with a judge who fails to do what the law orders him to do—to make a statement of his travelling allowances, and no sympathy with a judge who attempts to put on "side" that he has no business to put on, or who thinks he is above the law. The law provides that he shall make a due and proper return of these expenses. If he did not do so, the Department of Justice has my full endorsement in refusing to pay him a cent. I hope there has been no compromise in this matter. If he paid out the travelling expenses let him make the statement and affidavit as others do. I should be sorry as one member of Parliament, to vote money to any judge who declined to comply with the proper requirements of the law. I have asked his name, and I want to know if the claim amounted to a larger sum than is here ? Was he allowed the full amount of his claim ?

Mr. DICKEY. This item is not for his claim. That claim does not reach $1,000. But he put in, for instance, a claim for $2, horse-hire for every day in the year. He said he was quite sure he had paid that amount, and would not give any voucher. He said he could not. We positively declined to give him anything until he had furnished satisfactory evidence.

Mr. MULOCK. Did his duties involve that disbursement ?

Mr. DICKEY. He is entitled to horse-hire as part of his disbursement.

Mr. MULOCK. But only such as is necessary for the proper discharge of his duties.

Mr. DICKEY. And what is actually paid.

Mr. MULOCK. Does he hold division court there ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, and he acted as Superior Court judge. He discharges some of the duties of Superior Court judge and he wanted to get a Superior Court judge's travelling allowances,—that was about the amount of it ; and the department was determined that he should give a statement in the regular way. He came here and submitted evidence to the department which was entirely satisfactory and which the Deputy Minister allowed.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he charges $2 a day for horse-hire ?

Mr. DICKEY. He wanted to. I do not say that that was allowed to him. I do not in the slightest degree say that Judge Bole was trying to do anything dishonest or improper, but he declined to comply with the regulations.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That was improper.

Mr. DICKEY. He was sure that he had paid that amount, but we were not willing to allow it without the necessary evidence.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to know if the judge's accounts go to the Auditor General and whether the vouchers which were accepted as satisfactory to the department will be submitted to the Auditor General ?

Mr. DICKEY. That is a matter of routine with which I am not familiar. The accounts are settled and certified in the Department of Justice, and I presume that, like every other certified account they go to the Auditor General.

Mr. MULOCK. The judges are remunerated according to a fixed statutory scale.

Mr. DICKEY. The Superior Court judges.

Mr. MULOCK. And not the county court judges.

Mr. DICKEY. As I remember, the Superior Court judges get $5 a day travelling expenses and the county court judges $2 a day and disbursements.

Mr. MULOCK. He is not being remunerated on the Superior Court scale but on the county court scale. That is clearly set forth in the Act. Parliament did not give it to the Department of Justice or to any department to allow these expenses in an arbitrary way as some official may decide or as he may think proper. There is a principle laid down by the statute, and only on that principle has the judges a right to be paid. It does not appear to me that the fact that the Deputy Minister has certified the account should settle the matter, but the Auditor should only authorize the payment on the vouchers as required by law being forthcoming. I object to Acts of Parliament being overruled by members of the service. The members of the service have nothing to do with adjudicating in a semi-judicial way as to whether or not the account is a fair one. The law requires, I presume, that they shall satisfy themselves that there were, as a matter of fact, such and such disbursements, before they certify. And that is the only thing the deputy should certify to, not what he thinks is reasonable, but what the law allows.

Mr. DICKEY. That is what he tried to arrive at.

Mr. MULOCK. But the hon. Minister tells us that he made a compromise balance.

Mr. DICKEY. No, the judge came here himself and submitted evidence as to what his actual disbursements were. The evidence was satisfactory to the deputy, and the deputy certified the accounts, as it was his duty to do.

Mr. MULOCK. It is his duty to certify the question of facts, not to compromise a claim.

Mr. DICKEY. No.

Mr. MULOCK. You said the department did not award him all that he claimed, that you cut down the claim.

Mr. DICKEY. I think so, yes.

Mr. MULOCK. There ought to be no difficulty in ascertaining what his disbursements amounted to. He has a certain circuit, it is easy to discover where he was, what courts he held, how far he had to travel, and what travelling expenses are in that country. Therefore it seems to me that the claim should be entirely satisfactory as a question of fact, both to the deputy and to the Auditor General.

Mr. DICKEY. I presume it will have to be, before it is paid.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the Minister know what is the total amount that is going to be paid for this claim ?

Mr. DICKEY. I could not give the hon. gentleman the exact figures.

Mr. MULOCK. I think this amount does not cover travelling expenses for one year, but for two years or more.

Mr. DICKEY. Three years, I think.

Mr. MARA. There was a difference between the judge and the Justice Department, and the judge would not accept the travelling allowance which the Justice Department thought he was entitled to. He would accept but a portion of it, and so the matter stood for another three years.

Mr. MULOCK. Has he been paid any travelling expenses for three years ?

Mr. MARA. For two or three years.

Mr. MULOCK. How many courts does he have to attend in a year ?

Mr. MARA. He resides at New Westminster, and for weeks at a time he has to go to Vancouver daily, and he holds court at Harrison River, the town of Yale, and a number of other places. The circuit is a large one. His official residence is New Westminster, and he has to travel about 12 miles by electric railway. He has more work to do than any other county court judge in British Columbia. The district should be divided, and another county court judge appointed, because, in addition to his duties as county court judge, he also does Supreme Court work in chambers.

Mr. DICKEY. He is a good judge, and a very energetic man.

Mr. MARTIN. I think there should be some reorganization of the judicial forces in British Columbia. I understand that the Superior Court judges who reside in Victoria go over to Vancouver once a week, and Canada has to pay their travelling expenses. We have a somewhat half and half system there, it seems to me. One judge resides in New Westminster, and the other judges reside in Victoria, and instead of the New Westminster judge going over to hold court at Vancouver every week, one of the Superior Court judges from Victoria goes over there every week. It seems to me the system the Government had in force in the North-west Territories is much better than that, where they have a resident judge in each district in the Territories, and the result is that the Government has to pay large travelling expenses. I suppose it must cost the Government $15 or $20 each trip from Victoria over to Vancouver and back. That expense would be saved if one of the judges was made to reside in Vancouver. I suggest that the Department of Justice should arrange the matter with the Attorney General's Department in British Columbia, in order to remove that anomaly.

Mr. DICKEY. I may tell the hon. gentleman that that is one of the grounds on which Judge Bole based his claim for increased travelling allowances, because he discharged some of the duties of a Superior Court judge, I think there should be a Superior Court judge appointed and living on the mainland, I think there should be a judge in the Kootenay district of Yale and Cariboo.

Mr. FLINT. This seems to be the proper place to ask a question of the Minister of Justice with regard to county court judges in Nova Scotia. The statute provided that those judges should have certain travelling allowances, but after the statute was passed, an Act relating to speedy trials came into force and threw upon the county court judges, in several instances, a necessity of travelling not at all contemplated at the time of their appointment. I have seen correspondence with some of the county court judges, and they consider that a hardship is imposed upon them. I understood, although not authoritatively, that correspondence had been had with the Justice Department on that subject. If that is the case, I would like to ask the Minister if the Government have reached any conclusion as to remedying what appears to be a hardship upon some of the county court judges of Nova Scotia.

Mr. DICKEY. Expressing my individual opinion, I think there are cases of hardship amongst the county court judges in Nova Scotia. In one case that has been brought to my notice, a great deal of work has been thrown upon the judge by the Speedy Trials Act, and he incurs a great deal of expense. So far as I am personally concerned, I should like to see that remedied in some way.

Mr. MARTIN. Returning to British Columbia, it seems to me that one of the judges who is now resident in Victoria should have his residence at Vancouver. That would involve no additional expense upon Canada, and would save a considerable sum.

Mr. DALY. That is contemplated.

Mr. MARTIN. As to a county court judge for Kootenay, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. DICKEY. Both those changes are contemplated.

To provide for a retiring allowance to Constable W. H. Timbers	$604 46

Mr. DICKEY. This is a gratuity under the regulations, and under the practice. It is one month's salary for every year that the man has served. He is a very old and valuable servant.

Senate—Further amount required for salaries and contingencies	$5,000

Mr. FOSTER. You recollect that the House sat after 1st of July last year, and the vote which should have been for one Parliament was partly taken out of the vote for the Parliament of the preceding year; consequently we have to ask for extra amounts of legislation all through.

House of Commons—Additional amount required for contingencies	$44,343

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that all caused by the extra?

Mr. SPEAKER. Thirty-two days of last session, and the number of days over one hundred of this session.

Cattle Quarantine—Further amount required	$8,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We should like to know why the additional amount is required, and what is proposed to be done with it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The amount voted was not sufficient to meet the obligations which were entered upon, and this amount was required to pay the sum absolutely necessary. One of the largest items is to pay the expense of the North-west Mounted Police in connection with cattle quarantine, $3,700.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does this mean an additional force? When the Mounted Police are engaged in quarantining cattle are their salaries charged to the department?

Mr. MONTAGUE. We pay the Mounted Police for their services. The amount is charged against the Agriculture Department. It is a mere matter of book-keeping.

Public Health and General Quarantine Service—Additional amount required for maintenance and general expenses	$16,529 55
Tracadie Lazaretto—Omitted in Main Estimates	600 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is this sum to be expended and how?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Dr. Montizambert pressed very strongly on my predecessor that an increased amount should be voted when the Estimates were prepared last year. The figures he has given me show outstanding accounts up to 30th June, 1896, $10,629. There are repairs required to the quarantine steamer "Challenger," $3,000; boat service at St. John, $250; hiring of tugs and disinfectants, $2,500. I went over the amounts very carefully with Dr. Montizambert, and this is the very smallest amount for which the service can be performed.

To pay the widow of the late Sergt. Colebrooke, N.W.M.P., a pension equal to one-half of the daily pay of her late husband, from 31st October, 1895, to 30th June, 1896, 244 days at 50c	$122 00
A gratuity equal to 12 months' pay of her late husband	365 00
A compassionate allowance to his child equal to one-tenth of the pay of his late father, 244 days at 10c	24 40
A gratuity equal to four months' pay	121 66

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this a gratuity in addition to other allowances?

Mr. DALY. The total amount here will be the only pension that will be given. The case is that of the widow of a Sergeant Colebrooke, of the Mounted Police who was shot by the Indian "Almighty Voice." He escaped from the barracks and was followed at night by the sergeant, and on coming up with the Indian he turned around and killed the sergeant.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is desirable to know whether this is to be a permanent pension or not, as the case will form a precedent. No doubt this is an exceptional case, for the sergeant was shot in discharge of duty.

Mr. DALY. I ask that the item be allowed to stand in order that I may obtain further information.

Militia—Arms and Ammunition........ $1,000,000

Mr. TARTE. Explain this.

Mr. FOSTER. It was all explained last night.

Mr. TARTE. I want to know more about it.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend wants me to give all the information I gave last night, he will get it more fully by reading the "Hansard" report of yesterday's date. The $1,000,000 is the amount which comes due this current year for the supplies which have been purchased from the War Office in Great Britain, consisting of rifles, carbines and field artillery and equipment and ammunition therefor.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And the payment for which falls due before the 1st of July ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. TARTE. For the whole amount ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, one part in April, and the other part about the 1st of July.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman referred last night to $900,000, when does that fall due ?

Mr. FOSTER. That falls due on delivery. All are to be delivered and will be paid for by October.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is one point that requires possibly a little consideration at our hands, and that is the manner in which this sum is charged. The hon. gentleman places it to capital account. It is a very convenient thing, no doubt, to make charges to capital account on certain contingencies, but I am rather inclined to think that we ought to charge this to our ordinary income. It would not be convenient, I admit, but I do not exactly see on what principle we make a charge of this kind to capital account. It is not a permanent expenditure. If it had been for the erection of fortifications—although I do not think it would have been wise to have done it even then—there might be some reason for it. But when you are charging for arms which will wear out and have to be replaced, I am not at all clear that you ought to make the charge to capital account. This fashion of charging to capital account is rather productive of indifference as to the amount of the expenditure. It is more sharply looked after when you make it a charge upon the current income of the year. We did not charge to capital account the several millions which we incurred in connection with the North-west rebellion. I do not know that this is a proper way to enter a charge for a portion of the small arms and ammunition required for the force. This will only pay for about one-half. While there is no objection to dividing it, I do not think that you ought to make a distinct capital account for a thing which is absolutely, so to speak, being expended all the time. I forget how many years these arms are supposed to last, but there is no doubt they will be replaced by some more modern improved method of slaughtering human beings within a short number of years, and then we may have more capital account. I rather think this ought to be charged to income. It would be well to have a little explanation about the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. It is very difficult to draw a distinction sometimes between what should be charged to capital and what should be charged to the consolidated revenue fund. I do not think the reasoning of my hon. friend will hold good, that because things wear out they should not be charged to capital. The building of new portions of a railway like the Intercolonial Railway, at first cost, have been and are to a large extent charged to capital account.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). A large part is permanent.

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing is so permanent but that it wears out. The steel rails that are put on, and formerly the iron rails which were put on, were at first charged to capital account, but when they are replaced they are replaced from income.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman say that guns should be charged to capital account, but that when they are worn out and replaced they should be charged to income.

Mr. FOSTER. Quite so. If you go to work and at a very large expenditure comparatively, put the militia of the country into possession of a complete armament; that armament does not wear out all at the same time. It wears out gradually, and the gradual replacement can very well be met from income year by year. After all when you come down to get at the basis from capital expenditure, it is not to be defined always, and you will not find it strictly defined in our expenditure, or in the expenditure of any other country, as to be that on which is of so permanent a character that it does not wear out. A great deal depends on convenience. It would be absolutely unfair, at all events, impossible, to get out of the revenue of a single year a large special expenditure of two or three million dollars. A large proportion of this is for the field batteries, and these, while permanent to a large extent, will wear out also. However, it is quite different from the general maintenance from year to year, and the supply of what is necessary from year to year for the current needs of the force.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that while in England charges of this character are not all charged against the one year, yet they are charged against income. The hon. gentleman proposes to cast aside weapons that were purchased a few years ago. According to the theory which he has just laid down, these new weapons, being intended to replace the others, should be regarded as weapons that should be charged to income and not against capital. It does seem to me that the fair way would be to charge this to income, but to distribute it over a period of four or five years.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A considerable portion of this is for ammunition, which of course is transitory. We have never in my recollection bought any new rifles to replace those worn out. I would like to know what is to be done with a great many of the Snider-Enfield rifles now in the possession of the country. If those purchased are to be charged to capital account, those we have should go to the credit of capital account.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not know whether this should be charged to capital or income ; but I am astonished at the Minister of Finance saying that the charge for steel rails and other permanent materials for the Intercolonial should be charged to capital.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that at all.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. Minister said that, so far as steel rails are concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not even say that.

Mr. GIBSON. Then I am mistaken. What did he say ? If I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, it is quite easy to explain how the income of the Intercolonial is made up, when all materials are chargeable, half to income and half to capital.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the hon. gentleman's premises founded upon ? Not upon any assertion I made.

Mr. GIBSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. If he refers to "Hansard" he will find that that is his argument—that because steel rails were charged to capital, that was a sufficient reason for the Government charging this $1,000,000 to capital.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman wants to know what I said, I made a distinction between new rails and new rails. There are new rails to replace those once used, and new rails which are laid down in the primary construction of the road.

Mr. GIBSON. Everybody knows that the first rails used on a railway are chargeable to capital.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I said.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would just say in that connection that the Government have charged too much to capital account in dealing with the Intercolonial Railway. When Mr. Mackenzie left office, the amount of capital expenditure was about $36,000,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite have run it up, I think, to $55,000,000 by this time. The House will notice that whenever large sums are chargeable to income, there is a reasonable guarantee that some degree of care and method and prudence will be used in the expenditure ; but when the Government are allowed to charge indiscriminately to capital, then vastly more money is spent, and people pay very little attention to it. An expenditure of $200,000 or $300,000 chargeable to income is very much more strictly regarded than $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 chargeable to capital ; so that there is good reason for guarding with jealousy the tendency to open new capital accounts. As remarked by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), a very considerable part of this is for ammunition. If I remember the explanations yesterday, about $500,000 was for ammunition, and it does appear to me that charging this to capital account is a very dubious practice indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must see the distinction regarding this matter. His main fear is that being allowed to charge this expenditure to capital account, we will undertake expenses which we would not undertake if we had to take the money out of revenue, and so keep in mind the current income of the year. But it is not intended to do that. As my hon. friend knows, it is an extraordinary equipment which we are making ; and, although I did not say it last night, I wish to say it now, that although the Government gets, as it hopes to get from Parliament, the authority to raise by loan, and use if necessary, $3,000,000 for the kind of equipment and defence we discussed last night, it is not the intention of the Government to expend that without obtaining authority from Parliament for the various parts of that expenditure. This is the reason why I put this $1,000,000 in the Estimates ; and if we meet here again, and I have the pleasure of bringing down the Estimates, whatever amount is to be expended out of that $3,000,000 to be raised by loan, will be put in the Estimates and voted. I would not consider that the Government had any right to use any part of that $3,000,000 which has not been voted for a specific object, unless some extraordinary emergency were to arise which would make it necessary. Of course, that would justify the expenditure of any amount of money the Government would find at its disposal, if the emergency were of a certain kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman's notion of an emergency is shown by what has been done. The hon. gentleman has undertaken to make contracts in England to the amount of $2,000,000 while Parliament was in session, without asking a dollar's appropriation from Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. We discussed that last night.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We discussed it, and the hon. gentleman refers to the subject again. I say that neither in the case of a loan effected by the Government, nor in the case of the ordinary revenues of the country, has the hon. gentleman a right to appropriate a dollar for any purpose for which Parliament has not voted it. If there were an invasion, or some extraordinary condition of things not contemplated, and the Government were obliged, under the extreme necessities of the case, to make an expenditure, then they should come to Parliament for an indemnity, but for the Government to incur large liabilities behind the back of Parliament, with Parliament in session, is an unprecedented proceeding. The hon. gentleman referred to the case of railways. He says a railway will wear out, and yet we charge it to capital account. The entire road does not wear out. The road-bed is there ; the land purchased for the road remains in existence.

Mr. FOSTER. What part does not wear out ?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the land wear out ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, all things are perishable.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). All things are perishable in the day of judgment. It does seem to me that what we are bound to consider is what is a fair appropriation to make for the ordinary defences of this country in the way of arms and ascertain, as near as we can, how long they are liable to continue and to charge against each year its fair appropriation of this expenditure. It ought not to go against capital account at all.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be rather complicated.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The expenditure on ammunition for these small arms alone amounts to £76,000 sterling. It seems to me that is an extraordinary expenditure to charge to capital account.

Mr. MARTIN. My objection to this item is that the Government have no right to come down to Parliament and ask Parliament to appropriate moneys that are already spent. I am opposed to making this grant of a million dollars for the reason I have mentioned. We are here doing what we have been doing time and time again before, simply indemnifying the Government against action taken by them without the knowledge and advice of Parliament. The hon. gentleman assures us that if he gets permission from this House to borrow $3,000,000, he will not spend any of it without first asking the leave of Parliament. The hon. gentleman has already spent the most of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Not one cent is spent.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman is playing upon words. It appears to me that if the Government have gone and pledged the credit of Canada in England, the money is practically spent. They had no right to pledge the credit of Canada, there was no emergency, and no reason for their coming to England and buying these arms. There might have been a reason for their coming to Parliament early in the session and asking the opinion of Parliament as to whether arms should be bought and what kind of arms. But the Government have taken this whole matter into their own hands and have told us that they propose, if we give them authority to take $3,000,000, not to spend a cent of it without first asking our permission. But they have already spent the great bulk of it by sending Colonel Lake to the old country to order $1,625,000 worth, and he has instructions, we are told, to make the order up to something like $1,900,000. It is a perfect farce to ask Parliament to make an appropriation in a case of that kind. Parliament has no option, we are not here to discuss, the Government have not left us in a position to discuss whether it is advisable to buy these guns and what kind of guns should be bought. The Government charge us with being unpatriotic if we oppose a grant to the militia, but I will put this case in answer to that argument. Suppose the Government had here insisted on $100,000,000, for they might just as well have $100,000,000 as one. There was just as much justification, as far as Canada was concerned, for engaging the credit of Canada to the extent of $2,000,000 as $1,000,000, and therefore the arguments about lack of patriotism vanishes. We have the right to criticise propositions made even for the purpose of protecting the country. The Government cannot pretend there was any emergency because Parliament was sitting at the very time they were making this bargain ; the bargain was made in March, and Parliament began to sit on the 2nd January. For that reason I am opposed to granting a million dollars or a million cents as to the Government as an indemnity to them, because I do not think they have shown any reason to this House why we should indemnify them against their proceedings in this matter. Their proceedings have been entirely without justification or authority. If they had any respect for Parliament, they would have come down here and made their proposition. Are we not to have anything to say as to how many guns shall be bought ? Nothing whatever. We have no option, the guns are bought, and we must pay for them. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is not the only case in which this Government has undertaken to arrogate to themselves the functions of Parliament. Time and time again during recess, they have passed Orders in Council appropriating large sums of money without authority, and they have come down, believing that they had such a majority in Parliament, that no question would be made of their actions, but that a vote would simply follow, as a matter of form, because the majority of members were elected to support them. That is not treating Parliament fairly, that is subversive of all parliamentary institutions. Before last session, they passed an Order in Council granting $2,500,000 to the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway without the slightest warrant in law. They induced various persons to invest considerable sums of money on the credit of Canada through the passing of that Order in Council.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. MARTIN. What have they done in this case? They sent over to England without knowledge, and pledged us to heavy expenditure. The drafts are falling due, as the hon. gentleman tells us, and Canada will be in default if we do not pay these drafts.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not Canada.

Mr. MARTIN. That is the way he put it. Of course it is the Government that would be in default, and let them be. Let the people of Canada understand how the Government have been treating Parliament all these years. I suggest that the two cases are entirely analogous. They proposed to grant two and a half millions of the people's money to a railway company without any warrant in law, without any justification whatever, without any authority, with the view of binding beforehand the action of Parliament. In that particular case, we find that the Government did not even come and ask Parliament, and Canada was put in that unfortunate position of its responsible government having passed an Order in Council appropriating two and a half million dollars for the purpose of constructing certain railways, and Parliament never was called upon to give authority and life to that Order in Council. I submit that that is a kind of thing which this Parliament should set its face against. And this is the opportunity for those members of the House who do not believe that it is right for the Government to act in that way to show their practical condemnation of that step. And I, for one, am prepared to prevent, if possible, this item going through, for the reasons that I mention. I say that it is a perfect outrage on the rights of Parliament. This is supposed to be an appropriation, it is supposed to be an estimate for an expenditure to be authorized by this House. And they go through the form of giving some details as to the transaction which they say are binding upon us, and therefore we have no option in the matter; we have no control as to whether they shall buy one thousand or forty thousand or a hundred thousand of these rifles. They have bought them, and the argument I have heard used is that this money has to be paid. I say, Mr. Chairman, this is a kind of argument we should not admit here. We should express our condemnation of any Government undertaking to take away from us the privilege which the constitution gives to us of saying what the people's money shall be spent for and discussing fully all the details of a supposed expenditure before the expenditure is made. As hon. gentlemen have pointed out, an emergency might arise which would make it necessary for the defence of the country that the Government should act. And if they did so, and came down to Parliament and asked for an indemnity, I would at once agree to it if the circumstances justified it. But this is not a case of that kind. There has been no emergency, and no circumstances have arisen which would justify the Government in treating Parliament as it has in this case. When this expenditure was determined upon Parliament was sitting and sitting with nothing to do. We know that we sat here from the second day of January until the third day of March with absolutely nothing to do. We were called here to pass a Remedial Bill, but the Remedial Bill was not before us. Members of the House were engaged in discussing matters that had been discussed time and time again. And yet, while there was every opportunity for the Government to take the House into its confidence to get its authority for this expenditure, the proposition was not laid before us. The House should have had the opportunity of discussing the question whether the Government were buying enough rifles or whether they were buying too many or whether they were buying the right kind. I am told that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction amongst military men in Canada because of the kind of rifle the Government has selected. They have selected, I am told, a magazine rifle, and there are a great many military men in Canada who claim that a magazine rifle is not suited to the circumstances of the Canadian militia. Surely in a matter of this kind the advice of this House would have been of great assistance to the Government, and they were constitutionally bound to ask the advice of this House before they undertook the obligation which they have undertaken. I for one, am in favour of refusing to give the Government this item. Let the matter stand until next session. That would be a delay of only a couple of months or so. I am prepared to do that for the purpose of registering the strong disapproval that every member of the House must feel at the conduct of the Government in thus overriding all constitutional usages and all parliamentary practice.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow this proposition to pass without registering my strong disapproval at the conduct of the Government. The Government come down and ask us for a vote of one million dollars for the purchase of rifles. They say they want that million in order to meet a liability incurred to the War Department while Parliament was sitting here. In the Speech from the Throne attention was called to a measure intended to provide for the better arming of the Canadian militia and the strengthening of Canadian defences. Later on in the session, notice was given of the motion now before us, asking Parliament to authorize the Governor in Council to borrow the sum of three million dollars, required for the purpose of the defence of the Dominion. That notice was given almost at the outset of the session, and this matter was laid over to the last days, when the members are tired out and wish to go home. For my part, I am opposed not only to the raising of the loan of three million dollars, but also to that of one million now under discussion. The reason why I oppose it is that, had the Government been in a pressing want of that money, they should have asked for a vote at the beginning of the session. Why have they entered into a contract like this, and incurred such a large liability without first obtaining the authority of Parliament ? Why have they ignored Parliament altogether ? Such conduct is without any justification whatever. Had they intended making an honest and proper use of this money, they had but one course open to them, and that was asking Parliament to make an appropriation at the proper time. The Government ought to have known before now that they wanted such a sum for the purpose of arming the militia and putting our troops into a state of efficiency. Why did they not take the House into their confidence at the outset, to get authority for this heavy expenditure of two million dollars ?

Now, Mr. Chairman, whenever the Government want to get an appropriation for a few thousand or a few hundred dollars, they never fail to ask the House for a vote. Why, then, if they wanted such a large sum as one million dollars, did they not ask the House to make an appropriation ? The reason is that they wanted to override all constitutional usages and parliamentary practice. In fact, by such a course, they ignored the very existence of Parliament. They have ignored the rights of the representatives of the people. We are told that not one cent of this sum is spent, but they tell us in the same breath that they have incurred liabilities of several millions of dollars. That being so, if not one cent is spent, I think there is no reason for allowing the Government to spend that million dollars. They no longer enjoy the confidence of the people. The hon. gentlemen are no longer the representatives of public opinion here ; they will never be returned to this House. I say, therefore, that as representatives of the people, we should not give them a single cent of that money, without a shadow of a guarantee as to the purpose to which it shall be applied. I say that the Government do not possess the confidence of the people, a fact which is evinced by their failure to enact the law for the passage of which Parliament was called together. For, in the month of July last, the Government pledged themselves and declared that they would be prepared at the next session of Parliament, to introduce and press to a conclusion such legislation as would afford an adequate measure of relief to the Catholic minority.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) My remarks, Mr. Chairman, are quite relevant. I wish to point out that the Government are unable to pass their Remedial Bill into law ; that they no longer represent the people, that they no longer enjoy the confidence of the members of this House, and, therefore, that Parliament would not be warranted in entrusting to them the expenditure of one million dollars to boodle with ; that we would not be justified in allowing them to expend four millions of military subsidies. They would lead us to believe that they are going to expend those four millions for the purpose of putting the militia into a state of efficiency. Do they expect to fool the people into believing that they ask for that vote for no other purpose than that ? No ; but they intend to use that money, as remarked the other day by the Montreal "Daily Witness," a paper whose British proclivities nobody will call in question, for boodling and for election purposes. Now, a Government no longer commanding popular confidence has no longer the right of asking a vote like that, because at the next elections they are going to be swept out of power. It will be time, when the elections are over, to discuss whether or not we should grant this vote of money ; but, for the moment, no extraordinary emergency has arisen which makes it necessary for us to authorize the money. There is one feature in connection with this vote which puzzles me. We have over and again been told that in the event of a war taking place or Canada being invaded, we could rely on Great Britain's protection ; and that the only ground for not severing the colonial tie was that, should international difficulties arise, we might rely on England's strong arm. Now, Sir, I am sorry to hear under the circumstances that the Government, for the purpose of arming the Canadian militia have made their purchases not from private contractors, but from the War Office in Great Britain, and that we are asked now to foot the bills. Is that the protection we have been promised by Great Britain ? Is that the position in which we stand as a colony ? I think we are entitled to an altogether different treatment at the hands of Great Britain. On the other hand, I do not think the War Department is in such a hurry to get their money, that we should be asked for a vote of money now. I believe that the War Department is not in such pressing want that they cannot afford to wait a little longer, until we have the funds wherewith to meet the liabilities incurred, without having to raise a loan. Now, Sir, under the circumstances, I believe that it is our duty to refuse granting the Government the authority to raise that amount of four million dollars, and I, for one, am in favour of refusing to give the Government this item. I heartily concur in the remarks just fallen from my hon. friend the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin)——

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) I entertain not the least doubt that, had the Government been so anxious to recognize the militia as they now profess to be, it would have proved easy for them to follow a different course ; they should have brought up the matter at a time when there was full opportunity to discuss it at length. Parliament is asked to foot this bill at a time when the Government are rolling up the public debt by millions, at a time when it reaches $300,000,000. I believe that our public debt is large enough without our jingoes adding to it a few more millions for an unwarrantable expenditure. I do not think this expenditure is called for under the circumstances, and I, for one, am strongly opposed to authorizing the money to pay that expenditure.

Mr. LEGRIS. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I do not want to let this opportunity slip by without registering my strong protest not only against the unwarrantable course followed by the Government in this matter, but also against the ill-advised and enormous expenditure incurred by this moribund Government. It seems to me, this is not a question as to whether the Government ought to make a charge of this kind to capital account or to our ordinary income. Do what they may, and whether they make the charge to capital account or not, it is none the less true that they are embarking the country in another enormous expenditure. I say that such a course cannot be too severely censured. Once more the hon. members who occupy the Treasury benches have evinced the fact that they are reckless of the opinion of this Parliament and mock at us, the representatives of the people. That they should incur such large liabilities and spend millions of the people's money behind the back of Parliament, with Parliament in session, is an unprecedented proceeding. I would certainly be failing in the duty I owe my country, were I to pass under in silence and not enter my strongest protest against such a course and such an extravagant expenditure, which is altogether unwarrantable under the circumstances. Why, Mr. Chairman, at the very time when the Government are face to face with yearly and enormous deficits, flying up into the millions, it is at this very time, I say, that they chose to incur further liabilities for three million dollars, under the pretense of arming the troops with new weapons, and reorganizing our militia. Is such a reorganization actually called for ? The very first requisite for putting our militia into a state of efficiency would be the placing at the head of our Militia Department a gentleman well qualified to fill the position and to command our officers and their subalterns. So long as our troops lack a Minister of Militia able to cope with the duties of his high office, so long will all that expenditure for putting the militia into an adequate state prove useless. There are enough instances at hand either in the Militia Department or during the annual drills to show that, in order to put the militia of the country in a state of efficiency, there is something else required besides pledging the credit of the country to the expenditure of millions. This year, the Government have incurred large expenditures for military purposes, and still, instead of being put into a state of better efficiency, I have no hesitation in saying that our militia is getting worse and worse. But, I ask, Mr. Chairman, on what grounds do the Government justify such an expenditure ? They say that it is for the purpose of supplying a fair armament for our militia, but the weapons which are now being used by our soldiers are surely good enough for the purpose of allowing them to learn what little military science they are supposed to master and even more than they do actually learn. Therefore, I am bound to register my strongest disapproval of the conduct of the Government, and to protest against their extravagance in throwing away the millions of the people's money, and embarking the country in enormous expenditures at a time when the public exchequer is empty ; at a time, I say, when yearly deficits are piling up ; at a time when the people are loaded down with taxation, which is growing still heavier ; at a time when business is prostrated and thousands of our people are in actual want of the necessities of life ; at a time when failures reach a figure unheard of in the history of this country. The Government would do far better, to my mind, to seek to alleviate the charges with which our people are loaded down rather than increasing the public debt and incurring liabilities as useless as those which they are now asking Parliament to authorize. That expenditure of one million dollars for purchasing arms is an ill-timed and unwarrantable one, under the circumstances. We are at peace with the world, and there is no cloud of war hanging over our heads. Instead of launching out into this enormous expenditure, out of proportion with our actual wants, the Government would evince more wisdom in securing a better discipline in the ranks of the militia. As I said, and I repeat it, the Government should place at the head of the Militia Department a gentleman having the proper qualifications to fill that high position. Let them first reform the head of the department before launching out into such large expenditures. Had the Government had more money than is required for the public service; and if they could spend the millions of the people without involving in debt the toiling and agricultural classes, I would not protest as I do now. You are not to blame for spending money and incurring liabilities, when you can afford to do it; and that rule applies to governments as well as to individuals. But, when a government is at bay, at the last gap; when the finances of the country are as involved as they now are, I say that a Government has no right to load down the people with new charges; that our duty is to postpone and not to hurry on a legislation involving such expenditures, instead of throwing to the winds, to no purpose, millions of money which could be used to far better advantage in coming to the relief of the toiling masses. The course pursued by the Government throughout this transaction is an utterly outrageous proceeding, and an insult offered to the House. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have been sitting here now four months; and for the two first months, the Ministers have kept us here idle, being at the time busy fighting among themselves; and now, in the dying moments of this Parliament, when most members have gone home, we are asked to pass this appropriation and vote the expenditure of millions, which perhaps the Government stand in need of, for electoral purposes. I fail to see anything else but the interest of the party exchequer, in railroading this measure and spending millions they ask the House to vote, after they have been spent. I have no hesitation in saying that I would fail in my duty, were I to keep silent about the course adopted by the Government, and were I not to enter my protest against this extravagant and unwarrantable expenditure of the people's money. I have no doubt but that the voters who shall be called upon to pronounce themselves within a few weeks, will not hesitate in saying that the Government have perpetrated another crime. It is quite true that there are so many crimes laid to the door of the present Government that the hon. gentlemen are perhaps right in thinking that it matters little whether they go down to hell with a conscience more or less weighted with crime, but I say that such a way of dealing with Parliament is an insult offered to the representatives of the people whom they feign to ignore. I say that the voters of this country will resent such an insult, as they shall soon have a chance of rendering their verdict on the conduct of the Government. They will give no uncertain sound as to the course now followed by the Government and will undoubtedly condemn this new and useless expenditure of the people's money. From what has been said on the floor of this House, I gather that the Government have not been actuated by an earnest desire to serve the best interests of the country but by that of filling the empty exchequer of the party, in view of the elections near at hand.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, in rising at this stage of the debate, I merely wish to enter my protest along with the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) and the hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Legris), in connection with the expenditure which the Government have incurred for the arming of our militia and which they now ask us to ratify by our vote. I approve of the stand taken on the matter by the hon. members for Rouville and Maskinongé. It is now too late, at this advanced stage of the session, for a moribund Government to come down and ask this House for a vote of money of that kind. Undoubtedly, this is an unwarrantable expenditure, owing to the heavy public debt with which our people are loaded down and seeing also that there is no absolute necessity for the Militia Department purchasing rifles as they have done. I say, Mr. Chairman, that such an expenditure is unwarrantable, because we still are a British dependency and Great Britain has always promised us her active aid in our hour of need. Such expenditure is unwarranted on the further ground that we are at peace with the whole world. This expenditure is altogether uncalled for on this further ground—and I beg to say so before this House and the country with all the Chauvinism of which I am a fervent adept, and in spite of the loyalty professed by the French Canadian people for Great Britain, a loyalty evinced now as in the past by their readiness to shed their blood and expend their money for the defence of the country—but, I say, the people of our country are unwilling to incur such expenditures to fight the battles of England. But we are told: we have bought those rifles, the honour of Canada is pledged and we have to foot the bill. We have bought two million dollars worth of rifles and the Government only ask us a vote of one million dollars. Another ground upon which I object to this expenditure is the lack of information as to what they intend to do with the money and as to the purpose to which it shall be applied. As remarked by the hon. members for Rouville and Maskinongé, how much of that vote, I ask, will go to the Militia Department? We have voted considerable sums of money for the building of the Curran Bridge, for the Tay Canal, for the Yamaska Pier, for the Quebec Harbour and similar works, and we all know what a large percentage of that money has been wasted. Well, the country is surely entitled to inquire, on the eve of general elections, whether the Government are in earnest when they come down and ask the House, in the public interest, that vote of money. I, for one, do not believe that they are in earnest. They are so reckless, so extravagant, as evinced by the facts I have just alluded to, that we are warranted in believing that the hon. gentlemen are going to appropriate a certain amount of that vote to meet the exigencies of the electoral campaign which will soon be in full swing throughout the country. Another ground on which I oppose this vote is the strong opposition to that expenditure evinced by the press and the general public in the province of Ontario. As to the members from the province of Quebec, they cannot vote this item, without overriding the public feeling prevailing in their province. And, in order to substantiate my statement, Mr. Chairman, allow me to quote from the "Presse," a Conservative organ, of the 20th instant:

> Obstruction is a two-edged weapon; it sometimes inflicts more injury than it does good. In refusing to vote the Estimates, the Opposition injures many interests and provokes reprisals. Should they lack the co-operation of a certain number of interested parties at a critical moment, they will have only themselves to blame for it. Having gone that far, we are free now to confess our satisfaction at seeing a certain item of expenditure struck off from the Estimates, for the present at least. The idea of expending $1,000,000 for rifles and guns to make ourselves agreeable to Great Britain is a most preposterous one; and at a time when the Government of Great Britain are heaping up lies over lies in order to come, in spite of their free trade policy, to schedule our live cattle, it is our dissatisfaction and not our gratitude we must give vent to towards her, under the circumstances.

In its next issue, the same paper wrote editorially as follows:—

> Messrs. Laurier and Cartwright have opposed the vote of one million dollars for the militia, but without giving the grounds of their opposition; both the hon. gentlemen are aware that the Government do not wantonly propose so unpopular a measure, and that, should they come into power, after the next general elections, Great Britain might exact from them the same sacrifice; hence their reticence. It is for the voters of this country to impose upon their representatives the obligation of opposing this unproductive expenditure. The voters shall soon be masters of the situation, for some time, not very long, though. Well, let them dictate without control.

Such are the views expressed by the "Presse," a Conservative journal, about the Government policy, in connection with the purchase of rifles which we are now asked to authorize. I fully coincide in the views expressed by that paper, and on the grounds alleged by the hon. members for Rouville and Maskinongé, I cannot let this item pass without, on behalf of the electors of my constituency, entering my serious and strong protest in condemnation of what the Government have done. We have always been and still are loyal subjects of England. Whenever Great Britain required the help of our arms, whenever she asked the French Canadians for their active co-operation, they always responded to the call. We have respected the treaty under which the country became a British dependency. Why, if Great Britain still retains the possession of Canada, it is owing as much to the loyalty of the French Canadians as to their bravery. As I said before, we are loyal subjects of Great Britain; but, under the circumstances, we believe that this expenditure is altogether uncalled for, unwarrantable, and I, for one, am in favour of refusing to give the Government this item.

Annual Drill—Amount required to provide for 4 days' additional drill pay of the active militia; 12 days' drill for field batteries in camp, city corps at their local headquarters	$20,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman please explain this item.

Mr. DICKEY. This is to provide for four days' extra drill of the city corps. I was only able to obtain enough to pay for eight days, and they actually drilled for twelve days, and this is to pay them. Of course it is a most desirable thing that the city regiments, the flower of the militia, should not be discouraged in the work of keeping up their organizations.

Mr. MARTIN. This is another case where the Government have assumed to take the matter out of the hands of Parliament. While the drill was performed, it was performed on a promise from the Government that it should be paid. I say the Government have no right to make any such promises.

Mr. DICKEY. It was rather on a misunderstanding of the Government promise. The city regiments understood the promise to be for the full twelve days' drill. The Finance Minister when he made the promise, really meant only eight days' drill.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand that when the deputation waited upon the Finance Minister, he expressly told them he could not get the money until the next session of Parliament.

Mr. DICKEY. As far as I remember, when the Finance Minister was parting with the deputation he said, "You will get your drill this year." They understood that to mean full twelve days' drill.

Mr. MARTIN. Was that not a natural understanding?

Mr. DICKEY. I am inclined to think that there was some ground, but the Finance Minister did not understand it as they did.

Mr. FOSTER. For my part I knew but little about militia drill and I was speaking with a view to the rural militia, and the promise was of full drill; and that promise went to the city corps as well as to the rural corps, while I had in view particularly the rural corps.

Mr. MARTIN. My objection is entirely to the manner in which these things are done. I have no objection to the drill. I think it was a most ill-advised business on the part of the Government to propose to cut down the drill as they did. They wanted to make a show of economy. There was a considerable reduction in the estimates of a number of the departments, and amongst them was the Militia Department. Now, I believe there is great room for a reduction of expenditure in that department, but not in trenching on the time of drill for either the rural or the city corps. The reduction could be made in the permanent corps and in items of waste which have nothing to do with the drills. The Government have no right to take the matter out of the hands of Parliament. They only asked Parliament for a certain amount of money, they asked for altogether too little, intentionally they asked too litttle, because they intended to cut down the drill. They found that was going to affect them unfavourably with the militia throughout the country, and then they weakened and agreed to restore the amount of drill. This Government seems to have no idea of their responsibility to Parliament, they go on and do things, relying upon their mechanical majority in this House to condone anything they may do, no matter whether that majority agrees with them or not. They go on and say: Well, we have done it, and you have either to put us out or put it through. I protest against the Government putting the House in that position. They have no right to put even their own supporters in the position of either turning them out of power, or of condoning all their actions. The Government should remember that it is not part of their duty to spend public money, that is not one of the functions of Government. It is the duty of the Government only to spend such money as Parliament appropriates for the various purposes of government; and the particular cases of emergency which require them to go beyond that are duly provided for by statute. When they go beyond that, as they did in connection with buying these guns, as they did with this drill, as they did with the railway matter I have referred to, they are violating a principle. It is not a question of this item or that item, it is a question of destroying parliamentary institutions and destroying the power which Parliament has in the administration of public affairs.

Salaries and wages—Civil employees in the military stores, public armouries, &c.	$10,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is too large an amount. We cut that estimate down somewhat. But I propose to make this $8,000 instead of $10,000, which makes the vote just the same as it was in the preceding year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why did you not ask for money enough before?

Mr. DICKEY. The Militia Department estimated last year for $65,000 for this service; the Government cut that down against the protest of the department, to $55,000. While I was in the department I made a desperate effort to meet that contingency. This vote will make $55,000 and $8,000; last year the vote was $68,000 odd.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is well to emphasize these little games, because it amounts to that, on the part of the Finance Department. Last year, for a purpose, there is no question about it, the hon. gentleman applied his pruning knife to the Estimates that were brought down, and the Minister of Militia has just explained to us the process. He asked for what he knew would be required, and the Minister of Finance cut it down to make a show, with the full intention, no doubt, of having it replaced by Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very uncharitable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. However, the effect had been produced at the elections that were then imminent. That was the little game that was transacted. Now, the hon. gentleman would have our full support in all well-considered economies that we can make, but there is no use in cutting down estimates with the express intention, at a later day, of replacing them, and doing this for the sake of producing an effect.

Pay and allowances—Active militia at schools of instruction, including a school at Halifax, N.S., and Vancouver, B.C.	$45,000

Mr. DICKEY. This is a new service altogether. The General in command expressed the view that we did not get enough work out of the permanent corps, and out of the schools, and he submitted a scheme to me to be carried out in this quarter, for putting 230 additional men through the schools; and this is necessary in order to do that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you mean non-commissioned officers?

Mr. DICKEY. Non-commissioned officers and men, giving them a training. I cannot say just in what proportion they are divided.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How do you get the men?

Mr. DICKEY. They are chosen by the commanding officers from the different regiments; practically they are volunteers.

Mr. FLINT. How is it that this appears as a Supplementary Eestimate, and why was it not a substantial estimate in the regular Estimates ?

Mr. DICKEY. The scheme was adopted early in this or late in the last calendar year.

Mr. MARTIN. Does that include the School of Mounted Infantry at Winnipeg ?

Mr. DICKEY. I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to inquire what is the programme. Does the Minister of Justice, speaking for the Minister of Militia, mean now to set to work regularly and train two or three hundred non-commissioned officers every year, through the medium of our schools.

Mr. DICKEY. I think if Parliament will provide the money, that demand will probably be made by the department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will be the cost ? About $100 ?

Mr. DICKEY. A little more. We would only go on, of course, for a certain time, because the object of the General is to get a certain leaven in every corps in Canada, a certain leaven of thoroughly trained non-commissioned officers. The idea is to train a thorough body of non-commissioned officers.

Mr. MARTIN. What regiments do members of the Winnipeg school join ?

Mr. DICKEY. The school is not on the list mentioned here ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand the object of the General in command of the department is to turn out, say, 1,000 or 1,200 non-commissioned officers, enough for 25 000 or 30,000 men.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a great deal to be said in favour of that plan, if it is properly carried out.

Mr. DICKEY. It strikes me very favourably.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The training of non-commissioned officers is not a new plan. As many are trained as the schools will accommodate. Certain qualifications are required. The men must be able to read and write, have good characters, and possess some other qualifications. The result will be that no non-commissioned officers will be appointed unless they have taken certificates at the military schools. We shall have the great advantage of a regular body of non-commissioned officers ; but it is to be regretted that the accommodation at the various schools is not sufficient to meet the requirements, and the department is obliged to refuse many applications. One-half the applications I have made have been refused. I am quite satisfied that a great deal more could be done with the schools than is at present done. Certainly this arrangement was undertaken when there was apprehension of danger, and so the demand might be more than usual. It is a step in the right direction, and so long as there is no increased cost in the way of instructors but the demand is limited to actual allowances to men and necessary accommodation, it is all right. If we are going to establish additional schools and additional staff I would object, because there is already sufficient staff for the work required ; but as regards feeding and providing for the men who attend the schools, it is money well spent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long are the men kept there ?

Mr. DICKEY. Three months.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand these schools are for the purpose of educating non-commissioned officers and men. If the Winnipeg school is for the purpose of educating officers and men, what is the general plan ?

Mr. O'BRIEN. It was planned by General Middleton or General Herbert as a means of establishing a mounted infantry corps. It is practically a cavalry school, and is on the same footing as all the other schools.

Mr. MARTIN. Then it is intended to educate cavalry men ?

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is, and the cavalry school in Toronto is the only other one in the Dominion.

Mr. MARTIN. If that is the intention, the school is a lamentable failure, because practically no men go to the school. The corps is recruited from the city.

Mr. DICKEY. You have a good man there now, Williams.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not speaking of the man, I am talking of the school. The men who go to the Winnipeg school do not stand apart. Is this part of the standing army ?

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is a part of the permanent corps. In all the schools none are admitted but men who belong to the force.

Mr. MARTIN. These men are recruited in Winnipeg.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman is making a mistake as regards the difference between men who enroll themselves in the permanent corps and men who enroll themselves in the military schools for the purpose of obtaining certificates.

Mr. MARTIN. Those attending the Winnipeg school are young men who attend there and are kept at the expense of the country and paid wages for three years. This is an absolute waste of money. I endorse the principle that the men who attend these schools should be thoroughly trained, but practically none of these men attend the Winnipeg school. They enter that school for three years and are paid $10 or $12 a month and expenses. I never could understand that any benefit would be derived from these schools. I suppose the city of Winnipeg gets a little benefit out of it.

Mr. DICKEY. It is not intended for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN. No doubt the people of the city will be down on me for keeping out sources of revenue. It is a great expense to keep up a company of that kind, fifty or sixty men and their horses.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. gentleman's remarks apply to all the permanent corps. It is a question very well worthy of consideration, and it has been discussed many times. When Minister of Militia I took the view that the permanent force should be very considerably reduced and I struck off 20 per cent of the whole force everywhere, in Winnipeg as elsewhere. The practical difficulty about the permanent corps is that succeeding majors-general take different views of the possibilities of the schools. Originally they were intended to be schools, but General Herbert took a wide view of their functions. The permanent officers of the department look upon them as teaching staffs. and that they are not intended to exceed that function.

To pay Capt. F. Manley, late of the 10th Royals, Toronto, compensation for injuries sustained during the North-west Rebellion	$500

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the explanation for this ?

Mr. DICKEY. Capt. Manley was with the 10th Royals in the North-west. He was shot in the foot, and his injury has developed into rather serious form, with rheumatism and lameness. The wound was a pretty serious one.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In common with a great many other people who have rheumatism.

Mr. DICKEY. There is no doubt about this case. I went into it very carefully myself, and I came to the conclusion that the Government was doing very well if they got off with paying this $500.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This is a grant which the House ought to approve of. I would have supported it equally as well if it were twice the amount. Had Capt. Manley had made application at the time of the wound, he would have had a pension from that day forward. He was not anxious to be placed on the pension list, and so he neglected to make any application. The wound has increased, and in time, it threatens that he will become a cripple from it. This is the least possible thing the Government could have done.

Compensation to Sergeant J. Watson, caretaker of the Drill Hall at Winnipeg, consequent upon the unsanitary state of the quarters in the building occupied by him as the caretaker	$300

Mr. DICKEY. This is a case which I dealt with when I was Minister of Militia, and I am responsible for it. Sergeant Watson was put into quarters at Winnipeg, which had been reported by the surgeon of the department as being in an unsanitary condition. A disease developed in his family, typhoid fever, I think, his wife died and his children were ill for a considerable time, and he was put to a very considerable expense. This $300 is the amount that he established that he actually paid out for medical attendance. It is a peculiar case. I do not know whether there is any liability on the part of the Crown, but this matter is in the hands of the committee, and there is no particular wish to press it if the committee does not desire to pass this vote. But, here is this man, a servant of the Crown, ordered into quarters that were unsanitary, and he obeyed, and sickness ensued through which he incurred this expense.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When did this happen ?

Mr. DICKEY. About four or five years ago, but I cannot give the date. It is I think a very meritorious claim.

Mr. MARTIN. The Government already have officers quarters of considerable size at Fort Osborne, where the school is. Might I ask the Minister if it is the intention to enlarge these quarters and buy some adjacent land ?

Mr. DICKEY. No.

Mr. MARTIN. Has that been suggested to the department ?

Mr. DICKEY. I heard a rumour of that sort in Winnipeg.

Mr. MARTIN. And that is all there is in it ?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. FLINT. From the explanation of the Minister of Justice, I believe this to be a meritorious case. During my first three sessions here, I had the duty thrown upon me to press upon the Militia Department a case much stronger than this. In the town of Yarmouth, while the artillery company there was practising with its heavy guns, a gun discharged a missile which passed through the rear of the drill shed, went through a stable, and killed the employee of a livery stable quite a distance away. The bullet struck the man in the back and he was killed. He was very poor, and left a family absolutely in distress. If ever there was a case deserving of compensation, it was this one. It was held to be very doubtful from a legal point of view, if the widow could have recovered from the Government, but even if she could recover in the Exchequer Court, of course she was entirely too poor to make the attempt. A petition signed by the most influential inhabitants of the town, and supported by the officers of the artillery company was presented, asking the Government for some compensation for this valuable life destroyed. I have been informed officially by the department, that although they had the utmost sympathy with the bereaved family, yet they felt they could not give compensation to this poor widow, without establishing a dangerous precedent. In connection with this vote, which I find no fault with, I think this claim which I mention might receive the consideration of the Government. I would ask the Minister of Justice, who is well up in the affairs of the Militia Department to use his influence with the Minister of Militia, and to make a note of this case which I mention, and perhaps to press it again, having this precedent in his mind.

Mr. DICKEY. What was the man's name ?

Mr. FLINT. The name of the man was Cosman. Three or four hundred dollars would certainly be ample, and as I understand the circumstances of the family, they are still in need of the money. This accident took place just before the meeting of the House in 1891. The case which I refer to is one in which there need be no danger of establishing a precedent, because such an extraordinary accident as that would probably never happen again in the history of the country.

Mr. DICKEY. That was not brought to my notice when I was Minister of Militia. I went into a great many cases that had been standing a good while. I dealt with them as far as possible on legal principles, and refused payment in all cases where there was no negligence. There were cases in Barriefield, which the hon. member for South Oxford will know of. There was one very hard case of a woman's cow being killed at target practice ; but as there was no negligence, I declined to consider the claim The claim the hon. gentleman mentions may be open to the same objection. In the case in hand, I thought there was negligence, and that was the reason I advised payment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The range at Barriefield is Government property and is allowed to be a common for the villagers ; and they are aware that they put their cattle there at their own risk, and that it is their duty when the flag is hoisted to remove them. So that, however hard the case may be, I am inclined to agree with the Minister that it is impossible to give compensation, otherwise a very old cow in the vicinity of Kingston at election times would be converted into beef at Her Majesty's expense ; and they might, as my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) says, bring as much as cows in North Victoria. But I rise to say that if the Minister of Justice were inclined to take a favourable view of the case my hon. friend (Mr. Flint) has mentioned, it seems to me it might be fairly dealt with out of the sum of $25,000 which we give for unforeseen expenses. I do not think there is much risk of a case of that kind forming a dangerous precedent.

Mr. DICKEY. I will ask the Department of Militia to send me the papers.

Mr. FLINT. If the Minister will promise to look through the papers, he will find the most extraordinary circumstance recorded there, almost in the whole annals of artillery practice. It was something that puzzled the experts sent to look into the matter.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister says he allowed this claim of Watson because there was negligence. Are there claims from outside parties, or is the claim paid to Watson ?

Mr. DICKEY. They are all claims by him, and this money will go to him.

Railways and Canals. Capital—Improvements to the Governor General's private car "Victoria"	$1,300

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many private cars do the Government own altogether ? I suppose the country owns this.

Mr. FOSTER. No, we do not. It is the private property of His Excellency ; bought and paid for by him.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then, why are we improving it?

Mr. FOSTER. He made the capital expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many other cars have we got ?

Mr. HAGGART. Only a fortnight ago I brought down a statement showing in full detail all the cars owned by the Government, the expenditure on each car, the employees, and everything else about them.

Mr. MARTIN. If we built the car, of course we ought to repair it ; but if the car belongs to the Governor General, why should we repair it ?

Mr. HAGGRAT. The Governor General pays a rate of the expenditures, by an arrangement with Lord Derby. He wished a car, but he did not wish to own it altogether, and he pays annually the interest on the expenditure. We built the car.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the cost of the car ?

Mr. HAGGART. Twelve thousand, six hundred and thirty-three dollars and eighty-nine cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you charge him ?

Mr. HAGGART. Three per cent on the cost.

Mr. McMULLEN. What are the improvements ?

Mr. HAGGART. The improvements cost $1,290.31.

Mr. McMULLEN. I ask what are the improvements ?

Mr. HAGGART. There were new water closets put in, for one thing.

Mr. McMULLEN. They surely did not cost $1,200. What else was put in, and who made the improvements ?

Mr. HAGGART. It was built at the shops of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton. That was the actual expenditure.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to know what other accommodations or improvements were put in. Was the ventilating improved?

Mr. HAGGART. No, I do not think so. I suggested that, and I think it would be a great improvement if some new patent for ventilation were adopted in the car ; but it was not put in this car.

Mr. McMULLEN. What other improvements were put in this car ?

Mr. HAGGART. All I know was the improvement I have mentioned. The whole car was upholstered again, and Lord Derby had the interior fitted with ship bunks, and there was an alteration made in the whole interior.

Beauharnois—To Deepen Entrance Channels	$7,600

Mr. HAGGART. Owing to the low water last season, it was very difficult to enter this canal, and this vote is required for lowering the mitre sills and lock at the lower entrance.

Rideau Canal—Final Estimate—R. Waddell	$2,275

Mr. HAGGART. The Waddell Company were the contractors for the erection of a high water bridge over the Rideau Canal at Smith's Falls. Contract price was $3,265 ; they were paid $190, and the balance is $2,275.

Land Damages	$10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This was intended to pay for the last general election. Where are the damages ?

Mr. HAGGART. Some are on the Tay Canal and some on the Rideau. Mr. Wood, the land appraiser, values them at $11,250.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would suggest that you give up the Tay Canal for the damages.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much for land damages on the Tay Canal ?

Mr. HAGGART. The total amount for last year was $27,000. A settlement was arranged for at $10,000 on the Tay Canal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The amount, then, is on the Tay Canal and not the Rideau.

Mr. HAGGART. The amount to be paid is $10,000 on the Tay Canal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That all goes to the Tay Canal as land damages ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much was paid altogether on the Tay Canal for land damages ?

Mr. HAGGART. I think that is the whole of the land damages.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much land does this cover ?

Mr. HAGGART. About 3,000 or 4,000 acres.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who owns the land ?

Mr. HAGGART. There are about twenty owners.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have those damages been arbitrated ?

Mr. HAGGART. They have been appraised by Mr. Wood, the Government appraiser.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this the same Mr. Wood who was then M.P. ?

Mr. HAGGART. He used to be the member for Hastings.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Brother of E. C. Wood ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

St. Peter's Canal—Completing Repairs to Lock (G.G.W.)	$10,000

Mr. HAGGART. The work was contracted for by S. Donnelly, but he found he was unable to pump out the lock. He was unable to complete the work, and it was taken out of his hands and completed by day labour.

Mr. McSHANE. Had the Government any security from Mr. Donnelly for the performance of his contract ?

Mr. HAGGART. They had the usual contract, which was retained by the Government.

Mr. BOWERS. Is it in thorough repair now ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but there is a small amount of work to do which is provided for in the main Estimates.

Mr. BORDEN. Is the canal being used ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. McSHANE. I understand from the hon. Minister that the contractor, Mr. Donnelly, has a claim against the Government.

Mr. HAGGART. He had.

Mr. McSHANE. Did the Government perform this work ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, he claims that he made the dam according to the specification, and he contends that all he was intended to do was fulfilled, and that after that he had to get extra work done, and I believe the contractor is partially right in reference to that. I think the contractor is partially right and he has a claim against the Government up to the time we took the contract from him and completed it.

Mr. McSHANE. What right have the Government to take the contract from him if he has a claim against the Government ?

Mr. HAGGART. He could not complete it under his contract, because he was required to do more than he thought was necessary, but it was taken from him and completed by the Government.

Mr. McSHANE. I do not understand this. Here is a man performing a contract. You say he has a claim against the Government. Then why does the Government take the contract from him and complete the work ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not understand the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand the hon. gentleman to point out that the man had a contract and he performed part of the work to the satisfaction of the Government, and then the Government steps in and takes the remainder of the work from him.

Mr. HAGGART. He gave up his contract. He said that the plan upon which he was required to complete the work was not sufficient and the Government had to build two other dams to complete it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then are we to understand that the plans of the department were inadequate ?

Mr. HAGGART. That is his claim—that the contracts were inadequate, and from the way we had to build it, it was found they were inadequate. So it would have been no use to carry out the contract in accordance with the plans.

Mr. McSHANE. I do not understand this. Here is a man who has a contract with the Government. The Government take the contract from him——

Mr. HAGGART. He abandoned the contract himself.

Mr. McSHANE. Then what claim can he have if he abandoned the contract ?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must imagine that himself.

Mr. McSHANE. We are not here to imagine. I am talking about business, and there is no imagination about business, particularly where the people's money is to be paid. If Mr. Donnelly has a claim against the Government and the Government had to complete his contract at a cost of $43,000, what is his claim against the Government ? What is the amount of the claim ? I hope it is not $200,000 like Mr. Goodwin's claim.

Mr. HAGGART. He claims between $1,300 and $1,400.

Expenses of deep water way commission. $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose this is under the charge of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I should like to have a tolerably full explanation as to who composed this commission, what work has been done, what their instructions are, and why the hon. gentleman wants $10,000 for their expenses.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the instructions to these commissioners have been laid upon the Table. I made a statement some time before these commissioners were appointed that I intended to appoint commissioners. The United States appointed three commissioners and asked us to appoint three to meet with them. These gentlemen were appointed as a commission to report upon the deep water ways. Messrs. Keefer, Monro and O. A. Howland were appointed. They receive no salary but are paid their travelling and living expenses. They have made a first report, which I will bring down, if the hon. gentlemen wish it, to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is covered by this—the entire water-way from Lake Superior to the Atlantic ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What precisely is the scope of this commission ? Is it the idea that they should report on the feasibility of making a channel of communication for ocean going vessels from Lake Superior to the Atlantic ?

Mr. HAGGART. That is one of the subjects they reported on.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the same Mr. Monro that was engaged on the Soulanges Canal ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. He is already under salary ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is Mr. Keefer also in the employ of the Government ?

Mr. HAGGART. No. Mr. Keefer is the president of the association of engineers for the whole of North America.

Mr. McMULLEN. How long were they engaged in their work ?

Mr. HAGGART. It is five or six months, I think, since they were appointed. I do not know how long they were actually engaged in their work.

Mr. McMULLEN. If they were engaged five months this would be at the rate of about $75 a day.

Mr. HAGGART. Their work is not finished yet.

Mr. McGREGOR. They have only met four or five times and a few days at a time ; at Toronto, Detroit, and I think they have been to Chicago once.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose they have a lot of officials connected with the work ?

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is secretary of the board ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think they have a secretary at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. They have no officials with them ?

Mr. HAGGART. No ; they have no official with them.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are asked to vote $10,000 and it appears that this commission has sat three or four times. We are supposed to be dealing with the tail end of last years' apropriations. Why are we asked to vote $10,000 if they have had only a few meetings and no salaries are paid to them ?

Mr. HAGGART. My deputy says it is in excess of the amount required. They finished an estimated amount of their living and travelling expenses, which they think will amount to $10 a day each.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister says they have been engaged five months or 150 days, and $10 a day each for three men, would make $4,500. Now, why are we asked to vote $10,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The deputy says that this amount may be in excess of the requirements, but there will be several expenditures outside that for travelling and living allowance, such as collecting information, and examining experts.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think this committee would be justified in voting a sum outside what has been actually spent within the past year or will be spent up to the 30th June. When the new Parliament meets it will be time enough to deal with the future expenditure.

Mr. HAGGART. Nothing has yet been voted, and I have been unable to pay them a single cent for travelling and living allowances. They sent in an estimate to the department that the amount of expenditure would probably be in the neighbourhood of $10,000. It is possible the amount may not be required before the 1st July. I will reduce the amount to $5,000 if the committee thinks proper.

Mr. McGREGOR. They have only had three or four meetings, of one day at a time. I think one-half of $5,000 would cover the expenditure thus far.

Mr. HAGGART. I will bring down tomorrow the Order in Council for their appointment, and I will bring down their first report, and the estimate which the gentlemen themselves made of their probable expenditure.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If they will take $10,000, and show how they propose to divide it, I do not suppose there will be much objection.

Mr. McSHANE. While we are on the canal estimate, I want to get from the Minister of Railways and Canals an answer to a question which is asked in the newspaper article which I will read to the committee :

> In the threatened delay in the opening of the Welland Canal the Corn Exchange has a distinct grievance. In former years this canal has been opened on or about April 20th, and contracts have been usually made on this understanding. It was announced on the Corn Exchange yesterday that several contracts had been made this season on the understanding that grain might be brought from the Lake Superior and Lake Erie ports through the Welland Canal in time to catch the steamers leaving Montreal on May 1st. Several communications have been addressed to the Government in the matter, the Corn Exchange and the Board of Trade having requested information as to when the canal was to be opened. No answer to these communications has been received, but the Government has apprised private persons in Montreal of the fact that the canal will not be opened until May 1st.
> It will be seen from the sailing notices, that several vessels are booked to sail on May 1st and during the following week. Mr. Reford told the Corn Exchange yesterday that he had two vessels at Quebec and that as there was every chance of an early breaking up of the ice bridge these vessels might be in Montreal by the end of the month. He said that they should have taken their cargoes and left port by May 4th or 5th, but this would be impossible if the Welland Canal was not opened till May 1st. Mr. Torrance said that if the canal was not opened till May 1st there would be no grain at Montreal till May 7th or 8th. Mr. Thomson reiterated the assertion that the grain men had always calculated on the opening of the canal on April 20th, and that this year they had made their contracts accordingly. Several vessels, he said, were now waiting in Lake Ontario to get up to Toledo. They were under charter, and every day of delay involved substantial loss.
> The view was expressed that the Government should take immediate steps to prepare the canal for an early opening. A force of men large enough to secure this result should be put into the canal at once, and preparations for the opening should be hastened by every possible means. To this end a strongly worded resolution has been drafted and forwarded to the Government.

that so important a matter should be neglected. The season of navigation on the St. Lawrence is little over six months in length, and of that six months not even a day, much less a couple of weeks should be wasted. It is the business of the Government to attend to these things, but it is to be presumed that it has been so earnestly engrossed in the task of hanging on to office that it has had no time to give to the performance of purely routine duties. As usual it has been kept informed as to the requirements of Montreal and the country at large, and as usual, where Montreal is concerned, it has paid no attention to the requests of the business men of the metropolis. It is to be hoped that the shaking up which it has received at the hands of the Corn Exchange will have the effect desired, and that it will see that the Welland Canal is opened in time to save a fortnight's business which is at present gravely menaced.

* * * * * * * *

It seems hard to explain the attitude of the Dominion Government towards the interests of Montreal except upon the basis of a wilful desire to neglect them. In the failure to provide for the opening of the Welland Canal this year at the date at which the canal has been usually opened in former years, the Government has done itself a great injury among the business men of the city. It looks very much as if the Government was in search of ways to get itself disliked in Montreal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I felt it my duty to bring this important question before the committee, and before the Minister of Railways and Canals. I do not reproach him, it may not be his fault, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that business has been bad enough in the city of Montreal for a long time past, and our shipping merchants, like Mr. Thompson, the McLellan Company, and others, have difficulty in getting their grain down to the port of Montreal through the neglect of the Government in opening the Welland Canal. The Government should have done everything possible to keep that canal open in order that the shippers of grain might be able to get their cargoes down to Montreal. Now, it would be a very unfortunate thing if these steamers, two for Reaford, three or four for Torrance, and some for the Allan lines, were unable to get grain for cargoes at the opening of navigation. Freight for grain is very low. They cannot take cattle at a profit, because people shipping cattle over to Great Britain just now, find it a losing business. And besides hundreds of workingmen will be kept out of employment for over ten or twelve days.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the question.

Mr. McSHANE. I do not want any lessons on questions of order. I know them better than you do.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that there is no question of this kind now before the committee.

Mr. McSHANE. I understand the people of the city of Montreal——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the question.

Mr. McSHANE. I desire to speak to the question. But I desire to say this——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I repeat that the hon. gentleman is speaking to a question which is not before the committee. There is no such question before the committee, and he is not in order.

River St. Lawrence Ship Channel......... $20,000

Mr. McSHANE. Do I understand that I am not allowed to speak for the shipping trade of Montreal when the question of canals is up ? Do I understand you, Mr. Chairman, to rule that I am out of order in speaking on that important question ? The people of Montreal have for a long time had no representative to speak here.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McSHANE. You may cry me down if you choose, and you may say "oh, oh," if you choose, and it shows very little common-sense when representatives of the people are standing here trying to do what they can. The Finance Minister may laugh, but he may not laugh before Parliament closes. He shows a dislike to my nationality and my race, not only in this city, but in the Dominion. No insinuation or sneer made by the Finance Minister will put me down. I will not be bullied or censured by the Finance Minister. When he does that, he lowers his position as Finance Minister of this great Dominion, and I tell him that my position here is as good as his, and that I am not ashamed of the people I represent. I assure the committee that my character and career will bear investigation here, and the people of Montreal have sent me here as their representative. Last night I was attacked by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McSHANE. They mistook their man.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McSHANE. I am in order when I stand here and do what I can for the people who have sent me here. I am not afraid of the sneers and jeers of the Finance Minister, and I tell him the day will come when he will be told by the people I represent that he made a decided mistake. In the meantime, let me go on. I am sorry I am so frequently interrupted by Ministers. Do I hurt them so much ? Some of the newspapers have attacked me for twenty-five years, and the people of Montreal cannot think I am all they say or I would not be here. What have I done that the Finance Minister should lower himself by attempting to stop me voicing the sentiments of the working people, the merchants, the commerce and the shipping trade of Montreal. I am not ashamed to do what is right; hon. members may attempt to frown me down, but they will not succeed. I live and will live, and while living I intend to do my duty, and that is all I want to do. I will now continue my remarks on the Welland Canal. I appeal to the Government to attend to this matter for the sake of business. Business has been very bad. I do not blame the Minister of Railways and Canals, but I hope the Government will do what they can to endeavour to have the Welland Canal opened as soon as possible, in order that our merchants and ship-owners will be able to do the best they can with their business. That was the only reason I brought the question up. I think I have done my duty, and I would be recreant to the Board of Trade and Corn Exchange, and the people of Montreal, if I did not do so.

Mr. HAGGART. There was no intention to interrupt the hon. gentleman or prevent him making his speech. If the hon. gentleman had waited quietly, he would have been satisfied that there was nothing before the Chair at that time to which his remarks would have reference, and on the next item he would have the opportunity of making his remarks. In regard to the first charge made by the hon. gentleman that I made no answer to the request of gentlemen who telegraphed me in respect to the opening of the canal, I may say that I handed the telegram to my deputy, and he afterwards told me he answered every one of them. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries got similar telegrams, and he answered them. In regard to the Welland Canal, on account of the lock repairs necessary this winter, the opening may be a few days later than usual, but I expect it will be open before 1st of May, which will be in plenty of time for vessels passing through that canal and down the St. Lawrence. I telegraphed the engineering superintendent of the Welland Canal to ascertain if the opening of the canal could not be hurried, and I also telegraphed the engineer in charge of the St. Lawrence Canals asking him what would be the first day it was possible to have the canals open in order that boats might go through.

Mr. GIBSON. Are they working night and day?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. The Welland Canal will be opened about the 27th inst., as soon as the St. Lawrence Canals will be available for traffic, because the deputy informs me that those canals cannot be opened before May 1st, which is as soon as any boat could go down. Everything has been done by the department to hurry the opening of the canals in order to facilitate business and meet the representations not only of the Board of Trade, but of the several gentlemen who telegraphed me. I feel keenly the charge made in the newspapers that I received communications on the subject and had not attended to them. I instructed my engineers on the subject, and those communications were answered. I made inquiries at once. I hurried the work and ordered it to be carried out night and day in order that the canal might be opened at the earliest possible moment, and in time for the navigation of the St. Lawrence Canal and river.

Mr. McSHANE. Since I have been in this House no hon. gentleman has treated me with more courtesy and kindness than the Minister of Railways and Canals. The few requests I have made on behalf of the city of Montreal he has granted, if possible. So far as my intercourse with the Minister of Railways is concerned, he has measured out to me a kindness and fair-play which is in striking contrast to the conduct of some hon. gentlemen in the same Cabinet with him. I do not know that I have done any harm to the hon. Minister of Finance, or to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, only to try and do my best for Montreal, and I do not intend to harm them. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has also treated me with that kindness and respect which characterizes him.

River St. Lawrence Ship Channel........ $20,000

Mr. OUIMET. This appropriation was reduced by $20,000 last year, and I expected to make all the economies possible, and to save that sum. But, owing to the unusually low water last summer, the dredges had to work late in the season, and were not sent into winter quarters until the last steamers had left the St. Lawrence. That explains why the hoped-for reduction has not been realized.

Mr. TARTE. Is this $20,000 now due?

Mr. OUIMET. No, but this money is to work the dredges from the commencement of the season to the first of July. This, I may say, is the best time of year for the dredges to work. We intend to dredge at various places where it is necessary in order to make the channel perfectly safe for the increased draft of steamers we have now. It requires 28½ feet of water to make the ship channel 27½ feet clear, at every season of the year.

Mr. TARTE. I suppose the channel has been filling in every year?

Mr. OUIMET. No, our experience is not to that effect.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I wish to invite the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the statement I made two or three years ago. In 1892 or 1893, I suggested to work the Government dredges at the mouth of the River Richelieu. As the hon. Minister of Public Works is aware, that part of the river is of great importance from the standpoint of navigation, and it is not only necessary but of extreme urgency to have this dredging done. As the Government dredges are in their winter quarters at Sorel, remaining there until the 10th or 12th May, I suggested to the hon. Minister, two or three years ago, to have the dredges work at the mouth of the Richelieu River during the time which elapses between the breaking up of the ice, and the moment when those dredges are required elsewhere. The hon. Minister then promised me that he would take the matter into consideration, but I believe that nothing has been done since. We are in the spring season, and owing to the rise of the river, some time will elapse before the dredges are sent to work elsewhere; and that is the reason why I press again my demand upon the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works, in the hope that he will accede to it.

Compassionate allowance to the following sufferers by the accident on I. C. Ry. at Lévis: Mrs. S. Godbout, $200; Albert Coffin and family, $500; Mrs. Jenny Granville, $100 .... $800

Mr. HAGGART. On the 18th June, 1890, an accident occurred on the Intercolonial Railway near Lévis, and a number of persons were injured. Some of them brought claims against the Government, and judgment was given against them. Last session a compassionate appropriation of $12,000 was made, and that has been mostly distributed. The following persons, however, have received nothing:—Mrs. S. Godbout, Albert Coffin and family, and Mrs. Jennie Granville.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I know about that claim of the Coffin family, and the amount which the Minister suggests here is ridiculously small. Mr. Coffin got very seriously injured, either his arms or his legs were broken, I forget which, and he was many weeks laid up. His wife was also seriously injured, and some of the children had bones broken. There is not an arbitrator in the world that would venture to offer them such a small sum as this.

I am aware that the hon. gentleman paid their board for the four or five weeks during which they were recovering from the injuries they received, and I suppose the doctors bills were paid too. But the man was unable to do any work for many months after he left there. I think it was six months before he was able to do a stroke of work. Either his two legs or his two arms were broken. Last year I submitted to the Minister their claim, which I think was $2,000, and it did not seem to me to be an excessive amount. I certainly think that $500 is too small. The man is not able to bring a suit against the Government; he is too poor for that.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman wrote me a letter enclosing their claim. I wrote to Mr. Pottinger, and asked him to state exactly what they were entitled to, and I was guided entirely by his report. If the hon. gentleman wishes, I may make further inquiries on the subject, and perhaps add a supplementary amount.

Mr. GIBSON. It would be a pity to deprive them of the $500 at present. If there is more to be granted, perhaps it can be brought down later.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understood the Minister to say that some of the parties had brought suits and failed. I suppose that was on the ground that they were torts and not contracts, and that therefore they could not succeed against the Crown.

Mr. HAGGART. The others brought actions, and I believe they would have succeeded against any other party than the Crown; and for that reason the judge recommended that the Crown should pay them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think myself that the law should be amended in that regard. In the Australian Colonies, where the Government undertake to run railways and to manage public works as ordinary carriers, they have legislated so as to make the Crown responsible in cases of tort exactly as in cases of contract; but here that has not been done. I know that in Prince Edward Island a few years ago, action was brought against the Government, and the parties failed just on the ground I mention. Either the legislation should be amended so as to give these parties the right of action, or all these matters should be open to arbitration, so as to give equitable relief to the parties, just as if the Crown were made liable.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Did the hon. gentleman say that the action was brought in the Exchequer Court?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Because if the judge of that court has expressed the view in some cases that the Government were not liable, he has distinctly held in two cases that in the last consolidation of the statutes the liability of the Government is changed, and that now the Crown is liable for negligence.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not suppose there was any negligence proved in this case. However, the court recommended that an amount should be granted to them, although they had no legal claim.

Cornwall Canal—Repairs, old locks, 15 and 17 (break of June and July, 1895).. $11,500

Mr. HAGGART. That is to pay for repairs to a break in these locks by the steamer "Ocean" and a barque. Seven lock gates were carried away.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the work never been paid for?

Mr. HAGGART. No, it has not been paid for yet.

Mr. GIBSON. Who did this work ?

Mr. HAGGART. Davis & Son.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Government charge the amount of damage to this steamer ?

Mr. HAGGART. The amount has been assessed, and I think the steamer has been seized.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was this work done under contract ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

St. John Custom House—Amount due W. H. Thorne for Interest on Account of Goods supplied $381 36

Mr. OUIMET. The appropriation ran short, and Mr. Thorne had to wait over a year for his payments, and we pay interest after the three months allowed for credit.

Mr. BOWERS. I would suppose that the immense dealings which he had with the Government would have prevented his charging any interest.

Mr. OUIMET. The three months' credit was allowed, and it was only after that that interest was charged.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Have the Government allowed interest on any other accounts for supplies ?

Mr. OUIMET. Whenever there was unreasonable delay it was allowed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that this is wholly unknown. I do not remember in the whole scope of my experience having seen a claim for interest on account of goods supplied. I think this ought to stand over. I never knew such a claim to be allowed by any department before.

Mr DAVIES (P.E.I.) How long has it been due ?

Mr. OUIMET. Over a year.

Mr. FOSTER. There are special circumstances in this case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that from Confederation down to the present time the hon. gentleman can show a single instance of an item of this character appearing in the estimates before.

Mr. OUIMET. At the top of the next page there is another item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So much the worse. It shows how these things will grow. There is not the slightest doubt that the Government pay amply for all that they get, and quite enough to allow the tradesmen who supply them to go unpaid for a few months or even for a year without charging interest. In the case of private parties, it is extremely rare, as hon. gentleman know, for interest to be allowed. The rule is the other way, discount on cash payment being allowed. If this is allowed, many other similar claims will be made.

Mr. FOSTER. I did have a very clear idea of the transaction, but as it is some time ago, my recollection of the details is not so perfect. But let us see what there is in the case. The department was at work with reference to the Customs House, and there came a time when they had no money. But the work was let and the contractor was going on. That was about the beginning of the year. I do not know whether the failure of the money was due to an insufficient estimate or wrong calculation. However, about the beginning of the calendar year, the money for carrying on the work ran out. But the work was in a position to go on, and if it went on without a break it could be done much more cheaply than if the contractors had to knock off for about six months and wait until the beginning of the fiscal year. I talked it over with the Minister, and I advised him, if he could get the men to go on with the work and could get the supplies, to go on, with the understanding that when the money was voted on the 1st of July or about that time they would get their pay. Rather than stop the work, that was done. The workmen went on with the work and the supplies were furnished. The supplies in this instance were given not with the idea that they were not to be paid for on a cash basis. The work went on, on this basis, but another error crept in by which the money was not voted sufficient for the next year, and consequently, the supplier was out the return for what he had sold to the department on a cash basis not only for the remaining months of that years, but also for the whole of the succeeding year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is through bad estimating. Who is responsible ?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot help that. We must look at this not from a point of view. of the man who made the estimates, but from the point of view of the man who supplied the material thinking he was selling upon a cash basis but who has been kept out of his money for a year and six months.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He sold on time.

Mr. FOSTER. Three months' time, perhaps—practically a cash basis.

Mr. OUIMET. I may be allowed to add to what the Minister of Finance has mentioned that the arrangements made enabled the department to occupy the building a year sooner than we could have done had we been obliged to wait to get the cash voted. That has saved $3,000 of rent. Moreover there was a special agreement in this case and I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a point I had omitted to mention. Other premises were rented during this building was being put in a state of repair. It had been burned down. Unless the department could get in by the 1st of May they would have to pay rent for the Pugsley building, which they then occupied for another year. I am as much against paying interest on these claims as any one can well be, unless there is good reason for paying it. But in this case, I think it is perfectly right.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the hon. Minister give us the price he paid per pound for this copper ?

Mr. OUIMET. I cannot give that at the moment.

Mr. GIBSON. Then we are hardly in a position to judge of the merits of this case.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, let it stand until to-morrow.

Mr. OUIMET. My impression is that we got the copper at a very low figure. It had been imported for the contractor for the roof, and the contractor having failed in carrying out his contract, we succeeded in getting it at a very small advance on the cost price. So I am confident that the bargain was really a very good one. But I will give the exact figure to-morrow.

Mr. GIBSON. Before the item is allowed to stand over I would like to say that last year when this custom-house at St. John was up for discussion a great many objections were raised to the extravagant prices paid for the various items of construction, and it was pointed out to the Minister that the greater part of the work was to be done by the day and the material supplied by the Government and that if ordinary care and economy had been exercised in the purchase of material, there was no need to pay any extras, but that everything had been ordered at fabulous prices.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no, no.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes ; I remember the case distinctly because we spent a whole day discussing this very building. And I will remind the hon. Minister of one circumstance which will recall the case to his memory. He said I was taking a great deal of interest because I was preparing to take his position, and I told him that I was not anxious for the job.

Mr. OUIMET. I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman was not offended by that reference to his political bright prospects.

Mr. GIBSON. Not at all. If ordinary care had been taken at that time, the estimate given by the engineer would have covered the expenditure. But there was no reduction as to prices. Favoured contractors in the city were allowed to supply bricks, lumber and material of all kinds at fancy prices.

I think the papers will show, when they are brought down, that this gentleman had sufficient profit to have allowed the Government to take over this coffer without making a claim for interest. Now, the Minister of Finance says he is as much opposed to granting interest on back due payments as any one in the House. This is the first time since I have been in the House that a claim of this time has come up, and in granting it you are establishing a precedent under which other claims will come in from other contractors who have done work for the last ten or fifteen years. Many of these claims, perhaps, have been set aside by the Government, not because they did not intend to pay them at all, but because they wanted to pay them at a more convenient season, when the elections were coming on. Now, if these claims are allowed, these men can, afterwards come back upon the Government and say : You owed us, as a firm, $10,000 five years ago, and now that you have acknowledged that our claim is just, we want the interest on that $10,000 for five years. I shall be glad to have the explanations of the Minister to-morrow with reference to the price paid this firm.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The excess in the cost of the building over the estimate did not depend on the cost of the material, but arose from the necessity of demolishing more of the masonry than they thought at first would be necessary. The architects had made a mistake in ascertaining the exact amount of damage that had been done to the walls by fire.

Mr. GIBSON. I said that I was aware that the work had been done under the estimate. I rather wished to pay the engineer a compliment. I thought if care had been taken by the Government in purchasing the material that went into this building, the work would have been done under the engineer's estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. Let the item stand.

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary......... $8,000

Mr. OUIMET The amount voted last session was $5,000. As a matter of fact, the whole work of the penitentiary would have had to be stopped when the vote ran out, and it was thought better to let the work go on. This is to pay for the material, stone, sand, limestone, and other materials and plant that were necessary for the boundary wall that the convicts were building.

Mr. TARTE. Where is the stone bought?

Mr. OUIMET. The stone is taken out of a quarry, two or three miles away from the penitentiary.

Mr. TARTE. A quarry belonging to the Government ?

Mr. OUIMET. A part of it used to be taken from the quarry bought by the Government, but I think it has been exhausted for the last two years. It is now taken from several places.

Mr. TARTE. To whom was that money paid ?

Mr. OUIMET. It has not been paid yet. There is an amount for 35,800 cubic feet of limestone, in blocks, supplied by C. Bastien, at 16½ cents per cubic foot.

Mr. TARTE. If I remember right, there was a quarry bought by the Government a few years ago, and stone has been taken from that quarry. Now, I think the Government has ceased taking stone from that quarry.

Mr. OUIMET. That was five or six years ago. It was more expensive.

Mr. TARTE. What was the price paid for that quarry.

Mr. OUIMET. I do not know, it is a long time ago. It was bought in 1873-74.

Mr. TARTE. This is a peculiar case, indeed. You bought and paid for a quarry, and now you are buying stone elsewhere.

Mr. OUIMET. The property that was bought containing the quarry is still in the possession of the penitentiary, and is worked as a farm by convict labour. I do not think we paid much more than it was worth as farm land.

Mr. TARTE. Can the hon. gentleman tell me if Mr. Bastien uses the work of the convicts to get out the stones that he is supplying the Government ?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. TARTE. Is my hon. friend sure about that ?

Mr. OUIMET. I am positive.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What about the Montreal Dominion public buildings, $8,000?

Mr. OUIMET. This is a work that has not been paid for this year, the most of it being improvements in the post office building. That post office building had become insufficient for the requirements of the service, and we had either to build another one, or to fix this one. The building has four stories and it was decided to move the inspectors' offices and customs office on the third floor. On the second floor there are the registered letters, and the savings bank offices, and also the offices of the postmaster and other members of the staff. We had to build an elevator, and to fit up the whole office, so that now the building is certainly sufficient as a post office for the next twenty years. We had a vote last year, and it was insufficient.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is all expended ?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is a very extraordinary proceeding. We had last evening a discussion of an expenditure of upwards of $2,000,000 without the sanction of Parliament, and here the hon. gentleman says that $16,000 have been expended, and they now ask us for an appropriation, after the work is done.

Mr. OUIMET. In this particular instance the whole matter was before Parliament, and it was decided to repair the building in a certain way. The expenditure was properly sanctioned although a sufficient sum was not asked for at the time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I call attention to the fact that in England in similar cases there is no further expenditure without a vote.

Winnipeg Military Buildings—To pay W. C. Reamen, administrator of the estate of the late D. N. McDonald, the amount of his contract for heating barracks and mess-rooms at Fort Osborne, with hot water	$3,200

Mr. OUIMET. This balance was settled long ago, but a dispute arose as to the parties to whom payment should be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have been informed by some parties residing there that the hot water heating at Fort Osborne has not been successful.

Mr. OUIMET. My deputy has not received any complaint on that score. After the building is completed, it goes out of our hands.

Mr. DALY. I have never heard any complaints.

Victoria Post Office	$20,000

Mr. OUIMET. This post office was commenced last year. The first vote was taken two years ago. It is being built by contract.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Government had a site there before, and expended $18,000 in making a cellar below the proposed building. What has become of the site and the cellar ?

Mr. OUIMET. The excavation was there when we bought the site. We have used it to some extent, and we consider we made a good bargain.

Public Buildings, Ottawa, including ventilation and lighting—Repairs, materials, furniture, &c	$10,000
Rideau Hall, including grounds—Renewals, improvements, repairs, furniture and maintenance	4,000
Gas and electric light—Public Buildings, Ottawa	5,000
Lighting Dominion Public Buildings....	6,500
Rents Dominion Public Buildings	2,500
Telephone service—Public Buildings, Ottawa—Additional connections..........	350

Water Dominion Public Buildings—To provide for payment of arrears due to Quebec City Corporation for water supplied, 1893 to 1895	2,312

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to call attention to the Montreal post office. I have it on the best authority, and I can prove it before a committee of this House, that there is in the employment of the Government a clerk in the Montreal post office who is a public contractor. The firm is known as Madden & Fréchette. They take public contracts, although one of them is a clerk in the Montreal post office. The Minister may shake his head, but I am prepared to prove it, and also that this individual was drawing pay as clerk in the post office and at the same time taking public contracts and attending to them.

Mr. OUIMET. What is his name ?

Mr. McMULLEN. He is a member of the firm of Madden & Fréchette. That firm is doing public contracting, and yet he is drawing pay as a clerk at the same time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What is his name ?

Mr. McMULLEN. The firm is Madden & Fréchette. They hold contracts now, and one of the firm, I repeat, is a clerk in the Montreal post office. If the Minister is prepared to deny it, I am prepared to prove it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I say he is engaged in public contracts, and he does the clerical part of the work in the Montreal post office, and at the same time he is drawing salary as an official. He does the work in the post office as a member of that contracting firm, and he is drawing his pay as a clerk in the service of this Dominion at the same time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have not heard of any clerk in the post office being a contractor, but I will certainly look into the matter. If the facts are as stated by the hon. gentleman, I will prevent him using the post office for his contracting business.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not charge that the Postmaster General is aware of the matter, but such is the case and should not be tolerated.

Harbours and Rivers, Maritime Provinces Generally	$5,000

Mr. BORDEN. Will the Minister state where this money has been expended ?

Mr. OUIMET. It will be expended where it is most needed, and on the report of our engineers.

Mr. BORDEN. Surely the Minister must have some statement as to what is going to be done with this $5,000. This is a Supplementary Estimate and the works must have been completed, or are under construction now.

Mr. OUIMET. All these repairs are done wherever they are most necessary. All these works have reached a time of life when it is very difficult to keep them in repair, and if all the money needed was voted by Parliament to keep them in an efficient state, it would amount to several millions of dollars.

Mr. BORDEN. I am not objecting to the vote but the committee ought to know where the money is going to be expended. I know that there are a great many breakwaters requiring repairs, and several of them in my own county, and I would like to know how much of this vote is going to be expended in that part of the country.

Mr. OUIMET. I will get the details from my engineer and give it to the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Owen Sound Harbour	$1,204

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand there is a great deal of difficulty in keeping Owen Sound Harbour open at present, and that it silts there rapidly.

Mr. OUIMET. The water on Lake Huron has lowered three feet within the last two years, and a good deal of dredging is required in order to give twenty feet, so as to give accommodation to the large boats plying on the lakes. I was informed yesterday that the boats of the Canadian Pacific Railway could not turn at their wharf when loaded, and dredging is absolutely needed now.

Mr. McMULLEN. The lowering of the water in the lakes is becoming a serious matter. Have the Government taken any steps to ascertain as to what the result of the Chicago Canal will be ?

Mr. FOSTER. Surely on a simple item like this we need not at this hour of the session go into the history of that matter.

Mr. OUIMET. The subject has not escaped the attention of the Government. The Department of Railways and Canals has instructed one of their engineers to act as a commissioner with two or three American engineers to investigate that question.

Mr. McGREGOR. The water will get higher with the opening of spring.

Navigation Kootenay Rapids, B. C.	$4,000

Mr. OUIMET. A good deal of traffic has developed lately on the Kootenay River between Revelstoke and the Mines and the Kootenay rapids are an obstacle to the navigation on that river. Work has already been done, but navigation is still interrupted for two or three months in the year. This work will facilitate the navigation of the rapids on that route which is the natural outlet for the ore, and also for carrying in supplies to the mines.

Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island	$ 8,000
Dredging Quebec and Ontario	10,000
Dredge vessels—Repairs	3,000

Mr. FORBES. Has this money been spent or is it meant to be spent this year ?

Mr. OUIMET. It is meant to be spent until the 1st of July. The expenditure has not yet been made. It is to be made at Campbellton, Richibucto, Fouchu Harbour, St. John River and Charlottetown Harbour.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where is the dredging going to be done at Charlottetown ?

Mr. OUIMET. In front of the wharfs—three or four of them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There can be no dredging in front of the wharfs ; there may be some at the side of the wharfs. I want to know which of the wharfs you are going to dredge. Are you going to dredge at the railway wharf at the east end, or at some of the private wharfs ?

Mr. OUIMET. I will give the hon. gentleman a list of the places before concurrence.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Two Ministers in succession have promised to remove the obstructions in the Sydenham River. I want to know whether these obstructions which are practically impeding navigation at the present time, although the water is unusually high, are to be removed out of this appropriation.

Mr. OUIMET. I think I told the hon. gentleman the other day that I intended to do it, and I hope to keep my promise.

Mr. GIBSON. I want to ask the Minister if it is the intention of the Government to do some dredging in the Burlington Canal. I had a letter from a gentleman who delivers a great deal of coal from Cleveland, and he says that the depth of water in the Burlington Canal has decreased to eleven feet. This is a serious matter, because that canal forms an entrance to Hamilton.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is a Government dredge at Amherstburg, and I want to ask the Minister whether it is his intention to send that dredge to the River Thames to remove a bar there. It is very important that that should be done, and the dredge could do it in a very short time.

Mr. OUIMET. Several gentlemen from Chatham have made representations to that effect.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, I understand so. They have been making representations for the last ten years.

Swing bridge over the Burlington Canal. $15,000

Mr. GIBSON. Who has been awarded the contract for this work ?

Mr. OUIMET. The Dominion Bridge Company for the iron-work and F. Webb for the masonry.

Mr. GIBSON. Does this include the substructure and the superstructure ?

Mr. OUIMET. No, it will cost $37,000 altogether.

Mr. GIBSON. Was the Dominion Bridge Company the lowest tenderer ?

Mr. OUIMET. The Canadian Bridge Company was lower by $200, but the contract was given to the Dominion Bridge Company as being in a better position to do the work at once. The Canadian Bridge Company did not agree to do the work within the time specified. The Dominion Bridge Company have agreed to reduce their price by $200.

Mr. GIBSON. And the bridge is not delivered yet ?

Mr. OUIMET. Because the time has not expired yet. The whole bridge will be complete and ready to be operated on the 1st of July.

Mr. GIBSON. A job that was started last October or November. It has taken eight months to do a work which should have been done in the same number of weeks.

Mr. OUIMET. I will bring down the Order in Council in which all the reasons are set forth. If the work is delayed, it is on account of difficulties that arose with the club which wanted another kind of bridge because this was going to interfere with their club building. That took a long time to settle.

Mr. GIBSON. It would have only been fair to the committee to have had this information before it so that the hon. gentleman could answer questions intelligently. I happen to know a little about the locality, and the work, and I am sure that it will interfere very materially with the owners of the club. I am aware that they sent down a deputation after the Government to move the club-house at the Government expense, and the Government refused. If the hon. Minister had been fair to the committee he would have had this information before it.

For Fortnightly Steam Communication between Liverpool, G.B., and St. John, N.B., from November, 1895, to April, 1896, 10 round trips $25,000

Mr. IVES. The contract contains the clause that the payment of subsidies is subject to its being approved by vote of Parliament of Canada, and if it at any time no further sum be voted, the contract shall become void, and no indemnity due the parties. We have not infringed upon the authority of Parliament in this matter. The arrangement was proposed by the Beaver Line Steamship Company, who undertook to make the experiment of shipping Canadian export from the city of St. John during the past winter. The experiment proved largely successful. One clause required a very large portion of the cargo to be from western Ontario and Quebec, and that clause has been complied with. Another clause requires rates as low as those from any port in the United States, and that also has been complied with.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Had you parliamentary authority to enter into such contract.

Mr. IVES. No, but I reserved to Parliament the right to reject the contract, in which case no subsidy or damages would be payable. If we had waited until the 15th January, the experiment could not have been made this winter at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You should have brought it up last session. We are getting into the habit of doing everything by Orders in Council, and ignoring Parliament.

Amount required for Ocean Mail Service between Great Britain and Canada to July 8th, 1895	$6,083 34

Mr. IVES. This is practically a revote, caused by the fact that the vote was for the Allan Company, and the Government have employed some steamers of the Dominion Line, by consent of the Allans, to perform part of the service.

For Steam Service between Canada, France and Belgium to June 30, 1896.	$8,333 34

Mr. IVES. This is in anticipation of authority being granted to enter into arrangements with the direct line. This is a vote for the remainder of the fiscal year.

For Steam Service between St. John and Digby	$6,250

Mr. IVES. The Government have, with the authority of Parliament entered into a compact with a steamship company to perform that service, and, by arrangement, part of it has been transferred to the Dominion Atlantic Railway. But we have no authority to pay anything to that company, therefore we ask this vote. There will be a sufficient lapse in the vote or the steamship company to make up the amount.

Mr. BORDEN. Last year $12,500 was voted for a mail service between St. John, Digby and Annapolis. I find that in these Estimates Annapolis is dropped out.

Mr. FOSTER. The mails go to Annapolis by rail.

Mr. BORDEN. In that connection I would like to ask the Minister why is it that this service does not appear in the main Estimates. Is it not intended to continue the service next year ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes ; there would have been an item in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. IVES. I sent an item for insertion in the Supplementary Estimates, but there is no prospect of it passing.

Mr. BORDEN. Was it for the same amount ?

Mr. IVES. I proposed a better service at a slightly increased amount, but deducted $1,000 for what the Postmaster General pays for the postal service between Digby and Annapolis.

Mr. BORDEN. There is a magnificant boat on that line now.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the one that is performing this contract.

Mr. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman say what amount was to have gone into the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. IVES. I have not been to the Government with the Estimates yet.

Repairs to Str. "Quadra," owing to casualty on Fulford Reef	$12,000

Mr. GIBSON. How much was this vessel worth in the first place ? This seems a large sum of money to be paid for repairs for a vessel that is shipwrecked.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The amount is very considerable. I was surprised at it myself. The actual repairs only cost about $5,000 under contract. The balance was spent in removing her from the rocks.

Mr. GIBSON. Everything comes high in British Columbia.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes ; but we did the best we could. We held an inquiry to ascertain whether there was any fault to be found with the captain. The inquiry exonerated him, but a nominal penalty was imposed.

To provide for additional amount in connection with the mail service	$2,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If it was earlier I would give my views on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. Give them next year when Parliament is not moribund.

To provide for the payments of Collector of Customs for services in connection with the issuing of fishing licenses to United States vessels during season 1895	$278 55

Mr. FORBES. In connection with these fisheries items, I wish to make a statement with regard to one particular matter, the pounding of lobsters. What I wish to get from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a definite statement of his policy with reference to that matter. I want to lay before the Minister the fact that his officers on the south shore of Nova Scotia have been putting up bills reading in part as follows :—

> Public notice is hereby directed to the following close season for fish——

And he goes on :

—on the part of the coast extending westward to Cape Canso, westward to the provincial boundary line, it shall be unlawful to fish for, catch, kill, buy, sell, or have in possession any lobsters from the 1st July to 31st December.

Now, I want to point out to the hon. Minister that the Act, as far as I can discover provides that it shall be "unlawful to fish for, catch, kill, buy, sell or have in possession without lawful excuse, any lobsters," and so on. Now, the hon. gentleman's officers have deliberately omitted these words "without lawful excuse" from the notice. Now, the fishermen fear that according to this notice they are likely to be very much hampered in the right to dispose of their property. In the first place they write to the fishery officer Mr. J. R. Kinney the following letter :—

> Dear Sir,—We are thinking of building a pound to keep lobsters in, and, as it will be quite expensive, don't you think we can keep a lot over and ship after the close season under the present law. Or are we obliged to sell within the close season at a loss. Please reply.
> Yours truly,
> JOHN MARDEN.

Mr. Kinney wrote back as follows : —

> As the law is at present, I do not see why any fish caught legally may not be kept over as long as the owner sees fit.
> J. R. KINNEY,
> Inspector.

That was in September, 1893. In order that they might have an official confirmation, the fishermen met and decided to write to the Minister himself, then Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper. Mr. Marden, on behalf of the fishermen of the south shore, wrote to the Minister, and on 27th July, 1894, the following letter was received from John Hardie, acting Deputy Minister :—

> In reply to your letter of 19th instant, making certain inquiries regarding the possession and export of lobsters during the close season, I am directed to inform you that provided it can be proved the fish were taken out during the open season, there is nothing to prevent them being exported as you describe.

Now, under that authority, the men engaged in that business invested large capital, and undertook to construct these ponds in order that they might hold the fish they had caught during the legitimate season, for the purpose of selling them at a later period when the markets afforded a better price. The Minister can see that there should not be the slightest difference made between fish which are caught within season and packed in barrels or canned in tins and then held for better markets, and fish which are taken and kept in ponds, as long as they are properly kept, and since the Deputy Minister himself says that as long as the fish have been taken out of the water or caught during the open season, there is no reason why that should not be allowed. Now, I want the Minister to tell me whether it will be permitted to fishermen to catch fish within the open season, which begins the 1st July in that part of Nova Scotia, and hold them in these ponds and ship them when they chose. I cannot see that it would interfere with the regulations of the Fishery Department in any way. The Minister might say that it would require his officers to watch and see that the fish are caught in the proper season. Well, that is the duty of his officers to see that they are not caught after season. There is nothing to hinder or prevent these ponds, where the fish are put after having been legally caught, from being inspected and officially closed and marked, so that they may only be opened under the inspector's eye. I say it is not right for the fishermen to be compelled to dispose of all their fish immediately on the first day of July. Last year and the year before, the steamers, with the full knowledge of the department, refused to carry these fish after first of July, although three days was given to the fishermen, and that time was further extended to ten days. It would be impossible for them to dispose of the fish within that time. No care was taken of the mode in which the fish were carried to the various markets where they were sold. I do not see why the Minister should not permit fish to be kept in ponds until November or December. If these fish are allowed to be held in pond during the close season, it will tend very greatly to allow the open season to be shortened. I believe the fishermen would consent to the limitation of the close season to a month or two, say, March, April and May. They could take away January and February from the fishing season, because the fish that are caught after the 1st of July could be disposed of during January and February following, and would bring a much better price to the fishermen. I ask the Minister to observe that if fish could be sold after the close season, it would tend to reduce the catch and preserve the fish. If a fisherman can be allowed to hold the fish, he would not be compelled to slaughter them in a falling market. The market is full in July and August with the fish coming from other quarters. I think the Minister has no right to interfere with the profits of the fishermen, he has no right to compel them to sacrifice their property at a slaughter price. I would like the Minister to give me a short statement of what arrangement he expects to make during this coming season. If he cannot make a statement now, the fishermen will have no security for their shipments of this season's catch.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is quite correct in taking a practical view of the difficulty that exists on account of keeping the close seasons under which it may be impossible to export fish caught, perhaps, the night before. The department considers that a reasonable time should be given to export fish to get them off their hands, but I have not been influenced by any argument I have heard that the department should recognize the right of the fishermen to make these ponds, and catch lobsters and put them in the ponds, and sell them after the close season.

Mr. McGREGOR. May I ask if the Minister has made any change in the Detroit River, in the regulations with reference to catching fish ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes ; in the Detroit River, the St. Clair River, and Lake St. Clair, in view of the fact that negotiations are going on with the United States authorities. On account of the narrowness of these waters, we have withdrawn restrictions, pending a final decision with the United States.

Mr. GIBSON. Does that apply to the Niagara River ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. ALLAN. Is it the intention of the department to allow fish to be caught in December ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The regulations have been relaxed so as to allow fishing to be nearly as free on the one side as on the other.

Mr. ALLAN. Last year, when it was expected that the elections would be held, I believe a prominent citizen of Essex County had a communication from the Minister, which was read to the county council, promising the fishermen on our side of the lake that they would have the same privilege as the American fishermen, and the county council passed a vote of thanks to the hon. gentleman. Now, I would like to ask him if it is the intention of the Government to relax the regulations so as to permit fishing in the month of November, the only time that whitefish can be caught in the Detroit River.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think it is likely that is covered by the changes made.

Mr. ALLAN. I did intend to refer at some length to the fishery regulations on the great lakes, but as the time is late, I shall not detain the committee very long. We are entitled to an answer from the Minister as to whether he intends to permit fishing on the Detroit River in November, the only time in the year when fish can be caught.

Mr. COSTIGAN. All these matters are regulated by Orders in Council, and I will bring them down to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLAN. I desire to call the hon. gentleman's attention to one or two matters. I call attention to the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest that the hon. gentleman should come at ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLAN. Yes, if I have the opportunity from 10 to 10.30. This is a very important question to which I invite the attention of the House and the country. I wish to refer to the unreliable character of the fishery statistics. This matter should come up. Special reference has been made in this years' report of the Department of Fisheries to the accuracy of their statistics. In this report, at page 12, it is stated as follows :—

> As the yield of the fisheries for the season closing on the 31st December is not yet available for publication, a few statistical tables have been prepared and form Appendix No. 8.
> The statements show the general extent of the Canadian fisheries ; their yield and value in each province of the Dominion, as well as the capital invested and the number of men engaged in this important industry.
> For the past few years the yield of the fisheries of Canada has exceeded twenty million dollars. Over 70,000 fishermen exploit our seas and inland waters for a livelihood, and over $9,000,000 are now invested in fishing vessels, boats, nets and other implements.

It is stated that our fisheries yield an annual return of about $20,000,000, whereas investigation will show that this statement is grossly exaggerated and that the actual yield is not over one-half that sum. If any one will go over the fishery statistics for Ontario, which are estimated as producing, annually, $1,600,000, he will find they are over estimated threefold, and that the true value is about $500,000. Why does the Minister continue to so value the fisheries ? Herring is put down at about four or five times its value, trout is entered at 10 cents a pound, when the price is 4 cents, and whitefish is entered at 8 cents. That is a sample of the way in which the statistics are made up. I called the attention of the House last session to the extraordinary character of the fishery report. I will now call attention to the report in regard to the lake fisheries. These reports have been very misleading. In order to make a favourable showing and to meet the contentions that the Americans are getting the lion's share of the products of our lake fisheries, the department values the Canadian catch at from three to six times their value and in the same table puts down the Americans at one-third the value, pound for pound, that has been put on Canadian-caught fish, although they are worth more. By this extraordinary method of calculation, they succeed in making a very fair showing for Canada. Taking the year 1889, for example, the department figures that the Canadian catch for that year was within $11,000 of the American. But, instead of only between $10,000 and $11,000, the actual difference applying the same values to American catch of fish as the department has given to the Canadian, the difference for that year is over $3,700,000. In order to put this matter clearly before the House, I will read from the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for 1891, page 50, Roman numerals :

> Another great cause of complaint among the advocates of free fishing is the alleged enormous difference in the catch between United States and Canadian fishermen. They point to the fact that with no restrictions whatever as to the number of fishing apparatus and with no close seasons of any kind, their neighbours stand in a far better position than they do in this respect. In order to set this long debated matter at rest, comparisons have been made with a view of establishing whether these contentions were founded on facts. The recent publication of the last report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries proves the most interesting in this respect, inasmuch as it affords an opportunity of practically testing the matter and once more showing the immense value of the Canadian lake fisheries as compared with those of the other side.

And, Mr. Chairman, in order to set this long-debated matter at rest and to show the immense value of the Canadian lake fisheries, as compared with those on the other side. The department values the Canadian catch in the year 1885, $1,268,551. Total American catch, 1885, $1,813,078, or about 50 per cent more. Whereas there was, in round numbers, twenty-seven million pounds of Canadian fish to seventy-six million pounds of American ; and, using the same values for both, instead of there being a difference of only $600,000 in favour of the American catch, the actual difference for that year is over $2,200,000. These remarkable statements having escaped criticism in 1891, and having, apparently, served its purpose of deceiving the public. The department, in 1893, returned to the same methods, and the report of the Deputy Minister contains the following statement :—

> In the annual report of this department for the year 1891, comparative tables were published showing the variations in the yield and value of the fisheries on both sides of the great lakes. This was done for the purpose of establishing whether the contentions of certain Canadian fishermen that there was an enormous difference in favour of the United States, were founded on facts or not. These tables comprised the years 1880 and 1885. A recent census bulletin, published by the United States Department of the Interior, affords an opportunity of extending these tables by comparing the returns for the years 1885 and 1889, and drawing the conclusions therefrom.

Then, again, in reference to fish eggs, as an evidence of the depletion of the American fisheries, the following appears in the report of the department :—

> But the depletion of the United States waters has made it impossible, in some cases, for adequate supplies of fish-eggs to be obtained for some of the hatcheries in the United States. Season after season for many years, requests have been made for permission to procure spawn upon the Canadian side of these contiguous waters. Unless, indeed, such supplies, especially of eggs, of whitefish and lake-trout, were obtained from Canadian fishermen, some of the lake-hatcheries in the United States could not continue their operations.
> It has not in every case appeared advisable to officially grant such requests, or sanction the draining of the spawning beds in our waters in order to populate the depleted waters on the other side of the international dividing line. No doubt, the planting of fry on either side must, in the long run, be advantageous to both countries, but it is also beyond doubt that salmoniods all have the same habit of returning, when mature, to the locality where they spent their earliest days as small immature fry. Whitefish and salmon-trout have not been proved to be so rigidly obedient to this law as the sea-salmon, but, belonging as they do to the same great family, they are characterized by common habits. Hence there is every probability that the fry of whitefish and salmon-trout planted on the United States side of the great lakes, even though the eggs were obtained on the Canadian breeding grounds, will continue season after season to return to the American localities, especially at the spawning period.

Here we have given us a proof that our fisheries are in a flourishing condition, and that the American fisheries have become depleted ; the fact that the Americans come over on our side of the lake and buy fish spawn. Well, there is nothing very wonderful in that. The men on the other side of the Detroit River have been for many years buying fish spawn from us, for the simple reason that they can obtain it much cheaper than they could obtain it on their own side of the lake. It costs a very large sum to gather the eggs in the great lakes, and to confirm that statement, I have only to refer to the report of the department. No one will doubt about the quantity of fish in Lake Winnipeg, particularly whitefish, and Mr. Latouche Tupper, in his report, narrates the very great difficulty he experienced in obtaining whitefish eggs. He says :

> I left on September 10th for Grand Marais where I decided again to take ova, although it had not been satisfactory the two previous years. As I was asked to keep down expenditure as low as possible, I did not like going a greater distance than I could help, so decided to try Grand Marais another year. I left five days earlier as I determined to cut my own net stakes. On the 15th the stakes were driven for the first net. I was disappointed in not getting a second net from officer Chadwick of Rat Portage which had been ordered to be sent me—but unfortunately had been sold. I had then to take the only net I could get here, which was old and unable to stand the severe storms we experienced.
> On the 18th, we had both nets set and fishing, on the 25th the fish were coming in nicely, but on the 26th it blew a gale from the north-west which piled the water over our nets taking out some stakes and releasing our fish, the fish had been coming in fully as plentifully as last year. On the 31st we again lifted and found the whitefish coming in. On the 1st October there was another heavy blow which caused us a loss again, and it was necessary to drive three new stakes. On the 7th there was a gale and heavy snow, on the 8th we lifted and found there was not a large increase, on the 14th October we lifted again and got 18 ripe fish, on the 16th 56 fish spawned.

There had been so much storm and our nets had been so damaged and cleaned out of fish that on the 17th we lifted again and only got twelve quarts of eggs.

This clearly shows the difficulty of obtaining fish eggs in the open lakes. I wish to refer to these few points to show the incorrect statements which are put in this report of the Fishery Department. They give statistics in this blue-book, year after year, that are utterly unreliable, and which in some instances are altogether false. Their tables are altogether wrong when they valued 29,000,000 pounds of Canadian fish as equal to 91,000,000 pounds of American fish. Every year that sort of thing has been going on. As an additional proof of the unreliable character of the fishery statistics, I may allude to another matter. Year after year, from 1887 down to 1893, a very large quantity of whitefish, trout, and herring, is recorded as having been caught in the Thames River, whereas, as a matter of fact, not one single pound of this fish was ever caught in that river. Take the year 1888-89 as an example. I find it stated :—

Name of Station.	Kinds of Fish.
	White-fish.	White-fish.	Trout.	Trout.	Herring	Herring.
	Brls.	Lbs	Lbs.	Brls.	Brls.	Lbs.
Thames River..........	127	23,300	54,600	176	750	140,300

These are the false statistics which have been furnished the Canadian people for a great many years. I have pointed out, Sir, that the comparisons made between the catches of fish on the American and Canadian sides are absolutely false. I called attention to the matter last session of Parliament, because I feel strongly that our blue-books should be absolutely correct. We find errors in them—well not errors, because they are no doubt inserted intentionally designed for a purpose—and that purpose I believe is to deceive the Canadian people and keep from them the result of the ruinous fishery policy which has been pursued by this Government in reference to our lake fisheries. As a matter of fact, our Lake Erie fisheries have been fooled away, and the Americans have been catching ten or fifteen fish on Lake Erie, to the one caught by Canadians. If you take the figures supplied by the Department, and compare the respective value of the catches by the fishermen of the two countries, you will find that millions of dollars have been lost by the province of Ontario, and that thousands of men have been deprived of employment on account of their not being able to get licenses to fish in waters where the fish swim from one side to the other. I do not intend going into the question at any very great length at this hour in the morning, but I think we are entitled to an explanation as to why such nonsensical statements are incorporated in the statistics in reference to the value of the catch of fish on each side of the lake. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will give an explanation, I will be satisfied, but if not I will take an opportunity to go into the question some time to-morrow. Surely, Sir, I cannot be accused of taking up the time of this House unnecessarily. I do not pretend to have any special knowledge in this fishery matter, but I have looked into it somewhat, and I can point out errors innumerable in the report circulated by the Government with respect to our lake fisheries. I can not comprehend how a comparison like that can be given year after year, to the people of Canada, and it is full time that we should know whether our blue-books are to continue to be made out in this incorrect way or not.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I hope the hon. gentleman will not think me discourteous, if I say that I would not be able to give satisfactory explanations at this very early hour in the morning.

Mr. ALLAN. Then I will bring the matter before the House to-morrow morning, because I think it is high time we should know why these inaccurate statements are published in the blue-books.

Resolutions reported.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Bill (No. 111) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.55 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Morning Sitting.

THURSDAY, 23rd April, 1896.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 10.30 a.m.

PRAYERS.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MARTIN. I rise to a question of privilege. I am informed by the accountant of the House that it is impossible for members to receive the balance of their indemnity unless they produce a pair. I wish to protest against any such condition. I do not know what the accountant of this House has to do with my voting in this House. Either a member is entitled to receive the balance of his indemnity or he is not. If I am entitled to receive it, I want it. If not, I do not. I know that other hon. members have received the balance of their indemnity, and I do not know why there should be any difference made between one member and another. It does seem to me to be carrying politics a long way to insist on a person furnishing a pair. The question as to how I am going to vote is a matter for myself and my constituents. I am informed that this order was given by you, Mr. Speaker, to the accountant, and I wish to protest most respectfully against any such condition being imposed. I do not wish to be favoured, but to be treated the same as all other members of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not aware of any arrangement of the kind. I have not heard of it, and was not aware that any such proposition was made by any person.

Mr. MARTIN. I went to the accountant's office and asked for my indemnity, and was informed by him that the Speaker had instructed him not to pay until the parties applying furnished a pair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The accountant must have misunderstood the instructions given by me to him. No member is entitled to receive his indemnity until the House is prorogued; but under an arrangement which has prevailed, at all events, ever since I have been a member of Parliament, on the last day of the session it is customary to allow members, on receiving from the whips a memo., initialed by the Speaker, to receive the balance of their indemnity, and no difference has been made with regard to any member. I have not authorized the payment of any member, except according to the practice which has prevailed since I have been Speaker, and no discrimination has been exercised.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am quite aware, Sir, that you have made no discrimination between members, but at the same time it appears to me that my hon. friend's point is quite right, that if any one member is paid his indemnity every other member is entitled to it. Whatever our practice has been it must be revised, and there can be no reasonable ground for refusing my hon. friend the right to draw his indemnity and allowing it to others.

Mr. FOSTER. As a question of principle that is exactly right, but there is the practice which has always prevailed since I have been a member of this House, and it is simply intended for the convenience of members. Of course, now that the hon. member for Winnipeg has taken exception to it on the ground of principle, I suppose it must be abandoned, the convenience of members can no longer be consulted, and no payments can be made until the House is prorogued.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But if payments have been made, it seems to me it is now a question of right if the hon. gentleman wishes to draw his indemnity. We can recognize no pair in this House. It is a very great many years since I have taken a pair because I disapprove of the principle.

Mr. MARTIN. Other members have been paid their indemnity, and if that was in violation of the law it should not have been done. If it is a violation of the law to pay them, it is no more a violation of law to pay me. I protest against the question of pairing and voting in this House being raised in this way. The accountant and officers of the House have nothing to do with my vote, and I consider it a direct insult on the part of the accountant, not personally, of course, but through the orders he has received, to ask me if I wished to vote one way or the other in this House before I could draw my indemnity.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The matter is in a simple shape. It is simply this, that by common consent, the practice has prevailed that on the last day of the session, those members who were initialled by the whip as having paired.

Mr. MARTIN. What have they to do with it ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Just this, that by common consent that practice has prevailed; but the hon. member for Winnipeg having taken exception to it, and the parties having had no right to it, but having had it simply as a matter of convenience, the practice now ends and it cannot be continued.

Mr. MARTIN. If some members have already been paid, the accountant has no right to distinguish between them and others.

Mr. IVES. Some members have been paid under the arrangement which has existed for years, and no exception was made in the case of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPEAKER. I can only point out the practice that has prevailed for the convenience of members, as stated by the hon. leader of the House. If exception is taken to that, I must give the accountant instructions not to pay further sums until the House is prorogued. These payments have been made on the authority of the Speaker himself in each particular case. No general directions had been given to pay, but on the authority of the Speaker, on the last day of the session, for the convenience of members. The practice has prevailed to allow members to be paid on producing a memorandum from the whips, initialled by the Speaker. But of course I shall issue instructions at once to discontinue the practice.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not object to the members being paid ; what I object to is——

Mr. DALY. Sit down.

Mr. MARTIN. I will not sit down. I beg to move the adjournment of the House. I think it is very impertinent for the Minister of the Interior to tell me to sit down. I decline to permit any member of this Government to be so impertinent to me as that. The hon. gentleman has acted in that way in the past.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The word "impertinent" is not parliamentary, of course.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is parliamentary for the Minister of the Interior to order me to sit down ?

Mr. DALY. I did not order you to sit down. I would not demean myself to be impertinent to you.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, what I say is that I have not objected to the arrangement for paying members their indemnity on the last day before prorogation. What I do object to is the condition attached to that arrangement, that we should furnish a pair, which is something with which the officials of this House have nothing to do. Either this order to pay the members on the last day before prorogation, is legal or it is not. If it is legal, then there is no reason for attaching to it the improper condition which I am objecting to, and that condition should be withdrawn,—not the whole order, because that would not be fair to those who desire to receive their whole indemnity and get away, as between them and those who have already received their indemnity. Personally I do not care one way or the other ; but I do object to the accountant of this House asking me how I am going to vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I may just say that it will be a great relief to the chief whip of the Opposition and to myself if the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) is complied with. For several years this arrangement has been in existence. The chief whip of the Opposition and myself generally select the members who live at great distances from the capital to make pairs ; and it is a great convenience to members to be able to draw their money a few hours in advance of prorogation, settle their bills, and get away. This has been done chiefly for the convenience of members, but it gives the whips a great deal to do. I have not been able to read my letters this morning, having to sign pairs which the chief whip of the Opposition and myself have made, so that the members might get their pay. I hope, in the interest of the chief whip of the Opposition and myself, that the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg will be complied with.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose, then, that I am to say to the House that it is not upon the pairing of members that the accountant is to pay, but on the certification of the Speaker himself. If, as I understand, the House objects to the arrangement that has prevailed, I shall give instructions to the accountant to pay no more until after the prorogation.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the hon. member for Winnipeg withdraw his objection ?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not withdraw my objection.

Mr. TAYLOR. That settles it.

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST.

Mr. FOSTER moved third reading of Bill (No. 107) respecting certain debentures of the Montreal Turnpike Trust held by the Government of Canada.

Mr. McSHANE. I desire to ask a question before that Bill passes. I understand that the Government have made an arrangement with the bondholders of the Turnpike Trust to buy a debt of $400,000 for $200,000 ; and I desire to ask whether, after that bargain is carried out, the bondholders or the Government will own the road ?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the explanations were made pretty fully the other night ; my hon. friend may not have been here. The situation is this : A trust that was brought into existence in 1840, and had power to issue bonds, has from time to time issued bonds. A time came when the Government of Canada became possessed of practically all those bonds. The interest upon the bonds had not been paid for from fifteen to sixteen years, and an arrearage had accrued. The bonds bore 6 per cent interest. After carefully thinking it over, the Finance Department came to the conclusion that it would be impossible to administer the trust on the basis of the bonded indebtedness and the arrearages of interest at 6 per cent; and this is an arrangement by which the old bonds are to be replaced by new bonds bearing 3½ per cent. and the surplus is to be devoted to the retirement of the bonds. The Turnpike Trust still remains; and when in the future. 40 or 50 years from now, all the bonds are changed, I do not know exactly what will happen. Whatever is left of the value of the property will, I think, belong to the trust; but the march of civilization, so far as turnpike roads and toll roads are concerned, with the encroachment of other means of travel, notably the electric, will probably solve that question in a natural way.

Mr. McSHANE. I thank the hon. gentleman for the answer, and I hope the time will come very soon——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has already spoken.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 110) respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.—(Mr. Foster.)

OCEAN STEAMSHIP SUBSIDIES.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 106) further to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.

(In the Committee.)

M. EDGAR. There could certainly be no objection to a provision that a contract shall not be entered into in a binding way until Parliament shall meet again, and in order to meet that point, I propose an amendment after the word "year" in line 16 the following words:—

> Provided that such a contract shall not be binding on Canada until it shall have been laid before the House of Commons and shall have been approved by resolution thereof.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I applied twice for the correspondence and was informed that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) had it. But he says he has not got it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the correspondence was shown to the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No.

Mr. IVES. I have the correspondence in my desk. I showed it to the leader of the Opposition yesterday. But the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) was engaged at the time and I could not show it to him. I had not time to get the correspondence copied and so brought the original files. The papers are being copied and will be laid on the Table to-day.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—THE GOODWIN CONTRACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yesterday I was not in my place when a question was asked of the Minister of Justice to which I hoped he would give a more unqualified answer. We discussed the other day the Goodwin contract and the hon. Minister, in closing the debate, rather left the impression on the House, that he was disposed to have the dispute in question referred to the courts.

Mr. DICKEY. I meant to leave that impression.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But the hon. Minister did not say so in terms which left no doubt. He left himself quite open and reserved a discretion which he might exercise. Considering the circumstances, and considering the mass of opinion collected against the payment of the claim and considering the expression of opinion given in this House by legal and other professional gentlemen, engineers and others, I think the House is entitled to a positive assurance that the hon. gentleman will relegate the matter to the courts before paying the money. And I desire to obtain that assurance from him to-day. I have consulted with a number of gentlemen on both sides of the House upon the subject, and the general impression is that assurance should be given. If there is a good claim, let it be decided in the courts and paid, and if not let it not be paid at all. I invite the hon. gentleman to say so.

Mr. DICKEY. I think I have gone as far as I possibly can. The hon. gentleman and the House perfectly well know my own personal feelings. But the hon. gentleman will see that I cannot go further without pledging the office and I cannot pledge the office; I do not know anything about the branch of it. The hon. gentleman certainly can have no doubt whatever about my own personal feelings.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why not make the statement?

Mr. DICKEY. I could not decide that case here. If I decided it according to the majority of opinions that have been expressed in the House, I should say I would refuse the claim altogether and not even allow it to go to the courts. I could not decide the matter in an off-hand way like that. I have spoken very strongly; I have expressed myself very clearly.

Mr. MULOCK. But your wicked partners may overrule you.

Mr. DICKEY. They cannot overrule me, I assure you. I do not see that I can go further than give the House the assurance I have given it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The leader of the Government, or the gentleman in charge of the matter especially, can certainly tell us that under all the circumstances of the case, the Government won't pay unless they are compelled to pay by the courts ; that is all we want. There is a statement that such and such an opinion was expressed that this case must go to the courts if Mr. Goodwin presses his claim, but there are two opinions clearly against him. Now, it is only right, after all that has been said, that there should be no hesitation on the part of the Government in saying that Mr. Goodwin will be left to the courts for a settlement of that kind. Of course, I recognize the fact that the Minister of Justice can only give a legal opinion, but the Government can give a distinct statement as to their intentions. I am sure it has been discussed enough to enable them to make up their minds by this time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only say that I think the hon. gentlemen are very hard to satisfy. The Minister of Justice has indicated that so far as he has had an opportunity to examine the papers, he is disposed to advise a reference to the courts. It is customary for the Government to be guided by the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and I think the hon. gentleman has no right to press for anything further.

Mr. LAURIER. If the statement made by the Minister of Justice was as emphatic as the statement just made by the leader of the House, we might be satisfied.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is as I understand it.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not want to be unfair to the House at all : I want the House to understand in an unqualified way what my position is at the present time. I have expressed my opinion, but I positively decline as a lawyer to state now what opinion I may give when I have had an opportunity of looking thoroughly into the case. I intend to look into it honestly, and I intend to give an honest opinion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no doubt thrown upon that.

Mr. DICKEY. I have no hesitation whatever in saying, as I have already said, what I would decide to do, if I were to decide at this moment, and what my strong views are on that question. But I cannot bind myself to go any further.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman misunderstood me altogether. I did not ask him to bind himself to an opinion one way or the other. He may give an opinion in favour of Mr. Goodwin, or against Mr. Goodwin, and he may modify the opinion already given. I am not asking him to give as his opinion. The papers have been brought down, the case has been discussed, a great many gentlemen have formed a very strong opinion that this claim ought not to be paid, we do not ask him to say that it will not be paid, we ask him to say that in view of all the facts, it will not be paid without a judgment of the court being taken upon it. We do not ask him to express an opinion, but surely this House has a right to say that, under all the circumstances of the case, we shall not separate without an assurance being given to them that this matter will be settled, not by a passing opinion of the Minister of Justice, or by a majority of the Treasury Board, but by the courts of law. If the court shall determine that this is a good claim, well and good. We don't ask for any opinion to be expressed now, nor do we want the Government to be governed by an opinion the hon. gentleman may pass afterwards ; we want this case to go to the courts of law before it is paid, and I do not think that is asking too much.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would point out that the hon. gentlemen has spoken once.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I know I can only speak through the indulgence of the House.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not think any Minister of Justice can go further than I have gone.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I believe the pressure that is attempted to be put upon the Minister of Justice is absolutely without precedent. I think it would be difficult, if at all possible, to find in the British Parliament the law officers of the Crown pressed as the Minister of Justice has been pressed here in regard to what he will do when he is called upon, formally and officially under the statute, to discharge his functions on a future occasion, an occasion which has not arisen, in regard to the advice that he will tender to the Government. This question must come under the statute, according to what has been stated in debate, on the challenge of the Auditor General to the Treasury Board. Under the statute, the Minister of Justice, holding an official position, is called upon to decide at that time, and not now, after that appeal has been prepared and properly brought to his notice, or that reference from the Treasury Board, with the facts as they shall appear, and with the papers as they shall then exist—at that time he will have to discharge his duty, and the responsibility will rest upon him. Hon. gentlemen opposite have in great heat, hon. gentlemen hostile to this Government, every man of them who has criticised this claim, hon. gentlemen anxious to make capital against this Government, have expressed opinions from their seats that the Minister shall come down and tell this House what he will do and what he will recommend after he has had an opportunity for making a review of the situation —it is absolutely, in my opinion, unprecedented. It is ridiculous to ask him to place himself in this position, a position that no Minister of Justice would place himself in, and no Government would yield to it unless they had no business to occupy their positions as a Government. The Minister of Justice has stated in my hearing, at least three times, that he would not bind himself to any course, but that his opinion, so far as it had been affected by the debate, would make him very careful whether he entertained the claim at all: and that one reason why he would not pledge himself to refer the case to the Exchequer Court was that possibly he would find that there were no grounds for this claim to be further urged, and in that event, instead of referring it to the Exchequer Court, he would advise that the claim be not entertained.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The position which the junior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has taken is rather an unusual one. This matter was discussed pretty fully a few days ago, and a great majority of those who spoke upon the subject were of the opinion that this was an invalid claim. They did not concur in the legal opinion expressed by the member for Pictou when acting as Minister of Justice. Well, Sir, you have a carefully reasoned opinion from a former Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson, you have a different opinion from the hon. member for Pictou, and you have from the present Minister of Justice an impression given without careful consideration, an opinion by which he says he would not wish to be bound, and the opinion expressed in the first instance was not the opinion expressed by the member for Pictou. Now, this is a claim upon the treasury of Canada, it is a claim that this House must assume responsibility for: and looking at the different opinions that have been expressed by the legal advisers of the Government, the law officers of the Crown, the House takes this position, that this ought not to be paid unless upon a judgment of the Exchequer Court. Now, that is a simple proposition. The House has before it the fact that the law officers of the Crown before whom this subject has come, do not agree, do not concur in opinion, and that being so, the House says that we do not want this to be paid upon the opinion of the Minister of Justice: we want a judgment of the Exchequer Court on the subject. That is a reasonable proposition, and one in which the Government ought to acquiesce.

Mr. EDGAR. The amount involved in this claim is so very great that when there is any doubt whatever as to the validity of the claim, it is the duty of the Government to put the machinery of the courts of the law in motion before paying a doubtful claim of such an enormous magnitude. We must remember that the chief engineer of the Soulanges Canal has given his professional opinion on the question of cost to the country. If the Minister of Justice does not agree with the engineer as to the meaning of a clause in the specifications, he cannot successfully dispute the engineer's accuracy when he tells the department that a decision in favour of Mr. Goodwin on this claim will involve a loss to this country ranging from half a million to $750,000. I cannot understand why when a suggestion is made from this side of the House that the Government should agree to have the case submitted to a court, the Minister of Justice should consider that to be unfair pressure to put upon the Government. I think the attempt to bully the Minister of Justice has been made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who endeavours to prevent the Government, of which he is not a member, doing what the Minister of Justice says his deliberate opinion favours, and that his advice now would be that the case should be submitted in the first instance to a court. I am sure the Minister of Justice would welcome an expression of opinion of this House that would strengthen his hands in his present view against the pressure which his colleagues and others may bring upon him in regard to this case. For that reason, I move:

> That you, Mr. Speaker, do not now leave the Chair, but that in the opinon of this House the claim of George Goodwin, recently refused by the Auditor General, should not be passed by the Government except by authority of a court of law.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think it is greatly to be regretted that the House is not able to get from the Minister of Justice a definite pledge on this very important matter. What has been asked, and I think most reasonably asked, is that before a payment is made on this disputed claim the question should be submitted to the ordinary tribunal for that purpose, constituted by the Government itself, the Exchequer Court. The position of the affair is this. The claim has been certified by the engineer under the direction of his chief, under the authority of the late Minister of Justice. The claim is therefore probably payable according to that certificate. But when it came before the Auditor General it was accompanied by a statement of the engineer that, although his hand has certified to the amount, he has done so under the direction of his chief, that the sum is not payable, and the work has not been done. Under these circumstances, the Auditor General has refused to honour the draft, as it were, of the department, and from that an appeal is threatened to the Treasury Board. If the Treasury Board overrules the Auditor General there is no redress in the court—the claim is established. What we want is not a Treasury Board determination of the matter. but that the question should be submitted to the court, and the court should say whether the debt should be paid or not. The Minister of Justice said he could not do so because. peradventure, it would appear there was no claim. We do not want the case submitted to the court in that event ; but we want a pledge that the Goodwin claim, or any claim of such a class. shall be submitted to the court before it is paid. and we will have that pledge before the Supply Bill goes out of that door.

Mr. MULOCK. I can understand that the ex-Minister of Justice does not wish this case submitted to the courts. He has undertaken to overrule the authority of the next Minister of Justice. and all the officers of the department. and of course he does not desire that his own opinion, given after he had ceased to be in office. or communicated after he had ceased to be in office. should be reversed. No matter what his motive may be. he has no right to bulldoze the Government and pose as the power behind the throne. to try and prevent justice being done to the people of Canada. This is a most extraordinary position. The Government. representing the people and having charge of the people's money. are manifesting an anxiety to pay an increased claim. This is not the first time this has happened. It is not very long ago since I had occasion to bring before the House a transaction very like this one. There was a contract made with Mr. Onderdonk to build a section of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The contract provided that at any stage the Government might. if they choose, take over the railway stock and plant on hand and in use.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the question before the House. He can refer to the Onderdonk case if he chooses. but he cannot go into any particulars and discuss it.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not intend to do so. I intend to illustrate the case now under discussion by what happened on a former occasion. and I will show a parallel between that case and the case in hand. History is going to repeat itself here. In the Onderdonk case the Government decided to take over the rolling stock, and arbitrators made an award of $150,000. and the Government then went out of their way to have the award increased ; instead of guarding the Treasury they went out of their way and manifested their anxiety to pay more than the award. That is what happened then. Here we have again the Government. instead of protecting the Treasury. manifesting anxiety to raid the Treasury. The ex-Minister of Justice says it is a new claim. Has any new work been done ? We are told that the work now certified to was done and the claim presented to the ex-Minister of Justice. How does he mean to say that this is a new claim ? There has not been a blow struck on the contract since. The engineer in charge of the work pronounced the claim unfounded in fact ; the chief engineer. who has to do with the construction of contracts pronounced against it ; every one of the engineers decided the question of fact against the claimant. Sir John Thompson decided the question. so far as it was a question of law, against the claimant, and the matter remained in suspense until the retirement of the ex-Minister of Justice. After his retirement he walked into the office one day. told his late deputy he had formed an opinion on it. But for that mere accident the treasury of the country would have been saved possibly $250,000. What case was submitted to Mr. Lash ? Mr. Lash was formerly Deputy Minister of Justice. a Queen's Counsel. and a lawyer of eminent standing. I fancy quite as eminent a lawyer as the ex-Minister of Justice. Mr. Lash. on the 17th March. gave an opinion. Was that opinion on a different claim. or upon the claim submitted to the ex-Minister of Justice ? I fancy it cannot be pretended that Mr. Lash advised on any different claim. Mr. Lash unreservedly gave it as his opinion that the claim was unfounded in law and in fact. That is the last opinion given. Against his opinion. against the opinions of the engineers. against the opinion of Sir John Thompson. we have the verbal statement of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). and in this conflict where lawyers differ. we are told that in regard to a claim of this enormous sum we should not have the protection of the judgment of a court of law. Sir. it is an extraordinary thing that members of this House. and men who were formerly members of the Government, should manifest an anxiety to so recklessly pay away the people's money. If the claim is valid the court will so pronounce it. I maintain that where there is a grave question as to whether the claim is valid. or recoverable. or not. the mere fact that there is a decided difference of opinion between able counsel, demands that the Government. as the trustees of the money of the people, should at least do what an ordinary citizen would do under similar circumstances. There is overwhelming testimony that there is more than a grave doubt as to the validity of this claim. Therefore. why should the Government assume to decide against the people. instead of giving to the people all the protection with which the law surrounds them. If it had not been for the mere accident of our having a careful, wise, safe and trusted Auditor General, this country would to-day be poorer by $210,000. and probably $750,000 because of the meddlesome interference of an ex-Minister of Justice. If this is the last day of the Parliament. and this the last hour of it. and the Supply Bill is to be blocked entirely. and every other bit of legislation. I for one say. that we will be only doing our duty by the country if we do that, in the absence of a promise that this money shall not be paid until it is granted by a court of law. So far as I am concerned, no Supply Bill can go through this House until we get that pledge.

Mr. DICKEY. Let us review the circumstances of the case briefly. The hon. gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Davies) raised this question. I listened with a great deal of interest to his argument, and I listened with a great deal of interest to the argument of the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and I heard a great deal of the discussion that succeeded. The question seemed to me one of very considerable interest, and I said a few words to the House upon it. I was pressed then to express an opinion——

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Excuse me, not by me. I did not press the hon. gentleman to express an opinion. I do not want to anticipate his opinion at all.

Mr. DICKEY. Well, I was pressed to commit myself. I declined the request of the hon. gentleman from Queen's, on the ground that I might altogether refuse this claim. Now, I have been pressed this morning upon the same subject. I think my former statement to the House was very frank. I told the House, that while my present opinion was perfectly evident to hon. gentlemen, yet, from a personal standpoint I declined to commit myself to an opinion. The hon. gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Davies) has said, that he does not want me to commit myself to an opinion, and that he wants me simply to consent, practically not to give an opinion, but to refer the matter somewhere else.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will excuse me. I did not even say that. If the hon. gentleman forms an adverse opinion to the claim it of course drops. I want an assurance from the Government that the money will not be paid, unless it is ordered by a court of law to be paid.

Mr. DICKEY. I was about to refer to that. The hon. member from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock) give notice that they will not allow Supply to be passed, unless I give up my professional scruples,——

Mr. MULOCK. That is not the point at all.

Mr. DICKEY. Well, unless I do what I have refused to do with regard to this matter.

Mr. MULOCK. Allow me to correct the hon. Minister. As far as I am concerned, I am taking my own course. I say that there has been a conflict of opinion as to the validity of this claim. Whilst the majority of opinions is against its validity, there is such a serious difference of opinion amongst legal gentlemen, as to whether it is a valid claim or not, that that circumstance alone, should cause the Government to stay its hand, and not to allow the money to be paid unless a competent court of jurisdiction should order it to be paid.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says he does not want me to give an opinion, but he asks that I should give a pledge that I would not allow this money to be paid without going to court. In view of the situation, I am willing to give that pledge to the House. It is not a pleasant thing for me personally to do, but I am face to face with this circumstance, that otherwise the whole business of the country would be blocked. I will not allow my personal pride, or my professional pride, to stand in the way of the business of the country. For that reason, I waive any consideration of that sort, and I say that so far as I am concerned, I will give no opinion as to that claim without a reference to the courts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In justice to myself I wish to say a few words. I quite agree with the decision of the Minister of Justice, just given, and the pledge just given under the circumstances. So far as I am concerned, and so far as my position in the matter is concerned, a reference to the Exchequer Court would have been most gratifying, and I appeal with confidence to all that I have said, and which is taken down in "Hansard," in order that it may be understood, that I would have resented under ordinary circumstance, such a pledge being extracted from a Government that I supported; in consequence of that pledge involving in my humble judgment, a want of confidence in the Minister of Justice of the day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well that is my ground, and I am giving my reasons, and hon. gentlemen opposite may not agree with me. Personally, I have no pride or stubborness in this matter. I have strong views as to the correctness of my own opinion, but so far as I am concerned, that reference to the Exchequer Court is considered and was always considered by me, a most happy thing. I do not know that under ordinary circumstances it would be in accordance with reason, or that it was respectful to the occupant of the office of Minister of Justice of the day, that a pledge like that should be extracted. But, I see the situation of the Government, with Parliament expiring now in a few moments, and I quite agree with the statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say this: That whatever supply is to be obtained we must have the items passed before one o'clock.

Mr. LAURIER. I quite understand that the pledge given by the Minister of Justice is the pledge of the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that ought to remove the discussion.

Mr. MULOCK. I cannot allow the ex-Minister of Justice to give any incorrect colouring to what I said. My attitude is this: The Minister of Justice must see that the mere fact that there is such a difference of opinion, demands a reference to the court. I am not seeking to bias the Minister of Justice or to interefere with his independence or freedom of action or responsibility. It was not the pledge of the Minister of Justice that was wanted. I wanted the pledge of the Government. Now, I have something to say when this motion is voted down.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is settled. The amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. EDGAR. In view of the assurance of the Government that they will meet the views expressed in this amendment, at the suggestion of my leader, I beg leave to withdraw it.

Amendment (Mr. Edgar) withdrawn.

CASE OF LIEUT.-COL. HAMILTON.

Mr. MULOCK. Yesterday I read a telegram in reference to Lieut.-Col. Hamilton, and to-day I have received a telegram in respect to the supposed influence of Sergt. George on the action of the court or commission that inquired into the case of Colonel Hamilton. I have received a telegram from Sergt. George, and, in justice to him, I simply want to put it on record, for whatever it is worth. The telegram is as follows:—

> April 23rd, 1896.
> You are misquoted morning papers, or misinformed as to facts. My resignation in morning. After meeting president of court of inquiry, said no charge whatever against me. Ready for fullest inquiry. Fair play is a jewel.
> HUGH M. GEORGE.
> Late Sergeant-Major Queen's Own Rifles.

Whatever the telegram means, I read it because I wish to give him the benefit of the statement.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

North-west Mounted Police—
Amount required to complete the service of the year	$35,000 00
Amount required to pay claim of Wm. Gordon for horse-shoeing at the rate of 75c. per shoe instead of 50c. already paid	$ 613 25

Mr. DALY. The first item is occasioned by the sending of a detachment of police to the northern Yukon district. The other item is an old claim for horse-shoeing from a man named William Gordon of Prince Albert. The price of horse-shoeing at that time was 75 cents per shoe, and Gordon was paid that price up to a certain period. The police wanted to settle at 50 cents, but Gordon claimed that, owing to the high price of coal, iron and nails at the time of the rebellion, he should be paid 75 cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We shall have another rebellion in the North-west to a dead certainty if you are going to pay for horse-shoeing at the rate of 75 cents per shoe. This claim is ten years out of date. I think it had better stand.

Mr. DALY. We have the opinion of the late Sir John Thompson that, as 75 cents per shoe was the rate which Gordon charged to the public, he had a right to charge us the same rate. Wages, charcoal, iron and nails were all at war prices at the time of the rebellion.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec—
To compensate John Ormiston, Esq., Collector of Customs of the Port of Gananoque, for services as agent of this department for the sale of islands in River St. Lawrence during the seasons of 1894 and 1895	200
To provide for legal and other expenses incurred on behalf of the Mississaguas of the Credit in connection with the presentation of their claims to the Board of Arbitrators	$2,000

Mr. DALY. As to the first item, Mr. Ormisston could not be paid out of the consolidated revenue without the money being voted by Parliament, he being an officer of the Government. He has sold a number of islands there, and this is his commission. The money will be recouped to the Government out of the funds of the band who owned the islands, but it has to be voted in this way. The next item is for legal expenses incurred by the Mississaguas in the arbitration between Ontario and Quebec, in connection with a claim they had against the province of Ontario, which was found by the arbitrators not to be well founded. This is to recoup them for their legal expenses. The decision against them reduced their capital to such an extent that they were not able to pay their legal expenses.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Are they to pay back the principal?

Mr. DALY. That is a matter to be arranged afterwards.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To whom does this money go?

Mr. DALY. To a firm in Hamilton. I cannot remember the name. They were engaged by the Indians themselves.

To provide for the purchase of seed grain and implements in connection with the scheme for improving the condition of the Half-breeds in the North-west Territories	$2,000

Mr. DALY. When the industrial school at St. Boniface was built, the land was acquired from the archipiscopal corporation. At that time, it appears some arrangement was made for an exchange by our giving them land in lieu of the forty-four acres. That exchange could not be carried out, and the matter has been hanging fire ever since, and this is to settle the claim in full.

To provide for the payment to the widow of George McPherson, late Indian Agent for Lake of the Woods District, for services rendered by him as an Indian agent at the North-west Angle from 1st October, 1875, to 1st July, 1896, the date of his permanent appointment to that position. $200 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The amount is small no doubt, and it is very disagreeable to discuss this thing, but I put it to the common sense of the House where are these things going to end ? Twenty years ago this claim accrued, and it is now brought up. I think really, in the general interests, the hon. Minister of Finance ought to let that stand or drop it.

Mr. DALY. We will let that stand.

Geological Survey—Amount required to provide for continuing artesian boring in the North-west Territories $3,957 57

Mr. CHARLTON. What success has attended the experiment ?

Mr. DALY. This is for boring for oil in the Athabasca Mountains. They have got down 1,700 feet and expect to strike the oil at 1,800 or 1,900 feet, and so far the indications are very satisfactory.

To defray the expenses of delimiting the boundary between Canada and the United States along the frontiers of New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia $25,000 00

Mr. DALY. This is in connection with the Passamaquoddy Bay, New Brunswick. We are restoring some of the monuments along the line between Quebec and Vermont and finding the line in Lake Erie and Lake of the Woods, disputes having arisen in connection with the fisheries. It appears that in British Columbia, in running the 40th parallel, one party went from a westerly direction and another from an easterly direction, and there is one line to the north and another to the south. Settlement has been going in to our part of the country on the south. Up to the present there has not been settlement on account of the Indian reserve, but that is about to be opened, and we are afraid disputes will occur as to it being Canadian or United States territory, and we propose to send out an officer to continue the line in order to ascertain if it is a true one.

To recoup the North-west Mounted Police for temporary relief afforded in cases of actual destitution, and for the purchase of seed-grain for distribution among distressed settlers in the North-west Territories $31,000 00

Mr. DALY. This is owing to distress which we had to relieve, caused by a very destructive prairie fire last fall. These fires destroyed stacks of grain, buildings, implements, and the horses and cattle of the settlers and their hay, and left them in such a position that we had to come to their rescue through the Mounted Police. Every case was investigated by an officer of the police, and the money spent in the most economical way.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask by whom this was distributed ? The reason I ask is, there was some reference made in the newspapers to the previous distribution, and it was hinted that there was some dissatisfaction with the manner in which these funds were distributed.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman has reference to another matter—to the distribution of money by the North-west government. This distribution is by the North-west Mounted Police and advisedly, so that no question could arise as to the money not being given to the proper people. I will undertake that every dollar has been properly expended.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who has control of this ?

Mr. DALY. Major Griesbach has had most to do with it. He is in command of the North-west Mounted Police at Edmonton.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is his mode of procedure in these cases ?

Mr. DALY. He made a personal inspection.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is a matter of personal judgment.

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And the department is guided entirely by that ?

Mr. DALY. Yes. Major Griesbach is a responsible man and has had twenty years' experience in the North-west.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have these disbursements all been made by one party ?

Mr. DALY. No ; he has had his junior officers under him, and one portion of the expenditure, as I said, was made at Prince Albert by Major Moffat, who is in charge of the Mounted Police there.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are the returns made under statutory declaration ?

Mr. DALY. Every item is accounted for by voucher. If the hon. gentleman knew the perfect system the police have in connection with these matters he would understand that there is no possibility of anything going wrong. So far as the distribution is concerned, Major Griesbach was assisted by officers of the department who speak the language of the settlers—Hungarians and others—and there was thus a check, so far as that was concerned.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Were they all foreigners ?

Mr. DALY. Not all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can understand how easy it is to get vouchers for money supposed to be spent in this way. I am not imputing anything wrong to the Mounted Police. But I say that besides the voucher being got from the party who gets the money or the seed grain, there should be a statutory declaration setting out that this relief was given to these several individuals, and in addition to that there should be in all cases at least two persons present when the disbursements are made.

Mr. DALY. So far as the seed grain is concerned, every person who receives it gives an acknowledgment and a lien upon his land. We expect to be repaid the amounts given to these people for the seed grain.

Mr. EDGAR. Do you ever get anything ?

Mr. DALY. Yes ; large sums are repaid. The people cannot get the deeds for their land until repayment is made.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is any return made, such as I have suggested should be made ?

Mr. DALY. I am satisfied the officer will receive an acknowledgment and the acknowledgment will accompany his report, so systematic is the way in which they do their work. It is just the same as with any military organization.

Mr. McMULLEN. But a distribution of that kind is not satisfactory. It is quite within the power of the Mounted Police to make an unjust return, and you have no check upon them. But if they made the return under oath and it was learned that it was wrong, the officer could be prosecuted.

Mr. DALY. I think I can satisfy the hon. gentleman. This distribution is always made by two men, and a receipt is taken from the settler to whom the relief is given. This is returned to the officer in charge of these men who make the return to the commandant in the usual way. It is impossible to make the distribution in a better way, it seems to me. It was with a view to meeting all difficulties that the Mounted Police were selected to perform this duty.

Mr. MARTIN. Was this relief distributed at the same time as the relief given by the North-west government ?

Mr. DALY. No ; this is being distributed now.

Mr. MARTIN. Was it on account of the dissatisfaction with the manner in which the North-west government had made the distribution that the Mounted Police were selected for this service ?

Mr. DALY. No ; it was because this was to be distributed up in the Edmonton district, and the North-west government had not the facilities for meeting the conditions that existed there. I had no dissatisfaction myself so far as the North-west government were concerned, as they were disbursing their own money.

Amount required to pay Mr. J. L. P. O'Hanly, C.E., for services investigating the subject of the probable effect of the Chicago drainage canal upon the lakes and harbour levels	$2,500

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if any information has been accumulated with regard to this matter and if any facts are known which would lead to a conclusion as to the probable effects of this canal ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And what was done for this money ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. On my attention being called to the fact that the scheme of the Chicago drainage canal had been commenced, and in view of the fact that the United States government thought it of sufficient importance to appoint three engineers to examine into and make a report as to the probable effect upon the water-level on the great lakes that might be produced by the construction of this canal, believing that Canada was equally interested from that point of view, I employed the services of an engineer to make an inquiry. For that purpose, I selected Mr. O'Hanly, as a competent man, especially as a hydraulic engineer, and I have been ever since the more satisfied with his appointment because it was impossible to get any data, either in the United States or in this country, and in support of that assertion, I may quote a report made by the eminent engineers who were selected in the United States to make this inquiry, to the effect that no data was available in the United States, or elsewhere that would enable them to make a satisfactory report upon that subject, and that to make engineering and scientific inquiries, instrumental surveys would have to be made before they could make a complete report. Mr. O'Hanly went to work, under those circumstances, and put himself in communication with some of the most eminent engineers in the United States, collected all the information possible, and made an interim report, which I laid upon the Table of the House some time ago, and which I think will prove of great value as a matter of record in this country, not only for my own department, but for the public at large.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think this had better stand over. It is just one of those items that will require considerable discussion, and the time is extremely short in which we can discuss it. It is an item that can take no harm by being aired for a couple of months.

Mr. COSTIGAN. But the work is done, and done in good faith.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be, but I do not hold to paying sums of this kind without full discussion, and no such discussion can take place upon it now.

Mr. McMULLEN. I may say to the Minister that I want to make an hour's speech on this question, and if he is prepared to listen to me now, I am prepared to go on.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of course, under these circumstances, I shall have to let it stand, as I do not want to delay the rest of the Estimates; but I do not see why this should not go through as well as any other item in the Estimates.

To pay travelling expenses of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries in connection with the Imperial Commission for the manning of British ships..	$746 89

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is to pay the expenses of Deputy Minister Smith when he was attending to that commission in England.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did the British Government ask the Canadian Government to send a representative to this commission, or was it a spontaneous move of the hon. gentleman ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot say for certain whether it was the British Government, or British Board of Trade.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not exactly see what we had to do with it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman can understand that Canadian shipping was much interested on this question, and Mr. Smith went to represent the Canadian shipping interests. The British Government agreed to pay the expenses, and did pay most of the expenses, except this $746.

North-west Territories—Further amount required for schools, clerical assistance, printing &c.	$25,000 00

Mr. DALY. This is supplementary to the large vote that is given every year to the North-west government. The hon. gentleman will see in the main Estimates a sum of $242,879. The North-west government have stated that it was impossible for them to carry on the works that are contemplated with the sum they had last year, and they have asked us to supplement that vote this year by $25,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the population of the North-west Territories now ?

Mr. DALY. Eighty-three thousand.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think the Minister of the Interior has been very frank with the committee in connection with this item. The fact is that the North-west government claim that the hon. gentleman agreed to advance the money for the purpose of affording aid to distressed settlers in the Territories last year. In 1894 the Estimates for the North-west Territories amounted to $297,509 ; in 1895 that item was $313,009. Now, there was included in that Estimate for 1894, a sum for elections, which, of course, only occur once in three or four years. The hon. gentleman came down last year and got the same amount that he got for 1894, or a little larger amount, without explaining to the committee why it was that he required as much money, there being no elections in the Territories during 1895. The hon. gentleman told the North-west Government that they could apply this amount, together with a sum of $25,000 for a bridge, to this money which he had agreed to give them, which, I believe, amounted to $45,000 or $50,000.

Mr. DALY. Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MARTIN. But the whole amount they expended was $45,000 or $50,000. I think this is a matter that should be thoroughly understood and ventilated in this committee. In 1894 Mr. Ross and, I think, one other member of the North-west government, called upon the Minister of the Interior when he was in Winnipeg and got from him, as they say, a promise. As I understand the matter, the government of the North-west Territories claim that the Minister of the Interior promised them $50,000 for the purpose of relieving the needs of settlers in the Regina district. The North-west government went to work in 1894 and used that sum for that purpose, employing men on necessary public works and in other ways. They expected there would be in the Estimates for 1895 an item for that amount. No such item appeared, and no explanation was made in Committee of Supply ; but the Government gave the North-west Territories a rather larger grant than in the previous year, in fact $25,000 more, because there was included in the grant $5,000 for a bridge and $20,000 for elections. So, in that indirect way, which was a very wrong one to adopt, the North-west was recouped to the extent of $25,000. They are still short $25,000, and the Government propose to vote this amount of $25,000 under the head of schools, printing, &c. But the grant is for no such purpose ; it is really intended to recoup the North-west government. I understand the Minister of the Interior denies that any promise was made to give $50,000 for the North-west Territories. This has been a live question in the North-west. Its discussion occupied several days at the last session of the assembly. Some members of the assembly were very much opposed to the action of Mr. Haultain and his government in connection with the matter, and blamed them for using the territorial funds. The provincial government advanced $50,000 out of money in their possession for schools and other purposes, and which was not at the time required. Mr. Haultain has been in Ottawa this session, and, no, doubt, he discussed the claim with the Government, and this item is the result. I am not discussing the question as to whether it was proper to advance $50,000 to settlers or not for relief purposes ; but what I am pointing out is that $50,000 of Dominion money has gone for the purpose of relieving settlers in the Regina district without this House knowing it, and without any explanation being offered. The Minister of the Interior adopted a very improper mode of smuggling a grant through the House without giving any explanation. In the assembly, Mr. Haultain made a similar explanation to that I have already given, namely, that the grant by the Dominion Government in 1895 was really $25,000 more than in 1894, and that the amount now proposed is the additional $25,000.

Mr. DALY. I have nothing to conceal. I have no intention to deceive the House nor any one. This item was not discussed last year because the items in regard to the North-west government were not discussed at all. If I wished to deceive the House, I could have brought down the Estimate in a different form. The disbursements of the government of the North-west Territories were made for public works in the district. I never mentioned $50,000 to Mr. Haultain. The only sum mentioned was $25,000. The position was simply this. Large petitions had been sent to the Government asking that we would do something to relieve the distress in Moose Jaw and Regina districts. I protested that this was a matter entirely outside our jurisdiction and within the jurisdiction of the North-west assembly. I met Mr. Haultain when I went west that summer, after having had considerable correspondence with Mr. Davin and others, and Mr. Haultain thought it would not be wise to afford relief without receiving a 'quid pro quo' from assisted settlers, and so his government undertook local public works and money was paid to these men who worked on them. The amount here asked, $25,000, is a final amount to recoup the North-west government for that amount given for relief purposes.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman has not given an explanation in regard to the Estimate of last year. What the hon. gentleman did last year was to vote $25,000 for the purpose of relieving settlers without giving any explanation on the Estimates.

Mr. DALY. I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. MARTIN. The item was increased in 1894 by $25,000, on account of the items for bridge and elections. But, although in 1895 those two items had been dropped, still the same amount practically was asked.

Mr. DAVIN. That would not necessarily be so much less every year. A great deal more is given than is asked for and a great deal more should be given than is asked for every year ; about $100,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Probably the hon. gentleman is right. If the same amount was given in 1893 and as in 1894, the Territories would get $25,000 more, because they had to meet $20,000 for the elections and $5,000 for a bridge, which they did not require the previous year. I say that increase was not for the ordinary purposes of the Territories, but for the payment of this relief money.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to remind my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) that the Winnipeg train leaves at one o'clock.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think so.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be a little before time to-day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you not wish it was ?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not intend to be long. By pretending to increase that amount for schools and clerical assistance, he gives them $25,000 more for this relief, but their grant for schools and clerical assistance has not been increased a cent. The hon. gentleman did take the responsibility in his promise to Mr. Haultain to refund the money, by saying it was a Dominion liability and not a Territorial liability.

Electric light inspection $2,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are a great number of small towns which have electric lights, and complaints have been made to me from several quarters, that quite a considerable charge is made by the Government for inspection. It seems to me that it is desirable to encourage these lights in small towns, and that the charge for inspection in towns less than 5,000 population should be made very low. I do not object to the employment of an inspector. In the great majority of these cases the companies do not pay dividends, and it is rather a hard thing to saddle them with $50 or $40 additional expense for inspection. If the Controller of Inland Revenue would agree that the inspection fee should be a nominal one in these small towns, he would confer a considerable boon upon these companies, fifty or sixty of which are scattered over Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. I fully agree with what has been said by my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright). I know that in my part of the country there are complaints of the onerous fees charged by the Government for the inspection of electric light in these small towns. If a fee is to be exacted at all, it should be made as small as possible.

Mr. McMULLEN. On behalf of the town in the constituency I represent, I appealed to the former Controller (Mr. Wood), and a reduction was made from $50 to $25 in towns of less than 3,000 inhabitants. In my humble opinion, it ought even be less. I quite endorse what the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has said. The electric light is a very great advantage to the public in these small towns and the least possible sum should be charged in the way of inspection fees. I do not think that $10 would be too low.

Mr. BOYLE. In the town where I live, the same difficulty arises. I add my voice to that of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in asking that the fee be made as low as possible.

Mr. PRIOR. Hon. gentlemen cannot expect me to make a promise at the present time. I will take the matter into my most serious consideration.

To provide for payment at a uniform rate for mail service on various small sections of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from 1st January, 1896.......... 7,100 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has the Minister to say about this ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Great inconvenience has been found, both by the department and by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to result from the various rates paid for mail service on the small sections of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the payment being in some cases 8 cents per train mile, and in other cases 6, 2, 3 and 4 cents per train mile. An arrangement is now being made to fix an annual rate of $100 per mile per year between Montreal and Quebec and between Ottawa and Prescott, and uniform rates on the various small sections of the line. The total increase resulting from these changes is $14,115 per annum.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On what basis were the increases made ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. On the basis of $100 per train mile per annum.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that the usual rate ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, it is the same as we paid to the Grand Trunk.

To meet the additional expense required to provide for payment to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the rate of $130 per mile per annum for the conveyance of mails over their line between Vancouver, B.C., and St. John, N.B., instead of the rate now paid them $99,000 00

Mr. CHARLTON. Is the rate higher on this section than on the other sections ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This is on the main line. We pay a higher rate on the main line than on the side lines.

Mr. CHARLTON. Do you pay the same on the main line of the Grand Trunk ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. EDGAR. This may be all right on its merits, but I find that an Order in Council was passed on the 12th of June, 1895, making this increase ; and on the 12th of July last year the Postmaster General, when asked in this House by the hon. member for South Oxford if there was to be any increase in the expenditure in his department for the year 1895-96, said :

> I can tell the hon. gentleman that there is no increase at all in the amount.

And now he comes here and asks for this increase in pursuance of an Order in Council which had been passed a month before that day. I think the House is entitled to some explanation of that.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I must first give a few words of explanation in reference to the reason why the increase took place. We are now paying for accommodation which was absolutely necessary. We had not sufficient room on the cars for the conveyance of the mails. Some had to be carried in freight cars and in baggage cars, which rendered it quite impossible for the service to be carried on as it should be. Consequently, when it became a question of revising the rates, the company and the Government agreed that for this increased amount of money we would get the accommodation which was required. The reason why I stated last session that there was no increase in my estimates, was that I was not asking any amount of money to meet that improved service, as it was not intended that it should be paid out of the estimates of that year. Consequently, I think I was quite right in understanding the question put to me to mean whether my estimates were to be increased in consequence of any new service, and in answering that there was no increase contemplated. Moreover, one of the strong reasons which satisfied me that the information I was giving was correct was that that amount was only part of a very much larger amount, $400,000, which was what the Canadian Pacific Railway asked us to pay for this improved service. Negotiations were then going on with the company, and therefore I did not consider that it was necessary to provide money to pay for it. I certainly did not mean to hide anything from the House ; but I thought, as I do to-day, that I was quite justified in giving the information which I did, because I was not asking for any money to meet that improved service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the basis of this arrangement.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is just the difference between 125 and 130 miles, and is on the same basis as that on which we pay other lines compared with the accommodations.

To provide for the payment of the claim made by Mr. Robert Hastey in connection with his contract for the mail service between Ottawa and North Wakefield, viz.: In lieu of three months' notice of termination of contract $125 00

Mr. DEVLIN. What is the explanation of this?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Hastey is contractor for the mail service between Ottawa and Wakefield by the old route from Ottawa via Chelsea. The Gatineau Valley Railway was being constructed, and the mails were carried over the railway as each section was completed. This put the contractor to some expense for extra services, and this is to compensate him.

Special service between Ottawa and Hull from 1st January, 1884, to 31st December, 1889, at 80 cents per day $1,497 60

Mr. DEVLIN. We require some explanation of this.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This is the same as the other.

Mr. DEVLIN. Here is an item that has not been paid from 1884 to 1889, nearly $1,500, and after ten years the claim is put in. The only explanation is that Mr. Hastey was carrying the mails, but that gentleman must have been paid during all those years.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Hastey carried this mail, and I do not know why it was not paid between 1884 and 1889, but the claim was submitted to me and looked into by my officers, and I thought it a fair claim and only fair to put this amount in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is not an item that should be brought up under existing circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. We will let it stand.

Amount required to complete the payment of the following items to 30th July, 1896, viz.: Inspectors' and city postmasters' salaries $36,233 33

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a very large sum, and I must remind the hon. Postmaster General that there is a very big deficit. I shall want details of this inspector and city postmaster's salary. $36,000 a year added to them is no trifle.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is the amount that was struck off the Estimates last year, and we found it impossible to get along without it. We had our Estimate reduced by that amount, but we found it quite impossible to carry on the services without it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Unquestionably in the Post Office Department there can be very considerable reductions made in the way of salaries. I have drawn the attention of the committee several times to the excessive salaries paid both to officials in the city offices and in Ottawa with the miserable salaries paid to country postmasters. The whole system wants to be recast. For instance, in cities like Montreal and Toronto you pay the postmasters $4,000 a year to step around virtually with kid gloves, and you allow country postmasters to serve the country and keep their offices open night and day and Sundays, and pay them $36 a year and in some cases only $15 a year. The whole system should be recast, city postmasters cut down to not more than $2,000, with towns in proportion, and then the salaries paid to country postmasters raised to something like a decent figure. I know people who have kept post office for fifteen years, and they are not getting more than $30 or $35, though the work takes almost the entire time of one. Much more could be said but I do not wish to take up the time.

Mr. McSHANE. I have had many letters urging me to press upon the Postmaster General the propriety of reducing the rate on drop letters to one cent. That is a change which should be made in the interests of the mercantile community, and of poor people in all the cities of the country. In consequence of the rate for these letters being two cents, merchants now send their clerks and office boys with such letters. This rate is too much altogether, particularly when contrasted with the fact that in the United States for two cents a letter is carried to any part of the country.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not wish to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter, but I may say I received over 200 letters from the twelve cities in the Dominion, and nineteen out of twenty of those who wrote them agreed that the Dominion Government was losing money by reason of this two-cent rate, as so many sent around clerks and boys with these letters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This question no doubt deserves consideration, but I am afraid it is not possible to discuss it now. But before we pass the amount the Postmaster General asks, the hon. gentleman ought to be in a position to state to us who are the inspectors and city postmasters for whom this amount is required. The number of these officers cannot be very great, and we ought to have a list of the persons to whom this $36,000 is to be paid.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That information can easily be brought down. I had no reason to expect that the names of these officers would be asked.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that is exactly what the hon. gentleman ought to have expected.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I may have been wrong in not supposing that the names would be required, but they are all in the Civil Service list and in my own report. I could not, from memory, give the hon. gentleman the names, but I can easily get the list if the hon. gentleman wishes it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the House is being treated as it ought to be treated in this matter. The hon. gentleman came down last year with a marked reduction in his Estimates for the coming year. Now, the House has had a right to assume, and did assume that this was not a hasty, hap-hazard education, but one that had been made after careful consideration and consultation between the Postmaster General and the deputy. Now, the hon. gentleman tells us that the reductions could not be made, and he wants $36,000. Surely the House has a right to be told why the reduction was made and why now it is found that these reductions have to be made up for. To accept the mere casual statement of the Minister that the reductions were not practicable is not business-like. The hon. gentleman, with his usual suavity, pressed his former Estimate through without full explanation, and now he comes to us at the last moment and asks us to note this large sum without reasonable explanation. I protest against this as a most unbusiness-like proceeding.

Mr. EDGAR. Last year the Postmaster General made a flourish of trumpets about his reductions. He said that the amount for salaries and allowances was $17,965 less than had been voted the previous year. Now he tells us that he has not enough money for this item by over $36,000. I am surprised that the Postmaster General did not assume that this committee would require some explanation, especially as his present request is in contradiction to his statements of last year.

An hon. MEMBER. Dropped.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better think twice before we say that the item is not to pass. Last year this item was reduced by $17,000, in round numbers, the Postmaster General proposing to make that reduction. But you must take into the account the facts that the total amount voted for salaries is $1,211,000. Then there is a certain amount of accretion in this salary-list from year to year, and this amount does not represent a large percentage on the total. Allowing for the reduction of last year, this is an increase of only $19,000. That is not a very extraordinary increase for such an immense staff.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman is going away from the record. If he will look at it, he will see that the class for whom this vote is asked, is a very small class. They are inspectors and city postmasters.

Mr. FOSTER. The salaries total up about $500,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What the hon. gentleman asks is $36,000 for inspectors' and city postmasters' salaries.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a mistaken drafting, for it goes over the whole service.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman came down a few months ago and made a reduction of some $18,000 in this service. He must have known why he made that reduction, he must have had some business principle upon which he made that reduction. Now he comes down, and for the same year he asks $36,000, and does not give us any particulars.

Mr. FOSTER. If you will look at page 88 of the Estimates, you will see how it comes. There is a total of city post offices and inspectors' offices; the two total up for the year 1895-96 to $1,193,000, and for this next year we ask $1,223,000. Although the wording does not carry this out in the Supplementary Estimates, that is what is meant to be carried out. It is the amount necessary to supplement the total city post offices and inspectors' offices, the two together going up to $1,223,000. Therefore, this needs amendment as far as its verbiage is concerned. It should be "Inspectors' and city postmasters' offices." There are so many of them that the amount paid each year is $2,200,000.

Mr. McSHANE. Let it drop.

Mr. FOSTER. If you insist upon dropping it, what will happen is this, that city postmasters and their employees and the employees in inspectors' offices, the total amount of whose salaries is $1,200,000, will be, to the extent of $36,000, docked of what they have earned. Now, my hon. friend does not want that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That was the proposition made by the Government. The Government and the Postmaster General have, I assume, carefully considered the matter, and made that proposition to us a few months ago. Now, assuming that the hon. gentleman came to the conclusion that this was a proper sum to vote, he must have done it on the ground that he had good departmental reasons for not asking more. Now, for the next year he asks $36,000 extra, and without full explanation why he has made this extraordinary change in his departmental estimates.

Mr. McSHANE. The Finance Minister says that if we do not vote this sum, the post office employees will be without their salaries. I deny that such would be the case. I want to say that in the Montreal post office there are one-half too many employees. Every Minister who has a relative, has hoisted him into that post office, or into somewhere else. Does the hon. Minister mean to tell me that these men cannot find any other business? Why, Sir, these men, before they were appointed, were either returning officers or active agents of the Government, and travelled all over the city working in favour of the Government candidates, and it is for these men that we are asked now to vote $36,000. If the Minister had acceded to the request I made in the early part of the session, backed up by the merchants and professional men of Montreal, that the price of drop letters should be reduced from 2 cents to 1, then I could understand his desire to have this $36,000 voted. But I will not stand here and vote this money, because there is no necessity for it, because one-half the employees in the Montreal post office could be dispensed with and the business could be carried on just as well. In England and the United States we do not see this class of men hoisted into public offices where they are allowed to live on the earnings of the rest of the people. I hope the hon. member will drop this item ; if not, I shall speak on it for four hours.

Mr. FOSTER. Stand.

Dominion Lands—Further amount required for surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, &c.	$8,500 00

Mr. DALY. The vote was cut down last year by about $75,000 from the usual appropriation. There are some townships in the North-west that are occupied by settlers that have not been blocked out yet, and this is to complete the survey. There is a reduction of $75,000 in the vote.

Mr. MULOCK. This is another sample. Last session the Government made profession of great economy.

Mr. DALY. Look at the difference between $75,000 and $8,000. We knocked off $75,000 from last year's vote, and all I am asking for now is $8,000. This work is absolutely necessary between now and first of July. The men have got to start out at once, or else they will lose the whole season. If we get this money, we can start parties on Monday, so that we can get to work. These townships are up north of Edmonton, perhaps one is north of Prince Albert. But this is for work absolutely needed.

Mr. MULOCK. There is a certain amount of honesty about the hon. gentleman's statement ; at the same time, I am obliged to view a good many of these recommendations with some degree of suspicion.

Mr. DALY. I would not have it here, if it was not all right.

Mr. MULOCK. How much of this is for electioneering purposes ?

Mr. DALY. There is nothing of that kind about it.

Mr. MULOCK. Will you give me the details showing how this amount is made up ?

Mr. DALY. I cannot give any further explanation than I have given. Our vote was reduced by $75,000, but we find that there are certain townships now occupied by settlers that are unsurveyed. It is necessary to survey those this year, and the work can be done if we send parties out now, because the hon. gentleman will understand that, if we do not send them in April or the beginning of May, probably they lose the whole summer.

Mr. MULOCK. How many parties will be in the field ?

Mr. DALY. There will be three parties.

Mr. MULOCK. How many persons to a party ?

Mr. DALY. I have not the information at hand. There is no politics in the matter. This amount is to do actual necessary work. All the work is subjected to the most careful inspection, it is being done at a greatly reduced price, and there is no possibility that there is anything in it for politics.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose I shall have to accept the hon. gentleman's statement.

To provide for taking and compilation of the census of Manitoba	$15,000 00

Mr. FOSTER. It is absolutely necessary to take this vote, as it is statutory. The census is taken quinquenially and must be taken before July.

For printing and compilation of French and English edition of Statistical Year-Book, 1894	$2,200 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This may safely stand over.

Mr. OUIMET. The English edition has been completed, and the practical result of holding it over will be to prevent the French edition being issued.

Mr. FOSTER. It is only a charge made by one department against another.

Mr. McSHANE. If the French edition is yet to be issued, let the item pass.

To introduce Canadian meats and other perishable food products into the markets of the United Kingdom in such a way that consumers may obtain them regularly in their best condition under the name "Canadian" ; the revenue from sales of all products to be deposited to the credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund	$60,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not disposed to criticise or oppose this proposition, but it is a complete new departure and will require a very long discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. In that event we will drop it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It will defer the matter for a year.

Mr. DAVIN. The people of the North-west take a deep interest in this item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is utterly impossible at the present time to discuss a new departure like this. The discussion would take a whole day.

Mr. DAVIN. I have had letters from farmers——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not care. We are not going to discuss it now.

Item dropped.

Experimental Farm—For printing bulletins $2,000 00

Mr. McSHANE. I understand a letter was sent by the Montreal Poultry Association to the Experimental Farm asking certain questions. I am informed that the association never obtained any answer to their letter. I ask the Government for an explanation. In the meantime, speaking on their behalf, I ask the Government why it is that no answer was given to their letter to the Government ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I cannot speak for the past, but so far as the future is concerned, we are now taking that matter up, and it will be attended to.

Mr. McSHANE. I understand if they renew their application it will be granted ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, I do not say that. I say we are considering the whole question.

Mr. McMILLAN. We are keeping up the experimental farm at an enormous cost, and the farmers of the country know nothing about what is going on, on the farm, for the reason that the report is not being distributed amongst them. If it is to cost the country $75,000 a year to keep up this Central Experimental Farm, it is a necessity to the farmers of the country that they should get the report with regard to it. The report has not been distributed amongst the farmers in the manner it ought to be.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman expresses my sentiments exactly, and it is with a view of carrying out that idea, that this work was undertaken. I may say that the subject referred to in these bulletins, were, first, to give the farmers of the country information with regard to the grain experiments ; second, to give the results of experiments in hop growing ; and, third, with regard to the experiments in flax growing. We circulated some forty thousand of these bulletins in English, and some twelve thousand in French. This vote is to cover the expense of the three issues.

Further grant in aid of the North-west Territories Exhibition to settle unpaid accounts $12,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, this must stop.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say this with regard to this vote, and then my hon. friend can give his ultimatum, Czar-like, if he chooses. There were a lot of unpaid accounts. They have been thoroughly gone through by my own department here, in connection with Mr. Pope and Mr. Gordon, and so far as we can get at the accounts which are payable, they come to about $12,000. These are now at Regina, and are being thoroughly gone over by the proper officers so that the accounts may be examined with the vouchers, to see whether they are expenditures properly authorized, and as to the prices and the like of that. There is no doubt that a considerable proportion of these are just claims. Somebody must pay them, and I do not know who in the world would pay them except ourselves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We can discuss that two months hence.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman would allow this to go through, I will take care that the payments are made solely through the Auditor General's Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This can very well stand over.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if you object.

Mr. DAVIN. These amounts are due to poor men, carpenters and builders, and men who cannot afford to be out of their money, and they will be out of it, if this vote does not pass.

Mr. McMULLEN. It has been an exceedingly unfortunate thing from the beginning. It appears to have been gone into with unlimited extravagance. Some good may have been accomplished, but I must say that, in my humble opinion——

Mr. FOSTER. If you are going to oppose it, we will have to drop it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Very well.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Of course, it will be dropped with the understanding that we do not prejudge the matter at all. It can wait for a few months.

To provide for balance of pay and field pay of Major G. Guy as paymaster to the North-west forces during the suppression of the rebellion of 1885 .... $1,067 20

Mr. DICKEY. I will read the following report with regard to this vote, from the Deputy Minister of Militia :—

6th March, 1896.

The Honourable
The Minister of Militia and Defence.

The undersinged, deputy head of the Department of Militia and Defence, has the honour to represent that an application has been for some time under the consideration of the department, from Major George Guy, for a balance to the Northwest forces, during the suppression of pay and field pay claimed by him as paymaster of the rebellion of 1885.

That clause 81 of the Militia Act, on the subject of pay, is as follows :—

81. Whenever the militia or any part of corps thereof, is called out for active service, the officers and men so called out shall be paid at such rates of daily pay as are paid to officers and men of the relative and corresponding grade in Her Majesty's service, or such other rates as are for the time being fixed by the Governor in Council.

That when the militia was ordered out on active service in 1885 no rate of pay had been fixed by the Governor in Council for the appointment of paymasters to the forces.

That, consequently, Major Guy claimed to be entitled, while so serving, to the rate of pay and field pay allowed by the royal warrant of 1884, for such an appointment in the Imperial service, viz. : $6.09 per diem, and charge pay, likewise pay in the Imperial service, while in charge of the accounts of the campaign, at $1.21 a day ; also field pay at the rate of $1 per day.

This principle was recognized in the payment of Major Generals Laurie and Strange, and the other officers of the field force, also of the Surgeon General, who served at headquarters during the rebellion. Major Guy points out, in his letter hereto annexed, that a strict analogy of the duties performed by him during that campaign, as accountant and paymaster in charge of all the accounts and expenditures, amounting to some $4,000,000, a force of over 5,000 being in the field, with similar duties in the Imperial forces would entitle him to claim the higher emoluments of chief paymaster in Her Majesty's service.

He was, however, only paid by the department at the rate of $5 a day, a less rate of pay even than that which was subsequently fixed by the Regulations and Orders of 1887 for ordinary staff paymasters in the militia.

That during the whole of his service in connection with the North-west campaign, both as paymaster to the forces and as one of the commissioners upon the war claims (the amount paid him in which latter capacity is deducted from the present claim as paymaster), the onerous and very arduous, as well as responsible duties, which devolved upon Major Guy, were performed with the utmost fidelity and care, and in a highly efficient manner. The undersigned is therefore strongly of the opinion that Major Guy is justly and equitably entitled to the balance of pay and allowances which he claims, and therefore respectfully recommends payment of the annexed account of that officer for the balance due him, amounting to $1,067.20, the Major General Commanding the Militia having likewise recommended the same for payment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Carried.

Lachine Canal—Enlargement.......... $20,000 00

Mr. HAGGART. This $20,000 is to pay the expenses between the opening of navigation and the 1st of July, 1896. The work is being carried on by days' labour by the Government dredge.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would ask this item to stand over.

Mr. FOSTER. How will the men on the dredge be paid, then ?

Mr. McMULLEN. I object to a large vote of $65,000 being rushed through in a few moments.

Mr. HAGGART. I will not be able to employ the dredge if you do not give it.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the $20,000 is simply for dredge work, and nothing else ?

Mr. HAGGART. That is the information from my department.

Mr. LAURIER. Carried.

Cornwall Canal—Enlargement $74,000 00

Mr. HAGGART. The work on the enlargement of this canal has progressed more rapidly than was expected. The first appropriation of $350,000 is found to be insufficient. There was expended, on the 1st of March, 1896, $3,380,000, out of an estimated cost of $4,200,000, and this is to pay the estimates on the work going on.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many men are employed ?

Mr. HAGGART. It is all by contract.

Mr. FOSTER. The contracts are going on. There is no new contract.

Mr. HAGGART. The work is very nearly finished. It will be all finished, I believe, by the 1st of July.

Rapide Plat Canal—Enlargement...... $87,000 00

Mr. HAGGART. This work is all under contract, and this amount is to pay up to the 1st of July. There is an amount of $22,578 unpaid, because the contractors did more work than the Estimates of last year provided for.

Rideau Canal—Wm. Davis & Sons, final estimate and interest $11,200 00

Mr. HAGGART. This is the final estimate on the Tay Canal section.

Mr. MULOCK. That had better stand. We would like to discuss that.

Mr. HAGGART. The work is done, and this is the final estimate.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to have a lot of information on this.

Mr. FOSTER. It is exactly in the same position as the preceding vote. The work is done, it has been done under contract, and the final estimate of the engineer is in. I do not know on what ground the hon. gentleman objects.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know anything about the contract. Is it an extension or is it an improvement ?

Mr. HAGGART. It is for the improvements on the Tay section of the Rideau Canal in 1889. When the work was completed, a final estimate was prepared, which Messrs. Davis refused to accept, inasmuch as they alleged that the measurements were not correct ; and the matter remained in abeyance until last year, when a thorough examination of the ground was made and measurements were taken, and the engineer's note books were overhauled by Messrs. Lynch and Phillips, with the result that it was found that $7,692.32 was due to them. All claims in which no measurements could be taken or obtained or information obtained were rejected, and interest from the 13th of February, 1891, to the 1st of July, 1893, is allowed.

Mr. MULOCK. Well, I do not think there is any urgency whatever. The claim has been standing since 1889, according to the Minister's statement.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman is going to object to it we will drop it.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not objecting to the cost, but time will not permit us to get the information.

Item dropped.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal—Equipment and construction	$265,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This, I think, had better stand over.

Mr. HAGGART. I will explain to the hon. gentleman the balances due on the different contracts. J. & R. Miller, offices and shops—total amount, $14,716 ; amount paid, $11,234 ; balance due, $3,482. Dominion Bridge Company, movable dam—amount of contract, $75,700 ; amount paid, $51,097 ; balance due, $24,602. H. Ryan & Co., lift lock, balance due, $150,000 ; supply pipes, balance due, $8,220 ; guard pier, nothing paid, leaving a balance due of $10,924. Allan & Fleming, who are dredging the upper entrance, $36,000. J. & R. Miller, bolting breast wall, nothing paid ; $550 due. Dominion Bridge Company, appliances to work the dredge, nothing paid, $1,520 due. Sweeping, $1,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I dare say the claims are right enough, but I know that there will be a long discussion on this, which it is utterly impossible to have now, so that we shall have to let it stand.

Mr. HAGGART. Suppose we allow the smaller claims to be paid, and let the $150,000 for the lift lock stand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Leave both the contracts, and pay the others.

Mr. HAGGART. Then I understand that hon. gentlemen opposite will consent to the following items, under this heading, passing :

Dominion Bridge Company	$24,602
J. & R. Miller	550
Dominion Bridge Company	1,520
Sweeping	1,000

Item, as amended, agreed to.

St. John, N.B., Custom-house—Amount due W. H. Thorne for interest on account for goods supplied	$381 36

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object to this on account of the nature of the claim. This man is a large contractor, and he supplies the Government with a very large amount of goods every year. He supplied the Custom-house last year with a very large amount of goods at an enormous profit, and he now asks for interest on balance due him. The item should be dropped, at all events until further investigation is made.

Mr. OUIMET. I stated distinctly last night that this was a special agreement, made in order to have the buildings finished and ready for occupation on the 1st May, and in consequence of that arrangement we save $3,000 in rent. If we had not made that arrangement, Mr. Thorne was entitled to be paid, we would not have been able to pay the labourers, and the building would not have been ready for occupation the 1st May. This would have involved another year's rent at $3,000, so that we have really saved $3,000 by this expenditure of $381.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to complete the payment of the following items to 30th June, 1896, viz. :

Inspectors' and city postmasters' salaries	$36,233 33
Mileage to railway mail clerks	13,600 00
Provisional allowance	260 00

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. McShane) should object to that.

Mr. MULOCK. I want to have a little discussion with the Postmaster General——

Mr. FOSTER. He will accommodate you with a discussion at another time.

Mr. MULOCK. This is the proper time. If it does not take place now, it cannot take place at all. I find that the Postmaster General renews contracts without public notice of tender. I have a case in point where he has renewed a contract for 90 per cent more than the work could be done for.

Mr. FOSTER. The Postmaster General found that he could not make the reduction of $18,000 proposed. I would suggest that $18,000 be struck off this item, leaving it $18,233 33. That, at least, ought to be given.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. In the main Estimates there are two items that I would like to have passed. What I want to ask hon. gentlemen opposite is to make it unnecessary that the House should assemble here in July and have a summer session, which is inconvenient and expensive as well. The proposition I would make to them is, if they cannot see their way clear to give us our working Estimates for next year, to give us, at least, two or three months' Estimates, in order that Parliament may find it unnecessary to meet so soon. I think there is nothing unreasonable in that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is utterly impossible.

Mr. McMULLEN. When hon. gentlemen opposite considered it necessary to pass a Franchise Act for the benefit of their party, they could keep us here in August and September, with no consideration for questions of convenience and expense.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well. On the main Indian Estimates I wish to take up the six items at the first :

Indians—Manitoba and North-west Territories:

Annuities and commutations	$124,905 00
Implements, tools and hardware	5,200 00
Field and garden seeds	1,103 17
Live stock	3,835 00
Supplies for destitute and working Indians	176,093 00
Triennial clothing	2,634 00

I would like the whole item of "triennial clothing," because that is to be given, as I understand it, about the 1st of next July. We can do with $55,000 of "Annuities and commutations," but we should have the whole of "Implements, tools and hardware," the whole of "Field and garden seeds," and the whole of "Live Stock;" but $20,000 "Supplies for destitute and working Indians" will be sufficient for the remainder of the fiscal year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very well.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER communicated to the House the following letter which he had received :—

> Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
> Ottawa, 23rd April, 1896.
> Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber, to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament, on Thursday, the 23rd instant, at 8 o'clock, p.m.
> I have the honour to be, Sir,
> Your obedient servant,
> JOHN SINCLAIR,
> Governor General's Secretary.
> The Honourable
> The Speaker of the House of Commons.

After Recess.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to concur in resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Militia—Arms and ammunition ..	$1,000,000 00

Mr. RINFRET moved :

> This House regrets that the Government, without the authority of Parliament, has entered into contracts for the purchase of arms and equipments to the amount of nearly $2,000,000.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. BERGERON. The members for South Ontario (Mr. Smith), Annapolis (Mr. Mills), and North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) did not vote, and they are in the House.

Mr. HUGHES. I am paired with the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Colter) ; otherwise I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). I paired with the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Beith) ; otherwise I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I am paired with the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) ; otherwise I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. GUAY. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) did not vote.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was paired with the hon. member for Montreal East (Mr. Lépine);

otherwise I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Rider) has not voted.

Mr. RIDER. I was paired with the hon. member for Vancouver Island (Mr. Haslam); otherwise I would have voted for the amendment.

Beauharnois Canal—Deeper entrance to channel	$7,600 00

Mr. EDGAR. I do not think the House should concur in this resolution. I understand that the amount of $7,600 which has been voted for this purpose hitherto has been wasted, and if the amounts voted from time to time had been properly expended there would not have been a large mud bank, necessitating the employment of hundreds of men for its removal. I am afraid this item is put in the Estimates to be wasted and thrown away as was the case with the previous expenditure. Just at this particular time it will give employment to a few hands.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. There never was such an item before in the Estimates, and no previous expenditure has been made for that purpose. The amount is required to carry out a recommendation of a committee of the Board of Trade of Montreal, which waited on the Government last summer for the purpose of urging them to deepen the canals and river at certain points and improve the navigation, and that the work should be carried out before the season of navigation opened. The forwarders on the St. Lawrence supported these recommendations.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is no urgency in this matter, and work can very well stand over for a few months. We have not had time to discuss it. Several important works have been brought to the attention of the Government, year after year, but nothing has been done; yet here is a new work undertaken. I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works last night to an important matter with respect to dredging. Although the dredge has been in the locality where its services were required, nothing had been done, although almost all the residents of the locality had petitioned for it.

Mr. HAGGART. Most of this work has been done, for it had to be carried out before the opening of navigation.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Edgar) who brought this question forward has evidently been wrongly informed. I know the place very well. The work done there is most important, and it has been asked for for some years. It has been asked for by the Board of Trade of Montreal, and I myself have impressed on the Government during two or three years its necessity. It is at the foot of the Beauharnois Canal where the lower end of the rapids strikes the bank, the guard pier at the foot of the channel. The current has thrown into the channel large boulders, and the channel is filling up with earth at that point. Last year the Government engineer made the necessary surveys. In respect to the plea put forward that the work could be postponed, I may state that it is almost completed. It was commenced last fall, it has been carried on during the winter, and will be ready for the opening of navigation on May 1st, and most of the money has been already expended.

Mr. TARTE. If I thought the amount asked would be spent for public purposes, I would certainly not object to it. But I have been informed by the best citizens of Beauharnois that the large sums of money which have been expended have been wasted, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) was called upon to give an account of all the money spent there he might have some difficulty in doing so. If the money spent for dredging purposes in the river had been expended in a legitimate way, Beauharnois to-day would be better off than it is. I know, so far as a man can know, that if this money is voted to-day it will be squandered as in the past. The explanation is that this item is put in the Estimates for political purposes. The reason why I object to this item is that I want money expended for legitimate purposes.

Mr. CHARLTON. This evidently is a debatable question, and some hon. members have information which causes them to hesitate to concur in this proposed vote. I do not suppose it is of very grave importance whether the amount asked is voted now or two months hence. The Government had better let the vote drop. On my information, I do not feel warranted in concurring in it.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. This is a vote for a canal, it is not a vote in connection with the Department of Public Works. This work is being carried out for the purposes of navigation. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) accepted the insinuation thrown out by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte); but I may inform him that the work is being carried on under the supervision of the Dominion engineers in Montreal, and that is the reason why it has been done at comparatively small cost. The work would have cost two or three times as much if it had not been executed under the chief engineer of the Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. I happened to be with the Minister at the time the deputation waited on him and discussed with him this and other points in connection with the River St. Lawrence. It was a representative delegation from the Board of Trade of Montreal, and forwarders at different points from St. Catharines to Montreal. We talked over many points, and this was one in regard to which they pressed urgency, and that the work should be entered upon and completed by the opening of navigation. I remember hearing the Minister state that he would endeavour to carry out their wishes in that respect. That has been done, and the work is being completed under the engineers of the department. It was done in answer to the request of the Montreal Board of Trade and forwarders on the St. Lawrence. What are we coming to, if on an expenditure of this kind, any gentleman comes up and says : This is a debatable point and you shall not have your Supply. I think that is too responsible a position to be taken. I happen to have some personal knowledge of how this originated, and I think it would be an outrage upon the general forwarding interests of the St. Lawrence River if we should cast any doubt upon it, after a man has done this work, and done it for a purpose of this kind, and under supervision of the engineer of the department. If we should stop the vote, just on account of a hearsay piece of business, surely that would not be right.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There have been circumstances prior to these referred to, which will go a long way to control my vote on the matter. I think I am in the judgment of the committee when I say that when we were going through the committee last night and to-day, every consideration was given to the statements made by the Ministers with respect to the necessity for the expenditure of public money. I may fairly challenge the hon. gentleman to admit that the Opposition concurred in every reasonable proposition that was made by Ministers, to the effect that the expenditure of any money was necessary. We voted the money in all these cases without hesitation, and after very short debate. What I am anxious now to call the attention of the committee to is the fact that we are face to face with another flagrant evidence in which the constitutional usages which ought to control the expenditure of money have been violated.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes. I voted for this sum on the statement of the Minister, that it was a work which ought to be done when navigation opened, and that he wanted the money to do it. I find now that the whole thing is a farce. The money has been taken, the work has been done, and Parliament has not been consulted. The more we look into those items, the more I see that the old English system of voting supplies to the Government of the day has become a very farce. The Ministry are waited upon by a deputation of Montreal merchants, who point out that it is necessary, in the interest of the trade generally, that certain public works should be done. What should have been the course taken by the Ministery in a case of this kind? If they considered, on the representations made that the work should have been done, they should have replied to the delegation : This is a matter which we will bring before Parliament with our recommendation that the money should have been voted for it. They should then have obtained the necessary authority from Parliament, Parliament being the controlling power under all circumstances. We find in this case that Parliament has been ignored altogether. The Montreal Board of Trade represent to the Minister that certain things should be done, and without any authority under heaven for doing so, he incurs the expenditure, and then on the last day of the session he asks us to ratify it. We emphasized our position upon matters of this kind with reference to the expenditure on the militia. I repeat here, that the policy which has been adopted of spending the public money, and then coming to Parliament afterwards to authorize it, is a policy in direct violation of every constitutional principle, and a policy which in the long run will land the country in the position that they had better do away with the expense of Parliament altogether, and elect eight or ten men, leaving to them the absolute control to carry out the Government of the country for five years. If the money is spent without authority, I say that the Minister who did it ought to be punished, because it is a direct violation of the control of Parliament and of constitutional usages. I will register my vote against this unconstitutional arbitrary and dangerous method of expenditure.

Mr. HAGGART. A few words in reply to the extraordinary position taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) in reference to this particular work. I take issue with him directly as to the constitutional mode of dealing with such works as this. The attention of the Government was drawn to the abnormal condition of the St. Lawrence River, and to the fact that the water was unusually low. There was no Parliament sitting at the time. The Montreal Board of Trade, my own officers, and the forwarders of the country, asked that the canal should be deepened, in order to utilize it for navigation. If it were not deepened, then the navigation of the country would be suspended. The only possible time to do the work is in the winter. The only possible time to lower the mitre sill was in winter, and, Sir, I would have been neglectful of my duty as Minister of Railways and Canals, if I did not do it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) talks about the old English constitutional style. Why, I could give him a thousand instances of where the same thing was done in England as has been done by my department. We did not expend one cent of the money. We made the arrangements for doing the work, and we proposed to Parliament afterwards to ratify it by granting the money. The hon. gentleman and his friends, for the sake of making a charge against the Department of Railways and Canals, would propose to stop the navigation of the St. Lawrence for nearly one year. I leave the country to decide whether I was right or wrong. I did what I considered my duty. I incurred the expenditure when it was impossible for me to consult Parliament in regard to it. I did it at the only time at which the work could possibly be done; I did only one portion of the work, and I ask Parliament now to ratify it by granting the money which it was necessary to expend in the interest of the country. That is my position.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Railways proposes to defend this transaction because he says it comes within the special provision of the Act which allows the Government, under certain circumstances, to incur an expenditure which has not been previously sanctioned by Parliament. The statute only authorizes such expenditure when the occasion for it is unexpected and unforeseen.

Mr. DALY. That is this case.

Mr. MULOCK. And when it cannot be provided for in other ways.

Mr. HAGGART. It could not be provided for.

Mr. MULOCK. Even if it comes within that class of cases what would have been the duty of the Government. The Minister defends this transaction on the ground that it comes within a special class of cases mentioned in the statute. Sir, it was his duty after he incurred that expenditure, within fifteen days after the assembling of Parliament, to have given the information to Parliament, and laid it upon the Table of this House.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) must see the distinction. I have not paid one cent of money.

Mr. MULOCK. That is because you have been able to do it on credit. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that the water fell particularly low last summer. Why, Sir, the necessity for this work existed when Parliament was in session last summer, and the money should have been asked for then. I do not wonder at the Minister of Railways and Canals trying to cover up his irregularity by a seeming manifestation of indignation. Nevertheless the transaction has no justification and should not be ratified. I submit, Sir, that the Government have not been candid with us in committee. We were left under the impression that this money was all voted for expenditures which was for work which was to be commenced. But there was not one word to the effect that this was to pay a liability already incurred.

Mr. HAGGART. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked what it was to be used for, and I said it was for lowering the mitre-sill nearly two feet, for the purpose of utilizing the navigation. The hon. gentleman knows that it is impossible that that could be done at any other time than when the water is out of the canal.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman should have told the committee that it was to pay an existing debt. Does the hon gentleman think he was dealing frankly with the committee ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not say that it is to pay an existing debt. The only part that could be done only in winter has been done, but there is a large portion to be expended at the different entrances yet.

Mr. MULOCK. That is a new version. The hon. member for Beauharnois said it had been expended.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I said the work had been done.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister says the work has not yet been done.

Mr. BERGERON. The work for the $7,000 has been done during the winter.

Mr. TARTE. The Minister does not say so.

Mr. BERGERON. The men have been at work since last fall. They did the work during the winter because they could not do it in the fall. I imagine that what is asked for to-day is to pay for the work that has been done.

Mr. HAGGART. Partly, and partly for the work at the entrances.

Mr. MULOCK. The proper thing to do is to have the House go into committee again, if we are to get at the facts. The committee has not been treated with frankness. The Minister left the committee under the impression that this was for work intended to be performed. Now we have the hon. member for Beauharnois, who is familiar with the work, telling us that it has been performed. The Minister said at first that it had been performed, and now he tells us that a part of the work is yet to be done. Is it not manifest that a decision has been obtained from the committee by their not being informed of the facts ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, if your statement is correct.

Mr. MULOCK. I am taking the Minister's own statement, and I am trying to reconcile two conflicting statements. There is only one source of information when the House is voting the money, and that is the statements made by the Minister who ought to know the facts. We have no way of weighing the facts or examining witnesses ; and if the hon. gentleman wishes to explain the item further, let him resolve the House into committee again, and let us understand what the facts are ; but as it is at present, you have a vote which you are not entitled to. The hon. gentleman's own language is capable of two constructions. He says he told the committee that the vote was to pay for lowering the mitre sills. That language is vague, and is as applicable to the future as to the past ; and when we get an answer like that, do you suppose that we are to imagine it is for an exceptional transaction ? We interpret a statement like that in the spirit of our position here. The hon. gentleman points to the statute. Let me read it :

> If, when Parliament is not in session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then upon the report of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the service in question that the necessity is urgent, the Governor in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared, to be signed by the Governor General for the issue of the amount estimated to be required, which shall be placed by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to a special account, against which cheques may issue from time to time, in the usual form, as they are required.

Now, I ask the hon. Minister to lay on the Table the documents on which this expenditure was incurred. It is mere trifling to say that the money has not been paid out. The liability has been incurred, and the liability will have to be implemented by payment. If he has proceeded by law, I demand, before this vote is taken, that the necessary reports under the law be laid on the Table. Has he the report of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General and his own report ? Were they submitted to the Governor in Council and did the Governor in Council issue an order ? I ask him to produce the Order in Council required by the statute. The warrant should precede the check. The Governor General's warrant is the only thing that will warrant the procedure which is said to have taken place, and it is your duty, if you can justify this under a Governor General's warrant, to lay the warrant upon the Table. That you have not got, you have no authority whatever for the expenditure, and a deception has been practiced upon Parliament. According to the Act :

> The Auditor General shall, in all such cases, prepare a statement of all such legal opinions, reports of council, special warrants and documents issued without his certificate and of all expenditure incurred in consequence thereof, which he shall deliver to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to be by him presented to Parliament not later than the third day of the session thereof next ensuing.

Now, the hon. Minister of Railways purports to justify his transaction under this statute.

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. MULOCK. Under what does he propose to do it ?

Mr. HAGGART. I will explain.

Mr. MULOCK. There are only two ways in which he can justify it. One is by a vote of Parliament in advance, and the other, according to the provision of this Act for expenditure in the class of cases coming within the letter of this Act. There is no other way known to the law. The hon. gentleman has no authority whatever for any expenditure or liability except under one or the other. The hon. Minister of Justice will tell him so. There is not a member of the Government, except the Minister of Railways, who will controvert what I am saying, and I do not believe he will. He can neither make any expenditure nor incur any liability that will lead to any expenditure. The honour of the Crown is pledged when a contract is entered into, and it is perfectly idle for the hon. Minister to think that he is not evading the law when he enters into a contract, in the name of the Crown, for which there has been no provision made by Parliament. There has been no provision made in this House. You had no right to incur liability without the sanction of Parliament. We are in that position that we have to make good this transaction or repudiate the contract. If we were to repudiate the contract, where would the honour of the country be ? When the Governor in Council authorizes the execution of a document creating a liability, it would be an extreme course for Parliament to refuse to vote the necessary money. Circumstances might warrant such a course, but, while it is possible that there is no legal liability and that every contractor of the Crown is bound to see that there has been a vote, or that the contract comes within the spirit of the law, I submit that a contractor with the Crown ought to be protected by either a previous vote or by the circumstances bringing the matter within the class of cases mentioned in the statute respecting the revenue. But if the contractor has not either of these guarantees, and the Crown has chosen to enter into a contract, what is the position of the Crown ? The hon. gentleman does not propose to pay the money out of his own pocket. He asks Parliament to recognize that he has entered into a legal bargain. He is not asking Parliament to repudiate this bargain, but to admit that he has entered into a valid and legal contract, which entitles him to call upon Parliament to pay the money. There is only one kind of contract he could have entered into that would have warranted him in calling for a vote of Parliament, and that is the contract in the spirit of this statute. This statute did not draw its inspiration from circumstances of to-day. The principle underlying it is as old as the principle of responsible government. It is as old as the principle that requires Parliament to come together every year because it cannot get supplies except in that way. It is the principle that only allows us to vote money for one year, and under which every dollar that is not expended in the fiscal year lapses and falls back into the Treasury. The whole principle of the control of public money is involved in this act of the Minister. If any one of the fifteen Ministers of the Crown can to-day enter into contracts without authority of Parliament, or without the authority of the Governor General in Council—because the hon. gentleman has not even got the authority of his Treasury Board for it, but only the stroke of his own pen—if every one of the fifteen Ministers of the Crown can, at his own sweet will, create liabilities that will have to be made good by the people afterwards, there is an end to parliamentary representation, there is no use of our assembling here. We are only the recorders and registrars of the wills of the members of the Government. Under the circumstances I protest against such an illegal act. I protest against this usurpation of authority and violation of the constitution, I protest against this abuse of power. If I could add further words to express my indignation, I only wish that the vocabulary was extensive enough to enable me to do so.

Mr. GIBSON. Last night, when this item was up for discussion, it was stated by the hon. Minister that this expenditure was required because the work had to be done on account of the lowering of the water, that the lock and the mitre sill had to be lowered and the lower entrance as well. To-day we find that this has been done. Last night the hon. Minister said the money was required to do the work, and, in proof of that, I shall read the statement of the hon. gentleman to the House, contained in "Hansard," page 7184 :

> Owing to the low water last season, it was very difficult to enter this canal, and this vote is required for lowering the mitre sills and lock at the lower entrance.

What do we find ? We find that nearly $7,600 has been spent upon the work already done, although the hon. Minister came before Parliament last night and asked the committee to slip this item through because it was a work of necessity. We find now that the hon. Minister, without any authority from Parliament, directly or indirectly, took the expenditure upon his own shoulders. This is only in keeping with his conduct in other matters. When cornered about what has been done in his department wrongfully, he says : I know nothing about it ; I left it to my deputy. In this case he says distinctly that this is for work about to be done. There was no opposition to the vote. Not a member on this side objected to the expenditure, but the committee are justified now in holding the expenditure back, because the hon. Minister went outside of his powers, and is simply making a laughing-stock of this House and the country. He simply incurs any expenditure he may think fit, relying on a majority in Parliament to vote it. This is only in keeping with the administration of the whole Department of Railways and Canals. Deputations come down here, they urge the necessity of the Government expending some money in the county they come from, and then, without the authority of Parliament, the hon. gentleman goes to work and spends $7,600 of the people's money, and then comes to the committee and says this is a work of necessity. The committee, relying upon the information given, relying upon the word of the Minister of Railways and Canals, grants the money without reluctance, and to-day we find that the work was done, and done without the sanction of Parliament. Parliament sat late enough last year for the Minister to have provided in last year's Estimates money enough for this work.

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot let the remarks of the hon. gentleman pass without observation. The hon. gentleman would lead the House to believe that I stated one thing last night and another thing to-day. While the hon. gentleman knows the meaning of plain English as well as any man in the House, and yet he make insinuation against me that I got that vote last night under false pretenses. Here is what I stated :

> Owing to low water last season it was very difficult to enter the canal, and this vote is required for lowering the mitre sills as well as the locks at the lower entrance.

Is there anything in that to justify the hon. gentleman's insinuation ?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is acquainted with the facts and he knows that the mitre sills could not be lowered after this time of the year and that the work must be done before this. There is no man in the House knows that better than he does. I will venture to say the hon. gentleman, with all his inquiries into the canal before the vote was made, knew that this work was done as well as I did, and yet he will rise and make a statement that I have been in the habit of making expenditures without any vote of Parliament at the request of members in the different constituencies. He may make the charge, but he cannot place his finger upon a single item to substantiate it. In answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) I know my statutory duty as well as the hon. gentleman does. The hon. gentleman knows that that statute is to provide for cases where an expenditure is necessary before the money can be voted. Does the hon. gentleman say that if no money was voted and five or six of the gates of the canal were carried away that I would have to get a Governor General's warrant? This perhaps was not an unforeseen expenditure. The carrying away of the gate may not cause an unforeseen expenditure. It ought to be calculated upon. But suppose a gate were carried away, perhaps I could not make the recommendation or the Finance Minister perhaps, would not back me in making the recommendation for a Governor General's warrant. I made no expenditure. I simply, for the carrying on of the ordinary business of the canal did what in my opinion and in the opinion of the department was necessary. I had no power to expend a cent of money upon it, and I did not expend a cent of money upon it. I did it as every Government has done it and must do it. Surely the Minister who controls the department can be trusted for the expenditure of a couple of thousand dollars which, right or wrong, he thinks is absolutely necessary in the public interest to spend and which expenditure cannot be allowed to wait until a vote of Parliament is given. He would not be doing his duty if he did not do it. There is no liability and the hon. gentleman knows it as well as I do. I trusted to come to the people's representatives and say that the work was necessary in the interests of the country and ask them to indemnify me by voting the money. They can refuse to do it. The total amount expended, I find, was $1,353. Surely in an important undertaking like the Beauharnois Canal the House must see that I was justified in doing the work and trusting to be justified by the House in the expenditure. In answer to the hon. gentleman I will say there has been no expenditure, there has been no liability for the amount, because I have not the power to enter into a contract or incur the liabilty. I simply trusted that the expenditure was such a one that when the House met and the explanation was made the peoples' representatives would vote me the money.

Mr. GIBSON. If the House will pardon me a moment, I wish to correct the hon. gentleman, as I do not wish him to put words in my mouth that I did not use. He stated that I was aware that the work had been done. I desire to say that I was not aware. It was because the hon. Minister said the work was to be done.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. Minster said the money "is required for" and so on.

Mr. HAGGART. It does not bear such an interpretation as that.

Mr. GIBSON. The committee at all events understood that.

Mr. HAGGART. The committee cannot understand anything but what I said.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call the attention of hon. members that we are not now in committee.

Mr. McMULLEN. It was understood that we would vote the money for work already done or necessary to be done up to the end of the present fiscal year, as it was urged that there were many men as well as the officers of the House who had not been paid. We have here an item of $7,600, and the Minister says that $1,353 has been spent. Now the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) who represents the constituency says that it has all been spent. Which is right and which is wrong? We are in a different position from an ordinary Parliament. Hon. gentlemen opposite are within twenty-four hours of being in the same position as the rest of us and not entitled to any more than others to spend money in the name of the people. We have no right to grant them the money and they have no right to ask it. We are simply here to grant sufficient to cover the money already spent and for which no provision has been made in past estimates. The Minister says that $1,353 is all that has been spent. Why then does he ask $7,600? The elected representatives of the people will meet here within sixty days, possibly, and it will be their duty to decide whether these sums should be expended or not. The committee should only be asked to vote the $1,353 that has been expended. I would be quite agreeable to vote that amount. The hon. Minister says that the time for making these improvements on the canal is passed for this season. In that case, you cannot work any more at mitre-sills or any work of that kind. I admit, if these men had not got their pay, they should be paid. But why should we be asked to vote an additional sum? That belongs to the new Estimates, and not to past items.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no use in the hon. gentleman going on, because I stated that this amount was an amount for work that could only be done in the winter, and that the dredging at the mouth of the canal must be done in the summer between now and 1st July, or it is useless.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister must present other arguments than a mere statement that it must be done between now and 1st July. Would not the Minister put the point far better if he were to say that it must be done between now and polling day? Would not that be a better shape to put it? I dare say it is the intention to spend it before that time, and it is only about a week difference between polling day and 1st July. But I contend that there must be better evidence of the necessity of spending this money than the mere statement of the Minister that it must be done between now and 1st July. It is an old canal, it cannot be greatly in need of repairs. If any particular accident had occurred which necessitated the spending of money to put the canal in repair, then we could easily understand it. We are willing, in the interests of the trade of the country, to consent to any reasonable demand, but we do not want to consent to demands for which there is no absolute necessity at the present moment. There is nothing about this case that shows any necessity at all that we should vote this money and have it spent between now and 1st July. We want better evidence, clearer indication, of the necessity of spending this money than has been offered to us yet. The House are prepared to grant the passage of an item where men have been employed and have not been paid, or where the Estimates of last year have not been sufficient to meet the demands of the work done. We have been compelled to consent to the passage of additional items, and in the case of the post office vote——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member must confine himself to the item under discussion.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister, in other cases, has come before the House and altered the sums. For my part, I should be willing to alter this vote. I will take the Minister at his word; he says that $1,350 of this money has been spent. Now, if he is willing to make a division of the vote as he did in other cases, the House would be willing to consider the proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope we may take the vote soon, otherwise I want to remind the House again that we will lose all the work we have done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the vote is taken, I would like to say a word or two on the rather important question that has been raised by the remarks of the Minister of Railways. Now, I do not accuse the Minister of Railways of any intentional deception, far from it: but I think that when in any case money is asked for purposes on which money has been spent and liabilities incurred, the Minister in charge of the item, whoever he may be, should undoubtedly acquaint the House with the particulars. Now, the Minister of Railways won't say that he actually left it to be supposed that this was for future expenditure.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman was asking me about lowering the mitre-sill, and I told him that it was. I knew it must be done before this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not accusing him, but I am pointing out what ought to be done in all cases where money has been spent or liabilities incurred. It appears to me it was the duty of the Minister in charge to have stated those facts, because they are important facts. The House ought to know, when it is asked for a sum of money, whether it is for work to be done, or for work that has been done, because it would very materially affect the whole discussion, of necessity, and we ought to have heard that. Of course, we were very much hurried last night, and a great many of these things were let through a great deal easier than they ought to have been. But I would say with respect to the other matter—in the Minister's own Estimates for this year and for other years, there are items such as this: "Miscellaneous works not provided for." A certain limit is always given to the Ministers for the purpose of meeting contingencies, and I have not been adverse to giving reasonable latitude in that way.

Mr. FOSTER. It is for public works, not for railways and canals.

Mr. HAGGART. I don't think I have a vote of that kind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister is Minister of Railways and Canals, and under the head of Railways and Canals, I see there is a vote "Miscellaneous works not provided for."

Mr. FOSTER. That is never used for such a purpose.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is just one of those things that might be properly done, if there is an emergency. But as to the other matter, I think the Minister was entirely incorrect. If it becomes necessary, in the public service, to incur any special expenditure, it is undoubtedly just the time where a Governor General's warrant is justified. If the expenditure occurs for something unforeseen, you may ask a Governor General's warrant. But a Governor General's warrant ought not to be asked for under other circumstances, because it would be a dangerous precedent to allow any Minister to think that he was justified in committing the country to a large expenditure or a small expenditure, the principle is the same, without the authority of Parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. For what purpose is a Supplementary Estimate for the current year unless it is to provide exactly for these cases?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not at all. A Supplementary Estimate is intended, no doubt, to provide for future sums which the Estimate granted up to that particular time, or for that particular year, won't meet. The hon. gentleman seems to be without ballast; I suppose he has displayed exactly what he thinks. The Supplementary Estimates were intended, according to him, to provide for expenditures which the Ministry have incurred without authority.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman not know that 99-100ths of them are so?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They ought never to be so. No expenditure should be incurred without the authority of Parliament. The only excuse for these Supplementary Estimates is this : It happens, as we all know, especially in public works, that now and again the expenditure goes faster than the appropriation provides for. It may well happen that a larger part of an appropriation is required within one year than was anticipated, and in proper time the authority of Parliament ought to be got for the extra sum required. But there, mind you, the authority of Parliament had been had to the whole expenditure. Of course, the Estimate should not pass without knowledge on the part of the House of the sum total required : so that although the House did not contemplate all the expenditure in one year, it contemplated the whole expenditure. That is the true function of the Supplementary Estimates, and no doubt also to provide for expenditure which will come due for unforeseen emergencies, but it was never intended that the Government should have authority to commit the House and the country to expenditures, and after having practically deprived Parliament of all control, then they come down and say : We expended so and so, and we want the money for it. That is not the way parliamentary government can be carried on. But if an accident occurs, if a special case occurs, if an unforeseen incident occurs, then there is a special provision made by our statutes under which the hon. gentleman may get authority to do it, and such authority he ought to have got.

Mr. LAVERGNE. (Translation.) I regret that the hon. Minister of Finance has not concurred in the very reasonable proposition made by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who said he was willing to alter this vote, that is, to make a division of the amount by giving the Minister the sum of $1,350 that has been expended, according to the information given by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and to drop the balance of the amount for this session. That was a very reasonable proposition, and I think the hon. Minister ought not to have opposed it. Before the committee voted that item last night, we were put under a false impression by the Minister. I do not accuse the Minister of Railways of any intentional deception, but we all understood, and were left under the impression that this vote was for work intended to be performed, and for work of the highest importance, that there was urgency in the matter, and the work had to be carried on and completed within the shortest possible period. The House was thus put under a false impression, or the committee has put a false construction on the statement made by the hon. Minister who controls the work in question.

Mr. HAGGART. If the House will give me $1,350 we will drop the balance of the amount ; and if the House refuses to grant the sum, I will withdraw the item altogether and allow the responsibility to rest on hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. FOSTER. Then hon. gentlemen opposite take the full responsibility for stopping navigation.

Resolution negatived.

St. Peter's Canal—Completing repairs..$10,000 00

Mr. OUIMET. I beg to submit to the House a memorandum covering the proposed dredging for the season of 1896, for the lower provinces, as follows :—

Dredge " Prince Edward "— Charlottetown.
  Souris.
  Crapaud.
  Nine-Mile Creek.
  Orwell Bay.
  Wood's Island.
Dredge " Geo. McKenzie "—
  Fourchu Harbour.
  Cow Bay.
  Grand Etang.
  St. Peter's Canal (at entrance).
Dredge " New Dominion "—
  On the St. John River, principally at Fredericton and at Oromocto Island, with a view of giving 11 feet navigation between St. John and Fredericton.
Dredge " St. Lawrence "—
  Restigouche.
  Pointe du Chêne.
  Yarmouth.
Dredge " Canada "—
  Richibucto—Albion Channel.
  Clifton.
New dredge " Cape Breton." After 1st July, if appropriation is granted—
  Digby.
  St. John Harbour.

Fishery inspection $2,000 00

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So far as the inland service is concerned in connection with the fisheries, the concensus of opinion is that it is a very great failure. I thought the Minister was taking money to increase the fishery protection on the sea fisheries. As a matter of fact, while one or two lobster factories are kept closed, it is a matter of public notoriety that some of them keep open just as long as they like and under the nose of the inspectors. Of course, if the inspector goes down, proper notice is given, and the factories are cleaned up and everything looks nice. On the shores of Egmont Bay, for months after the season closed, last year, canning went on openly, and hardly the slightest attempt was made to stop it. It does appear to me, that we are only throwing money into the sea by voting additional money to those overseers and attendants. The predecessor (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) made an attempt at one time to carry out the law. I commended him for it at the time, and I hoped that his back would be strengthened, but I am afraid it was not. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Costigan) is too good-natured altogether.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is the hon. gentleman referring to an appeal he made himself.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I should be very sorry to form an opinion as to the hon. gentleman's general character on the result of a single appeal. I do not, for a moment, wish to impute wrong-doing to the hon. gentleman, but I do say that political and other friends may forward memorials, and that the hon. gentleman, in his good nature, may allow this favour and that favour. The result is that the close season regulations amount to very little in any case. It is so much money thrown away, and if I had been in my place last night, I would have most strongly objected to the hon. gentleman incurring any additional expense in this matter, at any rate until he had effectively carried out, with his present staff, the existing regulations as to the close season.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We are doing the best we can.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the manner in which the regulations are now being carried out is the best he can do, I can only characterize it as a failure. I speak with reference to the close lobster season, and I speak from knowledge acquired on the spot.

To provide for the taking and compilation of the census of Manitoba.. $15,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When this matter was up, one or other of the Ministers promised to produce the statute requiring this to be done before the 1st of July.

Mr. FOSTER. My view was that it had to be done before the 1st of July, 1896, and I think that is perfectly correct. The decennial census is provided for, of course, in the Confederation Act. The arrangement with Manitoba as to financial terms, after successive Acts, came at last to be settled on a basis of so much per head of the population. It was enacted in the statutes of 1885 that the province should not wait for the ten years' increase of population before getting an increase in the per capita allowance; and an arrangement was first made that between the decennial and quinquennial periods an estimate should be made of the increase in two and a-half years, and that a census should be taken within the five years, upon which was to be based, accurately, the per capita allowance. The decennial census was taken in the spring of 1891, and on the 1st of July of that year, the payment of the subsidy upon the population, as shown by the census, commenced. Five years from that date would be the 1st of July, 1896, upon which the payments should begin to run. So that I think it imperative under the statute that the enumeration, which is simply a per capita enumeration, should be had, in order that the payments may be based upon it from the 1st of July.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not quite sure the thing is imperative, but the assumption is it should be taken about the 1st July, as our census is taken the 1st April.

Canals. Lachine—Enlargement $20,000

Mr. McSHANE. I wish to speak on this point. I wish to get some explanations from the Minister. I think the Finance Minister had better drop this item. Some of us will want to speak upon it.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member is going to speak, let him go on.

Mr. McSHANE. I have no wish to stop any improvement on the canal, but I understood this $20,000 was for work that had been done by the contractors, but so far as I can learn now, this is additional work that is being done by the Government by means of dredges. I wish to ask the Government for some particulars. Is this amount intended to pay for work for the whole summer ?

Mr. FOSTER. It cannot extend beyond next July.

Mr. McSHANE. Then I say it is impossible to spend anything like $20,000 for the dredging of the Lachine Canal before July. They cannot begin work until the 15th or 20th of May, and they cannot, with the dredge that is there and the force of men on board, spend even $10,000. If the Government will reduce this amount to $5,000 I will agree to its passing. I may be told by the Minister of Railways and Canals that the work has been done. We heard the contradiction here to-day. The Minister of Railways and Canals, speaking about the Beauharnois Canal, said that $7,600 had been spent upon the Beauharnois Canal, that the work had been done. To-day he tells us the contrary. And the hon. member (Mr. Bergeron), who so ably represents Beauharnois, stated that the work has been done. Yet the Government accepts about $1,300 on that vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to state one thing, if the House will allow me. The exigencies of the session must be somewhat considered. We have passed this vote in committee after an explanation. The department informs me that if this is thrown out the whole calculations will have to be gone over, and it will require at least an hour or an hour and a half to do that. So it will be impossible for us to get the Supply Bill through if this is changed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was going to ask if the Minister would not accept the suggestion of the hon. member, and, instead of throwing the vote out, reduce the amount.

Mr. FOSTER. It amounts to exactly the same thing; the whole Bill has to be changed.

Mr. McSHANE. This is a separate item. I am willing to reduce the amount.

Mr. OUIMET. Is the hon. gentleman quite sure there is only one dredge up there ? He makes his calculation on the work of one dredge. But I think there are two or three.

Mr. McSHANE. I have no objection to consenting, if you reduce the amount just the same as you did in the case of Beauharnois Canal. But I do not see why you should ask for $20,000 for work of that kind to be done in four weeks' time.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman knows that it cannot be paid out unless on the certificate of the engineer and the sanction of the Auditor General.

Mr. McSHANE. I hope the Government will put it down to $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend takes the House altogether at a disadvantage. He admits that full explanations were given at the time.

Mr. McSHANE. I do not take the House at a disadvantage. I am here performing my duty to the people of Montreal, who sent me here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Say $5,000, and have it done with.

Mr. McSHANE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I brought up a matter last night—and I suppose I will be out of order in referring to it —concerning the Welland Canal ; and I blamed the Finance Minister and the Government for negligence in not taking measures to have that canal opened early to allow the grain to come down.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. McSHANE. I knew I should be called to order. The Minister of Finance now stands up here, and asks us to give him $20,000, without telling us how it is to be expended. Here you are asking for $20,000 for the enlargement of the Lachine Canal by dredging, within four or five weeks. We have no right to depend on the future, we have no right to ask the future to pay anything, unless we know what it is for. A little while ago, the amount asked for the Beauharnois Canal was reduced, and the sum was granted. I am willing to accept a similar compromise with regard to this vote ; I am willing to give you $10,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. gentleman wants to register his protest against this vote, he has done so ; and now let us get on.

Mr. McSHANE. I do not see why this Government should ask for $20,000 for work that has not been done, but for work, he says, must be done by 1st July. Why, Sir, it is impossible to spend $20,000 on such a work before that time. When I spoke before, I thought this was a work under a contract that had been given to Mr. McNamee, but when I learned this afternoon that this was a work to be performed by the Government before the 1st July, I thought it my duty to insist upon some explanations as to how that money is to be spent, where it is to be spent, and who is to spend it. I know how that money is to be spent, we all understand it, and it is in keeping with what this Government have been doing year after year. There has been for years a popular delusion that a certain party owned the country, and that they could do what they pleased with the people's money, without any authority whatever. That has been shown every time this Government has presented Estimates to this House. Now, I desire to say that we cannot concur in this vote without explanations. Is there any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who can give me an explanation as to how this $20,000 is to be spent between now and 1st July ? Has it been spent ? If it has been spent, it has been spent without the consent of this Parliament ; and, if it is to be spent, it is an impossibility that within so short a time $20,000 can be spent by the Government with one or two dredges in enlarging the Lachine Canal. With all the traffic going up and down that canal, after 10th or 15th May, it would be an impossibility to expend any such amount of money in the way proposed. Why, Sir, the canal is full of barges, and steamers, and small tows, and every other sort of vessel, and it is impossible that these dredges can do that amount of work within so short a time. I therefore hope that this amount will be reduced. I am willing to make it $10,000, and, if you concur in that, there will be no opposition ; but, if not, this item will not pass the House to-night.

Sir DONALD SMITH. As I understand it, this vote is asked for to do what is considered to be necessary work in enlarging the canal, the work to be done between now and 1st July, that is to say, in a little over eight weeks' time. I presume that the engineers who reported on this work, are better judges with regard to what can be done within that time, than either the hon. gentleman or myself ; and the House is in the habit of taking on faith, very largely, what these professional men propose and what they say can be done. The hon. gentleman from Montreal Centre (Mr. McShane) has assumed to himself to be the friend of the workingmen. I do not dispute that title in any sense whatever. But there are others also who know something of the needs and necessities of the workingmen, and, for one, I would say that I think, without presumption, I know something of what the case is in that respect in Montreal. The hon. gentleman knows that this past winter has been a very serious one for a great many of the labouring classes in Montreal, and that, having suffered a good deal in the winter, they have been looking forward most hopefully to have work in the spring and as the summer goes on. From their point of view, taking it for granted that this work is considered necessary for the proper enlargement of the canal, I hope the House will concur in the vote. The hon. gentleman has said that it is impossible to do so much work as $20,000 would represent, before the 1st July ; but he knows very well that there is more or less dredging going on the whole time in the canal, notwithstanding that there are so many vessels passing to and fro. I have no doubt that, if the House does permit this vote to be carried, it will be spent for a good purpose, and I am sure it will give employment to many who are eagerly looking forward to have it, and who are very much in want of such work. I trust, therefore, that the House will concur in this vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the question of the enlargement of this canal was before the committee, the Minister of Railways and Canals stated that the money was actually due on contracts that had been already let, and on that condition it was allowed to pass. Now the Minister of Finance says it is for dredging.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend is mistaken. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals distinctly stated it was for dredging, and that the dredging was done by days' work. I am informed that any change proposed will render it impossible to pass the Supply Bill before 7.30. The hon. gentleman well knows that prorogation is fixed for 8 o'clock, and if this Bill is not before the Senate before a quarter past seven or half past seven its fate entirely depends on any obstructor. I make an appeal to the leader of the Opposition ; I ask him if he will be kind enough to state whether this item may go through or not. If the hon. gentleman will not take the responsibility of assenting to the passage of this item, we should know it. The item was explained in committee, and objection has only been raised at the present stage.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the Minister of Finance is willing to reduce it to $10,000, in my opinion it might pass.

Mr. FOSTER. If the item is changed, it will affect the whole Supply Bill.

Mr. McMULLEN. There appears to have been a misunderstanding in regard to this matter, and I should like to come to an amicable settlement of this difficulty. I think the Minister of Finance should accept the suggestion I have thrown out.

Mr. FOSTER. At the request of the leader of the Opposition I am prepared to reduce the item to $10,000.

Mr. LAURIER. I move that the amount be reduced from $20,000 to $10,000.

Resolution, as amended, concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of following resolutions :—

1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1896, the sum of $2,151,493.80 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1897, the sum of $87,772.17 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 112) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1896, and the 30th June, 1897, and for other purposes relating to the public service of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times.

Mr. FOSTER moved the third reading of the Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At this point, it may possibly be as well that we should understand what time the new House will meet. I think that ought to be definitely declared before the Supply Bill leaves our hands.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In reply to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman I wish to say : That as nearly as I can form an opinion at the present moment, it will be about the middle of July. I suppose it would not be impossible to bring the new House together before that date. We are anxious to meet at as early a period as possible, and indeed we must meet, on account of the exigencies of the public service. As the hon. gentleman knows, we are without supplies for the coming year, and that necessitates our meeting Parliament at the earliest possible date.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose it is too late for the hon. gentleman to alter the intention of the Government, but I would suggest that it would be wiser to have the elections at least a week earlier than he proposes now to have them. He will have trouble enough as matters stand, in carrying out the understanding. However, if it cannot be altered, I have nothing more to say.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READING AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 66) respecting debentures of Loan Companies (from the Senate).—(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 84) further to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act (from the Senate). —(Mr. Dickey.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at Six o'clock.

Evening Sitting.

The Speaker took the Chair at 7.30 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE CASE OF VALENTINE SHORTIS.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Speaker, now that the work of the session is very nearly completed and that I may not be accused of obstruction, I desire, with your permission, to bring before the House a matter which I consider of sufficient importance to justify me in rising to speak about it at this time. I refer to some papers which I asked for at the commencement of the session, relating to a case which at that time occupied a great deal of attention in the public mind; I mean the Shortis case. I gave verbal notice to my hon. friend, the chief of the Opposition, that I would bring up this matter now, and when I proceed with my remarks, the House will understand why I am doing so. I obtained an address for all correspondence and papers connected with the case of the prisoner Shortis. The papers were brought down, and I found them very elaborate. In fact, I was surprised on reading all the papers that were brought down. I had no idea of all the petitions and demands that had been presented to the Government in that case. The principal papers were: the demand on the judge, Judge Mathieu, for his report, the report of the judge, in fact, two reports, which were sent one after the other; the report of the Minister of Justice, which is a recommendation to His Excellency that the law be allowed to take its course; the telegram of the Governor General to the Home Office in England; the answer of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the draft warrant commuting the sentence of Shortis. I think these are the principal papers in connection with the case. When these papers came down, what struck me was that, so far as I could see, it was purely and simply a commutation of sentence by His Excellency the Governor General. Now, I want to say immediately, that I do not want to cast any blame at all upon His Excellency. On the contrary, I want to be fair, and I would look upon it as a piece of cowardice to accuse His Excellency, instead of holding the Government responsible; because they are here to defend themselves and they will do so, I am sure. But the papers show a great inclination on the part of His Excellency to come to the conclusion to which His Excellency came. There is no doubt that the commutation of the sentence of Shortis at that time made a very deep impression upon the public. What struck me was that the moment that the people of the country are led to believe that the law is not administered in the same way for everybody, then it is a sad day for Canada. In fact, this is the position I took the first time I spoke on this subject; but at the same time I thought that members of Parliament, and public men generally occupying high position in the country, should be the first to dissuade the masses from entertaining such a belief. But I find, from some extracts which I am going to read, from speeches and papers, that the fact has been the reverse. Politicians have tried to make political capital out of this case, in the press and on the stump. In the county I represent there is a paper published caller the "Progres de Valleyfield." I do not want to repeat anything which that paper contains, because it does not amount to anything where it is known. On the contrary, those who know the paper believe the opposite of what it says. But its statements in regard to this case have been carried to the Montreal papers and others. I have here extracts from an article which appeared in "Le Cultivateur," a paper which is not very different from the Valleyfield paper I have mentioned, except that it is edited by a member of Parliament who sits in this House. In its issue of April 4th, 1896, it says:

> Shortis, the triple murderer of Valleyfield, is enjoying a splendid health at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. With money, under the present Administration, criminals are pretty sure to be on the safe side. Before his departure for Europe, Shortis' father declared that his son's life had cost him $60,000. An investigation into the circumstances which accompanied the commutation of the murderer's sentence would bring to light extraordinary things.

"La Patrie," of the 13th April has an article reflecting on myself for use in the campaign which the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) has opened in my county since three weeks. This is what that paper says:

> The population of this county have a big reckoning to settle with that flighty and inconstant member, Mr. Bergeron, who will have to explain why Shortis was not hung to pay for the crime of having butchered fathers of families, when Riel was executed for having loved his prairie lands and for having stood up for the sacred cause of liberty. We understand that the "Beauharnois Boy" is anxious to withhold such explanation, and that since Saturday last he is less hopeful than ever.

"La Patrie" is one of the principal Liberal papers published in Montreal, and has a very large circulation. In a meeting which took place in Valleyfield, the other day, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) spoke thus, as reported in "La Patrie" on the 13th April, and as "La Patrie" is the Liberal organ in Montreal, I do not suppose the hon. gentleman will repudiate it:

> Everything is for sale in this county, even criminal justice. I allude to the Shortis case. What did Mr. Bergeron do in all this? What did he do with your petitions? He simply forwarded them as one posts a letter. I want to know if there is equal justice for all in this country? I want to know if criminals can be made to escape punishment with money in this country? The widow and children of Maxime LeBœuf, the father and mother of young Loy, the blood spilt—are they not all urging retribution? What is to become of the property and life of citizens if criminal justice is for sale in this country? The Shortis case has no parallel in the history of the whole world. The $60,000 of old Mr. Shortis have unhinged the administration of criminal justice in this country.

"Le Cultivateur," on the 18th April, which is the last number published, I believe, said this:

> What can be said of the commutation of the sentence passed upon that triple murderer, Shortis? Does not public opinion clearly indicate that it was openly bought and paid for? Let any one, if he can do so, show a similar case in the whole history of the civilized world?

Hon. members who are listening to me will understand, when they take into account the feelings of the people, many of whom were under the impression at the time that money had something to do with the pardon, that writings of that sort and speeches of that kind, coming from men occupying positions such as the hon. member for L'Islet occupies, are not apt to prevent them from thinking that really criminal justice is bought and sold in this country. But I was disposed to let all this pass. I did not intend referring to these statements in the House, but thought I would wait until I was in my county, the people of which are most deeply interested in this matter, although it is a case which has attracted the attention of the whole country. I thought I would not bother the House with these statements and remarks, but would content myself with replying to them in my county; but when I find the leader of the Opposition, when I find a gentlemen occupying so high a position in this House and country, expecting, as his friends behind him say, to be Premier of this country, making a speech in Valleyfield, in which he sought to make political capital out of this matter, I thought it was about time to bring it before the House, and if there has been any money paid to anybody, let us see where it has gone to. The "Sunday Sun," of Montreal, thus referred to that speech:

> The leader of the Opposition did not look his best, but he made an able speech. He made a good deal of capital out of the Government's action in the Shortis case, although he exonerated the Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) from all blame in the matter. He claimed that the Government had not acted in the Shortis case as in that of Riel, and claimed that his platform was equal rights and justice for all.

This is from the "Sunday Sun," which is looked upon as an independent newspaper. I have in my hand the Montreal "Herald," which is the organ af the Opposition, which thus reported the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition:

> The eloquent speaker then recalled in vivid terms the terrible drama which was enacted in their midst one Friday night last summer, by which two respectable young men had lost their lives at the hands of a cold-blooded murderer. "That murderer's trial took place," said he. "Twelve of your fellow-citizens found him guilty, and would not recommend him to the mercy of the court, and he was condemned to death. His mother made desperate efforts to save her son from the gallows."
> We cannot blame her for having tried to save her son—any mother would have done the same. But it is not the Governor General who is responsible for having commuted the sentence; the responsibility must fall upon the shoulders of the Cabinet Ministers. Lord Aberdeen's instructions from England are not to pardon except on the advice of his Ministers. I must render this justice to Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, who was then Minister of Justice, that he wanted the sentence to be executed. The Cabinet was equally divided, eight to eight, and if there had been a man at the head of the Government, he would have said: "Accept the Minister of Justice's wish or get out." Seeing the turn which the affair had taken, Lord Aberdeen referred the whole question to the Secretary of the Colonies, and then he commuted the sentence. "I am not a man to thirst for blood, but the law is the law, and justice must be equal for everybody. Riel was condemned to death, although his lawyers had pleaded insanity, and although the jury had recommended him for mercy, he was executed. I want equal justice for everybody, equal rights to everybody, to every race, and to every religion. The Ministers were not only guilty before the people, but they are also responsible to the representatives of the Queen."

Now, this is from the lips of the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition. Then, as I understand the reports which I get from my county—and I suppose the same thing is carried on in other places—the fight there is waged to a great extent over that question, and as I have had no more to do in the matter than you, Mr. Speaker, I intend to put before the House some correspondence which otherwise I would not have liked to put before it. When I called for the papers at the opening of the session, I mentioned the fact that I had written twice to the then Minister of Justice, and that he had replied. My letters were private, and I did not care particularly about having letters of that sort published and naturally they were not published. As a rule, people are not apt to publish letters in which they are not asking for mercy but asking that the law be carried out. It was not, therefore, my intention to publish them, but I think that now I will be justified in giving those letters to the House and country, and let the responsibility fall upon those who are trying to make use of this case on the public platform and make political capital out of it, not only in my county but, I am told, in other counties as well. I may say at once that when the case of Shortis was brought to Beauharnois. I was asked by the lawyer who had the case in hand, Mr. Foster, of Montreal, to take a part in the defence, and I refused. I refused, in the first place, because I did not think I was under any obligation to take a brief. There were many other lawyers looking for it, and besides I had too deep a sympathy with the families of the victims. I could not have defended him. Had I done so, I would have been lying to myself, and I would rather a thousands times have acted for the Crown than for the defence. Consequently I refused. Not only did I refuse, but I felt the tragedy so deeply that in an election which took place in the county of Jacques Cartier, sometime in December last, when I was invited to speak at a meeting which Mr. Foster, who was not only a political friend but a personal friend of mine, was to address, I refused to attend because I did not want to be on the same platform with him. I may be told that that was carrying things too far, but that is the way I felt at the time, and Mr. Foster felt my conduct so deeply that he wrote me this letter, which I have his permission to publish :

Montreal, December 26th, 1895.

Hon. J. G. H. Bergeron, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

My dear Sir,—From time to time since I have been endeavouring to obtain for my client, Valentine Shortis, that justice which I believe he is entitled to receive from the hands of the Dominion Government, and a proper consideration of the petition we have filed for the commutation of the sentence of death passed upon him—I am reminded at almost every turn of the fact that you appear to have appointed yourself Crown Prosecutor for the district of Beauharnois, and as well, to have put yourself at the head of certain men who demand his life, irrespective of the question as to whether he is entitled by law or not to be declared a lunatic, which I believe him to be. I had no reason to find fault, when, last summer, in the early stages of this case, I offered to you a retainer to assist in the defence, that you should have seen fit to have declined the same ; and while as a lawyer you would have been, I consider, justified in accepting, you as a politician saw fit to refuse as was your right ; but having declined to take part in the trial, and having sympathized throughout with our opponents, it seems to me that you have no reason to make this matter, as you have, a personal one, and not even to confine your abuse to the unfortunate prisoner, but it appears that you are classing me among those who deserve your ill-will. We have, since we were very young men, always been on terms of intimacy and friendship, and I think it ill-becomes one in your position to go so far as you did the other day, when, after you were advertised to speak at the political meeting in Lachine, you refused to attend, and gave as your reason the fact that I was going to take part on behalf of the Conservative candidate.

Now, I am not writing you to complain so much at this, of which, perhaps, on political grounds I might have some cause to complain, but to express to you my surprise at the fact that you are acting in the whole of this matter as though you were the paid attorney for the prosecution rather than as a prominent member of Parliament, and as a lawyer occupying the position you do it seems to me you should take.

You, of course, are entitled to your own opinion the same as any other citizen in this country, and have a right to use any personal influence in attaining your desire in connection with this matter, but it does seem strange that you should be making a life and death struggle of it, as you appear to be, when the matter, after all, does not concern you any more than a humblest man in the country.

I feel bound to add that among some of our friends your attitude is being criticised as overzealous, and as though you were constituting yourself a public avenger rather than as a citizen of a country who should only desire that justice should be done to my client as well as to your political friends.

I have contented myself with asking my friends to study the record and the case we have presented to them, and to do us justice on that record, and it seems to me that that is all you should ask or hope for.

I write you this letter because in view of our past relations I think it is only right that you should know how I feel about the matter, and especially at your going the length you did with regard to the Lachine meeting.

Yours truly,
GEORGE G. FOSTER.

Now, as I am at that part of the case, I may as well give these letters. I want to put them on record. I say again, I am sorry to put these letters on record, but I do it because I think I am obliged to do so, considering the insinuations cast against my conduct by the hon. leader of the Opposition in his speech at Valleyfield, or rather the insinuations cast upon me in his presence without his saying anything to contradict them. This is the letter from Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper :—

Ottawa, March 4th, 1896.

My dear Bergeron,—Herewith I send you compared copies of two private letters which you wrote to me when I was Minister of Justice in re Shortis.

Yours sincerely,
CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The first of these letters is as follows :—

(Private.) 4427 Prairie Avenue,
Chicago, 9th November, 1895.

The Hon. Sir Charles H. Tupper.

My dear friend,—Although far away in the land of Uncle Sam, I see by our Canadian papers that it is intended to present you with a petition to commute Shortis's sentence to imprisonment for life on the plea of insanity. I do not need to tell you the bad effect such a commutation would have in our district after the fair trial he had. Also, after your judgment in the Chatelle and their own pleading in favour of Riel in 1885 on the plea of insanity.

Shortis deserves to be hanged ten times—he is purely a monster.

I hope you will not be annoyed with this letter. Do unto others, &c. Wishing you lots of good things, I remain,

Your friend,
J. G. H. BERGERON.

P.S.—Please remember my wife and I to Lady Tupper. J. G. H. B.

Hon. gentlemen will see that I pretty well foresaw the course our political opponents would take in this case. The answer to that letter is here :—

Office of the Minister of Justice,
Ottawa, November 12, 1895.

My dear Bergeron,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 9th inst., respecting Shortis. You may rely on my looking into this case in the most careful possible manner. Reciprocating all your good wishes, and with kindest regards to Mrs. Bergeron and yourself, in which my wife would join did she know I was writing, believe me,

Always sincerely yours,
CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

My second letter was dated from Montreal. I could not see how that sentence could be commuted. But I heard there was a great deal going on in that matter, that petitions were being got up, that there were delegations, and I was told at that time there were immense petitions which had come from Ireland. So I wrote again :—

(Private.) 15 St. James Street,
Montreal, 14th December, 1895.

The Hon. Sir Charles H. Tupper.

My dear friend,—As I see by the papers that great efforts are made to have Shortis's sentence commuted to imprisonment for life, I again wish you to remember my letter to you from Chicago, asking that the law be carried out.

The commutation of the sentence would have a most terrible effect, and the more so as the prisoner's parents are rich.

Hoping that the law will be carried out according to the verdict of the jury and the sentence of the judge, I remain,

Yours very sincerely,
J. G. H. BERGERON.

Now, this is all that I did so far as that case is concerned. But the unfounded stories which have been told, and to which some high personages afterwards gave currency, have gone so far as to say—and I am very sorry to bother the House with all this,but it seems to me it is a good thing to know what kind of warfare we are to have and to prepare ourselves for it—that Mrs. Shortis, being an Irishwoman, and my wife also being an Irishwoman, my wife had presented Mrs. Shortis to Lady Aberdeen. The story went on very seriously, so much so that the mayor of Valleyfield, Mr. Loye, who is an old friend of mine and a thorough Conservative, is opposed to me, and it is reported to me that all he has against me is this Shortis business, and I think I am justified in referring to the story and answering it. I want to say here to those who know me and think that I can be belived—and those who know me, I think, will be of that opinion—that I have never in my life spoken to either Mrs. Shortis or Mr. Shortis. I have seen them in court, but I have never spoken to them. And that seems very strange. Mrs. Shortis went to many people ; she went to Ministers of the Crown, she went to the railway magnates and those who were at the head of great corporations, she did everything that, as the chief of the Opposition said, a mother would do in such a case—and yet she never came to my home. It is a very short distance from where she was boarding to where I live in Beauharnois, and I do not know why she did not come to my home. If she had come I would have received here with a great deal of attention, for I had great sympathy for her. But she did not do it, and, consequently, I have never communicated, directly or indirectly, either with her or with her husband. It seems to me that that settles the question so far as I am concerned. Now, I want to know this before I sit down : Is it possible that we have come down in this country to this kind of political warfare ? Is it possible that a political party, no longer relying upon its policy, or upon what it can bring before the people, will stoop to the use of such weapons as these in order to defeat a man in a county or a government in a country. As long as the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) repeated these things—and I am told he is making great use of them at small gatherings, not merely in Valleyfield but in Beauharnois, I did not care, as I shall meet him often in the presence of my electors. But I shall not have the pleasure of meeting my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition very often. Now, there is one thing I have to complain of. I waited until the last moment, because I always thought that some members of the Opposition would get up in the House and make some motion about that case, men who think that criminal justice in this country is for sale, men who occupy high positions in this country and who say that $60,000 were actually paid to save Shortis's neck, and who have not the boldness, who have not the courage, to stand up here and say so as responsible members of Parliament in this House, where they can be answered. That is one of the reasons which has prompted me to stand up here and show the position in which I stand upon this question, and also because I wish to cast upon those gentlemen who have thrown out such insinuations, the responsibility of their deeds. I am sorry to have occupied the attention of the House so long when we are about to prorogue in a few minutes.

Mr. LAURIER. I will in the first place answer the concluding remarks of my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) when he said he expected that the Opposition would move upon this matter. The hon. gentleman rightly expected that the Opposition were prepared to move in this matter, and if they did not move earlier, it is simply because, as every body knows, many things that should have been brought before the attention of the House, could not be brought before it, for reasons which every body knows ; and partly because my hon. friend himself had told me that he intended to bring this matter up, and give me due notice, and I have been waiting ever since for his action.

Mr. BERGERON. I notified my hon. friend two or three days ago.

Mr. LAURIER. It comes with bad grace from my hon. friend to taunt anybody with not having moved in the matter, when he considers that I was duly warned that he was going to bring this matter up, and that I should have anticipated his movements. Now, I will next refer to the opening sentence of the hon. gentleman's remarks. I was not astonished to hear that sentence from my hon. friend, because it was in keeping with the tone which has been adopted all along by the ministerial press. Here are the words which were spoken not fifteen minutes ago by the hon. member for Beauharnois ; I took them down, and if I do not repeat them correctly, he can appeal to "Hansard." Speaking of the voluminous records that we have had before us in this case, the hon. gentleman said :

> These papers show a great inclination on the part of His Excellency to come to the conclusion to which he came.

These are the words spoken by the hon. gentleman not fifteen minutes ago. I have read these papers myself, they have been in the hands of members for at least a month, and I ask that hon. gentleman now, What is there in these papers which show that His Excellency the Governor General had ever displayed any intention of doing what at least he did do ? There is not a single word. I challenge any man on the floor of this House to show me a single word in those papers that indicates that His Excellency harboured any such extraordinary inclination. I will not characterize this insinuation as it ought to be characterized ; but it is in accord, as every body knows, with the tone of the ministerial press upon this question. The attitude of the ministerial press upon this question has been to transfer the responsibility for the commutation of the sentence of Shortis, from the shoulders of the advisers of His Excellency to the shoulders of His Excellency himself. That has been the case all along, and the very remark with which my hon. friend opened his speech to-night only emphasized the attitude that has been taken by that press, namely, a desire to displace responsibility for the commutation of Shortis's sentence. Whether it be worthy of blame, or worthy of praise, His Excellency the Governor General is not to be looked to at all, but there sit the men, opposite me, who are responsible.

Mr. BERGERON. I said so in my remarks.

Mr. LAURIER. If my hon. friend said so in his remarks, the words were very colourless indeed. Next the hon. gentleman referred to something I said at Valleyfield. I have not looked at the report of my speech at that meeting, but I take it for granted it was accurate. But what is there wrong in my remarks upon that subject ? What fault has the hon. gentleman to find in anything I said upon that question at Valleyfield ? I said at Valleyfield what I have said on the floor of this House, in this present session, and what I repeat again, that in the Riel case the Government laid down the proposition that when the defence of insanity had been entered on the part of a prisoner, and when the jury had passed upon that plea and had declared the prisoner guilty, it was not open to the Government to re-open the case and commute the sentence. That is what I said, and is it not a fact ? Now, this is what I find strange. My hon. friend finds fault with me for having referred to the Riel case as a precedent, yet in the private correspondence, as shown in the papers laid before the House, the then Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), referred to that very Riel case as a precedent.

Mr. BERGERON. I knew my political opponents would use that.

Mr. LAURIER. Certainly his political opponents will use it. When a precedent was laid down in this House upon a case of this kind, what reason can there be why this precedent should not be followed ? Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a criticism to make upon the advisers of His Excellency. They had a duty to discharge. The law and their oath of office compelled them, made it obligatory on their part, to tender advice to His Excellency the Governor General. A petition for commutation of sentence had been placed in the hands of His Excellency. He could not act upon it, he had to act upon the advice of his responsible advisers. The case was discussed in the Council, and the report came before His Excellency, an extraordinary report, an unheard of report, an unconstitutional report, that the Cabinet were divided. Who ever heard of a Cabinet being divided ? Why, the Cabinet are one. They can have but one voice ; and if a Cabinet is divided, as will sometimes happen, there is only one thing to do to maintain the solidarity of the Cabinet, and that is for the dissenting members to retire. They have to put their resignations into the hands of the Premier, into the hands of His Excellency, if they cannot concur in the policy of the administration. In this matter what do we find ? We find that when the advisers of His Excellency were called upon to make a report to His Excellency, they took no such action, but reported to His Excellency that they could not agree upon a decision. I stated before and I repeat now, that if the Prime Minister had done what it was his duty to do, he should have said to these gentlemen who did not agree with the report of the Minister of Justice, that they must resign their positions, either concur with the report of the Minister of Justice, or resign their portfolios. I stated at Beauharnois, and I have no fault to find with the report of my speech which the hon. gentleman read ; I stated that the Minister of Justice had taken the proper course when he advised that the law should take its course. Then under the circumstances it seems to me there was nothing to do for the members of the Cabinet but either to adopt the report of the Minister of Justice, or to resign their positions, if, in their conscience and their judgment, they could not agree to the recommendation of the Minister of Justice. But it is an unheard of thing, it is unconstitutional, that upon such a question as that, a report should go to the head of the Government, to the Governor General, to the representative of the Crown, that the Ministry cannot give any advice because they are divided. Then, Sir, the Governor General had nothing to do but to do as he did, that is to say, to ask the Colonial Office in England for instructions, since the parties who were charged by the constitution to give him advice, would not give him any advice ; and the hon. member for Beauharnois instead of casting an insinuation upon His Excellency, would do better to put the blame where it belongs, and that is upon the members of the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I cast no blame upon His Excellency. I said it would be cowardice to do so. I distinctly held the Government responsible, but I repelled the insinuation that money had been spent to secure the commutation of that sentence.

Mr. LAURIER. Since that is my hon. friend's view, he will admit that he had a very unfortunate way of expressing it, especially in view of what he had said only a few moments ago, that the papers brought down showed a great inclination on the part of His Excellency to come to the conclusion to which he finally came. The hon. gentleman speaks of insinuations which were made in my presence against him. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I am not responsible for words spoken in my presence. If I attend a public meeting and any one speaks, he speaks in his own behalf. and I cannot be held responsible for any word he utters. But so far as the meeting at Valleyfield is concerned, I did not hear any one make any insinuation against the hon. member personally,for the very simple reason that as soon as I delivered my address, having gone from Ottawa to do so, I left the meeting and I did not hear anything afterwards. The hon. gentleman has spoken about money being offered. I do not attach great importance to that, but the House will attach importance to the action of the Government in this matter. The hon. gentleman asks, what kind of warfare are we to expect ? He is to expect in this as in all other matters what any government is to expect when the Government does not discharge the duties which appertain to it. What are these men sitting here for ? Their duties are well known, and chief among them is that of giving advice to His Excellency in matters of this kind. If the Ministers in office deliberately refuse to give His Excellency the advice to which he is entitled, it would be a breach of duty on the part of the Opposition if they failed to call the attention of the public to the matter, and they would specially be remiss in their duty if they failed to call the attention of the public to such a failure as this. Is the Government in a matter of this kind expected to act, or any member of the Government to act, or not to act, and the conduct not be criticised and approved or condemned ? Are not hon. members on the Treasury benches responsible for matters of this kind, and if they fail to act, are we not bound to call the attention of the public to the matter ? We are within our rights in so doing, and I fail to see the point which the hon. gentleman has made. I say again that in regard to this matter a certain law has been laid down, and this law should be adhered to, unless good reasons are given to the contrary.

Mr. DICKEY. I cannot endorse the course taken by the hon. gentleman in this matter. The hon. gentleman says the Government is responsible for His Excellency's acts. Well and good. It suits the hon. gentleman to adopt that argument at the one instant, at the next moment the hon. gentleman, who holds the Government fully responsible for their remission of the sentence of Shortis, finds fault because the Government did not advise His Excellency. If the hon. gentleman places upon the shoulders of the Government, and the Government accepts the issue of pardoning Shortis, the Government, so far as its responsibility to this House is concerned, has advised the commutation of the sentence of Shortis. If the hon. gentleman takes that view, he should not take the other view, that the Government is to be blamed because it was divided in opinion. The hon. gentleman says that those who do not agree with the Minister of Justice should resign. If that is said on the assumption that the Council was equally divided, I cannot understand the constitutional law laid down. When questions of this kind are to be decided in Council the Minister of Justice is no more than any other member of the Council. It is true that for convenience the Minister of Justice submits a recommendation in these matters. It is not a recommendation of the Government or of the Premier, but it is simply a proceeding necessary to bring the matter before Council. In the case of a division in Council the hon. gentleman urges that half of the Council should have resigned. Which half should have resigned ? Suppose the Prime Minister was on the one side and the Minister of Justice on the other, which half should have resigned? The leader of the Opposition assumes that the Council was equally divided in this case.

Mr. LAURIER. I did not assume so; the papers state so.

Mr. DICKEY. I would ask the hon. gentleman if in an issue of life and death he would so act. We will take the case of a member of the Council who thought this man was innocent, and the decision of the Council was to hang him. Should any member of the Council who conscientiously held a different opinion, be asked to vote against his conscience that the man should be hanged. If, on the other hand, a member of the Council believed that this was a criminal whose execution was necessary under the laws of the country, and required in order to properly carry out the criminal law, should that member of the Council vote for a remission of the sentence for an act which he considers a public wrong? Would the hon. gentleman have advised either of those courses? Surely not. The hon. gentleman would say that this was not a question of policy, and therefore of compromise, that there is a question of conscience in it; that it was a question involving the highest judicial functions, where men swear to do justice between man and man; that it was not a question of compromise, in which one man has to give away his opinion to another, but that it was a question of serious opinions as regards every member of the Cabinet. If a case of that sort unfortunately arose when members of the Cabinet were equally divided, the suggestion was made that the dilemma should be met by the Minister of Justice submitting a representation and the Council adopting it; but it must be remembered that the report of the Minister of Justice is simply laid before the Council for the purpose of bringing the matter up for discussion. Council may have been divided upon this question, but Council has accepted the responsibility of the act of His Excellency. The hon. leader of the Opposition charges in this House that the inconsistent part of the Government's action was in not advising His Excellency. This was a crime which created great feeling in the district where it took place. It was a crime the details of which were horrible to the last degree, which shook the moral sense of the community—and I am speaking now altogether irrespective of the man's state of mind. The hon. leader of the Opposition went to that locality to begin his political campaign, and in that locality, where the feeling is of that character, a feeling which is deep down in the savage instinct that comes to us from the past, and which civilisation ought to wipe out, he deliberately stirs up those feelings which lie against that criminal. Did the hon. gentleman find fault at Valleyfield with the Government for not advising His Excellency? Not at all. He found fault with the commutation of the sentence, and he tried to stir up the people of that neighbourhood because the sentence had been commuted. If the hon. gentleman had confined himself to the statement that the Government had acted unconstitutionally, inasmuch as they had not advised His Excellency—as I have no doubt he will do when he discusses the matter in places far away from Valleyfield—I would not so much complain. The hon. gentleman says the Government must expect to be attacked as every other Government is attacked. The sentence of the murderer has been commuted. The Government are responsible for that commutation. Will the hon. gentleman tell me of any Government in any civilised country that was ever attacked on a platform for that action? Will he tell me of any political party that ever made as part of its political platform an attack on the Government because it commuted the sentence of a criminal. Does the hon. gentleman find that in English politics or in French politics? Surely the hon. gentleman must realize that, whatever may be the unfortunate results of this Shortis case, the climax will be capped if it appears on the political platforms and is used in political campaign against any candidate for this House. I do not propose to discuss the case at all. I wish to say simply, in conclusion, that whatever members opposing the hon. member for Beauharnois, or whatever canvassers against him say, I hope the hon. gentleman who leads Her Majesty's Opposition will cease bringing a matter of this kind into politics, will cease endeavouring to invite censure upon the Government not for having refused to do their duty, but for the responsibility which lies upon them for commuting the sentence of a man, who, he says, was criminal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Although I watched the hon. Minister very closely to follow exactly the line of his argument, I was not able to learn what the hon. gentleman meant. I do not know whether he meant the House and the country to understand that the Government were prepared to assume the full responsibility for the action taken by His Excellency. I interrupted the hon. Minister during the progress of his speech, and some of his colleagues called me to order. And there is quite time, I think, for the hon. gentleman to answer that point yet. That is the only point we wish to be advised upon.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am perfectly in order. I understand what I am doing.

The Sergeant-at-Arms. Mr. Speaker, a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman who talks about order does not know what he is talking about. I want to ask the hon.

Minister if he is prepared to accept the responsibility taken by His Excellency.

Mr. DICKEY. I stated so, there is no doubt about our constitutional responsibility.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no doubt about the responsibility of the Government——

PROROGATION.

A message from His Excellency the Governor General by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod :

Mr. SPEAKER :

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows :—

May it please Your Excellency :

The Commons of Canada have voted certain Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :—

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial year ending 30th June, 1896, and the 30th June, 1897, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service, to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words :—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Sixth Session of the Seventh Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I am glad to be able to relieve you from further attendance in Parliament.

I desire to express my regret that the mission which my Government recently despatched to confer with the local authorities of Manitoba, has been unproductive of any immediate result, and that the question relating to schools in that province still awaits settlement.

I thank you for the appropriation which you have made towards providing for the better arming and equipment of the Militia Forces of the country.

The powers with which you have endowed the Commissioners appointed under the Behring Sea Claims Convention will, I trust, facilitate the investigations of that tribunal and hasten a just settlement of these long standing claims.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I have to thank you for the Supplementary provision you have made for carrying on the services of the current year.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

Inasmuch as in the opinion of my advisers it is desirable that the judgment of the people upon the questions which now engage public attention should be obtained at an early day, I have to announce my intention of causing this Parliament to be immediately dissolved.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Tuesday, the second day of June next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the second day of June next.
