Introduction

The Canadian fishing industry

The Canadian fishery consists of Atlantic, Pacific and freshwater sectors which are distinct from one another in size and organization as well as in species caught, technology employed, and products sold. Together, in 1985, they accounted for a landed value of over $1.1 billion and a product value of $2.44 billion. Of this, 80 per cent (nearly $1.9 billion) was generated by exports, making Canada, in terms of value, the world's leading exporter of fishery products for the seventh consecutive year. Of this export volume, 61 per cent went to the United States, 12 per cent to the European Economic Community, 17 per cent to Japan and the balance to other countries.

The fishing industry is, largely, owned and controlled by Canadians. In several instances, Canadian companies have established sales offices and even processing subsidiaries abroad.

The Atlantic fishery

In 1985, landings in Atlantic Canada totalled 1.17 million tonnes, with a landed value of $667.15 million. The most important species in terms of both tonnage and total value was cod. It is particularly significant, therefore, that landings, and particularly those for cod, are expected to increase over the next few years. This will allow Canada to seek out and develop new markets for its output.

The east coast fishery consists of several sectors. The offshore fleet numbers about 150 large trawlers (over 30 metres in length) which operate year-round. More than 30 000 smaller vessels conduct seasonal midwater and inshore fisheries. Currently, one factory freezer trawler is operational.

The processing industry is characterized by a small number of large plants (fewer than 50) which usually operate on a year-round basis and about 500 smaller plants which may or may not operate throughout the full 12-month cycle. This latter group, which includes 270 freezing plants and a number of canneries and curing operations, tends to process the landings of fishermen from the immediate areas.

Weather and ice conditions in certain parts of Atlantic Canada greatly affect the consistency of supply of raw material to some of these plants. Processing operations are technologically sophisticated and there is a growing number of secondary processors or manufacturers of fish-based consumer products developing products for the export market.

More than 45 000 registered fishermen and 15 000 plant workers (full-time and part-time) are employed in the fishery in Atlantic Canada. For many communities, the fishery is the only source of employment.

The Pacific fishery

In 1985, total landings in the west coast fishery were 212 855 tonnes for a landed value of just under $376 million. Salmon is the mainstay of the British Columbia fishing industry whereas groundfish, which dominates on the east coast, is a relatively minor component. Herring, which provides roe for the lucrative Japanese market, is ranked second in importance in the Pacific fishery.

The processing industry consists of a dozen major companies, and a number of smaller firms operating more than a hundred plants. Canning is much more common as a processing operation than it is on the east coast. Freezing, smoking and roe extraction operations are also widely distributed and, in 1985, there were seven groundfish plants producing mainly frozen fillets and blocks. Export markets for salmon are principally in Europe (France, the United Kingdom, Sweden), Japan, Australia and New Zealand.

Freshwater fishery

Canada's freshwater fisheries are concentrated mainly around the Great Lakes and in central Canada. Aquatic resources in this part of the country support a vibrant freshwater fishery sector that employs almost 8 000 fishermen. In 1985, landings in the freshwater fishery totalled 44 000 tonnes with a total value of $62 million. The United States represents the major export market for Canada's freshwater species ($36 million in 1985), followed by the European Economic Community and Japan.

Canadian fishing industry quality standards

The Canadian government, through the Inspection Branch of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, is responsible for administering the Fish Inspection Act and Regulations. It has the responsibility for assuring that fish and fish products produced in Canada, imported into Canada or exported from Canada, are safe and of good quality; were produced under sanitary conditions; and are properly packaged and labelled. These responsibilities are currently met through the operation of a Fish Inspection Program carried out by a staff of 488 full-time and seasonal inspectors located in all 10 provinces and the Northwest Territories. There are 130 field inspection centres across the country supported by 23 strategically located laboratories.

Fish processing plants

Federal registration is a requirement for all 990 plants that process fish for export (interprovincially or internationally). In order to qualify for registration, the construction, equipment and operating conditions in the plants must be in accordance with the Fish Inspection

Regulations. To ensure that these conditions are met and maintained at a satisfactory level, all plants are subject to periodic inspection by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Quality improvement initiatives

In 1980, following extensive consultations with the fishing industry, the federal government announced a comprehensive program to further improve the quality and consistency of Canadian fish products. Today the Quality Improvement Program influences each sector of the industry from harvesting through distribution, and the following elements have been introduced:

- vessel certification, requiring that all fishing vessels meet specified requirements for construction, equipment and operation;
- construction, equipment and operation standards for unloading, holding, handling and transportation;
- dockside grading, promoting the grading of raw material at point-of-sale to specified standards applied by government-licensed industry graders.

Exports

Over the past few years, a growing number of countries have enacted legislation that requires imported products to meet health, quality, identity, composition and labelling specifications. In order to facilitate the sale of Canadian fish products to these countries, the federal government will, following a request from an importer, examine a lot of fish for export to determine if it meets the requirements of the importing country. The individual requirements of these countries are outlined in a procedural manual for inspection personnel. If the product meets the necessary requirements, a certificate is issued.

This export certification program promotes the international sale of Canadian fish products and assures exporters that their products will be acceptable to the importing country.

Inspection laboratories

The 23 fish inspection laboratories across Canada are situated in major fish-producing areas.

Analyses for product safety involve tests for the presence of harmful bacteria, contaminants such as heavy metals and pesticide residues, and paralytic shellfish poison. Products are regularly tested bacteriologically, chemically and organoleptically (by the senses) for odour, flavour, texture and such defects as bones, bruises, scales, blood spots and foreign material. All fish products must be completely wholesome — free from taint and decomposition.

Laboratory staff regularly check to ensure that products for which grade standards have been established comply with all regulatory requirements and thereby enable the field inspection staff to certify Canadian fish products for the export market.

Canada's fish inspection activities — which cover vessels, plants, unloading, holding and handling sites, and transportation equipment — ensure that only the country's finest products reach international markets.
