Your attention will be invited to the expediency of alleviating the burdens which the law of compulsory education has, within recent years, imposed upon the poorer portion of my people.

There are several other matters upon which legislation is desirable, but recent uxperience has rendered it doubtful whether the time at your disposal will, in your judgment, be sufficient for consideration of many subjects of an important character beyond which I have referred. In case time for further legislation should be found, I have directed the preparation of bills for enactment of a reform system of county government in Ireland, analogous to that put in operation for Great Britain; for the establishment of district councils for the extension of facilities for purchasing small parcels of land in Great Britain; for amending the law in respect to compensation payable by employers in case of injury to persons in their employment; for consolidating and amending the laws relating to public health; for the appointment of public trustees; and for increasing the security of friendly securities and

On Thursday Balfour introduced the frish Land Bill in the House of Commons. He said the Government's pelloy was the same as in the bill of 1898. One variation of the present bill from that of last year was that it was in some degree of fr. Paprelll's views.

Mr. Parnell had suggested that the privilege of purchase be confined to tennits whose holdings were under £50 valuation. Though he (Balfour) could not accept except the limitation he had altered the soope of the bill by excluding all purely graing farms and farms whose benants did not reside on them. Among other changes embodied in the new bill one had altered the soope of the bill by excluding all purely graing farms and farms whose tenants did not reside on them. There was heard a heavy clang, As of steel-girt men the tread, and the tombs and the hollow paves rang

With a sounding thrill of dread.
And the holy chant was hushed awhile,
As by the torch's flame
A gleam of arms, up the sweeping aisle,
With a mail clad leader came.

He came with haughty look, A dark glance high and clear, But his proud heart through his bre plate shook
